Foreword

Signed a half century ago in San Francisco in June 1945, the United Nations Charter—the blueprint for the structure and work of the new world Organization—shaped the way for a new reality of global cooperation. For five decades, the United Nations has brought nations together to deal with challenges that no single nation could resolve on its own. Through the United Nations, the world has embraced the ideals of peace and security and has pledged itself to the goals of development and respect for human rights and international law. Within its halls, consensus can be built, sometimes on issues where Member States initially had diametrically opposed views, and strategies have been devised and implemented to realize the vision of a better world for all humanity.

The United Nations helped scores of nations to achieve independence; at the United Nations, they took their first steps as States on the international stage, and within the United Nations, they could assume their rightful place and gain recognition as equal members of the world community. Within the framework of the United Nations, the unique concept of peace-keeping was created and a strong and effective infrastructure established to protect and promote human rights. During its first fifty years of existence, the world Organization helped advance international law and promote economic and social development and cooperation. At the United Nations, disadvantaged and marginalized groups found a forum to redress long-standing injustices. In 1995, two striking examples were the World Summit for Social Development, which focused on social integration and alleviation of poverty, and the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing, which aimed to accelerate the process of advancing the status of women worldwide.

The Organization's celebration of its fiftieth anniversary in 1995 coincided with an era of profound worldwide change. To help harness that change for the benefit of all humanity, it has more than ever been making efforts to find ways to approach the complex new problems of the planet, helping States attain democracy vital for development and striving for solutions and progress. The new era is marked by both unprecedented levels of global cooperation in meeting common challenges, as well as by fierce conflicts centred around the assertion of national or ethnic identities, as seen most recently in the former Yugoslavia, Rwanda and Liberia.

The United Nations, as custodian of the common dream of global cooperation and an instrument of peace and justice, will endure and succeed. Its work, as recorded in the pages of the 1995 Yearbook of the United Nations, reflects those lofty ambitions and that common dream.

HOW TO OBTAIN VOLUMES OF THE YEARBOOK	1615

About the 1995 edition of the Yearbook

This volume of the YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS continues the tradition of providing the most comprehensive and up-to-date coverage of the activities of the United Nations. It is an indispensable reference tool for the research community, diplomats, government officials and the general public seeking readily available information on the UN system and its related organizations.

The Department of Public Information of the United Nations remains committed to a timely annual publication of the Yearbook in order to ensure that the public receives detailed and current accounts of the work of the United Nations. However, the efforts to achieve timely publication have resulted in having to rely on provisional documentation and other materials to prepare the relevant articles. Largely, Security Council resolutions, presidential statements and some other texts in the present volume are provisional.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented and divided into seven parts covering political and security questions, regional questions and peace-keeping, human rights issues, economic and social questions, legal questions, administrative and budgetary questions, and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations. Chapters and topical headings present summaries of pertinent UN activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications. REFERENCES are listed either at the end of shorter chapters or after subchapters, linked to the text by numerical indicators.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 1995 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, approved amendments and committee reports; and information on sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. Details are also provided of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 1995, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 1995 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The user may locate information on the United Nations activities contained in this volume by the use of the table of contents, the SUBJECT INDEX and the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS. The volume also has five appendices: APPENDIX I comprises a roster of Member States; APPENDIX II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; APPENDIX III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; APPENDIX IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1995; and APPENDIX V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services worldwide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Parts One to Six of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1995 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/50/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the fiftieth session, beginning with A/50/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1995/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1995 sessions, beginning with E/1995/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1995/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 1995/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2196(LX) of the sixtieth session. The Council's decisions are not numbered.

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
LOS/PCN/-	Preparatory Commission for the International Seabed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.95.II.A.2; E/F/R.95.II.E.7; E.95.X.1.

I. Introduction

1. Few events in recent history have generated as much confidence in the future and such high hopes for a better world as the fall of the Berlin Wall some five years ago, symbolizing as it did the end of the cold war. The spectre of global nuclear cataclysm, which has haunted humanity since the dawn of the nuclear age, has receded, and in its place has emerged the promise of an era of international peace freeing the energies of nations to work together towards economic and social progress for the whole of humankind.

2. At the time, there was a widespread belief that when no longer fuelled by military assistance provided by rival major Powers, the many regional conflicts flaring in different parts of the world could be quickly extinguished. The global economy was expected to derive significant benefit from a huge "peace dividend" accruing as a result of the abandonment of the costly arms race. It was hoped that an important share of those resources would be invested in poor countries starved of capital and skills and thus help to accelerate economic growth and development worldwide.

3. Sadly, the record of world affairs over the past few years has largely belied those optimistic expectations. Many old conflicts continue to defy the efforts of the international community to bring about a settlement and new wars have continued to erupt, almost all of them within States. Most disappointingly, the total volume of assistance to developing countries has not only failed to show growth but has, in fact, declined.

4. The fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations is therefore not only a time to review the Organization's first half century and prepare it for its second: it is also an occasion to address ways to regain the momentum in world affairs that appeared so dramatically at the outset of this decade.

5. In the same manner as my first three annual reports to the General Assembly, my fourth report endeavours to place in focus the efforts of the Organization to respond effectively to the multitude of new demands and problems resulting from the dramatic changes engendered by the end of the cold war. Those efforts relate both to the long-term goals embodied in the Charter of the United Nations—now apparently more accessible as a result of the sea change in international relations—and to the immediate tasks arising from the outbreak of new conflicts in different parts of the world and the resulting increase in demand for the Organization's preventive, peacemaking, peace-keeping and peace-building services.

6. Addressing the implications for the Organization of the massive increase in the number and complexity of peace-keeping operations, and their profoundly changed nature, I pointed, in my previous annual report, to the widespread misperception of the United Nations as an organization dedicated primarily to peace-keeping. I underscored that, in the midst of its efforts to contain and resolve immediate conflicts by peace-keeping and other means, the United Nations remained determined to pay more attention to the foundations of peace, not least those lying in the realm of economic and social development.

7. During the past year acute armed conflicts have continued to place heavy demands on the Organization's financial and human resources and to dominate public perception of the United Nations role and effectiveness. The problems presented by conflicts such as those in the former Yugoslavia, Afghanistan, Liberia, Rwanda, Burundi and Somalia are in many ways unprecedented. More often than not the mandates and resources provided to the Organization to deal with them have proved to be inadequate to address effectively the complex tasks at hand. When journeying into uncharted territory with less-than-adequate means, set-backs are unavoidable. But these must not be allowed to become a source of disillusionment or to overshadow the successes that, notwithstanding formidable challenges, have been achieved by peace operations in various parts of the world, from Cambodia to Mozambique to El Salvador to Angola. Nor must adversity be allowed to weaken our resolve to carry forward efforts to save human lives and prevent larger conflicts, for which the United Nations remains an irreplaceable instrument. On the contrary, the set-backs suffered in the quest for peace and security must reinforce our determination to take the hard decisions required and seek continuously to develop improved approaches as a means of enhancing our capacity and effectiveness. With these objectives in mind, I issued, in January 1995, a Supplement to "An Agenda for Peace" (A/50/60-S/1995/1), which has been the subject of a presidential statement in the Security Council and is now being studied by the General Assembly. The experience of the past several months has given added force to the recommendations in the Supplement.

8. While the issues before the international community in this regard require careful and urgent attention, it is also extremely important that the difficulties encountered in peace-keeping operations, significant and disturbing as they may be, should not divert attention from other dimensions of the work of the Organization, which, though less visible, are equally essential and serve to lay the economic and social foundation for lasting peace.

9. In the domain of economic and social development, as in the area of peace-keeping, the international context within which the United Nations operates and the challenges that it faces have greatly changed. In the economic and social fields, as in the political, many areas of great concern remain where the United Nations has not, as yet, proved equal to the challenge. The situation of the least developed countries and of many parts of Africa remains critical. At the same time, the effort of the United Nations in support of development is vast and rich with distinct accomplish-merits. As such, it deserves better recognition and enhanced political and public support.

10. At both the practical and the conceptual levels, the period covered by the present report has been marked by notable advances in the Organization's capacity to guide the response of the international community to global change and to the new forms of economic and social problems facing the world.

11. I attach great importance, in this regard, to the ongoing discussions within the framework of the General Assembly on "An Agenda for Development". The first report on the subject, which I presented to the Assembly in May 1994 (A/48/935), was followed by hearings and submissions by a variety of sources and was then drawn upon in a large number of statements made during the general debate at the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly. In that light, I submitted to the Assembly, in November 1994, a set of recommendations aimed at giving practical force to the emerging consensus on the priorities and dimensions of development (A/49/665). Such consensus is being further advanced through the working group that is preparing the further consideration of the matter at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly.

12. In the same context, I have been particularly encouraged by the support that the role of the United Nations in the economic and social fields and the current work on the elaboration of "An Agenda for Development" have received at the annual summit meeting of Heads of State and Government of the seven major industrialized nations. The communique issued at Halifax in June 1995 (A/50/254-S/1995/501, annex I) specifically declared the readiness of the Group of Seven to work with others in order to set out a fresh approach to international cooperation and to define the particular contribution expected of United Nations bodies.

13. At the same time, the ongoing series of global conferences on key issues of development was carried forward with the World Summit for Social Development, held in March 1995, at Copenhagen. On that occasion a start was made towards combined and effective action across borders to address poverty, unemployment and social disintegration. In Beijing, where the Fourth World Conference on Women will be held this September, the world will act upon the newly achieved recognition that the advancement of women is fundamentally critical to the solution of many of the world's most pressing social, economic and political problems. These conferences will be followed next year by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

14. A sustained, coordinated follow-up to those conferences, together with a renewed effort in support of African development, has been the main focus of extensive consultations I have held during the year with the heads of the Bretton Woods institutions and the executive heads of the other agencies represented in the Administrative Committee on Coordination. These are covered in the section of the report dealing with the work of the Secretariat, as well as in the chapter of the report dealing with development, humanitarian action and human rights as the foundations of peace, chapter III.

15. During the period covered by the present report, I have continued to emphasize the essential linkages between the political and development missions of the United Nations and to advance a comprehensive vision of the role of the Organization where the advancement of human rights and democracy are essential elements of both of those missions.

16. In parallel with the efforts to enhance the Organization's capacity in the field of peace and security and to introduce an improved conceptual framework for pursuing the Organization's development mission, reforms in the structures and methods of work of the Organization are gaining momentum.

17. To this end, I have put forward a management plan designed to create a mission-driven and result-oriented organization. In carrying out the plan, the achievement of five objectives is fundamental:

(a) Better management of human resources, together with improvement in staff member capabilities and accomplishments;

(b) Better management of the Organization's programme, from the identification of strategic priorities, through the budgetary process by which resources are allocated to achieve those priorities and finally through a performance measurement system by which programme managers are held accountable for achieving the strategic priorities;

(c) Better information with which to manage, and its timely availability;

(d) Better management of technology and extension of its availability throughout the Organization;

(e) Better management of the Organization's cost structure and an enhanced programme for promoting efficiency and cost-effectiveness.

18. Reforming the United Nations into a simpler, more focused and more integrated organization, capable of pursuing the different aspects of its mission in a mutually reinforcing way and in the most efficient manner possible, has continued to be a key objective of my efforts during the past year, as it has been since I took office in January 1992. As described in the report, the past 12 months have seen further tangible progress towards streamlining operations, strengthening accountability, tightening personnel and management standards, and eliminating waste and redundancy. I am, in this context, deeply committed to continuing to reduce the budget further while improving the quality of service to Member States.

19. In pursuing those efforts, I am keenly aware that Secretariat reform, to be truly effective, must be part of a larger restructuring effort including the intergovernmental machinery to adapt the Organization as a whole to the demands of the post-cold-war era. Such a process requires the determination and full commitment of all Member States.

20. A crucial component of that larger reform process should be the achievement of a more dynamic relationship among the main intergovernmental organs—the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. I hope that the account of developments in the work of those organs in chapter II of the present report will prove helpful in considering what adjustments and further improvements can be introduced in this regard.

21. Within the realm of activities covered by the Economic and Social Council, further steps to ensure more coherent management of operational activities carried out under the aegis of the various programmes and funds of the United Nations, as well as improved coordination of the humanitarian activities carried out by various parts of the Organization, are other essential elements of reform requiring renewed attention at the intergovernmental level.

22. In the same context, I am firmly convinced that no reform effort can succeed without addressing the basic issue of providing the Organization with a more adequate and reliable financial base. This issue is developed in chapter II of the present report, where I endeavour to highlight the seriousness of the financial crisis facing the Organization. The difficult financial situation is compounded by the continuing late payment of contributions by many Governments. It is increasingly proving to be the most serious obstacle to the effective management of the Organization. I therefore particularly appreciate the serious effort under way in the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the Organization, established during the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly, to devise constructive and long-lasting solutions in this crucial area.

23. Two other, related dimensions of the ongoing reform effort need to be highlighted and are given prominence in the present report.

24. One relates to the expansion in the depth and coverage of the assistance provided by the Organization to Member States in the process of democratization. Requests for electoral assistance continue to grow. Beyond this type of assistance, there is a growing demand for United Nations support in preparing the social, as well as institutional, ground in which democracy can take root. I hope that the development of a comprehensive approach to the role of the United Nations in these areas will be further advanced at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly, in the light of the report on the subject I have submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/30 of 7 December 1994 (A/50/332).

25. The past year has also deepened awareness that the efforts of States to democratize will have an increased likelihood of success when democratization extends to the international arena. The progressive opening of the United Nations to civil society is an important part of this process. Also in this respect, the global conferences held by the United Nations in recent years are making a crucial contribution. By bringing together State as well as non-State actors they are serving to create strong, worldwide, issue-based constituencies around key dimensions of development. The democratic nature of this conference series contributes immensely to the legitimacy and effectiveness of the programmes of action being adopted.

26. Indeed, the new world environment clearly demands more systematic cooperation between the United Nations and all other actors engaged in promoting political and economic security at all levels, whether they be regional or subregional organizations (progress in cooperation with these entities is covered in chapter IV of the present report), or non-State actors such as citizen groups, grass-roots movements and non-governmental organizations of all types. The strengthening of coordination and cooperation between these actors and the various elements of the United Nations system can serve only to enhance effectiveness in fulfilling the goals of the Charter. It also serves to reinforce democratic principles in world affairs and in the emerging international system.

27. I have sought in this report to provide a clear and comprehensive account of the work of the Organization as it helps Member States to make the transition to a new international era. I firmly believe that success in this great task requires nothing less than the full participation of all concerned—not only the United Nations and its Member States, but individuals, the private sector, the academic community and non-governmental, regional and international organizations. It is to inspire the widest reflection upon and assessment of the only world Organization at our disposal, and in accordance with Article 98 of the Charter of the United Nations, that I submit the present annual report.

II. Coordinating a comprehensive strategy

A. Organs of the United Nations

28. While pursuing an extremely heavy work schedule, the organs of the United Nations have consolidated reforms in their work programmes during this year, allowing for greater gains in efficiency.

1. General Assembly

29. During its forty-ninth session, the General Assembly has continued to focus on issues related to the maintenance of peace and security, economic and social development and strengthening and reform of the United Nations to enhance its ability to fulfil the goals of the Charter in a world that has changed dramatically since the Charter was drafted.

30. By comparison with 20 years ago, there has been a shift of emphasis. The Assembly now devotes somewhat less attention than it did then to the main regional conflicts, several of which have fortunately been resolved during the last decade, and devotes more time to economic and social matters and to a number of generic questions of primordial importance for the effective functioning of the Organization, notably a cluster of financial issues. These arise from the failure of Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time and from the enormous expansion in the cost of peace-keeping, which has risen from about $626 million per annum in 1986 to about $3.6 billion in 1995.

31. The Organization now faces a very serious financial situation. In a statement to the Assembly on 12 October 1994, I drew attention to this, emphasizing that it had become an urgent political question. I was gratified by the Assembly's subsequent decision to establish a high-level working group and to entrust to it the consideration of additional measures to ensure a sound and viable financial basis for the Organization. That working group has worked intensively during 1995. I addressed it on 22 June and sought its urgent assistance in averting a serious financial crisis. In parallel, the Assembly established another working group of experts on the principle of capacity to pay.

32. An index of the severity of the current problems is that the Organization as at January 1995 owed some $850 million to Governments who have contributed troops and equipment to peace-keeping operations. This debt represents an involuntary loan to the Organization by Member States who have in addition accepted the risk of exposing their young men and women to the perils of peace-keeping. This is manifestly unjust.

33. Another index is the number of Member States whose arrears exceed the contributions due for the last two years and who are therefore, under Article 19 of the Charter, unable to vote in the General Assembly. As at mid-August, they numbered 17, nearly 10 per cent of the membership. A number of other Member States have indicated to the President of the Assembly that they are not able to meet their obligations under Article 17 and will therefore also soon lose their right to vote.

34. As regards the financing of peace-keeping, the General Assembly reaffirmed at its forty-ninth session that the costs of peace-keeping are the collective responsibility of all Member States in accordance with Article 17 of the Charter. The Assembly also adopted procedures to strengthen the administrative and budgetary aspects of peace-keeping, including the establishment of a financial year for each peace-keeping operation starting on 1 July and a request to the Secretary-General to submit twice a year, for the Assembly's information, a table summarizing the proposed budgetary requirements of each operation.

35. Development continued to receive special attention from the General Assembly, emphasizing that the importance of this aspect of the Organization's activities should not be overshadowed by the intense public interest in its peace-keeping activities. The holding of three important United Nations conferences during a period of 12 months (on population and development in Cairo in September 1994, on social development in Copenhagen in March 1995 and on women in Beijing in September 1995) was evidence of the importance that Member States attach to the Organization's role in the economic and social fields.

36. On 6 May 1994, I published "An Agenda for Development" (A/48/935). In response the General Assembly established an ad hoc open-ended working group to elaborate further an action-oriented, comprehensive agenda that would take into account reports and recommendations presented by the Secretary-General, the work of the Economic and Social Council, views expressed in the Assembly itself and a number of other views and proposals.

37. The question of enlargement of the Security Council attracted intense interest throughout the period under review, as a possible means of making more efficient and democratic the work of the Organization in the field of peace and security. In September 1994 the General Assembly reviewed the progress report of the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and other matters related to the Security Council, and decided that the Working Group should continue its work and submit a report before the end of the forty-ninth session. The Working Group has held 21 meetings and a number of informal consultations and has addressed two clusters of issues, the first covering the size and composition of the Council, including permanent, non-permanent and new categories of membership, and the second the Council's working methods and procedures, its efficiency and effectiveness, and its relationship with other United Nations organs.

38. The Assembly has increasingly adopted the informal, open-ended working group as an effective instrument in seeking solutions to major problems relating to the efficient working of the Organization. These bodies, each comprising the entire membership, have been instrumental in allowing a concentrated and issue-specific exchange of views on Security Council reform, "An Agenda for Peace", "An Agenda for Development", the financial situation of the United Nations and, most recently, the strengthening of the United Nations system. The activities of these working groups, their interrelated mandates, the depth and complexity of their deliberations and the frequency of their meetings pose a challenge to the capacity of the Secretariat to provide the required substantive and technical support from within already scarce resources.

39. The agenda for the forty-ninth session comprised 164 items, a reduction from 180 items in the previous session (see fig. 1). This results from the consolidation of related items and the decision to discuss some of them only every second or third year. Further rationalization seems possible. Broadly worded agenda items allow flexibility to examine several topics or aspects of a question under a single item. Areas where this possibility could be explored are disarmament (18 items on the agenda of the forty-ninth session), cooperation between the United Nations and intergovernmental organizations (5), decolonization (5) and the financing of peace-keeping operations (19). There are also 10 items that have not been considered at all for several years.

40. An issue closely related to the number of items on the agenda is the number and periodicity of reports requested by the Assembly. In addition to the reports of principal organs and their subsidiary bodies, over 200 reports of the Secretary-General were issued at the forty-ninth session, not including several reports of special rapporteurs and of the Office of Internal Oversight Services. The difficulties and expense involved in producing so many reports in a timely manner are evident, given the frequency with which the Assembly and other principal and subsidiary organs now meet. Streamlining and cost-cutting efforts cannot ultimately succeed unless the number of reports requested is significantly reduced.

41. During the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly, its General Committee and its Main Committees held 377 meetings, as compared with a total of 401 during the forty-eighth session and 426 during the forty-seventh session. The Main Committees held 237 informal meetings and consultations, a decrease from the 285 held during the forty-eighth session. Meetings held by working groups increased to 141 from the previous session's 86. The Assembly has so far adopted 324 resolutions during its forty-ninth session, compared with 333 during the forty-eighth session. Some 79 per cent were adopted without a vote or by consensus, as compared with 81 per cent at the previous session. The number of Heads of State and Government who participated in the general debate of the Assembly rose from 43 (23 per cent of the membership) to 45 (24 per cent) at the forty-ninth session (see fig. 2).

2. Security Council

42. During the period under review, the Security Council has continued to meet, on an almost daily basis, to review the issues on its agenda, to warn about the threats to peace around the world, to call on antagonists to restrain their ardour for combat, to take various types of action to control and resolve conflicts, and to muster regional and international support for those measures (see fig. 3). Towards these objectives, the Security Council has demonstrated a determination to unify its ranks in order to address more effectively the various complex issues that confront it today. One of the Council's greatest contributions has been its patient and deliberate search for consensus within its own ranks. This positive trend has enabled Council members to approach the issues on its agenda with a greater degree of harmony and cohesion (see figs. 4 and 5).

43. The main focus of the Security Council's concern has been the former Yugoslavia and central Africa. In the former Yugoslavia the Council endeavoured to defuse the conflicts, prevent their further spread and mitigate their impact on civilian populations. To that end, it addressed many issues, including the changing peace-keeping role of the United Nations, humanitarian emergencies, mass violations of human rights and the difficult issues arising from the use of United Nations troops to protect humanitarian relief deliveries. The Council also offered active support to efforts by interested Member States, in particular those comprising the Contact Group, as well as the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, to bring about negotiated solutions to the conflicts in the region. The Council continued to make active use of mandatory sanctions as a means of achieving the above purposes. The Council's determination to ensure the resolution of the crises in a comprehensive way, as well as to strengthen cooperation between the United Nations and relevant regional organizations, in particular the European Union (EU) and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), still offers the best hope of bringing to an end the human tragedy in the former Yugoslavia.

44. At the beginning of the period under review, the Security Council had authorized the deployment of six major peace-keeping operations in Africa, more than in any other continent. Four of them remain, the one in Mozambique having completed its mandate with conspicuous success and the one in Somalia having been withdrawn after it had succeeded in its humanitarian efforts but had been denied the necessary cooperation of the Somali parties with efforts to promote national reconciliation. In addition to the four remaining peace-keeping operations, in Angola, Liberia, Rwanda and Western Sahara, the Council has been concerned with peace-making efforts in other African countries, especially Burundi and Sierra Leone. During the period under review the Council dispatched an unprecedented number of missions, all of them to African destinations: Burundi (twice), Mozambique, Rwanda, Somalia and Western Sahara. The conflicts in Africa, like those in the former Yugoslavia, are primarily internal, but they have major implications for the security of the subregions concerned. As in the former Yugoslavia, they have disastrous humanitarian consequences, and the Council has had to devote as much attention to alleviating the misery of the civilian populations affected as to efforts to control and resolve the conflicts. Cooperation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and with subregional organizations in Africa has been an important feature of the Security Council's efforts.

45. Seven sanctions regimes remain in effect and generate much work for the Council. In order to ensure the adequate servicing of the various sanctions committees and the expeditious processing by the Secretariat of applications for humanitarian supplies, I have reinforced the unit responsible in the Department of Political Affairs. For their part, the sanctions committees, drawing on their own experience, have initiated measures to streamline their working procedures and to ensure greater transparency in the conduct of their work in conformity with a set of measures decided by the Security Council (see S/1995/234).

46. Cooperation on sanctions with regional organizations has been important, with special reference to the contributions of the Organization of American States (OAS) in Haiti and of EU and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) in the former Yugoslavia. The temporary assignment of liaison officers from the EU/OSCE Sanctions Assistance Missions Communications Centre has provided the Secretariat and the relevant committees with customs expertise and with advice on the practical implementation and monitoring of sanctions. Member States could further assist the efforts of the committees and the Secretariat by screening more effectively their nationals' applications to the committees and by cooperating in further streamlining of the committees' procedures.

47. In order to ensure that sanctions remain a credible instrument for promoting international peace and security, Member States will need to address a range of problems encountered in the implementation of sanctions. Recommendations in this regard were put forward in my Supplement to "An Agenda for Peace" (A/50/60-S/1995/1).

48. The Security Council's methods of work received consideration during an extensive debate on the annual report of the Council to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session. Member States exchanged views on a broad range of issues related to the functioning of the Council. The Council made known its intention, as part of its efforts to improve the flow of information and the exchange of ideas between members of the Council and other Member States, to have increased recourse to open meetings, in particular at an early stage in its consideration of a subject, on a case-by-case basis. The Council has already initiated the holding of orientation debates. Briefings by the President of the Security Council for States non-members of the Council have become institutionalized.

49. In the face of persisting conflict in Africa, Europe and elsewhere, the Security Council has demonstrated that it remains committed to the goals of strengthening peaceful and cooperative relations between Member States and helping communities within States to live peacefully with one another, to rebuild and to work towards stable and productive societies.

50. It must be emphasized, however, that only if the decisions of the Security Council enjoy the full support of the international community, and only if the parties to the conflict carry out those decisions in full, can the Council fulfil its responsibilities under the Charter to maintain and consolidate international peace and security.

3. Economic and Social Council

51. The Economic and Social Council held its substantive session from 26 June to 28 July 1995 at Geneva. The Council's high-level segment dealt with one of the most pressing issues on the international agenda: the development of Africa. A spirit of partnership prevailed during the debate in the Council and conclusions were reached on conflict prevention and resolution, natural disasters, external debt, resource flows, trade, capacity-building, agriculture and food security, and other areas. The segment was attended by a large number of ministers and other high-level representatives. One day was devoted to a policy dialogue with Mr. Michel Camdessus, Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), Mr. James Wolfensohn, President of the World Bank, Mr. Renato Ruggiero, Director-General of the World Trade Organization, and Mr. Carlos Fortin, Officer-in-Charge of UNCTAD, on major issues in the world economy.

52. The Council's coordination segment addressed the coordinated follow-up and implementation of the results of major recent international conferences in the economic, social and related fields. The agreed conclusions envisage the integrated consideration by the General Assembly of themes common to those conferences with a view to promoting better coherence and integrated policy guidance. This may involve measures to improve the coherence of the work of the relevant Main Committees of the Assembly. The Council, for its part, decided to carry out an annual review of cross-cutting themes common to major international conferences and to take action to ensure the necessary coordination of agendas and work programmes of the functional commissions involved in the follow-up to the various international conferences. Attention was also given to measures for the strengthening of inter-agency coordination at the regional and country levels, and to the role of the resident coordinators in facilitating national reporting on progress achieved in the follow-up to global conferences. The Council invited the Administrative Committee on Coordination to bring system-wide coordination issues to the attention of the Council and to make recommendations thereon. Implementation of the agreed conclusions will enhance complementarity and coherence between the Council and the General Assembly, including their subsidiary bodies, as well as interaction between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization. The complementary steps initiated by the Administrative Committee on Coordination to pursue conference agendas within a common framework will promote unity of purpose and action in the United Nations system as a whole.

53. The operational activities segment began to exercise its new mandate to provide policy guidance to the United Nations funds and programmes. The guidance provided covers priorities in budget allocations, improved coherence in country programmes and improved cost-effectiveness of administrative services, including the possible use of common administrative services at the field level. The Council reaffirmed the need to increase substantially the availability of resources allocated to operational activities for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis commensurate with the needs of developing countries.

54. In line with these conclusions and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/199 of 22 December 1992, I will submit to the Assembly a range of specific recommendations, in the context of the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities, on further steps to strengthen the role of the Economic and Social Council in this field and on important subjects such as improved substantive operational coordination at the country level, increasing the predictability and levels of resources, strengthening the resident coordinator system and a variety of programme tools such as the country strategy note, the programme approach and national execution.

55. The Council initiated a review of arrangements for consultations with non-governmental organizations. By its resolution 1993/80, the Council established the Open-ended Working Group on the Review of Arrangements for Consultations with Non-Governmental Organizations. A primary objective is to update and introduce coherence in the rules governing the participation of non-governmental organizations in international conferences convened by the United Nations. The Council requested the Working Group to examine ways and means of improving practical arrangements for the work of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations and the Non-Governmental Organizations Unit of the Secretariat.

56. The Working Group held its first substantive session from 20 to 24 June 1994. An inter-session meeting took place on 7 and 8 November 1994. Its second substantive session was held from 8 to 12, 26 and 31 May 1995. At its substantive session, the Economic and Social Council approved the recommendation of the Working Group that its mandate be extended for one year and that its final report be presented to the Council at its substantive session of 1996.

57. In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1994/24, a Committee of Co-Sponsoring Organizations was constituted by the heads of the six co-sponsors of the joint programme on HIV/AIDS (the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization (WHO) and the World Bank) known as UNAIDS. As the United Nations system's main advocate for the global response to the HIV/AIDS epidemic, UNAIDS has three mutually reinforcing roles: to provide globally relevant policy on HIV/AIDS and promote international best practice and research; to provide technical support for an expanded response to HIV/AIDS, particularly in developing countries; and to advocate a comprehensive, multisectoral response to HIV/AIDS, well-resourced and strategically, ethically and technically sound.

58. At its second meeting, on 12 December 1994, the Committee of Go-Sponsoring Organizations unanimously recommended Dr. Peter Piot as director of the UNAIDS programme and the Secretary-General appointed Dr. Piot as Executive Director for a period of three years starting on 1 January 1995. On 5 May, the Economic and Social Council decided on the regional distribution of seats for 22 Member States to be represented on the Programme Coordinating Board of UNAIDS. It decided that each of the six co-sponsoring organizations, as well as five non-governmental organizations, would participate in the work of the Board. The Board held its first meeting on 13 and 14 July at Geneva.

59. The Commission for Social Development began its consideration of arrangements for the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development's Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action at its thirty-fourth session, held in New York from 10 to 20 April 1995. The Economic and Social Council concluded that the scope and methods of work of the Commission should be adapted to enable it to play a more effective role in promoting an integrated approach to social development in the aftermath of the World Summit. It decided that the Commission should hold a special session in 1996 to review from this perspective its mandate, terms of reference and scope of work, elaborate a multi-year programme of work and make recommendations to the Council on the frequency of the Commission's meetings.

60. During its session the Commission also heard the first report of Mr. Bengt Lindqvist, the Special Rapporteur on the Monitoring of the Standard Rules for the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities. The Commission also started preparations for the International Year of Older Persons, to be observed in 1999, and advanced the preparations of a world programme of action for youth, to be adopted by the General Assembly during its fiftieth session.

61. The Commission on Sustainable Development held its third session, including its high-level segment, in New York from 11 to 28 April 1995. More than 40 ministers attended, holding portfolios such as the environment, forestry, agriculture, tourism, development and finance. Fifty-five Governments submitted national reports on their activities in support of sustainable development by the twenty-first century. The session included panel discussions between senior officials from Governments, international financial institutions, United Nations agencies and programmes, the business community and non-governmental organizations. Two days were dedicated to the sharing of national experiences in implementing Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in June 1992, and a "Day of Local Authorities" examined grass-roots efforts to achieve sustainable development. These initiatives received welcome support from the large number of non-governmental organizations attending the session, who see in the Commission a transparent and participatory mechanism for addressing sustainable development concerns, including those at the national and community levels. The Commission agreed to establish an intergovernmental panel to formulate by 1997 coordinated proposals for action with regard to the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forest. The Commission also endorsed work programmes on consumption and production patterns, the elaboration of sustainable development indicators and the transfer of environmentally sound technology.

62. The concluding high-level segment (26-28 April) of the Commission addressed challenges on the path towards the full implementation of Agenda 21. The Chairman's summary noted that the insufficiency of the financial resources available to support national efforts, particularly in developing countries and economies in transition, remains a continuing constraint to achieving sustainable development.

63. The Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development, a subsidiary expert body of the Economic and Social Council, held a special session on rural development from 6 to 17 February. It proposed a strategy that would include development of national sustainable energy action programmes for agricultural and rural development; priority for rural energy development; capacity-building in rural energy development; new directions in management and institutional arrangements; new financial and investment arrangements; accelerated development and implementation of new technologies; new international actions for rural energy development; and strengthening of sustainable energy activities within the United Nations system. The Commission on Sustainable Development agreed at its April 1995 session to encourage Governments to integrate renewable forms of energy into their national strategies for sustainable and rural development. It urged Governments to support efforts of interested developing countries towards the sustainable use of an appropriate mix of fossil and renewable sources of energy for rural communities.

64. The Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace is intended to coalesce reflection about the advancement of women and propose new directions into the twenty-first century. During the autumn of 1994 regional preparatory meetings were held in four regions, a number of expert group meetings on specific themes were organized and informal consultations were held with Member States on the draft of the platform for action. From 16 March to 7 April, the Commission on the Status of Women, acting as preparatory committee for the Conference, met and continued negotiations on the platform for action. Subsequent to the session, the focus shifted to promoting participation by Governments and non-governmental organizations in the Conference, ensuring public information about it and supporting the inter-governmental negotiation process. From 31 July to 4 August, informal consultations were convened by the chairperson of the Commission to continue negotiations. The Conference preparations have involved the largest number of non-governmental organizations ever accredited for a United Nations conference and a major effort has been made to facilitate their participation in the process.

65. The Division for the Advancement of Women completed, as conference documents, two major studies, one entitled "Women in a Changing Global Economy: The 1994 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development", and the second a review and appraisal of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women. In-depth studies of women and education and training, women in international decision-making and women in economic decision-making were also completed. Steps have been taken to ensure that the relevant human rights mechanisms of the United Nations regularly address violations of the rights of women, including gender-specific abuses, through provision of gender-based information to treaty bodies, work on the development of an optional protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and work on guidelines for integrating gender into human rights monitoring.

66. The issue of how best to ensure advancement of women in the work of the Secretariat and the United Nations system as a whole is one of the major areas central to the Conference and its follow-up. The institutional mechanisms for this are being reviewed internally and by Governments of Member States.

4. Trusteeship Council

67. In 1994, with the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement for the last Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and Palau's admission as the 185th Member of the United Nations, the Trusteeship Council completed the task entrusted to it under the Charter with respect to the 11 Territories that had been placed under the Trusteeship System. The other 10, the majority of them in Africa and the Pacific, had already attained independence, either as separate States or by joining neighbouring States. The Trusteeship Council thereupon amended its rules of procedure and will in future meet only as and where occasion may require.

68. In a letter dated 2 June 1995 addressed to me (A/50/142), the Permanent Representative of Malta requested, on behalf of his Government, that the General Assembly include an item entitled "Review of the role of the Trusteeship Council" in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session. The Government of Malta would like the Assembly to consider transforming the Council's role so that, in addition to its role under the Charter, the Council would hold in trust for humanity its common heritage and common concerns.

69. In my 1994 annual report on the work of the Organization, I recommended that the General Assembly proceed with steps to eliminate the organ, in accordance with Article 108 of the Charter. I regret that no decision to abolish the Trusteeship Council has been taken.

5. International Court of Justice

70. The International Court of Justice at The Hague is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations and, as such, holds important responsibilities in the settlement of disputes of a legal nature.

71. In 1994-1995, the Court continued to have a record number of 13 cases before it. Eleven were contentious cases in which the parties were States from different parts of the world. Two were requests for an advisory opinion, one submitted by the World Health Organization (WHO) and the other by the General Assembly.

72. In the period under review, judgments have been given in two cases, in one of which hearings were held. In a third case, hearings have been postponed. In other cases a great number of pleadings have been filed within the prescribed time-limits. One contentious case and one request for an advisory opinion were brought before the Court.

73. The hearings in the case concerning the Aerial Incident of 3 July 1988 (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America), scheduled to take place in September, were postponed sine die at the joint request of the two parties.

74. Written comments were filed by several States by 20 June 1995, the time-limit fixed by the President of the Court by an Order of 20 June 1994 on written statements submitted in connection with the request by WHO for an advisory opinion on the Legality of the Use by a State of Nuclear Weapons in Armed Conflict. The written proceedings are thus closed.

75. In December 1994, the General Assembly laid before the Court a request for an advisory sory opinion on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons. In February 1995, an Order was made fixing two time-limits, one within which written statements relating to the question might be submitted to the Court by States entitled to appear before the Court and by the United Nations, and one within which States and organizations having presented written statements might present written comments on the other written statements. Written statements have been filed by a number of States. Written comments are expected by 20 September 1995.

76. Public sittings for the purpose of hearing oral statements or comments will open on 30 October 1995. These oral proceedings will cover the requests for advisory opinion submitted by WHO and the General Assembly.

77. As each of the parties in the case concerning the Gabcikovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia) had filed a counter-memorial within the prescribed time-limit of December 1994, the President of the Court, also in December, made an Order fixing the time-limit for the filing of a reply by each of the parties. Each party having filed its reply within the prescribed time-limit, the written proceedings are now closed.

78. In the case concerning Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain), the Court, in July 1994, had delivered a judgment in which it found that the exchange of letters of December 1987 between the King of Saudi Arabia and the Amirs of Qatar and Bahrain, and the minutes signed at Doha on 25 December 1990, were international agreements creating rights and obligations for the parties, and that, by the terms of those agreements, the parties had undertaken to submit to it the whole of the dispute. The Court fixed 30 November 1994 as the time-limit within which the parties were jointly or separately to take action to that end and reserved any other matters for subsequent decision.

79. In February 1995, the Court delivered a judgment by which it found that it had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute between Qatar and Bahrain that had been submitted to it; that it was seized of the whole of the dispute; and that the application of Qatar as formulated on 30 November 1994 was admissible. In April the Court issued an Order fixing a time-limit for the filing by each of the parties of a memorial on the merits.

80. Hearings in the case concerning East Timor (Portugal v. Australia) were held in January and February 1995. On 30 June, the Court delivered its judgment, by which it found that it could not, in the absence of the consent of Indonesia, adjudicate upon the dispute referred to it by Portugal concerning a treaty of December 1989 between Australia and Indonesia on exploitation of the continental shelf of the so-called "Timor Gap".

81. In the case concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)), the President of the Court, in March, made an Order extending the time-limit for the filing of the counter-memorial of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) filed preliminary objections in June 1995 relating to admissibility and jurisdiction. In July 1995, the President of the Court made an Order fixing the time-limit for the filing by Bosnia and Herzegovina of observations on the preliminary objections, proceedings on the merits having been suspended by operation of the Rules of Court.

82. In the cases concerning Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) and Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States of America), the respondent States filed preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court on 16 and 20 June respectively.

83. On 28 March 1995, Spain instituted proceedings against Canada with respect to a dispute relating to the Canadian Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, as amended on 12 May 1994, and to the rules of application of that Act, as well as to certain measures taken on the basis of that legislation, more particularly the boarding on the high seas, on 9 March, of a fishing boat, the Estai, sailing under the Spanish flag. Taking into account the agreement concerning the procedure reached between the parties at a meeting with the President of the Court, held on 27 April, the President, by an Order of 2 May, decided that the written proceedings should first be addressed to the question of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute and fixed time-limits for the filing of the memorial of Spain and the counter-memorial of Canada.

84. By a letter dated 9 August, the Government of New Zealand gave the Court formal advance notice of its intention to bring France before the Court in connection with the French nuclear testing in the South Pacific.

85. Because of the new cases mentioned above, the Court's docket has remained well-filled. Besides the cases referred to, the following were on the Court's list during the period under review:

- (a) Maritime Delimitation between Guinea-Bissau and Senegal (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal);
- (b) Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America);

(c) Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria).

86. Following the death, on 28 September 1994, of Mr. Nikolai K. Tarassov (Russian Federation), Mr. Vladlen S. Vereshchetin (Russian Federation) was elected to fill the resulting vacancy on 26 January 1995. The vacancy created by the death, on 24 February, of Mr. Roberto Ago (Italy) was filled by the election, on 21 June, of Mr. Luigi Ferrari Bravo (Italy). The vacancy created by the resignation, as at 10 July, of Sir Robert Yewdall Jennings (United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland) was filled by the election, on 12 July, of Mrs. Rosalyn Higgins (United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland).

6. Secretariat

87. The purpose of my management plan is to create a mission-driven and result-oriented Organization, with specific goals of enhanced performance, better productivity and increased cost-effectiveness. The foundation of the management plan is the new system of accountability and responsibility that I have established. The system is designed to create a new management culture, assisting and supporting programme managers in achieving the strategic objectives of the Organization and in executing legislative mandates. In effect, the new system of accountability and responsibility empowers managers with the freedom to manage—streamlining administrative procedures, introducing considerable decentralization and delegation, allowing greater flexibility in the management of resources and encouraging greater innovation and initiative.

88. The first of the five major objectives is better management of human resources, together with improvement in staff capabilities and accomplishments. An entirely new strategy for human resources was introduced in the Organization and subsequently endorsed by the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session. The implementation of the system will modernize and reform the management of human resources. Among the components of this new system is a new work planning and performance appraisal system, which is based on staff/management-agreed work outputs and performance measurements.

89. The strategy is based on the need to access the continuously changing and evolving role of the Organization and the requirement to respond progressively to changing needs with a breadth and depth of skills. The strategy involves a concerted effort to provide career training that meets changing staff needs. There is also the need, as a management tool, for active implementation of an attrition programme. An early separation programme for staff at various levels in both the Professional and General Service categories will contribute to an adaptable staff with a varied skills mix, leading to greater effectiveness and efficiency in the context of constantly changing demands on the Secretariat. Lastly, a total remake of the adjudication process has begun, replacing litigation of staff/management issues with an informal dispute-reconciliation process or timely and time-saving arbitral disposition.

90. Vigorous efforts are being made by the Office of Human Resources Management to integrate goals and targets for improvement in the status of women into the overall strategy. The adoption of a proactive, more people-centred human resource strategy has been conducive to achieving this goal. The percentage of women in posts subject to geographical distribution is continually rising and at the end of July 1995 stood at 33.6 per cent, up from 32.6 per cent at the end of June 1994. During the same period 51.42 per cent of all promotions were those of women.

91. The second objective is better management of the Organization's programme from the identification of strategic priorities, through the budgetary process by which resources are allocated to achieve those priorities and through a performance measurement system by which programme managers are held accountable for achieving the strategic priorities. Clearer lines of responsibility and greater managerial accountability characterize the new format for the medium-term plan, the Organization's basic strategic document. The new format of the medium-term plan provides for clearly defined objectives and emphasizes full congruence between the identified programmes and the departments responsible for their implementation. The process of managerial responsibility and accountability has been considerably tightened through improved linkage between programmes, budgets and performance measurement. Financial congruence has been achieved at each step in planning and execution. Member States will now be able to tell what is to be done, who is responsible for doing it and what is accomplished.

92. Third is better information with which to manage and its timely availability. Work continued in 1994 and 1995 on the development of the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS), which aims at modernizing and enhancing the internal flow and use of management information in such areas as human resources, finance, accounts and procurement. The IMIS project represents an ambitious effort to make good, through one massive effort, 30 years of neglect in upgrading existing electronic data-processing systems. The system is a revolutionary step towards the electronic integration of all of the offices of the Organization performing administrative tasks regardless of location. The first two releases of the system, the human resource components, were fully and successfully implemented at Headquarters. The other releases—accounts, finance and procurement—will be gradually phased in during the next year, with the whole system operational worldwide by the end of 1997.

93. Fourth is management of technology and extension of its availability throughout the Organization. Technology, with its potential for improved services and greater cost-effectiveness, will also facilitate the role of Conference Services. Technological advances in communication and networking, text-processing, desktop publishing, translation and document tracking have provided savings. Further expansion of the United Nations telecommunication network will produce additional savings for the United Nations system as a whole. The optical disk system, now being expanded to accommodate increasing user demand, offers easy, high-speed electronic access to United Nations documents. The development of remote translation and text-processing techniques has brought down the cost of holding meetings away from established headquarters by reducing the staff required on-site. As a result, the number of staff who travelled to the Cairo Conference was significantly reduced from that of previous conferences, and no translators will be going to the Beijing Conference.

94. The fifth objective is better management of the Organization's cost structure and an enhanced programme for cost-effectiveness. The budget process is being used to drive the Organization to a higher level of efficiency. The proposed 1996-1997 programme budget is smaller than the budget for the biennium 1994-1995. The proposals include the abolition of 201 posts, offset in part by the proposed creation of 66 new posts in priority areas of peace-keeping, international and regional cooperation for development, drug control, crime prevention, population, human rights and humanitarian affairs and internal oversight. The aggregate reduced spending will be achieved through more cost-effective ways of implementing mandates, rationalizing work programmes and technological innovations. The proposed reductions were achieved without curtailment of mandated activities. At the same time, efficiency gains of $35 million have been proposed throughout the Secretariat without compromising the quality of programme outputs.

95. Identifying efficiency gains is now a key component of management planning. The first phase of this programme has concentrated on the simplification of existing procedures: redefining work programmes, improving productivity, substituting lower cost alternatives, streamlining staff requirements and reducing overheads.

96. The next phase will concentrate on the elimination of duplication and overlap in programme delivery and the elimination of programmes without a mandate and programmes that do not return adequate value to Member States.

97. An Efficiency Board, chaired by the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management, Mr. Joseph Connor, will identify during the next biennium further significant opportunities for cost containment beyond those proposed in the 1996-1997 budget. These will include removing overregulating procedures in the personnel, finance and purchasing areas, eliminating duplicate efforts between Headquarters and other duty stations, and studying "outsourcing" alternatives.

98. Procedures are being revised for better transparency and fairness of procurement efforts. Some steps already taken, or in the initial phase, include the extension of basic professional procurement training; revised delegation of procurement authority for peace-keeping missions; institution of global system/blanket contracts; review and updating of the vendor roster; and establishment of the office of ombudsman, to which all vendors may address complaints.

99. In its first year of operations, the Office of Internal Oversight Services, headed by Under-Secretary-General Mr. Karl-Theodor Paschke, has provided the United Nations with oversight coverage, promoting effective and efficient programme management. The Office also finds and reports on instances of waste, fraud and mismanagement. I look forward to the findings and conclusions of the first annual report of the Office, to be submitted to the General Assembly in September 1995.

100. The Office of Legal Affairs, headed by Mr. Hans Corell, has been heavily involved in legal work related to the continued expansion and diversification of the activities of the Security Council, ranging from the establishment of a new international criminal tribunal to establishing new peace-keeping missions and winding down others.

101. During the period under review, the Office was involved in current operations such as those in Angola, Georgia, Guatemala, Haiti, Mozambique, Rwanda, Somalia, Tajikistan, Western Sahara and the former Yugoslavia. Legal officers from the Office have served as legal advisers in a number of those operations.

102. The Office of Legal Affairs is involved in the implementation of various aspects of Security Council decisions. It has assisted in the drafting and interpretation of status-of-forces agreements and status-of-mission agreements and given advice to operational departments. The Office has developed modalities and instruments for the procurement of necessary systems, facilities, equipment and services required for peace-keeping and other activities. Particular attention was given to the rights of contractors and to third-party claims arising out of Chapter VII operations.

103. Novel issues of international humanitarian law have arisen during the period under review. The Office has provided advice and opinions in relation to the detention of United Nations personnel in Bosnia and the treatment of Bosnian prisoners by United Nations forces. The progress towards a referendum in Western Sahara has required legal assistance in the preparation of a code of conduct for the referendum campaign.

104. The Office of Legal Affairs advised on the question of setting up an international judicial commission to investigate the Burundi coup d'etat of 1993 and on the proposed establishment of a commission of inquiry or truth in Burundi. The Office assisted in the drafting of the terms of reference of the International Commission of Inquiry to investigate the events at Kibeho, Rwanda.

105. The Office contributed to filling a gap in United Nations practice, highlighted following a United Nations inquiry into a 1993 massacre of civilians in Liberia, by preparing a set of guidelines for United Nations investigations into allegations of massacres. The Secretary-General has approved the guidelines for publication and circulation.

106. The establishment by the Security Council of international tribunals dealing with serious violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda raises difficult and complex legal issues. The Office of Legal Affairs is providing legal and administrative support to the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. The Office played a central role in launching the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda by providing advice on the drafting of the statute and rules of procedure and evidence and by providing the initial budget for the administrative and financial support from Headquarters, coordinating a technical mission to the field in order to negotiate a headquarters and lease agreement for its premises and preparing reports on the seat of the Tribunal.

107. At its past session, the General Assembly established an ad hoc committee open to all States to review substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute for an international criminal court elaborated by the International Law Commission. The ad hoc committee held a first series of meetings in April 1995 focusing on the following subjects: establishment and composition of the Court, applicable law and jurisdiction, exercise of jurisdiction, methods of proceedings (due process), relationship between States parties and the Court, and budget and administration. While progress has been made in the consideration of these issues, the ad hoc committee agreed to hold a second series of meetings from 14 to 25 August. Its report will be before the General Assembly at its forthcoming fiftieth session.

108. The continuation of economic sanctions and other measures against Iraq, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya requires monitoring and assistance by the Office and advice to the various sanctions committees. In the case of Iraq, the Office advises on the scope of mandates under relevant Security Council resolutions, such as those concerning compensation to Iraqi farmers relocated from Kuwait and the return of Kuwaiti property. The Office is supporting the work of the Compensation Commission, which has been carrying out an impressive amount of work in processing claims, and will soon examine the more complex and larger claims of corporations and Governments.

109. The Office of Legal Affairs is ensuring consistency in the implementation of General Assembly decisions on the participation of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and its status throughout the United Nations system. The question lies at the intersection between international law and United Nations political decisions on sensitive issues.

110. The Office of Legal Affairs was responsible for the organization and agenda of the United Nations Congress on Public International Law, held from 13 to 17 March in New York, under the general theme "Towards the Twenty-First Century: International Law as a Language for International Relations". Some 571 scholars and professionals from 126 countries attended the event, which marked the mid-point of the United Nations Decade of International Law. International lawyers exchanged views on such issues as the progressive development of international law and its codification; research, education and training in international law; and the challenges expected in the twenty-first century.

111. The Office of Legal Affairs provides advice relating to the technical aspects of treaties and treaty law. The information in the Multilateral Treaties deposited with the Secretary-General is electronically updated daily. Outdated and disparate laws governing international trade pose an obstacle to the maintenance and expansion of trade links. The success of economic and social reforms currently under way in many States depends on the adoption of adequate laws that facilitate international trade. The Office of Legal Affairs is assisting the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) to elaborate modern and harmonized trade laws as well as non-legislative texts aimed at facilitating international trade. Issues recently addressed are the draft convention on independent bank guarantees and stand-by letters of credit, and the use of electronic data interchange in international trade.

112. The United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea calls for the establishment of three new institutions subsequent to the entry into force of the Convention: the International Seabed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf. The Office of Legal Affairs convened and serviced the first and second parts of the first session of the Assembly of the International Seabed Authority, held from 16 to 18 November 1994 and from 27 February to 17 March 1995, respectively, at Kingston. The third and final part of the Assembly was held also at Kingston from 7 to 18 August.

113. Pursuant to the mandate provided by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/28 of 6 December 1994, the Office of Legal Affairs convened the first part and serviced the first and second parts of the Meeting of States Parties to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, held in November 1994 and May 1995 in New York, relating to the organization of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. The Meeting agreed on the approach to be taken in the establishment of the Tribunal and its initial functions. The Office is involved in the preparation of the draft budget, which will be submitted to the next Meeting of States Parties, to be held from 27 November to 1 December 1995 in New York.

114. The Office of Legal Affairs is carrying out preparatory work regarding the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf. Following the 1993 findings of an ad hoc group of experts that examined the relevant provisions of the Convention on the definition of the continental shelf, the Office prepared background notes, initiated cooperative arrangements with competent international organizations and is in the process of convening a group of experts to deal with the composition and work programme of the Commission, scheduled to meet from 11 to 14 September in New York.

115. The United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks concluded its substantive work on 4 August with the consensus adoption of an Agreement for the Implementation of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks. The Conference decided to hold a formal signature ceremony on 4 December. The Office of Legal Affairs convened and serviced the fifth and sixth sessions of the Conference, from 27 March to 12 April and from 24 July to 4 August, respectively, in New York.

116. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/28, the Office of Legal Affairs is strengthening the system for the collection, compilation and dissemination of information on the law of the sea and developing an integrated database on legislation and marine policy, as well as establishing a system for notifying Member States and relevant international organizations of information submitted by States and intergovernmental bodies.

117. The Department of Public Information, headed by Mr. Samir Sanbar, is seeking to surmount resource constraints by engaging in closer professional cooperation with other bodies of the United Nations system, especially UNDP, UNICEF and UNFPA.

118. A coordinated and unified public information strategy aimed at increasing public understanding and support for the United Nations has become of crucial importance for the Organization's peace-keeping and other political missions. The Department of Public Information has formed an interdepartmental working group consisting of those departments playing a leading role in such field operations with a view to developing practical proposals for informational projects.

119. To convey an accurately balanced view of United Nations activities, the Department has made a special effort to highlight economic and social development activities and issues, in particular the recent major United Nations conferences held in Cairo, Copenhagen and Beijing, and the forthcoming Habitat II Conference in Istanbul. Focal points have been established within the Department for each conference to design, in cooperation with the substantive departments concerned, public information strategies and programmes that are budgeted jointly. Assessment of post-conference feedback has shown the value of this multifaceted approach to the promotion of international conferences.

120. A major new activity of the Department's publishing programme is the Secretary-General's Blue Books Series. The Series describes the role the United Nations has played in some of the pivotal peace operations and other international issues of our time. Each volume in the Series encapsulates—in an overview provided by the Secretary-General—how the United Nations marshalled international forces, opinion or consensus to achieve objectives in such areas as the struggle against apartheid, the drive to stop the proliferation of nuclear weapons and the promotion of human rights. Blue Books on peace operations in Cambodia, El Salvador and Mozambique have been published. The United Nations and the Advancement of Women was published in August 1995 and made available for the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing. Some 17 titles are currently planned for publication.

121. The Department's dissemination of information to direct users and redissemulators has been enhanced by modern technology and techniques, including the use of several electronic networks. On the Internet, for example, can be found the Department's database containing important United Nations documentation and publications. These materials reach their audiences in electronic form at enormous speed and are accessed by an average of 16,000 users daily. On the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Charter of the United Nations at San Francisco on 26 June 1995, the Department launched the "UN Home Page" on the World Wide Web. This pilot project provides instantaneous information to Internet users in a multimedia service format consisting of text, graphics and sound. Examples of its contents include basic information about the United Nations and its history, press releases, documents, publications and photos, as well as pictorial highlights of the guided tour of Headquarters. To make documentation accessible to a wider audience, the United Nations Bibliographic Information System (UNBIS Plus) has been produced on CD-ROM.

122. Radio is one of the most cost-effective and penetrating media available to the Department, which is improving access by United Nations Radio to airwaves worldwide. Currently, 29 programmes in 15 languages are being sent to broadcasters in over 180 countries. The Department also operates an electronic radio news service in English, French and Spanish that facilitates access by broadcasters to news programmes updated twice daily and is accessible through regular telephone lines.

123. The Department continues with the help of new technologies to reach its goals to explore the huge potential represented by television audiences. For instance, the Department transmitted "Year in Review" via satellite to broadcasters around the world in the six official languages. The programme was received and retransmitted by major broadcasters in over 24 countries, representing a total potential audience of over 360 million television households. This satellite transmission proved to be an extremely quick and cost-effective distribution channel and represented the largest audience ever reached by the programme.

124. In connection with the fiftieth anniversary, the Department initiated a major campaign of television spots. A series of 40 "UN Minutes" were produced, charting the history and accomplishments of the Organization. In addition, a series of "Question and Answer" quiz announcements were made. These television spots have been aired on both domestic and international Cable News Network channels, and by Time Warner Cable Company on many channels in the New York area. The Department thus obtained several million dollars worth of free air time donated by these two companies alone.

125. Responsibility for the Department's global outreach activities is assumed in large part by the network of information centres and services located in 68 countries around the world. They perform both a passive information role in dealing with a mounting volume of inquiries and requests for information, and an active role in engaging in a wide variety of contacts in pursuance of their mandate. As an example of the latter role, the centres have been the catalyst for the creation of approximately 80 national committees for the observance of the fiftieth anniversary.

126. The United Nations Office at Geneva, under its Director-General, Mr. Vladimir Petrovsky, continues to provide administrative and logistical support to Geneva-based United Nations programmes and activities in human rights, humanitarian operations, trade and development, as well as major environment, disarmament and security-related matters.

127. There is a growing demand from Member States to visit the United Nations Office at Geneva to establish or explore further cooperation between their countries and Geneva-based specialized agencies and programmes. Seven official visits were organized for that purpose and included the Heads of State or Government of Guatemala, Italy, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Lithuania, Slovenia and Tunisia. These exchanges are a major factor in consolidating the Office's role in the region and beyond.

128. Activities with regional organizations increased throughout the year. A number of tripartite meetings took place with the participation of the Council of Europe, OSCE and the United Nations, represented by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Centre for Human Rights. During the course of the year, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) was also associated with the meetings, which dealt with humanitarian issues in Europe.

129. Dialogue with Member States of the region contributed to the organizing of national committees for the United Nations fiftieth anniversary, important activities at the national level and joint projects included in the Geneva programme for the fiftieth anniversary. In that respect, cooperation with the host country and Geneva authorities, including major building projects to meet the needs of the United Nations Office at Geneva, was particularly fruitful.

130. The United Nations Office at Geneva continues to host an increasingly large number of meetings. From September 1994 to March 1995,

1,775 meetings were serviced with interpretation (including 154 meetings outside Geneva) and 2,455 without interpretation (including 105 meetings outside Geneva). During the period from April to August 1995, 1,354 meetings were planned to be held with interpretation (including 148 meetings outside Geneva) and 1,760 without interpretation (including 68 meetings outside Geneva).

131. In addition to servicing the Office's established bodies, the Palais des Nations hosted a number of important political or peace-keeping-related meetings, such as the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, the Compensation Commission, the meetings of the Georgia/Abkhazia parties and the Commission of Experts on Rwanda. The United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre for Science and Technology for Development were transferred to Geneva in 1993/94, and the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the Commission on Science and Technology for Development held regular sessions producing important documentation. The increasing activities of the Centre for Human Rights will give rise to new committees and/or working groups, which will meet at the United Nations Office at Geneva. These developments will require careful management of the allocation of facilities.

132. The Office has been involved in United Nations work on the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia; the Georgia/Abkhazia conflict; the meetings between Portugal and Indonesia concerning East Timor under the good offices of the Secretary-General; the talks on Yemen; and discussions on biological, conventional and nuclear weapons. The Office has also been involved with the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), UNCTAD and the United Nations Compensation Commission, and has provided support for the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Assistance Mission in Rwanda (UNAMIR), round tables organized by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs for a number of countries in Africa and Asia, and working groups of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR).

133. During this period the round table set up by the Director-General, with the participation of senior and staff representatives of all Geneva-based organs and programmes, made recommendations aimed at strengthening and simplifying security arrangements, as well as achieving a larger degree of control over documentation, with the ultimate goal of sizeably reducing its volume.

134. The Office has conducted two main studies aimed at identifying areas of duplication and overlap in the administrative sector within the Office, as well as between the Office and various

United Nations entities and programmes located at Geneva. The first phase of a management study led to a greater delegation of authority between Headquarters and Geneva in the personnel and budget/finance fields. Such delegation will not only sizeably reduce duplication and overlap, but will also allow for more timely processing of administrative actions at Geneva. The next phase of the management study will finalize administrative arrangements at Geneva and determine the relationship between the various entities. The second study, a work-flow analysis conducted in the context of the future introduction of IMIS at Geneva, has just been completed. By the end of the year, the reorganization will be almost completed, permitting the Office to respond more efficiently to the increasing demands placed upon it by Member States of the region and the Organization as a whole.

135. Also located at Geneva, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) has completed its restructuring process as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/227 of 8 April 1993. This year UNITAR completed a training programme in international affairs management, including peacemaking and preventive diplomacy, environmental law and policy, and a fellowship in international law. In addition, the UNITAR training programme for the management of economic and social development has been reorganized. The aim of the programme now is to upgrade the professional skills of human resources in specific fields and to put the UNITAR training initiative at the service of multilateral and bilateral cooperation agencies, in particular the secretariats of organizations in charge of facilitating the implementation of international legal instruments. The coming years are likely to see a consolidation of UNITAR training and capacity-building activities, while research programmes are progressively discontinued. It is hoped that Member States will ensure the long-term continuity of the Institute.

136. The United Nations Office at Vienna, headed by the Director-General, Mr. Giorgio Giacomelli, provides administrative support to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and other United Nations activities based at Vienna, serves functions related to crime prevention and cooperation in space activities, and is an important meeting place and support centre for peace-keeping operations. From 1 July 1994 to 1 July 1995, a total of 2,209 meetings were planned and serviced at Vienna.

137. Beginning 1 April 1995, after extensive negotiations, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and the United Nations Office at Vienna merged conference planning, coordinating and language and servicing capabilities to form a Unified Conference Service under the Office's management. A number of seminars, training courses and technical cooperation projects have taken place; others are being planned or are being implemented.

138. The Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the United Nations Office at Vienna has promoted international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice and provided assistance to Member States on problems of both national and transnational crime. The Office organized the International Conference on Preventing and Controlling Money Laundering and the Use of the Proceeds of Crime: A Global Approach (Courmayeur, Italy, 18-20 June 1994), the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime (Naples, Italy, 21-23 November 1994) and the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Cairo, 29 April-8 May 1995).

139. The World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime adopted the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/159 of 23 December 1994. In the Declaration, Heads of State and Government, ministers responsible for criminal justice systems and other high-level representatives of Governments expressed their resolve to protect their societies from organized crime through effective legislative measures and operational instruments. The Global Action Plan emphasized that the United Nations should facilitate the provision of technical cooperation, including the systematic exchange of experience and expertise, by drafting legislation, providing special training for criminal justice officials and gathering, analysing and exchanging information.

140. The Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders found that new forms and dimensions of crime and the links among criminal organizations threatened the security and stability of States and made global action imperative. The Congress discussed four substantive topics and held six demonstration and research workshops that permitted a more technical consideration of priority issues of direct concern to Member States. The discussion on combating corruption involving public officials attracted considerable attention and a number of recommendations were proposed. The plenary meeting on technical cooperation assessed the progress achieved and problems encountered in operational activities. Member States, in particular developing countries and countries in transition, discussed their needs for assistance from the United Nations and the international community.

141. The work of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch was oriented towards operational activities and technical assistance, in particular for developing countries and countries in transition. The Branch focused its efforts on the promotion of effective and fair criminal justice systems based on the rule of law, taking account of United Nations norms, standards and model treaties. It provided assistance to Member States, upon request, in legislative and criminal justice reform, the elaboration and implementation of criminal codes and international treaties, the planning and formulation of national criminal justice policies and strategies, and the establishment of information networks and databases. The programme also contributed to peace-keeping and peacemaking missions of the United Nations by assisting in building legal and criminal justice infrastructures, and providing support to the missions and countries concerned. Two interregional advisers provided advisory services to various countries, carried out needs assessment missions and developed project proposals.

142. The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the body responsible for policy guidance in this field, meets annually at Vienna. At its fourth session, held from 30 May to 9 June 1995, the Commission addressed the conclusions and recommendations of the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, as well as of the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime. It recommended follow-up measures to the conclusions of the Congress and to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan adopted by the Conference. All recommendations of the Commission were approved by the Economic and Social Council during its substantive session, held at Geneva from 26 June to 28 July 1995.

143. The Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch cooperated closely with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Centre for Human Rights. The Branch also undertook cooperation and coordination activities with the interregional, regional and associated institutes in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in areas of mutual concern.

144. The Office for Outer Space Affairs, which relocated to the United Nations Office at Vienna in October 1993, implemented its multisectoral programme with political, legal, scientific and technical assistance components. Through its Programme on Space Applications, the Office organized and conducted workshops, training courses and symposia on various aspects of space science and technology and their applications for economic and social development. The Office continued its service as the substantive secretariat for the General Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and its Legal Subcommittee, as well as their subsidiary bodies.

145. Further progress was made on the Office's initiative to establish regional centres for space science and technology education in the developing countries. Those centres will provide individuals from developing countries with education and training in space-related disciplines and applications. In 1994, the Office decided to establish a centre, which will be co-hosted by Brazil and Mexico, for the Latin American and Caribbean region, and to establish the first node of the centre for the Asia and Pacific region in India. It is expected that 1995 will yield firm agreements on the location of the centres in the Middle East and Africa. The Office in 1994 expanded its Space Information Service to include a limited computer database capability as well as a gateway, or "home page", on the Internet. The home page provides basic data on the space-related activities of the United Nations and is the first step in the development of the broad information system mandated by the General Assembly. The Office has initiated plans to provide support for the preparatory work in intergovernmental committees concerning the convening of a third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.

146. The Administrative Committee on Coordination, comprising the executive heads of the specialized agencies, including the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as all United Nations programmes under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General, provides the main instrument to establish an effective system of inter-agency cooperation and coordination within the United Nations system. In line with the objectives that have guided the recent restructuring of its machinery, the Committee's capacity to identify the main policy issues facing the international community and to promote and organize joint initiatives and responses towards common objectives has been progressively strengthened. The improvements the Secretary-General seeks to introduce within the United Nations, at both the policy and management levels, must be pursued as an integral part of a broader effort to adapt priorities and methods of work to changing requirements at the level of the system as a whole. Thus, at its past two sessions, the Committee pursued its consideration of policies that could lead to a more effective division of labour and to greater complementarity of action within the United Nations system. The Committee devoted particular attention to building and strengthening cooperative arrangements between the Bretton Woods institutions and United Nations funds, programmes and other specialized agencies. In the same context, particular attention was given by the Committee to ways and means of enhancing the capacity of the resident coordinator system to promote effective coordination among all economic and social actors at the country level in support of national development efforts. The achievement of greater complementarity between the country strategy notes, launched by the General Assembly, and the policy framework papers, under the aegis of the Bretton Woods institutions, was viewed as a key objective to those ends.

147. At the global level, the Committee's efforts to promote a coordinated follow-up to the results of major conferences on interrelated development issues are helping to promote a more effective division of labour within the system, drawing on the new policy insights, priorities and commitments generated by those conferences. The continuing discussions in the Committee on the follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and its consideration, at its session in February 1995, of issues relating to international drug abuse control have helped equally to promote a more effective distribution of responsibilities and mutually reinforcing activities by the organizations of the United Nations system in addressing emerging global priorities.

148. African economic recovery and development was a major focus of attention at the last two sessions of the Committee. While United Nations organizations individually and collectively have placed high priority on the development of Africa, the current level of effort does not match the scale of economic and social problems confronting the region. The Committee concluded that a much higher level of commitment and resources at all levels was necessary to overcome the crisis facing many countries of the continent. As Chairman of the Committee, the Secretary-General called for a renewed joint effort to develop further practical initiatives with clear targets. The Committee agreed to establish a high-level steering committee to present a set of concrete recommendations for approval at its next session. The broad programme areas identified for this purpose include availability and management of water; sustainable food security; human development and capacity-building; and the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development, with special emphasis on poverty alleviation. The steering committee also focuses on the consideration of means to enhance political and financial support for African development. Its initial work was drawn upon in preparing for the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council devoted to African development.

149. Regarding management issues, members of the Committee reaffirmed their strong commitment to ensuring the advancement of the status of women throughout the United Nations system. It was generally agreed that management commitment at the highest levels was crucial to the achievement of gender equality. The Committee identified specific measures to increase the flexibility with which the United Nations system deals with women candidates; to remove obstacles to their recruitment, retention in service, promotion and mobility; and to create a supportive environment.

150. The Committee also addressed issues affecting the security and safety of United Nations staff, as well as questions relating to improvements in conditions of service. A special meeting in June of the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions, in which most senior agency officials responsible for administration and management participated, pursued ways to enhance management effectiveness throughout the system.

151. In February 1995, all Committee members, and a number of distinguished personalities who have led independent reviews on ways to strengthen the United Nations system, met at Vienna at a Forum on the Future of the United Nations. The Forum addressed the changing requirements for global and regional governance arising from the emerging new political and economic framework and their implications for the Organization; new approaches to the financing of the United Nations system; the implications of the changing role of the system for the international civil service; and the public image of the United Nations, in particular the challenge of mobilizing and focusing the attention of the media on the Organization's economic and social work.

B. Ensuring an adequate financial base

152. The United Nations financial crisis continues to deepen because of the delays with which Member States have paid their assessed contributions, both for the regular budget and for peace-keeping operations. As at 10 August 1995, unpaid assessed contributions totalled $3.9 billion: $858.2 million for the regular budget (of which $456.1 million relates to the current year (1995) and $402.1 million relates to prior years) and $3 billion for peace-keeping operations, current and prior shortfalls taken together (see fig. 6).

153. The United Nations is able to continue its peace-keeping operations only because the payment of bills and reimbursements to troop-contributors are being delayed. By the end of the year, unpaid reimbursements to troop-contributors and payments owed for contingent-owned equipment are estimated to reach the $1 billion mark. This situation cannot continue. Troop-contributors have expressed their difficulty with continuing participation in peace-keeping operations if they are not paid on time.

154. Many Member States have made serious efforts to expedite payment of their assessments but, without substantial additional major contributions before the end of the year, the cash balance of the United Nations will be dangerously low. This difficult financial situation, in particular when compounded by the continued unpredictability of the receipt of contributions, has a direct impact on the efficiency of the Organization and makes it more and more difficult to manage it effectively.

155. Along with these cash difficulties, the Organization has also been facing another serious problem as a result of the growing practice on the part of the General Assembly of authorizing spending on additional or new activities without providing corresponding resources through assessments on Member States. This has further exacerbated the already difficult financial situation, since the only way to provide funding for those activities is to borrow from accounts with cash resources, without any assurance that those accounts will be replenished in order to implement activities for which Member States had initially provided resources.

156. Unless the receipt of unpaid assessments dramatically improves, there will be no choice but to reduce spending further, focusing on those activities for which no assessments have been approved. Activities for which assessments have been approved, but have chronically not been paid by Member States, may have to be curtailed.

157. Notwithstanding these financial problems, efforts are continuing to make the Organization more efficient and more effective in carrying out the many tasks entrusted to it. In formulating the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, particular emphasis has been placed on management improvements, which have resulted in savings without affecting the delivery of mandated activities. On that basis, a budget has been proposed for the next biennium in the amount of $2,510 million (at current rates before re-costing) for approval by the General Assembly this year. This represents a reduction of $109 million, or 4.2 per cent less than was appropriated for 1994-1995 (see fig. 7). The implementation of the 1996-1997 programme budget, once approved by the General Assembly, should not suffer from the same financial uncertainties that the Organization has been experiencing.

158. The objective of the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the Organization, which was established by the General Assembly and began meeting in January 1995, is to bring about constructive and positive changes to provide the Organization with a long-sought-after solid financial base.

C. The fiftieth anniversary

159. During the past year, much of the work of the Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary has focused on the preparations for the Special Commemorative Meeting of the Assembly on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the entry into force of the Charter of the United Nations, to be held at United Nations Headquarters from 22 to 24 October 1995. The Committee has also continued to monitor the progress of the commemorative programme being undertaken by the Fiftieth Anniversary Secretariat. The Committee is expected to conclude its work by adopting, in early September, as part of its report to the General Assembly, a declaration in support of the Organization on its fiftieth anniversary.

160. The Fiftieth Anniversary Secretariat, headed by Ms. Gillian Martin Sorensen, has continued to develop and implement an ambitious global commemorative programme of activities and products. The goals identified for the fiftieth anniversary are to promote a more balanced image of the United Nations; to enlarge its constituency of support, especially among youth and non-traditional audiences; to improve worldwide education about the work of the Organization; and to mobilize public support in favour of the United Nations to position it to meet ever-growing demands. In line with these objectives, the Fiftieth Anniversary Secretariat has developed and implemented projects in key programme areas, among which education and communication have been given priority.

161. Educational activities include the development of educational kits for primary, intermediate and secondary schools and their distribution in all six official languages. Substantial funds have been made available for free distribution in developing countries and translation into additional languages as part of a "Global Teach-In" (a day or a week designated for teaching about the United Nations). In cooperation with UNESCO, workshops on the kits and the Global Teach-in have been conducted at several international education conferences. Other cooperative projects with specialized agencies and programmes have focused on youth and teachers. A "Passport to the Future" has been designed to sign on millions of young persons, between the ages of 7 and 14, as "global citizens". The Passport encourages them to demonstrate their concern for a better future by becoming involved in some of the world's most pressing challenges—the environment, human rights and peace—by participating in their local community.

162. Communications activities have included an international public service campaign through video, radio and print, in the six official languages. The campaign is designed to inform the public of the many achievements of the United Nations system, such as those in the areas of democratization and decolonization, women and development, environment, health, refugees, peace-keeping and food security. The videos, which were produced by directors from eight geographic regions, are appearing worldwide on television and airlines and in schools. The print and radio campaign is being distributed to broadcasters and publications in all Member States. A multimedia exhibit has been provided to Headquarters and regional offices and to headquarters of specialized agencies. Publications include a pictorial history of the United Nations, Visions—Fifty Years of the United Nations, and a book on the United Nations written by young people for young people, entitled A World in Our Hands.

163. Emphasis in all programme activity has been on achieving broad participation. As the Fiftieth Anniversary Secretariat was not in a position to implement and publicize all of the activities in each Member State, considerable efforts have been made to encourage and provide support to the fiftieth anniversary committees formed by Member States, local United Nations offices and non-governmental organizations in their implementation of these and other activities. In all, 145 countries have established national committees and are carrying out an impressive array of local commemorative events. The Fiftieth Anniversary Secretariat continues to work in close cooperation with them, providing information materials, guiding and supporting the development of activities at both the local and country levels, and recommending specific activities to complement those being implemented at the global level. Over 40 Member States are honouring the United Nations with commemorative coins and virtually every postal administration is issuing commemorative stamps honouring the Organization.

164. The Secretariat has also worked with many cities—including the cities that host our Headquarters offices—in development of appropriate commemorations, including conferences and colloquiums, concerts, art exhibits and other cultural and popular events. One among many was the myriad of activities organized at San Francisco to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Charter.

165. In addition to the public service announcement campaign, the Fiftieth Anniversary Secretariat has continued to develop a wide range of information products, which are being distributed widely to national committees, United Nations information centres, United Nations field offices, permanent missions, United Nations associations, academic groups and international news media, as well as the general public. These products include the UN50 newsletter, an updated press kit, a 16-page information brochure on the fiftieth anniversary, information about the anniversary available through the computer network and a number of information brochures published jointly with the Department of Public Information, along with audio and video compilations.

166. Overall, the funds required for developing the commemorative programme were secured from private sector support from global sponsors of the fiftieth anniversary as well as from project sponsors. Royalties from the coin programme are providing substantial revenue for educational and communications activities. Additional revenue has been derived from a commemorative watch.

167. United Nations associations and other non-governmental organizations have supported the fiftieth anniversary effort to broaden public understanding of the work and continued relevance of the United Nations through, among other things, education programmes, conferences and activities aimed at young people, such as art projects, essay competitions and model United Nations programmes. In addition, many of these organizations, especially United Nations associations, actively participate as members of the national committees established for the fiftieth anniversary to arrange commemorative programmes within the Member States. Furthermore, in the context of the Special Commemorative Meeting of the General Assembly for the Fiftieth Anniversary, there are plans to organize a one-day non-governmental organization programme in mid-October to examine the role of non-governmental organizations in the work of the United Nations.

D. United Nations University (UNU)

168. The Governing Council of the United Nations University (UNU) held its forty-first session from late November to early December 1994 at Accra. The Council considered proposals to further enhance the effectiveness of the University, led by Rector Heitor Gurgulino de Souza, and to strengthen the University's role and impact in United Nations research initiatives and activities. Several proposals for new academic initiatives were approved by the Council. Among them, the Council decided to establish the UNU International Leadership Academy, which will operate at Amman, with financial support from the Government of Jordan.

169. The Director-General of UNESCO and the Secretary-General appointed new members of the Council to replace 11 members whose six-year term of office came to an end on 31 May 1995.

170. The year 1995 marks the twentieth anniversary of the initiation of UNU academic activities. It is also the sixth and final year of the UNU research, training and dissemination activities carried out under the second medium-term perspective (1990-1995). The process of preparing the University's third medium-term perspective (1996-2001) for the next six years has accordingly been set in motion. To that end, the University prepared a mission statement as a step towards sharpening the focus of its institutional goals as an international educational institution and autonomous entity of the United Nations in a rapidly evolving global environment.

171. At its forty-first session, the Council endorsed an institutional strategy paper setting out the programmatic development goals to take the University into the twenty-first century. In addition, the Council considered the appraisal report of an internal assessment group of the Council. The report called for the University to take a leading coordinating role in United Nations research initiatives and activities and to act to enhance the overall coherence of the University's academic programme. The assessment underlined the need for a better integration of UNU research, training and fellowship initiatives and for more effective dissemination of UNU publications. Another major recommendation of the report was the further strengthening of the UNU Centre in its key function as a coordinating mechanism of University academic programmes and research and training centres and programmes. The Council requested that the essential components of the assessment report and the institutional strategy paper and mission statement be integrated as a further step in the process of developing the University's third medium-term perspective.

172. During the period from 1 September 1994 to 10 August 1995, 72 UNU academic meetings were held worldwide. As at 10 August 1995, 58 UNU postgraduate trainees were enrolled in training programmes at cooperating institutions around the world. The areas of training include food and nutrition, geothermal energy, remote sensing, biotechnology and micro-informatics. In 1994, 57 per cent of the training was done at institutions in developing countries and 43 per cent at institutions in industrialized countries. More than 1,340 fellows from over 100 countries have been trained by the University since 1976; an additional 2,300 persons have received training in UNU workshops and seminars. To date, more than 300 books, 5 scientific journals and numerous research papers and studies have been produced from UNU research.

173. Research continued to be carried out within the five programme areas identified by the UNU second medium-term perspective: universal human values and global responsibilities; new directions for the world economy; sustaining global life-support systems; advances in science and technology; and population dynamics and human welfare.

174. The University has made progress in the implementation of its programme on environmentally sustainable development (UNU Agenda 21), which places particular emphasis on human development and capacity-building in developing countries. A series of postgraduate education and capacity-building activities on environmental management has been initiated in Tokyo, together with collaborating institutions in India and Thailand.

175. The University also launched a major new long-term research effort that brings together private companies, industrial policy makers and researchers to pursue the achievement of technological breakthroughs that will facilitate manufacturing without any form of waste, the so-called Zero Emissions Research Initiative. To mobilize support and to exchange information on the design and implementation of this global multidisciplinary research programme, the University organized the first World Congress on Zero Emissions at its headquarters in Tokyo in early April 1995. The World Congress was the first multi-point Internet video conference undertaken from Japan, linking scholars and government and business leaders in Asia, Europe and North America and allowing access to an extended audience in some 100 countries.

176. To further the development of long-term initiatives related to the work of the United Nations, the Rector convened a special advisory team to assist in preparing a "UNU Agenda for Peace, Security and Global Governance". The advisory team suggested a five-year programme focusing on such topics as ethics, democracy and governance, human rights, adjudicatory tools of governance and mechanisms for peace and collective security. These mechanisms include preventive diplomacy, collective security schemes, peace-keeping, post-conflict measures and disarmament. The programme is currently being implemented.

177. The University continues to strengthen its interaction with the United Nations system and is making an intensive and concerted effort to ensure that the results of its work feed into the deliberations and operational activities of the United Nations. The University prepared policy papers for presentation at the International Conference on Population and Development and the World Summit for Social Development preparatory process. Substantive contributions are being planned or are in progress with respect to the Fourth World Conference on Women, Habitat II and the ninth session of UNCTAD. The University has also intensified its research efforts in support of the United Nations Secretariat through studies on mine-clearance technology, peace-keeping in Africa and regional security questions in Latin America.

178. The University has produced a number of policy-oriented studies, including "The Fragile Tropics of Latin America: Sustainable Management of Changing Environments"; "International Waters in the Middle East: From Euphrates-Tigris to Nile"; "Managing Water for Peace in the Middle East: Alternative Strategies"; "Hydropolitics Along the Jordan River: Scarce Water and Its Impact on the Arab-Israeli Conflict"; "Sustainable Management of Soil Resources in the Humid Tropics"; "Ocean Governance: Sustainable Development of the Seas"; "Steering Business Toward Sustainability"; "Culture, Development and Democracy: The Role of the Intellectual"; "Global Transformation: Challenges to the State System"; "State, Society and the United Nations System: Changing Perspectives on Multilateralism"; "The United Nations System: The Policies of Member States"; "Arms Reduction: Economic Implications in the Post-Cold-War Era"; "Mega-City Growth and the Future"; "Global Employment: An International Investigation into the Future of Work"; and "The Evolving New Global Environment for the Development Process".

179. From 1 September 1994 to 10 August 1995, UNU received some $19.9 million in endowment fund, operating and specific programme contributions. Nevertheless, the University faces continued resource constraints brought on by lower investment income from its endowment fund and increased competition for limited resources. Mobilization of operational contributions and of untied or unearmarked funding has become increasingly difficult in the last decade.

III. The foundations of peace: development, humanitarian action and human rights

A. Implementing "An Agenda for Development"

180. Three years ago, at its forty-seventh session, the General Assembly set in motion the process of formulating an Agenda for Development. Since then, considerable effort has been devoted both at the intergovernmental level and by the Secretariat to its elaboration.

181. In November 1994, in a report to the General Assembly (A/49/665), I presented four principal recommendations on "An Agenda for Development" for the consideration of Member States at the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly.

182. These were: (a) that development should be recognized as the foremost and most far-reaching task of our time; (b) that while it must be seen in its many dimensions—in the contexts of peace, the economy, environmental protection, social justice and democracy—development at its core must be about improvement of human well-being, the removal of poverty, hunger, disease and ignorance, ensuring productive employment and the satisfaction of priority needs of all people in a way that can be sustained over future generations; (c) that the emerging consensus on the priority and dimensions of development should find expression in a new framework for international cooperation; and (d) that within this new framework for development cooperation, the United Nations must play a major role in both policy leadership and operations.

183. I further outlined the need for a new framework for world development cooperation that requires supporting actions at the national and international levels and a strong and effective multilateral system, at the centre of which would be the United Nations, with its unmatched global network at all levels. The United Nations can promote awareness, build consensus and inform policy in every dimension affecting development and can help rationalize and harmonize the multiplicity of public and private efforts worldwide. An important element in the new framework should be improved cooperation between the United Nations, its specialized agencies and the Bretton Woods institutions.

184. The General Assembly has primary responsibility to bring together all these aspects in an Agenda for Development. The aim should be to provide consistent policy guidance that would contribute to greater coherence and integration of the development work of the United Nations system. This implies strengthening the capacity of the Assembly to provide such harmonized policy guidance by a careful review of the working methods of its Second and Third Committees, so that the debates in those Committees could be sharply focused on key policy issues and their mutual complementarities enhanced. Secondly, a revitalized Economic and Social Council could greatly assist the Assembly by bringing to its attention recommendations leading to the adoption of harmonized and integrated policies. The relationship between those central bodies and the Bretton Woods institutions, on the one hand, and the funds and programmes and specialized agencies, on the other, could be built around shared objectives and a common purpose leading to closer cooperation and joint actions at the country level.

185. Recent pronouncements of the summit meeting of seven major industrialized countries, which was held at Halifax, Canada, in June 1995, as well as of the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries held at Bandung, Indonesia, in April 1995, signify a resolute willingness on the part of the international community at the political level to see a strong United Nations system working in unison for the realization of internationally agreed goals and objectives. Efforts to make United Nations operational activities more efficient and effective begin with the identification of those areas where it has special assets and strengths that can support the process of development. Given shared vision and a common purpose, coordination and integration in the Organization's operational activities can be ensured.

186. This issue was considered during the coordination segment of the Economic and Social Council in July 1995. At my request, the Administrator of UNDP, who assists the Secretary-General in ensuring policy coherence and the coordination of operational activities for development, initiated a process of consultation among senior United Nations officials on coordination mechanisms that can be instituted on conference follow-up at the inter-agency level, thus mobilizing the United Nations system as a whole through thematic inter-agency task forces at the national, regional and headquarters levels.

187. During the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly, Member States decided to establish an open-ended working group to elaborate further an action-oriented comprehensive agenda for development, taking into account the reports and recommendations presented by the Secretary-General pursuant to Assembly resolutions 47/181 of 22 December 1992 and 48/166 of 21 December 1993, the outcome of the high-level segment of the 1994 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council, the views expressed by representatives in the high-level debate held during the forty-ninth session of the Assembly, as well as the summary of the World Hearings on Development and proposals presented by Member States and other parties.

188. The Working Group was required to submit a report on the progress of its work to the General Assembly before the conclusion of its fiftieth session. A compendium containing the goals, targets and commitments of major United Nations conferences held and agreements signed since 1990, as well as an assessment of the status of their implementation, was submitted by the Secretariat to the Working Group following its first session. That document was a complement to the background information already identified in Assembly resolution 49/126 of 19 December 1994.

189. At the Working Group's second session, held from 15 to 26 May 1995, Governments presented their views on the structure and content of the Agenda for Development during the formal meetings, which were preceded and followed by inter-sessional consultations. The Working Group reached a consensus on the structure of the Agenda and defined modalities for developing its text during the third and final session, yet to be held. A tentative comprehensive structure was adopted, consisting of three chapters, the first devoted to setting goals and objectives; the second representing the bulk of the Agenda, providing a policy framework and identifying priority actions for development, together with means of implementation; and the third dealing with institutional issues and follow-up.

B. Global development activities

1. Secretariat departments at Headquarters

190. The Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, headed by Mr. Nitin Desai, provides support for the central coordinating and policy-making functions vested in the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies, as well as for the Second and Third Committees of the General Assembly. Ensuring the integration of economic, social and environmental concerns in policy development and implementation is a crucial objective underlying the structure and mandate of the Department.

191. The World Summit for Social Development was convened by the General Assembly at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995 to address the urgent and universal need to eradicate poverty, expand productive employment, reduce unemployment and enhance social integration. The Summit provided an impetus for the world's Governments to give priority to the social aspects of global development and the social impact of international relations, while reaffirming their commitment to individual, family and community well-being as the fundamental concern of their policies.

192. The Summit was the largest gathering ever of Heads of State and Government: in all, 187 countries participated in the deliberations, which produced the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action, and 117 of them were represented by Heads of State or Government. In addition, 2,315 delegates representing 811 non-governmental organizations joined the meeting, demonstrating eloquently the vitality and diversity of people's initiatives and establishing the foundation for a renewed and strengthened partnership between Governments and the actors of civil society. The preparations for the Summit and the actions initiated in pursuance of its mandate have brought into play virtually the entire spectrum of departments, agencies, programmes and offices of the United Nations system and fostered coordination between them and with Member States and non-governmental organizations.

193. The observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (1996) will provide an excellent opportunity for the implementation of the commitments made at Copenhagen. Countries are invited to elaborate specific targets during the Year and to prepare national strategies for the struggle against poverty.

194. The International Year of the Family (1994) has led to a remarkable evolution of the political approach to the family as an object and agent of social policy throughout the world. A greater recognition has been accorded at the global, national and individual levels to the importance of supporting families and bringing about positive changes in the family as an integral part of the efforts to achieve peace, human rights, democracy, sustainable development and social progress, as well as lasting progress on behalf of women, children and other traditionally less advantaged members of society. A large number of local, national and international activities in support of the family were arranged by Governments in more than 150 countries and by various non-governmental, community and intergovernmental organizations in observance of the Year. Those efforts were effectively augmented by supportive action of 34 bodies and agencies of the United Nations, including the regional commissions.

195. The International Conference on Families, held in October 1994 during the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly, marked the first occasion on which the Assembly devoted a discussion exclusively to the family. The Conference itself conveyed the growing conviction that it is in the best interests of individuals and societies to promote democratic families and family-friendly societies. I will submit to the Assembly at its fiftieth session a detailed report on the observance of the International Year of the Family, along with specific proposals on its long-term follow-up.

196. The High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development, which was set up following the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held in June 1992, to provide independent advice to the Secretary-General on environment and development matters, held its third session from 17 to 21 October 1994. The Board examined four issues: (a) sustainable food security for a growing world population; (b) the need for mutual reinforcement between international trade and environment policies; (c) value-based education for sustainability; and (d) ways of forging new alliances for sustainable development. The Vice-Chairperson of the Board apprised the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its third session, of the conclusions reached in its deliberations and on its discussions with me. The Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development of the Administrative Committee on Coordination met in February and July 1995. The Inter-Agency Committee has received strong support from Member States, which have expressed their particular appreciation for the fact that the follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development bring together the entire system in a coordinated and cooperative manner.

197. Since the adoption of the Barbados Declaration and Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States in May 1994, efforts have intensified to follow up on the work programme regarding the specific economic, social and environmental concerns of those States. There is increasing interest among the organizations of the system, including the regional commissions, as well as a number of concerned non-governmental organizations, in joint and coordinated activities in this regard. In May 1995, the Department organized a meeting of those organizations and representatives of the Alliance of Small Island States to discuss the status of implementation of the Barbados agreements. The achievement of the goals set out in those agreements, as with Agenda 21 itself, continues to be impeded by financial constraints, as well as by difficulties in the effective transfer of technology for sustainable development.

198. The Office of the Special Coordinator for Africa and Least Developed Countries, as requested by the Secretary-General's Panel of High-level Personalities on African Development, organized a high-level brainstorming workshop on non-governmental organizations and African development on 16 and 17 January 1995. The Office prepared a pamphlet on the conclusions and recommendations of the Panel, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/214 of 23 December 1993. In addition to disseminating information to countries and organizations, the Office coordinated activities related to the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 46/151 of 18 December 1991, including the sixth meeting of the Working Group of the United Nations Inter-Agency Task Force on Africa's Critical Economic Situation, Recovery and Development.

199. My report on the development of Africa, including the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, prepared for the 1995 high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council, identifies key policy issues critical to African development and offers concrete recommendations on what African countries and the international community can do to improve the lives of the people of Africa. It also analyses the progress made and difficulties encountered in the implementation of the New Agenda.

200. The Office of the Special Coordinator provided substantive assistance to donor and African countries in the negotiations on the establishment of a diversification facility in the African Development Bank, which led to General Assembly resolution 49/142 of 23 December 1994, requesting those States participating in the African Development Fund to consider making an initial adequate contribution to finance the preparatory phase of commodity diversification projects and programmes in African countries. The Office organized regular briefings on areas of concern and, together with UNDP and the Governments of Japan and Indonesia, organized the Asia-Africa Forum at Bandung, Indonesia, in December 1994, as a follow-up to the Tokyo International Conference on African Development. The Office also organized, together with the Department for Development Support and Management Services and UNDP, an international workshop on informal sector development in Africa at United Nations Headquarters. The Office participated in a number of intergovernmental and other meetings, including those of OAU.

201. The Interim Secretariat of the Convention to Combat Desertification opened the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, for signature in Paris on 14 and 15 October 1994. As at July 1995, the number of signatories had reached 106 and 2 countries had ratified the Convention. Consistent with General Assembly resolution 49/234 of 23 December 1994, the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the Elaboration of an International Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, held its sixth session in New York, from 9 to 19 January 1995, and adopted a work programme for the interim period leading to the first session of the Conference of the Parties, which will be held within 12 months of the entry into force of the Convention. The Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee established two working groups to lay the groundwork for the first session of implementation of the resolution on urgent action for Africa, through the exchange of information and the review of progress made thereon, and through the promotion of action in other regions. It initiated this phase of its work at its seventh session, held at Nairobi from 7 to 18 August 1995.

202. "Awareness days" are being held in 20 affected countries in the various subregions of Africa to sensitize key actors at the local level and to enable them to participate fully in the Convention's implementation. Seminars are also being held at the subregional level in southern, eastern and western Africa to facilitate the preparation of relevant action programmes. A number of activities were held in various countries in observance of World Day to Combat Desertification and Drought, 17 June, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/115 of 19 December 1994, including seminars, exhibitions and the launching of publications.

203. The first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change was convened from 28 March to 7 April 1995 at Berlin. The meeting aimed at setting in motion the processes needed to promote the effective implementation of the Convention—only four years after multilateral negotiations were first launched on the issue of global warming and its impact on the climate. It is to the credit of the international community that the Conference of the Parties, fully aware of the contribution that the implementation of the Convention can make towards sustainable development, has agreed by consensus to forge ahead with concrete efforts aimed at bringing emissions of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere within safe limits.

204. The Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis, headed by Mr. Jean-Claude Milleron, is the principal unit in the United Nations for the generation and elaboration of economic, demographic, social and environmental data and the analysis of national and regional development policies and trends. It also provides technical support to projects in statistics and population undertaken by developing countries.

205. A cornerstone of the Department is its wide-ranging programme of statistical publications, which continued during the year. In addition to the Statistical Yearbook, other annual reference volumes published included the Demographic Yearbook, Industrial Commodity Statistics Yearbook, National Accounts Yearbook and Energy Statistics Yearbook. Publications with a more frequent periodicity included the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics, Commodity Trade Statistics and the Population and Vital Statistics Report. As part of its contribution to the Fourth World Conference on Women, the Department completed the 1995 edition of The World's Women: Trends and Statistics. This second edition, which was a collaborative effort among 12 United Nations offices and agencies, not only presents an array of new data, but also underlines the work that still must be done to develop gender statistics that are comprehensive and of adequate quality.

206. The year has seen further progress by the Department in the development and implementation of new statistical concepts and methodologies in other areas. The 1993 System of National Accounts was the result of collaboration between the United Nations, EU, IMF, the World Bank and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). Since the adoption of the System, the Department has been working in close cooperation with the regional commissions and other international organizations on its implementation in selected developing countries. During the past year, the Department conducted seminars on the 1993 System of National Accounts in concept and practice, and on the use of the System of National Accounts for transition economy countries.

207. The Department, in cooperation with international organizations and countries, has completed a draft revision of the international concepts and definitions for international trade statistics. In addition, the Statistical Commission, at its twenty-eighth session, held in New York from 27 February to 3 March, approved an international compilation of environmental indicators that will be assembled by the Department. Close collaboration with the Commission on Sustainable Development and its secretariat will ensure comparability with its programme on indicators of sustainable development. In the area of integrated environmental and economic accounting, the framework developed by the Department is now being tested through several country projects with the support of United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and UNDP. The Statistical Commission also designated the period 1995-2004 as the 2000 World Population and Housing Census Decade. In this area, the Department continued its work on civil registration and vital statistics.

208. The work of the Department in the area of population was given fresh impetus towards the end of 1994 with the success of the International Conference on Population and Development, held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994. The Department, in cooperation with UNFPA, undertook substantive preparations for the Conference. Following the Conference, the General Assembly decided, in its resolution 49/128 of 19 December 1994, that the revitalized Commission on Population and Development should be charged with monitoring, reviewing and assessing the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted at Cairo. The Department provides the secretariat for the Commission. At its twenty-eighth session, from 21 February to 2 March 1995, the Commission affirmed the Department as the body with competence to cover the monitoring and appraisal of the broad range of areas covered by the Programme of Action. The Department was also charged by the Secretary-General with the preparation of the report on international migration and development called for by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/127 of 19 December 1994. The report, which was submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its 1995 substantive session, not only addressed the substantive issues involved but also included aspects related to the objectives and modalities for the convening of the United Nations Conference on Migration and Development.

209. The Department completed its 1994 revision of World Population Prospects, the official United Nations population figures for all countries of the world. Reflecting the high international standing of these data, the World Bank announced that henceforth it would rely exclusively on the United Nations for population statistics. Studies in the field of population by the Department address such subjects as contraception, women's education and fertility behaviour, abortion, urbanization, population policy, international migration policies, the status of female migrants and the spread of HIV/AIDS. Much of the work undertaken in the course of these studies contributed to the deliberations on the Cairo Programme of Action.

210. As a further dimension of its responsibility for monitoring the world economic and social situations, the Department produced the World Economic and Social Survey 1995. In addition to an analysis of the world economic situation and its short-term prospects and discussions of major global policy issues, the Survey examined some longer-term dimensions of economic and social changes in the world. As part of the continuing effort to improve the Survey, the 1995 edition devoted greater attention to a discussion of economic and social policies around the world. In a parallel effort to provide both the academic community and the general public with information on issues that would form the backdrop to the World Summit for Social Development, the Department published The World Social Situation in the 1990s prior to the Summit.

211. The Department carried out development projections and perspective studies under Project LINK, an international economic research network of more than 70 country teams. During the past year, the Department convened two meetings of this network—one in Salamanca, Spain, and the other in New York—to assist in the preparation of short-term economic forecasts for the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. As part of its longer-term analysis, the Department prepared an update of the "Overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy beyond the year 2000" for the General Assembly at its fiftieth session. The Department has continued its work on the debt crisis, sources of finance for development, coercive economic measures and economic assistance to countries affected by sanctions imposed by the Security Council. It has produced reports on each of these subjects for the Assembly at its fiftieth session.

212. As mandated by the General Assembly in response to the new development thinking that has evolved in recent years, the Department has been expanding its research and analysis on micro-economic issues, focusing on ways in which increased reliance on market forces can contribute to the attainment of development objectives. This work has included studies relating to employment, technology and the use of market-based mechanisms both to meet environmental objectives and to provide public services. The Department has continued to provide operational and technical assistance to developing countries and economies in transition, primarily in the areas of population and statistics and mostly with financing provided by UNDP and UNFPA. Such arrangements applied to more than 100 technical cooperation projects over the past year, with additional assistance on such matters as country strategy notes being provided through resident coordinators on a pro bono basis.

213. The Department has sustained its efforts to provide information and analysis through means other than official documents and publications. In order to promote exchanges with others with shared interests, the Department convenes seminars, issues a series of working papers and continues to increase its dissemination of information by electronic means. In 1995 the United Nations Statistical Yearbook was again issued on CD-ROM, as well as in its traditional paper form. Version III of Women's Indicators and Statistics Database (Wistat) was similarly made available in CD-ROM format, while Statbase Locator (an inventory of international computerized databases) was released on diskette. In addition, selected information from the 1994 revisions of World Population Prospects and World Urbanization Prospects released during the year is available on-line to users of the Internet, through the Department's Population Information Network, which was used extensively during the International Conference on Population and Development. All the official documents of the Conference, as well as the statements made in the plenary, were made available on the Network, which handled more than 28,000 requests while the Conference was taking place.

214. As part of its effort to improve the availability of economic and social information, the Department, in cooperation with the regional commissions, continues to work on a new system that will encompass the collection, processing, storage, exchange and dissemination of economic and social information. Entitled the United Nations Economic and Social Information System, phase II of the project commenced in 1995 and focuses on implementing the System's core components in selected pilot areas, such as national accounts and the development of prototype techniques.

215. The Department for Development Support and Management Services, headed by Mr. Chaozhu Ji, is responsible for providing technical assistance to developing countries and economies in transition in the broad fields of integrated development and public management, thereby assisting Governments in establishing an enabling environment for development.

216. In the planning and management of mineral resources, the Department organized international round-table conferences on foreign investment in exploration and mining in India and Pakistan in 1994. These were to familiarize foreign investors with the new mining policies and regulations in those countries, to encourage investment in development of the mineral sector, to acquaint better the Governments with the mining industry's expectations and with the elements of a successful mining investment promotion drive, and thus to arrive at mutually satisfactory and rewarding policies for mining investments. The conferences culminated in concrete joint venture investments in both countries. The Department has also prepared the Environmental Guidelines for Mining Operations in response to the need stressed in Agenda 21 for the adoption of environmental guidelines for natural resource development.

217. The water resource activities at the individual country level have been extended into subregional and regional initiatives through the use of joint programming with the regional commissions. This work has brought the added benefit of preparing the ground for several recently launched Global Environment Facility initiatives in international waters and the Okavango and Lake Chad basins. The detailed implementation experience has also provided the empirical basis for the ongoing global freshwater assessment initiated at the request of the Commission on Sustainable Development.

218. Information exchange dealing with both mineral and water resources is facilitated by the substantive services the Department provides to the Committee on Natural Resources. Dissemination of ideas is also fostered by the Natural Resources Forum, the quarterly technical journal produced by the Department.

219. The Department is collaborating with the African Energy Programme of the African Development Bank in a wide-ranging effort to address the serious problems within the African energy sector. In 1994 the Department undertook a study of energy institutions in 17 African countries to characterize better the strengths and weaknesses of the sector at the country, subregional and regional levels. A key recommendation that emerged from the exercise was that an African energy unit should be established, based within the African Development Bank and supported by OAU, the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and the Department for Development Support and Management Services. A programme of action is now being elaborated in conjunction with the African Energy Programme of the African Development Bank.

220. The Department executed a $7 million project in Zimbabwe funded by the Global Environment Facility, which provides a model for other countries with sufficient solar energy. The project addresses the issue of global warming by providing a sustainable model of solar electricity dissemination in Zimbabwe's rural areas where an expanded commercial market is being developed for affordable domestic solar electric lighting systems through the provision of low-interest financing from existing institutions to allow householders to purchase home solar systems.

221. The United Nations International Conference on Coal Methane Development and Utilization will be held in Beijing in October 1995. A primary objective of the Conference is to assist Governments in developing a legal and regulatory context for the promotion of domestic coal-bed methane resources. The Conference will review the status and potential of ongoing coal-bed methane recovery projects in China. Coal mines in that country characteristically have high seepage rates of methane gas, with consequent danger of atmospheric pollution and a grave risk to the safety of miners and the productivity of the mines. To help address this problem, the United Nations is assisting China through a $10 million programme designed for recovery of coal-bed methane prior to, during and after mining operations. Funded by the Global Environment Facility and executed by the Department for Development Support and Management Services, the programme addresses all types of gas recovery and the feasibility of various options for gas utilization. Another project is developing the geothermal resources of the Tibet region, with $3 million in trust funds contributed by the Government of Italy. This project is leading to institution-building and human resource training both in China, during the execution of the project, and overseas. The project is also oriented towards important investments to be realized in the near future.

222. Under the joint programming exercise, initiated in June 1994, pilot projects implemented by the Department together with the regional commissions include a geothermal project in conjunction with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), a capacity-building project in central Asian countries to deal with transboundary management of water resources and a small-scale mining proposal from ECA designed to train artisanal miners.

223. The Department has taken several steps to strengthen support to Governments in the area of social development policy and poverty alleviation, consistent with priorities enunciated at the World Summit for Social Development. Africa is an area of particular concern. To limit the potential for negative effects of national economic adjustment programmes on vulnerable groups and on delivery of services in social sectors like health and education, the Department has developed a system for monitoring the social effects of such programmes. This has been introduced in projects in Algeria, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, Senegal and Tunisia. In June 1995, the Department collaborated with the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development and UNDP to organize a workshop at Headquarters on the development of Africa's informal sector. Experts from Governments, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations and academic institutions discussed experiences and perspectives.

224. In the fields of public administration and finance, the Department is assisting Governments in developing administrative and managerial systems at the central and local levels, in strengthening financial management capabilities, in undertaking public enterprise reform and encouragement of private enterprise and in improving related informational technology. For example, in Viet Nam, the Department is currently providing technical services to the Government's comprehensive public administration programme and in particular to the component on improvement of civil service management.

225. The Department has completed the establishment of a computerized information system to assist key agencies of government. This public sector planning and management information system facilitates econometric analysis, national budget preparation and modelling, the preparation of debt programmes and investment programme planning and monitoring. The system has already been demonstrated in several countries and is ready for installation upon request.

226. Laying the groundwork for a session of the General Assembly on making Governments work better was the focus of a meeting of more than 50 experts worldwide organized by the Department from 31 July to 11 August at Headquarters. The themes for the experts' discussions included policy development, administrative restructuring, civil service reform, the role of public administration in promoting social development, financial management, post-conflict rehabilitation and reconstruction of government machinery, public/private sector interaction and the role of public administration in the management of development programmes. Recommendations from the meeting will be reviewed at a resumed session of the Economic and Social Council later this year.

227. The outbreak of localized conflicts throughout the world has highlighted the interdependence and interaction between peace and improvement of the human condition, as today Governments must often begin to reconstruct their human and administrative infrastructures even before conflict has ceased. The Department's work in assisting Rwanda to restore its technical, human and institutional capacities and rehabilitate its judicial system, in strengthening Yemen's water and sanitation facilities, in preparing a reconstruction and development plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina and in providing support to the rejuvenation of Haiti's public administration—these are all examples of this recognition being acted upon by the United Nations.

228. To help stimulate a better exchange of ideas on post-conflict reconstruction strategies, the Department organized a colloquium in June in Austria, with support from the Government of Austria and in cooperation with the Austrian Centre for Peace and Conflict Resolution. This informal gathering brought together representatives from several Governments, plus a number of United Nations departments and agencies, non-governmental organizations and academic institutions. The conclusions of the meeting and other documentation, including an inventory of possible post-conflict peace-building activities, have been published.

229. In the area of cartography, the Department continues to implement the recommendations presented by the Thirteenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific, which requested the United Nations to support surveying, mapping and charting activities in the Asia and Pacific region and to facilitate the participation of the least developed countries and the small island developing States of the region in the work of the Conference.

2. United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD)

230. The work of UNCTAD, under the Officer-in-Charge, Mr. Carlos Fortin, was dominated during the past year by the forty-first session of the Trade and Development Board and its subsidiary bodies, and the United Nations International Symposium on Trade Efficiency, as well as by the preparatory process for the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. I have proposed for approval by the General Assembly the appointment of Mr. Rubens Ricupero as Secretary-General of UNCTAD. His appointment would be effective as at 15 September 1995.

231. During this period, the Trade and Development Board undertook a preliminary analysis and assessment of the final act of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations. The States members of UNCTAD recognized the important role it could play in the post-Uruguay Round period in enhancing the ability of developing countries to take maximum advantage of these new opportunities and in recommending measures to mitigate the consequences on countries that could be adversely affected. The respective roles and functions of UNCTAD and the World Trade Organization have been more clearly delineated.

232. UNCTAD also started implementation of the decisions taken during the mid-term review of the Cartagena Commitment in May 1994. The commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of UNCTAD at the first part of the Board's forty-first session in September was the occasion for States members to reaffirm their full support to the organization and to look to its future orientation. Finally, the preparatory process for the ninth session of the Conference, to be held in the spring of 1996, started in a spirit of cooperation and with the conviction that the Conference should address in an innovative and action-oriented way the economic issues facing the international community.

233. The Trade and Development Board, at the first part of its forty-first session, in September 1994, adopted a declaration in which States members reaffirmed their commitment to the primary development objectives of UNCTAD and undertook to reinforce their political support for the organization and for its important role in strengthening the global Partnership for Development by addressing the economic and development problems of all countries, in particular the developing countries.

234. The Board's discussion on interdependence was based on the Trade and Development Report 1994. The Board reviewed the east Asian growth and development experience and concluded that there was a wide variety of experience in east Asia: while in some fast-growing economies the policy regime had been more liberal, several Governments had successfully played active and interventionist roles.

235. The Board concluded its policy review of technical cooperation activities of UNCTAD by noting that the agency's technical cooperation was greatly valued by developing countries and countries in transition and had also attracted increasing support in the last few years from donor countries and institutions. Accordingly, the Board emphasized the need to strengthen UNCTAD technical cooperation.

236. At the second part of its forty-first session, in March 1995, the Board endorsed agreed conclusions on trade policies, structural adjustment and economic reform, and on the UNCTAD contribution to the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s. The Board also agreed on preparatory action for a high-level intergovernmental meeting to be held in September to undertake a mid-term review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s. It also carried out a policy review of the work of UNCTAD on sustainable development. On trade policies, structural adjustment and economic reform, a broad convergence emerged on a number of conclusions. The Board concluded that Governments should take a positive approach to structural adjustment. A policy framework favourable to structural adjustment could facilitate the comprehensive and effective implementation of the Uruguay Round agreements, lower resistance to further liberalization and better prepare economies for future negotiations on improving market access.

237. On preparations for the ninth session of the Conference, the Board reached agreement on the provisional agenda for the Conference. The theme of the ninth session will be promoting growth and sustainable development in a globalizing and liberalizing world economy. The Government of South Africa announced its decision to make an offer, in principle, to host the Conference. States members underlined the importance of holding the session in Africa and expressed their full support for South Africa as the host country.

238. The United Nations International Symposium on Trade Efficiency was held at Columbus, Ohio, from 17 to 21 October 1994. More than 2,000 decision makers from both the public and private sectors participated in the Symposium and in the other parallel events: the Global Executive Trade Summit, the Global Summit for Mayors and the World Trade Efficiency and Technology Exhibition. The Symposium was chaired by the Secretary of Commerce of the United States of America. The unprecedented involvement of the private sector and of local governments made the Symposium a unique forum for bringing practical solutions to some of the problems encountered in international trade. The Symposium adopted the Columbus Ministerial Declaration and launched the Global Trade Point Network. Together, these documents constitute a blueprint for efficient international trade in the next century.

239. The Standing Committee on Commodities held its third session from 31 October to 4 November 1994. In its agreed conclusions, the Committee requested UNCTAD to continue its analysis of ways to improve the competitiveness of natural products, giving priority to the theoretical and practical aspects of the internalization of ecological externalities. UNCTAD held a number of commodity-related meetings under its auspices. In January 1994, the fourth session of the United Nations Conference on Tropical Timber adopted the International Tropical Timber Agreement and, as at 31 December 1994, 12 States had signed the new Agreement and one had become formally party to it, although conditions for its entry into force are not yet met. At the end of the second session of the United Nations Conference on Natural Rubber, in October 1994, 53 out of the 67 articles for a successor agreement had been cleared in principle. The Conference resumed its work, under UNCTAD auspices, at a third session, in February 1995, where 31 countries, representing nearly 90 per cent of world trade in natural rubber, adopted the 1995 International Natural Rubber Agreement aimed at stabilizing prices. The new Agreement was opened for signature at United Nations Headquarters on 1 April 1995. Other commodity-related meetings held under UNCTAD auspices dealt with iron ore and tungsten.

240. The Standing Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries held its second session from 14 to 18 November 1994. The Committee endorsed a set of recommendations aimed at fostering economic cooperation among developing countries. Furthermore, it concluded, inter alia, that developing countries should adopt strategies that combine trade liberalization with other measures in the areas of production, investment, transport and communications, marketing and distribution and trade information. Special attention should be given to measures for increasing the effectiveness of trade liberalization regimes in regional integration arrangements and for increasing South-South trade.

241. At the end of the thirteenth session of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices, held from 24 to 28 October 1994, competition experts launched the preparatory process for the Third United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices, which is scheduled to take place in November 1995. The main document prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat dealt with the role of competition policy in economic reforms in developing and other countries. The Intergovernmental Group held its fourteenth session from 6 to 10 March 1995. Anti-trust experts made a number of proposals for strengthening multilateral cooperation in the area of competition laws and policies.

242. The three new ad hoc working groups, established in accordance with a decision of the Board taken at the resumed second part of its fortieth session, in May 1994, commenced their work. The Ad Hoc Working Group on Trade, Environment and Development held its first session from 28 November to 2 December 1994. The Working Group examined international cooperation on eco-labelling and eco-certification programmes, and market opportunities for environmentally friendly products. The session emphasized the importance of improved transparency in eco-labelling and the need for developing countries to be more closely associated with the elaboration of environmental criteria having an impact on trade and development.

243. The Ad Hoc Working Group on the Role of Enterprises in Development held its first session from 3 to 7 April 1995, focusing upon the development of small and medium-sized enterprises. The Working Group examined the role of the State in creating an enabling environment for the promotion of entrepreneurship, as well as the viable development of enterprises, especially small and medium-sized enterprises.

244. The Commission on International Investment and Transnational Corporations held its twenty-first session from 24 to 28 April, its first session in its new role as a subsidiary body of the Trade and Development Board. The Commission examined recent trends in foreign direct investment and exchanged experiences on ways of attracting such investment.

245. In 1994, UNCTAD expenditure on technical cooperation amounted to some $22 million. The largest single source of funds continues to be UNDP, although the trend observed in recent years towards increased contributions by other donors has continued. As part of the programme, UNCTAD provided support to a number of countries in assessing the results of the Uruguay Round, and in preparing themselves for new issues subject to negotiations in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade/World Trade Organization. Continued assistance was provided in several aspects of trade policies, including competition policy, the linkage between trade and the environment, and the utilization of the generalized system of preferences. Several new packages under the UNCTAD training programme TRAIN-FORTRADE were developed and delivered. In the area of commodities, particular attention was devoted to the use of risk-management instruments.

246. With the transfer to UNCTAD of the United Nations activities related to transnational corporations and to science and technology, the corresponding technical cooperation programmes, including advisory services on foreign investment, have become an integral part of UNCTAD technical cooperation. The UNCTAD software for management and analysis of debt was enhanced and installed in a number of countries. UNCTAD has also continued to provide support to countries in the areas of shipping, port management (notably in Somalia) and cargo tracking, with the training aspects being undertaken in most cases through the TRAINMAR programme. The largest single programme undertaken by UNCTAD is that on customs modernization and computerization, known as ASYCUDA. In line with the process leading to and following up after the World Symposium on Trade Efficiency, support and advice were given to a number of countries in the establishment of trade points.

247. At its tenth executive session, held on 4 May, the Trade and Development Board agreed that appropriate exploratory work should be undertaken on such new and emerging issues on the international trade agenda within the preparatory process for the ninth session of UNCTAD. Three categories of issues were identified. The first consists of issues that give rise to demands for domestic policy harmonization. Among those issues are investment and competition policies and labour standards. The second category includes issues that reflect concern about the lack of coherence among global policy objectives. The third consists of issues affecting the ability of countries, especially the least developed countries and others with weak economies, to pursue national goals effectively.

248. The Commission on Science and Technology for Development held its second session from 15 to 24 May. (The Commission, a subsidiary body of the Economic and Social Council, now meets at Geneva as a result of the designation of UNCTAD as the United Nations focal point for science and technology-related activities.) Topics considered by the Commission at that session included the use of science and technology to help meet basic needs of low-income populations, improving women's access to science and technology, and the use of science and technology towards sustainable land-management practices. The Commission decided to focus its work programme for the next two years on recent developments in information technologies and their implications for economic growth, social cohesion, cultural values and society as a whole.

249. The Standing Committee on Developing Services Sectors: Shipping held its third session from 6 to 9 June to examine progress in policy reforms for enhancing competitive services in the fields of shipping, ports and multimodal transport in developing countries and countries in transition. In particular, support was pledged by major donors for the TRAINMAR programme, through which UNCTAD enhances the management capacities of developing countries in the field of shipping, ports and multimodal transport. The role of UNCTAD in the development of the advanced cargo information system was also praised. As this was the last session of the Committee before the ninth session of UNCTAD, the Committee reviewed work carried out since 1992. It established a set of complementary activities to be taken up by UNCTAD during the period leading up to the ninth session and suggested issues for further deliberation at that session.

250. The Ad Hoc Working Group on Trade, Environment and Development held its second session from 6 to 9 June, to examine the effects of environmental policies on market access and competitiveness. The UNCTAD secretariat was requested to outline positive measures that could be used as alternatives to trade-related measures for environmental protection for consideration at the next meeting of the Working Group, to be held in October.

251. The Standing Committee on Poverty Alleviation held its third session from 12 to 16 June to identify national and international measures to alleviate poverty through international trade and official development assistance. As this was the last session of the Committee before the ninth session of UNCTAD, the meeting reviewed the work carried out since 1992 by the Committee and suggested that the ninth session should consider whether the present form of intergovernmental machinery for addressing poverty alleviation in UNCTAD was the appropriate one or whether some alternative arrangement could be envisaged. Poverty and increased marginalization will feature high on the agenda of the ninth session.

252. In cooperation with UNDP and the United Nations regional commissions, UNCTAD organized the Symposium for Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries from 14 to 16 June, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/169 of 21 December 1993. The objectives of the Symposium were to analyse weaknesses in the operational, administrative, regulatory and institutional framework that is currently in place in the transit sector and to propose the future course of action at the national, bilateral, subregional and international levels. Participating countries agreed to develop a global framework for cooperation on transit transport with the support of the international community. UNCTAD has been requested to convene transit corridor-specific consultative groups that will identify priority areas for action at the national and subregional level and will establish the framework for the implementation of agreed measures. At a meeting of governmental experts from land-locked and transit developing countries, held from 19 to 22 June, the recommendations of the Symposium were widely endorsed.

253. The Standing Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries held its third session from 19 to 23 June to discuss ways to enlarge and deepen monetary, financial, investment and enterprise cooperation. The agreed conelusions contain suggestions for strengthening financial and monetary cooperation among developing countries, as well as at the level of investment and business.

3. United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP)

254. UNEP, headed by Ms. Elizabeth Dowdeswell, is pursuing implementation of the environmental dimension of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in June 1992.

255. At its seventeenth session, in May 1994, the Governing Council of UNEP recognized the need for a fundamental change in the Programme's focus and priorities, and its relationship with other collaborators, in order to address the changed international environmental agenda emerging from the Conference.

256. In addition to implementing a work programme for 1994-1995 based on a Corporate Programme Framework, UNEP held, between October 1994 and February 1995, extensive consultations with Governments and high-level advisers to develop a refocused programme, based on an integrated approach, for its biennium 1996-1997.

257. The new integrated programme for 1996-1997 as approved by the eighteenth session of the Governing Council of UNEP addresses four principal environmental challenges: (a) sustainable management and use of natural resources; (b) sustainable production and consumption; (c) a better environment for environmental health and well-being; and (d) globalization trends and the environment.

258. UNEP collaboration with UNDP has been advanced with the signing of two agreements, one on international information exchange and another on a new partnership for combating desertification. In March, UNEP and the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources signed a partnership agreement to strengthen their long-standing worldwide cooperation in resource conservation and sustainable development. The agreement will facilitate collaboration at the regional level, thereby increasing the capability of UNEP and the International Union to respond to geographically diverse environmental concerns.

259. A major recent development during the period under review has been the operationalization of the restructured Global Environment Facility, which is implemented jointly by UNDP, UNEP and the World Bank. Within the Global Environment Facility, UNEP will catalyse the development of scientific and technical analysis, and promote and implement environmental management.

260. The Scientific and Technical Advisory Panel was constituted by the Executive Director in April. UNEP has also worked in conjunction with other major groups in the areas of chemicals, refugees, agricultural development and environmental technology.

261. UNEP, together with the International Labour Organization (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), WHO, UNIDO and OECD, established the Inter-Organization Programme for the Sound Management of Chemicals to increase coordination and information exchange on chemicals and chemical wastes. Additionally, UNEP, with the active collaboration of the private chemical industry sector, has issued the Code of Ethics in the International Trade in Chemicals. UNEP was asked to increase its role in managing toxic chemicals and to further the development of international environmental law. Moreover, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme authorized the Executive Director to begin negotiations, in cooperation with FAO, on the development of a prior informed consent convention relating to the international trade of certain hazardous chemicals. UNEP also participated in a regional seminar at San Salvador in May on the implementation in Central America and the Caribbean of the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal, which generated valuable discussion on how to incorporate cleaner production activities in the proposed subregional centres for training and technology transfer under the Basel Convention.

262. In collaboration with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), UNEP assisted Rwanda to address the issue of environmental damage caused by civil war and the massive movement of refugees.

263. UNEP has joined the World Bank, FAO and UNDP in supporting the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research in its efforts to confront the new challenges of sustainable agricultural development. UNEP is taking part in the development of a multilateral system on plant genetic resources. As a co-sponsor of the Consultative Group, UNEP has been requested to provide information on the negotiating process leading to the second conference of the parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity.

264. The UNEP Environment Technology Centre became operational in September 1994. Located in Osaka and Shiga prefectures in Japan, the Centre is engaged in assisting developing countries in the transfer of technology to solve urban environmental problems and issues relating to management of freshwater lakes and reservoir basins. After the earthquake in Kobe, the Centre responded by providing staff to assist emergency medical teams.

265. The first UNEP International Seminar on Gender and Environment, held in April 1995, called for shared responsibility between women and men in achieving sustainable development and provided material for the development of a policy statement to the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing.

266. UNEP offered to provide the secretariat for the proposed global programme of action to protect the marine environment from land-based activities. The programme was reviewed by a meeting of government experts held in March. The meeting recognized the need to reduce and eliminate pollution by persistent organic pollutants. The final document of the draft global programme is to be presented for adoption at an intergovernmental meeting in October and November.

267. The work of UNEP with the commercial and investment banking sector since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 has resulted in a new alliance with major insurance companies. In March 1995, UNEP announced the forging of a new partnership at its Advisory Group Meeting on Commercial Banks and the Environment, with a view to continuing to foster responsible sustainable development policies and practices in the banking sector. UNEP signed an agreement with the International Olympic Committee to promote environmental protection in international sports competitions. Together with the Foundation for International Environmental Law and Development, UNEP convened a first meeting on liability and compensation in London, gathering experts from the United Nations, Governments and the academic community.

268. UNEP provides scientific and administrative support to the secretariats of environmental conventions. The Lusaka Agreement on Cooperative Enforcement Operations Directed at Illegal Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora, which aims to reduce and ultimately eliminate illegal international trafficking in African wildlife, was concluded in September 1994 by six eastern and southern African countries. The United Nations International Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, provides for a substantive role for UNEP in awareness-raising and the formulation and implementation of programmes to combat desertification. The first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, held in November and December 1994, chose UNEP to host the permanent secretariat of the Convention. UNEP has initiated a programme to promote the safe use of biotechnology throughout the world as one of its responses to Agenda 21.

Under the auspices of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Flora and Fauna, a Timber Working Group was established in March to study how the Convention should be involved in the protection of timber species.

269. The first Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change was held in March and April. UNEP believes that a strong climate research base is needed to ensure the Convention's success and to this end has been playing a central role with the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change in collaboration with FAO, the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of UNESCO, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and the International Council of Scientific Unions. Over 300 experts from countries that have ratified the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer to the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer made significant progress in proposing possible amendments and adjustments to the international treaty during a one-week session at Nairobi from 8 to 12 May. It was the second time since its inception in 1987 that the Montreal Protocol had been reviewed, demonstrating the determination of the world community to find solutions to many ozone-related issues that should be resolved by the December 1995 meeting at Vienna of the parties to the Protocol. Final recommendations will be made at a meeting at Geneva from 28 August to 1 September 1995, at which proposed amendments and adjustments to the Protocol will be considered, including advanced phase-out of methyl bromide and a revised phase-out schedule for chlorofluorocarbons and halons by the developing countries. Meanwhile, the multilateral fund for the implementation of the Montreal Protocol has disbursed $303 million to finance about 830 projects in 81 developing countries.

270. An intergovernmental agreement aimed at conserving the migratory waterbirds of Africa and Eurasia was adopted in June at The Hague at a meeting held under the auspices of the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals. This new agreement covers more than 150 species of birds that are ecologically dependent on wetlands for at least part of their annual cycle. The coastal States of the Mediterranean Action Plan—the oldest and strongest of the UNEP regional seas programmes—adopted a cross-sectoral approach to environmental protection and development of the Mediterranean basin at the Ninth Ordinary Meeting of the Contracting Parties to the Convention, held from 9 to 10 June at Barcelona. The scope and geographical coverage of the revised Convention and Action Plan were also expanded to ensure the integration between the marine environment, the coastal areas and the associated coastal watersheds, including water resources, and soil, forest and plant coverage.

271. The Executive Director of UNEP is chairing the Working Group on Sustainable Freshwater Resources for Africa within the Secretary-General's Special Initiative on Africa. A draft report was submitted to the meeting of the Group held in July at Geneva for the purpose of promoting dialogue and collaborative management of water resources among riparian States sharing international water resources. To that end UNEP has been implementing a series of new projects in integrated management of water resources. In June a meeting of experts was held on a diagnostic study for the Nile basin as the first phase in the development of a comprehensive management plan for the basin.

272. At the first meeting of the Environmental Emergencies Advisory Group, held in January, experts from 24 countries commended the work of the Joint UNEP/Department of Humanitarian Affairs Environment Unit, which was established in 1994 and has since carried out a number of emergency assessments of the oil spills in Arctic Russia.

273. UNEP efforts to link environmental and economic concerns are gaining momentum. At a workshop convened by UNEP and the World Bank in March, international experts urged the leading financial institutions to incorporate social and environmental objectives in their structural adjustment programmes. Another workshop was held in March to review the environmental impact of trade policies. UNEP has agreed to take a leading role in the development of methodologies for sustainability indicators. In a workshop hosted by the Philippines in May and June, government representatives from 33 countries, agencies, development banks and industries developed a framework for the sustainable management of reefs as outlined in the International Coral Reef Initiative: the UNEP regional seas programme was recognized as an appropriate vehicle for that effort. The implementation of Agenda 21 was reviewed in Paris in June by UNEP and 50 major international and national industry associations. This annual consultative meeting of UNEP facilitated information exchange among industries on the activities they have undertaken to promote sustainable production and consumption patterns worldwide.

274. From May to June in Mexico City, 50 experts in urban and environmental management from Latin America analysed major problems hindering the efforts of the region's mega-cities towards sustainability. The result was a document prepared in collaboration with UNEP that will be presented at the Second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held at Istanbul in June 1996.

275. The Governing Council of UNEP held its eighteenth session at Nairobi, from 15 to 26 May, adopting a record number of 64 decisions, all by consensus. A programme activity budget of $90-105 million was approved for the next biennium. UNEP celebrated World Environment Day on 5 June with the theme, "We the Peoples, United for the Global Environment", in South Africa, with the participation and support of the President of the Republic of South Africa, Mr. Nelson Mandela.

276. The demands placed on UNEP after the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 have not been met with any significant increase in financial resources to the Programme. The further expected reduction of the voluntary contributions to the Environment Fund of UNEP and the unpredictability of payments constitute principal constraints for the future of the Programme and its capability to provide an effective service to the international community.

4. United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat)

277. At a time when approximately one quarter of the world's population is either inadequately housed or is homeless, the growing global shelter crisis resulting from uncontrolled urbanization and rural poverty is imparting new urgency to the mandate of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), under the direction of Mr. Wally N'Dow.

278. To address these far-reaching challenges, the Centre has embarked on a number of major initiatives. Central to these are preparations now under way for the Second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), also known as the "City Summit". Through its declaration of principles and commitments and its global plan of action, Habitat II is expected to reaffirm the importance of human settlements in national and international development policies and strategies.

279. The recently concluded second session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference mobilized those whose collaboration is essential to the forging of new partnerships for managing the urban environment: national Governments, local authorities and their international associations, private-sector enterprises, civic groups and non-governmental and community-based organizations. Through a series of regional meetings, supported and/or organized by the regional commissions, countries are now taking stock and identifying common concerns with respect to their regions.

280. Preparations have begun on several Habitat II-related conferences, including the International Conference on Best Practices in Improving the Living Environment, to be convened at Dubai in November. Organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, as well as professional associations and research institutions, are collaborating with the Centre in sponsoring an extensive series of workshops, seminars, colloquiums and round tables related to the Conference's two main themes: adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlement development in an urbanizing world.

281. The Centre continues to monitor and coordinate the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, which will also be reviewed by Habitat II in 1996. Technical assistance activities geared to that end were undertaken by the Centre in 91 countries over the reporting period, especially in the areas of urban management, environmental planning and management, disaster mitigation and reconstruction, housing policy and urban poverty reduction. Significant interregional programmes are currently being implemented, in urban management, sustainable cities and the housing and urban indicators programme. Among the major reconstruction projects under way in 1995 were those in Afghanistan and Rwanda.

282. Capacity-building activities were expanded in the countries in transition of eastern and central Europe and the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). Progress was achieved in introducing gender issues in human settlement-related training programmes. New initiatives have been launched with UNEP and WHO to promote environmental health in human settlements and work is proceeding on the second Global Report on Human Settlements, which will be launched at Habitat II.

283. Africa is an important focus of the Centre's activities. Over the reporting period, new responsibilities have been entrusted to the Centre by the Inter-Agency Task Force for the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s. The Centre will be the associate lead agency responsible for urban management and human settlement programmes and policies and for the continuum from relief to development.

284. Securing adequate levels of funding to carry out its expanding mandate and role within the development agenda of the United Nations, including support for Habitat II, is one of the most important challenges facing the Centre. The urgent need for United Nations and bilateral donor emergency assistance to redress the effects of civil wars and natural disasters has resulted in continuing reductions in the level of funding available for the Centre's development cooperation activities of a longer-term nature.

C. Operational activities for development

1. United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)

285. As the principal arm of the United Nations for the funding and coordination of technical assistance and development, UNDP, under its Administrator, Mr. James Gustave Speth, has contributed to the development debate at both the conceptual and operational levels—internationally and in the countries it serves.

286. To strengthen its own capacity to give policy guidance and support in priority areas, UNDP restructured its Bureau for Policy and Programme Support to include four thematic divisions, on social development and poverty elimination, management development and governance, sustainable energy and environment, and science and technology.

287. Path-breaking legislation on the future of UNDP and on the successor programming arrangements for the next period was approved by the Executive Board of UNDP and UNFPA in June. The decision on the future of UNDP continued the process of redefining its role. The Board recognized poverty elimination as the overriding priority in UNDP programmes and urged concentration on areas where UNDP has demonstrable comparative advantages, in particular in capacity-building.

288. The Board's decision on successor programming arrangements constituted a major turning-point for UNDP, replacing the programming system that had been in effect since the "consensus" decision of 1970. The new system is intended to provide greater flexibility in the assignment of resources, as well as greater incentives for the formulation of focused, high-impact and high-leverage programmes to promote sustainable human development.

289. At the conceptual level, the Human Development Report, a report to UNDP, prepared by a team of independent development experts, has contributed to the international development debate. The 1995 Report focuses on gender issues and on valuing women's work as a contribution to the Fourth World Conference on Women.

290. Several Governments have requested assistance in the preparation of their own national human development reports, based on the methodologies used in the Human Development Report. National reports have been published in 9 countries in all regions in 1994 and 1995 and are in preparation in close to 40 more, including several in central and eastern Europe and CIS. In other countries, such as Botswana, Egypt and Bolivia, exercises based on the human development methodology for the collection of disaggregated data have been conducted. Overall, the reports and data collection exercises help to identify groups ex-eluded from the benefits of development, whether for reasons of poverty, gender or geographic location, and to propose environmentally sound strategies for their inclusion.

291. The national long-term perspective studies programme, introduced in 1991, has helped African countries define national priorities to guide their development over a 25-year "futures" horizon. By 1994, the programme was active in 11 countries.

292. UNDP has assisted many programme countries in the preparation of their positions at global forums. Through the resident coordinator system, UNDP has contributed at the national level to preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women. Several dozen reports on the status of women were prepared for the Conference, most of them based on gender analysis and the collection of disaggregated data. UNDP facilitated dialogue in each country among the organizations of Government, the United Nations and civil society. UNDP is now integrating the broader concept of gender in the programming process. For example, in 1993, the Government of Turkey, with support from UNDP, launched a programme for the enhancement of women's participation in the nation's development. Training was conducted on such topics as women and employment, women and entrepreneurship, and women and violence. UNDP is also cooperating with UNCHS in the preparations for Habitat II.

293. In 1994, in collaboration with the Inter-American Development Bank and Governments of the region, UNDP co-sponsored development-related preparations for the Summit of the Americas, which mapped out areas for enhanced regional cooperation and development and for movement towards greater participation in development planning and management. In the Asia and Pacific region, UNDP sponsored a regional meeting of development ministers at Kuala Lumpur to facilitate dialogue on strategies for collaboration and for development in the region. It was also heavily involved in the preparations for the International Convention to Combat Desertification and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, assisting with both the preparation of country positions and the conventions themselves.

294. UNDP experience shows that concepts can only be developed and tested against operational activities. In January 1995, in order to serve development professionals, UNDP pulled together national experience in 13 monographs in the UNDP Series on Sustainable Human Development: Country Strategies for Social Development. The series was launched during the preparatory process for the World Summit for Social Development.

295. Inter-agency cooperation has been furthered by widening the resident coordinator pool to encompass candidates from the joint consultative group on policy agencies as well as from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the United Nations Secretariat. Since January 1994, a total of six resident coordinators have so far been selected from the United Nations, UNICEF, the World Food Programme (WFP), UNIDO and UNCTAD. It is hoped that this will lead to greater understanding of the priorities of different agencies and an enhanced sense of ownership of the resident coordinator system on the part of the agencies.

296. In many countries, resident coordinators have established sectoral subcommittees led by the relevant United Nations agency representative to ensure coordination at the sectoral level. Joint training of United Nations agency representatives and resident coordinators at the ILO Turin Centre has been stepped up. A total of 13 workshops had been held by April 1995, with 63 staff from UNDP and 305 staff from other United Nations agencies being trained. To give further support to inter-agency coordination, UNDP has established an Inter-Agency Coordination and External Policy Office within a restructured Bureau for Resources and External Affairs.

297. Considerable success has been achieved in increasing the clarity of respective roles within the United Nations system. A statement of principles was signed with UNEP outlining respective roles and an intention to collaborate between the two organizations. A statement of principles was also signed with FAO on food security, a central aspect of sustainable human development in many countries. The high-level task force between UNDP and the World Bank was revitalized, resulting in the negotiation of a revised statement of principles for collaboration between the two agencies, in particular in the areas of forestry and poverty alleviation. Joint programming in select countries is expected to begin in the coming year. Finally, discussions are taking place between UNDP and UNHCR on the collaborative efforts to reintegrate populations displaced by war.

298. The Administrator of UNDP established a task force under the chairmanship of the Associate Administrator for further strengthening the role of the regional economic commissions. Mechanisms are being established—with collaboration between UNDP and the commissions—for coordinating United Nations activities at the regional and subregional levels.

299. UNDP has improved its support to the round-table process in order to achieve more regular meetings and a sharper focus on policy and resource mobilization. The 1994 round table for the Gambia raised $400 million. Four others were organized in Africa in 1994 (Central African Republic, Guinea-Bissau, Mali and Seychelles). The two organized in Asia, for the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Maldives, raised $500 million and $100 million respectively. The 1995 round table for Rwanda raised $587 million.

300. UNDP is playing a more active role in consultative group meetings, focusing on capacity for sustainable human development. At the consultative group for the Philippines, the UNDP-sponsored Philippine Human Development Report 1994 served as a principal reference for the agenda item on sustainable development.

301. In March, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action adopted by the World Summit for Social Development called on UNDP to organize United Nations system efforts towards capacity-building at the local, national and regional levels. In April, the Administrator sent a detailed proposal for UNDP follow-up strategy to all 133 country offices. In June, the Executive Board of UNDP adopted key decisions on following up the Summit and mandated poverty elimination as its overriding priority within the framework of the goals and priority areas agreed to the previous year in support of sustainable human development. The Administrator has asked the UNDP country offices to consult with national counterparts on how the United Nations system can best assist each country in implementing the recommendations of the Summit, in particular in developing national strategies and programmes for poverty elimination. Other areas include the macroeconomic framework for a greater emphasis on poverty reduction; social sector policy and planning; systems to assist vulnerable groups; and poverty definitions, indicators and assessments. UNDP has set up a rapid response system to provide information required for Summit follow-up and to support shifts in programme emphasis.

302. Poverty elimination, as addressed by the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action, requires participation and empowerment of people at all levels. This requires effective outreach mechanisms that make use of local government, institutions of civil society such as village and community groups and institutions of traditional government, national and international non-governmental organizations, United Nations Volunteer specialists and United Nations specialized agencies. Most importantly, it involves empowerment of target communities in the identification and communication of their own needs and in the management of the implementation of projects and programmes geared to eliminating critical constraints to their development. During 1994 and 1995, the United Nations Capital Development Fund provided local development funds in addition to larger-scale infrastructure and credit facilities. These funds involve the community, whether through community groups or local government bodies, in establishing priorities and in implementing micro-scale infrastructure projects.

303. To target those who are marginalized in economic or social terms but nevertheless have the potential for productive livelihood requires pro-poor macro-policies geared to build on the productivity of the poor. Many UNDP-supported programmes and projects, as in Sri Lanka and Uganda, have demonstrated how to bring participation, employment and empowerment to poor people. In recognition of the importance of rural agriculture in the alleviation of poverty, employment creation, the preservation of the environment and bringing women into the mainstream of economic development, guidelines for UNDP, government and other development practitioners, entitled "Sustainable Human Development and Agriculture", have been produced and now serve as a basic reference for programming in UNDP.

304. UNDP took several initiatives in 1994 to promote greater participation by the potential actors and beneficiaries of development. The Conference on Peace and Development, held in Honduras in October 1994, represented the climax of effort by the countries of the region to build consensus on the issues of peace and democratization in Central America. The Conference brought together representatives of Governments, the private sector, cooperatives, trade unions, indigenous communities, universities, regional organizations and the donor community, thus institutionalizing the dialogue with civil society.

305. Employment generation requires deepening collaboration between UNDP and ILO to identify market demand systematically and to create economically viable jobs that foster sustainable livelihoods. For example, in Ethiopia, the Government has formulated a national programme on human resource development and utilization that looks at both the supply and demand for human resources. The employment and livelihoods sub-programme has set a target of creating 24,000 additional jobs per year over five years and focuses on areas such as the informal sector, promotion of small and medium-scale enterprises, agricultural wage employment and rural on- and off-farm employment.

306. Protection and regeneration of the environment has been advanced by UNDP for national capacity-building in the follow-up and implementation of Agenda 21 and the Montreal Protocol. China has developed, with UNDP support and with the involvement of over 50 government agencies, research institutes and public organizations, an Agenda 21 strategy. UNDP helped to organize a donor conference during which the Government presented 62 high-priority projects covering such areas as sustainable agriculture; cleaner production; clean energy; conservation and sustainable use of natural resources; pollution control; population growth; and an improvement in the status of people's health, education and general welfare.

307. To meet the growing demand for national capacity to manage complex environmental concerns, a new Division for Sustainable Energy and Environment was established in August 1994 within the Bureau for Programme and Policy Support. It will further support efforts to incorporate environmental concerns at the earliest possible stages of economic decision-making and promote the full implementation of Agenda 21.

308. A new initiative for sustainable energy is being formulated to support programme formulation and to provide for greater access to improved energy technology. UNDP along with UNEP, UNIDO and the World Bank are the four implementing agencies assisting some 31 developing countries to eliminate ozone-depleting substances in a programme financed by the multilateral fund under the Montreal Protocol. As at 31 December 1994, total approved budgets amounted to $79.61 million. Eleven country programmes have been approved with UNDP as lead agency and 19 capacity-building (institution-strengthening) projects are under way. Out of a total of 97 projects completed, 20 involve technology transfer investment projects, which have phased out 1,455 tons of ozone-depleting substances.

309. The governance issues concerning the Global Environment Facility have been resolved and the Facility's Instrument has been approved, delineating the roles of UNEP, UNDP and the World Bank. By December 1994, the UNDP Global Environment Facility pilot phase portfolio consisted of 55 technical assistance projects and 28 pre-investment feasibility studies. In 1995, UNDP launched the post-pilot phase, with 20 projects. As the Programme's main effort to implement Agenda 21, Capacity 21 completed its first full year of operation in 1994, with a solid portfolio of national programmes in all regions. By August 1995, the environmental management guidelines training workshop, a major capacity-building initiative, had been held in 122 countries, involving 3,600 participants.

310. UNDP is supporting public sector reform in many countries. In Viet Nam, UNDP is helping with reform of the legal, financial and monetary systems, with particular emphasis on social adjustment concerns. It has been assigned the main responsibility for support to the Government in the coordination and management of external cooperation resources. Similar activities are under way in Lebanon, Peru and Zambia. In March, a regional meeting of Latin American and eastern European experts was held in Argentina to discuss how prudent use of regulation, competition and social safety nets can be combined to ensure that privatization contributes to sustainable human development.

311. During 1994, the United Nations Capital Development Fund began working with UNDP units dealing with governance in selected developing countries. The aim is to promote decentralization by attracting technical cooperation to the local level and providing the capital assistance necessary for newly established local authorities to gain experience in administering development programmes.

312. Collaborating closely with the Electoral Assistance Division of the Secretariat, UNDP has responded to an increasing number of country requests relating to the introduction or enhancement of the electoral process, including, in Africa, Chad, Ethiopia, Liberia, Mozambique, Togo and Uganda, and, in Latin America, Brazil and Mexico. United Nations Volunteer specialists served as electoral observers and facilitators in Mozambique and South Africa. Other UNDP-supported initiatives have aimed to ensure access to due process and acquired rights. For instance, an international ombudsman workshop was held in the Russian Federation as part of the democracy, governance and participation programme for the States of eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union.

313. UNDP is attempting to promote sustainable development even in the midst of internal conflict situations. The importance of ensuring that humanitarian relief is linked to sustainable human development is widely accepted as a prerequisite for countries to resume progress and rebuild capacity as soon as possible. A case in point is Somalia, where, despite the difficult security situation, UNDP managed to continue an active rural rehabilitation programme in some parts of the country.

314. In 1994-1995, UNDP substantively enhanced its assistance in two situations in particular. Firstly, resources for the UNDP programme of assistance to the Palestinian people doubled to $25 million between 1993 and 1994. Secondly, the Government of South Africa and UNDP concluded negotiations and signed the Basic Standard Agreement in October 1994 during the visit of President Nelson Mandela to Headquarters during the general debate of the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session.

315. In other institutional developments, UNDP has become the first United Nations organization to be accepted as a member of the Society for Worldwide Inter-Bank Financial Telecommunications, a financial communications system using leased lines owned by banks. This has improved cash management capabilities while achieving savings of $250,000 per year in general operating expenditures and reductions in staff costs.

316. The year 1994 was the mid-point of the current fifth indicative planning figure cycle (1992-1996), and 16 mid-term reviews were completed. It was found that fifth-cycle country programmes were essentially strategic, aimed at a limited number of major national or regional development objectives. As such, they are distinctly more focused than in previous cycles. They aim to reduce the number of individual projects and, as called for in General Assembly resolution 44/211 of 22 December 1989, to move towards the programme approach under national execution, with strong emphasis on national ownership and commitment. For example, in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, individual projects have been reduced from 50 to 15 and in the regional programme for Asia and the Pacific from 350 to 80. National ownership is being reinforced, with an increase in the rate of national execution from 34 per cent of approvals in 1991 to 53 per cent in 1994.

317. In 1994, voluntary contributions by member countries to UNDP core resources amounted to $917.57 million. Contributions to non-core resources, including UNDP-administered funds, trust funds, cost-sharing arrangements and government cash counterpart contributions, raised the total funds administered by UNDP to over $1.8 billion. There has been a continued rise in funds received through cost-sharing arrangements, with cost-sharing contributions increasing by 58.7 per cent in 1994. Total field programme expenditures for technical cooperation activities in 1994 amounted to approximately $1,036.50 million.

318. It became clear in 1994 that the UNDP biennial budget would have to be reduced further to keep administrative costs in line with declining core programme resources. This is in spite of the fact that between the biennial budgets for 1992-1993 and 1994-1995 a total of $53.6 million was cut from the administrative budget. Cuts have been made primarily by reducing staff positions both at headquarters (26 per cent) and at the country level (8 per cent).

319. The stagnation of UNDP core resources since 1992 and the current uncertain outlook reflect the global situation with regard to development cooperation. It is a cause for concern that notwithstanding the substantial adjustments undertaken in response to the changed conditions of the post-cold-war era, the resource base for UNDP has been seriously eroded. The 1995 contributions to the central resources of UNDP are expected to amount to approximately $937 million. This is much lower than the originally projected level under Governing Council decision 90/34, which, on the basis of resources of $1 billion, called for an 8 per cent annual increase during the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996). Viewed in the context of that decision, the shortfall for the cycle would amount to approximately $1.4 billion. For this reason, the Executive Board of UNDP decided to reduce national indicative planning figures by 30 per cent from their original levels.

320. Tragically, 17 UNDP staff members lost their lives in 1994 while serving the cause of development.

2. United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)

321. Ms. Carol Bellamy was appointed the fourth Executive Director of UNICEF, succeeding Mr. James P. Grant, who had led the organization for 15 years until his death in January 1995. The new Executive Director has indicated that improving the financial management and administrative and programme systems of UNICEF and ensuring more effective and efficient programme delivery will allow UNICEF to move into the next century (see fig. 77).

322. 1995 is the mid-point of the decade-long strategy of the World Summit for Children to meet global objectives for the welfare of children. The international community's goals and objectives for children and the broad outline of a global strategy have been set for the remainder of the decade by the World Summit for Children and by the imperatives of the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The International Conference on Population and Development and the World Summit for Social Development have reiterated the commitment of the international community to these goals. The Fourth World Conference on Women, to be held at Beijing in September 1995, can be expected to take these commitments a stage further, with a heightened emphasis on the need for gender equity and equality and for special attention to the girl-child.

323. The progress report presented to the UNICEF Executive Board on follow-up to the World Summit for Children noted that impressive progress was under way and that the majority of developing countries were on track to achieve a majority of the goals.

324. In 1994, UNICEF supported programmes in 149 countries—46 in Africa, 37 in Latin America and the Caribbean (including 10 Caribbean island countries), 34 in Asia (including 13 Pacific island countries), 14 in the Middle East and North Africa and 18 in central and eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States and the Baltic States. The total programme expenditure reached $801 million. The third issue of The Progress of Nations, released in June 1995, provided up-to-date data on indicators for monitoring progress towards the goals, ranking countries according to their results.

325. UNICEF is addressing the main causes of child mortality, with a focus on prevention, including immunization and the prevention and treatment of the major killers—acute respiratory infections, diarrhoeal diseases and malaria in areas of high endemicity. Immunization coverage was sustained globally at the 80 per cent level, but the regional average in Africa remained significantly lower, as it did in 1993. The Bamako Initiative, as a strategy for strengthening local primary health care systems, expanded to 33 countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America. Global and country-level activities continued to achieve goals for the year 2000 of universal iodization of salt and vitamin A distribution to all vulnerable people.

326. Most countries in East Asia, Latin America and the Middle East achieved the mid-decade goal of universal access to primary education. However, more than one half of developing countries, including high-population countries in South Asia and Africa, still have to make major strides before all their children can be provided adequate opportunities for basic education. Girls' primary education was the dominant component of UNICEF support for education in South Asia, sub-Saharan Africa and the Middle East and North Africa.

327. UNICEF assisted some 100 countries in achieving their water supply and sanitation goals and worked to refine strategies that emphasize sustainability and maximize health and socioeconomic benefits. Progress was made in gaining acceptance of the women's equality and empowerment framework, as well as the life-cycle approach, as tools for promoting gender-balanced programmes for children and development.

328. UNICEF is committed to mainstream development programming, particularly as related to activities in basic social services. While pursuing these long-term development efforts, UNICEF was also called upon to play an active role in responding to many emergencies in which women and children were the hardest-hit victims. Approximately 25 per cent of UNICEF's programme expenditure in 1994 was devoted to providing life-saving essential services for children and women in emergencies.

329. In the former Yugoslavia, UNICEF was charged with a mandate to provide relief assistance in situations of great insecurity for its own staff. In Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia and Tajikistan, UNICEF helped to address the special needs of refugee populations and internally displaced people through the re-establishment of the cold chain, the provision of basic vaccines and health supplies, and support for educational systems.

330. UNICEF continues to pay special attention to African and other least developed countries. Despite the continuing and threatening emergencies in certain parts of sub-Saharan Africa, there are many positive developments that go almost unnoticed. In the areas of special action for children, 25 of the 46 countries in sub-Saharan Africa have either increased or sustained the immunization levels of 75 per cent or higher reached in 1990; the usage rate of oral rehydration therapy has now reached 50 per cent; salt iodization measures are being implemented in 28 of the 39 countries affected by iodine deficiency disorders; and guinea worm disease is well on the way to being eliminated from most of Africa.

331. Africa remains the continent with the greatest needs. UNICEF devotes some 38 per cent of its financial and human resources to sub-Saharan Africa. It helps to build capacities and empower communities and families. In countries emerging from disasters, programmes will aim at strengthening local capacity, solidarity and coping mechanisms, which could become the embryo of new societies. At the national level, UNICEF is strengthening its ability to support Governments in policy development affecting children and in mobilizing resources for children. At the same time, UNICEF is participating actively in a United Nations-wide initiative for Africa, working to strengthen country-level collaboration towards all the elements of sustainable human development, poverty reduction and accelerated economic growth.

332. Unaccompanied children and internally displaced people were a major challenge for UNICEF in Rwanda, where an unprecedented relief effort was mounted to protect refugees from the rapid spread of disease and famine. In Angola, Burundi and Somalia, UNICEF continued to provide assistance in the areas of health, education and water supply and sanitation. In Mozambique, under a national plan of reconstruction, UNICEF reoriented its emergency activities towards rebuilding basic services for health, water supply and sanitation and education. In Liberia and Sierra Leone, despite facing an increasingly difficult situation, UNICEF continued to provide essential emergency services. Trauma counselling and physical rehabilitation for handicapped children were priorities, as were programmes for violently abused women and girls and vocational training for child soldiers.

333. The Convention on the Rights of the Child has been embraced by more States than any other human rights treaty in history. By August 1995, 177 parties had ratified the Convention, with only 17 countries needed to attain the goal of universal ratification by the end of 1995.

334. At its forty-ninth session, the General Assembly discussed for the first time the issue of children's rights and adopted resolutions on the protection of children affected by armed conflicts; the need to adopt efficient international measures for the prevention and eradication of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child; and the plight of street children (resolutions 49/209 to 49/212, all of 23 December 1994). UNICEF was asked to play an active role in support of those resolutions. Furthermore, UNICEF, in collaboration with the Centre for Human Rights, has been assisting the Committee on the Rights of the Child in monitoring implementation of the Convention. UNICEF is supporting the comprehensive study of the impact of armed conflict on children in response to General Assembly resolution 48/157 of 20 December 1993.

335. The World Summit for Social Development has provided new impetus to the work of UNICEF on behalf of children within the United Nations system, setting that work within a wider international effort towards poverty eradication and social development. After two years of systematic mobilization and persistent technical refinement in which UNICEF played an active role along with UNDP and UNFPA, the "20/20" initiative was adopted at the World Summit for Social Development as a legitimate and useful instrument for guiding, assessing and monitoring overall official development assistance and national budgetary allocations to basic social programmes.

3. United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA)

336. During 1994, UNFPA, directed by Dr. Nafis Sadik, supported population programmes in 137 countries and territories. The Fund operates field offices, each headed by a country director, in 60 of those countries. The year 1994 will be remembered as the year the international community changed the way it looks at population issues. That change in perception actually evolved over two decades and culminated in the adoption of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, held at Cairo in September of that year.

337. The Programme of Action was the product of more than three years of intense deliberation and negotiation between Governments, non-governmental organizations, community leaders, technical experts and interested individuals. The Programme of Action goes beyond mere numbers and demographic targets and places human beings and their well-being at the centre of all population and sustainable development activities. It also sets out quantitative and qualitative goals and objectives to be reached by all countries by the year 2015: to provide universal access to reproductive health and family planning services; to reduce infant, child and maternal mortality; and to provide access to primary education for all girls and boys.

338. The Conference, and the Programme of Action it produced, spawned a series of internal and external assessments of UNFPA. For example, each UNFPA geographical division conducted internal reviews of existing policies and programmes and convened regional meetings to consider the implications of the Conference for their respective regions.

339. UNFPA held a series of joint workshops with partner agencies in the United Nations development system to examine how best to translate the recommendations of the Programme of Action into actions at the country and local levels. These workshops focused on the key areas of the Fund's programme—reproductive health and family planning (with WHO); information, education and communication (with UNESCO and WHO); and population data, policy and research (with ILO)—and involved advisers from the UNFPA technical support services/country support team system, including technical support services specialists from the respective United Nations agencies and organizations. These regional and technical consultations helped UNFPA assess the policy and programme implications of the Conference for the future work of UNFPA.

340. The programme priorities and future directions of UNFPA in the light of the Conference were considered by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board at its annual session in June 1995. The Executive Board, in its decision 95/15, supported the broad outline of the future programme of assistance of UNFPA, which must be implemented in full accordance with the Programme of Action of the Conference, and endorsed the Fund's core programme areas of reproductive health, including family planning and sexual health, population and development strategies, and advocacy. The Board also recommended, in its decision 95/20, that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly endorse the agreement between UNDP and UNFPA to designate UNFPA resident country directors as UNFPA representatives.

341. On 19 December 1994, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/128, entitled "Report of the International Conference on Population and Development", in which it emphasized the importance of continued and enhanced cooperation and coordination by all relevant organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies, and requested them to take appropriate measures to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Programme of Action. In resolution 49/128, the Assembly decided that the Population Commission should be renamed the Commission on Population and Development and that it should meet on an annual basis beginning in 1996.

342. On behalf of the Secretary-General and at the request of the Administrator of UNDP, the Executive Director of UNFPA convened in December 1994 the first meeting of the Inter-Agency Task Force on the Implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development. The meeting, attended by 12 United Nations organizations, worked to establish a common framework for follow-up to the Conference and other conferences in the social sector. The Task Force decided to use working groups to develop operational guidelines for use by resident coordinators to promote inter-agency collaboration at the country level in the following areas: (a) a common data system at the national level in the field of health, notably in the areas of infant, child and maternal mortality; (b) basic education, with special attention to gender disparities; (c) policy-related issues, including the drafting of a common advocacy statement on social issues; (d) women's empowerment; and (e) reproductive health.

343. To achieve the goals of the Conference, it is necessary to mobilize resources from Governments and non-governmental organizations. At the request of the Secretary-General, the Executive Director of UNFPA convened a consultation on resource mobilization on 20 January 1995. The participants suggested using existing mechanisms at the country level, such as the resident coordinator system, the World Bank consultative groups, and UNDP round tables, for the purpose of mobilizing country-specific resources. It was agreed that global consultation on this topic should be convened periodically, preferably at the time of the annual sessions of the Commission on Population and Development.

344. In conjunction with the International Conference on Population and Development and the World Summit for Social Development, UNFPA organized two international parliamentary meetings, dealing specifically with population issues relevant to the themes of the conferences. Moreover, UNFPA established an NGO Advisory Committee to advise on how to make better use of and interact more effectively with non-governmental organizations and the private sector.

345. In 1994, UNFPA organized programme review and strategy development exercises in nine countries, providing useful inputs to the formulation of the country strategy notes. By the end of 1994, UNFPA had undertaken a total of 76 such exercises.

346. The Executive Board of UNFPA, in its decision 94/25, encouraged UNFPA, given the situation in Rwanda, to support, on an exceptional basis, in appropriate ways and in collaboration with other relief agencies, emergency assistance to the people of Rwanda from the population programme resources of the third UNFPA country programme for Rwanda. Subsequently, UNFPA approved a project in Rwanda for emergency/rehabilitation assistance to the national maternal and child health and family planning programme, with UNICEF and UNFPA as executing agencies, and two emergency assistance projects to meet the reproductive health needs of Rwandan refugees in Burundi and the United Republic of Tanzania. The projects in Burundi and the United Republic of Tanzania, which were formulated in collaboration with UNHCR, UNICEF, the African Medical and Research Foundation and local non-governmental organizations, are progressing reasonably well. The Executive Board, in its decision 95/14, approved the continued implementation of decision 94/25, allowing for flexibility in sectoral expenditure of resources from the third UNFPA country programme for Rwanda and for overall expenditures of up to $7.8 million.

347. At the global level, UNFPA continued to support the Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction of WHO. UNFPA also participated in the United Nations Joint and Co-sponsored Programme on HIV/AIDS. The Fund's Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs in Developing Countries in the 1990s, co-funded by a number of multilateral and bilateral donors and non-governmental organizations, organized in-depth studies on contraceptive requirements in Brazil, Bangladesh and Egypt, generating interest by several other countries with regard to contraceptive requirements. The Global Initiative also produced technical reports and organized consultative meetings and workshops.

348. The income of the Fund in 1994 was $265.3 million, compared to a 1993 income of $219.6 million, an increase of 20.8 per cent (see fig. 12). Total expenditures for projects, from regular resources, increased from $134.3 million in 1993 to $204.1 million in 1994, an increase of $67.1 million, or 50 per cent. Expenditures for reproductive health and family planning programmes increased by 46 per cent, from $68.7 million in 1993 to $100.1 million in 1994, and accounted for nearly half of all of the Fund's project expenditures. Expenditures for information, education and communication activities increased by 80 per cent, from $21.3 million in 1993 to $38.3 million in 1994, and accounted for 19 per cent of total project expenditures. The remaining expenditures were divided among basic data collection (6.6 per cent); population dynamics (5.7 per cent); formulation, implementation and evaluation of population policies (8.1 per cent); multisectoral activities (5.5 per cent); and special programmes (5.4 per cent).

349. In 1994, the Asia and Pacific region received 31.5 per cent of UNFPA programme allocations, the sub-Saharan Africa region received 31.1 per cent, the Latin America and Caribbean region 13.5 per cent and the Arab States and Europe 11.5 per cent. Support for interregional and global programmes amounted to 12.4 per cent of allocations. The Fund continued to concentrate over 71 per cent of its resources in countries most in need of assistance in the population field and notably in the poorest developing countries. In 1994, there were 58 priority countries for UNFPA assistance: 32 in sub-Saharan Africa, 17 in Asia and the Pacific, 5 in Latin America and the Caribbean and 4 in the Arab States.

4. World Food Programme (WFP)

350. Directed by Ms. Catherine Bertini, WFP, the food aid arm of the United Nations system, remains on the front line of the United Nations battle against hunger and poverty. WFP concentrates its efforts on the neediest people in the neediest countries of the world.

351. In 1994, food assistance provided by WFP reached 57 million poor and hungry people. Eighty-two per cent of total WFP resources went to low-income food-deficit countries; the share to least developed countries was 52 per cent. Such resources support both relief and development.

352. On the development side, WFP food aid has been an effective means of transferring income to the poor and encouraging collective action in poor communities. Currently, some 225 development projects with an aggregate commitment of $2.6 billion are being supported in over 80 developing countries (see fig. 13).

353. On the emergency side, WFP responds to food shortages by relying on its network of country offices and on its expertise in transport, logistics and procurement. During 1994, WFP provided relief assistance at a value of over $1 billion to the victims of man-made and natural disasters in over 40 countries.

354. In 1994, WFP managed $1.5 billion of resources—in food commodities and cash—in support of the hungry and poor throughout the developing world. Over 32 million victims of man-made and natural disasters benefited from WFP assistance in 1994. Some 16 million people participated in food-for-work projects in support of agricultural and rural development. Over 8 million people received supplementary feeding through WFP-assisted education, training, health and nutrition projects.

355. About 80 per cent of WFP relief assistance in 1994 was provided to victims of disasters coming out of civil strife or cross-border wars—some 8.5 million refugees and 16.5 million internally displaced people, representing 50 per cent of the world's population of those two groups. More than 7 million people were victims of drought and other natural disasters. Some 64 per cent of total WFP relief operations were in support of needy people in Africa. The single biggest operation was in Burundi and Rwanda, costing $242 million, or 22 per cent of total relief expenditures. This operation, associated with tragic loss of life on a massive scale, continues to be an urgent focus of attention for the United Nations today, not only in Burundi and Rwanda but also in Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda and Zaire. The Liberia regional programme, costing $96 million, provided assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Liberia and in four neighbouring countries involved in the crisis.

356. Elsewhere in the world, major emergencies faced by WFP included the former Yugoslavia, where people continued to face food shortages and real poverty as a result of unresolved conflicts. WFP operations in that region amounted to $149 million. Afghanistan represents another country that is still in a state of chronic food insecurity in the absence of peace. The WFP regional operations in support of Afghan refugees and displaced people cost $95 million in 1994.

357. The number, scale and duration of emergencies and disasters, particularly those caused by armed conflict, have escalated alarmingly in recent years. In 1994, two out of three tons of WFP-provided food aid were distributed as relief assistance, and only one ton was used in support of development projects. Five years ago it was the reverse. With fewer resources for development, "silent" emergencies, in which people live in abject poverty and chronic food insecurity, can quickly turn into acute emergencies. Relief assistance alone does not change the vulnerability of poor people to the next emergency. WFP is therefore making a deliberate effort to identify ways to increase the linkages between its relief and development assistance by integrating disaster mitigation elements into development projects, developing capacity-building elements into relief operations, and strengthening disaster preparedness through vulnerability mapping, better early warning and institutional development.

358. The Programme's approach to reducing problems associated with humanitarian emergencies is to collaborate in efforts aimed at prevention rather than cure. Wherever possible, food aid is used to support development goals. Africa and Asia continue to receive the largest shares of WFP development assistance—40 per cent and 39 per cent, respectively. However, WFP development resources continue to decline in both absolute and relative terms with respect to emergency operations. Of the target of $1.5 billion for WFP regular development resources for the biennium 1993-1994 (approved by the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council, and endorsed by the General Assembly and the FAO Conference) only two thirds was realized. As a result, the implementation of projects was often delayed. Moreover, WFP has been unable to support all approved projects at the level originally planned, as donors have increasingly tied and designated their development funds.

359. Food purchases have increased significantly during the last five years. In 1994, WFP purchased a record 1.4 million tons of food, almost half of all the commodities distributed by the Programme. Sixty per cent of the food commodities were bought in developing countries, maintaining the Programme's position as the largest contributor to South-South trade in the United Nations system.

360. WFP cooperates with other multilateral, bilateral and non-governmental organizations at all stages of its activities. In 1994, significant progress was made in ensuring greater collaboration in relief operations. Joint assessments of refugee food needs (with UNHCR) and emergency needs (with FAO) continued to be an essential part of the work of WFP. WFP-assisted development projects in 17 countries benefited from collaboration with the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD). WFP signed a first memorandum of understanding on joint working arrangements for emergency relief operations with a major international non-governmental organization and will seek to conclude similar agreements with other non-governmental organizations in the future.

361. The approach of WFP has been notably strengthened by the adoption of principles and guidelines for a country-based programme, which includes resourcing levels, and of criteria for project approval. Resource arrangements are being addressed to improve predictability, accountability and transparency, as well as actual resource levels. The General Regulations of the Programme are being amended in the light of General Assembly resolutions 47/199 of 22 December 1992 and 48/162 of 20 December 1993.

5. United Nations International Drug Control Programme

362. During the reporting period, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, headed by Mr. Giorgio Giacomelli, continued to carry out its activities on the basis of a three-tiered strategy articulated at the country, regional and global levels.

363. At the country level, the Programme elaborated guidelines to assist Governments in the preparation of national drug control master plans, that is, national agendas that address both illicit demand and illicit supply reduction. Support by the Programme led to the development of master plans in 14 countries and territories in the Caribbean. Master plan assistance was also provided to Algeria, Guatemala, Namibia, Pakistan, the United Arab Emirates and Viet Nam. The Programme assisted the Government of Colombia in developing drug control components within that country's 10-year National Alternative Development Plan, to become effective on 1 January 1996.

364. In 1994, the Programme funded a comprehensive ground survey of the extent of opium poppy cultivation in Afghanistan. The results—to be confirmed in a 1995 survey—reveal a dry opium production volume substantially in excess of previous estimates of 2,000 metric tons; based on the revised estimates, Afghanistan would be the world's largest illicit producer of opium.

365. At the regional level, the Programme held in South Africa in November 1994 a regional workshop aimed at strengthening judiciary cooperation against drug trafficking in southern Africa. Governments in the region adopted a communique against corruption and a plan of action comprising measures to strengthen drug trafficking interdiction in the subregion.

366. In May 1995, at Beijing, the first ministerial meeting took place between the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, China and Thailand, all of which are parties to the memorandum of understanding on control of illicit drugs in South-East Asia. The meeting approved the accession of Cambodia and Viet Nam to the memorandum of understanding and endorsed an Action Plan on subregional cooperation in drug control matters. In China, law enforcement capabilities in Yunnan Province were strengthened with equipment from the Programme and training needs were identified. Law enforcement officers in the border areas of China and Myanmar launched the establishment of an information exchange system. After the signing of a regional memorandum of understanding in 1994, Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Peru and the Programme developed an action agenda for implementation in 1995-1997 emphasizing law enforcement and harmonization of demand reduction techniques.

367. By 30 June 1995, the Baltic States, 9 central European countries and 12 countries of CIS had received legal assistance from the Programme. The central Asian republics have emerged as a high priority for the Programme, and accordingly a multisectoral subregional programme, requiring support from the international community, has been developed.

368. In 1994-1995, the Programme continued its series of demand reduction expert forums, with technical consultations held in Brazil, the Bahamas, Cameroon, India and Morocco. In the context of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, a World Forum on the Role of Non-Governmental Organizations in Drug Demand Reduction was held at Bangkok in December 1994.

with participants from 115 countries. The Forum resulted in a declaration that reinforces the partnership between the United Nations and non-governmental organizations in demand reduction.

369. In April 1995, the Programme helped organize in Brazil the Second International Private Sector Conference on Drugs in the Workplace and the Community, with one result being the identification of essential elements of corporate policy needed for drug abuse prevention. In February 1995, the Programme and the International Olympic Committee signed a cooperation agreement to promote sports in the prevention of drug abuse.

370. At the global level, the Programme conducted research and synthesized the results into technical information and research papers. In order to address complex issues in drug control, the Programme prepared studies on the present status of knowledge on the illicit drug industry and the economic and social impact of drug abuse and control, as well as an interim report on the economic and social consequences of drug abuse, presented to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-eighth session, in March 1995.

371. The Programme's laboratory continued to expand its Quality Assurance Programme, aimed at assisting laboratories to develop effective laboratory practices in the analysis of drug-related matters. Eighty laboratories worldwide are participating in the International Proficiency Testing Scheme, which assesses the performance of laboratories and enhances output accuracy.

372. One of the major issues addressed by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 1994 and 1995 was the implementation of General Assembly resolution 48/12 of 28 October 1993 on measures to strengthen international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities. The Executive Director of the Programme convened two meetings in 1994 of an intergovernmental advisory group and produced a report which was examined by the Commission at its thirty-eighth session. That report included specific recommendations on ways to strengthen international action in drug control. The Commission, in its resolution 13(XXXVIII), invited States to consider the recommendations; it also requested the Executive Director to further refine them in the light of States' comments for submission to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

373. In response to General Assembly resolution 48/12, the International Narcotics Control Board, an independent treaty organ, outlined its assessment and major findings with respect to the drug control treaties in its report for 1994. The Board also issued a special supplement on the effectiveness of the treaties, highlighting areas in need of strengthening.

374. In September 1994 and February 1995, at the request of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Programme convened a working group on maritime cooperation to further international cooperation in combating illicit drug traffic by sea. The recommendations and principles adopted by the working group and endorsed by the Commission represent a milestone in efforts to contain the problem of illicit drug shipments that traverse international waters.

375. Also in February 1995, the Administrative Committee on Coordination held a high-level meeting at Vienna that addressed system-wide cooperation in drug control. The meeting resulted in recognition of the need for United Nations programmes, funds and agencies to incorporate drug control components into their programmes and broad support for the leadership role of the Programme in drug control coordination.

376. The total budget of the Programme for 1994-1995 amounted to $205 million, of which approximately 93 per cent was funded from voluntary contributions. The main share of these resources, $162 million, was used for over 300 operational activities in 50 countries, aimed at countering illicit drug production, trafficking and consumption. In view of the continuous rise in drug-related problems throughout the world and the trend of dwindling resources available for drug control, I urge Member States to provide the political and financial support needed to pursue international priorities in drug control.

6. Technical cooperation programmes of the United Nations Secretariat

377. The focal point at United Nations Headquarters for technical cooperation for development efforts of developing countries and countries in transition is the Department for Development Support and Management Services. Total project expenditures for the Department in 1994 approximated $101 million for close to 1,044 projects in over a dozen sectors. Of that amount, UNDP funded about $51 million. The Department disbursed 44 per cent of its expenditures in Africa. In order to carry out its projects, over the past year the Department fielded over 900 international experts and consultants to work in collaboration with national personnel. The Department calls on a worldwide roster of over 4,330 consultants, 2,350 consulting companies and 6,330 suppliers of equipment. The Department also helps Governments to identify, select and purchase the most appropriate services and equipment for their development projects and supports capacity-building for work in those areas. Training is a vital component of such activities; in 1994, training placements were made for some 2,500 persons from over 130 countries.

378. With the approval of the General Assembly, the Secretariat has proceeded with the decentralization to the regional commissions of staff and resources in the fields of natural resources and energy. These activities are managed by the Management Board of the United Nations Technical Cooperation Programme in Natural Resources and Energy, chaired by the Under-Secretary-General of the Department for Development Support and Management Services, with the participation of the regional commissions. This coordinating body has enhanced the responsiveness and effectiveness of assistance provided by the Organization in these areas.

379. Considerable progress has been made in forging closer links between the Department and UNDP. This strengthened cooperation has resulted in an increased role by the Department in "upstream" advice in development planning and management and in technical backstopping activities at the programme and project levels.

7. United Nations Office for Project Services

380. The United Nations Office for Project Services, formerly a part of UNDP, was established, with the approval of the General Assembly, on 1 January 1995. Consistent with my overall plan for the restructuring of the Secretariat, I proposed to separate the Office for Project Services from UNDP with the objective of strengthening the operational activities of the United Nations system for development. Within this framework, the Office for Project Services is now the principal entity in the United Nations system furnishing project management, implementation and support services.

381. The Office for Project Services is headed by the Executive Director, Mr. Reinhart Helmke, who reports to me through the Management Coordination Committee, as well as to the Executive Board of UNDP and UNFPA.

382. The Management Coordination Committee, comprising the Administrator of UNDP as chairman, the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management, the Under-Secretary-General for Development Support and Management Services and the Executive Director of the Office, has met twice during the reporting period to deliberate on a number of important policy and coordination issues relating to Office operations.

383. The Committee reviewed the business plan of the Office, its new financial regulations, its relationship with UNDP and the Department for Development Support and Management Services, operational follow-up activities relating to the World Summit for Social Development, held in 1994, and a set of strategic policy guidelines defining the scope of activities of the Office, including client partnerships and principal areas of concentration. Four main areas of concentration were identified for activities of the Office: executing development projects, coordinating rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, managing environmental programmes and administering development loans. The proposed new financial regulations for the Office were approved by the Executive Board at the beginning of 1995, affording a new framework from which businesslike management practices can be instituted.

384. The portfolio of projects of the Office has grown consistently over the past 20 years, reaching more than $1 billion in 1994. Delivery in 1994 stood at $403.1 million, up 5.3 per cent from 1993. The number of projects in the portfolio also increased to nearly 1,900, as compared with roughly 1,700 during the previous year. In 1994, activities where the country portfolio was in excess of $10 million were under way in more than 20 countries.

385. In addition to implementing projects on behalf of United Nations agencies and programmes, the Office also administers management service agreements (MSAs) on behalf of multilateral development banks, bilateral donors and recipient Governments. Against a portfolio budget of $639 million, services provided under MSA arrangements totalled $142 million in 1994. Expenditures incurred by the Office during that year under the Global Environment Facility and the Montreal Protocol to the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer amounted to more than $30 million.

386. In view of the experience it has acquired in managing post-conflict rehabilitation since the late 1980s, the demand for the services of the Office in designing and implementing comprehensive and integrated recovery programmes is increasing. The applicability of the lessons learned in the Horn of Africa, in Central America and in Asia are now being tested, for the first time, in eastern Europe (Ukraine) and central Asia (Tajikistan).

387. In keeping with its field orientation and in order to render its services more efficient, the Office has decentralized a number of functions. In addition to the Management Support Unit established in Central America in 1993, the Office has set up a post in Kuala Lumpur, from which it manages programmes in South-East Asia.

D. Regional development activities

388. The regional commissions were established by the General Assembly to serve as the main regional centres for economic and social development. They operate at a level between global United Nations entities and country operations. As such, the regional commissions promote regional initiatives and strategies, contribute to in-depth studies of various issues and support intergovernmental initiatives to elaborate norms, standards and legal instruments. In addition, regional commissions are a forum for dialogue for sub-regional groupings and help prepare regional positions to world conferences and summit meetings held by the United Nations (see fig. 14).

1. Economic Commission for Africa (ECA)

389. Assisting Member States in Africa to reinforce promising trends and overcome the obstacles to accelerated growth and socio-economic development has defined the analytical, advocacy and advisory work of ECA under its Executive Secretary, Mr. K. Y. Amoako. This provided the backdrop to the thirtieth session of the Commission, held from 24 April to 3 May 1995, the theme of which was "promoting accelerated growth and sustainable development in Africa through the building of critical capacities". At that session the Commission reviewed progress in the elaboration of the Framework Agenda for Building and Utilizing Critical Capacities in Africa and directed that the Framework Agenda be completed before the next session, in 1996.

390. The session also adopted a declaration on external debt of African countries which called for improvement in the Naples Terms, including an 80 per cent reduction in the total non-concessional debt of African countries, and urged the cancellation of concessional debt rescheduled in the Paris Club. It adopted a special memorandum on the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for Least Developed Countries for the 1990s scheduled for September 1995. The session noted with satisfaction the commitment of African countries to carry out necessary reforms to attract private investment, and invited all African countries and their development partners to participate in the regional forum on private investment which will be held in early 1996 at Accra.

391. At the same session the Commission strongly endorsed the need to promote food security and self-sufficiency in Africa. In this regard, the Commission called on Member States to create a macroeconomic environment conducive to the development of the food and agricultural sector and requested relevant United Nations agencies to strengthen programmes designed to promote food security and self-sufficiency in Africa.

392. With the coming into force in May 1994 of the Abuja Treaty establishing the African Economic Community, the Commission intensified its efforts in support of the implementation of the Treaty. Together with the Organization of African Unity and the African Development Bank—its partners in a Joint Secretariat—the Commission participated in setting up a committee to formulate proposals for resource mobilization in support of the African Economic Community and formulating a framework for a working relationship between the subregional economic communities and the Joint Secretariat. Furthermore, the Commission undertook studies on the rationalization and harmonization of regional economic groups in West and Central Africa in the context of the establishment of the West African Economic and Monetary Union and the Central African Economic and Monetary Union.

393. The Second United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa aims at facilitating development of transport and communications in Africa. A mid-term evaluation report of the Decade programme was examined by the Tenth Meeting of African Ministers of Transport and Communications held in May 1995. The main recommendations from the evaluation were that the programmes should be streamlined, resource mobilization efforts for Decade projects should be intensified and the beneficiaries of the Decade programme should assume ownership. The Commission implemented four important projects in the transport and communication sectors: human resource and institution development in transport and communications; a transport database; the reactivation of the Trans-African Highway Bureau; and the Yamoussoukro Declaration on a new air transport policy for Africa.

394. With a view to assisting Member States in formulating policies and strategies for sustainable development of natural resources, the Commission published a document entitled "Policies and strategies for the development and utilization of natural resources and energy in Africa". The Commission also organized, in collaboration with the World Meteorological Organization, an international conference entitled "Water Resources: Policy and Assessment", held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 March 1995. The Conference articulated a strategy to rehabilitate, build or adopt the institutional financial manpower and technological capacity of countries to assess water resources needs for socio-economic development.

395. In response to the decisions of Member States expressed at the Regional Ministerial Conference on Development and Utilization of Mineral Resources in Africa, the Commission undertook two studies on prospects for increased production and intra-African trade in copper and copper-based products and prospects for increased production and intra-African trade in aluminium commodities and metal products. The studies have been well received by Governments, private companies and entrepreneurs, as well as regional and subregional organizations.

396. The Commission continued its efforts to promote the development of scientific and technological capacities. It thus conducted studies on incentives for development and the application of science and technology, indicators for science and technology in Africa and foreign direct investment as a vehicle for science and technology development. Furthermore, the Commission, in collaboration with OAU, organized a round table on the science and technology protocol of the African Economic Community from 21 to 27 September 1994.

397. In the context of the implementation of the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa, the Commission assisted Member States in the formulation of appropriate industrial policies and effective implementation of industrial programmes. The twelfth meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry at Gaborone in June 1995 examined, among other things, the progress made by African countries in the implementation of their national and subregional programmes for the Decade and the role of the private sector in the implementation of the goals of the Decade.

398. The Commission has launched a new series entitled the Human Development in Africa Report. The 1995 edition of the report was devoted to the themes of "Goals of the child", "Health for all" and "Basic education for all". The Commission has intensified its activities in assistance to Member States in integrating population development factors into socio-economic development programmes and policies; preparation of studies and/or workshops on family planning and reproductive health, fertility and mortality; and the implementation of the Dakar/Ngor Declaration on Population, Family and Sustainable Development and the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development.

399. The sixteenth meeting of the African Regional Coordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development was held from 20 to 22 April 1995 at Addis Ababa. It endorsed the African Platform for Action for Women adopted at the Fifth African Regional Conference on Women held at Dakar in November 1994. The African Platform for Action is the region's common position for the Fourth World Conference on Women. At the same time, the Commission continued its efforts related to the establishment of an African women's bank by convening an Ad Hoc Group Meeting in August 1994 to examine the feasibility of the creation of the bank. Entrepreneurs from some African countries have indicated their willingness to promote the bank. At its 1995 session, the Conference of Ministers requested further studies to clarify certain issues concerning the establishment of the bank. The Commission's operational role in the advancement of women was matched by the deepening of its analytical work on women's issues in Africa. For example, the Commission's Economic and Social Survey of Africa 1995 features a special study on gender disparities in formal education in Africa.

400. The Commission, in collaboration with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), UNCTAD and OAU, organized in Tunisia in October 1994 the International Conference to Assess the Impact of the Uruguay Round on African Economies. The aim of this Conference was to evaluate the technical requirements of African countries in adapting to the post-Uruguay Round international trade environment.

401. During the period from December 1994 to June 1995, the Commission fielded over 65 short-term technical advisory missions. The main institutional vehicle for providing these advisory services is the ECA Multidisciplinary Regional Advisory Group. ECA rendered assistance to some Member States in the area of environmental management. It fielded advisory missions to Eritrea on protection of the marine environment and to Seychelles on water and environment. The Commission collaborated with UNEP in the preparation of studies on the contribution of the coastal/marine sector to the gross national product in the Gambia and the United Republic of Tanzania.

402. The Commission has provided assistance to Member States in areas of public sector management, including development of indicators for public enterprise performance; strengthening of national statistical institutions; establishing information management systems; and agricultural management and policy planning. In Eritrea, for example, ECA has provided technical assistance for public enterprise reform and management, and assisted in establishing a national development information system and network linking various departments of the Government. In Angola, ECA is evaluating the development priority areas to form the basis of a policy framework for its technical assistance to the country's socio-economic development.

403. Reflecting the diversity of requests for its support, the Multidisciplinary Regional Advisory Group also provided technical assistance to universities or institutes in some Member States. These included the Institute for Diplomacy and International Studies at the University of Nairobi, the International Relations Institute of Cameroon and the University of Ghana, Legon. Technical assistance to these institutions included short-term training and assistance in the establishment of new centres within these institutions. Advisory services were also rendered to intergovernmental, regional and subregional organizations and institutions. These included the subregional economic groupings, the ECA-sponsored institutions, the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development and the Semi-Arid Food Grain Research and Development Centre. During the period under review, the Commission had a total of 115 projects, of which 44 were terminated and 71 remained under implementation. A total amount of $5,606,603 was made available to the Commission under extrabudgetary resources for the implementation of the projects.

2. Economic Commission for Europe (ECE)

404. The aim of ECE is to further harmonize policies, norms and practices among the countries of the region and to strengthen their integration and cooperation.

405. Under the direction of Mr. Yves Berthelot, the Commission achieves this aim through policy analysis and dialogue on macroeconomic and sectoral issues; the elaboration of conventions, norms and standards; and a newly developed programme of assistance to the transition process.

406. ECE has continued to accord priority to the protection of the environment and the promotion of sustainable development, in particular in a transboundary context. Since 1979, ECE member countries have worked energetically to take up the environmental challenges of the region. In particular, the Commission has elaborated nine international, legally binding instruments on air pollution, environmental impact assessment, industrial accidents and transboundary waters.

407. Preparations are under way for two new protocols on persistent organic pollutants and on heavy metals to the 1979 Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution. These legal instruments constitute a unique legal framework for meeting environmental challenges. In order to make the conventions and protocols fully operational region wide, the Commission, in its decision G(50), called upon all its member States which had not already done so, to consider the earliest possible ratification of, or accession to, these instruments.

408. The Committee on Environmental Policy, with the assistance of its Working Group of Senior Governmental Officials on Environment for Europe, the central coordinating body for the Environment for Europe process, advanced in the preparations for the Sofia Ministerial Conference on Environment for Europe, to be held in October 1995. Among the main issues to be considered by the Conference are the follow-up to the 1993 Environmental Action Plan for Central and Eastern Europe, the assessment of the state of the environment for Europe and financing environmental improvements.

409. The Committee on Environmental Policy, in cooperation with OECD, has made progress in extending the OECD country environmental performance reviews to central and eastern Europe. The first two joint pilot reviews of Poland and Bulgaria have already taken place. The third review in cooperation with OECD will take place in Belarus next year. As part of its own environmental performance review programme the Commission has undertaken a review of the situation in Estonia, to be concluded by the end of 1995 and published in early 1996.

410. During the past year, the Committee on Human Settlements continued its preparatory work for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II). The Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Conference was held and a task force was established to assist the Committee in carrying out the preparatory work. An analytical report was prepared containing an overview of human settlements development in the ECE region and was submitted to the Preparatory Committee for Habitat II.

411. During the past year, the ECE Inland Transport Committee has continued to serve as a forum for cooperation in the field of transport. The Committee finalized and adopted two new legal instruments, bringing their total number to 50, and adopted amendments to a number of existing ones. Significant progress was made in the preparation of the European Agreement on Main Inland Waterways of International Importance.

412. Moreover, the Inland Transport Committee progressed in the establishment of international norms and standards for the construction of road vehicles, covering active and passive safety, environmental protection and energy consumption. The Committee has also paid special attention to activities in relation to road safety under the recently revised Vienna Convention on Road Signs and Signals and other related legal instruments. The second Road Safety Week was organized under the auspices of ECE from 27 March to 2 April 1995 and aimed at waging simultaneous campaigns addressed to young road users in each ECE member State. Substantive progress was also made in the elaboration of international norms and standards for the transport of dangerous goods by road and inland waterways and in their harmonization with those concerning the transport of such goods by rail, sea and air. The Committee acted on the basis of the recommendations developed by the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, a subsidiary committee of the Economic and Social Council.

413. The Inland Transport Committee finalized the customs container pool convention and prepared a draft convention on international customs transit procedures for the carriage of goods by rail. It was decided to undertake the revision of the Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets (TIR Convention) in view of the current problems in its implementation. A report on the facilitation of border crossing in international rail transport was prepared. A programme of action in the area of inland transport, aimed at assisting the countries of central and eastern Europe in their transitions to market economies, is being implemented.

414. Work has progressed as a follow-up to the decision taken by the Commission at its forty-ninth session, in April 1994, to convene a Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment in 1996. The Preparatory Committee for the Conference has thus far held five meetings and achieved agreement on a text of draft guidelines for a common strategy on transport and the environment.

415. The integrated presentation of international statistical work in the ECE region has been expanded beyond the statistical work of ECE, the European Communities and OECD to include statistical activities in the region undertaken by the Statistical Division and the Population Division of the United Nations Secretariat, the specialized agencies, the Council of Europe, CIS and other international organizations.

416. ECE supports a trade facilitation programme through its Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures. Considerable progress was made in the development of the United Nations Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (EDIFACT) messages. Members of the Working Party and the secretariat participated in the United Nations International Symposium on Trade Efficiency held at Columbus, Ohio, in October 1994. A Compendium of Trade Facilitation Recommendations was developed. A memorandum of understanding between ECE, the International Electrotechnical Commission (IEC) and the International Organization for Standardization (ISO) was developed and approved in order to better define the division of responsibilities between these organizations.

417. The Guide on the Adaptation of Real Property Law of Countries in Transition, prepared under the auspices of the Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry, was also well received. In the field of trade and investment promotion the secretariat continued to publish quarterly the East-West Investment News and to update its database on foreign direct investment projects and supporting legislation in countries in transition.

418. The economic analysis conducted by ECE and published in the Economic Bulletin for Europe and the Economic Survey of Europe in 1994-1995 provides in-depth analysis of current economic developments in Europe, the States of the former Soviet Union, and North America. Special emphasis is given in both publications to developments in the transition economies of eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union and to their progress in creating market economies. This year's Economic Bulletin pays special attention to the foreign trade and payments of the transition economies and to the level of external support they have been receiving. The latest Survey, in addition to a detailed review of macroeconomic developments, contains an assessment of the reform process over the last five years and a review of international migration in eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States.

419. Under the second phase of the Energy Efficiency 2000 project, ECE has continued to assist countries in transition to develop their capacity to enhance energy efficiency and to implement energy efficiency standards and labelling.

420. In collaboration with national Governments, local institutions and UNDP, ECE has also formulated projects for enhancing energy efficiency in the context of programmes of conversion of military bases and manufacturing facilities to peaceful purposes in central and eastern Europe.

421. The Gas Centre was established in 1994, supported by financial contributions from major European and North American Governments and gas companies. A major regional initiative, the Gas Centre brings together almost all of the key natural gas market players in the Commission. It has already been successful in opening dialogue among the private and public gas companies and the Governments in the region.

422. The Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation prepared and published two studies entitled "World engineering industries and automation—performance and prospects, 1993-1995" and "World industrial robots: statistics 1983-1993 and forecasts to 1997". The engineering industries continued to influence the restructuring of industry and, in particular, the process of investment and privatization. In this respect, special emphasis was given to the creation of small and medium-sized enterprises in economies in transition. At its fiftieth session, the Commission recognized the publication Rehabilitation Engineering as an ECE contribution to the World Summit for Social Development.

423. The Working Party on the Chemical Industry discussed the policy-oriented issues currently facing the chemical industry and stressed the importance of the work related to sustainable development and, in particular, the Chemical Industry—Sustainable Economic and Ecological Development (CHEMISEED) programme. Fifteen member countries identified 40 sites polluted by chemicals for the pilot project demonstrating environmental clean-up procedures.

424. The Working Party on Steel strengthened its regional programme on metallurgy and ecology through: the organization of a Seminar on the Steel Industry and Recycling; the addition to the work programme of a Seminar on Processing, Utilization and Disposal of Waste in the Steel Industry; a bibliography of environmental publications in the steel sector; and activities aimed at the harmonization of regulations on environmental protection. The Global Study on the Steel Industry in Europe was prepared in cooperation with the European Commission, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD), the World Bank and the International Iron and Steel Institute. The study also served as the basis for the examination of the restructuring of steel industries in the economies in transition.

425. The Working Party on Standardization Policies reviewed developments in the fields of coordination, harmonization, conformity assessment and metrology at the international, regional and national levels and paid particular attention to assistance to the countries in transition with a view to adapting existing structures to market conditions and to assisting newly independent States to build adequate institutions. At its forty-ninth session, the Commission adopted the recommendation on the meteorological assurance of testing proposed by the Working Party as separate decision H(49).

426. In the light of the decision taken by the FAO Council in June 1994 concerning the restructuring of FAO, and in particular the increased decentralization to the regional and subregional offices, the joint ECE/FAO Agriculture and Timber Division was dismantled in 1995. In accordance with the decision of the Commission at its fiftieth session, in April 1995, interim arrangements have been made to ensure the continuation of the ECE/FAO joint activities on agriculture and the environment and on the economic analysis of the agri-food sector. The Commission will consider a proposal of the Executive Secretary to merge the ECE Committee on Agriculture with the FAO European Commission on Agriculture.

427. The ECE regional advisory services programme has elaborated a national plan of assistance to the Republic of Georgia. The first phase is scheduled to be implemented before the end of July 1995. The experience of this plan will be evaluated and applied to other cases of high priority.

3. Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC)

428. The period covered by this report was marked by a certain turbulence in economic performance in Latin America and the Caribbean. This context, in turn, was reflected in the activities of ECLAC, headed by Mr. Gert Rosenthal, which tries to respond to both long-term and emerging development issues in the region.

429. In the past year, the ECLAC secretariat, which includes the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) and the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE), focused on a number of development issues concerned with medium-term growth (macroeconomic management, innovation, enhancing savings and channelling them to productive investment) and intraregional economic cooperation. In addition, the secretariat was involved in numerous regional preparatory activities for global events, particularly the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women.

430. At the time of writing the present report, ECLAC was undertaking a major mid-decade evaluation of the strategies of adjustment, stabilization and structural reforms pursued by the region. The exercise is expected to be particularly timely in the face of recent events affecting some Latin American economies. The document is planned to be reviewed by the member Governments during the forthcoming session of the Commission to be held at San Jose, Costa Rica, in April 1996.

431. ECLAC continued to be a meeting place for officials. In addition to some 35 seminars held during the past 13 months, the secretariat prepared and held the sixth session of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean, held at Mar del Plata, Argentina, from 25 to 29 September 1994. The secretariat played a similar role in the twenty-first meeting of Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean, held at Santiago, Chile, on 3 and 4 July 1995. Support was provided to the third Regional Meeting of Ministers and High-level Authorities of the Housing and Urban Development Sector in Latin America and the Caribbean, held at Quito, Ecuador, from 16 to 18 November 1994.

432. ECLAC has been actively involved in the follow-up activities to Agenda 21, most notably in those dealing with environmentally sustainable management of natural resources and various sectors of activity, and the development of statistics and environmental accounts. The extensive list of publications and research works includes a study on water resources management in Latin America and the Caribbean from the perspective of programme 21, and a study entitled "Hazardous products and wastes: impact of transboundary movements towards the Latin American and Caribbean region and possibilities for preventing and controlling it". The Commission made relevant contributions to the preparatory work of the World Summit for Social Development through the formulation of poverty reduction strategies within the context of its major statement on changing production patterns with social equity. Among the publications most recently issued are: Proposals for a modern social policy to foster social development and Educational inequalities: problems and policies. Work is ongoing on a project that explores the relationships between this statement and the promotion of economic, social and cultural rights in the region.

433. ECLAC has also continued to perform its established role of monitoring the economic and social performance of the region. To the Commission's list of traditional annual publications that fulfil this function—the Preliminary Overview of the Economy of Latin America and the Caribbean, the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean and the Statistical Yearbook for Latin America and the Caribbean—the Social Panorama of Latin America has now been added in keeping with the increased level of recognition that the matter is gaining in the region. Work continued on the setting up of the Short-term Indicators Database, the incorporation of new international statistical classifications and the development of a data bank on the external debt of Latin American countries. In addition, assistance was provided to Latin American countries in implementing the new System of National Accounts.

434. The Executive Secretary participated in the Meeting of Heads of State of the Río Group (September 1994), the Hemispheric Summit of Heads of State (December 1994) and the Ibero-American Summit of Heads of State and Government (July 1995).

4. Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP)

435. Against the backdrop of the sustained dynamism of the Asia-Pacific region, ESCAP, headed by Mr. Adrianus Mooy, has continued to focus attention on enhancing economic growth and social development among the countries of the region.

436. In that connection, at its fifty-first session, concluded on 1 May 1995 at Bangkok, the Commission decided to hold a ministerial conference on regional economic cooperation and directed the secretariat to initiate necessary preparations.

437. The Commission also placed emphasis on promotion of subregional economic cooperation in various fields, including trade and investment. A second consultative meeting among executive heads of subregional organizations and ESCAP was hosted by the secretariat of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) at Jakarta in January 1995.

438. The Commission emphasized the pivotal role of industrial and technological development in sustaining the growth momentum in the region.

The Commission's work in this area was guided by several mandates and directives as enshrined in the Seoul Plan of Action for Promoting and Strengthening Regional Cooperation for Technology-led Industrialization in Asia and the Pacific, the Action Programme for Regional Economic Cooperation in Investment-related Technology Transfer, the Beijing Declaration on Regional Economic Cooperation and the Delhi Declaration on Strengthening Regional Economic Cooperation in Asia and the Pacific towards the Twenty-first Century.

439. Another important development has been the fifteenth session of the Standing Committee of the Bangkok Agreement, held at Bangkok in February 1995, which decided to launch the third round of negotiations, with a mandate to address both tariff and non-tariff barriers and to explore the possibility of including the services sector in due course.

440. The Commission endorsed the Jakarta Declaration and Plan of Action for the Advancement of Women in Asia and the Pacific adopted at the Second Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Women in Development, held at Jakarta in June 1994. The Jakarta Declaration and Plan of Action served as the regional input to the draft global platform of action for adoption by the forthcoming Fourth World Conference on Women. Following the Ministerial Conference, regional meetings of coordinating bodies of non-governmental organizations and national machineries for the advancement of women were convened to accelerate implementation of the Plan of Action.

441. An Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference in Preparation for the World Summit for Social Development was organized at Manila in October 1994, at which the Manila Declaration and Agenda for Action for Social Development in the ESCAP region were adopted. As part of the preparatory activities, a symposium of non-governmental organizations was convened by ESCAP prior to the Ministerial Conference.

442. The Commission's initiatives with regard to its declaration of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002, continued to generate significant activities at national and regional levels aimed at improving the status and participation of disabled persons. To date, 30 members and associate members have signed the Proclamation on the Full Participation and Equality of People with Disabilities in the Asian and Pacific Region.

443. The Commission continued to support national efforts and activities to promote participatory human settlements development. Preparatory work has begun for convening an Asia-Pacific Urban Forum in 1995 which will serve as a key preparatory activity to the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) in 1996. The Commission is also working closely with the Regional Network of Local Authorities for the Management of Human Settlements (CITYNET) and the Asian Coalition for Housing Rights to assist member countries in addressing urban poverty issues, particularly as they relate to low-income housing and settlements improvement.

444. In implementing the Bali Declaration on Population and Sustainable Development and the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, various inter-country research projects and training courses were conducted; technical assistance was also provided relating to such areas as family planning, population ageing, migration and urbanization, the role and status of women and demographic analysis. Activities of the Asia-Pacific Population Information Network (POPIN) focused on upgrading technical skills in database development and improving population information management and sharing.

445. Under the theme of environment and sustainable development, the Commission focused attention on the preparations for the Ministerial-level Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific, which will be organized by ESCAP at Bangkok in November 1995, and the prevention of desertification, including preparation of the Regional Implementation Annex for Asia to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa.

446. Under the theme of transport and communications, the Commission pursued its activities related to the implementation of the Asian Land Transport Infrastructure Development Programme, comprising the Asian Highway and Trans-Asian Railway projects. Current activities under this project include a study on developing land transport linkages of Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan with seaports of the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan in the south and China in the east; a study on the development of a highway network in Asian republics; a Trans-Asian Railway route requirements study; and implementation of ESCAP resolution 48/11 on road and rail transport modes in relation to facilitation measures.

447. Following the theme topic of the fiftieth session of the Commission "Infrastructure development as key to economic growth and regional economic cooperation", and Commission resolution 50/2 on the "Action plan on infrastructure development in Asia and the Pacific", the Commission at its fifty-first session adopted the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific. The Commission decided to convene a ministerial conference on infrastructure in 1996 to launch the New Delhi action plan and to review phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific.

448. Special efforts were made to improve policies for tourism development, taking into consideration the socio-economic and environmental impact of tourism. Studies on the cultural and environmental impact of tourism provided policy recommendations for the cultural and environmental management of tourism development. ESCAP convened the first meeting of the Working Group on the Greater Mekong Subregion Tourism Sector in April 1995.

449. The statistics subprogramme of the Commission focused on promoting the improvement of capabilities of national statistical offices in the region for timely and accurate collection and dissemination of statistics needed for development planning and decision-making. Technical meetings were organized to support country work in the implementation of the 1993 System of National Accounts (SNA), in statistics on gender issues and in environment statistics and environmental and resource accounting. Assistance was also provided through advisory services, including those in population statistics, data-processing and national accounts.

450. The Commission's reaffirmation of its predominant role in promoting regional cooperation in Asia and the Pacific was manifested in the decision by the Russian Federation to seek a revision in its status in order to become a regional member. The application of the Russian Federation was unanimously endorsed by the Commission, which recommended a resolution on the matter for submission to the substantive session of 1995 of the Economic and Social Council.

451. To meet the need for an integrated and effective approach to development at the regional level, an inter-agency meeting on strengthening coordination at the regional level was convened by ESCAP in May 1994. This meeting established the Regional Inter-agency Committee for Asia and the Pacific under the chairmanship of the Executive Secretary of ESCAP. The first meeting of the Committee was concluded at Bangkok in June 1995.

5. Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA)

452. The impact of international and regional issues does not only concern the political environment, but also affects the whole economic and social fabric in ESCWA countries. Thus, ESCWA, headed by Mr. Hazem El-Beblawi, undertook multidisciplinary coverage of work programme components, combining them in a few compact areas. The Commission's work programme was formulated around five themes featuring inter-related activities.

453. Under the first thematic subprogramme, Management of natural resources and environment, issues concerning the assessment and proper management of land, water and energy resources were addressed, as well as environmental degradation resulting from inadequate management of these resources.

454. In the field of environment, ESCWA participated in several meetings and workshops such as the Technical Secretariat of the Council of Arab Ministers Responsible for Environment. A report was completed on progress made in the ESCWA plan to implement Agenda 21 in the region which was presented to the Commission at its eighteenth session, in May 1995, as well as to the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Economic and Social Council. Furthermore, ESCWA, in its capacity as a member of the Executive Committee of the Joint Committee on Environment and Development in the Arab Region, participated in its fifth meeting at Cairo in July 1995. The meeting discussed the implementation of the decisions of the second meeting of the Joint Committee and preparations for a meeting on biodiversity in the Arab region. The meeting also included discussions on two technical reports on the establishment of an integrated environmental information network in the Arab region.

455. A report was prepared by ESCWA on activities related to the protection of the ozone layer, while issues pertaining to resource conservation were addressed through studies on wildlife conservation for sustainable development in the Arab countries and the assessment of the fisheries sector in the United Arab Emirates. In the field of water resources, ESCWA organized a meeting at Amman from 12 to 14 September 1994 of the Inter-agency Task Force on modalities of cooperation and coordination among United Nations specialized agencies and Arab regional agencies involved in various water-related activities. The meeting recommended that ESCWA serve as the secretariat for the Inter-agency Task Force. A long-term project on the assessment of water resources using remote-sensing techniques is under way.

456. The second thematic subprogramme, Improvement of the quality of life, includes activities to provide support for ESCWA member States in preparing, at the national and regional levels, for world conferences and meetings. Reports were submitted to the Commission at its eighteenth session on all preparatory and follow-up activities for meetings and conferences such as the International Conference on Population and Development, the International Year of the Family, the World Summit for Social Development, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the Fourth World Conference on Women.

457. The Commission participated in the preparatory committee for the World Summit for Social Development and in the Summit itself. It also participated in the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995. Other major activities included the preparation of the Arab Declaration for Social Development, which was presented to the Council of Arab Ministers for Social Affairs, the launching of a social development database, the preparation of a project document on human development in the Arab States and a workshop on sustainable human development experiences, held at Cairo from 14 to 19 May 1995. ESCWA also undertook a study on the impact of the recent crisis on the social situation in the ESCWA region, which analysed the socio-economic impact of crises in the region, with particular emphasis on population migration, the quality of life and vulnerable and disadvantaged groups. ESCWA organized, in this context, a seminar entitled "The Role of the Family in Integrating Disabled Women into Society", at Amman from 16 to 18 October 1994.

458. In the area of women and development, ESCWA organized the Arab Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Fourth World Conference on Women, which was held at Amman from 6 to 10 November 1994 and was attended by 420 participants representing all Arab countries. The meeting reviewed the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the ESCWA Strategy for Arab Women to the Year 2005. The meeting also finalized the Regional Plan of Action for the Advancement of Arab Women. ESCWA also organized a meeting on the Arab family in a changing society at Abu Dhabi in December 1994, in the context of preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women. Other activities within this framework included national workshops in nine ESCWA countries to review the national plans of action in the light of national reports on the situation of women. Information on women's issues was addressed through a publication on Arab women in ESCWA member States. This publication includes statistics, indicators and trends. A database on statistics on women was also launched.

459. In the field of rural development, two long-term rural community development projects are being implemented in Egypt and the Syrian Arab Republic. ESCWA continued to issue its annual publication Agriculture and Development in Western Asia (No. 16, December 1994); and it prepared a National Farm Data Handbook for the Syrian Arab Republic. Other publications issued by the secretariat include: Land and Water Policies in the Near East Region;

Marketing of Agricultural Products in Lebanon; Evaluation of Agricultural Policies in the Syrian Arab Republic: Policy Analysis Matrix Approach; Prospective Development of the Agricultural Institutions in the Occupied Palestinian Territories; and Rehabilitation of Veterinary Services.

460. Information on human settlements issues was disseminated through the publication of a newsletter jointly published by ESCWA, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements and the League of Arab States. ESCWA participated in preparatory meetings for Habitat II and convened at Amman, in March 1995, a regional preparatory meeting for the Conference.

461. In the area of industrial development, ESCWA completed a publication entitled Proceedings of the Expert Group Meeting on the Creation of Indigenous Entrepreneurship and Opportunities for Small and Medium-scale Industrial Investments. In preparation for the Fourth World Conference on Women, the Commission issued a publication entitled Participation of Women in Manufacturing: Patterns, Determinants and Analysis. Several training-of-trainers workshops on how to start a business in war-torn areas were held in Bethlehem, Gaza, Nablus and Beirut. Moreover, a pilot workshop on upgrading entrepreneurial skills of managers of small and medium enterprises under changing conditions was held at Amman in September 1994. A study was completed entitled "Impact of the single European market on the industrial sector in the ESCWA region"; and two project documents were completed for the establishment of business incubators in the occupied Palestinian territories.

462. The third thematic subprogramme, Economic development and cooperation, involved activities dealing with such central issues as promoting economic and technical cooperation and integration among ESCWA countries, promoting coordinated regional strategies, training officials in developing national capabilities in managerial skills, and reviewing and analysing economic performance, policies and strategies.

463. The Survey of Economic and Social Developments in the ESCWA Region, 1993 was issued in November 1994. The Survey for 1994 was completed in July 1995. Within the same context, a study was completed on "Review of developments and issues in the external trade and payments situation of countries of Western Asia", which included a chapter on the implications of the Uruguay Round on development in the region. A study was also completed entitled "Review of developments and trends in the monetary and financial sectors in the economies of the ESCWA region".

464. The proceedings of four workshops/conferences were published, namely: the Western Asia workshop on strategies for accelerating the development of civil registration and vital statistics systems; the Second Arab Conference on Perspectives of Modern Biotechnology; the workshop on the implication of the new advanced materials technologies for the economies of the ESCWA countries; and the workshop on the integration of science and technology in the development planning and management process in the ESCWA region.

465. In the area of transport and communications, a report was submitted to the Commission at its eighteenth session on the "Follow-up action of the implementation of the Transport and Communications Decade, second phase: 1992-1996". Furthermore, studies were completed on "Development of free zones in Western Asia"; "Development of the telecommunications sector in the ESCWA region"; and "Present status, development trends and future prospects of telecommunications in the ESCWA region"; and the ESCWA Transport Bulletin for 1994 (No. 5) was issued. Additionally, the ESCWA secretariat conducted an expert group meeting on the Development of a Multimodal Transport Chain in Western Asia, held at Amman from 24 to 27 April 1995.

466. In the field of statistics, ESCWA continued the development and maintenance of databases on energy and industry. A workshop on the implementation of the 1993 System of National Accounts was held at Amman from 12 to 19 December 1994 and another workshop on industrial statistics took place at Damascus from 26 November to 6 December 1994. Training was also provided on the use of statistical computer packages, geographical information systems and the application of the International Comparisons Programme.

467. The fourth thematic subprogramme, Regional development and global changes, encompassed activities dealing with exogenous factors and global changes affecting the region. The major activity under this subprogramme is an ongoing multidisciplinary study on the impact of the single European market on different sectors in the ESCWA region.

468. Issues concerning Palestine, the Middle East peace process and the least developed member States were the focal points for the fifth thematic subprogramme, Special programmes and issues. In its studies, the Agriculture Section covered the rehabilitation of the fisheries sector in the Gaza Strip and of veterinary services in the occupied territories. In addition, a proposed action programme for the restructuring of Palestinian agricultural public institutions was also prepared. The Industry Section undertook workshops on the development of small enterprises in the occupied Palestinian territories.

E. The humanitarian imperative

469. This past year has seen a frightening persistence and intensity of conflicts that affect an unprecedented number of innocent civilians. The reality of contemporary warfare is that more than 90 per cent of casualties are non-combatants who are often deliberately targeted because of their ethnic or religious affiliation. As a consequence, victims continued to flee their homes and communities in staggering numbers in 1995, reaching a global total of some 25 million refugees. A still larger number of persons have been displaced or are directly affected by warfare within their own countries.

470. Increasingly, humanitarian organizations are compelled to operate in war-torn societies where conflicting parties are often openly contemptuous of fundamental humanitarian norms. In such circumstances, a major challenge is the need to safeguard the well-being of civilians while providing assistance in a manner consistent with humanitarian principles.

471. In addition, the international community is faced with the paradox of needing ever larger resources to address the immediate survival needs of victims, while simultaneously recognizing that such action may deflect attention and support from initiatives essential to undoing the root causes of vulnerability and strife. Faced with these conflicting trends, humanitarian organizations have been reassessing the processes that shape the nature and impact of their interventions.

472. Recent experience illustrates the importance of a well-organized and adequately resourced mechanism for coordination, both within the multi-actor humanitarian arena and with other elements of the international system involved in crisis management and pre-emptive action. This is particularly evident in rapid and simultaneous mass population movements, where it is often difficult to move quickly enough to mobilize and deploy resources in a manner that will prevent avoidable deaths. However, notwithstanding the importance of support from the international community, it is the people of the country directly affected who are primarily responsible for their own recovery and that of their communities.

473. The volatile context within which humanitarian assistance is provided is a major determinant in the overall capacity of the United Nations system to pre-empt and respond to crises in a manner that minimizes avoidable suffering.

474. The scale and depth of suffering in conflict situations confronting the international community today is too often a consequence of a disregard for fundamental humanitarian principles. In many instances, the suffering endured by civilians is not an incidental element of political and military strategies but constitutes its major objective. The conflicts in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Rwanda are alarming examples of what occurs when civilians are subjected to the full brutality of contemporary warfare and gross violations of human rights. Determination must be shown to enforce the rule of law and to hold accountable those who are responsible for heinous crimes.

475. The limited means of humanitarian organizations to provide protection is particularly glaring in conflict settings and in situations characterized by extreme violations of human rights. The Rwandan experience illustrates the way in which the capacity of the United Nations to provide protection and assistance is undermined when inputs and distribution mechanisms are used for purposes that are inimical to humanitarian objectives. Finding the means to reach those in need without entrenching the power of abusive elements is one of the most difficult challenges facing the humanitarian community in recent times.

476. The indifference of warring parties to even the most basic humanitarian principles has continued to make conditions under which relief workers must operate extremely dangerous. As the number of conflicts increases so too does the number of practitioners who have been killed or wounded, sometimes deliberately, while carrying out their humanitarian tasks. Frequent disruption and diversion of emergency relief supplies have occurred. Access has on many occasions had to be negotiated. Dependence on the agreement of armed groups often makes the provision of humanitarian assistance tenuous and subject to unacceptable conditions. If this trend continues, it could undermine the capacity of the agencies to carry out humanitarian work. Safeguarding both the concept and the reality of "humanitarian space" remains one of the most significant challenges facing the humanitarian community.

477. Another major obstacle facing humanitarian organizations is the absence of sufficient political will and support for action to address the underlying causes of crises. The provision of humanitarian assistance in a vacuum is tantamount to managing only the symptoms of a crisis. Experience shows that, in most instances, the effectiveness of humanitarian endeavour in conflict settings is predicated to a considerable extent on successful action by the international community to resolve the problems that provoked the crisis.

478. In some situations, such as in Angola and Mozambique, a determined effort has been made to stop the fighting and to consolidate the peace. In other settings, such as Haiti, assertive action has been taken to end oppression and the potential for violent conflict. This is in dramatic contrast to other settings, such as the Sudan, where conflict has smouldered for 28 of the last 39 years. In Burundi and Liberia, a volatile mix of circumstances points to the need for action to strengthen the push for peace.

479. The humanitarian agenda is often shaped by political attitudes to particular crises, strategic interests in specific areas and the attention span of the media. Such factors, which are for the most part beyond the control of humanitarian organizations, contribute strongly to the low level of attention and support provided to victims of "silent" emergencies. Ideally, and in a more humane world, assistance would be provided according to need and the core principle of impartiality would have greater relevance when responding to emergencies.

480. Other factors that have an impact on the effectiveness of relief and protection organizations include the relationship between the level of resources and attention devoted to the prevention of, preparedness for and recovery from disasters and the amount of resources required to meet the daily needs of people in camp situations (see fig. 75). Rwanda is but one example of current trends. Some $1 billion was spent in the first six months of the crisis. Most of this was used for the immediate survival needs of the millions who were uprooted and displaced in 1994. Although resources were requested at an early stage for confidence-building measures to facilitate and encourage the return of those who had fled and for action focused on the problem of genocide, only a minuscule amount has been made available for activities essential to ameliorating and resolving the underlying cause of the cyclical strife that now characterizes Rwanda and other parts of the Great Lakes region.

481. However, some vital progress has been made both in responding rapidly and effectively to the needs of victims and in generating a more cohesive approach within the United Nations system. The Inter-Agency Standing Committee has played an incisive role, having on many occasions enabled consensus and decisions on pressing country-specific issues to be arrived at quickly and with immediate impact. Its uniqueness and success stem in part from the presence of, and close working relations with, certain major umbrella non-governmental organizations. In 1994, the Committee agreed on a number of measures for strengthening field coordination of humanitarian assistance in complex emergencies, in particular in the pre-emergency and initial response phases. A set of guidelines relating to the humanitarian mandate as well as the appointment of and terms of reference for humanitarian coordinators were approved and the Emergency Relief Coordinator was also designated as the focal point for internally displaced persons. Most importantly, procedures for the most expeditious agreement on the division of labour between agencies have also been approved by the Committee.

482. Within the Secretariat, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations have established a mechanism for the joint analysis of early warning of a looming crisis, within a broader framework for the coordination of operational planning and implementation among the three departments. Among the United Nations agencies also, agreement as to the responsibility and criteria for "sounding the alarm" in impending crises has enabled appropriate preventive and preparedness actions (such as contingency planning measures, primarily at the in-country level) to be initiated.

483. Timing is also critical in the fielding of humanitarian assistance operations. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs has established a Rapid Response Unit to field experienced personnel to work with the United Nations resident or humanitarian coordinator and to build up systematic support for field-level coordination activities. At Kigali in April 1994, the United Nations advance humanitarian team, staffed by United Nations agency representatives and Department of Humanitarian Affairs personnel, re-established a United Nations humanitarian presence during a very difficult period and was able to lay the groundwork for the expansion of humanitarian activities as the situation permitted. In Haiti, a combined Department of Humanitarian Affairs/UNDP team was deployed to support the United Nations Coordinator for Humanitarian Assistance in the immediate aftermath of the United Nations action of September 1994. During the crisis in Chechnya, Department of Humanitarian Affairs staff were dispatched to neighbouring republics, where they worked closely with UNHCR and United Nations agency representatives in addressing the needs of internally displaced persons.

484. The Central Emergency Revolving Fund has consistently proved its value in facilitating both a rapid and joint response by United Nations agencies to fast-breaking emergencies. Delays in its reimbursement have, however, offset its usefulness on a number of occasions. The past year also saw the first use of the interest on the Fund to support immediate coordination arrangements in the field, with the establishment of the United Nations Rwanda Emergency Office at Kigali.

485. With a growing number of major emergencies of all varieties requiring international assistance, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, led by Under-Secretary-General Peter Hansen, has continued to strengthen its coordination support capacity and to act as a focal point for the development of new initiatives taken jointly by the international emergency response community towards the improved effectiveness of international relief operations. Activities since my last report include the expansion of the number of countries participating with members in the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination Team, including six disaster-prone developing countries from the Latin American region, and the development of guidelines and standards for the assessment of international relief requirements in multisectoral emergencies and for the mobilization of resources, the rapid initiation and support of field coordination, the exchange of know-how and techniques, and the development of standard operational procedures in the deployment of international response teams.

486. In this endeavour, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs has worked closely with and supported the activities of international networks of emergency teams such as the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group and the Standing Coordinating Group on the Use of Military and Civil Defence Assets in Disaster Relief. With regard to the provision of specialized human, technical and logistical resources to support the coordination of international relief operations, the Department has initiated memoranda of understanding with Governments and organizations to allow it expeditious access to their emergency relief capacities. This forward-looking, systematic approach used by the Department has proved its worth in a number of sudden-onset emergencies during the year.

487. Natural disaster reduction remains a core activity of humanitarian assistance, which tackles the root causes of disasters, and an essential ingredient of rehabilitation and reconstruction planning. The Under-Secretary-General has, therefore, brought together the Department of Humanitarian Affairs' Disaster Mitigation Branch and the secretariat for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction under the umbrella of a Disaster Reduction Division. Thus the Department is able to serve all aspects of natural disaster reduction at all levels within the framework of a coherent United Nations strategy (see table T).

488. Between May 1994 and July 1995, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs launched 27 appeals for international assistance on behalf of countries affected by natural, technological or environmental disasters. It coordinated international assistance following more than 85 disasters in 50 countries. Some 243 situation reports were issued on the consequences of those disasters, to which the international community reported contributions amounting to more than $115 million, $6.3 million of which were channelled through the Department. During the same period, the Department arranged 38 relief flights from its emergency stockpile at Pisa, Italy, in response to the immediate requirements of those affected by disaster.

489. However, while much vital progress has been made in augmenting the capacity of humanitarian agencies to respond quickly and coherently to the immediate needs of victims of all kinds of emergencies, the task of assisting countries to emerge from crises continues to pose significant challenges. This is particularly evident in situations of systemic breakdown when the task of rebuilding civil society is dependent on the commitment of the international community to address the underlying cause of crises. The ability of aid agencies to support a recovery process is, of course, largely determined by the extent to which affected communities engage in activities geared to making the transition from dependency on relief to sustainable development.

490. As is now widely acknowledged, the relationship between relief and development, particularly in conflict settings, is complex and needs constantly to be assessed to ensure that interventions are mutually reinforcing. In many instances, gains made by the humanitarian community in stabilizing a situation are not accompanied by the inputs necessary to nurture a recovery process. Indeed, protracted crises often experience funding shortfalls, thereby negating tenuous advances in the reduction of vulnerabilities of either a social, economic or political nature. The tragic experiences of people in Liberia, Rwanda and the Sudan illustrate the need for sustained and concerted action focused on breaking the dynamic of violence.

491. On a more positive note, the experiences of Haiti and Mozambique during this past year demonstrate the advantages of assertive action that actively nurtures the quest for peace. Likewise, the opportunity to consolidate the long-awaited peace in Angola must be fully exploited and necessary support provided for vital rehabilitation and reconstruction activities. As in other post-peace-fire situations, it is important that the international community maintain the momentum for peace; too often, critical activities, including demining and the homeward return of refugees, the displaced and former combatants, are jeopardized because of insufficient support for programmes that are essential for the revitalization of community life. Aware of the challenges confronting war-torn societies, humanitarian and development staff of the United Nations system are currently reviewing mechanisms to ensure that their respective funding and operational activities are complementary and enhance peace-building initiatives.

1. Cooperation with regional arrangements or agencies

492. In the field of natural disaster reduction, the primary function of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs is to promote new initiatives. This includes project activities in 28 of the more disaster-prone developing countries, including 11 new ones during the year under review.

493. The main objectives have been to establish and apply the most effective methods for hazard and risk assessment, to promote wider interchange of knowledge and systematic application of appropriate technology, to carry out more active pooling, analysis and dissemination of early warnings, and to stimulate the development of scenario-specific disaster mitigation and preparedness plans with emphasis on maximizing the use of local resources and community involvement, while providing access to external expertise where essential. A special focus has been placed on Africa, where three subregional seminars have stimulated new national initiatives in disaster reduction. In Latin America and the Caribbean, new projects have been formulated for five countries and comprehensive programmes continue in four others. For Asia, projects are continuing or are in the process of formulation for six countries, including a new four-year programme encompassing the South Pacific island States, which has been widely sponsored and warmly welcomed by the participating countries and regional agencies. Attention is also being given to the eastern European, Middle East and CIS countries, with projects launched or in process of formulation in five States. The above activities have been carried out in close cooperation with UNDP and UNEP to promote the inclusion of development and environment issues wherever applicable. Eleven other international agencies and more than 30 non-governmental organizations have been associated.

494. In the framework of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs' project on the use of military and civil defence assets in disaster relief, arrangements have continued for strengthening cooperation between the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and NATO, the Western European Union (WEU) and the Inter-American Defense Board. Within the provisions of the Oslo Guidelines, mechanisms for such cooperation are being tested and improved through joint training, contingency planning and field exercises. Regional cooperation was tested in particular during an exercise hosted by the Russian Federation focusing on international assistance following a simulated major nuclear power plant accident. Standing operating procedures for the use of military and civil defence assets in disaster relief are being refined to enhance the humanitarian aspects of the NATO Partnership for Peace programme. The EU Humanitarian Office, a member of the Standing Coordinating Group, has funded the activities of the project related to relief air operations and to regional cooperation in Africa and Asia.

495. UNDP and the Department of Humanitarian Affairs have established a Joint Environment Unit that strengthens the international capacity to respond to environmental aspects of disasters, while making the most effective use of limited resources. The Unit represents a practical synergy between the two organizations that ensures a targeted and comprehensive approach to the growing problem of environmental emergencies while at the same time avoiding duplication of effort. As such, the Joint Environment Unit is fully integrated into the Department of Humanitarian Affairs. UNEP provides staff and funding for the project, while the Department provides access to resources, expertise in disaster management and procedures for effective mobilization and coordination of relief.

496. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs also continues to work closely with the Caribbean Disaster Emergency Response Agency, with which the Department has an agreement for early warning and exchange of information when disaster strikes.

2. Proactive humanitarian action

497. Part of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs' core coordination function involves participation in the planning and execution of "proactive" humanitarian action, though this term carries different meaning when applied to the onset of complex crises, on the one hand, or natural disasters, on the other. Examples of humanitarian activities that might prevent or reduce the scale of suffering include the provision of assistance that could pre-empt mass population movements or support that facilitates the reintegration of demobilized soldiers. Prevention of natural disasters might involve the strengthening of structures against earthquakes or the resettlement of populations away from flood zones or earthquake fault lines.

498. A functioning early warning system is critically important for the timely planning and implementation of pre-emptive action. The Humanitarian Early Warning System has been created to provide up-to-date warnings of country crisis situations through analysis of its database, drawing upon the various early warning mechanisms of other United Nations agencies as well as non-United Nations information sources. The System is made up of a database that includes both statistical and other country-specific information, graphically presented trend evaluation and an analysis process that examines statistical and event information. The System completed its prototype in January 1995 and has expanded its country coverage as well as its depth of information on each country. It became fully operational in July.

499. In the field of natural disasters, activities generated by the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction are focused specifically on preventive measures. The momentum created by the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction, held at Yokohama in May 1994, has been successfully sustained by means of a participatory and continuous dialogue of traditional and new partners within the International Framework of Action. Consequently, the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation, in particular its Plan of Action, has been transformed into a comprehensive and structured sequence of sectoral and cross-sectoral activities at all levels. During the second half of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, and commensurate with the proposals of the World Conference, emphasis is being shifted to concrete activities at the country and local levels. In order to maintain this broad-based inter-agency approach, the Inter-Agency Steering Committee has been extended until the end of the Decade.

500. Also in line with the Yokohama Strategy, the interdependency of natural disaster reduction, environmental protection and sustainable development is being reflected through improved cooperation between the International Framework and the major development activities inside and outside the United Nations system. Thus the Department of Humanitarian Affairs is acting, through the International Decade for Natural Disaster Relief secretariat, as task manager for natural disasters for the Commission on Sustainable Development. The process that has been outlined for the remaining years of the Decade will provide the opportunity to present its closing event with sound proposals for the full integration of disaster reduction into national planning and international development cooperation. It reflects the challenging objectives that have been laid out by the "Agenda for Development" (A/48/935).

3. Relief operations

501. The four major operations during the past year have taken place in Chechnya, Ukraine (Chernobyl), Kenya and the Sudan.

Chechnya

502. Following a request from the Russian Federation for international assistance for persons displaced from Chechnya to the neighbouring federal republics of Ingushetia, North Ossetia and Dagestan, last January I authorized a United Nations inter-agency mission to the region. This resulted in the issue of a "flash appeal" in February to mobilize immediate resources for the emergency needs of 220,000 people. Subsequently, the United Nations consolidated appeal for persons displaced as a result of the emergency situation in Chechnya, Russian Federation, covering the period from 1 January to 30 June 1995, was launched at Geneva in March. Because of the continuing crisis, the appeal was updated in June and its coverage was extended by six months to the end of 1995.

503. The extended United Nations humanitarian programme now covers the emergency needs of the 118,000 internally displaced persons identified as being the most vulnerable and seeks donor support for financial coverage of the 30 per cent shortfall of the total $25 million needed to allow relevant agencies to complete emergency assistance projects, as originally envisaged. Activities being implemented include assistance in areas such as shelter, water and sanitation, food, health and care for children in especially difficult circumstances. A high level of inter-agency cooperation has been achieved through a triangular structure among agencies operating in the field, the Humanitarian Coordinator in Moscow and the headquarters of the United Nations agencies, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and the Department of Humanitarian Affairs. However, the situation affecting refugees and internally displaced persons in the three republics is still precarious. While the majority of those affected have sought shelter with host families, this additional burden has placed severe pressure on already meagre resources. Overcrowding has stretched the social services available to persons in the region. Food and medicines are in short supply and the onset of winter weather will result in additional hardships for the victims of the conflict unless urgent preventive action is taken. In particular, additional funding support is urgently required in order for agencies to stockpile contingency food supplies for the winter months.

504. At the end of June, peace negotiations between the Russian authorities and the Chechen delegation commenced at Grozny under the auspices of OSCE. A cease-fire came into effect on 2 July.

Chernobyl

505. While the tenth anniversary of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant is approaching, the extent of its impact on the populations of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine is only now being fully realized. Over 300 children now suffer from thyroid cancer, a disease practically non-existent in children before the accident, and hundreds of thousands live in constant fear of still unknown effects the accident may have on their long-term health. The fertility rate, especially in Belarus, has declined dramatically, while the morbidity and mortality rates have increased. This trend is unlikely to reach its peak until well into the next decade.

506. In September 1994, the United Nations Coordinator on International Cooperation on Chernobyl convened an expanded meeting of the quadripartite committee for coordination on Chernobyl. The meeting assessed the results of ongoing United Nations activities relating to Chernobyl and discussed the need for initiatives to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the accident in April 1986 and, in that connection, to draw attention to the continued need for funding of programmes to overcome the effects of the Chernobyl accident.

507. Members of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Chernobyl continue their efforts to bring Chernobyl projects to fruition, but the lack of funds has brought several programmes to a halt. Particularly affected is the International Programme on Health Effects of the Chernobyl Accident under the auspices of WHO. Although generous financial support by a handful of countries allowed the full and rapid implementation of the priority activities, there are now no resources to maintain the programme and initiate much-needed follow-up activities that have a direct impact on the health of the affected population.

508. In November 1994, nine community centres (three each in Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine) were officially opened, marking the completion of phase I of the UNESCO programme to overcome the psychological effects of the accident. However, the implementation of phase II of the project, as well as other related projects, will depend on the possibility of raising additional funds. The FAO/International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) joint division completed successful projects on the use of radio-caesium binders to reduce contamination of milk and on the cultivation of rape-seed on contaminated soils. As a result of the projects, large areas that were hitherto regarded as unsafe can now be used for agricultural production. In 1995, IAEA also began, in cooperation with the French Institut de Protection et de Sûreté nucléaire, a project on environmental impact assessment.

509. Plans are now under way for events to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the Chernobyl accident. WHO will arrange a conference at Geneva in November on the health aspects of the accident, the United Nations will participate in a conference to be arranged at Minsk by the Government of Belarus and EU, while IAEA will arrange a summing-up conference at Vienna from 8 to 12 April 1996. A further meeting of the quadripartite committee will be held in the autumn of 1995 and will have as its main objective to identify those projects which remain of vital importance to the affected population and to agree on ways to ensure their funding.

Kenya

510. The United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for Kenya launched in February 1994 covered the period from January to December of that year, targeting a population of 1,620,000. Donor response totalled $54,860,331, an amount equal to almost 57 per cent of the total requested in the appeal. The food situation remains mixed, as agricultural conditions in some regions have improved while others remain uncertain. Aggregate production in 1994/95 is provisionally estimated at close to 3.5 million tons, almost 1 million tons above the previous year's reduced level. Good rains and high world prices for coffee are helping to maintain recovery in agriculture. Over 200,000 Somali refugees remain in Kenya, adding some strain to the food situation and increasing tension at border areas. Political tensions continue, as do both ethnic tensions in the Rift Valley and violence in Mombasa between Islamic groups.

The Sudan

511. The Secretary-General's report of 12 September 1994 on emergency assistance to the Sudan (A/49/376) stated that, despite progress made in the Sudan relief operation and Operation Lifeline Sudan, considerable needs still remained to be addressed, and the international community was urged to respond generously to the emergency needs and recovery of the country. In January 1995, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs issued the 1995 United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for the Sudan, in which United Nations agencies requested $101.1 million to meet the urgent humanitarian needs of 4.25 million people.

512. The donor response to the yearly United Nations consolidated appeals between 1992 and 1994 has generally been quite positive: in 1992 it was 73 per cent of the amount requested. In 1993, however, it was 64 per cent, but although there were considerable delays in the donor response to the 1994 appeal, at the close of the year approximately 85 per cent had been received. Such fluctuations have serious ramifications for programme effectiveness.

513. Regrettably, the early part of 1995 showed only limited contributions to the appeal, so that by mid-July a considerable shortfall in donor response (less than 27 per cent of total requirements) was seriously compromising the United Nations ability to provide the urgently needed humanitarian assistance. This is all the more alarming as the shortfall occurred after increased cooperation during the previous two years with both the Government of the Sudan and the southern factions, as well as the improved cereal harvest in 1994, had permitted the United Nations to scale down its funding requirements by 45 per cent of the prior year's revised figure.

514. Since the launching of the 1995 appeal, Operation Lifeline Sudan activities have been hampered by renewed fighting, in particular in the provinces of Equatoria, Upper Nile, Jonglei and northern Bahr El-Ghazal, where tens of thousands of persons have been dispossessed and dispersed. Renewed hostilities, combined with a lack of donor funding, have greatly reduced the effect of improved food production and forced people to abandon their homes and fields. In total, the United Nations estimates that there are just under 1.2 million internally displaced persons in the Sudan. The conflict has also forced the evacuation of relief workers from numerous localities, while in already three instances this year, relief workers have been kidnapped and held for periods ranging from a few days to almost two months. In another case an armed attack on a United Nations barge convoy disrupted a highly successful and cooperative logistics operation. With respect to other components of the Operation Lifeline Sudan logistics plan, operations remain dependent on air transport as the Operation has not received agreement on the use of road corridors. Moreover, both financial constraints and a recent increase in the denial of air access have cut into the Operation's effectiveness. Further affecting the United Nations and non-governmental organizations' capacity to respond were the various incidents of misuse, misappropriation and looting of food and other relief supplies, which continue despite agreements to the contrary, although improved monitoring and coordination mechanisms have reduced the overall number of incidents since last year.

515. Positive developments registered before the mid-year mark related notably to the two-month cease-fire between the Government and rebel factions mediated by the former United States President Jimmy Carter in consultation with the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, under whose aegis peace efforts have been organized since late 1993. Despite sporadic fighting, United Nations agencies were able to take advantage of opportunities for accelerating primary health-care programmes during this initial period as well as during a subsequent two-month extension. Further efforts to renew the cease-fire in late July did not meet with success.

516. Since 1989, when Operation Lifeline Sudan began as a short-term programme to deliver food and other life-saving provisions, it has developed considerably. While still providing food aid and basic health care to reduce mortality and morbidity among the affected population, the Operation now implements a much broader programme that extends to household food security, water and sanitation, basic shelter, food for work in support of agricultural production and health sector rehabilitation, primary education, support to psychologically traumatized children, capacity-building and promotion of humanitarian principles.

517. With increased access to a war-affected population of approximately 4.25 million throughout the country, Operation Lifeline Sudan reaches more people than ever before. Originally serving some 8 sites in southern Sudan, its operations have since come to include as many as 104 locations. This has been due in large part to greater flexibility shown by all the concerned parties.

518. It will be recalled from last year's report that the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development had by March 1994 assumed a separate, though complementary, role in the regional peace process by facilitating negotiations on humanitarian access and related issues organized by the United Nations with the Government and the principal southern factions. Subsequent to agreements reached in March and May 1994, fixing modalities for humanitarian access across lines of conflict was identified as the priority for further negotiations. As no progress has been achieved during the intervening period, preliminary discussions intended to permit a resumption of tripartite talks were undertaken with the parties at Khartoum and Nairobi in late July and early August by the United Nations Special Envoy for Humanitarian Affairs for the Sudan, at which the question of operational modalities for international non-governmental organizations working out of Khartoum was discussed and all parties encouraged to work closely with the United Nations Special Envoy and senior Operation Lifeline Sudan personnel at Khartoum and Nairobi to secure an improved basis for progress.

519. With some exceptions, notably the suspension of an international non-governmental organization from the Operation owing to a breach of operational procedures, as well as the need to agree on guidelines for non-governmental organizations working out of Khartoum, cooperation among national, United Nations and non-governmental organizations working in the Sudan remains excellent. As in the past, the Operation provides the framework for the humanitarian efforts of 30 international non-governmental organizations working in the region. While the Nairobi office has established letters of understanding with non-governmental organizations, which reflect the ground rules for Operation Lifeline Sudan operations, UNICEF Khartoum has sought to support government counterparts and local non-governmental organizations in relief and rehabilitation initiatives. Special efforts have been made to promote an improved framework for international non-governmental organizations to operate from Khartoum, including in the displaced person camps and the transitional zones. However, the continued strict controls on access and movement of the international non-governmental organizations in Khartoum have hampered attempts to bring to bear the comparative advantages they can offer.

520. While the number of approximately 1.2 million beneficiaries identified as requiring emergency food aid in 1995 is a significant reduction compared with the needs of 1994, insecurity continues to plague the food delivery systems. In addition, whereas carry-over food stocks from 1994 were sufficient to cover most of the emergency food aid needs for 1995, international assistance to support monitoring, operational support costs and special transport costs had received less than 30 per cent of required donor support by July, causing the World Food Programme (WFP) to scale back monitoring activities by 50 per cent. Despite these constraints, by the end of July over half of the estimated 109,398 tons of food needs for 1995 had been transported by WFP and partner non-governmental organizations to areas in need.

521. For Operation Lifeline Sudan non-food assistance out of Khartoum and all operations in the southern sector out of Nairobi, UNICEF has a lead responsibility. Overall 4.25 million people have been targeted for 1995, of whom 2.7 million are accessed from Khartoum and 1.7 million from Nairobi.

522. In May 1995, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs organized a consultation of key donors and aid organizations at Geneva to review funding status and programme implementation, the status of recommendations made by donors in 1994 and the timetable for a comprehensive review of Operation Lifeline Sudan.

523. A detailed critical review of the Operation is planned for later this year. As its main objectives, the review will analyse the Operation, its appropriateness in achieving maximum access to populations in need and in ensuring respect for fundamental humanitarian principles; assess the effectiveness of its coordination structures, in particular the relationship among the United Nations, donors, non-governmental organizations and Sudanese counterparts; and assess efficiency, identifying constraints and achievements.

524. In the first half of 1994 alone, some 96,000 tons of emergency food aid were delivered to affected areas of the Sudan by WFP and international relief agencies, in a major initiative that benefited substantial numbers of the affected population and not least the 500,000 persons who were then on the verge of starvation. In the latter part of the year WFP continued those efforts and expanded, in particular, its surface delivery capacity in southern Sudan.

4. Relief operations in the Near East (UNRWA)

525. The activities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), headed by Commissioner-General Idriss Zubeidi, focused during the reporting year on providing constructive support to the Middle East peace process.

526. The Agency took immediate steps to develop an effective working relationship with the Palestinian Authority and to meet the Authority's requests for assistance to the fullest extent possible. On 24 June 1994, an exchange of letters took place between the Commissioner-General of UNRWA and the Chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) for the purpose of facilitating the continued provision of UNRWA services to Palestine refugees in areas under the control of the Palestinian Authority. On an ad hoc basis UNRWA provided land and buildings, temporary shelter and emergency humanitarian aid to assist the Authority in establishing its operations in the Jericho area. UNRWA actively pursued coordination of its services with those provided by the Authority, developing effective relations with it in the education, health and relief and social service sectors. The Agency also played an active role in multilateral forums established to support the peace process, such as the multilateral working group on refugees, as part of the United Nations delegation.

527. Within the context of developments in the peace process, UNRWA began the process of relocating its headquarters from Vienna to Gaza by the end of 1995. The relocation should serve to demonstrate the commitment of the United Nations to the peace process, underline its confidence in the Palestinian Authority and contribute to the economic development of the Gaza Strip.

528. UNRWA developed a detailed budget and action plan for the move, including the design of a new headquarters building in Gaza. The Agency was taking the necessary steps to obtain the $13.5 million in funding needed for the move and to meet the schedule for the move. As at August 1995, the Agency had received $4.07 million in pledges and contributions for the move.

529. At my request, UNRWA undertook to administer the payment of the salaries of 9,000 members of the Palestinian Police Force from funds contributed by donors. The technical mechanism underlying the effort was established in a memorandum of understanding signed by UNRWA and the Palestinian Police Force in September 1994. From that date until March 1995 a total of $29.8 million was disbursed in the operation, in which UNRWA worked closely with the office of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories. In its resolution 49/21 O of 13 April 1995, the General Assembly requested UNRWA to continue to facilitate the payment of Palestinian Police Force salaries until the end of 1995. An additional $4.9 million was paid for the July 1995 police salaries.

530. In September 1994, UNRWA launched the second phase of its Peace Implementation Programme with the objective of providing continuing infrastructure development and job creation to Palestine refugees throughout the Middle East. Funded projects included construction of schools, health clinics, women's programme centres and sewerage and drainage works, as well as renovation of shelters. Besides improving living conditions for refugees, related projects created an estimated 5,500 jobs over an average four-month period in Gaza alone. The programme met with a positive response on the part of donors, receiving a total of $109 million in funding as at May 1995. The Agency's project for a 232-bed general hospital in Gaza, begun in October 1993, continued during the reporting year. The hospital is due to be completed in early 1996 and recruitment of senior staff is under way.

531. While taking on new roles and responsibilities in response to changing conditions, UNRWA continued to fulfil its basic mission of providing essential health, education and relief and social services to 3.1 million Palestine refugees located in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the West Bank and Gaza. Some 410,000 elementary and preparatory school pupils were enrolled in the Agency's 643 schools during the academic year 1994/95. The Agency handled nearly 6.5 million patient visits during 1994 through its network of 123 health centres and health points. More than 181,000 of the neediest Palestine refugees received special assistance from the Agency during the year, including food rations, shelter rehabilitation and subsidized medical care. Additional facilities and services provided on an ongoing basis through the Agency's core programmes included vocational training, graduate scholarships, family planning services, special infant care, community rehabilitation centres, women's programme centres and income-generation schemes.

532. UNRWA's regular and emergency cash budget for the biennium 1994-1995 was $570 million. The Agency ended 1994 with an actual funding shortfall of $7 million. Because of the deficit the Agency was forced to carry over the austerity measures imposed in 1993 in response to an earlier deficit, which included a salary freeze, a reduction in administrative costs and cuts in the budgets for additional teacher posts, hospitalization and medical supplies. An informal meeting of UNRWA's major donors and host Governments held at Amman in March 1995 resulted in pledges that helped to reduce the projected deficit for 1995. At the Amman meeting the donors reiterated their commitment to the continued provision of UNRWA services and approved a five-year planning horizon proposed by the Agency.

F. Protection and resettlement of refugees

533. The core functions of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), headed by Mrs. Sadako Ogata, are those assigned by its 1950 statute: providing international protection to refugees and seeking permanent solutions to their problems. As part of its duty to ensure that voluntary repatriation schemes are sustainable, UNHCR has also become involved in assisting and protecting returnees in their home countries. In recent years, the General Assembly and the Secretary-General have called with increasing frequency on UNHCR to protect or assist particular groups of internally displaced people who have not crossed an international border but are in a refugee-like situation inside their countries of origin, as well as other populations affected by conflict.

534. The genocide in Rwanda and the flight last year of over 2 million Rwandan nationals into neighbouring countries in the Great Lakes region of Africa was one of the darkest episodes in recent history and one that posed an unprecedented challenge for UNHCR and other humanitarian agencies. Other regions, including the former Yugoslavia, south-west Asia, the Horn of Africa and parts of western Africa, have also continued to suffer from massive population displacements, while a major new crisis erupted in the northern Caucasus in December 1994.

535. Although the refugee population worldwide had decreased to 14.5 million by the beginning of this year because of repatriation solutions in various parts of the world, the total number of people of concern to UNHCR had risen to some 27.4 million. This included 5.4 million internally displaced persons, 3.5 million others of humanitarian concern, predominantly populations affected by conflict, and some 4 million returnees requiring assistance to re-establish sustainable reintegration in their countries of origin. In 1994, UNHCR provided material assistance to a total of 17.6 million people, as compared to 13.8 million in 1993. This included 8.9 million in Africa, 5 million in Asia, 3.5 million in Europe and 115,000 in Latin America.

536. The present period of volatility and readjustment in world affairs has been characterized by increasing levels of human displacement. In the face of this reality, UNHCR has continued to hone its emergency response capacity and to pursue preventive and solution-oriented approaches. It has aimed to assure a high level of emergency preparedness, to provide assistance and protection in such a way as to avert, where possible, the occurrence of new refugee flows and to promote concerted efforts to achieve durable solutions, notably voluntary repatriation. In so doing, it has collaborated increasingly closely with political, peace-keeping and development initiatives and organs of the United Nations, with other inter-governmental and regional bodies and with a wide range of non-governmental organizations.

1. Emergency response

537. As a result of its efforts since 1991, UNHCR's stand-by capacity has achieved a high level of preparedness in terms of both personnel and stockpiles of emergency relief supplies that it can deploy rapidly in an emergency. During 1994 and the first half of 1995 alone, its emergency response teams were deployed to 17 operations around the world.

538. While continuing to take the lead in the international response to refugee emergencies, UNHCR has endeavoured to ensure the effectiveness of its interventions and the durability of results by building partnerships with other United Nations agencies and by coordinating its activities in complex emergency situations with the Department of Humanitarian Affairs. In its emergency operations in the former Yugoslavia, the Great Lakes region and other parts of Africa, and the central Asian republics, UNHCR has continued to strengthen its collaboration with United Nations agencies and programmes, in particular WFP, UNICEF, WHO and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), in activities such as food aid, immunization and health care, water supply and sanitation, mother and child medical care, family planning and education.

539. Faced in the Great Lakes region with the most severe refugee emergency in recent history, the Office was again obliged to innovate. With its own staff resources heavily committed in the region and elsewhere, it appealed to donor Governments to assume an operational role by providing self-contained services in a number of critical assistance sectors through the deployment of resources drawn largely from their military and civil defence establishments. The use of these so-called "service packages" in the Rwanda emergency has demonstrated how, under certain conditions, unique military skills or assets can support UNHCR emergency relief activities. The positive impact of service packages in responding to the critical conditions that characterized the massive exodus of Rwandans has led UNHCR into a process of consultation with Governments and the Department of Humanitarian Affairs on how, when necessary and appropriate, this mechanism can best be used.

2. The search for solutions

540. Over 2 million refugees returned to their countries of origin in 1994, most notably to Mozambique, Afghanistan and Myanmar. Return movements have continued in 1995, with prospects also opening up for the large-scale return of some 300,000 refugees to Angola. Solutions have continued to be consolidated in several other regions, especially in Central America, where the process launched by the International Conference on Central American Refugees was brought formally to a close in June 1994 and a framework agreed for the post-Conference period, and in south-east Asia with the agreement of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees to aim for the completion of activities under the comprehensive plan of action by the end of 1995.

541. Solutions to complex, refugee-producing emergencies require concerted efforts whereby humanitarian activities are complemented by both political initiatives to resolve conflict and development efforts to ensure a sustainable livelihood for the most severely affected areas and people.

542. In many areas of the world, UNHCR works increasingly closely with peace-keeping or peacemaking initiatives undertaken by the United Nations. It has continued to work with the United Nations peace-keeping operation in the former Yugoslavia where, as lead agency for the provision of humanitarian assistance, it has brought urgently needed assistance to over 2 million victims of war. Elsewhere, be it in Angola, Liberia, the Great Lakes region, the Horn of Africa, Guatemala, the Caucasus or central Asia, it has worked either within the framework of or in tandem with United Nations efforts at conflict resolution.

543. In its search for solutions to the problems of refugees and other displaced persons of concern to it, UNHCR has also placed considerable emphasis on developing closer collaboration with regional bodies. A regional conference was hosted jointly by UNHCR and OAU at Bujumbura in February this year to ensure a concerted approach to the crisis in the Great Lakes region. Working relationships have also been enhanced with other regional bodies, as, for example, in Georgia, where UNHCR and OSCE cooperate closely on efforts to resolve the Abkhazia and South Ossetia conflicts. Similar collaboration has been taking place in Nagorno Karabakh and Chechnya.

544. UNHCR continues to attach great importance not only to conflict-resolution initiatives, but also to achieving a better interface between relief, rehabilitation and development. In the experience of the Office, the implementation of the concept of a continuum from relief to development should, on the one hand, enable humanitarian assistance to promote viable reintegration of displaced people into a process of social and economic recovery and, on the other, bring development endeavours closer to people-centred concerns and aspirations. Without this, solutions to humanitarian crises may regress into new, divisive communal problems.

545. UNHCR has therefore continued to reinforce its community-based approach to reintegration assistance through the implementation of quick impact projects and has pursued discussions with other departments and agencies, notably the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and UNDP, on how institutional gaps can be bridged to ensure a meaningful continuum from relief to development. It has also sought to strengthen its relationship with the financial institutions, notably the World Bank. UNHCR efforts to support reconciliation and rehabilitation in post-conflict societies have been evident in the case of Mozambique, where its strategy for the reintegration of the 1.6 million refugees who have returned since the signing of the Peace Agreement aims, with the endorsement of the Government and major donors, at establishing linkages to longer-term development programmes.

3. Preventing refugee crises

546. Recognizing that, without effective preventive action, problems of human displacement will continue to spread, the Office has strengthened its institution-building and training activities in various parts of the world. In addition, UNHCR and IOM have continued their collaboration in mass information campaigns targeted, in particular, at potential migrants from the Russian Federation and other countries of CIS.

547. The scale of actual and potential problems of displacement in the former Soviet Union has led to an important initiative, which seeks to address current problems of displacement and prevent their proliferation. Further to General Assembly resolution 49/173 of 23 December 1994, UNHCR is engaged in preparations for a conference that will establish a programme of action to address the problems of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in the CIS countries and relevant neighbouring States. It is expected that the programme of action will include measures to prevent unnecessary movements and address the consequences of past, present and future displacements.

548. Most frequently, however, the efforts of the Office have come into play in situations where large-scale human displacement has already occurred. In such situations, UNHCR has continued to promote and participate in strategies that may help contain fragile situations. It has attempted to address or attenuate, wherever possible, the causes of refugee flows or, failing that, to reduce the necessity for affected populations or individuals to seek asylum across international borders. As part of these efforts, UNHCR has, at my request, continued or expanded its involvement in assisting and seeking solutions for groups of the internally displaced. In addition to its programme of humanitarian assistance for over 1.5 million internally displaced persons in the former Yugoslavia, UNHCR has, for example, been engaged in activities on behalf of substantial numbers of internally displaced in Angola, Ghana, Sierra Leone, Rwanda, Afghanistan, the Caucasus and the Russian Federation. These activities are frequently carried out in cooperation with other concerned United Nations bodies in the context of comprehensive approaches to displacement and conflict resolution.

4. Protecting the victims

549. The scale of recent humanitarian crises has drawn renewed attention to the protection needs of victims of persecution and conflict. Among the challenges that have come to the fore are the provision of international protection to those seeking asylum from internal conflict, the often compelling protection needs of the internally displaced, the need to ensure the security and rights of the inhabitants of refugee camps and the need to restore effective national protection for those who have returned to fragile situations in their home countries. The importance of UNHCR's protection role has thus remained primordial in all phases of its activities, be it in responding to emergencies or in pursuing and consolidating solutions.

550. In the contemporary situation, large numbers of people in need of international protection have been forced to flee their countries because of situations of conflict. In view of political initiatives undertaken by the international community to resolve such situations, certain asylum countries have resorted with increasing frequency to providing temporary protection rather than making formal determinations of refugee status under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees. UNHCR, together with States, has been exploring this concept, notably in relation to those who have fled the former Yugoslavia, in an effort to ensure that international protection continues to be granted to all who need it.

551. One premise upon which temporary protection is based is the expectation of removing, within a reasonable period, the underlying cause of the outflow. UNHCR has insisted that temporary protection must not be unduly protracted before more permanent status is granted to the victims in situations where the grounds for flight have not been resolved. In addition, UNHCR has emphasized that the beneficiaries of temporary protection are, in many cases, refugees within the meaning of the 1951 Convention.

552. As the Rwanda crisis has recently demonstrated, mass flight from situations of inter-communal conflict can lead to the politicization of refugee camps and to attendant abuses of human rights. UNHCR has endeavoured to ensure that the security and human rights of refugees, including their right freely to decide to return home, are protected in such situations. In response to security problems in Rwandan refugee camps in Zaire and following close consultations with the Secretary-General, measures were taken by UNHCR to improve law and order and prevent intimidation and violence against refugees and candidates for voluntary repatriation through the deployment of Zairian forces, monitored by an international security liaison group.

553. The protection responsibilities of UNHCR also include protecting the human rights of returnees and other displaced persons of concern to the Office. UNHCR has thus continued to play a role in monitoring the situation of returnees and ensuring that national protection is restored. Recent experience in Central America has been particularly encouraging in this respect. The international colloquium held in Costa Rica in December 1994 to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the Cartagena Declaration adopted the San Jose Declaration on Refugees and Displaced Persons, which addresses the key issue of harmonizing legal criteria and procedures to consolidate the durable solutions of voluntary repatriation and local integration.

554. In pursuing its preventive and solution-oriented activities, UNHCR has welcomed United Nations efforts to establish a more effective operational capacity in the field of human rights, be it through intensified human rights field operations or through the establishment of international tribunals to prosecute the perpetrators of grave violations of human rights and humanitarian law. UNHCR has sought to strengthen collaboration with human rights treaty bodies and other human rights mechanisms, and has sought to establish active collaboration with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, especially at the level of field operations. Ongoing contacts with human rights working groups, rapporteurs, experts and monitors are also an integral part of the approach of UNHCR to link human rights concerns with the protection of refugees.

G. Protection and promotion of human rights

555. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Mr. Jose Ayala Lasso, is the United Nations official with principal responsibility for the Organization's human rights activities and, with the Centre for Human Rights, forms a unity of action. The staff of the Centre provides support for the activities of the High Commissioner and the various programmes, procedures and organs of the human rights programme.

1. New directions for the human rights programme

556. Over the last 12 months, the Organization's human rights work has taken action in response to the need, as seen by Governments and United Nations organs, to reach out and apply abstract human rights principles in concrete situations. A growing number of countries have requested advisory services and technical cooperation in building up national human rights infrastructures. In the last year well over 100 human rights technical cooperation projects have been implemented in some 50 countries. In order to assist in carrying out human rights technical cooperation programmes and at the request of Governments concerned, the United Nations has established human rights field presences in Burundi, Cambodia, Malawi and Rwanda. This represents a new departure in delivering human rights assistance. The human rights officers involved seek, through training, law reform, education and information, to contribute to building the structures of a society respectful of human rights and to prevent violations. Their very presence has proved to be a confidence-building measure for fragile societies.

557. The committees established by human rights treaties are also focusing their recommendations on ways the United Nations can help States live up to their human rights obligations. Further, the committees themselves are undertaking field missions to understand better the conditions in which human rights must be protected, to try to defuse situations of tension and to help develop concrete solutions to problems. They are also increasingly active in the field of early warning and preventive action.

558. Monitoring human rights violations on the ground in order to provide accurate information to the international community and to contribute to bringing serious situations to an end is another area in which our activities have grown. In 1993, the first monitors were sent to the field and today more than 120 human rights monitors are to be found in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and in Rwanda. Further, and following a resolution of the Commission on Human Rights, agreement has been reached to send two monitors to Zaire. The role of monitors is not only to report on violations, but also to be active agents of prevention.

2. Activities of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

559. The activities of the High Commissioner for Human Rights have opened new domains for

United Nations action to promote human rights and have given direction and provided initiative throughout the human rights programme. Strengthening international cooperation for human rights has been a main theme. In visits to over 30 States on all continents, the High Commissioner has sought to reinforce commitment to international and national protection of human rights through discussion with government officials, members of parliament and the judiciary. The High Commissioner has sought to strengthen the role of civil society in protecting human rights through contacts with non-governmental organizations, the academic community, the press and the public. These missions include appeals for ratification of treaties, for cooperation with all United Nations human rights mechanisms, inclusion of United Nations standards in national law and the establishment of national institutions to protect human rights. Human rights problems are dealt with frankly and appropriate actions suggested, including the revision of laws, release of detainees and adoption of other measures.

560. The High Commissioner's efforts to strengthen international cooperation extend also to cooperation with United Nations agencies and programmes, international and regional organizations and international and national non-governmental organizations. The High Commissioner has met with regional human rights organizations in Europe and the Americas, and he has drawn the attention of high-level international development and financial meetings to the need to support human rights activities.

561. An important aspect of the High Commissioner's activities is to help ensure that the human rights perspective is included in international conferences and that the high level of existing United Nations human rights standards is maintained. The High Commissioner took initiatives in this regard in relation to the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women. With regard to the latter, the High Commissioner has given particular attention to encouraging the inclusion of all aspects of the equal status and human rights of women and the girl-child in its deliberations.

562. The High Commissioner has also continued his activities aimed at responding to serious situations of violations and at preventing violations from developing or becoming widespread. The High Commissioner has continued to strengthen the activities of his offices in Burundi and Rwanda, has dispatched a high-level personal representative to visit the Russian Federation, including Chechnya, and has appointed a personal representative to the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the Former Yugoslavia to deal with human rights issues.

563. Preventing violations often goes hand in hand with providing advisory services and technical cooperation in human rights. In this connection the High Commissioner has established a special programme to promote and support national human rights institutions. Other areas of activity are combating all forms of discrimination, including racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance; promoting the equal status and rights of women; the rights of the child; and the rights of minorities and indigenous people. Of special importance is the responsibility given to the High Commissioner by the General Assembly to coordinate the implementation of the plan of action of the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education. The High Commissioner places importance on promoting the right to development and cultural, economic and social rights. A strategy for the implementation of the right to development and protection of cultural, economic and social rights is being developed to identify, in cooperation with relevant agencies, treaty-based bodies and experts, ways of improving the implementation of those rights.

3. International human rights treaty system

564. Some progress has been made in ratifications within the international human rights treaty system. As at 10 August 1995, 177 States had accepted to ensure and respect the wide range of basic human rights laid down in the Convention on the Rights of the Child. This means that the rights of more than 90 per cent of the children in the world today are protected by the Convention. This is in itself a notable achievement; every effort should be made to gain universal ratification by the end of 1995. Ratification of other treaties has not progressed so rapidly: as at 10 August, 132 States were party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights; 131 to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; 143 to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination; and 141 to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. Only 90 States had ratified the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and only 4 had ratified the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families.

565. In September 1994, I wrote to all Member States urging ratification of outstanding human rights treaties. In February 1995, I wrote to Heads of State or Government appealing for ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child. I am pleased with the numerous positive responses and I have asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to follow up on my letters and to offer assistance where required.

Nevertheless, new efforts must be made to achieve universal ratification of these important instruments.

566. At the heart of the international human rights treaty system are the six expert committees charged with monitoring respect for human rights as laid down in the respective treaties: the Human Rights Committee; the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights; the Committee on the Rights of the Child; the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination; the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women; and the Committee against Torture. Together, they review the human rights situation in some 60 countries a year. The committees and their members represent a precious source of information and expertise.

567. The committees have been improving their methods of work, providing more focused recommendations and carrying out field missions with increasing frequency. Three objectives are shaping their work: increased interaction and participation of the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations; the establishment of closer connections between the findings of the treaty body concerned and the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation; and the establishment by treaty bodies of procedures aimed at preventing human rights violations and preventing existing problems from escalating into conflicts.

568. In connection with situations that require special or urgent action, the committees have requested special reports on an urgent basis (former Yugoslavia, Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Haiti, Iraq, Peru, etc.), undertaken good offices missions (Belgrade, Kosovo) or carried out technical assistance missions (Croatia, Panama). Special appeals have also been issued with regard to Indonesia, concerning East Timor and Pakistan.

569. In June I met, for the first time, with the chairpersons of all six treaty-based bodies. The discussion focused on the role of those bodies in early warning and preventive action, on the greatly increased capacity of those bodies to monitor accurately the human rights situation in a wide range of countries and the assistance those bodies needed from the Secretariat to carry out those expanded responsibilities successfully. I expressed my full support for their important activities and my personal commitment to securing universal ratification of human rights treaties. I look forward to closer cooperation with the treaty bodies in the future.

4. Activities of the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary bodies

ments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations. Over the years the Commission has created numerous human rights fact-finding mechanisms charged with reporting on various human rights situations or types of serious violations, dealing with individual appeals and making suggestions for action to improve respect for human rights. The human rights situation in 12 countries is under review by these procedures. In addition, 14 thematic mandates have been established dealing with particularly serious violations, wherever they may occur, running from arbitrary executions, torture, disappearances, exploitation and sale of children, to violence against women and racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia. This year saw the appointment of a special rapporteur on Burundi and one on the adverse effects on human rights of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic waste and dangerous products. Each year thousands of urgent individual cases are transmitted to Governments and some 40 field missions are carried out. In May a special meeting on these procedures took place to improve their operation, to seek ways of integrating women's human rights into their work and to decide on their contribution to the Fourth World Conference on Women.

571. The Commission on Human Rights, through various working groups, also pursued the adoption of a declaration on the rights and responsibilities of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms; a draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment concerning visits to prisons or places of detention; and a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflicts. Work is also under way on guidelines for a possible optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, as well as the basic measures needed for the prevention and eradication of those practices.

572. The Commission has given close attention to the equal status and human rights of women. The Commission's Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, submitted her preliminary report to the Commission at its last session. The document deals with the different forms of violence that occur in the family and the community and are perpetrated or condoned by the State, and sets out the framework for the future work of the Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur has also been actively involved in the integration of women's rights into the mainstream of United Nations activities in the field of human rights, as called for in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. The High Commissioner and the Centre for Human Rights have been helping to focus the attention of the various human rights organs and bodies on the human rights input to the Fourth World Conference on Women and on the preparation of parallel human rights activities.

573. The United Nations has continued to work for the protection of the rights of indigenous people. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations is the main forum for interaction between human rights experts, Governments and representatives of indigenous people; some 400 representatives of indigenous people take part each year. The General Assembly has proclaimed the period 1995-2004 as the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People and the Commission on Human Rights is studying the draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people. Work continues towards the establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people, as called for by the Vienna Declaration.

574. Minorities are another especially vulnerable group often needing international action to help protect their rights. A new body, the Working Group on Minorities, has been set up with a wide mandate aimed at promoting respect for the 1992 Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities and examining possible solutions to problems involving minorities. Further, the General Assembly has asked the High Commissioner to promote the implementation of the principles contained in that Declaration.

575. The programme of action for the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination is a key element in promoting equality. The General Assembly has recommended that various measures and actions be taken on the national, regional and international levels. High priority is to be given to providing assistance and relief to victims of racism and all forms of racial discrimination. The possibility of convening a world conference on the elimination of racism, racial and ethnic discrimination, xenophobia and other related contemporary forms of intolerance is being studied.

5. Advisory services and technical cooperation

576. The World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna in June 1993, gave heightened emphasis to the need for the international community to respond to the requests of States for technical cooperation to strengthen the institutions of human rights and human rights practices. The concrete response to this is to be found in the programme of technical cooperation in the field of human rights implemented by the Centre for Human Rights. The programme supports a wide range of projects aimed at, among other things, developing national plans of action for human rights, providing assistance in drafting constitutional provisions relating to human rights, reforming legislation, human rights aspects of elections, prison reform, developing and strengthening national institutions, strengthening the judiciary, training judges, prosecutors and lawyers in human rights, and training police and the armed forces. Technical cooperation projects also support regional human rights institutions such as the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, the African Centre for Democracy and Human Rights Studies and the Arab Institute for Human Rights. Many of these activities are financed through the United Nations voluntary fund for technical cooperation in the field of human rights under the guidance of its board of trustees, composed of eminent international experts.

577. The preventive capacities of this programme have grown in importance. Contributions have been made during the past year to support the peace process in Palestine through the training of the Palestinian Police Force, to strengthening the human rights structures in the Caucasus (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia), to the peace-keeping operation in Mozambique through human rights training for the ONUMOZ civilian police component and in the former Yugoslavia through training for UNPROFOR officials and the national police of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Assistance continues in Cambodia and in Rwanda and Burundi.

6. Early warning mechanism

578. The Centre for Human Rights has increasingly brought its human rights expertise to bear on various activities dealing with early warning or with information relating to emergency situations. The Centre has participated in the Administrative Committee on Coordination Working Group on Early Warning of New Flows of Refugees and Displaced Persons and its subgroup on indicators. The Centre has also contributed to the development of the set of indicators for the Humanitarian Early Warning System led by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and to the framework for coordination project for planning and implementation of complex operations in the field. The Centre is also an active participant in the relief net project coordinated by the Department and contributed to the May 1995 meeting on early warning activities related to the CIS region.

579. During the last year the United Nations faced a major challenge in responding to the increasingly varied demands for action made upon it by Governments and United Nations bodies. Initial difficulties encountered in fielding complex human rights missions have now been overcome and the High Commissioner is seeking the cooperation of countries in building a solid basis for future action in the following areas: (a) logistical assistance capacity on a stand-by basis to provide material, communications and other support needed to contribute to emergency or preventive field missions; (b) the establishment and maintenance of an international roster of specialized staff to be available at short notice for human rights field missions (investigation teams, human rights field officers, legal experts etc.); and (c) increased contributions to the voluntary fund for technical cooperation in order to cover the financial needs of advisory service field missions and assistance.

580. Other action must be envisaged to enable the human rights programme to respond to the new demands of the Vienna Declaration, the High Commissioner's mandate and other decisions of policy-making bodies. The structure of the programme and of the supporting secretariat is being carefully reviewed in order to rationalize the work programme and to provide the substantive and technical support needed by the programme.

IV. Expanding preventive diplomacy and conflict resolution

A. Implementing "An Agenda for Peace"

581. In response to my report entitled "An Agenda for Peace", the General Assembly adopted resolutions 47/120 A and B on 18 December 1992 and 20 September 1993, respectively. In the first resolution the Assembly gave me a clear mandate to pursue preventive diplomacy and to strengthen the Secretariat's capacity in an early-warning mechanism, in particular collection and analysis of information, for situations likely to endanger international peace and security. The Security Council has also held a number of meetings to examine specific proposals made in "An Agenda for Peace", and the President of the Council has issued some 10 statements or letters as part of the review process.

582. On 3 January 1995, I issued a position paper entitled "Supplement to 'An Agenda for Peace'" (A/50/60-S/1995/1), in which I set forth additional recommendations, highlighting the areas where unforeseen, or only partly foreseen, difficulties had arisen and where there is a need for Member States to take the "hard decisions" noted in my 1992 report (A/47/277-S/24111). I also drew conclusions with regard to the crucial distinction between peace-keeping and enforcement action, as well as to the circumstances in which military force is a useful tool of diplomacy and those in which it is counterproductive.

583. In response to the Supplement, and after intensive discussions on 18 and 19 January 1995, the Security Council issued a presidential statement (S/PRST/1995/9) in support of that position paper. The Council welcomed and shared the priority I had given to action to prevent conflict. Furthermore, it encouraged all Member States to make the fullest possible use of instruments of preventive action, including the good offices of the Secretary-General, the dispatch of special envoys and the deployment, with the consent as appropriate of the host country or countries, of small field missions for preventive diplomacy and peace-making. Among other things, the Security Council hoped that the General Assembly, as well as other organizations and entities, would accord the Supplement a high degree of priority. It is encouraging to see that the lessons of contemporary peace-keeping have begun to appear not only in United Nations documents but in the training manuals of a number of Member States as well.

584. In the General Assembly, the Informal Open-ended Working Group on An Agenda for Peace continued its work during 1995 on issues contained in "An Agenda for Peace" and the Supplement.

585. Encouraged by such interest and in the belief that it is evidently better to prevent conflicts through early warning, quiet diplomacy and, in some cases, preventive deployment, than to undertake major politico-military efforts to resolve conflicts after they have broken out, I intend to redouble my efforts to perform the task entrusted to me under the Charter. If the United Nations is to play a timely and constructive role in averting or mitigating the destructive effects of complex crises, it is essential that the various elements of the Organization have an early, common view of the nature of the problem and the options for preventive action. In the Supplement, I noted that the multifunctional nature of both peace-keeping and peace-building had made it necessary to improve coordination within the Secretariat, so that the relevant departments function as an integrated whole under my authority and control.

586. It is in this context that, following an initiative of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the three substantive departments of the Secretariat, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Peace-keeping Operations, have developed a flow-chart of actions—information sharing, consultations and joint action—for the coordination of their respective activities in the planning and implementing of complex operations in the field. This mechanism, known as the "Framework for Coordination", covers the departments' activities during routine monitoring and early-warning analysis, assessment of options for preventive action where possible, fact-finding, planning and implementation of field operations, and conduct of evaluations or lessons-learned exercises.

587. An important element of the Framework for Coordination is the provision for staff-level consultations by the three departments, as well as the United Nations Development Programme, the Commission on Human Rights, the Department of Public Information and other parts of the Organization, to undertake joint analyses of early-warning information from a variety of sources, and to formulate joint recommendations for possible preventive measures. The individual departments—particularly the Department of Political Affairs—will retain the authority to implement preventive action, under my direction.

588. To ensure continuous consultation between the Secretary-General and the Security Council and to assist the latter in being informed about the latest developments, particularly in the area of peace-keeping operations, I have appointed one of my Special Advisers, Mr. Chinmaya Gharekhan, as my personal representative to the Council. Troop-contributing Governments are also understandably anxious to be kept fully informed. Therefore, I have endeavoured to meet their concerns by providing the Governments with regular briefings and by engaging them in dialogue about the conduct of the operation in question. Members of the Security Council have been included in such meetings, which the Council recently decided to formalize. It is important, however, that this reform should not lead to any blurring of the three distinct areas of authority, which include overall political direction that belongs to the Security Council; executive direction and command for which the Secretary-General is responsible; and command in the field, which I entrust to the chief of mission.

589. All the efforts of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Secretariat to control and resolve conflicts need the cooperation and support of other players on the international stage. Chapter VIII of the Charter defines the role that regional organizations can play in the maintenance of peace and security. Forms of cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations include consultations, diplomatic support, operational support, co-deployment and joint operations. While the capacity of regional organizations for peacemaking and peace-keeping varies considerably, none has yet developed the capacity and experience the United Nations has in those fields. The United Nations is ready to help them when requested to do so and when resources are sufficient. To advance these efforts, I intend to hold another high-level meeting with regional arrangements and organizations as a follow-up to the meeting I convened on 1 August 1994.

B. Preventive diplomacy and peacemaking

590. It has become clear that preventive diplomacy is only one of a class of actions that can be taken to prevent disputes from turning into armed conflict. Others in this class are preventive deployment of military and/or police personnel; preventive humanitarian action, for example, to manage and resolve a refugee situation in a sensitive frontier area; and preventive peace-building, which itself comprises an extensive menu of possible actions in the political, economic and social fields, applicable especially to possible internal conflicts.

591. All these preventive actions share the following characteristics: they all depend on early warning that the risk of conflict exists; they require information about the causes and likely nature of the potential conflict so that the appropriate preventive action can be identified; and they require the consent of the party or parties within whose jurisdiction the preventive action is to take place.

592. The element of timing is crucial. The potential conflict should be ripe for the preventive action proposed. Timing is also an important consideration in peacemaking and peace-keeping. The prevention, control and resolution of a conflict is like the prevention, control and cure of disease. If treatment is prescribed at the wrong moment in the evolution of a disease, the patient does not improve, and the credibility of both the treatment and the physician who prescribed it is compromised.

593. The term "peacemaking", as used by the United Nations, refers to the use of diplomatic means to persuade parties in conflict to cease hostilities and negotiate a peaceful settlement of their dispute. All the types of action that can be used for preventive purposes, such as diplomatic peace-keeping, humanitarian aid and peace-building, have their role in creating conditions for successful peacemaking, and implementing and consolidating the negotiated settlement for peace.

594. The primary responsibility for preventive action and peacemaking rests with the Department of Political Affairs, headed by Under-Secretary-General Marrack Goulding. The Department was created in 1992 to consolidate the political work of the Secretariat in a single department. There is, however, a distinction to be made between the Department's roles in these two fields. In the preventive field, its role is to identify the action required, with execution being entrusted to the specialist department or other agency concerned. In the peacemaking field, its role generally includes execution as well.

595. The Department of Political Affairs has five main responsibilities in support of preventive action and peacemaking. First, it must monitor, analyse and assess political developments throughout the world. Next, the Department identifies potential or actual conflicts in whose control and resolution the United Nations can play a useful role. It then prepares recommendations to the Secretary-General about appropriate actions in such cases. Fourth, the Department executes the approved policy when it is of a diplomatic nature. Finally, it assists the Secretary-General in carrying out political activities decided by him and/or mandated by the General Assembly and the Security Council in the areas of preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping and peace-building, including arms control and disarmament.

596. The Centre for Disarmament Affairs, an integral part of the Department of Political Affairs, provides advice, analysis and assessment on all disarmament matters and carries out the responsibilities entrusted to the Secretariat in this field. The Electoral Assistance Division, another integral part of the Department, provides services requested by Member States in the electoral field. The Department also provides secretariat services to the General Assembly, the Security Council and their various subsidiary organs.

C. Peace-keeping in a changing context

597. United Nations peace-keeping is the responsibility of the Department of Peace-keeping Operations, headed by Mr. Kofi Annan. It remained a dynamic and demanding activity, responding to continuing turbulence in relations between States as well as to armed conflict within State borders. Certain peace-keeping missions were brought to a successful conclusion and new missions were established by the Security Council, while the status of existing operations ranged from relative stability to high danger. In the face of these challenges, the Organization continued to encounter grave difficulties in obtaining resources from Member States, in both specialized and properly equipped military units and adequate financing. At the end of July 1995, approximately 65,000 military personnel, 1,700 civilian police and 6,000 civilian personnel were deployed in 16 United Nations peace-keeping operations, with an aggregate annual budget of approximately $3.6 billion (see table 2).

598. In Haiti, the suspended United Nations Mission was redeployed after a multinational force established stable and secure conditions. Likewise, in Angola, an effectively suspended United Nations peace-keeping operation, the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, has been newly deployed after the Angolan parties, following prolonged negotiations under United Nations auspices, finalized an agreement to bring the interrupted peace process back on course. In Tajikistan, a small United Nations Mission of Observers was deployed in support of a negotiating process under United Nations auspices, with the goal of national reconciliation and the promotion of democracy. Two major missions, in Mozambique and in El Salvador, were steered to a commendably successful conclusion, both culminating in elections monitored by the United Nations and the establishment of elected Governments, with the promise of the consolidation of stability in both countries. In contrast, the United Nations Operation in Somalia II, long plagued by interminable hostility between clan leaders who often turned upon the mission itself, was terminated, with a residual good offices mission being maintained to assist in the search for political compromise. Although the ambitious goal of reconstructing a stable Somali State was not achieved, the mission's principal objectives of ending the dire conditions of famine and of restoring some stability to most of the country were secured.

599. In recent years, the practice of peace-keeping, developed during the cold war and based on the consent and cooperation of the parties and impartiality of United Nations forces, with resort to arms only in self-defence, has proved most effective in multidimensional operations where the parties not only entered into negotiated agreements but demonstrated the political will to achieve the goals established. However, where the climate was one of hostility and obstruction instead of cooperation and political will, peace-keeping came under heavy strains and pressures. This has been the experience in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where the United Nations itself came under armed attack. While efforts to achieve a political agreement between the parties remained futile, the determination to press for military advantage undermined laboriously negotiated cease-fires, and the force of events on the ground drove the United Nations into situations in which mandates assigning peace-keeping tasks simultaneously with limited enforcement actions proved contradictory and ineffective. The Bosnian Serbs' use of military force to obtain their objectives demonstrated the perilous balance to be maintained by the international community between the limits of a mandate defined in response to a particular situation and the larger objective of realizing the purposes of the Charter. This has compelled renewed reflection on the instruments available to the international community in its efforts to maintain international peace and security.

600. The limits of peace-keeping in ongoing hostilities starkly highlighted by the distressing course of events in the former Yugoslavia have become clearer, as the Organization has come to realize that a mix of peace-keeping and enforcement is not the answer to a lack of consent and cooperation by the parties to the conflict. The United Nations can be only as effective as its Member States may allow it to be. The option of withdrawal raises the question of whether the international community can simply leave the afflicted populations to their fate. The Organization has been confronted with this issue with increasing frequency, not only in Bosnia and Herzegovina, but also in Somalia, Rwanda, Liberia, Angola and elsewhere.

601. The international community's response to these situations was varied. In some cases, it became necessary to rethink and readjust the measures taken. Such, often difficult, readjustment can be minimized if mandates given the Organization establish well-defined, achievable objectives and have the necessary political and material backing of Member States. Especially in instances where the Security Council authorizes the use of force even to a limited extent, under Chapter VII of the Charter, the composition, equipment and logistical support of such an operation must be commensurate with the task.

602. Peace-keeping missions have multiplied in number and complexity in recent years (see fig. 16). United Nations personnel in much larger numbers are now involved in a wider spectrum of operations ranging from the monitoring of traditional cease-fires to the task of armed protection of humanitarian convoys, and from the control of buffer zones to assistance in the implementation of peace settlements. As expectations rise and more missions are deployed, the United Nations is finding it increasingly difficult to keep up with fast-moving situations. Delays resulting from factors such as procedures and readiness have meant that local situations could get worse while the Organization prepares forces for deployment.

603. The Stand-by Forces Planning Team, established by the Secretary-General, developed the stand-by arrangements system in 1993, and the process to institutionalize it in the Secretariat began in May 1994. The mandate of the Secretariat vis-a-vis stand-by arrangements is to maintain a system of stand-by resources, able to be deployed as a whole or in parts, anywhere in the world, at the Secretary-General's request, with agreed response times, for United Nations duties, as mandated by the Security Council. The system calls for Member States to provide the Secretariat with detailed information regarding probable contributions (military, civilian police and civilian specialists) to peace-keeping operations. The information provided by participating Member States includes such data as response times, capabilities and air and sealift volumetrics as well as indications regarding equipment requirements.

604. The aim of the initiative is to reduce mounting times for new or expanding peace-keeping and enhancing efficiency and coordination at the Secretariat and mission levels. The stand-by arrangements system is based on conditional offers by Member States of specified resources which could be made available within agreed response times for United Nations peace-keeping operations. These resources can be military individuals or formations, civilian police, specialized personnel (civilian and military) and services, as well as material and equipment.

605. The resources remain on "stand-by" in their home country, where training prepares them to fulfil specific tasks or functions in accordance with United Nations guidelines. Stand-by resources would be used for peace-keeping operations mandated by the Security Council and should not be confused with peace-enforcement units, which are described in "An Agenda for Peace" (A/47/277-S/24111) as forces meant to respond to "outright aggression, imminent or actual". In these arrangements, Member States retain full responsibility for stand-by resources as long as they remain in their home country. During the period of their assignment to peace-keeping operations, personnel made available by participating Member States would remain in their national service but would be under command of the United Nations.

606. To ensure its effectiveness, the stand-by arrangements system relies on detailed volumetric information on resources specified in each of the stand-by arrangements. By maintaining a comprehensive database of the volumetrics, the Secretariat will be in a better position to assess detailed requirements. Secretariat planners will know well in advance what movement provisions are required and what items should be procured if deficiencies exist. In addition, procurement activities can be pre-planned, thereby reducing costs.

607. So far 46 Member States have confirmed their participation in stand-by arrangements and 13 are in the process of finalizing their offers. The commitments made to date do not, however, cover the whole spectrum of resources required to mount and execute future peace-keeping operations adequately. Deficiencies still exist in critical areas such as communications, multi-role logistics, health services, supply, engineering and transportation.

608. The Stand-by Arrangements Management Team is currently manned by one United Nations-contracted military officer and three others on loan from Governments. In addition, the team is temporarily assisted by four officers from other teams within the Mission Planning Service of the Department of Peace-keeping Operations.

609. Potentially, the stand-by arrangements system will offer an effective means of rapidly deploying needed resources to new or current peace-keeping missions. If these arrangements are fully built up, the Secretariat would be in a better position to meet current challenges. The system's success is totally dependent on the support and participation of Member States, since even under the stand-by arrangements Member States will retain the right to deploy the agreed units in a particular operation.

610. The daunting experiences in United Nations peace-keeping in the turbulence following the end of the cold war also have confronted the Organization with problems on a more practical level. The difficulties in securing resources have led to unacceptable delays in deployment of peace-keeping forces in emergency situations that cannot afford delay. In the Supplement to "An Agenda for Peace", I urged that serious thought be given to the idea of a rapid reaction force to provide the Security Council with a strategic reserve for deployment in emergencies requiring the immediate presence of peace-keeping troops. The system of stand-by arrangements does not so far ensure the reliability and speed of response which is required in such emergencies. It is essential that the necessary capabilities are reliably available when they are needed and can be deployed with the speed dictated by the situation. It is evident that Member States possess such capabilities; what is needed is the will to make them available for the execution of Security Council mandates.

611. The work of peace has never been without risk, but today United Nations personnel are routinely required to face dangers to their life and health in the course of unpredictable and risky operations in hostile environments. This is demonstrated by the unfortunate fact that there have been 456 fatalities in peace-keeping missions between 1991 and 1995 as compared to 398 between 1948 and 1990. Particularly disturbing is the tendency by some to ignore the international status of United Nations personnel and to attack peace-keepers as they carry out their duties mandated by the Security Council (see figs. 17 and 18). The Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted by the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session is of crucial importance, and I urge Governments to take the necessary action to ensure that the Convention enters into force as soon as possible.

612. There is an increasing awareness among Member States that public information, both internationally and in the mission area, is critical to the success of peace-keeping operations. In the planning of recent major operations, therefore, the requirements for an information capacity were examined at an early stage and the resources required were included in the proposed budget.

D. Current activities in preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peace-keeping

1. Afghanistan

613. During the period under review the Special Mission established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/208 continued its work under the leadership of Mr. Mahmoud Mestiri. Also in January 1995, the Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan (OSGA) was established in Jalalabad, until conditions could permit it to return to Kabul.

614. I visited Pakistan from 6 to 8 September 1994 and was briefed by Mr. Mestiri on his intensive consultations in previous weeks about transitional arrangements which would lead to a cease-fire and the convening of a Loya Jirga (Grand National Assembly). I also met separately with various representatives of the party leaders and with independent Afghans. Mindful of the strong desire of the Afghan people for peace, I instructed Mr. Mestiri to continue his endeavours.

615. On Mr. Mestiri's initiative, an advisory group of recognized and respected independent Afghan personalities from within and outside the country met at Quetta for 19 days starting on 29 September 1994 to advise the United Nations in its efforts to achieve progress. Their recommendations for an early transfer of power to a fully representative Authoritative Council, a country-wide cease-fire, a security force for Kabul and the subsequent establishment of a transitional government or the convening of a Loya Jirga were endorsed by the Security Council in November and subsequently by the General Assembly in December. In October, President Burhanuddin Rabbani had made a conditional offer to transfer power and Afghanistan gave its support to the United Nations peace proposals in a statement issued by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs (S/1994/1227, annex).

616. Mr. Mestiri returned to the region on 29 December 1994 and focused his efforts on the early transfer of power to the Authoritative Council. During January 1995, negotiations on its membership were held with all the major leaders, including President Rabbani, who reiterated his readiness to step down on 20 February when the Council was to be set up.

617. The military successes of the Taliban, a newly established armed force, delayed the setting up of the Council in Kabul. Efforts were made to include this group in the Council but it declined to participate in the process directly. The convening of the Authoritative Council was postponed to 21 March while a committee of four personalities worked to reconcile the areas of divergence. Its proposal that the Council be composed of two representatives from each of Afghanistan's 32 provinces, plus 15 or 20 representatives nominated by the United Nations to achieve the necessary ethnic and political balance, was accepted by some, but not all, of the parties.

618. As the date for the transfer of power drew closer, changes in the political and military situation began to accelerate. On 6 March, intensive fighting erupted in Kabul and adjacent areas between the forces of General Massoud and those of Mr. Mazari (Hezb-i-Wahdat), and then between those of General Massoud and the Taliban. The renewed fighting resulted in a virtual stalemate in the peace process. No nomination for the Authoritative Council had been received by mid-April, when Mr. Mestiri departed from the area.

619. In June, I called Mr. Mestiri to New York and, after discussing the new situation with him, decided that the United Nations should immediately resume its efforts towards peace in Afghanistan. On my instructions, Mr. Mestiri visited the region between 18 July and 1 August in order to reassess the prevailing situation. During his visit, he exchanged views with key Afghan leaders and senior officials of the neighbouring countries on ways in which the United Nations could assist the peace process. His interlocutors included President Rabbani, General Dostum, Mr. Ismael Khan and leaders of the Taliban.

620. I received Mr. Mestiri's report on the latest round of his activities in early August and agreed with him that he should assume residence inside Afghanistan and pursue his efforts to obtain the agreement of all concerned to the modalities for the transition to a broad-based and widely accepted Government. I also decided to enhance the Special Mission and OSGA by stationing additional political affairs officers in the country.

621. The United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan (UNOCHA) continued to coordinate the humanitarian programme throughout the country. A consolidated appeal, seeking $106 million to cover humanitarian needs for a 12-month period, was issued in October 1994. The main targets of the appeal were the emergency in Kabul, the needs of the internally displaced and support for voluntary repatriation of refugees from neighbouring countries. The total cash and in-kind contributions received during 1994 by United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations for activities outlined in the approach are estimated at $85 million. As a result of a mid-term review that was carried out early in 1995, a general consensus has emerged among all humanitarian partners concerned over the need for a new consolidated appeal covering the period from October 1995 to September 1996. The appeal will include projects covering the provision of emergency relief to vulnerable groups in urban and rural areas, including internally displaced persons and returnees. Emergency rehabilitation projects targeting communities made vulnerable by loss of livelihood, basic services or shelter will also be incorporated.

622. When I met the leaders of all the main Afghan factions in Islamabad in September 1994, I urged them to lift the blockade of Kabul, which had prevented the delivery of humanitarian aid to the city since late June. As a result, convoys carrying over 1,500 tons of urgently needed supplies reached Kabul in December. After fighting ended in the city, regular United Nations convoys carrying relief supplies reached the city as of mid-March. Refugees and displaced people also began to return. However, much of the southern part of the city is completely devastated. Mines and unexploded ordnance present a constant danger, and little clean water is available. United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations are working together to address these most urgent humanitarian needs, providing food, shelter, sanitation and health care.

623. Throughout 1994, internally displaced persons from Kabul continued to arrive in Jalalabad. By January 1995, almost 300,000 persons were living in camps assisted by the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and non-governmental organizations. As a result of coordinated efforts, the health and nutritional status of camp residents improved dramatically.

624. Joint United Nations interventions in the humanitarian field include a mass immunization campaign, organized by the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, in collaboration with the Ministry of Public Health and non-governmental organizations. The first round took place in November 1994. Following an appeal by the United Nations, a complete cease-fire prevailed for the week of the campaign. The second and third rounds took place in April and May 1995.

2. Armenia and Azerbaijan

625. The conflict over the region of Nagorny Karabakh, which involves Armenia and Azerbaijan, remains unresolved, but the situation on the ground in and around Nagorny Karabakh has not deteriorated in the past 12 months. The cease-fire agreed to on 12 May 1994 through the mediation of the Russian Federation has been observed to a large extent and no additional territory has been occupied.

626. The members of the Security Council have continued to support the peacemaking efforts of OSCE, which decided at its summit meeting at Budapest on 6 December 1994 to establish a co-chairmanship for its OSCE Minsk Conference and, inter alia, to conduct speedy negotiations for the conclusion of a political agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict that would permit the convening of the Minsk Conference and make it possible to deploy a multinational OSCE peace-keeping force in the region.

627. In its presidential statement of 26 April 1995 (S/PRST/1995/21), the Security Council reiterated its support for the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Minsk Conference and, inter alia, strongly urged the parties to conduct negotiations constructively without preconditions or procedural obstacles and to refrain from any actions that might undermine the peace process. Furthermore, the Council stressed that the parties to the conflict themselves bore the main responsibility for reaching a peaceful settlement.

628. I remain prepared to provide my full support for the efforts of OSCE. To that end, the United Nations Secretariat has had a number of consultations with the OSCE High-level Planning Group to extend technical advice and expertise in the field of peace-keeping. I am also fully prepared, if so requested, to lend my good offices to the OSCE-led political process towards reaching a comprehensive settlement of the conflict.

629. During my visit to Baku and Yerevan in October/November last year, the first such visit of a Secretary-General to the newly independent transcaucasian nations, I was able to obtain a first-hand assessment of the very serious effects of this conflict, in particular in its humanitarian dimension, on both Armenia and Azerbaijan.

630. Active humanitarian programmes coordinated by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs are being implemented in both countries. Activities of the 1995-1996 humanitarian programmes, as presented in the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for the Caucasus (1 April 1995-31 March 1996), include relief projects in the food, non-food, shelter, education and health sectors, as well as capacity-building and projects addressing the transition from emergency assistance to development. As at 31 July 1995, 37.4 per cent ($10.5 million) of funding had been received for the Armenia component of the appeal and only 37 per cent ($12.8 million) of requirements pledged for humanitarian activities in Azerbaijan. It is anticipated that the majority of refugees and internally displaced persons in both Azerbaijan and Armenia, who are among the most vulnerable members of the population, will continue to require humanitarian assistance in the foreseeable future. I requested Under-Secretary-General Aldo Ajello to undertake a mission of goodwill to Armenia and Azerbaijan.

3. Baltic States

631. In accordance with the agreements between the parties concerned, the Russian Federation withdrew its troops from the territory of Estonia and Latvia by 31 August 1994. In a letter addressed to me on 26 August 1994 (A/49/344-S/1994/1008), the Permanent Representative of the Russian Federation confirmed the guarantees that the Russian Federation gave to the Latvian side that the Agreement concerning the legal status of the Skrunda radar station during the period of its temporary operation and dismantling would not be used to carry out acts directed against the sovereignty and security interests of Latvia.

632. At the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly, it was generally recognized that completion of the withdrawal of foreign armed forces from the territory of the Baltic States would contribute to enhancing stability in Europe and developing better relations between the Baltic States and the Russian Federation. The General Assembly thus concluded its consideration of this item.

4. Bougainville

633. I welcomed the establishment of a Bougainville Transitional Government in April of this year. I am pleased to note that, following the signing of the agreement reached at the Bougainville Peace Conference at Arawa last October, and following the talks held by my Special Envoy in August 1994 and January 1995 with the leaders of Papua New Guinea and Solomon Islands, and with representatives of all Bougainvillian groups in pursuance of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1994/81 of 9 March 1994, there has been a marked improvement in the political and human rights situation on the island.

634. Convinced that reconstruction and rehabilitation are essential for the strengthening of the peace process, I dispatched a United Nations inter-agency mission to Papua New Guinea in April-May 1995. The Mission has prepared a development programme for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Bougainville.

635. In accordance with the mandate entrusted to me by Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/65, I will continue to lend my good offices to the peace process now under way in Bougainville.

5. Burundi

636. The threatening situation in Burundi has been a major preoccupation throughout the period under review. I visited the country on 16 and 17 July 1995. Since his appointment in November 1993, my Special Representative for Burundi, Mr. Ahmedou Ould-Abdallah, has actively promoted national reconciliation in the country through his contacts with all parties concerned.

637. On 10 September 1994, all the parties reached agreement on a system of power-sharing and later signed a Convention of Government, with the sole exception of the Parti pour le redressement national (PARENA), headed by former President Jean-Baptiste Bagaza. On 30 September 1994, the National Assembly elected Mr. Sylvestre Ntibantunganya, a Hutu, as the new President of the Republic of Burundi. Mr. Anatole Kanyenkiko, a Tutsi, was reconfirmed as Prime Minister on 3 October 1994, and five days later a new coalition Government, representing 7 of the 13 political parties, was sworn in.

638. In my report to the Security Council of 11 October 1994 (S/1994/1152), I noted that although the situation had stabilized somewhat with the election of a new President, it still remained precarious. The international community should therefore continue to encourage the moderate forces in Burundi.

639. Throughout the period under review, the Security Council repeatedly deplored the attempts of extremist elements to destabilize the situation further and called upon all parties to respect and implement fully the provisions of the Convention of Government. The Council dispatched a fact-finding mission, the second in six months, to Bujumbura on 10 and 11 February 1995. The mission recommended, inter alia, the establishment of an international commission of inquiry into the October 1993 coup attempt and the massacres that followed, a substantial increase in the number of Organization of African Unity military observers, the strengthening of the office of my Special Representative and the deployment of United Nations human rights monitors throughout the country (S/1995/163).

640. In a presidential statement of 29 March 1995 (S/PRST/1995/13), the Security Council requested me to report on the steps to be taken to establish the commission of inquiry recommended by its mission which had visited Burundi the previous month. After considering various options, I concluded that it was necessary to explore the possibility of establishing a commission on the truth for Burundi similar to the one that had worked in El Salvador. I appointed a Special Envoy, Mr. Pedro Nikken, to visit Burundi for two weeks starting 26 June 1995. His mission was to determine whether the appropriate national entities in Burundi were prepared to set up a commission on the truth. The Council also reaffirmed its support for a regional conference on peace, stability and security and called with great urgency upon the countries of the region to convene such a conference. My Special Envoy visited Bujumbura from 28 June to 9 July 1995. In his report, he concluded that neither a commission on the truth nor an international commission of judicial inquiry would be an adequate response to the need to put an end to impunity in Burundi. However, an international commission of inquiry could be viable and useful. I reported to the Council on 28 July (S/1995/631) with recommendations for the establishment of such a commission.

641. The Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, organized by the Organization of African Unity and UNHCR, took place as scheduled at Bujumbura from 12 to 17 February 1995, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 49/7 of 25 October 1994. The Conference adopted a plan of action and decided to ask UNDP to organize a round table to assist the countries affected by the Rwandan and Burundian refugees. Preparatory meetings for holding the round table are scheduled to take place from September to December 1995.

642. On 15 February, the Union pour le progrès national (UPRONA), the main opposition party, forced the resignation of Prime Minister Kanyenkiko. Five days later, Mr. Antoine Nduwayo was appointed Prime Minister. On 10 March, a new 25-member coalition Government was appointed. The security situation nevertheless remained fragile. Violence did not subside, despite a reconciliation and pacification campaign launched by the Government in April 1995, and it continued to affect parts of the country. Two problems, in particular, were potentially explosive: the sudden influx of Hutu refugees who left the Kibeho camp for displaced persons in Rwanda and crossed the northern border of Burundi (27,000 as of 12 May 1995) and the question of a shipment of small arms and ammunition ordered by Burundi from China in 1992, but blocked in Dar es Salaam by the authorities of the United Republic of Tanzania.

643. A fresh outbreak of violence in Bujumbura in June 1995 led to the announcement by President Ntibantunganya of new security measures, but they were rejected by the Parliament with the Front pour la démocratie au Burundi (FRODEBU) majority voting against them. The same month, arrest warrants were issued against two Hutu extremist leaders—former Minister of the Interior Leonard Nyagoma and his top adviser, Mr. Christian Sendegeya, who had sought refuge in Zaire. The situation was further aggravated by the unexpected resignation of the Tutsi Minister for Foreign Affairs. On 6 July 1995, Mr. Paul Munyambari, a Hutu (FRODEBU), was appointed Foreign Minister in his place. Preparations for the national debate, which is tentatively scheduled for November or December 1995, are under way.

644. During his visit to Burundi from 29 to 31 March 1995, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights received support from the President of Burundi for the expansion of the office of the High Commissioner in Bujumbura, opened since 15 June 1994. On 4 May, the Economic and Social Council appointed Mr. Paulo Pinheiro (Brazil) Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Burundi. Mr. Pinheiro paid his first visit to the country from 21 June to 2 July.

645. On the humanitarian front, the violence in Burundi severely affected the northern provinces. Populations have continued to flee to the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire. The reduction in the availability of food resources to meet regional needs has forced the World Food Programme to cease distributions among the displaced populations while continuing to serve refugees. This has led to the exacerbation of ethnic tensions within the northern regions.

646. The fact that the humanitarian needs which surfaced after the events in October 1993 in Burundi were largely met by September/October 1994 seems to account for the general consensus within the relief community in Burundi that the humanitarian crisis is past. However, although an emergency does not exist at present, there remain reasons for concern about the future. Health and educational services are continuously perturbed by ethnic turmoil, forcing the international community to set up parallel administrative structures. Dwindling international emergency resources and the absence of follow-up development assistance pose questions about the Government's capacity to take over the provision of basic services.

647. The United Nations Development Programme is actively involved in assisting the Government in its transition from a relief-assisted State to one which may lead a recovery effort. A 15-month continuum programme of close to $3.4 million was initiated to help elaborate sectoral strategies. In addition, a number of conferences attract donor support.

648. The World Health Organization is implementing a four-pronged assistance effort, totalling nearly $3.9 million. The efforts are focused on strengthening the National Epidemiological Surveillance Network, assisting in the prevention and control of communicable diseases and epidemics, supporting the provision of health services to the most affected provinces, and aiding in the prevention and control of sexually transmitted diseases.

649. The efforts of UNICEF are geared towards reinforcing the existing health network as well as the integration of preventive and curative services of health and nutrition, the provision of water supply and environmental sanitation, supporting basic education and peace education, and giving assistance to 8,000 unaccompanied children. Over $10 million has been contributed for these efforts.

650. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations has concentrated its efforts on providing displaced persons, returnees and refugees with agricultural tool kits and seeds. In addition, the organization is involved in reforestation and stockbreeding. A total of $12 million has been allocated for these tasks.

651. In addition to providing assistance to approximately 200,000 refugees, UNHCR has been assisting 220,000 returnees and displaced persons and 5,000 urban poor. UNHCR also provides secondary-school and higher education, and implements repatriation operations of former refugees from and to Rwanda. Approximately $30 million has been raised for the accomplishment of these tasks.

652. WFP continues to assist the internally displaced persons and returnees as well as 200,000 Rwandan refugees in Burundi, and 150,000 Rwandan and Burundian refugees in Zaire. The reduction in regional food availability has led WFP to implement an accelerated reintegration programme for the internally displaced.

6. Cambodia

653. In April 1995, the Royal Government of Cambodia agreed to my decision that the term of my Representative in Cambodia, whom I had appointed following the termination of the mandate of the United Nations Military Liaison Team in May 1994, be extended by six months and that he should be assisted during this period by one military adviser. In accordance with his mandate, my Representative has maintained close liaison with the host Government, as well as with United Nations programmes and agencies operating in the country.

654. The broad cooperation between the Government, the United Nations and the international community has brought further progress to the country during the past year. The generous pledges made at the third meeting of the International Committee on the Reconstruction of Cambodia (ICORC) are clear evidence of the sustained commitment of the international community to assist the Government in its endeavours to establish a peaceful, democratic and prosperous State.

655. Discussions in May 1995 between my Special Envoy, Under-Secretary-General Marrack Goulding, and the Cambodian Government led to an agreement to introduce measures to improve communication between the United Nations Centre for Human Rights in Phnom Penh and the Government, and for the office to continue to function with its existing mandate. At that time I issued a personal appeal to Member States for contributions to the Trust Fund for a Human Rights Education Programme in Cambodia. I repeat this appeal now.

7. Cyprus

656. During the past year, my mission of good offices proceeded within the overall framework set out by the Security Council in resolution 939(1994):

to continue to work for progress on both the substance of the Cyprus problem and the implementation of the package of confidence-building measures that had been the focus of efforts during the previous period.

657. After my Special Representative, Mr. Joe Clark, visited the region in September 1994 for meetings with the Cypriot parties and the Governments of Greece and Turkey, he reported to me that matters were close to an impasse. The Greek Cypriot leader continued to insist on progress on an overall solution, while the Turkish Cypriot leader placed priority on the early implementation of the confidence-building measures. In response, I wrote to each of the community leaders on 10 October 1994, informing them that I had requested my Deputy Special Representative to invite them to join him for a number of informal consultations. These consultations were to explore, in a concrete manner, ways in which the implementation of the confidence-building measures and the long-contemplated overall settlement of the Cyprus problem might be advanced.

658. Both leaders accepted this invitation, meeting five times between 18 and 31 October 1994. They discussed the essential elements of a federation in Cyprus as well as the implementation of the confidence-building measures, exploring a broad range of ideas pertaining to political equality, sovereignty, membership in the European Union, aspects of the federal constitutional arrangements, security and demilitarization, displaced persons, property claims and territorial adjustments, as well as modalities for the early establishment of the federation and implementation of the confidence-building measures. The ideas broached under these headings offered ways of satisfying in an equitable manner what have consistently been the most deeply held concerns and interests of each community.

659. In November and December 1994, I met separately with each of the Cypriot leaders to hear their views on the informal meetings. I told them that given the necessary political will, the elements discussed during their meetings offered the possibility of a significant step forward both on the substance of the Cyprus question and on the confidence-building measures. I also strongly encouraged the Turkish Cypriot leader to respond in a commensurate manner to the ideas that had been broached. I instructed my Representatives to pursue their contacts with the parties in order to establish the basis for a further discussion of these issues. To this end, Mr. Clark travelled to the region in March and May 1995.

660. The continuing support of the members of the Security Council for the efforts of my mission of good offices has been particularly encouraging. But I regret that, in spite of the presence on the negotiating table of almost all elements required for a just and lasting settlement, the negotiating process again appears to be blocked.

661. The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) has continued to carry out effectively its mandate despite the reduction of its strength by nearly half over the past couple of years. The two sides have generally exercised restraint in the past year. However, the continuing quiet should not obscure the fact that there is merely a cease-fire—not peace—on the island. I continue to be concerned by the excessive level of foreign troops and of armament in Cyprus, and the rate at which these are being strengthened. The two sides have not yet agreed, in accordance with the proposed package of confidence-building measures, to extend without delay the 1989 un-manning agreement to all parts of the buffer zone where their forces remain in close proximity to each other. The Security Council's repeated call for a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops and in defence spending should be heeded by all concerned. I again urge both sides to take reciprocal measures to lower the tension, including mutual commitments, through UNFICYP, not to deploy along the cease-fire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those that are hand-held and to prohibit firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone.

8. East Timor

662. I have continued to provide my good offices in the search for a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the question of East Timor. During the period under review, I held two more rounds of talks at Geneva, on 9 January and 8 July 1995, with the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Portugal. These talks identified a number of substantive issues for further discussions and explored possible avenues towards a solution.

663. During my visit to Indonesia in April, I had very useful discussions with President Suharto. I had equally valuable meetings with President Mario Soares when I visited Portugal at the end of August. I also dispatched a mission to Portugal, Indonesia and East Timor in December 1994 to consult with the two Governments and a broad range of East Timorese personalities on a series of ideas to help move the process forward.

664. With the support of the two Ministers, I took the initiative to facilitate and offer necessary arrangements for the convening of an all-inclusive intra-East Timorese dialogue. The dialogue does not address the political status of East Timor or represent a second negotiating track. Instead, it is intended to be a forum for free and informal discussions among the East Timorese on practical ideas aimed at creating an atmosphere conducive to the achievement of a solution to the question. The first meeting of the dialogue was convened at Burg Schlaining, Austria, from 2 to 5 June 1995, and was attended by 30 East Timorese of all shades of political opinion. In a positive atmosphere, the delegates reached a declaration by consensus and produced a number of useful ideas that I examined in July with the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Portugal. The participants voiced their desire to have further meetings of this kind in the future. I share this view and intend to pursue this matter with the two parties.

665. While deep differences remain between the two sides on the core issue of the status of the Territory, I am convinced that a solution can be found through patient dialogue. I am encouraged in this belief by the willingness of the two sides to continue the dialogue and to seek a lasting solution. I am also heartened by the desire expressed by the East Timorese, recently manifested at the first session of the dialogue, to contribute to the peace process. The next ministerial meeting will take place in London in January 1996.

9. El Salvador

666. With the assistance of the United Nations, El Salvador continued its progress from a violent and closed society towards one in which democratic order, the rule of law and respect for human rights are being established. However, as in previous years, significant progress in the implementation of outstanding elements of the peace accords was not without problems or delay. These included the full deployment of the National Civil Police and the completion of the demobilization of the National Police; the reform of the judicial and electoral systems; the transfer of land to former combatants; and the conclusion of reintegration programmes for them. On 31 October 1994, I reported to the Security Council that I deemed it necessary to recommend that the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) be extended until 30 April 1995.

667. The Government of President Armando Calderon Sol and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) have continued to express their determination, e.g., in a joint declaration signed on 4 October 1994, to see the peace accords promptly implemented for the benefit of all Salvadorans. Specifically in the latter part of the year, implementation of the outstanding points assumed a more rapid pace. For example, the long-delayed demobilization of the National Police was formally effected on 31 December 1994. In the early months of 1995, however, the land programme slowed and some worrisome indicators emerged.

668. In the light of these developments, I informed the President of the Security Council on 6 February 1995 of my intention to set up in El Salvador, following the expiration of the mandate of ONUSAL, a small team of United Nations officials to provide good offices and verify implementation of the outstanding provisions of the peace accords. The team, which would be established for an initial period of six months, would also provide me with a continuing flow of information, thus allowing me to keep the Council informed of further developments. On 17 February, the Council welcomed my proposal, and preparations began for the team's deployment.

669. At the beginning of April 1995, I made a visit to El Salvador, the third occasion on which I had done so as Secretary-General. Although I stressed that the primary responsibility for the process lay with Salvadorans, I assured the Government and people of El Salvador that the commitment of the United Nations remained, despite the withdrawal of ONUSAL.

670. On 27 April 1995, the parties to the Chapultepec Peace Agreement signed a programme of work for the completion of all outstanding points in the peace accords. On the following day the Security Council adopted resolution 991(1995), formally marking the end of the mandate of ONUSAL. The new United Nations Mission in El Salvador (MINUSAL), led by Mr. Enrique ter Horst, my Special Representative, began its work as planned on 1 May 1995. With its staff partly funded by voluntary contributions, MINUSAL represents a much reduced United Nations presence, but one that confirms the Organization's ongoing support for peace-building in El Salvador.

671. The Programme of Work had divided the remaining accords into six areas (public security, land transfer, human settlements, reinsertion programmes, Fund for the Protection of the Wounded and Disabled and legislative reforms) and established dates by which specific provisions in each area must be completed. Monthly updates on its progress, which I circulated informally to members of the Security Council, revealed the continuing determination of the parties to the peace accords to bring them to completion. Progress was made in all areas, with the Government's deposit of ratification of international human rights instruments with the United Nations Secretariat and the secretariat of the Organization of American States and its recognition of the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights particularly to be welcomed.

672. However, by early August 1995 it was clear that significant delays had occurred in the land transfer programme (which reached the 60 per cent target set for 30 April 1995 only in the first week of July), in the design of a "special regime" for rural human settlements, in the strengthening of the National Civil Police and in the implementation of the judicial reforms recommended by the Commission on the Truth. With a little under three months before the expiration of its term, MINUSAL continued to exercise its good offices and verification responsibilities in favour of one final effort to bring these outstanding elements of the peace accords to conclusion.

10. Georgia/Abkhazia

673. My Special Envoy for Georgia, Mr. Edouard Brunner, supported by the Russian Federation as facilitator and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe as participant, has continued his efforts to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the conflict, particularly in identifying a political status for Abkhazia acceptable to both the Georgian and Abkhaz sides. He has visited the region and chaired several rounds of negotiations and expert talks. I visited the Republic of Georgia from 31 October to 2 November 1994 in order to explore with the Head of State, Mr. Eduard Shevardnadze, and other Georgian Government officials how the political process could be advanced. I have also offered to assist by meeting either separately or jointly with the leaders of the two sides. The Russian Federation, acting in its capacity as facilitator, made intensive efforts in 1995 to reach agreement on a draft protocol that might provide the basis for a Georgian-Abkhaz settlement. Unfortunately, all these efforts have resulted in little political progress to date.

674. A significant gap remains between the two sides regarding the political status of Abkhazia within the territorial integrity of Georgia. Abkhazia's Constitution, which was promulgated by the Supreme Soviet of Abkhazia on 26 November 1994, declares Abkhazia to be a "sovereign democratic State . . .". Such constitutional arrangements are unacceptable to the Georgian side, which insists on preserving its territorial integrity. The Government of Georgia proposes to establish a federation for Georgia within which Abkhazia would be granted a wide degree of autonomy.

675. Assuming that it is possible to find agreement on a draft protocol now under discussion, a prolonged period of detailed negotiations will have to follow in order to agree on ways to implement a settlement. Such negotiations will require continuous attention in situ. I have therefore decided to appoint a deputy to my Special Envoy, who will be resident in the area and thus able to provide a continuous presence at a senior political level. Following the precedent of other operations, such as those in Cyprus and Tajikistan, the Deputy will also be the head of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG). In carrying out the tasks of political contact and negotiation, the Deputy will divide his time between Tbilisi and Sukhumi and will travel as necessary to Moscow for direct consultations with the Russian authorities.

676. UNOMIG has been fulfilling the tasks mandated by the Security Council in resolution 937(1994) of 21 July 1994. It maintains its headquarters at Sukhumi, but because of the unavailability of suitable accommodation in that city, part of the Mission's headquarters staff is now stationed in Pitsunda. The Mission also has a liaison office in Tbilisi and three sector headquarters—at Sukhumi, Gali and Zugdidi. In addition, UNOMIG has six team site bases: three in the Gali region, two in the Zugdidi region and one in the Kodori Valley.

677. The Government of Georgia and the Abkhaz authorities have largely complied with the agreement of 14 May 1994 on a cease-fire and separation of forces. All armed forces have been withdrawn from the security zone, although a few pieces of non-operational heavy military equipment remain in the restricted weapons zone.

678. The situation in the security and restricted weapons zones, especially in the Gali region, has been tense. One of the most pressing problems in the security zone has been the presence on both sides of unauthorized weapons among the population, and among some of the Abkhaz militia, as well as the Georgian police. In addition, armed elements beyond the control of either the Government of Georgia or the Abkhaz authorities have been responsible for criminal activities in the Gali region. The situation in the Kodori Valley, which had been tense towards the end of 1994, has now calmed down. The relations on the ground between the Abkhaz and the Svan have been satisfactory, with a slow but steady build-up of mutual confidence.

679. UNOMIG has reported that the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) peace-keeping force has been conducting its operations within the framework of the agreement of May 1994, and any variation from the tasks set out in the agreement has been made in consultation with the parties. Cooperation between UNOMIG and the CIS peace-keeping force has been very productive. Cooperation between UNOMIG and the Government of Georgia and the Abkhaz authorities has also been satisfactory. Through its liaison office in Tbilisi, UNOMIG has been cooperating with OSCE.

680. In pursuance of paragraph 10 of Security Council resolution 937(1994), I have established a voluntary fund for contributions in support of the implementation of the agreement of 14 May 1994 for humanitarian aspects including demining, as specified by the donors, which will facilitate the implementation of UNOMIG's mandate. One pledge has been made so far.

681. At independence, the people of Georgia had one of the highest standards of living among the republics of the former Soviet Union. Today, the country is racked by political instability, civil strife on two fronts and the displacement of some 270,000 people. Lack of foreign exchange for essential inputs, such as fuel, and hyper-inflation have devastated the economy. Agricultural production contracted in 1994 for the fourth year in succession. In the break-away region of Abkhazia, some 75 per cent of the original inhabitants have reportedly fled civil conflict into other parts of Georgia and the area remains the scene of extensive destruction. In some areas, large numbers of mines have been laid and roads are impassable.

682. Of all the difficulties currently facing Georgia, the most immediate are the scarcity of basic foods and the critical energy supply situation. After several years of huge budget deficits, the Government lacks the resources to ensure the continued provision of basic social services. Many primary health-care units and hospitals are unable to function because of shortages of medicines and equipment. Health care is now almost entirely dependent on international humanitarian assistance.

683. In addition, large numbers of orphans, abandoned children and people in need of special education are currently living in extremely poor circumstances because of reduced government spending. Most lack adequate food, bedding, warm clothes and learning materials. As in the neighbouring Caucasus republics, textbooks and school materials are in short supply and many school buildings urgently need rehabilitation.

684. There has also been little progress in the return of refugees and displaced persons to Abkhazia. Though voluntary repatriation under UNHCR auspices commenced in mid-October 1994, movement as at December 1994 of a mere 311 persons out of an estimated total 250,000 refugees and displaced persons has been very disappointing. Since the end of November 1994, formal repatriation has virtually halted, and the Quadripartite Commission has not met since 16 February 1995. About 20,000 persons have returned spontaneously to the Gali district.

685. The Abkhaz side continues to object to the large-scale and speedy return of refugees and displaced persons. Its offer of 17 April 1995 to repatriate 200 persons a week and to be more flexible with regard to those refugees and displaced persons returning spontaneously does not meet UNHCR requirements for a meaningful timetable. The continued delay in resettling internally displaced persons to Abkhazia has placed a heavy burden on the economy of Georgia, weakening its capacity to recover and exacerbating social and political tensions. The Abkhaz side continues to link progress on the question of refugees to progress on political issues. The authorities are withholding thousands of other applications and have refused to process further requests owing to a stalling of the peace negotiations on both sides.

686. As part of its efforts to move from a centrally planned to a market economy, the Georgian Government is taking steps towards economic reform. The task of transferring the State-run economy into private hands is daunting and has, in itself, inflicted severe social and economic hardship. In 1994, subsidies for important staples were progressively removed, resulting in price increases. Further liberalization of prices for most commodities will be progressively instituted during 1995. Although the minimum wage and pensions have also been increased, these reforms cannot keep pace with rising inflation.

687. In the light of these problems, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs led an inter-agency mission to Georgia in February 1995, for the second consecutive year, to assess the needs of the country and formulate an inter-agency consolidated appeal for the Caucasus, including Georgia, and covering the period from 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996. That appeal was launched at Geneva on 23 March 1995. Activities covered in the appeal include relief projects to be undertaken by United Nations agencies/programmes and non-governmental organizations in the food, non-food, shelter and health sectors, as well as projects aimed at strengthening the country's self-reliance in a post-emergency phase.

688. On 19 May 1995, the Quadripartite Commission convened in Moscow to explore once again the possibilities for resuming the voluntary repatriation programme under the auspices of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Representatives of UNHCR presented a concrete timetable for such returns, under which the displaced population from the Gali district would have returned before the end of 1995. Despite strenuous efforts to obtain a more flexible response, the Abkhaz side maintained its previous position of April 1995 of allowing only 200 persons per week to return. This continues to be unacceptable to the other parties.

689. Minor improvements to security conditions in the Gali district have resulted in increased daily movements back and forth across the Inguri River by displaced persons, primarily to the lower security zone, to work in the fields, trade or repair houses. Some of these persons have decided to stay in the Gali district as long as security does not again deteriorate. The size of the semi-resident population is estimated at 25,000 to 35,000 persons. However, large numbers continue to live in difficult circumstances, placing great strain on the Georgian economy, on human relations and on local services. In these circumstances, the level of frustration and distress is very high, leading to calls for mass spontaneous repatriation.

690. As of July 1995, $9.4 million, representing 25.7 per cent of funding requirements for Georgia, had been contributed to the appeal, as reported to the Department of Humanitarian Affairs by agencies making the appeal. A mid-term review of the appeal will be launched in late August 1995, to review both the implementation of the projects presented in the appeal and the funding situation, and to present plans for the continuation of activities until the end of the appeal period.

11. Guatemala

691. During the reporting period, negotiations between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG) have continued under the auspices of the United Nations. While advances in the process have been uneven, the establishment of the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala (MINUGUA) and the signing of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples are encouraging developments.

692. Taking into account progress made during the first half of 1994 as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 1994/58, I recommended to the General Assembly in my report of 18 August 1994 (A/48/985) the earliest establishment of a human rights verification mission in Guatemala. On 19 September 1994, by resolution 48/267, the Assembly established MINUGUA for an initial period of six months, and I appointed Mr. Leonardo Franco as the Mission's Director. MINUGUA was officially inaugurated in November 1994. With eight regional offices, five sub-regional offices and an authorized strength of 245 international staff, the Mission represents a significant effort by the United Nations in human rights verification and institution-building. It is also the most tangible result so far of the talks between the Government of Guatemala and URNG.

693. After the signing of five agreements between January and June 1994, the pace of the negotiations slowed down during the last six months of the year. On 28 December 1994, I expressed my concern to the General Assembly and the Security Council and stated that the time-frame originally foreseen for the conclusion of a peace agreement would have to be revised. In addition, I wrote to the parties to ask them to renew their commitment to the process and to indicate the steps they would be prepared to take to allow it to regain momentum.

694. As a result of initiatives by the Secretariat, the parties agreed in February 1995 to several proposals aimed at facilitating the continuation of the talks, including a new time-frame. On that basis, I informed the General Assembly and the Security Council that conditions existed for further United Nations involvement in the peace process. Negotiations were resumed soon thereafter and the landmark Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples was signed at Mexico City on 31 March 1995. Immediately afterwards, preparatory work began for the negotiation of the next item of the agenda—socio-economic aspects and the agrarian situation.

695. On 1 March 1995, I transmitted to the General Assembly the first report of the Director of MINUGUA (A/49/856 and Corr.1, annex), in which he acknowledged the cooperation received from the parties, the international community and the agencies of the United Nations system. With regard to MINUGUA's verification mandate, the Director confirmed the existence of a pattern of serious human rights abuses and widespread impunity in Guatemala. He also summarized MINUGUA's institution-building activities, aimed at strengthening those national institutions responsible for the protection of human rights. On 31 March 1995, the Assembly renewed MINUGUA's mandate for a further six months.

696. In April, I visited Guatemala to review the work of MINUGUA and progress in the peace process. I congratulated the parties on their achievements so far, in particular the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples, but I stressed that their continued commitment, perseverance and political will were essential if the process was to succeed. I emphasized that the efforts of the Guatemalans towards national reconciliation would be backed by the international community with the United Nations as its instrument. As a follow-up to my visit, I appointed Mr. Gilberto Schlittler as my Special Envoy for the Guatemala Peace Process.

697. On 29 June, I transmitted to the General Assembly the second report of the Director of MINUGUA on human rights (A/49/929). The Director concluded that progress achieved since the installation of the Mission, while insufficient, demonstrated that with political will from the parties and commitment on the part of society as a whole, it was possible to improve the situation of human rights in Guatemala.

698. Currently, the parties are negotiating on several items, including the socio-economic aspects and the agrarian situation. Several items remain to be considered, namely, the strengthening of civilian power and role of the army in a democratic society, the reintegration of URNG into political life, a definitive cease-fire, constitutional reforms and the electoral regime and, lastly, a schedule for implementation, enforcement and verification.

699. Guatemala is now in the first stages of an electoral campaign leading to presidential elections scheduled for November 1995. The timetable I proposed in February 1995 partly intended to ensure that electoral considerations would not affect the negotiations. It now appears, however, that the negotiations and the electoral process will overlap in time. This complex situation notwithstanding, I hope that the parties will be able to proceed steadily towards the signing of a final peace agreement, as early as possible in 1996.

12. India and Pakistan

700. Since 1949, the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) has been deployed to monitor the cease-fire in Jammu and Kashmir. India and Pakistan have affirmed their commitment to respect the cease-fire line and to resolve the issue peacefully in accordance with the Simla Agreement of 1972. The increasing reports of incidents of violence in Jammu and Kashmir have further aggravated relations between the two countries. These developments highlight the urgency of seeking a political solution through a meaningful dialogue. In this connection, I have maintained contacts with both Governments and visited the two countries in September 1994. I reiterated to them my readiness, should they so wish, to render whatever assistance may be needed to facilitate their search for a lasting solution.

13. Iraq-Kuwait

701. During the past year, I have continued to stress to Iraqi representatives the importance of Iraq's cooperation in implementing all of its obligations as expressed in the resolutions of the Security Council.

702. Further significant progress was made by the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM), headed by Mr. Rolf Ekéus, and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) Action Team in the implementation of section C of Security Council resolution 687(1991), concerning the elimination of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction and long-range missile capabilities. They completed the process of establishing a system to monitor Iraq's dual-purpose industries (i.e., those that have non-proscribed uses but which could be used to acquire banned weapons capabilities), aimed at monitoring Iraq's compliance with its obligations not to reacquire such banned capabilities. This system became operational in April 1995.

703. Further refining of the system will continue as UNSCOM and IAEA gain experience in operating it, but all the elements of the system are now in place. Some 120 remote-controlled monitoring cameras have been installed at over 28 sites and linked in real time to the Baghdad Monitoring and Verification Centre. Twenty or so automated chemical air samplers have been installed at sites, and a highly sensitive chemical laboratory has been installed in the Centre to analyse these samples. The Centre also has a biological preparation room to prepare and package biological samples for shipment to laboratories in other countries. Communications have been upgraded to perform the new tasks associated with ongoing monitoring and verification.

704. Resident teams of inspectors in each of the weapons disciplines are now operating full-time out of the Centre. Their activities are supplemented by aerial inspection and surveys conducted using a high-altitude surveillance aircraft provided by the United States. These aerial assets remain key to the ability of UNSCOM and IAEA to fulfil their mandates as they provide the initial survey capability to identify sites which might need to be inspected and ensure the ability to conduct short-notice inspections of sites as necessary.

705. Efforts continue to elucidate and hence account for all elements of Iraq's past banned weapons capabilities. Much progress has been made in this regard but major issues remain in the biological area.

706. UNSCOM and IAEA also, in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 715(1991), submitted in May 1994 a proposal for an export/import monitoring mechanism which would require that all exports be notified by both Iraq and the Governments of the exporters to a joint unit to be established in New York by UNSCOM and the IAEA Action Team.

707. I wish to express my appreciation to those Governments that contributed to UNSCOM operations, and in particular to the Government of Germany, which generously provided the Special Commission with air support in the form of both C-160 transport aircraft and CH-53G helicopters.

708. In November 1994, the Government of Iraq took an important step forward by affirming its recognition of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Kuwait. The United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) has continued to operate within the demilitarized zone established on both sides of the border between Iraq and Kuwait. In December 1994, Iraq formally recognized the international border demarcated by the United Nations in 1993. The situation has been calm in the Mission's area of responsibility.

709. The United Nations Coordinator for the return of property from Iraq to Kuwait has continued to facilitate the hand-over of property. In September 1994, Iraq informed me that once a damaged C-130 aircraft had been dismantled and returned, it would have "nothing else whatever to return". Kuwait responded by transmitting to me what it described as "an indicative but far from exhaustive list" of Kuwaiti property that had yet to be returned. It has also stressed the importance it attaches to the return of irreplaceable archives.

710. In January 1995, Kuwait transmitted a list of military equipment belonging to the Ministry of Defence that it claimed was still in the possession of Iraq. Arrangements were made for the hand-over, which began on 22 April 1995 and continued into July 1995. On many of the hand-over documents signed by the parties, Kuwait complained of the state of disrepair of the items returned while Iraq, for its part, noted that the vehicles had been "brought as is from Kuwait". Kuwait also noted that of 120 armoured personnel carriers handed over, only 33 were found to belong to Kuwait.

711. Among a number of urgent humanitarian issues to which the situation between Iraq and Kuwait has given rise is the fate of over 600 Kuwaiti and third-country nationals who are still missing in Iraq. I have urged Iraq to cooperate with the International Committee of the Red Cross so that a full accounting may be achieved.

712. The suffering of the Iraqi civilian population is also of considerable concern to me. On a number of occasions I have urged Iraqi officials to accept the Security Council's "oil for food" formula described in resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991). I believe the Council's latest offer in resolution 986(1995) addresses the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people while taking into account a number of concerns Iraq had previously expressed over resolutions 706(1991) and 712(1991). I can only regret that Iraq has not yet accepted this temporary humanitarian measure, which would indeed be an important step towards overcoming the crisis which exists between Iraq and the international community.

713. I have made every effort to comply with Security Council resolution 778(1992), of 2 October 1992, in which the Council requested me to ascertain the whereabouts and amounts of assets related to Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products which could be deposited to the escrow account, as well as the existence of any Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products that could be sold. I regret to note that no further funds have been deposited into the account as a result of my effort to seek information on such assets directly from Governments with jurisdiction over relevant petroleum companies and their subsidiaries. As at 1 August 1995, $365.5 million, representing voluntary contributions and Iraqi petroleum assets, had been deposited into the escrow account since the adoption of resolution 778(1992).

714. The United Nations recognizes Iraq's obligation to pay compensation to the victims of its aggression. The Commission established to administer the United Nations Compensation Fund, provided for in paragraph 18 of Security Council resolution 687(1991), has held four regular sessions since August 1994. During that period, its Governing Council has approved the reports and recommendations of Panels of Commissioners and issued decisions for three instalments of category "A" (departure) claims; two instalments of category "B" (serious personal injury and death) claims; and one instalment of category "C" (individual losses up to $100,000) claims. In issuing its decisions, the Governing Council awarded over $1.3 billion in compensation to 354,920 successful claimants.

715. Unfortunately, with the exception of approximately $2.7 million paid to the first 670 successful claimants in category "B" in May 1994, and approximately $8.1 million to be paid to 2,562 category "B" claimants in 1995, depending on the availability of funds, the remaining awards of the Compensation Commission have gone unpaid owing to the lack of sufficient resources in the Compensation Fund.

716. During 1994, the lack of adequate funding affected all sectors covered by the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme. In terms of food assistance, the bulk of donations was earmarked for the "Autonomous Region" (Governorates of Erbil, Dohuk and Suleimaniyah). According to reports of the World Food Programme, approximately 70 per cent of food requirements had been met in the north and only 40 per cent in the centre and south. As a result of lack of resources, a substantial amount of the food destined for the centre and south was covered by counterpart matching funds from the United Nations escrow account.

717. Health conditions have continued to deteriorate throughout the country because of shortages of essential drugs and medical supplies. The situation is further aggravated by the inadequate supply of potable water and poor sanitation facilities, as essential equipment and spare parts are lacking to rehabilitate the water, sewage and electricity supply systems.

718. With respect to security, since early December 1994, armed conflicts between members of the two major political parties have been reported in the northern Governorates of Erbil and Suleimaniyah. Moreover, the recent Turkish military operations on the Turkish/Iraq border, and in particular near Zakho (Dohuk Governorate), resulted in restrictions on the movements of humanitarian aid workers and relief commodities.

719. By the end of April 1995, the strength of the United Nations Guards Contingent in Iraq had been reduced from a high of over 500 in 1991 to 50 guards, the majority deployed in the "Autonomous Region" for the protection of humanitarian personnel. As a result of recent donor contributions received in support of the Guards Contingent, arrangements are under way for the assignment of an additional 100 guards during the summer of 1995. In a tense and volatile environment such as Northern Iraq, the continued presence of the Guards Contingent is required to protect United Nations and non-governmental organization personnel as well as assets and operations linked with the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme.

720. Under the previous appeal (covering the period from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995), the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme continued to provide humanitarian assistance to vulnerable population groups throughout the country. Projects implemented by United Nations agencies and programmes and humanitarian non-governmental organizations covered all the priority sectors included in the appeal, with particular emphasis on food, health, water and sanitation, agriculture, shelter and rural integration, and education. Response to the previous appeal was inadequate, with approximately 51 per cent ($146 million) of overall Programme requirements ($288.5 million) covered by allocations of voluntary contributions, "matching" funds from the United Nations escrow account and carry-over from the previous phase. From this amount, funding for United Nations-directed humanitarian activities amounted to $92.5 million, while contributions made available to humanitarian non-governmental organizations and other direct/bilateral programmes amounted to $53.5 million.

721. On 21 March 1995 at Geneva, during a donor consultation meeting for Iraq, the United Nations launched a consolidated inter-agency humanitarian appeal for Iraq covering the period from April 1995 to March 1996. The Programme, which calls for a total of $183.3 million, is designed to address only the most essential needs to sustain relief and rehabilitation activities as well as to prevent a further deterioration of the conditions affecting the most vulnerable population groups throughout the country. Since April 1995, approximately $27 million (representing voluntary contributions and "matching" funds from the United Nations escrow account) has been pledged/received in support of United Nations-directed activities in Iraq. In addition, a number of direct contributions have been made in support of humanitarian non-governmental organizations and bilateral programmes in northern Iraq.

722. Under the current appeal, humanitarian needs continue to increase in practically all sectors covered by the Programme, in particular in the nutrition and health sectors. By all accounts, children are increasingly dying of ailments linked to malnutrition and lack of adequate medical care. The World Health Organization reports a rise in tuberculosis and an acute shortage of essential drugs and medical equipment in hospitals. At least 4 million people are in need of food assistance and hunger threatens the lives of over 1 million among them. As of June 1995, because of rapidly depleted food stocks in the "Autonomous Region", the World Food Programme decided to reduce food distributions from 350,000 to only 300,000 people. In the centre and south, from a targeted 550,000 case-load, WFP was able to continue feeding only some 60,000 vulnerable people in social institutions. The support of the international community is urgently required to cover outstanding needs for the procurement and warehousing of food, medicines and shelter materials before the onset of winter.

14. Korean peninsula

723. I have continued to follow closely developments in the Korean peninsula. I am pleased to note that, in implementation of the October 1994 Framework Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United States of America, the two countries reached agreement in June on the provision of two light-water reactors to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and that discussions are in progress on the question of safe storage of the spent fuel removed from that country's reactors. In addition, trade and communications barriers between the two countries have been lowered, and liaison offices in the respective capitals are expected to open in the near future.

724. Hopefully, progress in these areas will contribute to steady improvement of the situation on the Korean peninsula, especially through the re-establishment of the North-South dialogue. I remain ready to provide any good offices which the parties might find useful. I plan to visit the Republic of Korea in September 1995 and intend to go to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in the first half of 1996 on a mission of goodwill.

15. Liberia

725. The United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) was established under Security Council resolution 856(1993) of 10 August 1993 to work with the Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) in the implementation of the Cotonou Peace Agreement signed between the Liberian parties on 25 July 1993. However, delays and obstacles created by different Liberian factions with respect to the Agreement necessitated a range of subsequent agreements between the factions, and the work of UNOMIL had to continue far beyond the original time-frame of the Security Council resolution.

726. Initial progress was made under the Cotonou Peace Agreement and this encouraged the Security Council, by its resolution 911(1994) of 21 April 1994, to extend the mandate of UNOMIL until 22 October 1994, with the expectation that the Mission would be terminated in December 1994. Subsequently, the situation in Liberia took a negative turn as fighting intensified between factions and the whole peace process came to a standstill.

727. My Special Envoy, Mr. Lakhdar Brahimi, visited Liberia from 16 to 26 August 1994 in order to assist me in determining options for the United Nations in facilitating the peace process. Shortly thereafter, the Chairman of ECOWAS, President Jerry Rawlings of Ghana, convened a meeting of the factions at Akosombo, Ghana, on 7 September to review the delays in implementing the peace process. This meeting resulted in the signing at Akosombo, on 12 September, of a supplementary agreement to the Cotonou Peace Agreement.

728. The conclusion of the Akosombo Agreement coincided with an upsurge of fighting in Liberia and, on 9 September, 43 unarmed United Nations military observers and six non-governmental organization personnel were detained. By 18 September, they had all been released or otherwise found their way to safety. In September 1994, with the breakdown in the cease-fire, and the fact that the security of unarmed military observers could not be assured, I restricted UNOMIL military operations to the greater Monrovia area and reduced the Mission's military component from its authorized strength of 368 to approximately 90 observers.

729. In mid-November, I sent a high-level mission, led by the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, to the region to consult with the Chairman of ECOWAS and the heads of ECOWAS States on how best to revive the peace process. Soon thereafter, the Chairman of ECOWAS carried out further consultations with the Liberian parties and interest groups, which led to the signing of a further agreement at Accra on 21 December 1994.

730. The Accra Agreement, unlike the Akosombo Agreement, was signed by all the Liberian factions and attempted to clarify the Akosombo Agreement. Other than a new cease-fire which came into effect on 28 December 1994, the factions failed to implement all the other major elements of the Accra Agreement, including the decision to form a new Council of State. The cease-fire, while re-established on 28 December, again broke down in early February 1995.

731. On 28 December, my new Special Representative for Liberia, Mr. Anthony Nyakyi (United Republic of Tanzania), took up his office in Monrovia. Since then Mr. Nyakyi has been consulting the Liberian factions, the Chairman of ECOWAS, as well as the Heads of State of ECOWAS, with a view to facilitating the search for a peaceful solution to the continuing hostilities.

732. In its resolution 972(1995) of 13 January 1995, the Security Council expressed deep concern over the Liberian situation. It also expressed the hope that a summit of the ECOWAS States would be convened to harmonize their policies on Liberia, in particular the application of the arms embargo imposed by the Security Council in resolution 788(1992). On 11 March 1995, President Rawlings of Ghana and I agreed at a meeting in Copenhagen that, subject to the concurrence of the Nigerian Head of State, a summit of the ECOWAS Committee of Nine would be held at Abuja.

733. In my ninth progress report to the Security Council of 24 February 1995 (S/1995/158), I conveyed specific options to the Council, including the provision of necessary resources to ECOMOG if the Liberian factions would demonstrate readiness to implement the Accra Agreement. I express my appreciation to the countries contributing troops to ECOMOG; they have made enormous sacrifices since the operation was launched in 1990.

734. On 13 April 1995, the Security Council adopted resolution 985(1995) extending the mandate of UNOMIL until 30 June 1995. Following extensive consultations between the Chairman of ECOWAS and the West African Heads of State and several contacts between the Chairman and myself, the third meeting of Heads of State and Government of the ECOWAS Committee of Nine on Liberia was held at Abuja from 17 to 20 May 1995. The Heads of State of Cote d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Ghana, Liberia, Mali, Nigeria, Sierra Leone and Togo attended the meeting. Burkina Faso and Guinea were represented by their Foreign Ministers. The Senior Minister at the Presidency for Governmental Affairs and National Defence of Benin and the Minister of African Economic Integration of Senegal also attended. My Special Envoy, Mr. Vladimir Petrovsky, and my Special Representative for Liberia, Mr. Anthony Nyakyi, were also present, as were the Eminent Person for Liberia of the Organization of African Unity, Reverend Canaan Banana, and the Special Envoy for Liberia of the United States of America, Mr. Dane Smith.

735. Delegations were sent by the following Liberian parties: the Armed Forces of Liberia (AFL), the Lofa Defense Force (LDF), the Liberia National Conference (LNC), the Liberian Peace Council (LPC), the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL), the Central Revolutionary Council of the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (CRC-NPFL), Alhaji Kromah's wing of the United Liberation Movement of Liberia for Democracy (ULIMO-K) and General Roosevelt Johnson's wing of ULIMO (ULIMO-J). Mr. David Kpomakpor, the current Chairman of the Council of State, participated in the meeting. Delegations of all the Liberian factions except NPFL were headed by their respective leaders. At the invitation of the Government of Nigeria, Mr. Charles Taylor, the leader of NPFL and the only Liberian faction leader who did not attend the ECOWAS summit, travelled to Abuja on 2 June for consultations with Nigerian officials. On 10 June 1995, I submitted my eleventh progress report on UNOMIL to the Security Council (S/1995/473). By unanimously adopting resolution 1001(1995) on 30 June 1995, the Council extended the mandate of UNOMIL until 15 September 1995 and declared that unless serious and substantial progress was made towards a peaceful settlement, the Mission would not be renewed after that date. The Council urged the Liberian parties to use the Mission's extension to implement the peace process envisaged in the Akosombo and Accra agreements of 1994, particularly their provisions on the installation of the Council of State; the re-establishment of a comprehensive and effective cease-fire; the disengagement of all forces; and the creation of a timetable for the implementation of disarmament agreements.

736. My Special Representative conveyed to the Liberian factions the contents of Security Council resolution 1001(1995) and urged them to abandon their selfish, narrow interests and agree on positive urgent steps to bring peace to their country. The Liberian factions also held a consultative meeting, with the exception of NPFL, on 19 July which was attended by my Special Representative and the representatives of OAU and ECOWAS.

737. The eighteenth summit meeting of ECOWAS was held at Accra on 28 and 29 July 1995, and was attended by the Heads of State of Benin, Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia and the Niger. In his report to the Committee of Nine, the Chairman of ECOWAS (the President of Ghana) pointed out that positive developments, which he characterized as confidence-building measures, had taken place since the last Abuja summit. He also referred to the recent Monrovia consultative meetings and deplored the fact that, despite all efforts made, some of the outstanding issues remained unresolved. He referred to Security Council resolution 1001(1995) and explained the final deadline set by the Council. He called on the United Nations to continue assisting the peace process.

738. The Liberian factional leaders agreed on 19 August 1995 to end hostilities and to hold elections within a year. The cease-fire in Liberia came into force on 26 August 1995.

739. In the context of Security Council resolution 1001(1995), if serious and substantial progress is achieved by 15 September, it was agreed that the Council would consider restoring UNOMIL to its full strength, with appropriate adjustment of its mandate and its relationship with ECOMOG, including matters relating to post-conflict peace-building in Liberia. In this regard, the swearing in of a Council of State for Liberia on 1 September 1995 gives rise to hopes for a new momentum for peace. The assistance of the international community will be crucial in this regard.

740. On 15 January 1995, I launched the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for Liberia. The appeal sought $65 million required by United Nations agencies and programmes to meet the life-saving needs of the 1.8 million Liberians affected by the war. As at 10 August, the international donors' community had contributed 71 per cent of the funds requested.

741. United Nations humanitarian agencies and programmes, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations, have developed agreed protocols for carrying out relief work in Liberia. Guided by these principles, the humanitarian assistance community will continue to work with my Special Representative to gain access to as many war-affected civilians as possible.

16. The Middle East

742. In the course of the past year, significant results were achieved in the Middle East peace process, signalling the parties' continued commitment to proceed on the road to peace. An outstanding achievement was the conclusion, on 26 October 1994, of the historic Treaty of Peace between the State of Israel and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan. I warmly welcome this momentous agreement, which ended a decades-long state of war.

743. Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) continued the implementation of their Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, signed on 13 September 1993. By December 1994, the Palestinian Authority, which had been established in May in most of the Gaza Strip and the Jericho area, was given responsibility for health, education, social welfare, tourism and direct taxation in the other areas of the West Bank. Israel and the PLO are at present negotiating the redeployment of Israeli military forces in the West Bank and the holding of elections for the Palestinian Council; interim understandings on an agreement have been reached by leaders on both sides.

744. Meanwhile, multilateral negotiations on Middle East regional issues have proceeded, creating a network of common projects among countries in the region. The United Nations participates actively in the multilateral negotiations as a full extraregional participant.

745. Hope has been generated by these encouraging signs that progress can be accelerated in the Israeli-Lebanese and Israeli-Syrian negotiations leading to a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967), 338(1973) and 425(1978).

746. The Israeli-Palestinian peace talks have been complicated and set back, on more than one occasion, by terrorist attacks from enemies of peace in which dozens of civilians have been killed and wounded. I have condemned these incidents and I am encouraged by the determination of Israeli and Palestinian leaders to continue the peace process.

747. In addition, concern in the international community has been generated by the Government of Israel's decisions to expropriate land and expand settlements in the occupied territories. The subject was taken up in deliberations in the Security Council at its formal meetings on 28 February 1995 and 12 May 1995.

748. The peace process needs broad public support and without a visible improvement in the living conditions of the Palestinians this support will remain fragile. In this connection, I have to draw attention to the damaging effects which closures of the occupied territories by Israel have had on the nascent Palestinian economy.

749. In its efforts to support the Arab-Israeli peace process, the United Nations has placed special emphasis on sustainable economic and social development in the occupied territories. The United Nations Special Coordinator, Mr. Terje Rod Larsen, has been active in strengthening local coordination between agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, the Bretton Woods institutions and the donor community. He works in close cooperation with the Palestinian Authority and the Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction. The first results of the international assistance efforts are already visible, especially in institution-building and the infrastructure.

750. In southern Lebanon hostilities have continued at a high level between Israeli forces and armed elements that have proclaimed their resistance to Israeli occupation. On several occasions civilian targets on both sides came under attack. I have called for restraint and urged the parties to refrain from attacking civilians.

751. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) has sought to limit the conflict and to protect inhabitants from violence. In resolution 1006(1995) of 28 July 1995, the Security Council reaffirmed the mandate of UNIFIL as defined in its resolution 425(1978) and subsequent resolutions, to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restore international peace and security, and assist the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. Although UNIFIL has not been able to make visible progress towards these objectives, it has contributed to stability in the area and afforded a measure of protection to the population of southern Lebanon. On the basis of the request for my good offices regarding the detainees held in Khiam jail in the area controlled by the Israel Defence Forces in southern Lebanon, I have authorized the appropriate contacts in that regard.

752. In July 1994, I initiated a study to determine how UNIFIL could perform its essential functions with reduced strength in view of the long-term problem of the shortfall in its assessed contributions. By its resolution 1006(1995), the Security Council approved my proposal for a streamlining, which will result in a 10 per cent reduction of the Force's strength and direct savings of $10 million a year. This will not affect UNIFIL's operational capacity.

753. The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) continued to supervise the area of separation between the Israeli and Syrian forces and the areas of limitation of armaments and forces provided for in the disengagement agreement of 1974. With the cooperation of both sides, UNDOF has discharged its tasks effectively and its area of operation has been quiet.

754. The United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), which is the oldest existing peace-keeping operation, has continued to assist UNDOF and UNIFIL in carrying out their tasks and has maintained its presence in Egypt. A streamlining undertaken by UNTSO is under way and will result in a 20 per cent reduction of its strength and corresponding savings in expenditures.

17. Mozambique

755. Over a three-day period from 27 to 29 October 1994, Mozambique conducted, with the assistance and support of the United Nations, the first free and fair multi-party elections in the country's history. The elections brought together in an open democratic contest the ruling Frente de Libertação de Moçambique (FRELIMO) and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana (RENAMO), the country's two major political parties and former foes. Immediately after the results of the election were announced, my Special Representative declared the elections free and fair, based on reports from United Nations observers. This was fully supported by the Security Council. This was a welcome change from a long-running conflict that had claimed the lives of tens of thousands of people, driven millions from their homes and destroyed much of Mozambique's economic and social infrastructure. The elections were the culmination of a major success story in United Nations peacemaking, peace-keeping, and humanitarian and electoral assistance.

756. The mandate entrusted to the United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ) by the Security Council in resolution 797(1992) of 16 December 1992 was to verify and monitor the implementation of the General Peace Agreement, signed by the Government of Mozambique and RENAMO at Rome on 4 October 1992. The peace accords required the United Nations to supervise the cease-fire between the two parties, provide security for key transport corridors, monitor a comprehensive disarmament and demobilization programme, coordinate and monitor humanitarian assistance operations throughout the country, and provide assistance and verification for national elections. ONUMOZ subsequently undertook a number of additional tasks at the request of the parties.

757. One of the most important aspects of the operation was the emphasis it placed on peace-building. ONUMOZ's unprecedented endeavours in this regard were concentrated not only in its oversight of the electoral process but also in the channelling of special trust funds to strengthen the organizational capacity of parties contesting the election. This was particularly important in regard to RENAMO. The transformation of a guerrilla force into a political entity with a stake in the democratic process is one of the most significant legacies of the United Nations operation.

758. The final meeting of the Supervisory and Monitoring Commission established under the Rome Agreement was held on 6 December 1994. At that meeting, final reports were submitted by the Chairmen of the Cease-fire Commission, the Commission for the Formation of the Mozambican Defence Force, the Commission for Reintegration, the National Police Affairs Commission and the National Information Commission. My Special Representative, Mr. Aldo Ajello, handed these reports over to Mr. Joaquim Alberto Chissano, the President-elect. Subsequently, the new Assembly of the Republic was installed on 8 December, and the newly elected President of Mozambique was inaugurated the next day; he appointed his Government on 16 December. In accordance with paragraph 4 of Security Council resolution 797(1992), these events marked the expiry of the political mandate of ONUMOZ, and my Special Representative left Mozambique on 13 December 1994.

759. The withdrawal of the military, police and civilian components of the Mission proceeded according to plan, beginning on 15 November 1994. A limited force of four infantry companies and medical personnel, a skeleton headquarters staff, demining personnel and a small number of military observers were retained to assist in residual operations and the liquidation phase of the Mission. With the official closure of ONUMOZ at the end of January 1995, a small number of United Nations civilian logisticians remained in Mozambique to deal with outstanding financial, legal and logistic issues.

760. When the last ONUMOZ contingents departed from Mozambique in January 1995, they had overseen a remarkable transformation in the country, from the ravages of civil war to the implementation of democratic government and the creation of a peaceful environment in which economic activity could once again flourish. The strong commitment of the major participants to peace, along with firm support from the international community, were important prerequisites that enabled the United Nations to help bring about this transition. In this regard, neighbouring States played a vital role; first, in bringing the major participants to the negotiating table, and then in helping to sustain the peace process under ONUMOZ.

761. Although both the General Peace Agreement and the ONUMOZ mandate were successfully implemented, a number of concerns requiring further action remained at the time of the Mission's withdrawal. These included, on the security front, the continuing need to train and equip the new integrated armed forces and to upgrade the police in accordance with Security Council resolution 898(1994) of 23 February 1994, while attending to the collection and disposal of outstanding caches of weapons. Mozambique also needed to strengthen its democratic institutions and to promote economic and social reconstruction so that peace, democracy and development could be sustained. While the last United Nations peace-keeping forces left Mozambique in January 1995, their colleagues from the development arm of the Organization remained behind to assist Mozambique in consolidating a peaceful and stable future.

762. I should like to express my appreciation to the international community and to those programmes and organizations whose financial and technical assistance to the Mozambican authorities made it possible to hold the elections in an exemplary manner. There is agreement among the international community that ONUMOZ was a success. Key factors that contributed to this result include: the political will of the Mozambican people and their leaders, demonstrated by their strong commitment to peace and national reconciliation; the clarity of the ONUMOZ mandate and the consistent support provided by the Security Council; and the international community's strong political, financial and technical support of the peace process.

763. The United Nations Office for Humanitarian Assistance Coordination (UNOHAC) was made the humanitarian component of ONUMOZ by the Security Council in resolution 797(1992). In the transition from war to reconciliation to peace, UNOHAC and its humanitarian assistance partners addressed the emergency needs of between 4 and 5 million internally displaced persons, 1.5 million returning refugees and some 90,000 demobilized soldiers. Effective and coordinated humanitarian assistance activities helped to create conditions that allowed civilians affected by the war to begin rebuilding their lives. The success of the Consolidated Humanitarian Programme, developed by UNOHAC and its partners, received tremendous support from the international community, which contributed more than 82 per cent of the approximately $775 million required for execution of the Programme.

764. As the mandate of ONUMOZ neared termination in late 1994, UNOHAC focused its activities on ensuring completion of projects where possible, and on finalizing arrangements with humanitarian assistance partners in-country for the transfer of a number of responsibilities that would continue beyond the life of the peace-keeping operation.

765. One such hand-over involved the Trust Fund for Humanitarian Activities in Mozambique, established by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs to provide financial support for the implementation of 26 projects which were to be fully implemented only after the expiration of the ONUMOZ mandate on 15 November 1994. The Trust Fund financed a variety of critical activities within the Programme, including demobilization and reintegration of demobilized soldiers, emergency supply of non-food relief items, provision of seeds for the family sector, multisectoral area-based activities, and demining. In order to ensure effective continuation of these projects, the Department has passed responsibilities for trust fund project-monitoring and coordination to the office of the United Nations Development Programme in Maputo.

766. The area of demining also required carefully planned transition arrangements. The accelerated demining programme was designed by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and UNOHAC to ensure that Mozambique would be provided with an indigenous demining capacity. The Department and UNDP agreed that at the expiration of the ONUMOZ mandate, UNDP would assume responsibility for the financial management of resources that are or will be made available for the implementation of the programme, while policy guidance and technical support for the programme would continue to be provided by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs.

767. The accelerated demining programme has established a Mozambican demining organization of 10 platoons (450 deminers), 15 supervisors, four survey teams, an Explosive Ordnance Disposal team, demining instructors, and the headquarters and support staff to manage the instructors and the organization. In total, 500 Mozambicans are employed by the programme. Since the commencement of demining operations in September 1994, 5,000 anti-personnel mines and some 400,000 square metres of land have been cleared. The emphasis of the programme is on training in order fully to develop local mine-clearance capability, resulting in a sustainable Mozambican entity able to address Mozambique's long-term mine-clearance problems.

18. Myanmar

768. In keeping with the good offices mandate I received from the General Assembly and from the Commission on Human Rights, I have established a dialogue with the Government of Myanmar in order to address various issues of concern to the international community, in particular with respect to the process of democratization and national reconciliation in that country. During the period under review, my Representatives have held several rounds of talks in New York and Yangon with Secretary 1 of the State Law and Order Restoration Council, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and other authorities of the Government. In the talks, a series of ideas were discussed, which, if implemented, would assist in moving the process forward.

769. I welcome the Government's decision to lift the restrictions imposed on Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and to release a number of other political prisoners, including several leading members of the National League for Democracy. I look forward to further steps to speed up the return of multi-party democracy in Myanmar. I will report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the progress of those discussions, which are being continued on my behalf at Yangon in August by the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs.

19. Republic of Moldova

770. I visited the Republic of Moldova on 4 November 1994 to discuss rehabilitation efforts in the aftermath of the severe droughts, hurricanes and floods that hit the country in mid-1994. At its forty-eighth session, the General Assembly, upon appeal by President Mircea Ion Snegur, adopted a resolution on 14 September calling upon the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system, to assist in the rehabilitation efforts of the Government.

771. On 21 October 1994, the Republic of Moldova and the Russian Federation signed the agreement on the withdrawal of the Russian Federation's 14th army from the Trans-Dniestr region. Both countries have agreed that the withdrawal should be synchronized with a political settlement of the Dnestr conflict. The withdrawal is anticipated to take place within three years.

772. Following an earlier parliamentary decision, a large majority of ethnically-mixed districts taking part in the referendum held on 5 March 1995 decided to join the Gagauz autonomous region within the Republic of Moldova.

773. The Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) has been taking the leading role on issues concerning the Republic of Moldova since the OSCE mission was established in that country on 27 April 1993.

20. Sierra Leone

774. In December 1994, in response to a formal request from Captain Valentine Strasser, Head of State of the Republic of Sierra Leone, I dispatched an exploratory mission to that country to facilitate negotiations between the Government and the forces known as the Revolutionary United Front. That mission reported to me on the serious consequences of the three-year conflict in Sierra Leone. A significant percentage of the population had taken refuge in neighbouring countries or been internally displaced and most of the country's infrastructure had been destroyed. If the conflict continued, it would further complicate the problem of bringing peace to Liberia and could have a more general destabilizing effect in the region. On the basis of the mission's findings, I decided to appoint a Special Envoy for Sierra Leone, Mr. Berhanu Dinka, to help the parties to work towards a negotiated settlement.

775. In April and May 1995, Captain Strasser announced that to restore democracy he would set up a national reconciliation conference to prepare for a return to civilian rule in 1996 and that a three-year ban on political parties was being rescinded. He called on the Revolutionary United Front to renounce its armed struggle and to join the electoral process, declaring that the Government was ready to enter into a cease-fire in order to negotiate peace without preconditions. However, the Front spurned the offer to end the armed struggle, stressing that dialogue was conditional on the withdrawal of foreign troops fighting alongside Sierra Leonean armed forces. Notwithstanding these difficulties, my Special Envoy is continuing his efforts to help bring about a settlement of the conflict.

776. On 26 May, I congratulated the Head of State of Sierra Leone on the democratic initiatives announced on 27 April, in particular the lifting of the ban on political parties. On 22 June, the National Provisional Ruling Council issued a decree barring for the next 10 years 57 persons, including presidents, vice-presidents, ministers, ministers of State and deputy ministers, from holding any public office or holding office in any corporation in which the State held a financial interest, from being elected president of the Republic or member of parliament, or from being elected to or holding office in any local body. According to the Government, the ban was based on the findings of two commissions of inquiry.

777. On 20 July, seven prospective political parties jointly petitioned the Head of State to repeal restrictive elements of the decree lifting the ban on political parties. Further complicating matters, on 25 July the Sierra Leone Bar Association refused to attend the National Consultative Conference on Elections (15-17 August), linking its refusal to participate to the decree banning 57 persons from holding political office and restrictions placed on political parties by the Government.

778. It is widely recognized that the conflict in Sierra Leone cannot be resolved through military means. It is important therefore for the Revolutionary United Front to respond positively to the Government's offer to negotiate a settlement of the conflict. The sixty-second ordinary session of the Council of Ministers of OAU adopted a resolution expressing concern over the worsening conflict. I call upon the international community to support the United Nations efforts to ensure that peace and democracy prevail in Sierra Leone.

779. Following a series of rebel attacks that began late in 1994, thousands of Sierra Leoneans were forced to leave their homes and thousands more sought asylum in neighbouring States. As a result, the total number of internally displaced persons in Sierra Leone is estimated at over 500,000 persons. They are concentrated in and around Freetown, as well as in a number of towns in eastern and central Sierra Leone, including Bo, Kenema, Makeni, Segbwema and Daru. In Freetown, it is estimated that the influx has swollen the population threefold, to 1.5 million persons. The overall result of these developments is characterized by, among other things, overcrowding in a small number of areas, acute shortages of basic survival requirements and the breakdown of overburdened infrastructure.

780. In response to these developments, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) took up the question of Sierra Leone at a meeting in February. The Standing Committee is composed of the executive heads of the United Nations humanitarian organizations as well as ICRC, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the International Organization for Migration and the non-governmental consortia International Council of Voluntary Agencies, Interaction and the Steering Committee for Humanitarian Response. As a result of the discussions held, the working group of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee was charged with developing the terms of reference for an inter-agency appeal for resources required by United Nations organizations to meet emergency needs. The result was the United Nations inter-agency appeal for new refugee flows and populations affected by the humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone. From March to December 1995, the appeal sought $14.6 million to respond to the unmet needs of internally displaced persons within Sierra Leone, as well as those of the new outflow of Sierra Leonean refugees who had recently fled to the Forecariah region of Guinea. There has not yet been any response to the appeal.

781. As well as being limited by resource mobilization difficulties, humanitarian assistance efforts have been hindered by the prevailing security situation, which led to a withdrawal of United Nations international staff to Freetown in late January 1995. However, humanitarian activities continue on a smaller scale, with the involvement of national staff and the utilization of innovative implementation methods.

782. The office of the United Nations Resident Coordinator has developed an emergency information management system to ensure that United Nations organizations respond to the humanitarian crisis in Sierra Leone in a coordinated and complementary manner. The system will gather and analyse data required by the relief community to develop and target programmes for affected populations.

783. At its meeting on 2 June, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee further decided to pursue these efforts by dispatching an inter-agency mission to assess the coordination of humanitarian assistance activities in Sierra Leone. The mission, led by a representative of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, recommended a strengthening of the capacity of the United Nations to support the Government's efforts to coordinate the emergency relief response in Sierra Leone. Actions have been taken to implement this recommendation through the placement of experienced personnel within the office of the Resident Coordinator.

21. Somalia

784. During the 12 months since my last report, it has become evident that the humanitarian tragedy in Somalia has been overcome, thanks to the international humanitarian assistance supported by the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II). This achievement contrasts sharply with the lack of tangible progress in national political reconciliation, for which the responsibility must be borne by the Somali leaders and people. Because of the deteriorating security situation in the country, including attacks and harassment directed against UNOSOM II and other international personnel, and because of the lack of cooperation from the Somali leaders concerned, the continued presence of UNOSOM II became increasingly questioned.

785. On 14 October 1994, I reported to the Security Council (S/1994/1166) that the Somali leaders still had not carried out commitments entered into under the Addis Ababa Agreement and the Nairobi Declaration. The UNOSOM goal of assisting the process of political reconciliation was becoming ever more elusive, while the burden and cost of maintaining a high level of troops were proving increasingly difficult for Member States to justify. The presence of UNOSOM II troops was having a limited impact on the peace process and on security in the face of continuing inter-clan fighting and banditry.

786. I therefore recommended that if the Security Council maintained its previous decision to end the mission in March 1995 and to withdraw all UNOSOM II forces and assets, it should extend the mission's mandate until 31 March 1995 to allow the time required to ensure a secure and orderly withdrawal. At the same time, I stressed that the withdrawal of UNOSOM II would not mean United Nations abandonment of Somalia. However, although humanitarian organizations were committed to continuing their work in Somalia, they could continue doing so only in a secure environment for which Somali leaders would bear the ultimate responsibility. The United Nations would also remain ready to assist the Somali parties in the process of national reconciliation.

787. On 26 and 27 October 1994, before taking a decision on the withdrawal of UNOSOM II, the Council sent a mission to Somalia to convey its views directly to the Somali leaders. The mission concluded that 31 March 1995 was the appropriate date for the end of the mandate of UNOSOM II. None of the Somali factions, humanitarian agencies or non-governmental organizations had requested a longer extension.

788. On 1 November, the United Somali Congress/Somali National Alliance (USC/SNA), led by General Mohamed Farah Aidid, and other factions convened a unilateral national reconciliation conference in south Mogadishu. This was against the advice and warning of the Security Council mission and my Special Representative, Mr. Victor Gbeho, who had warned that the convening of such a conference before the question of participation in it was resolved would be a recipe for continued strife.

789. On 4 November, by its resolution 954(1994), the Council extended the mandate of UNOSOM II for a final period until 31 March 1995. On 10 November, I transmitted to the Council a statement by the Inter-Agency Standing Committee reaffirming the commitment of the humanitarian agencies to continue their emergency and rehabilitation work in Somalia after the expiration of the UNOSOM mandate. The President of the Security Council, on behalf of the Council's members, wrote to me on 7 December welcoming the commitment of the agencies. The Council also encouraged me to play a facilitating or moderating role in Somalia after March 1995 if the Somali parties were willing to cooperate.

790. Prior to the withdrawal of UNOSOM II, General Aidid and Mr. Ali Mahdi signed a peace agreement on behalf of the SNA and the Somali Salvation Alliance (SSA), respectively. In February they also signed three other agreements to manage the operations of the Mogadishu airport and seaport by a joint committee. The Mogadishu seaport was reopened to civilian traffic on 9 March. I was encouraged by the signing of these agreements, which helped to avert fighting over the facilities.

791. The withdrawal of the 15,000 United Nations troops, as well as civilian personnel, facilities and property from Somalia, began in November 1994. In response to my request, seven Member States joined forces in providing support and security for the withdrawal. To that end they established a combined task force, "United Shield", composed of France, India, Italy, Malaysia, Pakistan, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, under U.S. command. I announced on 2 March that the withdrawal had been completed in a safe and orderly manner, ahead of schedule and virtually without a problem. I again emphasized that the United Nations effort could continue and that the United Nations would not abandon Somalia.

792. On 28 March, I submitted to the Security Council a general assessment of the United Nations achievements in political, humanitarian, military and security matters and the police and justice programme. I recalled that, in late 1992, some 3,000 Somalis had been dying daily of starvation; that tragedy had been ended by the international relief effort. However, the endeavour to achieve political reconciliation had not succeeded because of the lack of political will among the Somali leaders. The international community could only facilitate, encourage and assist the process; it could neither impose peace nor coerce unwilling parties into accepting it.

793. In a presidential statement of 6 April (S/PRST/1995/15), the Council supported my view that Somalia should not be abandoned by the United Nations and welcomed my intention to maintain a small political mission, should the Somali parties so wish, to assist them in achieving national reconciliation. However, the SNA, then headed by General Aidid, expressed objection to a United Nations political presence and role in Somalia, although a wide range of Somali leaders representing the main factions, including a wing of the USC/SNA, had called for such a presence. In view of these divisions among the Somali parties, I have concluded that, for the time being, a political office, headed by Mr. Abdul Hamid Kabia, should monitor the situation from Nairobi. It is my intention to relocate the political office to Mogadishu when the necessary conditions exist, including adequate security. The President of the Security Council conveyed to me in his letter of 2 June (S/1995/452) the agreement of the members of the Council with my decision.

794. On 15 June, General Aidid was named "interim president" by his supporters. Following his announcement of a unilateral "government", General Aidid made an attempt to claim Somalia's seat at the OAU summit meeting, but OAU refused to recognize his "government" and decided to keep Somalia's seat open until a generally accepted government was formed. OAU urged the Somali leaders urgently to promote dialogue to ensure the formation of a broad-based national authority.

795. I remain convinced that a durable political settlement through national reconciliation is an indispensable prerequisite for the re-establishment of government, restoration of law and order, and rehabilitation and reconstruction in Somalia, and that the attainment of national reconciliation for the sake of the common good is well within the power of the Somali leaders. It is my hope that they will find the strength and the courage to pursue a more productive peace process in the coming weeks.

796. Coordination of the United Nations humanitarian assistance programme was, until December 1994, the sole responsibility of the Division for Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of UNOSOM, which was headed by a Humanitarian Coordinator. The Division's tasks included fielding humanitarian affairs officers throughout the country, coordinating inter-agency assessment missions, providing funding for small-scale projects, assisting with emergencies, building essential structures such as schools and clinics, digging wells, facilitating the protection of humanitarian relief convoys, providing logistical support to humanitarian partners, holding security briefings and information-sharing meetings with United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations, and providing support to local bodies such as district and regional councils.

797. In October 1994, when it became apparent that the UNOSOM mandate would not be extended and the Division would be dismantled, the agencies established a United Nations Coordination Team, chaired by the Resident Representative of UNDP (who was later appointed United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator) and composed of representatives of United Nations agencies and IOM, to manage the transition to a post-UNOSOM period and to ensure the continued coordination of the United Nations humanitarian assistance programme. The Coordination Team works in close cooperation with both international and Somali non-governmental organization consortia. It also works to support the coordination efforts of the Somalia Aid Coordination Body, a consortium of donor Governments, United Nations agencies and organizations, and international non-governmental organizations.

798. In 1994, no consolidated inter-agency appeal for Somalia was issued. Instead, United Nations agencies presented their requirements and plans for that year through a document prepared for the Fourth Humanitarian Coordination Meeting, held at Addis Ababa from 29 November to 1 December 1993. Consequently, in 1994 there was no systematic tracking of contributions received by various agencies for Somalia as is ordinarily done by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs under the procedures adopted for consolidated inter-agency appeals. The agencies nevertheless reported that their programmes were relatively well funded, although implementation was hindered by security conditions in the country.

799. Despite the absence of political progress in Somalia, significant gains have been made on the humanitarian front over the past year. Agencies and organizations have focused their efforts on community-based community initiatives, providing support to capacity-building programmes while assisting local non-governmental and community-based organizations in the areas of relief and initial rehabilitation. Direct support was provided in the form of supplies, training and management services. Food-for-work schemes replaced free food distributions as the preferred mode of delivering food assistance, while agricultural assistance took the form of targeted initiatives rather than the large-scale distributions of seeds and tools undertaken in previous years.

800. It was possible in 1994 to undertake modest rehabilitation activities in areas where relative security existed. In other areas, however, incidences of kidnapping of humanitarian aid workers occurred, while operations continued to be vulnerable to frequent labour disputes and subjected to unrealistic demands for the payment of security services. The humanitarian agencies expect that for the foreseeable future they will continue to operate against a background of uncertainty. The United Nations agencies nevertheless believe that they can, with the direct support of the Somali people and their leaders, collectively assist Somalia to progress into a new era of rehabilitation, recovery and development.

801. In view of this, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs launched a consolidated inter-agency appeal for Somalia, covering a period of six months beginning in January 1995. The organizations participating in the appeal requested a total of $70.3 million for their activities during the first half of 1995.

802. To date the consolidated inter-agency appeal for Somalia has received under 20 per cent of the resources requested. It is essential that funding for the humanitarian relief and rehabilitation programmes be provided to ensure that progress made by the United Nations agencies, international organizations and national and international non-governmental organizations over the past three years is not reversed.

22. Tajikistan

803. The situation in Tajikistan, particularly on its border with Afghanistan, has remained unstable during the past year. My Special Envoy, Mr. Ramiro Píriz-Ballón, continues his efforts to mediate a political dialogue between the Government of Tajikistan and the opposition to achieve progress towards national reconciliation.

804. High-level inter-Tajik consultations, held at Tehran in September 1994, resulted in the signing of an Agreement on a Temporary Cease-fire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country. The two parties also agreed on important confidence-building measures, including the exchange of prisoners and prisoners of war. The parties also agreed to establish a joint commission consisting of representatives of the Government and the opposition. They requested the Security Council to assist the work of the Joint Commission by providing political good offices and dispatching United Nations military observers.

805. In my report to the Security Council dated 27 September 1994 (S/1994/1102), I recommended, as a provisional measure, the strengthening of the group of United Nations officials in Tajikistan with up to 15 military observers drawn from existing peace-keeping operations, pending a decision by the Council to establish a new United Nations observer mission in Tajikistan. The cease-fire came into effect on 20 October following the deployment of 15 military observers. A technical survey mission was immediately sent to the country to assess the modalities for establishing a future observer mission.

806. The third round of inter-Tajik talks took place at Islamabad from 20 October to 1 November. The parties succeeded in extending the Agreement for another three months, until 6 February 1995, and also signed the protocol on the Joint Commission to monitor the implementation of the 17 September cease-fire agreement. On 30 November, I submitted a report to the Security Council recommending a possible United Nations peace-keeping operation in that country (S/1994/1363). On 16 December, the Council, by its resolution 968(1994), welcomed the extension of the cease-fire agreement by the Tajik parties and decided to establish the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) in accordance with the plan outlined in my report.

807. Despite the agreement reached in Islamabad to hold the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks in Moscow in December 1994, the negotiating process was at a stalemate. In order to revitalize it, my Special Envoy undertook consultations with the Government of Tajikistan, leaders of the opposition and certain Governments in the region in December. In January 1995, a United Nations team held consultations at Tehran with the Tajik opposition leaders and high-ranking officials of the Islamic Republic of Iran.

808. The fourth round of inter-Tajik talks remained blocked as a result of conditions put forward by the opposition and by the plans of the Government to hold parliamentary elections in February. However, at the end of January, President Emomali Rakhmonov and Mr. Akhbar Turajonzodah, of the Tajik opposition delegation, informed me of their decision to extend the cease-fire agreement until 6 March 1995. In a report dated 4 February (S/1995/105), I informed the Security Council that the Tajik parties had complied only in part with the provisions of Security Council resolution 968(1994).

809. At the end of February, I asked Under-Secretary-General Aldo Ajello to hold consultations with the Tajik parties and some Governments in the region in order to reach agreement on the agenda, time and venue for the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks. He obtained the agreement of the parties to extend the cease-fire agreement until 26 April 1995 and made some progress in addressing the conditions stipulated by the opposition for the resumption of inter-Tajik talks.

810. My Special Envoy held new consultations with the Tajik parties and the Governments in the region, which resulted in high-level inter-Tajik consultations in Moscow from 19 to 26 April. The two sides agreed on the agenda and dates for the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks at Almaty, the extension of the cease-fire for another month and important additions to the cease-fire agreement and the protocol on the Joint Commission.

811. The fourth round of talks took place at Almaty from 22 May to 1 June. They followed the high-level consultations at Kabul from 17 to 19 May between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and Mr. Abdullo Nuri, leader of the opposition Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan, under Afghan auspices, where it was decided to extend the cease-fire agreement for a further three months, until 26 August.

812. As I reported to the Security Council on 10 June (S/1995/472), at the Almaty talks the parties for the first time held an in-depth discussion of the fundamental institutional issues and the consolidation of the statehood of Tajikistan, as set forth in the first round of talks in Moscow in April 1994; however, they were unable to reach any decisions on those issues. The parties welcomed the decision of the Kabul summit meeting to extend the Tehran cease-fire agreement until 26 August and decided to implement a number of confidence-building measures by 20 July and to request the continuation of the good offices of my Special Envoy.

813. In its resolution 999(1995), the Security Council welcomed these decisions, called for the achievement of substantive progress on the fundamental political and institutional issues, and sought the convening of a further round of talks. It encouraged the dialogue between the President of Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan, and urged the substantial extension of the cease-fire agreement. The Council also called for discussions with the Afghan authorities on the possible deployment of a number of United Nations personnel inside Afghanistan.

814. In accordance with this, I dispatched my Special Envoy on 31 July to hold consultations in the region with the Tajik parties and with some Governments in order to create the conditions for a second summit meeting between President Rakhmonov and Mr. Nuri. At that meeting, to be held as soon as possible, it is hoped to obtain agreement on a set of general principles for a comprehensive political solution to be negotiated during the next stage.

815. The small United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan has played an important role in containing the conflict. It has provided essential support to the Joint Commission set up by the parties as the main instrument for maintaining the cease-fire and it has been instrumental in containing local conflicts.

816. The establishment of UNMOT and the extension of its mandate last June for another six months were subject to the proviso that the Tehran cease-fire agreement of 17 September 1994 remain in force and the parties continue to be committed to an effective cease-fire, national reconciliation and the promotion of democracy. The Security Council thus underlined the primary responsibility of the parties themselves for composing their differences. It is to be hoped that they will use well the goodwill and support of interested Governments and the international community as a whole in order to make decisive progress towards that goal.

817. While improvements in the overall stability of conflict-affected areas of Tajikistan in 1994 led to the return of more than 90 per cent of former refugees and internally displaced persons and to substantial progress in their reintegration, the country continues to face critical difficulties in conditions of tremendous economic hardship, especially in the most affected communities of the Khatlon region in the south-west, Gorno-Badakshan in the east and parts of the Garni Valley. Emergency food aid is a major source of nutrition for many of the most vulnerable. Many health centres have been destroyed; functioning ones lack basic equipment and drugs are often unavailable. Schools and hospitals lack water and sanitation facilities and many schools are not operating, which threatens to erode the high levels of literacy of past decades. Shortages of fuel have severely affected the country's production capacity. Inadequate employment opportunities compound the existing deep clan and regional divisions.

818. During 1994, the humanitarian community endeavoured to address the most pressing needs. Over 60 per cent of funding requested in the Department of Humanitarian Affairs' 1994 consolidated inter-agency appeal for Tajikistan ($42.5 million) was pledged or contributed. Humanitarian assistance also included capacity- and confidence-building activities, targeting areas of return of former refugees and internally displaced people.

819. The last mission to the country led by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs took place in October 1994. The mission held extensive consultations with the United Nations and non-governmental organization community to prepare proposals for humanitarian activities in 1995. The subsequent consolidated inter-agency appeal for Tajikistan (1 January-31 December 1995) was launched on 6 December 1994 and officially presented to donors on 23 March 1995 at Geneva. The appeal seeks to meet the most urgent humanitarian needs in-country (estimated at some $37.3 million) of some 600,000 people, who have been most affected by conflict, population movements and the deterioration of the economic, health and social infrastructures. By 31 March, $9.9 million, representing 53.4 per cent of funding requirements, had been contributed, as reported to the Department of Humanitarian Affairs by agencies making the appeal.

820. The current appeal aims to provide emergency food aid, as well as assistance in the health and education sectors. This assistance, provided in consultation with the humanitarian community, national and district authorities, targets the most vulnerable, including pensioners, invalids and widows with children, and returned and displaced people. Emphasis in the 1995 humanitarian programme is also on information management and capacity-building, with programmes aiming to assist in the training of health workers, community development, capacity- and confidence-building, and self-reliance activities. The appeal also covers a number of non-governmental organization initiatives in addition to United Nations agencies and programmes, and is the result of efforts to enhance coordination and cooperation among humanitarian partners in the field. While substantial humanitarian needs remain, support to Tajikistan will focus increasingly on rehabilitation and economic development. United Nations agencies and programmes are thus phasing down relief activities and promoting development-oriented projects.

23. Western Sahara

821. The referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, to be conducted by the United Nations in cooperation with OAU, should have taken place in January 1992. However, major differences in the interpretation of the main provisions of the settlement plan resulted in delays. None the less, agreement was reached on the interpretation of the criteria for eligibility to vote, which enabled the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) to commence the identification and registration of potential voters on 28 August 1994. Also according to the plan, the cease-fire has been in effect since 6 September 1991.

822. During my visit to the mission area in late November 1994, the parties—Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente POLISARIO)—assured me of their commitment to the settlement plan. The two neighbouring countries, Algeria and Mauritania, also continued to support it firmly.

823. In my report to the Security Council of 14 December (S/1994/1420), I noted that, given the large number of applications received, the only way to complete the identification and registration process within a reasonable time-frame would be through a major reinforcement of personnel and other resources. In its resolution 973(1995) of 13 January, the Council approved my recommendation to expand MINURSO and requested me to report by 31 March to confirm 1 June 1995 as the date for the start of the transitional period. The Council also decided to extend the mandate of MINURSO until 31 May 1995.

824. On 30 March, I informed the Council that, while the rate of identification and registration was increasing steadily, the progress achieved as at that date did not permit me to recommend 1 June 1995 as the start of the transitional period. I explained that problems relating, in particular, to the timely availability of tribal leaders had caused interruptions in the identification operation. At the same time, some progress had been achieved in the implementation of other aspects of the Settlement Plan. I concluded that, if the parties made it possible to raise the rate of identification to 25,000 per month, and if they cooperated in resolving expeditiously the remaining issues in the Settlement Plan, it might be possible for the transitional period to begin in August 1995 and to hold the referendum in January 1996.

825. In a presidential statement of 12 April (S/PRST/1995/17), the Security Council called upon both parties to cooperate fully with the United Nations to ensure prompt and full implementation of all aspects of the Settlement Plan. The Council hoped to see continuous and rapid progress by the time of my next report, in May 1995.

826. In that report (S/1995/404), I recommended that the mandate of MINURSO be extended for a period of four months. Following my report, the Security Council decided by its resolution 995(1995) of 26 May to extend the mandate of MINURSO for only one month and to send a mission to the region in order to accelerate the implementation of the Settlement Plan. The Mission held consultations with senior government officials at Rabat, Algiers and Nouakchott and with the POLISARIO leadership at Tindouf, and visited MINURSO headquarters at Laayoune.

827. In its report presented to the Council on 20 June (S/1995/498), the Mission indicated that, given the complexity of the tasks to be performed, the continuing delays caused by the two parties and the constraints imposed by the limited resources and local conditions, there was a real risk that the identification process might be extended beyond the time previously envisaged and that the referendum might not be held in January 1996.

828. On 23 June, the Frente POLISARIO announced its decision to suspend its participation in the identification operation, because of the sentencing to 15-20 years in prison, by a Moroccan military tribunal, of eight Saharan civilians who had participated in a demonstration at Laayoune and because of the Moroccan authorities' declared intention to have 100,000 applicants residing in Morocco take part in the voter identification operation. Following POLISARIO's decision, the Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Morocco addressed a letter dated 26 June to the President of the Security Council. In the letter, he claimed that the Frente POLISARIO was displaying bad faith, said that its decision could have most serious consequences and requested the Security Council to take all the necessary steps to ensure the resumption of the process with a view to holding the referendum on schedule.

829. On 12 July, the Frente POLISARIO informed the President of the Security Council that it had decided to continue to participate in the identification process. In announcing its decision, POLISARIO cited efforts made by certain States members of the Security Council to induce Morocco to reconsider the sentences imposed on the Saharan civilians, the adoption of Security Council resolution 1002(1995) and the positive discussion at the thirty-first session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU. On 27 July, the identification process resumed in the identification centres in Western Sahara and the Tindouf area. As at mid-August 1995, some 50,000 persons had been identified by MINURSO.

830. On 30 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 1002(1995), by which it extended the mandate of MINURSO until 30 September 1995. The Council also expected, based on the report I would present by 10 September on the progress achieved, to confirm 15 November as the start of the transitional period, to allow the referendum to take place in early 1996.

24. Yemen

831. Over the past year, Yemen has continued its efforts to recover from the devastation of the civil war. In its resolution 931(1994), the Security Council requested me and my Special Envoy to examine appropriate ways to facilitate the aim of political dialogue directed towards the restoration of peace and stability in the country. I continue to believe that political reconciliation is an indispensable step to ensure the stability of Yemen. I thus applaud the amnesty granted by the Government to most of those who fled the country at the conclusion of the war.

832. The continued implementation of the commitments pledged by the Government—to ensure democratic order, political pluralism, freedom of opinion and the press and respect for human rights, and to develop close cooperative relations with its neighbours—will indeed contribute to the restoration of stability. Earlier this year, the Foreign Minister reiterated to me that Yemen was willing to reach a negotiated settlement of its territorial dispute with Saudi Arabia on the basis of the norms and principles of international law and in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. Progress in this area will testify to the strength of that commitment and will add to security and stability in the area.

833. In August 1994, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs launched a consolidated inter-agency appeal focusing on the most urgent humanitarian requirements through February 1995, totalling some $21.7 million. The priority sectors covered in the appeal were health, water and sanitation, emergency food aid, agriculture and fisheries, education and limited mine clearance. Response from the donor community has been extremely disappointing, with only $3.3 million (15 per cent of the overall requirements) received to date, mainly for health and food supply projects.

834. Land-mines pose a continuing threat to the lives and the livelihood of civilians in the south and have hampered efforts of health rehabilitation and restoration of agricultural production in affected areas. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs, however, received limited funding ($150,000) from a mine-clearance trust fund to undertake a land-mine assistance project in the Aden region. The project began in late February 1995 and aims to provide technical advice to the government authorities. Two international land-mine specialists were recruited by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs for the purpose.

E. Major comprehensive efforts

1. Angola

835. During the past year, significant progress has been achieved in the search for peace in Angola. After protracted negotiations, the Lusaka Protocol was signed and the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III) was established to facilitate the implementation of its provisions. A cease-fire has been generally holding throughout the country and has opened access to all regions for the delivery of humanitarian relief assistance.

836. At the Lusaka peace talks, the most contentious issue was the question of national reconciliation, which included the allocation of posts at the national, provincial and local levels to the members of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA). In May 1994, the Government accepted a set of proposals on this issue put forward by the United Nations and the three observer States to the Angolan peace process—Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States of America. After lengthy discussions and the intervention of a number of African leaders, including President Nelson Mandela of South Africa, UNITA finally accepted the proposals in September.

837. The way was thus paved for the signing of the Lusaka Protocol in the Zambian capital on 20 November 1994 and for the cease-fire that came into force two days later. President José Eduardo dos Santos and several other Heads of State, foreign ministers and dignitaries attended the ceremony.

838. In my report to the Security Council of 1 February (S/1995/97), I recommended the establishment of a new United Nations peace-keeping operation in Angola to assist the Government and UNITA in implementing the Lusaka Protocol. In particular, I recommended that UNAVEM III be composed of political, military, police and, in future, electoral components. The Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit, which has been operational since March 1993, would continue to serve as a coordinating body for all humanitarian operations under the authority of my Special Representative. The main features of the new United Nations mandate would include: to assist in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol by providing good offices and mediation to the parties; to supervise, verify and, if necessary, control the disengagement of forces and to monitor the cease-fire; to assist in the establishment of quartering areas and to verify and monitor the withdrawal, quartering and demobilization of UNITA forces; to verify the movement of the Angolan Armed Forces to barracks; to verify and monitor the completion of the formation of a new armed force and the free circulation of people and goods. Other aspects of the proposed mandate were to monitor the activities of the Angolan National Police and the quartering of the Rapid Reaction Police, and to coordinate and support humanitarian activities linked directly to the peace process.

839. Having considered my report, the Security Council adopted resolution 976(1995) on 8 February, authorizing the establishment of UNAVEM III with an initial mandate until 8 August 1995 and with an authorized strength of 7,000 military personnel, in addition to 350 military observers and 260 police observers, as well as an appropriate number of international and local staff. The Council decided that the deployment of the infantry units would take place gradually and only if the parties complied with the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol.

840. The Joint Commission, chaired by my Special Representative for Angola, Mr. Alioune Blondin Beye, and comprising the representatives of both parties and the three observer States, was established at Luanda soon after the signing of the Lusaka Protocol. It is the body responsible for the implementation of the Protocol and has met in regular and extraordinary sessions on numerous occasions at Luanda and outside the Angolan capital.

841. Owing to some initial difficulties and delays in implementation of the Protocol, I dispatched my Special Adviser, Mr. Ismat Kittani, to register my concern with the parties and to assess conditions for the deployment of peace-keepers. The peace process subsequently regained momentum in mid-April. Although a number of incidents, unauthorized movements of troops and other cease-fire violations have occurred, the general trend has been towards a progressive decrease of such violations. Two meetings between the Chiefs of General Staff from the Government and UNITA, held in January and in February, also helped to consolidate the cease-fire and strengthen the peace process. Under the supervision of UNAVEM III, progress has been achieved in the disengagement of forces. In an especially positive development, the President of the Republic of Angola, Mr. Jose Eduardo dos Santos, and Mr. Jonas Savimbi, President of UNITA, met at Lusaka on 6 May in the presence of my Special Representative. This meeting gave a new and important impetus to the peace process and the parties took further concrete steps to consolidate the progress achieved. In June and July, the parties reached agreement on several important issues and approved an accelerated timetable for the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol.

842. Following this encouraging development, I visited Angola from 14 to 16 July to give additional impetus to the peace process. I had extensive meetings with President dos Santos, and met with Mr. Savimbi in his headquarters in the central part of Angola. Both the Government and UNITA emphasized the crucial role of the United Nations in the settlement of the Angolan conflict and stressed their commitment to the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. I also reviewed the performance of United Nations troops in several regions of Angola. Several issues were resolved following my visit. The National Assembly created two vice-presidential posts, one of which is to be filled by Mr. Savimbi. The parties have decided that the future strength of the Angolan Armed Forces would be 90,000 soldiers and they have made progress on the modalities for the incorporation of UNITA troops, 74,000 of whom would be ground troops. The national armed forces would also comprise air and naval forces of 11,000 and 5,000 personnel, respectively. President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi held a second meeting, on 10 August in Gabon, to address outstanding questions.

843. United Nations military and police observers have been deployed to nearly 60 locations throughout the country and their presence has increased United Nations verification capabilities, as well as its ability to provide good offices on the ground.

844. The deployment of UNAVEM infantry and support units has reached an advanced stage, with some 3,500 troops present in the country, including three infantry battalions. Full deployment of the contingents is expected in September/October. The United Nations has made strenuous efforts to ensure that mine verification and clearance of major deployment routes and quartering sites is carried out in order to begin early preparations for the quartering of UNITA troops and for the withdrawal of the Angolan Rapid Reaction Police and regular troops to barracks.

845. The civilian police component of UNAVEM has proved to be indispensable in enabling the United Nations to monitor and verify the neutrality of the national police. In addition, a United Nations human rights unit has contributed to the civil education campaign and to confidence-building among the Angolan population. The Government of Angola and the United Nations have agreed to establish an independent United Nations radio station in Angola, as recommended in my report of 1 February and endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 976(1995), which would broadcast information programmes on the role of the United Nations in Angola and on the peace process. Equipment for the United Nations radio station is expected to arrive in Angola in September and UNAVEM is holding discussions with the Angolan authorities regarding the allocation of broadcasting frequencies. In the meantime, UNAVEM has been given access to the government radio and is broadcasting its programmes on it.

846. On 8 August, the Security Council extended the mandate of UNAVEM for an additional six months, but expressed concern at the pace of implementation of the Lusaka Protocol and strongly urged the parties to accelerate the peace process. In the meantime, the General Assembly approved some $150 million for the UNAVEM budget for 1995.

847. Improvements in the security situation and the consolidation of the cease-fire have enabled the United Nations and international and local non-governmental organizations to extend their humanitarian relief activities to all regions of the country. Since the signing of the Lusaka Protocol, humanitarian agencies have reoriented their programmes to support the peace process in three realms of activity: relief and resettlement; demobilization and reintegration of former combatants; and action related to land-mines. It is estimated that over 3 million Angolans are receiving food aid or other types of relief assistance. These activities are directed inside Angola by the Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit, affiliated with the Department of Humanitarian Affairs.

848. The long-term prospects for peace depend in large part on the successful demobilization and reintegration into civilian life of those combatants who are not retained in the Angolan armed forces. Preparations are under way for the quartering and disarmament of UNITA soldiers under United Nations supervision and control. Humanitarian agencies will provide basic services to the soldiers in the quartering sites and organize programmes to facilitate their return to civilian society. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs has appealed to the international community for $102 million to support the demobilization and reintegration process over a period of approximately two years.

849. The intensive mine pollution in Angola seriously hinders the movement of goods and people as well as the resumption of economic activity. The problem is being addressed through a coorminated programme of mine survey and clearance, mine-awareness training for civilians and the training of Angolan technicians and managers.

850. Despite some progress on the humanitarian front, the economic and social situation in Angola continues to be extremely precarious. As in other peace-keeping operations, I have attached particular importance to these aspects of the situation in Angola. As the peace process advances, the focus of United Nations assistance is gradually shifting from emergency relief activities to rehabilitation of the country's war-racked economic and social infrastructure, and to development. With support from UNDP and the Secretariat, the Government of Angola has organized a round table for rehabilitation and community development to be held in September.

851. By providing humanitarian and development assistance, the international community can ease Angola's transition from war to sustainable peace. The Angolan people and their institutions, however, remain the primary agents of the necessary social, psychological and economic transformations.

2. Haiti

Restoration of democracy

852. The goal of restoring democracy in Haiti was significantly advanced by the return, in October 1994, of the legally and democratically elected President of the Republic of Haiti, Reverend Jean-Bertrand Aristide, who had been forced into exile by a military coup in September 1991.

853. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 940(1994) of 31 July 1994, the Multinational Force, led by the United States of America, started operation in Haiti on 19 September 1994. After the departure from the country of the military leadership, President Aristide returned to Port-au-Prince on 15 October. On the same day, the Security Council adopted resolution 948(1994), effectively lifting all sanctions imposed against Haiti.

854. On 23 September, I appointed Mr. Lakhdar Brahimi as my new Special Representative for Haiti to replace Mr. Dante Caputo, whose resignation I had received with regret four days earlier. I also sent a small advance team to Haiti to assess requirements and prepare for the deployment of the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH), as well as to monitor the operations of the Multinational Force.

855. On 25 October, President Aristide designated Mr. Smarck Michel as Prime Minister. The new Government took office on 8 November. Seven days later, I paid a visit to Haiti and assured President Aristide that the United Nations, in collaboration with OAS, would continue to assist the Government of Haiti in achieving a lasting transition to democracy.

856. Upon my return to Headquarters on 21 November, I reported to the Security Council. Responding to my recommendation, by its resolution 964(1994) the Council authorized an expansion of the advance team to up to 500 members for the transition period.

857. In my report to the Security Council on 17 January 1995, I noted that, following the arrival of the Multinational Force and the subsequent disintegration of the Haitian Armed Forces (FADH), politically motivated violence and human rights abuses had decreased and Haitians were enjoying fundamental rights. At the same time, however, the collapse of the FADH had created a security void that contributed to an increased level of crime in the country.

858. The Security Council considered my report, the statement of 15 January by the commander of the Multinational Force and the accompanying recommendations of the States participating in the Force regarding the establishment of a secure and stable environment in Haiti. The Council determined that, as required by resolution 940(1994), a secure and stable environment appropriate to the deployment of UNMIH existed in Haiti and it authorized me to recruit and deploy military contingents, civilian police and other personnel sufficient to allow UNMIH to assume the full range of its functions. The full transfer of responsibility from the Multinational Force to UNMIH was to be completed by 31 March and the mandate of UNMIH was extended for a period of six months until 31 July 1995. The Council also authorized the deployment of up to 6,000 troops and 900 civilian police observers.

859. On 13 April, I submitted a progress report on the deployment of UNMIH, informing the Council that the official ceremony of transfer of responsibilities from the Multinational Force to UNMIH had successfully taken place, as scheduled, on 31 March. My second visit to Haiti, on that occasion, provided a good opportunity to observe the beginning of the operation of UNMIH and to exchange views with the President of Haiti on the political and security situation in the country. The issue of security remained central to the entire United Nations operation, in particular at the time of elections. Legislative and local elections were held on 25 June under generally secure conditions. However, the elections were marked by organizational flaws and a partial rerun was held on 13 August. The second phase of the election is scheduled to be held in September.

860. On 31 July, the Security Council extended the mandate of UNMIH to the end of February 1996. The Mission continues to assist the Haitian authorities in maintaining a stable and secure environment and in protecting humanitarian convoys. UNMIH also provides the Haitian Provisional Electoral Council with logistical and financial assistance and its civilian police component guides the work of the Interim Public Security Force and trains the Haitian National Police on the job.

Human rights

861. A core group of the International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH) had returned to Haiti on 22 October 1994. In my report to the General Assembly on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti of 23 November 1994 (A/49/689), I proposed that MICIVIH should also contribute to the strengthening of democratic institutions.

862. The General Assembly, in its resolution 49/27 of 5 December 1994 on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti, requested the speedy return of all members of MICIVIH to Haiti. At present, the United Nations component has approximately 110 members. The Mission made a major contribution to the improvement of respect for human rights in Haiti, both during the military rule and since the restoration of the constitutional order last October. On 12 July, following my report of 29 June (A/49/926) and consultations with the Government of Haiti and the Secretary-General of OAS, the General Assembly extended the mandate of the United Nations component of MICIVIH until 7 February 1996.

863. MICIVIH continued to give priority to the monitoring and promotion of respect for human rights in Haiti. During the preparation of elections, the Mission facilitated and monitored respect for the freedom of expression and association as well as investigating allegations of intimidation and violence. Both UNMIH and MICIVIH worked closely with an OAS electoral observation mission set up in May 1995. UNMIH helped to ensure that the legislative and local elections on 25 June, while marred by organizational problems, took place in a secure environment, and MICIVIH staff assisted the electoral observation mission in the performance of its tasks. In its report on the 25 June elections, released by the Secretary-General of OAS on 13 July, the observation mission concluded that the elections had established a foundation that, although shaky, provided the basis for further positive progress towards the continuing evolution of an increasingly peaceful democracy in Haiti.

Development

864. After the events of September 1991, United Nations agencies and the international community provided humanitarian assistance to Haiti to address the most pressing basic needs. The main sectors targeted for intervention under the humanitarian assistance programme to alleviate the situation of the poorest sectors of the population were health care, nutrition, water supply and sanitation, and agriculture. To allow for the continuation of the humanitarian programmes during the embargo, a humanitarian fuel supply programme was undertaken. A total of 3,632,277 gallons of fuel was distributed among the non-governmental organizations and other institutions involved in humanitarian aid.

865. With the return of constitutional government in October 1994 and the restoration of democracy after years of political instability and deteriorated socio-economic conditions, reorienting Haiti towards the path of economic development will be a daunting task. After a thorough review of the ongoing humanitarian activities, it was deemed necessary to find a new approach in order gradually to phase out the emphasis on strictly humanitarian relief, while facilitating the initiation of longer-term reconstruction initiatives.

866. An appeal for a six-month transitional period was launched on 6 December 1994 simultaneously in Port-au-Prince and Washington, D.C., by the Government of Haiti, the United Nations and OAS. The activities presented in the appeal reflected urgent needs that could be implemented rapidly and be of immediate positive impact. They were also intended to be sustainable in order to facilitate a smooth transition to medium- and long-term reconstruction and development efforts. The appeal requested $78 million to meet the needs for continued humanitarian and reconstruction assistance during Haiti's critical transition periods. As at 10 August, 54.1 per cent of the appeal target, or some $50.8 million, had been either received or pledged.

867. In 1995, cooperation between the Government and its development partners has moved from emergency and ad hoc initiatives to more strategically planned public works and employment-creation projects, leading, in particular, to major agreements with EU, the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and the World Bank in July 1995. UNDP activities centre on governance, economic growth and poverty eradication, and the Programme has also provided seed money for certain initiatives by donor countries. In order to coordinate development activities with the peace-keeping mission of UNMIH in a manner consistent with its mandate, my Deputy Special Representative has been concurrently appointed Resident Representative of UNDP.

Natural disasters

868. On 13 November 1994, Tropical Storm Gordon caused heavy rains and floods that devastated sections of Port-au-Prince as well as the southern part of the country. The death toll was estimated at 1,122, and some 1.5 million people were affected. Altogether, 8,600 families became homeless and 61,500 were in need of emergency relief. Destruction of infrastructure, agricultural land and property was extensive and included 11,402 houses partially damaged and 3,905 completely destroyed.

869. Following the appeal for international assistance by the Government of Haiti, the United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator called on the United Nations Disaster Management Team to join the relief effort undertaken in support of the affected populations. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs sent a three-person team from United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination to strengthen the Humanitarian Coordinator's efforts to bolster the capacity of the special task force established by the Prime Minister.

870. In response to the emergency situation, the international community's cash contributions amounted to $8.6 million, of which United Nations contributions amounted to some $500,000. Relief items were received from the Department of Humanitarian Affairs warehouse at Pisa, Italy, as well as from the Governments of France, Japan and Mexico.

3. Rwanda

871. Since my last annual report on the work of the Organization, the situation in Rwanda has shown signs of gradual normalization, continuing a process that started with the end of the genocide and civil war and the establishment of the present Government on 19 July 1994. With the completion of the withdrawal of the French-led Operation Turquoise from south-west Rwanda on 21 August 1994, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR) assumed full responsibility for the former humanitarian protection zone prior to a gradual take-over by the new Rwandan civilian administration.

872. In my reports to the Security Council on UNAMIR, I have emphasized that while the situation in Rwanda has to some extent stabilized, a number of serious obstacles remain to be overcome. Continued problems in repatriation, reconciliation and reconstruction efforts have triggered frustration in Rwanda, which, in turn, has contributed to the deterioration of security and affected relations between UNAMIR and the Rwandan authorities. The Government of Rwanda expressed the wish that, at an appropriate time, UNAMIR's mandate and its possible phase-out from Rwanda should be discussed. However, I urged the Government to continue to extend the necessary cooperation without which the Mission could not carry out its tasks, while requesting my Special Representative, Mr. Shahryar Khan, to consider, in consultation with the Government, adjustments to UNAMIR's mandate.

873. Following those consultations, I recommended that the mandate of UNAMIR, which was due to expire on 9 June 1995, be renewed for another period of six months and its focus shifted from a peace-keeping to a confidence-building role. In its resolution 997(1995), the Security Council extended the mandate and authorized a reduction of its force level to 2,330 troops within three months and to 1,800 troops within four months. The mandate is to end in December 1995, with all troops withdrawn. Since the adoption of UNAMIR's new mandate, relations between UNAMIR and the Rwandan authorities have improved. UNAMIR is helping them to promote national reconciliation, the return of refugees and the setting up of a national police force. It is also responsible for the protection of humanitarian organizations, human rights observers and members of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda. In my report of 4 June, I described Rwanda as relatively stable and largely at peace, with some utility services back in operation, schools reopened and the economy and agriculture showing signs of revival.

874. Three major factors have nevertheless complicated international efforts to help the Government to restore normal conditions in Rwanda. Firstly, there has been the delay in bringing to justice individuals implicated in the 1994 genocide. In October 1994, the Independent Commission of Experts concluded that acts of mass extermination against Tutsi groups had been perpetrated in a planned and systematic way by certain Hutu elements and that this constituted genocide under the United Nations Convention on Genocide.

875. On 8 November, the Security Council, in its resolution 955(1994), decided to establish a tribunal to prosecute persons responsible for genocide and other such violations committed between 1 January and 31 December 1994. Mr. Richard J. Goldstone was appointed Prosecutor and the Prosecutor's Office, headed by the Deputy Prosecutor, Mr. Honoré Rakotomana, was to be established at Kigali. Under his supervision, the investigation of some 400 identified suspects, among them leaders of the former regime and principal planners of the genocide, who sought refuge in neighbouring countries, is being conducted in and outside Rwanda.

876. In its resolution 977(1995), the Security Council determined that the seat of the Tribunal should be established at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania. Since the Tribunal shares a common appeals chamber with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, the General Assembly has appointed only six judges for the Tribunal: Mr. Lennart Aspegren (Sweden), Mr. Laïty Kama (Senegal), Mr. T. H. Khan (Bangladesh), Mr. Yakov A. Ostrovsky (Russian Federation), Ms. Navanethem Pillay (South Africa) and Mr. Willam H. Sekule (United Republic of Tanzania). Their first plenary session was held at The Hague from 26 to 30 June 1995. During the session, the judges adopted the rules of procedure and evidence of the Tribunal and elected a President (Mr. Kama) and a Vice-President (Mr. Ostrovsky). The judges will assume their functions with the commencement of trial proceedings. The Tribunal is expected to process the first indictments in the second half of this year; however, the justice system as a whole is not yet operational and is in urgent need of support. It will be difficult to achieve national reconciliation and a meaningful political dialogue if justice in the wake of the horrific events of the summer of 1994 is not seen to be done.

877. In July 1994, an estimated 1.2 million Rwandan refugees arrived in the Kivu provinces of Zaire following the April-July civil war in Rwanda. The presence of such a large number of refugees in Zaire, and its impact on the security and economy of the country, was one of the main subjects of the discussion I held with Prime Minister Kengo Wa Dondo during his visit to Headquarters on 15 December. At that time, the Prime Minister requested me to appoint "a special representative for Rwanda in Zaire". It was agreed that a civilian UNAMIR liaison office should be established at Kinshasa to facilitate communication between my Special Representative for Rwanda and the Government of Zaire. The Prime Minister offered to provide 1,500 troops for a proposed United Nations force to ensure security in the refugee camps. The Government of Zaire cited the presence of the Rwandan refugees as one of the factors that had contributed to the postponement of the first multi-party parliamentary and presidential elections and to the extension for two more years of the transitional period in Zaire until 10 July 1997.

878. On 27 January 1995, the Government of Zaire and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees signed an aide-memoire outlining specific measures to improve security in the camps. Under the agreement, the Government of Zaire agreed to deploy a contingent of 1,500 military and police personnel—the Zairian Camp Security Contingent—to provide security in the camps. The measures included the prevention of violence, escort of repatriation convoys and maintenance of law and order, especially at food distribution centres.

879. Some 1,513 Zairian Camp Security troops and more than 38 members of the UNHCR civilian Security Liaison Group are now deployed in refugee camps. Their deployment has greatly improved security conditions. However, rumours about military training of elements of the former Government's army have persisted in some camps. Thus, in furtherance of Security Council resolution 997(1995), I sent a Special Envoy, Mr. Aldo Ajello, to the region to discuss the issue with all countries concerned and to explore the possibility of deploying military observers, in particular in the airfield of eastern Zaire, to monitor the alleged flow of arms. From 20 to 28 June, my Envoy visited Rwanda, Burundi, Zaire, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. On 9 July, I reported to the Security Council that some countries of the region were opposed to the deployment of United Nations military observers on their territory. However, Zaire reiterated that it would welcome an international commission of inquiry, under United Nations auspices, to investigate allegations of arms deliveries to the former Rwandese Government Forces. For its part, the Government of Rwanda has reiterated its determination to promote the earliest return of the refugees and has stated its readiness for dialogue with those of them who were implicated in the genocide.

880. The second complicating factor is that national reconciliation can hardly become a reality without the safe return of the refugees and internally displaced persons not implicated in acts of genocide. For that purpose, the assistance of the international community will be needed to build up structures for the resettlement of the refugees and internally displaced persons and their reintegration into society. However, efforts in this direction have been jeopardized by the continuing military activities of members of the former Rwandese Government Forces in refugee camps in neighbouring countries, including the launching of organized incursions into Rwanda. The Government is concerned that the elements abroad of the former Rwandese Government Forces receive training and arms deliveries, whereas Rwanda is still subject to an arms embargo.

881. Given the serious lack of security in the refugee camps outside Rwanda, I authorized United Nations participation in a joint working group with Zairian authorities to improve the situation. Following consultations with the Secretariat and UNHCR, I emphasized in a report to the Security Council (S/1994/1308) that any operation to achieve the repatriation of refugees and the improvement of security in the camps was futile without parallel efforts to promote national reconciliation and reconstruction. On 1 February 1995, I informed the Security Council that on 27 January UNHCR had concluded an agreement with the Government of Zaire for the deployment of 1,500 security personnel, as well as a UNHCR liaison support group, to camps in eastern Zaire to maintain law and order, to prevent intimidation of refugees by elements opposed to their repatriation and to protect returnees and relief workers. However, while the situation has improved, the problem is far from solved.

882. The Government made it clear that it wished to close down the camps of internally displaced persons for reasons of security, in particular those in Kibeho, Ndago, Kamana and Munini. At the insistence of UNAMIR, which opposed the closing of the camps by force, the Government agreed to postpone such action. However, on 18 April the Government decided to close Kibeho camp, an action that led to panic, a stampede and indiscriminate firing at displaced persons, resulting in the killing of a large number. I immediately expressed my horror at this deplorable incident and sent a Special Envoy to Kigali. In the aftermath, most displaced persons were repatriated to their communes with the help of UNAMIR and UNHCR. In its report (S/1995/411), the independent International Commission of Inquiry created to investigate the circumstances and causes of the Kibeho tragedy concluded that it was neither premeditated nor an accident that could not have been prevented. The speedy establishment of the Commission and the steps it has taken to penalize the military personnel involved have mitigated some of the tragedy's adverse effects.

883. Thirdly, there has been frustration at the slow pace of delivery of international economic and reconstruction assistance to Rwanda, including aid pledged at the UNDP round table of January 1995. Of $714 million pledged, only $69 million has been disbursed and of this $26 million has been absorbed by debt-servicing costs. With regard to the Rwanda portion of the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for the Rwanda crisis, launched in February this year, out of the $219,490,162 requested for Rwanda, only 50 per cent has been funded. For the subregion, under 60 per cent of the total $586,778,007 required for programmes in the neighbouring countries has so far been received.

884. Although the international donor community made generous pledges to the Government of Rwanda's rehabilitation and reconstruction programme, the slow process in turning them into actual support has frustrated the Government. I have repeatedly invited Member States and other potential donors to contribute to the trust fund for Rwanda, which could serve as a useful channel for contributions to meet the immediate needs of the Government and people of Rwanda. To date, $6,536,911 has been contributed. I also continue to believe that the early implementation of some of the key recommendations of the OAU/UNHCR Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, held at Bujumbura from 15 to 17 February, would ease the tremendous humanitarian crisis in the region. I appealed to all Member States to act in accordance with the Conference's recommendations.

885. In this sense, the experience of Rwanda casts a revealing light on some of the problems that a peace-keeping operation is bound to meet when operating in such difficult circumstances. A new integrated approach, enlisting and combining all the resources of the United Nations family, is urgently needed.

886. Only a small proportion of the Rwandan people who fled their country at different times have returned to Rwanda this year and of those who have the vast majority come from those living in Uganda since the early 1960s. Among the refugees who fled in 1994, enthusiasm for repatriation has waned since March, especially in the Goma area and in northern Burundi. This is a result both of intimidation in the refugee camps and of the high number of security incidents inside Rwanda, including the assassinations of the Prefect of Butare and the head of medical services in the Gisenyi area. The rate of arrests of suspected participants in genocide and strong speeches by some Rwandan authorities have also had a negative impact on repatriation. Despite these set-backs, UNHCR continues to prepare for larger-scale repatriation in the months ahead. In addition to monitoring returnees, UNHCR is trying to organize, in cooperation with the Government of Rwanda, confidence-building visits by refugee groups from camps in Burundi to their home communes.

887. The Government also has to address the social impact of large numbers of people returning to their homes. In this respect, it should not be forgotten that much of the Rwandan population is still traumatized by the events of 1994. It is thus hardly surprising that serious problems have occurred between the survivors of the genocide and those who are now returning from camps for displaced persons or refugees. Disputes concern the genocide, illegal occupancy of land and property and the settling of old scores and grudges. Since February, commune committees, comprising representatives of local authorities and human rights field officers, are being formed to address issues such as security and arrest procedures.

888. The combination of ethnic polarization in Burundi and Rwanda, massive circulation of arms, porous borders and transborder movements of refugees threaten, at best, to keep the subregion perpetually unstable and, at worst, to ignite a large-scale regional conflict. I will therefore intensify my efforts towards a broader international initiative for a long-term solution to the problems in the Great Lakes region, especially by the early convening of a regional conference on security, stability and development.

889. Food shortages within the region have also occurred and WFP and UNHCR have alerted the international community to the need to cover the shortages, which threaten more than 3 million Rwandan and Burundian refugees and internally displaced persons. Rations in some refugee camps have had to be reduced by as much as half. Inside Rwanda itself, the United Nations and non-governmental organizations have contributed significantly to the present harvest by providing seeds, tools and seed protection programmes. A seed multiplication programme, financed by the World Bank, has been initiated and FAO has been instrumental in the establishment of a consortium of donors for the agricultural sector.

890. UNICEF has reopened a number of nutritional centres, distributed equipment to non-governmental organizations and delivered supplementary food and material to unaccompanied children centres. With the assistance of UNICEF, ICRC, UNHCR and the Save the Children Fund—UK, 41,800 separated Rwandan children have been registered in Rwanda, Goma, Bukavu and Ngara, out of an estimated total of 95,000. Thanks to these efforts, at least 3,000 children have been reunited with their families. There is evidence that up to one fifth of all unaccompanied minors can be reunited with their families.

891. UNICEF and the Ministry of Justice have reached an agreement to move an estimated 400 children accused of genocide from prisons to a separate location. In addition, a special division for imprisoned children and women has been created within the Ministry of Justice. Five experienced lawyers have been recruited to act as defence counsels for the children. Regarding the demobilization of child soldiers, UNICEF and the Ministry of Defence have identified a location where the education and skills training of up to 4,000 child soldiers will soon begin.

892. Much progress has been made in the health conditions of the Rwandan population. WHO has assisted the Ministry of Health with training programmes to enable the national programme of diarrhoeal diseases and acute respiratory infections control to be re-launched and is supporting the Ministry in the production of the national health policy document. Training programmes have also been undertaken on the national health information system, with an emphasis on epidemiological surveillance. With the help of UNICEF and others, more than 100 of the 280 pre-war vaccination centres have reopened in Rwanda; supplies and equipment have been ordered for the remainder. A vaccination campaign against measles has also been launched in Kigali. Some progress has also been made in the rehabilitation of the country's water infrastructure and electric grid line.

893. Joint UNESCO and UNICEF efforts have continued to improve access to education. Some 1,800 teacher emergency packages, supplying basic classroom resources and an emergency curriculum to over 140,000 primary school children, were distributed inside Rwanda in February. This brings the number of such packages distributed so far to over 7,000, servicing at least 560,000 children.

894. As well as continuing its project for emergency assistance to the national maternal and child health/family planning programme, UNFPA is helping the Government to elaborate an integrated maternal and child health/family planning training programme, which incorporates maternal and child health/family planning, HIV/AIDS prevention and safe motherhood. WHO has also supported the national AIDS programme through the strengthening of managerial capabilities at central and regional levels.

895. In July, I visited Rwanda in order to observe at first hand the progress made and the challenges that remain. In my most recent report on UNAMIR, dated 8 August, I stressed that the achievement of genuine national reconciliation was an essential element in establishing lasting peace in Rwanda. The Government of Rwanda must take determined measures to that end and representatives of all sectors of Rwandan society should begin talks to reach an agreement on a constitutional and political structure necessary to achieve lasting stability. The international community also has an important role to play in the process of Rwanda's reconstruction and reconciliation. While the economic situation has marginally improved, the Government will not be able to cope with the mounting pressures from returning refugees, the rehabilitation of all sectors and tensions from neighbouring countries. The seriousness of the present situation and the growing probability that it will deteriorate further requires urgent and concerted action on the part of the international community. During my visit to the subregion, there was clear consensus among government leaders that instability in any State in the area could have a dramatic effect on all its neighbours. On 16 August, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1011(1995). In that resolution, the Council, inter alia, lifted for the period of one year, until 1 September 1996, the restrictions on the sale or supply of arms and related materiel to the Government of Rwanda. Such restrictions remain in force, however, with respect to non-government forces in Rwanda and in neighbouring States. On 1 September 1996, the restrictions imposed by the Council in paragraph 13 of its resolution 918(1994) shall terminate, unless it decides otherwise after its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the matter.

4. The former Yugoslavia

896. The Organization's continuing efforts in the former Yugoslavia remain focused on a multiplicity of mandated responsibilities that span humanitarian, military and political tasks in an environment characterized by vicious cycles of cease-fire violations, human rights infringements, physical destruction and death.

897. Unceasing conflicts, entrenched hostilities, violation of agreements and a genuine lack of commitment and good faith have become the hallmarks of this crisis. Taken together, these factors give the impression either that not enough is being done to find a peaceful resolution or that fundamental questions and issues that divide the parties are insurmountable. For too long, from the start of military confrontation in 1991 until the time of writing, all efforts aimed at reaching a negotiated and peaceful solution to the conflicts and outstanding issues have been in vain. The Organization and agencies within its common system that have programmes in the area are, however, continuing to devote the highest priority to bringing peace to the region and alleviating the suffering brought about by the conflict.

Preventive diplomacy and preventive deployment

898. The presence of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP) continues to make an important contribution to stability in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. However, as stated in my report last year, internal differences that could lead to political instability remain a cause for concern. Regarding the dispute between Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, my Special Envoy, Mr. Cyrus Vance, has continued his efforts pursuant to Security Council resolution 845(1993).

899. On 7 November 1994, Mr. Vance and I met with President Kiro Gligorov at Geneva following the elections in his country. I urged him to give favourable consideration to a number of proposals for resolving the dispute. On 6 February 1995, Mr. Vance began a series of parallel meetings with the parties with a view to convening direct negotiations. During the meetings both parties took a serious and constructive approach that could in time lead to direct talks. In a subsequent meeting with President Gligorov at Copenhagen on 10 March, I urged him to facilitate a face-to-face meeting with the other side. Between March and June, Mr. Vance continued his meetings with the two sides. When I visited Greece in July, I urged the Greek leaders to respond favourably to his proposals.

Peacemaking and peace-keeping

900. The International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia continues to provide a permanent forum for the negotiation of a comprehensive political solution to the problems in the former Yugoslavia. Its Steering Committee is co-chaired by Mr. Thorvald Stoltenberg, representing the United Nations, and the former Swedish premier

Mr. Carl Bildt, who was appointed by EU on 9 June following the resignation of Lord David Owen in May. My Special Representative, Mr. Yasushi Akashi, as well as the States members of the Contact Group, have continued their efforts to advance the peace process. At an EU summit meeting at Cannes, France, in June, European leaders determined that diplomacy should be the main tool for achieving several primary objectives, including the lifting of the siege of Sarajevo; resumption of a dialogue between the parties on the basis of the Contact Group Plan; establishment of a new four-month cease-fire; re-establishment of a dialogue between the Government of Croatia and the Krajina Serbs; and mutual recognition by the former Yugoslav republics.

901. Under the auspices of the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia and the Ambassadors of the Russian Federation and the United States of America to Croatia, the Government of Croatia and the local Serb authorities in Croatia concluded, on 2 December 1994, an Economic Agreement. That Agreement was seen as a major confidence-building measure towards the restoration of normal economic activities in Croatia. With continued adherence to the cease-fire agreement of 29 March 1994, it seemed that both sides had embarked on a course of normalizing their relationship by pursuing a number of tangible and mutually beneficial economic improvements, such as the opening of the Zagreb-Belgrade highway through Sector West, opening the Adriatic oil pipeline, rehabilitating and reconnecting the electricity grid and exploring the re-opening of railway connections.

902. On 12 January 1995, I received a letter from the President of the Republic of Croatia, Dr. Franjo Tudjman, informing me of his Government's decision not to agree to a further extension of the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) beyond 31 March. While the Government of Croatia's frustration was understandable, its decision to insist on the withdrawal of UNPROFOR from Croatia renewed mistrust and created new tensions, as a result of which cooperation on further elements of the Economic Agreement petered out.

ments of UNPROFOR stationed in Croatia were to be converted into UNCRO by the end of June 1995. At the same time separate forces were created for Bosnia and Herzegovina (retaining the name UNPROFOR) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (UNPREDEP). Overall command and control of all these forces was to be exercised by my Special Representative and the Force Commander from United Nations Peace Forces headquarters (UNPF-HQ) at Zagreb.

904. On 1 May, the Croatian army and police undertook an offensive against Sector West from both directions on the Zagreb-Belgrade highway with some 2,500 troops, heavy equipment and air support. UNPROFOR, whose mandate was to monitor the cease-fire arrangements agreed in March 1994, was powerless to prevent an offensive on that scale. However, UNPROFOR and other international agencies were able to keep the international community at least partially informed and to discourage violence against the Serb population, though abuses undoubtedly occurred during the early stages of the conflict. More than 10,000 Serb civilians crossed into Serb-controlled areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Subsequently, UNPROFOR and UNHCR helped those remaining Serb civilians who so wished to leave Sector West in a protected and orderly manner. Although the Government of Croatia declared its intention to respect fully the human rights of the remaining Serb population, it was not able to create confidence among the Serbs that it was in their interests to remain in Croatia. The mistrust created by the Croatian operation against Sector West further undermined efforts to resume negotiations towards a peaceful settlement in Croatia.

905. Following the take-over of Sector West by the Croatian army, tensions in the UNCRO area of operations remained high, preventing the deployment of the Operation as originally envisaged in Security Council resolutions 981(1995), 982(1995) and 990(1995). On 19 July, the Krajina Serb army and the forces loyal to Mr. Fikaret Abdic launched offensives against the Bosnian Army V Corps in the Bihac pocket. Croatia almost immediately warned that the displacement of the population of Bihac would be considered a serious threat to its security and stability. The Presidents of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina signed the Split Declaration on 22 July, which committed the Government of Croatia to assist Bosnian forces militarily in the Bihac pocket. Within Croatia, the Croatian army continued a major build-up of troops around Sectors North and South in apparent preparation for a major military offensive aimed at re-establishing Croatian control in those areas.

906. Intensive efforts to defuse the crisis and restart political negotiations were undertaken by the United Nations as well by Member States. My Special Representative met with President Tudjman to forestall a looming military confrontation. He also met with local Serb leaders at Knin. On 3 August, at Geneva, Mr. Stoltenberg chaired a meeting of the representatives of the Government of Croatia and the Croatian Serbs and presented the two sides with a paper covering seven points of contention. The Croatian Serb side was inclined to accept the paper as a useful basis for progress, subject to clearance by its political leadership, but the Government indicated that the paper did not address its fundamental concern that the Krajina Serbs should be reintegrated under the Croatian Constitution and laws. On the evening of 3 August, I telephoned President Tudjman and urged the utmost restraint.

907. On 4 August, the Croatian army launched a major offensive, which was largely completed a few days later. I immediately issued a statement expressing my regret at the outbreak of hostilities in Croatia, and urged the parties to respect international humanitarian law and the human rights of the affected population. At the start of the action, a significant number of United Nations observation posts were overrun by the Croatian army and some were deliberately fired upon. Some United Nations troops were used as human shields by Croatian army units as they conducted their attacks. Vigorous protests have been launched against these incidents by the United Nations and the troop-contributing Governments concerned. In the period following the Croatian military actions, the United Nations has concentrated on dealing with the humanitarian crisis brought about by the massive displacement of people and on maintaining contacts that would permit political negotiations to be resumed. Thus my Special Representative on 6 August concluded a nine-point agreement with the Croatian authorities allowing the United Nations, and other international organizations, to cope with the major humanitarian difficulties and to monitor the human rights situation on the ground. Mr. Stoltenberg was also in active contact with the authorities at Zagreb and Belgrade. These events had obvious implications for the future role of UNCRO in that, with the collapse of the armed forces of the Krajina Serbs, there was no longer a requirement, except in Sector East, to monitor or control the confrontation line, zone of separation, weapons storage sites and areas of limitations established by the cease-fire agreement of 29 March 1994. On 23 August, I recommended to the Security Council an immediate start to the repatriation of all UNCRO troops, except the two battalions in Sector East, with the aim of reducing troop strength to below 2,500 by mid-November 1995.

908. For the most part, developments in Bosnia and Herzegovina in the past year have been equally discouraging. In the autumn of 1994, military activity assumed unacceptably high levels, in particular in the Bihac area and around Sarajevo. The overall situation reached a crisis point when Bosnian Serb infantry entered the designated safe area of Bihac to repulse an offensive launched from the Bihac pocket in October by the Bosnian army. Following air attacks by Krajina Serbs into the Bihac pocket on 18 and 19 November 1994 and NATO air strikes against the Udbina airfield in Sector South in Croatia and on Bosnian Serb missile sites on 21 and 23 November, respectively, the situation sharply worsened. Some 250 UNPROFOR personnel were confined to the weapon collection points around Sarajevo and 26 United Nations military observers were detained in their quarters. The situation improved when, following former United States President Jimmy Carter's visit in late December, my Special Representative was able to secure a cessation-of-hostilities agreement, which came into effect on 1 January 1995.

909. Although the cessation of hostilities had been agreed for four months, fighting in the Bihac area never ceased, and those elements of the agreement which could have secured a more stable cease-fire, such as the creation of buffer zones and the interpositioning of UNPROFOR troops along the confrontation line, could not be implemented for lack of cooperation by the parties. In March 1995, the Government, in the first large-scale violation of the cease-fire agreement outside the Bihac area, launched offensive operations at Mount Vlasic, near Travnik, and the Majevica Hills near Tuzla. When efforts to extend the cessation-of-hostilities agreement beyond 1 May failed, the situation in and around Sarajevo began to deteriorate rapidly. The humanitarian airlift into Sarajevo airport has been blocked by the Bosnian Serbs from 8 April to the time of writing; sniping and exchanges of artillery fire have increased to levels not experienced since the establishment of the heavy weapons exclusion zone in February 1994.

910. On 25 May, as a result of the failure of the Bosnian Serbs to respect the deadline for the return of heavy weapons, an air strike was launched against an ammunition dump near Pale, with another against the same target the following day as a result of continuing non-compliance. The Bosnian Serbs shelled all safe areas except Zepa, and 70 civilians were killed and over 130 injured as a result of a rocket attack on Tuzla. The Bosnian Serbs surrounded UNPROFOR personnel in weapon collection points and detained 199, many of them under humiliating circumstances.

911. As the crisis heightened, NATO, on 29 June, approved a plan to send up to 60,000 troops to Bosnia and Herzegovina to cover the withdrawal of United Nations peace-keepers, should the need arise. United Nations-designated safe areas came under sustained attack from Bosnian Serb forces and Srebrenica was overrun on 11 July. The Security Council on 12 July demanded the withdrawal of the Bosnian Serb forces from Srebrenica but this demand was ignored. The Bosnian Serb army detained UNPROFOR troops from the Netherlands and by 14 July had evicted thousands of Muslim refugees from Srebrenica, while detaining Muslim men, whose fate is still unknown. The violations of international humanitarian law that appear to have been committed in the wake of the fall of Srebrenica and Zepa are a matter of utmost concern, and it is imperative that access be given to permit full international investigation of these allegations. The degrading and cruel treatment of the civilian population has been strongly, and justifiably, condemned. Zepa then came under attack and also fell to Bosnian Serb forces. In the Zepa enclave, both sides threatened to kill UNPROFOR troops from Ukraine—the Bosnian Serbs if NATO air strikes were used against them, and the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina if NATO air assets were not used. On 20 July, the Security Council adopted a presidential statement condemning humanitarian abuses in Zepa by the Bosnian Serb army. During this period the United Nations devoted all energies to dealing with the monumental humanitarian consequences of the fall of the two enclaves. Efforts to account for the missing and gain access to the detainees are continuing.

912. These dramatic developments and threats against the remaining safe areas were discussed at a conference in London on 21 July, which I attended along with leaders of the Contact Group and representatives of troop-contributing countries. The London conference considered measures, including air power, to deter further attacks on the safe areas. On 26 July, NATO approved plans for employing air power should Bosnian Serbs threaten or attack Gorazde. Following intensive discussions between NATO and the United Nations, appropriate procedures were agreed for this purpose, and I have delegated authority for launching air strikes in the region to the UNPF Force Commander.

913. The crisis situation that began to develop in May once again highlighted the vulnerability of UNPROFOR as a lightly armed, widely dispersed peace-keeping force. I therefore appreciated the offer made by France, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to make available to UNPROFOR some 12,500 additional troops as a rapid reaction capability in order to improve the Force's security and thus its ability to implement the mandate given to it by the Security Council. Difficulties raised by the Governments of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina have delayed the entry into operation of the rapid reaction capability.

914. The five-member Contact Group continued its efforts to arrive at a political solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, but little progress was made in convincing the Bosnian Serb party to accept the territorial map for an overall settlement, despite the support of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The latter has continued to minimize its relations with the Bosnian Serb leaders, and the monitor mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, established in September 1994, has maintained its monitoring of the closure of the 300-mile border with Bosnian Serb-controlled territory.

915. The dramatic developments that are taking place as this report is being finalized at the end of August provide, at long last, reason to hope that there may be worthwhile progress towards a political settlement. It is regrettable that in order to achieve peace the international community has had to resort to using force, but the warning that was given following the London Conference of 21 July was clear and unmistakable. After so many disappointments in past years of tragedy in Bosnia and Herzegovina, this new opportunity for political negotiation must not be wasted.

916. I am well aware that the patience, resources and will of Member States to resolve the crises in the former Yugoslavia have been sorely tested. Nevertheless, I remain convinced that only a negotiated comprehensive settlement will lead to an enduring peace. Part of that settlement must include arrangements for arms limitations and confidence-building measures that will prevent further outbreaks of conflict in the Balkans. There must also be an extensive plan for reconstruction and rehabilitation in the region as a whole. There will therefore be a continuing need for the international community to remain committed and involved.

Human rights

917. In August 1992, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights convened, for the first time ever in its history, in a special session to consider the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia. The Commission requested its chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to investigate the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia, in particular within Bosnia and Herzegovina.

918. The Special Rapporteur, Mr. Tadeusz Mazowiecki (who resigned on 27 July 1995), submitted regular reports during the past year to the Commission on Human Rights and to the General Assembly. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to make those reports available to the Security Council and to the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia. In 17 reports, the Special Rapporteur assessed the human rights situation in Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). In each of the reports, he presented a number of recommendations for action by the international community and various parties in the region.

919. With regard to the areas under the control of the de facto Bosnian Serb authorities, the Special Rapporteur drew attention to the ongoing practice of ethnic cleansing and the widespread violation of the human rights of peoples living in those areas, including Bosnian Serbs who were perceived as disloyal by the de facto authorities. There has also been a continuation of military attacks on civilians and interference with the delivery of humanitarian aid by Bosnian Serb forces in areas throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Special Rapporteur vigorously condemned all such violations of human rights and called for the prosecution of the perpetrators by the International Tribunal.

920. In addition, the Commission on Human Rights adopted resolution 1994/75, in which it requested me to report to the Commission on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In my report, I addressed the issue of the actions taken by the Special Rapporteur, the situation concerning the voluntary return of displaced persons, the problem of disappearances and actions taken by the Commission of Experts established pursuant to Security Council resolution 780(1992), the International Tribunal, the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, UNPROFOR and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

921. In November 1994, the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia confirmed the first indictment against a Bosnian Serb, Mr. Dragan Nikolic, on charges of gross violations of the Geneva Conventions, the laws and customs of war and crimes against humanity. Soon thereafter, a formal request was issued to the Government of Germany for the deferral of the Tadic case, involving charges of genocide, ethnic cleansing, rape and murder of civilians and prisoners of war. Proceedings for the transfer of the case from the German courts were completed a few months later and the first hearing of the Tadic case was held on 26 April 1995.

922. The Tribunal confirmed two more indictments in February 1995, bringing the total number accused to 22. Requests for their arrest and surrender to the Tribunal have been sent to the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Serb administration at Pale. Except for Mr. Tadic, however, who was transferred to the Tribunal by Germany, the remaining 21 accused are still at large.

923. In May, the Tribunal issued a formal request to the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina for the deferral of its investigation and criminal proceedings in respect of crimes committed against the civilian population in the Lasva river valley, where Bosnian Croat forces have allegedly committed mass killings of Bosnian civilians. The Tribunal issued another request for deferral of investigation proceedings to the Government with respect to the Bosnian Serb leadership at Pale. The latter investigation focuses on the question of possible responsibility of the Serb leaders for genocide, murder, rape, torture and forced transfer of population from large parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina. From 21 to 25 July the Tribunal handed down five indictments covering 24 people.

924. The March 1994 Washington Agreement that led to the establishment of the Federation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the introduction of the Contact Group Plan in May 1994 and the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities signed at the end of the year brought a period of stability to Sarajevo and improved freedom of movement. These developments, while not fundamentally changing the situation, made it possible gradually to reduce the number of beneficiaries needing international assistance to some 2.1 million persons, of whom 1.4 million were in Bosnia and Herzegovina. United Nations humanitarian agencies could then concentrate more on displaced persons and the most vulnerable groups.

925. With the exception of Bihac, overall access for humanitarian assistance was successful, at least during the period from June 1994 to March 1995, with UNHCR being able to exceed its monthly target in Sarajevo and elsewhere in central Bosnia. It was possible to bring winterization items and fuel to Sarajevo and the eastern enclaves. Arrangements were also made with FAO for the distribution of much-needed seeds and fertilizers throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina.

926. Overall security rapidly deteriorated in March 1995, making movements of humanitarian assistance increasingly difficult. The airlift to Sarajevo came to a halt on 8 April and with the escalation of the conflict from late May, land convoys became unpredictable and vulnerable. For the first time, signs of malnutrition and exhaustion were visible in Bihac and in the eastern enclaves.

927. The dramatic escalation of the conflict in June, July and August led to the displacement of hundreds of thousands of people throughout the former Yugoslavia. With the Croat authorities regaining control of western Slavonia in June, thousands of Serbs were displaced to north-west Bosnia. Following the fall of Srebrenica in mid-July, some 30,000 people were compelled to flee. At the beginning of August, thousands of men from Srebrenica still remained unaccounted for.

Some 4,350 people were evacuated from Zepa in late July. A Bosnian Croat offensive on Glamoc and Grahovo led to the displacement of some 13,000 Serbs in the Banja Luka area.

928. The retaking of the Krajina by the Croat authorities in early August led to an exodus of some 150,000 people to north-west Bosnia and to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. UNHCR, in cooperation with other humanitarian partners, mounted a major assistance effort to meet the needs generated by this emergency. The departing Krajina Serbs suffered widespread maltreatment, injuries and some deaths at the hands of Croatian troops and civilians, and UNCRO personnel reported much looting and burning of houses. UNHCR made efforts to monitor the situation of those Krajina Serbs remaining and to ensure the right to return of those who fled. UNHCR and other humanitarian agencies have continued to give assistance in Croatia and in western Bosnia, despite pressures for their departure, all too often through acts of violence. The practice of forced labour, often on front lines, is of great concern, and this situation has been exacerbated by renewed tensions and the recent influx of Serb refugees from western Slavonia and the Krajina, which has resulted in the Banja Luka region in worsening treatment and evictions of Muslims and Croats in retaliation.

929. In general, forced population movements, either associated with ethnic cleansing or leading to the same result, have been of great concern to UNHCR during the period. UNHCR has actively intervened against forced mobilization of refugees. The United Nations revised consolidated inter-agency appeal for the former Yugoslavia covering January-December 1995 was issued on 2 June by nine United Nations agencies, for a total of $470 million for humanitarian operations. The UNHCR component is $172 million to cover the cost of humanitarian aid for an estimated total of 2,109,500 beneficiaries in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Slovenia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Contributions as at 1 August 1995 were $1.36 million.

F. Cooperation with regional organizations

930. Cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations must constantly adapt to an ever-changing world situation. The Charter itself anticipated this need for flexibility by not giving a precise definition of regional arrangements and organizations, thus enabling diverse organizations and structures to contribute, together with the United Nations, to the maintenance of peace and security.

931. The growing interaction between the United Nations and regional organizations has its origins in Chapter VIII of the Charter. With this objective in mind, the Secretary-General met in August 1994 with the heads of several regional organizations with which the United Nations had recently cooperated in peacemaking and peace-keeping efforts. In the January 1995 Supplement to "An Agenda for Peace" (A/50/60-S/1995/1), a typology of current modalities for cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations was set forth.

932. Currently, such cooperation takes five different forms. First, there is consultation, which is practised on a regular basis and, in some cases, is governed by formal agreements. Secondly, there is diplomatic support, by which a regional organization can participate in United Nations peacemaking activities through diplomatic efforts of its own. For instance, OSCE provides technical input on constitutional issues relating to Abkhazia. Conversely, the United Nations can support a regional organization in its efforts, as it does for OSCE over Nagorny Karabakh. Thirdly, the United Nations and regional organizations can engage in operational support. A recent example is the provision by NATO of air support to UNPROFOR in the former Yugoslavia. Fourthly, there is co-deployment: United Nations field missions have been deployed in conjunction with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) in Liberia and with CIS in Georgia. Finally, there can be joint operations, such as the current human rights mission of the United Nations and OAS in Haiti.

933. However, given the diversification of the forms of cooperation being established between regional organizations and the United Nations, the basic principles of the Charter should be borne in mind. Article 24 confers on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of peace and Article 52 stipulates that the action of regional organizations must in all cases remain consistent with that principle.

934. The modalities of this cooperation must be refined and adapted to the diversity of local situations. The range of procedures that can be employed is wide and varied, but they all have the same advantage: they facilitate the Security Council's work and delegate responsibility to the concerned States and organizations of the region concerned, thereby promoting the democratization of international relations.

935. In this regard the recent adoption by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/57 of 9 December 1994 of the Declaration on the Enhancement of Cooperation between the United Nations and Regional Arrangements or Agencies in the Maintenance of International Peace and Security encourages regional arrangements and agencies to consider ways and means to promote closer cooperation and coordination with the United Nations, in particular in the fields of preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and post-conflict peace-building, and, where appropriate, peace-keeping.

1. Cooperation with the Organization of American States

936. Relations between the United Nations and OAS have been strengthened since the adoption of resolution 49/5 on 21 October 1994. OAS Secretary-General Cesar Gaviria visited the United Nations soon after assuming office in October 1994, and as recommended in resolution 49/5, a general meeting between representatives of the two Organizations was held in New York on 17 and 18 April 1995. OAS Secretary-General Gaviria and I opened the meeting and signed an agreement of cooperation between our two secretariats. The agreement provides for regular consultation, participation in each other's meetings when matters of common interest are on the agenda and exchange of information. The agreement also foresees appropriate measures to ensure effective cooperation and liaison between the two Organizations.

937. The general meeting adopted a set of conclusions and recommendations, mainly on economic and social issues. Reflecting new dimensions in relations between the two Organizations, the meeting adopted recommendations in the areas of preventive diplomacy, promotion of democracy and human rights, and humanitarian issues. It was agreed that the frequency of general meetings should be reviewed and that a more flexible format for consultations on cooperation between the two Organizations should be considered. The United Nations Secretariat was represented at the twenty-fifth regular session of the General Assembly of OAS, held in Haiti from 5 to 9 June 1995, at which two resolutions on cooperation between the United Nations and OAS were adopted.

938. The United Nations and OAS have continued their close cooperation in Haiti within the framework of MICIVIH. On 12 July 1995, the United Nations General Assembly adopted resolution 49/27 B, which extended the mandate of MICIVIH to 7 February 1996. The United Nations has also supported the OAS electoral observer mission in Haiti.

2. Cooperation with the Organization of African Unity

939. The United Nations and OAU have continued their efforts to strengthen and broaden their cooperation. In the economic and social fields, they coordinated their activities and initiatives on the preparation and outcome of international conferences, including those on population, social development and women. They also cooperated on the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and Agenda 21 to harmonize positions and to facilitate the implementation of programmes on which agreement has been reached.

940. Cooperation between the two Organizations in the areas of preventive diplomacy and peacemaking has made progress. I have maintained close contact with the Secretary-General of OAU to exchange views on how best to contribute to the prevention and resolution of conflicts in Africa. In Burundi, Liberia, Rwanda and Sierra Leone, the two Organizations continue to consult and cooperate in the search for peace and reconciliation. In Western Sahara, OAU is cooperating closely with the United Nations in the process leading to the referendum. I have also met and exchanged views with representatives of the countries that are members of the central organ of the OAU mechanism for conflict prevention, management and resolution. On 17 and 18 July 1995, I met at Addis Ababa with the current Chairman of OAU, President Meles Zenawi of Ethiopia, and the Secretary-General of OAU, Mr. Salim Ahmed Salim, and discussed with them ways and means of strengthening further the cooperation between the two Organizations.

941. The secretariats of the United Nations system and OAU are scheduled to meet at Addis Ababa from 6 to 10 November 1995 to work out the details of the programme of cooperation between the two Organizations for 1996 and beyond. High on the agenda of the meeting is cooperation in the prevention and management of conflicts and in democratic transition in Africa.

3. Cooperation with the Caribbean Community

942. Since 1985, the United Nations has been represented at meetings of Heads of Government of CARICOM. In July 1994, the Heads of Government, meeting at the CARICOM Summit, requested their Secretary-General to pursue efforts to strengthen cooperation with the United Nations. In November 1994, I met in Jamaica with a number of CARICOM Heads of Government and with its Secretary-General on the situation in Haiti and on matters of regional cooperation. I expressed my appreciation for the special role the Community continues to play in the restoration of democracy in Haiti and their contribution of military and police personnel to the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH), as well as their contributions to the joint United Nations/OAS International Civilian Mission in Haiti (MICIVIH).

943. On 20 December 1994, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/141 on cooperation between the United Nations and CARICOM. In January 1995, the Community and ECLAC signed a Memorandum of Understanding for Cooperation. This will offer opportunities to advance cooperation between the two organizations in a number of areas of critical importance. The Secretary-General of CARICOM participated in the Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on South-South Cooperation at United Nations Headquarters from 31 July to 4 August 1995.

4. Cooperation in the European area

944. During the past year, the United Nations has continued to strengthen its cooperation with European regional organizations. In December 1994, I attended the summit meeting of OSCE at Budapest. The United Nations and OSCE had previously agreed upon a practical division of labour concerning activities in the European continent and under this framework each Organization has provided support to the efforts of the other. OSCE has assisted the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General in negotiations he has arranged relating to the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, while the United Nations has given technical advice and guidance to OSCE regarding an OSCE peace-keeping force being organized for possible deployment in Nagorno Karabakh. Cooperation between the two Organizations has also been extended to a variety of other fields, such as election monitoring. Other Europe-based organizations with which the United Nations has had substantive cooperation in the past year include EU, the Council for Europe, NATO, in the context of military operations in the former Yugoslavia, and CIS, with which the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) works closely in Abkhazia.

5. Cooperation with the Organization of the Islamic Conference

945. In the context of ongoing efforts to enhance cooperation with regional organizations, the General Assembly in its resolution 49/15 of 15 November 1994 welcomed the decision of the secretariats of the United Nations and OIC to develop mechanisms of cooperation in the political field. Consultations to that end have been initiated between the two secretariats over the past year. The two Organizations have also had increased consultations during the past year with regard to a number of important regional political issues, such as Afghanistan, Tajikistan, Somalia and Bosnia and Herzegovina. The recent accordance of observer status to OIC in the United Nations-sponsored inter-Tajik talks reflects the increasing interaction between the two Organizations in the political field. The Coordination Meeting of the focal points of the United Nations system and OIC and its specialized institutions, which took place at Geneva in June, also adopted a number of important decisions to consolidate and rationalize cooperation between the two Organizations in nine mutually agreed priority areas of cooperation.

6. Cooperation with the League of Arab States

946. Areas of cooperation between the United Nations and LAS also continued to be consolidated, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/14 of 15 November 1994. The general meeting on cooperation between the representatives of the secretariats of the two bodies, held at Vienna from 19 to 21 July, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations and LAS, provided an opportunity for the follow-up of multilateral proposals aimed at strengthening cooperation to promote social and economic development and the exchange of views in the fields of preventive action and mine clearance. The United Nations continued to cooperate with LAS on the question of Somalia. LAS, jointly with OAU and OIC, held a meeting on Somalia at Cairo on 22 and 23 February 1995 in which the United Nations participated as an observer. The participating organizations agreed to continue to undertake joint efforts to assist national reconciliation in Somalia.

G. Disarmament

947. Since my previous report on the work of the Organization it has become increasingly evident that the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the availability of their basic components constitute a growing threat to international peace and security. The hypothesis that terrorists, with no territory to defend and unafraid of sacrificing themselves, could develop and use weapons of mass destruction is a frightening prospect, which is already affecting the security perceptions of many people throughout the world. Therefore, a coordinated response of the international community to those threats, and to the destabilizing effects caused by the unrestrained flow of conventional weapons, remains a high priority. Within the context of preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons, the strengthening of the nuclear non-proliferation regime achieved in 1995 by the Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons is an appropriate answer and should be accompanied as soon as possible by the entry into force of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons, as well as by the establishment of a regime for the verification of compliance with the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction.

948. While the Review and Extension Conference of the Non-Proliferation Treaty was a major focus of disarmament efforts in 1995, the international community has undertaken other disarmament initiatives to deal with the destabilizing effects and unconscionable waste of resources caused by the unrestrained flow of conventional weapons. The progress achieved, as far as the review process of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons

Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects is concerned, in assuring the full protection of civilians from the indiscriminate effects of anti-personnel land-mines and working towards their eventual elimination constitutes a step in the right direction. Furthermore, transparency measures, such as the Register of Conventional Arms, must be strengthened, and confidence-building and disarmament initiatives at the regional level should be developed further, in particular with reference to illicit traffic in light conventional weapons.

949. The Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty now has 178 States parties, commanding virtually universal adherence. The indefinite extension of the Treaty, decided upon at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference, as well as the other commitments made by the States parties reflected in the documents of the Conference, have strengthened the nuclear non-proliferation regime and will make a substantial contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security. I expressed gratification at the success of the Conference and recommended that the States parties continue to work in a spirit of cooperation and pursue the elimination of nuclear weapons as the ultimate goal of the non-proliferation process.

950. There have been advances in other areas of nuclear disarmament. The negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty have made progress at the Conference on Disarmament at Geneva and strengthened determination to resolve technical issues could bring the negotiations to a successful conclusion no later than 1996. The negotiating mandate was agreed upon at the Conference on Disarmament on a treaty banning the production of fissile material and this should enable the Conference to begin the negotiations expeditiously and bring them to an early and successful conclusion. Other encouraging steps are Security Council resolution 984(1995) and the declarations by the nuclear-weapon States concerning both negative and positive security assurances. Proposals aimed at transforming these unilateral declarations into a legally binding treaty obligation would contribute considerably to further progress in this area.

951. The general strengthening of the nuclear non-proliferation regime is matched and reinforced by the remarkable results achieved so far by the United States of America, the Russian Federation and the other European countries in post-cold-war security arrangements. The elimination of intermediate-range nuclear forces in Europe under the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, the reduction of nuclear strategic warheads in operational deployment resulting from the START process, the continuing successful implementation of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe and the ongoing security dialogue within the OSCE framework form the basis of a cooperative security system that in some measure could transcend the narrow limits of the European region. In Europe, the newly emerging cooperative security system is the product of negotiations based on consensus and cooperation. Significant initiatives for security dialogues are also being promoted in Asia, in Africa and in Latin America. Further enhancement of those initiatives would be an important step towards the strengthening of international peace and security at the regional level.

952. While progress in the dismantlement of nuclear weapons is encouraged, concerns about the safety and security of fissile material have increased. The smuggling of nuclear material is no longer only a fear but a frightening reality. Stronger global and national measures are needed to deal with illicit trafficking and to guarantee the secure disposal and storage of such material. Particularly important is universal recognition that International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards are an integral part of the international non-proliferation regime and that the Agency plays an indispensable role in ensuring the implementation of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

953. The Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) and the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga) are essential building blocks to progress towards nuclear-free regions elsewhere in the world, in particular in the Middle East and Asia, which would include in their scope all weapons of mass destruction. There has also been progress on the treaty establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa.

954. There has been a steady increase in the number of ratifications of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons, which has now reached 27 States parties. In discharging my responsibility as depositary to the Convention, I have written to all Member States urging ratification and entry into force of the Convention at the earliest possible date. In connection with the Convention on Biological Weapons, efforts of States parties are under way to strengthen the Convention by developing a legally binding verification protocol. The frightful consequences for humankind of biological warfare, or terrorism, must be avoided at all costs.

955. Measures to prevent proliferation of weapons should be fashioned to avoid any obstruction to the development process of countries. Developing countries need unimpeded access to technology and agreement is needed on appropriate controls concerning technology transfers, including transparency measures, that would be universal and non-discriminatory in nature.

956. The urgent problem of the proliferation of conventional weapons also demands the continuing attention of the international community. Unrestrained and illegal arms transfers have resulted in suffering and misery for hundreds of thousands of people, particularly in the developing world. At the global level continued support by Member States for the Register of Conventional Arms is essential. Reports to the Register indicate a degree of openness and transparency with regard to legitimate arms transfers for defensive purposes. Such openness will promote confidence and encourage responsible conduct in the transfer of major conventional weapon systems. Initiatives and ideas from regions and subregions, in particular Africa, Asia and Latin America, can enhance the global Register with complementary confidence- and security-building measures.

957. At the regional and subregional level, in particular in the developing world, direct action is needed to deal with the flourishing illicit traffic in light weapons, which is destabilizing the security of a number of countries. With the support of seven Member States in the Sahara-Sahel region, I dispatched an advisory mission with a view to assisting those States in their efforts to combat and stem the illicit flow of light weapons within and across their borders. More resources must be invested if there is to be any prospect of success.

H. Post-conflict peace-building

Strategies

958. An International Colloquium on Post-Conflict Reconstruction Strategies was convened on 23 and 24 June at the Austrian Centre for Peace and Conflict Resolution at Stadt Schlaining, Austria. It was attended by 58 participants from United Nations political, humanitarian and development entities, specialized agencies, the Bretton Woods institutions, donor countries and non-governmental organizations as well as representatives from war-torn societies. The meeting was organized by the Department for Development Support and Management Services, in cooperation with the Austrian Centre, and supported by the Government of Austria as a contribution to the definition of the role of the United Nations in the next half century as part of the fiftieth anniversary activities. The Department for Development Support and Management Services contributed a paper setting out a strategic programme for reconstruction and development.

959. The idea for the meeting stemmed from the Supplement to the Secretary-General's "An Agenda for Peace" (A/50/60-S/1995/1), which stresses the need for integrated action between

United Nations organizations, the parties to the conflict and other institutions prepared to assist in the reconstruction of a country; its purpose was to identify the practical and institutional issues that must be addressed to bring this concept to reality.

960. The main topic of post-conflict reconstruction was addressed under four headings: strategic issues, needs and capabilities, an integrated post-conflict reconstruction framework and mobilization of resources. Because of the interrelationship between these four topics, the themes recurred throughout the deliberations and there was considerable cross-fertilization of ideas. The meeting was an example of the coming together of various organizations, within and outside the United Nations system, all with a common interest in a topic that is of increasing concern to the international community. It is hoped that the ideas and recommendations presented in the report will serve as a basis for a clear definition of the role of the United Nations in post-conflict reconstruction, and for establishing arrangements that will ensure a swift, effective and integrated response to such situations by the United Nations system.

961. Issues falling within the four categories of post-conflict peace-building discussed at the Colloquium have been addressed elsewhere in this report; here I will focus on two specific concerns: electoral assistance and mine clearance.

Electoral assistance

962. In the period from July 1994 to 10 August 1995, the United Nations received 19 new requests for electoral assistance, from Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Benin, Chad, the Congo, Cote d'Ivoire, Fiji, Gabon, the Gambia, Guinea, Haiti, Kyrgyzstan, Namibia, the Niger, Sao Tome and Principe, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. In the case of the Congo, assistance could not be provided owing to lack of lead time. In addition to these new requests, assistance was also provided in 12 cases, to Brazil, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Honduras, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Mexico, Mozambique, the Netherlands Antilles, Sierra Leone and MINURSO, in response to requests received prior to July 1994 (see fig. 19).

963. Since July 1994, 30 States and United Nations missions have received or will soon receive some form of electoral assistance from the United Nations system. The type of electoral assistance provided has varied according to the requests received and the resources available. Following the guidelines provided to Member States (see A/49/675 and Corr.1, annex III), verification of electoral processes was conducted in Mozambique and plans for a verification mission in Liberia are currently on hold. The coordination and support approach was used in the cases of Armenia and Benin, and follow-up and report/observation was used in Guinea, Kyrgyzstan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Sao Tome and Principe. Technical assistance, the most frequently provided form of electoral assistance, was given to Brazil, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Haiti, Honduras, Liberia, Malawi, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, the Niger, Sierra Leone and Uganda. A total of 11 needs assessment missions were also conducted during this period.

964. Since the creation of the Electoral Assistance Division in 1992, the United Nations has been involved in the electoral processes of 61 Member States and some States have requested electoral assistance more than once. United Nations electoral assistance this past year in Mozambique and Armenia illustrates the process in action.

965. In Mozambique, the United Nations provided technical assistance and a verification mission for the first multi-party elections, held in October 1994. In accordance with the terms of the General Peace Agreement signed at Rome on 4 October 1992, ONUMOZ, through its electoral component, monitored the conduct of the entire electoral process. The Electoral Division of ONUMOZ fielded 148 electoral officers throughout the country to monitor voter registration, civic education, political campaigns, political party access to as well as impartiality of the media, polling, vote counting and tabulation of the vote at provincial counting centres. On the election days ONUMOZ deployed 2,300 international observers.

966. The United Nations also provided technical assistance to Mozambique through a UNDP project implemented by the Department for Development Support and Management Services. The project coordinated international financial and material support and provided technical assistance throughout the entire process in the areas of organization, training, civic education, jurisprudence, social communication and financial management. This assistance entailed management, coordination and monitoring of a $64.5 million budget made up of contributions from 17 countries and international institutions. Technical assistance included the training of 2,600 electoral officers at the national, provincial and district levels, 8,000 census agents, 1,600 civic education agents and 52,000 polling officers. In addition to a 12-person UNDP advisory team to the National Election Commission, 3 to 5 United Nations Volunteers were assigned to each of the 11 electoral constituencies and worked closely with the provincial and district electoral authorities.

967. In addition to the ONUMOZ electoral verification mandate, a United Nations trust fund for assistance to registered political parties was established to assist all political parties not signatories to the General Peace Agreement to prepare for the elections. The electoral component of ONUMOZ also designed a programme to enhance national observation. The programme provided training, transportation and subsidies for nearly 35,000 party agents to monitor the elections. A parallel programme funded by the United Nations trust fund provided computer training to 78 representatives from all political parties to enable them to monitor the processing of the vote at the provincial and national levels.

968. Armenia requested electoral assistance from the United Nations in January 1995 in connection with the elections to the National Assembly to be held in July 1995. In February, an officer from the Electoral Assistance Division conducted a needs assessment mission and returned in April to establish a joint operation coordinating unit together with a representative of OSCE. The purpose of the joint operation was to coordinate and support the activities of the international observers. Members of the joint operation were stationed in three regional offices for a period of six weeks in order to follow the pre-election process, including the registration of candidates, the electoral campaign, and poll preparations. On election day, 5 July, the joint operation deployed over 90 observers throughout the country to observe the conduct of the elections. Observers visited more than 300 precinct electoral committees, starting from the opening of the polls to the counting of votes at the precinct level. The group of observers represented 18 Governments and several governmental and non-governmental organizations.

Mine clearance

969. The ever-growing problem of uncleared land-mines continues to pose a humanitarian crisis of enormous proportions, devastating vast amounts of territory, possibly for decades. Despite the increased efforts of the international community, more than 20 times more mines are being laid than removed. Within the United Nations system, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs has intensified its activities as focal point for the coordination of land-mine assistance programmes. Since its establishment in early 1992, the Department has been involved in the formulation and implementation of mine-assistance programmes. Pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993 and 49/215 of 23 December 1994, the Department has been convening interdepartmental/inter-agency consultations on land-mine policy to examine all aspects of United Nations involvement in mine-related activities and to develop standard United Nations policy concerning the institutional aspects that need to be addressed in an integrated United Nations land-mine operation. The United Nations approach has been to focus on the creation of a national indigenous mine-clearance capacity, including appropriate arrangements to enable continuity of national mine-clearance efforts, as normalization of conditions in a country progresses.

970. During the past year, the United Nations engaged in the implementation and/or development of demining activities in nine countries. Programmes differ in structure, size and arrangements for funding and implementation.

971. Afghanistan is the most mature of the United Nations programmes, having been in operation for six years. There are currently almost 3,000 deminers working in the field. Over the past five years, the Programme has cleared a total of 54 square kilometres of high-priority area and destroyed over 110,000 mines and 215,000 unexploded devices. Approximately 2.5 million people received mine-awareness briefings.

972. Angola is probably the most mine-affected country in the world and, together with the implementation of the peace-keeping operation, a mine-action programme has been launched in cooperation between the United Nations, the parties to the Lusaka Protocol and non-governmental organizations. The Central Mine Action Office has been established as part of the Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit in Angola and is mandated to create an indigenous mine-clearance capacity. The Office is responsible for the implementation of the mine-action plan and coordinates all mine-related activities. UNAVEM III, in conjunction with the Office, is in the process of establishing a mine-clearance training school, which will form the core of the Angolan mine-action programme.

973. In Cambodia, the Cambodian Mine Action Centre (a governmental entity with technical advice provided through a UNDP project) has been coordinating all clearance activities. Over the past year, the Centre's 1,556 staff have continued to survey, mark and clear minefields, and teach mine awareness. Since the commencement of operations, 16,436,971 square metres of land have been cleared, with 423,708 unexploded devices and 61,787 mines destroyed.

974. In June 1995, a United Nations demining expert undertook a mission to Chad on behalf of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs to evaluate the land-mine problem in the Tibesti region.

975. Mine-clearance activities in Mozambique involve both the United Nations own programme, the accelerated demining programme, and non-governmental organizations and companies funded by the United Nations or by donors. The accelerated demining programme consists of 500 Mozambican deminers who were trained, equipped and deployed by the United Nations.

976. The use of mines in the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia, is extensive. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs has sent an assessment mission to the area and has suggested activities to reduce the number of land-mine accidents. Approval from the Abkhaz authorities is required before a programme can be started.

977. The problem of land-mines and unexploded ordnance in Rwanda has resulted in large numbers of accidents. Both the Department of Peace-keeping Operations and the Department of Humanitarian Affairs have assessed the situation and a plan has been developed. Action is of course dependent upon the approval of the Government.

978. In Somalia, a limited demining programme implemented by local Somali entities worked well until the security situation prevented follow-up to clearance activities in the field.

979. In Yemen, the United Nations is providing expert technical assistance to the Government on mine-clearance and mapping methods.

980. The continuing conflict in the former Yugoslavia has prevented the development of a humanitarian demining programme. However, United Nations peace-keeping forces and other United Nations agencies have engaged in mine-clearance activities as part of their attempts to carry out their mandates.

981. At Headquarters, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/215, established the Mine Clearance and Policy Unit to further strengthen support functions to demining operations. To facilitate the planning, implementation and support of mine-clearance programmes and policies, the Unit is developing a database containing information about the worldwide land-mine situation. Country-specific data, as well as general programme and financial data, are maintained in the database, which serves as a central repository of information for Member States, United Nations departments and agencies, and other interested parties.

982. On 30 November 1994, I established a voluntary trust fund for assistance in mine clearance. The fund's purpose is to provide special resources for mine-clearance programmes, including mine-awareness training and surveys, and to contract mine-clearance activities in situations where other funding is not immediately available. Some examples of the types of activities that could be funded from the trust fund include, but are not limited to, assessment missions, provision of seed money, emergency mine clearance, projects where other sources of funding are not readily available, consciousness-raising and enhancing Headquarters support for mine-clearance programmes in the field, including through the improvement of the central land-mine database.

983. In accordance with the recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report on assistance in mine clearance (A/49/357 and Add.1), the Mine Clearance and Policy Unit began the process of creating a United Nations demining stand-by capacity in order to expedite the provision of expert personnel, specialized equipment and facilities to United Nations mine-action programmes. These in-kind contributions have been a vital component of United Nations mine-action programmes. The establishment of a stand-by capacity is intended to institutionalize this support.

984. From 5 to 7 July 1995, I convened an international meeting on mine clearance at the Palais des Nations at Geneva. The objective of the meeting was to enhance international awareness of the land-mine problem in all its dimensions, to seek further political and financial support for United Nations mine-action activities and to increase international cooperation in this field. It consisted of three elements: a high-level segment devoted to statements by Governments and organizations, which also provided the opportunity to announce pledges to the voluntary trust fund for assistance in mine clearance and the United Nations demining stand-by capacity; nine panels of experts that discussed various aspects of the land-mine problem; and an exhibition focusing on the impact of land-mines on affected populations and international efforts to address the problem.

985. The international meeting was attended by representatives of 97 Governments and more than 60 organizations, bringing together 800 participants. Contributions in the amount of $22 million were announced towards the voluntary trust fund and 23 countries indicated contributions to the United Nations stand-by capacity totalling $7 million.

986. All delegations referred to the magnitude of the global land-mine crisis, which continues to deteriorate, and emphasized the need for urgent and effective measures to reverse the trend. Many delegations and organizations called for a total ban on land-mines; most delegations stressed the need to strengthen the provisions of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects.

987. There are still only 49 States parties to the Convention and its protocols, which include the protocol placing prohibitions and restrictions on the use of land-mines. The Convention needs to be strengthened to make its provisions applicable to both internal and international conflicts. It is in internal conflicts that the indiscriminate use of mines has caused the most suffering and misery to civilian populations. The 1995 Review Conference provides an opportunity to strengthen the Convention and its land-mine protocol. Looking at the magnitude of the problem, States parties should seriously consider a total ban on anti-personnel land-mines.

988. A revitalized Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters is developing ideas for the better integration of disarmament-related security measures with development in countries emerging from inter- or intra-State conflict. The Board is preparing for the Secretary-General's review a study entitled "Some thoughts on the development of the disarmament agenda at the end of the century", which should be relevant to the proposed fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament.

V. Conclusion

989. From the deep-rooted and far-reaching United Nations work for economic, social and humanitarian progress to the immediate and often urgent efforts to prevent, contain and resolve conflicts, what emerges from the pages of this report is an image of a multifaceted and ever-evolving organization—an organization responding flexibly to global change and to the changing needs of the international community.

990. There are signs that the massive educational effort under way at all levels of national and international society in this fiftieth anniversary year is helping to create a welcome realism about the role of the United Nations in world affairs today, as well as a renewed sense of commitment to fulfil the original promise set down in the Charter 50 years ago.

991. Major aspects of this landmark year are still to come, including the Special Commemorative Meeting of the General Assembly, to be held at Headquarters from 22 to 24 October 1995, and the commemoration in London in January 1996 of the first session of the General Assembly. None the less, it is already evident that this anniversary has created a spirit and a momentum that go well beyond the commemoration and celebration expected at such a point in time. Virtually every dimension of the United Nations has been energized. New realities are being used as the basis for reassessment and redesign. Successes are being built upon. A new spirit of cooperation at every level and on virtually every issue is within the grasp of a wider contingent of committed people than ever before.

992. It is vital, therefore, that the spirit of the fiftieth anniversary be carried forward in all these respects. Most fundamentally, it will be important to continue the major efforts launched this year with the objective of enabling the United Nations as an institution to become more intellectually creative, more financially stable, more managerially effective and more responsive to all sectors of society.

993. The fiftieth year has also generated criticism of the Organization, and this is serving to make the United Nations healthier and stronger. Shortcomings of the Organization itself, inadequate mandates, insufficient financial and material resources, the failure of Member States to fulfil their obligations or take on new responsibilities—all have, on occasion, been catalysts for criticism. However, the ultimate source of today's criticism can be found in the impact of globalization on the Organization and its Member States: as the United Nations is being asked to take on more duties and expand its activities, it is to be expected that the level of criticism should intensify. At the same time, globalization can work against the will to increase involvement, feeding fear and isolationism; criticisms born of these sentiments can create dangerous misperceptions.

994. Healthy criticism is an indispensable form of participation in and support for the United Nations in its effort to revitalize the international system. This report is itself an effort at transparency, revealing both the strengths and weaknesses of the Organization to the widest possible audience. The continuing calls for reform, and the reforms already enacted and under way, testify to the recognition by far more people than ever before that the United Nations is a truly indispensable element in world affairs and that if it did not now exist, it would be impossible to create it under present conditions. Thus the legacy of 1945 must be cherished and carried forward. In parallel, techniques that have succeeded must be transformed to meet the challenges of a new era.

995. Reflection and reform are not new to this Organization. As envisioned by the founders, the United Nations has evolved over time and adapted to new conditions, all the while in pursuit of a better life for all individuals and a better world for humanity as a whole. The fiftieth anniversary year, however, by arriving at such a critical juncture in the history of international relations, offers an unprecedented opportunity for change. As Secretary-General, I have from the outset been deeply committed to and concerned with reform. Looking back over the past three and a half years of effort for change and the substantial managerial steps taken during the period covered by this report, I believe that a continuing need exists for further, substantial reforms in the period ahead.

996. The communique issued by the Heads of State and Government of seven major industrialized nations and the President of the European Commission following their twenty-first annual economic summit meeting at Halifax provided suggestions for enhancing the effectiveness and coherence of the United Nations system in the economic, social and environmental fields and in the humanitarian area. The Halifax participants expressed their intention to utilize the gathering of Heads of State and Government in New York from 22 to 24 October 1995 for the observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations as an occasion to advance a consensus on ways to help the United Nations system to face the challenges of the next century.

997. Throughout this fiftieth anniversary year, serious consideration has been given to the future role and responsibilities of the United Nations by conferences, workshops and study programmes held at every level and in every part of the world. Two independent commissions have issued reports: "The United Nations in Its Second Half-Century", produced by an independent working group under the co-chairmanship of Mr. Richard von Weizsäcker and Mr. Moeen Qureshi, sponsored at my request by the Ford Foundation and facilitated by Yale University; and "Our Global Neighbourhood", produced by the Commission on Global Governance under the co-chairmanship of Mr. Ingvar Carlsson and Mr. Shridath Ramphal. The South Center also has been active in reviewing various aspects of reform.

998. These projects and commitments deserve appreciation and serious consideration by the international community. Discussions have taken place regarding the establishment of an open-ended high-level working group of the General Assembly that would undertake a thorough review of all relevant United Nations materials, Member States' submissions and independent studies and reports relating to the revitalization, strengthening and reform of the United Nations system.

999. The days, weeks and months covered in this report have been filled with discouraging developments. But from a larger, longer-term point of view, there are many signs that progress is being made, giving cause for confidence that, over time, success is entirely possible. Never before have so many courageous and committed people been involved in world betterment. Never before have nations recognized so clearly that their fate is bound up with each other. And never before has it been so undeniable that mutually beneficial international institutions of cooperation—with the United Nations foremost among them—are a vital global necessity.

1000. It is therefore imperative to remain focused on the reality of movement towards long-term achievement and not to permit dismay over immediate difficulties to weaken the positive momentum that has been achieved.

1001. There are three immediate problems, however, that must concern us deeply, for if they are not effectively addressed they can irreparably damage the United Nations as a mechanism for progress.

1002. First, the safety and integrity of United Nations personnel in the field must be respected. When lightly armed peace-keepers or unarmed aid workers on a humanitarian mission are threatened, taken hostage, harmed or even killed, the world must act to prevent such intolerable behaviour. The credibility of all United Nations peace operations is at stake; to preserve it, personnel must be protected as they carry out the duties the international community has sent them to accomplish.

1003. Secondly, the financial situation of the Organization must be placed on an adequate and sustainable footing. Calls for ever-greater United Nations effectiveness under conditions of financial penury make no sense. It is as though the town fire department were being dispatched to put out fires raging in several places at once while a collection was being taken to raise money for the fire-fighting equipment. The deterioration of the Organization's financial position must be reversed.

1004. And, lastly, funds for development are drying up. This is a consequence of the end of the cold-war contest, of the competing demands of peace-keeping and development for scarce resources, and of donor fatigue over the time and difficulty of creating progress on the ground. The willingness to spend money to try to contain conflicts around the world, while necessary and admirable, is not enough. Unless development is funded as well, the world can expect only the continuation of cycles marked by the alternation of terrible strife, uneasy stand-off and strife once again. To break this downward spiral, sustainable human development must be instituted everywhere. A new vision of development, and a universal commitment to it, are indispensable for the world progress all peoples seek.

1005. During the past year we have seen far too many innocent civilians, especially women and children, losing their lives or being condemned to carry on under appalling conditions. We continue to witness scenes of refugees deprived of their most basic rights and struggling desperately to survive. And hundreds of millions of people live in poverty so dire as to render them incapable of taking effective action to improve their own condition. Thus the existence of a true international community has yet to be demonstrated. Nothing could do more to bring such an instrument of human solidarity into being than a commitment undertaken now to ensure that all the poor countries of the world are set firmly on the path of development as we enter the next century. Such an achievement would bring an end to degradation and despair for a huge proportion of our fellow human beings and would represent one of history's most dramatic chapters of progress.

1006. We have before us an opportunity to combine the ongoing, incremental process of reform with a comprehensive vision of the future. The legacy of the founders at this half-century mark should be our inspiration as we step forward with pride to meet this challenge. Together we can bring the world of the Charter to the world of today.

Golden anniversary of UN celebrated in city of its birth

We the peoples of the United Nations determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war. . . do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

-from the Preamble to the United Nations Charter

UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali (left) met with United States President William J. Clinton, following the special ceremony in San Francisco.

On 26 June 1995, half a century after United States President Harry Truman called on delegates from 50 war-weary nations to "be the architects of a better world", an array of dignitaries from around the globe gathered at the San Francisco Veterans War Memorial Building's Herbst Theatre to celebrate the golden anniversary of the United Nations.

"The blueprint for the world Organization was drawn here in San Francisco 50 years ago", said Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali from the stage of the historic theatre where, on the same date in 1945, the UN Charter was signed and the world Organization was born. Scores of dignitaries, including United States President William Clinton, Poland's President Lech Walesa, Archbishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa, the 185 current Ambassadors to the UN, and some original members of delegations to the 1945 conference, were in the audience, as witnesses to the commemoration. "The Charter created here is more than a document of history; it is the foundation stone of international relations", the Secretary-General said.

A new reality

Since 1945, a new reality of global cooperation has taken shape, based on the Charter, said Mr. Boutros-Ghali, standing before a vibrant blue backdrop adorned with the United Nations seal, which is little changed from the original symbol designed for the founding conference five decades ago. "We are the custodians of the dream of global cooperation. We will not let it perish. As long as people seek national identities; as long as people seek protection from aggression; and as long as people yearn for a better world for their children, the United Nations will endure, and it will succeed."

At the podium, in front of which was displayed in a lighted case the original copy of the UN Charter, United States President Clinton gave a resounding "Yes, to the dream of the United Nations", but also asserted: "Today's UN must be ready to handle tomorrow's problems."

"We must all remember that the United Nations is a reflection of the world it represents. Therefore, it will remain far from perfect. It will not be able to solve all problems, but even those it cannot solve it may well be able to limit in terms of the scope and reach of the problem, and it may well be able to limit the loss of human life until the time for solution comes", Mr. Clinton stressed to the gathering.

"So I say especially to the opponents of the United Nations here in the United States, turning our back on the UN and going it alone will lead to far more economic, political and military burdens on our people in the future and would ignore the lessons of our own history", said Mr. Clinton, whose speech concluded the commemoration ceremony. "Instead, on this 50th anniversary of the Charter's signing, let us renew our vow to live together as good neighbours."

That vow had been at the heart of the drive for collective security which resulted in the convening of the original United Nations Conference on International Organization (UNCIO) on 25 April 1945. Over the following two months, in an atmosphere shadowed by the tail-end of the Second World War and the recent death of United States President Franklin D. Roosevelt, UNCIO delegates spent hundreds of hours hammering out agreements which culminated in the unanimous approval of the United Nations Charter on 26 June 1945, including the Preamble, drafted by American poet Archibald MacLeish, among others.

A day of hope

That day, said General Assembly President Amara Essy of Côte d'Ivoire in his address to the anniversary celebration, "was a day of hope. The world was rising from the long night of war. The veterans of that war were gathered in this room. Today, too, is a day of hope. We ourselves are veterans of another war, the cold war. We too must be the architects of a better world. Fifty years on, the future is once again in our hands."

The UN Charter, "conceived at Saint James' Palace in London, nourished out on the high seas, shaped in Washington, Moscow, Tehran, Dumbarton Oaks and Yalta, and given final form in San Francisco, was designed to usher in a peaceful, just and prosperous world, a world founded no longer on force but on law", Mr. Essy said.

"On this day 50 years ago, 51 flags floated over San Francisco. Today, 185 national emblems salute us—dazzling proof that the architects of the Charter were not mistaken. Their vision of freedom inspired the vast process of decolonization in Africa, Asia and elsewhere. And today we stand here as equal representatives of every continent on the globe."

Parade of Ambassadors

The commemoration opened with a procession of the 185 current UN Ambassadors, who solemnly strode to their seats, accompanied by a marching band, with the names of their nations scrolling on the big blue screen above the stage.

Amidst the speeches and musical performances by the San Francisco Opera and France's Opera de Lyon orchestra, the blue screen behind the stage came alive with a nostalgic multi-media journey through the 50-year history of the UN, with commentary by television personality Walter Cronkite.

Archbishop Tutu gave the benediction and American poet Maya Angelou read a poem she composed especially for the event, entitled "A Brave and Startling Truth".

Following the ceremony, Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali had a 30-minute meeting with President Clinton and then attended a civic luncheon at San Francisco's Moscone Center.

"Enhancing peace, achieving progress towards development, promoting human rights, advancing international law—these were the goals of those who created the United Nations",

"Fifty years ago, the world was weary of war, tired of poverty, and burdened by injustice. The United Nations was born to reject a culture of death and to create a culture of life, a culture of peace."

—Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali

said Mr. Boutros-Ghali in a keynote address to the luncheon. "They are the goals today. The United Nations helps its Member States achieve these objectives in ways that no other institution can."

Earlier the same day, the Secretary-General attended the dedication of a new United Nations Plaza at the San Francisco Civic Center. Created to serve as a permanent reminder of the history that was made in that city 50 years ago, the Plaza features granite paving-stone panels engraved with the Charter Preamble and UN seal, as well as the names of UN member nations and text from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Describing the Plaza as "a composition of stones and trees and sky", Mr. Boutros-Ghali said at the ceremony: "Designed by the human mind, graced by the glory of nature, and open to the universal sphere, this place calls upon us to build upon the best that has gone before, to preserve the life which our planet provides, and never to abandon the vision of a better world which the United Nations—created in this city—is intended to achieve."

The 26 June anniversary events capped two months of festivities in San Francisco, ranging from serious debates with noted dignitaries to gala cultural performances. On 25 June, a forum of Nobel Laureates, "Visions of Peace", convened at the Herbst Theatre to offer their view of the UN role in the next 50 years.

The public forum featured such Nobel Peace Prize winners as Archbishop Tutu, who got the award in 1984; Dr. Oscar Arias Sánchez of Costa Rica in 1987; President Walesa of Poland, the recipient in 1983; and Betty Williams from Northern Ireland in 1976.

NGO forum

The historic Herbst Theatre was also the site of a major three-day meeting (21-24 June) of non-governmental organizations (NGOs), entitled "We the People: Civil Society and the UN". A unique mix of UN personnel, early leaders and founders of the United Nations, activists and academics gathered to review the critical role that citizen groups played in the founding of the UN, their important contributions over the past 50 years and opportunities to build partnerships for the future.

An assortment of 42 citizen groups—including the American Association of University Women, American Federation of Labor, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, League of Women Voters, and Rotary International—served as consultants to the delegates attending the 1945 conference that laid the groundwork for the UN. Today, thousands of NGOs from around the world are accredited to the UN, which is in the midst of an effort to update and deepen their integration into the daily work of the Organization.

"Today we are searching for an international system that is acceptable to all", Mr. Boutros-Ghali said in an address to the NGO gathering in San Francisco on 24 June. "In order for every woman and every man in the world to perceive their true stake in the great ideals of the world Organization, it is necessary to have many more institutions such as yours. Only thus shall we be faithful to the urgent exhortation with which the preamble to the Charter begins: We the peoples of the United Nations."

On 25 June, the Secretary-General opened the Forum on the Reform and Renewal of the UN, also at the Herbst Theatre, which drew together authors, scholars and policy leaders, to examine the strengths and weaknesses of the Organization and begin work on a "white paper" containing their findings, conclusions and recommendations to best revitalize the UN.

Calling for the colloquium to keep in mind the principles of ideas, realism, consensus, a sense of history, the contemporary political context and the nature of progress in shaping their recommendations, Mr. Boutros-Ghali said that the UN had not only evolved gradually over time, but also there had been times when Member States had summoned the will to make major changes. "Such a time may be before us again", he said. "The ongoing, incremental process may be combined with a comprehensive vision of the farther future."

The San Francisco events were a prelude to the fiftieth anniversary programme planned at UN Headquarters in New York, which culminated in a special commemorative meeting of the General Assembly from 22 to 24 October 1995. It was on 24 October 1945 that the UN Charter came into force upon ratification by the five permanent members of the Security Council and a majority of other signatory States.

'An age-old dream'

UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali made the following statement on 26 June at the San Francisco ceremony commemorating the 50th anniversary of the signing of the United Nations Charter:

The United Nations expresses the age-old dream of universal cooperation. We are here to renew this dream. The blueprint for the world Organization was drawn here in San Francisco 50 years ago. The Charter created here is more than a document of history; it is the foundation stone of international relations.

For five decades, the United Nations has permitted nations to join together to deal with challenges that no single nation can resolve. Universal membership offers a forum for expressing universal ideals. Through the United Nations, the world has enshrined the ideal of sovereign independence—to accommodate the emergence of new States and to secure the dignity of their peoples. Fifty-one Member States ratified the Charter of the United Nations in 1945. Since then, millions of the world's citizens won the right to determine their destiny as independent nations. Today, the United Nations comprises 185 Member States. Decolonization utterly changed the international landscape, and could have led to chaos. But through the United Nations, the framework of international relations survived—and was strengthened by—this profound transformation.

At the United Nations, peoples took their first steps as States on the international stage. Within the United Nations, they could assume their rightful place and gain recognition as legitimate members of the world community.

Through the United Nations, the world has embraced the ideals of peace and security—to preserve the integrity of States and to protect the lives of their peoples. The concept of peace-keeping is not explicit in the Charter, but the Charter proved flexible enough to respond when the need for such missions arose. Peace-keeping is a manifestation of the world's capacity to work together. For both troop-contributing countries and the lands that they serve, United Nations peace operations reinforce the ideal of international solidarity in the face of conflict. Peace-keeping operations have proven their practical importance. They can monitor compliance with the terms of an agreement. They can give combatants the time and encouragement to pursue lasting peace. They can provide humanitarian relief. And, in the context of new forms of conflict, they can help to reconstruct entire societies.

Through the United Nations, the world has pledged itself to the ideal of development—to advance the prosperity of States and the welfare of their peoples. Working through the United Nations, the world's peoples have framed a vision for global development. They have forged a consensus about the rights that belong to all humanity.

Through the United Nations, strategies have been devised to realize this vision. An understanding of the common interest between North and South has grown. The advancement of women as the key to nearly every issue of development is becoming understood. Ways to approach the complex new problems of the planet are urgently being found.

Five decades are a brief moment in history. Yet, since 1945, a new reality of global cooperation has taken shape, based on the Charter that was framed here in San Francisco. Today, the world is accepting the ideals of democracy. Democratization can balance the individual's need for identity with the need for a workable international system: it can help to prevent conflict; it is vital for development. The United Nations is helping States express the ideal of democracy, and find practical ways of attaining it. We are the custodians of the dream of global cooperation. We will not let it perish. As long as people seek national identities; as long as people seek protection from aggression; and as long as people yearn for a better world for their children, the United Nations will endure, and it will succeed.

An 'Agenda for Tomorrow'

Three-day celebration
a festive, dignified occasion

The General Assembly hall on 22 October 1995—the opening of the special commemorative session.

It was the largest gathering of world leaders in history—presidents, prime ministers, kings, princes, sultans, Heads of State and Heads of Government of all races, creeds, colour and political background. They converged on the 18-acre site of United Nations Headquarters in New York during three crisp fall days in October, their flag-bedecked limousine motorcades slowly wending their way through Manhattan streets and avenues—strangely empty due to the stricture of unprecedented security—arriving at UN Headquarters on First Avenue to pay homage to the existence for half a century of the world Organization.

"I welcome the Heads of States and Governments of the world", Boutros Boutros-Ghali, the sixth Secretary-General of the United Nations, declared in opening the special three-day commemorative session, from 22 to 24 October, which capped nine months of celebrations and observances worldwide of the UN's golden jubilee.

"Welcome to your home, the home of the world's peoples. Welcome to the forum of the United Nations—the forum of peace, understanding and development. Welcome to you all, and heartfelt greetings to the world's leaders."

General Assembly President Diogo Freitas do Amaral told the opening meeting: "Supporting the United Nations—that should be our collective pledge in this Special Commemorative Meeting. Reforming the United Nations—that should be our political commitment during these three days. We must not allow this Organization to die at the hands of its critics, nor to perish for lack of commitment of its supporters."

Over the next three days—from early Sunday morning through late Tuesday evening—some 200 speakers addressed the Assembly, including 129 Heads of State and Government, most of whom were present for the historic group photograph of debate participants (see dust-jacket) which recorded the unprecedented assemblage.

They also met, in their hotel rooms and mission offices throughout New York, to discuss ongoing political crises and problems on their everyday agendas, using the quiet, behind-the-scenes diplomacy that characterizes the real world of international politics.

And there were social gatherings for the dignitaries and their spouses: luncheons in the UN's North Lounge, at round tables decorated with colourful flowers, and at the ancient Temple of Dendur exhibit inside the Metropolitan Museum of Art; a VIP dinner at New York's World Financial Center; a special concert by the New York Philharmonic in Lincoln Center, highlighted by Beethoven's Symphony No. 9; and an elegant reception inside the stone-lion-guarded New York Public Library, hosted by New York City's Mayor Rudolph Giuliani.

Altogether, it was indeed at once a festive and dignified occasion—a time for praise and reflection, for plaudits and proposals.

At the end of the celebration, Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali told the assemblage: "Your presence speaks, as you have spoken, with eloquence, of confidence in the future of the United Nations." He added: "We have listened to the wisdom of these leaders. Together they have given the world an 'Agenda for Tomorrow'. An Agenda covering every aspect of human society."

Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali also lauded the participation of non-governmental organizations, some of whose representatives had addressed the Assembly, stating they had "forged a new global partnership with the United Nations", as well as that of observers from non-Member States and UN bodies throughout the world.

The UN's birthday—24 October—also marked the beginning of the World Week of Peace, which was proclaimed by the Assembly as a time for Governments and peoples of the world to pause to reflect together on the challenges before them, as the UN celebrated its 50th anniversary.

"I appeal to all warring parties, everywhere in the world, to put down their arms and to seek peaceful means to achieve their ends", said Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali in a statement at the beginning of the Week. "The World Week of Peace should be a time of dialogue and new initiatives aimed at peaceful resolution of disputes."

In conjunction with the anniversary celebration, a pledge to balance population growth and resources, signed by 75 Heads of Government, was presented to the Secretary-General by President Soeharto of Indonesia in a ceremony at UN Headquarters on 25 October. Those signing the statement represent 3.9 billion people or 68 per cent of the world's population.

Also on 25 October, a group of world leaders met for a high-level UN Forum at Headquarters to review the status of human rights and to consider the UN human rights agenda for the next 50 years, in particular, action called for by recent conferences on human rights in Vienna and on women in Beijing.

Declaration adopted

A five-part "Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations", set out in resolution 50/6, was adopted by acclamation at the conclusion of the special commemorative session. It consists of an introduction and five sections on: peace, development, equality, justice, and the United Nations Organization.

In the seven-page document, the Assembly declares: "The commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations must be seized as an opportunity to redirect it to greater service to humankind, especially to those who are suffering and are deeply deprived. This is the practical and moral challenge of our time."

It states: "We, the Member States and observers of the United Nations, representing the peoples of the world:

- "Solemnly reaffirm the Purposes and Principles of the Charter of the United Nations and our commitments to them;
- "Express our gratitude to all men and women who have made the United Nations possible, done its work and served its ideals, particularly those who have given their lives during service to the United Nations;
- "Are determined that the United Nations of the future will work with renewed vigour and effectiveness in promoting peace, development, equality and justice and understanding among the peoples of the world;

- "Will give to the twenty-first century a United Nations equipped, financed and structured to serve effectively the peoples in whose name it was established."

The Declaration recognizes the important role of the UN in preventing another global conflict and calls for creating new opportunities for peace, development, democracy and cooperation.

Among its important provisions, the Declaration has world leaders pledge to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes, reaffirm the right to self-determination of all peoples, call for extraordinary measures by all countries to confront extreme poverty, reiterate the equal rights of men and women, and reaffirm that all human rights are universal and indivisible.

Development, equality, justice

The Declaration calls on the UN to address more effectively and in greater measure the need for a free and equitable international economic environment as an essential condition for international peace, security and stability.

It reaffirms that "democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, are interdependent and mutually reinforcing".

The Declaration urges the elimination of unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and the promotion of demographic policies to meet the needs of current generations without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs. While national and regional particularities and historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, the Declaration stresses that it is the duty of all States, "regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms".

The promotion of international law, the Declaration states, must be pursued to ensure that relations between States are based on the principles of justice and respect for the rule of law. It further states that the determination to build and maintain justice among States is in accordance with the principles of sovereign equality and territorial integrity.

UN reform highlighted

An entire section of the Declaration is devoted to how the UN works. In order to respond effectively to future challenges, the Declaration states that: the Organization must be reformed and modernized; the General Assembly should be revitalized; the Security Council expanded; and the Economic and Social Council strengthened to carry out effectively the tasks it has been assigned with respect to the well-being and standards of life of all people. In addition, it stresses that Member States must meet, in full and on time, their obligation to bear the expenses of the Organization.

UN reform was also the dominant theme of speeches during the special meeting, with many of the 129 Heads of State and Government and 71 other high-level speakers stressing the need for greater transparency, democratization and accountability in the Security Council and other UN organs. Participants also suggested that the current financing regime of the UN be restructured, and that new and innovative sources of funding be sought. Addressing the issue of peace-keeping, many world leaders called for a greater UN role in preventive diplomacy to avert the outbreak or spread of conflict.

Working for tomorrow

The United Nations "is the Organization that works for tomorrow", said Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali on 22 October, delivering the toast at a luncheon for Heads of State and Government. "The record of the past half century is clear. While others were called to deal with the problems of the present, the United Nations proved able to forecast—and address—the problems of the future."

The UN, he said, looked into the future and saw that decolonization must be a universal objective, that the poorest peoples of the world must have a voice, that the environment and economic development must be considered together if both were to be sustained, that the advancement of women was essential to human progress, and that the yearning of peoples for democracy must take place in the context of democratization of the international system itself.

"What is our vision of the second half century?", he asked. "It is a vision: of a world where conflicts will often be prevented before they must be countered by force of arms; of a world where material progress will go forward without excluding those now living on the margins of survival; of a world where human dignity and freedom can flourish, where no one is excluded by race, religion, class or gender; of a world where nature is allowed to renew itself, so that it may continue to provide for its human inhabitants."

The UN, concluded the Secretary-General, "cannot always be successful. But it will be essential. Of that there can be no doubt."

"Long Live the United Nations!"

Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali was both serious and optimistic as he addressed the leaders of the world during the special commemorative session of the UN's golden jubilee: "Your presence speaks, as you have spoken, with eloquence, of confidence in the future of the United Nations." A special UN photograph was taken during the October celebrations, which included 190 of the 200 participants in the session's historic debate. (The commemorative photo is featured on the dust-jacket of the 1995 Yearbook of the United Nations.) Among those pictured were 88 heads of State and 36 heads of Government, as well as Vice-Presidents, deputy Prime Ministers, Foreign Ministers, Permanent Representatives and heads of intergovernmental organizations. In the pages that follow are excerpts from the 200 addresses given to the General Assembly, on the occasion of the Organization's fiftieth anniversary, during six special plenary meetings of the Assembly held between 22 and 24 October. "We have listened to the wisdom of those leaders", the Secretary-General said at the end of the three-day celebration. "Together they have given the world an 'Agenda for Tomorrow'."

AFRICA

ALGERIA

President Liamine Zeroual: The fact that the United Nations has seen its membership approach universality in its 50 years of existence bears witness to the existence of a fortunate convergence between the trail that was blazed by the Charter and the course that has been followed by many of our peoples. The fact that the UN was able to foster the vast liberation movement that delivered peoples from the yoke of colonial domination holds its rightful place among the causes of satisfaction that give today's event its full meaning. The UN has woven a fabric of cooperation that spreads the benefits of man's mastery over nature.

ANGOLA

President José Eduardo dos Santos: The journey has not been easy for our Organization. On the date of its foundation the world was just emerging from a devastating war, with a tragic balance of 50 million dead and profound trauma and destruction. Sooner or later, the difficulties facing the United Nations will require redefinition of its structures and mechanisms, particularly the Security Council. A permanent seat in the Council should be assigned to a country from each geographic region that can assume an effective role in preserving peace at the regional level.

BENIN

Désiré Vieyra, Minister of State for Coordination of Government Action: The United Nations, as it reaches the half-century mark, must commit itself with resolve to the fight against poverty. We are pleased that at the World Summit for Social Development we finally overturned a sacrosanct principle to the effect that a country's social action must be determined by its economy. We shall now base our economies on the social sphere. Today, Benin is striving, with the help of its development partners, to reduce the rate of infant and maternal mortality and to reduce illiteracy by placing particular emphasis on health and education.

BOTSWANA

President Ketumile Masire: The presence of so many world leaders in New York bears witness to the success of the United Nations during its half century of existence. For Botswana and the African continent, this is a particularly historic moment. When the Organization was born in San Francisco in 1945, only four African countries were able to adhere as independent countries to the Declaration of the United Nations. The rest of the continent was still under colonial domination. Today, the UN boasts of 53 African States among its 185 Members. The UN has served us well.

BURKINA FASO

Ablassé Ouédraogo, Minister of Foreign Affairs: On the threshold of the 21st century, above and beyond the theory of States and of sovereignty, beyond the relationship of force, beyond the ambitions of domination, should we not substitute people, societies, nations, States? Should we not give new impetus to what was enshrined in the UN Charter in the words "We the peoples", and find again the human being and the humanity in each and every one of us and in each and every one of our acts? Only then will we progress with certainty towards a world of solidarity, progress, justice and peace.

BURUNDI

President Sylvestre Ntibantunganya: The United Nations cannot effectively assist our countries unless it adapts to the requirements of today's world. Peace in the world is still endangered by growing poverty, which is evidently the gravest threat to peace in the years to come. Moreover, the exclusion of a major portion of humankind from the most influential bodies of the UN gives the impression of a world that is frozen in time, whereas important changes have taken place over the past 50 years. We must transform and democratize international relations as a whole.

CAMEROON

President Paul Biya: Cameroon rejoices in the opportunity to take part today in the 50th anniversary ceremonies, as the United Nations played a primary role in its accession to national and international sovereignty. For us Africans, the UN is the expression of a collective will that is at the service of peace, of human dignity and solidarity among peoples. Created in the wake of one of the most harrowing conflicts in the history of mankind, in the last 50 years the UN has made an inestimable contribution to the defence of peace. In working for disarmament and encouraging negotiations, it has taken preventive action to ward off possible future conflicts.

CAPE VERDE

President Antonio Mascarenhas Monteiro: Nobody would know how to define our present world without the United Nations, taking into account not only its role in promoting and facilitating the great, imperative changes, but also its specific action in the most diverse fields of human accomplishment, both individually and collectively. The current reality requires firm leadership on the part of the UN to preserve peace and security in such a way that all Member States, big and small, will focus their abilities and energy on the promotion of the well-being to which all peoples have a right.

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

President Ange-Félix Patassé: Today, on the occasion of the jubilee of the UN, which is characterized by the density of its history and especially by its experiences, it is more than ever appropriate for the international community to draw the necessary lessons on which to base new hope, but especially, and above all, through which to fulfil the grand design of the UN, in the interests of our peoples. It appears unfair to certain nations that an Organization that wishes to be universal and democratic excludes other nations from its decision-making bodies. The Security Council must be expanded.

CHAD

President Idriss Deby: A half-century ago, immediately following the war, some 50 nations laid the foundations for a system of society turned resolutely towards freedom, peace, collective security, and economic and social well-being. While the world, over the years, has seen many upheavals and often-deadly conflicts that have resulted in sometimes severe criticism of our Organization, we must acknowledge that in many cases the United Nations has achieved substantial results and has spared humanity the worst of catastrophes.

COMOROS

Mouzaïr Abdallah, Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation: The celebration of the 50th anniversary of the UN is a historic occasion. We pay resounding tribute to the free nations that founded the United Nations, an Organization that has become, over the years, a global political arena that is essential to the rapprochement of peoples. The role of the UN in decolonization, advances in international law, respect for human rights and the identification of certain major problems such as those relating to population and the environment illustrate its growing accomplishments and progress.

CONGO

Destin Arsène Tsaty-Boungou, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Cooperation and Francophonie: The 50th anniversary comes at a time when a black page in the history of mankind, the page of the cold war, has been turned. But the world continues to face other challenges. The same nations that were powerful 50 years ago are even more powerful today, thanks to their command of science and technology. The expectations of African peoples, who, like the other peoples of the planet, contributed to the liberation of mankind in the two major armed world confrontations, have not been fulfilled by a fitting display of solidarity on the part of the international community.

CÔT'D'IVOIRE

Prime Minister Daniel Kablan Duncan: Certain failures notwithstanding, the Organization has achieved laudable successes. We can therefore be legitimately proud of our Organization because it is the institution that has made it possible to forge general consensus on issues of global policy. It is, moreover, the only structure capable of bringing about the implementation of and respect for the great principles of law, thanks simply to the univer-salinity of its Charter. Today, the question is how to reform the United Nations. Our Organization, a mirror on the world, must, 50 years after its creation, still be able to play the role assigned to it while adapting to the changes of our times.

DJIBOUTI

Roble Olhoye, Chairman of the Delegation: Fifty years ago, a mere 51 States began the United Nations. Today, with "nation inflation", we are 185 Members. The UN must be reformed if it is to remain relevant. But it needs stable resources, re-ordered priorities and more relevant and representative structures. Reform must be given priority or it may soon become incapable of addressing the real global problems of disease, hunger, poverty, development, conflict, security and national breakdown. The UN is the most important vehicle we have today to forge a new international system anchored in justice and equity.

EGYPT

Amre Moussa, Minister for Foreign Affairs: Today, we are gathered together here to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the United Nations. This is a unique opportunity to assess our successes and our failures. The UN has been a source of hope, a torch bearer and an element of construction. As we move closer to the beginning of the 21st century, mankind is sitting atop a volcano that is beginning to spew its lava. Let us not waste our scientific achievements by our political misconduct. Let us build up the credibility of the international order in a manner that instills confidence amongst peoples.

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

President Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbasogo: A half century of existence means a great deal for an Organization created after sufferings caused by war, injustice, discrimination, poverty, underdevelopment and the undervaluing of the individual. The creation of the UN was an act of conscience, an intention to reform by nations which decided to stop trying to take the upper hand in order to build a new world based on friendship, understanding, freedom, justice, tolerance, co-operation and love. After 50 years, it is natural that a work created by man should be examined to see if it continues to respond to the evolution of man and the times.

GABON

President El Hadj Omar Bongo: Some say that the UN is merely a forum in which to make speeches. Others say that it is an ineffective Organization. Conflicts persist in Rwanda, Bosnia and Herzegovina and many other areas of the world. Underdevelopment also continues to be a problem. Many of the past inadequacies were a result of East-West confrontation. Today, the UN can take credit for ensuring respect for human rights and for democratization, although we must recognize that progress could have been considerably greater.

GAMBIA

Baboucarr-Blaise I. Jagne, Minister for Foreign Affairs: The commemoration of the golden jubilee of the UN affords a unique opportunity to review past achievements and failures and to carve out a new path for our world towards a community of peoples who need each other for survival. I refer, of course, to an interdependent world, a global village, in which the achievement of socio-economic growth, peace and security in one country would depend largely on similar performance in other countries. We in the developing countries of the South need a head start, as was given to Europe in the aftermath of the Second World War through the Marshall Plan.

GHANA

President Jerry John Rawlings: In congratulating the United Nations, we are applauding ourselves. The Organization is very much us. It is the collective will of the international community of sovereign States, embodying our collective weaknesses as well. For us in Africa, particularly, the next 50 years will perhaps be even more crucial than the past 50 years. We want to see in the international community and in the UN framework a reversal of our continent's marginalization. There can be no bright future for the world, no new international order that is sustainable, without Africa.

GUINEA

Kozo Zoumanigui, Minister for Foreign Affairs: In attempting to take stock of the 50 years of our Organization's existence, I think it can be said that over this last half-century, the United Nations has proved irreplaceable, unique as a tool for dialogue, a concerted approach, negotiation and international cooperation. Through all these years, it has provided the ideal framework and laboured tirelessly not only for the maintenance of international peace and security, but also to mobilize the international community towards a solution of the problems of the world's economic and social development.

GUINEA-BISSAU

President João Bernardo Vieira: Today, more than ever, the UN Charter is a legal, political and moral frame of reference that cannot be side-stepped in international relations. It is imperative to proceed with reforms within the Organization. The agenda of the General Assembly must be rationalized and the Security Council should be expanded on the basis of equitable geographical distribution.

Member States must forge a world organization capable of protecting future generations from the scourge of war and providing true reasons for hope.

KENYA

Stephen Kalonzo Musyoka, Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation: On this occasion, we can state with confidence that the Organization has succeeded in the prevention of a third world war; that it has drastically reduced inter-State armed conflicts; that it has made much progress in the codification of international law; that it has provided a conducive climate and means for the reconstruction of Europe; that it has almost completed the mission of decolonization; and that it has withstood the cold war. Like the founders of the United Nations, we, as today's leaders, should take full cognizance of the inseparable relationship between peace and development.

LESOTHO

Deputy Prime Minister Bethuel Pakalitha Mosisili: As the founder of our nation, King Moshoeshoe I, put it: "Peace is like rain which makes the grass grow, while war is like the wind which dries it up." As we celebrate this historic occasion, we cannot but rejoice in the accomplishments of the United Nations in bringing the nations of the world together. Internal and international conflicts are, however, not over. We need to reflect on their causes, all of which are inimical to the UN principles. Our common resolve should be to work together to build a world devoid of them.

LIBERIA

Wilton S. Sankawulo, Chairman of the Council of State of the Liberian National Transitional Government: If the spectre of war prevails in most of the countries that attained independence after the birth of the UN, it is due largely to the legacy of colonialism and the cold war. Colonial powers disregarded the traditional values and social needs of their subjects. The contest for spheres of influence during the cold war gave rise to autocratic regimes, which were insensitive to the aspirations of their peoples. The signing of the UN Charter 50 years ago was a significant milestone in the creation of a global arrangement for securing human liberty.

LIBYAN ARAB JAMAHIRIYA

Omar Mustafa Muntasser, Secretary of the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation: We hope that this occasion will be a starting point for an unshackled United Nations that would continue to be revitalized and committed to the service of all peoples and not just a few States that seek to use it as a means to achieve their own ends. These few should realize that the UN has not been freed from the shackles of the cold war to find itself shackled by the fetters of major Powers. They should not forget that these small countries that helped the UN attain its universality are also capable of establishing their own organization away from the domination and hegemony of a few major Powers.

MADAGASCAR

President Albert Zafy: Fifty years! We are no longer young, but neither are we old yet. This is maturity, an age replete with usefulness and reason, the result of a wealth of experience garnered over half a century. This anniversary provides us with an opportunity to take stock of the last half-century and to examine together ways and means to influence the course of the coming years to ensure that this Organization can genuinely live up to the expectations of all the peoples of the world that yearn for peace, equality, respect for human life, and peaceful technological progress.

MALAWI

President Bakili Muluzi: It would have been nice if the United Nations had performed miracles these past 50 years. It would have been nice if it succeeded in preventing human beings from wantonly slaughtering each other on a regular basis. The UN failed to perform this particular miracle. Human beings all over the world continue to kill each other for political, tribal, religious and all sorts of other reasons. The world has yet to become one big happy family. And this means that the UN still has a crucial role to play in bringing about peace, stability, freedom and justice.

MALI

Prime Minister Ibrahim Boubacar Keita: We hope to see the United Nations live up to the desire of 21st century man to live in peace and security, in social justice and human dignity. How can we fail here to recall the action the Organization has taken to advance the cause of the self-determination of peoples, to eradicate colonialism and to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination and oppression? The UN has thus opened new horizons for many countries and peoples, enabling them to cooperate and to live in brotherhood within a community of interests and fortunes that inspires each people to devote its resources and energy to development, progress and prosperity.

MAURITANIA

Mohamed Salem Ould Lekhal, Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation: The theme of today's commemoration—"We the peoples of the United Nations . . . united for a better world"—must be more than a slogan. May the wisdom and farsightedness of our forebears who wrote the UN Charter inspire us to adopt the conduct and attitudes that will enable us to avoid the misfortunes and disasters of war and insecurity. Mauritania reaffirms its commitment to work to advance the great ideals of our Organization, to consolidate international peace and security and to strengthen cooperation and solidarity amongst all nations for a world free of war, poverty and underdevelopment.

MAURITIUS

Prime Minister Anerood Jugnauth: The United Nations is at the crossroads. It has already been challenged by an unprecedented number of conflicts and humanitarian emergencies on an unprecedented scale throughout the world. The time is not for despair but for a renewal of efforts to rekindle the original aspirations of the UN. The UN must further the common objectives of the world community and promote the economic and social advancement of peoples in all countries, big and small, thus creating conditions for the peaceful development of all.

MOROCCO

Crown Prince Sidi Mohamed: If it is truly our desire to have mankind reap the benefits of UN activities, in particular in the areas of health, development, education and culture, we must not waste time in making the UN capable of addressing the issues that face mankind. This must be done quickly, before there appears on the international political scene another giant harbouring unipolar aspirations who would return us, God forbid, to the era of the cold war from whose consequences humanity suffered so much and from whose influence it was deeply scarred.

MOZAMBIQUE

President Joaquim Alberto Chissano: Our challenge for the next century is to further strengthen the United Nations in order to enable it to deal more efficiently and vigorously with issues related to the maintenance of international peace and security, and to promote sustainable development, human rights and fundamental freedoms. Only these can ensure a better and safer world for all. Development is the twin sister of peace. There can be no sustainable development without lasting peace, nor can there be a lasting peace without sustainable development.

NAMIBIA

President Sam Nujoma: Celebration of the birth, longevity and performance of the United Nations is proper and fitting indeed. The world has been a safer place because of the UN and its continued relevance is beyond question. After 50 years, the Organization is alive and well. Its misfortunes are exaggerated. Failures are those of the Member States and not of the UN. The 50 years of the existence of the UN have brought the peoples of the world closer together than ever before. Indeed, today's world is truly a global village.

NIGER

President Mahamane Ousmane: Whatever its detractors may say, and despite the many obstacles that impede its functioning, we must acknowledge that the United Nations has been at the root of striking qualitative changes on the international scene. It has been at the centre of the accession to independence of many hundreds of millions of people. In the sphere of peace-keeping, it has somehow managed to prevent the repetition of conflicts just as devastating and deadly as the war that brought it into being. It continues to be the best framework for multidirectional thought and action towards a common approach to the ills that beset mankind.

NIGERIA

Tom Ikimi, Minister for Foreign Affairs: The theme of war and peace has confronted the UN since its inception. Indeed, the founding fathers of the world body expressed their determination "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which . . . has brought untold sorrow to mankind". Regrettably, these wars are proliferating mostly in the developing countries and have resulted in mindless human and material waste, destruction and dislocation of social structures, tidal waves of refugees and displacement of populations.

RWANDA

President Pasteur Bizimungu: Mechanisms should be worked out so that the UN can deliver on expectations. In particular, the Security Council must be reformed to make it more representative. The future of our Organization, our future, requires us to strive for unconditional solidarity and more dynamic cooperation. Mankind should never again witness the horrors of genocide that took place in Rwanda, and the current ethnic cleansing in the former Yugoslavia must be brought to an end. We count on the UN to direct and support our efforts to create a better world for humanity.

SENEGAL

Prime Minister Habib Thiam: Our presence bears witness to our renewed adherence to UN ideals and our faith in its unique mission of peace and cooperation, solidarity and progress. International peace and security, economic and social development, humanitarian aid and promotion of the rule of law continue to be permanent objectives which the UN has always been striving to achieve in the constant struggle for freedom. Indeed, the UN has not only persisted in this far-reaching enterprise, it has also inspired a great number of major positive transformations with a view to finding solutions to the problems facing our human race.

SIERRA LEONE

Valentine E. M. Strasser, Head of State: The dreams of those delegates in San Francisco are still shared by every single delegate here in New York. The world has changed; giant nations no longer confront each other with deadly weapons; the Iron Curtain has given way to closer cooperation; the threat of nuclear annihilation has receded. Giant economic blocs are emerging; one-time arch-enemies are now close allies. The resolution of ancient and emerging new conflicts and provision of humanitarian aid to the millions of hungry and dying peoples of the world are problems that the UN has grappled with. These are remarkable achievements.

SOUTH AFRICA

President Nelson R. Mandela: When distinguished leaders came together, half a century ago, to consign to the past a war that had pitted humanity against itself, the ruins and the smoke from the dying fires were the monument to what should not have been. Fifty years after the formation of the United Nations, we meet to affirm our commitment to the founding ideal and the common desire to better the life of all human beings. What challenges us, who define ourselves as "statespersons", is the clarion call to dare to think that what we are about is people—the proverbial man and woman in the street. These—the poor, the hungry, the victims of petty tyrants, the objectives of policy—demand change.

SWAZILAND

King Mswati III, Head of State: I believe the United Nations' founding fathers would have recognized their own goals in those of my generation. They are, after all, what every human being has a right to expect—good health, shelter, security for one's family, freedom to pursue the ideas and beliefs of choice, to be educated and employed and, above all, to be able to live in peace. In the year 2045, I wish to be able to stand and meet the gaze of my children, and my grandchildren, and say, "We did our best."

TOGO

Dahuki Péré, President of the National Assembly: A rapid survey of UN activities over the last 50 years shows that while it has allowed the world to escape a world war of a scope comparable to the last two wars, the effects of which traumatized humanity, our Organization has not fulfilled our hopes—either in the area of peace-keeping or in the area of economic and social development. Despite enormous means invested in safeguarding and restoring regional and international peace, this goal is far from being achieved. UN capabilities in the area of preventive diplomacy and the peaceful settlement of disputes should be strengthened.

TUNISIA

Al-Habib ben Yahia, Minister for Foreign Affairs: The United Nations has done a great deal in the service of peace since its establishment in the difficult times that followed in the wake of World War II. It has saved humanity from destruction and contributed to the emergence of the national liberation movement in various parts of the world. It has championed the advocates of fraternity and equality against the forces of injustice and every form of discrimination. Notwithstanding the difficulties that faced it, the UN has shown itself to be the very embodiment of human wisdom.

UGANDA

President Yoweri Kaguta Museveni: The Organization has in the last 50 years played a role in maintaining peace in the world and we salute its contribution. To properly utilize the United Nations in future, we should clearly define the circumstances under which it should assist the forces of legitimacy and democracy. Most cases which confront the UN are explosions that follow a prolonged period of the disenfranchisement of the people. The best way for the UN to handle such explosions is to seek to restore and support legitimacy.

UNITED REPUBLIC OF TANZANIA

Daudi N. Mwakawago, Chairman of the Delegation: As we meet today, we look back on 50 years of illustrious history. But our main objective is to focus on the future. The Organization needs revitalization. One area is to democratize its structures, especially the Security Council, to reflect current realities. Equitable geographical representation should be the centrepiece of reforms. A second area of concern is development. The scourge of poverty and environmental degradation is the new war facing the UN. It cannot be wished away or left to the developing countries to fight. It requires the solidarity of the international community through the leadership of the UN.

ZAIRE

President Maréchal Mobutu Sese Seko: For us Africans, the United Nations is first and foremost a synonym of re-found dignity and freedom. The UN flag represents the universal emblem of the decolonization of the States of our continent. Indeed, members will recall that when the UN Charter was signed in San Francisco, only a few African countries were among the first 51 States to be admitted. From 1960 to 1990, that is, from the first proclamations of independence to the independence of Namibia, all the other African States have progressively won their seat within the UN.

ZAMBIA

President Frederick J. T. Chiluba: In a world of growing tensions and challenges, the UN has performed well since its inception and deserves a word of appreciation and thanks. The structures of 1945, meant to service an almost homogeneous membership of 50 countries that has since increased almost four-fold, are no longer capable of servicing the bigger and wider globe. Membership has increased in numbers as well as in regional diversity. A restructured and more representative UN will be better equipped to respond to growing demands which have become multifarious in character.

ZIMBABWE

President Robert G. Mugabe: For us in Africa, the contribution of the United Nations in the decolonization and democratization processes has been an outstanding and honourable one, with the result that today southern Africa, once described by a Portuguese seafarer as a "region of storms", has finally and truly become a region of good hope where the oppressive settler regimes, apartheid and other ruthless systems of governance have succumbed to the revolutionary will of the majority, paving the way to peace, stability and regional cooperation.

ASIA AND THE PACIFIC

AFGHANISTAN

Najibullah Lafraie, Minister for Foreign Affairs: Each and every document of the UN talks about respecting the right to life, liberty and security, as well as the will of the nations. During this special commemorative meeting, world leaders have also presented speeches about the future of the world and ways and means of implementing the provisions of the UN Charter, which would remain merely beautiful expressions unless translated into practice. Let us not forget, however, that at this very moment millions of human beings go on living in poverty, hunger and deprivation.

BAHRAIN

Shaikh Mohamed Bin Mubarak Al-Khalifa, Minister for Foreign Affairs: The future of the United Nations depends, now more than ever, on the extent of its ability to influence events and to mould the future, especially in an era of accelerating change and development, influenced by the dramatic communications revolution in the world. If the UN is to carry out its task of peacemaking and ensuring justice, it behooves us, peoples and Governments alike, to present the 21st century with a UN capable of promoting the causes of justice, development and equality for all.

BANGLADESH

Prime Minister Begum Khaleda Zia: If we look around the world today at the numerous conflicts, big and small, at aggression perpetrated against small States, at genocidal conflicts and ethnic cleansing, and denial of the right of lower riparian countries to water of common rivers, there are many who may question the justification of this world body. Despite these drawbacks, mankind has not been able to evolve a more effective forum. The 50th anniversary offers the ideal opportunity to review its achievements and to look forward to a strengthened and reinvigorated United Nations.

BHUTAN

Dawa Tsering, Minister for Foreign Affairs: The United Nations means different things to different nations around the globe. It is only natural that we should view the world through our own perspective, influenced by our historical experience, geographical setting, traditions and value system. For a small nation like Bhutan, membership of the UN enables us to participate in shaping the international agenda on numerous issues that are of importance to our people. We benefit from the activities of the UN family of organizations, whose assistance has made a real difference in the everyday lives of our people.

BRUNEI DARUSSALAM

Sultan Hassanal Bolkiah Mu'izzaddin Waddaulah: The United Nations is still the best Organization to uphold a world order based on international law and the principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity. Interdependence between nations has increased, but has not displaced the sovereignty of nations as the basic principle in international relations. The UN gives all Members, big and small, an equal voice. The UN must change to meet new challenges, but I hope it will continue to give small nations an adequate voice in its deliberations.

CAMBODIA

First Prime Minister Samdech Krom Preah Norodom Ranariddh: The United Nations contribution to world peace has been unique. Through its specialist bodies, it has provided both emergency assistance to people around the world in urgent need and development assistance to help raise the standard of living of millions of people. We salute the staff of these UN organizations and thank them for their noble endeavours. We, Cambodians, are particularly indebted to the Organization for helping our country and people to regain their freedom and independence. Cambodians will never forget the assistance provided to our country by the UN.

CHINA

President Jiang Zemin: Over the past 50 years, the United Nations has done much useful work in mitigating regional conflicts, eradicating colonialism, expediting arms reduction and promoting peace and development in the world. However, it also has its failures and setbacks. The rivalry of certain big Powers has often left the UN in limbo. Moreover, the rights and interests of the large number of developing countries have not been fully respected. Our experience and lessons over the past half century, the Charter's purposes and principles, and epochal themes of peace and development have all placed solemn and urgent demands on us.

CYPRUS

President Glafcos Clerides: The UN Charter, a great human achievement, embodying the wisdom and vision of its drafters to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, constitutes the legal and moral foundation in international relations, and is as valid and relevant today as ever. What is really needed is to reduce the gap between principle and practice created by the failure to apply objectively and universally the Charter provisions, thus causing insecurity, frustration and bitterness. The authority of the Organization must be upheld against those who flout international opinion.

FIJI

Prime Minister Sitiveni Ligamamada Rabuka: The norms of the powerful have in the past been imposed to disinherit indigenous people, and to this day in some places, to deny them the political self-determination essential for their social and economic advancement. The United Nations must guarantee that external values and forces do not continue to coerce political concessions, economic reforms and social changes not desired by indigenous peoples themselves. Not all the wrongs that history has wrought upon indigenous peoples can now be put right. The UN should not hesitate to ensure for these that remedy is expeditious.

INDIA

Prime Minister P. V. Narasimha Rao: The United Nations today includes a much larger number of independent, sovereign States than when it began. In such a context, the UN cannot afford to be seen as either exclusivist or incomplete, either in appearance or in outlook. In particular, an adequate presence of developing countries is needed in the Security Council on the basis of objective criteria: nations of the world must feel that their stakes in global peace and prosperity are factored into the UN decision-making. At the 50th anniversary, we thus have the task of making the UN truly and effectively the global repository of humankind's aspirations.

INDONESIA

President Soeharto: In these troubled times, we, the Governments and peoples of the world, look up to the United Nations for the sustenance of our hopes. There is no question that we need the UN. What we often forget is that the UN needs us too. We applaud its triumphs, but we often forget that its failures are ours too. Its responsibility is our responsibility. It is our hope that during the next 50 years strides can be made in achieving better harmony between the national self-interest and the legitimate rights of the less empowered people of the world.

IRAN

Ali Akbar Velayati, Minister for Foreign Affairs: The UN gains its strength from its universal character, which is even more impressive in light of the diversity of its constituent elements. Faith in, and thus protection of, fundamental human rights, the dignity and worth of the human person, and equal rights of men and women cannot be divorced from respect for equality of nations, large and small. There can therefore be no justification for any attempt to impose the will or values of a few over the rest of humanity, or to enhance the perception of security of the privileged few at the expense of subjecting the rest of humanity to the nightmare of nuclear holocaust.

IRAQ

Vice-President Taha M. Marouf: With the end of the cold war, all the grandiose hopes for a new era of peace have given way to an emergent unipolarism, with many armed conflicts, on both the international and the domestic levels. Within the UN, it has spawned types of behaviour characterized by selectivity, double standards and putting the UN mechanisms at the service of narrow self-interest. Now that we can diagnose the ailment, we have to be quick with the remedy. We should begin by activating the democratic process in the work of the UN.

ISRAEL

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin: In the past 50 years, this podium has seen empires fall and borders erased. But it has also seen people awaken to their freedom and the nations of the world display their flags side by side. We are grateful to the international community for its encouragement at this historic moment which is unfolding on our little plot of land.

The road is still long. However, we are determined to continue until we have brought peace to the region, for our children and our children's children and for all the peoples of the region. This is our mission. We will fulfil it. Israel celebrates here with everyone—with all those attending here and with the entire world—50 years of the United Nations.

JAPAN

Prime Minister Tomiichi Muroyama: We have only five years left to the 21st century. Humankind has reached the stage at which we should all join hands and advance together so that the coming century will be one of hope, in which we can look forward to the creation and development of a new global civilization. On this occasion, I should like to reaffirm the determination that the people of Japan made 50 years ago to live in peace, trusting in the justice and faith of the peace-loving peoples of the world. As the exploration of a new vision for the United Nations continues, Japan will enhance its support for the Organization.

JORDAN

King Hussein Ibn Talal: I may not be the eldest head of State among you, but God has willed that I should be the longest serving, and the one who has dealt with the United Nations for the longest period. I recall, at an early age, witnessing the endeavours of men like Trygve Lie, Count Bernadotte, Ralph Bunche, Dag Hammarskjöld, and Gunnar Jarring and many others who have served the cause of peace and stability in our region. We acknowledge our debt to the men and women of the UN who have worked over the years to preserve peace in our region and feel proud to have contributed to serve the same lofty ideals in other regions.

KAZAKSTAN

President Nursultan Nazarbaev: No international structure on the eve of the 21st century will be capable of effectively resolving the issues of global security and social and political development without taking into consideration the new global balances. Today, we should be grateful to the United Nations for its effective endeavours, which have helped us all to avert potential global disasters in the second half of the 20th century. This is an undoubted accomplishment of the UN and its principal bodies and structures.

KUWAIT

Sheik Jaber Al-Ahmad Al-Jaber Al-Sabah, Amir of the State: Global confidence in the United Nations system has been on the rise since it has become a beacon of hope for alleviating and redressing the human suffering caused by aggression and oppression in all their forms and manifestations. We trust that the Organization will become even more effective in confronting mankind's global problems in the coming century. Such a contribution would indeed consolidate the lofty human values of benevolence, cooperation and interdependence for the common benefit of all human beings who yearn for a peaceful and dignified life.

KYRGYZSTAN

Mukar Cholponbayev, Chairman of the Legislative Chamber: As representatives of an ancient people but a young nation, and reflecting on our own history and the half-century of efforts to create a new code of international cooperation, we express profound gratitude to the founding fathers of the UN. The world community has been successful in interrupting the tragic cycle of world wars. Today, our discussions cover not the problems of global war, but rather global development. The UN is a living body and it is needed by all of us. Let us then join efforts to make it more effective and more responsive to contemporary challenges.

LAO PEOPLE'S DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC

Deputy Prime Minister Khamphoui Keoboulapha: During the last five decades, our universal Organization has been sorely tried in many conflicts and upheavals in various parts of the world. Despite the difficulties encountered, the United Nations has survived and strengthened its role in solving world problems. While we welcome what has been achieved, we cannot but confirm the fact that today's world is entering a new era—an era of cooperation for development. Yet the world is still without true peace. The realities of the world today show us that true peace cannot prevail until the imperatives of socio-economic development have been adequately addressed.

LEBANON

Bahige Tabbarah, Minister of Justice: The UN is not only a unique forum where Members can have their voices heard, and their complaints addressed. It is primarily the international institution that provides assistance and support to the developing countries so that they, in turn, can build their economies and their societies, and gradually bridge the gap between the industrial and the developing countries. World peace and understanding and respect for human rights cannot be permanent unless the economic gap between the rich and the poor countries of the world is bridged.

MALAYSIA

Datuk Abdullah bin Hadji Ahmad Badawi, Minister for Foreign Affairs: We strongly believe that the UN should be the body to promote globalism and pluralism. It must stand clearly on the side of universal values in combating genocide and aggression. Peace and security cannot be built on arms reduction alone. Development focused on eradication of poverty and the removal of bottlenecks towards global prosperity must remain a UN priority. The UN should not become an instrument for disciplining developing countries, while allowing for power politics and global domination by a few powerful countries.

MALDIVES

President Maumoon Abdul Gayoom: Fifty years ago, the UN was created to serve all peoples—rich and poor alike; big and small on an equal footing—based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members. My question is this: has the UN been successful in the even-handed application of this principle and in ensuring the protection and security of small States? Today, the world needs an organization that will aim at a world of shared economic prosperity and national security and one in which communities can live in harmony with one another and with the environment.

MARSHALL ISLANDS

President Amata Kabua: Today is an occasion to celebrate half a century of the existence of the United Nations and its accomplishments, and also to reflect over how, collectively, we may better chart our path and more clearly articulate our goals for the next 50 years or so. The current political landscape is vastly different from that of 50 years ago. This requires the UN critically to examine its performance and structures in search of practical solutions. It is imperative that those elements which are antiquated, and no longer minister to the needs of a continually changing humanity, be swept away and relegated to the currents of history.

MICRONESIA

President Bailey Olter: The accomplishments of the UN as a forum for advancing world peace and security cannot be minimized. But this Organization has an even greater mission. As populations grow and make increasing demands on the planet's limited resources, even the most richly endowed must come to understand the great, futuristic vision of the Charter. It wisely calls upon peoples and Governments, large and small, rich and poor, to incorporate in their policies and actions true respect for the rights of all, including the least privileged, to live in conditions of decency and equality.

MONGOLIA

President Punsalmaagiin Ochirbat: The UN, having risen from the ashes of the most devastating war in the history of mankind, is today celebrating its golden anniversary with a renewed sense of purpose and confidence in the future. From a distance of 50 years, one could reasonably argue that there were no victors nor vanquished, and that the sole winner was the entire human race. But the 50 million who perished in the war will always be a stark reminder of the imperative still fundamental today—to persevere in our collective efforts to achieve peace, progress and social justice.

MYANMAR

Maung Aye, Vice Chairman of the State Law and Order Restoration Council: The international community has changed considerably in the past 50 years; yet the UN Charter framed in June 1945 continues to be valid. Its principles—the equality of sovereign States, territorial integrity, the political independence of States and the peaceful resolution of conflicts—must remain inviolate and be faithfully observed in international relations. Erosion of these fundamental principles will undermine the aims and purposes of the Organization. Any attempt to weaken the time-honoured and universally accepted principles of sovereignty would be cause for serious concern.

NEPAL

Prime Minister Sher Bahadur Deuba: The spectre of a global nuclear catastrophe which has haunted humanity since 1945 is less threatening now with the end of the cold war. The Organization's functional approach to peace has provided economic relief to the less privileged regions of the world and restored human dignity to the neglected segments of our global society. While we are currently caught in a dilemma between our efforts to forge a new world order and face the reality of a global disorder, there is a strong need to reinforce some of its mechanisms to cope with the demanding times.

OMAN

Fahad Bin Mahmoud Al Said, Deputy Prime Minister for Council of Ministers: The past epoch of United Nations history has been a period of many a positive achievement, thanks to the effectiveness of multilateral action. The fact that the UN has been able to surmount the many great difficulties that stood in its path attests to the success of the Organization and its Member States. However, the achievement of peace, security, economic prosperity and social well-being on a basis of equality and justice will not be possible unless we strengthen our collective efforts and give priority to development plans on the individual and the collective levels.

PAKISTAN

Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto: Fifty years ago this day, men and women of vision assembled to create an Organization to save the world from war. For 50 years, there has been no global conflict. We applaud the United Nations humanitarian and peace-keeping interventions, to which the brave sons of Pakistan have contributed with their own blood. We welcome the UN efforts to emphasize social issues, including population, social development, women and human settlements. Let us remember the words of the philosopher Spinoza, who said: "Peace is not merely the absence of war. It is a virtue that springs from force of character."

PALAU

President Kuniwo Nakamura: The UN represents the most ambitious and noble attempt humankind has ever made to craft a lens with which to transcend self-interest as individuals and as nations. With such a lens, we are able to consider issues from the vantage point of the representatives of our close-knit global family who will come here to the United Nations 50 and 100 years from now to celebrate future anniversaries of this magnificent institution. When my ancestors sailed from South-East Asia to Palau, they needed courage, knowledge and wisdom. As nations, we too will need all of these qualities in the coming years.

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

Ben Micah, Special Envoy of the Prime Minister: The end of the cold war provides a rare opportunity to the international community to divert its energies and resources towards positive development directed at meeting the basic needs of our people and, thereby, ensuring long-term peace and stability. The UN no doubt remains the only global entity capable of shaping international consensus in order to instil confidence and facilitate international development cooperation. Papua New Guinea stands to salute the achievements of the UN, and will continue to support the noble cause and objectives of the Organization.

PHILIPPINES

President Fidel V. Ramos: In five turbulent decades we have seen the decolonization of virtually the whole world, the rise of human rights to the forefront of world concerns, the engagement of our world community in reform for the welfare of children, women, minorities and the environment, and, most of all, the work of re-engineering development in the poor regions of the world. Now we must ensure that this Organization is adequate to meet the challenges of a new era. Let us remember that the United Nations was created—as the Charter says—"to promote better standards of life in larger freedom" all over the world.

QATAR

Deputy Prime Minister Sheikh Abdulla bin Khalifa Al Thani: We ardently hope to see the birth of a new United Nations, which can firmly and effectively face up to the challenges of wars, internal conflicts, ethnic intolerance and other hurdles which hold back mankind's progress. This can happen only if the Organization can do more than set up machinery to deal with conflicts after they erupt. Preventive measures should be taken to forestall such conflagrations through the development of societies, economically and socially, and combating poverty, sickness and all the other causes of underdevelopment.

REPUBLIC OF KOREA

President Kim Young Sam: The dreams of the founders of the United Nations of a better world have already changed our planet tremendously. Riding the crest of the information age and globalization, not only is the international order undergoing an epochal change, but human civilization itself is being radically transformed. Change and reform in the UN are necessary if the Organization is to create and maintain the new world order. The UN has to be democratized and made more efficient; and every region of the world must be more equitably represented on the Security Council.

SAMOA

Tuiloma Neroni Slade, Chairman of the Delegation: My own country, like so many in this Hall, came to independence through the process of decolonization made possible only through the central role played by the United Nations. That process was a historic achievement. We now have an Organization structured by a few, half-a-century ago, that has to respond to the needs of many more, and to a world which is fundamentally different and which continues to change. It needs to be reformed and assured of the financial resources it needs. Membership of the Security Council must be enlarged to reflect the realities of the present time and to enhance its effectiveness and legitimacy.

SAUDI ARABIA

Prince Sultan bin Abdulaziz Al Saud, Second Deputy Prime Minister: The capabilities the UN has demonstrated over the past 50 years makes us determined to continue to support it. If the yardstick of its success lies in its effectiveness in serving the cause of international peace and security, we must underscore the importance of abiding by its Charter, and enforcing its resolutions. It is the hope of The Custodian of The Two Holy Mosques that our celebration today will make a watershed in the history of our Organization to enable it to achieve its goals and make it possible for all peoples of the world to live in security and achieve continued progress.

SINGAPORE

Prime Minister Goh Chok Tong: The United Nations has been criticized, even maligned. Some of the criticisms are valid, but many of them are unfair. Let us not forget that the UN has contributed to a better world, despite its shortcomings and failures in several areas. The UN may not necessarily be the prime mover in many world events, given the increasing strength of regional and multilateral bodies. But it has a very important integrative function: that of maintaining global coherence and ensuring that no country is excluded in the march towards security, peace and prosperity.

SOLOMON ISLANDS

Deputy Prime Minister Danny Philip: In the course of the last five decades, the United Nations did much to expand and strengthen the community of nations. In the Pacific, for example, the UN has been a critical factor in the emergence of independent States. The recent international recognition of the vulnerability of small island developing States to adverse economic conditions, as well as to natural and environmental disasters, is a significant example of the family of nations building mutual trust, support and respect. As the founders of this Organization understood, our problems are ultimately moral and spiritual in nature. Therefore, the very work of diplomacy can be successful only in an atmosphere of tolerance.

SRI LANKA

President Chandrika Bandaranaike Kumaratunga: The effective strengthening of the United Nations system is an essential requisite for advancing its goals. The Organization has regrettably sometimes come to be seen by the more vulnerable States as primarily serving the interests of the more powerful States. The revitalizing process must enhance the capacity of the UN, rather than merely effect economies and scale down its scope. In the end, the UN will essentially be what we, the Member States, make of it—not what individual States seek to make from it.

SYRIAN ARAB REPUBLIC

Farouk Al Shara', Minister for Foreign Affairs: A unanimity has crystallized among States of the world on the need to reform the UN, to render it more efficient for present and future challenges. The improvement in UN performance and the democratization of decision-making within it cannot be attained if stronger and richer States impose their selfish interests at the expense of the overwhelming majority of the world's countries. It is the tendency to do just that which lies at the source of genuine concern that has been generated by certain recent practices and experiences.

TAJIKISTAN

President Emomali Rakhmonov: Designed to help States resolve disputes in a peaceful manner, the UN today faces a new challenge: to make wider use of preventive diplomacy. The peacemaking potential of the UN can be coupled with its cooperation with regional organizations, primarily in deterring, confining and settling armed conflicts and in countering terrorism and radical manifestations of fundamentalism of various kinds. The best prospects for defending our national interests lie in cooperation with the UN, the OSCE, and other international organizations.

THAILAND

Prime Minister Banharn Silpa-Archa: In this day and age, where uncertainty lurks at every turn, and where sustainable development poses a challenge, the United Nations is more important than ever. Its role in South-East Asia has shown that, with the right kind of support, it is indeed capable of promoting "happiness in tranquility". We should see to it that the Organization concentrates on the things which only it can do, or which it can do better than any other international body: to stop people from killing each other, to get people to treat each other fairly, and to help people live in an environment of their own choosing.

TURKMENISTAN

President Saparmurat Niyazov: The 20th century ideological confrontation between blocs is gone, and mankind must choose which way to go. We stand together with those who believe in the philosophy of uniting the world while recognizing existing differences. We stand together with those who recognize the primacy of the United Nations in devising programmes of civilized partnership free from diktat and the imposition of ideas and ways of life. The new non-polar world is a community of equal partners. There should be no elite countries with special powers and prerogatives that rightfully belong to the entire world community.

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

Deputy Prime Minister Sheikh Sultan bin Zayed Al-Nahayan: Our participation in these celebrations clearly reflects our firm belief in the important and historic role of the United Nations in the establishment of a new era of international relations and in strengthening peace and security, especially in the Arab region, a region that has been ravaged, over the past few decades, by numerous wars and conflicts that have consumed its material and human energy and resources. The UN should perform a larger role in addressing those problems and in realizing the hopes and aspirations of the region's peoples.

UZBEKISTAN

President Islam A. Karimov: Today, the newly independent States on the post-Soviet space are in the process of laying the foundations of their national statehood and advancing towards democratic reforms for which they need support from the world community to expedite their integration into international structures. The consistency and irreversibility of reforms, democratization and a free market economy must be maintained. This will enable us to secure the place we deserve in the world community.

VANUATU

Prime Minister Maxime Carlot Korman: At a time when we are celebrating the 50th anniversary of the United Nations and, in particular, the development programmes adopted and applied for the benefit of Member States, and the means established to guarantee international peace and security, it is our duty to do more to help the Organization face the new challenges of the 21st century. Vanuatu assures the Secretary-General of its support for initiatives for reform. Let us respect peoples and guarantee life in the regions of our world. Let us effectively protect the environment in our respective regions. Let us together build a more pacific world.

VIETNAM

President Le Duc Anh: Over the past 50 years, the growth of the UN has been closely linked with the struggle of peoples for the right to self-determination and for UN Charter principles. Paradoxically, just when mankind has acquired the technology to reduce the distance between the Earth and other celestial bodies, the gap between the rich and the poor has widened alarmingly. Every day, we witness the human tragedy of countless innocent people—victims of wars, conflicts, economic embargoes and epidemics. The international community should do its utmost to ensure the enjoyment of fundamental rights to a life in peace.

YEMEN

Vice-President Abdourabou Mansour Hadi: Despite the challenges and difficulties facing the Organization as it discharges its functions and reaffirms its character, the last five decades have yielded important historic achievements, which have helped us to arrive at forming a collective future vision. Its greatest achievement is, perhaps, that it has spared mankind the horrors of a third world war. The Organization has also contributed to the liberation of nations, the raising of mankind's standard of living and the affirmation of the human right to a free and dignified life.

EASTERN EUROPE

ALBANIA

President Sali Berisha: The fall of the Iron Curtain—on which the United Nations had a positive influence—averted the threat of a large scale confrontation and ushered in a period of difficult transition for the countries of Eastern Europe. In this process, international institutions turned out to be not always interlocking, but interblocking. The international community, heading into the 21st century, is growing ever more aware of the need to redirect its advance towards a more reliable international order for everybody. The UN and its agencies can render a new contribution to this trend, to the benefit of present history.

ARMENIA

President Levon Ter-Petrossian: In view of the situation in 1945, it was only natural that the Charter of the UN should deal primarily with the maintenance of international peace and security. The UN played a pivotal role in the reconstruction that followed the devastation of the world war, and it has so far been able to prevent the world being plunged into global conflict. Even during the cold war, the very existence of an international forum in which countries might discuss global issues prevented the outbreak of many conflicts.

AZERBAIJAN

President Heydar Alirza ogly Aliyev: Great positive changes have occurred since the establishment of the United Nations involving the complete rebuilding of the world and practical implementation of the UN Charter. It was possible to avoid a new world war. Colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination have become history. Confirmation of common human values, ideas of freedom, democracy and human rights has become widely expanded. The UN has played a special role. But problems involving international terrorism, weapons proliferation, hunger, poverty and environmental disasters require radical solutions.

BELARUS

President Alyaksandr Lukashenka: The United Nations would do well today to think not so much about what has been done as about what still remains to be done. Unfortunately, on the threshold of the third millennium, the world is still burdened by many problems characteristic of the past: wars; armed conflicts in various regions; terrorism and other types of crime; environmental disasters; poverty; and hunger. Many other things threaten the future of mankind. The UN alone, this universal Organization, which reflects the interests of all peoples of the Earth, can unite the efforts of the community of nations in resolving these problems.

BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA

President Alija Izetbegovic: The United Nations, whose anniversary we celebrate today, has always been a source of our hope, but also a constant cause of our disappointment. Some say that it is the largest, but, on occasion, the most inefficient body in human history. The number of unimplemented resolutions is a proof of this. Being as it is, our Organization probably reflects the imperfections of our world. If the continuous improvement of the world is not work in vain, the further improvement of the UN is not only possible but very necessary. The supreme goal is the maintenance of peace.

BULGARIA

President Zhelyu Zhelev: Without the principles laid down in the UN Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the 1989 "velvet" revolutions in Eastern Europe would hardly have been able to sweep away the totalitarian regimes equipped, as they were, with the powerful tools of demagoguery, propaganda and terror. The two documents proclaimed, once and for all, the universal validity of fundamental human rights. They held out the promise of social progress and a higher standard of living through individual freedom and free enterprise. Our historical experience has taught us that unity is strength.

CROATIA

President Franjo Tudjman: So much power has convened today under the roof of the General Assembly Hall, and yet, so little power to provide the necessary solutions for a better common future. We are faced with a long and arduous road, but we can look back with pride on the 50 years of our common history. The UN must also be a garden of ideas related to general human values, international solidarity and an equitable international order. Our responsibility for narrowing the gap in economic development and for promoting coordinated development of all parts of our planet is equal to our responsibility for global peace.

CZECH REPUBLIC

President Vaclav Havel: In my vision, the UN of the future would become more clearly an instrument serving all inhabitants of our planet, an instrument for pursuing their good life together. The point is not to expropriate any part of their internal identification with their own country, their people, their religious or cultural roots. The point is to forge a world in which everyone could be himself without being menaced by another. The form of a 21st century UN could be shaped precisely by this spirit, by this sense of responsibility.

ESTONIA

President Lennart Meri: We, the small nations, are easily wounded; thus we are more sensitive. Because we are more sensitive, we are able to react more quickly. Because we are able to react more quickly, we are consequently more idealistic. Small States are more idealistic, so it follows that a more active hope and a desire to remain true to our principles lives in our midst. It was this hope, it was this dedication to principles upon which, under the circumstances, this Organization was founded 50 years ago.

GEORGIA

Alexander Chikvaidze, Minister for Foreign Affairs: We believe that the new philosophy of the United Nations must give priority to the strategy of "making" peace over "keeping" peace. The UN is obliged to break with neutrality in favour of mandatory implementation of Charter principles with regard to those who break the peace. There is also a need for a new method of decision-making, focusing on implementation, rather than be excessively preoccupied with procedure and self-serving adjustable wording. We must have the courage and the will to call an aggressor an aggressor, and genocide, genocide.

HUNGARY

President Árpád Göncz: We should not forget that the strengths and weaknesses or the accomplishments and failures of the Organization are our common responsibility. In this respect, the vision of the founding fathers "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war" remains to be pursued vigorously for all of us. For so many in the world, the United Nations is a beacon of hope and help. We ourselves felt this when in 1956 Hungarians in our revolution and national freedom fight, including myself, took courage from the distant but clear voice of solidarity coming from this very Hall. We remain deeply grateful for that.

LATVIA

President Guntis Ulmanis: Much has been achieved during the existence of the UN. Peace and reconciliation have been made possible through preventive diplomacy and peace-keeping under UN auspices. Humanitarian assistance has been brought to crisis points around the world, ensuring survival and shelter for millions of people. The Organization has been a forum in which initiatives vitally important for humanity have been launched. The end of the cold war has given us an opportunity to fulfil the vision of the founders of the UN: the creation of a global order in which the principles of the Charter are respected and its purposes achieved.

LITHUANIA

President Algirdas Mykolas Brazauskas: Fifty years of United Nations work have been crowned with tangible and laudable achievements. Most importantly, the number of democratic States has increased dramatically over those years. The global nuclear threat has decreased. Yet, the thread of life remains vulnerable. We have no other choice but to live together, seeking to better understand one another and to cooperate more closely. That is the basis of my optimism and faith in man, as well as in the future.

POLAND

Prime Minister Jozef Oleksy: The world needs devoted leadership, commitment and far-sighted vision as much as it needs oxygen. It needs perseverance in the promotion of trust between States and their organizations. If we, the United Nations—united not, as 50 years ago, against someone, but driven by the desire for peaceful cooperation—show sufficient determination to give effect to our own proposals, the world stands a chance of ensuring a better and safer life in the 21st century. It stands a chance of ensuring lasting peace and sustained development for all, and ensuring respect for the rights of the citizens of this globe.

REPUBLIC OF MOLDOVA

President Mircea Ion Snegur: The important international event that has brought us together has a profound historical significance. Shaken by the horrors of the Second World War and guided by the firm conviction that such apocalyptic cataclysms should never happen again, the free nations and their spiritual leaders laid the foundation of the United Nations 50 years ago. From this perspective, the first words of the Charter—"We the peoples of the United Nations"—are a natural expression of the world community's feeling of shared responsibility for the destiny of humankind.

ROMANIA

President Ion Iliescu: Our most important duty now, on the 50th anniversary of the United Nations, is to make the chance of a new beginning come to fruition. Released from the fetters of bipolarity and of the cold war, the international system has regained its natural freedom of movement. Instead of ending, history is in fact starting again! We have the chance of a new beginning! The UN has a very full agenda for the 21st century. What we can do, even as of today, is to review its functional structures, mechanisms and architecture in order to render them capable of addressing those issues.

RUSSIAN FEDERATION

President Boris N. Yeltsin: Half a century ago, an event occurred that paved the way to a new period in the history of mankind. Divided and bleeding, the world understood that its future was the path of mutual understanding and interaction. Only the United Nations will be able to realize the perennial dream of a world without wars and violence; of a world where controversial issues are settled through negotiation. While having won the world war, we have not yet managed to win peace. Today, the world more than ever before needs not only equality and tolerance, but also respect for the identity of each State.

SLOVAKIA

President Michal Kováč: The United Nations is a living organism; it enjoys periods of success, but is aware of its weaknesses as well. On the one hand, we can appreciate the past and present role of the Organization in resolving issues related to peace and security. On the other, social issues, as well as the process of strengthening democracy and protecting human rights, will require a more sensitive and more effective approach in the future. We are currently witnessing growth in the UN role in the field of economic and social development, where a certain disproportion exists.

SLOVENIA

President Milan Kucan: The United Nations has undoubtedly justified its establishment in its 50 years of existence. However, the goals defined in the UN Charter have not yet been realized. On the contrary, in the key area of its activity, the maintenance of international peace and security, the UN is burdened by an alarming lack of success. The genuine effectiveness of the UN in the maintenance of international peace and security is of crucial importance for the future of the Organization.

THE FORMER YUGOSLAV REPUBLIC OF MACEDONIA

Acting President Stojan Andov: The UN Charter has survived the test of the past five decades and continues to be the basic framework on which world peace, security, cooperation, and economic and social development can successfully be built. In the past five decades, the world has changed substantially. The reforms we envisage are aimed at increasing the efficiency of the work done by the UN and its bodies, strengthening the role of the UN in preserving world peace, enhancing collective security and harmonizing global economic and social development.

UKRAINE

President Leonid D. Kuchma: The peoples of the Earth in 1945 received a unique instrument for consolidating mankind as a single universal organism in its efforts to survive and build a better world. At that time, the UN might have been the only universal forum in which Ukraine could proclaim its existence as a country. The support of the UN promoted the realization of our age-old aspiration to have a State of our own. Finally, I place great hopes in the future of the UN which brings us closer to the moment when we shall be able to say, "The United Nations means a united world".

WESTERN EUROPE AND OTHER STATES

ANDORRA

Prime Minister Marc Forné Molné: In the face of ever-present examples of lack of tolerance and solidarity, it might seem that to speak of the "human family" is to speak of a desire rather than of a reality. Making facts accord with words spoken in this forum depends on us. We celebrate joyfully the establishment of the United Nations and wish it well on its first half-century of existence. Today, we all pledge to help it advance, as a standard of equality among men and women and peoples, an advocate of tolerance, an instrument for promoting peace, for defending our natural heritage and for development. Many happy returns, United Nations!

AUSTRALIA

Governor-General Bill Hayden: The world is a very different place from the one which, 50 years ago, gave birth to the United Nations. As delegates in San Francisco in June 1945 prepared to sign the UN Charter, most of Europe and a great deal of Asia stood in ruins, over 48 million people had died and the survivors of the greatest conflict in human history asked themselves what could be done to stop such a catastrophe from ever happening again. Their answer was to create an organization which sought to enshrine the universal values of tolerance, social progress and respect for human dignity within international machinery.

AUSTRIA

Federal President Thomas Klestil: Ever since the first moments of its existence, the United Nations has been torn between idealism and power politics, between solidarity and egoism. It has always mirrored the state of the world, but at the same time, it has been much more than the sum total of national interests. But the most fateful contradiction was already present at its creation. It was to be a community of nations, but the famous opening words of the Charter read: "We, the peoples". The history of the UN is the perpetual attempt to bring the world Organization closer to the people and to forge them into a genuine community of humankind.

BELGIUM

Prime Minister Jean-Luc Dehaene: This 50th anniversary should be an opportunity to adapt the United Nations to new realities and to equip it to face the challenges of the next century. The best contribution of the international community to peace and security is to avoid the outbreak of conflicts by means of preventive diplomacy. The UN requires reform if it is to become more efficient and effective. But we must first give it a solid financial base. As a reflection of its Member States, the UN can do nothing unless we confirm our political commitment and comply with financial obligations.

CANADA

Prime Minister Jean Chrétien: For 50 years now the United Nations has symbolized Canada's best hopes for a world at peace. Today, more than ever, we need the UN to maintain international stability and order, to tackle problems that do not respect borders—such as AIDS, drugs and terrorism. Countries should pay their dues now. Fifty years ago, in the ashes of a world war, in the shadow of 50 million dead, our predecessors found the strength to believe in a better future, and the courage and determination to build one. The result was the establishment of the UN. Surely we, the leaders of 1995, should do no less.

DENMARK

Prime Minister Poul Nyrup Rasmussen: We, the political leaders, are responsible for pointing the way for the United Nations. We set the agenda. We decide the priorities. The problems of the UN are our problems and our responsibility. Reform and rationalization are needed. So is the will to provide the Organization with political support and financial resources. The UN is exactly as strong as we make it. If the Organization does not fulfil our expectations, our credibility is at stake. Instead of criticizing the UN for not doing enough, we should take a close look at ourselves to see if we are doing enough for the UN.

FINLAND

President Martti Ahtisaari: The end of the cold war has provided the United Nations with new opportunities to strengthen international peace and security. It has helped the world to focus on threats to our common security which are not amenable to resolution by military means. For five decades, the UN has sought to provide security in the broadest sense of the word. The world Organization has been a source of inspiration and an obstacle to cynicism. We may not always recognize its efforts, and we may sometimes even resent them. But we cannot do without it.

FRANCE

President Jacques Chirac: Fifty years after our Charter was drafted, its aims have lost none of their relevance: peace and disarmament, democracy and development, the promotion of human rights and the fight against the great scourges that threaten mankind. In these 50 years, a body of common values has gradually come to be asserted. Today, we must focus our efforts on the adaptation and renewal of our Organization, above all by giving it the resources to operate. The temptation to disengage threatens the very existence of the UN. The world needs solidarity, and yes, it needs the United Nations!

GERMANY

Klaus Kinkel, Vice-Chancellor and Minister for Foreign Affairs: Unfortunately, history does not always follow the straight paths of reason, but it does give us opportunities for progress which sometimes border on the miraculous. Today, on the threshold of a new millennium, we must learn the right lessons from the experiences gained over the last 50 years. We cannot change what lies behind us, but we can do better in the future. We must influence and shape what lies ahead. What is the challenge we are facing? Nothing less than to keep the Earth habitable for our children and grandchildren; to make sure that 8 or 10 billion people can live in humane conditions.

GREECE

President Constantinos Stephanopoulos: The primary objective of the UN—that of preserving new generations from the scourge of war—has been partially achieved. Thanks to what has been called the balance of terror among the Powers, but also thanks to the existence of the UN, it has been possible to avoid having the cold war transformed into a new global conflict. The UN has always been a forum for discussion and conciliation, and has been able to adopt significant resolutions which have not all remained a dead letter—quite the opposite. Strengthening the effectiveness of the UN would be to the advantage of all.

ICELAND

Prime Minister David Oddsson: The fiftieth anniversary of the UN is an occasion to reaffirm our commitment to this indispensable Organization and its ideals. To ensure that the UN lives up to its full potential, the process of adapting it to a changing global agenda must be brought to a successful conclusion. Necessary reforms need to be agreed upon and implemented without delay. The composition of the Security Council should reflect new realities, and the General Assembly should become more focused on relevance and efficiency.

IRELAND

President Mary Robinson: The 51 States that founded this Organization in 1945 wrought well. The United Nations has become the first universal organization of States in human history and it has shaped the whole structure of international relations through the second half of the 20th century. But our special commemorative session will be an empty ritual, quickly forgotten, if we limit ourselves to congratulation. This is a time to adapt and renew what we have inherited; a time for vision, equal now to that of half a century ago; above all a time for Member States to make a new commitment and carry it through in action.

ITALY

Susanna Agnelli, Minister for Foreign Affairs: Fifty years ago the world's leaders succeeded in uniting all countries and peoples around common ideals and values. The result has been 50 years without a major war. The world has changed in the last 50 years and the United Nations has to change with it. International conflicts have been replaced by internal ones, characterized by political, economic, ethnic and religious tensions that often imply grave humanitarian crisis and human rights violations. We must seek new formulas and instruments to face the new crises. A reform of our Organization is clearly needed.

LIECHTENSTEIN

Prime Minister Mario Frick: We must look forward and strengthen the capacities and the effectiveness of the United Nations, which today, more than ever, is faced with numerous, enormous tasks. New problems and new challenges call for new, creative and flexible approaches. No one can deny that the United Nations today is not always able to respond swiftly and effectively to sometimes rapidly changing situations. A comprehensive reform and restructuring of the UN system is necessary to achieve this goal. No reform, however artful, will succeed unless the UN has a sound financial base.

LUXEMBOURG

Deputy Prime Minister Jacques F. Poos: Despite the paralysis engendered by the cold war, the UN was able to ensure relative stability by preventing the outbreak of a major conflagration and by limiting the scope and intensity of existing conflicts. The UN improved the living conditions of and offered sanctuary to hundreds of millions of the disinherited and homeless. It alone has the authority and legitimacy to attempt to meet such challenges as complex political, military and humanitarian crises, international terrorism, arms proliferation, drug trafficking, and environmental degradation.

MALTA

Deputy Prime Minister Guido de Marco: These first 50 years have shown that the moral and political foundations of the United Nations are rooted in ideals and aspirations which go beyond a simple aggregate of membership and the search for pragmatic solutions to specific and immediate problems. The whole is more than the sum of its parts. The founding fathers of the United Nations hitched their wagon to a star in charting the course of the future. This global vision rests and depends on the recognition of and respect for the rights, freedoms and dignity of each and every human being.

MONACO

Prince Rainier III, Head of State: The terrible images of the Second World War, of horrible combats, of massive destruction, of endless suffering, remind us of the dangers that brought 51 countries to San Francisco. We still see too often the tragic picture of civilians fleeing the fighting and taking the road of exodus to uncertain destinations; we see families, women and old people completely abandoned. In all circumstances, the UN has done its utmost, with the authority and means available to it, to help promote a return to peace, to protect the peoples exposed to danger and to ease the suffering of victims.

NETHERLANDS

Prime Minister Wim Kok: This Commemorative Meeting is a good opportunity to reflect on both the achievements and the shortcomings of the United Nations. We have to ask ourselves why, after 50 years, so few of the original ideals laid down in the Charter have been fully realized. We also have to be aware that we, the Member States, play a crucial role in every success or failure of the UN. The main task before us is to come to grips with reality. We must determine what it is that we want from the UN and how much we are willing to pay, politically and financially, in order to let the Organization do its work.

NEW ZEALAND

Prime Minister James Brendan Bolger: Those who founded this Organization had a vision of a better world. Some of that vision has been achieved. The spread of human rights and democracy and UN support for the role of women, for a fair trading system, for the protection of the environment—all these achievements must be recognized and celebrated. Today, the generation raised in the shadow of the cold war has the opportunity to direct its energy to the protection and enhancement of the planet, not its destruction. Let us put differences to one side and learn to live with diversity. There is so much we can accomplish by working together.

NORWAY

Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland: To millions of people, the United Nations has meant food where there was none, vaccination where epidemics raged, a school to attend, a new well in the village, and Blue Helmets who kept belligerents apart, shielding civil life. To scores of new nations, access to this rostrum meant sovereignty and self-determination. From this rostrum, for 50 years, all countries have been able to call for world attention. But let us not only commemorate the past. Let us also chart a new beginning. The ploughshare that worked for five decades is worn. Let us forge a new one.

PORTUGAL

President Mario Soares: Tribute must be paid to the United Nations for its steadfast efforts to further peace, dialogue and development. In a rapidly changing world, in the face of unstoppable processes of globalization, the United Nations must do everything it can to ensure that changes occur without serious disruptions and in the service of all mankind. We must, however, have the courage to recognize that the gap that separates the poor countries from the wealthy is growing ever wider and is becoming truly explosive. Will we be capable of ensuring peace, our most precious asset?

SAN MARINO

Captain Regent Piero Natalino Mularoni: No more wars! This is the strong and resolute appeal that the Captains Regent of the Republic of San Marino wish to reiterate to this Assembly. Over the years, this very Hall has witnessed the celebration of many achievements, the real sharing and resolution of peoples' problems, the condemnation of unfair treatment and dictatorships, as well as the admission of many peoples once exploited by colonial regimes and oppressed by intolerant systems. No more wars! This is the appeal of a small country which is also one of the newest UN Members.

SPAIN

Felipe Gonzá lez, President of the Government: The birth of our Organization, so closely linked to the end of a tragic war, enshrined principles underlying the common effort to fulfil mankind's aspirations: peace, freedom, human dignity, and economic and social progress. The great sufferings caused in Europe by the wars that pitted our peoples against each other made us look upon the Charter of San Francisco for inspiration. One cannot conceive of today's world without the UN contribution to decolonization, environment, development, and to innovative concepts such as the common heritage of mankind.

SWEDEN

Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson: We live in a world where more and more services need to be provided globally, in our truly common interest. We must develop systems of financing that assure adequate, predictable and sustainable levels of funding. The mandatory contributions should continue to be the backbone of the financing of the core activities, but the dependency on one large contributor must be reduced. We need to explore the possibility of creating an international tax on foreign currency transactions. We must uphold the strictest respect for the financial commitments we all have made when accepting the UN Charter.

TURKEY

President Süleyman Demirel: Fifty years ago, the United Nations was created to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in achieving a better world for all. The UN Charter was to provide the road map to a new international order. However, the initial hopes and aspirations of the founders turned into disillusionment during the dark days of the cold war. Now, there is a widespread revival of the positive spirit that prevailed half a century ago. We should seize this moment to adapt the UN to the new challenges and demands of our times, and in this we must not fail.

UNITED KINGDOM

Prime Minister John Major: Throughout the past 50 years, the principles of the Charter have stood the test of time. But now, we need to look ahead. The world is changing, and it is time for the United Nations to change with it. The world needs the UN, as much today as at any time in the past; a UN that works; a UN using today's methods to address tomorrow's needs; a UN that shows its worth to the taxpayer in all our countries. In that way, I believe we can capture and justify popular support for our Organization. Today, we face difficulties that we must overcome. At this commemoration, my hope is that we will find the will to do so.

UNITED STATES

President William J. Clinton: The United Nations has not stopped human suffering, but it has healed the wounds and lengthened the lives of millions of human beings. The UN has not banished repression or poverty from the Earth, but it has advanced the cause of freedom and prosperity on every continent. It has been a force for good and a bulwark against evil. So at the dawn of a new century so full of promise, yet plagued by peril, we still need the UN. And so, for another 50 years and beyond, you can count the United States in.

LATIN AMERICA & THE CARIBBEAN

ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA

Prime Minister Lester Bryant Bird: I come neither to bury the United Nations nor to praise it. Today, the UN's moral authority is sorely wounded, bleeding from its wounds in Bosnia, in Rwanda and in Somalia. Rogue regimes in these places have challenged the power of the UN and found an impotent force constrained by its limited operations' mandate and weakened by the paucity of its resources. The might of the world community, which should have been an overwhelming force to end conflict, stop killing and save lives, proved to be incapable of enforcing the peace that it set out to keep—hobbled essentially by its Member States.

ARGENTINA

President Carlos Saúl Menem: Fifty years have elapsed since the unspeakable pain and suffering of a terrible war gave rise to the United Nations. Today, we are celebrating much more than an anniversary. We evoke the dream, the vision, the fears and also the courage of a few men who, despite the proximity of horror, dared to imagine a space for the preservation of international peace and security, international cooperation, the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the economic and social progress of peoples. This generation—our generation—owes the founding fathers of the UN its deepest gratitude.

BAHAMAS

Prime Minister Hubert A. Ingraham: It is our desire that the next five decades bear the fruit of our theme today—"We the Peoples of the United Nations . . . United for a Better World". We hope for a world freed from the scourge of illicit drug traffic, relieved of the burdens created by uncontrolled migration, protected by greater environmental consciousness, enhanced through increased literacy and health standards everywhere, strengthened by Member States that fully honour their financial obligations to this body, and liberated from poverty, disease, unemployment, racism, religious persecution, tyranny and strife.

BARBADOS

Prime Minister Owen S. Arthur: Looking ahead, the United Nations of the next 50 years must embark on its unfinished journey, reformed and reenergized, to meet the challenges of a world of tumultuous global change. The reformed UN must construct a new system of security to reflect the changed nature of today's conflicts, conflicts mainly within nations, rather than between nations. It must accelerate and intensify its development mission. It must respond with dispatch to the cry and suffering of the world's poor, whose plight weighs heavily on the conscience of the world.

BELIZE

Prime Minister Manuel Esquivel: The 50 original signatories could not have foreseen that 50 years later this world Organization would consist of Member States with populations ranging from 1 billion to 16,000 people. While war and the peaceful settlement of disputes was the number one priority in 1945, priority number one in 1995 is found in Article 2 of the Charter which states that the Organization is based on "the sovereign equality of all its Members". Today, as the large and powerful sit side by side with the small and vulnerable, the principle of sovereign equality is a difficult pill for some and an elusive goal for others.

BOLIVIA

Edgar Camacho Omiste, Chairman of the Delegation: Lasting peace on Earth requires justice in international relations and within each country. If harmony is to prevail among nations, solutions have to be found to situations that impede fraternal relations among peoples. Someday in the not-too-distant future, there will be an end to situations of oppression and dependency, just as colonialism will come to an end, extreme poverty will disappear, friendship among peoples will flourish, and the free and sovereign presence of Bolivia on the Pacific Ocean will become possible. The power politics of yesterday will have to give way to brotherhood and cooperation as central instruments in the new international relations.

BRAZIL

President Fernando Henrique Cardoso: We are living in better times than 50 years ago. By freeing the international agenda of the tensions generated by ideological confrontation, the end of the cold war created the conditions for a growing convergence of values, with democracy, economic freedom and social justice at centre stage. Human advancement is at the core of the international debate. This is a forum in which we should, within the complex context of globalization, work to overcome a persistent situation of social and economic inequalities giving rise to hopelessness and a feeling of exclusion.

CHILE

President Eduardo Frei Ruiz-Tagle: Up to now, the United Nations has been the setting for inter-governmental agreement. It is now time to begin the long march towards the consolidation of ties between the peoples and groups of different societies. The exchange of cultural values in civil socety can provide an important source of support for the elimination of apprehensions, racism and prejudice against human conditions of all types. The future of the UN must be marked by emphasis on human development, preservation of the environment and the consolidation of peace.

COLOMBIA

President Ernesto Samper Pizano: The creation of the United Nations 50 years ago sowed the seeds of hope for mankind: hope for peace and progress, faith in the peaceful mechanisms for the settlement of conflicts and credibility in multilateralism as we confront the most wrenching issues before humankind. Today, we have to rethink what we are in order to know what we want to become. The task of the new UN system must be to regain that vision, so that we may continue to prevail as a civilization, as a democracy and as rational human beings.

COSTA RICA

President José María Figueres: To remain true to the spirit of San Francisco, the UN must not remain neutral or passive in the face of major conflicts. New challenges include assuming responsibility for protecting and preserving global assets. Only an organization that represents equally all the peoples of the Earth can be successful in this undertaking. We dream of a UN that encourages forums of cooperation among all nations to reduce the greenhouse effect, to save, study and make use of the planet's biodiversity, to decontaminate the seas and thereby ensure the greater well-being of present and future generations.

CUBA

Fidel Castro Ruz, President of the Council of State and the Council of Ministers: The obsolete veto privilege and the ill-use of the Security Council by the powerful are exalting a new colonialism within the United Nations. Latin America and Africa do not have a single permanent member in the Security Council. In Asia, India has a population of almost 1 billion but it does not enjoy that responsibility. How long shall we wait for the democratization of the UN and for the independence and sovereign equality of States to become a reality? How long before non-intervention in the internal affairs of States and true international cooperation take their rightful places? How long shall we have to wait before rationality, equity and justice prevail in the world?

DOMINICA

Prime Minister Edison C. James: The United Nations system was designed to deal with the problems of the postwar period, mainly related to the disruption of international peace through recourse to arms. Today's threat to peace has to do primarily with development. Cost-cutting measures and streamlining should take into account the legitimate aspirations of people in small and vulnerable States. Let us always remember that every human being has a right to be clothed with dignity, and that at the very heart of the cosmos stands that same human being, that irreducible kernel of development.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Constitutional Vice-President Jacinto Peynado Garrigosa: United Nations achievements have been one of the most precious assets of mankind throughout this past half century. This Organization has been able to settle and avoid armed conflicts, has fostered democratic institutions by promoting free and fair elections, and has raised its voice in defence of the poor, bringing humanitarian assistance to tens of millions. It led in efforts towards reversing environmental degradation throughout the world and achieving a sustainable way of life as we approach the 21st century.

ECUADOR

Galo Leoro, Minister for Foreign Affairs: To attend to the new and increasing demands being placed by the international community, our Organization needs major structural change, adopted under the obligations derived from the Charter of San Francisco. Respect for the binding nature of this fundamental universal instrument is the only way to guarantee the survival of small and weak States. We reaffirm our commitment to pursuing the ongoing quest for just and equitable solutions, arising from agreements mutually arrived at, to the conflicts that persist in the world.

EL SALVADOR

President Armando Calderón Sol: The international order of the postwar period was marked by antagonism and ideological confrontation. Nonetheless, the UN attained important and substantial achievements, outstanding among which were its significant contributions to avoiding another world war with unimaginable consequences, eliminating colonialism and racial discrimination, encouraging the codification of international law, strengthening the international system of human rights and promoting improvement of political, economic and social conditions of our peoples.

GRENADA

Robert E. Millette, Chairman of the Delegation: Some refer to the United Nations as the biggest debating society in the world, in which perception takes precedence over substance, rhetoric over reality—a Tower of Babel where debates consist of grotesque rituals of recurrent irrelevancies. The truth of the matter is that the UN, as a relatively young institution, is the quintessential example of humanity's struggle for peace among nations and within nations. It bears the marks of humanity's triumphs and failures. However, in the pursuit of peace, the UN continues "to run and not be weary, to walk and not grow faint".

GUATEMALA

President Ramiro De León Carpio: The United Nations' founding fathers, mindful of the tragedy of the two world wars, sought to create a new order based on justice for all. There can never be justice or peace if we deny the right of every human being and every nation to engage in dialogue on a footing of equality and to enjoy the identical dignity without which no member of our species can truly be free, without the shackles of poverty and without the bitterness of the hatred engendered by inequality. Universal representation should prevail at the UN, without any kind of exclusion.

GUYANA

President Cheddi Jagan: A new global human order must be an adjunct to the UN Agenda for Development. A new global human order must have as its goal human development, which means meeting the basic needs of the people, attaining cultural uplift and providing a clean and safe environment. To attain a new global human order, it is necessary to establish a sound and just system of global governance based on a genuine North-South partnership and interdependence for mutual benefit; a democratic culture of representative, consultative and participatory democracy, and a lean and clean administration.

HAITI

President Jean-Bertrand Aristide: Celebrating the 50th anniversary of the United Nations is especially meaningful for the world's first independent black republic. It gives us the opportunity also to celebrate the first anniversary of the return of democracy to Haiti. It came about thanks to the heroism and courage of the Haitian people, to the leadership of President Clinton, to you, Mr. Secretary-General, and to all of our dear UN friends. Gratitude is the heart's memory; let the beating of our hearts express our intense joy at having together achieved this miracle of the century.

HONDURAS

President Carlos Roberto Reina: The United Nations must help us find the humanism of our times. As if in a new Renaissance, we must erect a heretofore unseen concept of man on the shoulders of science and technology, a concept by which the importance of material things is found in their relationship with the higher levels of humanitarian conscience. This road begins by vanquishing poverty, defeating illegitimate power, breaking corruption and impunity and establishing a world order loved and sustained by all. There is no better definition of a future democracy.

JAMAICA

Prime Minister Percival James Patterson: We concede that the United Nations is by no means perfect. Yet, we shudder even to contemplate what kind of world would have emerged without it. It has become an indispensable instrument in the search for global dialogue in the resolution of disputes. It offers the only hope for the harmonization of global interests and for defusing the complex issues which otherwise can so easily ignite. We sometimes forget that the UN is the creature of its Members. We make it what we will. As Member States, it is our solemn obligation to build an effective system which generates lasting peace and social justice.

MEXICO

President Ernesto Zedillo: In today's world, serious problems persist which are at the root of conflicts that in the past gave rise to confrontations. Globalization and interdependence coexist alongside trends towards isolationism and intolerance. Restrictive nationalism, attempts at genocide and fragmentation, environmental deterioration and drug trafficking, economic disparities, social inequality and poverty are the current threats to peace and security. For this reason, the principles underlying and the raison d'être of the birth of the United Nations are today still fully valid.

NICARAGUA

Ernesto Leal, Minister for Foreign Affairs: The time has come to faithfully fulfil the commitment established in the UN Charter to promote economic and social advancement of all peoples. We must begin the UN's largest peace-keeping operation—placing the human being at the centre of economic and social development. Development should be the other phase of the work of the next 50 years of the UN—a UN that looks towards the South, which is still poor and without resources, so the 21st century may also become the century of development. We face the great challenge of turning into reality the results of world conferences on children, the environment, social development, population, human rights and women.

PANAMA

President Ernesto Perez Balladares: The genuinely far-reaching importance of the Organization can be measured not in quantifiable terms, but in terms of intangible but real values: wars never fought, victims that never died, children not orphaned. When we look at the record of these 50 years, many will say that the Organization has been an arena for sterile debate, but it is preferable for the world to have a forum in which conflicts can spend themselves in words rather than constantly to seek battlefields on which to resolve disputes of its own invention.

PARAGUAY

President Juan Carlos Wasmosy: Paraguay has the same fervour and conviction today about the United Nations as it had when it signed the Charter, and it continues to support the Organization with a view to its pursuing peace in the world, on the basis of the harmonious and balanced development of the Member States. Our support is not shaken or destroyed by some failures which the UN may have suffered. This Organization is absolutely necessary in our world to carry out the goals the peoples of the UN undertook to accomplish after the butchery of the Second World War.

PERU

Vice-President César Paredes Canto: The United Nations has had unquestionable successes in the 50 years of its existence. However, we cannot fail to stress that, during this period, we have not experienced 50 years of world peace. The conflicts that are still proliferating in many parts of the Earth mean that, at this very moment, men, women and children are falling victim to armed clashes which, far from resolving problems, aggravate them because land that is strewn with destruction and death is the most fertile ground for resentment and further sterile conflicts, even more bitter and prolonged, generating an endless spiral of violence.

SAINT KITTS AND NEVIS

Prime Minister Demil Douglas: In 50 years, the structure of the United Nations has hardly changed. Yet, its circumstances have changed beyond anything its founders would recognize. In this new era, we should endeavour to make the Security Council more representative of and responsive to its membership. The developing world should now become permanent members of the Security Council. The goal of appropriate representation should guide our efforts to ensure that all the peoples of the world, who have observed the principles of the UN Charter, are welcomed into this fraternity of nations.

SAINT LUCIA

Prime Minister John G. M. Compton: In spite of developments which seem to have violated the idealism of the founding fathers, the Organization has much cause for celebration. Its many organs and agencies, which work quietly and efficiently away from the glare of the media, have many achievements to their credit. They are engaged in silent battles against man's ancient enemies of ignorance, poverty and disease. They have kept the peace in many parts of the world without the fanfare of international commendation. They have registered remarkable successes in freeing subject peoples from the yoke of colonial domination.

SAINT VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES

Prime Minister James Fitz-Allen Mitchell: Over the passage of time, men with vision conceive an idea, create an institution, and one that benefits mankind for all time. Our United Nations belongs to this noble category, of which there are few that have earned 50 years' respect. The celebration of this anniversary would not have been so worthy a cause if the evils of communism had not been put to rest. We still await atonement by those who imposed such monumental waste on our civilization. I personally would wish to single out Mr. Gorbachev for his leadership in having jettisoned the awful load on our behalf, and creating the opportunities to carry us sumptuously into the 21st century.

SURINAME

President Runaldo Ronald Venetiaan: There is no doubt that unless we overcome and rectify certain shortcomings of the United Nations, this Organization will not be able to play its fundamental role in the management of the new world order; neither will it be able to realize its noble principles. Thus, a most urgent task for the international community now is to reinvigorate, restructure and democratize the UN and to give it a sound financial basis for the fulfilment of old and new tasks, in order to relieve international relations of suspicion and hostility, to bring an end to violence, and to fully activate the creative potential of the UN.

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Annette des Iles, Chairperson of the Delegation: For Trinidad and Tobago, as for the great majority of the Member States which make up this Organization, our first responsibility is to our people: to provide an acceptable standard of living and an improved quality of life for all our citizens, including our young people and our women. It follows that in countries such as ours, this Organization will be judged largely by the extent to which it can assist in this effort. We wish to urge, therefore, that international cooperation for development be placed at the centre of the activities of the United Nations.

URUGUAY

Vice-President Hugo Batalla: Today, as we commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Organization, we are living through an anxious and uncertain present in which even human values themselves are called in question. It is our responsibility to look ahead and to build on today's anxiety a brighter tomorrow in which all people, whatever their colour, their gender, their religious creed or the place where they live, will have the right, recognized as theirs by the international community, to a life of dignity with access to all the benefits that civilization affords. The eyes of the world are on us today; we are being called on to take up this challenge.

VENEZUELA

President Rafael Caldera: A new half century is beginning for the United Nations. We must prepare the Organization for a new era with a new agenda. Antagonisms of all sorts, poverty, especially abject poverty, selfishness and corruption, which eat away at our conscience and destroy institutions, all represent the most serious threat to peace. These are the greatest enemies that we must fight against in the new half century that is now dawning for the UN. It is time to stand up to those enemies, to turn our good intentions into reality.

OTHER SPEAKERS

HOLY SEE

Secretary of State Angelo Cardinal Sodano: In his address on 5 October, the Holy Father expressed the wish that the Organization might grow as a moral centre, as a family of nations. It can realize this mission only if each State feels that it is accepted and recognized for what it is and is willing to give and take, and if all share the same heritage of values whose highest expressions remain the ideals of justice, freedom, peace and solidarity.

SWITZERLAND

Secretary of State Jakob Kellenberger: Fifty years ago, the founding Members of the United Nations decided to be the joint guarantors of international peace and security and to promote human rights and social and economic development in the world. In the United Nations, we have today a sound tool for global policy-making that enables us, day by day and year by year, to build our future.

AGENCY FOR THE PROHIBITION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN

Secretary-General Enrique Roman-Morey: In February 1967, nearly 22 years after the signing of the Charter of the UN, Latin America and the Caribbean—at the core of the cold war without being part of it—gave mankind the example of the Treaty of Tlatelolco for the prohibition of nuclear weapons, which established the intergovernmental organization that I represent. For a world free of nuclear tests and nuclear weapons, I congratulate the United Nations.

ASIAN-AFRICAN LEGAL CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE

Secretary-General Tang Chengyuan: Consensus-building in the codification of international law is by nature a time-consuming and complex process, but the spirit of cooperation kindled by the Organization has kept the international legislative draftsmen and lawyers totally preoccupied, in particular during the ongoing UN Decade of International Law.

CARIBBEAN COMMUNITY

Secretary-General Edwin Carrington: Today, 50 years following the signing of the Charter creating the United Nations, this Organization still represents mankind's greatest hope for peace, development and international cooperation. Of particular significance to the Caribbean Community is the UN contribution to recognizing the equal sovereign status of nations, while promoting the special needs of the least developed and small nation States.

CENTRAL AMERICAN INTEGRATION SYSTEM

Julio Icaza Gallard, Director of Functional Integration at the General Secretariat: The current recognition, in the United Nations, of the fact that worldwide peace, security and stability can be achieved only if the economic and social needs of peoples are met is shared by the Central American Integration System. We should tackle simultaneously the economic, social, cultural, political and environmental spheres.

COMMONWEALTH SECRETARIAT

Secretary-General Emeka Anyaoku: The United Nations is the globe's only truly universal Organization. The effectiveness of the Organization is directly linked to the commitment and support of its constituents. The commitment of all Member States—including those of the Commonwealth—to the UN should reflect their determination to strengthen it and make it a dynamic and strong Organization.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ORGANIZATION

Secretary-General Shamshad Ahmad: We certainly need a just, fair and equitable economic order free of discriminatory and protectionist walls. It is in this direction that the United Nations should focus its attention in the coming years. The international community must develop new patterns of collaboration on the basis of equality, partnership, interdependence and mutuality of benefit.

EUROPEAN COMMISSION

Hans van den Broek, on behalf of the European Community: The present agenda of the United Nations has become more complex and more demanding than at any other time in its history. Instability has entrenched itself in many parts of the world. We have been witnessing the revival of nationalism, of ethnic cleansing, of unprecedented humanitarian crises, of gross violations of human rights, and even of genocide. The world, therefore, needs the UN today more than ever.

INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE OF THE RED CROSS

President Cornelio Sommaruga: Abounding in symbolism, the commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the United Nations invites us to ponder history. The International Committee of the Red Cross is therefore pleased to join in this celebration, which enables it to reaffirm its faith in mankind by paying tribute to an institution moulded in its image: imperfect, unique, yet irreplaceable.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF RED CROSS AND RED CRESCENT SOCIETIES

President Mario Enrique Villarroel Lander: Both the UN and our institution were founded by idealists who sought to bring works of enduring peace to the world. In our missions—yours aimed at constructing a better world with peace, full justice and freedom; ours aimed at the improvement of life for the world's vulnerable people—we have likewise brought together the world's States and their peoples.

INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR MIGRATION

Director-General James N. Purcell: How the world responds to migratory pressures is of critical importance to global stability and well-being. Once considered primarily as a positive force in nation-building, migrants are now, more often than not, seen as the visible messengers of society's failures. IOM can be a key resource in exploring comprehensive solutions, only in close partnership with the United Nations.

LATIN AMERICAN ECONOMIC SYSTEM

Permanent Secretary Carlos Moneta: Clearly, the balance sheet for these 50 years of United Nations activities is positive in connection with the objective of the maintenance of international peace and security. But there still exist serious areas of tension and conflict which require more resolute action by the system. Moreover, there must be greater democratization in the decision-making process within the Security Council.

LATIN AMERICAN PARLIAMENT

President Humberto Celli Gerbasí: At the close of the 20th century, the prospects for the developing countries are not very encouraging. We feel that there should be an ethical obligation to allow for the economic growth and social development of all nations, one in which there are no exploiters and no exploited, and in which freedom, peace, harmony and social justice prevail.

LEAGUE OF ARAB STATES

Mahmoud Aboul-Nasr, Chairman of the Delegation: The Arab States participated in the drafting of the United Nations Charter and have taken part in the work of the Organization for the past 50 years. Today, the Arab States, like all other Member States, look forward to a new phase, a phase in which, we hope, peace and justice will prevail and in which human rights and man's fundamental freedoms will be respected all over the world.

ORGANIZATION FOR SECURITY AND COOPERATION IN EUROPE

Secretary-General Wilhelm Höynck: The situation in the world today requires an ever more closely interlocking network of international organizations, in which the United Nations must have a special place. Only with such a network will we be able to cope with the challenges confronting us. We should give further thought to how we can integrate non-governmental organizations more effectively into such a network.

ORGANIZATION OF AFRICAN UNITY

Secretary-General Salim Ahmed Salim: Fifty years ago, a free Africa, liberated from colonialism and racial bigotry, was only a concept of many and a distant dream even to the optimistic internationalists among those who met in San Francisco to draw up the UN Charter. To the Organization of African Unity and Africa as a whole, therefore, the United Nations has been an instrument of liberation. Today, Africa is free, thanks to a great extent to the joint struggle coming from within the United Nations.

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

Secretary-General César Gaviria: Our continent, which is today united by the values of democracy and freedom, regards the United Nations as the most appropriate and effective instrument to further the collective aspirations of mankind. During these three days, many have mentioned the successes of the past. We should like to join this recognition of half a century of activity and success.

ORGANIZATION OF THE ISLAMIC CONFERENCE

Secretary-General Hamid Algabid: The imperative need to preserve peace and save succeeding generations from the scourge of war demands adherence to universally recognized principles and a firm determination to defend law and legality wherever they are under threat. Here, the United Nations has done remarkable work. Similarly, inspiring work has been done by the entire UN system in the areas of development, culture, health, and social and humanitarian affairs in all regions, including in the Islamic world.

PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION

Yasser Arafat, Chairman of the Executive Committee: I came to this Assembly 21 years ago as a fighter for freedom, liberation and independence, carrying with me the torments of my struggling people. Today, however, I come to you with a heart filled with love and peace, now that the olive branch has been raised over the peace of the brave. The winds of change are blowing on our world.

PERMANENT COUNCIL OF FRANCOPHONIE

President Emile-Derlin Zinsou: The francophone community sees itself above all as a place of solidarity. It finds unity in the diversity of its membership, which extends to every continent. In this United Nations, a lofty forum for dialogue, and especially for North-South dialogue, my presence attests to one of the fundamental dimensions of that community, most of whose members are from the South.

SOUTH PACIFIC FORUM

Deputy Secretary-General Nikenike Vurobaravu: The vision on which the United Nations was built—peace, human dignity, justice, economic and social progress—will be as valid in the next 50 years as it was in the last 50. In an increasingly complex, interdependent world, the UN's role in pursuing that vision is more and more important to small countries, such as those of the South Pacific Forum.

SOVEREIGN MILITARY ORDER OF MALTA

Count Carlo Marullo di Condojanni, Member of the Sovereign Council: The inception of the United Nations 50 years ago heralded the hope for a new era of peace and well-being around the world. The aim was to leave behind us a war in which the atrocities were on a scale previously unknown to mankind, a war that, with the introduction of nuclear weapons, had convinced peoples and Governments that they had to seek peace at any price.

PART ONE

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

During 1995, the General Assembly and the Security Council continued debate on measures to strengthen United Nations functions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security.

In January, the Secretary-General issued a supplement to his 1992 report, "An Agenda for Peace", setting forth additional recommendations for improving the Organization's peacemaking, peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building capacity. On behalf of the Security Council, its President made a statement on the supplement, supporting the Secretary-General's conclusions and proposals and inviting Member States to submit further reflections on the subject.

The General Assembly called on States to promote the objectives of the 1986 declaration of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic, considered that greater efforts were required to develop a focused discussion on implementing the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, and decided to continue to review implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security.

The Ministers expressed their appreciation for the UN efforts in maintaining world peace and security and stressed the primary responsibility of the Security Council in that respect. They further exchanged views concerning the situation in different regions as well as sanctions application, disarmament, sustainable development, and the United Nations financial situation and restructuring (see also PART ONE, Chapter III).

In a 23 October press communiqué,⁽³⁾ the heads of State or Government of the non-aligned countries members of the Security Council emphasized the importance of preventive diplomacy, peacemaking, peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building in the post-cold-war era, and underscored the need to devise a more stable system of collective security and recast the concept of collective action for peace and security so as to render the United Nations more capable of carrying out its functions. They called for broader coordination between the General Assembly and the Security Council in maintaining international peace and security and for constructive use by parties to a conflict of the Secretary-General's good offices and mediation efforts.

General aspects of international security

Fiftieth anniversary statements

On 26 September, the Security Council, meeting at the level of Foreign Ministers to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, authorized its President to make a statement⁽¹⁾ on its behalf, in which Council members, inter alia, reaffirmed their commitment to the collective security system of the United Nations Charter and to the maintenance of international peace and security, for which the Council had primary responsibility and in which it had played a crucial role since its establishment. The Council believed that effective use should be made of instruments for preventive action and that the Organization's peace-keeping capacity should continue to be improved. (For the full text of the statement, see PART ONE, Chapter III.)

On 27 September, the Foreign Ministers of the Security Council's five permanent members issued a statement⁽²⁾ following their meeting with the Secretary-General to review the world situation.

Supplement to an Agenda for Peace

Further to his 1992 report, "An Agenda for Peace",⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General in January 1995 issued a position paper entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace",⁽⁵⁾ in which he set forth additional recommendations on the development of UN activities related to international peace and security and highlighted areas that required what in 1992 he had called "hard decisions" by Member States.

The Secretary-General pointed out that since the end of the cold war, there had been a dramatic increase in UN activities related to the maintenance of peace and security. Many conflicts were now within States rather than between States. There had been a rash of wars within newly independent States, often of a religious or ethnic character and often involving unusual violence and cruelty. They were often guerrilla wars accompanied by the collapse of State institutions and a breakdown of law and order, which made peace-keeping far more complex and more expensive and also necessitated the use of UN forces to protect humanitarian operations. In addition, the nature of UN operations in the field had changed, as the Organization was asked to undertake an unprecedented variety of functions in helping the parties to a conflict implement a negotiated settlement. Such multifunctional operations also highlighted the need for long-term coordinated programmes in various fields, to ensure that the original causes of war were eradicated.

The Secretary-General further examined instruments for peace and security developed by the United Nations. Stressing the importance of conflict prevention through early warning, quiet diplomacy and preventive deployment, he noted that the greatest obstacle in that area was the reluctance of individual Member States to accept UN help when they were a party to a conflict. Other problems were finding individuals having diplomatic skills and willing to serve as the Secretary-General's special representatives, and the establishment and financing of small field missions for preventive diplomacy and peacemaking to assist such representatives. The Secretary-General proposed to create a norm within the international community for Member States to accept an offer of UN good offices; to enlarge the existing provision for unforeseen and extraordinary activities and make it available for all preventive and peacemaking activities, not just those related to international peace and security strictly defined; and to include in the regular budget a contingency provision for such activities, in the range of $25 million per biennium.

Preventive diplomacy could also be supported by measures used for post-conflict peace-building, such as demilitarization, control of small arms, institutional reform, improved police and judicial systems, the monitoring of human rights, electoral reform, and social and economic development programmes. As most peace-building activities fell within the mandates of various entities of the UN system, resumption of such activities could initially be entrusted to, or coordinated by, a multifunctional peace-keeping operation. In such cases, it might also be necessary to transfer the decision-making responsibility from the Security Council to the General Assembly or other intergovernmental bodies responsible for civilian peace-building activities. In situations where no peace-keeping operation existed, the early-warning responsibility had to lie with UN Headquarters, and the Secretary-General could take the initiative of sending a mission to a country of impending crisis, with its Government's agreement.

The Secretary-General also noted the progress made in the area of disarmament, which was of paramount importance to both the security of humankind and the release of economic, scientific and technological resources for peace and human progress. He pointed to the role played by micro-disarmament in peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building activities, giving special attention to small arms and anti-personnel mines (see next chapter). Speaking of the increased use of sanctions as another instrument for peace and security, the Secretary-General emphasized the need to ensure that provisions were made to facilitate the work of humanitarian agencies when sanctions were imposed and that the costs of applying sanctions were borne equitably by all Member States. He suggested establishing a mechanism to assess, at the Security Council's request and before the imposition of sanctions, their potential impact on the target country and on third countries; to monitor their application; to measure their effects and tailor them for maximum political impact and minimum collateral damages; to ensure the delivery of humanitarian assistance to vulnerable groups; and to explore ways of assisting affected third States and evaluate their claims submitted under Article 50 of the Charter.

The Secretary-General expressed the belief that the United Nations should, in the long term, develop a capacity for enforcement action against those responsible for threats to or breaches of the peace or acts of aggression, but advised against doing so at the current time due to the lack of resources and increased volume of peace-keeping and peacemaking activities. Noting that the Security Council could currently exercise such action by entrusting enforcement tasks to groups of Member States, he cautioned nevertheless that that arrangement could have a negative impact on the Organization's stature and credibility. He also considered various aspects of UN peace-keeping operations and made suggestions in that regard (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

The Secretary-General underscored the need for coordination of efforts in applying those instruments by the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Secretary-General, as well as by Governments, regional and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and various entities of the UN system. A new trend in that regard was the establishment of informal groups of Member States, created on an ad hoc basis to support implementation of the Secretary-General's peacemaking and peace-keeping mandates and referred to as "Friends of the Secretary-General". While that arrangement was of value as a diplomatic instrument for bringing influence to bear on the parties to a conflict, there was a risk of duplication or overlapping of efforts if members of such groups were to take initiatives not requested by the Secretary-General.

In the UN Secretariat, the main responsibility for coordinating inputs from various departments was entrusted to the Task Force on United Nations Operations and to interdepartmental groups on each major conflict involving the Organization. At the same time, improved coordination between Headquarters and head offices of other entities of the UN system had to date proved difficult to achieve, as each of the agencies concerned had its own intergovernmental legislative body and its own mandate. The Secretary-General therefore recommended that Governments instruct their representatives in those bodies to recognize proper coordination as an essential condition for the Organization's success and that it not be made hostage to inter-institutional rivalry and competition. He further noted increasing cooperation with NGOs in providing humanitarian relief and mobilizing public support and funds for such activities, and discussed coordination of efforts with regional organizations (see below, under "Regional aspects of international peace and security").

On the subject of financing, the Secretary-General pointed out that peace-building was critically dependent on Member States' readiness to make the necessary resources available and that it could be a long-term process and expensive—except in comparison with the cost of peacemaking and peace-keeping if the conflict should recur. He suggested that in putting together peace-building elements of a comprehensive settlement plan, the UN should consult international financial institutions in good time to ensure that implementation costs were taken into account when designing economic plans of the Government concerned. The problems in that area, however, were aggravated by many donors' reluctance to finance crucial peace-building elements, such as the conversion of guerrilla movements into political parties, creation of new police forces or "arms-for-land" programmes. He concluded that overcoming crises in the post-cold-war world required a deeper commitment to cooperation and true multilateralism than humanity had ever achieved before.

In his report on the work of the Organization,⁽⁶⁾ issued on 22 August, the Secretary-General stated that the UN Departments of Humanitarian Affairs, of Political Affairs and of Peace-keeping Operations had developed a framework for coordination of their actions—information sharing, consultations and joint action—needed to plan and implement complex operations in the field. These included routine monitoring and early-warning analysis, assessment of options for preventive action, where possible, fact-finding, planning and implementation of field operations, and conducting evaluations or "lessons-learned" exercises. He also noted that the Department of Political Affairs—created in response to the 31 January 1992 declaration by heads of State and Government at the Security Council summit,⁽⁷⁾ which had mandated him to give priority to preventive and peacemaking activities—had completed its restructuring and was now organized to follow political developments worldwide, so that it could provide early warning of impending conflicts and analyse possibilities for preventive action by the UN, as well as for action to help resolve existing conflicts.

With regard to post-conflict peace-building, the report stated that the United Nations had received 19 new requests for electoral assistance between July 1994 and August 1995. Also, since July 1994, 30 States and UN missions had received or would soon receive some form of electoral assistance from the UN system. Modalities for integrated action in a country's reconstruction were discussed at an international colloquium on post-conflict reconstruction strategies (Schlaining, Austria, 23 and 24 June), attended by representatives of UN political, humanitarian and development entities, specialized agencies, donor countries, NGOs and war-torn societies.

By a 22 December note,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Joint Inspection Unit on strengthening the UN-system capacity for conflict prevention.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 18 and 19 January and 22 February to discuss the supplement to "An Agenda for Peace".

On 22 February, the Council President made the following statement⁽⁹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the Secretary-General's position paper entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace" as an important contribution to the debate on the development of the United Nations activities related to international peace and security in all its aspects at the beginning of the year in which the Organization celebrates its fiftieth anniversary. The Council notes that the paper contains a wide range of conclusions and recommendations with regard to instruments for resolving conflict. The Council is of the view that in the light of recent developments and experience gained, efforts should be made to further enhance the Organization's ability to perform the tasks laid down for it under the Charter. The Council reiterates that, in performing the above-mentioned tasks, the purposes and principles of the Charter should always be strictly observed.

The Security Council welcomes and shares the priority given by the Secretary-General to action to prevent conflict. It encourages all Member States to make the fullest possible use of instruments of preventive action, including the Secretary-General's good offices, the dispatch of special envoys of the Secretary-General and the deployment, with the consent as appropriate of the host country or countries, of small field missions for preventive diplomacy and peacemaking. The Council believes that adequate resources must be made available within the United Nations system for these actions. It notes the problem identified by the Secretary-General in finding senior persons to act as his special representative or special envoy and encourages Member States which have not yet done so to provide the Secretary-General with the names of persons who might be considered by him for such posts, together with other resources both human and material which might be useful to such missions. It encourages the Secretary-General to make full use of resources thus put at his disposal.

The Security Council endorses the view expressed by the Secretary-General concerning the crucial importance of economic and social development as a secure basis for lasting peace. Social and economic development can be as valuable in preventing conflicts as in healing the wounds after conflicts have occurred. The Council urges States to support the efforts of the United Nations system with regard to preventive and post-conflict peace-building activities and, in this context, to provide necessary assistance for the economic and social development of countries, especially those which have suffered or are suffering from conflicts.

The Security Council welcomes the Secretary-General's analysis regarding peace-keeping operations. It recalls the statement made by its President on 3 May 1994 which, inter alia, listed factors to be taken into account in establishing peace-keeping operations. It notes that in resolving conflicts, primary emphasis should continue to be placed on the use of peaceful means rather than force. Without prejudice to its ability to respond to situations on a case-by-case basis, and rapidly and flexibly as the circumstances require, it reiterates the principles of consent of the parties, impartiality and the non-use of force except in self-defence. It underlines the need to conduct peace-keeping operations with a clearly defined mandate, command structure, time-frame and secure financing, in support of efforts to achieve a peaceful solution to a conflict: it stresses the importance of the consistent application of these principles to the establishment and conduct of all peace-keeping operations. It stresses the importance it attaches to the provision of the fullest possible information to the Council to assist it in making decisions regarding the mandate, duration and termination of current operations. It also emphasizes the importance of providing troop contributors with the fullest possible information.

The Security Council shares the Secretary-General's concern regarding the availability of troops and equipment for peace-keeping operations. It recalls earlier statements by the President of the Council on the subject and reiterates the importance of improving the capacity of the United Nations for rapid deployment and reinforcement of operations. To that end, it encourages the Secretary-General to continue his study of options aimed at improving the capacity for such rapid deployment and reinforcement. The Council believes that the first priority in improving the capacity for rapid deployment should be the further enhancement of the existing stand-by arrangements, covering the full spectrum of resources, including arrangements for lift and headquarters capabilities, required to mount and execute peace-keeping operations. It strongly encourages the Secretary-General to take further steps in this regard, including the establishment of a comprehensive database to cover civilian as well as military resources. In this context, it considers that particular attention should be given to the greatest possible interoperability between elements identified in such arrangements. The Council reiterates its call to Member States not already doing so to participate in the stand-by arrangements. While affirming the principle that contributing Governments should ensure that their troops arrive with all the equipment needed to be fully operational, the Council also encourages the Secretary-General and Member States to continue to consider means, whether in the context of stand-by arrangements or more broadly, to address the requirements of contingents which may need additional equipment or training.

The Security Council strongly supports the Secretary-General's conclusion that peace-keeping operations need an effective information capacity, and his intention to address this requirement in future peace-keeping operations from the planning stage.

The Security Council welcomes the Secretary-General's ideas regarding post-conflict peace-building. It agrees that an appropriately strong overall United Nations contribution needs to be sustained after the successful conclusion of a peace-keeping operation, and encourages the Secretary-General to study ways and means of ensuring effective coordination between the United Nations and other agencies involved in post-conflict peace-building, and to take active steps to ensure that such coordination takes place in the immediate aftermath of a peace-keeping operation. The measures described by the Secretary-General may also be required, with the consent of the State or States concerned, after successful preventive action and in other cases where an actual peace-keeping deployment does not take place.

The Security Council shares the Secretary-General's assessment of the paramount importance of preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. Such proliferation is a threat to international peace and security. Appropriate measures will be taken in this respect in particular where international treaties provide for recourse to the Council when their provisions are violated. The Council underlines the need for all States to fulfil their obligations in respect of arms control and disarmament, in particular in regard to weapons of mass destruction.

The Security Council takes note of the assessment of the Secretary-General of the importance of "micro-disarmament", as described in his paper, in the solution of conflicts with which the United Nations is currently dealing and of his view that small arms are probably responsible for most of the deaths in these conflicts. It shares the concern of the Secretary-General at the negative consequences for international peace and security which often arise from the illicit traffic in conventional weapons, including small arms, and takes note of his view that the search for effective solutions to this problem should begin now. In this context the Council stresses the vital importance of the strict implementation of existing arms embargo regimes. It welcomes and supports efforts with regard to international measures to curb the spread of anti-personnel land-mines and to deal with the land-mines already laid, and in this regard welcomes General Assembly resolutions 49/75 D of 15 December 1994 and 49/215 of 23 December 1994. It reaffirms its deep concern over the tremendous humanitarian problems caused by the presence of mines and other unexploded devices to the populations of mine-infested countries and emphasizes the need for an increase in mine-clearing efforts by the countries concerned and with the assistance of the international community.

The Security Council stresses the importance it attaches to the effective implementation of all measures taken by it to maintain or restore international peace and security including economic sanctions. It agrees that the object of economic sanctions is not to punish but to modify the behaviour of the country or party which represents a threat to international peace and security. The steps demanded of that country or party should be clearly defined in Council resolutions, and the sanctions regime in question should be subject to periodic review and it should be lifted when the objectives of the appropriate provisions of the relevant Security Council resolutions are achieved. The Council remains concerned that, within this framework, appropriate measures are taken to ensure that humanitarian supplies reach affected populations and appropriate consideration is given to submissions received from neighbouring or other States affected by special economic problems as a result of the imposition of sanctions. The Council urges the Secretary-General, when considering the allocation of resources available to him within the Secretariat, to take appropriate steps to reinforce those sections of the Secretariat dealing directly with sanctions and their various aspects so as to ensure that all these matters are addressed in as effective, consistent and timely a manner as possible. It welcomes the Secretary-General's efforts to study ways and means of addressing the various aspects related to sanctions in his report.

The Security Council reaffirms the importance it attaches to the role that regional organizations and arrangements can play in helping to maintain international peace and security. It underlines the need for effective coordination between their efforts and those of the United Nations in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter. It recognizes that the responsibilities and capacities of different regional organizations and arrangements vary, as well as the readiness and competence of regional organizations and arrangements, as reflected in their charters and other relevant documents, to participate in efforts to maintain international peace and security. It welcomes the Secretary-General's willingness to assist regional organizations and arrangements as appropriate in developing a capacity for preventive action, peacemaking and, where appropriate, peace-keeping. It draws particular attention in this regard to the needs of Africa. It encourages the Secretary-General and Member States to continue to consider ways and means of improving practical cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and regional organizations and arrangements in these areas. The Council encourages the Secretary-General to continue the practice of meetings on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations.

The Security Council recognizes the crucial importance of the availability of the necessary financial resources both for preventive action and operations undertaken to sustain international peace and security. It therefore urges Member States to honour their financial obligations to the United Nations. At the same time, the Council emphasizes the continuing necessity for careful control of peace-keeping costs and for the most efficient possible use of peace-keeping funds and other financial resources.

The Security Council will keep the Secretary-General's paper under consideration. The Council invites all interested Member States to present further reflections on United Nations peace-keeping operations, and in particular on ways and means to improve the capacity of the United Nations for rapid deployment. It invites the Secretary-General to keep it closely informed of the action he takes in follow-up to the paper and to the present statement. It hopes that the General Assembly, as well as other organizations and entities, will give consideration of the paper a high degree of priority and will take decisions on those matters which fall within their direct responsibility.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 March, the General Assembly decided to reconvene the informal open-ended working group on "An Agenda for Peace" to consider the new supplement. The working group established subgroups on sanctions, coordination, preventive diplomacy and peacemaking, and post-conflict peace-building, which held discussions between 28 March and 14 September. On 18 September, the Assembly recommended that the working group continue its work.

By resolution 50/41 of 8 December, the Assembly, noting that the University for Peace—a specialized international centre for research, training and education for peace located in Costa Rica—placed special emphasis on conflict prevention, peace-keeping and peace-building and the peaceful settlement of disputes in the context of "An Agenda for Peace", requested the Secretary-General to consider ways of strengthening cooperation between the UN and the University.

Regional aspects of international peace and security

Cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements

In his supplement to "An Agenda for Peace" (see above),(¹) the Secretary-General noted that regional organizations had much to contribute to maintaining international peace and security. Cooperation between the UN and regional organizations in that area took a number of forms, he said, such as consultation, diplomatic support, operational support, co-deployment and joint operations. While forms of cooperation and the peacemaking and peace-keeping capacity of regional organizations varied considerably, it was possible to identify certain principles on which their relationship with the UN should be based, he went on. They included the establishment of agreed, but not necessarily formal, mechanisms for consultation; respect for the primacy of the United Nations, particularly the need to submit regional arrangements that assumed a level of UN support for approval by Member States; a clearly defined and agreed division of labour; and consistency by members of regional organizations, which were also UN Member States, in dealing with a common problem of interest to both organizations.

The Security Council, in a 22 February statement by its President(²) on the supplement, reaffirmed the importance it attached to the role of regional organizations and arrangements in maintaining international peace and security, underlined the need for effective coordination between their efforts and those of the UN and encouraged the Secretary-General and Member States to continue considering ways of improving such coordination and cooperation. The Council welcomed the Secretary-General's willingness to assist regional organizations and arrangements in developing a capacity for preventive action, peacemaking and, where appropriate, peace-keeping, and drew particular attention in that regard to the needs of Africa.

The General Assembly's Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations in 1995(³) stressed the importance of the 1994 Declaration on the Enhancement of Cooperation between the United Nations and Regional Arrangements or Agencies in the Maintenance of International Peace and Security,⁽⁴⁾ and invited the Secretary-General to develop proposals for improving the capacity to respond to emergency situations in Africa, in particular through cooperation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and subregional organizations in conflict prevention and peace-keeping. (For further information on the Special Committee's deliberations, see PART TWO, Chapter I.)

In a 27 September statement,⁽⁵⁾ the Foreign Ministers of the Security Council's five permanent members underscored the importance of reinforcing cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations and arrangements in building stability and security and in preventing and managing conflicts. In a 23 October press communiqué,⁽⁶⁾ the heads of State or Government of the non-aligned countries members of the Security Council emphasized the need to take fully into account the special commitments and concerns of a region when joint efforts for conflict resolution were undertaken by the UN and regional organizations.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to requests from the Security Council and the Special Committee, the Secretary-General on 1 November reported(⁷) on improving preparedness for conflict prevention and peace-keeping in Africa. He noted that the UN and OAU had held regular consultations on key African questions to coordinate initiatives and actions on a broad spectrum of issues, including conflict prevention, management and resolution. Agreement was reached on establishing a staff exchange programme to assist OAU in strengthening its Mechanism on Conflict Prevention and Management and Resolution and to reinforce collaboration between the two organizations.

The Secretary-General considered that a structured and constant exchange of information on emerging crises at an early stage was the key to closer cooperation and coordination in preventive diplomacy. In that regard, he proposed to post a UN liaison officer at OAU headquarters in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, to ensure effective coordination of efforts in conflict prevention, management and resolution; and to send a technical team to assist in organizing an OAU situation room to monitor ongoing efforts in those areas, receive and disseminate information, and stay abreast of political developments in Africa. The UN and OAU also could: explore possibilities for engaging in regular joint peacemaking activities in Africa; co-sponsor national and regional seminars to facilitate dialogue among contending parties; and contribute to agreements and arrangements for conflict prevention, control or resolution. In addition, OAU could benefit from UN programmes concerned with good governance, peace-building and participatory democracy. (For further information on cooperation between the UN and OAU, see PART TWO, Chapter II.)

The General Assembly, by resolution 50/158 of 21 December, commended the UN and OAU for their ongoing cooperative activities in conflict resolution in Africa and invited the UN to assist OAU in strengthening its institutional and operational capacity in the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts.

Zones of peace

South Atlantic

The General Assembly in 1986(8) had declared the South Atlantic a zone of peace and cooperation and, in subsequent years, reaffirmed the determination of States of the zone to enhance and accelerate their cooperation in political, economic, scientific, technical, cultural and other spheres.

In October 1995, in response to a 1994 Assembly request,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on implementation of the 1986 declaration,⁽¹⁰⁾ containing the views of six Governments and five UN bodies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/18.

Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/11 of 27 October 1986, in which it solemnly declared the Atlantic Ocean, in the region between Africa and South America, the "Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic", Recalling also its subsequent resolutions on the matter, including resolution 45/36 of 27 November 1990, in which it reaffirmed the determination of the States of the zone to enhance and accelerate their cooperation in the political, economic, scientific, cultural and other spheres,

Reaffirming that the questions of peace and security and those of development are interrelated and inseparable, and that cooperation for peace and development among States of the region will promote the objectives of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic,

Aware of the importance that the States of the zone attach to the region's environment, and recognizing the threat that pollution from any source poses to the marine and coastal environment, its ecological balance and its resources,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the purposes and objectives of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic as a basis for the promotion of cooperation among the countries of the region;

2. Calls upon all States to cooperate in the promotion of the objectives established in the declaration of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic and to refrain from any action inconsistent with those objectives and with the Charter of the United Nations and relevant resolutions of the Organization, particularly action which may create or aggravate situations of tension and potential conflict in the region;

5. Welcomes the progress towards the full entry into force of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco), and the conclusion of a treaty on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa;

6. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the international community, in accordance with Security Council resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, aimed at contributing to an effective and lasting peace in Angola on the basis of the "Acordos de Bicesse" and the Lusaka Protocol;

7. Also welcomes recent positive developments in the situation of Liberia, including progress towards peace and national reconciliation in accordance with the Abuja Agreement to supplement the Cotonou and Akosombo Agreements as subsequently clarified by the Accra Agreement;

8. Commends the efforts of Member States and humanitarian organizations to render humanitarian assistance to Angola and Liberia, and urges them to continue to provide and to increase such assistance;

9. Affirms the importance of the South Atlantic to global maritime and commercial transactions and its determination to preserve the region for all activities protected by international law, as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

10. Further welcomes the offer by South Africa to host at Cape Town, on 1 and 2 April 1996, the fourth meeting of the States members of the zone;

11. Requests the relevant organizations, organs and bodies of the United Nations system to render all appropriate assistance which States of the zone may seek in their joint efforts to implement the declaration of the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the implementation of resolution 41/11 and subsequent resolutions on the matter under review and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, taking into account, inter alia, the views expressed by Member States;

Indian Ocean

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽¹⁾ the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean (New York, 30 March and 27-30 June 1995)⁽²⁾ continued to consider alternative approaches to achieving the goals contained in the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.⁽³⁾

The Committee focused on the implementation of a 1994 Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ with a view to giving new impetus to strengthening cooperation and ensuring peace, security and stability. It noted that greater efforts and more time were needed to develop a focused discussion on practical measures to ensure those conditions in the region. Statements were made relating to initiatives taken by countries in the region to promote cooperation, particularly economic cooperation.

The Chairman of the Committee reported on his consultations with France, the United Kingdom and the United States—the three permanent members of the Security Council that had withdrawn from the Committee in 1990. The Committee stated that it remained convinced that the participation in its work of all permanent members of the Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean would assist the progress of a mutually beneficial dialogue to develop conditions of peace, security and stability. The Committee encouraged those States concerned to resume their participation in its work and urged its Chairman to pursue his dialogue with their Governments and to report back at its next session. The Committee recommended that the Chairman inform it of the results of his consultations and other relevant developments at a meeting to be held in 1996 for that purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/76.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolution 49/82 of 15 December 1994 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean held in July 1979,

Having considered the conclusions and recommendations reached by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean during its session in 1995,

Emphasizing the need to foster consensual approaches, in particular given the prevailing international climate, which is conducive to the pursuit of such endeavours,

Noting the initiatives taken by countries in the region to promote cooperation, in particular economic cooperation, in the Indian Ocean area and the possible contribution of such initiatives to overall objectives of a zone of peace,

Convinced that the participation of all the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee is important and would assist the progress of mutually beneficial dialogue to develop conditions of peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;

2. Considers that greater efforts and more time are required to develop a focused discussion on practical measures to ensure conditions of peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region;

3. Reiterates its conviction that the participation of all the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee is important and would greatly facilitate development of a mutually beneficial dialogue to advance peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region;

4. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to pursue his dialogue on the work of the Committee with the permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean and to apprise the Ad Hoc Committee of his consultations and other relevant developments at a meeting to be held in 1996 for that specific purpose, to take place before the 1997 regular session of the Committee;

5. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the consultations held;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace".

Chapter II

Disarmament

The 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons took place at UN Headquarters in New York from 17 April to 12 May, and was considered the most important event in the area of arms limitation and disarmament during the year. By agreeing to extend the duration of the 1968 Treaty indefinitely, States parties gave permanence to the only existing international legal barrier against nuclear proliferation. The decisions adopted at the Conference strengthened the existing non-proliferation regime and opened the road for further progress towards nuclear disarmament, it was widely felt.

Another important disarmament-related event occurred in 1995—the conclusion of the Treaty of Pelindaba—by which the entire continent of Africa would become a nuclear-weapon-free zone. It marked the culmination of more than three decades of effort, which began in 1960, when the proposal for a nuclear-weapon-free zone was put forward in the United Nations as a response by a group of African States to French nuclear testing in the Sahara Desert. It was the first such regional arrangement negotiated under United Nations auspices.

Negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty intensified throughout the 1995 session of the Conference on Disarmament and during inter-session meetings. The measure of the progress achieved could be seen in the recording of agreed language in the rolling text of the draft treaty.

The Group of Governmental Experts to Prepare the Review Conference of the States Parties to the 1981 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, at its fourth and final session (Geneva, 9-20 January), elaborated an integrated draft text of amendments to Protocol II. It also adopted a text of the Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV).

The world's only multilateral negotiating body on disarmament issues—the Conference on Disarmament—met in a three-part session in 1995 (30 January-7 April, 29 May-7 July and 31 July-22 September). Its agenda included items relating to: a nuclear test ban; cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; prevention of an arms race in outer space; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments. Conference proceedings were marked by serious organizational difficulties arising from differences of view concerning its agenda and membership.

The Disarmament Commission, comprising all UN Member States, held four plenary meetings at its 1995 session (15-30 May). The Commission's 1995 agenda contained items on nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons; international arms transfers, with particular reference to a 1991 General Assembly resolution; and a review of the Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade.

The General Assembly decided to convene in 1997, if possible, a fourth special session devoted to disarmament.

UN role in disarmament

UN machinery

In 1995, UN disarmament efforts continued, mainly through the General Assembly and its First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a deliberative body) and the Conference on Disarmament (the multilateral negotiating forum which meets in Geneva).

Rationalization of the work of the First Committee

On 12 December, by decision 50/421, the General Assembly requested the Chairman of the First Committee to continue consultations on the further rationalization of the work of the Committee and decided to defer until 1997 consideration of the item entitled "Rationalization of the work and reform of the agenda of the First Committee".

Fourth special session devoted to disarmament

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 F.

Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/75 I of 15 December 1994, Recalling also that three special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament were held in 1978, 1982 and 1988,

Bearing in mind the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and the final objective of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Welcoming the recent positive changes in the international landscape, characterized by the end of the cold war, the relaxation of tensions at the global level and the emergence of a new spirit governing relations among nations,

Taking note of paragraph 108 of the Final Declaration of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995,^a which supported the convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament in 1997, which would offer an opportunity to review, from a perspective more in tune with the current international situation, the most critical aspects of the process of disarmament and to mobilize the international community and public opinion in favour of the elimination of weapons of mass destruction and of the control and reduction of conventional weapons,

Expecting that, since negotiations and action on important disarmament issues will be completed by the end of 1996, the year 1997 would be an opportune time to review the progress in the entire field of disarmament in the post-cold-war era,

1. Decides to convene its fourth special session on disarmament in 1997, if possible, the exact date and agenda to be decided upon before the end of the current session of the General Assembly through consultations;

2. Also decides to establish a Preparatory Committee to prepare a draft agenda for the special session, to examine all relevant questions relating to that session and to submit its recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

3. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General, no later than 1 April 1996, their views on the draft agenda and other relevant questions relating to the fourth special session on disarmament;

4. Requests the Preparatory Committee to meet for a short organizational session before the end of the fifty-first session of the General Assembly in order, inter alia, to set the date for its substantive session;

5. Also requests the Preparatory Committee to submit its progress report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session an item entitled "Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament: report of the Preparatory Committee for the Fourth Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament".

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, comprising all UN Member States, held four plenary meetings at its 1995 session (New York, 15-30 May).⁽¹⁾ It also held organizational meetings on 13 April and 11 December.

The Commission's 1995 agenda contained items on nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons; international arms transfers, with particular reference to a 1991 General Assembly resolution;⁽²⁾ and a review of the Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade, which was adopted by the Assembly in 1990.⁽³⁾ The first two items were carried over from the Commission's 1994 session.⁽⁴⁾ In 1995, three working groups were established, one for each item.

The Commission concluded its consideration of the items on nuclear disarmament and on the question of the Third Disarmament Decade, although without reaching agreement on relevant texts.

Working Group III, established to carry out a review and appraisal of the implementation of the Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade, met between 18 and 26 May. However, in spite of intensive efforts, the Group was unable to reach consensus on a text.

(For information on the work of the Working Group on arms transfers, see below, under "Conventional weapons and advanced technologies".)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/72 D.

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Recalling its resolutions 47/54 A of 9 December 1992, 47/54 G of 8 April 1993, 48/77 A of 16 December 1993 and 49/77 A of 15 December 1994,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Notes with regret that the Disarmament Commission was unable to achieve agreement on guidelines and recommendations under its agenda item entitled "Process of nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons" and on recommendations under its agenda item entitled "Review of the Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade", both of which were concluded in 1995;

4. Reaffirms the importance of further enhancing the dialogue and cooperation among the First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament;

5. Also reaffirms the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

6. Encourages the Disarmament Commission to continue to make every effort to enhance its working methods so as to enable it to give focused consideration to a limited number of priority issues in the field of disarmament, bearing in mind the decision it has taken to move its agenda towards a three-item phased approach;

7. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of Assembly resolution 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations on the items on its agenda, taking into account the adopted "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission";

8. Recommends that, pursuant to the adopted three-item phased approach, the Disarmament Commission, at its 1995 organizational session, adopt the following items for consideration at its 1996 substantive session:

(a) International arms transfers, with particular reference to General Assembly resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991;

(b) [to be added];^a

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure full provision to the Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services, including verbatim records, to that end;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare a compilation, in the format of a note by the Secretary-General, of all texts of principles, guidelines or recommendations on subject items that have been unanimously adopted by the Disarmament Commission since its inception in 1978;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

^aThe new item will be decided by the Disarmament Commission at its 1995 organizational session. (On 24 April 1996, the Disarmament Commission adopted the agenda for its 1996 substantive session, including, as a second substantive item, the item entitled "Exchange of views on the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament". The Commission did not reach a consensus on a third substantive item.)

General Assembly resolution 50/72 D

12 December 1995 Meeting 90 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/50/592) without vote, 17 November (meeting 26); draft by Mongolia (for Disarmament Commission) and 14 other States (A/C.1/50/L.28/Rev.1); agenda item 72 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 1st Committee 3-11, 26; plenary 90.

In the Committee, paragraph 12 was retained by a recorded vote of 147 to none, with 3 abstentions. Similarly, the Assembly adopted the para-

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, a multilateral negotiating body, in 1995 held a three-part session in Geneva (30 January-7 April, 29 May-7 July and 31 July-22 September).⁽⁵⁾ In addition to the 37 States members of the Conference (see APPENDIX III for list of members), 52 additional States, not members of the Conference, were invited to participate at their request.

During 28 formal plenary meetings and six informal meetings, the Conference considered a nuclear test ban; cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; prevention of an arms race in outer space; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments.

The proceedings of the Conference were marked by serious organizational difficulties arising from differences of view concerning its agenda and membership. Although it re-established two ad hoc committees—the first on a nuclear test ban and the second on a cut-off in fissile material—only the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban carried out its work. The committee to deal with a cut-off in fissile material could not proceed until agreement could be reached on the re-establishment of ad hoc committees on negative security assurances, prevention of an arms race in outer space, and transparency in armaments, and on the commencement of substantive consideration of nuclear disarmament. As no such agreement was reached, those questions were dealt with only in plenary meetings.

Some progress, however, was made with respect to the expansion of the Conference membership. On 21 September, the Conference adopted a decision⁽⁶⁾ to admit 23 more States (Austria, Bangladesh, Belarus, Cameroon, Chile, Colombia, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Finland, Iraq, Israel, New Zealand, Norway, Republic of Korea, Senegal, Slovakia, South Africa, Spain, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, Ukraine, Viet Nam, Zimbabwe) to membership at the earliest date, to be decided by the Conference. The list had originally been proposed in 1993.⁽⁷⁾ Twelve other States had requested membership but were not included in the decision. Conference rules of procedure provide for a review of membership at regular intervals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/72 A.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community, has the primary role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Noting with satisfaction the results achieved so far on the subject of a comprehensive test ban, as well as the commitment to complete the negotiations on the issue as soon as possible and not later than 1996,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

2. Welcomes the determination of the Conference on Disarmament to fulfil that role in the light of the evolving international situation, with a view to making early substantive progress on priority items of its agenda;

3. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to continue as the highest-priority task its negotiations to conclude a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

4. Acknowledges decision CD/1356 taken by the Conference on Disarmament on 21 September 1995 regarding its composition and the commitment to implement that decision at the earliest possible date;

5. Encourages the review of the agenda and methods of work of the Conference on Disarmament;

6. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to make every effort to reach a consensus on its programme of work at the beginning of its 1996 session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure the provision to the Conference on Disarmament of adequate administrative, substantive and conference support services;

8. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

General Assembly resolution 50/72 A

12 December 1995 Meeting 90 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/50/592) without vote, 10 November (meeting 18); draft by Morocco, for Conference on Disarmament (A/C.1/50/L.4); agenda item 72 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 1st Committee 3-11, 18; plenary 90.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/72 C.

Expansion of the membership of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament, and in particular the part concerning expansion of the membership of the Conference,

Stressing the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the sole multilateral global negotiating body on disarmament,

Emphasizing the fact that, notwithstanding dramatic changes in the international situation and continuous consultations, there has been no expansion of the membership of the Conference during the last seventeen years,

Fully convinced that an enlarged membership is desirable in order to take advantage of the current propitious international climate to negotiate and conclude, on the solid basis of a more representative participation, a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty and other important agreements requiring universal adherence,

Recognizing the legitimate aspirations of all candidate countries to participate fully in the work of the Conference on Disarmament, and recalling relevant decisions taken to review the composition of the Conference, including the agreement reached among Member States during the first special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament on a further expansion and on the wish to review the membership of the then Committee on Disarmament^a at regular intervals,

Noting that the Conference on Disarmament, which is funded from the regular budget, was granted, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/77 B of 16 December 1993, supplementary administrative, substantive and conference support services, inter alia, in anticipation of its expansion,

Recalling in particular its resolution 49/77 B of 15 December 1994, adopted without a vote, urging the Conference on Disarmament to make every effort to reach a solution resulting, by the beginning of 1995, in a significant expansion of its composition, which would then include at least sixty countries,

Strongly regretting, nevertheless, that the decision of the Conference on Disarmament to adopt the report of the then Special Coordinator for Membership, and the recommended composition attached to it, taken at the end of the 1995 session did not result in the immediate expansion of its membership,

1. Recalls the report of 12 August 1993 of the Special Coordinator for Membership designated by the Conference on Disarmament and the subsequent statement made by the Special Coordinator on 26 August 1993, recommending a dynamic solution to the question of membership;

2. Recognizes the legitimate aspirations of all countries that have applied for membership to participate fully in the work of the Conference on Disarmament;

3. Acknowledges decision CD/1356, taken at the 719th plenary meeting of the Conference on Disarmament on 21 September 1995, including the commitment to implement the decision at the earliest possible date;

4. Calls for the implementation of decision CD/1356 on the expansion of membership of the Conference on Disarmament on an urgent basis;

5. Strongly urges that the new members should, in pursuance of decision CD/1356 and with particular reference to the provisions contained in the second paragraph of that decision, all assume together membership of the Conference at the start of the 1996 session of the Conference;

6. Calls on the Conference on Disarmament, in accordance with its decision CD/1356, to review the situation following the presentation of progress reports by the President of the Conference on ongoing consultations at the end of each part of its annual session;

7. Urges that, following the presentation of progress reports by the President of the Conference, the other candidatures to date be further considered by the Conference at its 1996 session.

^aRedesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Non-proliferation

Non-proliferation Treaty

New parties to the Treaty

In 1995, Algeria, Argentina, Chile, the Comoros, Eritrea, the Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Monaco, Palau, the United Arab Emirates and Vanuatu acceded to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)(1) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia succeeded to it, bringing the number of States parties to 182 at year's end.(2) The Treaty entered into force on 5 March 1970.

NPT Review and Extension Conference

The 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (New York, 17 April-12 May)(3) was held to review the Treaty's operation and to decide on its extension. The Treaty called for holding a conference 25 years after its entry into force to decide whether it should continue in force indefinitely or be extended for an additional fixed period or periods. Previous quinquennial review conferences had been held in 1975,(4) 1980,(5) 1985(6) and 1990,(7) as called for under article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Treaty.

The Preparatory Committee for the Conference held its fourth and final session (New York, 23-27 January) in 1995 to discuss substantive and organizational matters.(8) Previous sessions were held in 1993(9) and 1994.(10) The States parties to NPT had formed the Committee in 1992.(11)

States parties participating in the Conference numbered 175. Representatives of the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) also participated, as well as a number of States non-parties, intergovernmental organizations and agencies, research institutes and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

The Conference adopted a decision to extend the Treaty indefinitely, and two other decisions concerning strengthening the review process for the Treaty, and principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament. The Conference adopted a Final Document containing the three decisions, all of which were adopted without a vote. It also adopted a resolution on the Middle East which called on all States in that region to accede to the Treaty.

The Conference established three Main Committees, the reports of which constituted part of the Final Document, and a Drafting Committee. The Main Committees reviewed the operation of the provisions of the Treaty allocated to them and were to work out language for inclusion in a final document. Discussions focused on: nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament; security assurances; nuclear-weapon-free zones; the implementation of safeguards; and the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. However, the Conference was unable to agree on a final declaration on the review of the operation of the Treaty because of insufficient time to deal with a number of issues on which positions were highly divergent.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,(12) the Secretary-General, in a March report with a later addendum,(13) transmitted the replies of 11 Governments, as well as France on behalf of the European Union (EU), providing their legal interpretations of article X, paragraph 2, of NPT concerning the extension of the Treaty, and their views on the different options and actions available.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 Q.

1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/52 A of 9 December 1992, in which it, inter alia, took note of the decision of the parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, following appropriate consultations, to form a preparatory committee for a conference to review the operation of the Treaty and to decide on its extension, as provided for in article VIII, paragraph 3, and also called for in article X, paragraph 2, of the Treaty,

Recalling also that the parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons convened in New York from 17 April to 12 May 1995 in accordance with article VIII, paragraph 3, and article X, paragraph 2, of the Treaty,

Noting that, at the time of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, there were one hundred and seventy-five of the one hundred and seventy-eight States parties to the Treaty present,

1. Notes that on 11 May 1995 the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons adopted three decisions on strengthening the review process for the Treaty, principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament, and extension of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Takes note of the resolution on the Middle East adopted on 11 May 1995 by the parties to the Treaty;

3. Notes that the States parties to the Treaty participating in the Review Conference:

(a) Agreed to strengthen the review process for the operation of the Treaty with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble and the provisions of the Treaty were being realized, and decided that, in accordance with article VIII, paragraph 3, the Review Conferences should continue to be held every five years, and that, accordingly, the next Review Conference should be held in the year 2000, and that the first meeting of the Preparatory Committee should be held in 1997;

(b) Affirmed the need to continue to move with determination towards the full realization and effective implementation of the provisions of the Treaty, and accordingly adopted a set of principles and objectives;

(c) Decided that, as a majority existed among States parties to the Treaty for its indefinite extension, in accordance with its article X, paragraph 2, the Treaty should continue in force indefinitely;

4. Notes that the three decisions and the resolution were adopted without a vote.

IAEA safeguards

In March, the Board of Governors of IAEA reviewed the progress made by the secretariat regarding its programme, adopted in 1993,⁽⁶⁾ to improve the Agency's safeguards regime, and endorsed its general direction. The Board noted, however, that some Governors had reservations about the need for greater access to sites. In June, the Secretariat submitted specific proposals in a two-part document concerning measures that could be implemented under existing legal authority and measures requiring additional legal authority to be conferred by the States involved. Some of the measures foreseen in part 1 were broader access to information regarding sites and activities relevant to States' nuclear programmes, and sensitive analysis of the environment at locations to which the Agency had access. The Board approved the first part of the proposals and decided to consider the second part at a later date. In September, the IAEA General Conference requested the Director General to make arrangements to implement the first part of the measures proposed and to put before the Board of Governors clear proposals for the second part.⁽⁴⁾ However, at its December meeting, the Board of Governors took no decision on the matter.

As at 31 December 1995, there were 100 safeguards agreements in force with 107 States with respect to NPT, 6 of which entered into force during the year (Belarus, Bolivia, Croatia, Kazakhstan, Myanmar, Zimbabwe). Barbados, the Republic of Moldova and Ukraine signed safeguards agreements under the Treaty in 1995, but they had not entered into force by the end of the year. Regarding the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco), there were 20 safeguards agreements in force, 16 of which were Tlatelolco/NPT agreements; 2 of those agreements entered into force in 1995 (Bolivia, Chile). The sui generis safeguards agreement between Ukraine and IAEA, signed in 1994,⁽⁵⁾ came into force on 13 January.

(For details of compliance by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with non-proliferation and safeguards agreements, see PART TWO, Chapter IV.)

Middle East

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1995 a report⁽¹⁷⁾ containing the text of a 22 September resolution of the IAEA General Conference on the application of IAEA safeguards in the Middle East.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/73.

The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the relevant United Nations resolutions,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the latest of which is GC(39)/RES/24, adopted on 22 September 1995, and noting the danger of nuclear proliferation, especially in areas of tension,

Cognizant that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the region of the Middle East would pose a serious threat to international peace and security,

Aware of the importance that all nuclear facilities in the region be placed under full-scope safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Recalling the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference noted with concern the continued existence in the Middle East of unsafeguarded nuclear facilities, reaffirmed the importance of the early realization of universal adherence to the Treaty and called upon all States in the Middle East that had not yet done so, without exception, to accede to the Treaty as soon as possible and to place all their nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Recalling also the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference urged universal adherence to the Treaty as an urgent priority and called upon all States not yet party to the Treaty to accede to it at the earliest date, particularly those States that operate unsafeguarded nuclear facilities,

Encouraged by the recent positive developments in the Middle East peace process, which would be further strengthened by States of the region undertaking practical confidence-building measures in order to consolidate the non-proliferation regime,

1. Welcomes the accession of the United Arab Emirates on 26 September 1995 to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon Israel and all other States of the region that are not yet party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons, to renounce possession of nuclear weapons and to accede to the Treaty at the earliest date;

3. Calls upon the States of the region that have not yet done so to place all unsafeguarded nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards as an important confidence-building measure among all States of the region and as a step towards enhancing peace and security;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East".

Strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States

In April, in response to concerns expressed by the non-nuclear-weapon States, the five nuclear-weapon States (China, France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States) updated their previous unilateral declarations,⁽¹⁸⁾ containing both positive and negative assurances, in the course of their preparations for the 1995 NPT Review and Extension Conference (China,⁽¹⁹⁾ France,⁽²⁰⁾ Russian Federation,⁽²¹⁾ United Kingdom,⁽²²⁾ United States).⁽²³⁾ Only the assurance of China was considered unconditional.

Positive assurances meant that certain States would provide or support immediate assistance, in accordance with the UN Charter, to any non-nuclear-weapon State party to NPT that was a victim of an act or an object of a threat of aggression in which nuclear weapons were used. Negative assurances provided a commitment by the nuclear-weapon States not to use nuclear weapons against countries not possessing such weapons.

The negative security assurances of four of the nuclear-weapon States (France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States) were harmonized in the light of efforts being made to draft a new Security Council resolution on assurances. The Council had adopted a resolution on the issue in 1968.⁽²⁴⁾

Recognizing that these measures did not, however, fully meet the hopes of those States that sought legally binding commitments, the parties to NPT agreed, in their decision on principles and objectives adopted at the review Conference (see above), to consider further steps that could take the form of a multilateral, legally binding instrument.

Communications. On 28 February, referring to its long-standing unconditional undertaking not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States or nuclear-weapon-free zones, China stated⁽²⁵⁾ that its position also applied to Kazakhstan and assured that State that it would respect its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. It had made similar assurances to Ukraine in 1994.⁽¹⁰⁾

Following the adoption of Security Council resolution 984(1995), Bulgaria⁽²⁶⁾ and Kazakhstan⁽²⁷⁾ welcomed the granting of security guarantees by the nuclear-weapon States.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council adopted resolution 984(1995) on 11 April 1995.

The Security Council,

Convinced that every effort must be made to avoid and avert the danger of nuclear war, to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons, to facilitate international cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy with particular emphasis on the needs of developing countries, and reaffirming the crucial importance of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to these efforts,

Recognizing the legitimate interest of non-nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to receive security assurances,

Welcoming the fact that more than 170 States have become parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and stressing the desirability of universal adherence to it,

Reaffirming the need for all States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to comply fully with all their obligations,

Taking into consideration the legitimate concern of non-nuclear-weapon States that, in conjunction with their adherence to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, further appropriate measures be undertaken to safeguard their security,

Considering that the present resolution constitutes a step in this direction,

Considering further that, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, any aggression with the use of nuclear weapons would endanger international peace and security,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the statements made by each of the nuclear-weapon States, in which they give security assurances against the use of nuclear weapons to non-nuclear-weapon States that are parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Recognizes the legitimate interest of non-nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to receive assurances that the Security Council, and above all its nuclear-weapon State permanent members, will act immediately in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in the event that such States are the victim of an act of, or object of a threat of, aggression in which nuclear weapons are used;

3. Recognizes further that, in case of aggression with nuclear weapons or the threat of such aggression against a non-nuclear-weapon State party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, any State may bring the matter immediately to the attention of the Security Council to enable the Council to take urgent action to provide assistance, in accordance with the Charter, to the State victim of an act of, or object of a threat of, such aggression; and recognizes also that the nuclear-weapon State permanent members of the Security Council will bring the matter immediately to the attention of the Council and seek Council action to provide, in accordance with the Charter, the necessary assistance to the State victim;

4. Notes the means available to it for assisting such a non-nuclear-weapon State party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, including an investigation into the situation and appropriate measures to settle the dispute and restore international peace and security;

5. Invites Member States, individually or collectively, if any non-nuclear-weapon State party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons is a victim of an act of aggression with nuclear weapons, to take appropriate measures in response to a request from the victim for technical, medical, scientific or humanitarian assistance, and affirms its readiness to consider what measures are needed in this regard in the event of such an act of aggression;

6. Expresses its intention to recommend appropriate procedures, in response to any request from a non-nuclear-weapon State party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons that is the victim of such an act of aggression, regarding compensation under international law from the aggressor for loss, damage or injury sustained as a result of the aggression;

7. Welcomes the intention expressed by certain States that they will provide or support immediate assistance, in accordance with the Charter, to any non-nuclear-weapon State party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons that is a victim of an act of, or an object of a threat of, aggression in which nuclear weapons are used;

8. Urges all States, as provided for in article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to nuclear disarmament and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control which remains a universal goal;

9. Reaffirms the inherent right, recognized under Article 51 of the Charter, of individual and collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security;

10. Underlines that the issues raised in this resolution remain of continuing concern to the Council.

11 April 1995 Meeting 3514 Adopted unanimously

5-nation draft (S/1995/275).

Sponsors: China, France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Conference on Disarmament consideration.

At its 1995 session,⁽²⁸⁾ the Conference on Disarmament was unable to establish an ad hoc committee on assurances because that action was linked to the establishment of ad hoc bodies on some other agenda items.

The five nuclear-weapon States updated their unilateral declarations on assurances in a 6 April plenary meeting (see above). At the same meeting, France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States made a joint declaration.⁽²⁹⁾ A number of delegations welcomed the unilateral declarations, expressing the view that they were consistent with the commitments that the non-nuclear-weapon States had entered into in the context of NPT. However, the Group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States (Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Myanmar, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Zaire), in a joint statement,⁽³⁰⁾ noted that neither the Conference on Disarmament nor any members of the Group were associated with the drafting of the Security Council resolution and stressed that the text did not take into account any of the formal objections made in the past by non-nuclear-weapon States on what they called the restrictive, restrained, uncertain, conditional and discriminatory character of the guarantees already provided. The Group considered that the terms of its 31 March 1994 declaration on the subject remained valid.⁽³¹⁾

By the end of the session, all groups in the Conference had confirmed their readiness to address the issue in the framework of the ad hoc committee, and many recommended its re-establishment at the beginning of the 1996 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/68.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Noting that, despite recent progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, further efforts are necessary towards the achievement of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Also convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Determined strictly to abide by the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or threat of force,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing also that effective measures and arrangements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament,^a submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as of the report of the Conference on its 1992 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the relevant decision of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995,^b and also of the decision adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communiqué of the Twentieth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul from 4 to 8 August 1991, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, ^aRedesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

^bA/50/752-S/1995/1035.

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations made by all nuclear-weapon States on their policies of non-use or non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Noting also the greater willingness to overcome the difficulties encountered in previous years,

Noting further Security Council resolution 984(1995) of 11 April 1995 and the views expressed on it,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, in particular resolutions 45/54 of 4 December 1990, 46/32 of 6 December 1991, 47/50 of 9 December 1992, 48/73 of 16 December 1993 and 49/73 of 15 December 1994,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to work actively towards an early agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Also recommends that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Nuclear-arms limitation and disarmament

Comprehensive test-ban treaty

In 1995, three treaties on nuclear testing were in effect, one multilateral—the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water⁽³²⁾—and two bilateral—the Treaty on Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests and the Treaty on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, both of which entered into force in 1990. None of them was comprehensive.

Negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty continued throughout the 1995 session of the Conference on Disarmament and during inter-session meetings. The measure of the progress achieved was in the recording of agreed language in the rolling text of the draft treaty.

Conference on Disarmament consideration.

The Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban was re-established in 1995⁽³⁸⁾ and charged with the same mandate as in 1994,⁽³³⁾ namely, to negotiate a comprehensive test-ban treaty.

The Committee held 28 meetings between 30 January and 19 September, during which it set up two Working Groups. Working Group 1 dealt with verification and Working Group 2 with legal and institutional issues. In addition, 10 Friends of the Chair and two Convenors were appointed to deal with specific issues in private and open-ended consultations.

Working Group 1 made intensive efforts towards structuring and revising treaty language on the verification regime in the rolling text. The rolling text was composed of two main parts: part 1 comprised draft treaty provisions that commanded a certain degree of consensus at the time of the adoption of the report; part 2 contained provisions that needed more extensive negotiation. An expert meeting was held relating to the overall structure of the International Monitoring System (IMS) to be established to verify compliance with the treaty. Later in the session, the Working Group, with the participation of experts, continued to narrow options and to specify the number and location of monitoring stations. As a result, revised draft language on provisions on verification issues was included in part 2 of the rolling text.

Working Group 2 elaborated revised draft language on legal and institutional aspects of the draft treaty, which was included in part 1 or 2 of the rolling text, depending on their respective stages of development. Thus, part 1 comprised measures to redress a situation and to ensure compliance, including sanctions; settlement of disputes; privileges and immunities; signature; ratification; accession; depositary; status of protocols and annexes; authentic texts; national implementation measures; and amendments.

The Ad Hoc Committee recommended that: the rolling text be used for further negotiation and drafting of the treaty; other documents considered by it be used in future negotiation and development of the treaty; expert work on IMS continue during the period from 4 to 15 December 1995; its work be continued during the period from 8 to 19 January 1996; and that it be re-established at the outset of the 1996 session of the Conference, with its current mandate, with a view to completing the negotiations as soon as possible and not later than in 1996.

The report⁽³⁴⁾ of the Committee containing the rolling text of the treaty was adopted by the Conference on Disarmament on 6 September.

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Cooperative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events held its fortieth (20 February-3 March),⁽³⁵⁾ forty-first (7-18 August)⁽³⁶⁾ and forty-second (27 November-1 December)⁽³⁷⁾ sessions in 1995, all in Geneva.

At its fortieth session, the Ad Hoc Group discussed the planning, operation and evaluation of the Group of Scientific Experts Technical Test Three (GSETT-3), which was an experimental seismic IMS. In August, it reviewed results from GSETT-3, which had begun full-scale operations on 1 January 1995. The Group noted that the concepts for an experimental seismic monitoring system to be tested during GSETT-3 included a single centralized International Data Centre (IDC), a specifically designed high-quality seismographic network consisting of some 50 primary (Alpha) stations and 100 to 150 auxiliary (Beta) stations, National Data Centres in participating countries, and a modern communications system to support exchange among those elements. IDC had been in operation since 1 January 1995 and currently 37 primary and 75 auxiliary stations were participating in the experiment. The remaining tasks envisaged for the completion and evaluation of GSETT-3 monitoring system dealt with network development, communications, evaluation and completion and the transition of GSETT-3 to IMS operations. The main topic of discussion at the Group's forty-second session was consideration of an auxiliary network of seismic stations for IMS. It also reviewed progress on its GSETT-3 experiment, noting that four new primary stations and six new auxiliary stations had been added since August. The Group reviewed a preliminary report on the evaluation of GSETT-3 and asked the Evaluation Group to present a draft of a final report for its next session in February 1996.

As the final evaluation of GSETT-3 would not be done until 1996, the Group could draw only preliminary conclusions; among them, it appeared that a single IDC would be capable of acquiring and archiving not only the volume of seismic data anticipated, but also the radionuclide, hydroacoustic and infrasound data to be exchanged. It was projected that, taken together, the primary and auxiliary seismic networks should be capable of locating seismic events in continental areas of magnitude four and above with an uncertainty in location of not more than 1,000 square kilometres. GSETT-3 also confirmed that the investment costs for its stations, communications links and IDC would be some $180 million, and yearly operational and maintenance costs would be about $30 million. The Ad Hoc Group recommended that the development and testing of its experimental system be continued to provide for a seamless transition into IMS under a future treaty.

As recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban, inter-session meetings of the IMS Expert Group were held from 4 to 15 December.⁽³⁸⁾ The Group, which had met several times during the annual session of the Ad Hoc Committee to elaborate the networks for the four agreed monitoring systems, agreed on the number and location of the stations to be incorporated in the four monitoring networks, and based, in principle, the number and placement of the auxiliary seismic stations for IMS on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts.

Note by the Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly requests of 1986⁽³⁹⁾ and 1987,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General in June transmitted two quarterly reports (July-September and October-December 1994) from Australia, which indicated that China had detonated an underground nuclear device in Lop Nor on 7 October 1994.⁽⁴⁰⁾

Unilateral moratoriums

In 1995, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States continued to observe their unilateral moratoriums.

On 15 May, China conducted an underground nuclear test at Lop Nor, and two further tests at the same site on 10 June and 17 August, but reiterated that it was committed to cease nuclear testing forever upon the entry into force of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty. Ecuador, by a letter of 1 June,⁽⁴¹⁾ condemned the May test. Australia on 17 August,⁽⁴²⁾ Mongolia on 18 August⁽⁴³⁾ and the Philippines on 18 August,⁽⁴⁴⁾ in protest to the August test, urged China to cease nuclear testing.

France carried out five nuclear-test explosions in 1995 in French Polynesia: on 5 September, 1 and 27 October, 21 November and 27 December. Before the resumed testing, France had not conducted a nuclear test since 15 July 1991. Letters condemning France's decision to resume nuclear testing in the Pacific were transmitted by: Australia,⁽⁴⁵⁾ Australia, as current Chair of the South Pacific Forum,⁽⁴⁶⁾ Ecuador,⁽⁴⁷⁾ Malaysia,⁽⁴⁸⁾ and the Philippines.⁽⁴⁹⁾ Belarus,⁽⁵⁰⁾ Peru⁽⁵¹⁾ and Ukraine⁽⁵²⁾ transmitted letters of protest.

Indonesia, on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, on 26 July⁽⁵³⁾ condemned the recent tests conducted by a nuclear-weapon State, as well as the decision by another State to suspend its moratorium and to resume testing soon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/65.

Comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/70 of 16 December 1993 and 49/70 of 15 December 1994, in which the entire international community supported the multilateral negotiations on a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Reaffirming that a comprehensive nuclear-test ban is one of the highest-priority objectives of the international community in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation,

Convinced that the most effective way to achieve an end to nuclear testing is through the conclusion of a universal and internationally and effectively verifiable comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty that will attract the adherence of all States and will contribute to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects, to the process of nuclear disarmament and therefore to the enhancement of international peace and security,

Noting the aspirations expressed by the parties to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water to seek to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time, which are recalled in the preamble to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Welcoming the further elaboration of the rolling text in the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban of the Conference on Disarmament, as reflected in the report of the Conference and its appendix, and the decision of the Conference to continue its work in inter-sessional meetings,

1. Welcomes the continuing efforts in the multilateral negotiations on a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty in the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban of the Conference on Disarmament, the significant contributions to the rolling text made by States participating in those negotiations and progress in key areas;

2. Calls upon all States participating in the Conference on Disarmament, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to conclude, as a task of the highest priority, a universal and multilaterally and effectively verifiable comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty which contributes to nuclear disarmament and the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects, so as to enable its signature by the outset of the fifty-first session of the General Assembly;

3. Also calls upon participants in the Conference on Disarmament to advance work on the basis of the rolling text during the inter-sessional negotiating period so as to proceed to the final phase of the negotiations at the beginning of 1996;

4. Further calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee at the commencement of its 1996 session, and to renew its mandate in order to complete the final text of the treaty as soon as possible in 1996;

5. Urges all States to support the multilateral negotiations in the Conference on Disarmament for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty and their prompt conclusion;

6. Declares its readiness to resume consideration of this item, as necessary, before its fifty-first session in order to endorse the text of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision to the Conference on Disarmament of adequate administrative, substantive and conference support services for these negotiations;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session an item entitled "Implementation of the comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

General Assembly resolution 50/65

12 December 1995 Meeting 90 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/50/585 & Corr.1) without vote, 17 November (meeting 25); 91-nation draft (A/C.1/50/L.8/Rev.1); agenda item 65. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 1st Committee 3-11, 16, 25; plenary 90.

In the Committee, a separate recorded vote was taken on paragraph 2, which was retained by 161 to none, with 1 abstention. The Assembly adopted the paragraph by a recorded vote of 166 to none, with 1 abstention.

Also on 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 A.

Nuclear testing

The General Assembly,

Welcoming the easing of international tension and the strengthening of trust between States that have prevailed following the end of the cold war,

Reaffirming that the cessation of all nuclear testing will contribute to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects, to the process of nuclear disarmament leading to the ultimate objective of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons and therefore to the further enhancement of international peace and security.

Convinced that the cessation of all nuclear testing will provide a favourable climate for the conclusion of negotiations on a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Considering that nuclear testing is not consistent with undertakings by the nuclear-weapon States at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Deeply concerned about the potential negative effects of underground nuclear testing on health and the environment,

Sharing alarm expressed internationally, regionally and nationally at recent nuclear tests,

1. Commends those nuclear-weapon States observing nuclear testing moratoria, and urges them to continue those moratoria pending the entry into force of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

2. Strongly deplores all current nuclear testing;

3. Strongly urges the immediate cessation of all nuclear testing.

Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/28 of 6 December 1991, in which it noted the convening of the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water from 7 to 18 January 1991, its resolution 48/69 of 16 December 1993, in which it noted the convening of a special meeting of the States parties to that Treaty on 10 August 1993, and its resolution 49/69 of 15 December 1994, in which it noted with satisfaction the commencement of multilateral negotiations for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty in the Conference on Disarmament on 1 February 1994,

Reiterating its conviction that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is the highest-priority measure for the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and for the achievement of the objective of nuclear disarmament,

Recalling the central role of the United Nations in the field of nuclear disarmament and in particular in the cessation of all nuclear-test explosions, as well as the persistent efforts of non-governmental organizations in the achievement of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Convinced that the Amendment Conference will facilitate the attainment of the objectives set forth in the Treaty and thus serve to strengthen it,

Recalling its recommendation that arrangements be made to ensure that intensive efforts continue, under the auspices of the Amendment Conference, until a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is achieved, and its call that all parties participate in, and contribute effectively to the success of, the Amendment Conference,

1. Urges all States that have not already done so to adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water at the earliest possible date;

2. Urges all States parties to the Treaty to contribute to the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty as soon as possible and no later than 1996 and to its expeditious entry into force;

3. Requests the President of the Amendment Conference to conduct consultations to those ends;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water".

Issues related to START

The 1991 Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I)⁽⁵⁴⁾ and its 1992 Protocol, known as the Lisbon Protocol,⁽⁵⁵⁾ entered into force on 5 December 1994, as a result of Ukraine's accession to NPT.⁽⁵⁶⁾ Even before its entry into force, the Russian Federation and the United States had begun to dismantle and destroy close to 2,000 warheads a year, which they continued to do. The other parties to the Treaty—Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine—began transferring Soviet-era nuclear warheads on their territory to the Russian Federation for dismantlement.

On 24 May, Kazakhstan stated that all nuclear weapons on its territory had been removed.⁽⁵⁷⁾ On 26 May, it further stated that the last nuclear explosive device, located at the former Semipalatinsk test site, would be destroyed at the end of May or during the first part of June.⁽⁵⁸⁾

With respect to ratification of the 1993 START II Treaty,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee's approval of the Treaty, which was required for ratification, did not take place until 12 December 1995. Ratification in the Russian Federation was delayed mainly because of concerns over proposals in the United States Congress to develop and deploy theatre missile defence (TMD)—actions that, in the opinion of the Russian Federation, might be in violation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty.⁽⁶⁰⁾ On 10 May, Russian President Boris Yeltsin and United States President William J. Clinton issued a joint statement⁽⁶¹⁾ in which they set out principles to serve as a basis for discussions on demarcation between ABM systems and TMD systems, but the two Governments had not come to an agreement by the end of the year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 C.

Nuclear disarmament with a view to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/75 H of 15 December 1994,

Recognizing that the end of the cold war has increased the possibility of freeing the world from the fear of nuclear war,

Appreciating the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, to which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America are party, and looking forward to the early entry into force of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms,

Welcoming the reductions in the nuclear arsenals of other nuclear-weapon States,

Welcoming also the decision of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to extend the Treaty indefinitely, taken without a vote, as well as the decisions on strengthening the review process for the Treaty and on the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament,

Noting the reference in the decision on the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament to the importance of the following measures for the full realization and effective implementation of article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, including the programme of action as reflected below:

(a) The completion by the Conference on Disarmament of the negotiations on a universal and internationally and effectively verifiable comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty no later than 1996, and the utmost restraint that should be exercised by the nuclear-weapon States pending the entry into force of that treaty;

(b) The immediate commencement and early conclusion of negotiations on a non-discriminatory and universally applicable convention banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices in accordance with the statement of the Special Coordinator of the Conference on Disarmament and the mandate contained therein;

(c) The determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Welcoming positive developments as well as the efforts being made by the States members of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiations on a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty at the Conference on Disarmament at Geneva,

Recalling that nuclear non-proliferation and the promotion of nuclear disarmament are key elements in the maintenance of international peace and security, which is one of the most important purposes of the United Nations,

1. Urges States not parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to accede to it at the earliest possible date, recognizing the importance of universal adherence to the Treaty;

2. Calls for the determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, and invites them to keep States Members of the United Nations duly informed of the progress and efforts made;

3. Calls upon all States to implement fully their commitments in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

Also on 12 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 I.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions,

Recognizing the fundamental changes that have taken place with respect to international security, which have permitted agreements on deep reductions in the nuclear armaments of the States possessing the largest inventories of such weapons,

Mindful that it is the responsibility and obligation of all States to contribute to the process of the relaxation of international tension and to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Stressing the importance of strengthening international peace and security through general and complete disarmament, under strict and effective international control,

Stressing also that it is the responsibility of all States to adopt and implement measures towards the attainment of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Appreciating a number of positive developments in the field of nuclear disarmament, in particular the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, and the treaties on the reduction and limitation of strategic offensive arms,

Appreciating also the indefinite extension of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and acknowledging the importance of the determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Welcoming the steps that have already been taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America to begin the process of reducing the number of nuclear weapons and removing such weapons from a deployed status, and bilateral agreements on the issue of de-targeting strategic nuclear missiles,

Noting the new climate of relations between the United States of America and the States of the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which permits them to intensify their cooperative efforts to ensure the safety, security and environmentally sound destruction of nuclear weapons,

Noting also that the Russian Federation and the United States of America concurred that, once the Treaty between them on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms was ratified, they would proceed to deactivate all nuclear delivery systems to be reduced under the Treaty by removing their nuclear warheads or taking other steps to remove them from alert status,

Noting further the commitment between the Russian Federation and the United States of America to intensify their dialogue to compare conceptual approaches and to develop concrete steps to adapt the nuclear forces and practices on both sides to the changed international security situation, including the possibility, after ratification of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, of further reductions of and limitations on remaining nuclear forces,

Taking note of the joint statement of 10 May 1995 by the Russian Federation and the United States of America on the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems,

Urging the early ratification of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms and further intensification of such efforts to accelerate the implementation of agreements and unilateral decisions relating to nuclear-arms reduction,

Welcoming the significant reductions made by other nuclear-weapon States, and encouraging all nuclear-weapon States to consider appropriate measures relating to nuclear disarmament,

1. Welcomes the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed in Moscow on 31 July 1991 by the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, including the Protocol to that Treaty signed at Lisbon on 23 May 1992 by the parties thereto, and the exchange of documents of ratification between the United States of America, Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation and Ukraine on 5 December 1994 at Budapest;

2. Also welcomes the signing of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Russian Federation on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms in Moscow on 3 January 1993, and urges the parties to take the steps necessary to bring that Treaty into force at the earliest possible date;

3. Expresses its satisfaction at the fact that the entry into force of the 1991 Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms clears the way for prompt ratification by the Russian Federation and the United States of America of the 1993 Treaty;

4. Also expresses its satisfaction at the continuing implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, in particular at the completion by the parties of the destruction of all their declared missiles subject to elimination under the Treaty;

5. Encourages the United States of America, the Russian Federation, Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine to continue their cooperative efforts aimed at eliminating nuclear weapons and strategic offensive arms on the basis of existing agreements, and welcomes the contributions that other States are making to such cooperation as well;

6. Welcomes the accession to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine as non-nuclear-weapon States, which thereby provided a notable enhancement to the non-proliferation regime;

7. Encourages and supports the Russian Federation and the United States of America in their efforts to reduce their nuclear weapons and to continue to give those efforts the highest priority in order to contribute to the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons;

8. Invites the Russian Federation and the United States of America to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their discussions and in the implementation of their strategic offensive arms agreements and unilateral decisions.

Noting with satisfaction a number of positive developments in the field of nuclear disarmament, in particular, the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms,

Noting also with satisfaction the conclusion of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms,

Realizing the vital importance of further nuclear disarmament with the ultimate goals of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons and a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Bearing in mind the results of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Prohibition of the production of fissile material and related issues

Although the Conference on Disarmament established in 1995 an Ad Hoc Committee to negotiate a treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, it was unable to begin work, since the appointment of a chairman for the Committee was linked to the establishment of other ad hoc committees. Further discussion on the issue was carried out in plenary meetings, during which many States reiterated their divergent positions on the scope of the future treaty. At the unilateral level, the United Kingdom announced at the 1995 NPT Review and Extension Conference that it had ceased production of fissile material for explosive purposes. In May, Russian President Yeltsin and United States President Clinton issued a joint statement⁽⁶¹⁾ on the transparency and irreversibility of the process of reducing nuclear weapons, in which they agreed that fissile materials removed from nuclear weapons being eliminated and excess to national security requirements would not be used to manufacture nuclear weapons; no newly produced fissile materials would be used in nuclear weapons; and fissile materials from or within civil nuclear programmes would not be used to manufacture nuclear weapons.

Illicit trafficking in nuclear materials

In response to the Secretary-General's request of 11 July,⁽⁶²⁾ the Security-General President responded⁽⁶³⁾ on 19 July, stating that Council members supported efforts by IAEA and other organizations regarding the illicit trafficking in nuclear materials. The Council also noted the initiative by Russian President Yeltsin to host a summit in 1996 to discuss nuclear safety, including the issue of illicit trafficking.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 P.

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the commitment of the international community to the goal of the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free world,

Determined to achieve the objective of prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons and their destruction, and to conclude such an international treaty or treaties at an early date,

Bearing in mind paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, calling for the urgent negotiation of agreements for the cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems, and for a comprehensive and phased programme with agreed time-frames, wherever feasible, for progressive and balanced reduction of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, leading to their ultimate and complete elimination at the earliest possible time,

Recognizing that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, the proposed treaty on fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices and a convention prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons constitute important steps towards the elimination of the nuclear threat, and will contribute to the achievement of the goal of nuclear disarmament within a time-bound framework,

Recognizing also that the end of the cold war has brought about favourable conditions for creating a world free of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, to which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America are States parties, as well as the conclusion of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms by the Russian Federation and the United States of America, and looking forward to full implementation of these treaties and to further concrete steps for nuclear disarmament by all nuclear-weapon States,

Noting with appreciation the unilateral measures of nuclear-weapon States for nuclear-arms limitation,

Recognizing the complementarity of bilateral and multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament and that bilateral negotiations can never replace multilateral negotiations in this respect,

Recognizing also that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty and the proposed treaty on fissile material for nuclear weapons or other explosive devices must both constitute disarmament measures and not only non-proliferation measures, and that they must be important steps leading to the total elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and the multilateral efforts in the Conference on Disarmament to reach agreement on such an international convention at an early date,

Recalling its resolution 49/75 E of 15 December 1994 on a step-by-step reduction of the nuclear threat,

Taking note of paragraph 84 and other relevant recommendations in the Final Document of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995,^a calling on the Conference on Disarmament to establish, on a priority basis, an ad hoc committee to commence negotiations early in 1996 on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

1. Recognizes that, in view of the end of the cold war and recent political developments, the time is now opportune for all nuclear-weapon States to undertake effective nuclear disarmament measures with a view to the total elimination of these weapons within a time-bound framework;

2. Also recognizes that there is a genuine need to emphasize the role of nuclear weapons, and to review and revise nuclear doctrines accordingly;

3. Urges the nuclear-weapon States to stop immediately the qualitative improvement, development, stockpiling and production of nuclear warheads and their delivery systems;

4. Calls upon the nuclear-weapon States to undertake step-by-step reduction of the nuclear threat and a phased programme of progressive and balanced deep reductions of nuclear weapons, and to carry out effective nuclear disarmament measures with a view to the total elimination of these weapons within a time-bound framework;

5. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to establish, on a priority basis, an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament to commence negotiations early in 1996 on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework;

6. Expresses its support for the efforts of the Member States of the Conference on Disarmament to this end;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Nuclear disarmament".

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

Africa

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁶⁴⁾ the Secretary-General in September transmitted the final text of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty,⁽⁶⁵⁾ known as the Treaty of Pelindaba, which was finalized at a Joint Meeting of the Organization of African Unity (OAU)/United Nations Group of Experts to Prepare a Draft Treaty on an African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone and the Intergovernmental Group of Experts of OAU (Johannesburg, 29 May-1 June; Pelindaba, 2 June). The OAU/United Nations Group of Experts previously held meetings in 1991,⁽⁶⁶⁾ 1992,⁽⁶⁷⁾ 1993⁽⁶⁸⁾ and 1994.⁽⁶⁹⁾ Subsequently, the text was amended by the OAU Council of Ministers (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 21-23 June) and approved by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Addis Ababa, 26-28 June).⁽⁷⁰⁾

The Treaty aimed at preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons and promoting the peaceful use of nuclear energy, and incorporated a prohibition on the dumping of radioactive wastes. A special agency—the African Commission on Nuclear Energy (AFCONE)—provided by the Treaty to supervise its implementation, was to be established with headquarters in South Africa.

Four annexes formed an integral part of the Treaty, consisting of a map illustrating the application of the Treaty (annex I), and dealing with IAEA safeguards (annex II), AFCONE (annex III) and complaints procedure and settlement of disputes (annex IV). Two of the three protocols were addressed to the nuclear-weapon States. Protocol I incorporated the undertaking not to use or threaten to use a nuclear explosive device against any party to the Treaty or territory within the zone; Protocol II incorporated the undertaking not to test a nuclear explosive device within the zone; Protocol III, addressed to France and Spain as States which were, de jure or de facto, responsible for territories within the zone, incorporated the undertaking to apply the relevant provisions of the Treaty to those territories.

The Treaty was to enter into force on the deposit of the twenty-eighth instrument of ratification, which meant on the ratification of a simple majority of OAU members. The OAU Secretary-General was designated depositary of the Treaty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/78.

Final text of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (the Treaty of Pelindaba)

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964, in which they solemnly declare their readiness to undertake, through an international agreement to be concluded under United Nations auspices, not to manufacture or acquire control of atomic weapons,

Recalling its resolution 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, in which it endorsed the above-mentioned Declaration and expressed the hope that the African States would initiate studies, as they deemed appropriate, with a view to implementing the denuclearization of Africa, and take the necessary measures, through the Organization of African Unity, to achieve that end,

Recalling also article VII of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, which acknowledges the right of any group of States to conclude regional treaties in order to ensure the total absence of nuclear weapons in their respective territories,

Bearing in mind paragraph 60 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, which states that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned constitutes an important disarmament measure,

Bearing in mind also the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1592(LXII)/Rev.1 on the implementation of the Treaty declaring Africa a nuclear-weapon-free zone, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 21 to 23 June 1995,

Noting the adoption by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-first ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 26 to 28 June 1995, of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (the Treaty of Pelindaba),

Noting also that the Treaty contains three Protocols open to the signature of States that, de jure or de facto, are internationally responsible for territories that lie within the limits of the geographical zone established in the Treaty of Pelindaba and to the signature of States possessing nuclear weapons, and convinced that the cooperation of such States is necessary for the greater effectiveness of the Treaty,

Recognizing that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones contributes to the strengthening of the international non-proliferation regime,

Considering that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in the Middle East, would enhance the security of Africa and the viability of the African nuclear-weapon-free zone,

1. Welcomes with special satisfaction the adoption by the African leaders of the final text of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (the Treaty of Pelindaba), which constitutes an event of historic significance in the efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security and which, at the same time, recognizes the right of African countries to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes in order to accelerate the economic and social development of their peoples;

2. Invites the African States to sign and ratify the Treaty of Pelindaba as soon as possible;

3. Calls upon all States to respect the continent of Africa as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

4. Calls upon the States contemplated in Protocol III to the Treaty of Pelindaba to take all necessary measures to ensure the speedy application of the Treaty to territories for which they are, de jure or de facto, internationally responsible and which lie within the limits of the geographical zone established in the Treaty;

5. Calls upon the nuclear-weapon States to bring the necessary support to the Treaty of Pelindaba by signing the Protocols that concern them as soon as the Treaty becomes available for signature;

6. Latin America and the Caribbean

The process of consolidation of the nuclear-weapon-free zone established by the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) continued throughout the year. By year's end, Guyana, Saint Kitts and Nevis, and Saint Lucia had ratified the Treaty, bringing the total number of parties to 38.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/77.

Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 1911(XVIII) of 27 November 1963 it expressed the hope that the States of Latin America would take appropriate measures to conclude a treaty that would prohibit nuclear weapons in Latin America,

Recalling also that in the same resolution it voiced its confidence that, once such a treaty was concluded, all States, and in particular the nuclear-weapon States, would lend it their full cooperation for the effective realization of its peaceful aims,

Considering that in its resolution 2028(XX) of 19 November 1965 it established the principle of an acceptable balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations between nuclear-weapon States and those which do not possess such weapons,

Recalling that the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) was opened for signature at Mexico City on 14 February 1967,

Recalling also that in its preamble the Treaty of Tlatelolco states that military denuclearized zones are not an end in themselves but rather a means for achieving general and complete disarmament at a later stage,

Recalling further that in its resolution 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967 it welcomed with special satisfaction the Treaty of Tlatelolco as an event of historic significance in the efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security,

Recalling that in 1990, 1991 and 1992 the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean approved and opened for signature a set of amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco, with the aim of enabling the full entry into force of that instrument,

Bearing in mind that, with the full adherence in 1995 of Saint Lucia, the Treaty of Tlatelolco is in force for thirty sovereign States of the region,

Noting with satisfaction that the Government of Saint Kitts and Nevis ratified the Treaty of Tlatelolco on 18 April 1995,

Also noting with satisfaction that the Government of Cuba subscribed to the Treaty of Tlatelolco on 25 March 1995, thus contributing to a greater integration among the peoples of Latin America and the Caribbean for the attainment of the aims of the Treaty,

Further noting with satisfaction that the amended Treaty of Tlatelolco is fully in force for Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Jamaica, Mexico, Peru, Suriname and Uruguay,

1. Welcomes the concrete steps taken by several countries of the region during the past year for the consolidation of the regime of military denuclearization established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco);

2. Notes with satisfaction the full adherence of Saint Lucia to the Treaty of Tlatelolco;

3. Urges the countries of the region that have not yet done so to deposit their instruments of ratification of the amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco approved by the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean in its resolutions 267(E-V) of 3 July 1990, 268(XII) of 10 May 1991 and 290(VII) of 26 August 1992;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

12 December 1995 Meeting 90 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/50/597) without vote, 10 November (meeting 18); 29-nation draft (A/C.1/50/L.5/Rev.1); agenda item 77.

Middle East

In 1995, the issue of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East figured prominently in the NPT Review and Extension Conference. At the Conference, States adopted a decision encouraging, as a matter of priority, the development of nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in regions of tension such as the Middle East. (See above, under "Non-proliferation".)

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1994 request of the General Assembly,⁽⁷¹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted, in an August report with a later addendum,⁽⁷²⁾ the views of two Member States on measures outlined in a 1990 study,⁽⁷³⁾ or other relevant measures, in order to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

Communication. The Council of the League of Arab States, meeting in Cairo, Egypt, adopted on 21 September a resolution on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, by which it invited the Security Council to ensure the universal implementation, without double standards, of all provisions concerning the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, to take the requisite steps to achieve that aim, and to provide non-nuclear-weapon States with effective and comprehensive security guarantees against the use or threat of use of such weapons.⁽⁷⁴⁾

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/66.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 A and B of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986, 42/28 of 30 November 1987, 43/65 of 7 December 1988, 44/108 of 15 December 1989, 45/52 of 4 December 1990, 46/30 of 6 December 1991, 47/48 of 9 December 1992, 48/71 of 16 December 1993 and 49/71 of 15 December 1994 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and to deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Welcoming all initiatives leading to general and complete disarmament, including in the region of the Middle East, and in particular on the establishment therein of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons,

Noting the peace negotiations in the Middle East, which should be of a comprehensive nature and represent an appropriate framework for the peaceful settlement of contentious issues in the region,

Recognizing the importance of credible regional security, including the establishment of a mutually verifiable nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 49/71,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Takes note of resolution GC(39)/RES/24, adopted on 22 September 1995 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-ninth regular session, concerning the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East;

4. Notes the importance of the ongoing bilateral Middle East peace negotiations and the activities of the multilateral working group on arms control and regional security in promoting mutual confidence and security in the Middle East, including the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

5. Invites all countries of the region, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

6. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

7. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Invites all parties to consider the appropriate means that may contribute towards the goal of general and complete disarmament and the establishment of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the region of the Middle East;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to pursue consultations with the States of the region and other concerned States, in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 46/30 and taking into account the evolving situation in the region, and to seek from those States their views on the measures outlined in chapters III and IV of the study annexed to his report or other relevant measures, in order to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

South Asia

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted in July the views of one Member State on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.⁽⁷⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/67.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982, 38/65 of 15 December 1983, 39/55 of 12 December 1984, 40/83 of 12 December 1985, 41/49 of 3 December 1986, 42/29 of 30 November 1987, 43/66 of 7 December 1988, 44/109 of 15 December 1989, 45/53 of 4 December 1990, 46/31 of 6 December 1991, 47/49 of 9 December 1992, 48/72 of 16 December 1993 and 49/72 of 15 December 1994 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures that can contribute effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note with appreciation of the declarations issued at the highest level by the Governments of South Asian States that are developing their peaceful nuclear programmes, reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Welcoming the recent proposal for the conclusion of a bilateral or regional nuclear-test-ban agreement in South Asia,

Noting the proposal to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia as soon as possible, with the participation of the regional and other concerned States,

Noting also the proposal to hold consultations among five nations with a view to ensuring nuclear non-proliferation in the region,

Considering that the eventual participation of other States, as appropriate, in this process could be useful,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;
2. Urges once again the States of South Asia to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the meantime, from any action contrary to that objective;

3. Welcomes the support of all the five nuclear-weapon States for this proposal, and calls upon them to extend the necessary cooperation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to communicate with the States of the region and other concerned States in order to ascertain their views on the issue and to promote consultations among them with a view to exploring the best possibilities of furthering the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

South-East Asia Treaty

On 15 December, the members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN)—Brunei Darussalam, Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand, Viet Nam—together with three neighbouring countries (Cambodia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar), signed the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty at the fifth ASEAN Summit, held in Bangkok, Thailand.

The main objectives of the Treaty included the reaffirmation by the 10 signatory States of obligations assumed under NPT, the right to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, and the protection of the environment from nuclear waste. The Treaty defined the zone as the area comprising, in addition to the territories of all States parties, their respective continental shelves and exclusive economic zones.

Thailand was designated as the depositary of the Treaty, which was to enter into force upon ratification by seven States parties.

As at the end of 1995, the protocol to the Treaty, addressed to the nuclear-weapon States, was still the subject of negotiations.

South Pacific

On 20 October, France, the United Kingdom and the United States stated⁽⁷⁷⁾ their intention to sign during the first half of 1996 the protocols to the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga).⁽⁷⁸⁾ By Protocol 1, the States internationally responsible for territories situated within the zone would undertake to apply the relevant prohibitions of the Treaty to those territories; by Protocol 2, the five nuclear-weapon States would provide security assurances to parties or to territories within the zone; and by Protocol 3, the five would undertake not to carry out nuclear tests in the zone.

(For information on zones of peace, see preceding chapter.)

Other nuclear and related issues

Disarmament Commission. The Commission continued to consider the item "Process of nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security, with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons",⁽⁷⁹⁾ which it had begun in 1991.⁽⁸⁴⁾ It established Working Group I to deal with the item, which held 10 meetings between 15 and 26 May 1995. Despite its efforts, the Working Group was unable to achieve a consensus document on the item.

Conference on Disarmament. Concerning nuclear-related issues, the Conference on Disarmament re-established two ad hoc committees, the first on a nuclear test ban and the second on a cut-off in fissile material, but only the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban carried out its work.⁽²⁸⁾ The Committee to deal with a cut-off in fissile material could not proceed until agreement could be reached on the re-establishment of ad hoc committees on negative security assurances, prevention of an arms race in outer space and transparency in armaments, and on the commencement of substantive consideration of nuclear disarmament. As no such agreement was reached, those questions were dealt with only in plenary meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/71 E.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to the survival of mankind,

Convinced also that a multilateral agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would strengthen international security and contribute to the climate for negotiations leading to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons,

Conscious that some steps taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in the international climate can contribute towards the goal of complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that any use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Stressing that an international convention would be an important step in a phased programme towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1995 session, was unable to undertake negotiations on this subject,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a possible basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Determined to continue negotiations for the achievement of this goal,

Have agreed as follows:

4. For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of the Convention, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The depositary shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and the date of entry into force of the present Convention, as well as of the receipt of other notices.

6. The present Convention shall be registered by the depositary in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 4

Other weapons of mass destruction

Chemical weapons

The Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by the Conference on Disarmament in 1992⁽⁸⁰⁾ and opened for signature in 1993,⁽⁸¹⁾ had 160 signatories by the end of 1995.⁽⁸²⁾ Forty-seven States had ratified the Convention, which required 65 ratifications to enter into force.

Concerning the work of the Preparatory Commission for the future Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), set up in 1992 to prepare for the Convention's implementation,⁽⁸⁰⁾ little progress was made in resolving outstanding issues. In the area of verification-related activities—the keystone of the treaty—it was possible only to adopt the draft OPCW confidentiality policy and to agree on technical specifications for inspection equipment. Other issues still showed no sign of early resolution, among them: technical issues related to declarations in the chemical industry and chemical weapons facilities; detailed procedures related to verification of old and abandoned chemical weapons; the timing of harmonizing national export control legislation with the provisions of article XI, on economic and technological development; the ultimate scope of the analytical database; and technical aspects of challenge inspection.

The Provisional Technical Secretariat made progress in selecting inspectors who were to be recruited and trained before the Convention entered into force. The Secretariat currently employed 116 staff members, representing 45 nationalities. At year's end, the Secretariat stated that it considered late 1996 or early 1997 as a possible time-frame for the Convention's entry into force.

Issues under discussion at the end of the year included preparation for the first Conference of States Parties; the transition between the Preparatory Commission and OPCW; and the status of OPCW regarding the United Nations system.

Bacteriological (biological) weapons

Efforts continued towards strengthening the 1972 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction,⁽⁸²⁾ through the Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties to the Convention, established in 1994⁽⁸³⁾ to consider measures, including verification measures, and draft proposals to strengthen the Convention, for inclusion in a legally binding instrument.

The Ad Hoc Group held three sessions in 1995 (4-6 January; 10-21 July; 27 November-8 December), all in Geneva.⁽⁸⁴⁾

In January, the Group adopted its agenda and rules of procedure and elected its officers. It decided that for each session a report of a procedural nature would be prepared, to which the results of the Group's deliberations would be annexed on the understanding that they would not prejudice the positions of delegations and would not imply agreement on scope or content. Following an exchange of views at the second session, the Friends of the Chair circulated informal papers that were annexed to the Group's report and formed the basis for the discussions at the third session. At that session, the Group decided to hold two more sessions in 1996, from 15 to 26 July and from 16 to 27 September, and the Chairman appointed Friends of the Chair to assist in consultations and negotiations concerning measures related to article X (transfer of technology); measures to promote compliance; confidence-building and transparency measures; and definitions of terms and objective criteria.

Fourth Review Conference (1996)

At the request of the States parties, a Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention, which entered into force on 26 March 1975, was scheduled to be held in Geneva from 25 November to 13 December 1996. A Preparatory Committee was formed, open to all parties, which planned to meet in Geneva from 9 to 12 April 1996. Previous review conferences were held in 1980,⁽⁸⁵⁾ 1986⁽⁸⁶⁾ and 1991.⁽⁸⁷⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/79.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and to their destruction,

Noting with satisfaction that there are more than one hundred and thirty States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, including all the permanent members of the Security Council,

Bearing in mind its call upon all States parties to the Convention to participate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, including the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference, and to provide such information and data in conformity with standardized procedure to the Secretary-General on an annual basis and no later than 15 April,

Recalling its resolution 46/35 A, adopted without a vote on 6 December 1991, in which it welcomed, inter alia, the establishment, proceeding from the recommendations of the Third Review Conference, of an ad hoc group of governmental experts open to all States parties to identify and examine potential verification measures from a scientific and technical standpoint,

Recalling also its resolution 48/65, adopted without a vote on 16 December 1993, in which it commended the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts to Identify and Examine Potential Verification Measures from a Scientific and Technical Standpoint, agreed to by consensus at the last meeting of the Ad Hoc Group at Geneva on 24 September 1993,

Recalling further its resolution 49/86, adopted without a vote on 15 December 1994, in which it welcomed the final report of the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by consensus on 30 September 1994, in which the States parties agreed to establish an ad hoc group, open to all States parties, whose objective should be to consider appropriate measures, including possible verification measures, and draft proposals to strengthen the Convention, to be included, as appropriate, in a legally binding instrument to be submitted for the consideration of the States parties,

Recalling the provisions of the Convention related to scientific and technological cooperation and the related provisions of the Final Document of the Third Review Conference, the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts and the final report of the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, held from 19 to 30 September 1994,

1. Welcomes the information and data provided to date, and reiterates its call upon all States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction to participate in the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention;

2. Also welcomes the work begun by the Ad Hoc Group in pursuing the mandate established by the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on 30 September 1994 and urges the Ad Hoc Group, in accordance with its mandate, to complete its work as soon as possible and submit its report, which shall be adopted by consensus, to the States parties to be considered at the Fourth Review Conference or later at a Special Conference;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render the necessary assistance to the depository Governments of the Convention and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the Third Review Conference, as well as the decisions contained in the final report of the Special Conference, including all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Group;

4. Notes that, at the request of the States parties, a Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention will be held at Geneva from 25 November to 13 December 1996, that, following appropriate consultations, a Preparatory Committee for that Conference has been formed, open to all parties to the Convention, and that the Committee will meet at Geneva from 9 to 12 April 1996;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be required for the Fourth Review Conference and its preparations;

6. Calls upon all signatory States that have not yet ratified the Convention to do so without delay, and also calls upon those States that have not signed the Convention to become parties thereto at an early date, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction".

Conventional weapons and related issues

Transparency, confidence-building and the arms register

In his 1995 report on the work of the Organization,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General stressed that transparency measures, such as the UN Register of Conventional Arms, established pursuant to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ must be strengthened, and confidence-building and disarmament initiatives at the regional level should be developed further.

Conference on Disarmament. Despite general agreement that the item on transparency in armaments was an important matter for the Conference on Disarmament to consider in 1995,⁽³⁾ divergent views persisted as to what subjects the item should cover and whether to continue deliberations within the same framework as in 1994.⁽⁴⁾ Consequently, there was no consensus on the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on Transparency in Armaments during the 1995 session of the Conference. Moreover, the question of its re-establishment became linked to the re-establishment of other Conference committees.

UN Register of Conventional Arms

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a July report with a later addendum,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the views of six Governments and of France on behalf of EU on the continuing operation of the Register, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽⁶⁾

Also pursuant to a 1994 Assembly request,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in an October report, with later addenda,⁽⁷⁾ information provided by 93 Member States for the calendar year 1994 on imports and exports of conventional arms in the seven categories (battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large-calibre artillery systems, combat aircraft, attack helicopters, warships, missiles and missile launchers) covered under the Register and/or background information on their military holdings, procurement through national production, legislation and policies. Of those States, 41 provided data on imports and 22 on exports, and 33 gave background information (24 reported on military holdings and 17 on procurement through national production). The level of consistency between exports and imports reported for the categories of large-calibre artillery systems, attack helicopters or warships remained very high in 1994. Greater discrepancies appeared to exist in the categories of armoured combat vehicles and missiles and missile launchers. Non-participation of one side in the reporting of a transaction—because of national security concerns, difficulties in compiling national statistics, legal obstacles, and conflicting interpretations of what constituted a transfer or of the definitions of the categories—were factors that could account for the mismatches or discrepancies, it was stated.

The Secretary-General's Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters (New York, 19-23 June) recommended that States currently participating in the Register should encourage others to do so through a partnership approach, and should offer to assist them in the political and technical aspects of reporting. The Secretary-General commended that suggestion.⁽⁸⁾

Not all importers participated in the Register. The number of transfers reported on export forms was 155, and the number of transfers reported on import forms was 116. Most import transactions were none the less reflected in the submissions by major exporters. In 1994, 20 States that were identified by exporting States as recipients of arms covered by the Register, as compared to 22 in 1993 and 28 in 1992, either did not report on those imports or did not participate in the information exchange.

Participation among regions continued to vary widely but fairly consistently. The submissions for 1994 again revealed high participation by Western European nations and a continuing rise in participation by States in Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean. Participation by countries of Africa and the Middle East was still low.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 D.

Transparency in armaments

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/36 L of 9 December 1991, 47/52 L of 15 December 1992, 48/75 E of 16 December 1993 and 49/75 C of 15 December 1994,

Continuing to take the view that an enhanced level of transparency in armaments contributes greatly to confidence-building and security among States and that the establishment of the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms constitutes an important step forward in the promotion of transparency in military matters,

Welcoming the consolidated report of the Secretary-General on the Register, which includes the returns of Member States for 1994,

Welcoming also the response of Member States to the requests contained in paragraphs 9 and 10 of resolution 46/36 L to provide data on their imports and exports of arms, as well as available background information regarding their military holdings, procurement through national production and relevant policies,

Stressing that the continuing operation of the Register and its further development should be reviewed in order to secure a Register that is capable of attracting the widest possible participation,

1. Reaffirms its determination to ensure the effective operation of the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms as provided for in paragraphs 7, 8, 9 and 10 of resolution 46/36 L;

2. Calls upon Member States to provide the requested data and information for the Register, on the basis of resolutions 46/36 L and 47/52 L and the annex and appendices to the report of the Secretary-General on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, to the Secretary-General by 30 April annually;

3. Reaffirms its decision, with a view to further development of the Register, to keep the scope of and participation in the Register under review, and, to that end:

(a) Recalls its request to Member States to provide the Secretary-General with their views on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development and on transparency measures related to weapons of mass destruction;

(b) Recalls its request to the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of governmental experts to be convened in 1997, on the basis of equitable geographical representation, to prepare a report on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, taking into account the work of the Conference on Disarmament, the views expressed by Member States and the report of the Secretary-General on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, with a view to a decision at its fifty-second session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that sufficient resources are made available for the Secretariat to operate and maintain the Register;

5. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to consider continuing its work undertaken in the field of transparency in armaments;

6. Reiterates its call upon all Member States to cooperate at the regional and subregional levels, taking fully into account the specific conditions prevailing in the region or subregion, with a view to enhancing and coordinating international efforts aimed at increased openness and transparency in armaments;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the progress made in implementing the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Transparency in armaments".

Transparency of military budgets

In a July report with later addenda,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General presented information received from 35 Member States on their military expenditures, as requested by the General Assembly in 1985.⁽¹⁰⁾

On 12 December, the Assembly, by decision 50/419, took note of the report⁽¹¹⁾ of the First Committee on the reduction of military budgets.

Regional approaches to disarmament

Throughout 1995, Member States continued to make determined efforts, within their respective regional contexts, to devise and strengthen appropriate approaches to prevent nuclear proliferation, to curb the flow of light arms, to introduce and promote confidence-building and transparency measures, and to adjust security structures to respond effectively to threats to the peace and to resolve conflict, increasingly of an intra-State nature. The United Nations was involved in many of those endeavours.

Regional developmentsAfrica

In 1995, Africa achieved a long-sought objective, which was the conclusion of a nuclear-weapon-free zone treaty for the continent (see above, under "Nuclear-weapon-free zones", for Treaty of Pelindaba). Regarding conventional weapons, disarmament efforts focused on the regulation of the flow of small arms, especially on measures to curb illicit trade, and arrangements to facilitate the restoration of peace in societies torn by conflict. On 1 September, the UN Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (Brazzaville, Congo, 20-24 March and 28 August-1 September)⁽¹²⁾ issued the Brazzaville Declaration on Cooperation for Peace and Security in Central Africa, which noted, among other things, that the proliferation of arms, including among civilians, was the main factor in the violence and insecurity prevailing in the subregion. The members of the Committee were Angola, Burundi, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, and Zaire.

The Advisory Mission on the Control and Collection of Light Weapons in the Sahelo-Saharan Subregion visited six countries (Burkina Faso, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, Mauritania, Niger, Senegal) in February and March, concluding that the subregion as a whole was suffering from severe socio-economic deprivation and intra-State conflict, aggravated by and contributing to the presence of large numbers of illicit light weapons. The Mission recommended that the United Nations work with the States and the donor community to develop support for a proportional and integrated approach to security and development, including identification of appropriate assistance for internal security forces. Practical measures of disarmament, including demobilization, were recognized as being crucial to furthering the peace processes in Angola, Liberia, Rwanda and Sierra Leone (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

Latin America and the Caribbean

Regional efforts to promote peace and security in Latin America and the Caribbean continued. Following the outbreak in January of a border conflict between Ecuador and Peru, the parties agreed to establish a demilitarized zone in the area of dispute. During the Regional Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures in the Region (Santiago, Chile, November),⁽¹³⁾ Ecuador and Peru jointly announced the adoption of a declaration on confidence-building measures. The Conference also adopted a declaration⁽¹⁴⁾ outlining specific measures for the Latin American and Caribbean region, including prior notification of military exercises; exchange of information and participation in the UN Arms Register; exchange of military observers; strengthening of civilian-military communications; and consultations to enhance the limitation and control of conventional weapons. On 15 December, the Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama signed the Framework Treaty on Democratic Security in Central America, which included provisions for the establishment of confidence-building measures and cooperation in combating the illegal trafficking of arms and other military equipment.⁽¹⁵⁾ (See also PART TWO, Chapter III.)

Asia and the Pacific

On 20 October, France, the United Kingdom and the United States announced their intention to sign during the first half of 1996 the protocols of the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty.⁽¹⁶⁾

On 15 December, in Bangkok, the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty was signed. Although none of the world's declared nuclear Powers had endorsed the Treaty as of the end of the year, the creation of the zone reflected a concerted effort by countries of the subregion to promote and strengthen regional security through nuclear non-proliferation. The 19-member ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF), composed of Asian, European and North American countries (Brunei Darussalam, 31 July-3 August), agreed that the ARF process would take place in three stages: the promotion of confidence-building measures; the development of preventive diplomacy; and the elaboration of approaches to conflict resolution. They also agreed to further institutionalize the process through the establishment of inter-sessional support groups. On the bilateral side, Australia and Indonesia signed a security agreement on 18 December. Both sides stressed, however, that the agreement was not a defence treaty or alliance; instead, it called for broad cooperation in areas such as joint military exercises and regular consultations on common security-related issues.

Europe

During the year, there were major steps in arms control and disarmament in Europe. The dismantlement and destruction of the nuclear weapons of the Russian Federation and the United States, mandated by START I, continued. In addition, because they did not have warhead dismantlement facilities, Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine transferred to the Russian Federation the weapons deployed on their territories that were scheduled for dismantlement under the Treaty. The parties to the 1990 Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE)⁽¹⁷⁾ completed the destruction of more than 50,000 tanks and other heavy weapons. However, some problems persisted after the 16 November deadline for full implementation had passed. As at the end of the year, agreement had yet to be reached on the level of equipment that the Russian Federation would maintain in the Treaty's flank areas (the flank includes the area around St. Petersburg in the north and the Caucasus Mountains region in the south). A CFE review conference was scheduled to be convened in May 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 K.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/58 P of 4 December 1990, 46/36 I of 6 December 1991, 47/52 J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 I of 16 December 1993 and 49/75 N of 15 December 1994 on regional disarmament,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Taking note of the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note of the recent proposals for disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation at the regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of smaller States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at the regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/75 J of 16 December 1993 and 49/75 O of 15 December 1994,

Recognizing the crucial role of conventional arms control in promoting regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that conventional arms control needs to be pursued primarily in the regional and subregional contexts since most threats to peace and security in the post-cold-war era arise mainly among States located in the same region or subregion,

Aware that the preservation of a balance in the defence capabilities of States at the lowest level of armaments would contribute to peace and stability and should be a prime objective of conventional arms control,

Desirous of promoting agreements to strengthen regional peace and security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces,

Believing that militarily significant States, and States with larger military capabilities, have a special responsibility in promoting such agreements for regional security,

Believing also that two of the principal objectives of conventional arms control should be to prevent the possibility of military attack launched by surprise and to avoid aggression,

1. Decides to give urgent consideration to the issues involved in conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, as a first step, to consider the formulation of principles that can serve as a framework for regional agreements on conventional arms control, and looks forward to a report of the Conference on this subject;

Conventional weapons and advanced technologies

Micro-disarmament

In his "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace",⁽¹⁸⁾ issued in January, the Secretary-General used the term micro-disarmament to describe disarmament in the context of weapons used in conflicts on an everyday basis. In subsequent statements, however, he cast micro-disarmament in operational terms, as action to control and reduce the massive production, transfer and stockpiling of light weapons around the world. In the area of post-conflict peace-building, the Secretary-General had drawn the attention of Member States to the land-mines crisis and had often referred to the issue in the context of micro-disarmament.

Small and light arms

Also in the "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace", the Secretary-General described two categories of light arms: small arms, which he stated were probably responsible for most of the deaths in current conflicts; and anti-personnel mines, a problem which the international community had begun to address. He noted that it would take a long time to find effective solutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 B.

Small arms

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and the commitment of Member States to take concrete steps in order to strengthen that role,

Realizing the urgent need to resolve underlying conflicts, to diminish tensions and to accelerate efforts towards general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control with a view to maintaining regional and international peace and security in a world free from the scourge of war and the burden of armaments,

Reaffirming the inherent right to individual or collective self-defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, which implies that States also have the right to acquire arms with which to defend themselves,

Reaffirming also the right of self-determination of all peoples, in particular peoples under colonial or other forms of alien domination or foreign occupation, and the importance of the effective realization of this right, as enunciated, inter alia, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Realizing that arms obtained through the illicit arms trade are most likely to be used for violent purposes and that even small arms when so obtained, directly or indirectly, by terrorist groups, drug traffickers or underground organizations can pose a danger to regional and international security, and certainly to the security and political stability of the countries affected,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General to the Security Council entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace", which stressed the urgent need for "practical disarmament in the context of the conflicts the United Nations is actually dealing with and of the weapons, most of them light weapons, that are actually killing people in the hundreds of thousands", and which identified light weapons as including, inter alia, small arms and anti-personnel land-mines,

Recalling its resolution 49/75 G of 15 December 1994, in which it welcomed the initiative taken by Mali concerning the question of the illicit circulation of small arms and their collection in the affected States of the Saharo-Saharan subregion, as well as the action taken by the Secretary-General in implementation of this initiative,

Noting the work of the Disarmament Commission on international arms transfers,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, within the existing resources, to prepare a report, with the assistance of a panel group of qualified governmental experts to be nominated by him on the basis of equitable geographical representation, on:

(a) The types of small arms and light weapons actually being used in conflicts being dealt with by the United Nations;

(b) The nature and causes of the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer of small arms and light weapons, including their illicit production and trade;

(c) The ways and means to prevent and reduce the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer of small arms and light weapons, in particular as they cause or exacerbate conflict; with particular attention to the role of the United Nations in this field and to the complementary role of regional organizations, and taking into account views and proposals of Member States and all other relevant information, for submission to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to seek the views and proposals of Member States on the matters mentioned in paragraph 1 above, to collect all other relevant information and to make them available for consideration by the panel of governmental experts referred to in paragraph 1 above;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session an item entitled "Small arms".

International arms transfers

Disarmament Commission. In May,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Disarmament Commission again considered the item "International arms transfers, with particular reference to General Assembly resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991".⁽²⁰⁾ It first discussed the item in 1994.⁽²¹⁾ By resolution 46/36 H, the Assembly had called on all States to give high priority to eradicating illicit trade in all kinds of weapons and military equipment.

Working Group II, established to deal with the item, agreed that the guidelines to be elaborated, while pertaining to the broad subject area of international arms transfers, would focus on the illicit arms trade, as had resolution 46/36 H. The Group Chairman proposed a structure for the guidelines, and the Group decided to use a paper submitted by him as a basis for its work. In the course of deliberations, many delegations put forward views and proposals, which were taken into account in revisions of the working paper. Annexed to the report of the Disarmament Commission⁽¹⁹⁾ was the latest revision of the working paper as a basis for future work, without prejudice to the position of any delegation.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General in September described action taken or planned regarding assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and collecting them.⁽²³⁾ He stated that in February an advisory mission had been sent to the Saharo-Saharan region at the request of States in the region. He was studying a report on that mission and it was expected that its conclusions and recommendations would result in practical steps to alleviate the problem of illicit trafficking. The Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders adopted a resolution on trafficking in firearms, and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice made recommendations to the Economic and Social Council to improve international efforts to promote regulation of the trade in firearms (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). No reports had been received from individual States on action they had taken to implement national control measures to check the illicit circulation of small arms. As to future action, the Secretary-General stated that he was encouraged by the increasing recognition of the serious problems caused by illegal arms trafficking. He urged States to increase their momentum of effort to take practical steps to deal with the problem.

Pursuant to a 1994 Assembly request,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General, in September, presented the replies of six Governments regarding measures they had taken to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms.⁽²⁵⁾ He noted that as at 10 September no request had been received from concerned Member States to study the possibilities of the collection of weapons illicitly transferred in the light of the experience gained by the United Nations and the views expressed by Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 J.

Measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991 and its decision 47/419 of 9 December 1992 on international arms transfers,

Recalling also its resolutions 48/75 F and H of 16 December 1993 and 49/75 M of 15 December 1994 on measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms,

Recognizing that the availability of massive quantities of conventional weapons and especially their illicit transfer, often associated with destabilizing activities, are most disturbing and dangerous phenomena, in particular for the internal situation of affected States and the violation of human rights,

Bearing in mind that in certain situations mercenaries, terrorists and child soldiers are supplied with weapons acquired from illicit transfers of conventional arms,

Convinced that peace and security are inextricably interlinked with and in some cases imperative for economic development and reconstruction, including in war-stricken countries,

Realizing the urgent need to resolve conflicts and to diminish tension, and to accelerate efforts towards general and complete disarmament with a view to maintaining regional and international peace and security,

Recognizing the curbing of the illicit transfer of arms as an important contribution to the relaxation of tension and peaceful reconciliation processes,

Stressing the need for effective national control measures on the transfer of conventional weapons,

Convinced that effective measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms will help enhance regional and international peace, security and economic development,

1. Invites Member States:

(a) To take appropriate and effective enforcement measures to seek to ensure that illicit transfers of arms are immediately discontinued;

(b) To provide the Secretary-General promptly with relevant information on national control measures on arms transfers with a view to preventing illicit arms transfers;

2. Requests the Disarmament Commission:

(a) To expedite its consideration of the agenda item on international arms transfers, with special emphasis on the adverse consequences of the illicit transfer of arms and ammunition;

(b) To study and report on measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms, bearing in mind concrete problems in various regions of the world;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To seek the views of Member States on effective ways and means of collecting weapons transferred illicitly, in particular in the light of experience gained by the United Nations;

(b) To seek the views of Member States on concrete proposals concerning measures at the national, regional and international levels to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms;

(c) To submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report containing the views expressed by Member States;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the effective implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms".

Assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and collecting them

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/36 H of 6 December 1991, 47/52 G and J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 H and J of 16 December 1993 and 49/75 G of 15 December 1994,

Considering that the circulation of massive quantities of small arms throughout the world impedes development and is a source of increased insecurity,

Considering also that the illicit international transfer of small arms and their accumulation in many countries constitute a threat to the populations and to national and regional security and are a factor contributing to the destabilization of States,

Basing itself on the statement of the Secretary-General relating to the request of Mali concerning United Nations assistance for the collection of small arms,

Gravely concerned at the extent of the insecurity and banditry linked to the illicit circulation of small arms in Mali and the other affected States of the Saharo-Saharan subregion,

Taking note of the first conclusions of the United Nations advisory missions sent to the affected countries of the subregion by the Secretary-General to study the best way of curbing the illicit circulation of small arms and ensuring their collection,

Taking note also of the interest shown by other States of the subregion in receiving the United Nations Advisory Mission,

Noting the actions taken and those recommended at the meetings of the States of the subregion held at Banjul, Algiers and Bamako to establish close regional cooperation with a view to strengthening security,

1. Welcomes the initiative taken by Mali concerning the question of the illicit circulation of small arms and their collection in the affected States of the Saharo-Saharan subregion;

2. Also welcomes the action taken by the Secretary-General in implementation of this initiative in the context of General Assembly resolution 40/151 H of 16 December 1985;

3. Thanks the Governments concerned in the subregion for the substantial support that they have given to the United Nations advisory missions and welcomes the declared readiness of other States to receive the United Nations Advisory Mission;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in the context of the implementation of resolution 49/75 G and of the recommendations of the United Nations advisory missions, to curb the illicit circulation of small arms and to collect such arms in the affected States that so request, with the support of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and in close cooperation with the Organization of African Unity;

5. Invites Member States to implement national control measures in order to check the illicit circulation of small arms, in particular by curbing the illegal export of such arms;

6. Invites the international community to give appropriate support to the efforts made by the affected countries to suppress the illicit circulation of small arms, which is likely to hamper their development;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to examine the issue and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and its Protocol

Status of the Convention

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in August a report⁽²⁷⁾ concerning actions in respect of the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects⁽²⁸⁾ and its three Protocols (dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons) between 1 September 1994 and 30 June 1995.

As at 31 December 1995, 57 States were parties to the Convention.⁽²⁹⁾ During the year, Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Malta, Romania, South Africa, Togo, Uganda, the United Kingdom and the United States became parties to the Convention and its Protocols, which had entered into force in 1983.⁽³⁰⁾

Review Conference

The Group of Governmental Experts to Prepare the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, at its fourth and final session (Geneva, 9-20 January),⁽³¹⁾ continued to concentrate on the preparation of amendments to Protocol II on the basis of the revised rolling text submitted by the Chairman in 1994.⁽³²⁾

Agreement was reached in principle for provisions on certain prohibitions and restrictions on the use of anti-personnel mines that were not self-destructing or did not comply with the Protocol's provisions on detectability. But the proposal to ban the use, development, manufacture, stockpiling and transfer of all anti-personnel mines without self-destructing or self-deactivating mechanisms and all booby traps was not supported by a majority of delegations. Although three different proposals were put forward on all aspects of a possible verification system, fact-finding missions and measures of compliance, there was no consensus.

With respect to the scope of application of the Protocol, it seemed possible to reach agreement to extend it to all armed conflicts, including conflicts not of an international character, and two alternative provisions were proposed.

The Group elaborated an integrated draft text of the amendments to Protocol II, which was eventually contained in the Chairman's rolling text annexed to the final report of the Group.⁽³¹⁾ It also dealt with other proposals relating to the Convention, among them, wording for a protocol on blinding weapons. As a result of extensive consultations, agreement was reached to transmit to the Review Conference a draft protocol on the subject. In addition, the Group considered how to pursue further discussions on naval mines and small-calibre weapon systems. As to organizational matters, the Group decided that the Conference would be held in Vienna from 25 September to 13 October and approved a draft provisional agenda.

The Review Conference met with 44 States parties in attendance.⁽³²⁾ Also participating as observers were representatives of the UN Children's Fund, the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the UN Development Programme, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, the European Community, the League of Arab States, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and the Sovereign Order of Malta. In addition, a number of NGOs attended public meetings of the Conference and its Main Committees. The main task of the Review Conference was to prepare amendments to Protocol II. As it was not possible to bridge the wide divergence of views in the time allotted, it was decided that resumed sessions of the Conference would take place in 1996, with the 1995 session constituting the first phase.

The Conference established three Main Committees: Main Committee I, to review the scope and operation of the Convention and its Protocols, consider proposals relating to the Convention, and prepare a final declaration for the Conference; Main Committee II, to consider proposals relating to the Protocols; and Main Committee III, to consider proposals for additional protocols. A Drafting Committee and a Credentials Committee were also established.

In the general exchange of views on Protocol II, delegations discussed the extension of the scope of application to non-international armed conflicts; measures to strengthen restrictions or prohibitions on mines and their export; provision for technical assistance; and verification. There was wide agreement that the scope of application of the Protocol should be extended to domestic armed conflicts.

All States parties were in favour of strengthening the prohibitions and restrictions on anti-personnel mines to some degree, particularly the aspect of export, but expressed a range of views with regard to the extent.

Discussions continued concerning the criteria for detectability and for self-destructing mechanisms and the modalities for their implementation, which the Group of Governmental Experts had agreed in principle should be provided for in the amended Protocol.

An overwhelming majority of parties supported the proposed ban on blinding laser weapons, to be incorporated into the Convention as Protocol IV.

As to the work of the Committees, Main Committee I discussed a proposal for eliminating the "waiting period" for States to become full parties. It also considered amending the Convention to provide for a structured process of periodic review conferences. Its task of preparing a final declaration for the Conference depended to a considerable degree on the conclusion of the work of Main Committee II, charged with preparing amendments to Protocol II. Main Committee II did not, however, complete its work as planned.

To assist itself in preparing amendments to Protocol II, Main Committee II established a Technical Military Experts Group to deal with proposals for article 2, on definitions, and proposals for specifications of the Technical Annex. In the course of its deliberations and negotiations, the Committee considered a large number of proposals. Divergent views of parties persisted, however, on various issues, in particular on criteria for detectability and for self-destructing and self-deactivating mechanisms, and a transitional period for achieving compliance with such technical requirements; a verification system and compliance mechanism; and arrangements for technical cooperation and assistance in mine clearance. As for the scope of application, no consensus could be reached on the exact wording of article 1, although there was agreement in principle on the substance. In the end, the Committee was unable to reach consensus on an amended text.

Main Committee III concentrated on the question of blinding laser weapons. On 6 October, it adopted by consensus its report, which contained a draft text entitled "Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV)".⁽³⁴⁾ During the deliberations, proposals were made and views expressed on various aspects: the scope of application, the prohibition itself (use, production, stockpiling and transfer), compliance and other pertinent issues such as the definition of "permanent blindness". The Committee did not elaborate extensively on the scope of application, but decided to leave the issue, referred to in article 1 of its draft protocol, to be decided by the Drafting Committee, pending agreement on the text on scope being negotiated in Main Committee II with respect to Protocol II. In view of the fact that production and stockpiling would entail questions of verification and compliance, the Committee finally decided to include only the prohibition of use and transfer. Also, as a result of intensive consultations among delegations as well as with the World Health Organization, the Committee adopted a compromise definition of the term "permanent blindness", referred to in article 5 of its draft. The report of Main Committee III was subsequently transmitted through the Conference to the Drafting Committee for its consideration. The Drafting Committee decided to delete article 1 and to maintain the remaining articles as provisions of the new Protocol IV.

At its final meeting, on 13 October, the Review Conference adopted by consensus the text of the Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons and the interim report on the organization and work of the first phase of the Conference.⁽³⁵⁾ It decided to continue its work at resumed sessions, to be held in Geneva from 15 to 19 January and from 22 April to 3 May 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/74.

four meetings and completed its work by submitting a final report,

Welcoming the fact that the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects met at Vienna from 25 September to 13 October 1995, in accordance with article 8, paragraph 3, of the Convention, and that, in addition to the States parties, forty other States attended and took an active part in the Conference, Particularly welcoming the adoption on 13 October 1995 of the Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV) annexed to the Convention,

Noting that the Review Conference was not able to complete its work in reviewing the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II), and the decision of the Conference therefore to continue its work,

Recalling the role played by the International Committee of the Red Cross in the elaboration of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto,

Welcoming the national measures adopted by Member States relating to the transfer, the production or the reduction of existing stockpiles of anti-personnel land-mines,

Desirous of reinforcing international cooperation in the area of prohibitions or restrictions on the use of certain conventional weapons, in particular for the removal of minefields, mines and booby traps,

3. Urgently calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take all measures to become parties, as soon as possible, to the Convention and its Protocols and upon successor States to take appropriate measures so that ultimately access to these instruments will be universal;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in his capacity as depositary of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto, to continue to inform it periodically of accessions to the Convention and the Protocols;

5. Takes note of the interim report of the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, held at Vienna from 25 September to 13 October 1995;

Approved by First Committee (A/50/594) without vote, 16 November (meeting 23); 49-nation draft (A/C.1/50/L.34); agenda item 74.

Land-mines

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September report⁽³⁷⁾ covering the activities of the United Nations on assistance in mine clearance over the past year and on the operation of the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance. He noted that, in response to the Assembly's call in 1994,⁽³⁶⁾ the International Meeting on Mine Clearance had been convened (Geneva, 5-7 July 1995). Ninety-seven Governments, 11 intergovernmental organizations, 16 UN bodies and 31 NGOs participated in the Meeting, which aimed at enhancing international awareness of the different dimensions of the land-mine problem, seeking further political and financial support for UN activities and promoting greater international cooperation. The Secretary-General stated that with some $22 million pledged at the Meeting, the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance, established in 1994,⁽³⁸⁾ would become fully operational. Mine clearance and/or mine-awareness programmes were under way in Afghanistan, Angola, Cambodia, El Salvador, the former Yugoslavia, Guatemala, Mozambique, Rwanda, Somalia and Yemen. Assessment missions were undertaken in Chad and Georgia.

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in November, a report containing information received from 16 Governments and EU on steps taken to implement moratoria declared on the export of anti-personnel mines.⁽⁴⁰⁾ The Secretary-General described unilateral, regional and global initiatives to limit their export.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 O.

Moratorium on the export of anti-personnel land-mines

The General Assembly,

Recalling with satisfaction its resolutions 48/75 K of 16 December 1993 and 49/75 D of 15 December 1994, in which it, inter alia, called upon States to agree to a moratorium on the export of anti-personnel land-mines that pose grave dangers to civilian populations, and urged States to implement moratoria on the export of anti-personnel land-mines,

Also recalling with satisfaction its resolution 49/75 D, in which it, inter alia, established as a goal of the international community the eventual elimination of anti-personnel land-mines,

Noting that, according to the 1994 report of the Secretary-General entitled "Assistance in mine clearance", it is estimated that there are more than one hundred and ten million land-mines in the ground in more than sixty countries throughout the world,

Noting also that, according to the same report, the global land-mine crisis continues to worsen as an estimated two to five million new land-mines are laid each year, while only an estimated one hundred thousand were cleared in 1994,

Expressing deep concern that anti-personnel land-mines kill or maim hundreds of people every week, mostly innocent and defenceless civilians, obstruct economic development and reconstruction, and have other severe consequences for years after emplacement, which include inhibiting the repatriation of refugees and the return of internally displaced persons,

Gravely concerned over the suffering and casualties caused to non-combatants as a result of the proliferation, as well as the indiscriminate and irresponsible use, of anti-personnel land-mines,

Recalling with satisfaction its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993 and 49/215 A of 23 December 1994 calling for assistance in mine clearance,

Welcoming the programmes of assistance that exist for demining and humanitarian support for the victims of anti-personnel land-mines,

Welcoming also the International Meeting on Mine Clearance, held at Geneva from 5 to 7 July 1995, and noting the statement of the Secretary-General at the meeting that the international community must take specific and tangible steps to address the intolerable situation caused by the proliferation of anti-personnel land-mines throughout the world, Recalling with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General concerning progress on the initiative in resolution 49/75 D,

Convinced that moratoria by States on the export of anti-personnel land-mines that pose grave dangers to civilian populations are important measures in helping to reduce substantially the human and economic costs resulting from the proliferation, as well as the indiscriminate and irresponsible use, of such devices,

Noting with satisfaction that more than twenty-five States already have declared moratoria on the export, transfer or sale of anti-personnel land-mines, with many of these moratoria being declared as a result of the aforementioned resolutions,

Believing that ongoing efforts to strengthen the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, in particular Protocol II thereto, are an essential part of the overall effort to address problems caused by the proliferation, as well as the indiscriminate and irresponsible use, of anti-personnel land-mines,

Noting the efforts that were made at the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, held at Vienna from 25 September to 13 October 1995, to strengthen prohibitions and restrictions in Protocol II governing land-mine use and transfer, and urging parties to build consensus towards agreement on such prohibitions and restrictions when the Review Conference reconvenes in January and April 1996,

Believing also that, in addition to Protocol II, other measures to control the production, stockpiling and transfer of anti-personnel land-mines are also necessary to address problems caused by anti-personnel land-mines, especially the indiscriminate or illegal use of anti-personnel land-mines that continue to inflict harm on civilian populations long after emplacement,

Recognizing that States can move most effectively towards the goal of the eventual elimination of anti-personnel land-mines as viable alternatives are developed that significantly reduce the risk to the civilian population, and emphasizing the need for States to work on developing such alternatives on an urgent basis,

1. Welcomes the moratoria already declared by certain States on the export of anti-personnel land-mines;
2. Urges States that have not yet done so to declare such moratoria at the earliest possible date;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on steps taken by Member States to implement such moratoria, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament";
4. Emphasizes the importance of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and Protocol II thereto as the authoritative international instrument governing the responsible use of anti-personnel land-mines and related devices, and urges parties to build consensus towards an agreement when the Review Conference reconvenes;
5. Encourages the widest possible accession to the Convention and to Protocol II thereto, and further urges all States to comply immediately and fully with the applicable rules of Protocol II;
6. Also encourages further immediate international efforts to seek solutions to the problems caused by anti-personnel land-mines, with a view to the eventual elimination of anti-personnel land-mines.

Other disarmament issues

In 1995, there were a number of disarmament issues that had, in most instances, been before the international community for some time, but that, for a variety of reasons, were not directly addressed to any great extent in the various disarmament forums.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

In 1995, the Conference on Disarmament⁽¹⁾ did not succeed in re-establishing during the session the ad hoc committee on the prevention of an arms race in outer space, despite general agreement among member States on the need to do so. This was partly due to the lack of agreement on the re-establishment of other ad hoc committees, including those for transparency and negative security assurances. Consequently, the subject was discussed only in plenary meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/69.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming also provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming further paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on this issue and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing the grave danger for international peace and security of an arms race in outer space and of developments contributing to it,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that bilateral negotiations, begun in 1985 between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, were conducted with the declared objective of working out effective agreements aimed, inter alia, at preventing an arms race in outer space,

Welcoming the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space at the 1994 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral body on disarmament, to continue to examine and identify, through substantive and general consideration, issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Regretting the inability of the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space in 1995,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from those efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space,

Stressing that the growing use of outer space increases the need for greater transparency and better information on the part of the international community,

Recalling in this context its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990, 47/51 of 9 December 1992 and 48/74 A of 16 December 1993, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Conscious of the benefits of confidence- and security-building measures in the military field,

Recognizing that there has been agreement in the Ad Hoc Committee that the conclusion of an international agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space remained the fundamental task of the Committee and that the concrete proposals on confidence-building measures could form an integral part of such agreements,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and that it is important strictly to comply with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space in 1996 and to consider the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, building upon areas of convergence and taking into account relevant proposals and initiatives, including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee at the 1994 session of the Conference and at the forty-ninth and fiftieth sessions of the General Assembly;

8. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1996 session and to continue building upon areas of convergence, taking into account the work undertaken since 1985, with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

9. Recognizes, in this respect, the growing convergence of views on the elaboration of measures designed to strengthen transparency, confidence and security in the peaceful uses of outer space;

10. Urges the Russian Federation and the United States of America to resume their bilateral negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Disarmament and development

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁾ in August on the relationship between disarmament and development. He recalled that, in his 1994 report⁽⁴⁾ on the subject, he had urged Member States, in the light of the changed international situation, to carry out a critical review of the action programme adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development⁽⁵⁾ and then to provide further guidance for Secretariat activity in that area. However, no such evaluation was made in 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 G.

Relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, concerning the relationship between disarmament and development,

Recalling also the adoption on 11 September 1987 of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Recalling further its resolution 49/75 J of 15 December 1994,

Science and technology

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General continued to follow and assess scientific and technological developments and develop a database of research institutions and experts in order to promote transparency and international cooperation in the application of such knowledge to disarmament objectives. In a September report,⁽⁷⁾ he noted that the Centre for Disarmament Affairs was in the process of expanding its database to provide information of the kind requested, and presented the views of two States regarding the impact of scientific and technological developments on international security.

In response to a 1989 Assembly request,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, in August, conveyed information received from Poland relevant to the 1971 Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Seabed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof,⁽⁹⁾ and to verification of compliance with its provisions.⁽¹⁰⁾

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/62.

The role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be maintained and encouraged,

Stressing the interests of the international community in the subject and the need to follow closely the scientific and technological developments that may have a negative impact on the security environment and on the process of arms limitation and disarmament, and to channel scientific and technological developments for beneficial purposes,

Cognizant that the international transfer of high-technology products, services and know-how for peaceful purposes is important for the economic and social development of States,

Recalling that the Final Declaration of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995,^a noted that restrictions being placed on access to technology through the imposition of non-transparent ad hoc export control regimes with exclusive membership tended to impede the economic and social development of developing countries,

Emphasizing that the internationally negotiated guidelines for the transfer of high technology with military applications should take into account the legitimate defence requirements of all States, while ensuring that access to high-technology products and services and know-how for peaceful purposes is not denied,

1. Affirms that scientific and technological achievements should be used for the benefit of all mankind to promote the sustainable economic and social development of all States and to safeguard international security, and that international cooperation in the use of science and technology through the transfer and exchange of technological know-how for peaceful purposes should be promoted;

2. Invites Member States to undertake additional efforts to apply science and technology for disarmament-related purposes and to make disarmament-related technologies available to interested States;

3. Urges Member States to undertake multilateral negotiations with the participation of all interested States in order to establish universally acceptable, non-discriminatory guidelines for international transfers of high technology with military applications;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to develop a database of concerned research institutions and experts with a view to promoting transparency and international cooperation in the applications of the scientific and technological developments for pursuing disarmament objectives such as disposal of weapons, conversion and verification, among others;

5. Encourages the United Nations to contribute, within existing mandates, to promoting the application of science and technology for peaceful purposes;

6. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views and assessment;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session an item entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament".

Arms limitation and disarmament agreements

Environment and disarmament and arms control agreements

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/70 M.

Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the importance of the observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms limitation,

Taking note of the relevant provisions of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction regarding the environment,

Conscious of the positive potential implications for the environment of a future comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Desirous of banning effectively military or any other hostile use of environment modification techniques, with a view to removing the dangers for mankind that might arise from such uses,

1. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to take every necessary measure to include in negotiating treaties and agreements on disarmament and arms limitation the corresponding environmental norms, with a view to ensuring that the process of implementation of such treaties and agreements is environmentally sound, in particular the destruction of weapons covered by them;

2. Emphasizes the importance of the compliance of all States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, and calls upon them to cooperate and ensure that the process of implementation of the Convention in all relevant aspects is environmentally sound;

Compliance

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/60.

Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/63 of 16 December 1993 and other relevant resolutions on the question,

Recognizing the abiding concern of all Member States for maintaining respect for rights and obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law,

Convinced that observance of the Charter of the United Nations, relevant treaties and other sources of international law is essential for the strengthening of international security,

Mindful, in particular, of the fundamental importance of full implementation and strict observance of agreements and other obligations on arms limitation and disarmament if individual nations and the international community are to derive enhanced security from them,

Stressing that any violation of such agreements and other obligations not only adversely affects the security of States parties but can also create security risks for other States relying on the constraints and commitments stipulated in those agreements and other obligations,

Stressing also that any weakening of confidence in such agreements and other obligations diminishes their contribution to global or regional stability and to further disarmament and arms limitation efforts and undermines the credibility and effectiveness of the international legal system,

Recognizing, in this context, that full compliance by parties with all provisions of existing agreements and the resolving of compliance concerns effectively by means consistent with such agreements and international law can, inter alia, facilitate the conclusion of additional arms limitation and disarmament agreements, and thereby contribute to better relations among States and the strengthening of world peace and security,

Believing that compliance with all provisions of arms limitation and disarmament agreements by States parties is a matter of interest and concern to all members of the international community, and noting the role that the United Nations has played and should continue to play in that regard,

Welcoming the universal recognition of the critical importance of the question of compliance with and verification of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and other obligations,

1. Urges all States parties to arms limitation and disarmament agreements to implement and comply with the entirety of the spirit and all provisions of such agreements;

2. Calls upon all Member States to give serious consideration to the implications that non-compliance with any provisions of arms limitation and disarmament obligations has for international security and stability, as well as for the prospects for further progress in the field of disarmament;

3. Also calls upon all Member States to support efforts aimed at the resolution of compliance questions by means consistent with such agreements and international law, with a view to encouraging strict observance by all parties of the provisions of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and maintaining or restoring the integrity of such agreements;

4. Welcomes the role that the United Nations has played in restoring the integrity of, and fostering negotiations on, certain arms limitation and disarmament agreements and in the removal of threats to peace;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance that may be necessary in restoring and protecting the integrity of arms limitation and disarmament agreements;

6. Encourages efforts by States parties to develop additional cooperative measures, as appropriate, that can increase confidence in compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament obligations and reduce the possibility of misinterpretation and misunderstanding;

7. Notes the contribution that verification experiments and research can make and already have made in confirming and improving verification procedures for arms limitation and disarmament agreements under study or negotiation, thereby providing an opportunity, from the time that such agreements enter into force, for enhancing confidence in the effectiveness of verification procedures as a basis for determining compliance;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament obligations".

Information and studies

Disarmament Information Programme

In carrying out its mandated information and education activities, the UN Centre for Disarmament Affairs gave increasing attention to the most topical issues of global concern in the field, such as non-proliferation in all its aspects, achievement of a comprehensive test-ban treaty, and ways and means of promoting regional approaches to disarmament and confidence-building measures, including greater openness and transparency in military matters.

Disarmament Week

The Centre for Disarmament Affairs worked closely with the NGO Committee on Disarmament, especially during the celebration of Disarmament Week. The Week, beginning 24 October, was observed by a special meeting of the First Committee. On 26 and 30 October and on 9 November, the NGO Committee, the Centre and the UN Department of Public Information sponsored panel discussions focusing on nuclear-test-ban negotiations, a fissile material cut-off, reduction of military budgets and land-mines.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a July report⁽²⁾ containing information on activities carried out by three Governments and by the United Nations to promote Disarmament Week from 1992 to 1994.

Recalling the recommendations concerning the World Disarmament Campaign contained in annex V to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in particular the recommendation that Disarmament Week should continue to be widely observed,

Pledging Conference

The Thirteenth Pledging Conference for the UN Disarmament Information Programme was held on 27 October in New York.⁽³⁾ Fourteen countries pledged $279,755 at the Conference, with various amounts earmarked for the trust funds of the Disarmament Information Programme and the UN regional centres for peace and disarmament and for the UN Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR), compared with $654,972 in 1994. In accordance with the Final Act of the Conference, the list of pledges was to remain open in order to incorporate any additional contributions up until 31 March 1996. The list of pledges made at the Thirteenth Pledging Conference in October 1995 and thereafter, up to 31 March 1996, was contained in a document of the Conference.⁽⁴⁾

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General in an August report⁽⁶⁾ described the activities of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament—in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean—during the period August 1994 to July 1995. He stated that the centres were unable to function in the manner intended by the Assembly because of a steady fall in voluntary contributions, in particular from Member States within the regions concerned. He warned that unless Member States took early and effective action, the centres would have to be closed and regional disarmament activities would have to be carried out only by staff members based in New York or Geneva.

The activities of the Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, established in Lomé, Togo, in 1986,⁽⁷⁾ were curtailed owing to severe financial constraints, which entailed some cuts in staff. Nevertheless, the Centre held monthly informal meetings on topical issues, and it widened the distribution of its quarterly bilingual publication, The African Peace Bulletin/Bulletin Africain de la Paix. Centre staff provided substantive and administrative support to the UN Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa and to the Secretary-General's Advisory Mission.

The Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, established in Lima, Peru, in 1987,⁽⁸⁾ was operating under extreme financial constraints. Its activities were largely directed towards maintaining contacts and cooperation with governmental and non-governmental organizations, research centres, academic institutions and other UN bodies and agencies interested in disarmament and international security issues. In February, the Centre hosted a round-table discussion on the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons. It continued to publish its quarterly newsletter, Boletín, to disseminate information and promote awareness of disarmament-related issues in the region.

The Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, established in Kathmandu, Nepal, in 1989, organized major regional meetings on openness, assurance of security and disarmament (Kathmandu, 13-15 February), on disarmament in the past half century and its future prospects (Nagasaki, Japan, 12-16 June) and on multifaceted cooperation in north-east Asia (Kanazawa, Japan, 22-23 June).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/71 C.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean

Disarmament in Africa, the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific and the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, Reaffirming its resolutions 46/36 F of 6 December 1991 and 47/52 G of 9 December 1992 on regional disarmament, including confidence-building measures,

Recalling also its resolutions 48/76 E of 16 December 1993 and 49/76 D of 15 December 1994 on the regional disarmament centres,

Mindful of the provisions of Article 11, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations stipulating that a function of the General Assembly is to consider the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and arms limitation,

Bearing in mind that the changed international environment has created new opportunities for the pursuit of disarmament, as well as posed new challenges,

Convinced that the initiatives and activities mutually agreed upon by Member States of the respective regions aimed at fostering mutual confidence and security, as well as the implementation and coordination of regional activities under the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, would encourage and facilitate the development of effective measures of confidence-building, arms limitation and disarmament in these regions,

Welcoming the programme of activities carried out by the regional centres, which have contributed substantially to understanding and cooperation among the States in each particular region and have thereby strengthened the role assigned to each regional centre in the areas of peace, disarmament and development,

Bearing in mind the importance of education for peace, disarmament and development for understanding and cooperation among States and for the promotion of international peace and security,

Recognizing with concern the financial situation of the regional centres as described in the 1994 report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the regional centres,

Underlining, therefore, the need to provide the centres with financial viability and stability so as to facilitate the effective planning and implementation of their respective programmes of activities,

Expressing its gratitude to the Member States, international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations that have, so far, contributed to the trust funds of the regional centres in Africa and Latin America and the Caribbean,

1. Commends the activities being carried out by the regional centres in identifying and broadening the understanding of pressing disarmament and security issues and exploring optimum solutions under given specific conditions prevailing in each region, in accordance with their mandates;

2. Reaffirms its strong support for the further operation and strengthening of the two regional centres and encourages them to continue intensifying their efforts in promoting cooperation with subregional and regional organizations and among the States in their respective regions to facilitate the development of effective measures of confidence-building, arms limitation and disarmament, with a view to promoting peace and security;

3. Encourages further use of the potential of the regional centres to maintain the increased interest in and momentum for revitalization of the Organization to meet the challenges of a new phase of international relations in order to fulfil the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations related to peace, disarmament and development, taking into account the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security as adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to promote the development of activities within the programmes of the United Nations regional disarmament centres related to education for disarmament;

5. Strongly appeals once again to Member States, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make more substantial voluntary contributions in order to revitalize the two centres, strengthen their programmes of activities and facilitate the effective implementation of those programmes;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the current financial situation of the two centres, to explore alternative financial resources and to continue to provide all necessary support to the regional centres in fulfilling their mandates;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the directors of the two regional centres are, as far as possible, locally based in order to revitalize the activities in the centres;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on his efforts to seek new alternative sources of financing for the two regional centres and on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific and United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean".

Recalling its resolution 39/63 J of 12 December 1984, in which it requested the Secretary-General to provide assistance to such Member States in the regions concerned as might request it with a view to establishing regional and institutional arrangements for the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, on the basis of existing resources and of voluntary contributions that Member States might make to that end,

Recalling also its resolution 42/39 D of 30 November 1987, by which it established the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia, with headquarters at Kathmandu and with the mandate of providing, on request, substantive support for the initiatives and other activities mutually agreed upon by the Member States of the Asian region for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament, through appropriate utilization of available resources,

Mindful of its resolution 44/117 F of 15 December 1989, in which it decided to rename the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia as the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific,

Commending the useful activities carried out by the Regional Centre in encouraging regional and sub-regional dialogue for the enhancement of openness, transparency and confidence-building, as well as the promotion of disarmament and security through the organization of regional meetings, which has come to be widely known within the Asia-Pacific region as the "Kathmandu process",

Noting that trends in the post-cold-war era have emphasized the function of the Regional Centre in assisting Member States as they deal with new security concerns and disarmament issues emerging in the region,

Noting also the efforts of the Member States to respond to these concerns and issues through the formulation of a common approach,

Appreciating highly the important role Nepal has played as the host nation of the headquarters of the Regional Centre,

Recognizing the need for the Regional Centre to pursue effectively its above-mentioned expanded function,

Expressing its appreciation to the Regional Centre for its organization of substantive regional meetings at Kathmandu and at Nagasaki and Kanazawa, Japan, in 1995,

1. Commends the important work carried out by the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, with its headquarters at Kathmandu;

2. Reaffirms its strong support for the continued operation and further strengthening of the Regional Centre as an essential promoter of the regional peace and disarmament dialogue in the Asia-Pacific region known as the "Kathmandu process";

3. Decides that the Director of the Regional Centre at Kathmandu should operate as before until a reliable means can be found to finance the operational needs of the Regional Centre;

4. Recommends that the Regional Centre organize the scheduled regional meetings at Kathmandu, Hiroshima, Japan, and other cities in 1996, within the available resources voluntarily contributed by Member States and organizations for that purpose;

5. Expresses its appreciation for the contributions received by the Regional Centre;

6. Appeals to Member States, in particular those within the Asia-Pacific region, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions in order to strengthen the programme of activities of the Regional Centre and its implementation;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary support, within existing resources, to the Regional Centre in carrying out its programme of activities;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific and United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean".

Disarmament studies and research

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, which advised the Secretary-General on the disarmament studies programme and implementation of the Disarmament Information Programme and served as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR, held two sessions in 1995 (Geneva, 10-12 January; New York, 19-23 June).⁽⁹⁾

The main issues discussed by the Board included nuclear issues and other weapons of mass destruction, micro-disarmament, the special session of the General Assembly on disarmament planned for 1997, the Register of Conventional Arms, the Conference on Disarmament and regional organizations in collective security.

In its capacity as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR, the Board reviewed the Director's report for 1994 and approved the work programme for 1996.

By resolution 49/237, section I, of 31 March, the General Assembly, taking note of a note⁽¹⁰⁾ by the Secretary-General concerning a request for a subvention in 1995 to UNIDIR, based on recommendations of its Board in 1994,⁽¹¹⁾ decided to keep under review the level of support costs charged to UNIDIR.

By resolution 50/216, section V, of 23 December, the Assembly approved a subvention of $220,000 for 1996, as recommended by the Board.⁽¹²⁾

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the UNIDIR Director's report covering Institute activities from July 1994 to June 1995, and the report of the Board of Trustees concerning the 1996 work programme.⁽¹²⁾ During the period under review, the research programme focused on non-proliferation with respect to nuclear weapons, other weapons of mass destruction and dual-use technology transfers; disarmament and conflict resolution, in particular the utility and modalities of disarming warring parties as an element of efforts to resolve intra-State conflicts; and regional security issues, devoted to confidence-building and arms control in the Middle East.

Disarmament studies programme

As requested by the General Assembly in 1993,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted, in a September report,⁽¹⁴⁾ an in-depth study reviewing the conclusions of the 1990 study on verification,⁽¹⁵⁾ prepared with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts. The Secretary-General concurred with the concluding observation of the group that modest steps, within the constraints facing the Organization (see PART SIX, Chapter II), to enhance its verification role would have a positive impact on implementing disarmament treaties, developing effective early-warning mechanisms for impending conflicts, and responding with appropriate strategies to manage and resolve conflicts that had occurred.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/61.

Verification in all its aspects, including the role of the United Nations in the field of verification

The General Assembly,

Affirming its continued support for the sixteen principles of verification drawn up by the Disarmament Commission,

Stressing that the critical importance of verification of and compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements is universally recognized and that the issue of verification is a matter of concern to all nations,

Recalling its resolution 48/68 of 16 December 1993, in which it requested the Secretary-General, as a further follow-up to the 1990 study on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification and in view of significant developments in international relations since that study, to undertake, with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts, an in-depth study on verification issues identified in that resolution,

Also recalling that, in its resolution 48/68, it requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the subject to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, which was unanimously approved by the Group of Governmental Experts on Verification in All Its Aspects, including the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Verification, and commends the report to the attention of Member States;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to give the report the widest possible circulation and to seek the views of Member States on the report;

3. Encourages Member States to consider the recommendations contained in the report and to assist the Secretary-General in their implementation where they consider it appropriate;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the views received from Member States on the report and on actions taken by Member States and by the Secretariat with respect to the recommendations contained in the report;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Verification in all its aspects, including the role of the United Nations in the field of verification".

Disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

In 1995, 30 fellows participated in the UN disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, which began on 16 August in Geneva and ended on 28 October in New York. It included a series of lectures; speaking, drafting and simulation exercises; preparation of individual research papers on various disarmament and security issues; attendance at meetings of the Conference on Disarmament and the First Committee; and study visits to Germany and Japan. The fellows visited The Hague, Netherlands, where they attended lectures dealing with the verification regime, national implementation measures and assistance to Member States with respect to the 1993 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction. They also visited IAEA in Vienna, where they were briefed on safeguards activities and the nuclear non-proliferation regime.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/71 A.

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling all the annual resolutions on the matter since the thirty-seventh session of the General Assembly, in 1982, including resolution 49/76 B of 15 December 1994,

Noting also with satisfaction that the programme, as designed, continues to enable an increased number of public officials, particularly from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, particularly to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to support ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Germany and Japan for inviting the 1995 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the implementation of the Geneva-based programme within existing resources and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

Chapter III

Other political questions

During 1995, the United Nations continued to address issues relating to the eradication of colonialism, information, international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space and atomic radiation effects.

In December, the General Assembly acted on the recommendations of its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, adopting a series of resolutions concerning decolonization issues. The Assembly also invited Member States to provide their comments on the future of the Trusteeship Council.

As recommended by its Committee on Information, the General Assembly adopted resolutions on the promotion of the establishment of a more just and more effective world information and communication order and on UN public information policies and activities. It also endorsed recommendations of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and the UN Programme on Space Applications for 1996. The UN Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation was asked to continue reviewing problems in that field.

The year 1995 was marked by activities to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the birth of the United Nations as well as of the end of the Second World War. The General Assembly proclaimed a World Week of Peace in connection with the UN fiftieth anniversary and adopted a Declaration in Commemoration of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the End of the Second World War. In October, the Assembly held a special commemorative meeting and adopted a Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations. The Security Council held meetings to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations and of the end of the Second World War in Europe and in the Asia-Pacific region. The Council President made a statement on each occasion.

In December, the Assembly again recognized the important role of the United Nations in supporting government efforts to achieve democratization.

Trusteeship and decolonization

In 1995, the United Nations continued its efforts to eliminate colonialism. The General Assembly's

Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization) held its annual session in New York in two parts, on 27 February and from 10 July to 16 August, with a total of 13 meetings.⁽¹⁾ The Committee considered various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration,⁽²⁾ including decolonization issues in general and the situation of individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). It considered reports of its Working Group⁽³⁾ and of the Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance.⁽⁴⁾

As at 1 January 1995, the Committee was composed of 24 members (see APPENDIX III). On 20 July, Bulgaria informed⁽⁵⁾ the Chairman of its decision to withdraw from Committee membership as of 1 August 1995. On 13 July, the Committee acceded to Mexico's request for participation in its proceedings.

On 27 February, the Committee established an open-ended working group on improving the efficiency of its work, which held informal meetings and consultations during the year. On 14 July, the Committee opened its Working Group to all members.

Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the Special Committee on decolonization carried out in 1995 a mid-term review of the 1991 plan of action⁽⁷⁾ for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000), which had been declared by the Assembly in 1988.⁽⁸⁾

The Committee organized a Caribbean Regional Seminar on the Mid-term Review of the Plan of Action (Port-of-Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 3-5 July) to assess political, social and economic conditions in the small island NSGTs, particularly with a view to evaluating their evolution towards self-determination. The Seminar, which brought together representatives of the peoples and the administering Powers of NSGTs in the Caribbean region, examined available options for self-determination, such as independence, free association or integration with an independent State, association with an organization of independent States or economically sustainable autonomy, as well as other possible options. A broad range of economic and social questions and environmental issues were considered, including the socio-economic advancement of NSGTs and its impact on self-determination; tourism development; drug trafficking and money laundering; human resources development; the role of specialized agencies and international and regional organizations in economic and social advancement; access to UN programmes and activities; implications of global warming, sealevel rise and other ecological hazards; disaster preparedness and relief; and questions relating to the law of the sea. The Seminar also discussed regional cooperation in the preservation and protection of marine and other natural resources from over-exploitation; transport and communications; higher education; research and development; public health care; disaster mitigation; and regional pooling arrangements for sharing special skills and expertise. On 5 July, the Seminar adopted a number of conclusions and recommendations.⁽⁹⁾ The guidelines and rules of procedure for the Seminar were contained in a separate report.⁽¹⁰⁾

On 10 July, the Special Committee's Working Group recommended⁽¹⁾ that the Committee invite UN organs, agencies and institutions to apprise the Secretary-General of actions taken to implement the 1991 Assembly resolution⁽⁷⁾ relating to the plan of action, and report to the Assembly in 1996. Noting that the action plan provided for seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions alternately, the Working Group recommended that the Committee organize in 1996 a seminar in the Pacific for that region's NSGTs.

The Committee⁽¹⁾ approved those recommendations on 14 July. On 18 July, it noted the Caribbean Seminar's report,⁽⁹⁾ on the understanding that reservations expressed by its members would be reflected in that meeting's record.⁽¹¹⁾

Implementation of the 1960 Declaration

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/39.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all its subsequent resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, most recently resolution 49/89 of 16 December 1994, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recognizing that the eradication of colonialism is one of the priorities of the Organization for the decade that began in 1990,

Deeply conscious of the need to take, speedily, measures to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism by the year 2000, as called for in its resolution 43/47 of 22 November 1988,

Reiterating its conviction of the need for the elimination of colonialism, as well as of the need for the total eradication of racial discrimination and violations of basic human rights,

Noting with satisfaction the achievements of the Special Committee in contributing to the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization,

Stressing the importance of the participation of the administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee,

Also noting with satisfaction the cooperation and active participation of some administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee, as well as their continued readiness to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Noting with concern the negative impact which the non-participation of certain administering Powers has had on the work of the Special Committee, depriving it of an important source of information on the Territories under their administration,

Aware of the pressing need of newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

Aware also of the pressing need of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, including particularly the small island Territories, for economic, social and other assistance from the United Nations and the organizations within its system,

Taking special note of the fact that, during its 1995 session, the Special Committee carried out a mid-term review of the Plan of Action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism in the context of the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, in which further options for self-determination were explored,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions on decolonization, including its resolution 43/47, in which it declared the decade that began in 1990 as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully as soon as possible their right to self-determination, including independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in any form or manifestation—including economic exploitation—is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms its determination to continue to take all steps necessary to bring about the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and the faithful observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its support for the aspirations of the peoples under colonial rule to exercise their right to self-determination, including independence;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1995, including the programme of work envisaged for 1996;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to give effect within their respective spheres of competence to the recommendations of the Special Committee for the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Calls upon the administering Powers to ensure that no activity of foreign economic and other interests in the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration hinders the peoples of those Territories from exercising their right to self-determination, including independence;

8. Takes note of the decision of some of the administering Powers to close or downsize some of the military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

9. Calls upon the administering Powers to eliminate the remaining military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and urges them not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States;

10. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories, and requests that the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

11. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration and to carry out those actions approved by the General Assembly regarding the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism in all Territories that have not yet exercised their right to self-determination, including independence, and in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

(b) To continue to examine the implementation by Member States of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization;

(c) To continue to pay special attention to the small Territories, in particular through the dispatch of regular visiting missions, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(d) To take all necessary steps to enlist worldwide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

12. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to cooperate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to receive visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants;

13. Also calls upon the administering Powers that have not participated in the work of the Special Committee to do so at its 1996 session;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide economic, social and other assistance to the Non-Self-Governing Territories and to continue to do so, as appropriate, after they exercise their right to self-determination, including independence;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the other resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

Implementation by international organizations

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in June 1995 a report with a later addendum,⁽¹³⁾ containing summaries of information provided by two specialized agencies and an international institution forming part of or associated with the United Nations on action taken to implement the 1960 Declaration.⁽¹⁴⁾

Report of the President of the Economic and Social Council. In accordance with 1994 resolutions of the Economic and Social Council⁽¹⁵⁾ and the General Assembly,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Council President reported⁽¹⁵⁾ in June on ongoing consultations with the Special Committee Chairman concerning implementation of the Declaration by international organizations. During the period under review, the UN Development Programme (UNDP) remained the primary provider of assistance to NSGTs. In close collaboration with other UN organizations and, where appropriate, the Caribbean Community, UNDP continued to fund projects covering primary economic sectors such as tourism, agriculture, fisheries industry, transportation, communication and power generation, as well as the social and educational sectors. Its recalculated indicative planning figures for 1992-1996, including estimated cost sharing, were $983,000 for St. Helena, $838,000 for Tokelau, $747,000 for Anguilla, $680,000 for the Turks and Caicos Islands, $543,000 for the British Virgin Islands, $337,000 for Montserrat and $270,000 for the Cayman Islands.

In addition to executing projects funded by UNDP, a number of specialized agencies and organizations extended assistance to NSGTs from within their own budgetary resources. The report described programmes by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and the UN Conference on Trade and Development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/58.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council on consultations held with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statement by the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960 and resolutions of the Special Committee, as well as other relevant resolutions and decisions, including in particular its resolution 1994/37 of 29 July 1994,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community,

Welcoming the assistance extended to Non-Self-Governing Territories by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme,

Expressing its conviction that closer contacts and consultations between and among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional organizations help to facilitate the effective formulation of assistance programmes for the peoples concerned,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the small island Non-Self-Governing Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters, such as hurricanes, cyclones and sealevel rise, and recalling other relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Bhutan, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Russian Federation, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Australia, Belarus, Bulgaria, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United States said it abstained because the text had unnecessarily and inappropriately linked the work of the specialized agencies and other organizations to the 1960 Declaration whereas the time for such a link had long since passed. The Russian Federation, which voted in favour, believed nevertheless that such matters should be dealt with in the General Assembly, and stated that it might vote differently if a similar resolution were introduced in the Council in the future.

Foreign interests impeding implementation of the Declaration

The Special Committee on decolonization in 1995 again considered foreign economic and other interests impeding implementation of the 1960 Declaration. It had before it working papers by the Secretariat describing economic conditions and foreign activities in Anguilla,⁽¹⁶⁾ Bermuda,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Cayman Islands,⁽¹⁸⁾ Montserrat,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Turks and Caicos Islands⁽²⁰⁾ and the United States Virgin Islands.⁽²¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/33.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, as well as all its other relevant resolutions, including, in particular, resolution 46/181 of 19 December 1991, endorsing the plan of action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming also that any economic or other activity that constitutes an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism is a direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming further that the natural resources are the heritage of the indigenous populations of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location, size and economic conditions of each Territory and bearing in mind the need to promote the stability, diversification and strengthening of the respective economy of each Territory,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the small Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation,

Conscious also that foreign economic investment, when done in collaboration with the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and in accordance with their wishes, could make a valid contribution to the socio-economic development of the Territories and could also make a valid contribution to the exercise of their right to self-determination,

Concerned about the activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which exploit the natural and human resources of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories and deprive them of their right to control the wealth of their countries,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Affirms the value of foreign economic investment undertaken in collaboration with the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and in accordance with their wishes in order to make a valid contribution to the socio-economic development of the Territories;

3. Reiterates that any administering Power that deprives the colonial peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources, or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests, violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Reaffirms its concern about the activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural resources that are the heritage of the indigenous populations of the colonial and

Non-Self-Governing Territories in the Caribbean, the Pacific and other regions, as well as their human resources, to the detriment of their interests, thus depriving them of their right to control the resources of their Territories and impeding the realization by those peoples of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence;

5. Reiterates its deep concern about those activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV), and the efforts to eliminate colonialism;

6. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take, in accordance with the relevant provisions of its resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction, if any, that own and operate enterprises in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such practices and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

7. Reiterates that the damaging exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories by foreign economic interests, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, is a threat to the integrity and prosperity of those Territories;

8. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the peoples of colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

9. Urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources, and requests the administering Powers to continue to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to ensure that no discriminatory working conditions prevail in the Territories under their administration and to promote in each Territory a fair system of wages applicable to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, through all means at his disposal, to inform world public opinion of those activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration;

12. Appeals to the mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to continue their efforts for the full implementation of the Declaration;

13. Decides to continue to follow the situation in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interest of the indigenous peoples and at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories, in order to facilitate and accelerate the exercise by the peoples of those Territories of their right to self-determination and independence;

14. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

Military activities and arrangements in colonial countries

The Special Committee on decolonization also considered military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might impede implementation of the 1960 Declaration. It had before it working papers by the Secretariat on military activities and arrangements in Bermuda⁽¹⁷⁾ Guam⁽²²⁾ and the United States Virgin Islands.⁽²¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 50/412.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration

At its 82nd plenary meeting, on 6 December 1995, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration', and recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, reaffirms its strong conviction that military bases and installations in the Territories concerned could constitute an obstacle to the exercise by the people of those Territories of their right to self-determination, and reiterates its strong views that existing bases and installations, which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, should be withdrawn.

"2. Aware of the presence of such bases and installations in some of those Territories, the General Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its concern that military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration might run counter to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the administering Powers concerned to terminate such activities and to eliminate such military bases in compliance with its relevant resolutions.

"4. The General Assembly reiterates that the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly deplores the continued alienation of land in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly in the small island Territories of the Pacific and Caribbean regions, for military installations. The large-scale utilization of the local resources for this purpose could adversely affect the economic development of the Territories concerned.

"6. The General Assembly takes note of the decision of some of the administering Powers to close or downsize some of those military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories.

"7. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue to inform world public opinion of those military activities and arrangements in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories which constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

"8. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-first session."

Information dissemination

In 1995, the Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance held consultations with representatives of the Secretariat's Department of Public Information and Department of Political Affairs concerning dissemination of information on decolonization. The representatives described activities of their Departments in that respect, including regular contacts with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), academic circles and institutions of higher education; replies to individual requests for information and distribution of relevant UN documents, as well as contacts with local media and communities through the worldwide network of 68 UN information centres and services; and coverage of decolonization issues in publications, television and radio programmes and press releases.

In a statement made on the occasion of the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of All Colonial Territories Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights (22-26 May), the Subcommittee Chairman underscored that, despite the universally recognized success in the field of decolonization, the task in that area remained unfinished and required further concerted and determined action. He appealed for strengthened and continued support from the administering Powers to ensure the progress of NSGTs towards self-determination.

In July, the Special Committee on decolonization approved the Subcommittee's report,⁽⁴⁾ including its Chairman's statement and recommendations on dissemination of information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/40.

Dissemination of information on decolonization

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

1. Puerto Rico

In July 1995, the Special Committee on decolonization postponed for another year, until 1996, consideration of its decision of 15 August 1991,⁽²³⁾ by which it deplored the fact that the United States Congress had not adopted a legal framework for holding a referendum to enable the people of Puerto Rico to determine their political future. The Committee agreed, on the basis of its usual practice, to give due consideration to requests for hearings and heard six representatives of Puerto Rican organizations.

Other general questions

Scholarships

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported in September 1995 on offers made by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of NSGTs.⁽²⁵⁾ Three States informed him of scholarships between 1 October 1994 and 30 September 1995. Austria regularly provided vocational training and capacity-building assistance in the infrastructure and education sectors, as well as the training of kindergarten teachers, for inhabitants of Western Sahara. New Zealand reported that 20 students from New Caledonia and 33 students from Tokelau were studying in that country in 1995 on government scholarships. During the financial year 1994/95, the United Kingdom offered 55 scholarships to students from the British NSGTs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/35.

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/42 of 9 December 1994,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to its resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Conscious of the importance of promoting the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of offers of scholarships is essential in order to meet the increasing need of students from Non-Self-Governing Territories for educational and training assistance, and considering that students in those Territories should be encouraged to avail themselves of such offers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;
4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;
6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Information to the United Nations

States responsible for the administration of NSGTs continued to inform the Secretary-General of the economic, social and educational conditions in the Territories, under the terms of Article 73 e of the UN Charter. In September, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁶⁾ that he received information with respect to Tokelau (administered by New Zealand), and Anguilla, Bermuda and Gibraltar (administered by the United Kingdom).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/32.

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and the action taken by the Special Committee in respect of that information,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on the item,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 49/39 of 9 December 1994, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII),

Stressing the importance of timely transmission by the administering Powers of adequate information under Article 73 e of the Charter, in particular in relation to the preparation by the Secretariat of the working papers on the Territories concerned,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to transmit or continue to transmit to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that adequate information is drawn from all available published sources in connection with the preparation of the working papers relating to the Territories concerned;

5. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

Visiting missions

The Chairman of the Special Committee on decolonization, as requested by the Committee in 1994,⁽²⁷⁾ held consultations with representatives of the administering Powers on the question of sending visiting missions to NSGTs. In July 1995, he reported⁽²⁸⁾ that some NSGTs had expressed their willingness to receive UN missions and that he had again appealed to the administering Powers for cooperation in sending such missions, which were essential for the successful implementation of the 1991 plan of action⁽²⁹⁾ for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (see above).

One administering Power said that those territorial Governments willing to receive visiting missions should first consult with the administering Power concerned. Two others declared themselves open to any suggestions by local Governments in the Territories regarding their readiness to receive such missions. Another administering Power found it difficult to facilitate access to the Territory concerned and hoped that the Secretary-General would succeed in his efforts to bring the parties together and make possible the dispatch of a visiting mission. A number of the administering Powers reiterated their willingness to continue providing information on NSGTs under their administration (see above).

On 10 July, the Committee adopted a resolution⁽²⁹⁾ stressing the need to dispatch periodic missions to NSGTs to facilitate full implementation of the 1960 Declaration,⁽²⁾ calling on the administering Powers to continue to cooperate by receiving UN visiting missions in Territories under their administration and requesting them to consider new approaches in the Committee's work. The Committee requested its Chairman to continue consulting with those Powers and to report as appropriate.

Other colonial Territories

East Timor

The Special Committee on decolonization considered a working paper⁽³⁰⁾ by the Secretariat on political developments, the human rights situation, and economic, social and educational conditions in East Timor. The paper also described UN consideration of the situation. The Committee acceded to the request by Sao Tome and Principe to participate in the deliberations. It heard statements, among others, by Indonesia, Portugal and 33 petitioners. On 13 July, the Committee decided, on the proposal of its Acting Chairman, to continue consideration of the question in 1996, subject to any directives by the General Assembly and on the understanding that Indonesia's objection would be reflected in that meeting's record.⁽³¹⁾

By a 5 June note verbale,⁽³²⁾ Portugal informed the Secretary-General that it continued to be prevented from exercising its responsibilities for the administration of East Timor and remained unable to provide information concerning the Territory under Article 73 e of the Charter, owing to East Timor's illegal occupation by a third country which prevented its people from exercising freely their right to self-determination. Portugal further described the human rights situation in the Territory, based on reports of the Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions⁽³³⁾ of the Commission on Human Rights, international media, NGOs and official UN documents; developments in the talks on the question of East Timor; and proceedings in the case concerning East Timor, brought by Portugal against Australia before the International Court of Justice (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

On 10 July, Indonesia responded⁽³⁴⁾ that Portugal had relinquished its responsibility as the administering Power of East Timor when it abandoned the Territory in 1975, which resulted in civil war, and that the people of East Timor had exercised their right to self-determination by deciding in 1976 to be integrated with Indonesia. Portugal's note, it said, contained invalid information based on secondary and unreliable sources. Indonesia further described steps it had taken to improve the situation in East Timor.

In September,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General updated his 1994 progress report⁽³⁶⁾ on efforts to find a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the question of East Timor. At a fifth round of talks (Geneva, 9 January 1995) under the Secretary-General's auspices, the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Portugal noted positively his intention to facilitate and offer necessary arrangements for convening an all-inclusive, intra-East-Timorese dialogue to exchange views and explore practical ideas for improving the situation. It was understood that the dialogue would not address the Territory's political status and would not constitute a parallel negotiating track. The Ministers further agreed to consider at subsequent rounds of talks possible avenues towards a solution to the question and reaffirmed the need to improve the human rights situation in East Timor, including access to the Territory and the early release of the East Timorese imprisoned, and full accounting for the persons dead or missing, as a result of the 1991 incident in Dili⁽³⁷⁾ (see also PART THREE, Chapter III).

At the first meeting of the All-inclusive Intra-East-Timorese Dialogue (Burg Schlaining, Austria, 2-5 June), a declaration was adopted which proposed holding further Dialogue meetings; called for measures to improve the human rights situation and to promote peace, stability, justice and social harmony; reaffirmed the necessity of East Timor's sociocultural development based on the preservation of its cultural identity; and expressed the need to involve all East Timorese in the Territory's development.

At the sixth round of talks (Geneva, 8 July), the Foreign Ministers welcomed the results of the first Dialogue meeting and the Secretary-General's intention to continue that process, and began discussions of possible avenues for a comprehensive solution, including an eventual framework for achieving such a solution, the preservation and promotion of East Timor's cultural identity, and bilateral relations.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

On 10 and 13 July, the Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas); the United Kingdom, the administering Power, did not participate. The Committee acceded to Argentina's request for participation in the deliberations.

It had before it a working paper⁽³⁸⁾ by the Secretariat outlining political developments, arrangements for a mine-clearing operation and economic, social and educational conditions on the islands, and describing the Territory's Constitution and Government, its participation in international organizations and consideration of its future status by the UN and other intergovernmental organizations.

The Committee adopted a resolution⁽³⁹⁾ requesting Argentina and the United Kingdom to consolidate the current process of dialogue and cooperation through the resumption of negotiations to find a peaceful solution to the sovereignty dispute relating to the islands, and reiterating its firm support for the mission of good offices of the Secretary-General in assisting the parties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, the General Assembly, by decision 50/406, deferred consideration of the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and included it on the provisional agenda of its 1996 session.

Gibraltar

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of Gibraltar on 10 and 11 July. It had before it a working paper⁽⁴⁰⁾ describing political developments and economic, social and educational conditions in Gibraltar, as well as UN consideration of the question and discussions of the Territory's future status. The Committee acceded to Spain's request for participation in the deliberations. It heard statements by Spain, the Chief Minister of Gibraltar and one petitioner representing an NGO.

The Committee decided to continue its consideration of Gibraltar in 1996, and to transmit relevant documentation to the Assembly to facilitate consideration by the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 50/415.

Question of Gibraltar

At its 82nd plenary meeting, on 6 December 1995, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, recalling its decision 49/420 of 9 December 1994 and recalling at the same time that the statement agreed to by the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland at Brussels on 27 November 1984 stipulates, inter alia, the following:

"The establishment of a negotiating process aimed at overcoming all the differences between them over Gibraltar and at promoting cooperation on a mutually beneficial basis on economic, cultural, touristic, aviation, military and environmental matters. Both sides accept that the issues of sovereignty will be discussed in that process. The British Government will fully maintain its commitment to honour the wishes of the people of Gibraltar as set out in the preamble of the 1969 Constitution", takes note of the fact that, as part of that process, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Spain and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland hold annual meetings alternately in each capital, the most recent of which took place in London on 20 December 1994, and urges both Governments to continue their negotiations with the object of reaching a definitive solution to the problem of Gibraltar in the light of relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations."

New Caledonia

The Special Committee on decolonization had before it a working paper⁽⁴¹⁾ on political and economic developments in New Caledonia and UN consideration of the question. It heard one petitioner on the issue.

The paper described recent developments within the framework of the 1988 Matignon Accords,⁽⁴²⁾ which provided for a self-determination referendum to be held in 1998, following a 10-year period of economic and social development aimed at: effecting a more equitable economic distribution among New Caledonia's three provinces, and providing education and training to enable the indigenous Melanesians, known as Kanaks, to participate equally in the economy and Government of the Territory. It noted that the Committee to Monitor the Matignon Accords had held its second intermediate meeting (Noumea, New Caledonia, 15 September 1994), at which the parties agreed that a comprehensive medium- and long-term development plan should be elaborated for certain strategic sectors such as energy, telecommunications, the nickel industry, air transport and tourism. A proposal was made to set up a planning team to help the provinces and the Territory seek investment and to follow up development projects. That body—the Agency for the Economic Development of New Caledonia—was inaugurated in February 1995. The parties also reached consensus on making certain technical adjustments to the Referendum Act of 1988, so as to restore the principles of decentralization enshrined in the Matignon Accords. The Referendum Act was amended accordingly by the Organic Law of 20 February 1995, approved by the parties and received favourably by the Territorial Congress and the Territorial Consultative Committee.

The sixth meeting of the Committee to Monitor the Matignon Accords, scheduled for February 1995, was replaced by an informal tripartite meeting of the parties to the Accords (Noumea, 7-8 February). The parties reaffirmed their desire not to break off the dialogue and to bring to fruition the process initiated in 1988. The Minister for Overseas Departments and Territories indicated that the State would play a full part in future discussions and proposed to work out a method leading to the establishment of a permanent operational organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/37.

Question of New Caledonia

Western Sahara

In 1995, efforts continued towards organizing a UN-supervised referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, in accordance with a settlement plan approved by the Security Council in 1991.⁽⁴³⁾ The Secretary-General continued exercising his good offices, in close cooperation with the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), to settle the differences between the two parties concerned—the Government of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente POLISARIO). During the year, major focus was on establishing the electorate eligible to participate in the referendum and removing obstacles to completing the identification of potential voters, carried out by the Identification Commission. To accelerate the process, the Secretary-General proposed modifications to the identification procedure and repeatedly called on both parties to cooperate fully with the UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO). In September, the Security Council extended the Mission's mandate until 31 January 1996. In November, the Secretary-General announced his intention to present the Council with alternative options, including the possibility of MINURSO's withdrawal, should the identification operation fail to proceed with the necessary speed.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 13 January 1995, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's December 1994 report⁽⁴⁴⁾ on the situation in Western Sahara, adopted resolution 973(1995).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 621(1988) of 20 September 1988, 658(1990) of 27 June 1990, 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, 725(1991) of 31 December 1991, 809(1993) of 2 March 1993 and 907(1994) of 29 March 1994,

Recalling the statements by the President of the Security Council of 29 July 1994 and 15 November 1994,

Having considered the Secretary-General's report of 14 December 1994,

Welcoming the efforts of the Secretary-General during his visit to the region from 25 to 29 November 1994,

Committed to reaching a just and lasting solution of the question of Western Sahara,

Urging the two parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) to ensure prompt and full implementation of the Settlement Plan,

Noting the Secretary-General's judgement that the only way to complete identification and registration in a reasonable time is through a major reinforcement of personnel and other resources,

Concerned that the implementation of the Settlement Plan has been delayed and that in the circumstances the mandate of MINURSO, like the other United Nations operations, should be subject to periodic consideration by the Council,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the situation concerning Western Sahara of 14 December 1994;

2. Reiterates its commitment to holding, without further delay, a free, fair and impartial referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the Settlement Plan which has been accepted by the two parties;

3. Calls upon the two parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and MINURSO in their efforts to implement the Settlement Plan in accordance with the relevant Security Council resolutions and within the time-scale outlined in paragraphs 21 and 22 of the Secretary-General's report;

4. Welcomes the fact that voter identification has begun and is continuing albeit at a slow pace, and commends MINURSO for the progress achieved thus far;

5. Approves the expansion of MINURSO as proposed in paragraphs 17 to 19 of the Secretary-General's report and expresses the hope that every effort will be made to deploy the observers necessary to complete the identification process in a timely fashion in accordance with the Settlement Plan;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report by 31 March 1995 to confirm the arrangements with regard to the logistic, personnel and other resources required for the deployment of MINURSO at full strength, on his final plans for implementing all elements of the Settlement Plan and on the responses of the parties to his proposals in order to fulfil the United Nations mission in Western Sahara;

7. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to deploy all possible efforts in order to create a propitious atmosphere conducive to a speedy and effective implementation of the Settlement Plan;

8. Expects to be able, on the basis of the report requested in paragraph 6 above, to confirm 1 June 1995 as the date for the start of the transitional period, with a view to holding the referendum in October 1995 and to bringing the mission to a successful conclusion shortly thereafter, in accordance with the Settlement Plan;

9. Decides that the mandate of MINURSO should continue to 31 May 1995;

10. Also decides to consider the possible extension of the mandate of MINURSO after 31 May 1995 on the basis of a further report from the Secretary-General and in the light of progress achieved towards the holding of the referendum and the implementation of the Settlement Plan;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments in the implementation of the Settlement Plan for Western Sahara during this period;

12. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 973(1995)

13 January 1995 Meeting 3490 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/24).

Report of the Secretary-General (March).
Pursuant to the Council's January resolution, the Secretary-General on 30 March provided a report⁽⁴⁵⁾ updating the situation concerning Western Sahara. He noted that monitoring and verifying the cease-fire as well as the identification of potential voters, begun in 1994, remained core activities of MINURSO, with more than 21,300 persons identified by mid-March 1995. That total represented 16.5 per cent of the known applicants in the Territory and 27.3 per cent of those in the camps in the Tindouf area in Algeria. In February and March, two new identification centres were opened and one was reopened, bringing the total number to seven. Also in February, the Secretary-General's Deputy Special Representative Erik Jensen addressed to the parties a detailed proposal concerning the selection of tribal leaders (sheikhs) responsible for identifying applicants and establishing whether they belonged to a particular tribal group (subfraction). The parties, meeting on 23 February in Tindouf and on 25 February in Laayoune, Western Sahara, discussed identification arrangements and exchanged lists of candidates to be considered as replacements in the absence of sheikhs.

The Secretary-General further reported on implementation of the settlement plan. The 1991 cease-fire, he said, remained in place, and Morocco had reaffirmed its readiness to reduce its troops in Western Sahara to no more than 65,000 by the beginning of the transitional period leading to the referendum. In accordance with the plan, the Secretary-General appointed Emmanuel Roucouas (Greece) as the independent jurist to ensure the release of Saharan political prisoners and detainees and their participation in the referendum. The Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees began preparations for the return of refugees, other Western Saharans and members of the Frente POLISARIO entitled to vote; its technical mission visited potential repatriation sites and the refugee camps from 2 to 15 February. Efforts also continued to finalize the draft code of conduct for the referendum campaign.

MINURSO's military component, headed by Brigadier-General André van Baelen (Belgium) and comprising 240 military observers and 48 military support personnel, conducted daily patrols in all parts of the Territory, undertaking a monthly average of 600 ground and 140 aerial reconnaissance patrols. In accordance with the Security Council's January authorization for an increase in the Mission's civilian police component from 55 to 160, its strength rose to 78 personnel as at 25 March. Civilian police observers provided technical assistance to the Identification Commission and ensured the security of identification centres and universal access to them for identification purposes. On 13 March, Colonel Wolf-Dieter Krampe (Germany) replaced Colonel Jürgen Friedrich Reiman (Germany) as the Civilian Police Commissioner. MINURSO's authorized civilian personnel level stood at 251.

The report reviewed arrangements for the Mission's deployment at the full authorized military strength of 1,695 and outlined its personnel, equipment and financial requirements (see below, under "Financing of MINURSO"). In conclusion, the Secretary-General called for the Council's continued support for MINURSO and noted that, should the parties resolve expeditiously the remaining issues and make it possible to raise the identification rate to 25,000 persons per month, the transitional period could begin in August 1995, with the referendum taking place in January 1996.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

The Security Council met on 12 April to consider the situation concerning Western Sahara. The Council President made the following statement⁽⁴⁶⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council notes the report of the Secretary-General dated 30 March 1995. It welcomes progress achieved so far in the identification and registration process, in particular the acceleration in the rate of identification, and emphasizes the need to continue that acceleration. It endorses the Secretary-General's goal of achieving a rate of at least 25,000 per month. However, the Council regrets that progress was not sufficient to enable the Secretary-General to recommend 1 June 1995 as the date for the commencement of the transitional period.

The Security Council also notes with concern the delays resulting from the failure to ensure the continuous presence at the identification centres of the necessary subfraction representatives. It welcomes the agreement on a method for choosing alternative subfraction representatives when necessary and it expresses the hope that this will contribute to further acceleration of the process with a view to holding the referendum in January 1996. The Council supports the Secretary-General's call upon both parties to cooperate fully with the Identification Commission in the performance of its work, in particular by abandoning their insistence on strict reciprocity in the number of centres and on the linkage of a centre on one side with a specific centre on the other.

The Security Council expresses its concern about the slow progress on the other aspects which are relevant to the fulfilment of the Settlement Plan and must be implemented before the referendum can take place. It calls upon both parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General, with his Deputy Special Representative and with the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), and to coordinate such cooperation to ensure prompt and full implementation of all aspects of the Settlement Plan.

The Security Council hopes to see continuous and rapid progress by the time of the Secretary-General's next report in May 1995, which would enable it to consider favourably the possible extension of MINURSO's mandate.

Meeting number. SC 3516.

Report of the Secretary-General (May). The Secretary-General on 19 May reported⁽⁴⁷⁾ on further developments in Western Sahara. He noted that, despite increased operational capabilities with the opening of an eighth centre, the rate of identification had been uneven. The operation had been interrupted periodically when tribal leaders and party representatives were not available on time, and because of weather conditions and logistical difficulties. The identification process was resumed on 2 May, following consultations by the Deputy Special Representative from 26 to 28 April with the Frente POLISARIO, community and tribal leaders and Moroccan officials to resolve differences regarding the selection of sheikhs.

As at 15 May, 35,851 persons were identified, representing 44.4 per cent of applicants in the Tindouf camps and 28.1 per cent of those in the Territory. The report cited the parties' insistence that if the identification process stopped at a centre on one side, it should also stop at a centre on the other side, and the unnecessary delays caused by limiting the identification of a maximum of 150 persons a day at any given centre. At the same time, additional resources enabled MINURSO to identify on occasion 800 to 900 persons in one day, making the target of 1,000 persons quite feasible. The Secretary-General also noted that the operation was observed by eight OAU representatives, with two more expected to arrive in May. He further outlined planned activities to implement various components of the settlement plan and described the composition of MINURSO and its logistical and financial requirements. While the strength of the Mission's military component had not changed since March, its civilian police component had increased to 98 observers as at 5 May.

The Secretary-General proposed that certain benchmarks be achieved before confirming the beginning date of the transitional period. These included: forwarding the code of conduct for the referendum campaign to the parties in July; progress in the release of political prisoners by August; and a ruling on the confinement of the Frente POLISARIO troops and confirmation of arrangements for the reduction of Moroccan troops in Western Sahara by September. He called on the parties to work with the Mission in a spirit of genuine cooperation and recommended extending MINURSO's mandate for a further four months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 26 May, the Security Council adopted resolution 995(1995).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 621(1988) of 20 September 1988, 658(1990) of 27 June 1990, 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, 725(1991) of 31 December 1991, 809(1993) of 2 March 1993, 907(1994) of 29 March 1994 and 973(1995) of 13 January 1995,

Recalling the statement by the President of the Security Council of 12 April 1995,

Noting the Secretary-General's report of 19 May 1995,

1. Reiterates its commitment to holding, without further delay, a free, fair and impartial referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the Settlement Plan which has been accepted by the two parties;
2. Commends the progress in identifying potential voters since the beginning of the year;
3. Expresses concern, however, that certain practices identified in the Secretary-General's report are hampering further progress towards the implementation of the Settlement Plan and underlines the need for the parties to heed the Secretary-General's call on them to work with the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) in a spirit of genuine cooperation;
4. Decides in this context, and with a view to accelerating the implementation of the Settlement Plan, to send a mission of the Council to the region;
5. Decides, therefore, to extend at this stage the present mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) until 30 June 1995;
6. Decides to consider the further extension of the mandate of MINURSO beyond 30 June 1995 in the light of the Secretary-General's report of 19 May 1995 and the report of the Security Council mission referred to in paragraph 4 above;
7. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 995(1995)

26 May 1995 Meeting 3540 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/426).

Report of the Security Council mission (June).

On 30 May, the Security Council President issued a note⁽⁴⁸⁾ in reference to the Council decision to send a mission to Western Sahara. The note set out the mission's duration, composition and terms of reference as follows: to impress on the parties the necessity of cooperating fully with MINURSO in the implementation of the settlement plan and to underline that any further delay would put the whole future of the Mission at risk; to assess progress and identify problems in the identification process; and to identify problems in other areas relevant to the implementation of the settlement plan.

The Council mission, composed of Argentina, Botswana, France, Honduras, Oman and the United States, visited Morocco, Algeria and Mauritania from 3 to 9 June. Its 21 June report⁽⁴⁹⁾ provided an account of meetings held with officials of the Moroccan, Algerian and Mauritanian Governments, representatives of the Frente POLISARIO and OAU observers, as well as briefings by the Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General and by MINURSO officials. The mission was apprised of the parties' position concerning the settlement plan and the holding of the referendum, guidelines of the Identification Commission, the status of work and difficulties encountered in the identification process and in the operation of MINURSO.

Noting continuing suspicion and lack of trust between the two parties, the mission felt that there was a risk that the identification process could be extended and the referendum not held in January 1996. In that respect, it strongly recommended that both parties abandon their insistence on reciprocity in the number and operation of identification centres on each side and refrain from blaming the other side for its lack of cooperation. The mission also called on the parties to take steps to facilitate a free and fair identification process and not to inhibit access to identification centres; suggested mobilizing additional teams in temporary fixed centres; urged lifting the limit on the number of persons to be identified in one day; and recommended expediting the review of undecided cases, while ensuring full confidentiality, and speeding up the compiling of preliminary voter eligibility lists and the administrative decision-making process regarding MINURSO's human and other resources. It called on Morocco to conduct preliminary vetting of the 100,000 applicants not residing in the Territory and recommended commencing without delay the identification operation for applicants living in Mauritania. The Security Council was to be apprised biweekly of the progress made and immediately of any interruption or slow-down in the identification process.

Other recommendations dealt with the implementation of various components of the settlement plan, including the reduction and confinement of troops, the exchange of prisoners of war and release of political detainees, voluntary repatriation of refugees and maintenance of the cease-fire.

Communications (June). By a 23 June letter,⁽⁵⁰⁾ transmitted by Honduras, the Frente POLISARIO informed the Security Council of its decision to suspend participation in the identification process and recall its observers, owing to the sentencing by a Moroccan military court on 21 June of eight Saharan civilians to prison terms of 15 to 20 years for having participated in a rally for Western Saharan independence, and to Morocco's announcement to the Security Council mission of its intention to have 100,000 Moroccan settlers take part in the identification operation. To restore credibility to the process, the Frente POLISARIO demanded the immediate release of political prisoners arrested since MINURSO's deployment, particularly the eight recently sentenced civilians, as well as the halting of retaliatory acts against Western Sahara's population and termination of the operation to move foreigners into the Territory.

On 26 June, Morocco responded⁽⁵¹⁾ that the other party could not decide on the identity of an applicant, whether residing in or outside the Territory, before the Identification Commission reached such a decision based on the established criteria. It accused the other side of obstructionism and called on the Security Council to ensure the resumption of the process with a view to holding the referendum on schedule and with the participation of the Saharans residing or sequestered in Tindouf.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 30 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 1002(1995).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 621(1988) of 20 September 1988, 658(1990) of 27 June 1990, 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, 725(1991) of 31 December 1991, 809(1993) of 2 March 1993, 907(1994) of 29 March 1994, 973(1995) of 13 January 1995 and 995(1995) of 26 May 1995,

Recalling the Secretary-General's report of 19 May 1995,

Having considered the report of 21 June 1995 of the mission of the Security Council,

Committed to reaching a just and lasting solution of the question of Western Sahara,

Concerned that the parties' continuing suspicion and lack of trust have contributed to delays in the implementation of the Settlement Plan,

Noting that, for progress to be achieved, the two parties must have a vision of the post-referendum period,

Urging the parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General and the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) to ensure prompt and full implementation of the Settlement Plan,

Noting that, in his report of 19 May 1995, the Secretary-General has outlined benchmarks for assessing progress on certain aspects of the Settlement Plan, including the code of conduct, the release of political prisoners, the confinement of POLISARIO troops and arrangements for the reduction of Moroccan troops in the Territory in conformity with the Settlement Plan,

Noting also that the mission of the Council has provided recommendations for moving forward on the identification process and other aspects of the Settlement Plan and stressing the need for the identification process to be carried out in accordance with the relevant provisions set out therein, in particular in paragraphs 72 and 73 of the Settlement Plan, as well as in the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the situation concerning Western Sahara of 19 May 1995 and the report of the mission of the Security Council to Western Sahara of 21 June 1995;

2. Reiterates its commitment to holding, without further delay, a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the Settlement Plan which has been accepted by the two parties cited above;

3. Expresses its concern that, given the complexity of the tasks to be performed and the continuing interruptions caused by the two parties, implementation of the Settlement Plan has been further delayed;

4. Calls upon the two parties to work with the Secretary-General and MINURSO in a spirit of genuine cooperation to implement the Settlement Plan in accordance with the relevant Council resolutions;

5. Stresses the need for the parties to refrain from any actions that hinder the implementation of the Settlement Plan, calls upon them to reconsider recent relevant decisions with a view to establishing confidence, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to persuade the two parties to resume their participation in the implementation of the Settlement Plan;

6. Endorses the Secretary-General's benchmarks described in paragraph 38 of his report of 19 May 1995;

7. Endorses also the recommendations of the mission of the Council concerning the identification process and other aspects of the Settlement Plan, described in paragraphs 41 to 53 of its report of 21 June 1995;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report by 10 September 1995 on the progress achieved in accordance with paragraphs 5 and 6 above;

9. Expects to be able, on the basis of the report requested in paragraph 7 above, to confirm 15 November 1995 as the start of the transitional period, to allow the referendum to take place early in 1996;

10. Decides to extend the mandate of MINURSO until 30 September 1995 as recommended by the Secretary-General in his report of 19 May 1995;

11. Decides also to consider the possible extension of the mandate of MINURSO after 30 September 1995 on the basis of the Secretary-General's report requested in paragraph 7 above and in the light of progress achieved in accordance with paragraphs 5 and 6 above towards the holding of the referendum and the implementation of the Settlement Plan;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in addition to the reports called for in paragraph 48 of the report of the Security Council mission, to keep the Council fully informed of further developments in the implementation of the Settlement Plan for Western Sahara during this period, in particular of any significant delays in the pace of the identification process or other developments that would call into question the Secretary-General's ability to set the start of the transitional period on 15 November 1995;

13. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of the Secretary-General (September).

Pursuant to the Council's June resolution, the Secretary-General reported(52) on 8 September on developments since his May report. He noted that Erik Jensen, confirmed as his Acting Special Representative, had held a series of meetings with Moroccan officials between 26 June and 15 July to discuss the identification procedure for applicants residing outside the Territory. Following a 9 July Moroccan royal edict reducing the 21 June prison sentences of eight Saharan civilians to one year, the Frente POLISARIO on 12 July had agreed to resume its participation in the identification process, but had also reiterated its view that the 1974 Spanish census was the only basis for identification recognized in the settlement plan. It deemed unacceptable what it called the participation of a "substitute population, sought by the occupying Power, whose most recent manoeuvre was to attempt to include 100,000 of its nationals in the voters list".

The identification operation recommenced in late July and brought the number of identified persons to more than 53,000, representing over 40 per cent of persons residing in the Territory and more than 51 per cent of those in the camps near Tindouf. The substantive review of specific cases was proceeding steadily, and arrangements were discussed for the beginning of the identification process in Mauritania. The number of OAU observers stood at 10 as at the end of June. Difficulties persisted, however, due to continued insistence on strict reciprocity and differences of perception concerning the procedure for identification of certain tribal groupings. The report also described activities to implement other components of the settlement plan.

MINURSO's military component totalled 285 as at 31 August, including 237 military observers and 48 military support personnel, while the strength of its civilian police component stood at 92 as at 1 September. Lieutenant-Colonel Jan Walmann (Norway) was serving as Acting Civilian Police Commissioner, Colonel Krampe having completed his tour of duty on 20 August. The Mission reported two cease-fire violations during the period under review, both by the Frente POLISARIO, relating to an attempt to restrict MINURSO's freedom of movement and to the conduct of live-fire exercises and movement of troops and equipment. During the same period, the Frente POLISARIO reported three overflights by Moroccan aircraft, in the vicinity of international air corridors, which the Mission was unable to confirm.

MINURSO's personnel requirement for its full deployment in the transitional period had been revised upward to 1,780 all ranks, and the concept of operations of its civilian police had also been reviewed. The Secretary-General informed the Council of his decision to link the deployment of infantry and supporting personnel to the publication of the final voter list. The benchmarks proposed in May had not been achieved, he added, as both parties maintained their positions concerning the confinement of the Frente POLISARIO troops and objected to the terms of the proposed code of conduct. Noting the parties' reluctance to compromise, the Secretary-General appealed for every effort to expeditiously implement the settlement plan. He then proposed the extension of MINURSO's mandate until 31 January 1996, with alternative options to be presented to the Security Council should the conditions necessary for the start of the transitional period not be in place by that date.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

On 22 September, the Security Council adopted resolution 1017(1995).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 621(1988) of 20 September 1988, 658(1990) of 27 June 1990, 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, 725(1991) of 31 December 1991, 809(1993) of 2 March 1993, 907(1994) of 29 March 1994, 973(1995) of 13 January 1995, 995(1995) of 26 May 1995 and 1002(1995) of 30 June 1995,

Reaffirming in particular its resolutions 725(1991) and 907(1994) relating to the criteria for voter eligibility and the compromise proposal of the Secretary-General on their interpretation,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1995, and noting further the fact that only two out of the eight identification centres are currently functioning,

Committed to reaching a just and lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara,

Reiterating the fact that, for progress to be achieved, the two parties must have a vision of the post-referendum period,

Expressing the hope for a rapid resolution of the problems causing delays in the completion of the identification process,

Expressing its regret that the outcome of the preliminary vetting by the Government of Morocco of the 100,000 applicants not residing in the territory is contributing to the inability of MINURSO to maintain its timetable for completing the identification process,

Expressing its regret also that the POLISARIO Front is refusing to participate in the identification, even within the territory, of three groups within the disputed tribal groupings, thus delaying completion of the identification process,

Taking note of paragraph 49 of the Secretary-General's report of 8 September 1995,

Stressing the need for progress to be made on all other aspects of the Settlement Plan,

Reaffirming its endorsement in resolution 1002(1995) of the recommendations of the mission of the Security Council concerning the identification process and other aspects of the Settlement Plan as described in paragraphs 41 to 53 of the report of the mission of 21 June 1995,

1. Reiterates its commitment to the holding, without further delay, of a free, fair and impartial referendum for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in accordance with the Settlement Plan, which has been accepted by the two parties stated above;

2. Expresses its disappointment that, since the adoption of resolution 1002(1995), the parties have made insufficient progress towards the fulfilment of the Settlement Plan, including the identification process, the code of conduct, the release of political prisoners, the confinement of POLISARIO troops and the arrangements for the reduction of Moroccan troops in the territory;

3. Calls upon the two parties to work henceforth with the Secretary-General and MINURSO in a spirit of genuine cooperation to implement the Settlement Plan in accordance with the relevant resolutions, to abandon their insistence on strict reciprocity in the operation of the identification centres and to cease all other procrastinating actions which could further delay the holding of the referendum;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in close consultation with the parties, to produce specific and detailed proposals to resolve the problems hindering the completion of the identification process in the framework of the relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 907(1994) relating to the compromise proposal of the Secretary-General, and resolution 1002(1995) relating to the recommendations of the Security Council mission, and to report on the outcome of his efforts in this regard by 15 November 1995;

5. Decides to review the arrangements for the completion of the identification process on the basis of the report requested in paragraph 4 above, and to consider at that time any further necessary measures which might need to be taken to ensure the prompt completion of that process and of all the other aspects relevant to the fulfilment of the Settlement Plan;

6. Decides to extend the mandate of MINURSO until 31 January 1996 as recommended by the Secretary-General in his report of 8 September 1995 and takes note of his intention, if, before then, he considers that the conditions necessary for the start of the transitional period are not in place, to present the Security Council with alternative options for consideration, including the possibility of the withdrawal of MINURSO;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report by 15 January 1996 on progress achieved towards the implementation of the Settlement Plan, and to state in that report whether or not the transitional period will be able to begin by 31 May 1996;

8. Stresses the need to accelerate the implementation of the Settlement Plan and urges the Secretary-General to examine ways of reducing the operational costs of MINURSO;

9. Further stresses that the existing mechanism for the financing of MINURSO remains unchanged, supports the invitation by the General Assembly to Member States, in General Assembly resolution 49/247 of 7 August 1995, to make voluntary contributions to MINURSO, and requests the Secretary-General, without prejudice to existing procedures, to consider the establishment of a trust fund to receive such voluntary contributions for certain specific purposes to be designated by the Secretary-General;

10. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1017(1995)

22 September 1995 Meeting 3582 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/816).

Communications and reports of the Secretary-General (October/November). On 27 October, the Secretary-General informed⁽⁵³⁾ the Security Council of decisions he had taken to accelerate the identification process. Under the modified procedure, identification in the case of the 85 subfractions with established lists of sheikhs and alternates was to continue, even in the absence of a party representative, tribal leader or OAU observer, provided that the identification schedule had been duly communicated to the parties, the convocation lists had been issued and hours of work had been announced. As for the other three tribal groupings and identification outside the Territory and the Tindouf camps, an applicant's claim for inclusion in the electoral roll was to be evaluated on the basis of a birth certificate showing him or her to be a child of a father born in the Territory or as having other links with the Territory, and a document issued by competent authorities within Western Sahara's internationally recognized frontiers before 1974 substantiating the father's birth in the Territory. A comprehensive effort was also to be launched to identify applicants residing in Mauritania and Morocco. On 6 November, the Council President communicated⁽⁵⁴⁾ to the Secretary-General that the Council members fully supported his efforts to accelerate the process.

In a 24 November report,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the issue of certain tribal groups and persons not resident in Western Sahara remained the main obstacle to completing the process. The Government of Morocco had rejected the proposed change in the identification procedure, stating that the differing treatment of members of the 85 subfractions and other applicants amounted to discrimination and was contrary to the settlement plan, he said. The Secretary-General would submit a new proposal, under which identification, in cases when no sheikh or alternate was available, was to be based on documentary evidence only. In November, both parties communicated their objection to the new proposal: Morocco emphasized the "privileged" place of oral testimony in identification, which would be excluded entirely under the proposed change; the Frente POLISARIO considered it as a reversal of the earlier approach, which would give Morocco the opportunity to introduce 135,000 applicants with no ties with Western Sahara.

The report further stated that all 233,487 applications had been processed as of 18 November, including 176,533 in the Territory and on the Moroccan side, 42,468 in the camps and Tindouf area, and 14,486 in Mauritania. Of those, 75,794 were convoked, of which 58,947 were identified. With identification allowed to proceed as proposed and without interruption, 12 centres could complete the process within four months, at a rate of 36,000 applicants per month.

The Secretary-General underscored that the proposed new approach was the only way to carry the process forward and hoped that both parties would be persuaded to cooperate in that regard. Should the operation fail to proceed with the necessary speed, he would present for Council consideration alternative options, including the possibility of MINURSO's withdrawal.

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, in a 4 October report,⁽⁵⁷⁾ provided an overview of MINURSO activities and developments in the situation in Western Sahara between 18 September 1994 and 30 September 1995.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 19 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 1033(1995).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions on the question of Western Sahara,

Noting also the response of the POLISARIO Front to the proposal of the Secretary-General, described in paragraph 11 of his report,

Noting further other communications received by the Council on this subject,

Stressing also the need for progress to be made on all other aspects of the Settlement Plan,

Committed to reaching a just and lasting solution to the question of Western Sahara,

Reiterating the fact that, for progress to be achieved, the two parties must have a vision of the post-referendum period,

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the results of those consultations on an urgent basis and, in the event those consultations fail to reach agreement, to provide the Council with options for its consideration, including a programme for the orderly withdrawal of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO);

Security Council resolution 1033(1995)

19 December 1995 Meeting 3610 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/1013).

Financing of MINURSO

Report of the Secretary-General (March). In a 7 March report,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Secretary-General, estimating costs for MINURSO's operations from 1 December 1994 to 30 June 1995 at $36,381,000 gross ($33,473,300 net) and the monthly cost of maintaining the Mission after 30 June 1995 at $5,619,400 gross ($5,123,000 net), requested appropriation of those amounts by the General Assembly. The totals reflected the requirements for MINURSO's expanded activities authorized by the Security Council in January, and included the phasing in of an additional 105 civilian police monitors, 124 international staff, 35 local staff and 12 OAU observers, as well as additional requirements for transportation, communications, data-processing and other equipment.

Mission expenditures from the operation's inception in 1991 to 31 January 1995 were estimated at $154,270,350 gross ($148,129,550 net). As at 31 January, outstanding assessed contributions due from Member States totalled $21,098,548, while voluntary contributions from 1 October 1994 to 31 January 1995 were valued at $1,743,200. The report also noted that troop-contributing States had been reimbursed in full for the period ending 31 August 1994.

ACABQ recommendation (March). In March,⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), having considered the Secretary-General's report, revised the requested amounts and recommended their appropriation and assessment by the Assembly for the period from 1 December 1994 to 31 May 1995, as well as commitment authorization for the month of June and from 1 July to 31 December 1995, subject to MINURSO's extension by the Security Council.

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/808/Add.1) without vote, 31 March (meeting 52); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.47); agenda item 119.

On 20 July, the Assembly adopted resolution 49/247.

Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 690(1991) of 29 April 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, and its subsequent resolutions, the latest of which was resolution 1002(1995) of 30 June 1995,

Recalling also its resolution 45/266 of 17 May 1991 and its decisions 47/451 A, B and C of 22 December 1992, 8 April and 14 September 1993, respectively, 48/467 of 23 December 1993 and 49/466 A and B of 23 December 1994 and 6 April 1995, respectively, on the financing of the Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara as at 7 July 1995, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 20,270,659 United States dollars, and urges all Member States concerned to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, particularly in regard to the reimbursement of troop- and equipment-contributing countries, resulting from overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission promptly and in full;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara the amount of 28,839,700 dollars gross (26,556,300 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 December 1994 to 31 May 1995 authorized under the provisions of General Assembly decision 49/466 B of 6 April 1995;

7. Also decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 28,839,700 dollars gross (26,556,300 dollars net) for the period from 1 December 1994 to 31 May 1995 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, the scale of assessments for the year 1994 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 4,912,257 dollars gross (4,523,326 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the scale of assessments for the year 1995 to be applied against the balance, that is 23,927,443 dollars gross (22,032,974 dollars net), for the period from 1 January to 31 May 1995, inclusive;

8. Further decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,283,400 dollars approved for the period from 1 December 1994 to 31 May 1995, inclusive;

9. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 4,806,600 dollars gross (4,426,000 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 to 30 June 1995, authorized under the provisions of its decision 49/466 B;

10. Also decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 4,806,600 dollars gross (4,426,000 dollars net) among Member States for the period from 1 to 30 June 1995 in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

11. Further decides that, in accordance with the provisions of resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 380,600 dollars approved for the period from 1 to 30 June 1995, inclusive;

12. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 16,777,500 dollars gross (15,288,300 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 July to 30 September 1995;

14. Further decides that, in accordance with the provisions of resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,489,200 dollars approved for the period from 1 July to 30 September 1995, inclusive;

15. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Mission for the period after 30 September 1995 at a monthly rate not to exceed 5,592,500 dollars gross (5,096,100 dollars net), this amount to be assessed on Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to extension of the mandate of the Mission by the Security Council beyond 30 September 1995;

16. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedures established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988 and 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

General Assembly resolution 49/247

20 July 1995 Meeting 106 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/808/Add.2) without vote, 14 July (meeting 66); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.61), based on informal consultations; agenda item 119.

Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 62, 66; plenary 106.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). In a 19 October report,⁽⁶¹⁾ the Secretary-General indicated that initial cost estimates for the Mission's operation from 1 October 1994 to 30 June 1995 amounted to $43,181,000 gross ($39,713,500 net), with $39,711,500 gross ($36,582,500 net) apportioned. Expenditures for that period totalled $37,092,900 gross ($34,364,700 net), leaving an unencumbered balance of $2,618,600 gross ($2,217,800 net), mainly due to delays in the work of the Identification Commission and the resultant lower number of international and local staff in the Mission area. However, the savings were partially offset by additional requirements in the flying hours for the aircraft, the overlap time during the increased number of rotations of military observers, spare parts for transport operations and commercial freight and cartage. As at 22 September, outstanding assessed contributions due from Member States totalled $50,321,922.

The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly credit the unencumbered balance to Member States. In December,⁽⁶²⁾ ACABQ agreed with that recommendation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 22 December, the General Assembly, by decision 50/446 A, appropriated to the MINURSO Special Account $22,370,000 gross ($20,384,400 net) already authorized and apportioned in July (see above) for the period from 1 October 1995 to January 1996, and set off against the future apportionment or outstanding financial obligations of Member States their respective share in the unencumbered balance of $2,618,600 gross ($2,217,800 net) for the period from 1 October 1994 to 30 June 1995.

By decision 50/469 of 23 December, the Assembly directed the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee to continue its consideration of MINURSO financing at the resumed fiftieth session in 1996.

Audit of MINURSO

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁶³⁾ the Secretary-General on 5 April transmitted a report⁽⁶⁴⁾ of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on an investigation of alleged irregularities and mismanagement of MINURSO. The report noted that the former Deputy Chairman of the Identification Commission in December 1994 had submitted charges of fiscal irresponsibility, serious mismanagement and "anti-Americanism" as well as lack of accountability in the Mission.

The audit and investigation were conducted at MINURSO headquarters in Laayoune between 13 and 18 February. The auditors were satisfied with explanations concerning most allegations and noted that remedial action with regard to certain irregularities had been taken as recommended during a previous internal audit in 1994. They did, however, make some further recommendations dealing with the optimal utilization of staff at identification centres, periodicity and comprehensiveness of progress reports, and avoidance of retroactive extension of staff contracts. While there were also several complaints against the Chief Administrative Officer concerning the lack of adequate administrative support and "improper behaviour", including anti-American expressions and adverse references to individual nationalities, the auditors did not sense any discrimination based on any particular nationality in the course of the investigation. On the other hand, the Chief Administrative Officer himself complained of lack of cooperation in enforcing rules and regulations.

The auditors concluded that the allegations appeared to have been triggered primarily by the former Deputy Chairman's frustration over non-extension of his contract and by personal animosity, and that the Deputy Special Representative needed better management and administrative support from, respectively, his Deputy in the Identification Commission and the Chief Administrative Officer.

By a 5 July note,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted a further report of OIOS, dealing with the follow-up on recommendations made during the 1994 audit of MINURSO. The report stated that the Mission had generally implemented corrective action recommended in prior audits and that the internal control system was adequate, although with opportunities for improvement.

By decision 49/488 of 20 July, the General Assembly took note of the two reports.

Island Territories

The Special Committee on decolonization had before it working papers by the Secretariat describing constitutional and political developments and economic, social and educational conditions in the following 12 island Territories: American Samoa,⁽⁶⁶⁾ Anguilla,⁽¹⁶⁾ Bermuda,⁽¹⁷⁾ British Virgin Islands,⁽⁶⁷⁾ Cayman Islands,⁽¹⁸⁾ Guam,⁽²³⁾ Montserrat,⁽¹⁹⁾ Pitcairn,⁽⁶⁸⁾ St. Helena,⁽⁶⁹⁾ Tokelau,⁽⁷⁰⁾ Turks and Caicos Islands,⁽²⁰⁾ United States Virgin Islands.⁽²¹⁾

The Committee allocated the item to its Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance and considered its report⁽⁴⁾ between 10 and 18 July. The United Kingdom and the United States did not participate in Committee consideration of the Territories under their administration. New Zealand, as the administering Power, continued to participate in Committee work in relation to Tokelau. The Committee heard one petitioner on behalf of the UN Association of the Virgin Islands. On 18 July, it adopted a consolidated draft resolution, on the understanding that reservations expressed by its members would be reflected in that meeting's record,⁽¹⁾ and recommended the text for action by the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolutions 50/38 A and B.

Questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands

General

The General Assembly,

Having considered the questions of the Non-Self-Governing Territories of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands, hereinafter "the Territories",

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recognizing that 1995 is the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations and that decolonization is one of the proudest achievements of the Organization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to those Territories, including, in particular, the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session on the individual Territories covered by the present resolution,

Recognizing that the specific characteristics and the sentiments of the people of the Territories require flexible, practical and innovative approaches to the options of self-determination, without any prejudice to territorial size, geographical location, size of population or natural resources,

Recalling its resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, containing the principles that should guide Member States in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Conscious of the need to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territories, in view of the target set by the United Nations to eradicate colonialism by the year 2000,

Noting with appreciation the continuing exemplary cooperation of New Zealand, as administering Power, in the work of the Special Committee, and welcoming its statement that it will abide by the wishes of the population of Tokelau in determining their future political status,

Welcoming the stated position of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland that it continues to take seriously its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations to develop self-government in the dependent Territories and, in cooperation with the locally elected Governments, to ensure that their constitutional frameworks continue to meet the wishes of the people, and the emphasis that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories to decide their future status,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the necessity of promoting economic stability and diversifying and strengthening further the economies of the respective Territories as a matter of priority,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the small Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation,

Aware of the usefulness both to the Territories and to the Special Committee of the participation of appointed and elected representatives of the Territories in the work of the Special Committee,

Expressing its conviction that referendums and other forms of popular consultation on the future status of the Non-Self-Governing Territories are an appropriate means of ascertaining the wishes of the peoples in those Territories with regard to their future political status,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide one effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, and considering that the possibility of sending further visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers should be kept under review,

Mindful also that some Territories have not had any United Nations visiting mission for a long period of time,

Noting with appreciation the contribution to the development of some Territories by specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, as well as regional institutions such as the Caribbean Development Bank,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the Non-Self-Governing Territories of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands, hereinafter "the Territories";

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of the Territories to self-determination, including independence, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms also that it is ultimately for the people of the Territories themselves to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and in that connection calls upon the administering Powers, in cooperation with the territorial Governments, to facilitate programmes of political education in the Territories in order to foster an awareness among the people of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination, in conformity with the legitimate political status options clearly defined in resolution 1541(XV);

4. Requests the administering Powers to ascertain expeditiously, by means of popular consultations, the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories regarding their future political status so that the Special Committee can review the status of the Territories in accordance with the expressed wishes of the peoples of the Territories;

5. Also requests the administering Powers to facilitate the dispatch of the United Nations visiting missions to the Non-Self-Governing Territories regarding their future political status so that the Special Committee can review the status of the Territories in accordance with the expressed wishes of the peoples of the Territory;

6. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the economic and social development and to preserve the cultural identity of the Territories, and recommends that priority continue to be given, in consultation with the territorial Governments concerned, to the strengthening and diversification of their respective economies;

7. Further requests the administering Powers to take all necessary measures to protect and conserve the environment of the Territories under their administration against any environmental degradation, and requests the specialized agencies concerned to continue to monitor environmental conditions in those Territories;

8. Calls upon the administering Powers, in cooperation with the respective territorial Governments, to continue to take all necessary measures to counter problems related to drug trafficking, money laundering and other offences;

9. Stresses that the achievement of the declared goal of eradication of colonialism by the year 2000 requires full and constructive cooperation by all parties concerned, and appeals to the administering Powers to continue to give their full support to the Special Committee;

10. Urges Member States to contribute to the efforts of the United Nations to usher in the twenty-first century in a world free of colonialism, and calls upon them to continue to give their full support to the Special Committee in its endeavours towards that noble goal;

11. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to initiate or to continue to take all necessary measures to accelerate progress in the social and economic life of the Territories;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of the question of the small Territories and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-first session.

B

Individual Territories

I. American Samoa

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Noting the fact that a large number of American Samoans have emigrated to the United States of America and are residing there,

Noting also the constitutional developments in the Territory,

Noting further that the Territory, similar to isolated communities with limited funds, continues to experience lack of adequate medical facilities and other infrastructural requirements,

Recalling the dispatch in 1981 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

1. Requests the administering Power to carry out, at the earliest possible date, a democratic exercise to ascertain the wishes of the people of American Samoa regarding the future status of the Territory;

2. Calls upon the administering Power to continue to assist the territorial Government in the economic and social development of the Territory and the development of manpower resources.

II. Anguilla

The General Assembly,

Referring to resolution A above,

Noting that general elections were held in March 1994,

Conscious of the commitment of both the Government of Anguilla and the administering Power to a new and closer policy of dialogue and partnership through the Country Policy Plan for 1993-1997,

Aware that the exploitation of deep-sea resources would help reduce the risk of depleting the Territory's own fishing resources as a result of overfishing,

Noting also the need for continued cooperation between the administering Power and the territorial Government in tackling the problems of drug trafficking and money laundering,

Recalling the dispatch in 1984 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

1. Requests the administering Power to carry out, at the earliest possible date, an exercise to ascertain the wishes of the people of Anguilla regarding the future status of the Territory;

International Trusteeship System

During 1995, discussion continued regarding the future role of the Trusteeship Council, which in 1994 had effectively completed its work with respect to the 11 Territories placed under the International Trusteeship System. As the last remaining entity of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, Palau completed the process of self-determination in November 1993, when it approved the Compact of Free Association with the United States, which had been Administering Authority for the Trust Territory. In December 1994, Palau became the 185th Member State of the United Nations.

In 1994, the Trusteeship Council had amended⁽⁷¹⁾ its rules of procedure, establishing that it would henceforth meet as and where occasion might require.

On 2 June 1995,⁽⁷²⁾ Malta requested that an item on the review of the role of the Trusteeship Council be included in the provisional agenda of the General Assembly's fiftieth session in 1995. In an explanatory memorandum accompanying its request, Malta expressed the belief that the role of the Council could be enhanced to that of trustee of the common heritage of humankind, making it the focal point for coordination of endeavour in different areas related to the safeguard of common heritage and incorporated within various international conventions, thus warding the interest of current and future generations against dispersal and fragmentation of effort.

In his report on the work of the Organization,⁽⁷³⁾ the Secretary-General reiterated his 1994 recommendation⁽⁷⁴⁾ that the Trusteeship Council be abolished in accordance with Article 108 of the Charter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/55.

Review of the role of the Trusteeship Council

The General Assembly,

Noting further the role of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States to submit, not later than 31 May 1996, written comments on the future of the Trusteeship Council;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, as early as possible and before the end of its fiftieth session, for appropriate consideration, a report containing comments made by Member States on the subject.

Information

UN public information activities continued to focus on publicizing the Organization's work and goals and enhancing the information and communication capabilities of developing countries. Those activities were carried out by the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the UN secretariat, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Joint United Nations Information Committee.

The General Assembly's Committee on Information, at its seventeenth session (New York, 1-12 May 1995), reviewed UN information policies and activities.⁽¹⁾ The Committee had before it a report on allocation of regular budget resources to the UN information centres (UNICs)⁽²⁾ and a review of DPI publications,⁽³⁾ submitted by the Secretary-General in response to a 1994 Assembly resolution.⁽⁴⁾

Its recommendations were considered by the Fourth Committee in November and the Assembly acted on them in December. On 6 December, the Assembly, by decision 50/411, increased the membership of the Committee on Information from 88 to 89, appointing the Democratic People's Republic of Korea as a new member (see APPENDIX III).

Communication issues

At its 1995 session, the Committee discussed the establishment of a more just and more effective world information and communication order based on the free circulation and balanced dissemination of information; examined UN public information policies and activities in the light of the evolution of international relations; and evaluated efforts made and progress achieved by the UN system in the field of information and communications.

UNESCO activities. In 1995, UNESCO continued to pursue its strategy for the development of communication and the free flow of information through its International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC) and other programmes.

In preparation for the Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X), UNESCO convened an international symposium on the theme "Women and the Media—Access to Expression and Decision-Making" (Toronto, Canada, 28 February-3 March). It approved the Toronto Platform for Action on women and the media, which recommended global and specific and immediate actions to increase women's participation in the media and to promote equality between men and women.

The General Conference of UNESCO, at its twenty-eighth session (Paris, 25 October-16 November 1995), adopted the Toronto Platform for Action and invited member States to implement its recommendations. In a resolution on communication, information and informatics, the Conference invited the UNESCO Director-General to: encourage women's access to expression and decision-making in communication, as well as to promote a better balanced dissemination of information, foster the cultural and educational dimension in electronic media programmes and encourage international debate on the issue of violence on the screen; study new trends in information and communication technologies and monitor new developments in the field of information; assist member States in formulating national information policies and regional strategies; and strengthen IPDC activities and intensify its interaction with the UN system and funding sources. The Director-General was also invited to: foster the development of community media in rural and disadvantaged areas and in large cities; increase audiovisual production capacities in developing countries and explore ways of improving regional and international dissemination of their products; contribute to the training of communication and information professionals, particularly women; support the establishment of an international network of schools of information studies; develop common approaches to training information specialists in the use of modern technologies; encourage the modernization of library and archival services and promote public libraries as gateways to information networks; strengthen regional informatics networks and their connection with international networks; and facilitate access to and promote the use of telematics services in developing countries.

In a resolution on promotion of independent and pluralist media, the General Conference endorsed declarations adopted by participants at a series of regional seminars in 1991,⁽⁵⁾ 1992⁽⁶⁾ and 1994;⁽⁷⁾ expressed its conviction that the next UNESCO/DPI regional seminar, to be held in Yemen in 1996, would contribute to the development of pluralist media in the Arab region; and invited the Director-General to organize a similar regional seminar in Europe in 1997. In two other resolutions, the Conference called for support to cultural and educational activities undertaken by public service broadcasting, media professionals and journalists to reduce violence in the media, and invited member States to intensify cooperation on matters of information design as the basis for optimized visual communication.

IPDC sponsored activities in various regions of the world. Efforts in Africa included: a project to promote photojournalism; a seminar for women journalists from West and Central Africa on creation of newspapers, marketing and ethics; a databank for a Moroccan press agency; a computer-based documentation system in Tunisia; mobile video projection units in Zambia; assistance to a women's magazine in Ethiopia; and strengthening of a Ghanaian journalist association.

In Asia and the Pacific, projects included: a meeting of experts to discuss communications priorities in the region; publication of monographs on media laws and regulations in Asia; development of a "Women in Media" network in Central Asia; establishment of a Bengali-language news agency in Bangladesh; information programmes for Tajikistan independent television; and a fellowship programme on television programme production in the Republic of Korea.

For the Middle East, projects included a mission to study the development of Palestinian television. For countries in transition to a market economy, a seminar was held in Moscow on the ethics of journalism. For Latin America and the Caribbean, a project was executed to develop information and communications capabilities.

An international round table for broadcasters and programme managers on non-violence, tolerance and television was held in New Delhi, India. Projects aimed at education and training of journalists and other information specialists were carried out for the Arab region, Chad, China, Guatemala, Jordan, Kazakhstan, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yemen. Assistance was provided to develop radio and television broadcasting in the Cook Islands, Dominica, Kyrgyzstan, Nepal, Niue, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe and Seychelles. Other projects dealt with rural information networks and broadcasting for rural development in Egypt, Grenada, Indonesia and Trinidad and Tobago.

In September, the IPDC Intergovernmental Council Bureau examined 66 projects and selected 47 of them for submission to the Council, totalling some $7.5 million. The Council did not meet in 1995, having deferred⁽⁷⁾ its sixteenth session to January 1996.

General Assembly resolution 50/31 A

6 December 1995 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/50/608) without vote, 27 October (meeting 11); draft by Committee on Information (A/50/21); agenda item 87. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 4th Committee 9-11; plenary 82.

By resolution 50/31 B, the Assembly invited Member States that wished to do so to submit to the Secretary-General by 15 March 1996 their observations and suggestions on ways to further the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries. The Secretary-General was asked to report on the subject in 1996 to the Committee on Information.

UN public information

DPI activities

In September, the Secretary-General submitted a report^(*) on questions relating to information, focusing on activities of DPI, which he stated had continued in 1995 to promote an informed understanding of the work of the United Nations and to foster a positive image of the system as a whole. In an effort to strengthen and improve the public information tasks of the Organization, DPI had sought to reach public opinion within every stratum of global society, ensure a cohesive approach to the issues and their unified presentation within the UN system, and exploit the potential of electronic communications. The Office of the Spokesman for the Secretary-General organized daily briefings and an increasingly large number of one-on-one contacts with the world's media, as well as various interviews and background briefings with senior UN officials. Contacts were also strengthened between the senior management of the Department and senior international media officials.

Services were provided to 2,900 permanently accredited and 2,500 temporarily accredited media representatives at Headquarters; in addition, more than 20,000 media representatives had been accredited since 1992 for UN conferences held away from Headquarters. The production of press releases in English and French was expanded. Radio programmes were provided in 15 languages to more than 1,800 broadcasting organizations. UN television programmes were distributed throughout the world by major international broadcasting organizations. The Department established a digital transmission system for audio recordings, laid the groundwork for a future tapeless archival system, and was introducing a compact-disc system for electronic storage, reproduction and dissemination of photographs.

The Department provided information to six publicly accessible databases and disseminated electronically more than a million pages of documents and publications during the first half of 1995. Its own database, the largest in the UN system, was accessed daily on the Internet by an average of 20,000 users; an additional 5,000 users on a daily basis accessed on the World Wide Web the UN Home Page, which had been launched during the year.

Thematically integrated information programmes on priority issues were developed. The Department conducted guided tours of UN Headquarters, organized weekly briefings for some 200 NGO representatives, and provided a wide range of information to some 1,500 NGOs worldwide. The forty-eighth annual conference of DPI for NGOs (New York, 18-20 September), centred on the theme "The United Nations at the turn of the century: global issues; global actors; global responsibility", was attended by more than 1,300 NGO representatives. The annual training programme for journalists took place at Headquarters from 18 September to 26 October.

The Department oversaw the comprehensive UN publications programme and provided research services through the Dag Hammarskjöld Library and its system of 347 depository libraries in 140 countries. An Integrated Library Management System for archival collection and bibliographic control of documents and publications was being launched. A variety of databases, regularly accessed by 91 Governments and 86 permanent missions, was made available in March both online and in compact-disc format. Additional steps were taken to strengthen the marketing and sales of system-wide publications through a network of agents, distributors and bookstores in more than 65 countries.

In implementing specific information programmes mandated by the General Assembly in 1994,(4) DPI pursued three thematically integrated priority areas: sustainable economic and social development in the overall context of "An Agenda for Development" (see PART FOUR, Chapter I); peacemaking, peace-keeping and peace-building (see below); and human rights and humanitarian relief activities. Economic and social issues, particularly developments with regard to "An Agenda for Development", were covered in the bimonthly Development Update newsletter, which provided an overview of UN activities and publications in the development sphere. The quarterly periodical Africa Recovery focused on issues of special concern to that continent and underscored the links between UN peace-keeping, humanitarian and developmental activities in Africa. The Department also provided information support to the Commission on Sustainable Development regarding follow-up to the 1994 Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the results of the UN Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks and UN conventions on biodiversity, climate change and desertification (see PART FOUR, Chapter VII).

As part of its 1995 programme for human rights, DPI was organizing seminars for international journalists and prepared a series of in-depth articles on key human rights issues, including judicial independence, the right to development, violence against women, the sale of children and child prostitution, ethnic conflict and racial discrimination. Activities relating to the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine included a seminar on assistance to the Palestinian people in media development, a training programme for Palestinian journalists (New York, 8 October-22 November) and the production of books, pamphlets and audiovisual materials.

The Department continued to develop information campaigns for major UN conferences, in collaboration with other entities of the system. During the year, such campaigns were carried out to promote the World Summit for Social Development, the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX) and the Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). The last-mentioned campaign included a series of feature articles, Focus on Women, and publication of the second edition of The World's Women: Trends and Statistics, including new sections on women and the media and women in peace-keeping. Preparations were also under way for an information programme to promote the Second UN Conference on Human Settlements (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII) and the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty, both in 1996.

The Department's contribution to the observance of the United Nations fiftieth anniversary (see also below, under "Other questions") included a special commemorative edition of the Yearbook of the United Nations; two special issues of the UN Chronicle (Vol. XXII, Nos. 3 and 4); the 50th Anniversary UN Minutes television series broadcast by more than 30 major television organizations worldwide; 12 video compilations on the history of the Organization; and a catalogue of historical and thematic photographs. The Department also co-produced A Place to Stand—a video overview of UN history and achievements.

DPI continued to ensure the timely production and dissemination of its major publications, in particular the Yearbook of the United Nations, the UN Chronicle and Africa Recovery. In July, the Department and the World Bank agreed to co-produce the twice-monthly publication Development Business on development bank and UN procurement. By August 1995, DPI had published seven volumes of the Blue Books Series, comprehensive subject-oriented reference works launched in 1994 and covering major issues of concern to the international community. A new edition of Basic Facts about the United Nations was produced and a new publication was introduced, entitled A Guide to Information at the United Nations. The UN Publications Board continued to guide publications activities on issues most relevant to the Organization.

The General Assembly, by resolution 50/31 B, encouraged the Secretary-General to explore ways of improving the access of UN radio to airwaves worldwide and requested him to increase efforts for the early resumption of the publication Development Forum or an alternative system-wide publication devoted to development issues.

Dissemination of information related to peace-keeping

By resolution 49/233 B of 31 March 1995, the General Assembly requested the Committee on Information to review the Secretariat's policy on dissemination of information related to peace-keeping.

The Committee's Extended Bureau subsequently submitted in May a paper on media strategies for peace-keeping and other field operations. The document noted the need for a coordinated and unified public information strategy aimed at increasing public understanding and support for the United Nations peacemaking role, and pointed out that the Secretary-General, in his "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace" (see PART ONE, Chapter I, and PART TWO, Chapter I), had underlined the vital role of an effective information capacity and the importance of establishing such a capacity at the early planning stages of every field mission.

Among measures suggested were: early consultations and coordination between DPI and the Departments of Peace-keeping Operations, Humanitarian Affairs and Political Affairs; early involvement of DPI in planning field missions to avoid fragmentation of resources and duplication of efforts with regard to public information activities; development of a joint information strategy in emergency situations; creation of DPI personnel rosters for public information duties in field operations; elaboration of draft standards for planning mission information strategies and related Headquarters activities; and dividing an integrated information programme into an internal programme within the area of the mission and an external programme for the international community at large. In addition, the paper recommended that an integrated strategy should target public opinion in countries providing support to and those hosting peace-keeping operations, in order to build support for such missions among contributing States and establish a positive environment for their functioning in countries of deployment.

The Committee on Information, at its seventeenth session,⁽¹⁾ took note of the review and decided to examine it further through its Extended Bureau.

In a September report,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General noted the establishment of an interdepartmental Working Group on Media Strategies for Peace-keeping and Other Field Operations as a mechanism for regular consultations among the Departments of Peace-keeping Operations, Humanitarian Affairs, Political Affairs and Public Information with regard to the information component of field operations. Consultations focused on development of information strategies and personnel rosters. DPI also continued to refine a set of standards for mission information components and to look into the development of a central UN broadcasting facility for field operations. It provided comprehensive information about UN peace-keeping and peace-making to the media, educational and research institutions, government agencies, NGOs and the general public. Other efforts resulted in the publication of a biannual collection of in-depth reviews of all current peace-keeping operations and a reference paper series on peace-keeping missions, as well as distribution of a one-hour documentary on peace-keeping, No Place to Hide. The third edition of The Blue Helmets was being prepared in 1995.

The General Assembly, by resolution 50/31 B, requested the Secretary-General to ensure the involvement of DPI at the planning stage of future peace-keeping and other field operations through interdepartmental consultations and coordination.

UN information centres

In a March report⁽²⁾ to the Committee on Information, the Secretary-General noted intensified efforts by UNICs—a network of information centres in 68 countries worldwide—to reach out to key audiences, pool resources with other UN entities, adapt information material in local languages to regional needs, contribute to preparations for major international conferences, strengthen relations with local media, and explore new communications technologies for the exchange of information with Headquarters, other field offices and the media. The work of UNICs was discussed in January in Geneva at a meeting of information professionals with the Secretary-General, during which he stressed the need for an active approach towards the media, urged UNIC directors to counter erroneous reporting in the media, and emphasized that information efforts should specifically focus on the younger generation.

The Secretary-General also described ongoing efforts to integrate UNICs with UNDP field offices, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽⁴⁾ Integrated centres would continue to carry out DPI's mandate under the immediate supervision of UNDP resident representatives. Closer cooperation was established between the UNDP field offices and UNICs in the developing world. Discussions on further integration continued on a case-by-case basis, in consultation with host Governments.

In September, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁶⁾ further on UNIC activities, noting efforts to broaden public awareness of the issues before the United Nations and its major international conferences. Many UNICs had developed educational and youth-oriented programmes and had increased the number of model UN programmes undertaken in cooperation with local high schools and universities. The Secretary-General noted that 16 UNICs had been integrated with UNDP field offices as at September 1995.

The General Assembly, by resolution 50/31 B, invited the Secretary-General to continue the integration exercise and to report on the subject to the Committee on Information.

In his March report,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General discussed the ongoing efforts to strengthen UNICs within available resources. He reported that DPI continued to computerize UNIC operations, upgrade and modernize their libraries and ensure closer cooperation with field offices of other UN system entities.

In his September report,⁽⁸⁾ he noted that UNIC libraries were fully equipped with UN bibliographic collections, including those in compact-disc format. During the year, DPI organized training workshops on technological innovations and electronic access to UN information.

Coordination in the UN system

The Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), an inter-agency committee of UN officials to coordinate information activities within the UN system, held its twenty-first session in 1995

(Paris, 5-7 July).⁽⁹⁾ It discussed ongoing JUNC projects, participation in international exhibitions and special events and other issues.

The Committee endorsed the work programme of the Non-Governmental Liaison Service and agreed to discuss at its ad hoc session in early 1996 the future of the JUNC information exchange bulletin and the feasibility of a new system-wide publication on development issues. It recommended that UNESCO be designated as the lead agency for UN participation in the Lisbon (Portugal) Exposition 1998: "The oceans, a heritage for the future"; it also considered participation in the Hannover (Germany) Exposition 2000: "Mankind, nature, technology". JUNC reviewed proposals for inter-agency information programmes on follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX) and for major UN meetings on women, least developed countries, human settlements and food. The observance of the United Nations fiftieth anniversary was also discussed, as was the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (1996).

Also reviewed were: inter-agency cooperation in audiovisual productions; an electronic version of a new system-wide film and video catalogue; the development of a photo compact-disc and picture exchange system; and the use of computer technology in the field of public information.

The Committee considered new areas of JUNC cooperation, including ways to facilitate UN television feeds to broadcasters from developing countries. The next Development Information Workshop was set for January/February 1996, at which communications strategies for promoting development issues, new public information technologies and possible joint projects would be discussed.

JUNC decided to hold its twenty-second session in Nairobi, Kenya, in June/July 1996.

Peaceful uses of outer space

During 1995, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space) and its Scientific and Technical and Legal Subcommittees again considered matters relating to international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽¹⁾ At its thirty-eighth session (Vienna, 12-22 June),⁽²⁾ the Committee reviewed the work of its Subcommittees and discussed ways of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and spin-off benefits of space technology. Permanent observer status was granted to the International Academy of Astronautics and the International Astronomical Union, on the understanding that they would apply for consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

In December, the General Assembly endorsed Committee recommendations and the 1996 UN Programme on Space Applications.

Space science and technology

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space, at its thirty-second session (Vienna, 6-16 February),⁽³⁾ continued to review the UN Programme on Space Applications, coordination of space activities within the UN system and implementation of the recommendations of the Second (1982) UN Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82).⁽⁴⁾ The Subcommittee also considered matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, including applications for developing countries; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; space debris; space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space; the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and its utilization for space communications; life sciences, including space medicine; national and international space activities related to the Earth environment; and issues relating to planetary exploration and astronomy.

During the session, the Committee on Space Research (COSPAR) of the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU) and the International Astronautical Federation (IAF) organized a symposium on the theme "Applications of space technology for education, with particular emphasis on its use in developing countries", which had been selected by the Subcommittee for special attention. The symposium considered policy issues regarding space education and applications of space technology in space education. Canada and the Russian Federation made special presentations. Member States provided specialists in space science and technology to present reports relating to Subcommittee agenda items.⁽⁵⁾

In June,⁽²⁾ the Committee on outer space considered and acted on the Subcommittee's recommendations.

Implementation of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82

The Subcommittee reconvened its Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82, which held its ninth session (Vienna, 8-16 February). The Working Group's recommendations, annexed to the Subcommittee report,⁽³⁾ were subsequently endorsed by the Committee on outer space and by the General Assembly in resolution 50/27 (see below).

The Working Group reviewed international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space, including activities of Member States⁽⁶⁾ and work programmes of international organizations.⁽⁷⁾ It recommended: the continued organization of seminars and workshops on advanced applications of space science and technology and on new technological developments so as to bring recent advances in space technologies and applications for development to the attention of planners, administrators and decision makers in developing countries; periodic reporting on the resources and technological capabilities of States in space activities and in the areas of education, training, research and fellowship opportunities for the promotion of cooperation in outer space uses; annual reporting by States and international organizations to the Secretary-General on space activities subject to greater international cooperation, with particular emphasis on the needs of developing countries; and provision of expert consultants to assist in preparing integrated national plans of action for initiating, strengthening or reorienting space application programmes, in conformity with other national development programmes. The Working Group requested Member States and international organizations to support the training programme in space applications and technologies on an ongoing basis. It also made recommendations for the convening of a third UNISPACE (see below).

Four priority areas were identified to promote the applications of space science and technology for development: the stimulation of the growth of indigenous nuclei and an autonomous technological base in space technology in developing countries; a greater exchange of experiences in space applications; funding for the UN Programme on Space Applications (see below); and voluntary contributions for activities to implement UNISPACE-82 recommendations. The Working Group reiterated the UNISPACE-82 recommendation on the free exchange of scientific and technological information and transfer of technologies to promote the use and development of space technology in developing countries, as well as the recommendation that countries should not place undue restrictions on the sale of components, subsystems or systems required for peaceful space applications.

The Committee on outer space, in endorsing the recommendations, noted the Working Group's view that the Programme on Space Applications should be given full support in order to implement the UNISPACE-82 recommendations, and the disappointment expressed by developing countries at the lack of financial resources to implement those recommendations fully.

The Committee noted that the UN Secretariat continued to strengthen regional mechanisms of cooperation through regional workshops and training courses, the establishment of regional centres for space science and technology education, and technical assistance for regional activities in Africa, Asia and the Pacific and Latin America and the Caribbean.

The Committee also noted steps to augment the International Space Information Service by developing a database capability and creating a "home page" on the Internet, preparation of a feasibility study on establishing a computer-based international space information service, and contributions of other international organizations towards the implementation of UNISPACE-82 recommendations.

The Committee agreed that the Strategy for Regional Cooperation in Space Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific and the related Action Plan, adopted by the Ministerial Conference on Space Applications for Development in the Asia-Pacific Region in 1994,⁽⁸⁾ and the Santiago Declaration, adopted by the Second Space Conference of the Americas in 1993,⁽⁹⁾ were important instruments in promoting international cooperation in outer space. It recognized the contribution of the First Conference on Space Technology and Developing Countries (Tehran, Iran, May). The establishment of the Asia-Pacific Satellite Communications Council, to serve as a regional forum for information exchanges and cooperation in satellite communications and broadcasting, was also noted.

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in August 1995 on progress made in implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations. The report⁽¹⁰⁾ primarily reflected the work of the Committee on outer space and its subsidiary bodies in 1995. The Secretariat, responding to 1994 requests of the Working Group of the Whole, submitted to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee studies on current projects and future perspectives for international cooperation in microsatellites and small satellites⁽¹¹⁾ and on the use of remote-sensing technologies for environmental applications.⁽¹²⁾ It also transmitted reports of 11 Member States on their activities regarding international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space.⁽¹³⁾

UN Programme on Space Applications

In accordance with its 1982 mandate,⁽¹⁴⁾ the UN Programme on Space Applications focused on: developing indigenous capabilities in space science and technology; providing fellowships for in-depth training and technical advisory services; organizing regional and international training courses, conferences and meetings; assisting in acquiring and disseminating space-related information; and promoting greater cooperation between developed and developing countries.

In December,⁽¹⁵⁾ the UN Expert on Space Applications reviewed Programme activities carried out in 1995, and those scheduled for 1996 and proposed for 1997. The Expert stated that Programme efforts to assist developing countries in building their indigenous capabilities had focused on establishing regional centres for space science and technology education in remote sensing and geographic information systems, meteorological satellite applications, satellite communications and geopositioning systems, and space and atmospheric sciences. Centre activities were aimed at developing and enhancing knowledge and skills of university educators and research and applications scientists and ensuring the use of that knowledge in pilot projects. In 1995, Morocco and Nigeria were selected to host centres for the countries of French- and English-speaking Africa, respectively, while Brazil and Mexico reached agreement on establishment of a centre for Latin America and the Caribbean. On 1 November, the Centre for Space Science and Technology Education in Asia and the Pacific was inaugurated in New Delhi, and its Governing Board held its first meeting the next day. Iran had offered to host a major node of that regional centre. Negotiations were also in progress on the establishment of a regional centre in Western Asia. Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, Greece and Romania offered to host a regional centre in Europe; Italy had proposed the establishment of a centre for Central and Eastern European countries.

The Programme received 15 long-term fellowships for 1995-96: Brazil offered 10, for research and applications in remote-sensing technology; the European Space Agency (ESA) offered five, for the study of space antennas and propagation, communications systems, remote-sensing instrumentation and remote-sensing information systems.

The Programme was expanding its technical advisory services due to increasing developmental support needs and advances in Earth observation systems technology, in communications technology and in related information systems. A feasibility study was completed on establishing a multinational Andean enterprise to facilitate operation of the Cotopaxi ground receiving station in Ecuador. An evaluation mission on user needs was planned for countries participating in the establishment of a Cooperative Information Network Linking Scientists, Educators and Professionals in Africa. The Programme and ESA continued their joint technical assistance programme to strengthen the capability of institutions in developing countries of obtaining satellite, radar and optical data for ongoing projects. Follow-up was made to a series of workshops on basic space science, and cooperation continued with the Asia-Pacific Satellite Communications Council, established in 1994, the membership of which grew to 40 in 1995, adding members in both Europe and North America.

A meeting of experts in Granada, Spain (27 February-3 March) focused on developing model curricula for the regional centres for space science and technology education. Stockholm University and the Swedish Space Corporation hosted the fifth UN training course on remote sensing in Stockholm and Kiruna (2 May-9 June).⁽¹⁶⁾ A UN/ESA workshop on the applications of space techniques to prevent and combat natural disasters took place in Harare, Zimbabwe (22-26 May).⁽¹⁷⁾

Training courses were conducted on the use of data from the European Remote Sensing Satellite (ERS-1) for the mapping and inventory of natural resources in Africa (Libreville, Gabon, 15-19 May);⁽¹⁸⁾ on applications of ERS-1 data (Frascati, Italy, 13-24 November);⁽¹⁹⁾ and on space technology for improving life on Earth (Graz, Austria, 11-14 September).⁽²⁰⁾ reviewing use of satellite technology to enhance food security, communications infrastructure, education, health and disaster early-warning systems.

Workshops were held on space technology for health care and environmental monitoring in the developing world (Oslo, Norway, 28 September-1 October)⁽²¹⁾ and on the applications of optics in space science and technology (Trieste, Italy, 20-24 November).⁽²²⁾ A Regional Conference on Space Technology for Sustainable Development and Communications (Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, 30 October-3 November)⁽²³⁾ reviewed the role of Earth observation satellites in the timely collection and analysis of data for sustainable development, environmental monitoring and management and global change studies, as well as the role played by communication satellites in enhancing the economic and social welfare of a country. As part of activities for disseminating space information, the seventh in a series of selected papers on remote sensing, satellite communications and space science was issued.

In 1995, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and the Committee on outer space had before them a report⁽⁸⁾ of the Expert on Space Applications on the Programme's activities in 1994, as well as those scheduled for 1995 and 1996. Both the Subcommittee and the Committee were concerned over the limited financial resources available for the Programme and appealed for voluntary contributions. In that regard, the Committee noted with appreciation contributions from Austria, Spain, the United States and ESA, as well as from various organizations in and outside the UN system.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/27, endorsed the Programme for 1996, as proposed by the Expert on Space Applications.⁽⁸⁾ By resolution 50/215 A, the Assembly approved $4,705,500 for outer space affairs under the UN regular budget for 1996-1997, including an appropriation of $446,200 for implementing Programme activities.

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued consideration of matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites. It reviewed national and cooperative programmes in developing and developed countries, as well as international programmes based on bilateral, regional and international cooperation, including technical cooperation between developing countries and assistance by States with advanced capabilities to developing countries.

The Subcommittee noted the continuing programmes of Argentina, Australia, Brazil, China, France, Germany, India, Indonesia, Japan, Morocco, the Russian Federation, Ukraine, the United States and ESA. It noted that the launchings of ERS-1 and the Japanese Earth Resources Satellite would provide valuable microwave data to complement multispectral data from other satellites, and that Argentina, Canada, China, India, Japan, the Russian Federation and ESA were developing various remote-sensing systems for future launch. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) continued its remote sensing of renewable natural resources, including land-cover mapping and geographic information systems, while the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) operated in the areas of weather forecasting and storm warning. The International Society for Photogrammetry and Remote Sensing continued to promote international cooperation in remote sensing and image processing.

The Subcommittee reiterated its view that remote-sensing activities should take into account the need to provide appropriate and non-discriminatory assistance to developing countries, and emphasized the importance of making remote-sensing data and analysed information openly available to all countries at a reasonable cost and in a timely manner, while data from operational meteorological satellites should continue to be freely accessible.

The Subcommittee considered that international cooperation in the use of remote-sensing satellites should be encouraged, through both coordination of the operations of ground stations and regular meetings between satellite operators and users. It noted the need for continuity in the acquisition of data, as well as the importance of compatibility and complementarity of existing and future remote-sensing systems, sharing of experiences and technologies, cooperation through international and regional remote-sensing centres and joint work on collaborative projects. The value of remote-sensing systems for environmental monitoring was also noted; in that context, the international community should utilize fully remote-sensing data in implementing Agenda 21⁽²⁵⁾ recommendations adopted by the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED).

The Committee on outer space reiterated the importance of ongoing international efforts to ensure the continuity, compatibility and complementarity of remote-sensing systems and to promote cooperation through regular meetings of satellite and ground-station operators and users. The free distribution of meteorological information, the Committee recognized, served as an example of international cooperation.

In December, the Secretariat submitted a study on the use of remote-sensing technologies for environmental applications, particularly in support of UNCED recommendations.⁽¹²⁾ The study examined the contribution of space technology to implementing Agenda 21, reviewed remote-sensing activities for sustainable development and considered environmental challenges that could be addressed through space technology. It recommended an increased use of satellite data in projects funded by national aid agencies; improved access to inexpensive remote-sensing data in a standardized format and to low-cost hardware and software; establishment of an effective coordination policy in developing countries for implementing remote-sensing components of national development plans; increased collaboration and exchange of information between research institutions and space agencies at all levels, as well as other sectors from both developed and developing countries; expansion of the network of ground receiving stations, particularly in Africa and Latin America; improved cooperation in the assessment of user requirements in developing countries, accessibility of affordable satellite data and information services, promotion of well-designed pilot projects, increased on-site education and training, provision of infrastructures for satellite data acquisition and improved utilization of existing user interfaces; and implementation of pilot projects by space agencies to demonstrate to policy makers the usefulness of remote sensing.

Nuclear power sources

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in 1995 again considered the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. After discussing a possible revision of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, adopted by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽²⁶⁾ it agreed that such revision was not warranted at the current time. Its Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, however, should continue to receive contributions related to improving the scope and application of the Principles. The Subcommittee reconvened the Working Group on 13 February to enable it to resume its work.

The International Atomic Energy Agency made a statement on recent developments in nuclear safety, drawing particular attention to new international basic safety standards for protection against ionizing radiation and for the safety of radiation sources as well as to a new document on emergency planning and preparedness for nuclear-powered satellite re-entry. Mindful of the differences in the application of safety standards to space and terrestrial systems, the Subcommittee recommended further studies of those developments. It noted information provided by Member States and organizations⁽²⁷⁾ on national and international research concerning the safety of nuclear-powered satellites and the collision of nuclear power sources with space debris, and recommended that such information should continue to be provided on a regular basis and that further studies of the collision problem be conducted.

The Committee on outer space endorsed the Subcommittee's recommendations and decided to continue discussing at future sessions a possible revision of the Principles. The Committee noted a report by the Russian Federation on forecasting an emergency re-entry of a spacecraft with a nuclear power source.⁽²⁸⁾

Legal aspects of the revision of the Principles were considered by the Legal Subcommittee (see below).

Space debris

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued consideration of space debris as a priority agenda item, focusing on the acquisition and understanding of data on the space debris environment. It noted programmes on data acquisition and understanding and on measuring, modelling and mitigating the orbital debris environment conducted by Canada, Germany, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United States and ESA, as well as the establishment by some national space agencies in 1993 of the Interagency Orbital Debris Coordination Committee to exchange information and review ongoing space debris activities, facilitate cooperation in research and identify debris mitigation options.

The Subcommittee recommended that Member States pay more attention to the issue of space debris and to the problem of collisions of space objects, including those with nuclear power sources on board (see above), with space debris. In that regard, it noted an informal working paper by the United Kingdom and national reports on the issue.⁽²⁷⁾ The Subcommittee agreed that international cooperation was needed to expand appropriate and affordable strategies for minimizing the potential impact of space debris on future space missions, and encouraged Member States and international organizations to provide information on their practices in minimizing the creation of space debris. Information should be compiled on steps taken by space agencies to reduce the growth or damage potential of space debris, and their common acceptance by the international community should be encouraged.

The Subcommittee adopted its work plan for 1996-1998, focusing on measurements of space debris, understanding of data and effects of the debris environment on space systems; modelling of that environment and risk assessment; and space debris mitigation measures. It decided to concentrate its deliberations on debris measurement techniques, mathematical modelling and characterization of the debris environment, and risk mitigation, including spacecraft design measures to protect against debris.

The Committee on outer space agreed with the Subcommittee's conclusions, endorsed its multi-year work plan and recognized the need for further research concerning space debris, data compilation and dissemination and the development of improved technology for debris monitoring. The Committee recommended that Member States continue national research on the issue and make its results available to all interested parties.

In November, the UN Secretariat reported to the Subcommittee on steps taken by space agencies to reduce the growth or damage potential of space debris,⁽²⁸⁾ including debris mitigation techniques used in launch vehicles, prevention of accidental debris creation, environmental protection of the geostationary orbit and debris protection of active spacecraft. It noted the recommendation of the International Academy of Astronautics that immediate action be taken to: stop the deliberate breakup of spacecraft producing debris in long-lived orbits; minimize mission-related debris; introduce venting procedures for rocket bodies and spacecraft remaining in orbit after completion of their mission; select transfer orbit parameters to ensure the rapid decay of transfer stages; re-orbit geostationary satellites at the end of their life; and insert separated boost motors and upper stages of geostationary satellites into a disposal orbit at least 300 kilometres above the geostationary orbit.

Also in November, the Secretariat transmitted information from four Member States regarding national research on space debris, safety of nuclear-powered satellites and the problem of collision of nuclear-powered sources with space debris.⁽³⁰⁾

Space transportation

The Subcommittee continued to review national and international cooperative programmes in space transportation systems, including expendable launchers, reusable space shuttles and space stations. China, India, Japan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine, the United States and ESA continued to develop their programmes; the United Kingdom cooperated with the Russian Federation and Ukraine on a reusable interim system and with ESA on its Future European Space Transportation Investigation Programme; and the United States continued to develop the International Space Station in cooperation with Canada, Japan, the Russian Federation and ESA.

The Committee on outer space noted progress achieved in the various programmes in operation or planned, as well as of developments in low-cost microsatellite technology and applications. It stressed the importance of international cooperation in space transportation to provide all countries with access to the benefits of space science and technology.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

In its examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit, the Subcommittee reviewed national and international cooperative programmes in satellite communications, including technological progress to make such communications more accessible and affordable and to increase the communications capacity of the geostationary orbit and the electromagnetic spectrum. It noted the growing use of satellite systems for telecommunications, television broadcasting, data networks, environmental data relay, mobile communications, disaster warning and relief, telemedicine and other communications functions.

As in previous years, some delegations advocated avoiding saturation of the geostationary orbit and a special regime to ensure equitable access by all States, particularly developing countries, that would also take into account the characteristics of equatorial countries. Others suggested that efforts should be made to minimize the generation of space debris by moving satellites shortly before the end of their useful lives into disposal orbits beyond the geostationary orbit. The view was also expressed that questions relating to the geostationary orbit were being addressed effectively by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU). Some delegations felt that the roles of ITU and of the Committee on outer space with regard to the geostationary orbit were complementary.

The Committee on outer space expressed appreciation to ITU for its thirty-fourth annual progress report on telecommunication and the peaceful uses of outer space.⁽³¹⁾ Some delegations stressed the important technical scope of ITU work, while drawing attention to the Committee's competence in preparing policy decisions and the legal status of the geostationary orbit.

Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit were considered by the Legal Subcommittee (see below).

Space and Earth environment

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued consideration of national and international space activities related to the Earth environment, in particular progress in the ICSU international geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme (IGBP). It noted that joint international efforts were fundamentally important for examining the future habitability of the planet and for managing the Earth's natural resources, emphasizing the need to involve both developed and developing countries in IGBP. The Subcommittee further noted the contributions of satellite remote sensing for environmental monitoring, sustainable-development planning, water-resource development, crop-conditions monitoring and drought prediction and assessment; the contribution of meteorological and atmospheric research satellites for studying global climate change, the greenhouse effect, the degradation of the ozone layer and other global environmental processes; and the need for further space research relating to climate change, weather patterns, vegetation distribution, storm and flood risk and other environmental factors. It recommended that all States participate in international cooperation activities concerning existing and planned satellite systems for environmental monitoring.

The Committee on outer space recognized its potential for making an important contribution by promoting international cooperation in the application of space technologies for environmental monitoring and sustainable development. In particular, the UN Programme on Space Applications could play an important role in assisting developing countries in strengthening their capabilities in related space technologies and applications through education, training and technical advisory activities.

Spin-off benefits

The Committee on outer space again reviewed spin-off benefits of space technology, which were providing new techniques for industrial measurement and control, image and data processing, medical techniques, computer systems, robotics, power generation, special materials and chemicals, water treatment, public safety, consumer goods, manufacturing and refrigeration. The Committee noted that the conversion of military industries to productive civilian uses would facilitate the transfer and use of space technologies and their spin-off benefits, and agreed that developing countries could make important contributions in that field and that they should identify those disciplines in which their most pressing needs could be addressed by space technology. It recognized the need to strengthen and enhance international cooperation by improving access of all States to spin-off benefits, particularly those addressing the needs of developing countries, and agreed that low-cost microsatellite technologies were particularly important in that regard.

The Committee was satisfied that the Programme on Space Applications, following a 1993 Committee recommendation,⁽³²⁾ was planning for 1996 a workshop on challenges and opportunities of spin-off benefits. It noted with interest Ukraine's proposal to use the Evpatoria Centre of Deep Science Communication as the basis for an international centre for space research that could be used by the Programme for its activities. Some delegations reiterated the view that the UN could contribute to the development of improved procedures for disseminating spin-off benefits, with an emphasis on providing them to developing countries at a reasonable cost.

Coordination in the UN system

Both the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and the Committee on outer space reiterated the necessity of continuous and effective consultations and coordination of outer space activities among UN organizations and noted with satisfaction information on progress achieved in 1994 and on work programmes for 1995, 1996 and future years.⁽³³⁾

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/27, reaffirmed its request to all UN organs, organizations and bodies, as well as other intergovernmental organizations dealing with outer space matters, to cooperate in implementing UNISPACE-82 recommendations.

Convening of a third UNISPACE

In response to a 1994 Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and its Working Group of the Whole continued to discuss the possibility of holding a third UNISPACE, as well as other means for achieving the goals set for such a conference. The Working Group considered the Secretariat's 1994 suggestions for the organization, funding, logistical implications and a possible agenda of a third UNISPACE.⁽³³⁾ It discussed the need for such a conference and examined other means of achieving conference goals, including intensification of work in the Committee on outer space. An indicative agenda for a third conference was submitted as a framework for future discussions.

Both the Subcommittee and the Committee on outer space agreed that Working Group recommendations should be the basis for continued discussions, with the goal of submitting the matter to the General Assembly. The Committee decided to consider in 1996, within the framework to be produced by the Subcommittee, all issues regarding the possible holding of the conference, including its technical and political objectives, a detailed and sharply focused agenda, funding, timing and organizational aspects. It also decided to consider whether the conference objectives could be achieved by other means, with a view to making a final decision, and noted that the interaction between space applications and the various uses of the "information superhighway" could be reflected in the justification and agenda items of the conference. The Committee further took note of a working paper by India⁽³⁴⁾ and an informal paper by the Secretariat⁽³⁵⁾ on matters related to the convening of a third UNISPACE.

Other questions

The Committee on outer space and its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued consideration of other space-related questions, including life sciences, space medicine and matters relating to planetary exploration and astronomy. The Committee noted the variety of space activities in those areas and encouraged further cooperation, particularly efforts to increase the participation of developing countries.

In the area of life sciences, the Subcommittee noted that studies of human and animal physiology under microgravity conditions had yielded important medical knowledge in such areas as blood circulation, sensory perception, immunology and the effects of cosmic radiation. Applications of space technology promised benefits for medicine and public health on Earth: satellite communications provided expert medical advice to distant areas, and products of space biotechnology, such as pharmaceutical and medical instruments, could contribute to improved health care. The Subcommittee encouraged further research and exchange of information on those applications, emphasizing that efforts should be made to promote international cooperation to enable all countries to benefit from those advances.

As for planetary exploration and astronomy, the Subcommittee noted that several missions currently under way had yielded new data, including a gravity field map of Venus and information on its atmosphere, discovery of Jupiter's satellite Dactyl and high-resolution images of its asteroid, and investigation of solar polar regions. It took note of missions planned for future launch to investigate Mars, Saturn and its moons and near-Earth asteroids. A special presentation was made on adverse environmental effects on astronomy, emphasizing the severe impact of electromagnetic pollution on radio astronomy and the effects of space debris on astronomical observations at optical wavelengths. The Subcommittee noted that the use of spacecraft for astronomical observations had greatly advanced knowledge of the universe and that planned activities would open up further realms of the universe to detailed observation. The need to further enhance international cooperation in planetary exploration and astronomy was stressed, so that all countries could benefit from those activities.

The Subcommittee welcomed the annual reports of WMO,⁽³⁶⁾ ITU⁽³⁷⁾ and various organizations outside the UN system.⁽³⁸⁾ It expressed appreciation to COSPAR and IAF for jointly published reports on progress in space science, technology and applications, international cooperation and space law in 1994.⁽³⁹⁾

Space law

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on outer space, at its thirty-fourth session (Vienna, 27 March-7 April),⁽⁴⁰⁾ again considered the question of an early review and possible revision of the 1992 Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space; matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit; and legal aspects of the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all States.

The Committee on outer space⁽²⁾ took note with appreciation of the Subcommittee's report on its 1995 session.

Nuclear power sources

The Legal Subcommittee considered the question of an early review and possible revision of the 1992 Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space.⁽²⁶⁾ It shared the view of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee at its 1995 session that revision of the Principles was not warranted at the current time, and suspended consideration of that item by its Working Group in 1996 for one year, pending the results of work in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, unless sufficient progress was made in that Subcommittee to warrant the reconvening of the Working Group. The Legal Subcommittee, however, retained the item on its agenda.

The Committee on outer space endorsed the Subcommittee's recommendations and agreed that the Principles would remain valid until such time as they were amended, and that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee should consider the need for their revision in the light of changing technology, before the Legal Subcommittee or the Committee undertook any actual revision.

Geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

The Legal Subcommittee, through a Working Group, continued consideration of the definition and delimitation of outer space and the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, on the basis of working papers submitted at previous sessions.

The Working Group undertook a general discussion of matters related to the geostationary orbit and a paragraph-by-paragraph review of a working paper introduced by Colombia in 1993.⁽⁴¹⁾ Some delegations expressed the view that the Committee on outer space and its Legal Subcommittee had been mandated by the General Assembly to consider the use of the orbit with a view to elaborating legal principles on the issue, and considered their work as complementary to ITU activities. Others stated that the Subcommittee had no mandate to develop a special legal regime and that ITU had dealt successfully with various aspects of the orbit's use, and advocated avoiding any possible conflict of activities between ITU and other international bodies. The view was expressed that, as the geostationary orbit was an integral part of outer space, the legal regime established by the 1966 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,⁽⁴²⁾ adequately covered activities related to the orbit. Other delegations were of the opinion that specific characteristics and features of the orbit as a limited natural resource which could become saturated necessitated a special regime to ensure equitable access for all States, taking into account the needs of developing countries and the equatorial countries in particular, due to their special characteristics. At the close of the discussion, Colombia stated its intention to submit a revised working paper on the issue in 1996.

The Working Group also finalized the text of a questionnaire to Member States on possible legal issues with regard to aerospace objects, for the purpose of seeking their preliminary views on various matters relating to such objects. It was hoped that replies to the questionnaire would provide a basis for the Legal Subcommittee's decision on further consideration of the item.

The Committee on outer space invited its members to give their opinions on matters concerning aerospace objects, took note of Subcommittee deliberations on the question of the geostationary orbit, and recognized that space debris was a cause for concern in the geostationary and lower orbits. Some delegations suggested adding the subject of space debris to the Subcommittee's agenda.

Exploration of outer space

The Subcommittee, through its Working Group on the item, continued to consider legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries. The Working Group based its discussion on two working papers: one containing principles regarding international cooperation in the exploration and utilization of outer space for peaceful purposes, submitted by Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Egypt, Iraq, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Uruguay and Venezuela;⁽⁴³⁾ the other, introduced by France and Germany, containing a declaration on international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries.⁽⁴⁴⁾

At the end of the session, the Chairman produced an informal working paper,⁽⁴⁵⁾ as amended, representing a merger based on the texts of the two working papers, with additional language from the Chairman, to facilitate debate on the issue in 1996. Subsequently, Cuba became a co-sponsor of the working paper on principles of international cooperation.⁽⁴³⁾

The Committee on outer space noted the constructive work by the Subcommittee and the Working Group and the useful discussion of the working papers. It recommended that the Subcommittee continue discussing the item in 1996.

Working methods

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly recommendation,⁽¹⁾ the Chairman of the Legal Subcommittee conducted informal, open-ended consultations on the Subcommittee's working methods and agenda. The Subcommittee adopted measures concerning the utilization of conference services and agreed to apply them with the utmost flexibility. It also decided to conduct open-ended informal consultations in 1996 to identify subjects that could be considered for inclusion in its agenda.

The Committee on outer space established a Working Group of the Whole to examine the working methods of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies, based on Subcommittee recommendations. Following deliberations in the Working Group, the Committee adopted a number of procedural measures regarding organization of work, consideration of agenda items, general debate statements, its regulatory role with regard to the subsidiary bodies, technical presentations and development of a long-term work plan. It recommended that agenda items be reviewed periodically to determine the likelihood of reaching consensus and the advisability of continued consideration, and that the Working Group of the Whole be reconvened in 1996 to continue its discussions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/27.

International cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space

The General Assembly,

30. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that these centres be established on the basis of affiliation to the United Nations as early as possible and that such affiliation would provide the centres with the necessary recognition and would strengthen the possibilities of attracting donors and of establishing academic relationships with national and international space-related institutions;

31. Notes that, pursuant to its request in paragraph 27 of resolution 49/34, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its thirty-second session, continued its discussions on the possibility of holding a third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and that the Committee continued these discussions at its thirty-eighth session with a view to promoting an early conclusion on the matter by the Committee;

32. Agrees that a third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space could be convened before the turn of the present century, and that, prior to recommending a date for the conference, there should be a consensus recommendation on the agenda, venue and funding of the conference;

33. Recommends that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its thirty-third session, continue the work it had conducted at its thirty-second session, taking into particular account the report of its Working Group of the Whole, with the aim being to complete the development and refinement of a framework that would allow an evaluation of proposals by the Committee at its thirty-ninth session, and that this framework should allow for the consideration of all possibilities of achieving the final objectives of such a conference;

34. Also agrees that, on the basis of the work to be conducted at the thirty-third session of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, the Committee, at its thirty-ninth session, should consider all issues related to the possible convening of a third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, including its technical and political objectives, a detailed and sharply focused agenda, funding, timing and other organizational aspects as well as whether the objectives of the conference could be achieved by other means, with a view to making a final recommendation to the General Assembly at that session of the Committee;

35. Notes with interest the plans of the Government of Uruguay to host the Third Space Conference of the Americas at Punta del Este in 1996;

36. Recommends that more attention be paid to all aspects related to the protection and the preservation of the outer space environment, especially those potentially affecting the Earth's environment;

37. Considers that it is essential that Member States pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, including nuclear power sources, with space debris, and other aspects of space debris, calls for the continuation of national research on this question, for the development of improved technology for the monitoring of space debris and for the compilation and dissemination of data on space debris, and also considers that, to the extent possible, information thereon should be provided to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee;

38. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international cooperation in the exploration and uses of outer space for peaceful purposes;

39. Emphasizes the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to the socio-economic advancement of humanity, in particular that of the people of the developing countries;

40. Takes note of the views expressed during the thirty-eighth session of the Committee and during the fiftieth session of the General Assembly concerning ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes;

41. Requests the Committee to continue to consider, as a matter of priority, ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

42. Also requests the Committee to continue to consider at its thirty-ninth session its agenda item entitled "Spin-off benefits of space technology: review of current status";

43. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue and, where appropriate, enhance their cooperation with the Committee and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

44. Further requests the Committee to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

Effects of atomic radiation

The UN Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its forty-fourth session in Vienna from 12 to 16 June 1995.⁽¹⁾ In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Committee continued to review important problems relating to radiation sources and effects.

It considered recent information on sources of exposure, dose assessment for radionuclides, effects of radiation on the environment, DNA repair and mutagenesis, hereditary effects of radiation, epidemiological evaluation of radiation-induced cancer, combined effects of radiation and other agents, and Chernobyl-related local doses and effects. The Committee made suggestions for further development of those topics and expressed its intention to review critically all available information on the consequences of the 1986 nuclear power plant accident in Chernobyl, Ukraine, in particular to clarify the possible relationships of childhood thyroid cancers to radiation exposures in Belarus, Ukraine and the Russian Federation. It also decided to continue collecting data on radiation exposures to determine representative values and ranges of variations, and to review new information from radiobiological and epidemiological studies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/26.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 49/32 of 9 December 1994, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which mankind and the environment are exposed,

Conscious of the continuing need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on mankind and the environment,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past forty years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;
2. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important activities to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;
3. Endorses the intentions and plans of the Scientific Committee for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;
4. Also requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;
5. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the work of the Scientific Committee and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;
6. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their cooperation in this field;

7. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Scientific Committee to the General Assembly.

UN fiftieth anniversary

The Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, established by the General Assembly in 1992,⁽¹⁾ held 14 meetings in 1995 to consider preparations for the Special Commemorative Meeting of the General Assembly, which took place in New York from 22 to 24 October (see special section, pp. 141-72), as well as other preparations for the observance of the anniversary and administrative and financial issues. The Committee concluded its work on 5 December.

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Preparatory Committee submitted in May 1995 its recommendations⁽³⁾ concerning a list of speakers for the Special Commemorative Meeting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (May and July)

On 24 May, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/12 B.

Organization of the list of speakers for the Special Commemorative Meeting of the General Assembly on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/215 B of 26 May 1994, in which it decided to convene a special commemorative meeting on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the entry into force of the Charter of the United Nations, to be held at United Nations Headquarters from 22 to 24 October 1995,

Recalling also paragraph 8 of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, in which the modalities for inviting Palestine and, if they so request, other observers to attend the Special Commemorative Meeting were agreed upon,

1. Decides that the Special Commemorative Meeting shall consist of a total of six meetings, on the basis of two meetings a day;

2. Also decides that the list of speakers for the Special Commemorative Meeting shall be organized in accordance with the procedure set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Organization of the list of speakers for the Special Commemorative Meeting of the General Assembly on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations

1. The list of speakers for the Special Commemorative Meeting will be established on the basis of six meetings, each meeting having 25 speaking slots, with the exception of the meeting on Tuesday, 24 October 1995, in the afternoon, which will have 60 speaking slots.

2. The first speaker in the Special Commemorative Meeting will be the head of State of the host country of the Organization.

3. The list of speakers for the Special Commemorative Meeting will be initially established as follows:

(a) The Secretary-General or his representative will draw one name from a box containing the names of all Member States, observer States and Palestine, in its capacity as observer, participating in the Special Commemorative Meeting. This procedure will be repeated until all names have been drawn from the box, thus establishing the order in which participants will be invited to choose their meetings and select their speaking slots;

(b) Six boxes will be prepared, each one representing a meeting and each one containing numbers corresponding to speaking slots at that meeting;

(c) Once the name of a Member State, observer State or Palestine, in its capacity as observer, has been drawn by the Secretary-General or his representative, that Member State, observer State or Palestine, in its capacity as observer, will be invited first to choose a meeting and then to draw from the appropriate box the number indicating the speaking slot in the meeting;

(d) A number of speaking slots at each meeting will be reserved for observers participating in the Special Commemorative Meeting. They will be invited to participate in the initial establishment of the list of speakers in the same manner as Member States, observer States and Palestine, in its capacity as observer, but from a different set of six boxes.

4. The establishment of the initial list of speakers for the Special Commemorative Meeting as outlined in paragraph 3 of the present annex will take place at a meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations to be held on 7 June 1995.

5. Subsequently, the list of speakers for each meeting will be rearranged in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly when organizing each category of speakers, following the order resulting from the selection process outlined in paragraph 3 of the present annex:

(a) Heads of State will thus be accorded first priority, followed by vice-presidents, crown princes/princesses, heads of Government, the highest-ranking official of the Holy See and Switzerland, as observer States, and Palestine, in its capacity as observer, ministers, permanent representatives and other observers;

(b) In the event that the level at which a statement is to be made is subsequently changed, the speaker will be moved to the next available speaking slot in the appropriate category at the same meeting;

(c) Participants may arrange to exchange their speaking slots in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

(d) Speakers who are not present when their speaking turn comes will be automatically moved to the next available speaking slot within their category.

6. In order to accommodate all speakers at the Special Commemorative Meeting, statements should be limited to five minutes, on the understanding that this will not preclude the circulation of more extensive texts.

7. The full text of all speeches provided to the Special Commemorative Meeting will be subsequently published in a bound book.

World Week of Peace

The General Assembly,

Cognizant of the fact that the promotion of peace and the prevention of war are among the primary goals of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations states that the peoples of the United Nations are determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind,

Recalling that the United Nations was established to prevent war and seek peace through peaceful means and through negotiation, as well as to promote international cooperation,

Recognizing the important role that Disarmament Week, which will be observed concurrently with the World Week of Peace, is playing in promoting international peace and security,

Recognizing also that the United Nations is universal in nature and is the only instrument for global interdependence and cooperation that has the moral authority and the influence to promote and maintain world peace,

Recognizing further the importance of promoting the culture of peace,

Concerned that recent conflicts between States have brought with them deplorable ethnic strife, destruction and displacement of individuals and communities,

Deeply concerned at the large proportion of civilians, especially women and children, who have been injured or killed during the armed conflicts that have increased in recent years,

Recognizing that civil society organizations are now playing a more important role in promoting tolerance and understanding,

Convinced that a short period of peace resulting from a cease-fire or a truce can offer opportunities for building a just and lasting peace,

Noting with satisfaction the valuable initiative taken by the United Nations Children's Fund to facilitate "days of tranquillity" and "corridors of peace", which have been used to provide humanitarian relief, such as immunization, health care, food and clothing, to children trapped by armed conflicts,

1. Decides to proclaim the World Week of Peace, beginning on 24 October 1995, in solemn commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations;

2. Approves the Proclamation of the World Week of Peace, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

3. Invites all Member States to begin this task of cooperation with their own citizens and with civil society organizations, so as to give maximum publicity and assistance to the launching of the proclamation of a universal week of truce or cease-fire during the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the broadest possible dissemination of this resolution through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session.

ANNEX

Proclamation of the World Week of Peace

Whereas the General Assembly has decided unanimously to proclaim the World Week of Peace in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations,

Whereas the promotion of peace and the prevention of war are among the primary goals of the United Nations,

Whereas, in increasing the size and scope of its peace-keeping operations, the United Nations has demonstrated its commitment to the task of peace-keeping and peacemaking,

Whereas the World Week of Peace offers a special opportunity for Governments, civilian organizations, local communities and individuals to take part in new initiatives for the commendable goal of conflict resolution, cease-fires and truces, and for a period of universal peace that could be used for the humanitarian relief that has become so critically necessary,

Accordingly,

The General Assembly

Solemnly proclaims the World Week of Peace, beginning on 24 October 1995, to coincide with the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations.

General Assembly resolution 49/244

12 July 1995 Meeting 105 Adopted without vote

61-nation draft (A/49/L.66 & Corr.1 & Add.1); agenda item 44.

Report of the Preparatory Committee (December). In a December report,⁽⁴⁾ the Preparatory Committee summarized its activities since its establishment, as well as anniversary programmes undertaken by Member and observer States, global projects and activities within the UN system and of NGOs.

The Committee noted that, as at 10 November, 152 Member or observer States had established national committees that had organized numerous events to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary. These included: school essay and art competitions; global teach-in programmes and other symposia and seminars on the United Nations; production of special publications, radio and television programmes and newspaper and magazine feature sections; exhibitions, national galas and concerts and sport events honouring the Organization; special "Model United Nations" exercises with student participants; and the naming of public streets, plazas and parks in honour of the United Nations. The UN Postal Administration issued three special stamp series in 1995, and throughout the world national postal administrations produced commemorative stamps depicting UN programmes and activities. More than 40 Member States minted legal tender coins, both gold and silver, honouring the anniversary, and base-metal coins for general circulation. In 1994, the General Assembly⁽⁵⁾ had decided that States participating in the UN coin programme were to donate royalties on each special proof or uncirculated coin sold to collectors to the Trust Fund for the Fiftieth Anniversary Celebrations, to be used for education and communications activities promoting the work of the United Nations.

Major events were held during the year to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary: in San Francisco, where the UN Charter had been signed in 1945, at Headquarters in New York, and at the Geneva and Vienna Offices (see special section beginning on p. 141). A special "global citizen passport to the future" programme, initiated in connection with anniversary celebrations, involved schoolchildren and community service activities. A world youth leadership training summit took place at UN Headquarters in August. A book entitled A World In Our Hands was written, illustrated and edited by young people, in honour of the anniversary. A multimedia exhibit was mounted at UN Headquarters, and fiftieth anniversary information sites were created on the Internet and other on-line services. A variety of publications, including a pictorial history of the Organization entitled Visions—Fifty Years of the United Nations, were issued.

Within the UN system, a Forum on the Future of the United Nations was convened in conjunction with a session of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (Vienna, February). Joint projects were undertaken with UNESCO, FAO and the regional commissions. NGOs actively supported many celebratory events; a one-day NGO programme was held in November to examine the role of NGOs and the United Nations and its future in the twenty-first century.

The Trust Fund for the Fiftieth Anniversary Celebrations supported both global projects and national educational and communications initiatives about the work of the Organization. It was expected to continue receiving revenues, in particular from commemorative coins and publications.

Security Council observances. On 27 September,⁽⁶⁾ the Foreign Ministers of the Security Council's five permanent members met with the UN Secretary-General to review the world situation on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War and the birth of the United Nations. The Ministers noted with satisfaction what had been achieved and the fact that institutions of the United Nations had been central to the pursuit of peace and security for the past 50 years in accordance with the UN Charter. They pointed out that serious challenges remained and that effective and efficient institutions within the UN system had an important role to play in confronting them. Affirming their commitment to the United Nations, they stressed the primary responsibility of the Security Council in maintaining world peace and security, and underscored the importance of reinforcing cooperation between the UN and regional organizations and arrangements in building stability and security and in preventing and managing conflicts (see also PART ONE, Chapter I, and PART TWO, Chapter I).

The Ministers also stated their position concerning the situations in different regions, and in the areas of sanctions application, disarmament, sustainable development, and the UN financial situation and restructuring. They pointed out that the Organization's proper functioning depended on the full and punctual payment by Member States of their contributions, which was crucial for the success of UN peace-keeping operations. They emphasized the importance of UN reform to make it more transparent, accountable, efficient and effective (see PART SIX, Chapter I).

Heads of State or Government of the non-aligned countries members of the Security Council, meeting on 23 October on the occasion of the UN fiftieth anniversary,⁽⁷⁾ noted that the authority and credibility of the Council had grown substantially in recent years as its members rediscovered a sense of common purpose in confronting dangers to peace and stability. In that regard, they pointed to the need for strengthening and revitalizing the Council to adapt it to the new realities and challenges of the time, and expressed their support for ongoing efforts to increase its membership based on equitable geographic representation. The heads of State or Government also called for improving the peacemaking and peace-keeping capacity of the UN, as well as cooperation between the General Assembly and the Security Council (see also PART ONE, Chapter I).

Communications. During the year, the Secretary-General received a number of communications from Member States on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary, transmitting commemorative resolutions adopted by parliaments, national assemblies and other important bodies. A statement by 16 heads of State or Government in support of global cooperation was issued in New York on 23 October.⁽⁸⁾

On 26 September, the President of the Security Council made the following statement⁽⁹⁾ on behalf of the Council members:

The Security Council has met on 26 September 1995, at the level of Foreign Ministers, to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations and to exchange views on the challenges which the Security Council faces.

Since its establishment the Security Council has played a crucial role in the maintenance of international peace and security on which development and cooperation among nations are based. The past few years in particular have been ones of momentous change, bringing fresh hope and new challenges. Operations mandated by the Council have assisted in the restoration of peace and stability to countries long-plagued by war. Although such operations have largely been successful, there are areas where success has not been achieved. The Council must continue to spare no effort in working for the maintenance of international peace and security, and build upon its experience of past and existing operations.

The Security Council recognizes that the challenges facing the international community demand a resolute response, based on the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations. The members of the Security Council consider that the United Nations must be strengthened and revitalized to help meet these challenges. They take note of the conclusions of the Working Group of the General Assembly on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council, inter alia, that the Council should be expanded, and that its working methods should continue to be reviewed, in a way that further strengthens its capacity and effectiveness, enhances its representative character and improves its working efficiency and transparency; and that important differences on key issues continue to exist. The Council also believes that effective use should be made of instruments for preventive action, and the Organization's capacity to conduct effective peace-keeping operations should continue to be improved. The Council will continue to attach utmost importance to the safety and security of all who serve under the United Nations flag in the field.

The members of the Security Council reaffirm their commitment to the collective security system of the Charter. On the solemn occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, the Council, along with other United Nations bodies, commemorates what has been achieved so far, but also commits itself once again to the maintenance of international peace and security for which it has primary responsibility, and to working to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war.

Meeting number. SC 3583.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (October and December)

The General Assembly, at six special plenary meetings on 22, 23 and 24 October at UN Headquarters in New York, held the Special Commemorative Meeting on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations. (For details, see special section, pp. 141-72.)

On 24 October, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/6.

Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations

The General Assembly

Adopts the following Declaration:

Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations

Fifty years ago the United Nations was born out of the sufferings caused by the Second World War. The determination, enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war" is as vital today as it was fifty years ago. In this, as in other respects, the Charter gives expression to the common values and aspirations of humankind.

The United Nations has been tested by conflict, humanitarian crisis and turbulent change, yet it has survived and played an important role in preventing another global conflict and has achieved much for people all over the world. The United Nations has helped to shape the very structure of relations between nations in the modern age. Through the process of decolonization and the elimination of apartheid, hundreds of millions of human beings have been and are assured the exercise of the fundamental right of self-determination.

At this time, following the end of the cold war, and as the end of the century approaches, we must create new opportunities for peace, development, democracy and cooperation. The speed and extent of change in today's world point to a future of great complexity and challenge and to a sharp increase in the level of expectations of the United Nations.

Our resolve on this historic occasion is clear. The commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations must be seized as an opportunity to redirect it to greater service to humankind, especially to those who are suffering and are deeply deprived. This is the practical and moral challenge of our time. Our obligation to this end is found in the Charter. The need for it is manifest in the condition of humankind.

On the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, we, the Member States and observers of the United Nations, representing the peoples of the world:

- Solemnly reaffirm the Purposes and Principles of the Charter of the United Nations and our commitments to them;
- Express our gratitude to all men and women who have made the United Nations possible, done its work and served its ideals, particularly those who have given their lives during service to the United Nations;
- Are determined that the United Nations of the future will work with renewed vigour and effectiveness in promoting peace, development, equality and justice and understanding among the peoples of the world;
- Will give to the twenty-first century a United Nations equipped, financed and structured to serve effectively the peoples in whose name it was established.

In fulfilment of these commitments we will be guided in our future cooperation by the following, with respect to peace, development, equality, justice and the United Nations Organization:

Peace

1. To meet these challenges, and while recognizing that action to secure global peace, security and stability will be futile unless the economic and social needs of people are addressed, we will:
 - Promote methods and means for the peaceful settlement of disputes in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and enhance the capabilities of the United Nations in conflict prevention, preventive diplomacy, peace-keeping and peace-building;
 - Strongly support United Nations, regional and national efforts on arms control, limitation and disarmament and the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, in all aspects, and other weapons of mass destruction, including biological and chemical weapons and other forms of particularly excessively injurious or indiscriminate weapons, in pursuit of our common commitment to a world free of all these weapons;
 - Continue to reaffirm the right of self-determination of all peoples, taking into account the particular situation of peoples under colonial or other forms of alien domination or foreign occupation, and recognize the right of peoples to take legitimate action in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to realize their inalienable right of self-determination. This shall not be construed as authorizing or encouraging any action that would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent States conducting themselves in compliance with the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and thus possessed of a Government representing the whole people belonging to the territory without distinction of any kind;
 - Act together to defeat the threats to States and people posed by terrorism, in all its forms and manifestations, and transnational organized crime and the illicit trade in arms and the production and consumption of and trafficking in illicit drugs;

- Strengthen consultation and cooperation between regional arrangements or agencies and the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security.

Development

2. A dynamic, vigorous, free and equitable international economic environment is essential to the well-being of humankind and to international peace, security and stability. This objective must be addressed, in greater measure and more effectively, by the United Nations system.

3. The United Nations has played an important role in the promotion of economic and social development and has, over the years, provided life-saving assistance to women, children and men around the world. But the pledge recorded in the Charter that all Members of the United Nations shall take joint and separate action in cooperation with the Organization for the achievement of higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development has not been adequately implemented.

4. It must be recognized that notwithstanding past efforts, the gap between the developed and developing countries remains unacceptably wide. The specific problems of countries with economies in transition with respect to their twofold transition to democracy and a market economy should also be recognized. In addition, accelerating globalization and interdependence in the world economy call for policy measures designed to ensure the maximization of the benefits from and the minimization of the negative effects of these trends for all countries.

5. Of greatest concern is that one fifth of the world's 5.7 billion people live in extreme poverty. Extraordinary measures by all countries, including strengthened international cooperation, are needed to address this and related problems.

6. In response to these facts and circumstances, the United Nations has convened a number of specifically focused global conferences in the last five years. From these conferences, a consensus has emerged, inter alia, that economic development, social development and environmental protection are interdependent and mutually reinforcing components of sustainable development, which is the framework of our efforts to achieve a higher quality of life for all people. At the core of this consensus is the recognition that the human person is the central subject of development and that people must be at the centre of our actions towards and concerns for sustainable development.

7. In this context, we reaffirm that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, are interdependent and mutually reinforcing.

8. In order to foster sustained economic growth, social development, environmental protection and social justice in fulfilment of the commitments we have made on international cooperation for development, we will:

- Promote an open and equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading system and a framework for investment, transfers of technology and knowledge, as well as enhanced cooperation in the areas of development, finance and debt as critical conditions for development;

- Give particular attention to national and international action to enhance the benefits of the process of globalization for all countries and to avoid the marginalization from and promote the integration of the least developed countries and countries in Africa into the world economy;
- Improve the effectiveness and efficiency of the United Nations system for development and strengthen its role in all relevant fields of international economic cooperation;
- Invigorate the dialogue and partnership between all countries in order to secure the existence of a favourable political and economic environment for the promotion of international cooperation for development based on the imperatives of mutual benefit and interest and genuine interdependence, while recognizing that each country is ultimately responsible for its own development but reaffirming that the international community must create a supportive international environment for such development;
- Promote social development through decisive national and international action aimed at the eradication of poverty as an ethical, social, political and economic imperative of humankind and the promotion of full employment and social integration;
- Recognize that the empowerment and the full and equal participation of women is central to all efforts to achieve development;
- Reduce and eliminate unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and promote appropriate demographic policies in order to meet the needs of current generations without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs, recognizing that environmental sustainability constitutes an integral part of the development process;
- Intensify cooperation on natural disaster reduction and major technological and man-made disasters, disaster relief, post-disaster rehabilitation and humanitarian assistance in order to enhance the capabilities of affected countries to cope with such situations.

Equality

9. We reiterate the affirmation by the Charter of the dignity and worth of the human person and the equal rights of men and women and reaffirm that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated.

10. While the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of all States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms, the universal nature of which is beyond question. It is also important for all States to ensure the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues.

11. We will therefore:

- Promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms, which are inherent to all human beings;
- Strengthen laws, policies and programmes that would ensure the full and equal participation of women in all spheres of political, civil, economic, social and cultural life as equal partners and the full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all women;

- Promote and protect the rights of the child;
- Ensure that the rights of persons who can be particularly vulnerable to abuse or neglect, including youth, persons with disabilities, the elderly and migrant workers, are protected;
- Promote and protect the rights of indigenous people;
- Ensure the protection of the rights of refugees and of displaced persons;
- Ensure that the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic and other minorities are protected, and that such persons are able to pursue economic and social development and live in circumstances of full respect for their identity, traditions, forms of social organization and cultural and religious values.

Justice

12. The Charter of the United Nations has provided a durable framework for the promotion and development of international law. The continued promotion and development of international law must be pursued with a view to ensuring that relations between States are based on the principles of justice, sovereign equality, universally recognized principles of international law and respect for the rule of law. Such action should take account of developments under way in such areas as technology, transport, information and resource-related fields and international financial markets, as well as the growing complexity of the work of the United Nations in the humanitarian and refugee assistance fields.

13. We are determined to:

- Build and maintain justice among all States in accordance with the principles of the sovereign equality and territorial integrity of States;
- Promote full respect for and implementation of international law;
- Settle international disputes by peaceful means;
- Encourage the widest possible ratification of international treaties and ensure compliance with the obligations arising from them;
- Promote respect for and the implementation of international humanitarian law;
- Promote the progressive development of international law in the field of development, including that which would foster economic and social progress;
- Promote respect for and implementation of international law in the field of human rights and fundamental freedoms and encourage ratification of or accession to international human rights instruments;
- Promote the further codification and progressive development of international law.

United Nations Organization

14. In order to be able to respond effectively to the challenges of the future and the expectations of the United Nations held by peoples around the world, it is essential that the United Nations itself be reformed and modernized. The work of the General Assembly, the universal organ of the States Members of the United Nations, should be revitalized. The Security Council should, inter alia, be expanded and its working methods continue to be reviewed in a way that will further strengthen its capacity and effectiveness, enhance its representative character and improve its working efficiency and transparency; as important differences on key issues continue to exist, further in-depth consideration of these issues is required. The role of the Economic and Social Council should be strengthened to enable it to carry out effectively, in the modern age, the tasks it has been assigned with respect to the well-being and standards of life of all people. These and other changes, within the United Nations system, should be made if we are to ensure that the United Nations of the future serves well the peoples in whose name it was established.

15. In order to carry out its work effectively, the United Nations must have adequate resources. Member States must meet, in full and on time, their obligation to bear the expenses of the Organization, as apportioned by the General Assembly. That apportionment should be established on the basis of criteria agreed to and considered to be fair by Member States.

16. The secretariats of the United Nations system must improve significantly their efficiency and effectiveness in administering and managing the resources allocated to them. For their part, Member States will pursue and take responsibility for reforming that system.

17. We recognize that our common work will be the more successful if it is supported by all concerned actors of the international community, including non-governmental organizations, multilateral financial institutions, regional organizations and all actors of civil society. We will welcome and facilitate such support, as appropriate.

Draft by Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the UN (A/50/48/Rev.1); agenda item 29.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: plenary 35-37, 89.

End of the Second World War anniversary

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly appeal⁽¹⁰⁾ to all States and peoples to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War and its proclamation of the year 1995 as World Year of Peoples' Commemoration of the Victims of the Second World War, several countries transmitted to the UN in 1995 statements made on the occasion of that anniversary. Communications addressed to the Secretary-General included a joint message by the heads of States of the members of the Commonwealth of Independent States,⁽¹¹⁾ a statement by the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),⁽¹²⁾ a memorandum by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea⁽¹³⁾ and a formal appeal by the President of Romania for historical reconciliation between Hungary and Romania, launched in Bucharest on 30 August.⁽¹⁴⁾ On 15 August, Japan communicated to the President of the Security Council a statement made by its Prime Minister.⁽¹⁵⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council on 9 May met in connection with the commemoration of the end of the Second World War in Europe. In a statement made on behalf of the Council, its President said, inter alia, that the United Nations was created primarily to preserve future generations from the scourge of war and that its Charter had entrusted the Security Council with the principal responsibility for maintaining international peace and security. For that reason, it seemed appropriate for the Council to pay tribute, on the fiftieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War in Europe, to all the victims of that war and to recall the Council's firm desire to make every effort to help mitigate human suffering resulting from war. At the invitation of the President, the Council members observed a minute of silence in memory of the combatants and victims of the Second World War.

The Council also met on 15 August to commemorate the end of the Second World War in the Asia-Pacific region. Its President made the following statement on behalf of the Council members:

"It was fifty years ago that the Asia-Pacific region saw the end of the Second World War, a devastating war that shattered the lives of tens of millions of people in this region. On this solemn occasion, we pay tribute to those who laid down their lives and the other victims of the war.

"Having survived the catastrophe of the Second World War, mankind sought to embrace new means to prevent the recurrence of such a tragedy. To this end, the United Nations was established, with primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security conferred on the Security Council by the Charter.

"Unity and harmony among nations would be the most honourable and noble way to pay tribute to those who sacrificed their lives for peace during the Second World War. For this reason, it is appropriate for the Security Council to pay homage on this anniversary to all the victims of the Second World War in the Asia-Pacific region."

The Council members then observed a minute of silence in memory of the victims of the Second World War.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with a 1994 resolution,⁽¹⁰⁾ the General Assembly held a solemn meeting on 18 October 1995 in commemoration of victims of the Second World War. On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/5.

Commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/25 of 2 December 1994,

Having considered item 36 of the agenda of its fiftieth session entitled "Commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War", Approves the Declaration in Commemoration of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the End of the Second World War, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration in Commemoration of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the End of the Second World War

1. We, the representatives of the States Members of the United Nations, have gathered at a solemn meeting of the fiftieth anniversary session of the United Nations General Assembly to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War, which brought untold suffering and ravages to humankind.

2. In this World Year of Peoples' Commemoration of the Victims of the Second World War, we bow our heads before the tens of millions who perished in their towns and villages or on the battlefields, or became victims of genocide in the death camps, and remember with gratitude those who fought against dictatorship, oppression, racism and aggression.

3. We note that one of the most remarkable results of the end of the Second World War was the establishment of a community based on new principles—the United Nations, whose task is to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war. We reaffirm the resolve of our States to adhere strictly to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

4. We note with satisfaction that today, now that many ideological barriers have fallen and the "cold war" has ended, new opportunities are emerging for building a non-violent world and a system of genuine global security with the United Nations as the central element.

5. We recall the tragedy of the Second World War and the unprecedented suffering it inflicted upon various peoples and upon all of humanity. We are fully aware of the vital necessity of making all possible efforts to put an end to existing armed conflicts, to avert such conflicts in the future and to overcome the remaining legacies of the Second World War as well as the manifestations of political, economic and social inequality, and we call upon the States of the world:

(a) To reaffirm the commitment to refrain from the use or threat of use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations;

(b) To redouble their efforts to put an end to all conflicts and to save future generations from the scourge of new wars, inter alia, by drawing the lessons that emerge from the history of past conflicts;

(c) To promote democracy and human rights and to support universal access to culture;

(d) To focus their efforts on the objective of creating conditions for the general progress of humankind in larger freedom.

6. The fulfilment of these commitments will be the best way to pay tribute to those who fought for peace, freedom, democracy and human dignity and to honour the memory of the victims of the Second World War. Only in this way can we prevent new tragedies and ensure that all nations become a single community living in peace, stability, cooperation and prosperity.

Support for democracies

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General in August 1995 reported⁽¹⁷⁾ on ways and mechanisms in which the UN system could support the efforts of Govern-merits to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies. He reviewed the experience gained in promoting a participatory culture and an open society through: establishment of political parties and movements, free and independent media and civic education; electoral assistance, including organization and conduct of elections, supervision, verification, coordination and support for international observers, support for national election observers, technical assistance and observation; and building institutions for democracy by creating and strengthening democratic structures of government, enhancing the rule of law, reforming the civil service and improving accountability, transparency and quality in public sector management.

The Secretary-General noted that the number of requests for electoral assistance had increased from 7 to 89 between 1992 and June 1995, 77 of which had been accepted. Elections, albeit necessary, he said, were not sufficient to ensure the durability of a democratization process; the United Nations had therefore broadened its activities to focus on the creation of independent judicial systems, establishment of armed forces respectful of the rule of law, training of police forces to safeguard public freedoms and the setting up of human rights institutions. As the breadth of democratization, governance and institution-building made it difficult for any UN entity to support the entire spectrum of programmes in that area, the Secretary-General recommended an expanding network for policy development and programme cooperation, involving UN agencies, bilateral donors and interested professional organizations. He further suggested that different components of the UN system should pay particular attention to such key areas as: strengthening of leadership skills and political institutions; linkages between government and civil society, including NGOs, the media, local authorities and professional associations; support for effective judiciaries guaranteeing the rule of law and protection of human rights; and participation in decentralization efforts. In conclusion, the Secretary-General underscored that the UN system and Governments, while remaining the principal actors in the democratization process, should work actively with a multiplicity of partners, including regional organizations, NGOs, parliamentarians, business leaders, professional associations, the academic community and ordinary citizens.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/133.

Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the indissoluble links between the principles enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the foundations of any democratic society,

Recalling the Manila Declaration adopted in June 1988 by the First International Conference of New or Restored Democracies,

Considering the major changes taking place on the international scene and the aspirations of all the peoples for an international order based on the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, including the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and other important principles, such as respect for the equal rights and self-determination of peoples, peace, democracy, justice, equality, the rule of law, pluralism, development, better standards of living and solidarity,

Recalling also its resolution 49/30 of 7 December 1994, in which it recognized the importance of the Managua Declaration and the Plan of Action adopted by the Second International Conference of New or Restored Democracies in July 1994,

Recalling further the view expressed in the Managua Declaration that the international community must pay closer attention to the obstacles facing the new or restored democracies,

Taking note of the views of Member States expressed in the debate on this item at its forty-ninth and fiftieth sessions,

Bearing in mind that such activities of the United Nations carried out in support of the efforts of Governments are undertaken in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and only at the specific request of the Member States concerned,

Bearing in mind also that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing and that democracy is based on the freely expressed will of the people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and on their full participation in all aspects of their lives,

Noting that a considerable number of societies have recently undertaken considerable efforts to achieve their social, political and economic goals through democratization and the reform of their economies, pursuits that are deserving of the support and recognition of the international community,

Noting with satisfaction that a Third International Conference on New or Restored Democracies will take place at Bucharest,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance provided in the past by the United Nations, at the request of Member States, as well as important concepts and considerations that are pertinent to this question,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Commends the Secretary-General and through him the United Nations system for the activities undertaken at the request of Governments to support the efforts to consolidate democracy, as reflected in his report;
3. Recognizes that the Organization has an important role to play in providing timely, appropriate and coherent support to the efforts of Governments to achieve democratization within the context of their development efforts;
4. Stresses that activities undertaken by the Organization must be in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to improve the capacity of the Organization to respond effectively to the requests of Member States through coherent, adequate support of their efforts to achieve the goal of democratization;

6. Encourages Member States to promote democratization and to make additional efforts to identify possible steps to support the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including innovative ways and means, as well as new reflections, to enable the Organization to respond effectively and in an integrated manner to requests of Member States for assistance in this field;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies".

PART TWO

Regional questions and peace-keeping

Chapter I

General aspects of peace-keeping operations

Over the course of 1995, a total of 20 UN peace-keeping operations were deployed worldwide. Four of those were new missions; another four completed their mandates, so that by year's end, 16 UN peace-keeping missions were operating. As a result of the termination of the UN Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the substantial reduction in the strength of the UN Confidence Restoration Operation (UNCRO) in Croatia, the number of military and civilian peace-keeping personnel under UN command fell from almost 73,000 as at 31 July to some 26,000 by the end of 1995. The cost of UN peace-keeping operations in 1995 totalled some $3.2 billion, while unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to the peace-keeping budget amounted to $3 billion as at 10 August, which exacerbated further the severe financial situation of the Organization (see PART SIX, Chapter II).

In January, the Secretary-General set forth additional recommendations for improving the UN peace-keeping capacity in his "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace". The position paper, provided on the occasion of the Organization's fiftieth anniversary, was welcomed by the Security Council. The Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations made recommendations on various aspects of peace-keeping, which were endorsed by the Assembly in December. Both the Council and the Special Committee called for enhancing further stand-by arrangements between the UN and Member States for resources to be used in UN operations, so as to improve the Organization's rapid reaction capability, as well as for reinforcing cooperation in peace-keeping with regional organizations. The Security Council continued to review arrangements for consultations with troop-contributing countries.

During the year, the General Assembly considered various aspects of peace-keeping financing, including reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment, management of peace-keeping assets,

Review of peace-keeping operations

Secretary-General's views

In his report on the work of the Organization,⁽¹⁾ issued on 22 August, the Secretary-General observed that peace-keeping remained a dynamic and demanding activity, responding to continuing turbulence in relations between States as well as to armed conflicts within State borders. As at 31 July, some 65,000 military personnel, 1,700 civilian police and 6,000 civilian staff were deployed in 16 operations, serving in conditions that ranged from relative stability to high danger. He noted that peace-keeping missions had multiplied in number and complexity in recent years and involved a wider spectrum of operations, from the monitoring of traditional cease-fires and control of buffer zones to assistance in the implementation of peace settlements and armed protection of humanitarian convoys. At the same time, where the climate was one of hostility and obstruction instead of cooperation and political will, peace-keeping came under heavy strains, making it necessary to rethink and readjust the measures taken or to terminate the mission. The Organization also continued to encounter grave difficulties in obtaining resources from Member States both in specialized and properly equipped military units and in adequate financing, which had led to delays in deployment of peace-keeping forces. Due to the shortfalls in the peace-keeping budget as a result of unpaid assessed contributions from Member States, the United Nations was able to continue peace-keeping operations only by delaying reimbursements to troop-contributing countries and payments owed for contingent-owned equipment.

The Secretary-General further described efforts to improve the Organization's peace-keeping capacity, including the establishment of a coordination framework among the UN Secretariat's Departments of Peace-keeping Operations, Political Affairs and Humanitarian Affairs (see PART ONE, Chapter I), and a system of stand-by arrangements—proposed in his 1992 report, "An Agenda for Peace"⁽²⁾—based on conditional offers by Member States of specified resources to be made available, within agreed response times, for UN peace-keeping operations. By the end of July, 46 States had confirmed their participation in stand-by arrangements and 13 were finalizing their offers. However, those commitments did not cover existing deficiencies in communications, multi-role logistics, health services, supply, engineering and transportation, nor did the system of stand-by arrangements ensure the reliability and speed of response required in emergency situations. While Member States possessed the necessary capabilities, the Secretary-General pointed out that there was a lack of will to make them available for the execution of Security Council mandates.

He also emphasized the importance of a public information component for the success of peace-keeping operations, stating that information requirements of recent missions were being examined at an early planning stage for inclusion in the proposed budget. Noting that there had been 456 fatalities among UN civilian personnel from 1991 to 1995, compared to 398 for the entire period between 1948 and 1990, the Secretary-General urged Governments to ensure the early entry into force of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽³⁾

In January 1995, the Secretary-General issued a position paper entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace",⁽⁴⁾ in which he elaborated further on his 1992 proposals⁽²⁾ for developing UN activities related to peace and security (see also PART ONE, Chapter I).

There had, he said, been dramatic changes in both the volume and the nature of UN activities in the field of peace and security since the end of the cold war. In January 1988, only five UN peace-keeping missions were operating; over the next seven years, another 21 were established. By 16 December 1994, 17 of them remained active.

Qualitative changes were even more significant than quantitative ones: of the five operations that existed in early 1988, all but one related to wars between States; of the 21 operations subsequently established, 13 related to conflicts within a State. Of the 11 missions between January 1992 and December 1994, all but two related to intra-State conflicts. The nature of peace-keeping also changed, in that UN operations, which had been largely military in character and confined to monitoring cease-fires and controlling buffer zones with the consent of the States involved, were increasingly mandated to undertake an unprecedented variety of functions: helping parties to a conflict implement a negotiated settlement and secure a post-conflict economic rehabilitation, as well as protecting humanitarian operations, often in a hostile environment. As a result, new and more comprehensive concepts to guide those activities, and their links with development work, were emerging and old concepts were being modified. In that regard, the Secretary-General set forth additional recommendations for improving the peace-keeping capacity of the United Nations (see below).

Operations in 1995

On 8 February, the Security Council authorized the establishment of a UN Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III) with an enlarged mandate, to replace UNAVEM II, established in 1991,⁽⁵⁾ whose mandate had expired on the same date. Under the supervision of the new Mission, progress was achieved in the disengagement of forces in Angola, and the parties to the conflict reached agreement on an accelerated timetable for the implementation of their peace accords. In August, the Mission's mandate was extended for an additional six months, until 8 February 1996.

The UN Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II), launched in 1993,⁽⁶⁾ officially ended on 31 March 1995, its withdrawal having been completed by 2 March. However, the situation in that country continued to be monitored by the UN from an office in Nairobi, Kenya (see next chapter).

On 31 March, the Security Council decided to establish three separate operations for the former Yugoslavia. It decided to extend the mandate of UNPROFOR within Bosnia and Herzegovina only and—for Croatia and for the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia—to incorporate elements of the former UNPROFOR into two new missions: the UN Confidence Restoration Operation (UNCRO) and the UN Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), respectively. In August, due to developments in Croatia, the Secretary-General recommended that the strength of UNCRO be reduced—from more than 14,000 to fewer than 2,500 troops by mid-November. In November, following the signing of the "Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium" by the Croatian Government and local Serb representatives, the Security Council decided to terminate the UNCRO mandate after an interim period ending on 15 January 1996 or upon the Council's decision to deploy a transitional peace-keeping force to implement relevant provisions of the Basic Agreement. Also in November, the Council extended the mandate of UNPREDEP until 30 May 1996. On 20 December, with the transfer of authority to the multinational Implementation Force (IFOR) following the signing of a peace agreement for Bosnia and Herzegovina in Dayton, Ohio, United States, the mandate of UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina was terminated. Also in December, the Security Council established a UN civilian police force, the International Police Task Force (IPTF), and a UN civilian office. Their purpose was to implement relevant provisions of the Dayton Peace Agreement (see PART TWO, Chapter V).

The UN Mission in Haiti (UNMIH), which had been redeployed by December 1994,⁽⁷⁾ assumed the responsibilities of the Multinational Force in Haiti (MNF) on 31 March 1995. The Mission provided a secure environment for the country's legislative and local elections held in June; on 31 July, its mandate was extended to the end of February 1996.

The UN Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) completed its mandate at the end of April, as that country, with UN assistance, continued progressing towards establishing a democratic society based on the rule of law and respect for human rights. Following the withdrawal of ONUSAL, a small team of UN officials—the UN Mission in El Salvador (MINUSAL)—was set up to provide good offices and to verify implementation of the 1992 Peace Agreement⁽⁸⁾ (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

In June, the Security Council renewed the mandate of the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR), established in 1993,⁽⁹⁾ shifting its focus from a peace-keeping to a confidence-building role, and authorized a reduction of its force level. The Mission assisted Rwandan authorities in promoting national reconciliation and the return of refugees and in setting up a national police force; it was also responsible for the protection of humanitarian organizations, human rights observers and members of the International Tribunal for Rwanda. In December, UNAMIR's mandate was extended for a final period to end on 8 March 1996.

Efforts also continued to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Liberia: the Security Council, noting the progress made, in September extended the UN Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) until 31 January 1996; in November, it adjusted the UNOMIL mandate, increasing its strength to 160 observers. As the UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) continued to assist in identifying and registering potential voters, the Council in September extended its mandate until 31 January 1996, but took note of the Secretary-General's intention to propose alternative options, including the possibility of the Mission's withdrawal, if before that date conditions were not in place for the start of a transitional period leading to the referendum (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

The UN Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) continued to monitor the implementation of the 1994 agreement on a cease-fire and separation of forces between the Government of Georgia and authorities of the Georgian region of Abkhazia; in May, its mandate was extended until 12 January 1996. The UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) was extended in December until 15 June 1996; it was verifying the compliance of the parties to the conflict in that country with their 1994 cease-fire agreement (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

The UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) remained in operation during 1995 to monitor the demilitarized zone along the border between the two countries. The UN Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP), in place since 1949, continued its activities (see PART TWO, Chapter IV), as did other long-standing missions, including the UN Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) (see PART TWO, Chapter V) and three operations in the Middle East—the UN Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and the UN Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) (see PART TWO, Chapter VI).

Improving UN peace-keeping capacity

In the "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace",⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General noted that peace-keeping had become both more complex and more expensive as the UN had to deal with an increasing number of conflicts both between and within States, often accompanied by the collapse of government authority. In that regard, he emphasized that respect for certain basic principles, such as the consent of the parties, impartiality and the non-use of force except in self-defence, was essential to the success of UN operations. However, some new aspects of recent peace-keeping mandates—protection of humanitarian operations during continuing warfare, protection of civilian populations in designated safe areas, and pressure on the parties to achieve national reconciliation at a pace faster than they were ready to accept—necessitated deviation from one or another of those principles. Coupled with insufficient military capabilities, such deviation undermined the viability of the mission and endangered its personnel.

The Secretary-General further underscored the need to distinguish between three levels of authority in peace-keeping—overall political direction of the Security Council, executive direction and command by the Secretary-General, and command in the field entrusted to the chief of mission. He cautioned against an increasing tendency for the Security Council to micro-manage operations, and also warned against any attempt by troop-contributing Governments to provide guidance, let alone give orders, to their contingents on operational matters, the unity of command being another important principle of peace-keeping. To avoid such incidents, steps were being taken to improve procedures for consultations with the Council and troop-contributing States to keep them informed of developments in the field. As for the availability of troops and equipment, which had palpably declined as measured against the Organization's requirements, efforts had been made to expand and refine stand-by arrangements between the UN and Member States; however, such arrangements did not guarantee that troops would actually be provided for a specific operation.

At the same time, peace-keeping was particularly affected by the financial crisis of the United Nations (see PART SIX, Chapter II), as the shortage of funds for the start-up of missions and for the recruitment and training of personnel imposed severe constraints on the Organization's ability to deploy newly approved operations. In that regard, it was advisable to establish the availability of necessary troops and equipment before the decision to create a new mission or assign a new task to an existing one.

The Secretary-General concluded that the UN had to give serious thought to the idea of a rapid reaction force, to serve as the Security Council's strategic reserve for deployment in emergency situations. He also proposed that a reserve stock of standard peace-keeping equipment be set up, as a possible measure to address the growing problem of inadequately equipped and trained troops offered for operations. The public information capacity of missions, which had proved to be a critical factor in an operation's success, also needed to be strengthened, with a mission's information requirements to be identified at an early planning stage and included in the proposed budget.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, in a 22 February statement⁽¹⁰⁾ by its President, welcomed the Secretary-General's analysis regarding peace-keeping operations and reiterated the basic principles of peace-keeping identified in the Supplement. The Council underlined the need to conduct operations with a clearly defined mandate, command structure and time-frame and secure financing, and stressed the importance of providing the fullest possible information concerning missions to the Council and to troop contributors. The Secretary-General was encouraged to continue his study of options for improving the capacity for rapid deployment and reinforcement of UN operations and to take further steps to enhance the existing stand-by arrangements, including the establishment of a comprehensive database covering civilian and military resources, as well as to consider ways of addressing the requirements of contingents in need of additional equipment or training.

The Council called on Member States to participate in stand-by arrangements and urged them to honour their financial obligations to the UN, which was of crucial importance to peace-keeping. At the same time, it emphasized the continuing necessity for careful control of peace-keeping costs and for the most efficient use of peace-keeping funds. The Security Council then invited States to present further reflections on UN operations and on ways of improving its capacity for rapid deployment.

Report of the Special Committee. As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽¹¹⁾ the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations continued a comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects. In 1995, it held eight meetings in New York between 10 April and 12 May. Committee deliberations were summarized in its report⁽¹²⁾ to the Assembly, issued on 22 June.

The Special Committee noted the qualitative and quantitative changes in peace-keeping operations and the new challenges facing them, and considered that it was time to evaluate the experiences gained and to draw appropriate lessons from both successes and setbacks. It stressed that the principles and purposes of the UN Charter should be strictly observed and that respect for the principles of sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States and non-intervention in matters essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State was crucial to common efforts, including peace-keeping. The Committee concurred with the Secretary-General's observation in the "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace" that basic principles of peace-keeping should be respected. It welcomed the view of the Security Council expressed in its President's statement on the Supplement and underscored the importance of factors to be taken into account when considering the establishment of peace-keeping operations, listed in a 1994 statement⁽¹³⁾ by the Council President. It also emphasized the need to ensure congruence between mandates, resources and objectives in formulating and implementing peace-keeping mandates.

The Committee welcomed the Secretary-General's 1994 report on command and control of UN operations⁽¹⁴⁾ and recommended that a Special Representative of the Secretary-General be appointed for larger operations, with authority over all components, so as to coordinate their activities at all levels. The need to enhance cooperation between peace-keeping missions and other related UN activities was stressed, and the Secretary-General was requested to ensure cooperation with other agencies of the UN system. Noting the importance of the unity of command and control, the Special Committee considered it useful to reach an agreed definition of the different kinds of command relationships applicable to peace-keeping operations. It also believed it necessary to delegate to UN missions in the field the appropriate financial and administrative autonomy, while strengthening measures relating to responsibility and accountability.

The Secretariat was urged to continue to improve the safety and security environment for peace-keepers and to ensure their physical well-being, as well as to assure appropriate protection for the information utilized by peace-keeping operations, including through the training of personnel responsible for managing such information. The Secretary-General was encouraged to continue strengthening the Department of Peace-keeping Operations (DPKO) and the Secretariat's capacity for the effective planning, organization, coordination and management of UN missions. In that regard, the Special Committee welcomed the development of the capacity for operational predeployment planning of UN missions, through the dispatch of a DPKO team. It also welcomed the establishment of the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services and urged the Secretary-General to assign a qualified representative of that Office to each large operation, or a visiting representative in the case of smaller missions.

The Committee called for the widest possible participation of Member States in peace-keeping operations as well as for the early identification of potential troop contributors and their involvement in the planning process. It reiterated its request to the Secretary-General to strengthen the civilian police unit within DPKO, and made recommendations concerning the training of peace-keeping personnel, an effective public information capacity of UN missions, and the availability of financial resources. Other recommendations dealt with consultations with troop-contributing countries, rapid deployment and stand-by arrangements, cooperation with regional organizations, and evaluation of operations (see below, under relevant subject headings).

JIU reports. By notes of 24 October⁽¹⁵⁾ and 14 November,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly reports of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the relationship between humanitarian assistance and peace-keeping operations and on the military component of peace-keeping operations. The November note contained recommendations on command and control of operations, the decision-making process and consultations concerning peace-keeping, a UN rapid reaction force and capability, stand-by arrangements, the relationship with regional organizations and arrangements, safety of personnel, and the Secretariat's planning and management capacity.

Communication. On 11 September,⁽¹⁷⁾ Austria transmitted recommendations adopted by the Conference on the Preparation of the Civilian Personnel of UN Peace-keeping Operations (Schlaining, Austria, 1-3 July), organized by Austria as a contribution to the observance of the UN fiftieth anniversary.

Stand-by arrangements

In 1995, the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations expressed deep concern at continuing and protracted delays between the establishment of peace-keeping mandates and the deployment of missions, and reaffirmed the need to improve the UN rapid-response ability. Noting that the Secretary-General's proposal for a rapid reaction force had raised a variety of complex political, legal and financial issues, the Committee recommended that priority be given to reinforcing the system of stand-by arrangements, which should be extended to headquarters components, transport capacity and civilian police personnel. Member States were invited to identify elements capable of rapid deployment and to clarify their offers, including in terms of volume and the time needed for deployment. The Secretary-General was asked to develop a rapidly deployable headquarters team and to examine the question of establishing additional logistics bases, possibly on a regional basis. He was also requested to consider ways of coordinating arrangements for the storage and maintenance of equipment between operations.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 Security Council request,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General on 10 November 1995 reported⁽¹⁹⁾ on the current status of stand-by arrangements. Since the launch of that initiative in 1993, the Secretariat had been in regular contact with 80 Governments and its teams had visited 57 other countries. As at 31 October, 47 Member States had confirmed their willingness to provide stand-by resources totalling 55,000 personnel, up from 21 States in June 1994. Of the 47 Governments, some 30 had provided information on specific capabilities and two—Denmark and Jordan—formalized their stand-by arrangements through a memorandum of understanding. However, as the bulk of resources consisted of infantry, there was a need to complement them with necessary logistic support in such areas as communications, multi-role logistics, transport, health services, engineering, mine-clearing and transport utility aircraft. As most fully equipped troops were provided by members of the Group of Western European and Other States, the Secretariat continued to seek the broadest possible participation by Member States as well as a proper mix of troops and supporting units.

To facilitate the planning and preparation process, the Secretariat defined standard components or "building blocks" for constructing various types of operations. Those included: headquarters support units, infantry battalions, civilian police, communications units, air services, engineer support, health services, multi-role logistic units, transportation, maintenance, supply, movement control, and food and catering services. The Secretariat also sought to expand its database with detailed information from participating Governments, so it could determine in advance the requirements of peace-keeping forces and individual units. Since few Governments were able to adhere to the preferred response time for confirmed stand-by resources—defined as the period between the request for resources and when resources were ready for air/sealift to the mission area—the Secretariat had begun to register those periods according to the declared individual capacities of Member States, which varied from 7 to more than 90 days. That would facilitate plans for deployment of units with longer response times in later stages of an operation.

The Secretary-General concluded that the UN was currently far from having a rapid reaction capability, and that the issue should continue to be addressed by both Member States and the Secretariat.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 December, the President of the Security Council made the following statement⁽²⁰⁾ on behalf of Council members:

The Security Council has noted with interest and appreciation the report of the Secretary-General of 10 November 1995 on stand-by arrangements for peace-keeping operations. It recalls earlier statements by the President of the Security Council on this subject and strongly supports the efforts of the Secretary-General to enhance the capacity of the United Nations for the planning, rapid deployment and reinforcement and logistical support of peace-keeping operations.

The Security Council encourages Member States not yet doing so to participate in the stand-by arrangements. It invites them, and those States already participating in the arrangements, to provide information in as detailed a manner as possible on those elements which they are ready to make available to the United Nations. It also invites them to identify components, such as logistic support elements and sea/airlift resources, presently underrepresented in the arrangement. In this context the Security Council welcomes the initiative undertaken by the Secretariat for the creation of a stand-by Headquarters component within the Mission Planning Service of the Department of Peace-keeping Operations. The Security Council also joins with the Secretary-General in suggesting the establishment of partnerships between those troop-contributing countries that need equipment for units that may be provided to the United Nations and those Governments ready to provide such equipment and other support.

The Security Council looks forward to further reports from the Secretary-General on the progress of the stand-by arrangements initiative and undertakes to keep the matter under review.

Meeting number: SC 3609.

Consultations with troop contributors

The Special Committee in 1995 welcomed the new arrangements for consultation and exchanges of information with troop-contributing countries, as set out in a 1994 statement⁽²¹⁾ by the Security Council President. The Committee stressed that consultations should be held before the Council decided on the mandate of any particular mission and sufficiently in advance of decisions affecting existing operations. It encouraged the Secretary-General to transmit regular situation reports on all peace-keeping missions to troop contributors, Council members and, where possible, other Member States.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

On 8 December,⁽²²⁾ a number of Member States requested that the Council meet to consider further measures for enhancing arrangements for consultations with troop-contributing countries. On 20 December, the Security Council convened to hear the views of its members and of other Member States on the Council agenda item, "An agenda for peace: peace-keeping". At the meeting's conclusion, the Council President said those views would be taken into account when the Council gave further consideration to the question of consultations with troop contributors.

Cooperation with regional organizations

The Special Committee, at its 1995 session, encouraged the strengthening of cooperation between the UN and regional organizations in order to enhance the rapid reaction capability of the international community, and stressed the importance of the 1994 Declaration on the Enhancement of Cooperation between the United Nations and Regional Arrangements or Agencies in the Maintenance of International Peace and Security.⁽²³⁾ The Committee invited the Secretary-General to develop proposals for improving the capacity of the Organization to respond to emergency needs for conflict prevention and peace-keeping in Africa, in particular through cooperation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and subregional organizations.

The Security Council, in a 22 February statement by its President⁽¹⁰⁾ on the Secretary-General's Supplement to an Agenda for Peace, welcomed his willingness to assist regional organizations and arrangements in developing a capacity for preventive action, peacemaking and, where appropriate, peace-keeping, and drew particular attention in that regard to the needs of Africa.

In response to those requests, the Secretary-General on 1 November reported⁽²⁴⁾ on improving preparedness for conflict prevention and peace-keeping in Africa (see also PART ONE, Chapter I). He pointed out that the implementation of peace-keeping mandates in the region was affected by a lack of experienced personnel, insufficient material resources and the slow deployment of troops and equipment, and that any effort to strengthen the UN peace-keeping capacity should address those constraints. In that regard, he proposed to give priority to enhancing African participation in the system of stand-by arrangements; to share information on that participation with OAU, subject to the agreement of the States concerned; to compile a list of the specialized and heavy equipment needs of African participants; and to promote, on the basis of that information, bilateral "partnerships" among nations with complementary strengths, under which one country would make available the necessary troops while another would provide the required equipment. The Secretary-General noted that 10 African States had already agreed to participate in the system and that consultations on the subject had been held with other Governments in the region.

The report further reviewed issues relating to the training of personnel and to the planning and financing of operations. Among suggested measures were: a distribution campaign of UN peace-keeping training materials; regional training workshops and seminars; and joint peace-keeping exercises for key officers and, in the longer term, units of African contingents participating in stand-by arrangements. As for the financial aspects of enhancing preparedness for peace-keeping in Africa, the Secretary-General proposed the idea of "partnerships" also in the form of bilateral assistance, with no direct cost to the UN, which could be coordinated within the framework of stand-by arrangements. He observed that the Organization could assist in planning and evaluating logistic and financial requirements of approved regional or subregional peace-keeping operations and that the UN and OAU could consider co-deployment of their operations, as in Liberia.

By a 17 October note,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a JIU report on sharing responsibilities in peace-keeping between the UN and regional organizations.

Evaluation of peace-keeping operations

In accordance with a 1994 Assembly resolution,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General, by a 17 March note,⁽²⁷⁾ transmitted the final report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on an in-depth evaluation of the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations.

The report contained findings and recommendations on the Organization's capacity to provide overall direction and coordination for the start-up of missions, carry out preparations during the negotiation phase, learn from experience, allocate responsibility for support functions, and develop and maintain a ready capacity to act. It reviewed the status of such capacity in relation to substantive elements of complex missions, including information, electoral, repatriation, human rights, civilian police and military components, as well as in relation to support functions such as planning, financing, staffing, logistics, procurement and training. The report also examined humanitarian and civil administration aspects of peace-keeping operations and provided recommendations dealing with responsibility centres, doctrine, early warning, mobilization of international emergency response, coordination of humanitarian assistance, and civil administration.

The Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations welcomed the OIOS final report and underlined the importance of developing an institutionalized and systematic mechanism for analysis of the lessons to be drawn from each operation. In that regard, the Committee called on the Secretary-General to ensure that both his Special Representative and the mission commander report to him at the end of their tour or the mandate, and that Member States be briefed on completed operations.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) considered the OIOS final report at its 1995 session.⁽²⁸⁾ The Committee endorsed the recommendations dealing with mission assessment and the establishment of a documentation centre by DPKO; assignment of responsibilities for support functions to various units within DPKO and the Department of Administration and Management; coordination of peace-keeping readiness activities outside DPKO; civilian police and military components; planning for stand-by arrangements; elaboration of peace-keeping planning guidelines; a strategic plan for developing a ready capacity to act within the Secretariat; standard planning procedures for the start-up phase; development of a prototype of the analytical peace-keeping budgeting system; incorporation of provisions for security requirements into mission plans and budgets and security-related training of civilian personnel; revision of manuals on field administration, operational support and procurement; and OIOS review of compliance with recommendations on logistics and procurement issues.

CPC also endorsed the recommendations to draw up training guidelines and a peace-keeping training plan for military and civilian personnel from the Secretariat, but felt that the need to prepare similar guidelines for personnel contributed by other organizations required further examination. It recognized the importance of information in peace-keeping operations and recommended that the Secretary-General take necessary measures to provide adequate support in that area. The Committee concluded that the remaining five recommendations needed to be examined further by relevant inter-governmental bodies.

By a 31 August note,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an OIOS report on the review of the DPKO Field Administration and Logistics Division.

5. Decides that the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, should continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects; the Special Committee should review the implementation of its previous proposals and consider new proposals so as to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to fulfil its responsibilities in this field;

Financing of peace-keeping operations

In 1995, the cost of peace-keeping operations totalled an estimated $3.233 billion, of which $3.2 billion was financed from the special account and $33 million from the regular UN budget. The cost of activities funded from the support account for peace-keeping operations stood at an additional $33.3 million.

At the same time, unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to the peace-keeping budget amounted to f3 billion as at 10 August. To continue its peace-keeping operations, the Organization had to delay reimbursements to troop-contributing countries and payments owed for contingent-owned equipment, with the debt estimated to have reached the $1 billion mark by the end of the year.

During the year, the General Assembly considered various aspects of peace-keeping financing, including reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment, management of peace-keeping assets, procurement reform, entitlements of peace-keeping personnel, the support account and the apportionment of costs among Member States. The Assembly placed Palau in group D and reclassified Belarus and Portugal for the apportionment of peace-keeping expenses. Issues related to the peace-keeping scale of assessments were also discussed by the Assembly's High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations (see PART SIX, Chapter II).

Review of administrative and budgetary aspects

Further to its 1994 resolution,⁽¹⁾ the General Assembly, at its resumed forty-ninth session in

General Assembly decision 49/478 A

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/803/Add.3) without vote, 17 March (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.37), based on informal consultations; agenda item 132 (a).

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 Assembly request for a sample budget of a single peace-keeping operation,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General on 1 August 1995 submitted a mock-up budget⁽²⁾ of the UN peace-keeping activities in the former Yugoslavia, including UNPROFOR, UNCRO, UNPREDEP and the UN Peace Forces (UNPF) headquarters that reflected the modifications proposed by the Secretary-General in 1994.⁽³⁾ It included a month-by-month phasing-in of military and civilian personnel; a monthly phased budget showing the planned expenditure; a table of statistics highlighting deviations from standard interrelationships between staffing, vehicles, communications equipment and computers; and an organizational chart of all major components or divisions, functions and locations.

The mock-up budget also included a review of: the political mandate of the missions; their operational plan and requirements; status of assessed contributions, voluntary contributions and trust funds; financial administration from 12 January 1992 to 30 June 1995; cost estimates from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996; staffing requirements; status of reimbursement to troop-contributing Governments; observations and comments on previous recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ); status-of-forces agreements with host countries; and recommendations for action by the General Assembly.

ACABQ recommendations. The Advisory Committee, having considered the mock-up budget and additional information from the Controller and other representatives of the Secretary-General, recommended that future budgets should include: an explanation of the linkage between the political mandate of a mission and its operational requirements; a distinction between essential and support activities; full justification of resource requirements; a detailed description and cost estimates of activities financed from voluntary contributions and other sources; a comprehensive review of the cash situation, including unliquidated obligations; administrative and financial implications resulting from status-of-forces agreements; detailed information on the equipment to be transferred from UN stockpiles and from other operations; and information on budget performance for previous periods and the latest available financial data for the period in progress.

The Committee's recommendations were provided in its 1 December report⁽⁴⁾ to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

By decision 50/451 A of 22 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on the mock-up budget and endorsed ACABQ's observations and recommendations.

JIU report. By a 14 November note,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a JIU report on the military component of UN peace-keeping operations, containing recommendations on, inter alia, the rotation of troops, death and disability benefits, and reimbursement for and procurement of equipment.

Amendments to financial regulations

Pursuant to the Assembly's 1994 decision⁽¹⁾ that the financial period for each peace-keeping operation would be from 1 July to 30 June, the Secretary-General on 29 November submitted draft amendments⁽⁶⁾ to the Financial Regulations to change the budget cycle of peace-keeping operations. If amended, the regulations would incorporate provisions that: the financial period would consist of two consecutive calendar years, the first of which would be an even year, except for peace-keeping operations with special accounts whose financial periods would be one year from 1 July to 30 June (Financial Regulation 2.1); and that the accounts for the financial period, except those for peace-keeping operations with special accounts, would be submitted by the Secretary-General to the Board of Auditors no later than 31 March following the end of the financial period. The annual accounts for peace-keeping operations with special accounts would be submitted by the Secretary-General to the Board of Auditors no later than 30 September each year (Financial Regulation 11.4).

By decision 50/472 of 23 December, the General Assembly amended the Financial Regulations as proposed.

Reimbursement for troops and contingent-owned equipment

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General on 8 December reported⁽⁷⁾ on a reform of the procedure for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment. He noted that the reform—aimed at setting comprehensive standards for each category of equipment and establishing rates of reimbursement following procedures similar to those used for compensation to Member States for military contingent personnel—proceeded in accordance with the project plan and the timetable set out by the Assembly. The plan called for five phases, with phases II and III representing the critical aspects of the project.

As part of phase I, the Secretariat identified items for consideration as either major or minor contingent-owned equipment. Under phase II, a working group of technical experts from troop-contributing countries met from 27 March to 7 April to identify standards for major and minor equipment and consumables for which reimbursement would be authorized. The Phase II Working Group's recommendations were provided in its Chairman's report⁽⁸⁾ of 2 May. Also in May, an ad hoc working group of technical and financial experts from seven troop-contributing States met with Secretariat representatives to develop rates for consideration during phase III of the project.

A working group of financial experts, meeting under phase III from 10 to 20 July, considered recommendations of the Phase II Working Group, reviewed the reimbursement rates proposed by the ad hoc working group, and made recommendations for comprehensive reimbursement standards, which were contained in its Chairman's report⁽⁹⁾ of 20 July. Another ad hoc working group, meeting from 31 July to 4 August, concluded that the system proposed by the Phase III Working Group was less expensive to the Organization than the current methodology.

The Secretary-General therefore recommended that the General Assembly approve the following principles proposed by the Working Groups: the wet and dry lease concept and associated rates; the self-sustainment concept for reimbursement of minor equipment and consumables and services, and the associated rates; the policy concerning preparation costs; the transportation policy for deployment/redeployment, including loss and damage incurred during shipment, except inland transportation; the transportation policy concerning resupply of contingents; the identification of one or more ports of embarkation/disembarkation; the policy for reimbursement of ammunition; the proposal to include an insurance factor for loss or damage due to no-fault incidents; the proposal for a mission-approved hostility factor applicable to self-sustainment rates and the spare parts element of the wet lease; the proposal that the UN not be responsible for loss or damage incurred due to wilful misconduct or negligence; the proposal relating to loss or damage of contingent-owned equipment, except that it would not apply to special equipment; the proposed standards and verification procedures related to major equipment under the leasing concept; and the proposed standards related to minor equipment and services provided under the self-sustainment concept.

It was further recommended that the Assembly approve one environmental/operational mission-specific factor not exceeding 5 per cent of the reimbursement rates for minor equipment and of the leasing costs for major equipment.

It was recommended that the Assembly not approve the proposal for reimbursement for inland transportation, nor the proposals that, should the United Nations not meet its full liability under the lease system, total responsibility for loss or damage due to no-fault incidents to contingent-owned equipment and supplies would revert to the Organization; and that the UN be responsible for compensation for all loss and damage of major equipment due to hostile action or forced abandonment whose collective value equalled or exceeded $250,000. Should the Assembly decide to approve compensation for all loss and damage of major equipment due to hostile action or forced abandonment whose unit value equalled or exceeded $250,000, the Secretary-General recommended acceptance of such liability only if fixed and reasonable limits of the amounts compensable by the UN, per peace-keeping operation and per contributing Member State, were established.

Management of peace-keeping assets

As requested by the Assembly in 1994,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General on 3 July submitted a report⁽¹⁰⁾ on storage facilities for surplus peace-keeping assets as well as on mission start-up kits. He noted that the recent trend towards missions of short duration had made available to the Organization substantial amounts of reusable and temporarily surplus equipment and supplies, estimated at more than $100 million, which necessitated an update of the reserve stock concept. The proposed approach would provide for a modular system of mission start-up kits—preconfigured supplies—to be held in reserve. A single kit, valued at some $3.4 million, would be sufficient to sustain a mission of up to 100 persons for up to three months. The Secretariat intended to maintain five start-up kits, stocked in ways to facilitate immediate packing and shipment. That stock, once established, was to be maintained by replenishment from the budgets of the missions receiving kits. The Secretary-General further noted that the policy of transferring assets from closing operations to other missions and/or the start-up kit reserve was an efficient and cost-effective method of maintaining operational readiness, and that demobilization (formerly "liquidation") guidelines were being promulgated to ensure that UN assets were fully utilized throughout their serviceable life.

The report also reviewed the use of the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, the principal functions of which were to receive, inspect, repair and store surplus assets; to maintain a reserve of mission start-up kits; and to serve as a "rear logistics" base for UNPF in the former Yugoslavia. The Logistics Base was intended to perform a central coordinating activity for peace-keeping assets in general and to provide a broad oversight and control function. The Secretary-General estimated the immediate requirements for managing the overall operation in Brindisi at $6.6 million for the six months until 31 December, to be covered, as an ad hoc arrangement, from the existing budgets of UNPF as well as other missions. Accordingly, he recommended that the Assembly confirm its acceptance of Italy's offer of the premises in Brindisi, approve the establishment of the UN Logistics Base and take note of the mission start-up kit concept and of the ad hoc financing arrangements for 1995.

Procurement

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General on 22 June submitted a progress report⁽¹²⁾ on the implementation of procurement reform in the Secretariat. The report described the steps taken to date, including a training programme for procurement personnel of DPKO and on-the-job training for procurement personnel of peace-keeping operations; an increase in procurement authority granted to missions worldwide, including authority in key areas for commitments of up to 75 per cent against future allotments; as well as other issues relating to the use of system contracts, the vendor roster and database, responsibility sharing between DPKO and the Department of Administration and Management, a comprehensive review of financial regulations and rules and of standard operating procedures, staff resources, and the use of information technology. The Secretary-General pointed out that the position of a full-time Chairman of the Headquarters Committee on Contracts had been created and filled as at 1 June and that an Ombudsman's office was to be established by the end of the year to review vendors' complaints. He concluded that the work being done provided a firm foundation for further change in improving specifications, establishing a comprehensive vendor database and reviewing existing documentation to bring about greater standardization and simplification.

On 20 July, the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report, welcomed in decision 49/486 the progress made in the implementation of procurement reform.

Peace-keeping personnel

Death and disability benefits

On 2 June, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹³⁾ on death and disability benefits of UN peace-keeping personnel, as requested by the Assembly in 1994.⁽¹⁾ The report reviewed the current system of compensation for death or injury sustained by contingent troops while in the UN service and compared it with alternative schemes, based on the principles of: equal treatment of Member States, compensation to the beneficiary not lower than reimbursement by the UN, simplification of administrative arrangements and speedy settlement of death and disability claims.

The alternative options reviewed would provide for one of the following: replacing the current system with a uniform global insurance scheme to cover all troops; applying to contingent troops current arrangements for military observers and civilian police; introducing standardized rates of reimbursement for death and disability; establishing an amount payable to a troop-contributing country per soldier per month to enable national authorities to provide suitable compensation, in lieu of any other reimbursement by the UN for service-incurred death or disability; or adding to the current system either a reasonable minimum level of compensation or a liability ceiling.

Upon review, the Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve a UN-administered global insurance system of standardized awards for death and disability, as both the fairest and most practical scheme, and consider extending it to military observers and civilian police as well. The level of awards, to be determined by Member States, was suggested at $50,000 for service-incurred death.

ACABQ recommendations. In October,⁽¹⁴⁾ ACABQ considered the Secretary-General's report and observed that a necessary prerequisite for a new system was agreement on the precise legal status of contingent personnel and the nature of their legal, administrative and operational relationship with the Organization and their Government. The Advisory Committee requested further guidance from the Assembly as to whether payments should be in the form of an allowance, a reimbursement or an award and whether they should be made to Member States or individuals directly; the amount to be paid by the United Nations; the status of the additional allowance mechanism put forward by the Secretary-General in his additional option; and whether an insurance scheme should be established. Pending the introduction of a new system, the Committee recommended improving the management of the current system so as to handle outstanding claims expeditiously.

Entitlements of mission staff

In a 1 December report⁽¹⁵⁾ on entitlements of staff assigned to peace-keeping missions, including mission subsistence allowance (MSA), the Secretary-General reviewed the entitlements applicable both to the normal movement of staff under regular rotation or assignment schemes and to special and non-family missions, and examined the purpose of MSA; the procedure for establishing and maintaining MSA rates; eligibility criteria for receipt of MSA; the relationships between MSA and daily subsistence allowance and between MSA, hazard pay and hardship allowance; and MSA in relation to the practices of the comparator civil service. He concluded that MSA, defined as the Organization's total contribution towards living expenses incurred in the field in connection with special mission assignment and applicable to international personnel assigned to peace-keeping and other UN operations in the field, was a central element in the entitlements of mission staff and one which provided a cost-effective and administratively simple mechanism to meet subsistence costs. As currently established and applied, MSA was commensurate with the exposure of staff to expenses arising from mission service, its rates being lower than either the equivalent entitlements in the comparator civil service or the daily subsistence allowance established by the International Civil Service Commission for short-term travel purposes.

Apportionment of costs

In 1995, the General Assembly again considered the question of placement of Member States into groups for the apportionment of peace-keeping expenses. First specified in 1973⁽¹⁶⁾ and again in March 1989,⁽¹⁷⁾ the groups were subsequently adjusted in December 1989⁽¹⁸⁾ and in 1991.⁽¹⁹⁾ The original four groups were: (A) permanent members of the Security Council; (B) specifically named economically developed Member States not permanent members of the Council; (C) economically less developed Member States; and (D) economically less developed Member States that were specifically named. In 1993,⁽²⁰⁾ Belarus and Ukraine, citing economic hardship since the breakup of the former Soviet Union, had requested reclassification from group B to group C. In 1994,⁽²¹⁾ the Assembly had called on both countries to prepare proposals for the treatment of their arrears in the financing of peace-keeping operations.

Belarus

On 20 July, the General Assembly, by resolution 49/249 A, decided to consider the request of Belarus for reclassification and to take action no later than at its fiftieth session.

On 14 August,⁽²²⁾ Belarus transmitted a memorandum regarding its relocation to group C. It stated that the original motives for assigning Belarus to group B had become historically obsolete, its legal status under international law had changed and its economic situation had greatly deteriorated. Belarus said it faced a serious and constant decline in its solvency, due to such factors as bearing, almost singlehandedly, the cost of mitigating the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, and substantial expenses resulting from disarmament treaty obligations, including destroying weapons. Belarus, due to conditions beyond its control, had therefore become chronically in arrears for financing peace-keeping operations. Given the discrepancy between its rate of assessment and its capacity to pay, and taking into account the relocation of Portugal from group C to group B (see below), Belarus requested to be relocated to group C, which would have no financial implications for other Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 September, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/249 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and its subsequent resolutions relating to the composition of the groups for the apportionment of the expenses of peace-keeping operations, the latest of which is resolution 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993,

Recalling also its resolution 49/249 A of 20 July 1995 and its decision 49/470 A of 23 December 1994,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the report of the Fifth Committee of 19 July 1995 on the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peace-keeping operations,

Having considered the request of Belarus for reclassification from group B to group G,

Recognizing that the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations is considering, inter alia, issues relevant to this matter and noting divergent views expressed thereon,

1. Decides, as a special ad hoc arrangement, to place Belarus among the Member States referred to in paragraph 3 (c) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, on the understanding that the reduction in the United States dollar amounts to be assessed on Belarus beginning 1 July 1995 shall be equal to the additional United States dollar amounts assessed on Portugal in accordance with Assembly resolution 49/249 A, on the basis that this decision will be adjusted as appropriate to conform with any future relevant decisions adopted by the Assembly;

2. Takes note of the stated intention of Belarus concerning the treatment of its arrears.

General Assembly resolution 49/249 B

14 September 1995 Meeting 107 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/947/Add.1) without vote, 13 September (meeting 69); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.70), based on informal consultations; agenda item 132.

Before adoption of the resolution in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, Belarus had made a statement pointing out that its Government was considering a procedure and timetable for payments of its arrears and that it would inform the Assembly during its fiftieth session of its intentions in that matter.

Palau

By decision 50/451 B of 23 December, the General Assembly, as an ad hoc arrangement, included Palau in group D of Member States for the apportionment of peace-keeping appropriations.

Portugal

On 20 July, the Assembly adopted resolution 49/249 A.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973 and its subsequent resolutions relating to the composition of the existing groups, the latest of which is resolution 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993,

Having received the request of Belarus for reclassification from group B to group C,

1. Welcomes with great satisfaction the voluntary decision made by the Government of Portugal to reclassify Portugal from group C to group B;

2. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to note the voluntary decision made by the Government of Portugal and to place Portugal among the Member States referred to in paragraph 3 (b) of its resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989 and, in accordance with that decision, to apportion its share of the costs of peace-keeping operations financed through assessed contributions on the basis of the proportion determined by the scale of assessments in the following manner: 35 per cent beginning 1 July 1995, 50 per cent in 1996, 70 per cent in 1997, 85 per cent in 1998 and 100 per cent in 1999 and subsequent years;

3. Also decides to consider the request of Belarus for reclassification from group B to group C at its resumed forty-ninth session and to take action thereon no later than at its fiftieth session.

General Assembly resolution 49/249 A

20 July 1995 Meeting 106 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/947) without vote, 14 July (meeting 66); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.64), based on informal consultations; agenda item 132.

Ukraine

By decision 49/493 of 20 July, the Assembly included in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session the sub-item on relocation of Ukraine to group C.

On 27 September,⁽²³⁾ Ukraine transmitted a letter from its President concerning that country's arrears. The letter pointed out that as a result of the redistribution of the assessment of the former USSR, Ukraine's rate of assessment was three times higher than its capacity to pay. The unprecedented 50 per cent increase in its contribution to the regular UN budget was not based on real economic indicators. At the same time, Ukraine's transition to a market economy required additional financial resources, and the country was incurring considerable economic losses implementing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Asserting that Ukraine was not in a position to pay its outstanding contribution as a result of conditions beyond its control, its President requested that the country be placed in group C for the apportionment of peace-keeping expenses.

On 23 December, the General Assembly, by decision 50/474, deferred action on the relocation of Ukraine to group C until its resumed fiftieth session in 1996.

Support account for peace-keeping operations

In 1995, the General Assembly continued to examine issues relating to the support account established in 1990 for peace-keeping operations. The account was intended to meet the needs at Headquarters for the support of ongoing operations and some of the additional workload during the pre-implementation phase of prospective missions. It was funded by including in, and setting aside from, the budgets of all operations financed outside the regular budget an amount equalling 8.5 per cent of the cost of the mission's civilian staff component (salaries, common staff costs and travel). Those moneys were to be kept in a separate account and used to fund temporary posts. The cost of activities funded during the year stood at $33.3 million, while the support account income totalled less than $33.2 million, leaving an operating deficit of some $145,000. The income comprised $25.1 million generated by applying the funding formula, $7.9 million of unencumbered balance from the prior year and some $32,000 transferred from the operating reserve.

ACABQ recommendations. In May,⁽²⁴⁾ ACABQ submitted to the Assembly its recommendations and observations concerning the Secretary-General's 1994 report⁽²⁵⁾ on the support account.

The Advisory Committee recommended maintaining the concept of a support account, including its method of financing, but restoring simplicity to the procedures for the approval of expenditures. It suggested that proposals for variations from previously approved levels in the number of posts financed from the special account be justified on an individual basis and be subject to procedures for classification as to grade; that specific requests for such variations be considered by ACABQ on behalf of the General Assembly; and that requests under the support account be justified not only on the basis of workload and operational need but also in the context of the totality of resources available to the particular unit or programme. The Committee stated that the requirements of the UN Financial Regulations and Rules as well as Staff Regulations and Rules must be fully respected and recommended that the Secretary-General review all previously authorized posts in the support account to ensure that they were used only for purposes approved by the Assembly, that they had been properly classified and that their vacancy announcements were handled in compliance with Staff Rules and procedures.

ACABQ further reviewed resource requirements for 1995 and recommended approval of non-post resources for the period from 1 April to 31 December 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

On 12 July, the General Assembly decided to maintain the current level of resources approved under the support account for peace-keeping operations for the month of July 1995 (decision 49/478 B).

On 20 July, the Assembly adopted resolution 49/250.

Support account for peace-keeping operations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/258 of 3 May 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 48/226 A, B and C of 23 December 1993 and 5 April and 29 July 1994, respectively, and decisions 48/489 of 8 July 1994 and 49/469 of 23 December 1994,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the support account for peace-keeping operations and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reaffirming the need to continue to improve the administrative and financial management of peace-keeping operations,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Decides that support account funds shall be used for the sole purpose of financing human and non-human resource requirements for backstopping and supporting peace-keeping operations at Headquarters, and that any change to this limitation will require the prior approval of the General Assembly;

3. Decides also to maintain the current methodology of financing the support account at the rate of 8.5 per cent of the estimated cost of the civilian staff component of each peace-keeping operation, on the understanding that this percentage shall be reviewed annually and for the first time no later than the spring of 1996, taking into account the report to be submitted by the Board of Auditors;

4. Affirms that upon the approval of a peace-keeping budget the amounts thus approved with regard to the support account are funds appropriated and therefore available to the Secretary-General, subject to specific use and purpose as specified by the General Assembly;

5. Also affirms that the level of resources is clearly a function of the income in the support account and that, therefore, it is the responsibility of the Secretary-General to ensure that, at any one time, the level of income to the support account is not exceeded;

6. Decides that once a year, for its consideration and approval, the Secretary-General shall submit to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee, a report on the use of the resources in the support account during the past calendar year and on the proposed expenditure for the following twelve-month period beginning 1 July, specifying the proposed establishment of posts and the projected expenditure for non-post requirements by category of expenditure, including, for the former, the grade structure in tabular form;

7. Decides also, taking into account the above-mentioned responsibility of the Secretary-General to ensure that expenditure remains within the level of income, to authorize the Secretary-General to redeploy and discontinue posts, according to functional requirements, and requests him to report thereon every six months to the General Assembly for information purposes;

8. Decides further that posts funded from the support account shall be filled and managed in compliance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and relevant General Assembly resolutions, including, where appropriate, the classification and advertisement of posts approved for more than ninety days;

9. Requests the Board of Auditors to report on an interim basis to the General Assembly by 31 October 1995 on the management of the support account, including, inter alia, the appropriateness of the funding level in view of actual experience, taking into account actions taken by relevant intergovernmental bodies, consistency in the use of human resources for purposes authorized by the Assembly and confirmation that contractual arrangements for the employment of personnel are consistent with the temporary nature of the posts;

10. Welcomes the contribution by Member States, on a non-reimbursable basis, of personnel to fill backstopping positions within the Department of Peace-keeping Operations, and reiterates its request to the Secretary-General contained in paragraph 7 of its resolution 48/226 C;

11. Authorizes, for the period from 1 July 1995, the continuation of the 346 posts previously authorized, and notes the redeployment of 10 posts (5 Professional and 5 General Service) from the Finance Management and Support Service of the Field Administration and Logistics Division, Department of Peace-keeping Operations, to the Accounts Division (3 Professional and 2 General Service) and the Peace-keeping Financing Division (2 Professional and 3 General Service), Department of Administration and Management;

12. Also authorizes, on an exceptional basis, for the period from 1 July 1995 to 31 January 1996, the conversion of the 61 positions under general temporary assistance to temporary posts exclusively for the purposes proposed by the Secretary-General in his report, including, inter alia, staffing of the Civilian Police Unit, on the understanding that the contracts for the staff encumbering these posts will terminate on 31 January 1996 unless the General Assembly decides otherwise;

13. Decides that further consideration of these staffing requirements will be subject to review during the autumn part of its fiftieth session, based on additional information provided by the Secretary-General through established procedures on, inter alia, the 61 posts cited in paragraph 12 above (to include, inter alia, an organizational chart reflecting current number, grade and function of posts), and the report by the Board of Auditors requested in paragraph 3 above;

14. Authorizes the resources for general temporary assistance, including the position of Special Adviser to the Secretary-General (319,600 United States dollars), overtime (157,500 dollars), travel on official business (90,000 dollars), training (372,500 dollars) and common services (4,028,200 dollars) for the period from 1 April to 31 December 1995.

General Assembly resolution 49/250

20 July 1995 Meeting 106 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/803/Add.5) without vote, 14 July (meeting 66); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.68), based on informal consultations and orally amended by Ireland; agenda item 132 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 55, 61, 66; plenary 106.

Fifth Committee consideration. On 28 November,⁽²⁶⁾ the Fifth Committee, in considering the question of financing peace-keeping operations, heard a statement by the Controller concerning the support account. The Controller pointed to an anticipated 50 per cent decrease in support account income for 1996, as a result of the reduction in peace-keeping budgets, and to the ongoing efforts to reduce support account staffing requirements. He also observed that the current formula of financing the account had not foreseen the recent expansion of the Secretariat's role and responsibilities in backstopping peace-keeping operations, noting that completed missions did not generate income for the support account but continued to require backstopping activities. In addition, a recent increase in the military component of operations changed the ratio of military to civilian personnel and significantly transformed the Secretariat's administrative backstopping requirements. In that regard, it was recommended that the current financing formula, based solely on civilian costs, be reviewed. The Controller also stated that it might be appropriate, in order to avoid wide fluctuations in the level of the support account, to establish a separate budget for backstopping requirements, to be financed according to the peace-keeping scale of assessment. He also listed staffing requirements for the beginning of 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 23 December, the General Assembly, noting the Controller's statement on the support account, decided to review at its resumed fiftieth session in 1996 the current methodology for financing the account and, on an exceptional basis, to establish a temporary post of Special Adviser to the Secretary-General; extend the 61 temporary posts authorized in July 1995 for the period from 1 February to 31 March 1996; and authorize $40,000 for overtime and $900,000 for common services for the period from 1 January to 31 March 1996 (decision 50/473).

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses

In a 17 November report,⁽²⁷⁾ submitted in preparation of the UN programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997 (see PART SIX, Chapter II), the Secretary-General pointed out that, in the light of the increased demand for his good offices and peace-making activities as well as the expansion of peace-keeping operations, the level of commitment authority to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, granted to him under a 1993 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁸⁾ was proving to be inadequate. Under the current procedure, he was authorized to enter into commitments of up to $5 million per year, without prior concurrence of ACABQ, for unforeseen activities certified by him as relating to the maintenance of peace and security. That commitment had been used principally for the appointment of special envoys for peacemaking activities, fact-finding and advisory missions, as well as for the establishment of political offices upon completion of peace-keeping missions. At the same time, financial requirements to implement Security Council decisions relating to both peace and security and peace-keeping operations, without prior concurrence of ACABQ, had to be met from the balance remaining of the $5 million per year.

The Secretary-General noted that the $5 million ceiling had been reached in October, committing him to seeking the concurrence of ACABQ for all additional unforeseen expenses. However, given the level of detail required by the Advisory Committee, that process took several weeks to complete, which created a time-lag between Security Council decisions and the granting of commitment authority by ACABQ. At the same time, those decisions often necessitated urgent action, such as the dispatch of advance teams during the start-up phase. Owing to the urgent nature of start-up requirements of new or expanded operations, the Secretary-General said he did not have the time to make a presentation and await the concurrence of the Advisory Committee.

The Secretary-General concluded that the current procedures needed to be revised so as to avoid situations whereby he was prevented from taking prompt action because of delays and/or financial constraints. He recommended that his authority to incur expenditures for the maintenance of peace and security be increased to $7 million in any one year of the biennium, and that he be granted authority to enter into commitments not exceeding $3 million in any one year, without prior concurrence of ACABQ for the immediate requirements of the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations or for unforeseen extensions of mandates by the Security Council.

In December, the Fifth Committee, noting that ACABQ had been unable to consider the report in depth for lack of time, deferred consideration of the issue to the resumed fiftieth session. The General Assembly, by resolution 50/216, section IX, of 23 December, decided to consider the Secretary-General's report at its resumed session and authorized him to continue with the current arrangements until a decision on his proposal was taken.

Liquidation of missions

By a 2 August note,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Board of Auditors on the liquidation audit of the UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia (see PART TWO, Chapter IV), in which the Board recommended, inter alia, that standard procedures be developed for the transfer and acknowledgement of assets redeployed from a peace-keeping operation in liquidation to other missions or UN bodies; a physical verification of the assets and liabilities of a mission in liquidation be carried out before the assets were realized and liabilities discharged; and, pending the establishment of a policy on the valuation and transfer of costs of assets between missions, the current practice of not giving credit to operations under liquidation for assets transferred to other missions be reported in a note to the consolidated financial statements of peace-keeping operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/204 C under the item on financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/211 of 23 December 1992 and 48/216 B of 23 December 1993, as well as previous relevant resolutions,

Noting that the responses requested in the aforementioned resolutions have not been received,

Noting with concern the numerous weaknesses highlighted by the Board of Auditors in its report on the liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia, especially as far as inventories are concerned,

Deeply concerned by the delays encountered in liquidating the Transitional Authority,

Bearing in mind that a number of peace-keeping operations are expected to be scaled down and liquidated during the next twelve months,

Taking note of the observation of the Board of Auditors in its report that there is at present no policy on the valuation and transfer of costs of assets between missions,

Noting the absence of standard procedures for the transfer and acknowledgement of assets between missions and United Nations entities,

Noting also that the Board of Auditors has recommended the establishment of appropriate policies and procedures for the valuation, transfer and disposal of assets of missions for consistent application in peace-keeping operations,

1. Notes with regret that the Secretary-General has not yet completed the feasibility study on procedures for the valuation and transfer of costs of assets redeployed from a peace-keeping operation in liquidation to other operations or United Nations bodies, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to proceed with all urgency to complete the study mentioned in paragraph 1 above and submit it to the General Assembly at the earliest opportunity during the first part of its resumed fiftieth session;

3. Takes note with concern of the findings of the Board of Auditors on the audit of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and the need for an additional review as a consequence of the many unresolved administrative and financial issues involved and the incomplete nature of the liquidation documentation available to the Board;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to study the most expeditious and cost-effective ways of liquidating peace-keeping operations and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its resumed fiftieth session;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to take immediate action to implement the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, keeping the Board fully informed regarding the measures being taken, and requests the Board to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

6. Regrets the absence of a report on measures taken or proposed to be taken by the Secretariat in response to the recommendations contained in the report of the Board of Auditors;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit such a report to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, before the beginning of the first part of its resumed fiftieth session, containing, inter alia, proposals for establishing:

(a) An appropriate policy for the physical verification of all assets and liabilities of a mission in liquidation before its assets are disposed of and its liabilities discharged;

(b) Standard procedures for the transfer of assets and the acknowledgement of assets transferred to other missions and other United Nations entities;

(c) Standard procedures for the valuation of all assets of a mission in liquidation as well as an appropriate policy for the financial accounting of transfers of assets for consistent application in all peace-keeping operations;

8. Appeals to Member States to pay their assessed and pledged contributions as soon as possible, in order to facilitate the completion of the liquidation process.

Chapter II

Africa

Millions of Africans continued to suffer in 1995 as a consequence of ethnic strife, political tensions and economic difficulties, despite intense United Nations efforts to address those often-tragic situations in a variety of ways during the year. While some progress was made in creating political frameworks for dealing with ongoing crises, the prognosis for Africa remained bleak.

Civil wars persisted in Burundi, Liberia and Sierra Leone. The flow of arms into those countries was a serious problem. The consequences of other conflicts—in Angola, Mozambique, Rwanda and Somalia—continued to plague those nations.

The plight of the vast numbers of African refugees and internally displaced persons, many in overcrowded camps concentrated in the central and western parts of the continent, was the focus of activities by several UN organizations, in particular the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights. A Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region was held in February in Bujumbura, Burundi. Consultations were held with regard to convening another Great Lakes regional conference—on security, stability and development—as called for by the Security Council.

The dispatch by the United Nations of humanitarian and emergency aid for Africa (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), as well as efforts to promote rehabilitation and reconstruction, brought some relief and hope for a brighter future.

Four of the 16 United Nations peace-keeping operations active at the end of 1995 were based in Africa: a new, third UN Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III); the UN Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL); the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR); and MINURSO, the UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (see PART ONE, Chapter III). Two others—the second UN Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II) and the UN Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ)—concluded in the early part of 1995.

A Security Council mission was sent to Rwanda and Burundi in February to assess the deteriorating political and social situations in those nations. An arms embargo against Rwanda was lifted in September. A first-time Human Rights Field Operation was launched in Rwanda, and a Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burundi was appointed. Two Special Envoys were sent to Rwanda in 1995, one to consult on possible deployment of UN observers in neighbouring countries, the other on a security conference for the Great Lakes region. The International Tribunal for Rwanda began the process of bringing to justice those responsible for genocidal acts in that country.

For Liberia, against the backdrop of the continuing conflict, the Abuja Agreement was signed in August, renewing the cease-fire—broken again later in the year—and instituting the Liberian National Transitional Government. Neighbouring Sierra Leone, also victimized by the consequences of a political coup, saw 2 million internally displaced as it struggled to prepare for 1996 elections.

In Angola, implementation of the 1994 Lusaka Protocol included efforts to demobilize and integrate former combatants into a peaceful society. In Mozambique, the withdrawal of ONUMOZ signalled the full implementation of the 1992 Rome General Peace Agreement.

Another final chapter in UN peace-keeping history was written with the withdrawal of UNOSOM II from Mogadishu at the end of March 1995. The Secretary-General stressed that the United Nations was not abandoning Somalia; there were, however, important lessons to be learned from the UN experience in that country and the clear line that needed to be drawn between peace-keeping and enforcement action, he said.

The General Assembly on 15 December 1995 accepted, due to exceptional and unique circumstances, South Africa's request not to pay its contributions for the 20-year period from September 1974 to June 1994, when a democratic, non-racial Government, elected after the full elimination of the apartheid system, was inaugurated and resumed participation in the work of the Assembly.

Angola

During 1995, the UN Security Council reported slow progress in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol,⁽¹⁾ signed on 20 November 1994 by the Government of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA), with the goal of re-establishing peace and stability in the country and achieving national reconciliation.

In February 1995, the Security Council established the third UN Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III), with an authorized strength of more than 7,000, to assist the parties in implementing the Protocol. It succeeded two previous UN operations in Angola—UNAVEM I,⁽²⁾ an observer group established in December 1988 to verify the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, and UNAVEM II,⁽³⁾ established in May 1991 to verify the Peace Accords (Acordos de Paz), signed earlier in the month to establish a cease-fire and transition period leading to elections, stability and internal security, including the formation of a single national army. The first multi-party elections in Angola were held in September 1992,⁽⁴⁾ the results of which were, however, disputed. Fighting resumed and, despite a UN cease-fire, escalated throughout 1993. Peace negotiations culminated in the adoption of the Lusaka Protocol in 1994.

During 1995, efforts focused on the demobilization and integration of armed forces, demining, restoring Angola's infrastructure, including roads, providing humanitarian assistance and return of refugees. Meetings were held between Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos and Jonas Savimbi, President of UNITA, to reach agreement on outstanding issues. Despite a 13 November joint statement declaring that all issues had been resolved, by the end of the year the Security Council noted that certain tasks required for full implementation of the Protocol had not been completed, including exchange of detailed military information, release of all prisoners, demobilization, disarming and quartering of troops, and final resolution of the issue of mercenaries.

Implementation of Lusaka Protocol

On 10 January, the Chiefs of Staff of the Angolan Armed Forces (FAA) and the military forces of UNITA met in Chipipa to consolidate the cease-fire and promote the military elements of the Lusaka Protocol. By a joint statement⁽⁵⁾ on the same day, they agreed to ensure the immediate cessation of hostilities throughout the country; to proceed with demobilization of troops in sensitive areas, starting in Huambo and Uige, Moxico, Lunda Norte and Lunda Sul, Malange, and Bailundo and Andulo, in order of priority; to enable surveying of all the areas proposed for the deployment of UN troops and to provide operational support; to permit the movement of people and goods within the whole national territory; to form joint work teams for the land-mine deactivation operations and assist UNAVEM, including providing information on land-mines, surveying operations and mine deactivation; to cooperate with UNAVEM to enable it to establish monitoring and verification teams and permit access to all areas in the country; to ensure the cessation of all hostile propaganda between the parties; to establish three-way communications, effective 12 January; and to release all military prisoners and supply a list of their names to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

Third UN peace-keeping operation (UNAVEM III)

Communication. In a 24 January message⁽⁶⁾ to the Secretary-General, the President of Angola stated that the Government was deeply committed to the 1994 Lusaka Protocol and had taken initiatives which had contributed to the detente of the internal political climate and were conducive to establishing a basis for mutual trust between the Angolan authorities and UNITA, so that the implementation of the understandings reached in Lusaka might proceed normally. It was crucial that the mechanisms in the Protocol be immediately established, not only to speed the process significantly, but also to strengthen peace. The Government believed that UN efforts would have a more effective impact on the peace process if the Security Council approved UNAVEM III at its next meeting on 8 February. That would demonstrate the determination with which the international community viewed the maintenance of peace in Angola and help eliminate a certain ambiguity and hesitation that still seemed to persist within UNITA.

Report of the Secretary-General (February). On 1 February, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁷⁾ that as at 25 January the number of UN military observers in Angola had increased from 50 to 171, and civilian police observers, from 18 to 122. Before the expiry of the UNAVEM II mandate on 8 February, the combined total of military and police personnel was expected to be 400. They were deployed to 22 sites throughout the country, in addition to headquarters in Luanda and recently established regional headquarters in Huambo, Lubango, Luena, Menongue, Saurimo and Uige. Thirty outstations were expected to be established soon in the most critical areas.

As mandated by the Security Council in 1994,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General had continued contingency planning for an enlarged UN operation in Angola and intensified contact with potential contributors, who had indicated their willingness to contribute a significant number of units and military and police personnel.

The Secretary-General recommended that a new UN operation—UNAVEM III—immediately take over from UNAVEM II. The main features of its new mandate would be (1) political: to assist in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol by providing good offices and mediation to the parties and taking appropriate initiatives to give impetus to the peace process; (2) military: to supervise, control and verify the disengagement of forces and to monitor the cease-fire, verify information received from the Government and UNITA regarding their forces, verify and monitor all troop movements, assist in the establishment of quartering areas, verify and monitor the withdrawal, quartering and demobilization of UNITA forces, supervise the collection and storage of UNITA armaments, verify the movement of FAA to barracks and monitor the completion of its formation and other tasks, and verify the free circulation of persons and goods; (3) police: to verify and monitor the neutrality of the Angolan National Police, the disarming of civilians, the quartering of the rapid reaction police, and security arrangements for UNITA leaders; (4) humanitarian: to coordinate, facilitate and support humanitarian activities directly linked to the peace process, in particular those relating to the quartering and demobilization of troops and their integration into civilian life, as well as participating in mine-clearing activities; (5) electoral: to declare formally that all requirements for holding the second round of presidential elections had been fulfilled and to support, verify and monitor the entire electoral process. The new operation would be authorized to use force in self-defence, including against forcible attempts to impede the discharge of its mandate.

The Mission, with headquarters remaining in Luanda, would be led by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Alioune Blondin Beye (Mali); its political affairs component would be headed by a senior political affairs officer, with officers at each of the six regional headquarters, and would include a public information section, with staff available to establish a UNAVEM radio station. The military component would be headed by a force commander and would include military observers and formed units. There would also be a demobilization and reintegration office to assist in quartering and demobilization. The police observer component would be headed by a chief police observer in Luanda and would have six regional headquarters. There would also be an administrative component. The Special Representative would have authority over all activities in support of the peace process and would oversee coordination efforts. All components would rely on integrated logistic, air support, communication and medical evacuation systems. A main logistic base would be established in the port city of Lobito, supplemented by one or two hub stations in the countryside, to avoid the serious bottlenecks being experienced at the port and airport of Luanda. The Secretary-General had instructed his Special Representative to pursue with the Government the provision of adequate material support to all elements of UNAVEM. At the same time, UNAVEM was discussing with the authorities the need for the Government to demine, repair and open as soon as possible major supply routes and airfields, as well as prepare accommodation and storage facilities throughout the country.

The Secretary-General observed that the cease-fire, which entered into force on 22 November 1994, was generally holding. However, despite steps announced on 10 January 1995 at the meeting of the Chiefs of Staff of FAA and UNITA (see above), expeditious measures were needed to facilitate further the effective application of the free movement of persons and goods, the functioning of the triangular communications system, the start of mine-clearing, and the disengagement of troops in areas of tension.

The Joint Commission, the principal body in charge of the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, in which the two parties and the three observer countries (Portugal, the Russian Federation and the United States) participated, had met several times since the return of the UNITA delegation to Luanda in December 1994. Other high-level contacts between the Government and UNITA officials had contributed to improved relations between the two parties. Conditions for the delivery of humanitarian assistance had also improved considerably.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

Authorizes the immediate deployment of such planning and support elements as are needed to prepare for the deployment of peace-keeping forces provided that the Secretary-General remains satisfied that an effective cease-fire and effective joint cease-fire monitoring mechanisms are in place, and that both parties are allowing the free and safe flow of humanitarian assistance throughout the country, and authorizes the subsequent deployment of such additional elements as are necessary to establish operational quartering areas for UNITA forces;

4. Decides that the deployment of infantry units will take place on the basis of a report from the Secretary-General to the Security Council that the conditions contained in paragraph 32 of the Secretary-General's report, inter alia, effective cessation of hostilities, provision of all relevant military data, and designation of all quartering areas, have been met, provided the Council does not decide otherwise;

12. Reaffirms the obligation of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of resolution 864(1993), and calls upon the Government of Angola and UNITA during UNAVEM III's presence in Angola to cease any acquisition of arms and war materiel, as agreed upon in the "Acordos de Paz", and to devote their resources instead to priority humanitarian and social needs;

13. Calls upon the Government of Angola to conclude no later than 20 March 1995 an agreement with the United Nations on the status of forces;

14. Encourages the Secretary-General to pursue urgently the offer of direct assistance by the Government of Angola to UNAVEM III, to reflect this as appropriate in the Status-of-Forces Agreement referred to in paragraph 13 above, and to explore with the Government of Angola and UNITA possibilities for substantial additional assistance related to peace-keeping and to report to the Council on the results of these explorations;

15. Urges Member States to respond positively to the request made to them by the Secretary-General to contribute personnel, equipment and other resources to UNAVEM III in order to facilitate its early deployment;

Security Council resolution 976(1995)

8 February 1995 Meeting 3499 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/117).

On 14 February, the President of Angola informed⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General that while Angola welcomed the decision to deploy UN peace-keeping forces, it was concerned about the Council call in paragraph 12 of resolution 976(1995) for the cessation of the acquisition of arms and war materiel. That was not in conformity with the right to exercise fully its sovereignty and defend its territorial integrity, as well as to have the means to achieve that objective, he said. It constituted a departure from and was incompatible with the Lusaka Protocol, whose spirit and letter recognized the rights and competences of the Government on the issue of national defence. Angola reaffirmed its willingness to continue collaborating with the United Nations so that UNAVEM III could accomplish its mission of peace. It wished that the United Nations would also obtain the necessary cooperation from UNITA.

In a further letter,⁽¹⁰⁾ on 3 March, Angola provided details of UNITA actions which, it alleged, related to intense preparations for war. Those included impeding the free movement of people and goods; attacks against UN and government aircraft; forced recruitment and training of young people by foreign instructors; lack of compliance with the decisions regarding the disengagement of forces; reactivation and enlargement of airfields, in locations such as Andulo and Nagage, to permit the landing of large transport aircraft with war materiel; and attacks against humanitarian assistance convoys.

Angola believed that there was still time to halt the military adventure that UNITA intended to launch again. It proposed setting a time-period for UNITA to fulfil provisions of the Lusaka Protocol not implemented to date; if, at the end of that period, UNITA maintained the same attitude, the application of a second package of sanctions should be considered. In addition, the Sanctions Committee should establish an effective monitoring programme for Zaire, in view of that country's non-observance of Security Council resolution 864(1993).⁽¹¹⁾ Angola added that it had also verified outside the country worrisome signs of UNITA's preparation for war.

Report of the Secretary-General (March). In his first progress report on UNAVEM III,⁽¹²⁾ dated 5 March, the Secretary-General said that its establishment had bolstered the hopes of the Angolan people for genuine peace and national reconciliation. His Special Representative, in continuing efforts to facilitate the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, had met with the President of UNITA and later with the President of Angola. Mr. Savimbi assured the Special Representative of his readiness to participate in the proposed meeting with President dos Santos and to begin discussions with the Government on the modalities for it, with the participation of UNAVEM. Moreover, the UNITA leader agreed to consider, in the context of political consultations between the two parties, or at the meeting with President dos Santos, the incorporation of UNITA members into the Government. An understanding was reached that the issue of mercenaries and the early release of prisoners would be considered by the Joint Commission. The Secretary-General said that President dos Santos had confirmed his readiness to meet with Mr. Savimbi. The Secretary-General hoped that both sides would move expeditiously to organize and hold the meeting, so as to signal to the Angolans and the international community that the national reconciliation process had effectively begun.

The Joint Commission, chaired by the Special Representative, held an extraordinary session on 20 February to discuss a 13 February incident in which a UN helicopter was shot at in Quibaxe, Cuanza Sul province. The Commission noted that UNITA had recognized its responsibility for the incident. At a Commission session on 1 March, following a similar incident in Licua, UNITA agreed to issue orders to all its personnel to avoid such incidents and promised to use various channels of communication, including its radio "Vorgan", and to facilitate liaison procedures. The Joint Commission established an ad hoc working group to expedite resolution of those issues.

The Secretary-General reported that the cease-fire continued in general to hold and in many areas tension had decreased markedly, although in other areas the situation remained volatile, particularly in the north. Progress was achieved in the disengagement of troops in the central region, but agreements reached by the government and UNITA Chiefs of Staff concerning the areas of Uige and Negage proved difficult to implement. However, UNITA confirmed to the Special Representative that, as at 2 March, it would commence disengagement in areas where it had not yet done so, in particular in Uige and Negage, and would ensure the safety of UN flights. It pledged to cooperate in the full integration of its troops into the national army.

In the meantime, UNAVEM III continued to expand. As at 1 March, 418 UN military and police observers were deployed to 38 sites outside Luanda. Deployment to the countryside was slowed because of shooting incidents by UNITA, lack of security clearances to visit certain areas and restriction on freedom of movement, in particular by UNITA, but also by FAA. In general, UN access to UNITA-controlled areas was limited.

UN humanitarian agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) had stepped up their efforts to assess needs in newly accessible areas and to extend the geographic reach of their assistance programmes. Inter-agency teams visited localities in many provinces, identifying major health and nutritional problems.

The mine-awareness campaign continued throughout the country. A UN mine-action office, together with UNAVEM, established a working group with the participation of NGOs to identify areas requiring urgent action. International NGOs were training Angolan instructors and technicians in such towns as Kuito and Luena, where a number of mine-clearance operations had begun. A committee was formed on quartering areas to establish criteria for site selection, infrastructure and provision of services.

The Secretary-General stated that deployment of UNAVEM III infantry units by 9 May could be achieved only if the parties had substantially complied by 25 March with paragraph 4 of resolution 976(1995), requiring a cessation of hostilities and quartering of troops. If not, deployment of those units would have to be deferred.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

At a 10 March meeting, after consultations among Security Council members, the President made the following statement⁽¹³⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the Secretary-General's report of 5 March 1995 on the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III).

The Security Council welcomes the assessment by the Secretary-General that the cease-fire is generally holding. It also welcomes the continued deployment of United Nations military and police observers to sites outside Luanda. It notes, however, that this deployment has been complicated by a lack of full cooperation by the parties, in particular UNITA. In the month since the adoption of its resolution 976(1995), a number of developments have taken place which give rise to serious concern. These include the lack of progress in disengagement around Uige and Negage, the escalation of tensions in the last few weeks, especially in the northern region, the lack of security clearances to visit certain areas and restrictions on movement of UNAVEM III personnel, attacks on villages, mine-laying, unauthorized movement of troops and military air activity, and attacks on United Nations aircraft, in particular that by UNITA in Quibaxe on 13 February 1995. The Council calls upon the parties, particularly UNITA, to refrain from such activities, to end negative propaganda, to improve their cooperation with each other and the United Nations through the Joint Commission and to cooperate fully with humanitarian operations.

The Security Council reiterates its call upon President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi to meet without delay as a sign of their joint commitment to the peace process and urges the Government of Angola and UNITA to finalize arrangements towards this end immediately, with a view to ensuring the necessary political momentum for the successful implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. It also encourages the observer States to the peace process, the Organization of African Unity and the neighbouring countries involved to continue their efforts aimed at the full implementation of the peace process.

The Security Council reaffirms the obligations of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of resolution 864(1993) and reiterates its call upon the Government of Angola and UNITA to cease the acquisition of arms and war materiel as agreed in the "Acordos de Paz".

The Security Council notes that the United Nations is currently pursuing with the Government of Angola the provision of critical services and access to key facilities such as ports and airports for UNAVEM III. Early and positive responses from the Government of Angola to the United Nations requirements in this respect are essential to UNAVEM III's deployment. It calls on both parties to expedite the completion of the initial tasks in order to ensure the prompt deployment of UNAVEM III units. The Council reiterates the importance it attaches to the Government of Angola and the United Nations agreeing on a Status-of-Forces Agreement by 20 March 1995 as called for in paragraph 13 of its resolution 976(1995). It will continue to monitor closely developments in these areas.

The Security Council commends the United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations for their continuing efforts to distribute humanitarian relief throughout Angola. It reiterates the importance it attaches to a well-coordinated and comprehensive mine-clearance programme which will, inter alia, improve the logistics of humanitarian operations. It calls upon both parties to cooperate with the United Nations and with the non-governmental organizations to put this in place. It deplores the killing on 2 March of three Angolans and one German, all members of the "Cap Anamur" non-governmental organization involved in demining activities, as well as attacks in the last month on ICRC aircraft and road transport, and reminds the parties of its repeated demands that they refrain from all actions which could jeopardize the safety of humanitarian personnel in Angola.

The Security Council endorses the Secretary-General's conclusions that the Government of Angola and UNITA must provide more concrete signs of cooperation and goodwill in the implementation of the peace process. It reminds the parties that the deployment of the units of UNAVEM III will not take place unless the conditions contained in paragraph 32 of his report of 1 February 1995 have been met. It has taken careful note of the Secretary-General's statement that, unless he can report by 25 March 1995 that the parties have complied with these conditions, it will not be possible to ensure that deployment begins on 9 May 1995. Time is short if the opportunity created by the Lusaka Protocol and the Council's resolution 976(1995) is not to be lost. The Council joins the Secretary-General in calling upon the parties to take the necessary steps now to ensure that deployment of these units can begin as planned on 9 May 1995. It requests the Secretary-General to keep it closely informed of developments in this regard.

Communications (March). On 25 March, the Secretary-General informed⁽¹⁴⁾ the Security Council President that on 16 March he had briefed the Council of his intention to send his Special Adviser, Ismat Kittani, to Angola to deliver letters to President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi and discuss with the Angolan parties measures to bring the military situation under control and facilitate preparations for the deployment of UNAVEM III.

The Special Adviser visited Angola from 17 to 22 March. In discussions with the Government and UNITA, in which the Secretary-General's Special Representative also participated, he conveyed the Secretary-General's concern regarding the status of the cease-fire and the parties' failure to cooperate fully with UNAVEM. He stressed that Council members needed convincing evidence that both the Government and UNITA had renounced the military option and were genuinely committed to the peace process. President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi assured the Special Adviser that they were fully committed to implementing the Lusaka Protocol and favoured accelerated deployment of all UN troops. The two leaders undertook to create the political, military and logistic conditions conducive to such deployment.

The Special Adviser reported that, while the conditions stipulated in Council resolution 976 (1995) had not been fully met, some progress had been made with regard to the cessation of hostilities, disengagement of troops, establishment of verification mechanisms, modalities for integration of military forces and other essential tasks. It was necessary to assist the parties in overcoming their mutual mistrust and create additional impetus to the peace process. In the circumstances, the Secretary-General decided that it would be in the best interest of the peace process to proceed with preparations for deploying UN infantry to Angola, although he realized that there were certain risks involved. However, unless the parties complied without delay with their commitments under the Lusaka Protocol and provided logistic support to UNAVEM, it would not be possible to ensure that deployment would begin in May. UN efforts, he stressed, had to be matched by an unambiguous political will and concrete action by the parties.

The three observer countries, in a 24 March statement,⁽¹⁵⁾ said that complete cooperation with UNAVEM personnel was required from the Government and UNITA and would continue to be the standard by which their compliance with the Lusaka Protocol would be measured. They urged both sides to accelerate preparations for a meeting between the President and Mr. Savimbi, as it would send a strong message to the Angolan people and the international community of their commitment to peace and national reconciliation. Angola's leaders had to recognize their responsibility not to lose that opportunity for peace. The observer States also reaffirmed their commitment to ensure that the Protocol was implemented fairly and rigorously and expressed the hope that sufficient funding and means, including aerial surveillance, would be available to enable UNAVEM to meet critical monitoring objectives.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In a 7 April report,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General said cease-fire violations remained at a relatively low level. Not all reported cases could be verified and confirmed by UNAVEM, since its movements were still restricted by poor road conditions, unidentified mines and other factors. Complaints involved attacks on villages, ambushes, raids, looting, abduction of civilians, mine-laying and other violations. At the same time, unauthorized troop movements, extensive military preparations and heavy air activity continued. In some instances, tensions still rose dangerously high. On 29 March, a military aircraft attacked a UNITA-controlled airport in Andulo and, on 25 March, the UNAVEM team site in Chongoroi (southern region) was subjected to a deliberate, apparently planned attack by unidentified armed military elements. The team site was temporarily evacuated.

With regard to mechanisms for the verification of the cease-fire, improved access to UNITA-controlled areas made it possible to establish 47 of the 52 team sites and six regional headquarters outside Luanda. As at 1 April, UNAVEM strength was 527 military and police personnel. Despite the improved military situation, several logistic obstacles remained to the deployment of UNAVEM troops, including the provision of essential services and access to key facilities, air and vehicular transport, and the repair of roads, railways and airfields. Although the Government had made some accommodation and transport available to UNAVEM, more direct assistance was required. In addition, the Government had not indicated its readiness to sign the agreement with the United Nations on the status of UNAVEM forces.

Progress was made in the disengagement of troops in the central and northern regions. The two parties committed themselves to maintaining disengagement positions and agreed to complete the second phase of disengagement by 10 April. In the meantime, the Joint Commission held its twelfth regular session in Luanda on 28 March. It noted that the first phase of the disengagement of forces had been completed and took measures to ensure that the second phase, which involved Lunda Norte, Lunda Sul and Mexico provinces, would be completed as scheduled. The demobilization and reintegration process was reviewed in the light of the agreement on the incorporation of UNITA troops into FAA prior to any demobilization. The UN Unit for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance (UCAH) and UNAVEM finalized mechanisms for coordinating responsibilities in establishing and managing the quartering areas for UNITA troops.

Overall progress was made in the humanitarian sphere, despite the continuing tension in many parts of the country. Relief programmes were launched, while new evaluation missions were planned for isolated communities. Because of logistical constraints and insecure conditions, possibilities for transportation by road continued to be severely limited. Relief activities continued to rely heavily on airlift operations. With respect to the comprehensive mine-action programme, the Government established the National Mine Action Institute, and the Mine Advisory Group in Luena resumed clearance activities. The Central Mine Action Office of UCAH and UNAVEM began collecting information on the location of mines throughout the country. Several NGOs continued to remove mines in the provinces of Bié, Cunene, Kwanza Norte and Malange, but suspended their activities in Benguela province following an attack on relief workers on 2 March.

By a 12 April communiqué,⁽¹⁷⁾ Angola, responding to the Secretary-General's report,⁽¹⁶⁾ clarified that there had been substantial progress with respect to the cessation of hostilities. It said the replenishment of logistical supplies for UNITA continued to be verified; the deployment of military observers and police had been concluded, as had the disengagement of forces. The Government had provided all information requested by the United Nations concerning the bilateral cease-fire, and had notified the United Nations that it had allocated 800 demining troops and was waiting for UNAVEM to present its action plan. Angola said it had already been agreed at a military meeting between the Government and UNITA that identification of quartering areas was a UNAVEM responsibility. The Government had put at UNAVEM's disposition all it had been asked to provide for its installation. The status-of-forces agreement between the United Nations and Angola was to be signed before 15 April, Angola concluded.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

At its meeting on 13 April, the Council President, following consultations among Council members, made a statement on behalf of the Council:⁽¹⁸⁾

The Security Council has considered the Secretary-General's progress report of 7 April 1995 on the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III).

The Security Council welcomes the confirmation by the Secretary-General that the cease-fire is generally holding and that the level of cease-fire violations has remained relatively low. It also welcomes the continued deployment of UNAVEM III military and police observers to team sites and regional headquarters outside Luanda, and the progress reported by him in a number of important areas, including liaison with UNITA, the completion of the first phase of disengagement and discussions of the modalities for the incorporation of UNITA into the national army. It commends the parties for their efforts in this regard.

The Security Council notes that a number of developments give cause for concern. These include reports of continuing military actions and preparations, in particular the attack on the airstrip at Andulo by the Angolan air force, the failure to complete the second phase of disengagement by 10 April 1995, some restrictions on UNAVEM III's access to government military facilities, and recent attacks on the personnel of UNAVEM III and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). It welcomes the improved access by UNAVEM III to UNITA-controlled areas but notes that some local UNITA commanders continue to impose restrictions on the movement of UNAVEM III personnel and calls upon UNITA to ensure unrestricted access.

The Security Council calls on the parties to co-operate fully with the United Nations, in particular through the Joint Commission, and to ensure the safety of the personnel of UNAVEM III and the NGOs. It notes with satisfaction that the members of the Joint Commission, including representatives of the Government of Angola, met Dr. Savimbi in Bailundo on 7 April and that at that meeting he publicly confirmed his commitment to the Lusaka Protocol. It reiterates its call for a meeting between President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi as a matter of urgency because such a meeting may help to improve the climate of trust and give new impetus to the peace process in Angola.

The Security Council welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to proceed with preparations for the deployment of UNAVEM III's infantry units. It notes that he has reminded the Angolan parties that they must implement without delay the requirements of the Lusaka Protocol, provide UNAVEM III with the indispensable logistic support, and undertake essential tasks such as mine-clearance, the repair of major transport routes, and the designation of quartering areas, to make it possible for United Nations infantry battalions to deploy to Angola in May 1995. The Council fully supports the Secretary-General in this regard and emphasizes the need for full implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. It welcomes his intention to deploy the infantry battalions in stages. It stresses the importance it attaches to the Government of Angola providing the logistic support envisaged for UNAVEM III. In this context it welcomes the Government of Angola's agreement to allow the United Nations full operational access to Catumbela airfield and calls upon the Government of Angola to ensure that this arrangement is extended for as long as required by UNAVEM III. It also welcomes the Government of Angola's intention to conclude, by 15 April 1995, a Status-of-Forces Agreement with the United Nations.

The Security Council reaffirms the obligation of all States to implement fully the provisions of paragraph 19 of resolution 864(1993) and states that the continuing flow of arms into Angola contrary to the provisions of the "Acordos de Paz" and resolution 976 (1995) contributes to the country's instability and undermines efforts at confidence-building.

The Security Council is encouraged that the Secretary-General has been able to report overall progress in the humanitarian situation in the month since his last report to the Council. It calls upon the parties to continue to facilitate access to all areas of the country for the delivery of humanitarian assistance.

It also calls once again upon the parties to respect the safety and security of all humanitarian personnel in Angola. It endorses the call on the parties by the three observer States to the Angolan peace process to co-operate fully in releasing all war-related detainees through the International Committee of the Red Cross, as well as all captured foreign citizens or to provide information about their fate.

While the Security Council takes note of the progress made in the implementation of the comprehensive mine-action programme, it also notes the statement in the Secretary-General's report that the mine situation in Angola remains critical. The Council therefore urges both parties to support and facilitate mine-clearance and to comply fully with the relevant provisions of the Lusaka Protocol. In this context, it welcomes the statement by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General following the 13th meeting of the Joint Commission that the Government of Angola and UNITA have pledged to put 800 and 400 personnel respectively at the disposal of UNAVEM III for mine-clearance activities.

The Security Council will continue to monitor the situation in Angola closely. It looks forward to the next monthly report of the Secretary-General and requests him, in the meantime, to ensure that it is kept informed of developments in Angola and on prospects for the prompt deployment of the infantry battalions of UNAVEM III.

Meeting number. SC 3518.

Report of the Secretary-General (May). On 3 May, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁹⁾ that preparations for the meeting between President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi were at an advanced stage. Agreement had been reached on the agenda and on practical details. His Special Representative had travelled to Lusaka, Zambia, on 21 April to discuss final arrangements. He also reported that on 3 May the status-of-forces agreement for UNAVEM III was signed. The cease-fire continued to hold generally and there had been a further reduction in the number of violations reported. However, the situation in several areas remained tense, as both sides continued to occupy forward positions, sporadically attacking the local population and conducting troop movements. Despite some problems, the second phase of disengagement was almost complete. A number of difficulties persisted in the area of communication links; contact with government troops was established in all regions, but effective communication with UNITA existed only in the regions of Huambo and Uige. Deployment of military observers to all 53 team sites was completed. The civilian police component of UNAVEM III was fully operational. As at 26 April, 185 civilian police observers from 17 countries were deployed to all 29 team sites, including the six regional headquarters.

No additional military data had been provided to the United Nations by the Government or UNITA since November 1994. However, at a Joint Commission meeting on 20 April, the parties agreed on the principle of "global incorporation" of UNITA soldiers into the national army, to be followed by gradual demobilization, until FAA reached the level of 90,000 troops, a figure accepted by both parties.

UNAVEM continued to accelerate the start of country-wide demining. Although the Government and UNITA had pledged to put 800 and 400 personnel, respectively, at the disposal of UNAVEM mine-clearance activities, both parties had yet to release funds or equipment for the programme to become operational. In the meantime, UNAVEM recommended to the parties that they begin mine-sweeping operations on major roads under their control to make the deployment of UN troops possible. A substantial increase was registered in the number of mine incidents involving civilians. The Government and UNITA agreed to provide the United Nations with information on the location of mines.

Efforts to intensify the distribution of humanitarian aid by road had begun to show results. Several overland convoys had been successfully organized. Although some progress was made in opening the three main road corridors—Luanda/Malanje, Benguela/Kuito and Namibe/Menongue—much reconstruction and mine-clearing work remained to be done. The same factors were hindering the return of displaced people to their places of origin. The UN Demobilization and Reintegration Office visited UNITA headquarters in Bailundo to discuss the humanitarian assistance component of the demobilization and reintegration programme. The second phase of the survey on the social and economic needs of demobilized soldiers from UNITA and FAA was launched; the results of that survey would be used in the design of training and social integration programmes.

The Secretary-General later reported⁽²⁰⁾ that President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi met in Lusaka on 6 May. They had discussed all aspects of the peace process and pledged their cooperation to consolidate peace in Angola and to implement the Lusaka Protocol, he said. In preparation for their next meeting, which they agreed would take place in Luanda, senior government officials visited Mr. Savimbi on 25 May in Bailundo.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

The Security Council met on 11 May to consider the Secretary-General's report. Following consultations among its members, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council:⁽²¹⁾

The Security Council has considered the Secretary-General's third progress report of 3 May 1995 on the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III) and the oral briefing from the Secretariat.

The Security Council welcomes the positive developments in Angola. It welcomes in particular the meeting in Lusaka on 6 May 1995 between President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi which took place in a positive atmosphere and gave new impetus to the consolidation of the peace process and the furthering of national reconciliation in Angola. The Council commends the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, of the observer States to the Angola peace process, of States of the region and, in particular, of the President of Zambia which assisted in bringing about this meeting. It expresses the hope that the meeting will mark the beginning of a regular and constructive dialogue between the President of Angola and the leader of UNITA.

The Security Council notes with satisfaction the progress in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol concerning, inter alia, reduction of cease-fire violations, the disengagement of forces, the cooperation among the parties and UNAVEM III, the signing of the status-of-forces agreement and the providing of logistic facilities for the mission. The Council welcomes the ongoing deployment of UNAVEM III support units and stresses the importance of a timely deployment of the infantry battalions of UNAVEM III.

The Security Council is however concerned by the slow progress in other areas. It stresses the necessity for the increased cooperation of the Government and UNITA with the United Nations in carrying out all major provisions of the Lusaka Protocol and relevant Security Council resolutions. While welcoming the release of the first group of prisoners, the Council urges the parties to expedite this process. Urgent attention should be given to the quartering of UNITA soldiers by the parties as well as the United Nations and the withdrawal of government troops to their barracks in order to permit the incorporation of UNITA troops within the national army and police in accordance with the Lusaka Protocol. The Council stresses also the importance of the completion of the disengagement process and the improvement of communication links with UNITA in all regions. It recalls the conditions set forth in Security Council resolution 976(1995) for the deployment of infantry units and calls upon the parties in Angola to take all necessary steps to ensure that these conditions are met promptly for the timely deployment of sustainable infantry units throughout Angola capable of fully discharging their mandated tasks.

The Security Council particularly underlines the urgency of a mine-clearance programme and calls upon the parties to provide, as promised, the funds and equipment necessary in order for the programme to become operational, and to begin mine-sweeping operations on major roads under their control. The demining, the opening of major roads and repair of airfields and other infrastructure are of crucial importance for the expeditious deployment of UNAVEM infantry units, the distribution of humanitarian aid, and the return of displaced persons to their places of origin. The Council invites the donors as well as the United Nations, its agencies and non-governmental organizations to support actively demining actions.

The Security Council notes with satisfaction the amelioration of the humanitarian situation in Angola and calls upon the parties to cooperate without restriction with the United Nations and other humanitarian international organizations to facilitate the distribution of aid in all the regions and to intensify their efforts to guarantee the security of humanitarian transports and of UNAVEM personnel. It requests Member States to continue to support the ongoing humanitarian activities in Angola and to disburse as soon as possible the contributions pledged during the donors' meeting in February 1995.

The Security Council will continue to monitor the situation in Angola closely and looks forward to the next monthly report of the Secretary-General.

Meeting number. SC 3534.

Report of the Secretary-General (June). On 4 June, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁰⁾ that he had written to President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi on 10 May to express the hope that some of the issues raised at their 6 May meeting would be resolved at the next meeting so that the peace process could be accelerated, and to assure them of UN support. In other positive developments, the Joint Commission travelled to and from Lobito by road for its special meeting on 18 May to demonstrate that a major road was now safe for travel; the Government had released through ICRC more than 200 UNITA prisoners; and, pending the establishment of an independent UN radio station, UNAVEM had started broadcasting an information programme over radio and television facilities made available by the Government.

Nevertheless, the second phase of disengagement was not fully completed. Agreement was reached in the Joint Commission that, after the demobilization of troops, 74,000 of the 90,000 FAA soldiers would be ground troops, provided in equal numbers by the two parties. The national defence force would also comprise air and naval forces of 11,000 and 5,000 troops, respectively. In that regard, UNITA provided the Special Representative with additional details of the strength of its forces. The Secretary-General considered it important to initiate as soon as possible an exchange of information between the parties on their military equipment and installations.

The Secretary-General said that he intended to strengthen the military component of UNAVEM by adding two specialized engineering companies, within the Mission's authorized strength of 7,000. The further dispatch of UN infantry would depend on progress in opening major access roads and in mine clearance. The number of civilian police observers stood at 210 as at 30 May. Although support from the Angolan police was encouraging in most areas, there was still room for improvement in others. There had been little progress in quartering the Government's rapid reaction police, due mainly to delays in making adequate barracks available.

There had been an increase in banditry against the civilian population, including international staff, the Secretary-General went on; on 15 May, a senior UNAVEM police observer had been killed in Luanda, an apparent act of banditry. The Government promised to investigate the incident and would take additional measures to enhance the security of UN and other international personnel.

A plan was finalized to address mine-clearance requirements for the deployment of UNAVEM infantry troops and other essential functions of the Mission. Demining operations were initiated in several parts of the country, and the Government pledged $3 million for mine-clearance activities. That effort was to be supplemented by the Central Mine Action Training School, to be established by the United Nations.

Progress had been made in opening cost-efficient overland routes for the delivery of humanitarian assistance. NGOs continued to clear mines in and around major towns, and the Norwegian People's Aid had initiated a mine survey in the northern provinces. The UN Children's Fund and the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) had launched mine-awareness and -avoidance programmes for internally displaced persons and refugees. Humanitarian agencies reported improved nutritional conditions in a few areas, allowing suspension of general food distribution there. However, overall food aid requirements were still considerable. Only 15 per cent of resources solicited in the 1995 humanitarian appeal for Angola had been received. The Secretary-General appealed to the international community to replenish the humanitarian stocks for Angola as a matter of urgency.

By a 15 June letter,⁽²²⁾ the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members welcomed the positive developments, supported the ongoing dialogue between the two parties and encouraged a further meeting between President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi. They noted with concern that the peace process was still behind schedule and remained concerned about the problem of mines. They endorsed the Secretary-General's call that the parties reinforce their recent actions in mine clearance and road and bridge repair, and they agreed that the international community should support those vital tasks. They also supported the Secretary-General's appeal to the parties to work out modalities for the quartering of UNITA troops and the withdrawal of the rapid reaction police to barracks.

Expressing distress over the loss of life of a UN police observer and the wounding of a military observer, the Council members recalled the parties' responsibility for the safety and security of all UN personnel in Angola.

Report of the Secretary-General (July). On 17 July, the Secretary-General reported⁽²³⁾ that since the 6 May meeting between President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi, high-level contacts between the Government and UNITA had intensified. In addition, the two leaders were in regular telephone contact. On 16 June, the Central Committee of the ruling Movimento Popular para a Libertação de Angola (MPLA) offered Mr. Savimbi one of two positions of Vice-President, with the other to be held by a senior member of MPLA. In late June, the two parties signed a comprehensive working document following a review of modalities for accelerating the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. The Secretary-General visited Angola from 14 to 16 July to review progress made and assess the situation on the ground.

UNITA insisted that no further disengagement of troops should take place until the Government withdrew from areas it had reoccupied in Huambo and Uige provinces. However, agreement was reached that both parties would keep their troops in situ until UNITA troops moved to quartering areas and government troops moved to barracks. Both sides had begun essential demining activities throughout the country, with the cooperation of UNAVEM, UCAH and NGOs. That notwithstanding, the pace of mine clearance remained slow and there were allegations about renewed laying of mines in some parts of the country. UNAVEM called on the parties to end that practice. An effort was under way to establish 4 of the planned 14 sites in the northern and central regions for the quartering and demobilization of UNITA troops. High-level government and UNITA delegations met from 19 June to 1 July and agreed on almost all quartering locations and the sequence of the quartering process; on basic conditions for assembly areas; on the modalities of FAA withdrawal to barracks; and on the need to eliminate checkpoints and organize additional humanitarian convoys to formerly inaccessible areas. However, certain aspects, such as the incorporation of UNITA troops with FAA, required further consideration, and the delegations were to meet again in Luanda.

As at 4 July, in addition to the six regional headquarters, 337 military observers had been deployed at 55 sites throughout Angola. Deployment of UN-formed units, whose total strength was 1,970, proceeded in accordance with the adjusted timeframe. Civilian police observers (CIVPOL) numbered 209.

CIVPOL reported that the situation in most of the country was fairly calm and complaints about the conduct of the national police were relatively few. The Angolan parties registered complaints about human rights violations with the Special Representative and the Joint Commission. In response, UNAVEM established a small sub-unit to deal with human rights issues and to observe implementation of the relevant provisions of the Lusaka Protocol. Five human rights specialists had been put at UNAVEM's disposal by the European Union. The Secretary-General intended, with the agreement of the Security Council, to strengthen that unit by up to 11, so that human rights monitors could be stationed in all 18 provinces. He noted that the Lusaka Protocol provided for the disarmament of the civilian population; with the proliferation of weapons and the increase in banditry, he said, the disarmament programme must begin without further delay.

An important step towards building confidence and facilitating humanitarian aid was the 14 June meeting in Bailundo of the Humanitarian Coordination Group, the first to be held outside Luanda, with strong UNITA representation. Another significant development was the initiation of plans to resettle some 40,000 displaced persons residing in Jamba, whom UNITA had requested the Angolan Government and the United Nations to help return to their places of origin. Progress was made in launching joint humanitarian initiatives in areas under the control of both parties, in which government agencies, UNITA and the United Nations were working together. There had been significant spontaneous movement of internally displaced persons to their places of origin in the provinces of Bengo, Benguela and Kwanza Norte. A workshop for representatives of the Government, UNITA, UN agencies and NGOs had been held (Luanda, 22-24 June) to develop a standard strategy for providing assistance to internally displaced persons. In June, UNHCR appealed for $44 million to fund the repatriation of 300,000 Angolan refugees residing in neighbouring countries (see PART FOUR, Chapter XII).

Economic and social conditions continued to be extremely precarious. The enormous difficulties facing Angola during the transition period were reflected in the fact that up to 70 per cent of the basic health system was destroyed, only 18 per cent of the population had access to sanitation and 34 per cent to safe water, the infant mortality rate was 195 per 1,000, the food deficit for 1995 was expected to be 360,000 tons, some 70,000 people were mutilated by weapons or mines, and 1.2 million internally displaced persons, 300,000 refugees and 3.2 million other people were in need of emergency humanitarian assistance. The country's debt/export ratio had reached 365 per cent, and the estimated gross domestic product per capita had fallen to $410, half that of 1990. The inflation rate was 1,838 per cent in 1993 and 972 per cent in 1994, while military spending in 1994 was estimated to be 39 per cent of the State budget.

The World Bank had developed plans to support Angola's reconstruction efforts. In addition, with the participation of UN agencies, a debt strategy for Angola had been prepared, as had programmes for divesting public companies and streamlining public services. The Government, with support from the UN Development Programme (UNDP) and the Special Representative, organized a round table on rehabilitation and community development in September (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). UN agencies were prepared to assist in strengthening national capacity for coordinating assistance and intended to accelerate discussions with the Government concerning joint programming.

The Secretary-General recommended that the UNAVEM mandate be extended until 8 February 1996, the beneficial effects of UN involvement in the settlement of the Angolan conflict having become evident.

Security Council resolution 1008(1995)

7 August 1995 Meeting 3562 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/646).

Report of the Secretary-General (October). In October, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁴⁾ that President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi had met in Franceville, Gabon, on 10 August and in Brussels, Belgium, on 25 September. During their August meeting, they agreed on modalities to continue bilateral discussions on the completion of the formation of FAA, including the global incorporation of UNITA troops in FAA. General understandings were reached on ways to define the powers and responsibilities of the two Vice-Presidents and on the holding of legislative and presidential elections. In Brussels, the two leaders agreed on consolidating the peace process and the progress achieved so far. Following a special session of the Joint Commission, held in Uige—headquarters of the northern region—on 19 August, the Government and UNITA issued a joint statement on 25 August reaffirming their intention to guarantee free movement of persons and goods throughout the territory, with certain controls at border posts and access points to cities.

Reports of cease-fire violations showed a steady decline, to their lowest level to date. The situation in most regions remained relatively calm and stable, except for numerous acts of banditry. Troops from both sides remained generally in situ, but tensions persisted, particularly in the diamond-rich area of Lucapa in the north-east, where both sides were seeking to consolidate and enlarge the areas they controlled. Reinforcements and sporadic shelling by both sides were reported in the northern region, and there was some tension in the southern region. UNAVEM reconnoitred all 15 proposed quartering areas, 11 of which were approved by the parties. The establishing of quartering areas began and work at Vila Nova and Londiumbali, in the province of Huambo, was practically completed. The Demobilization and Reintegration Office of the UCAH finalized preparations for the humanitarian assistance programme in the quartering areas. Equipment for registering UNITA soldiers had been received and UN Volunteers, who were to carry out the registration process in the quartering areas, arrived in the country. A coordination group, chaired by the Special Representative's Deputy, was set up to enhance coordination and decision-making during the pre-quartering and quartering phases.

Modalities for the formation of FAA were entrusted to the Joint General Staff, which established a standing committee of high-ranking officers under the direct supervision of President dos Santos and Mr. Savimbi. A high-ranking UNITA military delegation arrived in Luanda on 18 September to begin discussions with the Government on the issue.

During August, roads in the northern and south-eastern regions were successfully demined. However, UNAVEM continued to investigate allegations about renewed laying of mines. The United Nations contracted a commercial company from South Africa to undertake mine clearance and verification on approximately 7,000 kilometres of roads, while international NGOs were active in mine-awareness training and demining in some provinces.

Several meetings were held with officials of the Angolan national police to discuss the quartering of the rapid reaction police and the disarming of the civilian population. It was agreed that those two operations were to be undertaken simultaneously with the quartering of UNITA soldiers. The issue of special security for UNITA leaders had yet to be resolved. In addition to the special security arrangements in the Lusaka Protocol, UNITA asked for special protection and accommodation for its officials in all provincial headquarters, while the Government insisted on the letter of the Protocol, which provided only for members of the political committee and the national provincial secretaries.

Frequent violations of human rights continued, particularly by elements of the armed forces and police of both sides. The Joint Commission requested UNAVEM to report periodically on the human rights situation and on violations. In August, 10 more prisoners were released by the Government and UNITA, bringing the total released to 230. Another 213 detainees on both sides were visited by ICRC, but were yet to be released.

A priority for UN agencies and NGOs was to support internally displaced persons returning to their home areas. With the gradual consolidation of the peace process and the reopening of roads, displaced persons began to return, particularly in the provinces of Benguela, Huambo, Bié and Bengo. On the other hand, in Uige some 3,000 new displacements occurred as a result of hostilities between government and UNITA forces. In July, the Government, UNITA and UNHCR held talks with Zambian authorities on a repatriation and reintegration programme for 26,000 Angolan refugees living in Zambia. Meanwhile, some spontaneous repatriation took place from the Republic of Zaire to the provinces of Uige and Zaire.

With the planting season starting and with the coordination of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Ministry of Agriculture, UN agencies and NGOs were distributing 7,000 tons of seeds and more than 1.2 million agricultural tools. Increased road access reduced the need for costly airlifts. By mid-September, the World Food Programme was able to deliver 70 per cent of its humanitarian assistance by road. With the assistance of UNDP and other agencies, the Government mapped out a strategy to bring the country out of its humanitarian crisis and guide it to economic revival and sustained development. A programme of community rehabilitation and national reconciliation was presented to the first Round-Table Conference of donors (Brussels, September) (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). The International Monetary Fund collaborated in the implementation of the Government's new economic and social programme for 1995 and 1996. The World Bank planned a substantially increased programme, working with the Government to prepare projects dealing with emergency reconstruction, agricultural rehabilitation and manpower training. With funding from Japan and the Bank, preparations for a community-based rehabilitation programme were completed and a Social Support Fund established.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 12 October. After consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽²⁵⁾

The Security Council welcomes the Secretary-General's report of 4 October 1995 on the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III) pursuant to paragraph 21 of Security Council resolution 1008(1995) of 7 August 1995.

The Security Council has noted the positive developments in Angola since the Secretary-General's report of 17 July 1995. The Council is encouraged by the meetings in Franceville and Brussels between President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi which provided the opportunity to discuss the critical issues and reach agreement on consolidation of the peace process. These meetings, particularly the round table in Brussels, provided important reassurance to the international community. The Council welcomes the continued commitment of both parties to the process of dialogue. The Council commends the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, of the observer States to the Angola peace process and of States in the region to help in carrying forward the process.

The Security Council notes with satisfaction the progress in the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol, including the reduction of cease-fire violations, the disengagement of forces, the enhanced cooperation between the parties and UNAVEM III, the signing of the status-of-forces agreement, the provision of logistic facilities for the mission and the conclusion of the joint declaration on the free circulation of persons and goods. The Council also welcomes the ongoing deployment of UNAVEM III support units and stresses the importance of a timely deployment of the infantry battalions of UNAVEM III. The Council stresses the importance of an independent UNAVEM radio and urges the Government of Angola to provide, without delay, the facilities to allow it to operate.

The Security Council none the less remains concerned at delays in the peace process, in particular in respect of quartering of UNITA and the rapid reaction police, demining, disarmament, the return of the FAA to barracks and the formation of the new armed forces as well as the repatriation of mercenaries. The Council underscores the peril that may result from further delays. The Council is also deeply concerned at allegations of renewed laying of mines and demands that all parties refrain from such actions.

The Security Council emphasizes that continuing cooperation between the parties is essential if a sustained cessation of hostilities is to take hold. In this regard, the Council calls on the parties to refrain from troop movements or military activities that might create tension or lead to renewed hostilities.

The Security Council is concerned about the continuing complaints of human rights violations, and endorses the decision of the Joint Commission to inscribe human rights in the agenda of all its regular sessions.

The Security Council wishes to emphasize that post-peace-keeping elements can make an important contribution to a viable long-term peace. The Council notes the linkage between political and economic well-being and the need to ensure that displaced people and refugees are able to return to their places of origin. The Council reaffirms the Secretary-General's call for a comprehensive coordinated and integrated effort on the part of all relevant international organizations to help rebuild the Angolan economic infrastructure. The Council requests Member States to continue to support the ongoing humanitarian activities in Angola. It welcomes the commitments made at the Round-Table Conference, held in Brussels in September 1995, and urges those that have made pledges to fulfil their commitments as soon as possible.

The Security Council will continue to monitor closely the situation in Angola and looks forward to future reports of the Secretary-General.

Meeting number. SC 3586.

Communication. On 13 November, the Government and UNITA issued a joint communiqué,⁽²⁶⁾ noting that, following various problems which had created difficulties in re-establishing confidence between them, discussions were held on 9 and 13 November during which all issues were resolved. The Government and UNITA reaffirmed their good faith and good will to cooperate in carrying out the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol to a successful conclusion. They undertook to continue working on all aspects connected with the security of all citizens, including the security of the leader of UNITA; to carry on the work of the UNITA military group with the General Staff of FAA, on the overall incorporation and completion of formation of the Angolan armed forces and gradual demobilization; and to work with UNAVEM III and within the framework of the Joint Commission in order to initiate quickly and efficiently the movement of forces and means, particularly the quartering of UNITA military forces and subsequent actions, the quartering of the rapid reaction police and the return of FAA to the nearest quarters.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

The Security Council met on 28 November to consider the situation in Angola. Following consultations, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council members:⁽²⁷⁾

The Security Council welcomes the joint communique issued by the Government of Angola and UNITA on 13 November 1995 in which they reaffirmed their commitment to the peace process. The Council is pleased to note that some of the steps necessary to carry out the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol have been taken recently, including the resumption of the military talks in Luanda, and the movement of the first UNITA combatants to quartering areas on 20 November 1995, the first anniversary of the signing of the Lusaka Protocol. The Council underlines the need for the quartering process to be completed as soon as possible.

The Security Council, however, notes that despite these positive steps there continue to be cease-fire violations, importation of weapons, restrictions on freedom of movement, and the presence of mercenaries. The Council stresses that much remains to be done urgently to implement fully the Lusaka Protocol, including strict observance of the cease-fire, the continuation of the quartering process, the quartering of the rapid reaction police, the return of the Forças Armadas Angolanas (FAA) to defensive positions, and the resolution of questions regarding the modalities of military integration. The Council calls upon the Government of Angola and UNITA to continue to cooperate with UNAVEM III and to respect fully the status and security of international personnel.

The Security Council will follow developments in Angola closely and looks forward to receiving the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Angola by 8 December 1995.

Meeting number. SC 3598.

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

In December, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁸⁾ that full deployment of the UNAVEM military component was close to completion. As at 30 November, there were 6,184 military personnel all ranks, including 331 military observers. Their presence had already had a positive impact on the overall military situation in the country, despite the delays in the quartering process, the Secretary-General stated. Deployment of UN troops to the eastern parts of the country was hindered by mined roads and damaged bridges, as well as difficulties in sustaining UNAVEM III sites by air, given financial constraints.

UNAVEM continued to monitor the military situation and defuse individual incidents. In many areas, government and UNITA troops were still in close proximity and their aggressive patrolling undermined attempts to create the atmosphere of trust necessary for the quartering of troops. Tensions were most acute in Uíge, Cabinda, Lunda Norte and Lunda Sul, where large troop movements had taken place. A propaganda campaign was launched against UNAVEM III in Uíge and Benguela. Hostile demonstrations were held and, in a Government-controlled radio programme, the population of the province had been urged to "prepare for war" against UNAVEM III. In separate incidents on 24 and 25 October, UNAVEM and UCAH convoys were detained and subjected to harassment by UNITA. Increased acts of banditry also posed a threat to the peace process, as well as to the security of UN and other international staff.

Negotiations on the completion of the formation of FAA had resumed on 17 November. In the meantime, reconnaissance of 15 quartering areas for UNITA troops was completed and all sites but one were approved by the parties. A phased approach to quartering was adopted and construction of six additional cantonment areas began. The quartering of UNITA forces was finally launched in Vila Nova, Huambo province, on 20 November, the date of the first anniversary of the signing of the Lusaka Protocol. On 1 December, 363 individuals reported for cantonment there. The Government complained that they were "boy soldiers" with unserviceable weapons. The target of quartering an average of 150 soldiers daily was far from being realized. The Government finally provided UNAVEM with information on locations, in Huambo and Uíge provinces, to which FAA forces would withdraw.

The presence of large numbers of unexploded mines still seriously affected UN operations. However, joint demining activities in the province of Cuando Cubango had already resulted in the opening of several important roads. Germany was providing the services of experts to assist in quality control of the contract with a South African demining firm working in Angola, while the United States was to supply bridging equipment in December. The demining school established by the Central Mine Action Office of UCAH began training of a first group of 112 Angolan students. The Office also cooperated with the Angolan National Institute for the Removal of Explosive Devices in the joint training of some 250 local deminers, recruited from the ranks of former Angolan soldiers.

Human rights continued to be of special concern. At the request of the parties, UNAVEM III intended to launch a nationwide programme to disseminate basic information on human rights. The Special Representative held a series of training workshops and seminars for government officers, in the capital and in the regions. Additional human rights monitors were to be deployed to the regions to generate support from local government and UNITA officials for better respect for human rights.

The spontaneous, as well as organized, return of internally displaced persons continued. However, the return movement still involved less than 10 per cent of the displaced population, estimated at 1.2 million, and was expected to slow down even further because of transport difficulties during the rainy season and because people would not be able to return in time for the agricultural season. Progress continued in the expansion of overland humanitarian access. Several main roads from the coast to major towns in the hinterland were opened, as were some secondary roads in the interior. The opening of the Lobito-Huambo road and other routes facilitated the assistance programme to UNITA quartering areas in the provinces of Huambo and Bié and in the central highlands.

The Secretary-General observed that much had been achieved since the signing of the Lusaka Protocol, but many factors that prevented implementation of the earlier peace accords were still very much in evidence. He appealed to the Government and UNITA to demonstrate through concrete action that they were indeed committed to peace and ready to correct those negative factors.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council met on 21 December to consider the report of the Secretary-General. Following consultations among its members, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council:⁽²⁹⁾

The Security Council has considered the Secretary-General's report of 7 December 1995 on the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM III) pursuant to paragraph 21 of Security Council resolution 1008(1995) of 7 August 1995.

The Security Council reiterates its concern at the slow progress in implementation of the provisions of the Lusaka Protocol. The Council stresses the importance of full implementation of the political and all other aspects of the peace process. It underlines that several important tasks that were to have been resolved in the early stages of the peace process remain incomplete, including the exchange of detailed military information, the release of all prisoners, the redeployment of those government troops near UNITA quartering areas, and the final resolution of the issue of mercenaries. In this respect, the Council welcomes the recent announcement by the Government of Angola that it will terminate the contract and repatriate the personnel of the firm involved and will release all remaining prisoners.

The Security Council notes that the deployment of UNAVEM III troops is nearly complete and that four quartering areas are prepared to receive troops. The Council expresses its disappointment at the slow pace at which the quartering process has proceeded. It calls upon UNITA and the Government of Angola to fulfil their commitments regarding the expeditious quartering and demobilization of former combatants, the quartering of the rapid reaction police, and the return of the Forças Armadas Angolanas (FAA) to the nearest barracks.

The Security Council expresses deep concern at the delays in establishing modalities for the integration of the armed forces which is vital for the process of national reconciliation. The Council notes with dismay the series of disruptions in the military talks between the parties. It urges the parties to continue the military talks without interruption and to conclude an equitable and practicable agreement without further delay. The Council underlines that such an agreement should give particular attention to the expeditious completion of the demobilization and integration of former combatants. It recognizes that the prompt and complete exchange of military information is vital to the success of these talks and urges the parties to provide the information required by the Lusaka Protocol without further delay.

The Security Council is gravely concerned by continued violations of the cease-fire and military offensives, in particular events in the north-west. The Council calls on both parties to refrain from military activities or troop movements which lead to increased tensions and resumed hostilities and to implement without delay the disengagement plan being prepared by UNAVEM.

The Security Council deplores the recent threat to the safety of UNAVEM III personnel. The Council reminds the parties, in particular UNITA, that they must take the steps necessary to ensure the safety and security of all UNAVEM III and other international personnel.

The Security Council expresses regret that UNAVEM radio is not yet operational. The Council calls upon the Government of Angola to facilitate its immediate establishment. It also calls upon both parties to cease the dissemination of hostile propaganda.

The Security Council is concerned at delays in implementing mine-clearance programmes planned by the United Nations and by Member States, and calls upon the Government of Angola to facilitate issuance of necessary authorizations to relevant personnel. The Council calls upon the Government of Angola and UNITA to intensify their individual and joint demining efforts. It underlines that the opening of roads within Angola, including the clearance of mines and the restoration of bridges, is vital not only to the peace process and the complete deployment of UNAVEM III but also to the effective delivery of humanitarian assistance and future peace-building efforts. The Council is gravely concerned at the reports of remining in violation of the Lusaka Protocol.

The Security Council emphasizes that Angolans themselves bear ultimate responsibility for restoring peace and stability in their country. The Council stresses that concrete actions are urgently needed from the parties to put the peace process on an irreversible course. It notes that continued support for UNAVEM III will depend on the extent to which the parties demonstrate their political will to achieve a lasting peace.

The Security Council notes the important role played by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and by the three observer countries in the promotion of the peace process in Angola and calls upon them to further contribute appropriately to the implementation of the Lusaka Protocol within the agreed time framework and to assist UNAVEM III in the successful fulfilment of its tasks.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to update it on the progress of the Angolan peace process and the deployment and activities of UNAVEM III at least on a monthly basis.

Meeting number. SC 3614.

Before the statement was approved, Angola, in a 21 December letter⁽³⁰⁾ to the Council President, said the text did not reflect the reality of the situation of the peace process on the ground, and did not point out the perpetrator of the violations, UNITA. The statement did not mention the recent information provided by UNAVEM's military chief and did not take into account the important decisions regarding the return of the rapid reaction police, which was a gesture of the Government's good intentions regarding full implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. As to the so-called South African mercenaries, the Government had terminated the contract of the South African company "Executive Outcomes". Angola reiterated its denial that the South African military officials contracted to train Angola's national army were mercenaries, while it was well known that mercenaries had been used by UNITA. The Government had also sent a delegation to UNITA headquarters in Bailundo to discuss with Mr. Savimbi matters related to the proposal by President dos Santos to hold a meeting soon, within Angolan territory. Angola recommended reformulation of some of the statement's paragraphs, taking into account its comments.

Further report of the Secretary-General. In a later report,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the peace process had suffered a serious set-back towards the end of 1995, when FAA took control of several locations in the oil-producing region of Soyo, in the province of Zaire. Citing that offensive, UNITA suspended the quartering of its troops, withdrew its assistance to UNAVEM in the construction of quartering areas and, in some areas under its control, imposed restrictions on the movement of UNAVEM and other international personnel, including those of NGOs. In late December, FAA withdrew from the positions concerned and, as a confidence-building measure, a platoon of UN troops was deployed to the area. On 21 December, a government delegation met with UNITA leaders in their Bailundo headquarters to review implementation of the Lusaka Protocol. The two parties undertook once again to start fulfilling their obligations, including the definitive cessation of all military activities, the conclusion of military talks, the release of prisoners, an end to hostile propaganda, the resumption of the quartering of UNITA troops, the quartering of the rapid reaction police and withdrawal of FAA to the nearest barracks. However, UNITA failed to take the necessary steps to move the peace process forward, citing military threats to its forces in several parts of the country.

Since the beginning of December, security for humanitarian assistance activities had deteriorated in many parts of the country, especially those controlled by UNITA. As a result, one international NGO suspended its activities in UNITA-held areas and several that had previously expressed willingness to expand their humanitarian activities to those areas were increasingly reluctant to do so.

Mission composition

On 6 January, the Secretary-General reported⁽³²⁾ that the military component of UNAVEM II was composed of personnel from Argentina, Brazil, the Congo, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Jordan, Malaysia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Slovakia, Sweden and Zimbabwe. He proposed the addition of Algeria, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Egypt, Kenya, Mali, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, the Russian Federation, Senegal, Uruguay and Zambia to the list of countries contributing to UNAVEM II, which the Council approved on 13 January.⁽³³⁾

Following the establishment of UNAVEM III on 8 February, he further proposed adding France, Namibia, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Ukraine and the United Kingdom.⁽³⁴⁾ The Council agreed with those proposals in letters dated 17 March,⁽³⁵⁾ 4 August⁽³⁶⁾ and 1 November.⁽³⁷⁾ On 29 December, the Secretary-General also proposed adding Fiji and Italy to the list.⁽³⁸⁾

On 8 August, the Council agreed⁽³⁹⁾ with his 4 August proposal⁽⁴⁰⁾ to appoint Major-General Philip Valerio Sibanda (Zimbabwe) to succeed Major-General Chris Abutu Garuba (Nigeria) as Force Commander of UNAVEM III.

As at 27 January 1995, UNAVEM II's military and civilian police personnel numbered 304 all ranks, including 171 military observers and 122 civilian police officers. As at 30 November, UNAVEM III's total military and civilian police personnel stood at 6,184, including 331 military observers and 253 civilian police officers.

The Council, by resolution 976(1995) of 8 February, had authorized a maximum of 7,000 military personnel, in addition to 350 military observers and 260 police observers.

Financing

Reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ (June). In June 1995, the Secretary-General presented⁽⁴¹⁾ a proposed budget for UNAVEM III totaling $305,191,900 gross ($300,004,800 net) for the period from 9 February to 31 December 1995, consisting of $187,541,000 gross ($185,269,900 net) for the mandate period from 9 February to 8 August and $117,650,900 gross ($114,734,900 net) from 9 August to 31 December.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), also in June, recommended⁽⁴²⁾ that detailed consideration of the Secretary-General's report be deferred until the General Assembly's fiftieth session. It believed that the total resources requested would not be required before it had reviewed the estimates in detail. In the meantime, it recommended that the Assembly initially approve an amount of $215.7 million gross ($211.2 million net) for the period from 9 February to 31 December 1995, with an initial assessment of $150 million gross ($148 million net) from 9 February to 8 August. Should UNAVEM III's mandate be extended beyond the latter date, the Secretary-General should be authorized to enter into commitments not exceeding $13.9 million gross ($13.3 million net) per month.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

On 20 July, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/227 B.

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Verification Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

8. Decides, with regard to the period beyond 8 August 1995, to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments at a rate not to exceed 13.9 million dollars gross (13.3 million dollars net) per month until 31 December 1995, and that this amount shall be assessed on Member States, in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Verification Mission beyond 8 August 1995;

9. Invites voluntary contributions to the Verification Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/209 A.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, resolution 696(1991) of 30 May 1991, by which the Council decided to entrust a new mandate to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (thenceforth called the United Nations Angola Verification Mission II), resolution 976(1995) of 8 February 1995, by which the Council authorized the establishment of a peace-keeping operation in Angola (thenceforth called the United Nations

Recalling also its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Verification Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Verification Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Verification Mission on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amounts already apportioned, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, to apportion the additional amount of 34,851,497 dollars gross (36,216,158 dollars net) for the period from 9 February to 31 December 1995 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1995;

Burundi

In 1995, the United Nations continued its efforts to help end the political and humanitarian crises in Burundi, resulting from the October 1993 coup d'état(¹) and subsequent massacres, and the deaths of the Presidents of Burundi and Rwanda, who were killed in a plane crash in April 1994.(²) Following intense consultations mediated by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Burundi's political parties had signed on 10 September 1994 the Convention on Governance—a power-sharing mechanism for a four-year transitional period.⁽³⁾

Nevertheless, the year 1995 saw a continuation of ethnic and political tensions and an atmosphere of crisis. The Secretary-General's Special Representative reported some hope for optimism, following a Security Council mission in February to Burundi and Rwanda, which recommended the creation of an international commission of inquiry into the events that had triggered the crisis, which would seek ways to identify those responsible for the violence and prevent future incidents. With violence escalating and thousands fleeing the brutality of the conflict, the Commission on Human Rights decided to appoint a special rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Burundi. In August, the Security Council asked for the establishment of the international commission, and, in September, the Secretary-General appointed five members to it.

Meanwhile, the refugee situation in the region worsened, with half a million Burundians internally displaced and thousands more seeking refuge in neighbouring countries. More than 240,000 Rwandans fleeing violence in their country had become refugees in Burundi, and hundreds of thousands more were in other countries. A Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region was held in February, and international assistance was sought during the year to alleviate the widespread human suffering resulting from the political upheavals and violence.

Tensions and crises

Communication. On 25 January, Burundi informed⁽⁴⁾ the Security Council President that, despite some problems of insecurity, relative stability and a delicate balance had prevailed since the signing of the Convention on Governance. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Ahmedou Ould Abdallah (Mauritania), had noted also that Burundi's problems were very sensitive and highly complex and could be properly treated only in a global manner. Burundi said it firmly denounced "manoeuvres which are designed to sabotage the fragile work of national reconciliation" and affirmed that it had never requested an embargo or military intervention. It stressed the urgent need to avoid taking fixed positions on delicate matters in Burundi at a time when the political parties and civil society had agreed to hold a national debate.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council President, following consultations, made the following statement on behalf of the Council at a meeting on 31 January:⁽⁵⁾

The Security Council, which has been following closely developments in Burundi, has learned with concern that the situation in the country has deteriorated considerably over the last few days.

In this context, the Security Council deeply deplores the pronouncements made by the leadership of one political party which calls for the withdrawal of the Prime Minister and the overthrow of his Government by all means available.

The Security Council denounces such attempts to threaten by way of intimidation the coalition Government which was established in line with the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994. It further condemns the extremist groups that continue to undermine the national reconciliation process.

The Security Council calls upon all parties and others concerned, in particular the national security forces, to refrain from committing acts of violence and to give support to the Government institutions established in line with the above-mentioned Convention.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it fully informed of developments in Burundi. The Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3497.

Communication. On 9 February, Burundi informed⁽⁶⁾ the Security Council President that its leaders had the political will and resources to solve any problem so as to maintain the momentum of national reconciliation and the institutional normalization currently under way. At the invitation of Burundi's President, Sylvestre Ntibantunganya, it said, a meeting of the Conciliation Framework and all political partners had been held in Bujumbura on 7 February. Participants in the meeting agreed on the need for the Convention on Governance to be applied scrupulously in respect of the structure and the settlement mechanisms relating to the formation of the Government; President Ntibantunganya emphasized that all conflicts and disputes as to the interpretation and application of that Convention should be settled by the mechanisms and frameworks provided in it. Should the current Prime Minister no longer be the subject of political consensus, he said, opposition parties would be invited to nominate another candidate for the post, and a new Prime Minister would then be responsible for forming a new Government.

Missions to Burundi

February mission

In a 6 February note,⁽⁷⁾ the Security Council President said that Council members had decided to send a mission to Burundi and Rwanda, departing on 8 February and comprising representatives of China, the Czech Republic, Germany, Honduras, Indonesia, Nigeria and the United States. The mission's terms of reference for Burundi would be to hold consultations with the Special Representative on political and security developments in Burundi, his efforts in that regard, and additional ways in which the United Nations might further underpin those efforts; hold talks with the President, the Prime Minister and the leadership of the security forces and of the opposition parties, as well as UN agencies, the diplomatic corps, NGOs, the Office of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and other interested parties; convey to them the serious concerns of the Council over the recent political developments in Burundi; and stress to all parties the strong support of the Council for the Convention on Governance and the Government constituted on the basis of it and for the process of national reconciliation, and the Council's rejection of all attempts to undermine them or to destabilize the region.

Mission report. In its report⁽⁸⁾ to the Security Council, the mission, having visited Burundi on 10 and 11 February, observed that the political and security situation remained precarious and potentially explosive.

The root cause of the continuing political instability, it stated, was the unwillingness of the Tutsi and Hutu extremist elements, both within the coalition Government and outside it, to accept the power-sharing arrangements contained in the Convention on Governance. They had usurped the political initiative at the expense of the moderate elements who constituted the majority of the population and had been silenced through threat and intimidation. They were systematically undermining the coalition Government, particularly those among the ranks of the Union pour le progrès national (UPRONA), through inflammatory statements, calls for "dead city" strikes, street demonstrations, intimidation and incitement to violence.

Further aggravating the situation was the fact that the mainly Tutsi security forces constituted an independent power centre, and their support of the coalition Government could not be taken for granted.

The mission stated that the survival of the coalition Government, the Convention and peace and security in Burundi was jeopardized by the persistence of impunity, since there had been no accountability, political or judicial, on the part of those involved in the October 1993 coup attempt and subsequent massacres. In addition, the judicial system, which had largely collapsed, was often perceived as being partial, and the effectiveness of OAU military observers was limited by the restraints imposed on them by the Burundi security forces and the inadequacy of their numbers.

The mission recommended creation of an international commission of inquiry into the 1993 coup attempt and subsequent massacres, as proposed by the Government, as soon as possible, and augmentation of the UN presence in Burundi to assist capacity-building by the Government in the areas of building an impartial judicial system; civilian police training, impartial investigations and support services, especially in urban centres; and establishment of an effective administrative presence in the provinces. The number of OAU observers should be substantially increased and restrictions on their movement removed. Also, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights should deploy human rights monitors throughout the country, as requested by Burundi.

The mission supported the holding of a national debate, with the participation of all segments of society, as a means of fostering political dialogue in the country. Also recommended was the continuation of visits to Burundi of high-level international delegations to underscore international concern and help diffuse tension. Some mission members believed that to promote political stability and national reconciliation, the Council should explore the possibility of imposing selective sanctions against individuals believed to belong to extremist groups in Burundi.

Communications. Burundi on 6 March informed⁽⁹⁾ the Security Council President that, since the February mission, the situation in the country had developed in a positive direction. The tension observed during the mission's stay was linked to the opposition demand for the ousting of Prime Minister Anatole Kanyenkiko. A new Prime Minister and a new Government had been appointed by consensus, as provided for in the Convention on Governance. There were, however, problems of insecurity in certain parts of the country and acts of criminality in both rural and urban areas. The disarmament of armed population groups had provoked confrontations between the forces of law and order and groups in possession of firearms. Burundi refuted the statement that the security forces constituted an independent power centre and that their support of the coalition Government could not be taken for granted. Those forces obeyed the policy laid down by the Government, and those that did commit excesses were subject to military regulations. Neither the Government nor its security forces had restricted the movement of the OAU military observer group. However, any increase in those observers should be determined by Burundi. As for strengthening the United Nations presence in the country, Burundi said it needed support for the existing judicial system and called on the United Nations to join with other partners in that area. The establishment of a civilian police force was unnecessary in Burundi's view, as it was in the process of creating, with the assistance of external partners, a specialized anti-terrorism squad and a specialized disarmament squad. The Government was already experiencing difficulties in coordinating the activities of various existing police forces.

With regard to an effective administrative presence in the provinces, Burundi said it had already assigned territorial administration officials, as provided for in the Convention on Governance. It wanted the international community to assist in providing the logistical means to guide the population more effectively in the direction of peace and reconciliation.

Concerning the imposition of selective sanctions against individuals believed to belong to extremist groups, Burundi said that the hard core of extremists was relatively small. On the other hand, it would be wise to attack the "declared war-mongers", especially the "Forces for the Defence of Democracy", who had mobilized a parallel army and were "provoking attacks and deadly confrontations" from both outside and inside the country. The international community should also support the Government's pursuit of a return to peace and security and provide positive and reassuring encouragement. Burundi offered its full cooperation to the United Nations to prevent further conflicts.

On 8 March, Burundi transmitted to the Secretary-General a copy of the Agreement embodying the Convention on Governance.⁽¹⁰⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 March, the Security Council considered the report of the February mission to Burundi. It also had before it the report⁽¹¹⁾ of the March 1994 preparatory fact-finding mission to Burundi (see below). Following consultations, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽¹²⁾

The Security Council has considered the reports of its Mission to Burundi which visited Bujumbura on 10 and 11 February 1995 and welcomes the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Mission. It expresses its appreciation to the Mission members for their efforts.

The Security Council recalls its earlier statements on the situation in Burundi, in particular that of 31 January 1995. It remains deeply concerned that a climate of insecurity continues to prevail in Burundi. It condemns the activities of those, both within and outside the country, who seek to nullify the agreed power-sharing arrangements contained in the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994 by resorting to undemocratic methods such as intimidation and incitement to violence, as well as guerrilla activities and subversive political activity. Such actions have threatened peace, stability and national reconciliation.

The Security Council reaffirms its support for the Convention on Governance and for the coalition Government established under it. In this connection, it notes the appointment of the Prime Minister and his Cabinet and urges all parties in Burundi to work together to ensure stability in the country.

The Security Council reaffirms the view that impunity is a fundamental problem in Burundi, one which seriously endangers security in the country, and stresses the importance it attaches to assistance being given to help strengthen the national judicial system. In this context, it underlines the role that could be played by an international commission of inquiry into the 1993 coup attempt and into the massacres that followed, established in accordance with the Convention on Governance.

The Security Council strongly reaffirms its support for the implementation of the provisions of the Convention on Governance calling for the holding of a national debate with the participation of all segments of the society in Burundi, as a means of fostering political dialogue.

The Security Council underlines the importance of assisting the Government of Burundi in its efforts to restore stability and promote national reconciliation. In this context, it encourages the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Government of Burundi, to augment the United Nations presence in the country, in order to assist the Government of Burundi in strengthening the national judicial system, training civilian police forces and establishing an effective administrative presence in the provinces. It commends the important role played by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General.

The Security Council reiterates that improving the security situation in Burundi must be given high priority. It encourages the High Commissioner for Human Rights, in consultation with the Government of Burundi and in close coordination with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, to reinforce the office he has established in Burundi. Consideration could also be given to the role human rights monitors could play.

The Security Council also recognizes the significant contribution made by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) military observers. It encourages the OAU, in consultation with the Government of Burundi, to further increase their number and calls upon the international community to assist the OAU in this regard.

The Security Council further calls on all parties in Burundi to cooperate with international observers and other personnel by ensuring unimpeded access to all parts of the country.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep it fully informed of developments in Burundi. The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3506.

The Council met again on 29 March to consider the situation in Burundi. Following consultations, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽¹³⁾

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the escalation of violence in Burundi. It condemns the murders of the Minister of Energy and Mines and of the former Mayor of Bujumbura by extremists, and deplores the ensuing ethnic killings of many people that have caused thousands to flee their homes. It stresses the futility of resorting to violence and condemns the activities of the extremist elements who try to destabilize the country and threaten the whole region. It encourages all States to take the measures deemed necessary to prevent them from travelling abroad and receiving any kind of support. It reaffirms its determination to support the Convention on Governance of 10 September 1994, the provisions of which constitute the institutional framework for the necessary national reconciliation. The Council calls on all political parties, military forces and all elements of civil society fully to respect and implement it in a spirit of dialogue, moderation and compromise.

The Security Council urges all parties to work together to further the dialogue. It underlines the urgency of organizing, in accordance with the Convention on Governance, a national debate with the participation of all elements of the nation with a view to consolidating national reconciliation and restoring democracy. It invites the Secretary-General to help the various political parties and elements of civil society to initiate this comprehensive consultation.

The Security Council warns that those who commit crimes against humanity are individually responsible for their crimes, and will be brought to justice. The Council specifically warns that if acts of genocide are committed in Burundi, it will consider taking appropriate measures to bring to justice under international law any who may have committed such acts.

The Security Council reaffirms its view that the perception of impunity is a fundamental problem in Burundi, one which seriously endangers security in the country. The Council expresses once again its grave concern at reports indicating that systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law have been committed in Burundi.

The Security Council recalls the statement by the President of the Security Council of 9 March 1995 in which the Security Council, inter alia, underlined the role that could be played in Burundi by an international commission of inquiry into the October 1993 coup attempt and into the massacres that followed. It requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on an urgent basis on what steps should be taken to establish such an impartial commission of inquiry.

The Security Council favours measures to restore a state of law and improve the functioning of the judicial system. It also favours the organization of a round table of donors. It urges States to provide for these projects financial contributions directly or through a trust fund to be created for this purpose.

The Security Council supports the reinforcement of the action decided by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and welcomes the dispatching of experts.

The Security Council pays tribute to the actions taken by the Organization of African Unity (OAU). It calls upon the OAU and its members in the sub-region to continue to use their influence to help stabilize the situation in Burundi. It further calls upon all States, in particular neighbouring States, to refrain from supplying or allowing the transit of arms and to deny sanctuary and any other assistance to those extremist elements which seek to destabilize the situation in Burundi.

Aware of the close interconnection between various humanitarian and political problems in the region and of the risk of subsequent destabilization, the Security Council reaffirms its support for a regional conference on peace, stability and security and calls upon the countries of the region to convene such a conference as a matter of urgency.

The Security Council remains seized of the matter. The Council will consider taking action as the situation demands.

Meeting number. SC 3511.

Preparatory fact-finding mission

On 23 February 1995, the Secretary-General forwarded to the Security Council President the report of his March 1994 preparatory fact-finding mission to Burundi,⁽¹⁾ dispatched in response to a 1993 Council request.⁽¹⁴⁾ The mission, comprising Siméon Aké (Côte d'Ivoire), Martin Huslid (Norway) and a political affairs officer of the UN Secretariat, was sent to investigate the coup d'état of 21 October 1993, to consider the assassination of President Melchior Ndayaye and subsequent massacres and to consider, with the Government and the Special Representative, what activities future missions or an expanded UN political presence could undertake to encourage a return to civil peace.

The mission observed that the tragic events of October 1993 should be considered in the light of the historical, political and economic and social situation which prevailed in Burundi, especially since its accession to independence in 1962, in which the ethnic factor played a decisive role. The Hutu majority had been practically excluded from power during that period. The victory of the Front pour la démocratie au Burundi in both presidential and legislative elections in June 1993 gave the Hutu majority an opportunity to take over the running of the country. That led to the rejection, in some opposition circles, of the new political majority and refusal to accept the democratic change-over of power. The October 1993 coup d'état was planned by army units, led by certain officers, non-commissioned officers and senior officers, including those who had carried out the 3 July 1993 coup. There was indication that individuals belonging to political, civil and military circles were also involved. The Hutu majority saw the coup d'état of 21 October 1993, and especially the assassination of the President, as a rejection by the Tutsi minority, UPRONA and other opposition parties of the new Hutu-led Government, and as a challenge to the democratic system. Those events triggered inter-ethnic massacres. The Hutu reacted with a violent and bloody attack on the Tutsi, prompting the latter to react in similar fashion. In some cases, army units engaged in acts of reprisal, which were often directed selectively at the Hutu population. The mission believed that those massacres were not premeditated, but were the consequences of the October 1993 coup d'état and political assassinations. The mission considered that some moral responsibility had to be borne by those political leaders who gave insufficient consideration to the effect their statements were having on the supporters of their respective parties.

The mission proposed that the United Nations, OAU and the world community should continue and strengthen the actions of UN agencies and organs already present in Burundi, the special assistance from the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in education, aid from traditional or potential donors and emergency UN aid. They should also: reinforce the Office of the Special Representative, who had played a particularly useful role, especially in getting government institutions to function again; send an international judicial mission, in consultation with the Burundi authorities, to investigate the crimes committed in October 1993 and to identify those responsible so that they could be brought to justice, or make available a number of experts to act as advisers to help Burundi's competent authorities carry out the same task; support, through a proposed trust fund, the presence of 47 military observers and a small number of civilians from OAU; continue support from the international community for the democratic process and the promotion of human rights in Burundi; and organize an international conference on Burundi and Rwanda, under UN auspices, focusing on regional issues, to strengthen security, stability and cooperative links among the countries of the region.

Escalation of crisis

On 7 April,⁽¹⁵⁾ Burundi informed the Secretary-General that the decline in the situation in the country during March was a consequence of repeated provocations and attacks by Hutu militia and gangs against the forces of law and order and the Tutsi civilian population. It was also a logical consequence of the illegal distribution of arms to young Hutu by political leaders. The crisis had generated distrust among the various elements of the Burundi nation, with the Tutsi afraid of being wiped out altogether and the Hutu believing that the Tutsi, helped by the Tutsi-dominated army, were going to avenge their kin massacred in 1993 and seek to destabilize the national army.

In the face of this situation, the Government of Burundi had made a return to peace and security the top priority. The President and the Prime Minister had proposed that, for three years, the priority objective should be peace, national reconciliation and the reconstruction of the country. Parallel with that public awareness campaign, senior government authorities had decided to pursue systematically the disarmament of those holding weapons illegally; take action against those attempting to destabilize the nation; protect Burundians against any attack on their security, regardless of the origin or perpetrator; create conditions conducive to the reintegration of displaced persons and the return of refugees; and resume national economic and social development efforts, particularly in the areas of education, health and agriculture.

Burundi called on the international community to denounce the destabilizers on all sides who were undermining the process of national reconciliation, and to propose specific assistance activities in those areas agreed by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽¹⁶⁾

The OAU Central Organ of the Mechanism for the Prevention, Management and Resolution of Conflicts in Africa (Tunis, Tunisia, 20 April)⁽¹⁷⁾ expressed deep concern at the resurgence of political and institutional crises in Burundi, particularly the recent outbreak of violence, political assassinations and ethnic cleansing, and condemned the continuing militarization of Burundi society. It also appealed for regional action to deal with the instability and insecurity caused by the introduction of weapons into Burundi, and for concerted international action to isolate and neutralize the extremists and disarm and dismantle the militias and armed gangs. It urged all parties concerned to ensure the fulfilment of the commitments made at the February 1995 conference on refugees and displaced persons in the Great Lakes region (see below) and emphasized the need for the international community to increase humanitarian assistance and every other form of assistance to countries of asylum and displaced persons. The Central Organ urged the States members of OAU and the international community to encourage and support the forces of moderation in Burundi, and emphasized the importance for OAU to be fully involved in any action that the Security Council might take concerning the situation in Burundi.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/219 of 4 May and decision 1995/291 of 25 July, approved the request of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to report on the situation of human rights in Burundi (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

On 8 May,⁽¹⁸⁾ Burundi transmitted to the Secretary-General the views on the Burundi situation of the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Bandung, Indonesia, 25-27 April), which had expressed concern over the escalation of violence and immense human suffering in Burundi. Burundi said that the Security Council might wish to translate the views of the Non-Aligned Movement into action by helping Burundi to disarm and disband the militias and other illegally armed organizations. The coalition Government was determined to put an end to the militarization of Burundi society, but its efforts would be successful only if accompanied by concerted international action. The United Nations should devise a strategy to stem the illegal supply of weapons into the region, which resulted in arming of extremist elements.

The Ministers of Defence and Security of the States members of the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries (CEPGL), meeting in Bujumbura on 10 June, decided⁽¹⁹⁾ to establish a Tripartite Subcommission on Security to: conduct reconnaissance, verification, monitoring and other activities to counter the circulation of instruments of war and subversion as well as elements not currently subject to control on both sides of common borders; receive and respond to security-related complaints from States members; implement security-related decisions of CEPGL Ministers of Defence and of the summit of heads of State of CEPGL; and propose appropriate measures for strengthening peace and security along common borders in the event of non-compliance with decisions taken. In particular, the Subcommission would have to introduce measures to solve issues such as the permeability of borders, the organization of joint patrols along common borders, the abuse of CEPGL passes, and efforts to combat subversive activities along common borders, as well as other acts creating insecurity.

International commission of inquiry

The 1994 Convention on Governance⁽¹⁰⁾ provided for the formation of an international judicial fact-finding mission composed of competent, impartial persons to investigate the October 1993 coup and what the political partners had agreed to call genocide, without prejudice to the outcome of independent national and international investigations, as well as the various political crimes committed since October 1993. The Security Council on 9 March⁽¹²⁾ underlined the role that could be played by an international commission of inquiry established in accordance with the Convention and on 29 March⁽¹³⁾ requested the Secretary-General to report on what steps should be taken to establish such a commission.

On 28 July, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁰⁾ to the Security Council President that he had studied various options for establishing such a commission, which had given rise to considerable difficulties. He had therefore decided to investigate the alternative of proposing to Burundi the establishment of a commission on the truth, similar to the one that had been established for El Salvador.⁽²¹⁾ In that regard, he had sent Pedro Nikken, who played a central role in designing the El Salvador commission, to Burundi to discuss that option. After visiting Burundi from 28 June to 9 July, Mr. Nikken recommended that neither a commission on the truth on the Salvadoran model nor an international commission of judicial inquiry, whose mandate would be limited to purely judicial matters, would be an adequate response to the need to put an end to impunity in Burundi. However, an international judicial commission of inquiry could be viable and useful if its mandate guaranteed that its conclusions and recommendations would be put into effect and achieve the objective of prosecuting and punishing those responsible for the assassination of the President of Burundi on 21 October 1993, for the subsequent massacres, and for other serious acts of violence and political crimes committed since then. The international commission should not only undertake a judicial inquiry but also make recommendations of an institutional nature in the legal, political and/or administrative fields.

On that basis, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council set up such a commission with a threefold mandate: to establish the facts relating to the assassination of 21 October 1993, the massacres that followed and other serious acts of violence and political crimes committed between that date and the date on which the resolution of the Council was adopted; to recommend modalities for the trial and punishment of persons identified by the commission as being responsible for offences investigated by it; and to recommend measures of a legal, political or administrative nature, including measures requiring legislative or constitutional reform, to prevent any repetition of deeds similar to those investigated by the commission and, in general, to eradicate impunity in Burundi.

The Secretary-General recommended that the commission have three members appointed by him. The full cooperation of the Burundian authorities would be needed for the success of the commission's work, the Secretary-General stipulated, including free access to official archives; freedom to collect information it considered relevant, to use useful and reliable sources of information, to interview, in private, any person it judged necessary, and to visit any establishment or place without prior notice; and a guarantee of full respect for the integrity, security and freedom of witnesses, experts and any other persons who helped the commission in its work. The Secretary-General believed that seeking such a commitment from the Government in advance would further delay the commission's establishment. He proposed instead that the Security Council invite the commission to submit an interim report, at its convenience, to address in particular the question of how persons identified by it as being responsible for massacres and other political crimes should be brought to trial and in particular whether their trial should be entrusted to the Burundian judicial system or to an international tribunal.

Communications. On 8 August, Burundi reported⁽²²⁾ that it had set up a national inter-ministerial technical commission to draw up the terms of reference of the international judicial fact-finding commission to be established. The Council, it felt, should adopt only a resolution establishing the commission, whose terms of reference would be finalized in consultation with Burundi. Burundi also wished to be consulted on the appointment of the three members of the commission. The Council must bear in mind that Burundi would at the final stage exercise its sovereign right to try persons presumed guilty at the conclusion of the inquiry.

On 23 August, Burundi submitted to the Security Council President its terms of reference for an international commission of judicial inquiry.⁽²³⁾ It also requested that, because of the extreme importance and sensitivity of the mission assigned to the international commission, the Council postpone its vote on the draft resolution before it to allow Burundi time to scrutinize the draft.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council on 28 August adopted resolution 1012(1995).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the preparatory fact-finding mission to Burundi dated 20 May 1994,

Having further considered the report of the Security Council's mission to Burundi dated 9 March 1995,

Recalling the statement by the President of the Council of 29 March 1995, in which the Council, inter alia, underlined the role that could be played in Burundi by an international commission of inquiry into the 1993 coup attempt and into the massacres that followed,

Welcoming the letter of the Secretary-General to the President of the Council dated 28 July 1995 recommending that such a commission of inquiry should be created by resolution of the Council,

Taking into account the initiative of the Government of Burundi in calling for the establishment of an international judicial commission of inquiry as referred to in the Convention on Governance,

Recalling also the letter of the Permanent Representative of Burundi dated 8 August 1995 noting with interest the letter of the Secretary-General of 28 July 1995,

Taking note that the parties in Burundi, in the Convention on Governance, agreed, without prejudice to the outcome of the independent national and international investigations, to call the massacres which followed the assassination of the President of Burundi on 21 October 1993 genocide,

Deeply concerned that impunity creates contempt for law and leads to violations of international humanitarian law,

Expressing once again its grave concern at reports indicating that systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law have been committed in Burundi,

Stressing the importance of strengthening, in cooperation with the Government of Burundi, the Burundi judicial system,

Reiterating its profound concern over the resumption of radio broadcasts inciting ethnic hatred and violence and recognizing the need for ending such broadcasts,

Recalling that all persons who commit or authorize the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for these violations and should be held accountable,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, as a matter of urgency, an international commission of inquiry, with the following mandate:

(a) To establish the facts relating to the assassination of the President of Burundi on 21 October 1993, the massacres and other related serious acts of violence which followed;

(b) To recommend measures of a legal, political or administrative nature, as appropriate, after consultation with the Government of Burundi, and measures with regard to the bringing to justice of persons responsible for those acts, to prevent any repetition of deeds similar to those investigated by the commission and, in general, to eradicate impunity and promote national reconciliation in Burundi;

2. Recommends that the international commission of inquiry be composed of five impartial and internationally respected, experienced jurists who shall be selected by the Secretary-General and shall be furnished with adequate expert staff, and that the Government of Burundi be duly informed;

3. Calls upon States, relevant United Nations bodies and, as appropriate, international humanitarian organizations to collate substantiated information in their possession relating to acts covered in paragraph 1 (a) above, to make such information available as soon as possible and to provide appropriate assistance to the commission of inquiry;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the establishment of the commission of inquiry, and further requests the Secretary-General, within three months from the establishment of the commission of inquiry, to submit an interim report to the Council on the work of the commission and to submit a final report when the commission completes its work;

5. Calls upon the Burundi authorities and institutions, including all Burundi political parties, to fully cooperate with the international commission of inquiry in the accomplishment of its mandate, including responding positively to requests from the commission for security, assistance and access in pursuing investigations, including:

(a) Adoption by the Government of Burundi of any measures needed for the commission and its personnel to carry out their functions throughout the national territory with full freedom, independence and security;

(b) Provision by the Government of Burundi of all information in its possession which the commission requests or is otherwise needed to carry out its mandate and free access for the commission and its staff to any official archives related to its mandate;

(c) Freedom for the commission to obtain any information the commission considers relevant and to use all sources of information which the commission considers useful and reliable;

(d) Freedom for the commission to interview, in private, any persons the commission judges necessary;

(e) Freedom for the commission to visit any establishment or place at any time;

(f) Guarantee by the Government of Burundi of full respect for the integrity, security and freedom of witnesses, experts and any other persons who help the commission in its work;

6. Calls upon all States to cooperate with the commission in facilitating its investigations;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide adequate security for the commission in cooperation with the Government of Burundi;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, as a supplement to financing as an expense of the Organization, a trust fund to receive voluntary contributions to finance the commission of inquiry;

9. Urges States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute funds, equipment and services to the commission of inquiry including the offer of expert personnel in support of the implementation of this resolution;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1012(1995)

28 August 1995 Meeting 3571 Adopted unanimously

10-nation draft (S/1995/724).

On 22 September, the Secretary-General informed⁽²⁴⁾ the Security Council President that he had appointed to the commission Edilbert Razafindralambo (Madagascar) as Chairman, and Abde El Ali El Moumni (Morocco), Mehmet Güney (Turkey), Luis Herrera Marciano (Venezuela) and Michel Maurice (Canada) as members.

Refugee situation

Communications. In a 31 March statement,⁽²⁵⁾ the United Republic of Tanzania reported on the situation in Burundi, particularly in the capital, Bujumbura, citing a marked deterioration in the country's security, with violence and politically motivated killings. It was concerned that those developments could plunge Burundi into another bloodbath. Tanzania appealed to Rwanda to receive Rwandese refugees fleeing Burundi. The deterioration in the situation had caused more than 40,000 refugees from Burundi to cross into Tanzania; also, 100,000 Rwandese refugees from camps in northern Burundi were fleeing towards Tanzania. This had seriously increased the burden of caring for the large number of refugees in the country, numbering over 700,000. In view of the gravity of the situation, Tanzania had decided to close its borders with Burundi and had so advised the Governments of Rwanda and Burundi and relevant UN agencies.

In April, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁶⁾ some 240,000 refugees in Burundi, mostly from southern Rwanda. The deteriorating situation in Burundi had affected the refugees both inside and outside the camps.

In their 10 June communiqué,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Ministers of Defence and Security of the States members of CEPGL agreed that a lasting solution to the question of peace in the subregion would have to involve the voluntary return of refugees to their countries of origin. They undertook to adopt the following measures: identification and internment of activists; prohibition of their activities in the territory of the other countries; their expulsion from the national territory; denial of entry visas to them; revocation of political refugee status, in accordance with international law; and population monitoring of refugee sites, so as to prevent refugees from being recruited and from taking part in activities against the security and sovereignty of Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire.

The United Republic of Tanzania, in a 19 June press statement,⁽²⁷⁾ reported that it was hosting more than 1.4 million refugees, over half of which were from Burundi and Rwanda. In Burundi, a new exodus of refugees was prompted by ethnic unrest and increased violence at the end of March. Rwandan refugees who had settled in Burundi had been forced out of their designated camps. Mass migration, it said, was threatening the very survival of Tanzania. Owing to the prevailing political instability in Burundi, Tanzania would continue to deploy its troops along the border area to protect the Tanzanian local population, and to avoid further Burundi/Rwanda refugee influxes into the country. The continued presence of refugees in Tanzania was a cause of insecurity and a potential cause of conflict with its neighbours. The onus of responsibility was on Burundi to create conditions conducive to the safe return of refugees. Tanzania remained committed to the Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, adopted by OAU in 1969.⁽²⁸⁾

On 17 August,⁽²⁹⁾ Zaire stated that, in the light of the adoption of resolution 1011(1995) by the Security Council lifting the arms embargo imposed on Rwanda in 1994,⁽³⁰⁾ it had no choice but to ask that the Secretary-General indicate the arrangements made by the United Nations in relation to the new country or countries to which the Burundi refugees should be evacuated. In the absence of any clear indication, Zaire intended to evacuate them to their countries of origin.

Responding on 18 August, the Secretary-General⁽³¹⁾ said that he noted Zaire's difficulties but was appealing to Zaire to continue to assist the Burundi refugees, pending a Council review of its position.

On 23 August, the Council President⁽³²⁾ stated that the Council viewed with deep concern the forcible repatriation of Burundian refugees by Zaire and the increasingly tense situation in the region. It called on Zaire to stand by its humanitarian obligations regarding refugees and to reconsider and halt the forcible repatriation of refugees to Burundi. It supported the decision of the Secretary-General to send the UN High Commissioner for Refugees to the region to engage in urgent discussions with Zaire with a view to resolving the situation.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General reported⁽³³⁾ on the most recent political developments in Burundi, as well as international efforts to normalize the situation there.

Although the situation in Burundi remained precarious and continued to be of great concern to the international community, the political instability since mid-1994 had not led to a full-scale armed confrontation, in large part because of the international presence there. Despite increasing attempts by extremists to disrupt life throughout the country, governmental institutions, the agricultural sector, schools, banks, telephone communications and public transport continued to function. Extremists on both sides, inside and outside Burundi, continued to attempt to destabilize the Government in order to implement their own agenda. A fresh outbreak of violence in Bujumbura in June had led to new security measures, which were subsequently rejected by the Parliament.

The Secretary-General's Special Representative was actively promoting national reconciliation and a permanent dialogue among the various political actors and others in civil society, which had helped to lessen tensions in the country. During a visit to Bujumbura on 16 and 17 July, the Secretary-General held discussions with Burundi leaders and addressed the Parliament. He stressed adherence to the principles of the 1992 Constitution and the 1994 Convention on Governance and emphasized that all parties should work jointly towards the convening of a national debate to put an end to the confrontation that had devastated the country. On 15 March, an office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights opened in Bujumbura, providing technical assistance and advisory services in the field of human rights. OAU continued to pursue political and diplomatic efforts to prevent further instability and civil strife in Burundi. It had increased the military component of its mission in Burundi from 47 to 67, as well as funds for the mission's civilian component for the deployment of constitutional legal experts, human rights monitors and mediators. The presence in northern Burundi of some 200,000 Rwandese refugees had added to the complexity of the situation. There had been a number of armed incursions into Burundi from Rwandan refugee camps located in eastern Zaire. In addition, there were about 500,000 internally displaced persons, mostly Hutus, within Burundi.

A Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, coordinated by the UNHCR and OAU, was held in Bujumbura from 15 to 17 February. The Conference adopted a Plan of Action outlining a strategy for the peaceful resolution of the problem of displacement in the Great Lakes region, including the voluntary return and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons (see PART FOUR, Chapter XII).

In conclusion, the Secretary-General said that the international community should continue to coordinate its efforts so that the message to the political leaders of Burundi was consistent and unanimous. It was hoped that the planned national debate later in 1995 would help the parties move from confrontation and violence towards peace and reconciliation, while discouraging and deploring the actions of extremist elements.

On 22 December, the Security Council agreed⁽³⁴⁾ with the Secretary-General's decision⁽³⁵⁾ of 20 December to appoint Marc Faguy (Canada) as his Special Representative in Burundi, to replace Mr. Ould Abdallah. On 7 November, the Council had noted⁽³⁶⁾ his previous decision⁽³⁷⁾ to appoint Aziz Hasbi (Morocco) to that position. The Secretary-General confirmed that his Special Representative left for Bujumbura on 28 December and would assume functions upon his arrival on 30 December.

Further developments. In a report on the situation in Burundi,⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General stated that December 1995 had been characterized by widespread violence and by attempts by members of the opposition, with support from among the military, to remove from office President Ntibantunganya. Violence was also directed against the international humanitarian community.

The Secretary-General, in a 29 December letter⁽³⁹⁾ to the Security Council President, shared his deep concern over the persistence of violence and further escalation of human rights violations in Burundi. The Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights had reported that the country was a scene of smouldering civil war. The situation had continued to deteriorate since May and was characterized by daily killings, massacres, torture and arbitrary detention. The situation revealed an increasingly marked genocidal trend of a socio-ethnic nature and perpetrators were still enjoying impunity. The Special Rapporteur made a number of recommendations ranging from the consolidation of democratic institutions and the reform of the judicial system to the establishment of a national police force accepted by both communities and the deployment of human rights observers.

The deteriorating situation was underscored by recent decisions of international organizations, including ICRC, the World Food Programme and many NGOs, to curtail or suspend activities in Burundi following violent attacks against their personnel and assets. Burundi's borders with Zaire and the United Republic of Tanzania had remained closed recently. The Secretary-General felt there was a real danger of the situation degenerating to the point where it might explode into ethnic violence on a massive scale. In view of the worsening situation, the Security Council might wish to reconsider his 1994 proposals⁽⁴⁰⁾ for preventive deployment of military personnel and guards.

Liberia

In 1995, the Liberian conflict was exacerbated by deteriorating security and humanitarian situations, bordering at times on chaos. Despite the 28 December 1994 cease-fire, the ongoing civil war resulted in many deaths and hundreds of thousands of internally displaced persons, and widespread destruction of the country's infrastructure burgeoned. Arms continued to flow across Liberian borders despite the 1992 Security Council embargo.

In January, a high-level UN mission was dispatched to visit members of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), which since January 1994 had provided a Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) to act as regional peace-keepers in Liberia. Both ECOMOG and the UN Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL), in place since late 1993, threatened to withdraw or reduce their presence in Liberia unless factions to the conflict demonstrated the will to achieve reconciliation.

On the positive side, after months of political wrangling and military skirmishes, the Abuja Agreement was signed in September 1995, renewing a cease-fire and instituting the Liberian National Transitional Government. A six-member Council of State was inaugurated on 1 September. The Abuja Agreement, which followed two ECOWAS summits, was the fifth major agreement reached during the search for peace in Liberia, building on the 1991 Yamoussoukro Accord, the 1993 Cotonou Peace Agreement, and the Akosombo Agreement and Accra Agreement, both concluded in 1994.

At year's end, the peace process suffered another serious set-back when one faction attacked ECOMOG troops and widespread fighting again broke out among various factions.

During the year, a $65 million UN Consolidated Appeal was launched to provide humanitarian assistance to victims of the Liberian conflict.

Peace process developments

The Accra Agreement

The Accra Agreement was transmitted to the Security Council President by a 5 January 1995 letter⁽¹⁾ from Ghana, as Chairman of ECOWAS. Negotiated and signed on 21 December 1994 by eight factions then involved in the Liberian civil war, the Agreement consisted of texts of an acceptance and accession agreement and an agreement on clarification of the September 1994 Akosombo Agreement,⁽²⁾ which had not been signed by all parties. Under the Accra Agreement, parties committed themselves to the terms and conditions of the Akosombo Agreement, as expanded, and the clarification agreement, which stipulated that a cease-fire would come into effect by midnight 28 December 1994. A new five-member Council of State was to be installed within 14 days thereafter, composed of one member each appointed by the Central Revolutionary Council of the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (CRC-NPFL), the United Liberation Movement of Liberia (ULIMO), the Armed Forces of Liberia (AFL/Coalition) and the Liberia National Conference (LNC) and a traditional chief selected by NPFL and ULIMO, Mr. Tamba Tailor. Elections were to be held on 14 November 1995 and a new Government installed on 1 January 1996. The signatories further agreed to facilitate the establishment of safe havens and buffer zones throughout Liberia.

According to the Agreement, the Liberian National Transitional Government was to put in place immediately internal security arrangements, including police, customs and immigration, and begin formation of an appropriate national security structure, including the restructuring of AFL so that it could assume its character as a national army. The Transitional Government was to conclude a status-of-forces agreement with ECOWAS, and the Council of State was to set up committees to determine the criteria for recruitment of combatants and non-combatants into a restructured national army, as well as police and immigration units. Under the Agreement, the factions committed themselves to the regrouping of combatants to encampment sites and to maintain command and control over them at those sites. They also called on the Transitional Government, the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity (OAU), ECOWAS, other international organizations and donors to design a programme of financial assistance for the process of demobilization, retraining, rehabilitation and the reintegration of former combatants into civilian life.

Report of the Secretary-General (January). On 6 January, the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁾ on a high-level mission to six African nations led by Lansana Kouyate, UN Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, to discuss with ECOWAS member States the deterioration of the situation in Liberia; to consult on how best to revive the peace process and achieve reconciliation; to explore means of implementing the 1992 arms embargo imposed on Liberia;⁽⁴⁾ to assess the future role of ECOMOG in Liberia; and to examine ways in which the UN and the international community could assist ECOMOG in carrying out its mandate.

The mission visited Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Nigeria and Sierra Leone. It concluded that, notwithstanding the efforts of the ECOWAS Chairman, Liberian political and factional leaders were not yet committed to a sustainable peace. It recommended that those leaders be brought to understand that, in the absence of political accommodation and reconciliation, continued support from the international community would not be forthcoming. ECOWAS member States, especially the six directly involved with Liberia (Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Nigeria and Sierra Leone), should urgently organize an extraordinary meeting of Heads of State to resolve their differences and harmonize their policies on Liberia. Further, ECOWAS should strengthen and restructure ECOMOG in order to achieve a better balance of troops, including contributions from other African countries. It also recommended that international support—including financial support, logistics and equipment—be sought to enable ECOMOG to carry out its mandate, particularly with respect to deployment, encampment and disarmament. A planning and logistics team from the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations could offer ECOMOG technical assistance in preparing the necessary proposal, the mission suggested. UNOMIL's future should depend on the successful implementation of those steps; meanwhile, its mandate should be extended for a limited period of three months, beginning on 13 January 1995.

In the Secretary-General's view, it was too early to assess to what extent the Liberian factions would adhere to the terms and conditions of the 1994 Accra Agreement. However, the cease-fire, which came into effect as stipulated, was holding. The AFL/Coalition members were experiencing some difficulties in agreeing on their nominee for the Council of State, and Ghana was assisting them to reach a compromise. No similar difficulties appeared to be facing the larger factions. The next step under the Accra Agreement was the installation of a new Council of State. President Jerry Rawlings of Ghana was to convene a meeting of all Liberian factions on 9 January to finalize measures in that regard.

The military situation remained highly charged and unstable, the Secretary-General went on. The hostilities, which had resumed in September 1994, had spread to more than 80 per cent of the country. The fighting had caused massive population displacement. Humanitarian assistance outside the capital city of Monrovia had been suspended, and there were reports of human rights violations by all factions. The security situation in Monrovia had deteriorated significantly. UN military observers were withdrawn from most UNOMIL-team sites and their number reduced to approximately 90, compared to the authorized strength of 368. UNOMIL operations were restricted to areas under ECOMOG control—Monrovia, Kakata and Buchanan—and were limited to monitoring the cease-fire and assisting in the delivery of humanitarian support.

Fighting between factions mainly took the form of low-level skirmishes accompanied by looting and destruction of infrastructure. The northern and eastern regions, control of which had been contested by NPFL and Coalition forces, were the worst affected. All factions experienced serious problems of command and control. In some instances, ground commanders seemed to have wrestled the initiative from faction leaders, thus marginalizing the influence of some political leaderships.

The inability of ECOMOG to deploy troops at major points along the borders of Liberia, in accordance with the 1993 Cotonou Agreement,^(c) was a factor in the continuing breach of the 1992 arms embargo, the Secretary-General said. Due to insecurity and logistical difficulties, ECOMOG was now deployed in less than 15 per cent of the country. Factions continued to acquire arms across the borders and from sources within Liberia. Some ECOMOG troop-contributing countries, frustrated over the failure of Liberian leaders to agree on a political solution and experiencing financial hardships in maintaining their troops, had indicated their intention to withdraw their troops unless there was significant progress in the peace process or financial assistance was provided. Some had already reduced their contingents and other forms of support.

The condition of the civilian population continued to deteriorate, the Secretary-General reported. An estimated 1.8 million Liberians now required humanitarian assistance. A constant influx of displaced persons to Monrovia had raised its population to 1.3 million, nearly three times the level before the civil war. In seeking to respond to humanitarian needs in that volatile environment, relief organizations were functioning under even more difficult circumstances than before. The loss of command and control by the leaders of warring factions and the complete disregard for human suffering by their fighters limited humanitarian activities to ECOMOG-controlled areas, the Secretary-General said. Relief assets and supplies had been looted by factions, and humanitarian staff had been displaced. Some organizations had redeployed some professional staff to other countries. Donors continued to support efforts to resume delivering humanitarian assistance throughout the country, and UNOMIL also used its limited assets to advance the cause of humanitarian relief. A consolidated UN inter-agency appeal of almost $65 million was prepared for Liberia to meet emergency, life-saving needs for the first six months of 1995 (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the UNOMIL mandate for three months. During that time, his Special Representative, Anthony Nyakyi (United Republic of Tanzania), would make an in-depth assessment of the role that UN military observers could play in the peace process and recommend adjustments in their strength. The Special Representative would also work out, in consultation with ECOMOG, its financial and logistic needs so an appropriate appeal to Member States could be made to maintain ECOMOG troops in Liberia.

The Secretary-General expressed concern that should the conflict in Liberia continue, the displacement of people and flow of arms over its borders would have serious consequences for stability in the subregion. All ECOWAS members were called on to adhere strictly to the arms embargo; he hoped ECOWAS leaders would convene a summit at the earliest possible date, to harmonize their policies on Liberia and promote implementation of the Accra Agreement, including tightening the arms embargo.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council on 13 January adopted resolution 972 (1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 788(1992) of 19 November 1992, 813(1993) of 26 March 1993, 856(1993) of 10 August 1993, 866(1993) of 22 September 1993 and 911(1994) of 21 April 1994 and 950(1994) of 21 October 1994,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General dated 18 May 1994, 24 June 1994, 26 August 1994, 14 October 1994 and 6 January 1995 on the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL),

Viewing with appreciation the diplomatic achievement of the current chairman of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), President Jerry Rawlings of Ghana, in bringing together the factions leaders of Liberia to sign the Accra Agreement, on 21 December 1994, which builds upon the Yamoussoukro, Cotonou and Akosombo agreements and includes a timetable for the implementation of its provisions,

Commending once again the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), which has played a crucial role in the search for a peaceful solution to the Liberian conflict,

Commending also those African States that have contributed troops to the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG), and those Member States that have provided assistance in support of the peace negotiations and the peace-keeping forces, including contributions to the Trust Fund for Liberia,

Expressing the hope that a summit of the ECOWAS States will be convened at the earliest possible date to harmonize their policies on Liberia and promote implementation of the Accra Agreement, including tightening the application of the arms embargo,

Taking note with concern that there has been a continuing inflow of arms in Liberia in violation of the existing arms embargo, which has further destabilized the situation in Liberia,

Deeply concerned that the humanitarian situation in Liberia has worsened due to the lack of security in the country and the resulting inability of national and international relief organizations to function effectively,

Calling on the Liberian leaders and factions to demonstrate their commitment to the peace process by maintaining the cease-fire, which came into effect on 28 December 1994, recommitting themselves to the disarmament process and implementing without delay all provisions of the Accra Agreement,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General dated 6 January 1995;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIL until 13 April 1995;

3. Expresses deep concern at the failure of the Liberian parties so far to reach agreement on the composition of the Council of State as stipulated in the Accra Agreement at the recent talks in Accra and calls upon them to work together to implement the Accra Agreement by upholding the cease-fire, resuming disarmament and demobilization of combatants and implementing the other relevant aspects of the Agreement in accordance with the timetable, including the prompt installation of the New Council of State;

4. Requests that the Secretary-General base any decision to return UNOMIL and its civilian staff to the level authorized under resolution 866(1993) on the existence of an effective cease-fire and on the ability of UNOMIL to carry out its mandate;

5. Further requests that the Secretary-General report to the Security Council on the situation in Liberia, on the role of UNOMIL and of ECOMOG, including on the needs of ECOWAS States to maintain their troops in ECOMOG, on or before 1 March 1995;

6. Reminds all Member States of their obligation strictly to abide by and comply with the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia imposed by resolution 788(1992);

7. Demands once more, that all factions in Liberia strictly respect the status of ECOMOG and UNOMIL personnel, and those of organizations and personnel delivering humanitarian assistance throughout Liberia and further demands that these factions facilitate such deliveries and that they strictly abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law;

8. Urges Member States to provide support for the peace process in Liberia by contributing to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia, and by providing financial, logistical and other assistance in support of the troops participating in ECOMOG in order to enable ECOMOG to deploy fully and to carry out its mandate, particularly with respect to encampment and disarmament of the Liberian factions;

9. Requests, in this regard, the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to obtain financial and logistical resources from Member States;

10. Commends the efforts made by Member States and humanitarian organizations to provide emergency humanitarian assistance and especially the efforts of neighbouring countries to assist Liberian refugees;

11. Commends also the ongoing efforts of ECOWAS to further the Liberian peace process and the commitment of ECOMOG to ensure the safety of UNOMIL military observers and civilian staff;

12. Welcomes the tireless efforts by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to promote the cause of peace in Liberia;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 972(1995)

13 January 1995 Meeting 3489 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/22).

Report of the Secretary-General (February).
On 24 February, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁶⁾ to the Security Council that, in accordance with the Accra Agreement,⁽⁷⁾ the Liberian parties had met in Accra on 9 January under ECOWAS auspices to consult on the new Council of State, with a view to its installation by 11 January. However, they were not able to reach agreement on its composition and chairmanship, and the failure to install a new Council of State had led to massive demonstrations in Monrovia on 14 January, resulting in injuries to civilians and party members, as well as destruction of property. Further proposals were made, which were also not agreed upon and, on 30 January, the Chairman of ECOWAS informed the parties they should return to Liberia to continue their negotiations. At the time of the February report, through ECOMOG efforts, the security situation in Monrovia had improved.

In response to the request in Security Council resolution 972(1995) (see above) for information on the needs of ECOWAS troops in ECOMOG, the Secretary-General dispatched a technical team to Monrovia from 6 to 10 February. ECOMOG indicated that it required some 12,000 troops all ranks, an increase of 4,250 over its current strength, and detailed logistical and other requirements to fulfil its tasks under the Accra Agreement, including accommodation, transport, communications and other equipment. The estimated cost would be about $90 million for a 12-month period.

The team found that ECOMOG resources and logistic assets were clearly insufficient for effective execution of its tasks. It concluded that while estimates of logistic support requirements were justified, they were not convinced that 4,250 additional troops were needed to implement the ECOMOG operation.

The Secretary-General believed it unlikely that estimated resources for ECOMOG could be provided through voluntary contributions. He therefore asked ECOWAS to indicate which budget areas troop-contributing countries would be prepared to continue financing and those that were critical for external financing on a voluntary basis.

Because of the delay in installing the Council of State, the Secretary-General said, none of the military disengagement and restructuring provided for under the Accra Agreement had yet taken place. In addition, certain aspects of the peace process needed greater coordination, including those relating to the demobilization process, including transportation of combatants to encampment sites and to home communities, provision to them and their families of food and supplies at assembly and encampment sites, construction of those sites and coordination and financing of reintegration of combatants, as well as war-affected civilians, into Liberian society. He proposed the establishment of a joint ECOMOG-UNOMIL Liaison and Coordination Cell at ECOMOG headquarters to enable more effective coordination of their respective mandates.

The Secretary-General observed, in his 24 February report, that two months after the signing of the Accra Agreement, the Liberian factions and political leaders had yet to show that they were genuinely committed to the fulfilment of their obligations. With their failure to implement yet another agreement, he said, the time had come to consider how the international community could assist in the search for peace and stability in Liberia and what form that assistance could take. If the parties were willing to implement that agreement, one option before the Council for future UN political and military involvement in Liberia was the maintenance of UNOMIL as mandated under resolution 866(1993).⁽⁷⁾ However, that option's viability depended on providing ECOMOG with adequate resources to support its responsibilities in Liberia, a restructuring of ECOMOG, effective enforcement of the 1992 arms embargo, and more effective harmonization of ECOWAS member States policies regarding Liberia. Another option was to establish, in cooperation with ECOWAS, a UN peace-keeping force to help the parties implement all aspects of the Accra Agreement. If the current political stalemate continued, however, the Council could either further reduce UNOMIL's military component and limit the Mission's mandate to the provision of good offices, until the parties clearly demonstrated the political will to activate the peace process; or the Council could decide to withdraw UNOMIL.

Report of Secretary-General (April). On 10 April the Secretary-General reported⁽⁸⁾ increased fighting in various parts of the country, which resulted in a large influx of displaced persons in areas controlled by ECOMOG. The Special Representative had attempted to re-establish the Cease-fire Violations Committee, but some factions still had not designated representatives. In the meantime, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania informed the Secretary-General of their intention to withdraw from ECOMOG, dropping the group's strength by almost 2,000 to about 6,800 of all ranks.

The Secretary-General reported he had discussed with Ghana's President Rawlings the convening of an ECOWAS summit in Abuja, Nigeria, as soon as possible, bringing together the Heads of State of the ECOWAS Committee of Nine on Liberia and also involving the leaders of the Liberian factions. The summit was set for May 1995.

Given frequent reports of human rights violations, the Secretary-General appointed a legal/human rights officer to UNOMIL to investigate them.

Humanitarian assistance continued to be severely hampered by the security situation in areas controlled by the factions. Since January, 67,000 persons had sought refuge in Buchanan, bringing its population to 180,000—more than four times its pre-civil war size. Some 90,000 persons were living in shelters, and the UN Humanitarian Coordinator in Liberia had set up a special task force to address their needs. In addition to implementing immediate emergency programmes concerning food, shelter, water and sanitation, the task force was planning income-generating, quick-impact projects and trauma counselling.

As at 22 March, only 41 per cent of the $65 million sought by the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal had been pledged or contributed by the international community.

The Secretary-General then recommended that the Security Council extend UNOMIL's mandate until 30 June, with the provision that its military strength be reduced by about 20 observers given the Mission's limited ability to carry out its mandate. The military component would be strengthened as soon as the security situation improved. He urged parties to use that period to install the Council of State, re-establish an effective cease-fire, and implement other provisions of the Accra Agreement.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council on 13 April, following consideration of the Secretary-General's reports, adopted resolution 985(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 813(1993) of 26 March 1993, 856(1993) of 10 August 1993, 866(1993) of 22 September 1993, 911(1994) of 21 April 1994, 950(1994) of 21 October 1994 and 972(1995) of 13 January 1995,

Recalling also its resolution 788(1992) of 19 November 1992, in which it decided, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, that all States shall, for the purpose of establishing peace and stability in Liberia, immediately implement a general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia until the Security Council decides otherwise, and in which it decided also that the embargo shall not apply to weapons and military equipment destined for the sole use of the peace-keeping forces of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) in Liberia, subject to any review that may be required in conformity with the report of the Secretary-General,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General dated 24 February 1995 and 10 April 1995 on the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL),

Deeply concerned that the cease-fire in Liberia has broken down, precluding the full deployment of UNOMIL and preventing UNOMIL from fully carrying out its mandate,

Noting with deep concern that in violation of resolution 788(1992) arms continue to be imported into Liberia, exacerbating the conflict,

Welcoming the decision of ECOWAS to hold a summit of Heads of State in May 1995,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIL until 30 June 1995;

2. Urges all Liberian parties to implement the Akosombo Agreement and the Accra Agreement by re-establishing an effective cease-fire, promptly installing the Council of State, and taking concrete steps towards the implementation of the other provisions of the Agreements;

3. Encourages the ECOWAS States to promote implementation of the Akosombo and Accra Agreements, and to continue to do all in their power to facilitate a political settlement in Liberia;

4. Urges all States, and in particular all neighbouring States, to comply fully with the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia imposed by resolution 788(1992), and to that end decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council, consisting of all the members of the Council, to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(a) To seek from all States information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of the embargo imposed by paragraph 8 of resolution 788(1992);

(b) To consider any information brought to its attention by States concerning violations of the embargo, and in that context to make recommendations to the Council on ways of increasing the effectiveness of the embargo;

(c) To recommend appropriate measures in response to violations of the embargo imposed by paragraph 8 of resolution 788(1992) and provide information on a regular basis to the Secretary-General for general distribution to Member States;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Chairman of ECOWAS for his initiative in organizing a regional summit on Liberia and to the Government of Nigeria for agreeing to host it, and urges all parties to participate;

6. Demands once more that all factions in Liberia strictly respect the status of personnel of the ECOWAS Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) and UNOMIL, and those of organizations and personnel delivering humanitarian assistance throughout Liberia and further demands that these factions facilitate such deliveries and that they strictly abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council by 15 June 1995 on the situation in Liberia, including whether there is an effective cease-fire and whether UNOMIL can carry out its mandate, and on the status of contributions of financial and logistical resources from the international community in support of the troops participating in ECOMOG, and notes that the Council will consider the future of UNOMIL in the light of the Secretary-General's report;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 985(1995)

13 April 1995 Meeting 3517 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/291).

Sanctions Committee

The Security Council Committee, established under resolution 985(1995) to supervise implementation of the mandatory arms embargo imposed by the Council regarding Liberia, held its first meeting on 28 April. Pursuant to a decision taken at its second meeting on 25 May, the Committee on 7 June appealed to governmental or non-governmental organizations and individuals to provide information on suspected violators of that mandatory arms embargo.

In reporting on its activities up to 31 December 1995,⁽⁹⁾ the Committee stated that it had received no reports from Member States on alleged violations of the arms embargo.

Report of the Secretary-General (June). The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁰⁾ on 10 June that, following extensive consultations, the Third Meeting of Heads of State and Government of the ECOWAS Committee of Nine on Liberia was held in Abuja from 17 to 20 May. It had been preceded, on 15 May, by a meeting of ECOWAS Foreign Ministers, who recommended that the Liberian Council of State should be made up of six members, with Chief Tamba Tailor as its Chairman, and that each group should designate its own representative to the Council. Consensus was not reached on the designation of Vice-Chairmen. The Foreign Ministers agreed on the need to strengthen the arms embargo, undertake peace-enforcement measures and increase financial resources for implementing the peace process.

The Abuja meeting was attended by eight Heads of State—of Cote d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Ghana, Liberia, Mali, Nigeria, Sierra Leone and Togo—as well as the Foreign Ministers of Burkina Faso and Guinea, and senior Ministers from Benin and Senegal. Delegations of all the Liberian factions present were headed, except for the NPFL, by their respective leaders.

While the Liberian parties did not reach final agreement on the composition of the Council of State, the Heads of State and Government observed that in building on gains made during the Accra consultations in January 1995, a substantial measure of agreement had emerged on nearly all outstanding issues. They emphasized the need to preserve and consolidate those gains and requested the leaders of the Liberian parties to consult towards a definite solution. The Heads of State entrusted the Ministers of the Committee of Nine with responsibility for reconvening a meeting of Liberian parties to resolve the outstanding issues.

The ECOWAS leaders noted that, if and when agreement was secured, it would be imperative that the United Nations fully support the implementation of the peace process by restoring UNOMIL to full strength and securing resources for ECOMOG. They expressed concern over the continued flow of arms into Liberia and called on Member States to bring all embargo violations to the attention of the sanctions committee. They requested ECOMOG and UNOMIL to improve monitoring mechanisms and appealed to the international community to provide logistical support to ECOWAS to facilitate the effective patrolling of Liberia's borders and stem the flow of arms into the country. They stressed that the provision of adequate resources for ECOMOG would enhance its capacity to compel the armed factions to conform to ECOWAS decisions.

At the invitation of Nigeria, NPFL President Charles Taylor, the only Liberian faction leader who did not attend the summit, travelled to Abuja on 2 June for consultations with Nigerian officials.

In March and April 1995, ambushes and skirmishes continued, as a result of which UNOMIL had to suspend its patrolling in certain areas. Efforts by UNOMIL to bring all relevant faction representatives to participate in the Cease-fire Violations Committee remained unsuccessful, the Secretary-General stated.

In late April, concerns relating to food security led to a demonstration by Sierra Leonean refugees and internally displaced persons in Monrovia and an attack on offices and vehicles of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). The Special Representative convened a task force to formulate a comprehensive programme of disarmament, demobilization and long-term reintegration of ex-combatants. The office of the Humanitarian Coordinator developed a strategy for the delivery of humanitarian assistance that took those developments into account and formed the basis of a resource mobilization campaign for humanitarian activities in Liberia.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend UNOMIL's mandate until 30 September. In the event that the political stalemate continued, UNOMIL would be terminated on that date and converted into a good offices mission, including a small military cell, which would maintain liaison with ECOMOG. Those military observers who, in the absence of a cease-fire and the resumption of disarmament, might be unable to perform their monitoring functions effectively would also be withdrawn. The Secretary-General would consult with ECOWAS on the modalities of the good offices role of the United Nations and make recommendations to the Council. If, on the other hand, there were significant progress over the next three months, he would recommend that the Council restore UNOMIL to its full strength. It was evident, however, that UNOMIL's role in Liberia and its relationship with ECOMOG would have to be adjusted and he intended to consult with ECOWAS with a view to enhancing cooperation between UNOMIL and ECOMOG and defining a joint concept of operations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 1001(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 788(1992) of 19 November 1992, 813(1993) of 26 March 1993, 856(1993) of 10 August 1993, 866(1993) of 22 September 1993, 911(1994) of 21 April 1994, 950(1994) of 21 October 1994, 972(1995) of 13 January 1995, and 985(1995) of 13 April 1995,

Noting that a further concerted and harmonized effort by all concerned, including the ECOWAS States, would be helpful to advance the peace process,

Concerned that the Liberian parties have so far failed to install the Council of State, re-establish an effective cease-fire and take concrete steps towards the implementation of the other provisions of the Accra Agreement,

Deeply concerned also at the continuing inter- and intra-factional fighting in parts of Liberia, which has further worsened the plight of the civilian population, particularly in rural areas, as well as affected the ability of humanitarian agencies to provide relief,

Calling on the Liberian factions, especially the combatants, to respect the human rights of the civilian population and to respect international humanitarian law,

Expressing great concern over the continued flow of arms into Liberia in violation of Security Council resolution 788(1992),

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General dated 10 June 1995;

3. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIL until 15 September 1995;

4. Urges that the Liberian parties use this period to make serious and substantial progress towards implementation of the Akosombo and Accra Agreements and specifically to accomplish the following steps:

6. Declares its readiness if significant progress in the peace process in Liberia regarding the steps in paragraph 4 above is achieved by 15 September 1995 to consider restoring UNOMIL to its full strength with appropriate adjustment of its mandate and the relationship with ECOMOG to enable these two operations to carry out their respective functions more effectively as well as to consider other aspects of post-conflict peace-building in Liberia;

7. Urges the ECOWAS Ministers of the Committee of Nine as authorized by their Heads of State and Governments at the Abuja Summit of 17 to 20 May 1995, to reconvene a meeting of the Liberian parties and political leaders as soon as possible in order to finally resolve the outstanding issues of political settlement;

8. Urges Member States in the meantime to provide additional support for the peace process in Liberia by contributing to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia, and by providing financial, logistical and other assistance in support of the troops participating in ECOMOG in order to enable it to deploy fully and to carry out its mandate, particularly with respect to encampment and disarmament of the Liberian factions;

9. Requests the Secretary-General in this regard, to continue his efforts to obtain financial and logistical resources from Member States and urges those States that have pledged assistance to fulfil their commitments;

10. Reminds all States of their obligations to comply strictly with the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia imposed by resolution 788(1992) and to bring all instances of violations of the arms embargo before the Committee established pursuant to resolution 985(1995);

19. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1001(1995)

30 June 1995 Meeting 3549 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/521).

July summit statement. The Authority of Heads of State and Government of ECOWAS, at its summit meeting (Accra, Ghana, 28 and 29 July), adopted a resolution,⁽¹⁾ later transmitted to the Security Council, stating that it was convinced that withdrawal of UNOMIL would irreparably compromise all efforts made so far by ECOMOG and would be catastrophic for all States of the sub-region. It appealed to the Security Council to reconsider the situation in Liberia, taking into account recent initiatives and ongoing actions and to reconsider its decision, irrespective of the stage the Liberian peace process had reached by 15 September. The Heads of State renewed their appeal to the international community to provide adequate financial resources to ECOWAS and logistic support to ECOMOG for the restoration of peace in Liberia.

The Abuja Agreement

At the Consultative Meeting of Liberian parties, facilitated by ECOWAS (Monrovia, 19-23 July), factions attending a meeting of the Women's Groups of Liberia, also held in July, endorsed some recommendations made there. Subsequently, Charles Taylor discussed in Accra with the Chairman of ECOWAS and the OAU Eminent Person for Liberia, Reverend Canaan Banana, modalities for convening an all-inclusive meeting of Liberian factions. Following further consultations with some ECOWAS leaders and Liberian parties, the Chairman of ECOWAS convened a meeting of the factions at Abuja (16-19 August) attended by leaders of all parties, as well as Chief Tamba Tailor, representing the traditional chiefs.

The Abuja talks culminated on 19 August in the signing of the Abuja Agreement⁽¹²⁾ to Supplement the Cotonou and Akosombo Agreements, as subsequently clarified by the Accra Agreement. The Abuja Agreement provided for the establishment of a cease-fire and cessation of hostilities on 26 August at midnight; a six-member Council of State composed of: Wilton Sankawolo as Chairman; Dr. George Boley, representing the coalition of Liberia Peace Council (LPC), CRC-NPFL, and Lola Defence Force (LDF); Alhaji Kromah of ULIMO; Oscar Quiah of LNC; Chief Tamba Tailor; and Charles Taylor of NPFL. All other members of the Council would be Vice-Chairmen of equal status. The new Council would remain in power for one year, until the elections scheduled for 20 August 1996.

On 28 August 1995, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ghana, on behalf of President Rawlings, Chairman of ECOWAS, informed⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General of the successful outcome of the negotiations and the conclusion of the Abuja Agreement, whose successful implementation called for additional resources in terms of troops, guns, ammunition and money. Progress was also linked to the percentage of guns that could be taken away from the current fighters in Liberia by ECOMOG and the Council of State.

Council of State inauguration

Report of the Secretary-General (September).

On 9 September, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴⁾ that the new Council of State was inaugurated on 1 September in Monrovia and held its first session immediately after its installation. Reports indicated that the new transitional Government enjoyed the full support of all key political leaders of Liberia and was warmly welcomed by the population at large. It had already announced new appointments to the Cabinet and assigned oversight responsibilities of Ministries, autonomous agencies and public corporations to Council members. Nominations to the Supreme Court had also been made and consultations took place to fill the remaining posts in the Transitional Legislative Assembly and the Electoral Commission.

A cease-fire had been established on 26 August, the Secretary-General reported. An ECOWAS delegation, visiting Liberia from 25 to 27 August, confirmed that the factions had instructed their respective forces to observe the cease-fire. The Cease-fire Violations Committee, chaired by UNOMIL and consisting of ECOMOG and representatives of the Liberian National Transitional Government (LNTG) and the factions, met on 4 September to review plans for monitoring the cease-fire and implementing the other provisions of the peace agreement, including disarmament and demobilization. A Disarmament Committee, chaired by ECOMOG and comprising UNOMIL, LNTG and representatives of the armed factions, with the participation of the International Committee of the Red Cross, was also established to draw up plans for the disengagement of forces, disarmament and the exchange of prisoners of war. The Council of State, taking advantage of ECOMOG's extended presence in the interior, established local administrations and appointed superintendents for certain counties.

UN operations in Liberia

The Secretary-General observed in his September report that prospects for peace in Liberia were perhaps better now than they had been at any time since the outbreak of the civil war. The ECOWAS States had harmonized their policies towards Liberia and a new spirit of cooperation seemed to have emerged between the Liberian parties and ECOWAS. He recommended that the Security Council extend UNOMIL's mandate until 31 January 1996, during which time the parties should make every effort to complete the disengagement, assembly, disarmament and demobilization of their forces. In his view, effective reintegration of ex-combatants into civilian life would be an essential element in the peace process; UNOMIL, in consultation with the transitional Government, ECOMOG, UNDP and other United Nations agencies, as well as non-governmental organizations (NGOs), had established a task force on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, to develop a framework in which those issues could be addressed in an integrated manner. Technical and logistic assistance should also be provided so that the national police could effectively carry out its duties and progressively assume a greater share in the maintenance of law and order.

In accordance with his earlier decision to reduce the number of military observers in Liberia, the Secretary-General reported that, in July, 17 UNOMIL military observers had been redeployed to the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda. UNOMIL's current military strength consisted of 45 observers and 7 medical personnel. However, in the light of the developments in the peace process, he intended to increase immediately the military component by some 42 observers. That would enable the Mission to re-establish a presence at Tubmanburg and, subsequently, at Gbarnga and Tapeta, subject to the security situation and to the deployment of ECOMOG at those locations. Plans for the further expansion of UNOMIL, to carry out its responsibilities under the Abuja Agreement, were being prepared and UNOMIL was discussing with ECOMOG a joint concept of operations.

There was also a significant expansion planned in humanitarian assistance, the Secretary-General reported. Major humanitarian aid organizations had agreed to a set of operating principles, designed to maintain a common approach to working in the Liberian context. Also, major UN agencies, NGOs and other donor representatives in Liberia had adopted a joint mission statement, emphasizing the importance of neutral, impartial and need-driven humanitarian assistance, the promotion of self-reliance among those populations receiving assistance, and the efficient use of resources. That statement was to form the basis of an inter-agency consolidated appeal for Liberia. United Nations agencies, NGOs and their partners developed means of assuring the smooth and permanent reabsorption of demobilized fighters into civilian society, and programmes for the reintegration of internally displaced persons and refugees.

The Secretary-General said he would consult with the ECOWAS Chairman on holding a pledging conference to raise resources for ECOMOG and for other critical needs to advance the peace process in Liberia. He would send a mission to Liberia to consult with Liberian leaders and other interested parties to assess the requirements for implementing the Abuja Agreement. He also intended to present to the Council, by the end of October, UNOMIL's new concept of operations, which would include aspects of disarmament and demobilization.

Security Council resolution 1014(1995)

15 September 1995 Meeting 3577 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/790).

Transitional Government progress

Report of the Secretary-General (October).

Since its installation on 1 September, the new Council of State had shown strong determination to make the Liberian National Transition Government an effective one, the Secretary-General stated in a 23 October report to the Security Council.⁽¹⁵⁾ Appointments to the Cabinet were completed and new Ministers had been sworn into office on 26 September. Appointments to the Supreme Court were also completed and the Ad Hoc Elections Commission reconstituted. The distribution of positions in Government, public corporations and autonomous agencies had been carried out in accordance with the Abuja Agreement, he said.

The Council of State directed all government departments and agencies to prepare plans to expand the authority of LNTG into the interior of the country and had declared its intention to reopen all roads to ensure free and secure access into the hinterland. It envisaged that local government administrations, which had not existed in most counties during the six years of civil war, would be re-established. The Supreme Court announced its intention to re-establish the judiciary system throughout the country. Commissions were established to oversee the process of disarming and demobilization; repatriation and resettlement; national reconstruction; the restructuring of AFL; and the rehabilitation of the Liberian National Police.

As for the military situation, there had been violations of the cease-fire, including intermittent fighting between factions over a diamond-rich area. Despite an order from the Cease-fire Violations Committee to disengage, hostilities continued. All relief agencies had temporarily relocated their staff to Monrovia and reduced activities in the area. Harassment of civilians and looting of property were reported.

Disengagement of forces was occurring, but not completed, by 26 September. The ECOMOG/UNOMIL joint verification team reported that some factions said because of mutual distrust it was unlikely that significant disengagement would take place until ECOMOG deployed to those areas. The LNTG Disarmament and Demobilization Commission was to oversee the disarmament and demobilization of the 60,000 combatants into civil society. United Nations agencies, NGOs and bilateral donors planned reintegration assistance programmes, addressing the needs of ex-combatants, internally displaced persons and refugees. To provide for the ex-combatants during the time-lag between demobilization and reintegration, it was envisaged that assistance for the demobilization process would be provided under the assessed budget to help combatants for a two- or three-month period. UNICEF and its traditional partners established programmes to address the specific needs of child soldiers.

Further developments

Outlining the main objectives and revised mandate of UNOMIL in his October report, the Secretary-General said that in accordance with the Cotonou, Akosombo, Accra and Abuja Agreements, ECOWAS would continue to play the lead role in the peace process in Liberia, while ECOMOG would retain the primary responsibility for assisting LNTG in the implementation of the military provisions of the Agreements. UNOMIL would continue to observe and monitor the implementation of the peace agreements. Its main functions would be to exercise its good offices to support ECOWAS and LNTG to: investigate allegations of cease-fire violations reported to the Cease-fire Violations Committee, recommend measures to prevent the recurrence of such violations and report to the Secretary-General; monitor compliance with the other military provisions of the peace agreements and verify their impartial application, especially the disarming and demobilization of combatants; assist in the maintenance of agreed assembly sites and the implementation of a programme for demobilization of combatants, in co-operation with LNTG, donors and NGOs; support humanitarian assistance activities; investigate and report to the Secretary-General on human rights violations and assist local human rights groups in raising voluntary assistance for training and logistic support; and observe and verify the election process, in consultation with OAU and ECOWAS.

The new concept of operations envisaged that UNOMIL would monitor and verify the implementation of the military provisions of the Abuja Agreement and deploy its military observers with the emphasis on disarmament and demobilization. Teams of UN military observers would co-deploy with ECOMOG troops at each assembly site to monitor and verify the disarming of combatants. In addition, three mobile teams would be co-located within ECOMOG brigade headquarters. They would act as sector commanders for the UNOMIL military observers stationed at assembly sites in each sector. One mobile team would be stationed in Monrovia. Teams would investigate, jointly with ECOMOG and LNTG observers or independently, reported violations of the cease-fire and arms embargo, as well as the disengagement of forces.

To implement that concept of operations, it was estimated that 160 military observers would be needed; maximum strength would be reached during the period of disarmament and demobilization, scheduled between 1 December 1995 and 31 January 1996. UNOMIL would also require additional air assets. LNTG should ensure respect for the status of UN personnel and extend full cooperation to UNOMIL. At the same time, ECOMOG must provide security for UNOMIL personnel and property. Joint coordination meetings between UNOMIL and ECOMOG would be held.

ECOMOG estimated that it needed 12,000 troops, some 4,700 more than its strength at that time. Ghana, Guinea, Nigeria and other ECOWAS countries indicated in principle their preparedness to contribute additional troops.

Humanitarian aid

The Secretary-General, following consultations with the Chairman of ECOWAS and LNTG, also announced in his 23 October report the convening of a conference of assistance to Liberia in New York scheduled for 27 October. It would focus on support required to implement the Abuja Agreement, including humanitarian assistance, the disarmament and demobilization processes, recovery and rehabilitation needs, as well as assistance to ECOMOG.

To address the new humanitarian requirements, coordination mechanisms were to be expanded and strengthened. A UN Humanitarian Coordinator was to be appointed to support and coordinate efforts of UN operational agencies and to support efforts of the wider humanitarian community, including non-governmental, international and multilateral organizations. The Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit would include units on humanitarian assistance coordination and demobilization and reintegration. UNHCR was preparing for the repatriation of refugees starting in early 1996.

The Secretary-General identified a number of areas where Liberia needed assistance. Those included assistance for the holding of legislative and presidential elections, scheduled for 20 August 1996; technical assistance in the restructuring and management of the national police, financial and logistic support to obtain uniforms and communications and transportation equipment, and basic technical and financial assistance to the national police academy, including training material, training of trainers and the rehabilitation of buildings; and support for the Monrovia Central Prison.

The Secretary-General was encouraged by the progress and hoped that the Council of State and the faction leaders would abide by their commitments under the Abuja Agreement. He was, however, concerned about reports of cease-fire violations and resulting delays in the disengagement process. He urged LNTG to take action to avoid further incidents and to maintain the momentum of the peace process.

Security Council resolution 1020(1995)

10 November 1995 Meeting 3592 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/923).

Composition and financing

Composition of UNOMIL

In January 1995, the number of UNOMIL military observers was about 90, compared with the mission's authorized strength of 368. They still numbered 86 in April but fell to 45, plus 7 medical staff, in July.

However, in September, after the signing of the Abuja Agreement, UNOMIL's military component rose by 42. In October, the Secretary-General outlined a new concept of operations for UNOMIL, requiring a strength of 160 military observers. At mid-December, including medical staff, observers numbered 71.

On 16 November, the Council agreed⁽¹⁶⁾ with the Secretary-General's proposal⁽¹⁷⁾ to appoint Major-General Mahmoud Talha (Egypt) as Chief Military Observer of UNOMIL, to replace Major-General Daniel I. Opande (Kenya).

Financing of UNOMIL

In May 1995, the Secretary-General presented⁽¹⁸⁾ cost estimates for the maintenance of UNOMIL, amounting to $12,222,500 gross ($11,385,500 net) from 14 April to 31 December 1995 and $8,004,900 gross ($7,408,500 net) for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1996.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) in June recommended⁽¹⁹⁾ the suggested appropriations for the period from 14 April to 31 December 1995. For the later period from 1 January to 30 June 1996, it recommended that the Secretary-General submit his budget proposal to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 July, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/232 B.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 866(1993) of 22 September 1993, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council renewed the mandate of the Observer Mission, the latest of which was resolution 985(1995) of 13 April 1995,

Recalling also its decision 48/478 of 23 December 1993 on the financing of the Observer Mission and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 49/232 A of 23 December 1994,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of assessed contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia as at 20 June 1995, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 9,267,175 United States dollars, and urges all Member States concerned to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, due to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission promptly and in full;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that all United Nations activities related to the Liberian peace process are administered in a coordinated fashion with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia an amount of 4,781,400 dollars gross (4,533,300 dollars net), authorized and apportioned in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/232 A for the maintenance of the Observer Mission for the period from 14 January to 13 April 1995;

7. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 3,695,200 dollars gross (3,442,200 dollars net), authorized and apportioned in accordance with resolution 49/232 A, for the maintenance of the Observer Mission for the period from 14 April to 30 June 1995;

8. Decides further, with regard to the period from 1 July to 31 December 1995, to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 8,527,300 dollars gross (7,943,300 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observer Mission and to apportion this amount among Member States at the rate of 1,421,200 dollars gross (1,323,900 dollars net) per month in accordance with the scheme set out in resolution 49/232 A, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1995, 1996 and 1997, as set out in General Assembly resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994, subject to the extension of the mandate of the Observer Mission by the Security Council;

9. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 584,000 dollars, which is equivalent to a monthly rate of 97,300 dollars, approved for the Observer Mission for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1995;

10. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the amount of 395,553 dollars gross (436,290 dollars net) remaining from the assessment for the period from 14 April to 30 June 1995, which represents the balance remaining between the commitment authority approved in resolution 49/232 A and the appropriation provided for in paragraph 7 above;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observer Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991.

12 July 1995 Meeting 105 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/812/Add.1) without vote, 23 June (meeting 58); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.57), based on informal consultations and orally corrected; agenda item 129.

Report of the Secretary-General (October).

On 18 October, the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly a performance report on UNOMIL financing for the period from 23 October 1994 to 13 January 1995.⁽²⁰⁾

In November, following the Security Council's decision, in resolution 1020(1995) to adjust the mandate and concept of operations of UNOMIL, including an increase in the number of military observers to 160, he submitted revised cost estimates⁽²¹⁾ for a six-month period from 1 July to 31

December 1995, totalling $22,233,600 gross ($21,653,900 net), and $17,481,600 gross ($16,489,200 net) for the six-month period from 1 January to 30 June 1996.

ACABQ in an oral report to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee in December, said that the initial plan for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1995 could not be fully implemented owing to delays in deployment of personnel and in military demobilization. Revised estimates amounted to $8,100,093 gross ($7,730,800 net). As the Assembly in July had appropriated $8.5 million for UNOMIL, no additional appropriation would be needed.

However, revised estimates for the second six-month period beginning 1 January 1996 represented an increase of $2.3 million over the amount requested in November, and included recurrent costs related to demobilization and information activities. ACABQ thus recommended that $21,943,200 gross ($21,447,000 net) be approved to maintain UNOMIL through 31 March 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/210.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia and the related oral report of the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling also its decision 48/478 of 23 December 1993 on the financing of the Observer Mission and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 49/232 B of 12 July 1995,

Recalling further its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia the amount of 9,773,600 dollars gross (9,608,200 dollars net), for the maintenance of the Observer Mission for the period from 1 January to 31 January 1996;

9. ing into account the scale of assessments for the years 1995 and 1996;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 165,400 dollars approved for the Observer Mission for the period from 1 January to 31 January 1996;

11. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Observer Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 226,890 dollars gross (224,900 dollars net) for the period from 23 October 1994 to 30 June 1995;

End-of-year developments

Humanitarian appeal

At the 27 October Conference on Assistance to Liberia, co-chaired by the Secretary-General with the Chairman of ECOWAS and the Chairman of the Liberian Council of State, a total of $145.7 million was pledged for humanitarian assistance, demobilization and for ECOMOG. To sustain the momentum of the peace process, the Secretary-General visited Ghana from 26 to 29 November for consultations with the Chairman of ECOWAS, then proceeded to Monrovia on 29 November where he met with members of the Council of State. He told them of the need to demonstrate their full commitment to the peace process by ensuring respect for the cease-fire and timely implementation of the Abuja Agreement, especially the disarmament and demobilization provisions. He stressed that such action would encourage the international community to disburse funds pledged at the Conference. The members of the Council of State assured him of their commitment to the peace process and that, while some skirmishes were unavoidable, they would not allow the peace process to be derailed and were determined to hold presidential and national elections on schedule in August 1996. They regretted the lack of support for ECOMOG from the international community which, they felt, could delay and even jeopardize the peace process.

UNOMIL situation

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

The Liberian peace process remained generally on course, observed the Secretary-General in an 18 December report to the Security Council on UNOMIL.⁽²²⁾ LNTG continued to fill appointments in the various governmental bodies. To date, 12 of the 13 members of the Transitional Legislative Assembly had been inducted. However, implementation of the military aspects of the Abuja Agreement had fallen behind schedule. Little progress was made in the disengagement of forces, which was to have been completed by 26 September. Although the cease-fire generally held, violations and recurrent skirmishes were reported. In November, some Liberian faction fighters harassed ECOMOG soldiers, and reports were received of harassment of civilians. The factions continued to maintain that they would disengage and dismantle their checkpoints only when ECOMOG deployed to their areas of control. The deployment of ECOMOG and UNOMIL had been set for completion by 14 December, in accordance with the implementation schedule of the Abuja Agreement. Owing to a lack of logistic resources, however, ECOMOG troops could not be deployed on schedule, the Secretary-General stated.

ECOWAS and the Secretary-General's Special Representative had encouraged LNTG and faction leaders to contain the skirmishes that emerged during the first two months after the August cease-fire. In that connection, the Council of State designated George Boley, leader of LPC, to mediate between the contending forces. On 30 November, Charles Taylor (NPFL) and Alhaji Kromah (ULIMO-K wing) signed a Memorandum of Understanding agreeing to cease all hostilities, to create a buffer zone between their forces in Lofa County, to guarantee the free movement of civilians and commercial activity in the areas under their control, and to cooperate fully with relief organizations. They called on ECOMOG to deploy immediately to the buffer zone. That agreement prompted other factions to withdraw their allegations of cease-fire violations and to reaffirm their commitment to resolve their differences peacefully. It also prompted the faction leaders to open major roads to inaccessible areas of the country, including those linking Monrovia to Lofa, Nimba and Grand Gedeh counties through Bong County. Some forces worked together to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance to the newly accessible areas.

Since the 30 November Memorandum of Understanding, hostilities between the factions were reported to have ended. On 14 December, with the provision of initial assistance, ECOMOG began to deploy to critical areas, including assembly sites and brigade headquarters, to facilitate disarmament and demobilization. UNOMIL and ECOMOG finalized a draft plan for disengagement and demobilization, which was forwarded to the Council of State. While the final requirements for rehabilitation of facilities at the assembly sites were near completion, actual work had not begun.

A number of NGOs had been forced to suspend their activities in early October for security reasons although some 1.5 million persons still needed emergency relief. With an improved security situation toward the end of the year, humanitarian organizations planned to expand operations to previously inaccessible areas, especially in the northern and eastern sections of the country which had been cut off from aid for up to three years. The return from neighbouring countries of the more than 750,000 Liberian refugees remained slow. An influx of refugees continued from Sierra Leone into Grand Cape Mount and Lofa counties, with 3,000 refugees registered since early September. The humanitarian assistance community was planning a coordination framework in anticipation of an eventual large-scale return of refugees, internally displaced persons and demobilized combatants.

In a later report,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General indicated that after 14 December, when ECOMOG began deploying its troops to several regions of Liberia, the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Council of State travelled extensively throughout the country to explain the peace process and prepare combatants for disarmament and demobilization. The faction leaders issued directives to their combatants to cooperate with ECOMOG and UNOMIL in the implementation of the Abuja Agreement.

However, the peace process suffered a setback when the ULIMO-J wing attacked and overran ECOMOG positions in Tubmanburg and elsewhere on 28 December. Some LDF fighters were also reportedly involved in the attacks against ECOMOG. All UNOMIL personnel deployed to Tubmanburg were evacuated by 30 December. ECOMOG reported that it suffered 94 casualties (16 dead, 78 wounded), with an additional 10 soldiers missing in action. ECOMOG arms, ammunition and equipment were also seized. Some skirmishes between factions were also reported prior to the Tubmanburg incident. ECOMOG forces were attacked on 24 and 25 December, and on 27 December a humanitarian convoy was seized. The Cease-fire Violations Committee dispatched a team to investigate the Tubmanburg incident.

The fighting in Tubmanburg had serious human rights implications, the Secretary-General said, as estimated civilian casualties were significant. UNOMIL confirmed that on 30 December civilians had been forced out of a government hospital, where they had taken refuge, and used as human shields. Other civilians had been prevented from fleeing the town.

Although the peace process had seen some increase in economic activity, full recovery of an economy devastated by war remained one of the principal challenges facing Liberia, the Secretary-General had noted in his December report.⁽²²⁾ A joint UN Development Programme/World Bank mission visited Liberia at the end of the year to prepare for a Special Consultation Meeting on Liberia in March 1996, and other UN humanitarian agencies and programmes were also working to link their emergency relief activities to rehabilitation.

Mozambique

The United Nations Operation in Mozambique (ONUMOZ) formally ended on 31 January 1995, signalling the successful implementation of the 1992 Rome General Peace Agreement⁽¹⁾ between Mozambique and the Resistência Nacional Moçambicana (RENAMO). The Agreement dealt with monitoring the cease-fire, reintegration into society of demobilized military personnel and other military questions, formation of political parties, elections and guarantees, among other things. On 16 December 1992, the Security Council had established ONUMOZ⁽²⁾ to implement the Rome Peace Agreement.

After more than three decades wracked by the turbulence of an ongoing bloody civil war—which killed, maimed and made refugees of millions—Mozambique, with UN assistance over a three-year period, saw the institution of a cease-fire, withdrawal of foreign forces, the demobilization of warring factions, elections, installation of President Joaquim Alberto Chissano, a new National Assembly and the launching with international support of a rehabilitation process for its shattered infrastructure.

Security Council consideration. On 27 January, the Security Council met to consider the situation in Mozambique.

In his address to the Council, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation of Mozambique commended the Council and its members for their valuable contribution since the signing of the 1992 General Peace Agreement. He also commended the Secretary-General for his role in the consolidation of peace and security. Mozambique, he said, was now in an era in which political pluralism, national reconciliation and peaceful coexistence between Mozambicans would have to be ensured to enable lasting peace to be attained. A presidential forum, composed of distinguished political figures, would be created to enhance the national reconciliation process and consolidate democracy. The Government was preparing the national budget, whose approval by the National Assembly was scheduled to take place in March. To that end, President Chissano launched an appeal to the donor community for its continued involvement in the process of national reconstruction, stating that the Government's Economic and Social Rehabilitation Programme could register better results if it were supported by the international community. He hoped that the consultative group meeting scheduled for March 1995 in Paris would respond positively to the country's needs.

The Government attached great importance to promoting the involvement of national and foreign private sectors and had carried out a thorough review of the legislation on foreign investment in order to provide substantial incentives. Assistance was required for the reintegration of demobilized soldiers, returnees and displaced persons, as well as for eradicating poverty. Those initiatives should be complemented by actions aimed at promoting rural development and restoring primary health-care services in urban and rural areas. To consolidate the normalization of life in rural areas, the issue of land-mines had to be addressed.

The Government further attached great importance to strengthening national institutions responsible for the maintenance of peace and public order, such as the future Mozambican Defence Force, the national police and the judicial system.

Mozambique said it greatly appreciated the assurances of the UN Secretary-General that, despite the withdrawal of ONUMOZ, the United Nations would continue to assist the Government in strengthening the national reconstruction process and its new democratic institutions, as well as in its economic and social integration.

Liquidation of ONUMOZ

As stated in the final report on ONUMOZ,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General, in a 31 January 1995 report,⁽⁴⁾ confirmed that following the closure of the operation a small number of UN civilian logisticians would remain in Mozambique for one or two months to deal with outstanding issues, including disposition of property and equipment.

Based on inventory records as at 13 October 1994, assets were estimated to have a value of $31.5 million. The greater portion ($27.3 million) was to be transferred to other peace-keeping missions or shipped to the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, for storage and future use; the remainder ($4.2 million) was to be sold to commercial entities, donated to the Government or transferred to the demining programme, or transferred to UNDP projects.

Final ONUMOZ costs for the period from 16 November 1994 to 31 January 1995 were estimated at $47.8 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 March, the General Assembly, following consideration of the Secretary-General's report and the comments of ACABQ,⁽⁵⁾ adopted resolution 49/235.

Financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 797(1992) of 16 December 1992, by which the Council established the United Nations Operation in Mozambique, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Operation, the latest of which were resolutions 957(1994) of 15 November 1994 and 960(1994) of 21 November 1994,

Recalling also its resolutions 47/224 A and B of 16 March 1993 on the financing of the Operation and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which were resolution 48/240 B of 29 July 1994 and decision 49/467 of 23 December 1994,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Operation are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Operation, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Operation with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Operation in Mozambique as at 28 February 1995, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 62,831,938 United States dollars, and urges all Member States concerned to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, particularly in regard to the reimbursement of troop- and equipment-contributing countries, due to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Operation promptly and in full;

4. Expresses deep concern at the late submission of documentation, in particular the financial performance report for the period from 1 May to 15 November 1994;

5. Expresses concern at delays in the processing and settlement of claims for the reimbursement of the cost of the contingent-owned equipment provided by troop-contributing countries;

6. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

7. Expresses deep concern that the failure of Member States to pay their assessed contributions promptly and in full threatens to leave the Special Account for the United Nations Operation in Mozambique with insufficient liquid funds to meet its liabilities, in particular, to the troop-contributing countries;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to explore all possibilities in order to ensure prompt reimbursement to troop- and equipment-contributing countries;

9. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Operation in Mozambique a total amount of 40 million dollars gross (39,053,300 dollars net) for the liquidation of the Operation for the period from 16 November 1994 to 31 March 1995, inclusive of the commitment authority of 25 million dollars authorized under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 48/240 B, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee;

10. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 40 million dollars gross (39,053,300 dollars net) for the period from 16 November 1994 to 31 March 1995 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, the scale of assessments for the year 1994 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 13,529,400 dollars gross (13,209,200 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the scale of assessments for the year 1995 to be applied against the balance, that is, 26,470,600 dollars gross (25,844,100 dollars net), for the period from 1 January to 31 March 1995;

11. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 946,700 dollars approved for the period from 16 November 1994 to 31 March 1995, 320,200 dollars being the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the balance, that is, 626,500 dollars, for the period from 1 January to 31 March 1995;

12. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 4,458,900 dollars gross (4,258,900 dollars net) in respect of the Operation for the period from 1 November 1993 to 30 April 1994;

13. Decides also that the disposition of the assets of the Operation shall proceed on the basis of the following principles and policies, listed in order of priority, and requests the Secretary-General to proceed with the disposition accordingly:

(a) All equipment that meets the requirements of other United Nations operations and that it is cost-effective to move shall be redeployed to such operations or held in reserve for use by future operations;

(b) Other equipment shall be transferred to United Nations organizations, as well as to national and international non-governmental organizations already operating in Mozambique or in the process of establishing a presence there, upon request and against appropriate credit to the Special Account for the United Nations Operation in Mozambique;

(c) Any remaining material that cannot be moved shall be sold commercially on an "as is, where is" basis in accordance with standard United Nations procedures;

(d) Assets or installations that cannot be dismantled, including airfield installations, shall be donated to the Government of Mozambique;

14. Decides further to accept the proposal of the Secretary-General to donate certain assets to the mine-clearance programme on the understanding that it is not cost-effective to move them and that they cannot be financed through the voluntary contributions;

15. Takes note of the comments of the Advisory Committee in paragraph 26 of its report, and of the fact that the feasibility of procedures for valuation and transfer of costs for the assets of the Operation will be reconsidered during the discussion of the report of the Secretary-General requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/233 of 23 December 1994, to be submitted no later than 31 March 1995, and affirms that any decision on the methodology of the transfer of such costs of the Operation will be taken accordingly;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly by 31 July 1995, in the context of the performance report related to the liquidation of the Operation, a further report on the disposal of the assets and liabilities of the Operation;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Operation in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that all United Nations activities related to the Operation are administered under the authority of his Special Representative in a coordinated fashion with a maximum of efficiency and economy and in accordance with the relevant mandate, and to include information on the arrangements made in this regard in his report on the financing of the Operation;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session an item entitled "Financing of the liquidation of the United Nations Operation in Mozambique".

Rwanda

In 1995, United Nations involvement in Rwanda continued, with the aim of achieving reconciliation, rehabilitation and reconstruction for that country, still in the throes of the devastation inflicted on it in 1994 by the consequences of bloody ethnic strife, genocidal massacres and wide-ranging refugee flows.

Civil unrest continued during the year, mainly concentrated in camps for some 2 million refugees and internally displaced persons, located in Rwanda and in the neighbouring States of Burundi, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire.

A Security Council mission was dispatched to Rwanda and Burundi in February to help assess the situation and chart the role of the United Nations in the area.

In 1995, progress in identifying perpetrators of the massacres was made by the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

The mandate of the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR)—more than 5,000 strong at the beginning of 1995—was extended and adjusted in the light of the continuing crisis. Its authorized troop level was reduced to 1,200 by the end of the year, as the Government of Rwanda expressed reservations about the scope and nature of its mission.

The arms embargo imposed in 1994 by the Security Council was terminated as of 1 September. An International Commission of Inquiry was created by the Council to investigate reports of arms supplies to Rwandan government forces.

Through the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda—the first such undertaking to be run by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights—monitors were deployed throughout the country to help protect returning refugees, quell further violence and promote education programmes to prevent future incidents.

In 1995, Special Representative Shaharyar M. Khan continued his efforts to obtain a peaceful solution to the crisis. The Secretary-General also dispatched two Special Envoys during the year—Aldo Ajello, to deal with possible deployment of UN observers in neighbouring States, and Jose Luis Jesus, who undertook consultations on a regional conference on security, stability and development in the Great Lakes region.

Security Council mission

In a 6 February note by its President,⁽¹⁾ the Security Council stated that it would send a seven-member mission to Rwanda and Burundi. Its members—from China, the Czech Republic, Germany, Honduras, Indonesia, Nigeria and the United States—visited Rwanda on 12 and 13 February (see above for information on Burundi). Its mandate in Rwanda included: holding consultations with the Government regarding national reconciliation and reconstruction and the problem of returning refugees; and consulting with the Secretary-General's Special Representative, UNAMIR, the diplomatic corps and representatives from UN agencies and NGOs.

On 28 February, the mission reported⁽²⁾ to the Security Council President, stating that it had been encouraged by the progress towards returning to normalcy in Rwanda; yet the country's problems were far from over. The critical challenges of social and political accommodation, on which genuine stability and long-term healing depended, were still to be addressed. Rwandese society had to be enabled to rebuild and to continue to function. The primary responsibility in that regard rested with the Rwandese themselves, who had to determine how to come to terms with each other. As long as 2 million Rwandese remained in camps inside and outside their country, the situation in Rwanda would remain unstable, the mission predicted. It considered their return home as a matter of highest priority. Ensuring security in the camps, it agreed, was vital for the success of efforts to accelerate repatriation. The return and resettlement of internally displaced persons and refugees—a prerequisite for long-term stability and progress—was a task being undertaken through "Opération Retour", a programme coordinated by UNAMIR and UN agencies and supported by NGOs. However, fear remained the single most important factor impeding that process.

Progress towards reconciliation had so far been marginal. A number of immediate steps and measures were called for, such as active repatriation, the creation of a political and psychological climate conducive to reconciliation, and the restoration of an effective and functioning judiciary. Many accused or suspected of carrying out atrocities had so far shown no remorse or contrition, a situation seen as discouraging efforts towards reconciliation. The Government emphasized that it remained committed to the spirit of an inclusive, broad-based Government, as provided for under the 1993 Arusha Peace Agreement.⁽³⁾ The Government had commenced a dialogue with representatives of Rwandese refugee communities in Burundi, but that was not feasible with respect to the refugee community in Zaire in view of the insecurity and intimidation by armed elements in their midst.

The mission stated that as the emergency phase was now over, emphasis was increasingly being placed on long-term measures to rebuild the country. The importance of setting up an effective mine-clearance programme was emphasized, in order to support resettlement efforts and to revive agriculture and other reconstruction activities.

Reinvigorating the political process, including the creation of a framework for dialogue between the Government, refugee representatives and the United Nations, was considered especially important. The mission also recommended launching civic education programmes, especially in refugee camps; an effective mechanism to protect property rights; a transparent and effective judiciary; a nationwide, trained police force; an effective civil administration throughout the country; and unimpeded access throughout the country to UNAMIR, humanitarian personnel and human rights monitors. The mission recommended that the International Tribunal, established in 1994,⁽⁴⁾ become operational soon. A list of persons sought for questioning in connection with the violations of international humanitarian law concerning recent events in Rwanda would be established and made public (see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

Refugee camp security and repatriation efforts

General situation

Report of the Secretary-General (January). In January, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁵⁾ that while there had been some positive developments in creating conditions conducive to repatriation, the continuing presence of nearly 2 million Rwandese refugees in Burundi, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire remained a matter of serious concern.

The general security situation in the camps remained dangerous for both refugees and relief workers, and was potentially destabilizing for both the host countries and the subregion. Rwanda and UNHCR had signed tripartite agreements with Burundi and Zaire, respectively, on voluntary repatriation of refugees, defining conditions for repatriation, including returnee protection and land tenure. Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania were also involved in an ongoing dialogue on issues affecting refugees in the latter country and their repatriation to Rwanda.

The Secretary-General reported that only 200,000 refugees out of those who had left Rwanda after the events of 6 April 1994⁽⁶⁾ had returned to their country. A joint technical team from the UN Department of Peace-keeping Operations and UNHCR had been dispatched to Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire to review the situation in the camps, and had recommended measures to establish secure conditions in them. UNHCR's efforts to address security concerns in the camps were centred on improved monitoring of prevailing conditions, through an effective field presence and vigorous demarches with civilian and military authorities.

The camps in Zaire, where some 1.4 million Rwandese refugees were living, continued to be the most potentially explosive, with the most acute security situation in camps north of Lake Kivu in the Goma region, where some 850,000 refugees were located. The refugee population in Zaire tended to include more political, military and militia elements of the former Government than camps in Tanzania and Burundi. Their hostility towards the Government in Kigali was reflected in actions that had led to insecure conditions in the camps, including significant threats of civil disturbances, common crime and threats to the safety of international relief workers. There were reports of hoarding and/or sale of humanitarian assistance by some camp leaders. Zaire had taken steps in recent months to enhance the security situation in the camps, which had improved somewhat, but the potential for serious disturbances remained high.

In the United Republic of Tanzania, there were approximately 600,000 Rwandese refugees living in eight camps; the continuing influx consisted mostly of Rwandese refugees from Burundi and Burundi nationals. The camps in Tanzania were relatively more secure and better organized than those in Zaire and the refugees had created governing structures similar to those that existed in Rwanda, beginning at the prefecture level and extending down to the commune level. The structure provided a sense of organization and a security mechanism, and facilitated the delivery of relief assistance. Extremist elements, however, had considerable influence over the refugee population, though to a lesser degree than in Zaire.

The Secretary-General said that a technical mission had confirmed the feasibility of his 1994 proposal⁽⁷⁾ for a possible peace-keeping operation to enhance camp security. But because the operation would require substantially more than the originally estimated 3,000 to 5,000 troops, and because only one of about 60 potential troop-contributing countries had, as of 23 January 1995, formally offered a unit, it was clear that that option was not feasible.

Two other alternatives were examined: the deployment of Zairian security forces, with the support of UN civilian police and military observers, to patrol, escort and guard storage and transport of humanitarian assistance and provide security for repatriation; or provision of training and monitoring support to local security forces, through contractual arrangements, for deployment to camps both north and south of Lake Kivu. Neither option appeared feasible. After consultations with the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, it was decided that UNHCR would follow up with Zaire to conclude appropriate arrangements to enhance security in the camps. UNHCR would also continue to explore means of augmenting support to Tanzania to enable it to increase the level of security in its camps. UNAMIR would continue to coordinate closely with UNHCR in facilitating the safe and voluntary repatriation of the refugees to Rwanda.

The Secretary-General said that the summit meeting of the leaders of the subregion, held in Nairobi, Kenya, on 7 January, had usefully contributed towards defining a framework for action to address security in the camps and the repatriation of refugees to Rwanda and should also facilitate the work of the OAU/UNHCR Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region (Bujumbura, Burundi, February).

Communication. On 1 February, the Secretary-General informed⁽⁸⁾ the Security Council President that on 27 January Zaire and UNHCR had signed an aide-memoire outlining specific measures to improve the security situation in the refugee camps. Under that agreement, Zaire would deploy 1,500 experienced military and police security personnel to the camps in the Goma, Bukavu and Uvira regions. They would assist in the maintenance of law and order; prevent violence against and intimidation of refugees; provide protection for relief workers and for the storage and delivery of humanitarian assistance; and escort to the border of Rwanda those refugees who had voluntarily chosen to return to their homes. UNAMIR would assist in escorting the repatriated refugees to their home communities and would coordinate closely with UNHCR to facilitate the repatriation process. The Secretary-General's Special Representative would continue to have overall responsibility for all matters relating to UN efforts to assist in the restoration of peace and stability.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

The Security Council met on 10 February to consider the report of the Secretary-General. Following consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement on their behalf:⁽⁹⁾

The Security Council has considered the second report of the Secretary-General dated 25 January 1995 on the security in the Rwandese refugee camps, particularly those located in Zaire, and his letter dated 1 February 1995 on this subject.

The Security Council agrees with the Secretary-General's assessment that the present situation in many of the refugee camps remains dangerous for both refugees and relief workers and that the situation is also potentially destabilizing for the subregion as a whole. It is gravely concerned at reports of continuing intimidation and security problems in the camps, particularly in Zaire, and reaffirms its condemnation of actions of former Rwandese leaders living in the camps, and of former government forces and militias, to prevent, in some cases by force, the repatriation of the refugees. It also remains concerned at the security threat to international relief workers. It welcomes the steps taken by some of the host countries concerned to improve the security situation in the camps. The Council remains concerned at the obstacles posed by the former civil and military authorities and militias to effective local administration by the host countries and the discharge by UNHCR of its mission.

The Security Council attaches great importance to the earliest possible action to address the security problems in the camps. In this context it welcomes the decision that UNHCR, under its refugee protection and humanitarian assistance mandate, conclude appropriate arrangements with the Government of Zaire to enhance security in the camps. It welcomes the agreement between UNHCR and the Government of Zaire of 27 January 1995 to deploy 1,500 Zairian security forces and a UNHCR liaison group. It also welcomes the agreement reached between the Governments of Zaire and Rwanda on the return of refugees and property and urges its full implementation. The Security Council urges Member States to provide UNHCR with the resources needed in the context of the agreement concluded between it and the Government of Zaire. It stresses the importance of close coordination of all operations with UNAMIR. The Council endorses the efforts of UNHCR, in cooperation with the United Republic of Tanzania, to put in place security arrangements in the Tanzanian camps, and encourages UNHCR also to address the situation in Burundi. The Council requests the Secretary-General to report to it on a regular basis on the implementation of operations carried out by UNHCR.

The Security Council stresses the importance of ensuring that accurate information about the situation inside Rwanda is disseminated to the camps. In this respect, it reaffirms the importance of UNAMIR Radio commencing its broadcasts as soon as possible.

The Security Council encourages efforts to provide security in the camps and notes that they have to be accompanied by further efforts in Rwanda to ensure that refugees can return to their homes without fear of retribution or persecution. In this regard it acknowledges the achievements of the Government of Rwanda, despite the difficulty of the task and the lack of resources. It encourages the Government of Rwanda to continue to provide a framework for the action to be taken to repatriate the refugees, to promote national reconciliation and to reinvigorate the political process and calls upon the international community to continue to support the Government of Rwanda in its task. The Council reaffirms its view that such a framework should also include an appropriate mechanism for sustaining a dialogue between the Government of Rwanda, the refugee community and the United Nations. It welcomes the conclusions of the summit meeting of leaders in the subregion, held in Nairobi on 7 January 1995. The Council encourages the International Tribunal for Rwanda established in resolution 955(1994) in its work, as well as efforts to rebuild the local Rwandese judicial system to facilitate the maintenance of law and order. The Council welcomes the commitments made at the recent Round-table Conference on Rwanda and in response to the consolidated inter-agency appeal that will assist the Government of Rwanda in its efforts to rebuild the country and to promote national reconciliation.

The Security Council looks forward to the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, to be hosted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and UNHCR in Bujumbura from 15 to 17 February 1995. The Council expresses the hope that this conference will lead to further progress in creating the conditions necessary for the refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes and that it will facilitate the identification of long-term solutions to promote and ensure peace, security and development in the subregion, those issues to be the subject-matter of a further and broader conference of a political nature.

The Security Council underlines that the presence of the refugee camps should only be temporary and that the return of the refugees to their homes in Rwanda remains the ultimate goal. It requests the Secretary-General to continue his exploration of all options and to make any further recommendations necessary for ensuring security in the camps as soon as possible and to submit a further report on this subject in the light of the outcome of the conference in Bujumbura.

The Security Council will remain seized of the matter and will keep it under close review.

Meeting number. SC 3500.

On 27 February, in resolution 978(1995), the Council urged the arrest of individuals responsible for acts within the jurisdiction of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and condemned all attacks against persons in the refugee camps near the borders with Rwanda. It demanded that such attacks immediately cease and called on States to take appropriate steps to prevent them. It also urged States, on whose territory such serious acts of violence took place, to arrest and detain and submit to the appropriate authorities for prosecution persons against whom there was sufficient evidence that they incited or participated in such acts.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In a 14 April report⁽¹⁰⁾ on security in the Rwandese refugee camps, the Secretary-General said that in early April there were 240,000 refugees in Burundi, mostly from southern Rwanda. The deteriorating security situation in Burundi had affected refugees inside and outside the camps, with a constant movement of refugees to and from neighbouring countries. The strict border control by the army and the presence of uncontrolled armed groups in border areas had resulted in acts of violence and loss of life in and outside the camps. In view of the general insecurity, several thousand Rwandese refugees left for the United Republic of Tanzania. Between 17 February and 10 March, 8,000 Rwandese arrived in Tanzania from Burundi. In late March, some 70,000 more Rwandese refugees left camps in northern Burundi for Tanzania. As at 26 March, 600,000 refugees were reported in camps in Tanzania.

By early April, there were 1.1 million refugees in camps in Zaire. The number of refugees departing from the Goma camps rose from 2,000 in January to 10,000 in February. Those figures declined substantially in March, however, partly due to reports of increased arrests and detentions inside Rwanda. Food shortages and reduced rations in the camps were perceived by the refugees as a deliberate measure to force repatriation. On 31 March, the food situation in Goma was described by the World Food Programme (WFP) as critical. The militia of the former Rwandese Government exploited the shortage to incite the refugee population and reinforce their campaign against repatriation.

The Secretary-General also reported on the OAU/UNHCR Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region (Bujumbura, 15-17 February). A plan of action was adopted, with a primary focus on voluntary repatriation as the preferred durable solution to the refugee problem. The roles to be played by countries of origin, countries of asylum and the international community were stressed, and the international community was urged to assist countries of asylum and countries of origin—among the least developed—to alleviate and redress the negative impact on local communities of the presence of refugees and displaced persons. UNDP was to convene a roundtable meeting of donors for the countries in the region to coordinate actions to be undertaken.

Communication. Rwanda, in a 6 April statement,⁽¹¹⁾ cited the return of Rwandese refugees as one of its priorities. It would continue contacts with responsible officials in the countries of refuge in order to facilitate their return; request the host countries to segregate innocent persons from those responsible for genocide and massacres; promote awareness both within and beyond its frontiers concerning the need for the return of the refugees; and promote their return.

Rwanda said it had set up an inter-ministerial commission to settle lawsuits over properties abandoned by refugees and temporarily occupied by other persons. It had also identified sites for resettlement and areas for the settlement of former refugees; integrated members of the former government forces; and continued aid for displaced persons and refugees. A commission for the repatriation of the refugees, provided under the Arusha Peace Agreement,⁽¹²⁾ had been set up, as had a unit to coordinate humanitarian assistance. Rwanda also intended to establish, with the support of the international community, centres for the reception and transit of refugees who returned to Rwanda, including a service to register persons repatriated and their property and to distribute humanitarian assistance. Rwanda urged neighbouring countries sheltering refugees, and the international community, to note the following: innocent persons in the camps should be segregated from criminals guilty of massacres and genocide; refugees who did not wish to return should be kept at a distance from the frontiers of Rwanda; there should be collaboration with the Rwandese tribunals and the International Criminal Tribunal in the arrest and transfer of those guilty of the massacres and genocide; and humanitarian, technical and financial assistance on behalf of Rwandese refugees should be continued.

Events at Kibeho

A serious outbreak of violence occurred on 22 April at a camp for internally displaced persons in Kibeho in south-western Rwanda, resulting in a considerable number of deaths. Divergent accounts were given of what had happened, of the number of casualties and of the alleged responsibility of various parties.

On 27 April, Rwandan President Pasteur Bizimungu announced the establishment of an Independent International Commission of Inquiry, inviting Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom, the United States, the United Nations and OAU to participate, together with Rwanda, in the Commission's work.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

At a meeting of the Security Council on 27 April, the President made the following statement on its behalf:⁽¹³⁾

The Security Council has considered the Secretary-General's progress report on the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR) and his third report on security in the Rwandese refugee camps, as well as the oral briefings from the Secretariat on the tragic events on 22 April 1995 at the Kibeho camp for internally displaced persons.

The Security Council condemns the killing of numerous civilians in the camp and is encouraged by the decision of the Government of Rwanda to carry out a full investigation of these events without delay and to bring to justice those responsible. In this regard it welcomes the decision of the Rwandese authorities to establish an independent inquiry with United Nations and other international participation to carry out this investigation of the events. The Council also requests the Secretary-General to report to it, without delay, on these events and on the role of UNAMIR.

The Security Council is concerned by the generally deteriorating security situation in Rwanda. It underlines that the Government of Rwanda bears primary responsibility for maintaining security throughout the country and for the safety of internally displaced persons and returnees, as well as for ensuring respect for their basic human rights. In this context it reaffirms the need for coordination between the Government of Rwanda and UNAMIR and other agencies on these matters. The Council does, however, note with satisfaction that the Government of Rwanda has in previous months made considerable efforts directed at national reconciliation, rehabilitation and reconstruction, which are of crucial importance. The Council calls on the Government of Rwanda to intensify these efforts and on the international community to continue to support those efforts, in order to bring about a climate of trust and confidence which would assist in the early and safe return of refugees. In this context, it underlines the importance it attaches to demining, including the United Nations proposal.

The Security Council notes with deep concern disturbing reports of increased incursions into Rwanda from neighbouring countries and allegations of arms shipments into the Goma airport and of elements of the former Rwandese government forces being trained in a neighbouring country. It calls upon all States, especially those neighbouring Rwanda, to refrain from any action that would further exacerbate the security situation in that country and to prevent incursions into Rwanda from their own territories. The Council invites States and organizations which have information on the transport of arms into countries neighbouring Rwanda for the purpose of their use in Rwanda in contravention of resolution 918(1994) to pass that information to the Committee established under resolution 918(1994) and requests the Committee to consider that information as a matter of urgency and to report thereon to the Security Council.

The Security Council notes with satisfaction that the deployment of the Zairian Camp Security Contingent and the Civilian Security Liaison Group has had a positive effect on the security situation in refugee camps in Zaire.

The Security Council pays tribute to all members of UNAMIR. It reaffirms that UNAMIR constitutes one essential factor for creating a climate of confidence and for promoting stability and security. In this context, it underlines the responsibility of the Government of Rwanda for the safety and security of all UNAMIR personnel and other international staff serving in the country. It urges the Rwandese authorities to proceed with the exchange of letters supplementing the agreement on the status of UNAMIR and its personnel, reflecting the changes in UNAMIR's mandate following from Security Council resolution 918(1994). The Council calls for increased cooperation and collaboration between the Government of Rwanda, its neighbouring countries and UNAMIR as well as other agencies, including in the humanitarian field.

The Security Council expresses grave concern at the situation created by the overcrowded prisons in Rwanda which has resulted in the death of numerous persons in custody and requests the Secretary-General to consider urgently measures which could be taken quickly in conjunction with the Government of Rwanda and humanitarian agencies to improve the conditions of those in detention or under investigation. The Council emphasizes that the development of the Rwandese justice system continues to be an important factor in creating conditions of security, law and order, conducive to the return of refugees from abroad and of displaced persons to their homes. The Council calls on the international community to assist the Government of Rwanda in re-establishing the justice system as a contribution to confidence-building and the maintenance of law and order.

The Security Council expresses its appreciation for the action of those States which have arrested and detained persons following the adoption of resolution 978(1995). It urges States, in accordance with that resolution, to arrest and detain persons against whom there is sufficient evidence of responsibility for acts within the jurisdiction of the International Tribunal for Rwanda. It requests the Secretary-General to facilitate the rapid establishment of the Tribunal.

The Security Council requests the Government of Rwanda to facilitate the delivery and distribution of humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons in need, in conformity with the principles and current practice of UNHCR. It invites States and donor agencies to deliver on their earlier commitments and to further increase their assistance. It urges all Governments in the region to keep their borders open for this purpose.

The Security Council appeals to all States to act in accordance with recommendations adopted in the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region held in Bujumbura in February 1995, in order to contribute to facilitating the return of refugees. The Council welcomes the Dar es Salaam trilateral agreement of 12 April 1995, on the voluntary repatriation of Rwandese refugees from Tanzania.

The Security Council reaffirms the view that an international conference would contribute substantially to peace and security in the subregion. It welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to carry out consultations with all concerned so that such a conference can be held at the earliest possible date.

The Security Council will remain seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3526.

Inquiry Commission report. On 19 May, the Secretary-General forwarded to the Security Council President the report⁽¹³⁾ of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry. The Commission posed a number of questions, including those as to: the context in which the decision was taken to close the camps and the Kibeho camp; information about militias in the camp; consultation, before proceeding with closure, by the Government with various partners involved; the intent of the closure operation, especially whether it aimed to eliminate a certain category of people, especially one ethnic group; how the operation had been carried out since 18 April and what actually had happened on 22 and 23 April; the role, limitations and behaviour of the Rwandese Army, NGOs and UNAMIR; the role of the militia; and responsibility for the deaths at Kibeho.
