The Commission concluded that the tragedy of Kibeho had neither resulted from a planned action by Rwandan authorities to kill a certain group of people, nor been an accident that could not have been prevented. It recognized the legitimate interests of the Rwandan Government and the international community to have the camps closed as quickly as possible, both for reasons of national security and to remove an important obstacle to the country's efforts to recover from the devastating effects of the 1994 genocide. The Commission also recognized the efforts by the Special Representative, UNAMIR, the Government of Rwanda and various organizations to keep the situation at Kibeho under control. It regretted that UN agencies and NGOs were not able to contribute more efficiently to the speedy evacuation of internally displaced persons in the camp. There was sufficient reliable evidence to establish that, during the events at Kibeho camp between 18 and 23 April, unarmed internally displaced persons were subjected to arbitrary deprivation of life and serious bodily harm by Rwandese Patriotic Army military personnel in violation of human rights and humanitarian law, and by armed elements among the internally displaced persons themselves.

The Commission recommended an analysis by the Rwandan authorities of mistakes made in the preparation and handling of the closure of the camps, as well as a thorough, prompt and impartial investigation of individual responsibilities within the armed forces and any other factors that might have contributed to the event. In the future, high priority should be given to improving the capability of Rwandan State and local authorities to react adequately and within the internationally recognized framework of human rights and of humanitarian law to situations of social tension and emergency. The international community should continue encouraging and assisting Rwanda in its efforts to achieve justice, national reconciliation and reconstruction. The Commission called on the UN system to review its chain-of-command and operation procedures to make sure that an entire operation was not held hostage or bogged down by one or several agencies and organizations with limited mandates and responsibilities.

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In a 4 June report,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the Kibeho tragedy underscored the tensions and fears that remained in Rwanda. On 18 April, the Rwandan Government had cordoned off and closed eight remaining camps for internally displaced persons in the Gikongoro region, of which Kibeho was the largest. The Government considered that those camps were being used as sanctuaries by elements of the former Rwandese government forces and militia, and they were a destabilizing factor and a security threat. Negotiations were taking place between the Government and the United Nations for the voluntary closure of the camps when the decision to act was taken without notice or consultation. Seven camps were closed without serious incident. However, at Kibeho an estimated 80,000 internally displaced persons attempted to break out on 22 April, after spending five days on a single hill without adequate space, shelter, food or sanitation. A large number of deaths occurred from firing by government forces, trampling and crushing during an ensuing stampede, and machete attacks by hard-liners in the camp, who assaulted and intimidated those who wished to leave.

The Secretary-General reported that when the Rwandese Patriotic Army launched the operation, UNAMIR reacted immediately and, within 24 hours, trucks had been deployed to transport the internally displaced; two casualty collection posts were established to provide emergency medical assistance; and a UNAMIR command post with communication facilities was set up. UNAMIR engineers improved the Butare-Kibeho road to facilitate movement of convoys of internally displaced persons and humanitarian assistance. The sick and injured were evacuated. The presence of UNAMIR troops at open relief centres, way stations and transit centres was increased. Patrols were intensified to facilitate the reception and evacuation of internally displaced persons from those temporary facilities to their home communes. From the establishment of the Rwandese Patriotic Army cordon on 18 April to the tragic events of 22 April, senior UNAMIR officials visited Kibeho and the surrounding areas on several occasions to assess the situation, urge restraint and help coordinate the activities of UNAMIR personnel and relief agencies. Following the tragedy, Special Envoy Aldo Ajello was dispatched to Kigali to convey the Secretary-General's concern to the Rwandan leaders and to urge them to undertake an impartial investigation.

After three weeks of persuasion, through the combined efforts of UNAMIR and the Government of Rwanda, the approximately 2,500 internally displaced persons remaining in Kibeho were returned to their communes.

Neighbouring State concerns

The United Republic of Tanzania, in a 19 June press statement,⁽¹⁵⁾ reported that it was hosting more than 1.4 million refugees, with individuals from Burundi and Rwanda constituting over half of that number. Since 1993, refugees from those two countries had poured into Tanzania. Ethnic differences and a lack of good governance and accountability had made them refugee-generating States. Tanzania could not afford to take more than it could absorb and any move from Rwanda would be met with equal force. To avoid any future outbreak of ethnic tensions in Rwanda, Tanzania called on the Rwandan Government to create the correct political atmosphere in the country by creating a government of national unity. Efforts at implementing the Bujumbura Plan of Action (see PART FOUR, Chapter XII), particularly after the signing of the tripartite voluntary repatriation agreement with Rwanda on 12 April, had not helped much, even in restoring normalcy in the camps.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General in July reported⁽¹⁶⁾ on the implementation of paragraph 6 of Security Council resolution 997(1995), which called for possible deployment of UN observers in States neighbouring Rwanda. Special Envoy Aldo Ajello carried out the consultations requested by the Council from 20 to 28 June. He stressed the Council's great concern over increasing reports of military activities that threatened to destabilize Rwanda. The countries concerned reiterated their support for efforts to prevent the resumption of armed conflict in Rwanda, to ensure the return and resettlement of its refugees and to promote lasting reconciliation. The uncontrolled circulation of arms, including to civilians and refugees in the subregion, was seen as a major cause of destabilization, especially in Rwanda and Burundi. There was agreement that a broader approach, with the involvement of Rwanda and its neighbours and the support of the international community, would offer better opportunities for a lasting solution to the Rwandan crisis. The neighbouring countries expressed the wish to receive concrete assistance from the international community to help them deal with the main problems that followed the conflict in Rwanda and prevent any repetition of such conflict.

Rwanda welcomed the Council's initiative to deploy military observers in neighbouring countries as a step in the right direction. There were mixed reactions from the neighbouring countries; some questioned the utility, relevance and feasibility of the proposed deployment, arguing that it was in Rwanda that the international observers should be stationed to help create a climate of confidence that would encourage the refugees to return home and reduce the danger of destabilization from refugee camps. There was scepticism about the effectiveness of such deployment and what it could achieve. It was suggested that instead of tackling the effects of the crisis, the Council should address its causes and identify the countries that were providing support for the delivery of weapons and military training to the former Rwandan government forces. Zaire, while expressing support for any effective action that could prevent the destabilization of Rwanda, reiterated its strong denial of recent accusations that it was aiding the former Rwandan government forces with arms and training to enable them to attack Rwanda. It pointed out that it had called for an international commission of inquiry to investigate the allegations. Zaire felt that, instead of being criticized, it should be assisted by the international community to cope with the immense ecological, socio-economic, security and political burdens imposed by the refugees. The Secretary-General said that Zaire had also pointed out to him on 23 June its contribution, in response to a UNHCR request, of 1,500 troops, which had been deployed for security protection in the Rwandan refugee camps, and its unilateral action in disarming the former Rwandan government forces soldiers who had fled to Zaire. Those actions were evidence of its determination to prevent insecurity in the camps and the destabilization of Rwanda from Zairian territory.

The Secretary-General referred to the suggestion of his Special Envoy that relocation of the camps farther away from the borders with Rwanda could facilitate efforts to curb the threat of destabilization. However, the cost, logistical difficulties and fear of resistance from the population of the country of refuge had prevented concrete action. In addition, Zaire explained that such a move would be seen by its population as implying that the refugees were being resettled for a longer period and perhaps a permanent stay in Zaire. The United Republic of Tanzania, for its part, criticized any effort aimed at transferring refugees from one country of refuge to another. The Secretary-General said that he would explore further the positions of the Governments concerned while he was in the region.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council on 23 August met to consider the situation concerning Rwanda. Following consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽¹⁷⁾

The Security Council views with deep concern the forcible repatriation of Rwandan and Burundian refugees by the Government of Zaire and the increasingly tense situation in the region.

The Security Council takes note of the recent letter from the Government of Zaire to the Secretary-General and the Secretary-General's reply in which he urges the Government of Zaire to continue to provide assistance to Rwandan and Burundian refugees.

The Security Council considers that Zaire and the other States which have accepted refugees from Rwanda and Burundi make an important contribution, in spite of the considerable difficulties created for them thereby, to peace and stability in the region. Their contribution is of special importance in view of the genocide which took place in Rwanda and the possibility of further bloodshed in Burundi. The Council also notes the commitment of the Government of Rwanda to take the necessary steps to facilitate the safe return of its nationals as soon as possible and encourages it to continue its efforts in order to implement its undertakings in this respect.

The Security Council calls on the Government of Zaire to stand by its humanitarian obligations regarding refugees, including, inter alia, those under the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees of 1951, and to reconsider and halt its declared policy of the forcible repatriation of refugees to Rwanda and Burundi.

The Security Council supports the decision by the Secretary-General to send the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the region to engage in urgent discussions with the Government of Zaire and neighbouring States with a view to resolving the situation. It encourages all Governments in the region to cooperate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to achieve the voluntary and orderly repatriation of refugees. It also calls on the international community to provide all possible assistance to help care for the refugees.

Communications. On 29 August, the Secretary-General informed⁽¹⁸⁾ the Security Council President that he had received assurances from Zaire that it would not pursue forcible repatriation of refugees. On the same date, in Geneva, the High Commissioner for Refugees met with the Prime Minister of Zaire, who expressed the wish that the repatriation be completed by 31 December. The Prime Minister made evident the political and social pressures the refugees were imposing on Zaire. While appreciating the special needs of the host country, the High Commissioner made it clear that a policy of forcible repatriation would not solve the problem. The Secretary-General added that the enormous economic, environmental and political burden which the presence of almost 2 million refugees placed on Zaire, Tanzania and other countries in the region needed to be fully recognized.

On 11 September, Rwanda transmitted to the Security Council President a presidential statement⁽¹⁹⁾ made on the occasion of the visit of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, reiterating Rwanda's determination to enable the safe return of all Rwandan refugees, in the letter and spirit of the Bujumbura Declaration (see PART FOUR, Chapter XII). It said that the Government employed great effort to ensure that the Rwandan nationals expelled from Zaire were safely and conveniently settled.

In anticipation of further repatriation, reception centres at the border had been reinforced and were to remain open and be further strengthened to receive more returnees. Rwanda appealed to all nationals outside the country to take advantage of that momentum. International monitoring and a strengthened judiciary would guarantee that there would be no arbitrary arrests. Those who had settled on properties of other persons had been mobilized to vacate them for their legitimate owners, and disputes over property were being handled by special committees at various levels of government. All those efforts were paying off, with a rising number of persons returning voluntarily from Tanzania, Burundi and Zaire. More than 30,000 had repatriated voluntarily from Burundi; it was expected that most of the 100,000 to 150,000 still there would have repatriated by the end of 1995. The Government was developing further mechanisms, in collaboration with the UN and other members of the international community, to ensure that more people could be comfortably received in large numbers. It was soliciting the support and involvement of the international community in seeking innovative ways to expedite the healing process and national reconciliation.

In response to the Security Council's request of November 1994,⁽²⁰⁾ and as reiterated in resolution 1011(1995) of 16 August 1995, the Secretary-General reported on efforts to convene a regional conference on security, stability and development in the Great Lakes region. He proposed to appoint Jose Luis Jesus (Cape Verde) as his Special Envoy to facilitate the preparations for such a conference. The Council, in a 25 August letter⁽²¹⁾ of its President, welcomed the Secretary-General's proposal.⁽²²⁾

On 29 August, the Secretary-General updated⁽¹⁸⁾ the Council on recent developments in the region, stating that a lasting solution of the crisis facing the Great Lakes region lay only in the early restoration of political stability and security.

The Special Envoy would travel to the region for consultation and to donor countries for talks with multilateral institutions to facilitate longer-term activities in host communities and in areas of return.

On 7 September, in a letter⁽²³⁾ of its President, the Council informed the Secretary-General that it shared his concern at the continued gravity of the situation and underlined the need for a coordinated and effective response from the international community. The Council expressed its support for his initiatives and looked forward to their implementation.

On 30 October, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁴⁾ that his Special Envoy had held high-level consultations with Burundi, Ethiopia, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and OAU, most of which supported the idea of a regional conference. Rwanda expressed strong opposition to the idea and Uganda indicated that it was not keen on having the United Nations actively involved in that process. The Secretary-General said that the United Nations would continue to monitor developments in the region and he would revert to the Council if conditions existed for the successful convening of a conference.

On 10 November, in a letter of its President,⁽²⁵⁾ Council members stated that they supported all efforts to reduce tension and restore stability in the Great Lakes region. They encouraged the Secretary-General to continue contacts with the aim of convening the conference.

On 30 November, the United Republic of Tanzania forwarded⁽²⁶⁾ to the Security Council President a copy of the Cairo Declaration on the Great Lakes Region, adopted by the Presidents of Burundi, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire, following their meeting in Cairo, Egypt, on 28 and 29 November. They pledged to advance peace, justice, reconciliation, stability and development in the region. Former United States President Jimmy Carter and Archbishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa served as facilitators to that meeting.

Arms embargo

General aspects

In May 1994,⁽²⁷⁾ the Security Council had imposed mandatory arms sanctions against Rwanda and established a Committee to monitor the implementation of those sanctions, to consider violations of the embargo and to make recommendations for increasing its effectiveness.

In resolution 997(1995) of 9 June 1995 (see below), dealing with the extension and mandate adjustment of UNAMIR, the Security Council affirmed that the restrictions imposed by its 1994 embargo against Rwanda applied to the sale or supply of arms and matériel to persons in the States neighbouring Rwanda, if that sale or supply was for use within Rwanda. It called on States neighbouring Rwanda to take steps, with the aim of putting an end to factors contributing to the destabilization of Rwanda, to ensure that such arms and materiel were not transferred to Rwandan camps within their territories. The Council requested the Secretary-General to consult Governments of neighbouring countries on the possibility of deploying UN military observers, and Zaire, on the deployment of observers including in the airfields located in eastern Zaire, in order to monitor the sale or supply of arms and materiel. He was to report to the Council within one month.

Communication. On 5 July 1995, Rwanda, in a letter to the Security Council President,⁽²⁸⁾ complained that the United Nations had taken no action on reports by Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International which confirmed that the arms embargo imposed on the former regime in Rwanda was not achieving its objectives; the perpetrators were rebuilding their military infrastructure in Zaire, had spoken openly of their intention to return to Rwanda and had threatened to wage war and to complete the genocide begun in April 1994. The United Nations had been unable to prevent infiltration of Rwanda and Burundi by those elements; nor had it been able to detect the rearming of the perpetrators of genocide.

Rwanda said the arms embargo was preventing the Government from ensuring the security of its citizens. Its lifting would ensure that the country regained its full sovereignty and its capability to protect its citizens. The embargo, originally imposed against a genocidal Government, should not be extended to subsequent Governments and to the State of Rwanda. Preventive measures had to focus on the leaders, soldiers and the militia of the former Government who violated humanitarian law and on the Governments that continued to support them. Rwanda requested urgent Council action to lift the embargo.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

The Security Council met on 17 July to consider the situation concerning Rwanda and adopted resolution 1005(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions 918(1994) of 17 May 1994 and 997(1995) of 9 June 1995,

Noting with concern that unexploded land-mines constitute a substantial hazard to the population of Rwanda and an impediment to the rapid reconstruction of the country,

Noting also the desire of the Government of Rwanda to address the problem of unexploded land-mines, and the interest on the part of other States to assist with the detection and destruction of these mines,

Underlining the importance the Council attaches to efforts to eliminate the threat posed by unexploded land-mines in a number of States, and the humanitarian nature of demining programmes,

Recognizing that safe and successful humanitarian demining operations in Rwanda will require the supply to Rwanda of an appropriate quantity of explosives for use in these operations,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Decides that, notwithstanding the restrictions imposed in paragraph 13 of resolution 918(1994), appropriate amounts of explosives intended exclusively for use in established humanitarian demining programmes may be supplied to Rwanda upon application to and authorization by the Committee of the Security Council established by resolution 918(1994).

Security Council resolution 1005(1995)

17 July 1995 Meeting 3555 Adopted unanimously

Draft by United States (S/1995/580).

Further developments. On 10 August, Zaire, in transmitting to the Security Council President its position⁽²⁹⁾ on the lifting of the Council's 1994 arms embargo⁽²⁷⁾ against Rwanda, said that the massive influx of refugees into its territory threatened its security, territorial integrity and sovereignty; Rwanda was spurring a new flow of refugees while at the same time obstructing the return to Rwanda of the refugees in dignity and safety; Rwanda had not shown good faith in fulfilling its obligations under the 1994 tripartite agreement, in particular its obligation to create security and reception zones within Rwanda to receive refugees from camps in Zaire and to ensure their reintegration and safety; and Rwanda was seeking to resolve its problems of scarcity of territory, overpopulation of arable land and its inter-ethnic conflict, to the detriment of its neighbours, through violence and methods that ran counter to domestic and international law. Zaire said that the Council should deplore the proliferation of weapons in the region and take measures to end it, rather than lifting the embargo on the supply of arms and other materiel to Rwanda. Priority should be given to disarming the militias and other armed bands in the countries of the Great Lakes region. Zaire rejected the idea of redeploying military observers to Zaire and reiterated support for an international commission of inquiry under UN auspices to investigate the supply of weapons to the former Rwandan armed forces and to verify allegations of destabilization.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

The Security Council met on 16 August to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 997(1995). It invited Zaire to participate without the right to vote under rule 37^a of its provisional rules of procedure. The Council adopted resolution 1011(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the situation in Rwanda, in particular its resolutions 918(1994) of 17 May 1994, 997(1995) of 9 June 1995 and 1005(1995) of 17 July 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on monitoring of the restrictions on the sale or supply of arms dated 9 July 1995,

Having also considered the progress report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR) dated 8 August 1995,

Emphasizing that the uncontrolled circulation of arms, including to civilians and refugees, is a major cause of destabilization in the Great Lakes subregion,

Welcoming the proposal of the Government of Zaire to establish an international commission under United Nations auspices to investigate reports of arms supplies to former Rwandan government forces,

Recognizing that the registration and marking of weapons are of considerable assistance in monitoring and enforcing restrictions on the illicit deliveries of weapons,

Noting with great concern reports of military preparations and increasing incursions into Rwanda by elements of the former regime and underlining the need for effective measures to ensure that Rwandan nationals currently in neighbouring countries, including those in camps, do not undertake military activities aimed at destabilizing Rwanda or receive arms supplies, in view of the great likelihood that such arms are intended for use within Rwanda,

Stressing the need for representatives of all sectors of Rwandan society, excluding those political leaders suspected of planning and directing the genocide last year, to begin talks in order to reach an agreement on a constitutional and political structure to achieve lasting stability,

Taking note of the letter dated 5 July 1995 from the Permanent Representative of Rwanda to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council, requesting urgent action to lift the restrictions on the sale or supply of arms and materiel to the Government of Rwanda to ensure the security of the Rwandan population,

Welcoming the improvement in the working relations between the Government of Rwanda and UNAMIR and recalling the mandate of UNAMIR, as adjusted in resolution 997(1995), in particular to help achieve national reconciliation,

Recalling that the prohibition on the delivery of arms and matériel to Rwanda was originally aimed at stopping the use of such arms and equipment in the massacres of innocent civilians,

Taking note of the Council's decision in resolution 997(1995) to reduce the force level of UNAMIR, and reaffirming that the security of that country is the primary responsibility of the Government of Rwanda,

Deeply concerned by the situation in Rwanda's prisons and judicial system, particularly overcrowding, the lack of judges, detention of minors and elderly prisoners, and absence of speedy judicial or administrative review of charges, and, in this respect, welcoming renewed efforts by the United Nations and donor countries, in coordination with the Government of Rwanda, to initiate, on an urgent basis, measures to improve this situation, Underlining the need for increased efforts by the Government of Rwanda in the promotion of a climate of stability and trust in order to facilitate the return of Rwandan refugees in neighbouring countries,

1. Commends the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy in pursuing regional responses to the problem of illicit arms supplies in the region and encourages the Secretary-General to continue his consultations in this regard;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, as proposed in paragraph 45 of his report, to make recommendations to the Security Council, as soon as possible, on the establishment of a Commission mandated to conduct a full investigation to address allegations of arms flows to former Rwandan government forces in the Great Lakes region of Central Africa;

3. Calls upon the Governments of Rwanda and neighbouring States to cooperate with the Commission's investigation;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with the Governments of neighbouring States concerning the deployment of United Nations military observers in the airfields and other transportation points in and around border crossing points and calls on the neighbouring States to cooperate with and assist these observers to ensure that arms and related materiel are not transferred to Rwandan camps within their territories;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council within one month of the adoption of this resolution on his efforts for the preparation and convening, at the earliest possible time, of the regional Conference on Security, Stability and Development, as well as for the convening of a regional meeting to address the problems facing the repatriation of refugees;

6. Calls upon the Government of Rwanda to continue its efforts to create an atmosphere of trust and confidence for the safe return of refugees and take further steps to resolve the humanitarian problems in its prisons, and to expedite disposition of the charges against those detained;

B

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

7. Decides that, with immediate effect and until 1 September 1996, the restrictions imposed by paragraph 13 of resolution 918(1994) shall not apply with regard to the sale or supply of arms and related materiel to the Government of Rwanda through named points of entry on a list to be supplied by that Government to the Secretary-General, who shall promptly notify all Member States of the United Nations of the list;

8. Decides also that on 1 September 1996 the restrictions imposed by paragraph 13 of resolution 918(1994)

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

on the sale or supply of arms and related materiel to the Government of Rwanda shall terminate, unless the Council decides otherwise after its consideration of the second report of the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 12 below;

9. Further decides, with a view to prohibiting the sale and supply of arms and related materiel to non-governmental forces for use in Rwanda, that all States shall continue to prevent the sale or supply, by their nationals or from their territories or using their flag vessels or aircraft, of arms and related materiel of all types, including weapons and ammunition, military vehicles and equipment, paramilitary police equipment and spare parts, to Rwanda, or to persons in the States neighbouring Rwanda if such sale or supply is for the purpose of the use of such arms or materiel within Rwanda, other than to the Government of Rwanda as specified in paragraphs 7 and 8 above;

10. Decides also that no arms or related materiel sold or supplied to the Government of Rwanda may be resold to, transferred to, or made available for use by any State neighbouring Rwanda, or person not in the service of the Government of Rwanda, either directly or indirectly;

11. Further decides that States shall notify all exports from their territories of arms or related materiel to Rwanda to the Committee established by resolution 918(1994), that the Government of Rwanda shall mark and register and notify to the Committee all imports made by it of arms and related materiel, and that the Committee shall report regularly to the Council on notifications so received;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council within 6 months of the date of adoption of this resolution, and again within 12 months, regarding, in particular, the export of arms and related materiel referred to in paragraph 7 above, on the basis of the reports submitted by the Committee established by resolution 918(1994);

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1011(1995)

16 August 1995 Meeting 3566 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/703).

Communications. On 17 August, the Prime Minister of Zaire declared in a letter to the Secretary-General⁽³⁰⁾ that Zaire now had no choice but to request that the Secretary-General indicate the arrangements made by the United Nations in relation to the new country or countries to which the Rwandan and Burundi refugees in Zaire should be evacuated. Zaire intended to evacuate them to their countries of origin at the expense of UNAMIR, the United Nations and the Governments of their respective countries.

Responding on 18 August, the Secretary-General noted⁽³¹⁾ the difficulties encountered by the Government of Zaire and said he would communicate the Prime Minister's letter to the Security Council in extenso. Pending the reaction of the Council, he was appealing to Zaire to continue to assist the Rwandan refugees.

Sanctions Committee activities

In a report⁽³²⁾ on its activities since its establishment in May 1994⁽²⁶⁾ until 31 December 1995, the Security Council Committee to monitor sanctions on Rwanda said it had appealed to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, as well as individuals, to provide information on violations or suspected violations of the embargo imposed against Rwanda; considered a request from the United States pursuant to resolution 1005(1995) for the supply of a quantity of explosives and related materials for use in a bilateral humanitarian demining assistance programme; and adopted new consolidated guidelines based on sections of resolution 1011(1995). On 11 October, the Committee asked Rwanda to notify it of all imports of arms and related materiel.

A report by Human Rights Watch, entitled "Rearming with impunity: international support for the perpetrators of the Rwandan genocide", was transmitted to China, France, South Africa and Zaire for comment. China and France denied allegations of suspected violations. The report and replies received were transmitted to the International Commission of Inquiry (see below).

International Commission of Inquiry

On 7 September, the Security Council established an International Commission of Inquiry (see below). In August, the Secretary-General had reported⁽³³⁾ that, during his visit to the subregion, strong interest was expressed in establishing such a commission under UN auspices to address allegations of arms flows to former Rwandan government forces.

On 16 August, the Council, in resolution 1011(1995), had asked the Secretary-General to make recommendations on the establishment of a commission and called on Rwanda and neighbouring States to cooperate with the commission's investigations.

On 25 August, in a letter⁽³⁴⁾ to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General set out the terms of reference and other details of the proposed commission. It would collect information and investigate reports relating to the sale or supply of arms and related materiel to former Rwandan government forces in violation of the Council's embargo and allegations that such forces were receiving military training in order to destabilize Rwanda; and attempt to identify parties aiding and abetting the illegal acquisition of arms by those forces and recommend measures to curb the illegal flow of arms in the subregion. States, international and other organizations and individuals were to provide relevant information to the commission and any other assistance that might be required. Governments in whose territories investigations would be conducted should be requested to guarantee the safety and security of commission members and to ensure the necessary freedom of movement and contacts. The commission would be composed of an eminent person, appointed by the Secretary-General, who would serve as chairman, assisted by 5 to 10 legal, military and police experts, serving in their personal capacity.

The Secretary-General recommended that the commission commence its work in Zaire and could extend its work to other countries.

The Security Council met on 7 September and adopted resolution 1013(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the situation in Rwanda, in particular its resolutions 918(1994) of 17 May 1994, 997(1995) of 9 June 1995 and 1011(1995) of 16 August 1995,

Having considered the letter of the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council dated 25 August 1995 on the establishment of a commission of inquiry,

Having also considered the note verbale of 10 August 1995 from the Government of Zaire to the President of the Security Council and welcoming the proposal of the Government of Zaire contained therein for the establishment under the auspices of the United Nations of an international commission of inquiry and its offer to assist such a commission,

Recognizing that destabilizing influences in the Great Lakes region, including the illegal acquisition of arms, can be prevented by the cooperative efforts of all Governments concerned,

Expressing once again its grave concern at allegations of the sale and supply of arms and related materiel to former Rwandan government forces in violation of the embargo imposed under its resolutions 918(1994), 997(1995) and 1011(1995), and underlining the need for Governments to take action to ensure the effective implementation of the embargo,

Underlining the importance of regular consultations between the commission of inquiry and the countries concerned, as appropriate, in view of the necessity to respect the sovereignty of States in the region,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, as a matter of urgency, an International Commission of Inquiry, with the following mandate:

(a) To collect information and investigate reports relating to the sale or supply of arms and related materiel to former Rwandan government forces in the Great Lakes region in violation of Council resolutions 918(1994), 997(1995) and 1011(1995);

(b) To investigate allegations that such forces are receiving military training in order to destabilize Rwanda;

(c) To identify parties aiding and abetting the illegal acquisition of arms by former Rwandan government forces, contrary to the Council resolutions referred to above; and

(d) To recommend measures to end the illegal flow of arms in the subregion in violation of the Council resolutions referred to above;

2. Recommends that the Commission to be appointed by the Secretary-General be composed of five to ten impartial and internationally respected persons, including legal, military and police experts, under the Chairmanship of an eminent person, and assisted by the appropriate support staff;

3. Calls upon States, relevant United Nations bodies, including the Committee established by resolution 918(1994), and, as appropriate, international humanitarian organizations and non-governmental organizations to collate information in their possession relating to the mandate of the Commission, and requests them to make this information available as soon as possible;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the establishment of the Commission, and further requests him to submit, within three months from its establishment, an interim report on the conclusions of the Commission and, as soon as possible thereafter, to submit a final report, containing its recommendations;

5. Calls upon the Governments of the States concerned in which the Commission will carry out its mandate to cooperate fully with the Commission in the fulfilment of its mandate, including responding positively to requests from the Commission for security, assistance and access in pursuing investigations, including:

Security Council resolution 1013(1995)
 7 September 1995 Meeting 3574 Adopted unanimously
 Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/771).

On 20 October, the Council took note⁽³⁵⁾ of a 16 October letter⁽³⁶⁾ from the Secretary-General, who informed the Council that the six members of the Commission were: Mahmoud Kassem (Egypt), Chairman; Inspector Jean-Michel Hanssens (Canada); Colonel Jürgen G. H. Almeling (Germany); Lt.-Col. Jan Meijvogel (Netherlands); Brigadier Mujahid Alam (Pakistan); and Colonel Lameck Mutanda (Zimbabwe). He intended to assemble the Commission in New York on 25 October.

The Commission arrived in Nairobi, Kenya, on 4 November and in Rwanda on 8 November. During November and December, it travelled around Rwanda, returning to Kigali from time to time to meet with officials. After a two-week delay, resulting from questions raised by Zaire concerning the terms of reference and the proposed activities of the Commission while in Zaire, the Commission paid a preliminary visit to Kinshasa from 8 to 16 December.

The General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's proposals⁽³⁷⁾ and the comments⁽³⁸⁾ of ACABQ, approved the amount of $419,200 gross ($392,100 net) for the biennium 1994-1995 (resolution 50/205 A) and $742,800 gross ($688,600 net) for 1996-1997 (resolution 50/215 A) for the operation of the Commission from 1 November 1995 to 30 April 1996.

Human Rights Field Operation

In a 13 November note,⁽³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights on the UN Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda.

The Operation was the key response of the High Commissioner to the catastrophe that had occurred in Rwanda. From April to July 1994, Rwanda had suffered the slaughter of between 500,000 and 1 million persons. The massive human rights violations had been perpetrated in a preplanned, organized and systematic manner, and the mass killings had been condemned by all principal organs of the United Nations. The ensuing civil war and atrocities perpetrated against the civilian population had exacerbated the trauma, which had been worsened further by the extensive destruction of the country's infrastructure. The new Government that had taken power in mid-1994 had been able to halt the genocide and was faced with the immense task of restoring law and order, fostering national reconciliation and reconstructing public and economic institutions. The return of refugees to Rwanda and their resettlement, together with that of internally displaced persons, remained another major problem to be resolved. The Operation was serving Rwanda by charting with its Government the long and difficult path to national reconciliation and by ensuring that human rights were fully respected at all stages in that process. The High Commissioner observed that the Operation in Rwanda was the first human rights field operation to be run under his authority.

The Operation had carried out extensive investigations of genocide and other serious violations of human rights and humanitarian law that had taken place between April and July 1994 in Rwanda. Some 120 human rights field officers had been deployed throughout the country to monitor the human rights situation. These included experts on investigations, such as prosecutors, criminal investigators and forensic experts, as well as specialists for human rights advisory services and education. A broad-based programme of promotional activities in the field of human rights had been launched, including projects to rebuild the Rwandan administration of justice and human rights education.

The Operation had continued its genocide-related investigations until the Deputy Prosecutor's Office of the International Tribunal for Rwanda with its own investigative unit was established. Thereafter, the emphasis of the Operation's investigative work shifted to coordinating the activities of field teams with the work of the Tribunal.

As for repatriation and resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons, the Operation tried to ensure that basic human rights were not violated during the return, resettlement or reintegration process through monitoring of conditions at principal frontier crossing points, transit centres and interim detention centres and during reintegration into home communes. It also monitored the subsequent treatment and security of resettled refugees. In cooperation with ICRC, the Operation regularly visited prisons and detention centres to monitor conditions and make proposals for improvement. It actively promoted respect for legal procedures governing arrest and detention, and urged the appropriate authorities to review promptly cases where arrests appeared not to be based on strong indications of criminal responsibility. The Operation also worked to assist in the rehabilitation of the justice system at the national and local levels. It assisted in channelling material assistance made available by UNDP and other donors to local needs and encouraged the gradual resumption of the functioning of the Rwanda justice system. In cooperation with the Ministry of Justice and UNDP, it developed a plan to deploy 50 foreign legal experts to assist the Government in restarting all essential functions of the judicial system. In September, the Government asked for the temporary suspension and re-examination of that project.

In its efforts to promote respect for Rwandan law and human rights standards, seminars were held on arrest and detention procedures and training seminars were prepared for the gendarmerie and the Rwandese Patriotic Army on the role of the armed forces and law enforcement officials in the protection and promotion of human rights. A project for the creation of centres to provide legal and other advice to women was developed with local legal associations and competent ministries. The Operation worked with Rwandan NGOs and promoted human rights standards and awareness through radio broadcasts, newsletters and a weekly human rights club.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/200 of 22 December, took note with concern of the findings of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda that the human rights situation was exacerbated by the inadequate system for the administration of justice, characterized by the shortage of both human and material means. It requested the High Commissioner to report regularly on the activities of the Field Operation and requested the Secretary-General to ensure adequate financial and human resources and logistical support for it, taking into account the need to deploy a sufficient number of human rights field officers and the need for programmes of technical assistance and advisory services.

UN Assistance Mission

Work of UNAMIR

In October 1993, the Security Council established⁽⁴⁰⁾ the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda to assist in implementing the 1993 Arusha Peace Agreement. In June 1993, it had established⁽⁴¹⁾ the UN Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda (UNOMUR) to monitor the border between those two Central African nations to ensure that no military assistance reached Rwanda. UNOMUR was phased out in September 1994.

In 1994, following the deaths in April in an aeroplane crash of the Presidents of both Rwanda and Burundi, widespread civil unrest ensued, resulting in large-scale massacres of civilians and massive flows of refugees and displaced persons. The mandate of UNAMIR was expanded during the year to deal with the burgeoning crisis. From June to August, a multinational force—"Operation Turquoise"—was deployed to Rwanda to serve humanitarian purposes.

In 1995, the activities of UNAMIR, under adjusted mandates set out in June and December by the Security Council (see below), continued in the areas of: exercising good offices to help achieve national reconciliation within the Arusha Peace Agreement, facilitating the safe return of refugees and their reintegration into their home communities, supporting the provision of humanitarian aid and other forms of assistance and expertise, contributing to the security of UN personnel, including those of the International Tribunal for Rwanda and human rights officers, and assisting in the training of a national police force. During 1995, UNAMIR's strength dropped from about 5,700 to 1,200, in the light of the adjusted mandates.

The Secretary-General reported on the work of UNAMIR in 1995 in several reports (see below), which included details on situations related to security, refugee flows, human rights, food supplies and infrastructure rebuilding, among others.

Report of the Secretary-General (February).

On 6 February, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁴²⁾ that the security situation continued to be a matter of serious concern, with reports of summary executions, secret detention, torture, banditry and other violent acts against civilians. UNAMIR was assisting the Government to establish a new police force, as Rwandese military personnel continued to perform police duties. As part of its efforts to unify the Army, some 2,200 members of the former Rwandese government forces had undergone a five-month retraining programme.

The Government continued to take steps towards national reconciliation and reconstruction but, for the most part, lacked the resources to run an effective public administration, the Secretary-General reported. Also, Rwanda's court system was not functioning, its prisons were overcrowded and thousands of suspects awaited trial.

By 30 January, Opération Retour, an integrated inter-agency initiative to facilitate the safe resettlement of internally displaced persons, launched in December 1994, had resettled some 25,000 displaced persons.

The Government had established in 1994 a commission for the repatriation and resettlement of refugees, as provided for in the Arusha Agreement. In 1995, it was planning a socio-economic survey of refugees, a pre-repatriation census and registration of returnees, and an information and sensitization campaign directed at the refugees and the local population. It also was identifying resettlement sites, supervising the distribution of plots and facilitating the rehabilitation of basic infrastructure and transport of returnees.

The Secretary-General said the dissemination of factual information was a vital tool in creating conditions for refugees and internally displaced persons to decide freely to return to their homes.

On 14 January, the Government and UNAMIR signed an agreement to establish Radio UNAMIR in Kigali.

The Human Rights Field Operation (see above) continued to monitor human rights conditions, liaise with the Government with respect to human rights education, monitor the conditions of detainees, participate in confidence-building measures aimed at the re-establishment of civic society and coordinate with other international agencies in the field.

The Secretary-General also reported that UN organizations continued to provide urgently needed assistance, in particular, food, health and children's services, to displaced persons and other vulnerable population groups. Humanitarian organizations, with the Ministries of Defence and Justice, were developing plans for the demobilization, education and retraining of some 4,000 "child soldiers" for reintegration into society. Food-for-work schemes supported at least 7,000 civil servants and 17,000 teachers. As requested in 1994,⁽⁴³⁾ a comprehensive plan for a mine-clearance programme had been proposed, including a mine survey, marking and fencing operations, and emergency mine clearance. The UN Children's Fund (UNICEF) was also conducting mine-awareness education activities in all prefectures.

On 10 February, the Security Council, in a letter from its President,⁽⁴⁴⁾ noted that a functioning judicial system was essential in the government recovery programme for the establishment of internal security, and also for the return of refugees. They also attached importance to the establishment of an effective mine-clearance programme on the basis of the UN plan.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In a 9 April report⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General said that continued UN support was pledged to building a new Rwandese society based on tolerance, harmony and justice. In the nine months since the new Rwandese Government had assumed office, the overall situation had improved considerably. The private sector had revived, markets, shops and small businesses had sprung up, agricultural activities had started and schools had reopened. Radio UNAMIR had begun broadcasting on 16 February and was on the air seven days a week in three languages.

Over the past two months, tensions and frustrations had surfaced and the security situation in the country had deteriorated, with armed saboteurs entering the country and more and more people being detained by the Government. Those developments contributed to a decline in the repatriation of Rwandese refugees from Burundi, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire.

There were also reports that the armed forces of the former Rwandese Government were training and rearming; due to the tightened security, some incidents had occurred involving searches of UN vehicles and staff and a cut-off of goods and equipment at Kigali airport. Middle- and lower-level government authorities were often uncooperative.

Radio Rwanda had initiated a propaganda campaign against UNAMIR personnel, and strained relations between UNAMIR and Rwandese Army personnel persisted. The Army frequently restricted the movement of UNAMIR personnel and denied them access to certain areas, thus affecting their ability to discharge mandated tasks fully. Difficulties were also encountered during troop rotations, when UNAMIR personnel were delayed or denied entry at Kigali airport. Rwanda was reminded of its responsibility for the safety and security of all UNAMIR personnel, as well as for ensuring that their freedom of movement and access throughout the country were respected.

Human rights monitors were increased from 88 in January to 113 by 1 April. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights launched an international appeal to assist Rwanda to re-establish the judicial systems and for funds to recruit more human rights monitors.

Some 3,000 unaccompanied minors were registered in an attempt to reunite them with their families. Psychosocial counselling and trauma recovery programmes were to be enlarged. Agreement was reached with the Ministry of Justice to permit 400 children between the ages of 11 and 17, imprisoned for alleged involvement in genocide, to be moved to a separate location for children only. Vaccination and nutritional centres had reopened. An emergency curriculum was made available for over 140,000 primary schoolchildren.

A team of United States experts visited Rwanda to discuss with UNAMIR officials a possible plan of action for mine clearing. UNAMIR explosives demolition teams continued to carry out limited mine-clearing operations.

Substantial food shortages existed within the country and the subregion, and NGOs were distributing seeds and tools. The Secretary-General urged donors to accelerate the flow of aid to Rwanda, possibly through the Trust Fund for Rwanda.

Report of the Secretary-General (June). On 4 June, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴⁾ that the country was now largely at peace. Electricity, water and communications had been partly restored, primary and secondary schools had reopened, and economic and agricultural activities had resumed. The National Assembly had begun discussions on a new Constitution to replace the 1992 Constitution.

The Kibeho tragedy, he went on, had underscored the tensions and fears that remained just beneath the surface in Rwanda. The Government continued to report military preparations and incursions by elements of the former regime. The number of arrests for alleged complicity in the genocide remained high. As a result, the sense of insecurity within the communes inhibited the repatriation of refugees. Acrimonious criticism of the international community in general, and UNAMIR in particular, continued unabated, encouraging non-cooperation, even hostility, at the middle and lower levels of the Rwandan Government and by the Army.

Because of a deteriorating security situation in Kigali and an increase in armed robberies, UNAMIR had deployed troops there. Emergency medical assistance was provided to Rwandans at UNAMIR locations and to internally displaced persons in south-western Rwanda. Transportation was made available to internally displaced persons and returning refugees.

The Secretary-General reported that under a new mandate UNAMIR would shift its focus from peace-keeping to confidence-building, undertaking tasks specifically required to sustain a UN peace-keeping presence in Rwanda, mainly in Kigali. Those would include the protection of UN premises, as well as of personnel of the International Tribunal, UN agencies and NGOs; deployment throughout the country of military/police observers, as a complement to human rights monitors; helping in the distribution of humanitarian assistance; facilitating the return and reintegration of refugees in cities and communes; providing assistance and expertise in engineering, logistics, medical care and demining; and stationing a limited reserve of formed troops in certain provinces.

However, the Government of Rwanda had taken the position that most UNAMIR peace-keeping functions had become redundant, the Secretary-General went on. Rwanda believed the concept of promoting security and confidence through the presence of UNAMIR could no longer be accepted, since it had assumed responsibility for national security throughout the country; Rwanda felt the protection of humanitarian convoys was the responsibility of the Government and UNAMIR's role should be one of monitoring. Also, there was no need for UNAMIR to play a role in border monitoring. The training programme of UNAMIR's civilian police should be replaced by bilateral arrangements. Rwanda had proposed that UNAMIR should be reduced to a maximum of 1,800 formed troops, to be deployed in Kigali and the provinces. Rwanda wanted the mandate to be extended for six months, on the understanding that there would be no further extension and that steps to reduce UNAMIR troops outside Kigali should commence immediately.

With respect to a long-term solution of the refugee and related problems in the Great Lakes region, the Secretary-General intended to appoint a special envoy to consult with the countries concerned, as well as with OAU, on the convening of a Regional Conference on Security, Stability and Development.

The Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda continued its investigations into the genocide of 1994. Reports and extensive evidence gathered at massacre sites were made available to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and the International Tribunal. The process of investigating acts of genocide and other serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in Rwanda was launched. Most activity took place in other African countries, Europe and North America, and covered 400 identified suspects, many of whom had sought refuge abroad.

Humanitarian efforts mainly dealt with the consequences of the forced closure of internally displaced persons camps in south-west Rwanda. The rapid and coordinated response of UNAMIR, the UN Rwanda Emergency Office, UN agencies, international organizations and NGOs prevented greater casualties and suffering. The massive return of internally displaced persons, many of whom were forced to leave their possessions in the camps or were robbed on their way home, placed heavy demands on the communes. The closure of camps resulted in an increased number of unaccompanied minors; UNICEF reported nearly 2,000, some 70 per cent of whom were under the age of five.

Health facilities throughout the country needed urgent rehabilitation and additional staff. The World Health Organization had conducted training programmes in epidemiological surveillance and epidemic control. UNICEF supported the rehabilitation of the water-supply system in the north-eastern part of the country. Food shipments to refugee camps were affected, and many people lacked the means to produce food until the next agricultural season, from September 1995 to January 1996.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council met on 9 June to consider the Secretary-General's June report. It invited Zaire to participate in the discussion under rule 37^a of the Council's rules of procedure. The Council adopted resolution 997(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the situation in Rwanda, in particular its resolution 872(1993) of 5 October 1993 by which it established the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR), and its resolutions 912(1994) of 21 April 1994, 918(1994) of 17 May 1994, 925(1994) of 8 June 1994, and 965(1994)

of 30 November 1994, which set out the mandate of UNAMIR,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on UNAMIR dated 4 June 1995,

Recalling also its resolution 955(1994) of 8 November 1994 establishing the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and its resolution 978(1995) of 27 February 1995, concerning the necessity for the arrest of persons suspected of certain offences in Rwanda,

Stressing the importance of achieving genuine reconciliation among all members of Rwandan society within the frame of reference of the Arusha Peace Agreement,

Noting with great concern reports of military preparations and increasing incursions into Rwanda by elements of the former regime and underlining the need for effective measures to ensure that Rwandan nationals currently in neighbouring countries, including those in camps, do not undertake military activities aimed at destabilizing Rwanda or receive arms supplies, in view of the great likelihood that such arms are intended for use within Rwanda,

Underlining the need for increased efforts to assist the Government of Rwanda in the promotion of a climate of stability and trust in order to facilitate the return of Rwandan refugees in neighbouring countries,

Emphasizing the necessity for the accelerated disbursement of international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Rwanda,

Calling again upon all States to act in accordance with recommendations adopted by the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, held in Bujumbura in February 1995,

Recognizing the valuable contribution that the human rights officers deployed by the High Commissioner for Human Rights to Rwanda have made towards the improvement of the overall situation,

Acknowledging the responsibility of the Government of Rwanda for the safety and security of all UNAMIR personnel and other international staff serving in the country,

Reaffirming the need for a long-term solution to the refugee and related problems in the Great Lakes States, and welcoming, therefore, the intention of the Secretary-General to appoint a special envoy to carry out consultations on the preparation and convening, at the earliest possible time, of the regional Conference on Security, Stability and Development,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of UNAMIR until 8 December 1995 and authorizes a reduction of the force level to 2,330 troops within three months of the adoption of this resolution and to 1,800 troops within four months;

2. Decides to maintain the current level of military observers and civilian police personnel;

3. Decides, in the light of the current situation in Rwanda, to adjust the mandate of UNAMIR so that UNAMIR will:

(a) Exercise its good offices to help achieve national reconciliation within the frame of reference of the Arusha Peace Agreement;

(b) Assist the Government of Rwanda in facilitating the voluntary and safe return of refugees and their reintegration in their home communities, and, to that end, to support the Government of Rwanda in its ongoing efforts to promote a climate of confidence and trust through the performance of monitoring tasks throughout the country with military and police observers;

(c) Support the provision of humanitarian aid, and of assistance and expertise in engineering, logistics, medical care and demining;

(d) Assist in the training of a national police force;

(e) Contribute to the security in Rwanda of personnel and premises of United Nations agencies, of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, including full-time protection for the Prosecutor's Office, as well as those of human rights officers, and to contribute also to the security of humanitarian agencies in case of need;

4. Affirms that the restrictions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations by resolution 918(1994) apply to the sale or supply of arms and materiel specified therein to persons in the States neighbouring Rwanda, if that sale or supply is for the purpose of the use of such arms or materiel within Rwanda;

5. Calls upon the States neighbouring Rwanda to take steps, with the aim of putting an end to factors contributing to the destabilization of Rwanda, to ensure that such arms and materiel are not transferred to Rwandan camps within their territories;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to consult the Governments of neighbouring countries on the possibility of the deployment of United Nations military observers, and to consult, as a matter of priority, the Government of Zaire on the deployment of observers including in the airfields located in eastern Zaire, in order to monitor the sale or supply of arms and matériel referred to above; and further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the matter within one month of the adoption of this resolution;

7. Takes note of the cooperation existing between the Government of Rwanda and UNAMIR in the implementation of its mandate and urges the Government of Rwanda and UNAMIR to continue to implement the agreements made between them, in particular the Status-of-Mission Agreement of 5 November 1993 and any subsequent agreement concluded to replace that Agreement in order to facilitate the implementation of the new mandate;

8. Commends the efforts of States, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations which have provided humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons in need, encourages them to continue such assistance, and calls upon the Government of Rwanda to continue to facilitate their delivery and distribution;

9. Calls upon States and donor agencies to fulfil their earlier commitments to give assistance for Rwanda's rehabilitation efforts, to increase such assistance, and in particular to support the early and effective functioning of the International Tribunal and the rehabilitation of the Rwandan judicial system;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to continue to coordinate the activities of the United Nations in Rwanda, including those of the organizations and agencies active in the humanitarian and developmental field, and of the human rights officers;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 9 August 1995 and 9 October 1995 on the discharge by UNAMIR of its mandate, the humanitarian situation and progress towards repatriation of refugees;

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 997(1995)

9 June 1995 Meeting 3542 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/465).

Report of the Secretary-General (August). On 8 August, the Secretary-General reported⁽³³⁾ that repatriation of troops had begun. As at 3 August, its troop strength had been reduced to 3,571 all ranks. Civilian police observers numbered 56.

Working relations between the Government of National Unity and UNAMIR had improved and a spirit of cooperation with UN programmes and agencies, international NGOs and bilateral donors had emerged. The Secretary-General's visit to Rwanda on 13 and 14 July was intended to help strengthen those trends. Rwanda also had taken steps to improve relations with neighbouring countries, especially Burundi, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire.

Although senior government officials had publicly called on the Army and security forces to respect the rights of citizens, acts of violence continued to be reported. On 20 June, the Government issued a statement that opened the possibility for contacts with refugee representatives who had not been implicated in acts of genocide. At the same time, it encouraged refugees to visit Rwanda to assess conditions personally and thus expedite the pace of repatriation. Radio UNAMIR, heard in more than 70 per cent of Rwanda, continued its confidence-building broadcasts, providing the population with factual and objective information on the situation in the country, the Secretary-General said.

Several candidates for the offices of President and five Deputy Presidents of the Supreme Court had not been acceptable to the National Assembly, and efforts were under way to identify mutually acceptable nominees. On 19 July, President Bizimungu, responding to charges that political activities of non-governmental parties were prohibited, stated that while multi-party political activities, as such, had not been banned, political competition and mutual accusing among political parties which caused instability and divisions would not be allowed.

Restrictions on UNAMIR's freedom of movement had generally ceased. In addition, incidents of banditry and theft had decreased significantly. The closure of the displaced persons camps and the subsequent return of a large number of displaced persons to their previous neighbourhoods, as well as the continued repatriation of refugees, increased the pressure for housing and land. In some areas, however, acute housing shortages and disputes over property continued to result in violence. Although numbers had decreased, cases of arbitrary arrests and detention continued to be reported, as were attacks, disappearances and killings, mostly of new returnees. Both Rwanda and Zaire conceded that the situation in their border zone had deteriorated and accused each other of involvement. Rwanda had enhanced security measures, and requested that restrictions on its acquisition of arms be lifted.

Efforts to enhance the administration of justice, establish law and order and promote national reconciliation continued. On 17 July, the Minister of Justice inaugurated a four-month training course for future magistrates. The conditions in the prisons constituted a major humanitarian crisis, with more than 50,000 people incarcerated in 12 prisons and other places of detention. Death rates in the prisons were estimated at more than 200 per month.

The rate of repatriation of Rwandan refugees from neighbouring countries increased slightly. In June, 2,727 returned from Zaire. UNHCR estimated that, in addition to the 6,250 repatriated from Burundi in June and July under its auspices, up to 10,000 persons had returned to Rwanda on their own. Officials from the United Republic of Tanzania and Rwanda met with UNHCR in Kigali from 17 to 19 July to examine modalities for the return of the estimated 700,000 persons in Tanzania. They agreed to establish a joint commission on security and the resettlement of refugees. Since the closure of the camps for the internally displaced in south-west Rwanda, international humanitarian organizations had increased their activities at the commune level. The Government launched the first phase of its rehabilitation programme. Food-aid deliveries throughout the country had increased and there were sufficient stocks of food to cover planned distribution programmes.

By 1 August, the UN Human Rights Field Operation had established 11 field offices throughout the country. Plans were under way to establish sub-offices in additional communes. Human rights committees were being created at the provincial or prefectural level, with local participation, which would meet regularly with representatives of various government authorities. The Operation organized education seminars for civil, military and judicial representatives.

Following a bilateral agreement between the United States and Rwanda, a national demining programme was established in July, providing for the establishment of a national demining office, demining training for government soldiers and creation of a mine database.

Although a large-scale humanitarian effort was still required to meet emergency needs, Rwanda was gradually shifting towards rehabilitation and reconstruction. As a result, the UN Rwanda Emergency Office in Kigali, established in 1994, began preparing for its eventual closure. Transitional arrangements, including the establishment of a small UN disaster management team, were being made to ensure that the coordination of humanitarian assistance continued.

Donor countries and UN agencies met in Kigali on 6 and 7 July for a mid-term review of the January round-table conference. They recognized the need to expedite the disbursement of already committed funds and pledged an additional $200 million. Several programmes to facilitate the return to Rwanda of former members of the country's public service were initiated. The World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and UNDP were involved in a project designed to strengthen the Government's capacity to manage its economic, financial and human resources.

The Secretary-General concluded that in order to address the urgent problems surrounding the repatriation of refugees, it might be useful to convene, at the earliest possible date, a regional meeting to develop measures to implement the commitments embodied in the Nairobi summit declaration (see above, under "Refugee camp security and repatriation efforts"), the Bujumbura Action Plan (see PART FOUR, Chapter XII) and the tripartite agreements signed by UNHCR, Rwanda and neighbouring countries hosting Rwandan refugees. That would be in addition to the possible holding of round-table meetings, in which all sectors of Rwandan society would participate and which had been discussed with Rwandan government officials during the Secretary-General's visit to Rwanda in July.

Communication. On 29 August, the Secretary-General informed⁽¹⁸⁾ the Security Council President that following his July visit to Rwanda, he had asked the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs to initiate urgent measures to address the crisis resulting from the prison conditions in Rwanda and the inability of the justice system to process the cases of those incarcerated. Immediate action was needed to improve prison conditions and expand prison capacity by up to 21,000. Rwanda would also receive assistance to strengthen its justice system and to implement a proper arrest and detention policy.

In Rwanda, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs continued to assume responsibility for coordinating humanitarian actions. UNHCR, in collaboration with the Rwandese Ministry of Rehabilitation, oversaw the reception of returning refugees. Notwithstanding recent changes in the Rwandese Government, the Secretary-General said he was confident that work would continue in a constructive and positive spirit to enhance Rwanda's capacity for ensuring the observance of human rights, the safety of returnees and justice for all.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). In a 7 October report,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Secretary-General said that despite the unexpected expulsion of some 13,000 Rwandese from Zaire, Rwanda, with logistical support from UNAMIR, UN agencies and NGOs, was receiving and resettling its nationals in a generally humane and orderly manner. At a meeting of the Tripartite Commission involving the United Republic of Tanzania, Rwanda and UNHCR (Arusha, Tanzania, 18-21 September), agreement was reached on measures to launch large-scale repatriation of the more than 600,000 Rwandese refugees in Tanzania. At a Tripartite Commission meeting involving Zaire, Rwanda and UNHCR (Geneva, 25 September), Rwanda agreed to strengthen reception facilities, reduce border controls and provide security and protection to returnees, in collaboration with UNHCR and other human rights organizations. Zaire agreed to reduce all forms of intimidation in the camps within its borders. In the context of a renewed regional effort to promote voluntary repatriation, UNHCR was expanding its mass information campaign to counter extremist propaganda. In anticipation of an increased rate of return of refugees to Rwanda, UNHCR was augmenting its facilities at official border entry points and expanding activities in the communes of origin, in cooperation with UNDP.

UNAMIR troops and military observers, in coordination with UNHCR and other UN agencies, supported Rwanda's efforts to resettle the refugees forced across the border from Zaire between 19 and 24 August. They also helped to improve conditions in transit camps, in anticipation of a large-scale return of refugees, and to construct and renovate detention centres to relieve the overcrowding in Rwandese jails; and assisted in the construction or repair of bridges, roads and schools and in the transport of humanitarian assistance.

The deadline of 31 December set by Zaire for the voluntary departure of all refugees from its territory intensified the humanitarian challenges facing Rwanda and the international community. The task of organizing the voluntary repatriation of the estimated 2 million refugees was a difficult one. The UN High Commissioner for Refugees believed that a more realistic target was between 500,000 and 600,000 persons by the end of the year, due in part to the limited absorption capacity of many of the home communes in Rwanda. UNCHR had undertaken a demographic survey and assessment of existing infrastructure and population groups in Rwanda's communes to identify those communes that were ready to receive returnees and those that needed infrastructure rehabilitation.

Cross-border infiltration and sabotage, leading to countermeasures by the Government, constituted the most worrying security problem in the country, the Secretary-General said. An international commission of inquiry would look into allegations of arms supplies to and training of former Rwandese government forces. Training of the Rwandan National Police Force continued; the training of the communal police had been delayed because of the rehabilitation of the Communal Police Training Centre.

Conditions in the prisons continued to constitute a major humanitarian crisis. More than 52,000 people were incarcerated, with arrests continuing to take place. A plan of action, drafted by Rwanda and UNDP for urgent action on prisons and in the justice sector, had been circulated to the international community and a team set up, under the Special Representative, to mobilize resources and to accelerate the improvement of prison conditions.

In terms of humanitarian assistance, the situation remained fragile. According to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and WFP, some 15 per cent of Rwanda's estimated 1 million families were vulnerable. However, efforts to promote household food security and income generation for women had intensified.

There was a sizeable increase in the commitment and disbursement of funds pledged for Rwanda's Programme of National Reconciliation and Socio-Economic Rehabilitation and Recovery. WFP provided more than 100,000 individuals with food, but also assisted Rwanda's agricultural recovery, rehabilitation of destroyed infrastructure and construction of new houses, schools and water facilities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (October)

The Security Council met on 17 October to consider the report of the Secretary-General on UNAMIR. Following consultations among Council members, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽⁴⁷⁾

The Security Council has considered the Secretary-General's report on the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR) of 7 October 1995.

The Security Council welcomes progress made by the Government of Rwanda in the reconciliation process, including the integration of more than 2,000 members of former Rwandan Government Forces (RGF) troops into the Rwanda Patriotic Army (RPA). The Council calls on the Government of Rwanda to intensify its contacts with all sectors of Rwandan society, except with those directly responsible for the genocide. The Council reiterates its concern at reports about continuing cross-border infiltrations from neighbouring countries which have a destabilizing effect within Rwanda. The Council also reiterates its concern at the danger for peace and stability in the Great Lakes region which would be caused by uncontrolled arms flows and in this context reaffirms the relevant provisions of its resolution 1013(1995). The Council condemns all acts of violence in Rwanda. The Council welcomes the fact that the Government of Rwanda has voluntarily and without delay initiated an investigation into the killing of civilians at Kanama and expects that prosecution of those responsible will follow.

The Security Council calls again upon all States to act in accordance with the conclusions of the summit meeting of the leaders in the subregion in Nairobi in January 1995 and the recommendations by the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, held in Bujumbura in February 1995. The Council welcomes recent efforts to improve relations among the States in the region, which should help pave the way for the proposed Regional Conference on Peace, Security and Development. In this regard, the Council supports the efforts of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General to the Great Lakes region for the preparation and convening of such a conference. It requests the Secretary-General to submit his report on the results of the first round of consultations of the Special Envoy in the region as soon as possible.

The Security Council reaffirms the important role UNAMIR has played in Rwanda and the subregion. In this respect, the Council underlines its commitment to UNAMIR which, inter alia, assists the Government of Rwanda in facilitating the voluntary return and resettlement of refugees and has made available to the Rwandan authorities its engineering and logistics capacity. The Council underlines that UNAMIR can effectively implement its current mandate only if it has an adequate force level and sufficient means. The Council stands ready to study carefully any further recommendations that the Secretary-General might make on the issue of force reductions in relation to the fulfilment of the mandate of UNAMIR.

The Security Council reaffirms its view that genuine reconciliation as well as long-lasting stability in the region as a whole cannot be attained without the safe, voluntary and organized return to their country of all Rwandan refugees. In this respect, the Council welcomes the joint efforts of Rwanda, neighbouring countries and UNHCR to speed up the voluntary return of refugees through, inter alia, the work of the Tripartite Commissions. The Council underlines that, in order to foster the process of national reconciliation, an effective and credible national judiciary has to be established. In this respect, it welcomes the appointment of the members of the Rwandan Supreme Court. The Council further underlines that the International Tribunal for Rwanda should begin its proceedings as soon as possible. The Council calls on Member States to comply with their obligations with regard to cooperation with the Tribunal in accordance with resolution 955(1994). It urges once more all States to arrest and detain persons suspected of genocide and other serious violations of international humanitarian law in accordance with resolution 978(1995). The Council underlines the necessity for the Tribunal to be fully financed, as a matter of priority, and for continued access to the Voluntary Trust Fund established for the Tribunal. The Council continues to support the work of human rights monitors in Rwanda in cooperation with the Rwandan Government.

The Security Council reaffirms its concern at the appalling situation in the Rwandan prisons. In this respect, it welcomes measures initiated by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, in coordination with the international community and the Government of Rwanda, to alleviate the intolerable conditions in Rwandan prisons. It calls on the international community to continue its assistance in this regard and encourages the Rwandan Government to continue its efforts to improve the situation in the prisons. The Council underlines the importance of parallel action by the Rwandan Government to restore the Rwandan judicial system and requests the international community to assist the Rwandan Government in this urgent task.

The Security Council underlines that sound economic foundations are also vital for achieving lasting stability in Rwanda. In this respect, it welcomes the increased commitments and funds pledged for the Government's Programme of National Reconciliation and Socio-Economic Rehabilitation and Recovery following the mid-term review of the Geneva Round-Table Conference, and calls on the international community to continue to support Rwanda's rehabilitation process.

The Security Council will remain seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3588.

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

On 1 December, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁴⁸⁾ that the humanitarian situation in Rwanda continued to improve, with steady progress in the transition from emergency relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development. A complex relationship existed between several critical areas: reintegration of refugees; prison overcrowding and rehabilitation of the justice system; security for returnees at the communal level; and insufficient housing and scarcity of serviceable land.

During September and October, a total of 32,190 refugees returned to Rwanda, mainly from UNHCR-organized convoys. The rate of return from Tanzania increased from 1,000 returnees in September to 2,000 in October, of whom 1,144 were new case-load refugees. Approximately 19,000 refugees had returned from Zaire. Voluntary repatriation from Burundi fell from 7,773 in September to 1,012 in October. The low number of returnees could be attributed to the continuing campaign of intimidation and misinformation in the refugee camps; fear that their suspected role in the genocide would expose them to reprisal, denunciation or imprisonment; the affirmation by Rwanda that although refugees were welcomed to return, those involved in planning or carrying out the genocide would face imprisonment; and the shortage of adequate housing. To pre-empt drastic measures by countries of asylum and avoid the chaos and probable violence that massive repatriation would trigger inside Rwanda, UNHCR was encouraging large-scale organized voluntary repatriation. It also strengthened mass information campaigns, exchange visits of officials and refugees and regular monitoring of returnees within Rwanda, together with Human Rights Field Operation officers and UNAMIR military and police observers.

Some improvement in the socio-economic sectors had occurred, and the first effective step towards the revival of the national judicial system had been taken, with the appointment by the National Assembly on 17 October of six Supreme Court judges.

The prison population continued to grow and had reached 60,000. The Rwandan Prison Commission took emergency measures to create additional space for prisoners, leading to noticeably fewer deaths and better medical facilities. Prisoners were transferred to the extensions and temporary detention centres. There was frustration both in Rwanda and within the international community over the delay in restoring the procedures of justice throughout the country. A conference on genocide held in Kigali from 2 to 5 November focused on issues that the justice system would need to address, such as special courts for those accused of genocide, degrees of culpability and plea bargaining.

Progress continued to be made within Rwanda on security and normalization, but an atmosphere of tension and instability pervaded the region. Relations between Rwanda and both Zaire and Kenya had deteriorated and conditions in Burundi also contributed to the tension. In Rwanda itself, no major incidents of violence involving civilians were reported. However, there was a noticeable increase in insurgent activities in the western prefectures. Security was markedly better in areas where formed UNAMIR troops were present than in those areas where only military observers were stationed. The International Commission of Inquiry, established to investigate reports of military training and arms transfers to former Rwandese government forces, began its work on 3 November.

UNAMIR civilian police continued to train the Rwandan National Police Force. So far, 403 new gendarmes had completed the programme, with 515 more scheduled to complete training on 20 December.

The overall food situation improved, permitting reductions in the food-aid allocations to populations at risk. However, several regions in Rwanda remained areas of concern, owing to the high concentration of former displaced persons or returnees with no assets or income.

The Secretary-General observed that a large part of the international community believed that a further six-month extension of UNAMIR's current mandate was desirable. UNAMIR's role could be only one of facilitation. The principal responsibility for providing security and material support for the return of the refugees lay with Rwanda. The continued presence of UNAMIR could help to build confidence among the refugees and encourage them to take the decision to return. However, Rwanda had officially informed him on 24 November⁽⁴⁹⁾ that it did not agree to an extension of the UNAMIR mandate beyond its expiration on 8 December, as it felt the Mission did not serve the real needs of Rwanda. It would be receptive to a continued UN presence, provided its purpose was to assist Rwanda in rehabilitation and reconstruction, including the provision of technical expertise, financial assistance and equipment. The Secretary-General stated that he would therefore initiate a drawdown of the operation as of 8 December. The withdrawal process would take two to three months to complete, during which time UNAMIR would ensure the smooth and peaceful departure of UN military personnel and equipment.

The Secretary-General recommended that the United Nations maintain a political presence in Rwanda after the withdrawal of UNAMIR. A UN office, headed by his Special Representative, could be established to further, in consultation with Rwanda, the search for peace and stability through justice and reconciliation. His Special Representative would have overall authority for the coordination and expansion of the assistance that the United Nations and the international community were providing in support of Rwanda's rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts. Rwanda had also requested in August that the equipment belonging to UNAMIR be left to the Government after its departure. The Secretary-General said that was clearly an issue on which only the General Assembly could decide.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the situation in Rwanda, in particular its resolution 997(1995) of 9 June 1995,

Stressing the importance of the voluntary and safe repatriation of Rwandan refugees and of genuine national reconciliation,

Noting with great concern continuing reports of military preparations and incursions into Rwanda by elements of the former regime, underlining the need for effective measures to ensure that Rwandan nationals currently in neighbouring countries, including those in camps, do not undertake military activities aimed at destabilizing Rwanda or receive arms supplies, in view of the great likelihood that such arms are intended for use within Rwanda, and welcoming in this context the establishment of the International Commission of Inquiry pursuant to its resolution 1013(1995) of 7 September 1995,

(b) Assist the Government of Rwanda in facilitating the voluntary and safe return of refugees and, to this end, to support the Government of Rwanda in its ongoing efforts to promote a climate of confidence and trust through the performance of monitoring tasks;

(c) Assist the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international agencies in the provision of logistical support for the repatriation of refugees;

(d) Contribute, with the agreement of the Government of Rwanda, to the protection of the International Tribunal for Rwanda as an interim measure until alternative arrangements agreed with the Government of Rwanda can be put in place;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to reduce the force level of UNAMIR to 1,200 troops to carry out the mandate set out in paragraph 2 above;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to reduce the number of military observers and headquarters and other military support staff to 200;

Security Council resolution 1029(1995)

12 December 1995 Meeting 3605 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/1015).

Further developments. In a 21 December letter to the Security Council President,⁽⁵⁰⁾ Rwanda responded to statements about the situation in Rwanda made by the Secretary-General during a press conference on 18 December.

On 22 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 50/58 L, requested the Secretary-General to consult with Rwanda and relevant UN agencies on the nature of a continued UN presence in Rwanda after 8 March 1996 and on the role such a presence might play in furthering the search for peace and stability through justice, reconciliation and refugee return and in assisting Rwanda in its pressing task of rehabilitation and reconstruction.

The Secretary-General later reported that Rwanda's relations with its neighbours, especially Tanzania and Zaire, had improved. President Bizimungu visited Tanzania on 14 December and held discussions with the newly elected President, Benjamin Mkapa. The Foreign Minister of Rwanda also visited Kinshasa, Zaire. The International Tribunal for Rwanda issued its first indictments on 12 December, so as to carry forward the process of bringing to justice persons accused of genocide and crimes against humanity. In December, the number of returnees increased slightly. More than 13,500 refugees returned to Rwanda compared to 6,700 in November. That increase was due to an influx of refugees from Burundi, when 5,499 returnees crossed the border in UNHCR-organized convoys between 19 and 23 December. At the Rwanda/Zaire/UNHCR Tripartite Commission meeting (Geneva, 20 December), the parties expressed strong concern at the recent decline in the repatriation of refugees to Rwanda. In a joint communique, Rwanda reaffirmed its commitment to establish the necessary conditions for the safe return of refugees and to strengthen its capacity to welcome them, while Zaire reaffirmed its commitment to rid the camps of those resorting to intimidation to block the return of refugees. The Rwanda/Tanzania/UNHCR Tripartite Commission held its third meeting in Kigali on 7 and 8 December. The "go and see" visits of refugees to Rwanda continued during December. On 15 December, UNDP and the Rwandan Ministry of Planning signed a project for the urgent urban resettlement of refugees.

A one-year, $1.5 million project, financed by the United Kingdom and to be executed by the UN Centre for Human Settlements, in cooperation with the Ministry of Rehabilitation and Social Integration, would facilitate the resettlement of returnees in urban and semi-urban areas by preparing and developing sites. On 9 December, UNDP also signed a preparatory assistance project to support the same Ministry in the implementation of the Government's accelerated plan of action for the reinstallation and reinsertion of refugees and formerly displaced persons. That would reinforce the Government and local administration capacity to plan, implement, monitor and evaluate activities at both the national and local levels. Co-financed by the Netherlands, the one-year project, costing $1,159,000, would be executed by the UN Office for Project Services.

In March, the Secretary-General presented revised cost estimates for UNAMIR⁽³¹⁾ amounting to $158,449,600 gross ($156,371,700 net) for the period 10 December 1994 to 9 June 1995; cost estimates of $141,832,300 gross ($139,286,300 net), or the equivalent of $21,169,000 gross ($20,789,000 net) per month, for the period 10 June to 31 December 1995; and cost estimates of $126,912,900 gross ($124,634,400 net) for the period 1 January to 30 June 1996.

On 12 July, the Assembly, having reviewed those reports and also a report by the Secretary-General on the financial performance of UNAMIR from 5 April to 9 December 1994,⁽³³⁾ adopted resolution 49/20 B.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 846(1993) of 22 June 1993 and 872(1993) of 5 October 1993, by which the Council established, respectively, the United Nations Observer Mission Uganda-Rwanda and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, as well as the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Assistance Mission, the most recent of which was resolution 997(1995) of 9 June 1995,

Recalling also its resolution 48/245 of 5 April 1994 on the financing of the Observer Mission, its resolution 48/248 of 5 April 1994 and its decisions 48/479 A of 23 December 1993 and 48/479 B of 14 September 1994 on the financing of the Assistance Mission and its resolution 49/20 A of 29 November 1994 and its decision 49/481 of 6 April 1995 on the financing of the Observer Mission and the Assistance Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Assistance Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Assistance Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Assistance Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda as at 16 June 1995, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 66,539,201 United States dollars, and urges all Member States concerned to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, particularly as regards the reimbursement of troop- and equipment-contributing countries, due to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Assistance Mission promptly and in full;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution, and urges the Secretary-General to take the recommendations into account in the management of this operation and the formulation of future budget proposals;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Assistance Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

lars gross (58,542,300 dollars net) authorized under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 49/20 A and 80 million dollars gross (79,502,500 dollars net) authorized under the provisions of Assembly decision 49/481;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the additional amount of 83,417,100 dollars gross (82,919,600 dollars net) for the period from 10 December 1994 to 9 June 1995, taking into account the amount of 30 million dollars gross (29,271,150 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with resolution 49/20 A and 30 million dollars gross (29,271,150 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly decision 49/481 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, the scale of assessments for the year 1994 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 10,083,386 dollars gross (10,023,248 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the scale of assessments for the year 1995 to be applied against the balance, that is, 73,333,714 dollars gross (72,896,352 dollars net), for the period from 1 January to 9 June 1995;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 497,500 dollars approved for the period from 10 December 1994 to 9 June 1995, 60,138 dollars being the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the balance, that is, 437,362 dollars, for the period from 1 January to 9 June 1995;

9. Decides, as an interim measure, pending presentation of the revised cost estimate by the Secretary-General and the report of the Advisory Committee thereon, to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda a total amount of 109,951,900 dollars gross (107,584,300 dollars net) for the operation of the Assistance Mission for the period from 10 June to 31 December 1995;

10. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 99,628,200 dollars gross (97,508,000 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Assistance Mission for the period from 10 June to 8 December 1995 in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

11. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,120,200 dollars approved for the period from 10 June to 8 December 1995;

12. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 10 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance for the period from 5 April to 9 December 1994, the exact amount to be determined by the Advisory Committee no later than 14 July 1995;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda".

General Assembly resolution 49/20 B

12 July 1995 Meeting 105 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/687/Add.2) without vote, 7 July (meeting 62); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.59), based on informal consultations; agenda items 127 & 130.

Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 57, 60, 62; plenary 105.

In November, the Secretary-General presented revised cost estimates⁽⁵⁴⁾ of $96,685,400 gross ($94,880,600 net) for UNAMIR for the period from 10 June to 31 December 1995 and $51,733,200 gross ($50,417,400 net) from 1 January to 30 June 1996.

On 23 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/211 A.

Financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda and the related oral report of the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1029(1995) of 12 December 1995, by which the Council adjusted and extended the mandate of the Assistance Mission for a final period until 8 March 1996, as well as all previous Council resolutions on the Assistance Mission,

Recalling also its resolution 48/248 of 5 April 1994 on the financing of the Assistance Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 49/20 B of 12 July 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Assistance Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Assistance Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Assistance Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda as at 19 December 1995, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 74,322,512 United States dollars, representing 17 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Assistance Mission to the period ending 8 December 1995, notes that some 22 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, particularly those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, particularly as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, notably those troop-contributing Member States that have paid their assessed contributions in full, which bear an additional burden owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Assistance Mission promptly and in full;

4. Endorses, on an exceptional basis, in the absence of a written report, the oral observations and recommendations presented by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Assistance Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda the amount of 32,324,500 dollars gross (31,828,900 dollars net) for the operation of the Assistance Mission for the period from 1 January to 8 March 1996;

7. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 32,324,500 dollars gross (31,828,900 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 8 March 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 495,600 dollars for the period from 1 January to 8 March 1996, inclusive;

9. Invites voluntary contributions to the Assistance Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

10. Decides to keep the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda" under review during the fiftieth session.

23 December 1995 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/848) without vote, 21 December (meeting 44); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.23), based on informal consultations; agenda item 135.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 43, 44; plenary 100.

Also on 23 December, the Assembly, by decision 50/469, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the agenda item on the financing of UNAMIR at its resumed fiftieth session.

Sierra Leone

In 1995, the Security Council addressed the seriously deteriorating situation in Sierra Leone, which had resulted from a civil conflict begun in 1991. The Secretary-General in February 1995 reported that about 10 per cent of the country's population were now refugees in neighbouring countries and at least 30 per cent were internally displaced. Vital infrastructure had been destroyed and three quarters of the national budget was being spent on defence. If that continued, the Secretary-General said, the conflict in Sierra Leone would further complicate the problem of bringing peace to Liberia and could have a more general destabilizing effect in the region. On 7 February, the Security Council welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to appoint Berhanu Dinka (Ethiopia) as his Special Envoy for Sierra Leone, to work with the parties towards a negotiated settlement.

The 1991 conflict had erupted when the forces of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF) launched attacks to overthrow the Government of the All People's Congress (APC). Thousands of civilians had been killed, with many thousands more internally displaced or becoming refugees in Guinea and Liberia. On 29 April 1992, the Government of President Joseph S. Momoh was overthrown by a military coup and a National Provisional Ruling Council (NPRC) was established, with Captain Valentine Strasser as Chairman and Head of State. After regaining control of areas held by RUF in the southern and eastern parts of the country, NPRC announced a unilateral cease-fire in December 1993. Nevertheless, attacks on towns, villages and major highways escalated to unprecedented levels and spread throughout the country. The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁾ to the Security Council on 7 February that Chairman Strasser had formally requested in November 1994 the good offices of the UN Secretary-General to bring the Government and RUF to negotiations, with the United Nations to serve as intermediary.

A UN mission was sent to Sierra Leone from 15 to 22 December 1994 to explore the possibilities of dialogue between the Government and RUF. During that period, discussions were held with government officials, prominent citizens, religious leaders, resident diplomats and representatives of UN bodies and agencies.

Report of the Secretary-General (November).

In a 21 November report,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that over the last three years, while taking military measures against RUF, the Government of Sierra Leone had followed a two-track political approach: a negotiated settlement with RUF and democratization of the political process, including transition to an elected civilian Government within a fixed time-frame. Prior to requesting the good offices of the Secretary-General, the Government had in November 1994 dispatched a delegation of prominent Sierra Leoneans to the border with Liberia to establish contact with RUF and to pave the way for peace talks. Delegations from the two sides held meetings on 24 November and 4 and 7 December 1994.

The Secretary-General said that his Special Representative had spared no effort to establish contact with RUF. In May 1995, Foday Sankoh, leader of RUF, invited the Special Envoy to visit him at his base, but later changed his mind. Similarly, at the beginning of September, he invited, through the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in Freetown, a number of prominent Sierra Leoneans to meet with him. The Government agreed to allow those invited to proceed to the meeting. ICRC so informed RUF on 18 September, requesting it to fix a date and venue. So far, he said, no response had been received.

As to the process of democratization, Chairman Strasser on 26 November 1993 had set out a programme of transition to democratic constitutional rule, the Secretary-General stated. Registration of voters was to have been completed between March and June 1994 and presidential elections held in November 1995. However, the continued conflict and limited State resources delayed implementation of the programme by one year. On 27 April 1995, on the occasion of the thirty-fourth anniversary of independence, Chairman Strasser pledged that everything would be done to complete implementation of the transition programme by January 1996, when a democratically elected President would be sworn in.

Following that announcement, the Interim National Electoral Commission (INEC), established in 1994, intensified its activity under the chairmanship of James O. C. Jonah. Its sister organization, the National Commission for Democracy, established in the same year, promoted civic and voter education throughout the country. The UN Electoral Assistance Division had conducted a needs assessment mission from 22 November to 2 December 1994 to identify the technical requirements for organizing the electoral process, including voter registration, polling, civic education, training of electoral officers, legal issues and the electoral timetable.

On 20 June 1995, the Government lifted the ban on political activities, which it had imposed when it came to power, and authorized INEC to register political parties. Fifteen parties had so far registered and had begun campaigning. In order to build broad-based support for the electoral process, a National Consultative Conference was held (Freetown, 15-17 August) with the participation of all political parties, representatives of Government and 78 organizations representing a wide spectrum of civil society. The Conference adopted a system of elections based on proportional representation, a code of conduct for political parties and rules to govern campaign financing. It agreed to hold elections by the end of February 1996 and the date of 26 February was subsequently set. However, the process of voter registration and preparation for the elections was endangered by financial constraints. The Secretary-General planned to convene a donors' conference on electoral assistance to Sierra Leone in New York on 30 November 1995. However, there were some elements within Sierra Leone that sought to derail the electoral process, as was attested by an attempted coup on 2 October, the Secretary-General stated.

After the December 1994 offensive by RUF, the Secretary-General went on, it became clear that the military forces of Sierra Leone were inadequate to confront the challenges they faced. Given the links to the conflict in Liberia, certain regional and other countries provided military and other assistance to Sierra Leone. In addition, NPRC used non-Sierra Leonean military advisers. The military situation on the ground had not changed dramatically since 1994. RUF moved closer to Freetown and captured several villages in Kono District, an area rich in diamonds. Recently, morale and discipline within Sierra Leone's military forces appeared to have improved. The diamond fields of Kono and a number of villages were retaken by government forces in July and August, and the frequency of ambushes on the highways decreased. The Government had expressed its desire to demobilize part of its army, but would need assistance to reintegrate the soldiers into society. In the meantime, the military forces held a seminar on 16 and 17 November with civilians and representatives of political parties to discuss differences of perception and mutual suspicion between the military and the civilian population. It was hoped that the seminar would create a harmonious environment in preparation for the transition to civilian rule.

Concerning the economic situation in Sierra Leone, much of the fighting had taken place in the mineral-rich areas of the south and east and the agriculturally viable regions. As a result, gold and diamond production dropped and exports declined sharply. At the same time, government expenditures rose as a result of the war; it was estimated that some 75 per cent of total revenue was being spent on the war effort. Infrastructure damage was enormous and the humanitarian situation was critical, the Secretary-General reported. Nearly 2 million people, representing close to 50 per cent of the country's population, were internally displaced, the majority flocking to major towns. Only 1.1 million received assistance with any degree of regularity, owing to security constraints. Highways linking Freetown to key population centres were usable only sporadically and the impact on the civilian population was severe. In the eastern and south-eastern areas, which had been totally inaccessible for more than eight months, it was feared that malnutrition would soon reach life-threatening levels. Beginning in September, however, there was a relative improvement in access, allowing humanitarian organizations to deliver relief without armed escorts. Areas in the eastern portion of the country remained inaccessible.

In March 1995, a UN inter-agency consolidated appeal for $14.7 million was launched. The Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) intended to establish a humanitarian assistance coordination unit in Freetown, to support the UN Humanitarian Coordinator.

The Secretary-General observed that while the situation in Sierra Leone had generally been characterized by conflict, human suffering and economic decline, some positive trends were emerging which, if assisted, would contribute to the re-establishment of peace and stability. He urged the international community to demonstrate its solidarity with the people of Sierra Leone by taking some initial steps to signal its commitment to assist the democratization process.

He had instructed DHA and the United Nations Development Programme to field a team of experts to prepare, in collaboration with the Government, a coordinated and workable action plan for the demobilization and reintegration of combatants. He had also instructed the Electoral Assistance Division to work closely with other United Nations agencies to assist INEC in coordinating international observers during the elections and in strengthening national observer groups. In his view, the time had come for the international community to urge RUF to take advantage of his good offices and initiate a process of negotiation. His Special Envoy would be retained in Sierra Leone to continue efforts to establish a dialogue between RUF and the Government and support the process of democratization. His efforts would be coordinated with OAU and the Commonwealth.

The Security Council met on 27 November to consider the situation in Sierra Leone. Following consultations among Council members, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council:⁽³⁾

The Security Council has considered the Secretary-General's report of 21 November on the situation in Sierra Leone. It is deeply concerned at the conflict in that country, and at the suffering resulting from it, in particular that of the nearly two million internally displaced Sierra Leoneans. It calls for an immediate end to the fighting.

The Security Council expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his offer of good offices in Sierra Leone and urges the Revolutionary United Front to take advantage of that offer, thus enabling both parties to enter into negotiations. It thanks the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for his efforts to that end, in close coordination with the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth, the Economic Community of West African States, and other organizations and neighbouring States supporting the negotiations and the process of democratization in Sierra Leone, and welcomes the Secretary-General's decision that his Special Envoy's mission should continue for the time being.

The Security Council stresses the importance it attaches to a coordinated international effort to alleviate the humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone. It welcomes the Secretary-General's efforts in this regard and his initiative in preparing, in collaboration with the Government of Sierra Leone, an action plan for the demobilization and reintegration of combatants.

The Security Council underlines the need for generous humanitarian assistance in a situation in which nearly half the population of the country have been internally displaced, and calls upon Member States to provide such assistance. The Council commends those humanitarian agencies active in Sierra Leone. The Council deeply deplores attacks on humanitarian convoys and demands that those responsible cease such actions immediately.

The Security Council welcomes the programme of transition to democratic constitutional rule set by the Government of Sierra Leone, which is crucial to the restoration of peace and stability in that country. It expresses its strong support for the work of the Interim National Electoral Commission (INEC) in preparing for the elections to be held on 26 February 1996. It welcomes the assistance being given by the United Nations to the INEC at the request of the Government of Sierra Leone, and calls upon Member States to provide the fullest possible material and financial support to the INEC in order to ensure the success of the elections, with the broadest possible participation.

The Security Council urges the Secretary-General to continue to monitor closely the situation in Sierra Leone.

Somalia

In 1995, the social, economic and political upheavals in Somalia continued, even as the second UN Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II) wound down and completed its withdrawal, protected by an international force, at the end of March. Thus ended three years of intense UN and international efforts to address the ongoing crises caused by famine, civil strife and political chaos in that Horn of Africa nation.

The continuing lack of progress in the peace process and in national reconciliation efforts, in particular the lack of sufficient cooperation from the Somali parties over security issues, undermined UN objectives in Somalia and prevented the continuation of the UNOSOM II mandate beyond the end of March 1995, the Security Council stated on 6 April. It reaffirmed that, based on its experience in UNOSOM II, the people of Somalia bore the ultimate responsibility for achieving national reconciliation and restoring peace to Somalia. The international community, it stressed, could only facilitate, encourage and assist the process, but not try to impose any particular solution on it.

The Secretary-General stressed that the withdrawal of UNOSOM did not mean that the United Nations was abandoning Somalia. UN humanitarian operations would continue, with the focus on rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction in the post-UNOSOM era. There were important lessons to be learned, he added, about the theory and practice of multifunctional peace-keeping operations in conditions of civil war and chaos, and especially about the clear line that needed to be drawn between peace-keeping and enforcement action.

The Secretary-General made a number of proposals for a role for the United Nations after the UNOSOM withdrawal. Subsequently, the UN Political Office for Somalia, with headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya, was opened to maintain contact with political leaders and coordinate UN humanitarian activities throughout the country.

Despite efforts by many factions, the convening of a national reconciliation conference for Somalia did not take place in 1995.

End of mission in Somalia

The UN Security Council, on 24 April 1992,⁽¹⁾ established the United Nations Operation in Somalia to facilitate and maintain a cease-fire throughout the country, to promote reconciliation and political settlement and to provide urgent humanitarian assistance. That action was taken in the wake of widespread lawlessness and starvation, which occurred throughout Somalia as a result of a clan-based civil war begun in 1991.

During 1992, the tragic conflict continued, with increased human suffering and continued chaos, and widespread banditry diverting the delivery of humanitarian assistance. The UN instituted an urgent airlift operation and continued strict monitoring of the arms embargo imposed in January 1992. On 3 December, in the face of the magnitude of the human tragedy and gravely alarmed by the deterioration of the humanitarian situation,⁽²⁾ the Security Council authorized action, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, by the Unified Task Force (UNITAF). That multinational force, led by the United States, and at its peak more than 30,000 strong, had a mandate to establish a secure environment for humanitarian relief operations in Somalia.

On 26 March 1993, the Council,⁽³⁾ acknowledging the need for a smooth transition from UNITAF to an expanded UN operation, authorized the mandate for UNOSOM II. Subsequently during 1993 violent attacks took place against UN troops, which had been mandated by the Council to engage in disarmament efforts. In 1994, attacks on and harassment of UN personnel, as well as other difficulties, continued. On 4 November, the Council,⁽⁴⁾ in extending the UNOSOM II mandate for a final period until 31 March 1995, affirmed that the mission's primary purpose until its termination was to facilitate political reconciliation in Somalia, and decided that every effort should be made to withdraw all UNOSOM II forces and assets in a secure and orderly manner and as quickly as possible.

Secretary-General's report. In a 28 March report,⁽⁵⁾ submitted in accordance with a 1994 Security Council request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General made a general assessment of what had been achieved by the United Nations in Somalia with regard to political, humanitarian, military and security matters, the police and justice programme, and financial issues, and provided information on the withdrawal of UNOSOM II. The report also presented some views on the role the United Nations could play in Somalia beyond the conclusion of the UNOSOM II mandate on 31 March 1995.

The Secretary-General stated that the mission, which addressed the concerns of a people and a country caught in the throes of famine, civil war and the collapse of all institutions of government, had been a difficult one that had not attained all its objectives. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General declared, UNOSOM could claim major accomplishments, especially taking into consideration that, in late 1992, an estimated 3,000 men, women and children were dying daily of starvation, a tragedy that had been ended by the international relief effort.

In the area of national reconciliation, through the efforts of UNITAF, UNOSOM I and UNOSOM II, the international community had striven to create an environment conducive for the Somali leaders to achieve that goal, the Secretary-General said.

The most the international community could do for the Somali parties, he went on, was to afford every opportunity for them to agree among themselves on the modalities to re-establish their political and administrative structures based on a broad-based reconciliation, leading to the reconstruction of their country. If the political will to achieve a durable compromise was lacking, he said, the responsibility lay with the Somali leadership.

Withdrawal phase

In the initial phase of UNOSOM II force withdrawal, troops were redeployed to Mogadishu from Baidoa, Baledogle, Afgoye and Kismayo, the Secretary-General reported in March.⁽⁵⁾

As the troops left, military support to UN agencies, human rights organizations and NGOs was greatly reduced. The final withdrawal phase was assisted by a combined task force, known as "United Shield", with units from France, India, Italy, Malaysia, Pakistan, the United Kingdom and the United States. The withdrawal, which began with the repatriation of some 1,750 Pakistani personnel from 12 to 15 February, proceeded with minimal interruption and was to have been completed by 6 March, three weeks ahead of the time-limit set by the Security Council. On 28 February, the Mogadishu seaport was handed over to the combined task force and closed to commercial traffic. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General, James Victor Gbeho (Ghana), and other UN staff, the Force Commander and remaining UNOSOM staff left Mogadishu that same day. The withdrawal of the rearguard was completed on 2 March, and the combined task force, which had landed in Mogadishu on 28 February to cover the withdrawal, departed on 3 March, bringing operation "United Shield" to a successful conclusion.

Future role of UN

Following the end of operation "United Shield", UNOSOM II offices were temporarily relocated to Nairobi, while the Force headquarters closed in Nairobi on 8 March, the Secretary-General reported.⁽⁵⁾ Equipment worth $235,761, which was vital for the support of local communities, was donated to Somali district councils. As of 20 March, only 30 international staff continued to operate in Somalia. As soon as the security situation permitted, the Secretary-General stated, international staff would return to Mogadishu where agencies had retained small offices run by Somali nationals. The Secretary-General affirmed that he would continue to make available his good offices to assist Somali factions to arrive at a political settlement and would maintain a political presence in the area for that purpose, the size and mandate of which would depend on whether the factions wanted the United Nations to play a facilitating or mediating role. He stated that he intended to re-establish a UN presence in Mogadishu as soon as practicable.

UNOSOM had been authorized, during its withdrawal phase, to donate essential equipment, including generators, water pumps, office equipment and furniture. UNDP agreed in principle to support institution-building in the post-UNOSOM II era and to assist in strengthening the capacity of regional and district councils for local government and administration.

The Security Council met on 6 April to consider the Secretary-General's report. Following consultations among its members, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽⁶⁾

The Security Council has considered carefully the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Somalia dated 28 March 1995 and notes the successful conclusion of the withdrawal of UNOSOM II forces from Somalia. It expresses its appreciation to those Governments and agencies that have provided the personnel, humanitarian assistance and other support to the peace-keeping operation in Somalia, including those Governments which participated in the multinational operation for UNOSOM's withdrawal. It pays tribute in particular to all personnel who sacrificed their lives in this service.

The Security Council underlines that the timely intervention of UNOSOM II and the humanitarian assistance given to Somalia helped to save many lives and much property, mitigate general suffering and contributed to the search for peace in Somalia. The Council notes that, over the past three years, the United Nations and the international community have made significant efforts to restore peace and stability and facilitate the re-emergence of a civil society. However, the continuing lack of progress in the peace process and in national reconciliation, in particular the lack of sufficient cooperation from the Somali parties over security issues, undermined the United Nations objectives in Somalia and prevented the continuation of the UNOSOM II mandate beyond 31 March 1995.

The Security Council believes that the Somalia operation provides important lessons for the theory and practice of peacemaking, peace-keeping and peace-building.

The Security Council remains convinced that only a genuinely representative and broad-based approach to reconciliation will bring about a lasting political settlement and allow for the re-emergence of a civil society in Somalia. The Council reaffirms, based on its experience in UNOSOM II, that the people of Somalia bear the ultimate responsibility for achieving national reconciliation and restoring peace to Somalia. The international community can only facilitate, encourage and assist the process, but not try to impose any particular solution on it. The Council, therefore, calls upon the Somali parties to pursue national reconciliation, rehabilitation and reconstruction in the interest of peace, security and development.

The Security Council notes the recent agreements reached between the factions in Mogadishu, especially on the control of sea and airport facilities. It expresses the hope that this encouraging development is indicative of a new spirit of cooperation among the factions and that it will lead to further progress in the search for a lasting peace in Somalia.

The Security Council supports the view of the Secretary-General that Somalia should not be abandoned by the United Nations, which will continue to assist the Somali people to achieve a political settlement and to provide humanitarian and other support services, provided that the Somalis themselves demonstrate a disposition to peaceful resolution of the conflict and to cooperation with the international community. It welcomes the Secretary-General's intention to continue a small political mission, should the Somali parties so wish, to assist them in coming together in national reconciliation and looks forward to the report which the Secretary-General has indicated he will forward on this matter. The Council urges close cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), as well as the Governments of neighbouring countries in these efforts. The Council considers it essential that the Somali parties clearly express their acceptance of such assistance and their willingness to cooperate with the United Nations.

The Security Council recognizes that humanitarian assistance in Somalia is an important element in the effort to restore peace and security in the country. It is therefore important to sustain United Nations humanitarian activities in Somalia and to encourage non-governmental organizations to do likewise. However, their ability to do so will depend on the degree of cooperation and security offered by the Somali parties. The Council welcomes the willingness expressed by the international humanitarian agencies and NGOs to continue to provide rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance in areas where security is guaranteed by the Somalis. The Council stresses that the creation of a long-lasting, stable and secure environment throughout the country is vital for the resumption of large-scale activity in these fields.

The Security Council reaffirms the obligations of States to implement fully the embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 733(1992), and calls on States, especially neighbouring States, to refrain from actions capable of exacerbating the conflict in Somalia.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the situation in Somalia and to keep it informed about further developments. The Council will remain seized of the matter.

Communication. On 18 April, the Secretary-General brought to the attention of Council members an 11 April press release⁽⁷⁾ issued by the Somali National Alliance (SNA), which stated that it was inappropriate to talk about the UN political return to Somalia for the time being, let alone re-establish an office there. SNA stated that the Somali people were capable of sorting out their political differences and achieving their own reconciliation and would not accept any further interference in their political affairs.

In that connection, the Secretary-General stated that he would stay in touch with the parties with a view to overcoming those reservations. He had dispatched a security assessment mission to Mogadishu to determine whether the situation there was sufficiently secure to allow for the establishment of an office. Meanwhile, he had concluded that the retention of a full-time Special Representative at the Under-Secretary-General level could not be justified in view of the limited possibilities for UN political efforts, and he had therefore decided to establish a small political office, headed by a representative at the D-2 level and assisted by two Professional officers and a limited number of support staff. Operating temporarily from Nairobi, it would monitor the situation in Somalia and keep contact with the parties concerned to the extent possible.

On 21 April, the Security Council welcomed⁽⁸⁾ the decision of the Secretary-General.

On 31 May, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁹⁾ to the Council that a new set of guidelines for Mogadishu had been adopted on the basis of the assessment mission's conclusions, including the provision that international UN staff members be authorized to travel to Mogadishu and stay there no longer than three days a week. However, the instability and unpredictability of security conditions had severely curtailed visits by international staff. He had tried in late April and early May to dispatch special envoys to request the views of Somali leaders concerning a possible UN political presence in their country, but they declined to meet UN envoys. Nevertheless, a wide range of leaders representing the main Somali factions, including a wing of the United Somali Congress (USC)/SNA, had welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to set up an office. He had therefore decided to keep the political office for Somalia operating out of Nairobi until the situation allowed its transfer to Mogadishu and to reduce the staff to one Director and one General Service staff member. On 2 June, the Council agreed⁽¹⁰⁾ with that decision.

Humanitarian and other aspects

As for humanitarian concerns, the Secretary-General in March reported⁽⁷⁾ that, to meet such needs in the post-UNOSOM era, a UN Coordination Team had been established under the chairmanship of the UNDP Resident Representative, who also served as the Humanitarian Coordinator. The Coordination Team interacted with national and international NGOs and the donor community to harmonize and ensure coherence among their activities. A coordinated relationship with recognized district and regional councils was also to be formalized. To cover humanitarian relief needs, the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) launched a consolidated appeal for Somalia for $70 million for the first half of 1995 (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). UN agencies were to support capacity-building programmes, while assisting in relief and initial rehabilitation, focusing on agriculture, fishing and reconstruction. UNDP continued to implement integrated, community-based rehabilitation projects, including those for schools and water systems. It launched credit schemes for women and activities aimed at income generation. UNHCR's quick-impact programmes provided some stability for the more than half a million returning Somali refugees. UN agencies also considered the needs of the large numbers of unemployed, to help revitalize the economy and stimulate productive capacities.

Under a police training programme administered by UNOSOM II, 2,179 policemen had attended refresher courses. At the end of January, Somali police were at work in 82 district stations, providing a visible presence on the roads and in various communities. Donations of equipment and uniforms were received.

UNOSOM also provided training for judicial personnel in judicial administration and ethics, juvenile justice, sentencing practices and attitudes, human rights and the rule of law. It refurbished courtrooms, and by late March, 11 appeals courts, 11 regional courts and 46 district courts were functioning. UNOSOM also provided 12 prisons with food, water and medical services, and concluded arrangements with the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to begin educational and vocational training programmes in those prisons.

National reconciliation

In a March report,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the proposed national reconciliation conference still had not taken place. However, in November 1994, the SNA factions had convened a unilateral conference with a view to establishing an interim Government. The Somali Salvation Alliance (SSA) held a parallel meeting in anticipation of that move and to complete plans to establish its own Government. Although those efforts were not successful, discussions reportedly focused on the nature of a federal system of government, powers of the central Government vis-a-vis regional authorities, distribution of government posts, and drafting of a transitional charter. In December 1994, the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Somalia, Ambassador James Victor Gbeho (Ghana), met with President Meles Zenawi of Ethiopia to discuss ways of bringing together Ali Mahdi of the SSA faction and General Mohammed Farah Aidid of the SNA faction to resolve their differences over the convening of a genuine national reconciliation conference.

Acting under the authority of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, President Zenawi dispatched a fact-finding mission to Somalia at the beginning of January 1995. In March, he sent a delegation of ethnic Somali leaders from Djibouti, Ethiopia and Kenya to persuade political and traditional leaders throughout Somalia to come together to work for national reconciliation. Meanwhile, contacts continued between SSA and SNA factions throughout January and February to discuss new initiatives to break the political impasse. On 6 February, SSA formally presented its proposal for national reconciliation in Somalia, which called for the convening of a unified and all-inclusive national reconciliation conference on 25 February or any agreed date, with the United Nations playing a mediatory and supportive role. Ali Mahdi of SSA stressed that their proposal was subject to modification and that no one political faction or alliance could form a Government of national unity. Earlier, at the urging of the Special Representative, the two factions in January had established a negotiating committee with a view to setting up joint committees to manage the operations of the Mogadishu seaport and airport. The SNA/SSA negotiating committee was later given a wider mandate to coordinate political and economic matters relating to reconciliation among the Habr Gedir and Mudulood clans; work out modalities for bringing General Aidid and Ali Mahdi together; and merge the two proposed separate meetings on national reconciliation.

On 21 February, a peace agreement was signed by General Aidid and Ali Mahdi on behalf of SNA and SSA to promote national reconciliation and a peaceful settlement. The two sides accepted the principle of power-sharing; pledged to seek the presidency not through military means but through democratic elections; agreed to resolve disputes through dialogue and peaceful means; and agreed on a common platform for tackling problems. The pact also provided for confining "technicals" (combat vehicles) to designated areas; discouraging the open carrying of arms in Mogadishu; removing roadblocks; and reopening the main city markets. Another agreement, endorsed by the two leaders on 23 February, called for the establishment of two joint committees to manage the operations of the Mogadishu airport and seaport. It also provided a basis for cooperation between the Somali parties and the UN system. A third agreement, signed on 5 March by the two leaders, reopened the Mogadishu seaport on 9 March under the administration of the SSA/SNA joint committees.

On 8 March, the two leaders agreed to establish a security committee, comprising militia and police officers from both sides, to ensure the exclusion of unauthorized "technicals" from the airport and seaport and to arrange for the police force to provide security inside those facilities, while joint militias with specially marked "technicals" secured outer perimeters and routes used to deliver commodities to the markets. The committee chairmen were invited to consult with the UN Coordination Team in Nairobi (see below) on arrangements to reactivate civilian operations at the airport and seaport.

In the meantime, the Secretary-General agreed provisionally with the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) to continue to act in civil aviation matters concerning Somalia, pending further guidance from the Council and/or the re-establishment of government authority in Somalia. That agreement, the Secretary-General decided, had a salutary effect on the political process as a whole. As a result, the situation in Mogadishu had improved and both sides seemed to have settled down to serious discussions regarding convening a broad-based national reconciliation conference, establishing a regional council and appointing a governor for the Benadir region (Mogadishu). Of some 92 district councils, 58 had been established, as had 8 of 18 regional councils.

Further developments. In a later report,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that since the establishment of the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), its Director had opened contacts with all major Somali political factions, except those in the north-west. In May 1995, consultations of the local clans (Digil and Mirifle) on local governance in the Bay and Bakool regions led to the establishment of a regional authority for the two regions, centring on a supreme governing council with rotating leadership among the three Somali Democratic Movement (SDM) factions that had been contending for power there. The authority became a focal point for cooperation with the international aid community. However, on 19 September, it had come to an abrupt end with the incursion of General Aidid's militia into Baidoa.

Financial and administrative matters

Financing of UNOSOM II

In March 1995, the Secretary-General presented revised cost estimates⁽¹²⁾ for the maintenance and liquidation of UNOSOM II for the period 1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995, amounting to $290,162,400 gross ($286,664,300 net), and cost estimates of $3,314,100 gross ($2,928,800 net) for the establishment of the temporary UNOSOM II administrative office in Nairobi from 1 April to 30 June. In June, he submitted a final performance report on UNOSOM II from 1 November 1993 to 31 May 1994,⁽¹³⁾ and in July, a financial performance report for the period 1 June to 30 September 1994, including a preliminary report on the disposition of UNOSOM's assets and liabilities.⁽¹⁴⁾

By decision 49/415 B of 20 July, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee,⁽¹⁵⁾ deferred consideration of the item on the financing of UNOSOM II to its fiftieth session.

In November, the Secretary-General presented a further financial performance report for UNOSOM II⁽¹⁶⁾ indicating additional requirements of $40,540,000 gross ($39,184,800 net) for the period from 1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995, and $1,216,400 gross ($1,064,600 net) for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1995.

In an October report⁽¹⁷⁾ on the activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) (see PART SIX, Chapter I), the Secretary-General stated that a resident audit team, posted to Mogadishu from June 1994 to May 1995 to provide continuous audit coverage of UNOSOM II, reviewed procurement, transport and building activities, management services, communications, and finance and accounts. It audited all major contracts and found serious internal control deficiencies, resulting in significant monetary losses to the Organization.

The Assembly, by decision 50/469 of 23 December, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the financing of UNOSOM II at its resumed fiftieth session.

UNOSOM theft

On 17 April 1994, the theft of $3.9 million in cash from UNOSOM II headquarters in Mogadishu was reported,⁽¹⁸⁾ and investigations by the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services and by Scotland Yard of the United Kingdom were launched shortly thereafter. The General Assembly in December 1994⁽¹⁹⁾ had asked for a progress report on the OIOS investigation and action to determine responsibility for the theft and to recover the missing funds, as well as disciplinary measures taken and controls put in place to avoid the recurrence of similar incidents in the future.

On 2 February 1995, the Secretary-General submitted that report,⁽²⁰⁾ which provided details of the circumstances surrounding the theft, including general aspects of the security situation; findings of the investigations; corrective measures taken; and recommendations for further action.

The Secretary-General reported that, despite warnings regarding the lack of security for the cashier's office, where from $1 million to $3 million in cash received weekly was stored, large amounts of cash continued to be kept in the bottom drawer of a reinforced filing cabinet.

Following the investigation, the OIOS investigation team concluded that there had been an incredible lack of concern on the part of the UNOSOM administration for security in both the handling and the safe keeping of the stolen money. The Director of Administration and the Chief Finance Officer had been grossly negligent in the performance of their duties, the team stated, particularly in regard to the institution and maintenance of adequate controls for the management and security of the cash, and that negligence had provided the opportunity for the theft. The Director of Administration resigned but was informed that that would be considered a summary dismissal; he was contesting that decision before the UN Administrative Tribunal. The Chief Finance Officer, who had left the job three weeks before the theft, was denied his repatriation grant and other financial emoluments, a decision which was not contested. A third UNOSOM official, the Chief Cashier, was found to be generally inadequate for the job and was transferred to another position.

Following the theft, the Secretary-General reported, immediate corrective measures were taken to improve security, including installing a burglar alarm and posting a 24-hour guard at the cashier's office; changing procedures in that office; and using safes which were placed in a locked strongroom.

Other measures were also put in place, including reducing amounts of cash used by UNOSOM II to a minimum and instituting detailed policies on use and physical security of cash.

After the incident, chiefs of administration in all UN peace-keeping missions were asked to take additional precautions to safeguard and protect the Organization's assets, especially cash and blank and signed cheques awaiting collection by vendors.

South Africa

Cancellation of unpaid assessments

On 14 September 1995, South Africa and Namibia requested(¹) the inclusion in the agenda of the fiftieth session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Normalization of the situation concerning South Africa".

An explanatory memorandum recalled that, following the eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa, the international community had invited the South African delegation to resume its participation in the work of the General Assembly on 23 June 1994.

In 1974, the General Assembly had voted not to accept the credentials of the delegation of South Africa. Recalling that South Africa continued to practise its policy of apartheid and racial discrimination against the majority of the population in South Africa, the Assembly, in resolution 3207(XXIX),(²) called on the Security Council to review the relationship between the United Nations and South Africa "in the light of the constant violation by South Africa of the principles of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights".

Subsequently, on 30 October 1974, a draft resolution recommending the expulsion of South Africa from the Organization was not adopted by the Security Council, due to the negative votes of three permanent members.(³) On 12 November 1974, the General Assembly, by 91 votes to 22, with 19 abstentions, decided to suspend South Africa from participation in the work of the twenty-ninth session of the Assembly, upholding a ruling to that effect by its President.(⁴)

The 14 September memorandum explained that during the apartheid era, the Assembly had adopted numerous resolutions in which the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa were condemned as a crime against humanity and a negation of the UN Charter. The representatives of apartheid were thus excluded from participation in the Assembly in order to protest those apartheid policies. That step, taken by the international community to isolate the apartheid regime, had been vindicated by the liberation of South Africa. The regime had retaliated by withholding its contribution to the United Nations.

South Africa said it had paid on 3 October 1994 $11 million in respect of its UN assessments, regarding both the regular budget and various peace-keeping operations, as from 23 June 1994. It had thereby fulfilled its undertaking to meet fully and on time its financial obligations to the United Nations.

However, a substantial amount remained attributed to South Africa as so-called "arrears" that had been accumulated during the apartheid period. Therefore, South Africa now found itself confronted with an untenable situation: owing to the assistance of the United Nations, the scourge of apartheid had been eradicated and the people of South Africa liberated. Yet, South Africa continued to be held liable for the arrears accumulated during the apartheid period.

In view of the unique historical circumstances relating to South Africa, it was hoped that the Assembly, which had taken a principled and moral decision to exclude the South African delegation from participation in its work, would once again take a political decision to resolve this outstanding matter. A draft resolution was proposed for adoption by the Assembly, providing an appropriate formula that would hold South Africa responsible solely for contributions relating to the period following 23 June 1994.

On 1 December, the Assembly (decision 50/402 A) decided to consider the item in plenary and invited the Fifth Committee to present its technical observations regarding the implementation of any draft resolution on the matter by 12 December.

On that date, the Fifth Committee Chairman, responding(⁵) to the request of the Assembly President to provide technical observations, said agreement had been reached by the Committee in informal consultations on a number of proposed amendments to the draft resolution submitted on the subject. The Committee, on 12 December, endorsed those amendments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/83 without vote.

Normalization of the situation concerning South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/258 A, adopted by consensus on 23 June 1994, the date on which South Africa was invited to resume its participation in the work of the General Assembly,

Noting that South Africa has since that date commenced payment of its assessed contributions,

Also recalling the exceptional circumstances pertaining to the resumption of South Africa's participation in the work of the General Assembly following the elimination of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic, non-racial South Africa,

Recognizing that, owing to the exceptional circumstances arising from apartheid, South Africa requested not to be held liable for contributions relating to the period from 30 September 1974 to 23 June 1994,

Recognizing also that the General Assembly took a moral and political decision to exclude South Africa from participation in its work,

Recognizing further that the exclusion of South Africa from the work of the General Assembly was unprecedented,

1. Accepts, owing to these exceptional and unique circumstances, South Africa's request not to pay its contributions for the period from 30 September 1974 to 23 June 1994, and decides that the consequent burden for the Organization shall be borne by Member States pursuant to Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations and the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Welcomes and endorses the statement of South Africa that it will waive any credits it would receive in the amount of 549,606 United States dollars, and 737,142 dollars from budgetary surpluses retained in the regular budget and the peace-keeping special accounts, respectively, for the period from 30 September 1974 to 23 June 1994;

3. Decides to reduce the net amount of 122,238,000 dollars available as credits to Member States, arising from the implementation of resolutions 2947 A and B (XXVII) of 8 December 1972, 36/116 B of 10 December 1981, 40/241 B of 18 December 1985 and 42/216 A of 21 December 1987, by 53,881,711 dollars, and to waive the share of the credits in the amount of 53,332,105 dollars among other Member States on the basis of the respective scale of assessments contained in resolutions 34/6 A of 25 October 1979, 37/125 A of 17 December 1982 and 40/248 of 18 December 1985, in order to account for the reduction in outstanding contributions resulting from paragraph 1 above;

4. Also decides to reduce the amount of 173,392,935 dollars, available as credits to Member States, arising from the implementation of resolutions 33/13 E of 14 December 1978, 34/7 D and 34/9 E of 17 December

1979, 35/45 B of 1 December 1980, 35/115 B of 10 December 1980, 36/66 B of 30 November 1981, 36/138 B of 16 December 1981, 37/38 B of 30 November 1982, 37/127 B of 17 December 1982, 38/35 B of 1 December 1983, 38/38 B of 5 December 1983, 39/28 B of 30 November 1984, 39/71 B of 13 December 1984, 40/59 B of 2 December 1985, 40/246 B of 18 December 1985, 41/44 B of 3 December 1986, 41/179 B of 5 December 1986, 42/70 B of 3 December 1987, 42/223 of 21 December 1987, 43/228 and 43/229 of 21 December 1988, 44/187 and 44/188 of 21 December 1989, 46/194 of 20 December 1991, 47/204 and 47/205 of 22 December 1992 and 49/226 of 23 December 1994, by 40,905,714 dollars and to waive the share of credits in the amount of 40,168,572 dollars among other Member States on the basis of the respective scale of assessments for the period in which the surpluses arose, in order to account for the reduction in outstanding contributions resulting from paragraph 1 above;

5. Further decides that, owing to the unique and exceptional circumstances arising from apartheid, the decisions set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the present resolution shall under no circumstances constitute a precedent.

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

Scholarship holders under the UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (UNETPSA) numbered 1,445 in 1994/95, compared to 2,630 in 1993/94, according to a report of the Secretary-General covering the period 1 September 1994 to 31 August 1995.⁽⁶⁾ The Programme, administered by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Advisory Committee on UNETPSA, was financed from a trust fund made up of voluntary contributions from Member States, organizations and individuals. Scholarship assistance was granted to 1,438 students from South Africa, as well as 7 from Namibia. Of these, 766 were new awards.

During the period, $3,125,482 in contributions was received from 13 countries, with additional pledges totalling $21,408 from three countries still outstanding. The amount of $209,781.35 made to the UN Trust Fund for South Africa during 1994/95 was also available to UNETPSA.

The Advisory Committee on UNETPSA held three meetings to consider the development of the Programme in the light of the changing circumstances in South Africa. Most donors refocused their aid in favour of bilateral programmes, which had a negative effect on UNETPSA's funding situation. Several new projects were initiated in cooperation with a broad network of scholarship agencies, educational institutions, NGOs and the Government of South Africa. The Programme continued to co-sponsor training programmes with technikons, teacher training institutions and other institutions involved in distance education, with a focus on teacher upgrading in South Africa to strengthen the educational infrastructure.

The training and placement of cadres for middle- and high-level management in key sectors of science and technology, viewed as a crucial requirement for sustained growth and development in South Africa, remained a priority for the Programme. Concerted efforts were made to include poverty alleviation projects geared towards supporting community economic empowerment, with an emphasis on projects that benefited rural women. Closer relations and consultations with various government ministries resulted in increased support for projects aligned with the needs identified in the Government's Reconstruction and Development Programme. Particular attention was given to enhancing institution- and capacity-building and contributing to South Africa's human resources needs during the transition period and beyond. Administrative costs of UNETPSA were maintained at a minimum through group arrangements with educational institutions in South Africa. A National Programme Officer in South Africa was recruited and deployed as soon as UNDP became operational there.

The Secretary-General appealed for continued financial and other support to the Programme and recommended its extension for three to five years beyond 1994. As with past practice and depending on donor support, full new awards should be given and the maximum three-year period allowed for most degree programmes in South Africa. UNETPSA then had a window of opportunity to sponsor first-year students, who had the hardest time finding sponsors, within the priority fields. In order to integrate the goals of the Programme with the overall multilateral development programmes for the region, the management of UNETPSA and the Trust Fund should be transferred no later than 1 May 1996 to UNDP. Consequently, the Secretary-General asked the General Assembly to transfer the decision-making authority and review of the Programme to the Executive Board of UNDP and to discontinue the Advisory Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/131.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 49/17 of 23 November 1994,

Also recalling its resolution 2349(XXII) of 19 December 1967, by which it established the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa by integrating earlier special programmes, and resolution 2431(XXIII) of 18 December 1968, by which it established the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 7 December 1995 containing an account of the work of the Advisory Committee and the administration of the Programme for the period from 1 September 1994 to 31 August 1995,

Recognizing the valuable assistance rendered over the years by the Programme to disadvantaged students in South Africa, its support for institution-building in that country and the measures it has taken to ensure that commitments made with regard to educational and training assistance can be met in full,

Fully recognizing the need for the Government of South Africa to lay a proper foundation, in particular in the field of human resources development, during the transition and post-apartheid period,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

2. Agrees with the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa that the Programme be extended for three to five years beyond April 1994;

3. Decides, for the purpose of integrating the goals of the Programme with the overall multilateral development programmes of the United Nations Development Programme, to transfer, no later than 1 May 1996, management of the Programme and its funds and decision-making authority to the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme through the Executive Board of the Development Programme which will be entrusted with the following:

(a) To continue the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa Trust Fund as an identifiable entity for three to five years beyond April 1994;

(b) To undertake fund-raising and mobilization of resources for the Programme;

(c) To monitor and review the Programme;

4. Also decides to endorse the activities of the Programme, and requests the United Nations Development Programme to continue to place the primary focus of the Programme on human resources development aimed at capacity- and institution-building by contributing to South Africa's human resources during this critical period of development through:

(a) Expanding arrangements for co-sponsored training for the disadvantaged majority in sectors previously neglected;

(b) Continuing to utilize the catalyst function of the Programme by expanding the co-sponsorship and job-placement arrangements with corporations, non-governmental organizations and educational institutions;

5. Recommends administrative streamlining with the objective of strengthening the office of the Programme in South Africa;

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

In spite of efforts of the Council of the League of Arab States (LAS), the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and OAU to have the Security Council reconsider the sanctions imposed in 1992(¹) and strengthened in 1993(²) against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Council upheld its measures, intended to obtain the surrender for trial of two Libyan nationals, Abdelbaset Ali Mohamed Al Megrahi and Al Amin Khalifa Fhima, suspects in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, and Libya's cooperation with French authorities investigating the crash in 1989 of a Union de transports aériens (UTA) flight 772 in the Niger.

The sanctions related to various aspects of air links with, supply of arms and military weapons to, reduction and restriction of the activities of the diplomatic and consular missions of, and restrictions on known or suspected terrorist nationals of Libya, and included, after adoption of the 1993 resolution, other measures such as the freezing of Libyan financial funds abroad.

Communications. The OAU Council of Ministers, by a resolution adopted in January 1995 and transmitted to the UN Secretary-General on 13 February by Libya(³) and on 27 March by the OAU Secretary-General,⁽⁴⁾ reiterated its appeal to the Security Council to lift the sanctions against Libya and called for a fair trial of the two suspects in a neutral country to be agreed upon. The LAS Council, in a March resolution,⁽⁵⁾ adhered to its 1994 proposal(⁶) that the two suspects should be judged equitably by Scottish judges, in conformity with Scottish law, at the seat of the International Court of Justice in The Hague. LAS called on the Security Council to conduct a new and impartial inquiry into the crash over Lockerbie and urged it to lift the sanctions pending the results of the inquiry.

ment and statements by the spokesman for the victims' families had pointed to serious flaws and shortcomings in the Lockerbie investigation, and that it was no longer possible to place any reliance on indictments brought as a result of the investigation. It further underscored that despite those developments and the fact that the Libyan Government had complied in full with Security Council resolution 731(1992),⁽⁸⁾ France, the United Kingdom and the United States maintained their intransigent attitude, deliberately linking their demand relating to terrorism with Libya and confining that universal phenomenon to the Lockerbie and UTA incidents. The question of terrorism on a wide scale had been forcibly injected into Council resolution 748(1992),⁽⁹⁾ by which sanctions had been imposed that had done great harm to the Libyan people in all aspects of life. Since those sanctions were no longer justified in the light of recent developments, Libya said other Security Council members must urge the institution of an impartial inquiry into the Lockerbie case and suspend the application of the sanctions pending the outcome of the inquiry.

By a tripartite declaration of 30 March 1995,⁽⁹⁾ France, the United Kingdom and the United States reaffirmed their joint declaration of 5 August 1994⁽¹⁰⁾ and their common determination to bring to justice those responsible for the bombings of the Pan Am and UTA flights. They regretted that Libya had not satisfied the French judicial authorities with respect to the bombing of UTA flight 772 and expressed their commitment to full and comprehensive enforcement of the sanctions. The three States also reaffirmed that Libya must commit itself definitively to ceasing all forms of terrorist activity and all assistance to terrorist groups, and demonstrate by concrete action its renunciation of terrorism. They reiterated that Libya must ensure the appearance of the two suspects in the United Kingdom or the United States, where they would receive a fair trial, and reaffirmed that alternative proposals for trial in The Hague or elsewhere did not meet Security Council requirements and were unacceptable.

By a declaration⁽¹¹⁾ adopted at a round-table meeting of the Arab Lawyers Union, the Arab Jurists Union, the Libyan Bar Association and the General Syndicate of Libyan Attorneys (The Hague, 28-30 March), it was stated that the Security Council, by imposing sanctions against Libya, had exceeded its powers under Article 24 of the UN Charter and ultra vires its competence, and that the United Kingdom and the United States remained obliged to exhaust all means for the peaceful resolution of the Lockerbie dispute under Articles 2 and 33 of the Charter. The declaration called for the immediate suspension and ultimate removal of the sanctions and for a special session of the General Assembly to consider the Lockerbie case.

By a 3 May letter,⁽¹²⁾ Libya protested its inclusion by the United States in the list of countries providing support to international terrorism, trying to obstruct peace in the Middle East and seeking to acquire weapons of mass destruction. It firmly rejected those charges, noting that no evidence existed to support them and that it had condemned terrorism on many occasions, was a party to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,⁽¹³⁾ and was anxious for the success of peace in the region. Libya called on the Security Council to prevent the United States from undertaking any action prejudicial to its sovereignty and independence or tending to undermine its security and stability.

On 9 May, Libya communicated to the Council President a paragraph⁽¹⁴⁾ from the communique issued by the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries (Bandung, Indonesia, 25-27 April), in which the Ministers expressed their deep concern over Libya's human and material losses and those of neighbouring States as a result of the sanctions and urged the Security Council to lift the air embargo and other measures it had imposed. They affirmed that the escalation of the crisis, the threatened imposition of additional sanctions and the use of force as a way for States to deal with each other constituted a violation of the UN Charter, the principles of the Non-Aligned Movement and international laws and precepts. On 9 June, Libya reported⁽¹⁵⁾ on the humanitarian and economic consequences of the implementation of the Council's resolutions during the period from 15 April 1992 to 31 December 1994, describing their negative impact on the health and social welfare sector, agriculture and animal husbandry, transport and communications, the industrial and mining sector, and finance and trade. The report estimated total financial losses at some $10 billion.

By a resolution adopted in June,⁽¹⁶⁾ the OAU Council of Ministers again called for a lifting of the sanctions and for a fair trial of the suspects in a neutral country. The Council of Ministers also expressed strong opposition to any move to deny Libya a seat on the Security Council on account of the Lockerbie dispute. By a tripartite declaration of 26 July,⁽¹⁷⁾ France, the United Kingdom and the United States reaffirmed their position as stated on 30 March, and deplored the sanctions violations of 19 and 20 April (see below), which had been condemned by the Council members via the Committee on sanctions.

On 27 July, Libya requested⁽¹⁸⁾ the Security Council to organize a committee to study the United States claim that Libyan policies and actions threatened its national security and foreign policies. Libya repeated its willingness to receive a delegation sent by the Secretary-General to ascertain that there were no camps used for training terrorists on Libyan territory, and reiterated its demand for an independent inquiry into the Lockerbie incident and for the suspension of the sanctions until the results of the investigation were published. In a 31 July reply⁽¹⁹⁾ to the 26 July tripartite declaration, Libya stated that it had complied with the requests made in Security Council resolution 731(1992),⁽⁸⁾ condemned all forms of terrorism, severed its relations with all organizations suspected of resorting to terrorism, and cooperated with France and the United Kingdom. It reiterated its request for a committee to investigate allegations regarding the presence of training camps for terrorists in Libyan territory and its acceptance of the proposal for a trial of the two suspects in the Lockerbie case in The Hague. Libya said the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against Civil Aviation⁽²⁰⁾ accorded it the right to try the case and did not provide for extradition of the accused which, it said, would be contrary to Libyan national law, as well as to international law, given the absence of an extradition agreement between it and the United Kingdom or the United States. Libya emphasized its adherence to the sanctions, but stated that they did not apply to an airlift of Libyan pilgrims to the holy land, described in the tripartite declaration as a sanctions violation, as the performance by Libyans of their religious rites was not subject to any authorization.

On 22 August, Libya transmitted a resolution⁽²¹⁾ adopted at the Eighteenth Conference of the Union of African Parliaments (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 28-29 July), calling on the Security Council to rescind the sanctions as a matter of urgency, urging the States concerned to resolve the dispute by peaceful means, and inviting the three Western countries to respond to the proposal for a just and impartial trial of the two accused in a neutral country. The resolution called on all Governments to cease implementing the measures imposed on Libya and to participate in the search for a peaceful and just solution to the issue. The LAS Council, by a 21 September resolution,⁽²²⁾ upheld its March resolution,⁽⁵⁾ expressing regret at the continuation of the sanctions. The Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, 18-20 October), in its Final Document,⁽²³⁾ restated the position expressed at the Ministerial Meeting of its Coordinating Bureau⁽¹⁴⁾ and called for a positive response to the initiatives that would lead to an acceptable solution for the parties. Unless the Western countries concerned responded to the proposals for a peaceful settlement, the Conference said, non-aligned States would not be able to continue to abide by Council resolutions imposing the sanctions. Libya communicated the pertinent paragraph of the Final Document on 30 October.⁽²⁴⁾

On 17 November, Libya acknowledged⁽²⁵⁾ receipt of a 16 November letter from the Secretary-General, informing it, within the context of its implementation of Security Council resolutions, that the United Kingdom was satisfied with answers provided by Libya regarding its relationship with the Provisional Irish Republican Army. The Secretary-General considered that response to be an important step towards implementation of the relevant resolutions and removal of the difficulties in the relations between Libya and the United Nations. By a 20 November statement,⁽²⁶⁾ the United Kingdom confirmed its satisfaction with the Libyan disclosures (as a positive step) towards implementation of relevant Council resolutions, in particular towards its renunciation of terrorism, but pointed to remaining gaps and omissions in the information provided and to the fact that Libya had satisfied just one in a number of demands placed on it by the Council. The United Kingdom remained committed to the sanctions until Libya complied with those demands.

Report of the Committee on sanctions. The Committee on sanctions against Libya, established under resolution 748(1992),⁽¹⁾ on 22 December 1995 adopted a report on its activities during the year.⁽²⁷⁾

Pursuant to the 1992 resolution, the Committee consistently advised Governments against the shipment to Libya of goods and material that could be of possible dual use. It considered queries from Member States regarding the provision to Libya of items listed in the annex to its 1993 resolution expanding the sanctions,⁽²⁾ including equipment designed for use in the transportation of crude oil and natural gas, or for use in crude oil export terminals, as well as refinery equipment; it also considered the permissibility of the provision of aircraft components and parts to foreign commercial airlines operating within Libya.

With regard to the transfer of funds to Libya "for legitimate commercial purposes", the Committee decided on 23 February 1995 that it was the responsibility of Member States to enforce the sanctions imposed under resolution 883(1993), in particular the freezing of assets, using mechanisms they deemed appropriate and practical.

During the reporting period, the Committee received two reports of sanction violations, both concerning humanitarian flights. The first concerned an unauthorized stopover on 30 January 1995 in direct contravention of the Committee's authorization for an emergency medical evacuation flight; the second concerned unauthorized flights from Tripoli to Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, on 19 and 20 April (see below). Appropriate measures were taken by the Committee in response to the two reported violations.

During 1995, the Committee approved 42 emergency medical evacuation flights, as compared to 21 in 1994. On 19 April, the Committee approved, under certain conditions, Egypt's request for 45 flights on Egypt Air from Cairo to Tripoli and Benghazi and on to Jeddah, and an equal number of return flights, for the purpose of transporting 6,000 Libyan pilgrims to perform the Haj. According to verified reports, Libyan aircraft crossed Egyptian airspace and landed in Jeddah on 19 and 20 April. Those flights, which had not been authorized by the Committee, constituted a major violation of the sanctions regime, the Committee stated. The matter was discussed at informal consultations of the Security Council on 20 April. On 31 May, the Committee concluded deliberations on the violations by adopting the text of three communications to Libya, Egypt and Saudi Arabia. On 17 July, the Committee approved further procedures and arrangements concerning the authorization and monitoring procedures for emergency medical evacuation flights and the related issue of maintenance and supply of spare parts for the predesignated air ambulances.

On 17 October, the Committee considered two Libyan notes verbales requesting authorization for air transport facilities by Libyan or UN aircraft to enable over a million "illegal infiltrators, nationals of African States, to return to their countries in order to avoid the hardships and dangers of travel created by the air embargo". The intended repatriation would involve nationals from Benin, Cote d'Ivoire, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau and Senegal (10,000 nationals, 40 flights); Chad (300,000, 600 flights); Ghana (20,000, 40 flights); Mali (250,000, 500 flights); Niger (30,000, 60 flights); Nigeria (7,000, 15 flights); and Sudan (500,000, 1,000 flights). After careful consideration of the matter, the Committee was unable to accede to the Libyan request; it was of the view that the presence of foreign nationals in Libya and its desire to repatriate them did not constitute grounds for granting a humanitarian exception.

As recommended by the Security Council in a note of 29 March,⁽²⁸⁾ the Committee adopted certain measures to make its procedures more transparent. To that end, it decided to increase the practice of issuing press releases reflecting the most important matters discussed at its meetings. It would continue to make available tables indicating the status of emergency medical evacuation flights processed under the "no-objection procedure". A compilation of its decisions on other major issues would also be prepared on a regular basis and furnished to any delegation upon request.

After consultations held on 30 March, 28 July and 22 November in connection with the sanctions imposed on Libya under resolution 748(1992),⁽¹⁾ the President of the Security Council made three identical statements on behalf of the Council members:⁽²⁹⁾

The members of the Security Council held informal consultations on 30 March (28 July, 22 November) 1995 pursuant to paragraph 13 of resolution 748(1992), by which the Council decided to review every 120 days or sooner, should the situation so require, the measures imposed by paragraphs 3 to 7 against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

After hearing all the opinions expressed in the course of consultations, the President of the Council concluded that there was no agreement that the necessary conditions existed for modification of the measures of sanctions established in paragraphs 3 to 7 of resolution 748(1992).

Egypt-Sudan

On 29 June 1995, the Sudan informed(¹) the Security Council President of an exchange of fire between Egyptian and Sudanese police forces on 27 June in the Halaib area, specifically at the outer stations of Bageih and Alnus, resulting in three Sudanese policemen being killed and seven others seriously wounded. The Sudan said that those developments were part of a hostile campaign against it by Egyptian authorities and media, while the Sudan had exerted all efforts to settle the Sudanese/Egyptian dispute over the Sudanese province of Halaib by peaceful means. However, the Egyptian aggression continued, imposing a de facto occupation of the province. The Sudan reiterated that the province of Halaib was Sudanese territory under Sudanese administration and occupied by Sudanese population. It called on the Security Council to urge Egypt to withdraw its military presence and rescind administrative measures in the Halaib area south of Argin; start immediately towards resolving the dispute through negotiations based on previous agreements between the two countries; and compensate the families of Sudanese nationals, victims of its aggression.

By a letter of 6 July,⁽²⁾ the Sudan informed the Council President of further incidents, which it said took place between 27 June and 1 July. It charged that Egypt was engaging in many organized military acts of aggression against Sudanese territory; Egypt's failure to respond to the Sudan's calls for a resumption of dialogue affirmed its lack of will to resolve the dispute by peaceful means; and Egypt's position remained characterized by its rejection of all efforts by the Sudan to deal with the problem in bilateral negotiation, while it insisted that Halaib was Egyptian and not subject to negotiation.

The Sudan reiterated its call to the Council to exert pressure on Egypt to accept international arbitration, non-resort to the use of force and immediate commencement of action to resolve the dispute by peaceful means; and to withdraw its military presence from the Halaib area and refrain from perpetuating and confirming its occupation of the area, with payment of compensation to the families of the victims of the attacks.

Egypt, responding on 10 July,⁽³⁾ stated that since the Sudan's independence in 1956, all territory north of the 22nd parallel had been under Egyptian sovereignty; Sudanese claims disputing Egyptian sovereignty over the Halaib region were, therefore, devoid of any historical or legal foundation. The Sudan's unfriendly acts against Egypt, its President and Government had taken on a distinctly hostile tone and several Egyptian citizens in the Sudan had been arbitrarily arrested and imprisoned or subjected to other forms of detention without trial and without charges having been brought against them. Egyptian property in the Sudan, including the Egyptian diplomatic mission, had been confiscated. In addition, the Sudan had attempted to undermine the Egyptian Government as well as the relations between the two peoples and had threatened to denounce the provisions of the agreement in force on the waters of the Nile. Egypt called on the Sudan to respect rules governing relations among States, to comply with the principles and objectives of the United Nations and to cease supporting terrorism.

The Sudan on 17 July informed(⁴) the Security Council President that the 1899 agreement between the two parties, amended in 1902 and 1907, provided that the Sudan had sovereignty over the territories and region of Halaib, which had since then remained fully under Sudanese sovereignty. The inhabitants of the area had participated, as Sudanese citizens, in the first elections to the Sudanese Parliament in 1953 and in subsequent parliamentary elections; they had never taken part in an Egyptian election. The Sudan recalled its complaint to the Council in 1958(⁵) against the concentration of Egyptian troops on Sudanese territory in the Halaib region and drew the Council's attention to what it called unjustified and irresponsible acts of aggression perpetrated by Egypt which, it charged, was seeking to provoke the secession of a part of Sudanese territory. The Sudan declared that it was ready to accept the principle of a settlement or international arbitration or even a ruling of the International Court of Justice concerning the dispute over Halaib and requested the Council to compel Egypt to accept international arbitration.

By a further letter of 24 July,⁽⁶⁾ the Sudan alleged that Egypt continued to escalate tension through provocative acts against Sudanese citizens belonging to the Bisharin and Amra'ar tribes, and that it attempted to establish electoral districts in Halaib with a view to its participation in Egyptian elections. The Egyptian President had threatened the Sudan and accused it of the attempt on his life in Addis Ababa, without waiting for the results of the investigation carried out by the Ethiopian authorities, which established that the assassination attempt had been carried out by Egyptian elements. Furthermore, the Egyptian security service had attacked four Sudanese diplomats in Cairo. The Sudan reiterated its earlier requests to the Council that Egypt be compelled to lift the blockade on the inhabitants of the Halaib area and authorize deliveries to them of water and food; cease forcing Sudanese citizens in the province to participate in the election campaign; and stop provoking Sudanese citizens by seizing their property, freezing their accounts in Egyptian banks and subjecting them to illegal interrogation. It also requested that the Council assume direct responsibility in order to prevent a deterioration of the situation and forestall Egyptian escalation thereof.

On 3 October, the Secretary-General informed⁽⁷⁾ the Council of a statement by Ethiopia on 11 September at the Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Central Organ of OAU, indicating that the Ethiopian authorities had concluded that the terrorist assault on President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt on 26 June in Addis Ababa, although the work of Al-Gama'a Al-Islamia, was supported, assisted and facilitated by the security organs of the Sudan. Ethiopia felt compelled to present the information it had collected, since the alternative would have been to ignore the involvement in State-sponsored terrorism in its capital by a neighbouring country against an African head of State who was its guest. The Ministerial Meeting condemned the assassination attempt, called on the Sudan to hand over the three alleged perpetrators, and requested the OAU Secretary-General to report on additional measures to deal with the dangers posed by State-sponsored terrorism. At a meeting with the Ethiopian Foreign Minister on 29 September, it was agreed that it would be appropriate to inform the Council of the Ethiopian statement. The Minister requested that the Council be informed that Ethiopia would defer a decision on further action until it had ascertained what progress could be made at the level of OAU.

The Council members, as stated in a 12 October letter by the President,⁽⁸⁾ noted the contents of the Secretary-General's letter and welcomed OAU efforts to resolve the issue. They also looked forward to being kept informed of developments.

Responding to the charges on 13 October, the Sudan denied⁽⁹⁾ any direct or indirect involvement or connivance in the assassination attempt. It re-emphasized its condemnation of the incident and of all forms of terrorism and political violence, and reaffirmed that the suspects were not in its territory and that it had never allowed its territory to be used as a safe haven for criminals committing terrorist acts. It had taken steps to investigate the matter and expressed its willingness to cooperate. It had asked Ethiopia to provide any additional information that could be helpful in the search for the culprits and suspects, as well as the cooperation of the authorities concerned in both countries, and requested bilateral and joint efforts of those authorities.

Eritrea-Sudan

On 26 June, the Sudan, in a letter⁽¹⁰⁾ to the Security Council President, drew attention to a communique calling for the formation of a Supreme Political and Military Committee to coordinate the escalation of the struggle to overthrow the Sudanese regime. Taking part in the meeting were representatives of the self-styled Sudanese opposition factions and the rebel movement in southern Sudan, as well as the Ambassadors of the United States and Israel. The Sudan considered the gathering, sponsored by and held under the auspices of a neighbouring country and OAU member, a flagrant violation of the Charters of both the United Nations and OAU, and considered participation in it as a hostile act and a direct threat to its security, sovereignty and territorial integrity, and an interference in its internal affairs. The encouragement by Eritrea of secessionist tendencies clearly violated OAU resolutions on the retention by African States of the boundaries inherited upon independence. The Sudan asked all countries to refrain from interfering in its internal affairs and called on the international community to ensure that there was no recurrence of such conduct on Eritrea's part.

On 5 July, Eritrea charged⁽¹¹⁾ the Sudan with intensifying its subversive acts against Eritrea, forcing it to sever diplomatic ties with Khartoum. It called on the international community not to give credence to the Sudan's accusations, but to take measures to defuse its aggressive designs.

The Sudan, in an 11 July response,⁽¹²⁾ urged the international community to enjoin Eritrea to adopt a responsible mode of conduct in its international relations, based on full respect for the UN Charter and resolutions, as well as for the principles of mutual respect and non-interference in the internal affairs of States. Failing that, Eritrea would face the consequence of its hostile conduct towards the Sudan.

Eritrea-Yemen

By a communique of 18 December,⁽¹³⁾ Yemen charged Eritrea with an attack against the island of Hanish, located in the international navigation channel in the Red Sea, after it had issued on 11 November a warning to the Yemeni citizens and the military guard stationed there to leave the island and halt work on an investment project there. Despite agreement reached in meetings between representatives of the two countries that any dispute be contained and dialogue be continued after the month of Ramadan, Eritrea launched its attack on the island on 15 December. Yemen condemned Eritrea's involvement in that premeditated aggression against Yemeni territory as a violation of Yemeni waters and affirmed its right to repulse any attack against them.

At a meeting on 20 December, according to a press release of the same date, Yemen's Permanent Representative to the United Nations informed the Secretary-General that Yemen demanded the release of all Yemeni prisoners of war, total withdrawal of Eritrean forces from the island, and that Eritrea engage in negotiations to delineate the maritime borders between the two countries. Yemen would welcome any good-offices initiative by the Secretary-General aimed at settling the conflict peacefully. The Secretary-General said he continued to follow the situation and welcomed the cease-fire. He called on the parties to exercise restraint and reiterated his willingness to offer his good offices, with a view to finding a peaceful solution.

In a press statement of 21 December,⁽¹⁴⁾ Eritrea said that a lasting solution to the dispute rested solely on international mediation. The issue of captured soldiers was not acceptable as a precondition, and it undertook to hand over all prisoners to ICRC at Asmara. If both countries agreed in principle to withdraw their forces from the Hanish archipelago, a neutral mediating body acceptable to both parties should be established until such time as a lasting solution was found through international arbitration. That body would be entrusted with the task of observing and monitoring both the evacuation process and its sequel. Eritrea reiterated its proposal that an impartial and independent body should be established to investigate the incident and that Yemen should make the effort to contribute to the resumption of a constructive dialogue.

Mayotte

The question of the Comorian island of Mayotte—one of four islands in the Indian Ocean Comoro Archipelago—remained on the General Assembly's agenda in 1995. Following a referendum in 1974, the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros acceded to independence from France on 6 July 1975. France, however, continued to administer the island of Mayotte.

Communication. On 18 January 1995, the Council of Ministers of the Comoros issued a communiqué,⁽¹⁾ by which it noted the 24 November 1994 decision of the French Government to require inhabitants of the other three islands of the Comoros to possess a visa for entry to Mayotte. The Comoros strongly condemned that initiative, which, it said, reflected the deliberate intention of the French authorities to separate Mayotte from the geographical unit of which it was a natural part, and was inconsistent with French statements expressing willingness to seek a negotiated settlement and maintain the free movement of goods and persons between Mayotte and the other three islands of the Comoros. The Government of the Comoros intended to consult the nation with the aim of finding appropriate solutions. It was also seeking the support of the Federal Assembly, which would be convened in special session to consider the matter.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 22 November report,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had addressed a note verbale to the Comoros and France, drawing their attention to the General Assembly's 1994 resolution on the question of Mayotte⁽³⁾ and inviting them to provide him with any pertinent information on the issue. A similar communication was sent to the Secretary-General of OAU. Under the 1994 resolution, the Assembly requested the UN Secretary-General to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution.

France responded that it remained willing to promote a just and lasting solution in conformity with its Constitution and on the basis of respect for the wishes of the peoples concerned. The population had voted freely and democratically in favour of maintaining the territory of Mayotte within the French Republic. A constructive dialogue was continually taking place at the highest level with the Comoros. France was convinced that such consultation should be pursued in a spirit of accommodation, conciliation and openness.

The Comoros stated that it was again bringing to the Secretary-General's attention its proposal for a positive and constructive approach to the question of Mayotte which took into account the current realities and the need to adapt it to the human and economic imperatives of the times. It was time for the French and Comorian parties to translate into action their mutual and often expressed determination to resolve the issue. The restrictive and selective administrative measures, with which the inhabitants of the three other islands had to comply upon entering Mayotte, could only serve to entrench the feeling of separation even further. The Comoros proposed to France the establishment of a joint Franco-Comorian Commission to explore all options available and promote a rapprochement between the inhabitants of the four islands. The Comoros hoped that France would pursue a policy of cooperation aimed at promoting an economic realignment, with a view to reintegrating Mayotte gradually into the Comorian group as a whole, and that the elaboration of a programme of integrated development would enable the authorities of both parties to ensure a progressive rapprochement between Mayotte and its sister islands. The Comoros was convinced of the need to include Mayotte in the dynamics and process of regional integration in which its sister islands in the Indian Ocean were involved. The Secretary-General was asked to use his influence with the French authorities to ensure that they favoured dialogue in the search for a viable solution; to ensure that they took no action to compromise the climate of entente, understanding and mutual appreciation in Franco-Comorian relations; and to keep the question of Mayotte on the Assembly agenda until a final settlement was reached.

OAU quoted a resolution adopted by its Council of Ministers in January,⁽¹⁾ reaffirming Africa's solidarity with the people of the Comoros in their determination to recover their political rights and to defend the territorial integrity of the Comoros. The OAU Council appealed to its member States to condemn and disregard any action by France to force Mayotte to participate in events where a distinction could be made between the latter and the Comoros. It urged France to satisfy the legitimate claims of the Comoros in accordance with resolutions adopted by OAU, the United Nations, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, LAS and the Non-Aligned Movement. The Council condemned the introduction of entry visas into Mayotte for Comorian citizens of the other three islands and urged the OAU Ad Hoc Committee of Seven (Algeria, Cameroon, Comoros, Gabon, Madagascar, Mozambique, Senegal) to consider ways of facilitating the resumption of a dialogue with France. On 22 June, the Committee recommended that a meeting of the heads of State of the member countries of the Ad Hoc Committee be held to study the best way of reviving the dialogue on the question. It also recommended that OAU member States submit to the General Assembly a draft resolution reiterating solidarity with the people of the Comoros in their determination to regain their rights respecting the island of Mayotte.

The OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government in June endorsed⁽²⁾ those recommendations, pursuant to which the head of State of Gabon proposed that a meeting be held in New York on 4 and 5 October to exchange views on the best way of reviving the dialogue with France. However, that meeting could not be held in view of the new situation that had arisen in the Comoro Archipelago as a result of the coup d'état at the end of September by mercenaries led by Bob Denard.

The Secretary-General maintained contact with all parties and informed them of his readiness to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful solution.

The Assembly took no action on the agenda item on the question of Mayotte but, on 23 December, by decision 50/475, decided that it should remain on the agenda of its fiftieth session.

Cooperation between OAU and the UN system

In October 1995, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁾ on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity. In 1994,⁽²⁾ the General Assembly had called on UN organs to involve OAU closely in all their activities concerning Africa and to cooperate with OAU in the context of the pacific settlement of disputes and the maintenance of international peace and security in Africa. The Secretary-General reviewed the exchange of information and cooperation between the two organizations in the field of economic and social development, which involved the Centre for Human Rights of the UN Secretariat, the UN Children's Fund, the UN Conference on Trade and Development, UNDP, the UN Environment Programme, the UN Population Fund, the UN International Drug Control Programme, the World Food Programme, the Economic Commission for Africa, the UN Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the International Labour Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Finance Corporation, the International Monetary Fund, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the UN Industrial Development Organization and UNHCR. Cooperation in other areas was extended by the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the Universal Postal Union and the World Meteorological Organization.

The Secretary-General met on 7 April with members of the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution. They exchanged views on the conflict situations in Africa and discussed actions that could be considered to ameliorate them. The Secretary-General also met with the Chairman and the Secretary-General of OAU, discussing with them the importance of cooperation between the two organizations in efforts to bring about lasting peace and sustainable development in Africa.

In November, the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁾ on the tenth annual meeting on cooperation between the UN system and OAU (Addis Ababa, 6-10 November), which reviewed cooperation between the two organizations, especially in the areas of peace, security and democracy, and economic and social questions.

With regard to conflict prevention and management, the meeting requested the United Nations to assist OAU in establishing an early-warning or alert system as well as a "situation centre" similar to that of the United Nations, to enhance OAU's capability to collect, analyse and disseminate information, as well as to monitor and keep abreast of political developments and potential conflict situations. A mechanism should be set up for the exchange of information between the two organizations' respective early-warning systems, with a view to preventing or minimizing duplication. Whenever the need arose, joint OAU-UN fact-finding missions should be mounted, whose tasks should include assessing existing and potential conflicts as well as mediation. A common list should be established of eminent persons who could be fielded for such assignments, as well as common guidelines and rules of engagement for joint operations in Africa. In that regard, OAU envisaged the creation of peacemaking contingents and the limited deployment of observers which would require logistical support from the United Nations. The United Nations was also requested to assist in mobilizing financial and logistical support for specific OAU peacemaking activities, and to strengthen the institutional and operational capacity of OAU's Conflict Management Division through human resources development, research activities, public awareness and sensitization campaigns. In the context of post-conflict peacebuilding, the two organizations should collaborate in identifying, designing and implementing rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes, as well as programmes to address the needs of refugees, returnees, displaced persons, demobilized combatants and others affected by conflict. They should also promote education for democracy, human rights and freedom. The meeting asked the United Nations to support OAU's electoral unit in enhancing its institutional capacity for assisting countries, on request, in their electoral processes. Common criteria should be developed for verifying electoral processes and for debriefing and issuance of statements relating to those processes.

In the area of economic and social questions, UN organizations and bodies were asked to cooperate with OAU in strengthening the institutional, analytical and operational capacity of regional economic communities and in formulating specific programmes to that end; and in the preparation of protocols on various aspects of the Treaty Establishing the African Economic Community, which entered into force in 1994,⁽⁴⁾ and the review of existing protocols (see also PART FOUR, Chapter V). The meeting also adopted recommendations in respect of the UN System-wide Special Initiative for Africa, to be launched in early 1996, the UN New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (see PART FOUR, Chapter III) and the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development.⁽⁵⁾ It identified the areas for cooperation in human resources development and training, calling on the United Nations to assist African countries in, among other areas, restructuring their educational curricula, promoting free and compulsory education for all children, as well as civic education, and fighting drug trafficking and juvenile delinquency.

The meeting agreed that OAU and UNHCR should develop a comprehensive strategy and plan of action with the following objectives: to ensure that asylum and protection of refugees continued to be granted in Africa, taking into account the interests of States and hosting communities; to emphasize durable solutions to the complex refugee crisis in Africa; to reinforce cooperation in the field of conflict prevention, particularly as far as an early-warning mechanism was concerned; to ensure that the recommendations of the 1994 Symposium on Refugees and Forced Population Displacements⁽⁶⁾ and the Plan of Action adopted by the February 1995 Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region (see above, under "Burundi", and PART FOUR, Chapter XII) were effectively implemented; to develop a more comprehensive programme of assistance and support to the host countries and communities; and to mobilize additional resources for refugees from non-traditional donors. Other recommendations concerned women and development; the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa; the Second Transportation and Communications Decade in Africa (see PART FOUR, Chapter V); and health, particularly the prevention of HIV/AIDS/sexually transmitted diseases, and the provision of care and support to people with HIV/AIDS.

In a 1 November report,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General outlined a number of proposals for strengthening the capabilities of OAU and institutionalizing mechanisms in the area of cooperation in conflict prevention and peace-keeping in Africa (see PART ONE, Chapter I, and PART TWO, Chapter I, for details).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/158.

Chapter III

Americas

In 1995, the political situation in Central America and the Caribbean continued to improve, with positive developments in a number of areas. The parties to the political process in El Salvador agreed to accelerate implementation of their 1992 Peace Agreement; following the withdrawal of the UN Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) at the end of April, the Mission of the UN in El Salvador (MINUSAL) was established to verify the Agreement's implementation. The negotiating process between the parties to the internal armed conflict in Guatemala continued throughout the year; the UN human rights verification mission in that country verified compliance with the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and with human rights aspects of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples, signed in March 1995. The process of transition to a democratic society in Nicaragua was consolidated further and continued to receive international support; in June, the executive and legislative branches in that country reached agreement on the constitutional reform, promulgated in July, which cleared the way for 1996 general elections.

The UN Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) was fully deployed in 1995 and took over responsibilities from the Multinational Force in Haiti following the establishment of a secure and stable environment. In cooperation with the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, mandated to monitor and promote the observance of human rights, UNMIH assisted in the organization and conduct of local, legislative and presidential elections. In December, René Préval was elected President of Haiti, to succeed Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

In a resolution concerning the economic embargo by the United States against Cuba, the General Assembly called for the repeal of laws which had extraterritorial effects on States' sovereignty and freedom of trade and navigation. In another resolution, the Assembly supported the initiative of Panama to convene the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal.

Central America situation

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁾ on 3

October 1995 on the situation in Central America, covering the progress achieved since October 1994 by Central American countries in the areas of peace, freedom, democracy and development. The report summarized major developments in those countries and described their efforts to convert into a reality the improved prospects for peace and development, which the Secretary-General had been able to observe during his visit to Honduras, El Salvador and Guatemala from 1 to 3 April 1995.

It was pointed out that in 1995 democratically elected Governments of the region had shown themselves to be stable in the face of internal difficulties. Democratic institutions continued to be strengthened, with the consolidation of activities by national councils for human rights in El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras as well as by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the region, which provided new channels for political participation. In El Salvador, the Government had committed itself to promoting development by signing the Pact of San Andres on 31 May. The parties to the conflict in Guatemala signed on 22 August a declaration on a cease-fire during the electoral period and on the results of elections. In Nicaragua, months of dispute over constitutional reform had ended in an agreement between the country's executive and legislative branches. A conflict over a programme of reforms between the Government and the opposition in Costa Rica was defused by a pact agreed on in June.

At the same time, the pursuit of policies for macroeconomic stabilization, liberalization of the economy and modernization of the State had been accompanied by a decline in social conditions across much of Central America, which could be redressed only through increased investment in the region. To create an environment conducive to economic growth and investment, Governments had taken steps to consolidate further the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America—a new regional strategy for cooperation and integration adopted in 1994.⁽³⁾ In June, Costa Rica joined the Central American Integration System, which was also strengthened with the installation of its executive committee in March. Other regional institutions, such as the Central American Parliament, the Central American Bank for Economic Integration and the Central American Court of Justice, increased their activities within the framework of the Alliance. In August, the countries of the "northern triangle"—El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras—ratified the Guatemala Protocol to the General Treaty on Central American Integration, with a view to increasing the potential of their subregional market. However, the potential for conflict between regional and individual priorities in the area of economic integration remained great, as evidenced by Costa Rica's bilateral free trade agreement with Mexico, which came into effect on 1 January in advance of any regional agreement, and by the region's response to El Salvador's proposal for lowering the existing common tariff ceiling and floor.

The elaboration of an accord on regional security issues was discussed by the Central American Security Commission. A proposed treaty sought to define a security model making use of democratic institutions to find integral and peaceable solutions to the region's problems. In the meantime, Panama joined Costa Rica in abolishing its army; Nicaragua and El Salvador continued to make progress in subordinating their armies to civilian rule; and Honduras and Guatemala began to address that issue in depth. On 29 June, the Ministers of Defence and heads of the armed forces of Honduras, El Salvador and Nicaragua signed a declaration for peace, democracy, development and integration in Central America, by which they recognized the need to define a new model for regional defence respectful of human rights, the strengthening of the rule of law and the integral development of the human person and society. Progress was also made in overcoming territorial disputes in the region, but difficulties remained with regard to border disputes between Honduras and El Salvador and between Guatemala and Belize, as well as to the demarcation of waters in the Gulf of Fonseca shared by Honduras, El Salvador and Nicaragua. Binational commissions of El Salvador and Honduras continued discussions to resolve both border demarcation and dual nationality and property issues; in September, the two countries agreed to undertake the verification of property registration, examine issues of nationality and introduce a new system of monitoring borders so as to reduce tensions in the area.

The report further described international assistance for Central American efforts to promote peace, freedom, democracy and development. It noted activities of the Group of Friends of the Guatemalan Peace Process (Colombia, Mexico, Norway, Spain, United States, Venezuela) and the support group to follow the transition process and internal consensus-building in Nicaragua (Canada, Mexico, Netherlands, Spain, Sweden), as well as political dialogue and economic cooperation with the European Union (EU) maintained through the eleventh meeting in the "San Jose Process" (Panama City, 23-24 February) between the Foreign Ministers of Central America, EU and the Group of Three (Colombia, Mexico, Venezuela). The economic contribution of the international community was extended by commitments made during informal consultative group meetings of donors on Nicaragua, Guatemala and El Salvador, organized by the Inter-American Development Bank and the World Bank in Paris from 19 to 22 June. The Rio Group of countries, at their ninth summit meeting (Quito, Ecuador, 4-5 September), expressed support for integration processes in Latin America and the Caribbean and reaffirmed their commitment to establishing a hemispheric free trade zone by 2005, as agreed at the Summit of the Americas in December 1994 in Miami, Florida, United States. Cooperation also continued between Central America and the Organization of American States (OAS) in the areas of trade and mine clearance, as well as within the framework of the Alliance for Sustainable Development.

As for UN efforts in Central America, the Secretary-General noted that the peace process in El Salvador, initiated by the 1992 Peace Agreement, had maintained its impetus, although difficulties were encountered and delays had occurred in a number of areas; ONUSAL completed its mandate, and MINUSAL was set up to verify completion of the Agreement's implementation (see below, under "El Salvador situation"). Positive developments had also occurred in the peace process in Guatemala, which proceeded in accordance with the Framework Agreement and other accords concluded in 1994; in that regard, the report cited ongoing preparations for general elections in that country, scheduled for November 1995. At the same time, while compliance by the parties to the peace process with the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights showed some improvement, the overall human rights situation remained a source of concern, as reported by the UN human rights verification mission in Guatemala (see below, under "Guatemala situation").

The Secretary-General also outlined UN operational activities in support of processes in the region, which were described in detail in his 26 October report⁽⁴⁾ on international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for Sustainable Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), and noted that they focused on poverty alleviation, economic reform and public sector policies and management, emergency and development assistance, strengthening of democratic institutions, environmental protection and promotion of sustainable development, population-related programmes and natural disaster prevention and rehabilitation. He urged the Central American countries and the international community to remain fully engaged in the consolidation of peace throughout the region, and expressed his readiness to continue to play the active role in that process entrusted to him by the General Assembly.

Communications. The Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama and the Prime Minister of Belize, at their sixteenth summit meeting (Cerro Verde, El Salvador, 29-31 March), adopted a declaration on the strengthening of peace and security in the Central American region, reiterating, inter alia, their commitment to the procedure for a firm and lasting peace in Central America, set out in 1987.⁽⁵⁾ They also adopted a declaration of support for the establishment and operation of the Central American Radio Network and a declaration on the situation in Nicaragua, as well as a treaty on Central American social integration, a programme of immediate action for investment in human capital, and an agreement for the joint implementation of the 1992 UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (see PART FOUR, Chapter VII). The results of the meeting were transmitted to the Secretary-General on 18 April.⁽⁶⁾

On 5 April, the Secretary-General communicated⁽⁷⁾ to the Presidents of the General Assembly and of the Security Council the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples, signed by the parties to the conflict in Guatemala on 31 March (see below). On 11 October, El Salvador transmitted⁽⁸⁾ a declaration on the peace process in Guatemala, adopted by the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua and the Vice-President of Panama at a special meeting held in Costa del Sol, El Salvador, on 5 October, as well as their position and that of the Guatemalan President concerning education as a vital element of economic and social development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/132.

The situation in Central America: procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace and progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and its own resolutions, particularly resolutions 48/161 of 20 December 1993 and 49/137 of 19 December 1994, in which it recognized the importance of international support for Central America, within an appropriate global frame of reference, in order to preserve and extend the progress made in the process of consolidating peace, democracy and sustainable development and thereby to overcome the obstacles that are preventing Central America from becoming a region of peace, freedom, democracy and sustainable development,

Recognizing the importance and validity of the commitments made by the Central American Presidents since the Esquipulas II summit meeting of 7 August 1987 and their subsequent summit meetings, especially the fifteenth meeting, held at Guacimo, Costa Rica, from 18 to 20 August 1994, the Central American Environment Summit for Sustainable Development, held at Managua on 12 and 13 October 1994, the International Conference on Peace and Development in Central America, held at Tegucigalpa on 24 and 25 October 1994, and the sixteenth meeting of Central American Presidents, held in El Salvador in March 1995,

Reaffirming that there can be no peace in Central America without sustainable development or democracy, which are essential for ensuring the processes of change in the region and for implementing the integrated proposal for sustainable development agreed on at the most recent meetings of Central American Presidents, in particular the Central American Environment Summit for Sustainable Development and the International Conference on Peace and Development in Central America,

Convinced of the hopes that inspire the peoples of Central America to achieve peace, reconciliation, development and social justice, and the commitment to settle their differences by means of dialogue, negotiation and respect for the legitimate interests of all States, in accordance with their own decision and their own historical experience, while fully respecting the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Recognizing the validity of the Declaration of Commitments in favour of the populations affected both by uprootedness and by conflicts and extreme poverty, adopted at Mexico City on 29 June 1994, and the role of lead agency which the United Nations Development Programme has assumed in the place of the mandate formerly discharged by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Drawing attention to the establishment of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, which constitutes the new integrated development strategy at the national and regional levels and defines the political, moral, economic, social and environmental priorities, and to the signing, at the El Salvador summit meeting in March 1995, of the Treaty on Central American Social Integration, one of whose main objectives is investment in human capital, and bearing in mind that the Central American Integration System is the institutional framework which makes possible the effective, ordered and coherent promotion of integrated development,

Emphasizing the importance of cooperation and international solidarity in supporting the efforts being made by the peoples and Governments of Central America for the consolidation of a firm and lasting peace, and the need to strengthen the new programme of cooperation and economic, technical and financial assistance for Central America in the light of the new situation in the region,

Noting the efforts made by the Central American Security Commission and the importance of the ongoing negotiation of the Central American security treaty in accelerating the establishment of a new model of regional security, as provided for in the Tegucigalpa Protocol, and the agenda and programme of specific action for sustainable development adopted at the fifteenth Central American summit meeting, held at Guacimo,

Welcoming the role played by the peace-keeping operations of the United Nations, which carried out fully their mandate in Central America pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, and recognizing the importance of the observer and monitoring missions planned or under way in the region in accordance with the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly,

Stressing the importance of the determination of the Government of Guatemala and of the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca to achieve the full exercise of human rights and to reach, as promptly as possible, an agreement to establish a firm and lasting peace, in accordance with the Framework Agreement for the Resumption of the Negotiating Process between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca of 10 January 1994 and the hopes of the Guatemalan people, and the importance of full compliance by both parties with the other agreed commitments,

Recalling its resolutions 48/267 of 19 September 1994, 49/236 A of 31 March 1995 and 49/236 B of 14 September 1995, by which it decided to establish the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala and extended the mandate of the Mission,

Emphasizing the role of international cooperation in national efforts towards peace, in particular in contributing to the trust fund for the Guatemala peace process set up by the Secretary-General on 1 March 1995,

Stressing also the importance of the current electoral process in strengthening the democratic institutions of Guatemala,

Noting with satisfaction the signing of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples on 31 March 1995, at Mexico City, in the framework of the Guatemala peace process,

Noting with appreciation the efforts being made by the people and Government of El Salvador to consolidate the progress made in the transition towards a society characterized by democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights, and commending the reaffirmation by the Government of El Salvador of its political will to honour fully its commitments under the Peace Agreement, for the benefit of all Salvadorans,

Welcoming resolution 50/7 of 31 October 1995, in which it approved the proposal of the Secretary-General to extend the mandate of the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador for a period of six months, with a gradual reduction of its strength and costs, in a manner consistent with the effective performance of its duties, in order to exercise his good offices and to monitor the application of pending questions related to the peace agreements,

Welcoming also the adoption of resolution 49/16 of 17 November 1994, in which it recognized the exceptional circumstances that still prevail in Nicaragua,

Recognizing that the efforts of the Government of Nicaragua to consolidate peace and democracy, repair its economy and rebuild the nation merit the urgent support of the international community and the United Nations system in order to preserve the gains made and overcome the effects of the war and natural disasters which persist in Nicaragua, and that the request of the Nicaraguan Government for United Nations observers during the elections to be held in 1996 also merits support,

Recognizing also the valuable and effective contribution made by the United Nations and by various governmental and non-governmental mechanisms to the gradual transformation of Central America into a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development, and the importance of the political dialogue and economic cooperation which are taking place in the ministerial conference between the European Union and the Central American countries, and the joint initiative by the industrialized countries of the Group of Twenty-four and the countries of the Group of Three as cooperating countries, under the auspices of the Association for Democracy and Development in Central America,

8. Stresses the importance of intensifying the serious and resolute negotiations between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, and urges that negotiations on the remaining agenda items should be concluded without delay with a view to reaching at the earliest possible date a firm and lasting peace agreement, thus completing the peace process in Central America;

17. Recognizes the achievements made by the people and Government of Nicaragua in their efforts to consolidate peace, democracy and reconciliation among Nicaraguans, as well as the importance of reaching a national understanding in order to define a national development strategy through political dialogue and economic and social consultation among all sectors of the country, thereby strengthening grass-roots support for the country's reconstruction, and emphasizes how important it is for the Secretary-General to comply with Nicaragua's request for observers to be present during the electoral process in 1996;

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

37-nation draft (A/50/L.17/Rev.1 & Rev.1/Add.1); agenda item 45.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/50/826; S-G, A/C.5/50/36.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 41; plenary 54, 96.

On 12 October, the Assembly, by resolution 50/2, granted observer status to the Central American Integration System.

At their seventeenth summit meeting (San Pedro Sula, Honduras, 13-15 December),⁽⁹⁾ the Central American Presidents adopted a declaration as well as a framework treaty on democratic security in Central America, containing provisions for the Central American Democratic Security Model, its constituent organs and governing principles in relation to the rule of law, security of individuals and their property, and regional security. They also adopted an agreement on an electrical interconnection system for Central America and a treaty on the recovery and return of stolen, appropriated or illicitly retained vehicles.

El Salvador situation

Implementation of the 1992 Peace Agreement⁽¹⁰⁾ between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) continued in 1995, but was hindered by lengthy delays in several important areas. In April, the Salvadoran parties agreed on a work programme to complete the Agreement's implementation. The UN Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL), established in 1991⁽¹¹⁾ to monitor all agreements between the Government and FMLN, was withdrawn by the end of April, in accordance with a 1994 Security Council resolution.⁽¹²⁾ The termination of the Mission's mandate, which had been enlarged in 1992⁽¹³⁾ to include verification and monitoring of the implementation of the 1992 Peace Agreement, and in 1993⁽¹⁴⁾ to include observance of the electoral process, was affirmed by the Council in April.

Following ONUSAL's withdrawal, the Mission of the UN in El Salvador (MINUSAL) was established to provide good offices and verify implementation of outstanding provisions of the peace accords. In September, Ricardo Vigil (Peru) replaced Enrique ter Horst (Venezuela) as the Secretary-General's Special Representative for El Salvador and Chief of Mission. In October, the General Assembly extended the Mission's mandate until 30 April 1996.

Report of the Secretary-General (March). In a 24 March report⁽¹⁵⁾ on ONUSAL, the Secretary-General assessed the implementation of the peace accords in El Salvador. He noted the progress made in the reduction and transformation of the Armed Forces and readjustment of their mission, but pointed out that some complementary measures were still required to complete the process. Despite efforts to collect weapons from civilians and government institutions, a large number of unregistered arms in the country continued to pose a problem. Although the Government reported having seized some 2,000 such weapons since the beginning of the year, voluntary surrender had been negligible and prompt steps were needed to address the issue.

The long-delayed demobilization of the National Police had been formally effected on 31 December 1994, and the dissolution of the Customs Police was expected to be completed by the end of March 1995. The National Police was replaced by the National Civil Police (PNC), whose strength had reached more than 7,000 agents, in addition to 220 middle- and high-level officers, all graduates of the newly established National Public Security Academy. At the same time, PNC's functioning was still affected by legal voids and its regulatory machinery required strengthening, as did the criteria and procedures for admission to the Academy and its courses on key subjects. In addition, an increase in criminal violence prompted a decision by the authorities to use military patrols to deter crime in rural areas. Although the patrols operated together with PNC and under its command, the decision was not in compliance with the procedures established under the peace accords, which entailed undeniable risks, the Secretary-General stated.

Following implementation of several crucial judicial reforms, the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights and the new Supreme Court consolidated their activities against the backdrop of a marked decline in human rights violations. The Joint Group for the Investigation of Politically Motivated Illegal Armed Groups, established in 1993⁽¹⁶⁾ following the assassination of several FMLN leaders, made recommendations whose implementation could reduce impunity for both political and organized crime; however, no action was taken to implement them and the assassination cases remained unresolved. At the same time, non-binding recommendations of the National Counsel were often ignored, and the rate of conviction or sentencing for crimes such as homicides, attempted homicides and death threats remained low, which explained continuing popular mistrust of or scepticism about human rights institutions in the country. In addition, basic reforms to strengthen the human rights machinery called for by the Commission on the Truth were still pending, as was implementation of the Commission's binding recommendations aimed at enabling Salvadorans to have access to the international protection system.

The report noted that the presidential, legislative and municipal elections in El Salvador, held in 1994, had revealed a need for reform of the electoral system, including introduction of a single identity document; provision for voting in the area of residence of the voter; standardization of the formula for representation in the Legislative Assembly and municipalities; and depoliticization of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal. While no measures had been implemented since the elections, those issues were expected to be included in a package of reforms for consideration by the Legislative Assembly during the year.

Addressing economic and social issues, the Secretary-General pointed out that 18,362 people had received title to land under the land-transfer programme, including 5,420 during the reporting period alone; however, that total represented only 45 per cent of the 40,648 potential beneficiaries. The programme's implementation had accelerated in November/December 1994 with the adoption of a decree facilitating the procedure for legalization and titling of land, a number of administrative measures, and decentralization of the process to the regions, but the remaining administrative and legal impediments had led to its slow-down at the beginning of 1995 and made it impossible to complete the programme by the target date of 30 April. These included problems related to coordination of activities, measurement, identification of original owners and certification of ownership, inheritance issues, the need to title a large number of properties, and a lack of land title and the need to relocate, without breaking up existing human settlements, landholders occupying properties whose owners did not wish to sell. A lack of progress in finding a solution to the human settlements issue, due to differences in positions of the Government and of FMLN, led to repeated incidents between landowners and landholders and created a potentially explosive situation.

There was also a need to accelerate the implementation of outstanding reintegration programmes, including immediate action to remedy the delays in disbursement of agricultural credit, since only 2,500 landholders of the 22,000 potential beneficiaries had to date received access to such credit. While almost 12,000 war-disabled and some 18,000 war victims were in critical need of assistance, the operations of the Fund for the Protection of the Wounded and War-disabled as a Consequence of the Armed Conflict continued to experience delays for lack of resources and administrative capacity. On the other hand, most micro-enterprise credit had been disbursed, and the housing programme for the 600 former medium-level FMLN commanders was scheduled to begin at the end of March. As at the end of February, almost 19,000 demobilized former combatants of the Armed Forces had received compensation payments, and more than 4,300 former National Police agents had received counselling with regard to educational and training opportunities. Labour rights issues were on the agenda of the High Labour Council, established in accordance with the new labour code and inaugurated on 6 March, which replaced de facto the Forum for Economic and Social Consultation provided for under the peace accords.

The Secretary-General further described developments in the political process in El Salvador, noting that two of FMLN's five constituent groups had established separate political parties and that the National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace, supervising the implementation of the peace accords, was considering ways to extend its functions beyond 30 April, the target date for conclusion of its work. He observed that despite the evident progress achieved by the country in moving away from a violent and closed society towards a democratic order, the unfulfilled commitments pertained to aspects of the peace accords of such importance as to call into question the irreversibility of the whole process. Opposition from pressure groups and continuing institutional fragility had forestalled decisive government action regarding accession to international human rights instruments, electoral reform and, to a significant extent, the land-transfer programme, and no agreement existed on modalities for the transfer of human settlements, while the slow pace in implementing other reintegration programmes created a potential source of unrest. Those problems, the Secretary-General said, needed to be defused urgently.

Report of ONUSAL Human Rights Division. By an 18 April note,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the thirteenth and final report of the Director of the ONUSAL Human Rights Division, mandated to verify compliance of the parties with the 1990 San Jose Agreement on Human Rights.⁽¹⁸⁾ The report, covering the period from 1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995, assessed the development of human rights protection mechanisms in El Salvador and the status of agreements concerning respect for and protection of human rights. It provided an overview of institutional developments and proposed actions to be taken so as to ensure full compliance with the human rights obligations under the peace agreements. It also confirmed the trend towards improvement in the human rights situation, which had prompted the UN Commission on Human Rights to terminate in March 1995 the mandate of its Independent Expert for El Salvador. However, an increase in ordinary crime and the persistence of organized violence highlighted the need for continuing efforts to fulfil the human rights commitments, as well as an urgent need to accelerate the modernization and purification of the judiciary and to strengthen the investigative capacity of PNC.

The report noted that the new Supreme Court had begun implementing its proposals for modernizing the judiciary, eradicating corruption, training judicial officials, avoiding delays in the administration of justice and contributing to the effectiveness of auxiliary judicial bodies. Action was taken to eliminate the backlog of administrative matters and pending cases, revitalize the Judicial Training School and solve the prison crisis; purification of the judiciary was also started, albeit at a slower pace. In March, the Legislative Assembly elected the National Counsel for the Defence of Human Rights, recognized the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and ratified the Additional Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights in the Area of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (the "San Salvador Protocol"), as well as the Optional Protocol to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the latter giving victims of violations access to the UN Human Rights Committee once domestic jurisdictional remedies had been exhausted. However, action remained pending with regard to ratification of International Labour Organization conventions on protection of freedom of association and the 1968 Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, as well as with regard to the lifting of reservations denying competence to the Committee against Torture to conduct investigations into systematic violations of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. Legislative reforms were also needed in respect of the career judicial service, constitutional justice, guarantees of due process, criminal legislation and arbitrary detention for petty offences.

The report pointed to persistent deficiencies in the work of PNC—which had officially taken over command from the National Police on 12 January 1995—including weak investigation mechanisms, lack of coordination with judicial and human rights institutions, and inadequate knowledge or application of various legal procedures. The Human Rights Division confirmed a number of serious human rights violations by PNC members and reported mishandling of certain crisis situations; at other times, however, PNC had acted prudently in coping with serious breaches of peace, it was stated. The report noted that a number of public demonstrations in El Salvador in recent months had gone beyond the limits of peaceful protest and had tested the Government's ability to respond in a spirit of peace and respect for democratic legality. On 24 January, demobilized soldiers occupied several buildings in San Salvador, including the Legislative Assembly, and blocked traffic on three main roads, which resulted in one fatality and three injuries. On 27 January, during a march of some 300 demobilized members of the former security forces to the Presidential Palace, clashes between demonstrators and PNC occurred and three police officers were taken hostage. On 29 March, PNC violently dispersed a demonstration of some 1,500 war-wounded, some of whom were armed with scythes, stones and even a firearm.

Among other disturbing developments were the murder, on 10 November 1994, of the leader of one of FMLN's constituent groups—an act which appeared to be politically motivated; the Government's decision to use the armed forces in crisis situations; and its public security plan for combating crime, put into effect in March 1995, which relied heavily on the participation of the armed forces. The report noted that such reliance, although constitutional, should be resorted to only in exceptional cases, once normal means of maintaining public order had been exhausted. It underscored the importance of strengthening the Government's capacity to fight organized and politically motivated crime, but pointed out that the recommendations made in that regard by the Joint Group for the Investigation of Politically Motivated Illegal Armed Groups remained unfulfilled. The report also noted a significant increase in the incidence and extent of violence against women.

The Director of the Human Rights Division concluded that the change in the human rights situation had to be consolidated and sustained over time, one of the greatest challenges being to deal with the increasing crime while remaining strictly within the framework of the Constitution and the peace agreements and putting into practice a new doctrine of public security. Bilateral and multi-lateral cooperation agencies were urged to contribute to that process.

Communication of the Secretary-General (May). On 18 May, the Secretary-General transmitted⁽¹⁹⁾ to the Security Council a programme of work to complete implementation of the peace accords, agreed to by the Salvadoran Government and other signatories to the accords on 27 April. The programme assigned responsibilities and set deadlines for implementing specific aspects of the peace agreements relating to public security, land transfer, human settlements, reintegration, protection of the war-wounded and war-disabled, and legislative reforms. Under the work programme, the parties committed themselves to completing implementation of most agreements by 31 October 1995. They also provided recommendations for the completion of programmes not subject to a timetable.

The Secretary-General noted that implementation of the work programme would be verified by a small UN team set up pursuant to his recommendation of 6 February (see below), to be known as the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador.

UN Observer Mission in El Salvador

In a 6 February letter⁽²⁰⁾ to the Security Council President, the Secretary-General recalled a 1994 Council decision⁽¹²⁾ to renew the mandate of ONUSAL for a final period until 30 April 1995, but pointed to the remaining difficulties in the implementation of peace agreements concerning El Salvador, particularly with regard to land and other reintegration programmes, including the issue of human settlements, as well as related to the judiciary and electoral reform and binding recommendations of the Commission on the Truth. Accordingly, he considered it essential to put in place a mechanism to continue ONUSAL's verification and good offices functions following its withdrawal, and proposed to establish, for an initial period of six months from the end of ONUSAL's mandate, a small team of Professionals, with the necessary support staff, to carry out those responsibilities as well as to ensure continued coordination with activities of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in El Salvador. On 17 February, the Council President informed⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General that Council members welcomed the proposed arrangement.

On 24 March, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁵⁾ on ONUSAL activities from 1 November 1994 to 20 March 1995, including the work carried out by its Military Division, Police Division and Human Rights Division. He noted that preparations for dismantling the Mission were under way, with the official closure to take place at the end of April, and that nearly all Mission assets not required for its current functioning had been either transferred to other operations and UN organizations or sold commercially. As at 17 March, unpaid contributions from Member States to the ONUSAL Special Account since its inception totalled $23,649,501, and $10.5 million had had to be borrowed from other peace-keeping accounts to maintain the Mission. Final reports on the liquidation of assets and on the financial aspects of ONUSAL activities were to be submitted later in the year (see below).

The Secretary-General reviewed the situation in El Salvador (see above), stating that ONUSAL's withdrawal marked the end of a presence which had provided strong support for peace and democratization. However, implementation of the peace agreements in a number of important areas could not be completed before the expiry of ONUSAL's mandate and required further verification. In that regard, he reiterated his proposal to set up a small team to verify compliance with pending aspects of the peace accords and provide good offices.

On 28 April, the Security Council adopted resolution 991(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions and the statements of its President on the question of El Salvador,

Having considered the Secretary-General's report of 24 March 1995,

Security Council resolution 991(1995)

28 April 1995 Meeting 3528 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/335).

Financing of ONUSAL

Reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ (March and June). On 22 March, the Secretary-General reported⁽²²⁾ that the total expenditure of ONUSAL from 1 June to 30 November 1994 amounted to $11,704,200 gross ($10,397,300 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $270,400 gross ($338,900 net). He estimated the cost of maintaining the Mission from 1 December 1994 to 30 April 1995 at $5,215,600 gross ($4,613,900 net), taking into account its gradual phasing out from a strength of three military observers, 46 civilian police monitors and 150 civilian staff. The cost of its liquidation, for the period from 1 to 31 May 1995, was estimated at $113,300 and comprised salaries of 8 international and 16 local staff, common staff costs, mission subsistence allowance, rental of premises and staff assessment.

The report further indicated that ONUSAL equipment and other property was to be disposed of in accordance with a 1994 General Assembly resolution on administrative and budgetary aspects of financing UN peace-keeping operations,⁽²³⁾ and that unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to the ONUSAL Special Account, which had been merged with the Special Account for the UN Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA) in 1992,⁽²⁴⁾ totalled $23,650,597 as at 1 March 1995, including $10,666,652 for ONUCA and $12,983,945 for ONUSAL. Also at that date, voluntary contributions to ONUSAL amounted to $78,398, while the Trust Fund for the Commission on the Truth showed an income of $2,475,322. The report also provided observations and comments of the Secretary-General on previous recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

The Secretary-General proposed the appropriation and assessment of respective amounts for the periods from 1 June to 30 November 1994 and from 1 December 1994 to 30 April 1995, as well as for the Mission's liquidation from 1 to 31 May 1995, and action concerning the unencumbered balance of $542,100 gross ($534,500 net) for the period from 1 December 1993 to 31 May 1994.

In a 1 June report,⁽²⁵⁾ ACABQ recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposals concerning the unencumbered balance and appropriation of the amount expended from 1 June to 30 November 1994 and that requested for ONUSAL's liquidation. It recommended reductions to the cost estimates from 1 December 1994 to 30 April 1995 and the appropriation of $4,634,000 gross ($4,080,500 net) for that period. It noted with concern that the $10.5 million borrowed from other peace-keeping operations remained unpaid, and was of the view that the total amount to be assessed should depend on the General Assembly's treatment of those loans. ACABQ also noted the establishment of MINUSAL and recommended that the Secretary-General make proposals to the Assembly on its financing.

Pursuant to a 1994 Assembly resolution,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a 22 June report⁽²⁷⁾ on the final disposition of ONUSAL assets. He noted that the assets, with a total inventory value of $11,458,600, were classified under 10 categories as vehicular equipment, communications equipment, electronic data-processing equipment, mobile offices, generators, photocopying equipment, furniture and fixtures, solar panels, facsimile machines and other equipment. They were placed into three groups and four subgroups by method of disposition. The assets meeting the requirements of other UN missions, valued at $10,568,100, had been transferred either to other operations or to the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, for temporary storage. Those identified as not suitable for transfer outside El Salvador were to be either sold commercially, with estimated proceeds of $624,000 to be credited to the ONUSAL Special Account, or donated to the Government, for a total value of $5,700. Other assets were either written off ($249,200) or classified as lost ($11,600).

The Secretary-General also pointed out that measures had been initiated to settle amounts owed by the Mission, noting that its unliquidated obligations totalled some $2,966,000 as at 31 March. Outstanding contributions due from Member States amounted to $23,643,957 as at 4 June. The Secretary-General stated that the disposal of the Mission's assets and liabilities was a continuing process; he sought the General Assembly's concurrence with the disposition of assets as outlined in the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

On 12 July, the Assembly adopted resolution 49/246.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 693(1991) of 20 May 1991, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador, and Council resolution 729(1992) of 14 January 1992, by which the Council extended and enlarged the mandate of the Observer Mission, as well as the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission, the most recent of which was resolution 961(1994) of 23 November 1994,

Recalling also its resolutions 47/223 of 16 March 1993 and 47/234 of 14 September 1993 and its decisions 48/468 A of 23 December 1993 and 49/405 of 14 October 1994 on the financing of the Observer Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to meet its outstanding liabilities,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador as at 26 June 1995, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 23,643,957 United States dollars, and urges all Member States concerned to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, due to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission promptly and in full to enable speedy completion of its liquidation period;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in particular those contained in paragraph 5 thereof;

5. Takes note of the unencumbered balances of appropriations for the period from 1 December 1993 to 31 May 1994 in the amount of 542,100 dollars gross (534,500 dollars net);

Reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ (November/December). On 8 November, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁸⁾ that ONUSAL's expenditures from 1 December 1994 to 30 April 1995 totalled $5,460,000 gross ($4,825,800 net), resulting in an additional requirement of $826,000 gross ($745,300 net) for that period, while the cost of the liquidation phase amounted to $129,600 gross ($113,100 net), resulting in an additional requirement of $16,300 gross ($17,700 net). Those increases stemmed from the need to retain more staff than projected until the end of the Mission's mandate, and one staff member until the end of June, as well as from upward revision of local salaries and rental costs. Outstanding contributions due from Member States totalled $22,554,171 as at 31 October, and $4 million had been borrowed from another peace-keeping operation to cover the expenses. The Secretary-General proposed approval of the additional requirements and deferral of their appropriation and assessment, as well as deferral of the treatment of the unencumbered balance, to the Assembly's resumed fiftieth session.

In a 4 December report,⁽²⁹⁾ ACABQ noted that the overexpenditure was to be financed from savings from ONUSAL's prior mandate periods. It stated its intention to comment on the Mission's performance and liquidation upon consideration of the Secretary-General's November report and his final report on ONUSAL financing, to be submitted in 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 22 December, the General Assembly decided that, pending submission of the final performance report on ONUSAL, the additional requirements of $842,300 gross ($763,000 net) for the period from 1 December 1994 to 31 May 1995 would be financed from savings from prior mandate periods (decision 50/447). The next day, it decided that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue consideration of the agenda item on ONUSAL financing at its resumed fiftieth session (decision 50/469).

Mission of the UN in El Salvador

In a 6 October report,⁽³⁰⁾ submitted pursuant to the General Assembly's 1994 request⁽¹⁾ that the Secretary-General devise procedures for providing El Salvador with the necessary cooperation and assistance in the period after ONUSAL, the Secretary-General summarized the developments leading to the establishment of MINUSAL, which began its work on 1 May, and described its activities between 1 May and 30 September. The Mission comprised 11 international staff, 8 civilian police consultants and a small administrative unit, and was partly funded by voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for MINUSAL. The report noted that, due to advances in implementing the work programme for the completion of the peace accords, agreed on in April (see above), it was possible to reduce MINUSAL's strength to 10 international staff and 4 civilian police consultants, with the necessary support staff.

In assessing the status of peace agreements verified by the Mission, the Secretary-General noted that PNC had reached a strength of 8,482 agents and assumed virtually all public security functions in the country. However, the authorities continued to argue that the deployment of joint patrols of PNC and the Armed Forces in rural areas was necessary to combat and deter delinquency. In that regard, MINUSAL suggested adoption of a secondary law regulating the constitutional provision for the use of armed forces in the public security sector. At the Government's request, the Mission carried out a second evaluation of the sector, with recommendations for action. The Government also requested MINUSAL to provide advisory services in drafting a Police Career Law, to be submitted to the Legislative Assembly before the end of November.

The Mission continued to encourage efforts by the Supreme Court in screening and vetting judges, and participated in technical discussions in the Legislative Assembly concerning legislative reforms to comply with the binding recommendations of the Commission on the Truth. While reforms relating to penal and criminal procedures codes, penitentiary law and guarantees of due process were likely to be adopted by the end of November, others were not expected to be ready for approval before mid-1996. Delays also persisted in implementing the land-transfer programme; although 74 per cent of the potential beneficiaries had received titles to land as at 19 September, only 25 per cent of them had had their titles filed with the land registry. At the same time, a special regime for the relocation of human settlements was approved in August, together with an operational plan for their transfer, and it was foreseeable that such transfer would begin in rural areas before 31 October. Reintegration programmes also registered steady advances and were expected to be completed by year's end; however, concerns were raised about their impact and sustainability, and the Government requested UNDP to prepare an evaluation of their effectiveness.

The Secretary-General urged all parties in El Salvador to ensure the timely adoption of electoral reforms and reiterated the necessity of an administrative and structural transformation of the Supreme Electoral Tribunal. He further pointed out that MINUSAL and UNDP had prepared and submitted for funding a set of 10 technical assistance projects, with a total cost of $9.8 million, covering administration of justice, public security and land and reintegration programmes; as at September, the projects had received pledges of $4.23 million. The Secretary-General concluded that the continued presence of MINUSAL was necessary to fulfil the task of verifying implementation of the peace agreements, including monitoring and assisting in the land-transfer programme and providing advisory support for the formulation of legislative reforms and improvement of the public security sector. Accordingly, he proposed extending the Mission's mandate until 30 April 1996, with a gradual reduction of its strength and costs.

Financing of MINUSAL

In a 24 October statement⁽³¹⁾ to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General estimated the requirements for maintaining MINUSAL from 1 November 1995 to 30 April 1996 at $1,366,200, including $452,500 relating to 1995 and $913,700 for 1996. Those costs provided for 10 Professionals, 4 civilian police, and 1 international and 15 local staff. Of the 1995 requirements, $70,000 could be financed from the Trust Fund.

In a 27 October report,⁽³²⁾ ACABQ considered that additional requirements for 1995 should not exceed $367,400, and noted that the extension of MINUSAL's mandate entailed an additional requirement of up to $886,900 under the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/7.

Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

4. Approves the proposal by the Secretary-General to extend the Mission for a further period of six months, with a gradual reduction of its strength and costs, in a manner compatible with the efficient performance of its functions;

5. Calls upon Member States and international institutions to continue to provide assistance to the Government and people of El Salvador and to lend support to the efforts of the Mission for the purposes of peace-building and development;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Guatemala situation

The peace process in Guatemala—relaunched in 1994 with the conclusion of the Framework Agreement for the Resumption of the Negotiating Process between the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG),⁽³³⁾ the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights and a number of other agreements—showed further positive developments during 1995. In March, the parties signed the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples and requested the UN human rights verification mission in Guatemala to verify implementation of its human rights aspects. In April, they began negotiations on socio-economic aspects and the agrarian situation in the country. The negotiating process was assisted by UN Moderator Jean Arnault, appointed in 1994. In November and December, URNG declared a unilateral suspension of hostilities, on the occasion of presidential, congressional and municipal elections.

The Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala (MINUGUA), established by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽³⁵⁾ verified complaints of human rights violations in the country and assisted in strengthening human rights institutions, promoting human rights education and securing international support for the Guatemalan peace process. The Assembly extended the Mission's mandate in March and again in September, until 18 March 1996.

Report of the Secretary-General (March). In a 1 March report,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly and the Security Council of having received, in January 1995, replies from the President of Guatemala and the leadership of URNG to his December 1994 request⁽³⁶⁾ to indicate further steps to enable the peace negotiations to regain momentum. Both parties recognized the need to give new dynamism to the peace process and shared the view that steps could be taken to facilitate the early conclusion of negotiations on three groups of substantive issues: economic and social issues and the agrarian situation; strengthening of civilian power and the role of the army in a democratic society; and constitutional reforms and electoral regime. However, whereas the Government proposed to transfer consideration of the first and second groups of issues to representative bodies of Guatemalan society, with joint or separate suggestions from the parties, URNG suggested signing agreements on the three groups as already prepared by the Assembly of Civil Society—a body established in May 1994 in accordance with the Framework Agreement for the Resumption of the Negotiating Process.⁽³³⁾

To overcome the impasse, Marrack Goulding, UN Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, met with the Government and URNG in Guatemala and in Mexico City, respectively, suggesting that they agree: to present their proposals on all pending issues, with drafts on those issues to be prepared by the UN Moderator; to prepare a revised timetable aimed at completing the negotiations in May or June, before the start of the campaign for presidential elections to be held in November; to accept an informal three-month suspension of offensive military activities, the results of the negotiations, and measures to intensify implementation of their 1994 agreements; and to inform the Guatemalan people of current benefits and future gains from the peace process. While the Government agreed to those proposals, URNG expressed serious reservations about several elements. Accordingly, a revised set of measures was prepared and conveyed to the parties on 17 February, stressing that modalities for UN participation in the Guatemalan peace process and the Secretary-General's continued "moderation" of negotiations and verification of agreements depended on their response. In February, both sides accepted the revised package.

The Secretary-General therefore considered that minimum conditions existed for continued UN involvement, and instructed the Moderator to make arrangements for an early finalization of the agreement on identity and rights of indigenous peoples, currently on the negotiating agenda. He found it difficult, however, to recommend that UN support be continued in its current form, barring a genuine effort to achieve progress by target dates under the timetable agreed on in 1994.⁽³³⁾ The Secretary-General hoped that the parties would negotiate on outstanding issues in the same spirit they had demonstrated in the previous year.

Communications of the Secretary-General (March/April). On 29 March, the Secretary-General informed⁽³⁷⁾ the Assembly and the Council that the text of an agreement on identity and rights of indigenous peoples had been finalized and was ready to be signed. On 5 April, he transmitted⁽⁷⁾ the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples between the Government of Guatemala and URNG, signed in Mexico City on 31 March, which comprised seven parts dealing with: the identity of indigenous peoples; the struggle against discrimination; cultural rights; civil, political, social and economic rights; joint commissions; resources; and final provisions. The Agreement provided for the establishment of joint commissions on education reform, on reform and participation and on rights relating to land of the indigenous peoples, to be composed of an equal number of representatives of the Government and of indigenous organizations, as determined in consultations between the Government and the Maya sectors of the Assembly of Civil Society. The Secretary-General was requested to verify the Agreement's implementation.

Although the Agreement was to enter into force at the signing of a final peace agreement, aspects relating to the human rights recognized in Guatemala's legislation and in international instruments to which Guatemala was a party had immediate force and application, and the UN human rights verification mission in Guatemala (see below) was accordingly requested to verify their implementation. In that regard, the Secretary-General noted that he had asked the MINUGUA Director to assess whether such verification would entail additional resource requirements.

Human rights verification mission

First report of Mission Director (March). By a 1 March note,⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the first report of MINUGUA Director Leonardo Franco (Argentina), describing Mission activities from 21 November 1994 to 21 February 1995. The report provided background information on the situation in Guatemala and on MINUGUA's establishment and mandate; reviewed efforts for institution-building, international technical and financial cooperation and human rights promotion and education; and focused on the verification of compliance with human rights commitments.

It was noted that the Mission had established working relations with local civilian authorities, representatives of the army and the police and auxiliary offices of the Counsel for Human Rights, as well as arrangements for regular discussion of specific human rights aspects with the President of Guatemala, the leadership of URNG and the Presidential Human Rights Committee (COPREDEH). A MINUGUA/UNDP Joint Unit was set up to promote projects to strengthen national human rights institutions and to secure the necessary technical and financial cooperation, and a number of activities were identified for immediate implementation, in support of the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the Counsel for Human Rights and the Ministry of the Interior. The Mission was engaged in consultations on the establishment of a coordinating commission for the structural reform of the administration of justice, which would include the adoption of a new criminal procedures code and a law on the Public Prosecutor's Office, institutional modernization and a comprehensive legal education plan. MINUGUA also explored possibilities of cooperation with human rights NGOs, assisted in drafting a human rights promotion and education strategy, and held regular consultations with representatives of the Group of Friends of the Guatemalan Peace Process, EU and Japan to secure their cooperation in support of those projects.

The report further provided information on specific cases of human rights violations verified by the Mission. During the reporting period, MINUGUA received some 1,000 complaints, of which 288 were admitted for verification because they affected specific commitments made or rights accorded priority under the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights. Complaints in relation to the general commitment regarding human rights, under which the parties undertook to guarantee and protect their full observance and to promote and perfect norms and mechanisms for their protection, included alleged violations of: the right to life, involving 22 extrajudicial executions and deaths in violation of legal guarantees, 10 attempted executions and 68 death threats; the right to integrity and security of person, accounting for some 22 per cent of all complaints and involving cases of torture and of other threats to that right; and the right to individual liberty, involving 21 cases of arbitrary or illegal detention, 5 cases of enforced disappearances and 13 cases of forcible recruitment. There were also 46 alleged violations of procedural guarantees under the right to due process and complaints relating to political rights and the freedom of expression, of movement and of association.

The Mission also verified compliance with other commitments, including those: to strengthen human rights protection institutions; against impunity; against illegal security forces and clandestine structures, as well as regulation of the bearing of arms; to guarantee freedom of association and of movement; concerning military conscription; to safeguard individuals and entities working for the protection of human rights; to compensate and/or assist the victims of human rights violations; and concerning human rights and the internal armed conflict. The report listed 31 specific recommendations by MINUGUA regarding each commitment, including 27 to the Government and 4 to URNG, and concluded that the Mission could contribute to improving the human rights situation in the country through its permanent presence on the ground, verification work and strengthening of the human rights machinery.

Report of the Secretary-General (March). In an 8 March report,⁽³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General noted that MINUGUA had been fully deployed since 28 February, at headquarters in Guatemala City and at eight regional offices and five sub-offices. By 21 February, it had reached a strength of 67 local staff and 211 international staff, comprising 10 military liaison officers, 30 civilian police observers, 60 administrative and logistic support staff, and 111 substantive staff, of whom 72 were UN Volunteers. The status-of-mission agreement had been approved by the Guatemalan Congress and passed into law, and agreements on security arrangements were signed with both parties.

The Secretary-General stated that the first three months of the MINUGUA operation had confirmed the need for substantial improvements in the observance of human rights; he described the role played by the Mission in that process. Noting that its presence could be an important factor both in improving the human rights situation and in enhancing the prospect for an early end to the armed confrontation, he recommended an extension of the Mission's mandate for a further six months. He also appealed for contributions to the recently established Trust Fund for the Guatemala peace process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

On 31 March, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/236 A on MINUGUA, under the agenda item on the situation in Central America.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/15 of 20 November 1990, 46/109 A of 17 December 1991, 47/118 of 18 December 1992, 48/161 of 20 December 1993 and, in particular, 48/267 of 19 September 1994, in which it decided to establish the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala in accordance with the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General for an initial period of six months, and its resolution 49/137 of 19 December 1994, in which it requested the Secretary-General to continue his support for the Guatemalan peace process, through his representative, and his assistance in implementing the agreements,

Welcoming the inauguration and full deployment of the Mission and the support and cooperation provided to it by the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca,

Also welcoming the conclusion of the status-of-mission agreement between the Government of Guatemala and the Secretary-General and its subsequent approval by the Guatemalan Congress,

Taking into account the note by the Secretary-General containing the report of the Director of the Mission on the first three months of the Mission's activities,

Taking note of the recommendations addressed to the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca contained in that report, regarding the implementation of their commitments under the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights,

Stressing the importance of mobilizing national and international resources for institution-building and cooperation projects intended to strengthen the Guatemalan system for the protection of human rights,

Recognizing the efforts of the Secretary-General and the Group of Friends of the Guatemalan peace process in support of the peace negotiations,

Concerned that the peace negotiations slowed down during the second half of 1994 and that the target dates agreed by the parties for the conclusion of an agreement on a firm and lasting peace were not met,

Emphasizing the importance of giving new momentum to the peace negotiations with a view to reaching promptly a package of agreements that will put an end to the armed confrontation and lay the foundations for a lasting peace in Guatemala,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General concerning steps taken since 22 December 1994 to give new dynamism to the peace negotiations,

Having considered the recommendation of the Secretary-General regarding the extension of the mandate of the Mission, contained in his report on the Mission,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Director of the Mission on the first three months of the Mission's activities;

3. Decides to authorize the renewal of the mandate of the Mission for a further period of six months, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary-General;

4. Calls upon the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca to follow the recommendations of the Mission and to comply fully with their commitments under the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights;

5. Reiterates the importance of the undertaking by the parties, contained in the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights, to provide their broadest support to the Mission and whatever cooperation it may need to carry out its functions, particularly with respect to the security of the members of the Mission;

6. Invites the international community to increase its support for institution-building and cooperation projects with governmental and non-governmental organizations, intended to strengthen the Guatemalan system for the protection of human rights, in particular through voluntary contributions to the trust fund for the Guatemalan peace process being established by the Secretary-General;

7. Reiterates the great importance it attaches to the early conclusion of the agreement on a firm and lasting peace and urges the parties to make good on their commitment to give new momentum to the negotiating process;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly fully informed of the implementation of the present resolution.

Second report of Mission Director (June). By a 29 June note,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the second report of the MINUGUA Director, describing Mission activities from 21 February to 21 May. The report noted that Mission personnel totalled 339 and comprised 112 local staff and 227 international staff, including 10 military liaison officers, 41 police human rights observers, 103 UN staff and 73 UN Volunteers. The overall situation in Guatemala was characterized by a lack of public security, land-related disputes, tensions between the Government and the business sector over tax policy, an increase in harassment of and attacks on military units, continuing public concern over the human rights situation, and the launching of the presidential elections campaign. According to National Police data, 2,053 people had been killed and 4,078 injured in Guatemala between 1 January and 15 May as a result of criminal violence. The high incidence of kidnappings prompted the Guatemalan Congress to adopt a decree extending the death penalty to such cases, the compatibility of which with international human rights law was questioned by MINUGUA. The Counsel for Human Rights expressed concern at the increase in political and social violence and the ineffectiveness of State institutions responsible for investigating and punishing human rights violations; however, no action was taken on the Counsel's non-binding recommendations. The issue of impunity also remained a national concern.

The Mission continued to hold regular consultations with the Government and URNG and maintained regular contact with human rights institutions in Guatemala. During the reporting period, it received some 1,600 complaints, 570 of which were admitted for verification. Of those, 225 dealt with violations of the right to life, including 54 extrajudicial executions and deaths in violation of legal guarantees, 25 attempted extrajudicial executions and 146 death threats; 140 related to violations of the right to integrity and security of person, involving 10 cases of torture; 50 reported violations of the right to individual liberty, including 6 enforced disappearances; and 75 alleged violations of the right to due process. Other complaints dealt with political rights and the freedom of expression, of movement and of association. The report noted that of the 858 cases admitted since MINUGUA's inception, 261 had been closed and violations confirmed in 46.5 per cent of them.

The report further described the situation in respect of the rights not accorded priority under the Comprehensive Agreement and compliance with other commitments, as well as Mission activities related to institution-building, international technical and financial cooperation and human rights promotion and education. It noted that on 24 February the MINUGUA/UNDP Joint Unit had signed an agreement with the Attorney-General of the Republic to provide support to prosecutors in carrying out their duties under the new Code of Criminal Procedure. Support and assistance were also provided to the criminal public defender, the Judicial Training School, the Ministry of the Interior and the Counsel for Human Rights, and talks had begun on areas of cooperation with COPREDEH. The Joint Unit was compiling a list of human rights and indigenous NGOs with a view to strengthening their activities; in addition, a newly established team of 11 human rights promoters had organized more than 100 encounters in communities and 45 seminars and workshops for human rights workers, community leaders, teachers, prosecutors and police officers. MINUGUA produced a number of documents in local languages and disseminated its first report and the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples (see above) among the indigenous population. In an effort to secure international financial support for the peace process, the Government presented its Human Rights Programme, incorporating the Comprehensive Programme for Strengthening the Rule of Law, at an informal meeting of the Consultative Group of donors on Guatemala, held in Paris. The Trust Fund for the Guatemala peace process totalled $2.6 million, including a $1 million pledge from Norway.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Mission Director stressed several positive elements, such as the parties' cooperation with MINUGUA and support for its work; the virtual cessation of forcible military conscription; the widespread exercise of freedom of expression; the readiness of senior public security authorities to promote the investigation and solving of crimes; restraint in the use of force by the police during demonstrations and evictions from rural estates; acknowledgement by the army of its responsibility in two cases of arbitrary detention and torture; and the fact that the Government had not encouraged the organization of new voluntary civil defence committees (CVDCs). The Director also noted that URNG had fulfilled its commitment to suspend the destruction of electric power pylons. He noted with concern, however, that the greatest number of complaints referred to violations of the rights to life, to integrity and security of person and to liberty, in which the State failed in its duty to provide guarantees, and pointed to activities of illicit groups and abuses committed by CVDC members and military commissioners operating in rural areas. The report also noted that URNG had committed human rights violations and failed to observe its commitment to end the suffering of the civilian population, by making threats and taking action against civilian property in collecting "war tax", by unnecessarily endangering civilians not involved in the conflict during attacks on military bases and units, by taking reprisals and by laying mines and other explosives in places where civilians worked, lived or circulated.

MINUGUA reiterated the need for the Government to have a decisive overall policy for combating impunity, as well as its recommendations concerning the need to organize specific training courses for law enforcement officials, to recognize the competence of the Committee against Torture to investigate systematic violations of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and to ratify the Optional Protocol to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, thus providing Guatemalans with access to the Human Rights Committee. The Mission made a number of other recommendations, both to the Government and to URNG.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). On 11 August, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁴¹⁾ on the signing of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples, which was endorsed by the Assembly of Civil Society, and on MINUGUA's assessment of the Agreement's human rights aspects related to new verification activities to be undertaken by the Mission and additional resource requirements for their implementation. The Secretary-General recommended that additional resources be provided to MINUGUA accordingly, should the General Assembly extend its mandate.

The report also summarized Mission activities and drew attention to ongoing efforts by the international community in Guatemala to facilitate implementation of the preparatory phase of the Agreement on Resettlement of Population Groups Uprooted by the Armed Conflict. It noted that the parties had begun consideration of the next item on the negotiating agenda, dealing with socio-economic aspects and the agrarian situation, and that an agreement on the subject could be reached soon. Accordingly, the Secretary-General remained convinced that the United Nations should continue to assist the parties in reaching the earliest conclusion of an agreement on a firm and lasting peace, and that the international community should continue its support to the Guatemalan peace process and the efforts of MINUGUA. He recommended the renewal of the Mission's mandate until 18 March 1996.

14 September 1995 Meeting 107 Adopted without vote

36-nation draft (A/49/L.69 & Add.1); agenda item 42.

Third report of Mission Director (October).

By a 12 October note,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the third report of the MINUGUA Director, covering the period from 21 May to 21 August. The report noted that the political situation in Guatemala continued to be dominated by the electoral process leading to presidential, congressional and municipal elections in November. The participation of political parties and candidates was more comprehensive than in previous elections, as evidenced by the formation of the Frente Democrático Nueva Guatemala and numerous civilian election boards at the municipal level; URNG urged the public to vote and announced a cease-fire from 1 to 13 November, while President Ramiro de Leon Carpio met with representatives of political parties in an effort to encourage a high turnout at the polls. At the same time, the society continued to suffer from general violence, as demonstrated by the high rate of abductions and violent deaths and by the proliferation and use of firearms, which prompted a steady rise in the number of private security companies and self-defence groups.

On 30 June, the President announced his decision to demobilize some 25,000 military commissioners effective 15 September; the commissioners had been identified by MINUGUA and human rights activists for their involvement in acts of violence, harassment and intimidation against the civilian population. The Guatemalan Congress adopted two important laws: one classifying torture as an offence under the Penal Code, the other on the removal and deactivation of mines and other explosive devices to reduce risk to the inhabitants of areas affected by the armed confrontation. On 22 August, at a conference organized by the Central American Parliament, the main Guatemalan parties undertook to support whatever agreements might be reached as being of vital importance to the signatory Government.

Although both parties continued to cooperate with MINUGUA, no action had been taken on the Mission's recommendations either by the Government or by URNG. In June, the Mission deplored the lack of initiative and effectiveness on the part of the authorities in dealing with acts of illegal interference with the return of refugees to Guatemala, which culminated on 28 June in the taking of five international hostages, including three UN officers. In general, despite certain positive steps, the human rights situation in the country remained a cause for concern, due to the serious lack of public security and persistent impunity. During the reporting period, MINUGUA received 2,156 complaints, 424 of which were admitted for verification. Of those, 156 dealt with violations of the right to life, including 49 extrajudicial executions and deaths in violation of legal guarantees, 18 attempted extrajudicial executions and 89 death threats; 87 related to violations of the right to integrity and security of person; 43 reported violations of the right to individual liberty, including 2 cases of enforced disappearances; and 60 alleged violations of the right to due process. Other complaints dealt with political rights and the freedom of expression, of movement and of association. The report noted that of the 1,282 cases verified since MINUGUA's inception, 511 had been closed and violations confirmed in 46 per cent of them.

Verification activities in respect of other commitments indicated that: judges and prosecutors continued to be subjected to threats, intimidation and even attacks, without any investigation or punishment to follow; deficiencies persisted in the functioning of the Public Prosecutor's Office, the judiciary and the security forces responsible for preventing and punishing crime; illegal groups of various types continued their operations with impunity; the autonomy enjoyed by the army in its counter-insurgency and anti-subversive activities facilitated certain abuses and protection of officers implicated in corruption and crime; CVDCs and military commissioners prior to their dissolution continued to exert control over rural communities and commit abuses; no new measures had been adopted to regulate the bearing of arms, and the number of firearms in individual possession had risen sharply; and no measures or programmes had been devised to assist victims of human rights violations.

In addition, complaints were received regarding safeguards of individuals and entities working for the protection of human rights, infliction of suffering on the civilian population by URNG guerrillas, threats and actions by URNG against civilian property, the treatment of wounded and captured combatants, and illegal interference with the return of refugees and displaced persons as well as the treatment of returnees. On the positive side, the amended Criminal Code, characterizing extrajudicial execution and enforced disappearances as especially serious crimes and establishing penalties for them, entered into force on 14 July; some progress continued to be noted as to the freedom of association and of movement; and no cases of forced military conscription had occurred. Following claims by the Counsel for Human Rights that the Government's failure to strengthen that institution constituted a violation of the Comprehensive Agreement, the President stated that the Counsel's criticism provided grounds for the State to revise its relevant decisions and that he had reminded his ministers to obey the Counsel's resolutions and to cooperate with him.

On 4 August, a framework agreement on technical cooperation was concluded between MINUGUA and the judiciary branch, providing for assistance to the Public Defender's Office and measures to improve the juridical information system and the Judicial Training School. A technical cooperation agreement between the Public Prosecutor's Office and the MINUGUA/UNDP Joint Unit provided for the establishment of a technical advisory unit within that Office to train prosecutors. The Mission also continued to cooperate in improving the functioning of the National Police, and organized 66 human rights training seminars and nearly 250 informal talks on various agreements, which attracted more than 18,000 participants. It launched activities to verify compliance with the human rights aspects of the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and negotiated with donors providing for financial assistance to human rights projects in Guatemala, including a cooperation agreement with Norway, signed on 26 June; an agreement with Denmark's Human Rights Programme for Central America; and a letter of intent with the Inter-American Institute of Human Rights. The Trust Fund for the Guatemala peace process received $1.7 million in contributions and a pledge of 10 million kronor from Sweden.

The report concluded that the human rights situation in Guatemala had deteriorated in some aspects, owing to a crisis in the administration of justice, and noted that the right to life was still the right most seriously affected, that the rights to integrity and security of person and to individual liberty were not adequately guaranteed and that the right to due process was being violated more frequently. It was stated that URNG had failed to observe its commitments under the Comprehensive Agreement, with its troops continuing to commit human rights violations, and both parties were called on to implement measures recommended by the Mission.

Further developments. The negotiations on socio-economic aspects and the agrarian situation in Guatemala continued until their agreed interruption by the parties on 15 December. The presidential elections, held on 12 November, failed to produce a winner, and a second round was scheduled for 7 January 1996. URNG declared a further unilateral suspension of hostilities from 24 December 1995 to 8 January 1996. On 22 November, the Guatemalan Congress gave legal confirmation to the President's decision to demobilize military commissioners as of 15 September. By late November, contributions to the Trust Fund for the Guatemala peace process totalled $3.6 million. According to the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), 9,524 refugees had returned to Guatemala in 1995, significantly more than in previous years.

From its inception to the end of 1995, MINUGUA received more than 7,700 complaints, 1,567 of which were admitted for verification. Of that total, 1,078 cases, or 68.7 per cent, were closed, and violations were confirmed in 43.2 per cent of them, involving 3,161 victims. Confirmed violations concerned the rights to life, integrity and security of person and individual liberty in 64.2 per cent of cases, and responsibility was attributed to National Police officers in 24.5 per cent of them, to military commissioners in 17 per cent, to members of the army in 17 per cent, to members of CVDCs in 15.1 per cent and to URNG members in 5.4 per cent. Responsibility for violations of human rights during the internal armed conflict was attributed to URNG in 92.5 per cent of confirmed cases, and to the army in 5 per cent.

The Mission organized 650 encounters to clarify its mandate, attended by some 45,000 people, and 350 training seminars on human rights issues, with more than 15,000 participants. It signed a framework agreement on technical cooperation with the Counsel for Human Rights on 11 September, and renewed the cooperation agreement with the Public Prosecutor's Office on 10 October, which was expanded to include advisory services to the Attorney-General and the Council of the Office. Starting in September, the Mission cooperated with COPREDEH in human rights education for civil servants and public schools. On 31 August, Denmark agreed to provide MINUGUA with four professionals, to help meet the need for qualified personnel.

Financing of MINUGUA

In a 21 March statement⁽⁴³⁾ to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General estimated that the extension of MINUGUA's mandate until 30 September 1995 would require an additional appropriation of $10,138,800, net of staff assessment ($769,000), under the programme budget for 1994-

1995. That requirement provided for a strength of 10 military liaison officers, 60 civilian police, 113 international staff, 72 UN Volunteers and 135 local staff. He also requested commitment authority not exceeding $5,600,000 until the end of December 1995, should the mandate be extended beyond 30 September.

On 27 March, the Fifth Committee, based on the recommendations of ACABQ,⁽⁴⁴⁾ revised the requested amounts downward and informed⁽⁴⁵⁾ the General Assembly that, should it extend MINUGUA's mandate until 30 September, an additional appropriation of $9,423,100 would be required under the programme budget for 1994-1995 and that, should the mandate be extended beyond 30 September, the Secretary-General would be authorized to enter into commitments not exceeding $4,711,500 from 1 October to 31 December.

On 20 November, the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee revised estimates⁽⁴⁶⁾ amounting to $7,299,800 to maintain MINUGUA from 1 January to 31 March 1996, and to provide for an additional 14 international staff and 34 Volunteers to verify the Agreement on Identity and Rights of Indigenous Peoples. He requested an appropriation of that amount, net of staff assessment ($587,000), under the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997, as well as commitment authority not exceeding $2,347,000 per month, should the Assembly extend the mandate beyond 31 March 1996.

In a 12 December report,⁽⁴⁷⁾ ACABQ revised both staff requirements and cost estimates downward and recommended an appropriation of $7,124,800, net of staff assessment ($554,800), under the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997, as well as the granting of commitment authority not exceeding $2,329,700 per month, should the mandate be extended beyond 31 March 1996.

Nicaragua

In a 10 October report⁽⁴⁸⁾ on international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), the Secretary-General noted that pacification in that country had advanced significantly, with 1995 being the first year with no politically motivated armed groups there. More than 20,000 members of the Nicaraguan Resistance had been demobilized, and the army had been reduced from 92,000 combatants to 12,500, the smallest in Central America. The transformation of the Sandinista Army into a new National Army culminated in the transfer of command on 21 February 1995. On 15 June, agreement was reached between the legislative and executive branches of government on constitutional reform, which was promulgated by the President of Nicaragua on 4 July, clearing the way for presidential, parliamentary and local elections in November 1996. Significant advances were also achieved in creating and strengthening democratic institutions. Following the end of the conflict, some 350,000 displaced persons and refugees returned to the country; however, reintegration of refugees and demobilized combatants still remained outstanding goals.

In the economic field, municipal development committees were set up in 120 of Nicaragua's 143 municipalities, and a Department of Property was established in January within the Ministry of Finance to deal with complex property issues. A Conference on Property in Nicaragua, held on 4 and 5 July, produced agreements on security for occupants of small rural and urban properties, speedy and fair compensation for victims of confiscation, and payment for titles by occupants of large urban properties. The Consultative Group of donors for Nicaragua, meeting in Paris on 19 and 20 June, confirmed their support for the transition process in that country with commitments of $560 million for 1995 and $1.5 million for 1995-1997, intended to relieve Nicaragua's balance-of-payments gap.

The report noted that, while most Nicaraguans continued to support reconciliation, a number of serious challenges remained to be addressed for the establishment of lasting conditions of public security, including the recovery of output and improvement of living conditions, the finding of definitive solutions to the property issue and the problem of external debt, the conduct of a clean electoral process leading to broad participation in 1996 elections, and the management of such destabilizing factors as uncontrolled migration and trafficking of drugs, weapons and people.

The Caribbean

Haiti

In 1995, the international community continued to assist Haiti in the process of restoring democracy and accelerating economic recovery, following the departure of that country's military authorities and the return of its first democratically elected President, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, in October 1994. In January, the Security Council determined that a secure and stable environment had been established and authorized the deployment of the UN Mission in Haiti (UNMIH) at full strength, in accordance with a 1994 Council resolution.⁽¹⁾ The Mission, created in 1993,⁽²⁾ had first established its presence in Haiti in 1994, with the deployment of an advance team.⁽³⁾ At its full strength, UNMIH consisted of military, civilian and civilian police components under the control of the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Haiti, Lakhdar Brahimi (Algeria). On 31 March, it took over responsibilities from the multinational force in Haiti (MNF), deployed there since September 1994. The Security Council extended the Mission's mandate in January and again in July, until the end of February 1996, with a view to completing it by that time.

UNMIH provided a secure environment as well as assistance during the country's local, legislative and presidential elections. Prior to the elections, President Aristide affirmed that he would hand over power to a newly elected President in February 1996. On 23 December, René Préval was announced President-elect of Haiti. The electoral process was also supported by the UN/OAS International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH), established in 1993⁽⁴⁾ to monitor and promote the observance of human rights. In July, the General Assembly extended UN participation in MICIVIH until 7 February 1996; in December, it expressed its readiness to extend the UN component beyond that date, upon receipt of a request from the Haitian Government and the Secretary-General's recommendations to that effect.

Report of the Secretary-General and communication (January). In a 17 January report,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the security situation in Haiti had improved following the arrival of MNF in September 1994 and the subsequent disintegration of the Armed Forces of Haiti (FADH). Politically motivated violence and human rights abuses had decreased, although individual acts still occurred sporadically, and Haitians could enjoy freedom of expression, association and assembly. Large numbers of displaced persons had returned to their homes. At the same time, people in a number of areas continued to be intimidated by former members of the Front révolutionnaire pour l'avancement et le progrès d'Haiti (FRAPH), while the collapse of FADH had created a security void that contributed to a marked increase in banditry and criminality throughout the country. Violent deaths were reported daily, and acts of extortion and robberies by unidentified armed groups were widespread. Land conflicts also gave rise to violence.

The report characterized the relative security currently enjoyed by Haitians as fragile, and examined existing factors that could lead to future instability, including the disaffection of former FADH members; the probable continued existence of paramilitary networks and the availability of arms; rising frustration at the inability of the justice system to address past human rights violations and current criminality; the delay in translating economic measures and development programmes into concrete improvements in daily life; and the additional tension that might be generated by forthcoming elections. The Secretary-General underscored the need to develop a clear plan for resettling demobilized personnel, carry out reform of the judicial system and improve conditions in prisons as well as their infrastructure, accelerate economic recovery, and undertake an effective civic education campaign as part of the electoral process. In that regard, he noted the establishment of the Commission for Truth and Justice in January 1995 and the inauguration of the Provisional Electoral Council in December 1994.

The report also reviewed the establishment of Haitian security forces, noting that the Interim Public Security Force (IPSF) had totalled some 3,000 personnel at the end of 1994 and was supported by some 900 newly trained police auxiliaries. The Force worked in cooperation with 800 international police monitors; it was to be gradually replaced by the National Police, expected to reach a strength of 3,000 by January 1996. In addition, President Aristide signed a decree on 6 January 1995 setting up a Committee to Restructure the Armed Forces of Haiti, which was to establish rules for the creation of a new army of 1,500 soldiers. Noting that IPSF operations were adversely affected by deficiencies in the functioning of the justice system and the lack of essential equipment, the Secretary-General urged Governments and development agencies to accelerate implementation of their aid programmes and provide the needed support as early as possible.

He further provided an overview of the UNMIH mandate, rules of engagement, structure, deployment and concept of operations, as well as of preparations for the transition from MNF to UNMIH (see below).

On 27 January, Haiti informed⁽⁵⁾ the Security Council President that its Government supported the Secretary-General's recommendations.

UN Mission in Haiti

On 12 January, the Security Council President informed⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General that Council members agreed with his 1994 proposal⁽⁷⁾ to appoint Major-General Joseph Kinzer (United States) as Commander of the UNMIH military component.

In his January 1995 report,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, in accordance with the mandate established by the Security Council in 1994,⁽¹⁾ the Mission would consist of civilian, military and civilian police components under the control of his Special Representative for Haiti. It would be deployed in such a manner as to be conducive to the protection of international personnel and key installations; to facilitate resupply, command and control and force protection; to be logistically supportable; and to support the maintenance of the quick reaction force. The Mission's rules of engagement were to be defined in accordance with its mandate. The Secretary-General pointed out that the tasks originally entrusted to UNMIH by the Council in 1993⁽²⁾ and 1994,⁽¹⁾ especially those relating to military training and construction projects, as well as civilian police activities, had to be adapted to the realities on the ground.

The proposed concept of operations provided for the establishment of a headquarters and five sector subheadquarters, with logistical requirements including 15 helicopters, 1,400 overland vehicles and a 24-hour communication system. The UNMIH military component was to total 6,000 personnel and to comprise five infantry battalions, including Special Forces elements and a number of support units. Some two thirds of the military and one third of the civilian police component of UNMIH was to be staffed by MNF personnel, transferred from MNF two weeks prior to the transfer of command. The Secretary-General estimated that the transition from MNF to UNMIH would be completed by 31 March, with the Mission headquarters to be set up by the end of February. He noted that the strength of the UNMIH advance team in Haiti had been increased to 110 personnel, including 18 military observers, 40 civilian police personnel, 15 military planners and 37 administrative staff, in accordance with a 1994 Security Council resolution⁽⁸⁾ authorizing its progressive increase to 500 personnel.

The Secretary-General expressed his confidence that the Mission would be able to fulfil its mandate and to assist the Government of Haiti in sustaining a secure and stable environment, and recommended extension of its mandate for a further six months, until 31 July 1995. He estimated the cost of UNMIH for the first six months after the take-over from MNF at $178,317,000, providing for 6,000 military contingent personnel, 900 civilian police and 227 international and 193 local civilian staff, as well as 29 UN Volunteers.

MNF reports (January). On 9 January, the United States transmitted⁽⁹⁾ the eighth report of MNF, covering its operations from 19 December 1994 to 9 January 1995. The report noted that MNF, at a strength of 7,412 troops and 717 international police monitors, continued its expansion into outlying areas of the country so as to establish its presence in all 133 subdistricts, and had begun to carry out additional daily patrols in high-crime areas. It characterized the security situation in Haiti as positive, except for a brief eruption of violence on 26 December 1994 as a result of tension between the Haitian armed forces and the Government over pay and retirement benefits, which led to the killings of three members of the armed forces with six more wounded. The number of weapons seized or bought under the weapons control programme since MNF's inception totalled 20,345, including 5,853 grenades and 1,736 machine-guns. The report also described activities of the international police monitors in training IPSF personnel, as well as MNF assistance to local authorities and civil action projects.

The ninth MNF report, covering the period from 8 to 22 January and transmitted⁽¹⁰⁾ by the United States on 23 January, pointed to the continued security and stability in Haiti, with incidents of violence being minimal and indiscriminate in nature. On 12 January, however, one such incident resulted in a fatality in the United States contingent of MNF. The strength of MNF stood at 9,113 troops and 683 international police monitors; on 15 January, Major-General Fisher assumed command from Major-General Meade. During the reporting period, an additional 180 weapons and 173 munitions had been purchased under the weapons control programme, bringing the total number to some 21,000. The Government of Haiti continued with the reorganization of the armed forces and the creation of a new police force, as well as with preparations for elections, scheduled for May. On 17 January, the UNMIH Commander arrived in Haiti to conduct further planning for the transition from MNF to the Mission.

Communication (January). On 18 January, Member States participating in MNF recommended⁽¹¹⁾ that the Security Council determine it appropriate for UNMIH to begin assuming the full range of its functions. Annexed to the letter was a 15 January statement by the MNF Commander, declaring that a secure and stable environment had been established in Haiti and that one requirement for the transition to UNMIH, set out in the Council's 1994 resolution,⁽¹⁾ had thus been attained.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 30 January, the Security Council adopted resolution 975(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 841(1993) of 16 June 1993, 861(1993) of 27 August 1993, 862(1993) of 31 August 1993, 867(1993) of 23 September 1993, 873(1993) of 13 October 1993, 875(1993) of 16 October 1993, 905(1994) of 23 March 1994, 917(1994) of 6 May 1994, 940(1994) of 31 July 1994, 944(1994) of 29 September 1994, 948(1994) of 15 October 1994 and 964(1994) of 29 November 1994,

Security Council resolution 975(1995)

10-nation draft (S/1995/85).

In China's view, the deployment of UNMIH would lead to changes in the security situation in Haiti, currently characterized by rampant crime in the absence of a police force, which necessitated reconsideration of the Mission's mandate and size; however, no agreement had been reached among Council members on amendments it had proposed.

Further MNF reports (February/March). On 6 February, the United States transmitted⁽¹²⁾ the tenth report of MNF, summarizing its operations from 23 January to 5 February. The report indicated that the situation in Haiti remained secure and stable, due to a combination of such factors as functioning government ministries, IPSF deployments and MNF activities. A marked decrease in violence had been witnessed during the reporting period, and no incidents of politically motivated human rights abuses had been reported. MNF, at a strength of 7,758 troops and 686 international police monitors, maintained a visible presence and undertook a number of missions to outlying areas; at the same time, international police monitors conducted joint patrols and operated police stations with IPSF, which continued to improve its capabilities, reaching a strength of some 3,300 personnel. The number of weapons seized or purchased to date totalled 26,544, and it was estimated that few weapons remained in circulation. On 25

January, registration began for a job-training programme for former FADH members, while the National Police Training Academy started classes on 31 January. Measures were implemented to improve sanitary conditions in prisons, and a phased plan was initiated by the Government to assume full control of the detention facility operated jointly with MNF. In preparation for the transition to UNMIH, MNF activities were coordinated in all functional areas with the Mission staff already deployed.

The eleventh MNF report, communicated⁽¹³⁾ by the United States on 21 February and covering the period from 6 to 19 February, stated that the force, at a strength of 7,938 troops and 677 international police monitors, had adjusted patrol routes and patterns to ensure maximum coverage during times of increased criminal activity, and initiated market patrols in daylight hours. IPSF, which had reached a strength of 3,381, conducted joint and independent patrols and made numerous arrests; it was assisted by the MNF military police, which helped improve IPSF facilities and operations, identify the required equipment and procure uniforms. Although the overall climate remained secure and stable, three significant violent incidents occurred: an IPSF officer was found dead on 11 February; an international police monitor was wounded on 14 February; and one suspect in a murder case was beaten to death by a crowd that took control of a jail on 15 February. A disarmament operation targeting police stations and the national prison concluded with 2,010 weapons collected, bringing the number of weapons and grenades taken out of circulation to 29,903, of which 12,589 had been bought back and the rest seized. Agreement was reached between MNF and MICIVIH on cooperation in prison and jail clean-up, sanitation, structure restoration and prison guard training. Of the 2,500 eligible former FADH members, 1,912 had been registered for the job-training programme. The Haitian Parliament adopted an electoral law, promulgated by the President on 17 February. A donors' conference, which ended on 31 January in Paris, approved aid packages totalling $900 million, including $660 million for a reconstruction programme and $240 million in assistance funds, to be provided over 12 to 18 months.

On 6 March, the United States transmitted⁽¹⁴⁾ the twelfth report of MNF on its operations from 20 February to 5 March. The MNF strength stood at 7,892 troops and 665 international police monitors; it conducted out-of-sector missions and special missions to provide aircraft support to the Provisional Electoral Council and security for the testing of police academy candidates, as well as to conduct site surveys of proposed UNMIH base camp locations. Issues related to the transition to UNMIH continued to be discussed in working groups composed of United States, UN and Haitian officials. In the meantime, an increase in hijackings and lootings prompted MNF to provide escort to food convoys and to a pay team of IPSF personnel. It also agreed to conduct training of the presidential palace security force, at President Aristide's request. Force engineers executed an operation to repair three bridges destroyed by a tropical storm, and work continued on the power grid system in the capital of Port-au-Prince and on two water projects. The weapons buy-back programme collected more than 800 guns and 2,700 munitions during the reporting period, bringing the total to 33,000, while the destruction of confiscated ammunition was 75 per cent complete. Between 20 and 24 February, 375 National Police candidates graduated to the second police academy class, to begin on 13 March. Following the signing by the President of the electoral law, parliamentary and local elections in Haiti were set for 4 June.

The thirteenth and final MNF report, communicated⁽¹⁵⁾ on 20 March, stated that the force, the strength of which totalled 7,143 troops and 654 international police monitors, was finalizing plans for transition to UNMIH. In the meantime, it had changed patrol operations in response to sporadic increases in violence, such as a rise in the number of murders in Port-au-Prince between 12 and 14 March, and continued to provide security for humanitarian convoys, conduct missions to outlying areas, assist IPSF and train personnel for a national police force. The force worked closely with MICIVIH in analysing human rights and prison reform issues, and cooperated in conducting an assessment of Haiti's national forests, delivering construction material and developing a nation-wide vaccination programme against rabies. It also sponsored civil action projects aimed at distributing school supplies and food as well as repairing roads, prisons, the IPSF regional headquarters, and water, sewage and electricity systems. Between 6 and 19 March, 692 weapons had been collected under the buy-back programme, and registration for the job-training programme for demobilized FADH members concluded on 8 March, with a total of 2,619 registered.

Report of the Secretary-General (April). On 13 April, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁶⁾ that the transfer of responsibilities from MNF to UNMIH had taken place on 31 March, at an official ceremony attended by President Aristide of Haiti, President William J. Clinton of the United States and himself, among others. The transition was made possible due to the preparatory work by the advance team in developing the concept of operations, force structure and deployment plans; early deployment of some 70 per cent of the Mission's military component, including the Quick Reaction Force and Special Forces elements, within MNF; a six-day integrated staff training exercise in early March; and two tripartite meetings of Haitian, UN and MNF officials to address questions relating to security, elections, rehabilitation of the justice and penitentiary systems, and economic recovery. Matters concerning the Haitian police and the justice system were also discussed in working groups of Haitian officials and UNMIH representatives. A status-of-forces agreement for the Mission was signed on 15 March.

On 31 March, an advance team of 24 military observers concluded its mission; 10 of them were incorporated into UNMIH. The Mission established its headquarters in Port-au-Prince, with sub-headquarters in six operational sectors (Cap-Haïtien, Gonaïves, Jacmel, Les Cayes and two in Port-au-Prince). Five infantry battalions, including the Quick Reaction Force, as well as support units, a military police battalion, an engineering unit, aviation and logistics elements, a military information support team and a civil affairs unit were deployed in 10 locations, and Special Forces elements in 25 locations throughout the country. UNMIH took over four military camps built by MNF in Port-au-Prince and two of the three camps in Cap-Haïtien; its engineering battalion was to complete construction of an additional eight camps by 20 June. As at 31 March, the Mission's strength was 5,906 military contingent personnel, including 4,193 transferred from MNF; 791 civilian police (CIVPOL), including 379 transferred from international police monitors within MNF; and 122 international civilian staff, 175 local staff and 12 UN Volunteers.

UNMIH began to discharge its duties in a situation characterized by wide popular support for President Aristide and few human rights violations, as well as by major institutional weaknesses and growing frustrations over the slow pace of economic recovery. Following the expiry of mandates of most elected officials on 4 February, the country was without a Parliament; on 25 February, a presidential decree authorized either extension of mandates for local officials or their replacement by new interim officials. Due to technical difficulties, the parliamentary and local elections initially scheduled for 4 and 25 June were postponed until 25 June and 16 July. At the Government's request, efforts of the Provisional Electoral Council in preparing the elections were supported by a 17-person UN Electoral Assistance Team; it was also envisaged that the election process would be supported and observed by MICIVIH, other UN agencies in Haiti and OAS. As for the judiciary, a number of judges and the Chief Prosecutor in Port-au-Prince had been replaced, and the National Commission for Truth and Justice, responsible for investigating human rights violations committed under the military authorities, was inaugurated on 30 March. The Government created, on 6 April, a commission of five interim police officers to investigate recent assassinations, and launched a campaign to encourage court testimonies in assassination cases.

The Secretary-General noted that tremendous economic challenges persisted in Haiti and that the extreme poverty and high unemployment prevailing in much of the country required sustained international attention. Recovery signals were still weak, with industrial revival hindered by electricity shortages. Private and public investments were urgently needed to stimulate the economy suffering from a lack of basic infrastructure; however, foreign investment seemed to be impeded by perceptions of the public security situation. Although multilateral agencies and donors approved substantial aid packages in January, Haiti's absorptive capacity continued to be quite modest.

The report emphasized that the issue of security was central to the entire UN operation in Haiti. While very few human rights violations had been reported in the past two months, crime remained at a high level, with an increase in vigilante killings at the beginning of March, which led to concern that UNMIH, operating without enforcement authority, would not prove as effective as MNF. In that regard, the Secretary-General pointed to assertive rules of engagement of the Mission's military component and CIVPOL's proactive operation guidelines, and emphasized that effective coordination had been established between contingents with respect to security preparations. Discussions were also under way of steps to accelerate the deployment of a functional National Police force, which was still a long way from the minimum 7,000 agents needed to maintain law and order. On 24 March, Japan pledged $3 million to the newly established UN trust fund to support the international police monitoring programme and assist with the creation of an adequate police force in Haiti. At the same time, no programmes were in place to absorb in civilian employment IPSF members replaced by Police Academy graduates.

Communication (April). On 7 April, a group of Member States known as the Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti (Argentina, Canada, France, United States, Venezuela) transmitted a statement⁽¹⁷⁾ welcoming the transition from MNF to UNMIH and noting with satisfaction the role of MICIVIH and UNMIH in assisting the Haitian authorities with the electoral process. The statement pointed out, however, that the security situation in Haiti remained a matter of concern and that the early deployment of a permanent and effective police force as well as the reactivation of a functioning and fair justice system were central to long-term stability. In that regard, the Friends joined the Secretary-General's call for contributions to the UN trust fund. They also appealed for intensified national reconstruction and reconciliation efforts, and underlined the importance of immediate and sustained international assistance to Haiti and of ongoing political engagement, which was indispensable to the prospects for long-term peace and stability. The Friends reaffirmed their determination to support the Secretary-General in those efforts.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 24 April, the Security Council President made the following statement⁽¹⁸⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the transfer of responsibilities from the multinational force (MNF) to UNMIH that took place on 31 March 1995 and shares the Secretary-General's view, as stated in his report of 13 April, that this transfer was a milestone in the overall efforts of the international community to bring peace and stability to Haiti. The Council commends the Secretary-General, his Special Representative, the MNF Force Commander and the other dedicated personnel of the United Nations and MNF who made the transition possible.

The Security Council notes, however, that much remains to be done to institutionalize democracy in Haiti and reiterates the Secretary-General's call for the people of Haiti and their leaders to help UNMIH help them. While UNMIH's presence will assist the Haitian Government to sustain a secure and stable environment, the existence of a functioning and fair justice system and the early deployment of a permanent and effective police force by the Haitian authorities are central to Haiti's long-term stability. The Council joins the Secretary-General and Friends of Haiti in inviting Member States to make voluntary contributions to support the international police monitoring programme and assist with the creation of an adequate police force.

The Government and people of Haiti bear the primary responsibility for Haiti's political, economic and social reconstruction. However, the Security Council notes that the sustained commitment of the international community is indispensable for long-term peace and stability in Haiti.

The Security Council shares the opinion of the Secretary-General that the issue of security is central to the entire United Nations operation in Haiti.

The Security Council underlines the crucial importance of free, fair and secure elections for the democratic future of Haiti. The Council stresses the necessity of a secure environment in Haiti, including during the June and July legislative and local election period, and underlines the importance of a functioning police force and an established judicial system. The Council urges the Government of Haiti to take all necessary steps to ensure the success of the elections, and in particular to register as many voters as possible prior to the elections and to assure, in cooperation with the international community, that political campaigning occurs in an environment free from partisan intimidation.

The Security Council welcomes President Aristide's meetings with leaders of political parties and members of the Provisional Electoral Council and stresses the importance of dialogue with a view to achieving the political consensus needed to enhance the benefits and credibility of the electoral process. The Council also calls on the Government of Haiti to cooperate fully with the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS) to ensure that the preparations for elections and the elections themselves can take place in a secure and stable environment. Consistent with the objectives of Security Council resolution 940(1994), the Council emphasizes the importance for the Presidential elections to take place on schedule before UNMIH's scheduled withdrawal in February 1996.

Finally, the Security Council welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to coordinate UNMIH's peace-keeping mission with development activities carried out by others, in a manner consistent with UNMIH's mandate, to help the Government of Haiti strengthen its institutions, particularly the judicial system. The Council hopes this coordination will promote closer cooperation of all concerned in Haiti as well as improve the effectiveness of international support for rebuilding Haiti's economy.

Meeting number. SC 3523.

On 25 April, Haiti addressed a note verbale⁽¹⁹⁾ to the Council President, containing its Government's reactions to his statement. The note stated that the Government of Haiti was deeply committed to peace and stability in the country and to the organization of free and democratic elections, and that it had taken steps to guarantee maximum participation of the electorate and to involve all parties in the electoral process. The Government counted on the success of the elections to make the process of restoring democracy irreversible, and called on international observers to join it in its efforts to ensure transparency. The elections were to be held in accordance with the timetable as planned.

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In a 24 July report,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General noted that by the end of June UNMIH had reached a strength of 6,065 troops, 847 civilian police, 191 international staff, 240 local staff and 19 UN Volunteers. The Mission had completed deployment to its locations; its headquarters was fully established and five additional military camps had become fully operational. It provided security throughout the country, escorted humanitarian NGOs as well as logistical and food convoys, carried out prison guard duties for more than a month in Cap-Haïtien and Gonaïves, undertook harbour patrols, and executed civil projects providing assistance to improve power supply, the transportation of repatriated refugees, the development of a disaster response training programme, support for animal immunization and nutrition management programmes, as well as for public construction activities, and the removal of wrecked vehicles off the streets of Port-au-Prince. Information campaigns were carried out on various issues, including the role of UNMIH, the electoral process, public safety and the Haitian National Police.

CIVPOL encouraged and guided the work of both IPSF and the National Police, and provided on-the-job training for the latter; its resources, however, had been strained to the limit. It also coordinated the delivery of food for prisoners, helped to provide prison security, and undertook such unanticipated tasks as firearm training for the ministerial security force and security surveys of facilities for several ministries and the National Commission for Truth and Justice. Issues related to the UNMIH mandate were reviewed at weekly meetings between the Secretary-General's Special Representative, the Mission Force and CIVPOL Commanders and President Aristide. In May, an ACABQ delegation visited UNMIH to examine its administrative, logistical and financial aspects.

Despite technical difficulties with voter registration and ballot preparation, the municipal and local elections and the first round of parliamentary elections were held as scheduled on 25 June, observed by both MICIVIH and OAS. The UN Electoral Assistance Team provided technical expertise to the Provisional Electoral Council in such areas as logistical planning, distribution of electoral materials, preparation of technical documentation, registration of candidates, and polling and counting, while UNMIH's military and CIVPOL components assisted in maintaining security throughout the election period. Nevertheless, organizational problems prevented many Haitians from voting, and election results drew strong criticism from Haitian political leaders. The Provisional Electoral Council admitted that mistakes and irregularities had occurred and that complementary elections had to be held in certain constituencies.

The security situation continued to improve and was marked by a drop in vigilante killings and a decrease in common crime, although humanitarian aid convoys and warehouses were still targeted by organized gangs. In May, CIVPOL carried out its first monthly performance evaluation of IPSF; from 29 May to 13 July, initial training in prison guard duties was provided to 288 IPSF members and 140 other participants. IPSF was gradually being replaced by the Haitian National Police, the first two groups of which, totalling 766 agents, had completed training and were deployed. Following adjustments in the programme to provide for accelerated training in the United States, the number of police officers trained and deployed was expected to reach 6,000 by the end of February 1996.

Most demobilized IPSF members enrolled in the six-month retraining programme offered to former FADH personnel. In addition, steps were taken to set up a number of specialized security units in Haiti, and the creation of other services, such as coastal and border patrols, was under consideration. The report also noted that the UN trust fund for the Haitian National Police had received $3.2 million in contributions.

Improvements were made in the judicial and penal systems, with 6 of 15 prisons rehabilitated under the penal reform programme funded by UNDP and the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), and providing for a system of registration of prisoners, establishment of a penal administration system, training of prison wardens and renovation of certain detention centres. A national penitentiary administration was created in June, and a UN project to train prosecutors, in coordination with a USAID project, was launched on 3 July at the new Justice Academy, inaugurated that same day. The National Commission for Truth and Justice began to collect information on complaints of human rights violations during the period from 29 September 1991 to 15 October 1994 and to investigate certain cases.

The report further described development assistance to Haiti, provided by the UN system, multilateral donors and international financial institutions. It noted that a meeting of multilateral agencies and donors in Port-au-Prince on 11 and 12 May had identified commitments of $1.5 billion from October 1994 to the year 2000, and that aid disbursements of some $400 million had been made since October 1994 towards balance-of-payments support, emergency imports, governance and humanitarian assistance. A $50 million loan was granted by the World Bank for job-creation activities, while UNDP-funded programmes, expected to total $15 million in 1995, focused on governance, economic growth, poverty alleviation and environmental regeneration. A number of projects were financed by contributions from Governments and dealt with agricultural development, education, job creation, women in development, reintegration of refugees and displaced persons, and establishment of regional centres for coordination between UN agencies, NGOs and local civilian authorities. Joint activities by the Pan American Health Organization/World Health Organization concentrated on health programme development, including clean water supply, control of communicable diseases, immunization against preventable diseases and maternal and child health. In cooperation with the UN Children's Fund (UNICEF), a national campaign for the eradication of measles was launched; UNICEF also assisted with a campaign against childhood diarrhoea and acute respiratory infections, as well as with nutrition programmes. Among other UN bodies and agencies, the UN Population Fund implemented reproductive, health and family planning programmes; the World Food Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations assisted with agricultural development and food production; the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization carried out a literacy and women's education programme in rural areas; and the UN Capital Development Fund executed projects in the water and sanitation sector. The UN Volunteers programme for Haiti was relaunched in January 1995 and brought in more than 60 Volunteers, with a budget of some $2.6 million, focusing on community-led education projects. UNHCR assisted in the repatriation of some 20,400 Haitians from September 1994 to June 1995, with disbursements of about $500,000.

Pointing to the progress achieved by UNMIH in fulfilling its tasks, as well as to the need for sustaining a secure and stable environment in Haiti in order to promote a lasting restoration of democracy, the Secretary-General recommended extension of the Mission's mandate until the end of February 1996, with a view to completing it by that time.

Further report of the Secretary-General (November). On 6 November, the Secretary-General reported⁽²¹⁾ that UNMIH's strength had reached 5,958 military personnel, 780 civilian police, 184 international staff, 240 local staff, 28 UN Volunteers and 39 local interpreters. Three new base camps were established, completing deployment of the military component in all nine departments, and the boundaries of six operational sectors were modified at the end of August, while CIVPOL personnel were deployed in 19 locations, regrouped into five divisions. The Mission continued to carry out patrols, escort humanitarian relief convoys, provide logistical and security support for elections, serve as a backup to the Haitian authorities in law and order situations, and ensure the security of UNMIH personnel and property. Mission engineers carried out bridge reconstruction projects, while its civil affairs unit assisted with emergency medical training and worked on projects ranging from repairing infrastructure and rehabilitating prisons to improving the electric power distribution, maintenance and billing systems. It also initiated a clean-up of abandoned vehicles from the streets of Saint-Marc. As at 1 October, 332 small projects had been completed and 375 were in progress. CIVPOL provided specialized and general training to the Haitian National Police, tailored to meet local requirements. Although a CIVPOL officer was seriously wounded on 31 August, the threat to UNMIH was assessed as low. Mission-related issues continued to be discussed at regular meetings between its command, the Special Representative and President Aristide.

The report noted that the internal security situation was marked by a decline in violent crime but an increase in public unrest over economic issues. Vigilante groups had disbanded in many places and no political violence was reported. At the same time, growing popular discontent with the Government's programme of economic reforms led to the creation of an anti-privatization committee, by trade unions, public organizations and political parties, to coordinate protest activities. Following the resignation of the Prime Minister and interruption of the privatization process on 10 October, the President convened a special session of the National Assembly to approve the appointment of a new Prime Minister and to consider other outstanding issues. In the wake of the first round of elections, the President of the Provisional Electoral Council admitted to serious mistakes and resigned; despite renewed efforts by the Special Representative and the Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti to encourage the resumption of a dialogue between all parties involved, most opposition parties decided not to participate in the second round, reruns or complementary elections. Nevertheless, complementary legislative and municipal elections were held in 21 electoral districts on 13 August, and the second round of legislative elections and additional reruns took place on 17 September. Additional run-offs and complementary elections were held on 8 October. The polls resulted in a clear victory for the pro-Aristide Lavalas coalition.

Following the Government's assessment of security requirements, it was decided that the strength of the Haitian National Police would total 5,000 officers, all of whom had been recruited for training. By the beginning of October, more than 1,400 officers had been deployed and received essential equipment and supplies. The deployment of an additional 1,450 cadets was expected to be completed by November; however, considerable resources were required to provide them with the necessary equipment. Demobilization of IPSF personnel was carried out in parallel, but additional efforts were needed to ensure their reintegration into society. As for the judicial and penal systems, the programme for rehabilitation of penitentiaries continued to be implemented, with sanitary and medical services introduced in 8 of the 15 prisons, and a comprehensive assistance project for penitentiary reform was being finalized by the Government, UNDP and bilateral donors. In addition, some 420 members of the national penitentiary administration received initial training and assumed their responsibilities, while the Justice Academy trained more than 100 judges and prosecutors and 50 court security guards. The mandate of the National Commission for Truth and Justice, which had received more than 5,000 complaints of past human rights violations, was extended until 31 December 1995.

Further progress was made towards restoring macroeconomic stability, as evidenced by declining inflation, a relatively stable national currency, record-level fiscal revenues and an estimated growth of gross domestic product per capita for 1995. At the same time, serious challenges remained, highlighting the need for continuing international assistance. As at 31 August, total financial commitments for Haiti had reached $1.7 billion, of which some $650 million was expected to be disbursed by year's end. The commitments of the UN system amounted to $630 million, or 37 per cent, of total resources. The report further described specific assistance activities.

The Secretary-General noted that UNMIH had made substantial progress in fulfilling its mandate, and that it was reasonable to presume that it would be able to ensure an environment free of fear, violence and intimidation during presidential elections expected to be held in December 1995 or January 1996. Pointing to the expected completion of deployment of the Haitian National Police, he reiterated his appeal for contributions to the UN trust fund, and proposed a significant reduction in the strength of the CIVPOL component before the end of the year.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 16 November, the Security Council President made the following statement⁽²²⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 6 November 1995 on the United Nations Mission in Haiti (UNMIH), issued pursuant to resolution 1007(1995).

The Security Council commends UNMIH on the substantial progress it has made towards fulfilling its mandate, as set out in resolution 940(1994), to assist the Government of Haiti in sustaining a secure and stable environment, protecting international personnel and key installations, establishing the conditions for holding elections and creating a new professional police force. The Council commends the Secretary-General, his Special Representative, and other dedicated personnel of the United Nations who have contributed to this effort.

The Security Council also commends the Government of Haiti for holding local and legislative elections in a peaceful and non-violent environment, and notes the recent convocation of the special session of the National Assembly and its approval of the new Cabinet and plan of government. The Council notes with satisfaction the role of UNMIH and the joint United Nations/Organization of American States (OAS) International Civilian Mission (MICIVIH) in assisting the Haitian authorities with the electoral process.

The Security Council emphasizes that the continued engagement and commitment of all Haitian parties is necessary to the successful organization of free, fair and peaceful presidential elections. Consistent with the objectives of Security Council resolutions 940(1994) and 1007(1995), the Council welcomes the announcement by the provisional Electoral Council of presidential elections scheduled for 17 December 1995 that should allow a transition of power to a duly-elected successor before UNMIH's scheduled termination on 29 February 1996. The holding of presidential elections on schedule is a crucial step in consolidating long-lasting democracy in Haiti and ensuring a smooth transition of government. The Council calls on all political parties in Haiti to participate in the forthcoming elections and to contribute actively to maintain the secure and stable conditions necessary for their conduct.

The Security Council notes with concern recent instances of violence in Haiti and calls for respect for the rule of law, national reconciliation and cooperation.

The Government and people of Haiti bear the primary responsibility for Haiti's political, economic and social reconstruction. The Security Council underlines its firm support for the progress Haiti has already made in this regard. The Council emphasizes that a sustained commitment by the international community is indispensable for long-term peace and stability in Haiti. In this regard the Council encourages the Haitian Government to continue its dialogue with the international financial institutions.

The Security Council shares the view of the Secretary-General that the establishment of a professional police force capable of maintaining law and order throughout the country is central to Haiti's long-term stability. As the end of UNMIH's mandate approaches, attention should be focused on the selection and training of the Haitian National Police supervisors and on interested Member States providing the police force with the necessary equipment.

The Security Council also supports the efforts of the Secretary-General to streamline UNMIH, including the CIVPOL component.

The Security Council expresses its confidence that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, UNMIH and UN/OAS MICIVIH will continue to assist the Government and people of Haiti. It notes in particular the useful role played by the OAS and the valuable cooperation with Haiti of interested Member States on a bilateral basis and stresses the importance of continuing such cooperation. The Council requests that the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Friends of Haiti and the Haitian authorities, report to the Council, at the appropriate time, on next steps in the areas of security, law enforcement and humanitarian assistance, including by United Nations specialized agencies and programmes, which the international community may take to help Haiti achieve a long-term future that is secure, stable and free.

Meeting number. SC 3594.

Further developments. Prior to the December presidential elections, President Aristide affirmed that he would hand over power, as provided for in the Haitian Constitution, on 7 February 1996. The election results, announced on 23 December, showed that René Préval, President Aristide's Prime Minister in 1991 and the candidate of the ruling Lavalas Movement, had won, with 87.9 per cent of all votes.

The security situation deteriorated abruptly in the wake of an attack on 7 November against two National Assembly deputies, one of whom was killed and the other seriously injured. Violent demonstrations erupted in Les Cayes, necessitating the deployment of the Quick Reaction Force and joint Haitian National Police/UNMIH patrols for several days. Agitation quickly spread to other cities; roadblocks were set up and demonstrations, acts of arson, looting, weapons searches and vigilante justice occurred in various places. Following a meeting with President Aristide, the Secretary-General's Special Representative appealed to the Haitian people on 13 November not to take the law into their own hands, and the police, with UNMIH support, re-established control. At the same time, common crime remained a serious problem throughout the country and a major concern for the population. On the other hand, as the deployment of the National Police progressed, IPSF was abolished on 6 December by presidential decree.

In November and December, Haitian authorities signed a number of agreements for multilateral and bilateral project assistance. UNDP agreed to fund projects for strengthening the national Parliament and the Office of the Prime Minister, and sponsored a seminar for newly elected mayors to assist them in their work. An agreement was signed between Haiti, France, UNDP and USAID to co-finance a $2.9 million project for the rehabilitation of jails and the training of penitentiary personnel. From 22 to 24 November, 16 Latin American and Caribbean countries met in Port-au-Prince to negotiate 144 development cooperation projects in Haiti, which led to agreement on 22 projects totally financed and 73 projects partially financed.

Activities were also initiated for the transfer of responsibilities from UNMIH, a phased reduction of which began in October, to the Government of Haiti. The Trilateral Commission, comprising the Government, the United Nations and the Friends of the Secretary-General for Haiti, held its first meeting in Port-au-Prince on 16 November and agreed to set up joint working groups on transition-related issues, such as disarmament; information; justice, prisons and human rights; presidential security; election security; airports, seaports and coastguards; fire-fighting and urban disorders; and traffic.

Composition

On 16 January, the Secretary-General proposed⁽²³⁾ that UNMIH's military component be composed of contingents from Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bangladesh, Barbados, Canada, Djibouti, France, Guatemala, Guyana, Hungary, India, Ireland, Jamaica, New Zealand, Pakistan, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia and the United States; on 19 January, he added⁽²⁴⁾ to that list the Bahamas, Botswana, Costa Rica, Honduras, Nepal, the Netherlands and Slovakia. The Security Council's agreement with those proposals was communicated to the Secretary-General on 19 January⁽²⁵⁾ and 23 January,⁽²⁶⁾ respectively.

Financing

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (February/March). On 22 February, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁷⁾ that the budget of the UNMIH advance team from 1 August 1994 to 31 January 1995 totalled $5,902,500 gross ($5,707,100 net) and provided for up to 24 military observers, 19 contingent personnel, 40 civilian police and 51 international and 33 local civilian staff. The cost of maintaining the Mission from 1 February to 31 December 1995 was estimated at $272,966,400 gross ($268,301,000 net), providing for up to 6,000 troops, 900 civilian police, 220 international and 240 local civilian staff and 29 UN Volunteers.

Estimated expenditures from 23 September 1993 to 28 February 1995 amounted to $11,157,100 gross ($10,634,600 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $1,491,100 gross ($1,403,800 net). As at 31 January, outstanding contributions due from Member States totalled $2,090,369; at the same time, $2.7 million had been pledged to the trust fund for electoral assistance to Haiti.

The Secretary-General requested the appropriation of $5,946,700 gross ($5,749,600 net) and the assessment of $3,644,800 gross ($3,650,500 net) for the period from 1 July 1994 to 31 January 1995; action with regard to the unencumbered balance; the appropriation and assessment of $163,824,500 gross ($161,396,400 net) from 1 February to 31 July 1995; and commitment authority of $21,828,380 gross ($21,380,920 net) per month after 31 July, subject to UNMIH's continuation beyond that date.

In a 22 March report,⁽²⁸⁾ ACABQ recommended that the costs from 1 February to 31 December 1995 not exceed $257,556,300; it did not recommend assessment of the requested additional amount from 1 July 1994 to 31 January 1995 until review of a performance report for that period. It pointed out that its concurrence with commitments for March 1995 was being sought ex post facto, and reiterated its insistence that there be strict adherence to the established procedure for such concurrence, as well as to the UN financial regulations and rules. Noting that the Secretary-General's report had been submitted to it in an advance draft form and in only one language version, ACABQ trusted that the Secretary-General would, in future, ensure timely submission of comprehensive final documentation in all official UN languages.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

On 31 March, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/239.

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 862(1993) of 31 August 1993, in which the Council approved the dispatch of an advance team of no more than thirty persons to assess requirements and prepare for the possible dispatch of both the civilian police and the military assistance components of the proposed United Nations Mission in Haiti, and decided that the mandate of the advance team would expire within one month,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 867(1993) of 23 September 1993, in which the Council authorized the establishment and immediate dispatch of the Mission for a period of six months subject to the proviso that it would be extended beyond seventy-five days only upon a review by the Council to be based on a report from the Secretary-General indicating whether or not substantive progress had been made towards the implementation of the Governors Island Agreement of 3 July 1993 between the President of the Republic of Haiti and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of Haiti and the political accords contained in the New York Pact,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 940(1994) of 31 July 1994, in which the Council, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, authorized Member States to form a multinational force under unified command and control and, in that framework, to use all necessary means to facilitate the departure from Haiti of the military leadership, consistent with the Governors Island Agreement, the prompt return of the legitimately elected President and the restoration of the legitimate authorities of the Government of Haiti, and to establish and maintain a secure and stable environment that would permit implementation of the Governors Island Agreement, and approved the establishment of an advance team of no more than sixty persons, including a group of observers, to establish the appropriate means of coordination with the multinational force, to carry out the monitoring of the operations of the force and to assess requirements and to prepare for the deployment of the United Nations Mission in Haiti upon completion of the mission of the multinational force,

Recalling Security Council resolution 964(1994) of 29 November 1994, in which the Council authorized the Secretary-General to strengthen progressively the advance team of the Mission up to five hundred persons in order to further facilitate the planning of the Mission, identification of conditions required for the transition from the multinational force and preparation for the actual transition, as well as to make good offices available for the achievement of the purposes approved by the Council in resolution 940(1994),

Recalling also Security Council resolution 975(1995) of 30 January 1995, in which the Council authorized the Secretary-General to deploy up to six thousand troops and nine hundred civilian police officers, and extended the mandate of the Mission for a period of six months, to 31 July 1995,

Recalling further its decision 48/477 of 23 December 1993, its resolution 48/246 of 5 April 1994 and its decision 49/468 of 23 December 1994 on the financing of the Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, particularly as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, because of overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Mission in Haiti promptly and in full, which will contribute to the operational effectiveness of the Mission;

3. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

4. Takes note with concern of the relevant issues raised in the report of the Advisory Committee, and requests the Secretariat:

(a) To facilitate the work of the General Assembly and the Advisory Committee by providing adequate reports in a timely fashion, in all the official languages of the Organization, as well as by supplying expeditiously requested supporting information or clarification;

(b) To adhere strictly to the procurement rules and regulations;

(c) To seek prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee before entering into commitments under the provisions of section IV of General Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994;

5. Reaffirms resolution 49/233 A, in particular section II thereof regarding contingent-owned equipment, and takes note of the fact that the procedures used for budgeting for the reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment in the Mission do not prejudice the decision to be taken by the General Assembly on this matter in accordance with resolution 49/233 A;

6. Stresses the importance of the coordination between the United Nations Mission in Haiti, the International Civilian Mission in Haiti and all organizations and bodies involved in the implementation of the aid programme in Haiti, with a view to rationalizing the use of funds provided from voluntary and assessed contributions and avoiding duplication of activities and waste of resources;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

8. Decides to appropriate to the special account referred to in its decision 48/477 an amount of 44,200 United States dollars gross (42,500 dollars net), authorized and apportioned for the period from 1 to 31 July 1994 under the provisions of its resolution 48/246;

9. Decides also to appropriate to the special account a total amount of 5,902,500 dollars gross (5,707,100 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission for the period from 1 August 1994 to 31 January 1995, inclusive of the amount of 221,000 dollars gross (212,500 dollars net) authorized and apportioned for the period from 1 August to 31 December 1994 under the provisions of resolution 48/246, the amount of 1,347,000 dollars gross (1,217,900 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee for the period from 19 September to 18 December 1994 under the terms of General Assembly resolution 48/229 of 23 December 1993 and the reduced amount of 4,334,500 dollars gross (4,276,700 dollars net) authorized by the Advisory Committee for the period from 1 December 1994 to 31 January 1995 under the terms of resolution 48/229;

10. 11. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 151,545,100 dollars gross (149,579,700 dollars net), for the period from 1 February to 31 July 1995, among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1995, 1996 and 1997 as set out in Assembly resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994;

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (August/September). On 22 August, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁹⁾ that UNMIH's financial performance from 1 August 1994 to 31 January 1995 had resulted in an unencumbered balance of $1,982,600 gross ($1,915,700 net), from an appropriation of $5,902,500 gross ($5,707,100 net), of which, however, only $2,257,700 gross ($2,056,600 net) had been assessed. He estimated the Mission's cost from 1 August 1995 to 29 February 1996 at $152,011,500 gross ($149,680,400 net), providing for 6,000 contingent personnel, 900 civilian police, 207 international and 379 local civilian staff and 33 UN Volunteers.

As at 31 July, outstanding contributions due from Member States totalled $59,962,047; at the same time, $9.6 million had been contributed to the trust fund for electoral assistance to Haiti and $3.3 million to the trust fund for the international police monitoring programme and other specific purposes. The report also provided observations and comments on previous recommendations of ACABQ, including additional information requested by it in March.

The Secretary-General requested the assessment of $3,644,800 gross ($3,650,500 net) for the period from 1 August 1994 to 31 January 1995; action with regard to the unencumbered balance; the appropriation of $152,011,500 gross ($149,680,400 net) for the period from 1 August 1995 to 29 February 1996 and assessment of $130,809,260 gross ($128,840,360 net) for that period; and commitment authority of $21,182,900 gross ($20,849,900 net) per month after 29 February 1996, subject to UNMIH's continuation beyond that date.

In a 29 September report,⁽³⁰⁾ ACABQ noted that the monthly cost estimate for the period beyond 29 February 1996 was indicative and would be revised before that date. It recommended approval of the Secretary-General's other requests.

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Haiti and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1007(1995) of 31 July 1995, in which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission for an additional period of seven months, to 29 February 1996, in anticipation of the conclusion of the mandate at that time, as well as all previous Security Council resolutions on the Mission,

Recalling also its decision 48/477 of 23 December 1993 on the financing of the Mission and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was decision 50/407 B of 4 December 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. 2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, particularly as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, notably those troop-contributing Member States that have paid their assessed contributions in full, which bear an additional burden owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission promptly and in full;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement and taking into account the amount of 2,257,700 dollars gross (2,056,600 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/246 of 5 April 1994 and decision 49/468 of 23 December 1994, to apportion the additional amount of 3,644,800 dollars gross (3,650,500 dollars net) for the period from 1 August 1994 to 31 January 1995 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1994 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 3,030,730 dollars gross (3,035,470 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the scale of assessments for the year 1995 to be applied against the balance, that is, 614,070 dollars gross (615,030 dollars net), for the period from 1 to 31 January 1995 inclusive;

7. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, shall take into consideration the decrease in their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 5,700 dollars approved for the Mission for the period from 1 August 1994 to 31 January 1995 inclusive, 4,740 dollars being the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the balance, that is, 960 dollars, for the period from 1 to 31 January 1995;

8. Decides further that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Mission, there shall be set off against the apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 6 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 1,982,600 dollars gross (1,915,700 dollars net) for the period from 1 August 1994 to 31 January 1995;

International Civilian Mission to Haiti

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In a 29 June report⁽²⁶⁾ on the situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti, submitted in response to 1994 General Assembly requests,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the UN/OAS International Civilian Mission to Haiti had opened eight additional offices in 1995, for a total of 10, while its strength had been increased to 190 observers and other substantive staff, including 84 from OAS, and nine administrative staff, two of whom were contracted by OAS, representing 50 nationalities. The Mission continued to give priority to the monitoring and promotion of the observance of human rights.

The report pointed out that the number of human rights violations had fallen substantially since the deployment of the multinational force and the restoration of President Aristide and the constitutional Government. Different sectors of society had exercised their rights to freedom of expression, association and assembly, and internally displaced persons had begun to return to their homes. As most current violence was criminal in motivation, it fell outside the MICIVIH mandate. However, the Mission continued to investigate killings and other acts that might have a political context. The report referred to intimidation of political opponents, the murders of two political figures on 3 and 28 March, and killings of former FADH members, local officials or members of popular organizations. The Mission also continued to monitor compliance with legal procedures in cases of arrest and detention, and reported that torture and ill-treatment of people in custody had almost entirely ceased. It provided assistance in the organization and observance of elections (see above) and made efforts to ensure that they took place in an atmosphere unmarred by violence.

Activities to strengthen Haiti's human rights machinery included assistance to the National Commission for Truth and Justice in such areas as its operational aspects, working methods, work programme and budget. MICIVIH undertook regular visits to prisons and places of detention, whose conditions remained of acute concern, and cooperated in implementing a multilateral penal reform project; investigated the judicial status of detainees and promoted the rapid processing of their cases; and worked closely with Haitian NGOs in fostering human rights education. The Mission continued to provide medical assistance to victims of past human rights violations, and was involved in a network to promote psychiatric treatment for severely traumatized victims of torture. Following the deployment of UNMIH, mechanisms were put in place to facilitate coordination and exchange of information between the two Missions at all levels.

Referring to his agreement with the Secretary-General of OAS, as well as to President Aristide's request of 23 June, the Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly extend the mandate of MICIVIH's UN component until 7 February 1996.

General Assembly resolution 49/27 B

12 July 1995 Meeting 105 Adopted without vote

42-nation draft (A/49/L.67/Rev.1 & Rev.1/Add.1); agenda item 34.

Further report of the Secretary-General (October). On 12 October, the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁶⁾ that the number of MICIVIH regional offices had increased to 12, while its strength stood at 188 staff, of which 88 were from OAS, representing 46 nationalities. He noted that the human rights situation in Haiti had improved considerably, with the number of human rights violations remaining low, although there were sporadic reports of ill-treatment of detainees and of abuse of power by State agents. However, the Mission had examined some 20 killings since January 1995, where the victims appeared to have been targeted for assassination, but was not able to determine the motives for any of them. Several cases were raised with the authorities concerning the use of excessive force by IPSF and the National Police, and several cases of abuse of power by off-duty police officers were also under investigation. The Mission continued to monitor cases of summary "justice" by local people, the number of which had peaked at 50 in March and subsequently dropped to less than 10 in August, as well as their possible links to vigilante groups.

While the systematic use of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment had ceased, the Mission raised with the authorities several alleged cases of ill-treatment of detainees by IPSF officers, including three cases of beating, most of which were reported as being under investigation. The report further described Mission activities in monitoring possible violations of the rights to freedom of expression and association, and the right to justice for victims of past human rights abuses, as well as cases of arbitrary or illegal arrests and detention. It noted a gradual improvement in the administration of criminal justice but pointed to persistent problems in that area, including excessive delays in the processing of cases and extremely poor conditions of detention. Of a total 1,703 prisoners in Haiti as at the beginning of September, 1,504 were awaiting trial and only 199 had been convicted. The right to defence was not always upheld, and, having observed a number of recent jury trials, the Mission considered that criminal proceedings fell short of basic standards for a fair trial in most cases. In addition, the conduct of pre-trial investigations was impeded by a serious lack of resources.

MICIVIH continued technical cooperation activities for the reform of the judicial system, including assistance in the preparation of legal texts, improvement of the prison system and provision of training. It participated in the training of National Police cadets and penitentiary administration officials; continued regular visits to detention centres to monitor their conditions; assisted the National Commission for Truth and Justice in collecting information on past human rights abuses; monitored the conduct of elections; ensured the provision of medical assistance to victims of human rights violations, certified their medical condition during investigation and undertook a study on psychological effects of such violations; cooperated with local human rights and popular organizations; and disseminated information on human rights and its activities through, inter alia, the MICIVIH News monthly newsletter, the first issue of which had been released in September.

A series of recommendations was being prepared by the Mission for submission to the Government, aimed at strengthening the criminal justice system, improving the treatment of detainees and the conduct of law enforcement officials, as well as carrying out penal reform, and urging the Government to ratify international human rights instruments and to create an ombudsman institution for human rights protection. MICIVIH was also considering a proposal for an international conference on human rights and the administration of criminal justice in Haiti.

The Secretary-General stated that he had had consultations with the OAS Secretary-General who had expressed readiness for a continued MICIVIH presence after 7 February 1996. Accordingly, the Secretary-General intended to recommend an extension of the Mission's mandate upon receipt of a request to that effect from the Government of Haiti. Should that be the case, he recommended that the terms of reference be adjusted to place greater emphasis on technical cooperation with the Government in the area of institution-building, as well as on the promotion and protection of human rights.

47-nation draft (A/50/L.53/Rev.1); agenda item 38.

In a 5 July statement⁽³⁷⁾ to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General estimated requirements for maintaining MICIVIH from 7 July 1995 to 7 February 1996 at $13,754,100 net of staff assessment, including $11,483,700 for the period from 8 July to 31 December 1995, while estimated expenditures from 1 January 1994 to 7 July 1995 amounted to $11,966,800. Estimated requirements for 1994-1995 totalled $23,450,500, which necessitated an additional appropriation of $19,463,400 for the biennium.

In an oral report to the Fifth Committee,⁽³⁸⁾ ACABQ stated that there was no immediate need to appropriate additional resources for the Mission. On 11 July, the Fifth Committee decided⁽³⁹⁾ to inform the General Assembly that, should it extend the Mission's mandate, total costs would not exceed $23,450,500 and no additional appropriation would be required at the current stage.

According to revised estimates⁽⁴⁰⁾ under the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997, submitted to the Fifth Committee on 13 November, the amount to be appropriated by the Assembly for maintaining MICIVIH until 7 February 1996 totalled $2,270,400. In a 1 December report,⁽⁴¹⁾

ACABQ recommended reductions in that amount and the appropriation of $2,042,897 net of staff assessment ($278,200).

Other questions relating to the Americas

Cuba-United States

By a 3 May letter⁽¹⁾ to the Secretary-General, Cuba transmitted a memorandum by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, containing a legal and political analysis of the implications of the so-called Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity Act (the Helms/Burton bill). The proposed legislation, under consideration in the United States Congress, had the stated purpose of strengthening "international sanctions" against Cuba, when, Cuba maintained, the only existing sanctions were the United States unilateral economic, commercial and financial blockade that most other nations had opposed; the legislation in question represented a new set of coercive measures targeting third countries and aimed at disrupting their trade and investment relations with Cuba.

According to the memorandum, the bill would authorize bringing lawsuits before United States courts with regard to the property nationalized in Cuba and would require a United States administrative agency to certify restitution or compensation claims by Cuban-Americans for espousal in future dealings with Cuba. Some provisions would entail exclusion of sugar imports from countries purchasing sugar from Cuba; lawsuits in United States courts against third-country nationals and prohibition of credit to, and other retaliation measures against, third-country companies trading with or investing in Cuba; interference with international financial institutions; and attempted coercion of the independent States of the former Soviet Union.

The memorandum emphasized that United States espousal of property claims would violate international law and constituted an encroachment on Cuba's sovereignty, and underscored the willingness of the Cuban Government to negotiate the claims issue with the United States, pointing out that it had reached negotiated settlements with all other countries whose citizens' properties in Cuba had been nationalized. At the same time, the Helms/Burton bill would complicate immensely any effort to normalize relations between the two countries and its implications must be viewed with grave concern, the memorandum said.

On 26 May, Cuba communicated⁽²⁾ a document entitled "Renewed attempts to tighten the United States economic embargo against Cuba and the truth about the Cuban nationalizations". In reference to the Helms/Burton bill, Cuba stated that nationalizations had been carried out in full compliance with principles set forth by the General Assembly in connection with the right of countries engaged in a process of social transformation to nationalize foreign property. It also listed settlement agreements between Cuba and other countries and noted that, since the Second World War, the United States had negotiated 10 lump-sum settlement agreements concerning American-owned property nationalized in other countries.

On 25 August, Cuba transmitted⁽³⁾ a decision adopted on 13 July by the Council of the Latin American Economic System, which rejected the draft law entitled "Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity Act of 1995" of the United States Congress, considering that it violated international law, and called for the lifting of the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States against Cuba.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in its 1994 resolution on the necessity of ending the United States embargo against Cuba,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a 20 September report with later addendum,⁽⁵⁾ containing information from 48 States and six UN agencies and organs on their implementation of the resolution, by which the Assembly had called on States to refrain from unilateral application of economic and trade measures against Cuba and urged them to repeal or invalidate such measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/10.

Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba

The General Assembly,

Determined to encourage strict compliance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, among other principles, the sovereign equality of States, non-intervention and non-interference in their internal affairs and freedom of international trade and navigation, which are also enshrined in many international legal instruments,

Recalling the statements of the heads of State or Government at the Ibero-American Summits concerning the need to eliminate the unilateral application of economic and trade measures by one State against another which affect the free flow of international trade,

Taking note of Decision 360 adopted on 13 July 1995 by the Twenty-first Council of the Latin American Economic System, held at the ministerial level at San Salvador, which urged that the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba be lifted,

Concerned about the continued promulgation and application by Member States of laws and regulations, the extraterritorial effects of which affect the sovereignty of other States and the legitimate interests of entities or persons under their jurisdiction, as well as the freedom of trade and navigation,

Recalling its resolutions 47/19 of 24 November 1992, 48/16 of 3 November 1993 and 49/9 of 26 October 1994,

Concerned that, since the adoption of its resolutions 47/19, 48/16 and 49/9, further measures of that nature aimed at strengthening and extending the economic, commercial and financial embargo against Cuba continue to be promulgated and applied, and concerned also about the adverse effects of such measures on the Cuban people and on Cuban nationals living in other countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 20 September 1995 on the implementation of resolution 49/9;

2. Reiterates its call to all States to refrain from promulgating and applying laws and measures of the kind referred to in the preamble to the present resolution in conformity with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law which, inter alia, reaffirm the freedom of trade and navigation;

3. Once again urges States that have and continue to apply such laws and measures to take the necessary steps to repeal or invalidate them as soon as possible in accordance with their legal regime;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba".

General Assembly resolution 50/10

Speaking prior to the vote, Cuba pointed out that the United States-imposed embargo against it had had extraterritorial effects on third States as well, and that the embargo itself constituted an attempt by the United States to decide the system of government and social structures that should exist in Cuba. In response, the United States reiterated its position that the question of the embargo was a bilateral issue and that it had the right to determine its bilateral trading relationships; the objective of United States policy towards Cuba was a peaceful transition to a democratic system in which human rights were fully observed.

Universal Congress on the Panama Canal

On 18 August, France, Panama and the United States requested⁽⁶⁾ the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's fiftieth session a supplementary item entitled "Universal Congress on the Panama Canal". An explanatory memorandum accompanying the request stated that 7 September 1997 would mark the twentieth anniversary of the signing of the Panama Canal Treaty and the Treaty concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal, which provided for the transfer of control over the Canal to Panama on 31 December 1999. In that context, Panama had decided to convene a Universal Congress on the Panama Canal in September 1997, to examine the Canal's role in the twenty-first century and to promote sustainable development of the uses and resources of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, as well as the rational exploitation and development of the Canal basin and coastal areas. Annexed to the memorandum was a draft resolution calling for support for the organization of the Universal Congress.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/12.

Universal Congress on the Panama Canal

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/28 of 6 December 1994 on the law of the sea, 49/99 of 19 December 1994 on international trade and development and 49/131 of 19 December 1994 on the declaration of 1998 as International Year of the Ocean, and resolutions 2.5 of 16 November 1993, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-seventh session, and 1994/48 of the Economic and Social Council of 29 July 1994, both on the International Year of the Ocean,

Bearing in mind that on 7 September 1977 Mr. Jimmy Carter, President of the United States of America, and General Omar Torrijos, Head of Government of the Republic of Panama, signed in Washington the Treaty concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal and the Panama Canal Treaty, known as the Torrijos-Carter treaties, which stipulate that, at noon on 31 December 1999, the Canal, including all improvements, is to come under the control of the Republic of Panama, which shall assume total responsibility for its management, operation and maintenance, Emphasizing the significance of the Washington Declaration, signed on 7 September 1977 by the heads of State, heads of Government and representatives of the American republics, which recognizes "the importance for the hemisphere, for trade and for world shipping of the agreements designed to ensure the accessibility and continued neutrality of the Panama Canal",

Welcoming the plans of the Government of Panama to hold a Universal Congress on the Panama Canal in Panama City in September 1997, with the participation of Governments, international bodies, public and private academic institutions, maritime users and international shipping companies, to examine jointly the role which the Panama Canal should play in the twenty-first century,

Underlining the fact that the International Congress for Study of the Interocean Canal (Congrès international d'études du canal interocéanique) was convened by the Société de géographie de Paris, met from 15 to 29 May 1879 in the French capital, under the presidency of Count Ferdinand de Lesseps, builder of the Suez Canal, and culminated in the resolution that the canal should be built along the route traced between the Gulf of Limón on the Atlantic Ocean and the Bay of Panama on the Pacific Ocean,

Cognizant of the fact that, in keeping with the spirit of a new global alliance for sustainable development, it is necessary to formulate a balanced, integrated approach to environmental, trade and development issues,

Convinced, therefore, that the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal will promote international cooperation towards ensuring an orderly, sustainable development of the uses and resources of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and the rational exploitation and development of the Canal watershed and coastal areas, bearing in mind that Panama's coastline on the two oceans stretches for 2,988.3 kilometres in all, of which 1,700.6 kilometres are on the Pacific Ocean and 1,287.7 are on the Caribbean Sea,

Noting with appreciation the progress of the Tripartite Commission, consisting of the Republic of Panama, the United States of America and Japan, in the plans for the construction in the Isthmus of Panama of a sea-level canal or the enlargement of the present lock canal,

Reaffirming its resolution 31/142 of 17 December 1976, on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Amphictyonic Congress of Panama, in which it recalled that Simon Bolívar, the Liberator, referred on several occasions to the need for a possible opening of a canal in Panama, which "will shorten distances throughout the world, strengthen commercial ties" between the continents and promote the exchange of products "from the four corners of the globe",

Noting with satisfaction that by its resolution 49/131, 1998 was proclaimed International Year of the Ocean, during which year the Lisbon World Exposition is to be held,

Emphasizing that the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal has among its priority aims the promotion of international cooperation with a view to achieving an orderly, sustainable development of the uses and resources of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans,

1. Supports the initiative of the Government of Panama in convening the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal, with the participation of Governments, international bodies, public and private academic institutions, maritime users and international shipping companies, to examine jointly the role which the Panama Canal should play in the twenty-first century;

2. Requests Member States to assist generously in this undertaking;

3. Urges the competent organs, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, in particular, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme and the International Maritime Organization, to study the possibility of providing assistance from within existing resources for the organization of the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the Universal Congress on the Panama Canal and expresses the hope that its results will contribute to the growth of world trade and to sustained economic growth and sustainable development throughout the world;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Universal Congress on the Panama Canal".

Chapter IV

Asia and the Pacific

In 1995, UN efforts to secure peace for the vast region of Asia and the Pacific continued to be marred by continuing conflicts in Afghanistan and Tajikistan, the lingering consequences of wars between Iraq and Kuwait and between Iran and Iraq, and tensions relating to the Korean peninsula and to Jammu and Kashmir.

Ways to achieve national reconciliation in Afghanistan and in Tajikistan were sought by the UN during the year. Fighting in Afghanistan continued among three major armed factions controlling different parts of the country. The UN Special Mission to Afghanistan aimed to bring about the establishment of a representative and broad-based authoritative council and the transfer of power from the current President. A Protocol between the Tajik Government and its opposition, on fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in that country, was signed on 17 August 1995; its implementation was to be monitored by the UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan.

Matters centred on Iraq were dominant among UN concerns in the region. The United Nations maintained sanctions and an oil embargo against that country, seeking its compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions. The UN Special Commission on Iraqi disarmament and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued to monitor Iraq's ability to develop and produce nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and means for their delivery. During the year, it was acknowledged by Iraq for the first time that it had carried out an extensive biological weapons programme and developed and tested radiological weapons. The Security Council in April authorized a limited import of oil and petroleum products from Iraq and the use of revenue resulting from those imports to meet humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) made attempts in 1995 to dismantle the mechanism created under the 1953 Armistice Agreement between it and the Republic of Korea. IAEA sought to ensure DPRK compliance with the safeguards agreement in implementation of the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and to implement verification measures pursuant to the Agreed Framework between the DPRK and the United States concerning the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula.

In 1995, the General Assembly acted to settle matters relating to the liquidation of the UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia and to the special account of the UN Military Liaison Team in Cambodia. The Secretary-General kept abreast of developments in the relations between India and Pakistan and offered his assistance in facilitating their search for a lasting solution to the issue of Jammu and Kashmir. The UN Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan continued to monitor observance of the cease-fire between the two countries, last agreed to in 1971.

In December, the General Assembly recognized and supported the status of permanent neutrality declared by Turkmenistan.

East Asia

Korean question

Situation in 1995

In a 16 January 1995 letter⁽¹⁾ to the Secretary-General, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea stated, inter alia, that the new situation after the cold war demanded the establishment of a new peace arrangement on the Korean peninsula, and noted that the issue of such a peace mechanism should be resolved between it and the United States. The DPRK said that the United Nations should dissolve the United Nations Command (UNC), which had been established illegally and neither belonged to nor obeyed instructions from the United Nations, so that a favourable atmosphere for a new peace arrangement could be created.

On 23 February, the United States, on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to a 1950 Security Council resolution,⁽²⁾ submitted a special report⁽³⁾ of UNC on the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement.⁽⁴⁾ The report concerned the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission (NNSC), set up under the Armistice Agreement and composed of four senior officers from neutral countries nominated by the UNC Commander-in-Chief and jointly by the Korean People's Army (KPA) Supreme Commander and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers (CPV).

On 23 January, it was reported, the NNSC member from Poland—a neutral nation nominated by KPA/CPV—was informed that KPA would withdraw all support to the Polish camp in the Korean demilitarized zone (DMZ) effective 28 February, including rations, medical and dental care, transportation, utilities and physical security, which would prevent the Polish delegation from performing its duties and force it to leave the camp. On 9 February, the Polish officers were informed that transportation support to their activities would be withdrawn as of 10 February, and that they would be considered "illegal foreigners in the DMZ" after 28 February. As a result, the Polish member was unable to attend the NNSC weekly plenary session on 14 February; it was the first time in 42 years that such an incident had occurred.

UNC communicated to KPA its concern over that unilateral action, taken in violation of the Armistice Agreement, and pointed out that any changes to the Agreement had to be agreed upon by all signatories and that the UNC Commander-in-Chief had not agreed to any change regarding NNSC. UNC also requested that KPA/CPV nominate a neutral nation to replace the former Czechoslovakia, which had withdrawn its delegation from NNSC in 1993, following its division into the Czech Republic and Slovakia;⁽⁵⁾ however, no response had been received. The report underscored the high value of NNSC's continued participation in the Korean armistice system, as it provided an alternate channel of communications between the two sides, a credible neutral perspective in the resolution of incidents, and an important moderating influence in Panmunjom, the joint security area, which served to alleviate tension.

In a 28 February statement⁽⁶⁾ by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, transmitted on 7 March, the DPRK, in reference to the withdrawal of the Polish delegation from NNSC, said that NNSC had lost its purpose and that Poland's withdrawal had been necessitated by the Commission's unproductive position and was indispensable for the establishment of a solid peace mechanism on the Korean peninsula. The DPRK also accused the United States of unilaterally abrogating the Armistice Agreement's provisions related to NNSC.

In a 5 June letter,⁽⁷⁾ the DPRK called for the dissolution of UNC and the replacement of the Armistice Agreement with a peace agreement, as stipulated by a 1975 General Assembly resolution.⁽⁸⁾ On 6 July, the DPRK communicated⁽⁹⁾ a 29 June memorandum by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, stating that the establishment of a new peace mechanism in place of the outdated armistice system should not be further delayed, and accusing the United States of systematic violations of the Armistice Agreement as well as of ignoring the DPRK's proposal for the establishment of a new mechanism.

Armistice Agreement

Violations

On 9 May, the United States submitted a report⁽¹⁰⁾ on UNC activities in 1994. The report, provided annually, noted that no serious armistice violations had been observed in the DMZ during that year; nevertheless, UNC had dispatched joint observer teams to its guard posts along the DMZ on 56 occasions, while KPA continued to refuse to participate in the investigations proposed by UNC. The military demarcation line between the DPRK and the Republic of Korea had been crossed in Panmunjom several times: the incidents involved three United States delegations visiting the DPRK; the return of two KPA soldiers rescued at sea by the Republic of Korea Navy; and the return of a United States Army warrant officer and of the remains of the other crewman whose helicopter had mistakenly entered DPRK airspace and was shot down. UNC also provided administrative and security assistance to the political talks and other contacts between the two sides in Panmunjom. In addition, the decision of the Republic of Korea to lift its ban on business investment in the DPRK, announced on 7 November 1994, brought into question the issue of granting transit permission to private citizens travelling between the two countries.

The recovery and return of UNC Korean War remains proceeded on the basis of the 1993 agreement on remains-related matters,⁽¹¹⁾ which served to regularize cooperation on remains-recovery operations and establish a KPA-UNC Remains Working Group to locate, exhume, repatriate and identify the remains of UNC personnel located north of the military demarcation line. Between 30 November 1993 and 13 September 1994, KPA had returned 145 sets of remains, bringing the total so far to 208.

Other developments

The UNC report⁽¹⁰⁾ further described events related to the functioning of the armistice mechanism, particularly the Military Armistice Commission (MAC) and NNSC (see above). It recalled that in March 1991, having rejected the credentials of a UNC MAC senior member from the Republic of Korea,⁽¹²⁾ KPA had suspended its participation in MAC plenary sessions and communications at the senior level, as well as its reports to MAC and NNSC on compliance with the non-introduction of reinforcing arms and military personnel into the Korean peninsula. On 28 April 1994, KPA decided to recall its remaining members and staff personnel from MAC, to cease participation in MAC activities and to no longer recognize the UNC MAC as a counterpart. It also announced its intention to withdraw the Polish delegation to NNSC (see also above) and to send a new team appointed by the KPA Supreme Commander to make contact with the United States military regarding pending military issues, including a new "durable peace-ensuring system" to replace MAC. Notwithstanding UNC's rejection of that unilateral attempt to dismantle MAC and NNSC, KPA maintained its decision and notified the Polish NNSC delegation to withdraw from the DPRK. It reaffirmed, however, that it would abide by the Agreement's provisions not related to MAC.

On 1 September 1994, the report said, KPA rejected the credentials of the new UNC MAC Secretary. On the same day, China announced its decision to recall the CPV delegation from MAC; the delegation left the DPRK in December. In November, the DPRK informed Poland that its nomination as an NNSC member had been terminated. In addition, UNC's continued calls on KPA to nominate a successor to the former Czechoslovakia in NNSC met with no response.

The report stated that KPA attempts to end both MAC and NNSC, thus chipping away at the basic foundation of the armistice architecture, had to be opposed by the international community, as their dissolution could lead to an increase in minor incidents, with the potential to escalate into a more serious situation. It called on both sides to preserve the existing means of communication through MAC, which was vital to maintaining the armistice until a more durable peace was attained. UNC also affirmed that it would continue its efforts to implement the Armistice Agreement and thereby contribute to sustaining a stable environment and achieving the ultimate goal of a durable peace on the peninsula.

Compliance with non-proliferation and safeguards agreements

In 1995, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued its efforts to ensure full compliance by the DPRK with the agreement between that country and IAEA for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (safeguards agreement), in force since 1992.⁽¹²⁾ In accordance with a 1994 statement⁽¹³⁾ by the Security Council President, IAEA also monitored developments related to the Agreed Framework between the United States and the DPRK, reached in 1994⁽¹³⁾ to resolve the nuclear issue on the Korean peninsula.

IAEA communication (May). On 2 May, the IAEA Director General transmitted⁽¹⁴⁾ his report, which had been submitted to the Agency's Board of Governors in March. The report described discussions held in the DPRK in November 1994,⁽¹⁵⁾ stating that an IAEA technical team had again visited that country, between 21 and 28 January 1995, to discuss outstanding issues as well as the implementation of agreed verification measures performed at facilities subject to freeze under the Agreed Framework.

The DPRK continued to make clear that it viewed acceptance of measures for monitoring the freeze as being only in the context of the Agreed Framework, not under the safeguards agreement. While accepting containment and surveillance measures, it declined level and density measurements which IAEA considered necessary, as well as measurements relevant to assessing the total amount of plutonium in the spent fuel from the DPRK's 5-MWe Experimental Nuclear Power Plant. The report pointed out that such measurements had to be taken during the transfer of the spent fuel for storage, planned for the second quarter of 1995. The technical team also visited the manufacturing site of nuclear graphite blocks for use in the 50-MWe reactor core, and was informed that the production of reactor-related equipment and components other than some of the graphite blocks had stopped long ago.

The report clarified that issues under discussion with the DPRK concerned only verification of the freeze of activities at relevant nuclear facilities and had not yet addressed the steps deemed necessary to verify the accuracy and completeness of the DPRK's initial inventory of nuclear material subject to safeguards. Those issues were to be considered at further technical talks. In the meantime, IAEA continued its inspector presence at facilities in Nyongbyon; in January, the DPRK accepted the designation of 10 additional inspectors, bringing the total to 20.

IAEA communication (October). On 10 October, the IAEA Director General provided⁽¹⁶⁾ further information on Agency activities in the DPRK, stating that a further round of technical discussions had taken place from 12 to 18 September, during which the DPRK agreed to measurements of irradiated fuel rods in storage at the 5-MWe experimental reactor, but declined measures to assess the total amount of plutonium in the spent fuel. No agreement was reached about the installation of additional monitoring equipment at nuclear waste tanks in the reprocessing plant, and no discussion was held on IAEA requirements for the verification of the initial DPRK inventory of nuclear material; however, the DPRK indicated its intention to study the requirements and to discuss them at a future meeting. It also agreed to proceed with implementation measures delayed since January. The Director General noted that, in the meantime, inspections had been carried out since March at three nuclear facilities that were not subject to the freeze, and that IAEA inspectors continued their presence in the Nyongbyon area and had been able to observe the maintenance work at the 5-MWe Experimental Nuclear Power Plant.

Further developments. Subsequent to the September discussions, the DPRK raised new objections to implementation measures which would enable IAEA inspectors to photograph the new process line and other areas of the Radiochemical Laboratory, the DPRK's reprocessing plant. The issue of nuclear waste monitoring also remained to be resolved. In the meantime, IAEA requested the DPRK to introduce minor but essential modifications to the design of the storage racks for cans containing spent fuel, so that the cans could be effectively sealed in the racks under water.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 November, the General Assembly, by resolution 50/9, adopted in connection with its consideration of the IAEA report (see PART FOUR, Chapter VI), expressed concern over the DPRK's continuing non-compliance with the safeguards agreement and urged it to cooperate fully with IAEA in the agreement's implementation and to take all steps the Agency might deem necessary to preserve, intact, all information relevant to verifying the accuracy and completeness of the initial DPRK report on the inventory of nuclear material subject to safeguards until that country's full compliance with the agreement.

South Asia

India-Pakistan

In his August 1995 report on the work of the Organization,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General noted that India and Pakistan had affirmed their commitment, in accordance with the 1972 Simla Agreement,⁽²⁾ to resolve peacefully a long-standing dispute over Jammu and Kashmir, which was first inscribed on the agenda of the United Nations in 1948,⁽³⁾ and to respect the cease-fire line established in 1971.⁽⁴⁾ However, increasing incidents of violence in Jammu and Kashmir had further aggravated relations between the two countries and highlighted the urgency of seeking a political solution through a meaningful dialogue. The Secretary-General noted that, during his visit to India and Pakistan in September 1994, he had reiterated to both Governments his readiness to render assistance in facilitating their search for a lasting solution.

Communications. On 16 May, Morocco transmitted⁽⁵⁾ a statement adopted at a 15 May meeting in New York of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) Contact Group on Jammu and Kashmir, deploring the desecration and destruction of a Muslim shrine, an adjacent mosque and an institution of learning in Jammu and Kashmir, and urging the Secretary-General to take cognizance of the threat to regional peace and security posed by the deteriorating situation there. The Group appealed to the Security Council President to take note of the situation and to bring it to the Council's attention.

On 16 October, Morocco communicated⁽⁶⁾ the final documents adopted at the annual coordination meeting of the Foreign Ministers of OIC member States, held in New York on 2 October. The Ministers, inter alia, expressed concern at the deteriorating situation in Jammu and Kashmir and reaffirmed the commitment of OIC to promote a peaceful political settlement of that dispute on the basis of UN resolutions.

UN Military Observer Group

In 1995, the UN Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP), established in 1949 in accordance with a 1948 Security Council resolution,⁽⁷⁾ continued to monitor the cease-fire in Jammu and Kashmir, as mandated by the Council in 1951.⁽⁸⁾ As at 31 July, the Group comprised 40 military observers. It continued to be financed under the regular UN budget, its costs being assessed as part of each biennial programme budget.

South-East Asia

Cambodia

In his August 1995 report on the work of the Organization,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the broad cooperation between the Government of Cambodia, the United Nations and the international community had brought further progress to that country during the past year. In May, the Secretary-General's Special Envoy, Marrack Goulding, visited Cambodia and negotiated an agreement on the continued functioning of the UN Centre for Human Rights in the capital of Phnom Penh and on measures to improve communication between the Centre and the Government. UN activities in Cambodia continued to be coordinated by the Secretary-General's Representative, Benny Widoyo, whose mandate was extended during the year, with the agreement of the Security Council.

The liquidation phase of the UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), which had concluded its mandate in 1993,⁽⁷⁾ continued throughout 1995. During the year, the General Assembly took action with regard to UNTAC's liquidation, as well as to the Special Account for the UN Military Liaison Team in Cambodia, which had ceased its operations in 1994.⁽⁸⁾

UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia

Report of the Secretary-General (February).

On 23 February, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁹⁾ on the final disposition of UNTAC assets, which was carried out in accordance with a 1993 General Assembly resolution.⁽¹⁰⁾ He noted that the assets, with a total original inventory value of $232,010,300, had been either transferred to other UN missions and offices, donated to the Government of Cambodia, sold commercially, classified as stolen or written off. The total value of assets transferred stood at $154,159,600. The residual value of assets donated, estimated originally at $58,018,900, amounted to $38,249,400, while that of assets sold, valued initially at $8,113,300, totalled $6,074,600. Assets lost owing to theft amounted to $8,089,700, and those written off totalled $3,628,800.

The report provided a breakdown of the final disposition of UNTAC property by category of assets and by method of disposition, as well as a graphical presentation of its distribution and the rationale used in developing depreciation scales. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly note the final disposition at its resumed forty-ninth session.

Report of ACABQ (March). The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) considered in 1995 the Secretary-General's 1994 report⁽¹¹⁾ on UNTAC's financial performance for the period ending 30 June 1994, as well as his February 1995 report on the final disposition of UNTAC property.

In its 21 March report,⁽¹²⁾ ACABQ noted that outstanding contributions due from Member States totalled $78,192,615 as at 28 February, including $4,548,398 for the UN Advance Mission in Cambodia and $73,644,217 for UNTAC, and that the outstanding loan to UNTAC from the Peace-keeping Reserve Fund amounted to $18 million. It was also informed that full and final reimbursement had been made to troop-contributing States up to 31 December 1993, and that UNTAC's unliquidated obligations for the period from 1 November 1991 to 31 December 1995 stood at $65,535,900. It revised the requested amount to be credited as income for that period to the UNTAC Special Account from $12,969,830 to $14,462,709. ACABQ further noted that the amount requested for appropriation and assessment to meet UNTAC's additional requirements was based on preliminary projections, and that the team for the liquidation of UNTAC assets had been redeployed and continued operating from New York. In that regard, ACABQ recommended that requirements for the team be met from existing resources at Headquarters, and was of the opinion that no additional appropriation was necessary at that time. It was of the same opinion in respect of the requested assessment of the amount already appropriated by the General Assembly, pointing out that the Secretary-General could report to the Assembly as necessary prior to the final closing of accounts on the need for an additional appropriation and/or assessment.

As for the final disposition of assets, ACABQ noted that the value of stolen property was higher than previously reported, that a number of thefts had occurred during the withdrawal of UNTAC's military component in 1993, and that efforts to recover stolen assets had not been successful. It emphasized the need for full disclosure of property lost due to theft, and requested that the Secretary-General include information on all losses of peace-keeping assets over the past three years in his comprehensive report on the administration and management of UNTAC, requested by the Assembly in 1994.⁽¹³⁾ It was also of the opinion that the Secretary-General should make recommendations on measures to improve the security and protection of UN property in all missions, and recommended that the report, due in March but not yet received, be submitted to the Assembly at its fiftieth session.

ACABQ further expressed its intention to discuss a number of problems relating to procurement during its consideration of that report, and to review the transfer of assets to other missions, including from UNTAC, when considering the Secretary-General's report on the feasibility of procedures for valuation and transfer of costs for assets to be redeployed from a peace-keeping operation during its liquidation phase to other missions or UN bodies, requested by the Assembly in its 1994 resolution on administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of UN peace-keeping operations.⁽¹⁴⁾

On 20 July, the General Assembly, by decision 49/492, deferred consideration of the item on financing and liquidation of UNTAC to its fiftieth session, and reiterated its request for a comprehensive evaluation of all aspects of the administration and management of the operation, to be submitted by the Secretary-General at that session.

Report of the Board of Auditors (August). By a 2 August note,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Board of Auditors on the liquidation audit of UNTAC, submitted in accordance with a 1994 Assembly resolution.⁽⁸⁾ The audit, which covered the period from 1 October 1993 to 30 June 1994, examined planning for the liquidation process, disposition of non-expendable property, establishment of fair value of other assets and liabilities, maintenance of financial records during the liquidation phase, and reporting on the liquidation results. The report provided detailed findings and recommendations for corrective actions pertaining to both UNTAC and the liquidation of peace-keeping operations in general.

The Board recommended that: a number of investigations be carried out with regard to particular aspects of UNTAC's liquidation; the review of outstanding property write-off cases be expedited so as to determine accurately the value of those assets; and consideration be given to expediting the discharge of UNTAC's outstanding obligations to avoid additional costs associated with a prolonged liquidation process. Other recommendations dealt with the establishment of standard procedures for the transfer of assets, physical verification of a mission's assets and liabilities prior to its liquidation, and reporting on the costs of assets transferred between missions (for details, see PART TWO, Chapter I). In view of the large number of unresolved issues, the Board intended to carry out a final audit of UNTAC within three months after the completion of the liquidation, scheduled for 31 December 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue its consideration of the item on financing and liquidation of UNTAC at its resumed fiftieth session (decision 50/469).

By resolution 50/204 C of the same date, the Assembly took note with concern of the Board of Auditors' findings, noting numerous weaknesses in UNTAC's liquidation as well as the delays encountered in the process, and requested the Secretary-General to take immediate action to implement the Board's recommendations. The Board was asked to report at the Assembly's fifty-first (1996) session on measures being taken, while Member States were called on to pay their contributions as early as possible so as to facilitate the completion of the liquidation process. The Assembly also asked the Secretary-General to complete urgently the feasibility study it had requested in 1994⁽⁹⁾ on procedures for the valuation and transfer of costs of assets, and to submit, before the beginning of its resumed fiftieth session, proposals for such procedures as well as for a policy for the physical verification of assets and liabilities of a mission in liquidation.

UN Military Liaison Team in Cambodia

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a 14 October 1995 report⁽¹²⁾ on the financing of the UN Military Liaison Team in Cambodia. The Team, comprising 20 military liaison officers, had been established by the Security Council in 1993⁽¹³⁾ for a single six-month period, from 15 November 1993 to 15 May 1994.

The report noted that total expenditures for that period amounted to $616,500 gross ($590,300 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $293,900 gross ($281,800 net). At the same time, outstanding contributions due from Member States totalled $409,706 as at 30 September 1994. As a result, the Team's Special Account showed a deficit of $46,400. The Secretary-General proposed that the unencumbered balance be credited to Member States as appropriate.

In a 5 June report,⁽¹⁴⁾ ACABQ noted that outstanding contributions amounted to $122,050 as at 31 March 1995; it recommended that credits be apportioned among Member States in the balance of $375,406, which included the unencumbered balance plus accrued interest and miscellaneous income. ACABQ also noted that no credit had been given to the Team's Special Account for the value of its equipment transferred to other operations, since such a value had not been determined. In that regard, ACABQ intended to review the issue of disposition of assets in the context of its consideration of the final disposition of UNTAC property (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 July, the General Assembly endorsed ACABQ's observations and recommendations, urged Member States to make every effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Military Liaison Team promptly and in full, and decided to apportion among Member States credits resulting from the unencumbered balance of $293,900 gross ($281,800 net) for the period from 15 November 1993 to 15 May 1994 and the accrued interest and miscellaneous income of $81,506 in the Team's Special Account (decision 49/485).

Office of the Secretary-General's Representative in Cambodia

On 1 April 1995, the Secretary-General informed⁽¹⁵⁾ the Security Council of his decision to extend for a further six months, as requested by the Government of Cambodia, the term of his Representative in Cambodia, Benny Widyono, appointed in 1994⁽¹⁶⁾ and initially assisted by three military advisers. He was to be assisted by one military adviser during his extended term. The Council's agreement with that decision was communicated⁽¹⁷⁾ to the Secretary-General on 6 April.

During the year, the Representative, in carrying out his mandate, continued to monitor the political situation in Cambodia, to maintain close liaison and dialogue with the Government and to coordinate UN assistance aimed at helping that country move towards greater prosperity and democratization, in accordance with the spirit and principles of the 1991 Paris Agreements⁽¹⁸⁾ on the settlement of the conflict in Cambodia. In response to the Government's request, his term was again extended for six months, as proposed by the Secretary-General on 10 October⁽¹⁹⁾ and agreed to by the Security Council on 13 October.⁽²⁰⁾

West Asia

Afghanistan

In January 1995, the Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan (OSGA) was established in Jalalabad (to move to the capital of Kabul as soon as conditions permitted), following the discontinuation in December 1994 of the Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan and the function of the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan. OSGA provided assistance to Mahmoud Mestiri (Tunisia), Head of the UN Special Mission to Afghanistan, established in 1993⁽¹⁾ to facilitate national reconciliation and reconstruction.

During the year, the rivalry among the nine political parties in Afghanistan concentrated into a conflict among three major armed groups: the government forces of President Burhanuddin Rabbani; the forces controlled by General Rashid Dostum and his allies in the Supreme Coordination Council, comprising four parties; and the Taliban, a new military faction. The issues in contention were the relinquishing of power by President Rabbani, whose term of office had expired in December 1994, and the establishment of a representative and broad-based authoritative council as an interim mechanism. The Head of the Special Mission visited the region three times in 1995 and secured several agreements on the date of transfer of power to the interim mechanism; each time, however, the resumption of hostilities prevented it from taking place. At the end of the year, renewed fighting highlighted the urgent need for a cease-fire, so that political negotiations could continue.

In December, the General Assembly supported the Secretary-General's decision to strengthen the Special Mission and requested him to authorize continuation of its efforts. The Assembly also urged the leaders of all Afghan parties to renounce the use of force and to settle their political differences by peaceful means, and called on all States to refrain from interfering in Afghanistan's internal affairs.

(See also PART FOUR, Chapter III, for humanitarian assistance, PART THREE, Chapter III, for the human rights situation, and PART FOUR, Chapter XII, for refugee situation.)

UN Special Mission to Afghanistan

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an 8 November 1995 report, with a later addendum,⁽³⁾ which described activities of the UN Special Mission to Afghanistan and the political situation in that country, as well as UN rehabilitation and development activities and emergency humanitarian assistance (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

The report noted that Mr. Mestiri, Head of the Special Mission, had begun another round of mediation efforts on 26 December 1994, to secure agreement on the transfer of power from the current President, whose term of office was to expire two days later, to an acceptable and broadly representative "mechanism". Mr. Mestiri met with President Rabbani; General Dostum of the National Islamic Movement of Afghanistan and other members of the Supreme Coordination Council, including the leader of the Hezb-el-Islami party, Gulbuddin Hekmatyar; and the Governors of Nangarhar and Herat provinces and leaders of the Taliban—an emerging military faction which had taken control of several provinces. Agreement was reached on the composition of an interim mechanism and the transfer of power, to take place on 20 February 1995. That plan, however, was disrupted by the rapid advance of Taliban forces, which reached the outskirts of Kabul on 11 February.

Following the Taliban's refusal to participate in the interim mechanism, a working group of four prominent Afghans was established on 22 February to negotiate an acceptable modality for the transfer of power. The group secured the agreement of both President Rabbani and the Taliban that the transfer would take place on 21 March. On 6 March, however, the negotiations were disrupted by heavy fighting, which broke out in Kabul between government forces and the Hezbe-Wahdat party of Abdul Mazari, subsequently joined by the Taliban. At the Secretary-General's request, the Head of the Special Mission left the region on 13 April.

From mid-April to the end of August, the situation in Kabul and most parts of Afghanistan was relatively calm. The country was controlled by three major groups, including President Rabbani and his Commander, Ahmad Shah Massoud, joined by the Governor of Herat; General Dostum, mainly in the northern part; and the Taliban in the south and south-eastern provinces. On 20 June, the Head of the Special Mission briefed the Security Council on the situation and prospects for peace in Afghanistan and received the Council's support and encouragement to continue his efforts. On 19 July, following consultations with senior government officials of Saudi Arabia and with the OIC Secretary-General, Mr. Mestiri returned to the region and held a number of meetings with representatives of the Afghan political factions, both in Afghanistan and in Pakistan. He also met with the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, and reported his assessment of the situation on 1 August, concluding that an overwhelming desire existed among the Afghan people for a UN-mediated peace in their country, and that the Special Mission should continue its efforts regarding the establishment of a transfer-of-power mechanism. The Secretary-General endorsed that conclusion and requested Mr. Mestiri to resume his mission as early as possible.

On 23 August, heavy fighting began in western Afghanistan, leading to the take-over of Herat province by the Taliban on 5 September. By mid-September, fighting had spread to much of the country, except in three eastern provinces, as the rivalry among Afghanistan's nine political parties changed into a conflict among the three major armed groups (see above). The situation was exacerbated by a reported increase in external interference in support of one or another faction, through the direct or indirect supply of weapons, ammunition and other forms of military assistance.

On 16 September, Mr. Mestiri arrived in Islamabad, Pakistan. He was instructed by the Secretary-General to seek agreement on a limited cease-fire, to be followed immediately by negotiations on the transfer of power, and the establishment of a representative mechanism. Mr. Mestiri held discussions with representatives of the factions, as well as with other prominent Afghan personalities and organizations in various cities in Afghanistan; he also met with the Deputy Foreign Minister of Iran and his advisors in Tehran on 27 and 28 September, and with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, the OIC Secretary-General, a Saudi Arabian official and a United States Assistant Secretary of State. While President Rabbani was willing to accept an unconditional and nationwide cease-fire, his opponents insisted that he relinquish power prior to a cease-fire agreement. Following several meetings with Mr. Mestiri in Kabul, the President on 6 November announced publicly his willingness to transfer power to an individual or commission, and proposed that the warring parties and neutral personalities meet under UN mediation to agree on a mechanism and the date of the transfer. As a precondition, however, he called for the cessation of hostilities and for an end to all forms of foreign interference.

In November, Mr. Mestiri held another round of meetings with the parties, to prepare a list of names recommended for membership in the transfer-of-power mechanism. That process, however, was disrupted by renewed hostilities in and around Kabul between the Taliban and government forces, often involving indiscriminate rocketing and aerial bombardment. On 26 November, the Head of the Special Mission left the region at the Secretary-General's request.

The report also noted that the Special Mission's good offices were requested to secure the release of seven Russian crew members of an aircraft forced down by the Taliban, who had been detained in Kandahar since August. The Secretary-General stated that negotiations to that effect had not been successful, and he appealed for the release of any and all non-combatants in detention in Afghanistan. He pointed out that the issue of former President Mohammed Najibullah, who had been given refuge in the UN compound in Kabul in 1992, also remained a matter of great concern, as the authorities would not allow him and his companions to leave the country.

The Secretary-General concluded that leaders of the principal factions in Afghanistan seemed to prefer the route of continued war and confrontation over peaceful negotiations, but expressed his belief that peace and stability were nevertheless attainable and that the United Nations should continue its efforts towards that goal. In that regard, he decided to strengthen the Special Mission by stationing four additional Political Affairs Officers in four major cities in Afghanistan, so as to ensure the continuity of information exchange and consultation between the Mission and political leaders based in those cities.

Communications. On 3 February, France transmitted⁽⁴⁾ a 30 January statement on behalf of the European Union, calling on all Afghans to support a lasting cease-fire and to join in the efforts of the Head of the Special Mission. The Union also deemed it important to put a stop to foreign intervention, and invited countries in the region to support Mr. Mestiri's plan and to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance and development aid. It further appealed for rapid and unimpeded delivery of emergency food and medical assistance to the Afghan population.

On 20 June, the Russian Federation communicated⁽⁵⁾ a 9 June statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, which reaffirmed that country's position of non-involvement in the struggle between Afghan parties and urged other States to refrain from interfering. The Russian Federation stated that Afghan territory should not be used for activities that undermined the stability and security of neighbouring countries, as was happening in connection with Tajikistan (see below), and appealed to all parties in Afghanistan to refrain from armed conflict and to initiate serious efforts to achieve national reconciliation through the formation of a broad-based leadership.

Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan

The Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan was established in January 1995 in lieu of the Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan, which had been terminated in December 1994. OSGA was located in Jalalabad until conditions could permit it to move to Kabul. During the year, it provided assistance to the UN Special Mission to Afghanistan.

In a 13 December statement,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General said that the Mission would in future operate on a full-year basis from OSGA offices in Jalalabad and Islamabad, with four additional political officers stationed in Herat, Kabul, Kandahar and Mazar-i-Sharif, and that three more staff would be required for OSGA in addition to the 14 temporary posts and two military observers authorized for 1995. He estimated additional budget requirements for 1996 at $2,684,400, including $972,600 for the Special Mission and $1,711,800 for OSGA.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 September, the General Assembly, by decision 49/501, deferred consideration of the item on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security, and included it in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session.

Afghanistan-Pakistan

In a 5 September letter⁽⁷⁾ to the Secretary-General, the Foreign Minister of Afghanistan accused Pakistan of assisting the Taliban, with both equipment and personnel, to overrun the western part of the country, and stated that the level of foreign interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs, particularly by Pakistan, had thus reached a dangerous point. In its 10 September response,⁽⁸⁾ the Foreign Minister of Pakistan refuted the accusations as unfounded and reaffirmed its policy of strict neutrality and non-interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs. It attributed the continued armed conflict in that country to the fact that the regime in Kabul had reneged on its commitment to relinquish power, and stated that Pakistan was ready to assist the Afghan parties to arrive at a peaceful and durable political solution.

In a 14 September letter,⁽⁹⁾ Afghanistan stated that the Pakistani militia, backed by Pakistani regular air and ground forces and in collusion with the mercenaries known as Taliban, had overrun western parts of the country, including the city of Herat. It considered the Pakistani infringement on Herat and its subsequent occupation as totally intolerable, and called for the dispatch of a UN fact-finding mission to western Afghanistan. The letter also accused Pakistan of plundering Afghan national property in Herat, and called on the United Nations to take urgent steps to stop those acts. In a 19 September letter to the Head of the UN Special Mission, transmitted⁽¹⁰⁾ on 26 September, Afghanistan said that with the occupation of Herat, Pakistan's interference in its internal affairs had developed into aggression, and that Pakistan could no longer act as a mediator in inter-Afghan affairs. It also requested that the UN Special Mission to Afghanistan give priority to Herat's occupation and depart from the principle of impartiality in dealing with Afghan groups. In a 30 September letter, communicated⁽¹¹⁾ on 3 October, Afghanistan proposed the establishment of a contact group, composed of States and organizations dedicated to facilitating the search for peace and mobilizing international assistance for the reconstruction of the country.

On 12 October, Afghanistan informed⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General and the Security Council that on the previous day bands of mercenaries enforced by Pakistani militia had engaged in a heavy artillery and ground attack to the south-west and south of Kabul, inflicting a heavy toll on the civilian population. It requested that the Council take into consideration that recent evolution of the situation. On 25 October, Pakistan replied⁽¹³⁾ that the Afghan allegations regarding support for the Taliban and interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs were baseless and unwarranted, and that the Taliban owed its success to the disaffection among the Afghan people with the policies of the regime in Kabul. It reaffirmed its continued neutral position towards intra-Afghan rivalries and urged the regime in Kabul to desist from blaming Pakistan for its own failures.

On 1 December, Afghanistan informed⁽¹⁴⁾ the Security Council President of further attacks by the Taliban on Kabul, involving an aerial bombardment on 24 November and a rocket attack on 29 November, causing deaths and injuries among civilians. It requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to address the situation. In a 7 December letter,⁽¹⁵⁾ Afghanistan referred to several recent incidents of the transportation of weapons and ammunition by air to the Taliban, allegedly from Pakistan, which it considered a violation of its airspace and an act of aggression, and called for an end to the illicit transfer of arms.

Afghanistan-Tajikistan

During 1995, Afghanistan and Tajikistan addressed several communications to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President with regard to the situation on the Afghan-Tajik border. Afghanistan protested the shelling and bombardment of its northern part, hosting refugees from the internal conflict in Tajikistan, from the Tajik side of the border. Tajikistan lodged protests against attacks on its border posts and infiltrations into its territory from northern Afghanistan by armed groups of the Tajik opposition, and against the opposition's use of Afghan territory to undermine the stability and security of Tajikistan (see below, under "Tajikistan").

Iran-Iraq

Iran and Iraq continued throughout 1995 to address numerous communications to the Secretary-General, each charging repeated violations by the other of the 1988 cease-fire agreement⁽¹⁾ and the agreements reached in Tehran in 1991.⁽²⁾ Those violations included, inter alia, engineering activities and military patrolling in the no-man's land, installation of new observation posts, reinforcement of posts, helicopter and other aircraft overflights and incursions into the other side's airspace, the firing of small arms ammunition and mortars across the border, incursions into the other side's territory, tugging of vessels in the no-man's land, seizure and searches of tugboats and fishing boats, harassment of vessel crews and abduction of fishermen.

On 15 February, Iraq alleged⁽³⁾ that Iranian military forces had carried out between 11 and 13 February a wide-ranging offensive against Iraqi units in the Hawr al-Hawizah area, which involved the use of all types of light and medium weapons and was successfully repelled. Iraq stated that the attack constituted an act of aggression and was a flagrant violation of Security Council resolution 598(1987)⁽⁴⁾ and norms of international law. It further charged that the operation had been preceded by the collusion between the so-called "Supreme Council of the Islamic Revolution in Iraq", which it said was supported by Iran and by Kuwaiti government officials, and was thus to be regarded as open intervention by Kuwait in Iraq's internal affairs.

On 18 February, Kuwait categorically rejected⁽⁵⁾ the Iraqi accusation, affirmed its respect for the principles of good-neighbourliness and non-intervention in the internal affairs of other States, and asserted that the leader of the Supreme Council of the Islamic Revolution in Iraq had visited Kuwait for purely humanitarian purposes, which reflected that country's desire to assist in the supply of foodstuffs and medicines to those suffering deprivation in Iraq. In its 24 February reply,⁽⁶⁾ Iran also rejected the allegations, stating that its armed forces had had no movement along the borders during the indicated period and the prevailing situation in border areas during that period was calm and normal. Iran reiterated its commitment to the Security Council's resolution and to the principles of respect for Iraq's sover-eighty and territorial integrity and non-intervention in its internal affairs. For its part, Iran, on 9 March, claimed⁽¹⁾ that several Iraqis, dressed as shepherds and accompanying a herd of cattle, had penetrated its territory on 7 January and fired at the border police, causing the death of an Iranian soldier, before fleeing into Iraqi territory. It also said that a number of Iraqi smugglers had engaged in an armed confrontation with the Iranian border police on 8 January, which resulted in the death of one smuggler.

On 10 July, Iraq alleged⁽²⁾ that elements of the Iranian guard had infiltrated Iraqi territory on 9 July and fired rockets at a civilian location, causing property damage. It strongly condemned the aggression and urged the Iranian Government to desist from engaging in hostile acts incompatible with the norms of international law and the UN Charter. On 29 August, Iran strongly rejected⁽³⁾ the allegations.

Iraq-Kuwait situation

The United Nations continued in 1995 to seek Iraq's full compliance with its obligations under Security Council resolution 687(1991),⁽¹⁾ which set out the terms of the cease-fire that formally ended the 1991 military action—known as the Gulf War—taken by a coalition of States to bring about Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait, and provided for other conditions essential to restore peace and security in the region. The Council had called for the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of Iraqi weapons of mass destruction and means for their delivery; proscribed to Iraq programmes and activities for the development of such weapons; and banned the sale or supply to Iraq of specific items related to such programmes. Those activities were to be monitored and verified by the UN Special Commission (UNSCOM), established⁽²⁾ pursuant to the cease-fire resolution, and also by IAEA, entrusted with monitoring Iraq's nuclear capabilities.

Iraq's compliance was also sought in respect of other relevant Council resolutions, including resolution 707(1991),⁽³⁾ demanding from Iraq complete disclosure of information related to its proscribed programmes and unconditional cooperation with UNSCOM and IAEA; and resolution 715(1991),⁽⁴⁾ by which the Council approved the plans of UNSCOM and IAEA for their future ongoing monitoring and verification activities in Iraq. Pending full implementation of all relevant resolutions, the UN sanctions and oil embargo against Iraq remained in effect in 1995; in April, however, the Council decided to authorize a limited import of oil and petroleum products from Iraq and to use revenues from it for meeting humanitarian needs of Iraqi people.

Also in April, UNSCOM began ongoing biological monitoring in Iraq, in addition to its already operational missile, chemical and nuclear monitoring systems, the latter being coordinated with IAEA. UNSCOM and IAEA finalized their proposal for an export/import monitoring mechanism, submitted for Security Council approval in December. During the year, Iraq disclosed new information on its past proscribed programmes, acknowledging for the first time an extensive biological weapons programme and radiological weapons activities, and provided UNSCOM and IAEA with a large amount of additional important documentation and materials, which revealed that its past programmes had been more advanced than previously known.

The UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission (UNIKOM) continued to monitor the demilitarized zone (DMZ) along the Iraq-Kuwait boundary and to investigate its alleged violations. The Security Council reviewed UNIKOM activities in April and again in October, extending the operation until 6 April 1996. Other outstanding issues relating to the Iraq-Kuwait situation involved the return of Kuwaiti property seized during Iraq's occupation of Kuwait; accounting for Kuwaiti and third-country nationals missing in Iraq; and settlement of claims against Iraq for losses or damage as a result of its occupation of Kuwait, processed by the UN Compensation Commission. In 1995, the Commission's Governing Council held one special session and four regular sessions.

By decision 49/503 of 18 September, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item entitled "Consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session. By decision 50/445 of 21 December, the Assembly again deferred consideration of that item and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session.

(See also PART THREE, Chapter III, for the human rights situation in Iraq, and PART FOUR, Chapter III, for humanitarian assistance to Iraq.)

Communications. During the year, Iraq addressed numerous communications to the Secretary-General, listing tens of thousands of miscellaneous bombs, shells, rockets and other ordnance, some of the remnants of what it termed the 30-Power aggression against Iraq, that were found and disposed of in all parts of the country.

In letters of 6 January⁽⁵⁾ and 15 May,⁽⁶⁾ Iraq called for investigation of the information that projectiles with depleted uranium had been used by the coalition forces against Iraq during the Gulf War, stating the the use of such weapons constituted a violation of international humanitarian law due to its serious consequences for human health and the environment and should be regarded as a war crime, and requesting examination of those violations by the international community.

In a 28 February communication,⁽⁷⁾ Iraq quoted some statements of senior government officials in Kuwait, who it said were calling, directly or indirectly, for the removal of the political regime in Iraq and for interference in that country's internal affairs. Iraq accused Kuwait of seeking to undermine its sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence, in violation of the norms of international law and the relevant Security Council resolutions.

Sanctions compliance

The Committee established by Security Council resolution 661(1990)⁽⁸⁾ (Sanctions Committee) issued four reports during 1995—one every 90 days—on the implementation of sanctions against Iraq, in accordance with the guidelines for facilitating full international implementation of resolution 687(1991), approved by the Council in resolution 700(1991).⁽⁹⁾ The reports were transmitted to the Council on 1 March,⁽¹⁰⁾ 31 May,⁽¹¹⁾ 25 August⁽¹²⁾ and 27 November.⁽¹³⁾

Each report stated that, during the period under review, the Committee had received no information relating to possible violations of the arms and related sanctions against Iraq committed by other States or foreign nationals. It had not been consulted by any State or international organization on whether certain items fell within the categories of proscribed items or on dual- or multiple-use items (meant for civilian use but with potential for diversion or conversion to military use), nor had any allegations of violations in that connection been reported to it. No international organization had reported any relevant information that might have come to its attention, as requested under the guidelines.

Each report further stated that, since the last report of the Secretary-General submitted in 1991⁽¹⁴⁾ pursuant to resolution 700(1991), no additional States had replied to his request for information on measures instituted by their Governments for meeting the obligations set out in resolution 687(1991). In addition, the November report described measures adopted by the Committee to make its procedures more transparent, as recommended by the Security Council in a 29 March note⁽¹⁵⁾ of its President (see PART SIX, Chapter IV).

Communication (October). In a 5 October letter⁽¹⁶⁾ to the Security Council President, Iraq affirmed that it would continue to cooperate fully with UNSCOM and IAEA in the performance of their tasks pursuant to the relevant Council resolutions; that it had kept none of the proscribed weapons or weapon components since the end of 1991, and had undertaken no activity contravening its obligations under those resolutions; and that it had participated effectively in the establishment of UNSCOM's and IAEA's monitoring system (see below, under "Ongoing monitoring and verification"). Iraq therefore claimed to have fulfilled its essential obligations, and expressed the hope that the Council would take it into consideration during its next deliberation on the question of sanctions against Iraq.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 14 April to consider the situation between Iraq and Kuwait. Japan was invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.¹⁷

Speaking before the Council, Japan expressed deep concern about the plight of the Iraqi people, suffering from severe medical and nutritional problems as a result of their Government's intransigence which had necessitated the application of UN sanctions. Acting out of that humanitarian concern, Japan supported the draft resolution (see below), which, in Japan's view, contained a balanced approach to alleviating those hardships. At the same time, Japan stated that the well-being of the Iraqi people could be ensured only when their Government faithfully implemented all relevant Council resolutions and made efforts to rejoin the international community.

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 986(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions,

Concerned by the serious nutritional and health situation of the Iraqi population, and by the risk of a further deterioration in this situation,

Convinced of the need as a temporary measure to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people until the fulfilment by Iraq of the relevant Security Council resolutions, including notably resolution 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, allows the Council to take further action with regard to the prohibitions referred to in resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions,

Convinced also of the need for equitable distribution of humanitarian relief to all segments of the Iraqi population throughout the country,

¹⁷Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as a result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Authorizes States, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs 3 (a), 3 (b) and 4 of resolution 661(1990) and subsequent relevant resolutions, to permit the import of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq, including financial and other essential transactions directly relating thereto, sufficient to produce a sum not exceeding a total of one billion United States dollars every 90 days for the purposes set out in this resolution and subject to the following conditions:

(a) Approval by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in order to ensure the transparency of each transaction and its conformity with the other provisions of this resolution, after submission of an application by the State concerned, endorsed by the Government of Iraq, for each proposed purchase of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products, including details of the purchase price at fair market value, the export route, the opening of a letter of credit payable to the escrow account to be established by the Secretary-General for the purposes of this resolution, and of any other directly related financial or other essential transaction;

(b) Payment of the full amount of each purchase of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products directly by the purchaser in the State concerned into the escrow account to be established by the Secretary-General for the purposes of this resolution;

2. Authorizes Turkey, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs 3 (a), 3 (b) and 4 of resolution 661(1990) and the provisions of paragraph 1 above, to permit the import of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq sufficient, after the deduction of the percentage referred to in paragraph 8 (c) below for the Compensation Fund, to meet the pipeline tariff charges, verified as reasonable by the independent inspection agents referred to in paragraph 6 below, for the transport of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products through the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline in Turkey authorized by paragraph 1 above;

3. Decides that paragraphs 1 and 2 of this resolution shall come into force at 00.01 Eastern Standard Time on the day after the President of the Council has informed the members of the Council that he has received the report from the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 13 below, and shall remain in force for an initial period of 180 days unless the Council takes other relevant action with regard to the provisions of resolution 661(1990);

4. Further decides to conduct a thorough review of all aspects of the implementation of this resolution 90 days after the entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the initial 180-day period, on receipt of the reports referred to in paragraphs 11 and 12 below, and expresses its intention, prior to the end of the 180-day period, to consider favourably renewal of the provisions of this resolution, provided that the reports referred to in paragraphs 11 and 12 below indicate that those provisions are being satisfactorily implemented;

5. Further decides that the remaining paragraphs of this resolution shall come into force forthwith;

6. Directs the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to monitor the sale of petroleum and petroleum products to be exported by Iraq via the

Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline from Iraq to Turkey and from the Mina al-Bakr oil terminal, with the assistance of independent inspection agents appointed by the Secretary-General, who will keep the Committee informed of the amount of petroleum and petroleum products exported from Iraq after the date of entry into force of paragraph 1 of this resolution, and will verify that the purchase price of the petroleum and petroleum products is reasonable in the light of prevailing market conditions, and that, for the purposes of the arrangements set out in this resolution, the larger share of the petroleum and petroleum products is shipped via the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline and the remainder is exported from the Mina al-Bakr oil terminal;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to establish an escrow account for the purposes of this resolution, to appoint independent and certified public accountants to audit it, and to keep the Government of Iraq fully informed;

8. Decides that the funds in the escrow account shall be used to meet the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi population and for the following other purposes, and requests the Secretary-General to use the funds deposited in the escrow account:

(a) To finance the export to Iraq, in accordance with the procedures of the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), of medicine, health supplies, foodstuffs, and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, as referred to in paragraph 20 of resolution 687(1991) provided that:

- (i) Each export of goods is at the request of the Government of Iraq;
- (ii) Iraq effectively guarantees their equitable distribution, on the basis of a plan submitted to and approved by the Secretary-General, including a description of the goods to be purchased;
- (iii) The Secretary-General receives authenticated confirmation that the exported goods concerned have arrived in Iraq;

(b) To complement, in view of the exceptional circumstances prevailing in the three Governorates mentioned below, the distribution by the Government of Iraq of goods imported under this resolution, in order to ensure an equitable distribution of humanitarian relief to all segments of the Iraqi population throughout the country, by providing between 130 million and 150 million United States dollars every 90 days to the United Nations Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme operating within the sovereign territory of Iraq in the three northern Governorates of Dihouk, Arbil and Suleimaniyeh, except that if less than one billion United States dollars worth of petroleum or petroleum products is sold during any 90 day period, the Secretary-General may provide a proportionately smaller amount for this purpose;

(c) To transfer to the Compensation Fund the same percentage of the funds deposited in the escrow account as that decided by the Council in paragraph 2 of resolution 705(1991) of 15 August 1991;

(d) To meet the costs to the United Nations of the independent inspection agents and the certified public accountants and the activities associated with implementation of this resolution;

(e) To meet the current operating costs of the Special Commission, pending subsequent payment in full of the costs of carrying out the tasks authorized by section C of resolution 687(1991);

(f) To meet any reasonable expenses, other than expenses payable in Iraq, which are determined by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) to be directly related to the export by Iraq of petroleum and petroleum products permitted under paragraph 1 above or to the export to Iraq, and activities directly necessary therefor, of the parts and equipment permitted under paragraph 9 below;

(g) To make available up to 10 million United States dollars every 90 days from the funds deposited in the escrow account for the payments envisaged under paragraph 6 of resolution 778(1992) of 2 October 1992;

9. Authorizes States to permit, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 661(1990):

(a) The export to Iraq of the parts and equipment which are essential for the safe operation of the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline system in Iraq, subject to the prior approval by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990) of each export contract;

(b) Activities directly necessary for the exports authorized under subparagraph (a) above, including financial transactions related thereto;

10. Decides that, since the costs of the exports and activities authorized under paragraph 9 above are precluded by paragraph 4 of resolution 661(1990) and by paragraph 11 of resolution 778(1991) from being met from funds frozen in accordance with those provisions, the cost of such exports and activities may, until funds begin to be paid into the escrow account established for the purposes of this resolution, and following approval in each case by the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), exceptionally be financed by letters of credit, drawn against future oil sales the proceeds of which are to be deposited in the escrow account;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council 90 days after the date of entry into force of paragraph 1 above, and again prior to the end of the initial 180-day period, on the basis of observation by United Nations personnel in Iraq, and on the basis of consultations with the Government of Iraq, on whether Iraq has ensured the equitable distribution of medicine, health supplies, foodstuffs, and materials and supplies for essential civilian needs, financed in accordance with paragraph 8 (a) above, including in his reports any observations he may have on the adequacy of the revenues to meet Iraq's humanitarian needs, and on Iraq's capacity to export sufficient quantities of petroleum and petroleum products to produce the sum referred to in paragraph 1 above;

12. Requests the Committee established by resolution 661(1990), in close coordination with the Secretary-General, to develop expedited procedures as necessary to implement the arrangements in paragraphs 1, 2, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of this resolution and to report to the Council 90 days after the date of entry into force of paragraph 1 above and again prior to the end of the initial 180-day period on the implementation of those arrangements;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take the actions necessary to ensure the effective implementation of this resolution, authorizes him to enter into any necessary arrangements or agreements, and requests him to report to the Council when he has done so;

14. Decides that petroleum and petroleum products subject to this resolution shall while under Iraqi title be immune from legal proceedings and not be subject to any form of attachment, garnishment or execution, and that all States shall take any steps that may be necessary under their respective domestic legal systems to assure this protection, and to ensure that the proceeds of the sale are not diverted from the purposes laid down in this resolution;

15. Affirms that the escrow account established for the purposes of this resolution enjoys the privileges and immunities of the United Nations;

16. Security Council resolution 986(1995)

14 April 1995 Meeting 3519 Adopted unanimously

5-nation draft (S/1995/292).

Sponsors: Argentina, Oman, Rwanda, United Kingdom, United States.

On 1 June, the Secretary-General informed⁽¹⁷⁾ the Council of his 15 May meeting with Iraq's Foreign Minister, who stated that his Government would not implement resolution 986(1995) because it objected, inter alia, to the proportion of petroleum to be exported via the Kirkuk-Yumurtalik pipeline and to the modalities for distribution of humanitarian relief in three northern governorates. The Secretary-General expressed his regret at that decision, urged the Government to reconsider it, and stated the Secretariat's readiness to enter into discussions with Iraq on practical arrangements for implementing the resolution.

Noting that Iraqi cooperation was an essential prerequisite for the resolution's implementation, he believed it appropriate to postpone preparation of his report requested in the resolution until further progress on the subject. The Security Council endorsed that decision on 23 June.⁽¹⁸⁾

Escrow accounts

In his August 1995 report on the work of the Organization,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he continued efforts to ascertain the existence of any Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products that could be sold, as well as the availability of funds pursuant to Security Council resolution 778(1992),⁽²⁰⁾ by which it had been decided that all States having Iraqi assets representing the proceeds of sale of Iraqi petroleum or petroleum products, paid for on or after 6 August 1990, should transfer those funds to the escrow account provided for in resolutions 706(1991)⁽²¹⁾ and 712(1991).⁽²²⁾ The Secretary-General noted with regret that no further funds had been deposited into the account as a result of his effort to seek information on such assets directly from Governments with jurisdiction over relevant petroleum companies and their subsidiaries.

As at 1 August 1995, $365.5 million had been deposited into the escrow account since the adoption of resolution 778(1992), representing both voluntary contributions and Iraqi assets. At the end of the year, Kuwait transferred to the account $613,780 as revenue obtained from the sale of the cargoes of ships seized in the Persian Gulf for carrying illegal Iraqi oil exports.

By resolution 986(1995), the Security Council established an escrow account for the funds resulting from the authorized import of petroleum and petroleum products from Iraq; decided that the funds in the account should be used to meet the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi population as well as for other purposes described in the resolution; and requested the Secretary-General to use those funds accordingly.

UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The UN Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission, set up pursuant to Security Council resolution 687(1991), continued in 1995 to discharge its tasks in accordance with its expanded mandate: to monitor the Khawr Abd Allah waterway and the DMZ along the Iraq-Kuwait boundary established under the same resolution; to deter violations of the boundary through its presence in and surveillance of the DMZ; to observe any potentially hostile action mounted from the territory of one State into the other; and, as from 1993,⁽²³⁾ to take physical action to prevent or redress small-scale violations of the DMZ or the boundary.

UNIKOM maintained the three sectors—north, central and south—into which, for operational purposes, it had divided the DMZ. From its patrol and observation bases, observation points and static checkpoints, the Mission carried out ground and air patrols, as well as random checks within the DMZ; it also maintained a force mobile reserve and investigation teams at both the sector and headquarters level. The military observers performed UNIKOM's main patrol, observation, investigation and liaison activities, while the infantry battalion—the Mission's reserve—conducted armed patrols, operated checkpoints and provided security for UNIKOM's easternmost position on the shore of the Khawr Abd Allah.

The Mission continued to provide administrative and logistic support for other UN agencies in Iraq and Kuwait. It maintained headquarters in Umm Qasr, Iraq, and liaison offices in Baghdad and Kuwait City; in January, its logistic base in Doha, Kuwait, was moved to a support centre in Kuwait City.

Reports of the Secretary-General (March and October). During the year, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council two reports, on 31 March⁽²⁴⁾ and on 2 October,⁽²⁵⁾ on UNIKOM activities, in order for the Council to carry out its six-month review of the operation and to decide on its continuation or termination. The first report covered the period from 1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995, and the second, from 1 April to 30 September 1995.

The Secretary-General noted that the situation in the DMZ remained generally calm, although there had been a period of tension in October 1994 in connection with reports about the deployment of Iraqi troops north of the DMZ. The number of violations was limited and involved primarily overflights by aircraft and the carrying or firing of weapons other than sidearms. Shooting incidents had resulted in the deaths of two civilians, one on each side of the border. On the night of 28/29 December 1994, a UNIKOM patrol vehicle came under automatic fire on the Kuwaiti side of the DMZ and one military observer was wounded in the leg; the Mission, however, was not able to determine the perpetrators. Investigations on all ground violations were carried out, and the findings communicated to the parties; in addition, UNIKOM investigated 14 formal complaints, 6 from Iraq and 8 from Kuwait.

On 13 March 1995, two United States citizens mistakenly crossed the border from Kuwait into Iraq, their white vehicle having been misidentified at the checkpoint as belonging to the United Nations. They were apprehended by the Iraqi police, and subsequently released on 16 July. Checkpoint procedures were tightened in the wake of the incident. Another development involved the question of Iraqi fishing boats operating in Kuwaiti waters, which was raised by UNIKOM with Iraq. The Mission continued to act in coordination with the authorities on each side in cases of unauthorized border crossings and when responding to requests to facilitate repatriation. It exchanged information and cooperated closely on such matters with the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). At the latter's request, UNIKOM provided the venue and support for meetings of the Technical Subcommittee on Military and Civilian Missing Prisoners of War and Mortal Remains (see also below, under "Kuwaiti property and missing persons") on 29 and 30 August and on 26 and 27 September.

The Secretary-General also reviewed financial aspects of the operation (see below) and organizational matters, noting that the Mission had relied on locally contracted medical services since February, following the withdrawal of medical units by Austria and Bangladesh. In that regard, he proposed to accept the offer by Germany to provide a civilian medical unit, thus becoming a new contributor to UNIKOM. The Secretary-General concluded that the Mission had contributed significantly to the reduction of tension and the maintenance of calm in its area of operation, while enjoying effective cooperation of both Iraqi and Kuwaiti authorities, and recommended that UNIKOM be maintained.

On 10 April,⁽²⁶⁾ the Security Council concurred with the recommendation to maintain the Mission for another six-month period; on 6 October,⁽²⁷⁾ it further extended the operation and decided to review the question again by 6 April 1996.

Communications. On 17 January, Iraq strongly protested⁽²⁸⁾ the overflight by a UNIKOM helicopter of an Iraqi port outside the DMZ, which had taken place on 11 January, regarding it as a violation of the Mission's mandate and an infringement of Iraqi national sovereignty. In a 25 January letter,⁽²⁹⁾ it made a reference to reports in the United States media that the company contracting helicopters to UNIKOM might be connected with the United States Central Intelligence Agency; it called for reconsideration of the contract to ensure continued cooperation between the Mission and the Iraqi Government. That request was renewed on 28 February.⁽³⁰⁾ On 9 October, Iraq complained⁽³¹⁾ that a Kuwaiti military helicopter had landed inside the DMZ in violation of the DMZ regime.

In October, a helicopter unit from Bangladesh replaced the chartered helicopter.

Composition

As at September 1995,⁽³²⁾ UNIKOM had a strength of 1,331 personnel, including 244 military observers from 32 Member States; an infantry battalion of 775 from Bangladesh; an engineer unit of 50 from Argentina; a logistics unit of 35 from Denmark; and 227 civilian staff, of whom 80 were recruited internationally.

On 23 October, the Secretary-General informed⁽³³⁾ the Security Council of his intention to appoint Major-General Gian Giuseppe Santillo (Italy) to replace Major-General Krishna N. S. Thapa (Nepal) as UNIKOM Force Commander, effective 1 December 1995. The Security Council's agreement was communicated⁽³³⁾ to the Secretary-General on 26 October.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 20 March report⁽³⁴⁾ on the financing of UNIKOM, the Secretary-General noted that Member State assessments for the Mission for the period from its inception on 9 April 1991 to 31 March 1995 totalled $216,092,900, while contributions received for the same period amounted to $157,932,123 as at 28 February 1995, leaving an unpaid balance of $27,892,868. Resources made available to UNIKOM by the General Assembly for the same period totalled $279,566,400 gross ($272,116,200 net), while operating costs amounted to $237,803,933 gross ($231,031,260 net). As for voluntary contributions, two thirds of the Mission's cost for the period from 1 November 1993 to 31 March 1995, in the amount of $58,273,500, had been received from Kuwait, which also contributed 35 vehicles for use by the Mission's engineering unit.

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reported that 11 international General Service and Field Service staff of UNIKOM had been replaced by local staff between 1 November 1994 and 31 March 1995, while an additional nine were expected to be replaced between 1 April 1995 and 30 June 1996. He also recalled that Kuwait had provided two camps for the infantry battalion, free of charge, which resulted in savings of $7.1 million from the allocation for the construction of UNIKOM premises.

UNIKOM expenditures from 1 November 1993 to 31 October 1994 totalled $58,830,600 gross ($56,755,600 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $11,169,400 gross ($10,997,700 net), of which $7,800,000 had already been credited to Member States. Troops were provided during that period by Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Denmark and Norway; full reimbursement of costs to troop-contributing States had been made for the period ending December 1994. The cost of maintaining UNIKOM was estimated at $43,718,300 gross ($41,997,500 net) from 1 November 1994 to 30 June 1995 and at $5,326,000 gross ($5,108,200 net) per month from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996, providing for 255 military observers, 910 contingent personnel and up to 259 international and local civilian staff.

The Secretary-General requested that the General Assembly approve the amounts required for maintaining UNIKOM from 1 May to 31 October 1994, from 1 November 1994 to 31 March 1995, and from 1 April to 30 June 1995; appropriate one third of each amount for the respective periods and assess it for the first two periods, with the remainder to be funded by Kuwait; and approve the amount for the Mission's maintenance from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996. He also proposed action with regard to the unencumbered balance for the period from 1 to 30 April 1995, and requested commitment authority of $3,916,700 gross ($3,480,900 net) from 1 May to 30 June 1995 and of $1,920,600 gross ($1,702,700 net) per month from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

In March, the General Assembly adopted decision 49/477.

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

At its 99th plenary meeting, on 31 March 1995, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee and pending consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions:

(a) Approved, provisionally, an amount of 12 million United States dollars net for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1995, including the two thirds of that amount to be funded from voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait, should the Security Council decide to continue the Mission;

(b) Authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount of 4 million dollars net, representing one third of the cost of the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1995, in addition to the amount of 8 million dollars to be made available by the Government of Kuwait.

General Assembly decision 49/477

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/877) without vote, 29 March (meeting 50); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 118 (a).

ACABQ report. In a 19 May report,⁽³⁶⁾ ACABQ noted that the amount of unliquidated obligations had been reduced from $6.7 million at the end of February to $4.6 million at the end of March, and that reimbursement of troop costs to Member States had been made in full up to March 1995. It had been informed that a project to consolidate facilities in a new UNIKOM support centre had been under way since January and was expected to be completed in July, and that the Mission's logistics base was being moved from Doha to Kuwait City. Having reviewed UNIKOM personnel costs as well as transport and air operations, ACABQ recommended approval of amounts for the Mission's maintenance from 1 November 1994 to 30 June 1995 and from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996, appropriation and assessment of one third of the amount for the former period, and commitment authorization not exceeding $1,811,900 gross ($1,594,100 net) per month for the latter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July and December)

On 12 July, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/245.

Financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 689(1991) of 9 April 1991, by which the Council decided to set up the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission and to review the question of its termination or continuation every six months,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observation Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolution 45/260 of 3 May 1991 on the financing of the Observation Mission and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 48/242 of 5 April 1994,

Recalling further its decision 49/477 of 31 March 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observation Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Expressing its appreciation for the substantial voluntary contributions made to the Observation Mission by the Government of Kuwait and the contributions of other Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observation Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observation Mission as at 12 June 1995, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 27,668,567 United States dollars;

2. Expresses its continued appreciation for the decision of the Government of Kuwait to defray two thirds of the cost of the Observation Mission, effective 1 November 1993;

3. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Approves the amount of 33 million dollars gross (31,876,800 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1994, two thirds of this amount, equivalent to 21,251,200 dollars, to be funded from voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait;

7. Decides to appropriate to the special account referred to in General Assembly resolution 45/260 an amount of 11,748,800 dollars gross (10,625,600 dollars

net) authorized by the Assembly in paragraph 17 of its resolution 48/242 for the maintenance of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1994;

8. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 11,748,800 dollars gross (10,625,600 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 11 million dollars gross (9,876,800 dollars net) already apportioned among Member States in accordance with paragraph 17 of General Assembly resolution 48/242;

9. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, the credits already given to Member States totalling 1,123,200 dollars against the apportionment as provided for in paragraph 8 above represent their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income for the period from 1 May to 31 October 1994 approved for the Observation Mission;

10. Approves the amount of 43 million dollars gross (41,279,200 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Observation Mission for the period from 1 November 1994 to 30 June 1995, two thirds of this amount, equivalent to 27,519,500 dollars, to be funded from voluntary contributions from the Government of Kuwait;

11. General Assembly resolution 49/245

12 July 1995 Meeting 105 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/877/Add.1) without vote, 23 June (meeting 58); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.53); agenda item 118 la). Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 56, 58; plenary 105.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item on financing of UNIKOM at its resumed fiftieth session (decision 50/469).

Ongoing monitoring and verification

During the year, IAEA and UNSCOM continued to report on their activities to monitor and verify Iraq's compliance with the provisions of the Security Council's 1991 resolutions, primarily section C of resolution 687(1991). Those activities, carried out under the respective ongoing monitoring and verification (OMV) plans approved by the Council in resolution 715(1991), pertained to Iraq's nuclear, chemical and biological weapons programmes as well as ballistic missiles; and to an export/import mechanism, called for in the same resolution, to monitor any future sale or supply to Iraq of items relevant to the implementation of resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991) and of the OMV plans. In coordination with the Sanctions Committee, IAEA and UNSCOM in 1995 finalized the development of such a mechanism, and revised accordingly lists of items to be reported to them by exporting countries, contained in annexes to their OMV plans.

The discovery of a large amount of additional important documentation in August, coupled with Iraq's new disclosures, necessitated substantial adjustments in IAEA's and UNSCOM's understanding of and accounting for Iraq's past programmes, which were revealed to have been more extensive and advanced in every dimension than previously known. At the end of the year, Iraq also acknowledged having had a radiological weapons programme, information on which had been previously unavailable.

IAEA activities

Seventh IAEA report on OMV (April). By an 11 April note,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the seventh report of the IAEA Director General on the implementation of the Agency's OMV plan related to Iraq's nuclear capabilities, submitted in response to resolution 715(1991). The report noted that most Agency activities in Iraq were carried out by its Nuclear Monitoring Group (NMG), headquartered at the Baghdad Monitoring and Verification Centre (BMVC), which also was cooperating with UNSCOM resident teams as necessary.

The Director General provided background information on Iraq's past nuclear weapons programme, noting that the documents seized by IAEA inspectors in 1991 had revealed the progress made in the covert Iraqi nuclear programme, "Petrochemical Project 3" (PC3), in 1988-1991. Two questions, he said, had been left open; these covered the progress made by PC3 from June 1990 to January 1991, and the completeness of information regarding gas centrifuge enrichment. In that regard, Iraqi authorities asserted that the Kuwait invasion had brought all Iraqi Atomic Energy Commission activities to a virtual halt; that the sanctions imposed by the Security Council had interrupted the flow of equipment and material needed for completing the project; and that all sensitive documents had been surrendered to the Iraqi army for destruction. For its part, IAEA believed that some programme documents forcibly taken from IAEA inspectors in 1991 had been withheld by Iraq, despite its claim to the contrary, and that Iraq's assertion that all programme documents had been destroyed was not credible.

The Agency undertook independent verification of the information concerning the gas centrifuge programme, as well as materials and equipment imported by Iraq that were subject to control and monitoring under the OMV plan; to date, the investigation had entailed inquiries involving 186 companies in 28 countries. The Director General also pointed out that IAEA had recently received copies of documents alleging ongoing nuclear weapons-related studies in Iraq; however, initial analysis could not establish the documents' authenticity, while Iraqi authorities denied the existence of such a programme. The Agency continued to pursue the matter.

The report further described OMV activities, including inspections at facilities, installations and sites; environmental monitoring; verification of the use of items listed in annex 3 of the OMV plan as related to the nuclear programme; interviews with Iraqi personnel connected with the former programme; and verification of information provided by Iraq as well as acquired from Member States, from aerial surveillance and open sources and assessed to warrant further investigation. Since the establishment of NMG in 1994, more than 160 inspections had been conducted at some 70 facilities, including 23 facilities which had been inspected for the first time: 3 identified by Iraq as the recipients of monitored items for which it had requested release or change of use; 2 where previously undeclared items of dual-use equipment were located; 16 declared as having a means of power supply greater than 10 MWe; 1 where radioisotopes were used or stored; and 1 inspected on the basis of information obtained from Member States. The inspections revealed shortcomings in the inventory of declared facilities with a power supply greater than 10 MWe, and the Iraqi National Monitoring Directorate was requested to prepare a correct inventory declaration.

Environmental monitoring involved the twice-yearly hydrological survey of the watersheds of the Tigris and Euphrates, during which samples of water, sediment and biota were collected, as well as aerial and ground-based gamma radiation surveys, the collection of airborne particulate matter and the sampling of materials deposited on surfaces. IAEA video surveillance and recording equipment installed in two major engineering establishments had been modified to enable transmission of television signals from monitored locations to BMVC; the relevant information was shared with UNSCOM. IAEA and UNSCOM also cooperated in processing requests for the release of, or for permission to relocate, equipment and material, as well as for permission to change the use of monitored buildings. Also, to confirm that critical items of equipment were at their declared locations, and to prevent the undetected use of controlled equipment, IAEA continued to attach seals with unique verifiable signatures to such items.

As previously reported, all weapons-usable nuclear material had been removed from Iraq by February 1994, and was fully accounted for and stored under IAEA safeguards in the Russian Federation. The nuclear material remaining in Iraq comprised 1.8 tonnes of low-enriched uranium, 6 tonnes of depleted uranium and 540 tonnes of natural uranium, in a variety of physical and chemical forms, in sealed storage under IAEA control. The Agency was currently seeking Iraq's cooperation in consolidating its three semi-annual declarations made since November 1993 concerning the inventories of facilities, installations and sites suitable for nuclear activities of any kind, as well as of all material, equipment and items identified in annex 3 of the OMV plan; in that regard, IAEA had received an assurance that the necessary work was in progress. The report also noted the high level of cooperation by Iraqi counterparts in facilitating IAEA field activities. Those activities continued to be supported as well by the IAEA data analysis and processing centre, which maintained a computerized system for the management, analysis and retrieval of all information relevant to Iraq.

In implementation of the OMV plan, the Agency examined the extent to which technical assistance and cooperation might be accommodated within the constraints of the relevant Security Council resolutions. It identified five technical assistance projects, approved by its Board of Governors and perceived as falling outside the proscribed conduct of nuclear activities by Iraq. Three projects related to agriculture (mutation techniques for crop protection, immunoassay techniques for rinderpest diagnosis, improvement of soil fertility) and two to nuclear medicine (rehabilitation of nuclear medicine services and of radiotherapy services for cancer); they involved the provision by IAEA of experts, equipment and fellowships, as well as the funding of visits by Iraqi scientists to foreign laboratories. At the Agency's request, the Sanctions Committee examined the issue, concurred that the assistance in question fell within the limited exceptions to the sanctions, and approved the implementation of those projects.

The report also reviewed activities pertaining to IAEA on-site inspections, development of an export/import-monitoring mechanism, and a related revision to annex 3 of the OMV plan (see below).

Communication of the IAEA Director General (July). In a follow-up to the Agency's seventh report, transmitted⁽³⁸⁾ on 17 July, the Director General informed the Security Council that IAEA had completed its investigation of the documents referred to in the April report (see above), alleging that Iraq's nuclear weapons programme had been reconstituted. Owing to a large number of errors and inconsistencies in the documents, the conclusion was reached that the documents were not authentic. Furthermore, no credible evidence had been found to corroborate the allegations, it was stated.

Eighth IAEA report on OMV (October). The eighth IAEA report on implementation of the OMV plan, transmitted⁽³⁹⁾ on 6 October, stated that an Agency delegation had visited Baghdad from 17 to 20 August at the invitation of the Iraqi Government, following the arrival in Jordan, on 8 August, of General Hussein Kamel, the former Iraqi Minister of Industry and Military Industrialization. The delegation received information concerning Iraq's past nuclear programme, previously withheld allegedly at the instruction of General Kamel. In addition to new details of the programme, Iraqi officials provided documents on a hitherto undisclosed project said to have been ordered by General Kamel and consisting of a crash programme, launched in September 1990, to extract and further enrich the already highly enriched uranium contained in safeguarded research reactor fuel at the Tuwaitha site. The programme was aimed at accelerating the availability of weapons-grade material for the fabrication of a nuclear device and was to have been carried out between the twice-yearly IAEA safeguards inspections in November 1990 and May 1991. However, while the extraction equipment had been assembled by late January 1991, the damage caused by the coalition air raids on Tuwaitha and other relevant facilities made further work on the project impossible; in May 1991, the IAEA inspection had fully accounted for the safeguarded reactor fuel.

The Agency delegation also received information on activities of PC3 in the second half of 1990, involving, inter alia, activities of the gas centrifuge enrichment programme. On 20 August, Iraqi authorities announced the discovery of thousands of documents, and several tons of metals and other materials, on a farm said to be owned by the family of General Kamel. The documents, totalling some 680,000 pages, were inventoried by a joint IAEA/UNSCOM team in BMVC and subsequently transferred to IAEA headquarters in Vienna for evaluation. The metals and other materials were also transported to BMVC for analysis. Following the talks in Baghdad, the Agency delegation met in Jordan with General Kamel, whose detailed description of the past nuclear programme provided useful information. The report noted that, while the sheer magnitude of the documentation made it impossible to draw definitive conclusions at the current time, nothing warranted a change in IAEA's determination that Iraq's nuclear weapons programme had for all practical purposes been destroyed, removed or rendered harmless. However, it was clear that the crash programme to extract weapons-grade material from safeguarded reactor fuel constituted an additional violation of Iraq's safeguards agreement with IAEA, while its failure to disclose information on that programme and other weapons-related activities constituted violations of Iraq's obligations under relevant Security Council resolutions.

To follow up on the new information, an ad hoc IAEA inspection mission was sent to Iraq from 9 to 20 September (see below). In the meantime, NMG resident inspectors continued their work in the field and conducted 105 inspections at some 51 sites and facilities, 11 of which were visited for the first time. The sixth radiometric survey of Iraq's main water bodies was completed in April, with samples of water, sediment and biota having been taken at 15 sites selected from the 52 locations for which baseline data had been established in 1992. Twelve additional locations along the Euphrates watercourse, close to the Al Qaim phosphate fertilizer plant, were sampled as well, to establish a baseline for future analyses. In July, Iraq submitted a semi-annual update on facilities, installations and sites suitable for nuclear activities, which provided detailed information on 29 additional facilities, thus bringing the total number of declared sites to 169. IAEA and UNSCOM approved 12 of 20 requests for the release, relocation or change of the use of equipment, materials and facilities, received since August 1994.

On-site inspections

During 1995, IAEA conducted two on-site inspections in Iraq—the twenty-eighth and the twenty-ninth since such inspections were instituted in accordance with Security Council resolution 687(1991).

The twenty-eighth inspection (9-20 September)⁽⁴⁰⁾ investigated and documented the information declared by Iraq in August concerning its former crash programme to accelerate the production of a nuclear weapon. For the first time, Iraq acknowledged that activities had been carried out at the Tuwaitha and Al Atheer sites for the direct purpose of producing nuclear weapons and not, as previously asserted, merely to define the capabilities required for their production. Credible descriptions were obtained as to the purpose and utilization of the main buildings at the Al Atheer site, with particular respect to the internal explosion chamber and the gas gun laboratory, and an admission was gained regarding the processing of undeclared nuclear material in the former fuel fabrication laboratory at Tuwaitha, where some 10.3 tons of natural uranium, comprising uranium dioxide of Brazilian origin and yellowcake of indigenous origin, had been processed. Iraq also admitted that the Engineering Design Centre at Rashdiya was the headquarters of the centrifuge enrichment project; it provided a detailed explanation of its establishment, building utilization and achievements; however, no convincing rationale was offered for the prior concealment of that fact. Wide-ranging information was obtained clarifying and confirming certain aspects of the procurement system set up to support the centrifuge enrichment project.

Although there were no indications to suggest that Iraq had retained any practical indigenous capability to produce weapons-usable nuclear material, it was recognized that its intellectual capabilities and resources in that regard remained. In the light of the new information, it became evident that a further revision had to be issued to Iraq's so-called "full, final and complete" declaration made in June 1992.⁽⁴¹⁾ The revision would provide a comprehensive description of all facets of the past programme, in particular the work of the 1987 nuclear weapons study group at the Ministry of Industry and Military Industrialization, and the crash programme, including programme milestones and deadlines and the military strategy. The revised declaration also had to include details of the various procurement networks; achievements of the weaponization group set up within PC3; work on other enrichment technologies; the handling, processing and use of non-declared nuclear material; work on radiological weapons; activities since the end of 1990; and information on the current location of materials, equipment and documents removed from the Engineering Design Centre at Rashdiya after April 1991.

The twenty-ninth on-site inspection (17-24 October)⁽⁴²⁾ sought to obtain further details related to the organization, management and facilities of the centrifuge enrichment programme, centrifuge machines and cascades, procurement and foreign assistance, and weaponization activities. Discussions were held with the Iraqi counterpart at the headquarters of the Military Industrial Corporation, and inspections were conducted at the Al Shakyli store, the Engineering Design Centre and the Al Furat site, as well as at the Al Qaqaa State Establishment and at Balat Ash Shuada.

The inspectors noted a remarkable level of openness displayed by Iraqi counterparts in the discussions, but pointed to a certain remaining degree of reticence and to contradictions between verbal statements and the content of some original PC3 documents. They concluded that Iraq's original plan had had the objective of creating a small arsenal of nuclear weapons, with the first device being produced in 1991; however, the programme's main components had not progressed at the same pace to meet the initial deadline. The decision to embark upon a crash programme modified substantially the original objective and restricted the development of a delivery system to the short-term option of missile delivery. It was noted that Iraq had developed or otherwise acquired many of the technologies necessary to produce deliverable nuclear weapons, but the Gulf War had destroyed electromagnetic isotope separation facilities and halted efforts to master centrifuge technology. Subsequently, IAEA had removed from Iraq all existing research reactor fuel, and hence any in-country source of quickly available heavy enriched uranium.

The inspection emphasized that adequate provisions were currently in place in Iraq to detect the resurgence of a capability to produce significant quantities of nuclear weapons-usable material; however, vigilance was necessary to prevent the direct acquisition of such material, in view of the low signature associated with the assembly of a nuclear device.

Reports under resolution 699(1991)

In accordance with Security Council resolution 699(1991),⁽⁴³⁾ IAEA submitted in 1995 two progress reports on the implementation of the plan for the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of the items specified in paragraph 12 of Council resolution 687(1991).

The June report⁽⁴⁴⁾ stated that no development relevant to Agency activities in Iraq was to be reported for the period from 17 December 1994 to 17 June 1995, beyond what had been communicated to the Council in the April report on OMV (see above). In December,⁽⁴⁵⁾ information was provided on the events described in the October report on OMV, as well as on follow-up IAEA inspections (see above). It was noted that the documents obtained by the Agency during the period under review indicated the presence in Iraq of hitherto undeclared items that could fall in the categories proscribed to Iraq under resolution 687(1991). IAEA said it was in the process of locating, identifying and analysing the characteristics of such items.

UNSCOM activities

The UN Special Commission, headed by Executive Chairman Rolf Ekéus, continued its monitoring and verification operations in Iraq, which were carried out from three offices: the Executive Office in New York, the monitoring and verification centre in Baghdad and a field office in Muharra, Bahrain. In 1995, UNSCOM launched its biological monitoring system, augmenting systems already operational for monitoring missile, chemical and nuclear activities.

UNSCOM operations continued to be financed from frozen Iraqi assets made available through the escrow account, as established under Security Council resolution 778(1992)⁽²⁰⁾ (see also above, under "Sanctions compliance"), as well as from voluntary contributions from Kuwait, Qatar and Saudi Arabia. In addition, a number of experts, facilities, equipment and services were provided to the Commission by Governments at their own expense, including the premises of its field office in Bahrain.

The status, privileges and immunities of UNSCOM and other UN agencies involved in implementing resolution 687(1991) continued to be regulated by relevant Council resolutions and by agreements reached in 1993 with Iraq and Bahrain,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the latter being extended every six months. In a 7 March 1995 memorandum⁽⁴⁷⁾ to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General proposed that the General Assembly grant to the UNSCOM Executive Chairman, not a staff member of the UN Secretariat, the privileges and immunities referred to in articles V and VII of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.⁽⁴⁸⁾ By decision 49/475 of 31 March, the Assembly approved that proposal.

During the year, the Security Council received four reports from the Special Commission: two on UNSCOM activities, submitted by its Executive Chairman; and two on the implementation of its OMV plan, submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to Council resolution 715(1991).

Seventh report on OMV (April). On 10 April, the Secretary-General submitted the seventh report⁽⁴⁹⁾ on the implementation of the UNSCOM OMV plan. The report noted that the basic elements of the OMV system comprised regular inspections of relevant facilities, inventories of dual-purpose items (those permitted for use but which could be used for the acquisition of banned weapons), and accounting for all inventoried items until they were consumed, disposed of or no longer operable. The system was underpinned by the use of aerial surveillance with a variety of sensors, remote sensors, tags and seals, various detection technologies and the export/import control mechanism, as well as information obtained from other sources. The main areas of application of the OMV plan included Iraq's missile, chemical, biological and nuclear activities and export/import monitoring. The plan also required Iraq to adopt measures necessary to implement its obligations under resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991), as well as the plan itself, including penal legislation forbidding any activity proscribed to Iraq from being carried out under its jurisdiction.

The report noted that the UNSCOM missile-monitoring system had become operational, with the completion of the baseline survey of Iraq's permitted missile and related dual-purpose capabilities, installation of sensors and tags for monitored missiles and production equipment and related dual-purpose items, and the inception of a resident missile-monitoring team. UNSCOM had essentially completed the accounting of facilities, equipment and materials used in the past proscribed missile programmes, but was waiting for responses to its requests for information from a number of countries from which Iraq had acquired or sought to acquire items for proscribed purposes. While the Commission believed it had a broad understanding of Iraq's achievements and its level of technological development in that area, it continued to investigate certain related programmes, such as those for the development of a supersonic parachute recovery system and production of unsymmetrical dimethyl hydrazine—a liquid fuel capable of improving the performance of liquid-propellant rocket engines.

The resident missile-monitoring team conducted 178 inspections of research, development, testing, production and modification activities and facilities, to ensure that there was no research or development into or production of missile systems exceeding the specifications of the relevant Security Council resolutions; that all declared equipment was accounted for; and that records agreed with information available from other sources. It continued regular collection and review of video coverage of missile-related activities in critical areas and key equipment, to guarantee that all produced missiles subject to monitoring were accounted for and tagged and that no production of proscribed missile systems occurred. Three inspections were also carried out of the tagged operational missiles, to ensure that none had been modified to exceed the allowed specifications. In addition, UNSCOM continued to conduct twice-yearly research and development update inspections, most recently in March 1995, to review technical details of the design, development and testing of missile systems and missile-related technologies and to confirm that current designs did not exceed the established limits.

The Commission's chemical-monitoring system was also operational, with the installation of its monitoring equipment almost complete. On 25 March, Iraq presented a new full, final and complete declaration of its past chemical warfare activities, as promised during the high-level talks in Baghdad in February. The report provided background information available to UNSCOM on Iraq's past chemical programmes, including in the areas of agent production, precursor chemical production, equipment and munitions. It noted that baseline inspections had been conducted in January and February at 17 universities, colleges and research institutions to assess their relevance for monitoring, and five military storage depots had been visited because of their potential to store munitions for chemical weapons. The Commission concluded that, except for two facilities related to pesticide formulation, none of the chemical sites currently monitored had the capability to produce banned items, while the inspected research laboratories had no potential for conducting significant chemical weapons-related research and development.

In addition to the monitoring capabilities shared across the sectors, chemical monitoring was centred around visits to monitored sites, tagging and inventorying of key materials and equipment, collection and analysis of air samples using automatic samplers located at certain sites, and monitoring of key equipment items by remote-controlled cameras. By the end of January, sensor systems had been installed at all sites of interest, 30 cameras had been mounted at six sites, and 15 air samplers had been placed at eight sites. In February, a chemical laboratory was installed at BMVC for sample analysis. The chemical-monitoring group, which began work in October 1994, had conducted 70 inspections; its capabilities were to be enhanced in May 1995 with the provision of manual-transportable air samplers and personal detection and protection equipment.

The report further pointed to difficulties encountered by UNSCOM in establishing its biological-monitoring system, owing to the nature and scope of the task as well as to the incompleteness of and inconsistencies in Iraq's declarations regarding its dual-purpose capabilities. A new full, final and complete declaration recently received by UNSCOM had not definitively accounted for all the materials and items known to have been acquired by Iraq that might have been used in a biological warfare programme; in UNSCOM's view, there was a high risk that those items had been purchased and in part used for proscribed purposes. The report stated that, given the circumstances, the Commission's biological monitoring could not be considered comprehensive in coverage and properly focused; nevertheless, it summarized the available information on Iraq's past programmes, including in the areas of complex growth media, equipment and construction of biological facilities, and noted that interim biological monitoring, begun in December 1994 with a series of intrusive inspections, sought to establish the baseline data necessary for the commencement of monitoring. For that purpose, biological audits were conducted at 10 priority sites for which information was the most disparate.

The nature of biological weapons necessitated a broader effort than in the other areas, it was stated. The OMV plan provided for the monitoring of Iraq's basic biological research potential, its stocks of micro-organisms and complex growth media, its biological production capacity, and its ability to isolate micro-organisms and create particles usable in biological warfare, as well as its ability to fill containers with biological material and to disperse such material. In all, monitoring activities covered some 80 sites, comprising biological laboratories, biological production facilities and agricultural crop sprayers. To date, 24 cameras had been installed at five key sites and locations, and monitoring of certain sites had been initiated. A total of 13 biological inspections were undertaken in the period from October 1994 to March 1995, and interim monitoring groups conducted 51 visits to 20 sites. In addition, a biological room was installed at BMVC for the processing, packaging and onward transmission of biological samples.

UNSCOM continued to assist and cooperate with IAEA in the area of nuclear activities (see above, under "IAEA activities"). It participated in IAEA inspections and monitoring teams, provided logistic support as well as aircraft for the transport of IAEA inspectors, and commented on the Iraqi requests, considered by IAEA, to relocate nuclear-related, dual-use materials and equipment within the country. In addition to supporting the surface-water sampling programme, the Commission recently approved fitting its helicopters with air samplers to complement IAEA's investigative ability. It also shared information obtained by its U2 high-altitude surveillance aircraft and the Baghdad-based aerial inspection team, which continued to conduct regular aerial surveillance of monitored sites. The report noted that some 243 missions had been undertaken to date by the U2 aircraft and 550 missions by the aerial inspection team.

As for national implementation measures, the report stated that Iraq had consulted with UNSCOM on draft legislation, expected to be adopted in April, to ban any activity proscribed by relevant Security Council resolutions. It further reviewed activities to establish and implement an export/import-monitoring mechanism and described organizational and financial aspects of the Commission's work (see below).

Eighth report on OMV (October). The eighth report,⁽⁵⁰⁾ submitted on 11 October, on the implementation of the Special Commission's OMV plan, stated that the UNSCOM Executive Chairman had made five visits to Baghdad during the period under review (29 May-1 June, 30 June-2 July, 4-6 August, 17-20 August, 29 September-1 October). Two visits were also paid to Baghdad by the Deputy Executive Chairman (14-17 May, 17-20 September) to address issues relating to Iraq's prohibited programmes. Those visits were necessitated by indications that Iraq was contemplating ceasing its cooperation with UNSCOM.

In May, Iraq required statements from the Commission that the chemical weapons and missile files were closed and the monitoring system was operational, and from IAEA that the nuclear file was closed, following which it would address the outstanding issue of its biological activities. The Executive Chairman responded that, while the bulk of requirements with regard to chemical weapons and missiles had been implemented, uncertainties remained in those areas which needed to be resolved. On 1 July, Iraq acknowledged an offensive biological weapons programme, including the production of a number of biological agents, but denied the weaponization of such agents. In early August, it submitted its "full, final and complete" disclosure of the biological weapons programme and threatened to cease cooperation with the Security Council and UNSCOM if there were no progress, by 31 August, towards lifting sanctions and the oil embargo. Upon his return to New York, the Executive Chairman informed the Council accordingly in a 10 August oral briefing. However, following the departure of General Hussein Kamel for Jordan, Iraq withdrew the ultimatum and invited the Executive Chairman, as well as the IAEA Director General, to visit Baghdad (see also above, under "IAEA activities"). During that visit, it disclosed a much more extensive programme than was described in its "full, final and complete" declaration, admitting weaponization of biological warfare agents immediately prior to the outbreak of the Gulf War, including the filling of 166 bombs and 25 "Al Hussein" missiles. Subsequently, it made further disclosures with regard to other prohibited programmes, including the indigenous production and testing of Scud-type missile engines.

On 20 August, a large cache of documents and other materials was located and taken possession of by UNSCOM and IAEA, including microfiches, computer diskettes, videotapes, photographs and prohibited hardware components. While the bulk of the cache related to the nuclear area, many concerned chemical, biological and missile activities. Following the discovery, Iraq admitted that directors of the sites involved in proscribed programmes had been ordered in 1991 to deliver production technology-related documents to special security organizations, which was contrary to Iraq's original claim that all documentation had been destroyed. Nevertheless, the Commission believed that more such documentation existed, particularly in areas such as production records, procurement networks and sources of supply; the relevant documents and archives of the Military Industrialization Corporation and the Ministry of Defence were also missing. Initial analysis of the discovered documents at BMVC revealed programmes larger or more advanced in every dimension than previously declared; in particular, Iraq acknowledged a more extensive programme for the production and storage of the chemical warfare nerve agent VX.

The new evidence necessitated re-examination of Iraq's declarations on unilateral destruction of elements related to proscribed missiles and chemical and biological programmes, it was stated. The Commission had to press for additional documentation. It was evident that the Commission had to have a complete understanding of the concept behind each stage of the development of all proscribed weapons systems, together with their intended and actual deployment plans.

The report further reviewed OMV activities in each of the Commission's mandated areas. It noted that UNSCOM continued to: conduct regular inspections of more than 30 missile-related facilities, having performed some 450 inspections since August 1994; collect, on a monthly basis, videotapes from 40 cameras installed at 16 monitored facilities; and review more than 120 tagged pieces of missile-related equipment. During the reporting period, the Commission carried out the second annual verification of Iraq's non-proscribed operational missiles (with ranges less than 150 kilometres), and established modalities requiring Iraq to present 10 per cent of its missiles, three times per year, for verification. It also investigated Iraq's resumed acquisition efforts in support of missile facilities, which involved the actual import of equipment and materials without notifications to the UN Sanctions Committee; in most cases, Iraq wrongly asserted that those items had been purchased within the country. On 2 July, UNSCOM informed the Security Council of having detected the continued operation of the equipment purchased for proscribed missile activities, in contravention of the Commission's instructions for its destruction; shortly thereafter, Iraq agreed to comply and completed the destruction by the end of July.

The report stated that, prior to mid-August 1995, Iraq had continued to mislead UNSCOM by withholding requested information, attributing cases on which information was requested to non-proscribed areas, denying activities to which it later admitted, and falsifying its accounting of missiles, warheads and supporting materials. Further to the disclosures made in August, the Commission, at the end of September, obtained new information on Iraq's testing activity, including both static and flight testing of Scud-variant missile systems; development and testing of new liquid-propellant engine designs and of a warhead separation system; an indigenous design of a 600-mm-diameter supergun system; three flight tests of chemical warheads; and several new designs of longer-range missile systems, which involved missiles with ranges of up to 3,000 km as well as a missile for delivery of a nuclear explosive device. Based on the totality of the available information, the Commission concluded that earlier declarations on unilateral destruction of proscribed operational missiles had been intentionally falsified; that a new definite accounting of weapons, equipment and materials used in the proscribed missile programme had to be provided; and that Iraq had not yet disclosed fully and completely its proscribed missile activities.

In the chemical area, four additional baseline inspections were completed and monitoring and verification protocols were prepared for one research institute and three chemical storage and production sites, bringing the number of inspected facilities to 62 chemical sites and 18 universities, colleges and research institutes. In addition to 19 air samplers installed at six chemical production sites, the chemical monitoring team received 10 sampling pumps and supporting calibration equipment for random air sampling at any location. Protective equipment had also been procured for operations both in the field and at BMVC. Since its inception, the team had undertaken more than 200 inspections. In June and July, it detected the unauthorized movement and use of four major items of tagged equipment at two monitored sites; upon instruction, they were returned to the original position.

As the new information obtained in August and September showed that the disclosures made in March and May had been incorrect and incomplete, Iraq in October provided UNSCOM with a number of revised chapters; however, these covered only those areas in which shortcomings had been indicated by the Commission. The additional documentation revealed the existence of the nerve agent VX production programme from May 1985 to December 1990, not from April 1987 to September 1988; the production in 1990 of choline and other precursors in an amount sufficient to produce more than 400 tonnes of VX, with no conclusive evidence to support claims of their complete disposal; the development of binary sarin-filled artillery shells, rockets and aerial bombs, as well as flight tests of long-range missiles with chemical warheads; and significant foreign assistance to the chemical weapons programme, with at least $100 million in procurement remaining undeclared. Iraq's recent declarations invalidated the accounting for chemical munitions and weaponized chemical agents, since the munitions previously declared as used for chemical weapons were now declared as used for biological agents. Under the circumstances, the Commission would require a new full, final and complete disclosure from Iraq concerning its chemical weapons programme.

Biological monitoring began in full on 4 April 1995, preceded by a four-month interim phase. It involved 79 sites, of which 9 were subject to the most intense monitoring; 3 sites were equipped with a total of 22 cameras for video monitoring. Since 10 April, some 150 inspections or visits had been made to different sites, including more than 20 inspections to the Al Hakam facility, known to have played a significant role in Iraq's biological weapons programme. During the year, Iraq made a number of declarations in the biological area, including a full, final and complete disclosure (FFCD) in March; admission in July to having had an offensive biological weapons programme from April 1986 to September 1990; a new FFCD in August, subsequently declared invalid; and additional information disclosed in the light of August events (see above). As that information remained subject to verification, the Commission could not give assurances as to its correctness and comprehensiveness; nevertheless, the report provided a detailed account of new findings. As described, the programme comprised both lethal and incapacitating agents, anti-personnel and anti-plant weapons, a variety of weapons delivery means, and the production and actual weaponization of bacterial agents and research on a number of other biological agents. However, the new documentation appeared to represent only a fraction of all the documents generated under the programme; in addition, information obtained from other sources did not correspond in important aspects to that provided by Iraq.

The Commission continued to cooperate in nuclear-monitoring activities carried out by IAEA, including the review of Iraqi requests for relocation of materials and equipment, the management and control of machine-tool movements within Iraq, and participation in negotiations regarding the sale of nuclear materials removed from Iraq and reprocessed in the Russian Federation. Its U2 surveillance aircraft and the aerial inspection team had undertaken a total of 269 and 600 missions, respectively, while the establishment of a photo laboratory at BMVC facilitated the processing and review of the aerial imagery. No new developments were reported regarding the national implementation measures, as the adoption of the necessary legislation continued to be delayed. The report also reviewed activities related to the export/import-monitoring mechanism, as well as organizational and financial aspects of the Commission's work (see below).

Ninth report on UNSCOM activities (June).

On 20 June, the UNSCOM Executive Chairman submitted the ninth report⁽⁵¹⁾ on Commission activities, covering the period from 10 December 1994 to 16 June 1995. The report reviewed developments in the mandated areas (see above) and described high-level talks held in Baghdad during visits of the Executive Chairman and the Deputy Executive Chairman. Those visits were aimed at continuing the high-level dialogue initiated in July 1993⁽⁵²⁾ and at clarifying outstanding issues between Iraq and UNSCOM.

During the talks, Iraq sought the Commission's agreement to declare all areas except biological as closed, stating that its sole reason for cooperating with UNSCOM and IAEA was the desire for reintegration into the international community through the lifting of sanctions and the embargo. In the absence of prospects for such reintegration, Iraq would find it difficult to justify the expense and effort involved in such cooperation. For his part, the Executive Chairman insisted that certain outstanding technical issues, relating to the level of technical expertise achieved by Iraq and to accounting for components and materials, needed to be resolved first. At the same time, he welcomed the pledge, reaffirmed by the Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister, that Iraq would cooperate with UNSCOM efforts even after any decision by the Security Council to ease or lift the sanctions.

The report concluded that Iraq's cooperation in implementing the OMV plan had been of a degree that satisfied the provisions of Council resolution 715(1991).

Tenth report on UNSCOM activities (December). The tenth report⁽⁵³⁾ on UNSCOM activities, submitted on 17 December and covering the period from 17 June to 17 December, reviewed developments which took place after the October report on OMV (see above). It stated that the Executive Chairman had visited the capitals of States members of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates) to inform their Governments of UNSCOM activities and to seek their political and financial support, and held high-level talks in Baghdad from 27 to 29 November.

During that visit, he was provided with a personal diary relating to the destruction of certain chemical and biological bombs and with an inventory of chemical agents and precursors; he also received assurances from the Deputy Prime Minister that Iraq would continue its cooperation with UNSCOM without time-limits. The Executive Chairman also drew attention to the fact that Iraq's disclosure of its biological weapons programme had given rise to new issues relating to the destruction, removal or rendering harmless of weapons, stocks of agents, subsystems and components, as well as research, development, support and manufacturing facilities. The Deputy Prime Minister recognized that some destruction might be necessary, but appealed for a deferral for as long as possible. At a 12 December meeting with the Executive Chairman, the Deputy Prime Minister reiterated his August statement that all proscribed weapons in Iraq had been destroyed, and invited an expert team to Baghdad to investigate issues of concern to the Commission. The Chairman agreed to send a team of missile experts as soon as the necessary expertise and information could be assembled.

The report further noted that on 16 November Iraq had submitted a new FFCD on its missile activities, which, inter alia, reversed its assertion that the large radar destroyed by UNSCOM in 1994 had not been used in proscribed activities. Iraq also admitted to the production of some 80 major subsystems of Scud-type engines, all of which were claimed to have been disposed of or destroyed, and of 120 indigenous warheads, with no evidence supporting that number. A preliminary review of the declaration revealed inconsistencies with information available from other sources, as well as significant gaps in Iraq's accounting for missile guidance and control systems, liquid propellant fuels and ground support equipment. Iraq also admitted to having conducted a covert programme to develop and produce a surface-to-surface missile after the adoption of resolution 687(1991). Therefore, the Commission stated that it continued to believe that additional important documents were being withheld. In the meantime, it launched an investigation into Iraq's recent acquisition efforts, following the interception by Jordan of a large shipment of high-grade missile components destined for Iraq, and, between 9 and 15 December, carried out a regular research and development update inspection.

On 5 November, Iraq also submitted a draft FFCD of chemical weapons, acknowledging the production of 1.8 tonnes of VX agent in 1988 and 1.5 tonnes in 1990, compared with its earlier declarations that only 260 kilogrammes had been produced in 1988. It further admitted its 1988 plans to relocate the production of chemical precursors to civilian chemical factories, and agreed to supplement the draft FFCD with supporting documentation, as discussed at technical talks in Baghdad from 29 November to 2 December. Among other developments in the chemical area were the first night-time inspection of a chemical site and initial testing with temporary mobile monitoring cameras.

Along with the draft FFCD on chemical weapons, Iraq submitted a draft declaration in the biological area, largely supporting its admissions made since August. Nevertheless, the draft contained serious gaps and omissions relating to biological warfare-agent and munition production, munition filling and destruction of weaponized and bulk agents. Some information did not coincide with the Commission's current findings in a number of important aspects, and definite figures were absent on amounts of biological weapons agents and munitions produced, weaponized and destroyed. In the meantime, an UNSCOM mission identified equipment, material and facilities subject to destruction, removal or being rendered harmless in line with resolution 687(1991).

Another important development was the acknowledgement by Iraq of a programme related to radiological weapons. According to Iraq's statements, an experiment involving the explosion of several containers with irradiated zirconium oxide had been conducted in 1987 at a chemical-weapons test site, ostensibly to study the military effectiveness of using irradiated materials. Although Iraq initially claimed that only a few kilogrammes of zirconium oxide had been irradiated in the research reactor in Tuwaitha and that no special weapons system had been created, it subsequently admitted to having modified 100 empty casings of aerial chemical bombs for the purpose of radiological weapons. Additional information obtained on 4 December revealed the production of three prototype radiological bombs with a gross weight of 1,400 kg and a radioactive content of some 2 curies, all of which had been exploded at test sites. It was also disclosed that a bomb with an alternative design had been developed to fit in the aircraft bomb bay, and 80 casings for such bombs had been prepared. Iraq stated that a comprehensive account of the programme would be included in the nuclear FFCD to IAEA.

Communication (November). In a 6 November letter,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Foreign Minister of Iraq again raised the issue of UNSCOM's use of a U2 "spy" plane, which Iraq had been protesting since UNSCOM's 1991 decision to do so. Iraq stated that the paths followed by the aircraft during its overflights indicated that the targets chosen had been dictated by the intelligence requirements of the United States. In that regard, Iraq reiterated its request that Iraqi aircraft be used in the Commission's work, to exclude any possibility of foreign aircraft being used for purposes prejudicial to its sovereignty and security.

Organizational and financial aspects

The seventh report on OMV⁽⁴⁹⁾ stated that UNSCOM was in the process of creating a customized database in New York to support the export/import mechanism. Preparations to support the mechanism had also been made at BMVC.

The Commission reported that its work was complicated by the lack of secure long-term funding. Whereas UNSCOM estimated requirements from its inception to 31 December 1995 at $104,620,704, only $91,595,500 had been made available for its operations, resulting in a deficit of $13,025,204 as at 31 March.

The eighth report on OMV⁽⁵⁰⁾ stated that the financial situation had become more precarious than ever, with no funds identified as at October 1995 to meet the 1996 requirements, estimated at some $20 million. Also, the office space situation in New York had worsened, with the recruitment of additional experts to cope with the growing workload and the arrival of the documents obtained in Iraq in August.

The tenth report on UNSCOM activities⁽⁵³⁾ noted that the Commission continued to receive contributions in kind, including the secondment of experts and other personnel; donation of vehicles, laboratories, computers, monitoring cameras and detection and communications equipment; and provision of air support and ground facilities in Bahrain. Donors included all members of the European Union and Australia, New Zealand, the Russian Federation, Switzerland, the United States and some Latin American countries. The report pointed to Germany's decision to reduce the number of aircraft stationed in both Bahrain and Iraq, which, in UNSCOM's view, would deal a serious blow to its and IAEA's operations in Iraq.

Export/import-monitoring mechanism

During 1995, UNSCOM and IAEA, in coordination with the UN Sanctions Committee, finalized the development of an export/import mechanism called for in Security Council resolution 715(1991) to monitor any future sale or supply to Iraq of items relevant to the implementation of resolutions 687(1991) and 707(1991) and of OMV plans. In December, the mechanism was submitted for Council approval.

On 17 March, the Secretary-General transmitted⁽⁵⁵⁾ a note from the UNSCOM Executive Chairman, stating that the development of the mechanism had necessitated revision of annexes to the OMV plan, listing items to be reported by exporting countries to UNSCOM and IAEA, for the purpose of defining precisely items subject to notification. In accordance with the procedure established under resolution 715(1991), the Executive Chairman submitted the revised annexes related to chemical, biological and missile items to the Council and said he intended to notify Iraq of the changes 30 days thereafter. The revised annex 3 to the IAEA OMV plan, listing nuclear programme-related items to be reported to the Agency,⁽⁵⁶⁾ was communicated to the Council by the IAEA Director General.

Action by UNSCOM and IAEA. A third seminar of export-control experts, held in New York in January 1995, reviewed final drafts of item lists, considered draft notification forms to be completed by Governments pursuant to the mechanism and discussed its practical implementation. On 15 February, UNSCOM and IAEA resubmitted their joint proposal concerning the mechanism to the Sanctions Committee, further to their initial proposal submitted in 1994.⁽⁵⁷⁾

The mechanism envisaged the creation of an UNSCOM/IAEA Joint Unit, to be represented by customs experts and data-entry clerks in New York and at BMVC and responsible for receiving and processing notifications provided by Iraq and exporting Governments, inspecting notified items on their arrival in Iraq, and undertaking no-notice inspections at points of entry into Iraq and other sites to verify that all notifiable items were being declared. Studies indicated that the number of shipments of dual-use goods would not exceed 2,000 during a normal year.

In response to the Sanctions Committee's request, the Executive Chairman, on 17 July, set out modalities for implementing the mechanism, requesting that they be included with the tripartite proposal on the mechanism forwarded to the Security Council, once approved by the Committee. The Chairman explained that an office of export/import specialists, to be established at BMVC, would serve as an administrative clearing-house for communications from Iraq regarding notification forms, as well as conduct inspections within Iraq, in cooperation with BMVC monitoring teams. Those inspections were to take place not only at declared end-user sites where notified items would be tagged, but also anywhere else in Iraq, including points of entry, where there was reason to believe that notified items or dual-use items subject to notification could be found.

Sanctions Committee action. On 20 July, the Sanctions Committee approved the joint UNSCOM/IAEA proposal for the export/import mechanism, deciding that it should be accompanied by the 17 July letter from the Executive Chairman setting out implementation modalities. However, formal transmission to the Security Council was postponed, pending indications of concurrence from the Governments of all Committee members.

By a 7 December letter,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Sanctions Committee Chairman transmitted to the Security Council, for its approval, the proposed provisions for the export/import-monitoring mechanism, including its objective, scope and characteristics, as well as special cases falling under the mechanism.

Kuwaiti property and missing persons

In a 9 January letter,⁽⁵⁹⁾ Kuwait drew the attention of the Security Council President to Iraq's remaining obligations related to the release of Kuwaiti and third-country prisoners and detainees in Iraq, as well as the return of property seized during Iraq's invasion and occupation of Kuwait. Kuwait claimed that Iraq had not responded to some 600 individual files delivered to it through ICRC, and that it had in its possession almost 200 Kuwaiti armoured vehicles, a missile system and other equipment, in addition to official documents and property stolen from the private sector, with a value of hundreds of millions of dollars. In that regard, Kuwait urged Security Council members to continue their efforts to compel Iraq to fulfil its obligations relating to those issues.

On 13 January, Kuwait transmitted⁽⁶⁰⁾ a list of its military equipment that it claimed was still in Iraq's possession. Kuwait stated its non-acceptance of compensation as an alternative to the immediate return of equipment, but affirmed its right to compensation for the equipment determined on its return to be unserviceable. Kuwait, in a 6 March communication,⁽⁶¹⁾ reiterated its request for the return of property, and informed the Council President that positive results had not been obtained from recent meetings on Kuwaiti and third-country prisoners and hostages, held by the tripartite committee—comprising representatives of Iraq, the coalition States (France, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom and the United States) and ICRC as Chairman—and its technical subcommittee.

On 9 March, Iraq replied⁽⁶²⁾ that Kuwait's allegations were unsubstantiated, stating that the tripartite committee had considered the question of "missing persons" rather than "prisoners and hostages". It also noted that additional information on those persons was currently pending from Kuwait, and accused the Kuwaiti side of politicizing the matter. Iraq further stated that it had already returned large amounts of Kuwaiti property and that Kuwait's most recent list of items had been subjected to careful examination.

According to the Secretary-General's August report on the work of the Organization,⁽¹⁹⁾ the hand-over of property to Kuwait began on 22 April and continued into July. In many instances, however, Kuwait complained of the state of disrepair of the items returned, while Iraq contended that the vehicles had been "brought as is from Kuwait". Kuwait also noted that of the 120 armoured personnel carriers handed over, only 33 were found to belong to Kuwait. The Secretary-General further stated that he had urged Iraq to cooperate with ICRC in achieving a full accounting for more than 600 Kuwaiti and third-country nationals still missing in Iraq.

On 3 May, Kuwait alleged⁽⁶³⁾ that Iraq persisted in its refusal to allow ICRC visits to Iraqi prisoners; that its replies on certain files forwarded to it by ICRC had been inadequate; and that its participation in meetings of the tripartite committee and its technical subcommittee served only the purpose of creating a false impression of cooperation, which cast doubt on the utility of holding such meetings. In a similar vein, Kuwait questioned the seriousness of Iraq in dealing with the issue of property. In its 25 May reply,⁽⁶⁴⁾ Iraq refuted Kuwait's allegations, claiming that some 230 files on missing Kuwaitis and third-country nationals had been processed since the beginning of investigations in June 1994, with the technical subcommittee having processed 168 dossiers since December 1994. As a result, Kuwaiti authorities had closed four cases and the remains of one Kuwaiti had been returned to his relatives. For its part, Iraq accused Kuwait of withholding technical cooperation from Iraqi authorities.

In a 6 July letter,⁽⁶⁵⁾ Kuwait called Iraq's statements untrue, asserting that the number of dossiers processed by Iraq did not exceed 23, and that the information provided to Kuwait had been general and imprecise. No Kuwaiti prisoner, it went on, had been released in the past four years, and the property cited in earlier communications had not been returned. On 16 July, Iraq responded⁽⁶⁶⁾ that the number of dossiers had been reduced from the 627 originally submitted to 605, noted that 36 files contained duplicate names and pertained to only 18 cases, and provided background information on three Kuwaiti nationals, two of whom were dead and one was living in Baghdad of her own free will. Iraq further accused Kuwait of politicizing the issue of missing persons, thwarting the work of the technical subcommittee and calling for an end to that body's operations on the grounds that it had failed to fulfil its mandate. As for return of property, Iraq listed 28 items of naval equipment handed over to Kuwait on 9 July, and noted that two additional items had been returned on 28 June and 10 July.

UN Compensation Commission and Fund

The UN Compensation Commission, established in 1991⁽⁶⁷⁾ for the resolution and payment, through the UN Compensation Fund, of claims against Iraq for losses and damage resulting from its invasion and occupation of Kuwait, continued in 1995 to process claims for prompt settlement. During the year, the Commission's Governing Council held one special session on 19 January to elect its new President and Vice-President, and four regular sessions, all in Geneva: the sixteenth (20-22 March),⁽⁶⁸⁾ seventeenth (15-17 May),⁽⁶⁹⁾ eighteenth (9-11 October)⁽⁷⁰⁾ and nineteenth (11-13 December).⁽⁷¹⁾

In March, the Council considered recommendations of its panels of commissioners (review panels) on the second instalment of claims, and approved 162,720 category A claims (for departure from Iraq or Kuwait) and 811 category B claims (for serious personal injury or death). The number of claims approved in categories A, B and C (individual losses up to $100,000) had thus reached more than 220,000, with a value exceeding $870 million; all of the 95 Governments and 15 international organizations that had filed claims had received compensation awards in at least one category. However, compensation awards issued for those categories since October 1994 remained unpaid, owing to the lack of sufficient resources in the Compensation Fund.

The Governing Council also decided to accept a number of "late claims" under various categories, submitted after the expiration of the prescribed time-limits, and limited acceptance of claims in categories A, B, C and D (individual losses above $100,000) submitted after 1 January 1995. It further approved the appointment of a review panel on the claim submitted by Kuwait on behalf of the Kuwait Oil Company for the cost of extinguishing some 700 oil-well fires in 1991, and reviewed the progress in processing the consolidated claim by Egypt, on behalf of some 900,000 workers who had been in Iraq prior to 2 August 1990, deciding to extend the jurisdictional phase for that claim until 10 July 1995.

In May, the Governing Council approved 132,080 category A claims (third instalment) from 16 countries, totalling $517,650,500 (decision 29); decided not to accept claims in category E (corporate claims) from corporations and other entities and claims in category F (government claims) from Governments and international organizations after 1 January 1996, except as otherwise provided in its decision 12⁽⁷²⁾ or for reasons of civil disorder (decision 30); took note of reports from Governments on the distribution of payments to claimants, pursuant to its decision 18;⁽⁷³⁾ examined claims in categories A, B, C and D filed after 1 January 1995, and accepted those from Bangladesh, Canada, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey as having satisfied the criteria of "strong and compelling reasons" for accepting late submission; and noted with concern that actual payment from the Compensation Fund had thus far totalled only some $8.1 million. The Council's secretariat was asked to inform Governments that claims filed late as a result of delays attributable to Governments would not be considered after 1 September 1995.

In October, the Council approved 217,513 category A claims (fourth instalment) from 67 countries and three international organizations filing on behalf of Palestinians, totalling $771,513,000; and authorized $8.2 million in payment of outstanding compensation awards issued in the second instalment of category B claims to claimants from 41 countries and three international organizations filing Palestinian claims. It also accepted 3,087 claims in categories A, B, C and D filed after 1 January 1995, rejected 130 such claims and retained 1,349 others for further consideration. The Council further reviewed the progress in processing the Kuwaiti and Egyptian claims.

In December, the Governing Council approved 719 category B claims (third instalment) and authorized payment of compensation awards for those claims in the amount of $2.5 million, thus concluding its consideration of claims in that category. The total disbursement in category B stood at $13,460,000 for more than 4,000 claimants from 40 States and three international organizations filing Palestinian claims. The only category B claims remaining unresolved pertained to some 550 missing persons, mostly Kuwaitis, whose fate was still unknown (see above, under "Kuwaiti property and missing persons"). The Council further approved 217,520 category A claims (fifth instalment) with a value of $784,076,500, submitted by 60

Governments and three international organizations filing Palestinian claims. That brought the total of paid claims, amounting to $2.8 billion, to close to 800,000. A third decision related to further procedures for the review of claims, aimed at enhancing the efficiency of review panels and expediting the processing of claims in categories D, E and F.

The Council accepted six category E claims filed after the initial deadline as well as 271 claims in categories A to D submitted after 1 January 1995, rejecting 1,326 other late claims in those categories and retaining two claims for its next session. It also asked its Executive Secretary to request Governments, international organizations and other entities submitting claims to identify any confidential or privileged information that should be removed before claims documents were provided to third parties.

At each session, the Governing Council expressed concern over the lack of resources in the Compensation Fund. In May, October and December, it appealed for efforts to locate and transfer the proceeds from the sale of Iraqi oil and petroleum products to the escrow account (see above, under "Sanctions compliance"), with 30 per cent to be deposited in the Compensation Fund. The Council also reiterated its commitment to pursue efforts for obtaining revenues due to the Fund from the sale of the ship cargoes seized in the Persian Gulf for violating the UN oil embargo. In December, the Governing Council was informed that Kuwait had transferred $613,780 to the escrow account as revenue from the sale of illegal cargoes, of which 30 per cent would be available to the Compensation Fund.

Other matters relating to the Iraq-Kuwait situation

Complaints of airspace and other violations

During the year, Iran and Iraq communicated numerous complaints of violations of their airspace and of other violations allegedly committed by the military forces operating the Persian Gulf region.

On 31 January, Iran transmitted information⁽⁷⁴⁾ on incidents involving United States warships positioned in the Sea of Oman and the Persian Gulf, which, it said, created nuisances for Iranian aircraft and ships. Iran protested what it called illegal activities by the United States Government and asked for an end to such actions. Similar protests were communicated on 9 August⁽⁷⁵⁾ and 25 October.⁽⁷⁶⁾

On 6 October, Iran categorically rejected⁽⁷⁷⁾ allegations in a special warning by the United States, which declared the area of the northern Persian Gulf unsafe for commercial shipping owing to actions of Iranian flag ships. Iran said that the measures by its naval forces referred to in the warning were aimed at maintaining the security and safety of international navigation in the region, implementing sanctions against Iraq, and preventing misuse of the Iranian flag or the use of forged documents and manifests.

On 21 November⁽⁷⁸⁾ and 13 December,⁽⁷⁹⁾ Iran alleged that aircraft of the allied forces operating in Iraq had repeatedly violated its airspace, and provided information on 19 incidents.

Iraq continued throughout 1995 to address communications to the Secretary-General, recording daily violations of its airspace by United States aircraft engaged in reconnaissance and in what Iraq termed provocative activities, including the dropping of heat flares. In separate communications, it lodged⁽⁸⁰⁾ strong protests against violations of its airspace by aircraft of the United States and its coalition partners, flying at low altitudes and breaking the sound barrier over Iraqi townships, and condemned⁽⁸¹⁾ hostile and provocative overflights by United States and other aircraft from bases in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, holding the Governments of those countries fully responsible for their complicity in those acts of aggression and for the physical damage they caused. Following two incidents in which formations of United States military aircraft broke the sound barrier over residential quarters, causing sonic-boom damage to glass in windows of residences and government buildings, Iraq requested⁽⁸²⁾ the Secretary-General to intervene to prevent the recurrence of such unjustified acts against civilian targets.

In a 28 March letter,⁽⁸³⁾ the Foreign Minister of Iraq stated that since March 1991 his country had been the object of acts of aggression and grave violations of its sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence, despite the stipulations of Security Council resolution 687(1991). Iraq claimed that between March 1991 and March 1995, more than 1,000 such acts or violations had been committed by Iran and 56 by Turkey, while the United States and the United Kingdom had been engaged in ongoing aggression, using their military power to impose no-fly zones that excluded Iraqi aircraft from the northern and southern parts of the country. Those aircraft, Iraq said, had violated its airspace in the north 36,362 times between 9 May 1991 and 16 March 1995, while the number of violations in the south was even greater. Iraq said the fact that the Security Council had taken no action to address or prevent those violations constituted an alarming failure on the Council's part not only to maintain international peace and security, but also to implement the provisions of its own resolutions affirming commitment to Iraq's sovereignty.

In another series of communications, Iraq protested what it called acts of provocation by American warships and helicopters against Iraqi civilian vessels in its territorial waters, including oil and water tankers and fishing boats, as well as ships bound for Iraqi ports. These incidents, Iraq said, involved obstruction of navigation, interrogation of crews and detention of crews and vessels, the towing of vessels for inspection as well as on-the-spot searches, and escorting. On 21 August, Iraq stated⁽⁸⁴⁾ that a patrol flying the United States flag had carried out reconnaissance activities in its territorial waters on 7 and 8 August, and that a cruiser flying the flag of the United Kingdom had arrived in the same area on 9 August. On 20 November, Iraq informed⁽⁸⁵⁾ the Secretary-General that members of the crew from a United Kingdom frigate had boarded a tugboat inside Iraqi territorial waters and questioned its master. Both communications contained requests that the Secretary-General intervene to prevent the repetition of such unwarranted actions.

Iraq-Turkey

In communications addressed to the Secretary-General or the Security Council President, Iraq protested the invasion of its territory by Turkish forces, which it said was carried out on the pretext of pursuing elements that threatened the security of Turkey. On 7 April, it stated⁽⁸⁶⁾ that the Turkish air force had conducted 107 sorties into Iraqi airspace between 20 and 31 March 1995, and condemned those violations of its sovereignty. It further claimed that the appearance of terrorist armed bands in its northern part, as well as in southern Turkey, was a consequence of the United States and United Kingdom military intervention in northern Iraq from Turkish territory, which had prevented it from exercising its authority in that region. In a 9 May letter,⁽⁸⁷⁾ Iraq alleged that repression by Turkish forces had caused thousands of Turkish Kurds to seek refuge in Iraq. In a 4 July communication,⁽⁸⁸⁾ Iraq described activities of Turkish forces in northern Iraq, which involved the bombardment of villages, shootings, searches of civilians and their property, forced disappearances and seizure of livestock. It claimed that the approximate strength of one brigade remained in Iraq, contrary to Turkey's statement that its forces had been withdrawn on 2 May. Iraq lodged a vehement protest against the violation of its territorial integrity and the inviolability of its civilian inhabitants and their property.

On 24 July, Turkey responded⁽⁸⁹⁾ that, since Iraq had not been able to exercise authority over its northern part, it could not be asked to prevent the use of its territory for the staging of cross-border terrorist attacks against Turkey. Under those circumstances, the resort by Turkey to measures which were imperative to its own security could not be regarded as a violation of Iraq's sovereignty.

Central Asia

Tajikistan

United Nations efforts for a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Tajikistan continued in 1995. The Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Tajikistan, Ramiro Píriz-Ballón (Uruguay), and other UN officials held frequent consultations with both the Tajik Government and its opposition, as well as with other Governments concerned. The negotiation process between the two sides included high-level consultations in Moscow in April, summit meetings between the leaders of the parties in Kabul, Afghanistan, in May and in Tehran, Iran, in July, the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks in Almaty, Kazakhstan, in May/June, indirect talks between the two leaders in August, and the first phase of the continuous round of inter-Tajik negotiations in Ashkhabad, Turkmenistan, in November/December. In August, the two sides signed a protocol on fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan, in which they decided to begin continuous negotiations on a general peace agreement, to consist of several separate protocols.

The validity of the Agreement on a Temporary Cease-fire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks (the Tehran Agreement) of 17 September 1994(¹) was extended several times, the last time until 26 February 1996, and its text was amended. The UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT), established in 1994,(²) continued to assist the Joint Commission of the Tajik parties, set up under the Agreement to monitor its implementation, in investigating cease-fire violations and in fulfilling other tasks under its mandate. During the year, the Mission reached its full authorized strength of 40 military observers, but suffered one fatality in September. It maintained liaison with the Collective Peace-keeping Forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) in Tajikistan, whose length of stay was extended until 31 December 1995, as well as with the office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), and provided coordination for humanitarian assistance to the country. Brigadier-General Hasan Abaza (Jordan) continued as Chief Military Observer, while Darko Silovic (Croatia) in March replaced Liviu Bota (Romania) as Deputy Special Envoy and Head of Mission. The Security Council extended the Mission's presence in Tajikistan on several occasions; it renewed its mandate in June and again in December, until 15 June 1996.

Communications (January). The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Afghanistan issued a 6 January note(³) concerning violations of its airspace by war-planes belonging to the Russian Federation's border forces and the bombardment of villages on the Afghan side of the Tajik-Afghan border. The Ministry conveyed its strong protest to the Tajik authorities and once again rejected allegations of the use by the Tajik opposition of Afghan territory to conduct attacks on Russian border forces stationed in Tajikistan. In the letter of transmittal, Afghanistan expressed its continuing belief that the Security Council's endorsement of the stationing of Russian armed forces in Tajikistan was not a healthy course of action, and that national reconciliation in Tajikistan could not be achieved without the creation of a favourable political atmosphere and conditions for the voluntary repatriation of Tajik refugees.

In a 3 January statement(⁴) concerning the latest developments on the Tajik-Afghan border, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Tajikistan cited what it saw as continuing attempts to cross the border illegally, incessant shelling of Russian border troops and other hostile acts perpetrated by detachments of the Tajik opposition. It described an incident that had occurred on 2 January (see below). Tajikistan stated that Russian border guards were restricted to safeguarding the Tajik-Afghan border, which did not contradict the 1994 Tehran Agreement.⁽¹⁾ It also emphasized that Afghan border troops, despite assurances that they would prohibit illegal acts perpetrated from the territory of Afghanistan, appeared not to be in control of the situation. In that regard, Tajikistan lodged a protest with the leaders of Afghanistan, drawing their attention to the continuing provocations and appealing for additional steps to safeguard the Tajik-Afghan border.

Report of the Secretary-General (February).

On 4 February, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁾ that a particularly serious breach of the cease-fire had occurred on 2 January when opposition fighters, apparently coming from Afghanistan, ambushed Russian border troops, nine of whom were killed and eight wounded. There were a number of reports of attempts to infiltrate Tajikistan from Afghanistan across the Pyanj River; also, UNMOT observed shelling by Russian border forces towards Afghanistan on four occasions, and the Joint Commission carried out an investigation in northern Afghanistan in response to a complaint by the opposition. Another complaint dealt with the redeployment of some 350 government troops to join the border forces, confirmed by the Tajik authorities, in violation of the 1994 Tehran Agreement. In addition, efforts continued to reconcile the mandate of the Russian border forces, which had broad powers of search and arrest, with the spirit and provisions of the Agreement.

The Secretary-General further reported that his Special Envoy, from 12 to 21 December 1994, had held consultations with senior officials of the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, during which President Rakhmonov of Tajikistan supported the idea of an early fourth round of inter-Tajik negotiations in Moscow to extend the Tehran Agreement and to achieve further progress with the opposition in securing confidence-building measures. President Rakhmonov also indicated his willingness to postpone parliamentary elections, scheduled for 26 February, in order to amend the electoral law, as recommended by OSCE, provided that opposition leaders would participate in the electoral process and recognize the election results. However, during consultations held by a UN Secretariat team with opposition leaders and high-ranking government officials in Iran from 12 to 15 January, the Tajik opposition showed no interest in participating in elections, focusing instead on complaints against the Tajik Government and the Russian border forces, alleging violations of the Tehran Agreement. It stated that it could not accept Moscow as the venue for the next round of talks, unless the Russian Federation officially recognized the Agreement, returned to the opposition weapons and ammunition seized since the Agreement's entry into force, removed new checkpoints established between Khorog and Kalaikumb, and delegated a representative of the border forces to the Russian observer team during negotiations.

Noting that the Tehran Agreement was to expire on 6 February 1995, the Secretary-General referred to communications he had received on 25 and 27 January, respectively, from President Rakhmonov and from Akbar Turajonzodah, head of the Tajik opposition delegation and First Deputy Chairman of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan. President Rakhmonov stated that the Government of Tajikistan was prepared to extend the Agreement for any length of time without additional conditions, and was committed to the continuation of talks, while the Tajik opposition declared the Agreement's extension until 6 March and expressed the hope that inter-Tajik talks would continue and lead to significant progress in resolving fundamental issues on their agenda. In subsequent consultations in New York on 3 February, the opposition expressed its readiness to meet for the fourth round of talks at any time, in any capital of a CIS member other than Moscow.

At the end of January, UNMOT comprised 11 international civilian staff, 22 local staff and 22 military observers. The Mission maintained its headquarters in Dushanbe and field stations in Garm, Kurgan-Tyube and Pyanj. It was closely involved in the work of the Joint Commission and chaired its meetings. At UNMOT's suggestion, the Joint Commission met periodically with representatives of observer States, OSCE and ICRC. The Mission also continued to conduct patrols in the valley between Dushanbe and Garm, to maintain close liaison with the parties to the conflict, as well as with the CIS forces and the Russian border forces, on matters relating to the cease-fire, and to provide political liaison and coordination for humanitarian assistance to Tajikistan.

The Secretary-General noted that the Tajik Government had formally agreed to his proposals on the status of UNMOT, and that a trust fund to support the Joint Commission had been set up but to date had received no contributions. He concluded that the situation in Tajikistan remained tense and that the economic crisis there had had a serious negative impact on efforts to reach political stabilization and to complete the repatriation of refugees. However, activities of UNMOT were an important stabilizing factor, recognized by both parties to the conflict. Accordingly, he recommended that the Mission's presence be continued until 6 March 1995, on the understanding that every effort would be made during that period to obtain agreement on the holding of the next round of talks.

UNMOT extension (February). On 6 February, the Security Council President communicated⁽⁶⁾ to the Secretary-General that Council members had noted his report and endorsed his recommendation to continue the presence of UNMOT in Tajikistan until 6 March. The Council urged the parties to reconfirm through concrete steps their commitment to resolve the conflict only through political means, and their commitment to national reconciliation and the promotion of democracy.

Communications (February/March). On 6 February, Tajikistan transmitted⁽⁷⁾ a 30 January statement announcing the decision to hold elections to the Republic's Majlis-i Oli (Parliament) on 26 February and requesting the participation of foreign observers in the electoral process. Subsequently, Tajikistan announced the elections results⁽⁸⁾ and transmitted a press release thereon by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs.⁽⁹⁾

On 8 February, the Russian Federation transmitted⁽¹⁰⁾ a joint statement on Tajikistan, adopted on 26 January in Moscow at a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation and Tajikistan and the Deputy Foreign Ministers of Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan. Participants called on the Tajik opposition to resume talks in Moscow with the Government of Tajikistan without prior conditions. They welcomed the establishment of UNMOT, expressed support for a substantial increase in its personnel and called for the deployment of a full-scale UN peace-keeping operation on the basis of the CIS Collective Peace-keeping Forces in Tajikistan. They also appealed for an end to hostilities on the Tajik-Afghan border and for strict observance of the Tehran Agreement, expressed their intention to step up joint efforts to ensure the defence of the Tajik-Afghan portion of the CIS southern borders, and called on the Afghan authorities and military-political groups to prevent the use of Afghan territory for launching armed actions against Tajikistan. Participants further expressed their readiness to continue economic assistance to Tajikistan and appealed for international humanitarian assistance to the Tajik people.

On 10 February, meeting in Almaty, Kazakhstan, those same States adopted a joint appeal, transmitted on 14 February,⁽¹¹⁾ requesting the Security Council to establish a full-fledged peace-keeping operation in Tajikistan, and declaring their willingness to make available their units in the CIS Collective Peace-keeping Forces to serve as UN peace-keeping forces at the initial stage of the operation.

UNMOT extension (March). In a 3 March letter,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that Under-Secretary-General Aldo Ajello had held consultations in Moscow, Dushanbe and Islamabad from 24 February to 4 March, and had achieved agreement on the extension of the Tehran Agreement until 26 April.

Accordingly, the Secretary-General recommended that UNMOT's presence in Tajikistan be continued until that date.

On 6 March, the Council President communicated⁽¹³⁾ to the Secretary-General that Council members endorsed his recommendation and urged the parties to resolve the remaining differences in arranging the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks.

Communications (April). On 10 April,⁽¹⁴⁾ Kazakhstan lodged a vigorous protest with the authorities of Afghanistan in connection with the fire-power attack launched by detachments of the Tajik opposition from Afghan territory against Kazak, Russian and Tajik border troops, which resulted in fatalities and injuries. It called on the Afghan leaders to take measures to resolve the situation on the border and prevent similar acts by irregulars of the Tajik opposition.

On 9 April,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Russian Federation, stating that attacks by opposition fighters had increased in frequency and had become particularly audacious and provocative, causing casualties among Kazak, Russian and Tajik border troops, strongly protested to the central and local authorities of Afghanistan, with whose evident connivance, it said, such attacks were made from Afghan territory. It called on Tajik opposition leaders to stop their dangerous provocations and to hold constructive negotiations with the Government of Tajikistan.

In a 13 April letter,⁽¹⁶⁾ Afghanistan referred to repeated incursions into and bombing of Afghan territory by Russian war-planes stationed in Tajikistan, causing heavy casualties among civilians as well as property damage. It strongly protested to the Russian Federation and to Tajikistan against those attacks. Afghanistan stated that its attitude towards Tajik refugees in its northern part was characterized only by humanitarian intentions, and that the delay in their voluntary repatriation was attributable to the security situation in Tajikistan. In view of the described events, Afghanistan urgently expected the Special Envoy to visit Kabul.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

At a meeting of the Security Council on 12 April, the President made the following statement⁽¹⁷⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the escalation of military activities on the Tajik-Afghan border which resulted in grave loss of life. In this context, the Council reminds the parties of their obligations to ensure the safety of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy and all other United Nations personnel.

The Council strongly believes that armed activities by the Tajik opposition in violation of the ceasefire Agreement of 17 September 1994 jeopardize the inter-Tajik dialogue and the process of national reconciliation as a whole. Noting also recent violations of the 17 September 1994 Agreement by government forces, the Council calls on the Tajik opposition and the Government of Tajikistan to comply strictly with the obligations they have assumed under that Agreement and calls on the Tajik opposition in particular to extend it for a substantial period beyond 26 April 1995.

The Council fully supports the appeal of the Secretary-General to the Tajik parties and other countries concerned to exercise restraint, to do their utmost to continue the political dialogue and to hold the next round of talks as soon as possible. It welcomes the agreement by the Government of Tajikistan and the Tajik opposition to the proposal of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy to hold an urgent high-level meeting of their representatives in Moscow. It calls upon the countries of the region to discourage any activities that could complicate or hinder the peace process in Tajikistan.

Reaffirming its resolution 968(1994) of 16 December 1994, the Council once again urges the parties to reconfirm through concrete steps their commitment to resolve the conflict only through political means. The Council reiterates its call on the parties to hold the fourth round of the inter-Tajik talks without delay on the basis as agreed during the previous rounds of consultations.

Meeting number. SC 3515.

Joint statement (April). In April, the Special Envoy undertook new consultations with the Tajik parties and Governments in the region to clear the way for the next round of talks. As a result of his discussions in Moscow and Dushanbe and his conversation with Abdullo Nuri, Chairman of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan, by short-wave radio from Dushanbe, the parties agreed to hold high-level consultations in Moscow, without preconditions, to reach agreement on the agenda, time and venue for the fourth round of talks, as well as to extend the Tehran Agreement and prevent further escalation of fighting. The consultations were subsequently held in Moscow under UN auspices from 19 to 26 April, with the participation of Afghanistan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation and Uzbekistan as observers.

In a joint statement on Tajikistan,⁽¹⁸⁾ made on 20 April and transmitted on 26 April, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan called on the Tajik parties to step up the negotiation process under UN auspices, welcomed the decision by Tajikistan not to make the Tehran Agreement subject to a time-limit and called on the opposition leaders to follow that example. They advocated making the work of the Joint Commission more effective and improving the mechanism for monitoring observance of the cease-fire; emphasized the important role of the CIS Collective Peace-keeping Forces and confirmed their commitment to establishing close coordination between those Forces and UNMOT; stressed the importance of their joint appeal for deployment of a full-scale UN peace-keeping operation in Tajikistan (see above); and called on the Tajik Government to speed up the process of establishing its own armed forces and border troops.

UNMOT extension (April). On 26 April, the Secretary-General recommended⁽¹⁹⁾ that, in the light of the continuing high-level consultations in Moscow, UNMOT should continue to function until the review by the Security Council of his report on the situation in Tajikistan, to be submitted upon the return of the Special Envoy to New York.

In a letter of the same date,⁽²⁰⁾ the Council President noted that Council members were deeply concerned about the insufficient progress at the Moscow talks and the continuing military activities on the Tajik-Afghan border. They called on the parties and others concerned to resolve urgently outstanding questions with regard to extending the cease-fire and arranging a fourth round of talks; stressed again that the primary responsibility for resolving their differences rested with the Tajik parties themselves; and urged them to comply strictly with the Tehran Agreement. Council members agreed that UNMOT should continue its presence in Tajikistan, pending a further Council decision.

Communication (April). On 27 April, the Russian Federation transmitted⁽²¹⁾ a joint statement by the Government of Tajikistan and the Tajik opposition, adopted at the close of the consultations in Moscow on 26 April. The parties expressed their firm commitment to settling the conflict and achieving national reconciliation through exclusively peaceful, political means on the basis of mutual concessions and compromises, and agreed to: extend the validity of the Tehran Agreement until 26 May; hold the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks in Almaty, beginning on 22 May; and include in the agenda for the talks the questions of the constitutional structure and consolidation of the statehood of the Republic of Tajikistan, as set forth during the first round of talks in 1994.⁽²²⁾ The parties also agreed on additions to the text of the Tehran Agreement, extending its scope, inter alia, to military formations in the territory of Afghanistan, and decided to expand the Joint Commission to 14 members, 7 on each side. They confirmed their obligation to provide material and technical assistance to the Commission and appealed for international financial support for its activities. The parties welcomed the agreement between President Rakhmonov and Abdullo Nuri to meet before the fourth round of talks, and the statement by the Russian Federation that its border guards and servicemen with the CIS Forces, respecting and recognizing the agreements by the Tajik parties, were not violating them in carrying out their functions.

Report of Secretary-General (May). On 12 May, the Secretary-General described⁽²³⁾ the activities of his Special Envoy leading to the holding of consultations in Moscow, as well as their outcome. He noted that the situation in Tajikistan was marked by increasing tension due to attempts at infiltration by opposition fighters from Afghanistan and the continued presence of Tajik government troops in Gorno-Badakshan, in violation of the Tehran Agreement. UNMOT had carried out 32 investigations, either independently or together with the Joint Commission, and confirmed three violations of the Agreement, involving deployment of Tajik government troops and their participation in a training exercise of the CIS Peace-keeping Forces, as well as clashes between opposition fighters and government forces in the Garm district. Beginning on 7 April, a series of violent incidents occurred, including attacks against Russian border troops and their retaliation against targets within Afghan territory. Those hostilities caused numerous casualties on both sides.

Except for an investigation on 18 April, the Joint Commission had been inactive since late March, after the departure of three of the four opposition representatives. That had followed a decision by the opposition, later suspended, to withdraw from the Commission if the Government did not remove its 350 troops from Gorno-Badakshan and proceed with the participation of its troops in training exercises of the CIS Peace-keeping Forces. In addition, the report noted that logistic support for the Commission was inadequate, creating a serious impediment to its effective functioning. UNMOT, on the other hand, continued to maintain close liaison with the parties, as well as with the CIS Forces and Russian border forces, and to provide political liaison and coordination for humanitarian assistance to Tajikistan. In late March, the Mission established a radio link with the opposition headquarters in Taloqan in northern Afghanistan. As at 1 May, UNMOT personnel numbered 69, including 36 military observers and 33 civilian staff. The Mission opened three additional field stations, in Kalaikhumb, Khorog and Moskovskiy, for a total of six.

The Secretary-General observed that, although the results of the consultations in Moscow had provided ground for continuing UN efforts in Tajikistan and maintaining UNMOT, progress had yet to be achieved on the substantive issues dividing the parties. He appealed to the parties to comply strictly with the Tehran Agreement and to refrain from steps that could aggravate the situation or complicate the peace process, and underlined the need to strengthen the Joint Commission, calling for full cooperation with the Commission and UNMOT of the authorities and forces operating in the region.

President Rakhmonov and Abdullo Nuri, meeting in Kabul from 17 to 19 May, issued a joint declaration,⁽²⁴⁾ by which both sides confirmed their readiness to solve the inter-Tajik conflict, to repatriate all refugees to their places of origin and to stabilize fully the political situation in Tajikistan. They decided to extend the Tehran Agreement until 26 August and pledged to make every effort to resolve the conflict through political means at the negotiating table.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 19 May, the Security Council President made the following statement⁽²⁵⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Tajikistan of 12 May 1995.

The Security Council welcomes the Joint Statement of the delegation of the Government of Tajikistan and the delegation of the Tajik opposition signed in Moscow on 26 April 1995 as a result of the high-level consultations through the good offices of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy with the assistance of the representatives of all countries acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks. The Council expects the full implementation of the agreements reached in Moscow and, in particular, supports the convening of the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks on 22 May 1995 in Almaty and looks to the parties to cooperate fully in those talks.

The Security Council commends the efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy, the Russian Federation as a host country and all observer countries which significantly contributed to the positive outcome of the high-level inter-Tajik consultations held in Moscow from 19 to 26 April 1995.

The Security Council is concerned over the actions of both sides in the past three months, which posed obstacles to the peace process, as noted in the report of the Secretary-General. The Council stresses the urgent need for the Tajik parties to resolve the conflict and to confirm, by taking concrete steps, their commitment to achieve national reconciliation in the country exclusively through peaceful political means on the basis of mutual concessions and compromises. In this context, it welcomes the agreement by the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan to hold a meeting, which took place in Kabul on 17-19 May 1995.

The Security Council notes with concern the recent inactivity of the Joint Commission and is therefore encouraged by the parties' decision to strengthen the Commission and its mechanism for monitoring the Cease-fire Agreement of 17 September 1994. It welcomes the commitments by some Member States to the voluntary fund for contributions established by the Secretary-General in accordance with its resolution 968(1995), and reiterates its encouragement to other Member States to contribute.

The Security Council calls upon the parties to agree on a substantial extension of the Cease-fire Agreement of 17 September 1994 and to achieve substantive progress during the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks, in particular on fundamental institutional issues and consolidation of the statehood of Tajikistan as defined in the agenda agreed upon during the Moscow round in April 1994. It stresses that strict compliance by the parties with all the obligations they have assumed is a necessary condition for successful political dialogue.

The Security Council notes the observation of the Secretary-General contained in his report of 12 May 1995 that grounds exist for continuing United Nations efforts and maintaining the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and recalls its view that extension of the cease-fire is necessary for this.

Meeting number. SC 3539.

Communications and report (June). On 2 June, the Russian Federation transmitted⁽²⁶⁾ a decision to extend until 31 December 1995 the stay of the Collective Peace-keeping Forces in Tajikistan, adopted by the CIS Council of Heads of State on 26 May in Minsk, Belarus.

On 10 June, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁷⁾ on results of the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks, which took place under UN auspices in Almaty from 22 May to 1 June, with the participation of observers from Afghanistan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, the Russian Federation, Uzbekistan, OSCE and the Organization of the Islamic Conference. For the first time, parties had an in-depth discussion of fundamental institutional issues and the consolidation of the statehood of Tajikistan. The opposition suggested the establishment of a Council of National Accord as a supreme legislative and executive body for the transitional period of up to two years, on the basis of parity, responsible for drafting amendments to the current constitution and other legislative acts and for preparing and holding elections to a new parliament. The Government suggested a discussion of issues related to the permanent cessation of hostilities, repatriation of refugees and simultaneous release of detainees and prisoners of war, and stated its readiness to allow free activities of political parties and movements and the mass media, as well as to declare an amnesty for opposition supporters and to consider the integration of armed opposition units into Tajikistan's military structures and the appointment of opposition representatives to government posts.

The parties also discussed a number of compromise proposals presented by the Special Envoy, but were not able to reach mutually acceptable decisions. In a joint statement⁽²⁸⁾ on the results of the talks, transmitted on 5 June, they welcomed the decision to extend the Tehran Agreement until 26 August, agreed to exchange an equal number of detainees and prisoners of war by 20 July and to ensure unobstructed access of ICRC representatives and Joint Commission members to places of detention and incarceration, and set out measures to ensure the voluntary and safe return of refugees and displaced persons to their places of permanent residence. Tajikistan agreed that measures would be taken to suspend, for the duration of the inter-Tajik talks, the death sentences on opposition members and that those sentences would subsequently be reviewed. The parties requested the Special Envoy to continue his good offices in the search for a peaceful solution to the conflict.

The Secretary-General further reported that the situation in Tajikistan remained relatively calm, except in areas along the Tajik-Afghan border. UNMOT had carried out 17 investigations and confirmed two violent incidents, involving a helicopter attack on a village in Gorno-Badakhshan by Russian border forces, as well as an attack by government troops on a village south of Garm, causing one death and two injuries, which had followed an attack against a government defence post that had resulted in five fatalities. UNMOT also confirmed a helicopter attack on a village in northern Afghanistan, causing up to 20 civilian casualties, but was unable to verify those responsible for it. At the same time, reports continued of infiltration attempts across the border in the Pyanj and Moskovskiy areas, as well as of rocket attacks against border posts from Afghan territory; Russian border troops responded to the infiltration attempts by shelling across the border.

The Joint Commission focused its activities on monitoring the cease-fire and investigating its violation, but was not able to assume the political responsibilities envisaged under the Tehran Agreement, and support to Commission activities remained inadequate. UNMOT continued to carry out the tasks under its mandate; as at 1 June, its personnel included 39 observers and 33 civilian staff. Outstanding assessed contributions from Member States to its Special Account totalled $2.2 million as at 31 May.

UNMOT extension (June). The Secretary-General noted that the Mission had been recognized by the Tajik parties as playing an instrumental role in containing the conflict and recommended that its mandate be extended until 16 December. He also recommended that the Security Council approve in principle a proposal for expanding the UNMOT deployment to northern Afghanistan, subject to the agreement of Afghan authorities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 16 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 999(1995).

The Security Council,

Taking note with appreciation of the statement of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation of 26 April 1995 that the Russian border forces and the Russian military personnel of the CIS Collective Peace-keeping Forces stationed in Tajikistan, respecting and recognizing the agreements between the Tajik parties, do not violate them in the performance of their duties,

Security Council resolution 999(1995)

16 June 1995 Meeting 3544 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/486).

New Protocol signed

On 23 July, Iran informed⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General of a meeting between President Rakhmonov and Abdullo Nuri in Tehran on 19 July. The two sides signed a declaration confirming their readiness to take measures for the comprehensive implementation of the agreements that had been reached before and for the continuation of peaceful negotiations. They also agreed to establish a consultative forum of Tajik people to facilitate a solution to the political and social crisis in Tajikistan, and decided that modalities of the forum would be worked out during a fifth round of talks.

Indirect talks between President Rakhmonov and Mr. Nuri were arranged from 2 to 17 August through the good offices of the Special Envoy, which required him to shuttle between Dushanbe and Kabul four times. As a result, the two sides signed a Protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan,⁽³⁰⁾ by which they agreed to conduct a continual round of negotiations, beginning on 18 September, aimed at concluding a general agreement on the establishment of peace and national accord. The general agreement was to consist of separate protocols on political problems; military problems; repatriation and reintegration of refugees; a monitoring and verification commission; guarantees for the agreement's implementation; and a donor conference for financing reintegration and economic reconstruction programmes. The Government assumed the obligation to refrain from carrying out any acts that would run counter to the provisions of the protocols and from adopting laws or measures that might be incompatible with those protocols, while the opposition undertook to wage a political struggle by exclusively peaceful means, in accordance with Tajik laws and in conformity with the general agreement. The two sides also decided to extend the Tehran Agreement until 26 February 1996.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 25 August, the Security Council President made the following statement⁽³¹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the Protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan signed by the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the Tajik opposition on 17 August 1995. It commends the efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy and all countries acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks, which have significantly contributed to reaching the above agreement between the Tajik parties.

The Security Council calls upon the parties to implement fully the commitments contained in the Protocol. It supports the agreement of the parties to conduct the continual round of talks due to begin on 18 September 1995, with the aim of concluding a general agreement on the establishment of peace and national accord in Tajikistan and urges the parties to agree as soon as possible on the venue of the negotiations. It reiterates that the primary responsibility rests with the Tajik parties themselves in resolving their differences.

The Security Council welcomes the agreement reached by the parties to extend the Agreement on a Temporary Cease-fire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country signed in Teheran on 17 September 1994 for a period of six months until 26 February 1996, and calls upon the parties to comply strictly with the obligations assumed under this agreement, including cessation of all hostile acts on the Tajik-Afghan border and within Tajikistan. The Council calls upon all States and others concerned to discourage any activities that could complicate or hinder the peace process respecting fully the sovereignty and the territorial integrity of Tajikistan and the inviolability of the Tajik-Afghan border.

The Security Council urges the parties to implement as quickly as possible the confidence-building measures agreed upon during the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks held in Almaty.

The Security Council stresses the need to continue the existing close contacts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan with the parties to the conflict as well as its close liaison with the CIS Collective Peace-keeping Forces, with the Russian border forces and with the OSCE Mission in Tajikistan.

The Security Council welcomes the contributions by some Member States to the voluntary fund for contributions established by the Secretary-General in accordance with its resolution 968(1994), and reiterates its encouragement to other Member States to contribute thereto.

The Security Council expresses its readiness to consider in due course the recommendations of the Secretary-General regarding the possible role of the United Nations in the context of the present and future agreements between the Tajik parties.

Meeting number. SC 3570.

Further talks

Report of Secretary-General (September). On 16 September, the Secretary-General reported⁽³²⁾ on the outcome of the indirect talks and noted that his Special Envoy was engaged in consultations with the parties and others concerned to decide on a possible venue for negotiations. He also noted that the situation in Tajikistan remained relatively stable. UNMOT and the Joint Commission had received 61 complaints of cease-fire violations, dealing mainly with cross-border infiltration of opposition fighters, as well as with the detention of persons without charge and their treatment while in detention. Credible reports were received of redeployments of military units by both the Government and the opposition. Russian border forces continued occasional shelling across the border into Afghanistan; on two occasions, a border post in the Moskovskiy district had been attacked by rocket fire from Afghan territory, resulting in casualties. Other incidents involved a series of killings and clashes between local armed groups and government security forces in the Garm district, and exchanges of fire between Russian border troops and self-defence forces and between two brigades of the Tajik army.

The Joint Commission had been expanded to 14 members, including four permanently located in Gorno-Badakshan, two in Khorog and two in Vanj; however, its activities continued to be hampered by lack of office space and logistic support. UNMOT personnel numbered 87 as at 31 August, including its full complement of 40 military observers. The Mission established an additional team site in Vanj and secured agreement of the Afghan officials for a small liaison post in Taloqan. In that regard, the Secretary-General proposed that the Security Council authorize the establishment of the liaison post, once the modalities were agreed upon with the Afghan authorities, and expressed his intention to seek the necessary budgetary authority for a small increase in UNMOT staff in the light of the establishment of posts in Vanj and Taloqan. He noted with concern the delays in implementation of the confidence-building measures agreed upon during the fourth round of talks, and appealed to the parties to take steps for their early implementation, emphasizing that further inaction could undermine the credibility of the whole negotiating process.

Further developments (October/November). Following consultations in Dushanbe and Taloqan in October, by Assistant Secretary-General for Peace-keeping Operations Iqbal Riza and Deputy Special Envoy Darko Silovic, and a visit by the deputy leader of the Tajik opposition to Ashkhabad (Ashgabad) between 30 October and 2 November, the parties agreed in principle on Ashkhabad as the venue of negotiations, deciding they should begin on 30 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 6 November, the Security Council President made the following statement⁽³³⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the planned convening of the continual round of inter-Tajik talks in Ashgabad. It commends the efforts of the President of Turkmenistan in this regard.

The Security Council calls upon the Tajik parties to begin as a matter of urgency the continual round of talks with the aim of concluding a general agreement in accordance with the provisions of the Protocol on the fundamental principles for establishing peace and national accord in Tajikistan signed by the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the Tajik opposition on 17 August 1995.

The Security Council expresses the hope that the Secretary-General's Special Envoy will be able to resume promptly his efforts with regard to the preparation of the forthcoming round of talks. The Council reaffirms its full support for the activities of the Special Envoy.

The Security Council urges the Tajik parties to comply strictly with the obligations assumed under the Agreement on a Temporary Cease-fire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country signed in Tehran on 17 September 1994. The Council expresses the hope that the convening of the talks will contribute to a lessening of tensions along the Tajik-Afghan border and inside Tajikistan.

The Security Council notes that the relevant Afghan authorities have given their agreement to the establishment of a liaison post of UNMOT in Taloqan (northern Afghanistan). The Council welcomes this development and agrees with the proposal to establish such a post as suggested in paragraph 20 of the Secretary-General's report of 16 September 1995 with the privileges and immunities necessary for the security of the United Nations personnel concerned and for their ability to carry out the mandate.

The Security Council also notes the Secretary-General's observations regarding the strengthening of UNMOT in paragraph 21 of his report. The Council supports a corresponding increase in the Mission's strength.

Meeting number. SC 3589.

Communications and report (November/December). On 13 November, the Secretary-General communicated⁽³⁴⁾ to the Security Council his decision to extend the mandate of the Special Envoy until 26 March 1996. On 15 November, the Council President informed⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General that Council members had taken note of the decision.

In an 8 December report,⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Council of the beginning of inter-Tajik negotiations, stating that, at the first working plenary session on 7 December, both parties had confirmed their commitment to the cease-fire and their determination to work to find viable solutions to the problems listed in the 17 August Protocol. He further noted that the delay in resuming the negotiations had been accompanied by an increase in hostilities in Gorno-Badakshan and in the areas of Garm and Tavildara, involving attacks against government installations and personnel, as well as against State police and internal security forces, clashes between government troops and opposition fighters, and friction between Russian border troops and the so-called "self-defence forces". In addition, the conflict between two brigades of the Tajik army in the Kurgan-Tyube area had culminated in a military confrontation, in the course of which a UN military observer was shot and killed on 18 September. The brigades had since been redeployed and the Tajik authorities assured UNMOT that the trial of those responsible for the observer's death would take place in the near future.

A serious incident also occurred on 10 October, when nine soldiers of the Russian border forces were killed and their truck burnt. On 21 October, an opposition fighter was killed at a checkpoint by Russian border troops. On a number of occasions, border forces fired into Afghanistan; they continued to report infiltration attempts and rocket attacks against their posts. UNMOT and the Joint Commission had received 79 complaints of alleged cease-fire violations, carried out 31 investigations and confirmed six violations, four by the Government and two by the opposition. As for the Tehran Agreement provisions pertaining to the security and rights of individuals, the opposition filed numerous complaints regarding abductions, arrests, unlawful detention, long and illegal imprisonments, denial of the right to defence or communication, and murder, whereas the Government submitted 33 reports of murder, rape, harassment, abuse, beatings, hostage-taking and threats.

UNMOT continued to carry out its mandated tasks, although sporadic fighting compelled it to close temporarily two of its team sites. The functioning of the Joint Commission had been adversely affected by the delay in negotiations and the rising tension between the parties, as well as by a lack of office space, logistic support and security for its opposition members; its activities included, inter alia, two rounds of talks under ICRC auspices on the issue of prisoners of war, an initial press conference, held on 21 November, and a special broadcast on Tajik television on 22 November. As for the humanitarian situation, the Secretary-General pointed out that most refugees and internally displaced persons in Tajikistan had been successfully resettled, and that the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees was scaling down its operations and handing over certain programmes and activities to other agencies.

Noting that the parties had resumed negotiations on the basis of the 17 August Protocol, he recommended that the UNMOT mandate be extended for another six months, and estimated the cost for maintaining the Mission for that period at $4,304,400 gross. He also noted that outstanding contributions from Member States totalled $1,168,930 as at 30 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 14 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 1030(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions and the statements of its President, in particular, the statement of its President of 6 November 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 December 1995,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Tajikistan and to the inviolability of its borders,

Commending the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Envoy as well as of the countries and regional organizations acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks,

Emphasizing that the primary responsibility rests with the Tajik parties themselves in resolving their differences, and that the international assistance provided by this resolution must be linked to the process of national reconciliation and the promotion of democracy,

Recalling the commitments made by the Tajik parties to resolve the conflict and to achieve national reconciliation in the country exclusively through peaceful, political means on the basis of mutual concessions and compromises and stressing the inadmissibility of any hostile acts on the Tajik-Afghan border,

Recalling the joint appeal by the Presidents of the Republic of Kazakhstan, the Kyrgyz Republic, the Russian Federation, the Republic of Tajikistan and the Republic of Uzbekistan of 10 February 1995 addressed to the President of the Security Council, the statements of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of these countries of 24 August and 30 September 1993, of 13 October 1994, of 26 January and 20 April 1995 addressed to the Secretary-General,

Taking note with appreciation of the statement of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Russian Federation of 26 April 1995 that the Russian border forces and the Russian military personnel of the Collective Peace-keeping

Forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) stationed in Tajikistan, respecting and recognizing the agreements between the Tajik parties, do not violate them in the performance of their duties,

Expressing its satisfaction over the close contacts of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT) with the parties to the conflict, as well as over its liaison with the CIS Collective Peace-keeping Forces, with the border forces and with the Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) in Tajikistan,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 8 December 1995;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNMOT until 15 June 1996 subject to the proviso that the Tehran Agreement of 17 September 1994 remains in force and the parties continue to be committed to an effective cease-fire, to national reconciliation and to the promotion of democracy and further decides that the mandate will remain in effect unless the Secretary-General reports that these conditions have not been met;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to pursue, through the good offices of his Special Envoy and with the assistance of the countries and regional organizations acting as observers at the inter-Tajik talks, efforts to speed up the progress towards the establishment of a durable peace and national accord in Tajikistan;

4. Requests also the Secretary-General to report to the Council every three months on the progress towards a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict and on the operations of UNMOT;

5. Reiterates its call upon the parties to cooperate fully with UNMOT, and to ensure the safety and freedom of movement of United Nations personnel;

6. Regrets the slow rate of progress towards a political solution to the conflict in Tajikistan and emphasizes the need for the Tajik parties to take the opportunity of the continual round of talks in Ashgabat to reach a general agreement which will restore peace and national accord in their country in accordance with the provisions of the Protocol on the Fundamental Principles, signed by the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan on 17 August 1995;

7. Calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General's Special Envoy in order to achieve a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict through the inter-Tajik dialogue;

8. Calls also on the parties to implement without delay all the confidence-building measures to which they committed themselves during the fourth round of the inter-Tajik talks;

9. Encourages the continuation of direct political dialogue between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the Islamic Revival Movement of Tajikistan;

10. Emphasizes the absolute necessity for the parties to comply fully with all their obligations they have assumed and urges them, in particular, to observe strictly the Tehran Agreement of 17 September 1994 and to agree to its substantial extension;

11. Stresses the urgency of the cessation of all hostile acts on the Tajik-Afghan border and calls upon all States and others concerned to discourage any activities that could complicate or hinder the peace process in Tajikistan;

12. Encourages the relevant Afghan authorities to facilitate the arrangements that will permit the establishment of a liaison post at Taloqan in northern Afghanistan;

13. Underlines the need to develop further close cooperation between UNMOT and the parties to the conflict, as well as its close liaison with the CIS Collective Peace-keeping Forces, with the border forces and with the OSCE Mission in Tajikistan;

14. Welcomes the successful resettlement of the vast majority of internally displaced persons and refugees and the role played by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in this effort and commends the activities of other agencies and organizations assisting the civilian population;

15. Welcomes the contributions to the voluntary fund established by the Secretary-General in accordance with its resolution 968(1995), reiterates its encouragement to other States to contribute thereto and also welcomes the voluntary contribution made to UNMOT;

16. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1030(1995)

14 December 1995 Meeting 3606 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/1032).

End-of-year developments

The first phase of the Ashkhabad talks continued until 22 December. On 13 December, the parties adopted a joint declaration in connection with the continued fighting in Tajikistan, in which they condemned the serious violations of the Tehran Agreement that had been committed since 18 August 1995; entrusted the Joint Commission and UNMOT to carry out an investigation of the most recent events in the Tavildara and Shuroabad areas; undertook to respect and observe unconditionally the Agreement's provisions; and requested UNMOT to redeploy its posts to those districts. On 17 December, an UNMOT team was stationed in Tavildara. After joint efforts by the United Nations and the Russian Federation, the fighting was halted and calm restored.

Following the institution of the cease-fire, the parties considered the main political issues dealt with in the 17 August Protocol. The Government proposed a consultative forum of Tajik peoples on the basis of equal representation, to consider the further improvement of political, economic and social reforms; its recommendations were to be adopted by consensus. The Tajik opposition, however, rejected the concept of the forum, proposing a council of national reconciliation for a transitional period of up to two years, to replace the current Parliament (Majlis-i Oli) and prepare for new parliamentary and presidential elections. After the Government rejected that suggestion, the opposition presented its own proposals on the consultative forum, which were not accepted by the other side.

The second phase of the negotiations was scheduled to resume in January 1996.

Financing of UNMOT

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (February/March). In a 22 February report,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General estimated the cost of maintaining UNMOT from its inception on 16 December 1994 until 30 June 1995 at $4,339,700 gross ($4,138,400 net), providing for the deployment of 40 military observers and 44 civilian staff and including start-up costs of $1.2 million. Estimated costs from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996 amounted to $9,033,600 gross ($8,599,200 net). The report also included additional information requested by ACABQ, concerning the type of support provided by UNMOT to the Joint Commission and related budgetary implications, as well as the nature of cooperation between UNMOT and the OSCE Mission, the CIS Peace-keeping Forces and border forces and the extent of their assistance to UNMOT.

The Secretary-General recommended establishing a special account for the Mission and the appropriation and assessment of the amounts stipulated above for the period from 16 December 1994 to 30 June 1995. He also requested commitment authorization at a monthly rate of $752,800 gross ($716,600 net) after 30 June 1995 and the assessment of such amounts, subject to the extension of the Mission's mandate. The monthly cost was higher than the estimates of $442,300, provided in November 1994,⁽³⁸⁾ and of $708,500, communicated to ACABQ on 17 January 1995, due to additional requirements for helicopter operations, communications and public information.

In a 21 March report,⁽³⁹⁾ the ACABQ recommended the appropriation and assessment of $3,251,200 gross for the period from 16 December 1994 to 26 April 1995 and the appropriation of $10,044,200 gross from 27 April 1995 to 30 June 1996, to be assessed on Member States at the rate of $717,400 gross per month.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (March)

On 31 March, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/240.

Financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 968(1994) of 16 December 1994, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan for a period of up to six months, subject to the proviso that it would continue beyond 6 February 1995 only if the Secretary-General reported to the Council by that date that the parties had agreed to extend the Agreement on a Temporary Cease-fire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik-Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks, signed at Tehran on 17 September 1994, and that they remained committed to an effective cease-fire, national reconciliation and the promotion of democracy,

Recognizing that the costs of the Mission of Observers are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Mission of Observers, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Mission of Observers with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Mission of Observers in full and on time;

4. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan an amount of 3,251,200 United States dollars gross (3,123,600 dollars net) for the operation of the Mission of Observers from 16 December 1994 to 26 April 1995, inclusive of the amount of 1,759,700 dollars gross (1,711,800 dollars net) authorized under the terms of paragraph 1 (a) of General Assembly resolution 48/229 of 23 December 1993 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the biennium 1994-1995 and the amount of 651,600 dollars gross (611,600 dollars net) authorized with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee under the terms of section IV, paragraph 2, of Assembly resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994;

5. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 3,251,200 dollars gross (3,123,600 dollars net) for the period from 16 December 1994 to 26 April 1995 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, the scale of assessments for the year 1994 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 394,100 dollars gross (378,600 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the scale of assessments for the year 1995 to be applied against the balance, that is, 2,857,100 dollars gross (2,745,000 dollars net), for the period from 1 January to 26 April 1995, inclusive;

6. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 5 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 127,600 dollars approved for the period from 16 December 1994 to 26 April 1995, inclusive; 15,500 dollars being the amount pertaining on & pro rata basis to the period ending 31 December 1994 and the difference, that is, 112,100 dollars, being for the period from 1 January to 26 April 1995, inclusive;

7. Decides to appropriate the amount of 10,044,200 dollars gross (9,547,000 dollars net) for the continued operation of the Mission of Observers for the period from 27 April 1995 to 30 June 1996, to be assessed at the rate of 717,400 dollars gross (681,900 dollars net) per month in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Mission of Observers beyond the period authorized by the Council in its resolution 968(1994);

8. Invites voluntary contributions to the Mission of Observers in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

31 March 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/878) without vote, 29 March (meeting 50); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.42), based on informal consultations; agenda item 162.

Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 47, 49, 50; plenary 99.

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (November/December). On 13 November, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁴⁰⁾ that the Mission's financial performance from 16 December 1994 to 16 June 1995 resulted in an unencumbered balance of $378,600 gross ($373,800 net). Voluntary contributions totalling 100,000 Swiss francs and $54,200 were received, the latter to the trust fund to support the Joint Commission, and free office space for UNMOT headquarters was provided by the host Government. The Secretary-General requested the General Assembly to retain the unencumbered balance in the UNMOT Special Account, in the light of requirements from the establishment of additional posts.

In a 4 December report,⁽⁴¹⁾ ACABQ recalled that under the current practice an unencumbered balance was returned to Member States unless the Assembly decided otherwise.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 22 December, the General Assembly decided that Member States' respective shares in the unencumbered balance of $378,600 gross ($373,800 net) for the period from 16 December 1994 to 16 June 1995 should be set off against their future apportionments if they had fulfilled financial obligations to UNMOT and against their outstanding obligations if they had not (decision 50/450).

Turkmenistan

In a 20 October statement⁽¹⁾ before the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, Turkmenistan announced its decision to make permanent neutrality the main principle of its foreign policy. That principle, enshrined in the country's Constitution, had been endorsed on 16 March by its Majlis (Assembly) and supported by the summit meeting of the Economic Cooperation Organization held in Islamabad in March and by the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Cartagena, Colombia, 18-20 October), which also welcomed Turkmenistan as a new member of the Movement.⁽²⁾ Turkmenistan stated that it was ready and willing to play an active part in the peace-keeping processes carried out under UN auspices and appealed for the General Assembly's endorsement of its new policy.

On 8 November, Turkmenistan reiterated its appeal before the First Committee⁽³⁾ and expressed its conviction that, by following a policy of neutrality, good-neighbourliness and cooperation, it would ensure its national interests to the maximum extent and contribute to the strengthening of world stability and peace.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/80 A.

Permanent neutrality of Turkmenistan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the permanent neutrality of Turkmenistan,

Reaffirming the sovereign right of every State to determine independently its foreign policy in accordance with the norms and principles of international law and the Charter of the United Nations,

Welcoming the legislative confirmation by Turkmenistan of its status of permanent neutrality,

Welcoming also the desire of Turkmenistan to play an active and positive role in developing peaceful, friendly and mutually beneficial relations with the countries of the region and other States of the world,

Expressing the hope that the status of permanent neutrality of Turkmenistan will contribute to the strengthening of peace and security in the region,

Taking note of the support by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and by the Economic Cooperation Organization of the status of permanent neutrality of Turkmenistan,

Recognizing that the adoption by Turkmenistan of the status of permanent neutrality does not affect the fulfilment of its obligations under the Charter and will contribute to the achievement of the purposes of the United Nations,

1. Recognizes and supports the status of permanent neutrality declared by Turkmenistan;

2. Calls upon States Members of the United Nations to respect and support this status of Turkmenistan and also to respect its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Chapter V

Europe and the Mediterranean

The crisis in the former Yugoslavia continued to dominate the agenda of the Security Council in 1995 and to engage the peace-keeping efforts and resources of the United Nations in unprecedented proportions. The situations in Georgia and in the Nagorny Karabakh region of Azerbaijan, and the long-standing question of the Mediterranean island of Cyprus, also remained on the Organization's agenda.

Following a surge of widespread military activity in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia—between May and September—that was beyond the concerted efforts of the United Nations, the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, the European Union and the rest of the international community to forestall, a United States-led peace effort succeeded in making a breakthrough that culminated in the conclusion of a Peace Agreement for Bosnia and Herzegovina, initialled on 22 November by that country, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and formally signed on 14 December. A Peace Implementation Council was created to replace the International Conference and administer the civilian aspects of the Peace Agreement; an international force was to oversee its military aspects.

After Croatia had militarily reintegrated a majority of its occupied territories, originally designated as UN protected areas, negotiations for the peaceful reintegration of the remainder of those territories led to the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, concluded on 12 November between the Government of Croatia and the local Serb authorities in Eastern Slavonia.

The Secretary-General described the Basic Agreement as a landmark accomplishment and the Peace Agreement as brilliantly constructed on foundations laid during more than three years by many peacemakers, notably his Special Envoy Cyrus Vance (United States), and Thorvald Stoltenberg (Norway) and Lord David Owen (United Kingdom), who served as Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the Conference on behalf of, respectively, the United Nations and the European Union. The Secretary-General welcomed the interrelated agreements as offering real hope of ending the crisis in the former Yugoslavia—if the parties would allow their implementation. At the same time, he saluted the outgoing UN peace-keepers, military and civilian alike, for having successfully discharged their mission of protecting the humanitarian effort in the former Yugoslavia, and the United Nations Protection Force for successfully negotiating and helping to implement local cease-fires and other military arrangements in order to create conditions necessary for political negotiations.

In keeping with new arrangements envisaged by the agreements, military responsibility in Bosnia and Herzegovina was transferred to a new implementation force on 20 December, and consultations were under way for the emplacement of a transitional administration and a transitional peace-keeping force in Croatia's remaining occupied territories. To allow for an orderly emplacement, the Security Council extended the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia for an additional period terminating on 15 January 1996. It extended the mandate of the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia until 30 May 1996, pending new arrangements for its functioning.

In connection with the continuing tensions between Armenia and Azerbaijan over Nagorny Karabakh, the Council reaffirmed the inviolability of international borders and the inadmissibility of the use of force for the acquisition of territory. The Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia for a further period, terminating on 12 January 1996.

To give the conflicting parties in Cyprus continued opportunity to arrive at a final political solution to their differences, the Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Force in Cyprus until 31 December 1995 and, subsequently, until 30 June 1996.

In other actions relating to Europe and the Mediterranean, the General Assembly called on all Balkan States to endeavour to promote good neighbourly relations among them, welcomed the intensified cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, and commended the continuing efforts of the Mediterranean countries to contribute actively to the elimination of all causes of tension in the region and to turn it into an area of dialogue and cooperation.

Situation in the former Yugoslavia

General aspects

The International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia continued throughout 1995 to serve as a framework for peacemaking and peace-building in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. The Co-Chairmen of its Steering Committee remained in constant consultations with the warring parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia, as well as with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and all other interested Governments, to help promote a negotiated settlement of the conflicts in those two countries.

The United Nations Protection Force continued to operate as a single peace-keeping force until 31 March. Thereafter, it was restructured by the Security Council: to continue as a separate operation in Bosnia and Herzegovina; its operations in Croatia to be replaced by the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation; and, in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, to be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force. The restructuring was made at the request of the host countries, to meet more effectively their respective requirements.

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continued as the lead agency in operating a multifaceted humanitarian relief programme throughout the former Yugoslavia. Despite crippling war conditions that prevailed during a significant part of the year, intermittent or protracted road and airport closures, and obstructions and confiscations of humanitarian convoys, the agency managed to deliver 66,935 metric tons of humanitarian relief to beneficiaries, whose numbers rose to some 3.5 million in 1995.

With the signature on 14 December of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Peace Agreement), military responsibility in that country was transferred on 20 December to a multinational force, which was to oversee implementation of the Agreement's military aspects; a Peace Implementation Council was constituted to supersede the International Conference as the new structure to administer implementation of the civilian aspects.

As early as 22 November, when the Peace Agreement was initialled, the Council, by two resolutions, suspended indefinitely all sanctions it had imposed against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), subject to certain conditions, and provided for the phased termination of the 1991 embargo on deliveries of weapons and military equipment to the former Yugoslavia.

As a result of the military offensives of Croatia in May and August, and in view of the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, concluded on 12 November between the Government and the local Serb authorities in Eastern Slavonia, which called for new arrangements for its implementation, the Council decided that the existing UN operation in Croatia should terminate on 15 January 1996.

International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia

The Geneva-based International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY), organized in 1992⁽¹⁾ and co-chaired by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the head of State or Government of the Presidency of the European Union (EU), maintained its Steering Committee and Arbitration Commission throughout 1995.

The Steering Committee was co-chaired by Thorvald Stoltenberg (United Nations) and Carl Bildt (EU), who replaced Lord David Owen on 13 June. Together with the Committee's six working groups⁽²⁾ and ad hoc task forces, the Co-Chairmen carried out the day-to-day activities of the Conference, summarized in two biannual reports submitted to the Security Council through the Secretary-General.

The first (January-June) report⁽²⁾ noted that the Committee had met on 31 January, 10 March and 13 June to consider reports by the Co-Chairmen and ICFY negotiators, and to review developments in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia, including humanitarian issues in those countries, in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, in Slovenia, and in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Also discussed were State succession issues and problems between ethnic and national communities in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (ethnic Albanians, Serbs, Turks, Macedonian-speaking Muslims), in Croatia (ethnic Serbs) and in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), specifically the non-Serb ethnics in Kosovo (Albanians), Sandjak (Muslims) and Vojvodina.

The report also set out in detail the competence of the Arbitration Commission, its composition and current membership.

The second (July-December) report⁽³⁾ stated that ICFY continued to provide a valuable framework for peacemaking, peace-building and humanitarian and human rights activities in the former Yugoslavia. Those mainly included collaborating with the five-member Contact Group (France, Germany, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States)⁽⁴⁾ in the development of a settlement for Bosnia and Herzegovina and for Eastern Slavonia in Croatia; alerting the international community to pressing humanitarian problems and making humanitarian appeals; promoting dialogue between national authorities and ethnic minorities regarding the latter's human rights; and operating the ICFY Mission to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).⁽⁵⁾ (For the Co-Chairmen's reports on the ICFY Mission, see "Border control", under "Bosnia and Herzegovina".)

To enhance the focus of the Co-Chairmen's efforts, peacemaking was spearheaded by Mr. Bildt in respect of Bosnia and Herzegovina and by Mr. Stoltenberg in respect of Croatia.

In the context of renewed hopes for the achievement of a peace agreement and for an eventual peace implementation process, the Working Group on Economic Issues met on 10 October with an open agenda. It explored such questions as the lifting of restrictions on trade and financial transactions, the conditionality that should be attached to economic reconstruction programmes, and the economic aspects of State succession. Emphasis was laid on the need to promote trade and economic relations among the successor States in order to consolidate peace, when it came, and to ensure the success of a future reconstruction process.

By a decision of the Peace Implementation Conference (see below), ICFY and its Steering Committee were to cease to exist as of 31 January 1996.

Peace Implementation Council

Following the initialing in November of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and of its annexes, collectively known as the Peace Agreement, a Peace Implementation Conference was convened in early December to initiate the civilian implementation of the Peace Agreement and to establish the structures for its administration (for details, see under "Bosnia and Herzegovina" below).

Accordingly, the Conference approved the designation of Mr. Bildt as High Representative, whose mandate under the Peace Agreement was to monitor its implementation, and to mobilize and, as appropriate, to coordinate the activities of civilian organizations and agencies. Concluding that important ICFY objectives had been met and that a new structure was required, the Conference decided that a Peace Implementation Council (PIC), composed of all those States, international organizations and agencies participating in the Conference, would subsume ICFY, which should aim for dissolution by 31 January 1996. The ICFY working groups, as well as the ICFY Mission to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), were to be kept in being for as long as necessary.

The Conference further established a PIC Steering Board composed of Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, the EU

Presidency, the European Commission (the administrative arm of EU) and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC). The Board, to be chaired by the High Representative, would meet monthly and keep PIC informed of the progress of implementation.

Operating costs of PIC would be covered by a budget proposed by the Steering Board. All funds remaining in the ICFY accounts would, upon ICFY's dissolution, be transferred to PIC.

UN peace forces: UNCRO, UNPROFOR, UNPREDEP

The UN Protection Force (UNPROFOR), established in 1992,⁽⁶⁾ was restructured by the Security Council in 1995 in the light of two reports submitted to it by the Secretary-General on 14 January and 22 March, in accordance with Council resolution 947(1994).⁽⁷⁾ The reports took account of the position of Croatia, made known the previous year, regarding its conditions for the extension of the current UNPROFOR mandate in the country.⁽⁸⁾ Also taken account of were two follow-up communications on the subject addressed to the Secretary-General on 12 January⁽⁹⁾ and 17 March 1995.⁽¹⁰⁾

In the 14 January report, the Secretary-General assessed UNPROFOR's performance in Croatia and the likely consequences of its withdrawal, and requested that Croatia reconsider its position.⁽¹¹⁾

The 22 March report outlined UNPROFOR's current structure and composition, and comprehensively updated developments and the circumstances affecting implementation of the UNPROFOR mandates in the three main countries of its operation—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia—as well as its functions in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).⁽¹²⁾

As a result of Croatia's announcement on 12 March of its agreement to the retention of a UN peace-keeping force, the Secretary-General suggested that its mandate should include support for implementing the 1994 cease-fire and economic agreements,⁽¹³⁾ those elements of the existing UN peace-keeping plan for Croatia acceptable to the Government and the local Serb authorities, and those functions arising from various relevant Council resolutions.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the wish expressed by Croatia and by the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia that the UN forces in their countries should be separate from UNPROFOR, as well as to that expressed by Bosnia and Herzegovina for possible changes in existing arrangements for the UN presence there.

To respond to those wishes without compromising the cost-effectiveness and efficiency of an integrated UN peace-keeping effort in the theatre, the Secretary-General proposed that the current UNPROFOR be replaced by three separate but interlinked peace-keeping operations: United Nations Peace Force-One (UNPF-1) in Croatia, which would be smaller than the current UNPROFOR operation in that country; United Nations Peace Force-Two (UNPF-2) in Bosnia and Herzegovina; and United Nations Peace Force-Three (UNPF-3) in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Each would be headed by a civilian Chief of Mission at the assistant secretary-general level and would have its own military commander. Given the interlinked nature of the problems in the theatre and to avoid the expense of duplicating existing structures, overall command and control of the three operations would be exercised by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia; command over their military elements would be exercised by the Force Commander. The theatre headquarters, to be known as United Nations Peace Forces Headquarters (UNPF-HQ), would be located in Zagreb, Croatia, where the administrative, logistical and public information responsibilities of the three operations would be coordinated. UNPF-HQ would also be responsible for liaison with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), with other concerned Governments and with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

The Secretary-General recommended approval of: (a) the restructuring of UNPROFOR as described above; (b) negotiations based on the elements and functions he had identified for inclusion in the UNPF-1 mandate—to take effect upon Council approval of his report setting forth the details of the mandate, together with the two parties' undertakings to cooperate in its implementation, and confirming the conclusion of a status-of-forces agreement with Croatia, and to extend until 30 November 1995; (c) the conversion of UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia into UNPF-2 and UNPF-3, respectively, with the same responsibilities and composition as UNPROFOR currently had in those countries and with mandates also extending to 30 November 1995; (d) the Secretary-General's proposed appeals to the host Governments to conclude status-of-forces agreements with the United Nations and grant it suitable broadcasting facilities; and (e) the transfer to the three peace forces of the applicability of all relevant Council resolutions and authorities relating to the functioning of UNPROFOR in the territories of Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

The restructuring as recommended took effect at the end of the current UNPROFOR mandate, on 31 March, when the Council adopted three resolutions.

By resolution 981(1995), the Council established the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO) for a period terminating on 30 November 1995, and defined its new mandate to include: performing fully the functions envisaged in the 1994 cease-fire and economic agreements between Croatia and the local Serb authorities; facilitating implementation of all relevant Council resolutions, including the functions identified by the Secretary-General's March report; assisting in controlling, by monitoring and reporting, the crossing of military personnel, equipment, supplies and weapons over the international borders between Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina and between Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) at the border-crossing points for which UNCRO was responsible, as specified in the UN peace-keeping plan for Croatia;⁽¹⁴⁾ facilitating the delivery of international humanitarian assistance to Bosnia and Herzegovina through Croatia; and monitoring the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula in accordance with Council resolution 779(1992).⁽¹⁵⁾

Resolution 982(1995) extended UNPROFOR's mandate in Bosnia and Herzegovina for an additional period terminating on 30 November 1995 and established that all previous resolutions relating to UNPROFOR should continue to apply. UNPROFOR should continue to perform fully the functions envisaged in implementation of the two 1994 agreements (see above), including the functions identified in the Secretary-General's 22 March report, and to facilitate the delivery of international humanitarian assistance to Bosnia and Herzegovina until the effective deployment of UNCRO or 30 June 1995, whichever occurred sooner. In addition, UNPROFOR should retain its existing support structures in Croatia, including the operation of its headquarters.

By resolution 983(1995), the Council decided that UNPROFOR in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), for a period terminating also on 30 November, with the same responsibilities as UNPROFOR previously had in that republic.

Thus, three independent but interlinked peace-keeping forces, collectively called the United Nations Peace Forces, were created and deployed as UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina, UNCRO in Croatia, and UNPREDEP in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, covering a total mission area of some 98,700 square miles. UNPF maintained a liaison office in Belgrade, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). UNPF-HQ was located in Zagreb, Croatia, with two support bases, one in Pleso to the north and another in Split along the southern coast. UNPF maintained storage and warehouse facilities in Brindisi, Italy.

General Bernard Janvier (France), who succeeded General Bertrand de Sauville de la Presle (France) on 1 March as Force Commander of UNPROFOR, became Force Commander of the United Nations Peace Forces at the end of that month. His appointment by the Secretary-General was agreed to by the Council in January.⁽¹⁶⁾ Under him were former UNPROFOR field commanders—Lieutenant-General Rupert Smith (United Kingdom) in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Major-General Eid Kamel Al-Rodan (Jordan) in Croatia, and Brigadier-General Juha Engstrom (Finland) in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia—who became, respectively, Commanders of UNPROFOR, UNCRO and UNPREDEP. Civilian Chiefs of Mission were Antonio Pedauye (Spain) for UNPROFOR, Byung Suk Min (Republic of Korea) for UNCRO and Henryk Sokalski (Poland) for UNPREDEP.

UNPF remained under the overall direction of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to the Former Yugoslavia, Yasushi Akashi, until 31 October. With effect from 1 November, Kofi Annan, the Under-Secretary-General for Peace-keeping Operations of the UN Secretariat, was appointed temporarily as Special Representative to the Former Yugoslavia. These changes were made through an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Council in October.⁽¹⁷⁾

On 16 June, the Council welcomed the establishment of a rapid reaction capacity for UNPROFOR and, accordingly, authorized an increase in its strength of up to 12,500 troops to enable it to carry out its mandate more effectively (resolution 998(1995)). In November, the UNPROFOR mandate was extended for a further period ending on 31 January 1996 (resolution 1026(1995)).

Following the initialling in November of the Peace Agreement, the Secretary-General began to make arrangements for the transfer of military authority from UNPROFOR to a multinational Implementation Force (IFOR), as specified in the Agreement. That transfer took place on 20 December, with Admiral Leighton Smith (NATO) assuming command of IFOR. As at that date, a number of UNPROFOR troops had already left the theatre; 18,500 of the approximately 21,000 troops who remained were designated to join IFOR; repatriation of the rest began shortly thereafter.

Besides the forcible reintegration into Croatia in May and August of a majority of the territories held by the Croatian Serbs, which eliminated the need for a substantial UN presence in Croatia, the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, concluded on 12 November between the Government of Croatia and the local Serb authorities in Eastern Slavonia, called for the establishment of new arrangements for that Agreement's implementation. The Council thus decided to terminate UNCRO's mandate on 15 January 1996 (resolution 1025(1995)).

In other action, the Council extended the mandate of UNPREDEP for a period terminating on 30 May 1996 (resolution 1027(1995)).

Composition

In the early part of 1995, the total authorized strength of the three UNPF operations was more than 46,000—748 UN military observers (UNMOs), 44,870 contingent personnel and 1,011 civilian police monitors. Based on Security Council resolution 990(1995) of 28 April, troop strength in Croatia was to be reduced to 8,750 troops by 30 June.

UNPF had a total of 6,303 civilian support staff assigned to the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the Office of the Special Coordinator for Sarajevo, the UNPF Force Commander, the Division of Information, the Office of Civil Affairs and the Division of Management and Administration. Owing to the shortage of military support personnel, approximately 55 per cent of the civilian staff were assigned specialized technical and support functions in communications, transport, supply and property management, movement control and engineering services.

As a result of military events in Croatia in May and August and subsequent political agreements relating to that country and to Bosnia and Herzegovina, which required new arrangements for their implementation, a significant reduction of the UN presence in Croatia subsequently took place, as did withdrawal of UNPROFOR from Bosnia and Herzegovina.

As at 31 December, therefore, the military strength of the UNPF missions stood at 7,318, consisting of 6,847 troops and support units and 471 UNMOs. A breakdown of the total among the UNPF components was as follows: UNPF-HQ—184 personnel; UNCRO—3,110; UNPROFOR—2,433; and UNPREDEP—1,120.

Communications. On 5 May, the Secretary-General, having completed the necessary consultations regarding implementation of the Security Council resolutions creating the three new, separate operations, proposed⁽¹⁸⁾—and the Council agreed⁽¹⁹⁾—that the military contingents of UNCRO be composed of personnel already deployed in Croatia and contributed by: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Jordan, Lithuania, Nepal, Poland, Russian Federation. (Estonia's addition to the Member States authorized to contribute military personnel to UNPROFOR had been put forward by the Secretary-General on 3 February⁽²⁰⁾ and agreed to by the Council on 8 February.⁽²¹⁾) In addition, Ukraine had been invited to provide a helicopter squadron.

The current composition of UNPROFOR was to be maintained, with contingents from: Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, France, Jordan, Malaysia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Russian Federation, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom. The current composition of UNPREDEP, whose contingents were from Denmark, Finland, Norway, Sweden and the United States, was also to be maintained.

The Secretary-General further proposed that UNPF-HQ be staffed by military personnel and support units from all those contingents as well as from Indonesia and Slovakia. He felt it desirable to maintain the existing UNMOs, contributed by: Argentina, Bangladesh, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, France, Ghana, Indonesia, Ireland, Jordan, Kenya, Malaysia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Portugal, Russian Federation, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Venezuela. The observers would be deployed as needed throughout the three zones of operation.

On 14 July, the Secretary-General proposed that Germany, which had offered to make a field hospital available to UNPF, be added to the list of Member States authorized to contribute troops to UNPF,⁽²²⁾ to which the Council agreed on 17 July.⁽²³⁾ This was preceded by a letter of 6 July from Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) expressing concern over Germany's decision to become a troop contributor, contending that neighbouring countries and former occupying Powers were not to be engaged in UNPF operations; Germany, it stated, had occupied the former Yugoslavia in two world wars and the presence of its troops would constitute an open provocation and a threat to the peace process, which should be unacceptable to the international community.⁽²⁴⁾

Status-of-forces agreements

By an exchange of letters on 13 March 1995, the Special Representative and the Minister for Foreign Relations of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia reached an agreement on the status of UNPREDEP in that republic. A status-of-forces agreement in respect of UNCRO was likewise reached on 15 May between the United Nations and Croatia.

Financing

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July and December)

On 20 July, the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's proposals⁽²⁵⁾ and the related recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)⁽²⁶⁾ on the financing of UNPROFOR, UNCRO, UNPREDEP and UNPF-HQ for the periods 1 April to 30 June and 1 July to 31 December 1995, adopted resolution 49/248.

Financing of the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence-Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Protection Force and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, pending a detailed consideration of these reports at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 727(1992) of 8 January 1992 and 740(1992) of 7 February 1992, in which the Council endorsed the sending of a group of military liaison officers to Yugoslavia to promote maintenance of the cease-fire,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 743(1992) of 21 February 1992, by which the Council established the Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended its mandate,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council established the United Nations Confidence-Restoration Operation in Croatia, which is known as UNCRO, for a period terminating on 30 November 1995,

Recalling Security Council resolution 982(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina for an additional period terminating on 30 November 1995,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 983(1995) of 31 March 1995, by which the Council decided that the United Nations Protection Force within the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and that its mandate would continue for a period terminating on 30 November 1995,

Recalling further all the Security Council resolutions providing for an increase in the authorized strength of the United Nations Protection Force, of which the latest is resolution 998(1995) of 16 June 1995, which authorized an increase in United Nations Peace Forces/United Nations Protection Force personnel by up to 12,500 additional troops to provide the Force with a rapid reaction capacity,

Recalling its resolution 46/233 of 19 March 1992 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 49/228 of 23 December 1994,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute to such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Protection Force as at 10 July 1995, including the contributions unpaid in the amount of 862.2 million United States dollars, representing 22.5 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 30 June 1995, notes that some 16 per cent of the membership has paid its assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, particularly those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, particularly as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which is due to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Force promptly and in full;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Decides to utilize the special account established by its resolution 46/233 for the recording of income and expenditures relating to the United Nations Protection Force, the United Nations Confidence-Restoration Operation in Croatia, the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force and the United Nations Peace Forces headquarters;

7. Also decides to appropriate to the special account referred to in paragraph 6 above the amount of 404,194,500 dollars gross (401,106,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 April to 30 June 1995, authorized and apportioned under the terms of its resolution 49/228;

8. Further decides to appropriate to the special account a total amount of 673,657,500 dollars gross (668,511,000 dollars net) for the operation of the Force for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1995;

9. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 673,657,500 dollars gross (668,511,000 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1995 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20

December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1995 as set out in Assembly resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994;

10. Also decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 5,146,500 dollars approved for the Force for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1995, inclusive;

11. Takes note of the fact that the Secretary-General has estimated that an overall level of resources for the reinforcement of the Force with a rapid reaction capacity, not to exceed 297,112,600 dollars gross (275,290,800 dollars net), will be required for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1995 and that the General Assembly will carry out a detailed consideration of all reports of the Secretary-General at its fiftieth session;

12. Decides, in the context of section IV, paragraph 3, of its resolution 49/233 A of 23 December 1994, to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the reinforcement of the Force with a rapid reaction capacity, up to the amount of 100 million dollars gross (99,569,800 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1995;

13. 14. Further decides that, in accordance with the provisions of resolution 973(X), there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 430,200 dollars approved for the Force for the period from 1 July to 30 November 1995, inclusive;

15. Takes note of the decision of the Secretary-General to establish a sub-account of the Special Account for the United Nations Protection Force for the purposes described in paragraph 15 (c) of document A/49/540/Add.4;

16. Invites voluntary contributions to the sub-account of the Special Account for the United Nations Protection Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

17. Decides to defer consideration of the treatment of the unencumbered balances arising in respect of the period from 1 July 1993 to 30 September 1994 until it has an opportunity at its fiftieth session to examine fully the reports contained in documents A/49/540/Add.2 and A/49/540/Add.3 and any update of document A/49/540/Add.3 and the related reports of the Advisory Committee;

18. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to

20 July 1995 Meeting 106 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/756/Add.2) without vote, 14 July (meeting 66); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.63), based on informal consultations; agenda item 122.

Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 62, 63, 66; plenary 106.

In December, the Assembly met two more times to take the interim action necessary to meet further operational requirements relating to UNPF and other new missions in the former Yugoslavia. The estimated costs were presented by the Secretary-General in further reports on the financing of UNPROFOR for 1 October 1994 to 31 March 1995, prior to its restructuring;⁽²⁷⁾ of all UNPF components for 1 July to 31 December 1995, as revised,⁽²⁸⁾ together with their financial performance from 1 April to 30 June 1995;⁽²⁹⁾ and, for the period 1 January to 31 March 1996, of UNPREDEP, of the liquidation of UNCRO and UNPROFOR, and of the new operations expected to be authorized by the Security Council.⁽³⁰⁾

Pending detailed consideration of those reports, the Assembly adopted decision 50/410 A.

At its 78th plenary meeting, on 4 December 1995, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments for the operation of the combined forces for the period from 1 to 31 December 1995 in the amount of 115,373,000 United States dollars gross (113,866,300 dollars net), subject to the decision of the Security Council to continue the forces beyond 30 November 1995.

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1995, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Authorized the Secretary-General, on an exceptional basis, to enter into commitments for the operations in the former Yugoslavia for the period from

Audit of personnel pilot project

By a note of 6 June, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an audit report⁽³²⁾ on the UNPROFOR personnel pilot project, submitted in keeping with a 1994 Assembly request.⁽³³⁾ The project was begun in 1992 for the recruitment of international contractual personnel to provide a variety of support skills, especially in the technical and trade areas, which could not be met through traditional means of recruitment. The audit was conducted by the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the basis of an ACABQ recommendation that the project be suspended, pending an independent evaluation of UNPROFOR's contracting practices.

The audit covered the procurement processes; administrative procedures for managing the project, including determination of contractual personnel requirements, post classification and selection of candidates; policies and procedures for administering the contracts, including determination of billable costs, invoice checking, and monitoring of performance and compliance with contractual requirements; and recent developments in the management of the project.

The audit's basic finding was that deployment of contractual personnel had proved to be a viable means of meeting UNPROFOR support needs and could be an alternative method of providing support staff for other peace-keeping operations. The series of recommendations that emerged from the audit included: applying the project with flexibility to ensure fulfilment of the operational requirements of UNPROFOR or of other missions; engaging contractual personnel only upon determination by a review board and on the consent of the Department of Peace-keeping Operations; and limiting the engagement of such personnel to technical and trade functions.

By decision 49/487, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee,⁽³⁴⁾ took note of the audit report.

Cooperation with NATO

In his 22 March report,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General noted that NATO had continued to support the United Nations with substantial maritime and aerial operations. The joint NATO/Western European Union operation "Sharp Guard" enforced the Adriatic embargo under Security Council resolution 820(1993),⁽³⁵⁾ while operation "Deny Flight" continued to provide aerial monitoring and enforcement of the ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as decided by the Security Council in 1992⁽³⁶⁾ and 1993,⁽³⁷⁾ as well as protective close air support, air strikes and enhancement of the security of the UN-designated safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina when requested by UNPROFOR. The availability of NATO air power had strengthened UNPROFOR's bargaining position in negotiating clearances for humanitarian convoys, it was stated.

At the Secretary-General's request, NATO had also devoted considerable resources to contingency planning and other preparations in support of a possible UNPROFOR withdrawal from Bosnia and Herzegovina and/or Croatia.

The Secretary-General emphasized that despite regular and frequent infringements of the ban on military flights by helicopters and some occasional fixed-wing activity, he was convinced that the deterrent effect of NATO operations had contributed to the effective containment of the warring factions' air activity for combat purposes. He placed a high value on the security that UNPROFOR derived from NATO's operations and contingency measures.

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

By a letter of 31 October 1995, the President of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991⁽³⁸⁾ brought to the attention of the Security Council the Trial Chamber's decision of 20 October that there were reasonable grounds for believing that Dragan Nikolic, indicted in 1994,⁽³⁹⁾ had committed the crimes with which he had been charged.⁽⁴⁰⁾ Owing to the inability of Bosnia and Herzegovina to serve the indictment and warrant of arrest because the accused was residing in territory outside its control, and in the absence of a response from the Bosnian Serb administration, the decision provided for the issuance of an international warrant for Dragan Nikolic's arrest and invited the President to so advise the Council.

The Council took note of the President's letter in resolution 1019(1995) of 9 November.

(For the activities of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

Sanctions

The sanctions regimes imposed by the Security Council on the former Yugoslavia between 1991 and 1993⁽⁴¹⁾ and in 1994⁽⁴²⁾ included the general and complete arms embargo applicable to the whole of the former Yugoslavia and the sanctions specific to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Bosnian Serb party.

In the course of 1995, the Council, by resolution 992(1995), altered the 1993 restrictions on navigation on the Danube River.⁽³⁵⁾ In addition, by resolutions 982(1995), 988(1995), 992(1995), 1003(1995) and 1015(1995), the Council extended the 1994 partial suspension of economic sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)⁽⁴³⁾ for four successive periods from 12 January, the last period extending to 18 March 1996.

On 22 November, the day after Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) had initialled the Peace Agreement, the Council, by resolution 1021(1995), provided for the phased termination of the 1991 embargo on deliveries of weapons and military equipment to the former Yugoslavia,⁽⁴⁴⁾ excepting those deliveries as defined in the Peace Agreement, which should continue to be prohibited until the arms control agreement referred to therein had taken effect.

By resolution 1022(1995), also of 22 November, the Council suspended indefinitely and with immediate effect all sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the suspension to be automatically reimposed in the event of that country's failure formally to sign the Peace Agreement, or to be terminated if that country or the Bosnian Serb authorities were failing significantly to meet their obligations under the Agreement. Such suspension was not to apply to the measures imposed on the Bosnian Serb party until such time as it had withdrawn behind the separation zones established by the Agreement.

Following the formal signature of the Peace Agreement on 14 December and the Secretary-General's report to the Council on 20 December that, on that day, the transfer of military authority from UNPROFOR to IFOR had taken place, the provisions of Council resolutions 781(1992)⁽³⁶⁾ and 816(1993)⁽³⁷⁾ relating to the ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina were terminated with immediate effect, in accordance with Council resolution 1031(1995).

Navigation on the Danube

On 8 May 1995, the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to Security Council resolution 724(1991)⁽⁴⁵⁾ (Sanctions Committee) conveyed to the Council Romania's request that vessels of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) be authorized to use the Romanian locks of the Iron Gates I system on the left bank of the Danube during the forthcoming repairs to the locks on the right bank.⁽⁴⁶⁾ Supported by other Danube riparian States and by the Sanctions Coordinator of the European Union/Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (EU/OSCE), the request was made as an exception to paragraph 16 of resolution 820(1993).⁽³⁵⁾

Having noted the importance placed on the proper maintenance and timely repair of the Iron Gates I system for the safety of international navigation on the Danube, and taking account of Romania's readiness to ensure that the vessels in question would not engage in any activity that might contravene the relevant Council resolutions, the Sanctions Committee decided to recommend that the Council consider adopting a technical resolution granting the request.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the foregoing request, the Security Council convened on 11 May and adopted resolution 992(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the former Yugoslavia, and in particular its resolution 820(1993),

Desiring to promote free and unhindered navigation on the Danube in accordance with those resolutions,

Recalling statements made by the President of the Security Council on freedom of navigation on the Danube, in particular that made on 13 October 1993 expressing concern about the imposition of illegal tolls on foreign vessels transiting the section of the Danube which passes through the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Reminding States of their obligations under paragraph 5 of resolution 757(1992) not to make available to the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) or to any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) any funds or any other financial or economic resources and to prevent their nationals from making available to those authorities or to any such undertaking any such funds or resources, and noting that flag States may submit claims to the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) for reimbursement of tolls illegally imposed on their vessels transiting the section of the Danube which passes through the territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Taking note of the letter of the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) regarding use by vessels registered in, or owned or controlled by persons in, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the left-hand bank of the Danube while repairs are carried out to the locks on the right-hand bank,

Recognizing that the use by vessels registered in, or owned or controlled by persons in, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of these locks will require an exemption from the provisions of paragraph 16 of resolution 820(1993) and acting, in this respect, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the use of the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the left-hand bank of the Danube by vessels (a) registered in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) or (b) in which a majority or controlling interest is held by a person or undertaking in or operating from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) shall be permitted in accordance with this resolution;

2. Further decides that this resolution shall come into force on the day following the receipt by the Council from the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) of a report by the Danube Commission that they are satisfied that preparations for the repairs to the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the right-hand bank of the Danube have been completed; and that this resolution shall remain in force, subject to paragraph 6 below, for a period of 60 days from the date on which it comes into force, and, unless the Council decides otherwise, for further periods of up to 60 days if the Council is notified by the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) that each such further period is required for completion of the necessary repairs;

3. Requests the Government of Romania, with the assistance of the European Union/Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe Sanctions Assistance Missions, strictly to monitor this use including if necessary by inspections of the vessels and their cargo, to ensure that no goods are loaded or unloaded during the passage by the vessels through the locks of the Iron Gates I system;

4. Further requests the Government of Romania to deny passage through the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the left-hand bank of the Danube to any vessel using the locks of the Iron Gates I system under the authority of paragraph 1 above which is identified as being a party to any suspected or substantiated violation of the relevant Council resolutions;

5. Requests the Sanctions Assistance Missions Communications Centre to report to the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) and to the

Romanian authorities operating the locks of the Iron Gates I system on the left-hand bank of the Danube any suspected violation of any of the relevant Council resolutions by vessels using the locks of the Iron Gates I system under the authority of paragraph 1 above and to transmit to the Committee and to the Romanian authorities evidence that any such violation has in fact occurred; and decides that the Chairman of the Committee shall, after consulting members of the Committee, transmit to the Council any substantiated evidence of such a violation forthwith;

6. Decides that the exemption provided for in paragraph 1 above shall terminate on the third working day after the Council receives substantiated evidence from the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) of a violation of any of the relevant resolutions of the Council by a vessel using the locks of the Iron Gates I system under the authority of paragraph 1 above, unless the Council decides to the contrary, and that the Government of Romania shall be so informed immediately;

7. Requests the Executive Director of the Danube Commission to inform the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) of the date of completion of the repairs, or, if the repairs have not been completed within 60 days of the entry into force of this resolution, or within the subsequent periods of up to 60 days for which the provisions of this resolution may be extended, to provide the Chairman with a report on the state of the repairs 10 days before the expiry of any such period;

8. Confirms that, in accordance with the provisions of resolution 760(1992), the importation into the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of supplies essential to the repair of the locks on the right-hand bank of the Danube may be approved in accordance with the procedures of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) at a meeting or meetings of the Committee;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 992(1995)

11 May 1995 Meeting 3533 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/373).

In keeping with paragraph 2 of the resolution, the Sanctions Committee, on 21 June, transmitted the Danube Commission's communication that preparations for the repairs to the locks in question had been completed.⁽⁴⁷⁾ The resolution, and hence the authorization sought, entered into force on 23 June. On the basis of two letters from the Sanctions Committee, dated 16 August and 16 October, each stating that an additional 60 days were required to complete the repairs, and in the absence of a Council decision to the contrary, the resolution remained in force for a further two periods of 60 days each, from 22 August to 20 October⁽⁴⁸⁾ and from 21 October to 19 December.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Economic assistance to States affected by sanctions

The States bordering Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and some Danube riparian States—

Bulgaria, Greece, Moldova, Romania and Ukraine—continued in 1995 to suffer from special economic problems as a result of the strict enforcement of the comprehensive trade and economic sanctions imposed against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

To alleviate their situation, those States jointly suggested a series of measures on 18 May,⁽⁵⁰⁾ almost all of which the General Assembly embodied in its resolution 50/58 E of 12 December.

Humanitarian assistance programme

Various bodies of the UN system—including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the World Food Programme (WFP), the World Health Organization (WHO) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)—continued in 1995 to operate the humanitarian assistance programme for war-affected populations in the former Yugoslavia. As the lead agency, UNHCR was responsible for logistics, transport, food monitoring, domestic needs, shelter, community services, legal assistance and other protection services. UNPROFOR continued to provide escorts and engineering support to humanitarian convoys and to determine the safest convoy routes.

The UN inter-agency effort continued to be complemented by Governments acting on a bilateral basis, by various intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

The ICFY Working Group on Humanitarian Issues, chaired by UN High Commissioner for Refugees Sadako Ogata, met on 19 July and 10 October. It continued its efforts to generate financing for humanitarian activities, to provide protection and assistance for refugees and displaced persons, and to help uphold international norms of human rights and humanitarian law. The High Commissioner undertook a mission to the capitals of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)—Sarajevo, Zagreb, Belgrade—from 4 to 6 December, to discuss humanitarian issues connected with implementation of the Peace Agreement.

On 2 June, a revised consolidated inter-agency appeal was issued by the United Nations for an estimated $470 million to cover humanitarian operations from 1 January to 31 December 1995 for some 2,109,500 beneficiaries in the whole of the former Yugoslavia. The UNHCR component was $172 million. Owing to the dramatic escalation of humanitarian needs since May, a supplement to the revised inter-agency appeal was issued on 15 September, increasing the estimate from $470 million to $514.8 million to cover tens of thousands of newly displaced persons raising the number of beneficiaries to some 3,523,500. The UNHCR component was correspondingly increased to $222.7 million.

A new UN consolidated inter-agency appeal was launched on 20 November for $179.6 million to fund humanitarian assistance to 3.3 million beneficiaries from January to April 1996, of which the UNHCR component was $70.9 million.

According to UNHCR, contributions to the programme during 1995 consisted of $166 million in cash and some $6.4 million in kind. Humanitarian assistance in metric tonnage provided to the war-affected populations in the former Yugoslavia was as follows: Bosnia and Herzegovina—213,155 metric tons; Croatia (excluding the UN protected areas (UNPAs))—521; UNPAs—5,803; the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia—1,139; Slovenia—18; Serbia—31,589; Montenegro—5,231. (Procurement and distribution of assistance to Croatia, excluding the UNPAs, had been executed by EU since the end of 1992.) The beneficiaries totalled 3.5 million.

(See also "Humanitarian assistance", under "Bosnia and Herzegovina"; and PART FOUR, Chapters III and XII.)

Succession issues

As noted in its first biannual report,⁽²⁾ the ICFY Working Group on Succession Issues conducted negotiations on all aspects of succession related to the former Yugoslavia. The Group's meticulous and persistent work, it was stated, had brought the parties within reach of agreement on draft treaty provisions, cast into two sections, which could constitute independent treaties or parts of a single treaty, depending on development of events.

The first section, dealing with citizenship, pensions, acquired rights, archives, treaty succession and arbitration mechanisms, contained provisions on which a large measure of agreement had been achieved. The draft text on that section had been presented to the parties for consideration.

The second section dealt with disposition of assets and liabilities, and had been the subject of consultations over the past six months with Governments and creditors, the report stated. Consultations were continuing on the question of how to distribute assets and liabilities among the successor republics.

Communications. On 24 January 1995, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) communicated⁽⁵¹⁾ to the Secretary-General its reply to objections raised in 1994⁽⁵²⁾ by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Slovenia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia with regard to its request that it be allowed to pay UN budget contributions from the assets of the former Yugoslavia frozen abroad. The reply stated that, pending an agreement to regulate the effects of secession from the Yugoslav federation, which would also define the rights of the seceded territories in respect of the former Yugoslavia's assets, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was the owner of those assets by virtue of continuing the federation in international relations. Accordingly, its request that a portion of the former Yugoslavia's funds in foreign banks be unfrozen so that it could meet its financial obligations was fully in compliance with the factual and legal state of affairs.

Bosnia and Herzegovina,⁽⁵³⁾ on 16 February, and Croatia⁽⁵⁴⁾ and Slovenia,⁽⁵⁵⁾ on the following day, renewed their objections, stating that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was one of the five equal successor States and recalling Security Council resolution 777(1992),⁽⁵⁶⁾ which determined that the State formerly known as the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia had ceased to exist and that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) could not continue automatically the former Yugoslavia's membership in the United Nations.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

When 1995 began, an agreement on a comprehensive cease-fire had been in effect for seven days in Bosnia and Herzegovina and an agreement on a complete cessation of hostilities had just entered into force. Both were concluded between the Government and the Bosnian Serb leadership during the second half of December 1994, and it was widely felt that they provided yet another opportunity, until their expiry on 30 April 1995, for creating stable military conditions favourable to the conduct of political negotiation. Thus, monitoring and verification of the parties' compliance with the agreements became the main focus of UNPROFOR activities during the first months of the year.

In March, it became apparent to those concerned that the parties regarded the agreements as a mere winter truce for troop rest, regroupment and reinforcement. Following the expiration of the agreements, rapidly accelerating military activities began to be unleashed country-wide, but especially in and around the UN-designated safe areas. In May, Bosnian Serb violations of the heavy-weapons exclusion zone in Sarajevo drew NATO air strikes against an ammunition depot in Pale, seat of the Bosnian Serb administration. In response, the Bosnian Serbs took more than 300 UNPROFOR personnel hostage, using some of them as human shields at strategic locations, as in Gorazde, to deter further NATO air strikes.

In July, the Bosnian Serb forces mounted a full-scale assault on Srebrenica and nearby Zepa, quickly overrunning those two northern safe areas. In the Bihac pocket, in north-west Bosnia, where the agreements had never been respected, internal fighting flared up, also in July, between the Bosnian Army and the Bosnian separatists there who were being assisted by the Croatian Serbs from Krajina and by the Bosnian Serbs, who kept up their attacks from without. In early August, the intermittent shelling of Sarajevo reached a critical point when the city's Markale market-place was targeted, taking a heavy toll in civilian deaths and injuries. To restore the heavy-weapons and safe-area regimes, NATO conducted multiple air strikes at the end of August through the beginning of September against Bosnian Serb anti-aircraft systems, heavy-weapons sites and other military facilities throughout eastern Bosnian Serb territory. During that operation, mortar and artillery of the rapid reaction force of UNPROFOR engaged Bosnian Serb targets. Soon after, joint Bosnian and Croatian forces began to advance in the western part of the country, with the Bosnian forces taking much of the Ozren salient, while the Croatian forces made sweeping advances to the south-west, capturing areas traditionally populated by Serbs.

Those offensives resulted in dramatic flows of refugees and displaced persons inside and out of Bosnia and Herzegovina, exacerbated by refugee flows into that country due to two major offensives launched by Croatia in May and August against Croatian Serb-held areas within its territory. In July, thousands of Bosnian Muslim residents of Srebrenica and Zepa were expelled, as both fell to the Bosnian Serbs. In the same month, the counter-offensive of the Krajina Serbs on the Bosnian Army in the Bihac pocket caused some 8,000 residents there to abandon their homes and flee to neighbouring Cazvin. At the beginning of August, approximately 26,000 Bosnian Croats and Muslims were either expelled from or pressured into leaving Banja Luka in northern Bosnia, due to the influx there of some 14,000 Bosnian Serbs who had fled Bosansko Grahovo and Glamoc in late July in the wake of the advance of the joint Bosnian and Croatian forces into those western Bosnian towns bordering Croatia. Because of Croatia's military offensive at the end of August through the beginning of September, some 150,000 Serbs from the Krajina region of Croatia crossed into northern Bosnia and Herzegovina and thence to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). As the Bosnian Army swept through western Bosnia in mid-September, some 127,000 Bosnian Serbs fled to Banja Luka, significantly adding to the 14,000 Bosnian Serbs already in refuge there.

Amidst the fighting and population upheavals, widespread violations of human rights and international humanitarian law persisted, particularly in Bosnian Serb-controlled territory.

Shortly after mid-August, the United States began a determined pursuit of its peace initiative, securing a cease-fire agreement on 5 October, which UNPROFOR brought into force on 12 October. Meanwhile, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)—the latter representing also the Bosnian Serb party—had committed themselves on 8 September, under the auspices of the Contact Group, to Agreed Basic Principles and, on 26 September, to Further Agreed Basic Principles, which were to govern the forthcoming difficult and intensive proximity negotiations.

Those negotiations began on 1 November in Dayton, Ohio, United States, with the United States Under-Secretary of State for European and Canadian Affairs, Richard Holbrooke, as chief United States mediator. They culminated in the initialling on 21 November of the General Framework for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and all the annexes thereto, known as the Peace Agreement. A Peace Implementation Conference was convened in London on 8 and 9 December, which set in motion implementation of the civilian aspects of the Peace Agreement. With the formal signing of the Peace Agreement in Paris on 14 December 1995, the military authority in Bosnia and Herzegovina was transferred from UNPROFOR to a multinational implementation force (IFOR) authorized by the Security Council on 15 December, to operate under the authority and political control of the North Atlantic Council through the NATO chain of command.

With that transfer of authority, the Council resolutions relating to the safe areas and to the ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina were terminated with immediate effect.

1994 cease-fire and cessation-of-hostilities agreements

As of 1 January 1995, UNPROFOR had begun to focus on monitoring and verifying compliance by the Bosnian Government and the Bosnian Serb leadership with the 1994 agreements⁽¹⁾ on a comprehensive cease-fire and on a complete cessation of hostilities, negotiated by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia. The agreements were to expire on 30 April 1995, but were subject to renewal. Their texts were conveyed to the Security Council by the Secretary-General on 6 January 1995.⁽²⁾

The cease-fire agreement, which had taken effect on 24 December 1994, was for an initial period of seven days and four months. It provided for the following: a general cease-fire along all confrontation lines; a procedure for reporting any breach of the agreement to the Council through UNPROFOR and the Secretary-General; the free passage of UNPROFOR, humanitarian convoys and teams monitoring the cease-fire; the international monitoring of the human rights situation in all areas; the prompt and unconditional release of all detainees, including prisoners of war (POWs), and of all available information on missing persons, in accordance with an ICRC action plan; and immediate negotiations aimed at achieving an agreement on a comprehensive cessation of hostilities.

The cessation-of-hostilities agreement went into effect on 1 January along all confrontation lines for an initial period of four months. Under the terms of the agreement, compliance was to be monitored by UNPROFOR through regional joint commissions and a central joint commission which it would chair. UNPROFOR and the parties were to exchange liaison officers by 15 January. Cessation of hostilities was to include the separation of forces to mutually agreed positions and the interpositioning of UNPROFOR between them, a halt to the use of all explosive munitions and of weapons to fire them, and the withdrawal of heavy weapons of 12.7-millimetre calibre or greater, to be monitored by UNPROFOR. The parties were to accord UNPROFOR and other official international agencies, particularly UNHCR, full freedom of movement and respect for their safety and security. They were to comply fully with all existing agreements relating to: Gorazde,⁽³⁾ Sarajevo airport,⁽⁴⁾ Srebrenica,⁽⁵⁾ Srebrenica and Zepa,⁽⁶⁾ the Mount Igman demilitarized zone, and anti-sniping.⁽¹⁾ They were to assist in the total restoration of utilities and engage in joint economic activities to normalize life in all territories, particularly in and around the safe areas. Under ICRC auspices, the parties were to begin, by 15 January, releasing detained persons and searching for the missing. In addition, the parties were to cooperate with UNPROFOR in monitoring the withdrawal of all foreign troops.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (6 January)

Having received the texts of the two agreements, the Security Council met on 6 January and, after consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the following statement⁽⁷⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council welcomes the agreements between the Bosnian parties on a cease-fire and on a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina concluded on 23 December 1994 and 31 December 1994 respectively. It commends the efforts of all who worked to achieve them.

The Security Council stresses the importance it attaches to immediate and full compliance with the agreements. It attaches the highest priority at this juncture to the timely completion of the various steps envisaged in the agreement on a complete cessation of hostilities. It looks to the parties and others concerned to cooperate fully with the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in their implementation. The Security Council calls upon all forces to cease fighting around Bihac. It supports efforts in train to strengthen UNPROFOR, and encourages Member States to make available the personnel and equipment needed for UNPROFOR to supervise and monitor the agreements.

The Security Council will continue its consideration of all aspects of the crisis in Bosnia and Herzegovina and of the Secretary-General's report of 1 December 1994.⁽⁸⁾

The Security Council deems it imperative to intensify efforts under the auspices of the Contact Group to achieve an overall settlement on the basis of the acceptance of the peace plan of the Contact Group as a starting point. It will give its full support to such efforts.

Report of the Secretary-General (March).

In his report of 22 March 1995,⁽⁹⁾ intended to assist the Security Council in its consideration of the UNPROFOR mandate, the Secretary-General noted that the Bosnian Croat leaders had joined in the two agreements on 2 January.

A month into the implementation of the agreements, military activities declined significantly throughout the country, except in the Bihac region in north-western Bosnia and Herzegovina (see below, under "Bihac"), the Secretary-General reported. There had been a marked improvement in the quality of life in Sarajevo, and in freedom of movement and in the humanitarian situation in general. Compliance with certain other existing agreements (on Sarajevo, Mount Igman, Srebrenica, Gorazde), stipulated in the cessation-of-hostilities agreement, improved significantly. The roads around Sarajevo, closed since July 1994, were opened, first to a limited number of "official international humanitarian organizations" and then to civilians and other humanitarian organizations. A joint reconnaissance of the Mount Igman demilitarized zone verified the Bosnian Army's evacuation of that zone, although UNPROFOR continued to observe government troops transiting through.

The evacuation of Mount Igman made progress possible on the issue of routes: on 1 February, the airport roads were opened to the first category of humanitarian organizations; on 5 February, UNPROFOR informed the two sides that those roads would be opened the next day to civilian traffic; three days later, the Sarajevo-Visoko bus route, via Serb-controlled territory, was opened on the same basis. In February, therefore, an estimated 116,000 people crossed the airport roads, with some 88,000 people travelling between the two Bosnian Government-controlled areas and 28,000 between the two Bosnian Serb-controlled areas. Towards the end of the month, however, the bus route to Visoko was closed by the Bosnian Serbs, as were the airport roads in March, following the killing of two Serb girls by a Bosnian sniper.

Despite the general success of the cease-fire agreement and some success of the cessation-of-hostilities agreement, little was achieved in January on the provisions relating to separation of forces, interpositioning of UNPROFOR troops and heavy-weapons withdrawal. The vital mechanism of the joint commissions failed to function, for both sides refused to participate in commission meetings. Those developments, coupled with the Government's refusal to accept the posting of Bosnian Serb liaison officers at the UNPROFOR sector headquarters on Government-controlled territory and the parties' continued military preparations, gave rise to concerns about the long-term viability of the cessation-of-hostilities agreement. It increasingly appeared that the parties' objective was a winter truce, during which their forces would be able to rest, reorganize and train for a future offensive, the Secretary-General said.

The Government had already made clear to UNPROFOR that it was not interested in extending the agreement if the Bosnian Serbs were unwilling to accept the 1994 Contact Group peace proposal,⁽¹⁰⁾ at least as a starting point for negotiations. Government forces had begun to restrict UNPROFOR's freedom of movement in Government-controlled territory, thus precluding UNPROFOR access to certain areas of central Bosnia and Herzegovina. Likewise, the Bosnian Serbs had begun imposing restrictions and tight controls on supplies to the enclaves, particularly fuel and medical supplies, and had threatened to renew hostilities unless the Government immediately complied with the cessation-of-hostilities agreement. The impasse led to a deterioration of the security situation in Sarajevo. Shelling incidents increased, as did sniping at civilians and targeting of UNPROFOR and UNHCR aircraft. Those, in addition to recent government offensives in Travnik and Tuzla, the Secretary-General noted, were some of the signs of a steady deterioration in the overall situation in the country.

The continued lack of trust between the parties and their unwillingness to break out of a vicious circle of linkages had made it difficult to achieve further progress in implementation of the cessation-of-hostilities agreement and had undermined the achievements gained so far. In the absence of a real will by the parties to cooperate, UNPROFOR was unable to resolve outstanding issues among them, the Secretary-General concluded.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (3 May)

Following the expiration on 30 April of the comprehensive cease-fire and cessation-of-hostilities agreements, and in view of the parties' failure to renew them, the Council met on 3 May and authorized the President to make the statement below⁽¹¹⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the failure of the Bosnian parties to agree to an extension of the agreements on a cease-fire and a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the recent deterioration of the situation there. It stresses once again the unacceptability of all attempts to resolve the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by military means.

The Security Council calls upon the Bosnian parties to agree without further delay to a further cease-fire and a complete cessation of hostilities and, in this regard, fully supports the negotiating efforts of UNPROFOR and other international efforts aimed at persuading the Bosnian parties to agree to such a cease-fire and complete cessation of hostilities. The Council urges the Bosnian parties to abstain from any steps which may lead to further escalation of the conflict and reaffirms the need for a political settlement on the basis of the acceptance of the Contact Group plan as a starting point.

Meeting number. SC 3530.

Report of the Secretary-General (May). The Secretary-General on 30 May reported on developments in Bosnia and Herzegovina, both on the ground and regarding the parties' attitude affecting the UNPROFOR mandate,⁽¹²⁾ taking account of the concerns raised by the Security Council, as well as of issues raised by the Bosnian Government on 22 March⁽¹³⁾ regarding the mandate's implementation.

The Secretary-General stated that the continued lack of diplomatic progress and the breakdown of the 1994 cessation-of-hostilities agreement in March 1995 caused fighting to spread from the Bihac area to central Bosnia and Tuzla and thence to Sarajevo. Bosnian Serb forces increased pressure on the city by harassing convoys, hijacking UN vehicles, closing the airport to humanitarian and civilian traffic, sniping, and targeting the Mount Igman road with heavy-weapons fire. Government forces were also responsible for a number of incidents. After the agreement expired on 30 April, the fighting around Sarajevo further intensified, marked by the sustained use of heavy weapons by the two sides, increased civilian casualties and mounting calls for the stricter enforcement of the "heavy-weapons exclusion zone", i.e., the 20-kilometre radius around Sarajevo, excluding Pale.

As previous measures had failed to restore respect for the heavy-weapons agreement and as neither side appeared ready to stop fighting, UNPROFOR called for air strikes on 25 and 26 May, targeting eight bunkers within an ammunition dump near Pale. Bosnian Serb forces reacted by surrounding additional weapons collection points; shelling all safe areas, except Zepa, resulting in particularly heavy casualties in Tuzla where some 70 civilians were killed and over 130 injured; taking more than 300 UNMOs into custody, using a number of them as human shields to deter further air strikes; and cutting electricity to the city.

The Secretary-General presented a detailed analysis of the UNPROFOR mandate as it had progressively been expanded, emphasizing throughout that its effective implementation required the consent and cooperation of the parties. This was illustrated by UNPROFOR's use of its good offices, in keeping with repeated Council requests, to assist the parties to settle their differences peacefully. While it had earlier achieved considerable successes, beginning with the 1992 Sarajevo airport agreement,⁽¹⁴⁾ UNPROFOR had less success in subsequently persuading the parties to honour their commitments. With the deterioration of the military situation in recent weeks, UNPROFOR, having been denied the parties' cooperation, was no longer able to fulfil its mandate of ensuring the security and functioning of Sarajevo airport or the uninterrupted continuation of humanitarian operations there.⁽¹⁵⁾ The principal threat to airport security had been the frequent firings at aircraft using it, mainly by Bosnian Serbs and, on several occasions, by Bosnian government forces.

As to UNPROFOR's task to support UNHCR efforts to deliver humanitarian relief throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly through convoy protection,⁽¹⁶⁾ the difficulties impeding its full implementation centred essentially on the refusal by the various parties, especially the Bosnian Serb party, to respect UNPROFOR's freedom of movement and their readiness in some areas to use humanitarian assistance to further their war aims, including denying such assistance to populations so as to make them leave their homes, or seizing a proportion of humanitarian cargoes for their own use. None the less, UNHCR and UNPROFOR had been successful in meeting humanitarian requirements in most parts of the country. It was mainly in Bihac, and more recently in Sarajevo, that the parties' non-cooperation had caused major shortfalls in delivery.

UNPROFOR's ground monitoring at selected airfields of compliance with the ban on all military flights over the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina⁽¹⁷⁾ had been largely successful. A recent exception involved several Croatian sorties through Bosnian airspace to bomb positions in Sector West (Western Slavonia) in Croatia. The deployment of international observers to monitor the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina⁽¹⁸⁾ was never implemented, since Member States were unable to make available the number of observers required for the task, the Secretary-General said.

UNPROFOR had mixed results in carrying out its responsibilities in the safe areas.⁽¹⁹⁾ When consent and cooperation of the parties had been forthcoming, it had achieved considerable success in monitoring cease-fires, stabilizing confrontation lines and improving security by resolving localized disputes or outbreaks of fighting in those areas. It had also assisted in arranging medical evacuations, delivering and reporting on humanitarian aid, brokering local agreements to improve the populations' living conditions and promoting confidence-building arrangements. However, its ability to carry out its safe-area mandate and particularly to deter deliberate attacks on the areas had been severely limited by the inherent deficiencies of the safe-area regime described by the Secretary-General in his 1994 report⁽⁸⁾ and by the military activities of the two sides. In recent weeks those difficulties had increased as relations deteriorated between the parties and as the safe areas were drawn into the intensifying conflict throughout the country (see below).

Regarding UNPROFOR's tasks relating to the monitoring of the 1994 cease-fire agreement between the Chiefs of Staff of the Army of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Croatian Defence Council,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the presence of UNPROFOR on both sides of the cease-fire line had greatly contributed to stabilizing the situation within the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to building confidence between the Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat communities.

Safe areas

The Secretary-General, in his account of the situation in the safe areas, as contained in his 30 May report,⁽¹²⁾ pointed to the fact that Security Council resolution 836(1993),⁽¹⁹⁾ defining UNPROFOR's mandate as to the safe areas and the parameters for the use of force in "self-defence", did not require the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina to withdraw its military or paramilitary units from those areas. The Council had made clear in presidential statements, however, that "provocative actions by whomsoever committed" were unacceptable. He recalled emphasizing that the party defending a safe area must comply with certain obligations—especially not to launch unprovoked attacks from the area—if it was to achieve the primary objective of the safe-area regime: the protection of the civilian population.

The Secretary-General noted that the Government's forces in recent months had considerably increased their military activity in and around most safe areas; many of them, including Sarajevo, Tuzla and Bihac, had been incorporated into the Government's broader military campaigns. The headquarters and logistics installations of the Fifth Corps of the Army of Bosnia and Herzegovina were located in the town of Bihac and those of the Second Corps in the town of Tuzla. The Government also maintained a substantial number of troops in Srebrenica (in this case in violation of a demilitarization agreement⁽⁵⁾), Gorazde and Zepa, while Sarajevo was the site of the General Command and other military installations.

The Bosnian Serb reaction to government offensives launched from safe areas had generally been to respond against military targets within those areas, often disproportionately. Notwithstanding the provocation, such military responses were in violation of the safe-area regime and other local agreements. The Bosnian Serbs had also initiated unprovoked shelling of safe areas. In both cases, civilian casualties had occurred. UNPROFOR's mandate to deter attacks on the safe areas required it to react to Serb actions, irrespective of whether they were in response to offensives launched by the other side. This made the impartiality of UNPROFOR difficult to maintain and it was seen as a party to the conflict, with resulting risks to isolated UN personnel.

UNPROFOR's capacity to carry out its safe-area mandate had also been affected by the Bosnian Serbs' denial of freedom of movement to and from the three eastern safe areas (Gorazde, Srebrenica, Zepa) so that supplies for UNPROFOR personnel by road had become virtually impossible. The alternative to resupply convoys would be airlifting by helicopter, which involved considerable dangers, the Secretary-General stated.

Bihac

Report of the Secretary-General. According to the Secretary-General's report of 22 March,⁽⁹⁾ fighting and the blockade of humanitarian supplies continued in the Bihac pocket. In active support of the Bosnian rebel leader Fikret Abdic,⁽²¹⁾ who maintained his stronghold in Velika Kladusa, the Krajina (or Knin) Serbs continued to launch cross-border artillery and ground attacks on the pocket and to frustrate UNPROFOR and UNHCR by insisting that humanitarian convoys destined for the pocket and UNPROFOR supplies for the Bangladeshi battalion there pass through Velika Kladusa, as well as by subjecting convoy personnel to erratic and obstructive "checking" and to the dangers of either deliberate targeting or being caught in crossfire. UNPROFOR's repeated efforts to achieve a cease-fire and attempts by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, in coordination with UNHCR, to gain regular access to the region without traversing Velika Kladusa had not met with success.

The complexity of the situation in Bihac, where five more or less distinct parties could be identified, posed a daunting challenge for UNPROFOR, the Secretary-General continued. In the south, near Bihac town, the situation was at an impasse. The Bosnian Serbs insisted on their demand that the Government's forces return to the positions they had occupied at the signing of the 1994 cessation-of-hostilities agreement. The Government, having retaken control of the safe area and its water supply, refused, and equally insisted that the Krajina Serb forces withdraw from the pocket, as stipulated by the agreement. Fighting continued in the north, near Velika Kladusa, where the Krajina Serb forces remained actively involved. The resultant instability and the prospect of an UNPROFOR withdrawal from Croatia (upon the expiry of the mandate on 31 March) made unlikely UNHCR access to the south, where there was fear of imminent and widespread malnutrition. The Secretary-General warned that, should the situation fester, Bihac could again become a flashpoint for wider conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Communications. The role of the Krajina Serbs in Bihac was the subject of two communications from Bosnia and Herzegovina on 10⁽²²⁾ and 30 January.⁽²³⁾ The latter reported that the allied Bosnian Serb and Croatian Serb forces had fired more than 900 shells on the safe area proper and on other towns in the region; and, moreover, that UNMOs confirmed having observed soldiers in Bosnian Serb uniforms manning five artillery guns south of Velika Kladusa and two trucks carrying 40 such soldiers driving south through it. Bosnia and Herzegovina called on the Council to put an end to that aggression and see to the compliance with its relevant resolutions, or risk erosion of the agreements.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 17 February and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽²⁴⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the continued fighting around Bihac and deplores the serious humanitarian situation in the Bihac area. It reaffirms its support for the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and UNPROFOR.

The Security Council recalls the statement of the President of the Security Council of 6 January 1995. It reiterates the importance it attaches to full compliance with the agreements between the Bosnian parties on a cease-fire and on a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina concluded on 23 December 1994 and 31 December 1994 respectively. All involved must now make a concerted effort to consolidate what has been achieved so far to avoid the risk of a renewed outbreak of hostilities.

The Security Council demands that all forces in the Bihac area cease fighting immediately and cooperate fully with UNPROFOR in achieving an effective cease-fire. The Security Council reiterates its condemnation of the continued violations of the international border between the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Security Council condemns the recent obstruction of humanitarian convoys destined for the Bihac area by the Croatian Serb and Abdic forces. It welcomes the fact that convoys are now getting through, and calls upon all parties and others concerned henceforth to facilitate the unhindered flow of humanitarian assistance and complete freedom of movement for UNPROFOR.

Meeting number. SC 3501.

Further communications. Bosnia and Herzegovina alerted the Security Council on 30 April to the sharply deteriorating situation in the Bihac region: during the weekend, the Bosnian Serbs had fired six shells on the Bihac safe area and five more on Cazin; as reported by a UN spokesman, the Knin Serbs had dispatched 70 of their troops across the border into the region and, in renewed aerial attacks, dropped two cluster bombs.⁽²⁵⁾ On 23 July, it reported that a 20,000-strong combined force of Bosnian and Croatian Serbs, and Abdic paramilitary and special Yugoslav Army units, supported by 100 tanks, had mounted an all-out assault on Bihac.⁽²⁶⁾ It further reported on 1 August that the region continued to be under assault, precipitating an alarming humanitarian situation.⁽²⁷⁾

In the meantime, Croatia on 20 July alleged that the offensive on Bihac was being coordinated by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and led by two Yugoslav Army generals. It further alleged that, in support of that offensive, a major troop build-up and heavy-weapons deployment were under way in Knin and Glina. Reiterating its view that displacement of the 200,000 residents of Bihac was a serious threat to its security and stability, Croatia warned that it might be compelled to take measures to secure the safe-area status of Bihac, should it become threatened.⁽²⁸⁾

By identical letters of 24 July to the Secretary-General and the Security Council, Bangladesh, which had 1,200 of its troops deployed in Bihac, urged the use of air strikes and the immediate deployment of UNPROFOR's rapid reaction force to all enclaves under attack.⁽²⁹⁾

Gorazde

During the year, a number of communications were addressed to the Security Council and the Secretary-General regarding the safe area of Gorazde. Chief among those was a 26 July letter by the Secretary-General informing the Council of his support of the North Atlantic Council (NAC) decisions of 25 July regarding the use of NATO air power to deter Bosnian Serb attacks on Gorazde.⁽³⁰⁾ He agreed with NATO that a Bosnian Serb attack on that safe area should be met by a decisive response, including through air strikes. To streamline decision-making within the UN chain of command when the use of air power was deemed necessary, the Secretary-General on 26 July delegated his authority to make such a decision to the Special Representative, who in turn delegated it to the UNPF Force Commander and from him to the UNPROFOR Commander.

The Secretary-General noted that NAC had asked NATO, in consultation with UNPF, to formulate proposals on the possible use of air power also in connection with the ongoing attacks on Sarajevo and the Bihac pocket. He had informed the troop-contributing countries of those steps and had instructed the Special Representative to take all measures necessary to protect UN personnel in the theatre and to reduce their vulnerability to retaliation and hostage-taking.

In furtherance of United Nations-NATO cooperation, the Secretary-General instructed the Under-Secretary-General for Peace-keeping Operations, Kofi Annan, and the UNPF Force Commander to undertake consultations with NATO in Brussels, Belgium, on the operational modalities for implementing the agreed measures.

Earlier, on 21 July, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) called on the leadership of "Republika Srpska" not to attack the enclave of Gorazde, stressing that the solution to the Bosnian crisis could be achieved only by political means.⁽³¹⁾

Bosnia and Herzegovina on 18 August sought clarification of press reports on new arrangements for the Gorazde safe area and its 20-kilometre military exclusion zone;⁽³²⁾ namely, that UNPROFOR would withdraw from the area, which would then come under NATO air protection.⁽³³⁾ Reporting on 21 August that the Serb shelling of Gorazde earlier that day had killed three children, Bosnia and Herzegovina asked what it would take for NATO to react to such terrorism.⁽³⁴⁾ On 24 August, it requested either the immediate suspension of UNPROFOR's withdrawal from Gorazde or the adoption of a new Council resolution providing for an efficient defence of that safe area.⁽³⁵⁾

Statement for the Secretary-General. The Spokesman for the Secretary-General on 18 August issued a press statement to the effect that the Secretary-General had taken note with concern of press reports suggesting that the United Nations was in the process of abandoning the safe area of Gorazde, from which the UNPROFOR infantry presence was about to be withdrawn. The statement reaffirmed that the United Nations remained fully committed to its mandate of deterring attacks on Gorazde and other safe areas—to be achieved through a combination of a UN military presence on the ground and the threat of robust strikes from the air.

The statement explained that the UN presence in Gorazde currently consisted of some 180 British and some 90 Ukrainian troops. The latter had been disarmed by the Government's soldiers and were thus unable to function. At the request of the United Kingdom, its troops were scheduled to withdraw from Gorazde upon completion of their rotation at the end of August. UN attempts to replace them with a battalion from another country or from a combination of countries had been unsuccessful.

In the absence of a feasible infantry option to replace the British troops, the United Nations had no choice but to deploy UNMOs in Gorazde, backed up by NATO air power. Accordingly, the Secretary-General had instructed the Force Commander to draw up plans for a revised UN military deployment in Gorazde to serve as the eyes and ears of the international community, working in close cooperation with NATO. The Secretary-General remained committed to deterring attacks on Gorazde and, in particular, on its 60,000 resident civilians.

Sarajevo

Communications. By several letters transmitted between 8 February and 1 May, Bosnia and Herzegovina drew attention to what it described as the strangulation of Sarajevo by the Bosnian Serbs, who, it claimed, had come to exercise de facto control of the Sarajevo airport. It alleged, on 8 February, that humanitarian deliveries to Sarajevo had remained blocked at the airport for months due to obstructions by a Bosnian Serb checkpoint at a key intersection on the access route from the airport to Sarajevo city. Bosnia and Herzegovina demanded that, in accordance with existing agreements, UN control of that route be restored and that airport local staff, other than cargo inspectors, be removed forthwith.⁽³⁶⁾ It complained on 29 March that the "blue route" to Sarajevo exclusively transecting Government-controlled territory and the few hundred metres of runway mandated to be under UNPROFOR control had been closed on demand by the Bosnian Serbs and could be reopened only with their agreement.⁽³⁷⁾ On 24 April, it reported that Contact Group members had recently been denied access to Sarajevo, that the Ambassador of the United States to Bosnia and Herzegovina had been prevented from departing Sarajevo on a UN flight, and that, on 21 April, four United States and German diplomats, on arriving at the airport, had been forbidden to proceed to the city.⁽³⁸⁾

Germany and the United States, on 25 April, voiced their profound concern over the 21 April statement by the Bosnian Serb liaison officer at Sarajevo airport that his authorities would guarantee the safety neither of the UN aircraft, if the German and United States Contact Group members proceeded to Sarajevo to meet with the Bosnian Government, nor of the Contact Group members themselves during their transit from the airport to the city. They also voiced concern over statements by the Bosnian Serb leader, Radovan Karadzic, threatening imposition of conditions on the airport's use by diplomatic delegations. They supported UNPROFOR's position that recent Bosnian Serb actions to obstruct the airport's normal functioning were totally unacceptable.⁽³⁹⁾

On 1 May, Bosnia and Herzegovina reported that on the morning of that day, Bosnian Serb troops had raided a weapons collection site at Ilidza, seizing all the heavy weapons; and that sniping and shelling had escalated sharply, drawing no response from UNPROFOR and but two NATO overflights of the city.⁽⁴⁰⁾

When the Security Council met on 3 May to urge the extensions of the cease-fire and cessation-of-hostilities agreements, it also considered the on-going restrictions at Sarajevo airport. After consultations among its members on the latter, the Council authorized the President to make the following statement⁽⁴¹⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the obstruction of the normal operation of Sarajevo airport, including the suspension of the humanitarian relief airlift, caused by Bosnian Serb threats against United Nations aircraft and humanitarian relief flights, and by their attempts to impose restrictions on the use of Sarajevo airport by official missions as foreseen in the 5 June 1992 agreement. Such obstruction is in breach of the 5 June 1992 agreement and of the Council's previous resolutions, in particular resolution 761(1992), and is unacceptable.

Obstruction of the humanitarian relief also constitutes a violation of international humanitarian law.

In that context the Security Council demands that all parties and others concerned comply fully with the 5 June 1992 agreement and create immediately the necessary conditions for unimpeded delivery of humanitarian supplies to Sarajevo and other destinations in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It calls upon the Bosnian Serb party to guarantee the safety of all UNPROFOR supervised flights to Sarajevo, including humanitarian relief flights.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed of discussions with the Bosnian Serb party on the restoration of the normal functioning of Sarajevo airport so that it might take further action as necessary.

Meeting number. SC 3530.

Further communications. Updating its reports on developments in Sarajevo on 7 May, Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that a single shell fired that day from a Bosnian Serb position within the Sarajevo exclusion zone had killed at least 10 civilians and wounded some 50 others.⁽⁴²⁾ Further stating that Sarajevo had for some time been increasingly targeted by heavy weapons, it asked whether Council resolutions 824(1993),⁽⁴³⁾ 836(1993)⁽⁴⁰⁾ and 900(1994),⁽⁴⁴⁾ as well as the 1994 NATO declaration⁽⁶⁾ regarding heavy-weapons withdrawal from a 20-kilometre radius from the centre of Sarajevo, were still valid. Bosnia and Herzegovina reiterated this inquiry on 29 May⁽⁴⁵⁾ and demanded a formal reply to it on 1 June.⁽⁴⁶⁾

Meanwhile, on 8 May, Bosnia and Herzegovina drew attention to the incessant shelling and deliberate targeting of Sarajevo's civilian areas, in particular the suburb of Hrasnica, located at the base of the "blue route" and Mount Igman, within the Sarajevo exclusion zone.⁽⁴⁷⁾ In the face of the deteriorating political and humanitarian situation in the country, it asked the Secretary-General on 11 May, as a minimum, to call for the urgent reopening of Sarajevo airport to humanitarian flights and of the Butmir-Dobrinja section of the "blue route" (in addition to calling for an immediate halt to the transfer of the Croatian Serb population from Western Slovenia into Bosnia and Herzegovina).⁽⁴⁸⁾ It further reported as follows: on 16 May, that the Bosnian Serbs had that day launched a multi-pronged and multifaceted assault on Sarajevo's defensive lines and population;⁽⁴⁹⁾ on 24 May, that, according to an UNPROFOR spokesman, some shells that had landed in Sarajevo's market-place and surrounding areas contained "white phosphorus", a substance banned by the 1949 Geneva Conventions on the protection of the victims of war;⁽⁵⁰⁾ on 25 May, that it welcomed NATO's limited action but did not appreciate being lectured to or threatened by a UN command, which, by its own admission, had not reacted to earlier Serb violations and murder of civilians because its first priority was to avoid Bosnian Serb reprisals on UN personnel;⁽⁵¹⁾ and, on 29 May, that the Bosnian Serbs had again deprived Sarajevo city of electricity (by disconnecting the main transformer stations), natural gas (by shutting the gas valve at Zvornik) and water (by diverting the power supply intended for the Bacevo water pumping station), and had blocked deliveries of fuel, thus making for an extremely critical situation in the city.⁽⁵²⁾

On 31 May, following an extraordinary session of its Government held earlier that day on the critical security and humanitarian situation in Sarajevo, Bosnia and Herzegovina demanded that UNPROFOR be restored in full in Sarajevo to assume protection of the city's entire exclusion zone and of the humanitarian convoys destined for it; that UNHCR and UNPROFOR start food deliveries via the Metkovic-Tarcin-Hrasnica-Sarajevo land route and secure that route by all means necessary; and that UNPROFOR take control of the city's energy and water supply systems.⁽⁵³⁾

Between June and August, Bosnia and Herzegovina continued to report on the unrelenting siege of Sarajevo, describing the heavy toll it was taking on the civilian population,⁽⁵⁴⁾ such as the deaths of 31 civilians and the wounding of 18 others due to intermittent shelling and sniping,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the deaths on 28 August of a further 33 civilians and the wounding of 84 others due to the shelling of the Markale market-place,⁽⁵⁶⁾ and the continued bombardment of civilians.⁽⁵⁷⁾

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) on 7 September expressed concern over what it said were inconsistencies in the findings of UNPROFOR's investigation into the 28 August explosion in the Markale market, which singled out the Bosnian Serbs as the party responsible for the crime.⁽⁵⁸⁾ It claimed that NATO's unprecedented "retaliation" against that party had resulted in serious consequences, including loss of life and extensive material damage. It drew attention to scepticism regarding the official report, heightened by a statement of UNPROFOR Chief of Staff Colonel Andrei Demourenko (Russian Federation) that the chances were one in a million that the Bosnian Serb side was responsible and by the 2 September press statement by UNPROFOR spokesman Lieutenant-Colonel Chris Vernon (United Kingdom) that "Demourenko was not the only one to have challenged the official version of the event". In its letter, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) cited other events that, like this one and the 1994 shelling of the same market-place,⁽⁵⁹⁾ were, it said, usually orchestrated on the eve of crucial negotiations to resolve the crisis in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Also on 7 September, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) demanded an immediate halt to the continuing NATO bombardment of Serb positions and other targets in "Republika Srpska", as well as to the actions of UNPROFOR's rapid reaction force, reasoning that those represented a direct attack on the announced peace initiative that had been accepted by "Republika Srpska".⁽⁶⁰⁾ Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) said it was both unacceptable and incomprehensible to continue with air and other attacks and simultaneously to push for negotiations. It warned that UN and NATO military intervention against only one party encouraged the other parties to the conflict to resort to the war option, thus triggering a chain reaction of unforeseeable consequences that might be difficult to avert.

Srebrenica

Communications (9-12 July). Bosnia and Herzegovina on 9 July requested an emergency session of the Security Council to address the situation in the eastern safe area of Srebrenica.⁽⁶¹⁾ The area, which had sustained a shattering barrage of more than 1,000 shells the previous day, was currently under a full-scale offensive by the Bosnian Serbs, who had advanced into the town, at some points as deep as 5 kilometres. The UNPROFOR observation posts, manned by the Netherlands contingent, had also come under siege, causing some to be abandoned.

The offensive and subsequent occupation of Srebrenica on 11 July drew immediate condemnation by the President of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina,⁽⁶²⁾ EU⁽⁶³⁾ and the Organization of the Islamic Conference Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina (OICCG).⁽⁶⁴⁾

The Security Council convened on 12 July and adopted resolution 1004(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Gravely concerned at the deterioration in the situation in and around the safe area of Srebrenica, Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and at the plight of the civilian population there,

Gravely concerned also at the very serious situation which confronts personnel of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and a great number of displaced persons within the safe area at Potocari, especially the lack of essential food supplies and medical care,

Paying tribute to the personnel of UNPROFOR deployed in the safe area of Srebrenica,

Condemning the offensive by the Bosnian Serb forces against the safe area of Srebrenica, and in particular the detention by the Bosnian Serb forces of UNPROFOR personnel,

Condemning also all attacks on UNPROFOR personnel,

Recalling the Agreement for the demilitarization of Srebrenica of 18 April 1993 by the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bosnian Serb party, and regretting that it has not been implemented in full by either party,

Stressing the importance of renewed efforts to achieve an overall peaceful settlement, and the unacceptability of any attempt to resolve the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by military means,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Demands that the Bosnian Serb forces cease their offensive and withdraw from the safe area of Srebrenica immediately;

2. Demands also that the parties respect fully the status of the safe area of Srebrenica in accordance with the Agreement of 18 April 1993;

3. Demands further that the parties respect fully the safety of UNPROFOR personnel and ensure their complete freedom of movement, including resupply;

4. Demands that the Bosnian Serb forces immediately and unconditionally release unharmed all detained UNPROFOR personnel;

5. Demands that all parties allow unimpeded access for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international humanitarian agencies to the safe area of Srebrenica in order to alleviate the plight of the civilian population, and in particular that they cooperate on the restoration of utilities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to use all resources available to him to restore the status as defined by the Agreement of 18 April 1993 of the safe area of Srebrenica in accordance with the mandate of UNPROFOR, and calls on the parties to cooperate to that end;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1004(1995)

12 July 1995 Meeting 3553 Adopted unanimously

5-nation draft (S/1995/560).

Sponsors: France, Germany, Italy, United Kingdom, United States.

Communications (13 and 14 July). On 13 July, Bosnia and Herzegovina conveyed reports of human rights violations in Srebrenica: males 13 years and older were being separated from their families and subjected to forced labour at the trenches and to other abuses, while females aged between 15 and 35 were being rounded up and removed, along with truckloads of males, to unknown destinations.⁽⁶⁵⁾ It asked the Secretary-General to dispatch UNPROFOR troops and medical units to the area to protect and assist the civilian population, to ensure the safe passage of all refugees fleeing Srebrenica for Government-held territories, emergency assistance for them, and an accounting of all persons taken by the Bosnian Serbs, as well as their immediate release. In addition, on 14 July, Bosnia and Herzegovina demanded that the Tuzla airport be opened to allow emergency airlifts of food, clothing, medical supplies and temporary shelters for the refugees.⁽⁶⁶⁾

Ukraine on 13 July called for the immediate withdrawal of the Bosnian Serbs from Srebrenica,⁽⁶⁷⁾ as did the Group of Arab States on 14 July,⁽⁶⁸⁾ with Ukraine further calling for the immediate and unconditional release of all detained UN peace-keepers. Also on 14 July, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in condemning the actions of the Bosnian Serb forces against Srebrenica, spoke of the assistance provided to those forces by the Army of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).⁽⁶⁹⁾

The Security Council met on 14 July and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽⁷⁰⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council recalls its resolution 1004(1995). The Council is deeply concerned about the ongoing forced relocation of tens of thousands of civilians from the Srebrenica safe area to the Tuzla region by the Bosnian Serb party. Such a forced relocation is a clear violation of the human rights of the civilian population. It is especially concerned about reports of grave mistreatment and killing of innocent civilians. It is equally concerned about reports that up to 4,000 men and boys have been forcibly removed by the Bosnian Serb party from the Srebrenica safe area. It demands that in conformity with internationally recognized standards of conduct and international law the Bosnian Serb party release them immediately, respect fully the rights of the civilian population of the Srebrenica safe area and other persons protected under international humanitarian law, and permit access by the International Committee of the Red Cross.

The Security Council again condemns the unacceptable practice of "ethnic cleansing" and reaffirms that those who have committed or have ordered the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts.

The Security Council demands that the Bosnian Serb party immediately allow unimpeded access to the civilian population of the Srebrenica safe area by international humanitarian organizations and cooperate with any procedure established by those organizations to determine which civilians wish to depart the area of Srebrenica. It further demands that the Bosnian Serb party respect fully the rights of those civilians who wish to remain in the safe area and cooperate with efforts to ensure that civilians who wish to depart are allowed to do so with their families in an orderly, safe way in conformity with international law.

The Security Council demands that both sides allow the unhindered movement of humanitarian relief and cooperate with efforts by international organizations and agencies and concerned Governments to provide food, medicine, facilities and housing to the displaced.

The Security Council reiterates its demand that the Bosnian Serb forces immediately and unconditionally release unharmed all detained personnel of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), and that the parties respect fully the safety of all UNPROFOR personnel and ensure their complete freedom of movement.

The Security Council pays tribute to all the personnel of UNPROFOR, and of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, especially those deployed in the area of Srebrenica. It notes that the presence and bravery of the troops has undoubtedly saved the lives of many civilians in the Srebrenica area.

Meeting number. SC 3554.

Further communications. By a statement transmitted on 17 July, the OSCE Chairman-in-Office noted that, as a result of the fall of Srebrenica, 40,000 civilian lives were at risk; the Netherlands contingent of UNPROFOR had been forced to leave the area, along with thousands of civilians.⁽⁷¹⁾ In addition to demanding the immediate release of the UN peace-keepers detained by the Bosnian Serbs, the Chairman-in-Office stated that the take-over of Srebrenica, the attacks on the civilian population and on the UN personnel there and in other safe areas, and the blockade of humanitarian deliveries to Sarajevo were elements of a consistent pattern of the Bosnian Serbs' repudiation of the United Nations and the international community and of all efforts to settle the Bosnian crisis peacefully.

A statement by Malaysia, transmitted also on 17 July, strongly condemned the Bosnian Serb aggression on Srebrenica and called on the Security Council and NATO to stop the Serbs, using all means available, including military action and air strikes.⁽⁷²⁾

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in a 1 November statement, labelled as completely unfounded the claims that the Yugoslav Army had either directly or indirectly taken part in the "operations for the liberation of the Muslim military stronghold of Srebrenica".⁽⁷³⁾ Such falsehoods, it claimed, were part of well-known campaigns launched at crucial moments when peace in the former Yugoslavia was about to be reached.

Tuzla

On 26 May, Bosnia and Herzegovina reported a Bosnian Serb mortar attack on Tuzla that took the lives of 71 mostly teenaged civilians and maimed many others.⁽⁷⁴⁾ Calling the massacre a deliberate act of terrorism in retaliation for NATO's recent limited air strike, it demanded that the Security Council urgently meet to condemn the action and deal with it as it would any other terrorist act. It went on to say, in two subsequent letters that day, that the massacre would have caused shock and drawn resolute action against its perpetrators had it happened elsewhere in the West;⁽⁷⁵⁾ it voiced profound disappointment that the Council's condemnation, in a press statement, had merely referred to "shelling of the safe areas", rather than identifying the massacre for what it was: a terrorist act.⁽⁷⁶⁾

Also on 26 May, OICCG joined in condemning the "barbaric attack"; it called on the Council and NATO to live up to their commitments and obligations under relevant resolutions and decisions and resolutely respond to it.⁽⁷⁷⁾ On 9 June, Saudi Arabia, in addition to condemning the Tuzla attack, also condemned the shooting down on 28 May of the aircraft carrying the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina near Bihac.⁽⁷⁸⁾

On 8 October, Bosnia and Herzegovina demanded that, consistent with the relevant Council resolutions and NATO decisions, vigorous action be taken against the Bosnian Serbs, who earlier that day had fired Orkan rockets and anti-tank missiles on the Oskova refugee camp in Zivinice, a town within the borders of the Tuzla safe area, and launched an air attack on Tesanj; in all, eight people died and 75 others were injured.⁽⁷⁹⁾

Zepa

Communications (13 and 17 July). Bosnia and Herzegovina notified the Security Council on 13 July that the safe area of Zepa was under the onslaught of Bosnian Serb artillery, tank and infantry; owing to a complete blockade, the humanitarian situation in the area was dire.⁽⁸⁰⁾ On 17 July, Bosnia and Herzegovina reported that, despite the courageous resistance of its Army, it could not halt the onslaught; therefore, to prevent a repetition of the brutality dealt the civilian population of Srebrenica, it requested an emergency meeting of the Council to consider the evacuation of Zepa.⁽⁸¹⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (20 July)

Accordingly, the Security Council met on 20 July. Upon completion of consultations among its members, it authorized the President to make the statement below⁽⁸²⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council, recalling its previous resolutions, is deeply concerned by the situation in and around the safe area of Zepa. It condemns in the strongest possible terms the offensive by the Bosnian Serb forces against the safe area. The Security Council is also concerned in particular at the plight of the civilian population there.

The Security Council attaches the utmost importance to the safety and well-being of the civilian population in Zepa. It demands that the Bosnian Serb forces refrain from any further action that threatens the safety of that population, and that they respect fully the rights of the civilian population and other persons protected under international humanitarian law. The Council reaffirms its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law, and reiterates to all concerned that those who have committed or ordered the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts. It reminds the military and political leaders of the Bosnian Serb party that this responsibility extends to any such acts committed by forces under their command.

The Security Council underlines the importance it attaches to the fullest cooperation with UNHCR and other international humanitarian organizations, and demands that they be given unhindered freedom of movement and access to that area. It further demands that the Bosnian Serb authorities cooperate with all efforts, including those of UNPROFOR, to ensure the safety of the civilian population, and in particular its most vulnerable members, including evacuation as requested by the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina in his letter of 17 July 1995.

The Security Council strongly condemns the recent acts of violence and intimidation which have occurred against the personnel of UNPROFOR. It demands that both parties ensure the safety and freedom of movement of UNPROFOR personnel at all times.

Meeting number. SC 3556.

Communications (21-25 July). The Presidents of Bosnia and Herzegovina and of Turkey, by a joint statement issued on 21 July, assessed the grave situation arising from recent developments in the safe areas of Srebrenica and Zepa.⁽⁸³⁾ Among other things, Turkey's President expressed solidarity with Bosnia and Herzegovina and the readiness of the Turkish Red Crescent to accommodate refugees from Srebrenica and other parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Owing to the deteriorating situation in Zepa and the imminent threat to its civilian population, Bosnia and Herzegovina on 24 July reiterated its request for an UNPROFOR-escorted evacuation of the civilian population and called for another emergency meeting of the Council.⁽⁸⁴⁾ It reiterated that request on 25 July, stating that the incessant shelling of the town had driven the population into the neighbouring woods.⁽⁸⁵⁾ On the same date, it stressed that if the ongoing negotiations with the Bosnian Serb military, undertaken with UN assistance, were to produce an agreement, clear indications from the Council were crucial; otherwise the civilian population of Zepa would face the fate of Srebrenica.⁽⁸⁶⁾

The Security Council met on 25 July regarding the situation in Zepa and, after consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the following statement⁽⁸⁷⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the situation in and around the safe area of Zepa in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council notes the letter of 25 July 1995 from the President of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to the President of the Security Council.

The Security Council reaffirms its previous relevant resolutions and its statement of 20 July 1995. It reiterates in the strongest possible terms its condemnation of the Bosnian Serb offensive against the safe area and demands that the Bosnian Serbs comply fully with the requirements set out in that statement as well as its earlier resolutions. The Council further demands that Bosnian Serb forces withdraw from the safe areas of Srebrenica and Zepa.

The Security Council remains particularly concerned at the plight of the civilian population and other persons protected under international humanitarian law in the Zepa area. It welcomes and supports the efforts being made by UNPROFOR and the international humanitarian agencies, as requested by the President of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, to achieve a safe evacuation of those civilians who wish to leave and stresses the importance it attaches to the success of these efforts. It requests the Secretary-General to use all resources available to him to that end and calls on the parties to cooperate.

The Security Council demands that UNPROFOR and the international humanitarian agencies be provided with immediate and unhindered access to the population of the area and, in particular, that the Bosnian Serb party provide access to representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to all civilians who decide to remain and permit the ICRC to register any persons detained against their will and visit them immediately.

Bosnia and Herzegovina-Croatia

Bilateral agreements

The Presidents of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted a declaration on 22 July in Split, Croatia. (The Federation in the Areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with a Majority Bosniac and Croat Population was established in accordance with the March 1994 agreements concluded in Washington, D.C., between the Bosniacs—the term preferred by Bosnia and Herzegovina to refer to citizens loyal to it irrespective of their ethnic origin—and the Bosnian Croats in central Bosnia, following the peace accord between them the month before.⁽⁸⁸⁾) In the declaration, the Presidents addressed those portions of the Washington agreements on joint defence against Serb aggression and on a political solution congruent with the efforts of the international community; pursuant to their declared agreement on strengthening defence cooperation, the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina called on Croatia to extend urgent military and other assistance in the defence against aggression, especially in the Bihac area, which Croatia accepted; they also declared to continue to coordinate all aspects of mutual defence.⁽⁸⁹⁾

The Presidents subsequently concluded an agreement on the establishment of a Joint Cooperation Council to promote, plan and coordinate foreign policy, economic and social endeavours and other matters of common interest.⁽⁹⁰⁾

Intervention in western Bosnia

In his account of events during the UNPROFOR mandate period from April to November,⁽⁹¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that soon after NATO had conducted multiple air strikes towards the end of August against Bosnian Serb anti-aircraft systems and heavy weapons in the vicinity of Sarajevo, as well as against ammunition supply depots and other military facilities throughout eastern Bosnian-Serb territory, Bosnian government and Croatian forces had begun advancing in the western part of the country. In the week of 10 September, the Bosnian government forces took much of the Ozren salient, while the Croatian forces simultaneously made sweeping advances in the southwest of the country, including the capture of areas traditionally populated by Bosnian Serbs.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (18 September)

The Security Council held a meeting on 18 September to consider the military offensives in western Bosnia. After consultations among its members, the Council authorized its President to make the following statement⁽⁹²⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council deplores the rapidly escalating military situation on the ground in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and expresses its deep concern about the plight of the civilian population resulting therefrom.

The Security Council demands that all the parties involved in offensive military activities and hostile acts in western Bosnia cease them immediately and respect fully the rights of the local population. It stresses the importance it attaches to intensified efforts to alleviate the plight of refugees and displaced persons, and to the fullest cooperation in this regard by the parties with the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and the international humanitarian agencies. The Council reiterates that there can be no military solution to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and urges all parties not to take military advantage of the present situation. It once again expresses its full support for the Geneva Declaration of Principles of 8 September 1995 which provides a basis for negotiations with the aim of achieving a lasting peace throughout the region.

The Security Council furthermore deplores the death of one Danish peace-keeper and injury to nine others and expresses its condolences to the Government of Denmark and to the family of the peace-keeper who lost his life.

Meeting number. SC 3580.

Communications (19 and 20 September). Bosnia and Herzegovina explained to the Security Council on 19 September that the actions of the Bosnian, HVO (Croatian Defence Council) and Croatian forces in western and central Bosnia and Herzegovina were designed to halt the intensifying ethnic cleansing in the region, from which more than 21,000 Bosniacs and Bosnian Croats had been expelled.⁽⁹³⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina was convinced that the actions of those allied forces would contribute more effectively to a political solution, based on the Agreed Basic Principles signed in Geneva on 8 September (see below).

Croatia informed the Security Council on 20 September that it was operating in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina at the express request of that country's Government, consistent with international law and within the framework of the bilateral agreement concluded between their Governments.⁽⁹⁴⁾ Croatia had decided, however, to desist from further action in western Bosnia and Herzegovina that could lead to confrontation in the city of Banja Luka. Croatia firmly viewed its current and previous limited operations as having contributed positively to the peace process in the region, making ever more likely a just and timely political settlement of the problems there. Its actions, Croatia asserted, were the solution, not the problem.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (21 September)

The Security Council met again on 21 September and adopted resolution 1016(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions and the statement of its President of 18 September 1995,

Deeply concerned by the military situation on the ground in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and by the plight of the civilian population there which constitutes a humanitarian crisis of significant proportions,

Especially concerned by the humanitarian consequences, as a result of the recent fighting, including loss of life and suffering among the civilian population, and a new flow of tens of thousands of refugees and displaced persons, Reiterating its full support for the Geneva Declaration of Principles of 8 September 1995.

Gravely concerned about all offensives and hostile acts in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by the parties concerned, including those most recently undertaken,

1. Notes the assurances given by the Governments of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republic of Croatia regarding offensive actions in western Bosnia and, while taking note of the reports that the offensive actions have slowed down, affirms the need for full compliance with the demands set out in the statement of its President of 18 September 1995;

2. Deplores the casualties suffered by the Danish peace-keepers, expresses its condolences to the Government of Denmark and to the families of the peace-keepers who lost their lives, and demands that all parties fully respect the safety of United Nations personnel;

3. Calls upon all parties and others concerned to refrain from violence and hostile acts and to reach immediately a cease-fire and a cessation of hostilities throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Calls upon Member States involved in promoting an overall peaceful settlement in the region to intensify their efforts to this end with the parties to ensure that they take no advantage from the current situation and show utmost restraint;

5. Demands that the parties negotiate in good faith on the basis of the Geneva Declaration of Principles of 8 September 1995 with the aim of achieving lasting peace throughout the region;

6. Reiterates that there can be no military solution to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

7. Urges all States and international humanitarian organizations to intensify their efforts to help to alleviate the plight of refugees and displaced persons;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide to the Council as soon as possible information on the humanitarian situation, including information available through the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other sources;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1016(1995)

21 September 1995 Meeting 3581 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/810).

Communications (22 September-17 October).

On 22 September, Bosnia and Herzegovina reported an aerial attack north-west of the town of Bosanska Dubica (north-west of Banja Luka), which a UN spokesperson in Zagreb confirmed, and the cluster-bombing of the village of Arabus and parts of Bosanski Petrovac (south-west of Banja Luka), as well as of the city of Zenica (central Bosnia).⁽⁹⁵⁾ On 28 September, it further reported a rocket attack on the centre of Travnik and on Zenica, which left two civilians dead, injured some 20 others and inflicted extensive material damage.⁽⁹⁶⁾

On 27 September, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) drew attention to a Reuters news agency report, according to which Croatian regular troops who had entered 50 kilometres into "Republika Srpska" had opened fire on a convoy of Bosnian Serb refugees near the town of Bosanski Novi, killing 47 of them. The report further stated that the current Bosnian Muslim and Croat offensive, in which 60,000 regular Croatian Army troops were engaged, had resulted in the expulsion of some 150,000 Bosnian Serbs from north-western and central Bosnia. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) asserted that this latest tragic Serb exodus, which came soon after the mass flight of Serbs from the Krajina area of Croatia, constituted an unprecedented act of genocide.⁽⁹⁷⁾

On 17 October, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) wrote that despite the 12 October cease-fire agreement, the Bosnian Muslim and Croat forces, supported by Croatia's regular Army, were pressing their offensive forward against the Bosnian Serb towns of Sanski Most, Mrkonjic Grad and Ključ, causing heavy civilian casualties and a mass exodus of some 50,000 Bosnian Serb refugees into Banja Luka. It claimed that the offensive in north-western Bosnia, whose ultimate goal was the seizure of Prijedor and Banja Luka, had been reinforced recently by fresh units of Croatian troops armed with the most sophisticated weapons. Calling the Croatian Army's engagement in Bosnia and Herzegovina illegal and politically and morally unacceptable, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) asked the Council urgently to take measures to put a stop to the offensive and prevent a humanitarian catastrophe that seriously threatened the entire peace process.⁽⁹⁸⁾

The Security Council met on 7 December and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽⁹⁹⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council expresses deep concern over the looting and burning of houses by the HVO forces in the area of Mrkonjić Grad and Sipovo, which have continued for some time, and it also notes with concern that similar acts have been committed by Bosnian Serb forces in other areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council is also deeply concerned by reports that the HVO is moving mine-laying equipment into the Mrkonjić Grad and Sipovo areas.

The Security Council considers that such actions are dangerous and detrimental to the spirit of confidence essential for the implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Security Council demands that all such actions be stopped immediately and stresses the need for all parties to exercise maximum restraint and to demonstrate the cooperation essential for the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement.

Meeting number. SC 3603.

UN Protection Force (UNPROFOR)

In response to the wishes of the host Governments of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, the Secretary-General, in a report of 22 March, proposed that the UNPROFOR operations in those countries be replaced by three separate but inter-linked peace-keeping operations.⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ The proposal in respect of the peace-keeping force in Bosnia and Herzegovina was approved by the Security Council resolution below.

On 31 March, the Council adopted resolution 982(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the conflicts in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and reaffirming in this context its resolution 947(1994) of 30 September 1994 on the mandate of the United Nations

Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 22 March 1995,

Affirming its commitment to the search for an overall negotiated settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, ensuring the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all the States there within their internationally recognized borders, and stressing the importance it attaches to the mutual recognition thereof,

Reaffirming its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Welcoming the continuing efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia,

Welcoming also the efforts of Member States, in particular those of the Contact Group, and emphasizing the utmost importance of the work of the Contact Group in the overall peace process in the area,

Welcoming the acceptance by the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina of the Contact Group peace plan,

Welcoming also the agreements between the Bosnian parties on a cease-fire and on the complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina concluded on 23 December 1994 and 31 December 1994, and the essential role UNPROFOR plays in implementation of these agreements, and stressing the importance it places thereupon,

Wishing to encourage UNPROFOR's efforts, as part of its activities to facilitate an overall settlement of the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and as detailed in paragraphs 30 to 32 of the above-mentioned report of the Secretary-General, to help the parties implement the Washington agreements regarding the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Recognizing the need for Member States to take appropriate steps to enhance the capacity of UNPROFOR in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to execute its mandate as set out in the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, including providing the Secretary-General with all the resources authorized by previous resolutions of the Security Council,

Reiterating the importance of maintaining Sarajevo, the capital of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a united city and a multicultural, multi-ethnic and pluri-religious centre, and noting in this context the positive contribution that agreement between the parties on the demilitarization of Sarajevo could make to this end, to the restoration of normal life in Sarajevo, and to achieving an overall settlement, consistent with the Contact Group peace plan,

Noting that UNPROFOR plays an essential role in preventing and containing hostilities thus creating the conditions for achieving an overall political settlement, and paying tribute to all UNPROFOR personnel, especially those who have given their lives for the cause of peace,

Noting also that the mandate of UNPROFOR expires on 31 March 1995, in conformity with resolution 947(1994),

Noting further the letter of 29 March 1995 from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting also the letter from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Croatia of 17 March 1995 regarding his Government's views on the continued presence of UNPROFOR in the Republic of Croatia,

Paying tribute to the UNPROFOR personnel in the performance of the mandate of UNPROFOR, in particular in assisting the delivery of humanitarian assistance and monitoring the cease-fires,

Emphasizing that improved observance of human rights, including appropriate international monitoring thereof, is an essential step towards restoration of confidence between the parties and building a durable peace,

Reaffirming its determination to ensure the security of UNPROFOR and freedom of movement for all its missions, and to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, as regards UNPROFOR in the Republic of Croatia and in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 22 March 1995, and in particular approves the arrangements contained in paragraph 84;

2. Decides to extend UNPROFOR's mandate in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina for an additional period terminating on 30 November 1995 and further decides that all previous relevant resolutions relating to UNPROFOR shall continue to apply;

3. Authorizes the Secretary-General to redeploy before 30 June 1995 all UNPROFOR personnel and assets from the Republic of Croatia with the exception of those whose continued presence in the Republic of Croatia is required for UNCRO or for the functions referred to in paragraphs 4 and 5 below;

4. Decides that UNPROFOR shall continue to perform fully the functions envisaged in the implementation of the Cease-fire Agreement of 29 March 1994 and the Economic Agreement of 2 December 1994 between the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb authorities and all relevant Security Council resolutions, including the functions identified in paragraph 72 of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 March 1995, and to facilitate the delivery of international humanitarian assistance to the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina through the territory of the Republic of Croatia until the effective deployment of UNCRO or 30 June 1995, whichever is sooner;

5. Decides that UNPROFOR shall retain its existing support structures in the Republic of Croatia including the operation of its headquarters;

6. Emphasizes the responsibility of the parties and others concerned in the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina for the security and safety of UNPROFOR and in this context demands that all parties and others concerned refrain from any acts of intimidation or violence against UNPROFOR;

7. Reiterates the importance it attaches to full compliance with the agreements between the Bosnian parties on a cease-fire and on a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina; calls upon them to agree to a further extension and implementation of these agreements beyond 30 April 1995 and to use that period to negotiate an overall peaceful settlement on the basis of the acceptance of the Contact Group peace plan as a starting-point; and further calls upon the Bosnian Serb party to accept this;

8. Calls upon Member States to consider favourably requests by the Secretary-General for necessary assistance to UNPROFOR in the performance of its mandate;

9. Calls on all parties and others concerned to comply fully with all Security Council resolutions regarding the situation in the former Yugoslavia to create the conditions that would facilitate the full implementation of UNPROFOR's mandate;

10. Notes with satisfaction the progress made in the discussions between the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the United Nations referred to in paragraph 49 of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 March 1995, and urges the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to provide suitable radio broadcasting frequencies and television broadcasting slots at no cost to the United Nations for the purposes described in paragraphs 47 to 51 of that report;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on progress with regard to the implementation of UNPROFOR's mandate and to report, as necessary, on any developments on the ground, the attitude of the parties and other circumstances affecting the mandate of the Force, and in particular to report within eight weeks of the adoption of this resolution taking into account, inter alia, the concerns raised by the members of the Council and issues raised by the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

12. Urges the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to implement fully the provisions of the status-of-forces agreement of 15 May 1993 between that Government and the United Nations;

13. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security and freedom of movement

As the Secretary-General indicated in his 22 March report,⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ the deterioration of the security situation beginning in March was characterized by increased shelling, sniping at civilians and targeting of UNPROFOR and UNHCR personnel, especially in and around Sarajevo.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (14 and 19 April)

The Security Council met on 14 and 19 April to address the question of violent acts against UNPROFOR, in particular, the separate killings by sniper fire of two soldiers of the French contingent deployed in Sarajevo.

At the 14 April meeting, convened when the second shooting occurred, the Council, following completion of consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the statement below⁽¹⁰¹⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council is gravely concerned at the recent attacks on UNPROFOR personnel in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and, in this regard, has learned with particular indignation that once again a soldier of UNPROFOR, this time a soldier of the French contingent, was deliberately targeted and shot to death by an unidentified sniper in Sarajevo today. The Council notes with similar concern that several other soldiers of the United Nations have been killed recently in similar circumstances.

The Council condemns in the strongest terms such acts directed at peace-keepers who are serving the cause of peace in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Deliberate targeting of UNPROFOR personnel reflects the overall deterioration of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council wishes to state once again that this is totally unacceptable. It reiterates that the cooperation of all parties and others concerned is indispensable for the missions of the Force to be carried out and demands that they respect fully the status of United Nations personnel.

The Security Council invites the Secretary-General to investigate the circumstances of these acts and to report to the Security Council, taking into consideration the views of troop-contributing countries, on any measures which might be necessary to prevent further similar attacks, which should not remain unpunished.

Meeting number. SC 3520.

Bosnia and Herzegovina on 18 April offered its condolences to the families of the two UNPROFOR soldiers who had been killed. Referring to the inconclusiveness of UNPROFOR's analysis of the incidents, which somehow rendered "both sides" equally blameworthy, Bosnia and Herzegovina assured the Council that there was no basis to believe that any of the Government's soldiers were involved in those tragic incidents.⁽¹⁰²⁾

At its 19 April meeting, the Council, determined to obtain strict respect for the status of UN personnel, adopted resolution 987(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the conflicts in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and reaffirming in this context its resolution 982(1995) of 31 March 1995 and in particular its paragraphs 6 and 7,

Expressing its grave concern at the continued fighting in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina despite the agreements on a cease-fire and on the complete cessation of hostilities concluded on 23 and 31 December 1994, and deploring the violations of these agreements and of the ban imposed by its resolutions 781(1992) of 9 October 1992 and 816(1993) of 31 March 1993 by whomsoever committed,

Stressing the unacceptability of all attempts to resolve the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina by military means,

Noting once again the need for resumed negotiations aimed at an overall peaceful settlement of the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina on the basis of the acceptance of the Contact Group peace plan as a starting-point,

Gravely preoccupied at the recent attacks on the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) personnel in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and at the fatalities resulting therefrom, condemning in the strongest terms such unacceptable acts directed at members of peace-keeping forces and determined to obtain a strict respect of the status of United Nations personnel in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming its determination to ensure the security of UNPROFOR and freedom of movement for all its missions, and, to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Emphasizes once again the responsibility of the parties and others concerned in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina for the security and safety of UNPROFOR and, in this context, demands again that all parties and others concerned refrain from any act of intimidation or violence against UNPROFOR and its personnel;

2. Recalls its invitation to the Secretary-General, in this context, to submit proposals on any measures which could be taken to prevent attacks against UNPROFOR and its personnel and allow it to perform effectively its mission, and invites him to submit such proposals on an urgent basis;

3. Calls upon the Bosnian parties to agree to an extension of the agreements on a cease-fire and complete cessation of hostilities concluded on 23 and 31 December 1994 beyond 30 April 1995 and looks to all parties and all others concerned to cooperate fully with UNPROFOR in their implementation;

4. Urges all parties and others concerned to resume forthwith negotiations towards an overall peaceful settlement on the basis of the acceptance of the Contact Group peace plan as a starting-point;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 987(1995)

19 April 1995 Meeting 3521 Adopted unanimously
Draft by France (S/1995/311).

In a presidential statement of 18 September, the Council deplored the death of one Danish peace-keeper and injury to nine others. By resolution 1016(1995) of 21 September, the Council further deplored the casualties suffered by the Danish peace-keepers and expressed its condolences to Denmark and to the bereaved families.

Report of the Secretary-General. In his 30 May report⁽¹²⁾ on developments on the ground and on the parties' attitude affecting the UNPROFOR mandate, the Secretary-General, in response to Council resolution 987(1995) of 19 April, also proposed measures to prevent attacks against UNPROFOR and allow it to perform its mission effectively. His proposals came on the heels of the crisis brought about by the Bosnian Serb detention of more than 300 UNPROFOR personnel as hostages, some of whom were used as human shields in strategically important locations, in retaliation for the NATO air strikes near Pale.

The Secretary-General noted the repeated threats to the security of UNPROFOR and other UN personnel and the continual obstruction of their freedom of movement, which impaired the discharge of their mandated tasks. The Council decisions taken under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations to limit those difficulties had created ambiguities as to how UNPROFOR should react under those circumstances, in particular as to the use of force other than in self-defence. Those ambiguities, he asserted, had adversely affected the performance of UNPROFOR and its credibility, not only with the parties but with Council members and the public at large.

In this connection, the Secretary-General analysed the use of NATO air power in defence of UNPROFOR and as a deterrent to attacks on the safe areas. Experience gained from air power use on nine occasions between March 1994 and 26 May 1995 had confirmed the difficulties involved in such actions in support of a peace-keeping operation. Moreover, the use of force against only one party had altered that party's perception of UNPROFOR's neutrality and, realizing its extreme vulnerability, that party had resorted to retaliatory action in the form of detaining large numbers of UN personnel and obstructing their movement, as well as refusing to participate in negotiations.

The Secretary-General pointed to the absence of a clear enforcement mandate in the Council resolutions on Bosnia and Herzegovina, notwithstanding their frequent references to Chapter VII of the Charter, and the Council's reluctance to authorize additional troops deemed necessary to enable UNPROFOR to perform even its peace-keeping functions. Thus, to the inevitable question as to whether UNPROFOR was a peace-keeping or enforcement mission, the Secretary-General concluded that, so far, the Council had wished it to be a peace-keeping operation.

Meanwhile, the Secretary-General continued, UNPROFOR remained deployed in a war situation where, after more than three years, there was still no peace to keep. Further complicating its position was the gradual enlargement of its original mandate to include elements of enforcement, causing it to be seen as a party to the conflict. The safe-areas mandate, for instance, required UNPROFOR to cooperate and negotiate daily with a party against whom it was also expected to call air strikes in certain circumstances. Similarly, the United Nations had imposed sanctions on one party, but at the same time had deployed a Force obliged to work with that party's consent and cooperation. Consequently, the Bosnian Serb leaders had largely withdrawn their consent and cooperation, declaring that, in response to UN sanctions against them, they were applying their own "sanctions" against the United Nations.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General presented four options as to UNPROFOR's future role: withdraw the Force, leaving only a small political mission, if the parties so wished; retain its existing tasks and methods of implementation; change the existing mandate to permit the greater use of force; or revise the mandate to include only those tasks that a peace-keeping operation could realistically be expected to perform under the circumstances prevailing in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Secretary-General said he would not advocate the first two options and had concerns regarding the viability of the third. He believed, however, that the fourth would give UNPROFOR a realistic mandate that would enable it to help contain the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina without creating expectations that it could either enforce an end to the war or join it to fight on the side of one of the parties.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (23 June)

The Security Council met on 23 June and, after consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽¹⁰³⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council reiterates its condemnation of interference with humanitarian supplies and the freedom of movement of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) by all parties within the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In this context it is deeply concerned by the blockading by Bosnian government forces of UNPROFOR personnel in the Visoko, Gorazde, Gomi Vakuf and Kladanj areas, which included on 20 June 1995 placing mines outside the UNPROFOR camp in Visoko. The Council is also deeply concerned at the deterioration in the situation in and around Sarajevo, the obstruction by the Bosnian Serb party of freedom of movement and utilities to the city and the continued obstruction of the normal operation of Sarajevo airport.

The Security Council stresses that all such actions are unacceptable and demands that all parties fully respect the safety and security of UNPROFOR personnel and ensure their complete freedom of movement to enable UNPROFOR to carry out its mandate in accordance with the Council's resolutions.

The Security Council calls upon the parties to enter into negotiations as provided for in its resolution 998(1995) of 16 June 1995 and to agree without further delay to a cease-fire and a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council emphasizes that there can be no military solution to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It stresses the importance it attaches to the vigorous pursuit of a political settlement, and reiterates its demand that the Bosnian Serb party accept the Contact Group peace plan as a starting-point.

Rapid reaction capability

Communications from the Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General on 9 June informed the Security Council President that, in the light of his 30 May report on deteriorating conditions in Bosnia and Herzegovina, France, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom had offered to provide military reinforcements for UNPROFOR in order to reduce the vulnerability of its personnel and to enhance its capacity to carry out its mandate.⁽¹⁰⁴⁾

Annexed to the letter was an agreed summary of their proposal.

The reinforcements proposed were as follows: a multinational brigade of two battalion groups totalling some 4,500 troops, one approximately 2,000 strong to be provided by France and the other, approximately 2,500 strong, to be based upon the current UNPROFOR Reserve and to consist of a British battalion group and of a mortar-locating radar group from the Netherlands; a British airmobile brigade of approximately 6,300, composed of two infantry battalions, two aviation regiments, engineers, artillery elements and logistic support, including 800 temporary personnel; and a French brigade of 4,000 troops on stand-by in France, should further reinforcements prove necessary.

The rapid reaction force (RRF) would be an integral part of UNPROFOR and would be financed through normal UN peace-keeping assessments. It would act in support of UNPROFOR within its existing mandate, and would be available to UN military commanders for the defence of UN personnel. Its purpose would be to give the commander a capacity between "strong protest and air strikes"; it would increase tactical operational flexibility and would be intended to have a deterrent effect, but would not change the UN role to peace-enforcement.

In recommending acceptance of the proposal, the Secretary-General noted that the proposed troops numbered about 15,000, of whom 2,500 were already in the theatre. Thus, in order to incorporate those additional troops within UNPF/UNPROFOR, the Council would need to increase the authorized troop levels by 12,500, inclusive of the stand-by brigade.

In an addendum of 15 June to his letter, the Secretary-General stated that the cost of such an increase, including the corresponding increase in civilian support staff, was estimated at $414.3 million for a six-month period. The cost of deployment, excluding the 4,000 French troops on stand-by, was estimated at $304.4 million.⁽¹⁰⁵⁾

Having considered the foregoing report and letters of the Secretary-General, the Security Council met on 16 June and adopted resolution 998(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) as referred to in resolution 982(1995) of 31 March 1995 and the need for its full implementation,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 30 May 1995,

Having considered also the letter of the Secretary-General of 9 June 1995 and its annex,

Noting that the rapid reaction force referred to in the above-mentioned letter will be an integral part of the existing United Nations peace-keeping operation, and that the status of UNPROFOR and its impartiality will be maintained,

Deeply concerned by the continuing armed hostilities in the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Expressing its deep regret that the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina has continued to deteriorate and that the parties were not able to agree to a further cease-fire following the breakdown of the cease-fire agreement of 23 December 1994 and its subsequent expiration on 1 May 1995,

Gravely concerned that the regular obstruction of deliveries of humanitarian assistance, and the denial of the use of Sarajevo airport, by the Bosnian Serb side threaten the ability of the United Nations in Bosnia and Herzegovina to carry out its mandate,

Condemning in the strongest possible terms all attacks by the parties on UNPROFOR personnel,

Condemning also the increasing attacks on the civilian population by Bosnian Serb forces,

Determined to enhance the protection of UNPROFOR and to enable it to carry out its mandate,

Noting the letter of 14 June 1995 from the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina welcoming the reinforcement of UNPROFOR,

Stressing the importance at this juncture of renewed efforts to achieve an overall peaceful settlement,

Underlining once again the urgent need for acceptance by the Bosnian Serb party of the Contact Group peace plan as a starting-point, opening the way to the negotiation of such an overall peaceful settlement,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Reaffirming further that the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a State Member of the United Nations, enjoys the rights provided for in the Charter of the United Nations,

Determining that the situation in the former Yugoslavia continues to be a threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming its determination to ensure the security of the United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF)/UNPROFOR and its freedom of movement for the accomplishment of all its missions, and to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Demands that the Bosnian Serb forces release immediately and unconditionally all remaining detained UNPROFOR personnel, and further demands that all parties fully respect the safety of UNPROFOR personnel, and others engaged in the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and ensure their complete freedom of movement;

2. Emphasizes that there can be no military solution to the conflict, stresses the importance it attaches to vigorous pursuit of a political settlement, and reiterates its demand that the Bosnian Serb party accept the Contact Group peace plan as a starting-point;

3. Calls upon the parties to agree without further delay to a cease-fire and a complete cessation of hostilities in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Demands that all parties allow unimpeded access for humanitarian assistance to all parts of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and, in particular, to the safe areas;

5. Demands further that the Bosnian Serb forces comply immediately with the agreement of 5 June 1992 and ensure unimpeded access by land to Sarajevo;

6. Demands that the parties respect fully the status of the safe areas and in particular the need to ensure the safety of the civilian population therein;

7. Underlines the need for a mutually agreed demilitarization of the safe areas and their immediate surroundings and the benefits this would bring to all parties, in terms of the cessation of attacks on the safe areas and of launching military attacks therefrom;

8. Encourages, in this context, the Secretary-General further to intensify efforts aimed at reaching agreement with the parties on the modalities for demilitarization, taking particular account of the need to ensure the safety of the civilian population, and calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with these efforts;

9. Welcomes the letter of the Secretary-General of 9 June 1995 on the reinforcement of UNPROFOR and the establishment of a rapid reaction capacity to enable UNPF/UNPROFOR to carry out its mandate;

10. Decides accordingly to authorize an increase in UNPF/UNPROFOR personnel, acting under the present mandate and on the terms set out in the above-mentioned letter, by up to 12,500 additional troops, the modalities of financing to be determined later;

11. Authorizes the Secretary-General to carry forward the implementation of paragraphs 9 and 10 above, maintaining close contact with the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and others concerned;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in taking any decisions with respect to the deployment of UNPROFOR personnel, to take full account of the need to enhance their security and minimize the dangers to which they might be exposed;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Botswana, Czech Republic, France, Germany, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Nigeria, Oman, Rwanda, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Russian Federation.

Before the vote, China pointed out that the establishment under Chapter VII of the Charter of a force that, once put into operation, was bound to become a party to the conflict, would de facto change the peace-keeping status of UNPROFOR. Besides leading to many political and military complications, such a force would substantially increase peace-keeping expenditures. At a time when the Organization was in a financial crisis, it was neither appropriate nor desirable to finance such a force from the peace-keeping budget. China regretted that its amendment on this issue, repeatedly put forward during informal consultations, had not been accepted.

The Russian Federation likewise stated that some of its amendments had not been taken into account. Among those were the inclusion of a reference to the inadmissible violations of the arms embargo in the former Yugoslavia, including in Bosnia and Herzegovina; and of wording to preclude the impression that the force was intended to operate against only the Bosnian Serb party and not also against the Bosnian Government, which also bore responsibility for provocations, violations of agreements and direct attacks on UNPROFOR. To illustrate, the Russian Federation cited the Government's recent demand that the Canadian contingent withdraw its two observation posts near Visoko, which it then subjected to mortar and artillery fire, as well as to the Government's ongoing attempt to mount a massive attack in the Sarajevo region. Also underscored was the lack of time for the Council to agree on reliable guarantees against the use of the force in a manner to involve UNPROFOR in a war.

Communication from the Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 17 August that his Special Representative and the UNPROFOR Force Commander had undertaken consultations with Bosnia and Herzegovina with a view to expediting the deployment there of RRF and facilitating its freedom of movement.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ Consultations had also been undertaken with Croatia to facilitate the disembarkation, transit and, as required, stationing in Croatian territory of the RRF units as part of UNPROFOR.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the position taken by the two countries that the Council resolution establishing RRF was adopted subsequent to the 1993 status-of-forces agreement⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ concluded with Bosnia and Herzegovina for UNPROFOR troop deployments in the country and, hence, was not applicable to RRF, whose status therefore needed a separate agreement.

The Special Representative conveyed the UN position that the Council decision to authorize an increase in UNPROFOR's strength to include RRF could not be interpreted as excluding the expansion of UNPROFOR from the scope of the 1993 agreement. That expansion constituted neither an exceptional Council decision in the context of the UN forces and operations in the former Yugoslavia nor a new development in the general context of peace-keeping; nor did it alter the mandate of the forces and operations concerned. Croatia had been assured that the operational mandate of RRF was confined to Bosnia and Herzegovina and that what was being sought was merely the use of transit facilities already assured by the 1993 agreement.

The Secretary-General also drew attention to the demands by the local Croat authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, sometimes in their own capacity and sometimes on behalf of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina,⁽⁸⁸⁾ that the United Nations sign an agreement with them governing the status of RRF. In the view of the United Nations, it was unnecessary to do so, since the 1993 agreement was applicable throughout the entire territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The local Croat authorities, maintaining their position, had posed substantial impediments to RRF's deployment, training and freedom of movement in areas under their control. Bosnia and Herzegovina had not ensured, in this case, that the terms of the 1993 agreement were applied throughout its territory; it had also stipulated additional financial requirements, such as compensation for "environmental damage" that RRF might cause.

As a result, the deployment of major RRF elements currently in Ploce, Croatia, could not proceed. They included the helicopters of an airmobile brigade, an artillery battery designated for Mount Igman, a transport platoon bound for Federation-controlled territory and 16 logistic convoys. Those elements already in Bosnia and Herzegovina had been encountering continuous restrictions on their movements.

To break the impasse, the Special Representative had suggested to the Bosnian authorities that supplementary arrangements, as envisaged in the 1993 status-of-forces agreement, be concluded to cover the issues in question, with a proviso that, in the event of a conflict between those arrangements and the agreement, the latter should prevail.

(The Secretary-General's communication was preceded by a letter of 3 July from the President of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina asking for the particulars of RRF's mandate and deployment;⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ and by letters of 11 August from Croatia⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ and 14 August from Bosnia and Herzegovina⁽¹¹⁰⁾ on the question of expediting separate arrangements for RRF.)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

The Security Council met on 19 August to consider the Secretary-General's communication. Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized the President to make the statement below⁽¹¹¹⁾ on its behalf:

The Security Council is deeply concerned by the contents of the Secretary-General's letter of 17 August 1995 regarding the continued impediments to the functioning and deployment of the rapid reaction force (RRF) established by resolution 998(1995) of 16 June 1995.

The Council reaffirms in this regard that the RRF is an integral part of UNPF/UNPROFOR and that its deployment is crucial for the strengthening of UNPROFOR's capacity to carry out its mandate in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It shares the Secretary-General's view that the existing status-of-forces agreements constitute an appropriate and sufficient basis for the presence of UNPF/UNPROFOR, including the RRF.

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the implications of the continued impediments to the functioning of the RRF for the effectiveness of the United Nations mission in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It calls upon the Governments of the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina immediately to remove all impediments and to give clear undertakings concerning the freedom of movement and provision of facilities for the RRF, in order that it may perform its tasks without further delay. It further calls upon them to resolve forthwith within the framework of the existing status-of-forces agreements any outstanding difficulties with the relevant United Nations authorities.

The Security Council supports fully the efforts of the Secretary-General in this matter and will return to this question in the light of a further report which the Security Council requests the Secretary-General to submit no later than 24 August 1995.

Mandate extension

Report of the Secretary-General. On 23 November, the Secretary-General issued a report intended to assist the Security Council in its deliberations on the future of UNCRO, UNPROFOR and UNPREDEP, whose mandates were to end on 30 November.⁽⁹¹⁾ The report included a summary of developments in Croatia, in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) since the inception of those three separate but interlinked missions on 1 April, as well as the effect of those developments on the missions' implementation of their respective mandates. (For information on UNCRO and UNPREDEP, see below, under "Croatia" and "The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia".)

The report noted three dominant developments in Bosnia and Herzegovina during the reporting period. First, upon the expiration of the 1994 cessation-of-hostilities agreement at the end of April 1995, an unprecedented level of military activity had ensued, including offensives by all sides, resulting in major movements of refugees and displaced persons and in widespread violations of international humanitarian law, especially by Bosnian Serb forces. Second, NATO and UNPROFOR, through the rapid reaction force, had become militarily engaged against the Bosnian Serbs in order to prevent further violations of the heavy-weapons and safe-area regimes, to reduce UNPROFOR's vulnerability to hostage-taking and to improve its untenable situation. Third, the United States-led peace process, begun in the summer, had advanced to the stage at which the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina had been initialled on 21 November. Together with the country-wide cease-fire secured by the United States on 5 October and brought into force by UNPROFOR on 12 October, the Agreement provided the first real opportunity for a political solution to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Secretary-General said. (For details, see below.)

Compliance with the 5 October cease-fire was noticeably better than with previous cease-fires. All parties refrained from offensive activity and constructively participated in joint military commissions. UN military observers were operating in Bosnian Serb-held areas, with UNPROFOR and humanitarian convoys, as well as escorted civilian vehicles, moving freely in and out of Sarajevo and Gorazde. Sarajevo airport was operating safely and without hindrance, and the release of POWs and detainees was under way. The cease-fire provision regarding freedom of movement for UNPROFOR patrols, however, had yet to be complied with fully, for restrictions were still being imposed by Bosnian Croat military units in north-western Bosnia.

The limited progress in the political, social and economic integration of the Bosniac-Croat Federation had resulted in difficulties for UN activities. Continuation of the Federation—the foundation for the peace process—was threatened by the failure of the Bosniacs and Bosnian Croats to agree on certain fundamental issues and to implement what they had agreed upon. The most important of those were transfers of responsibility to the Federation, accommodation in areas recently recovered from the Bosnian Serbs in western Bosnia, and the resettlement of displaced persons. The recently announced accord on those issues (see below, under "Dayton Agreement on implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina") still had to be translated into meaningful cooperation on the ground, the Secretary-General stated. The difficult relationship between the Government of the Federation and that of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina had also caused some operational problems for the United Nations, notably in connection with the deployment of the rapid reaction force of UNPROFOR.

As envisaged in the Peace Agreement, and in close consultation with NATO, UNPROFOR was to arrange for the transfer of military responsibility to a new multinational implementation force to be authorized by the Security Council. Pending finalization of that arrangement, the Secretary-General recommended that the current UNPROFOR mandate be extended for two months ending on 31 January 1996.

In keeping with the Special Representative's recommendations, which the Secretary-General had accepted, only essential forces were being retained to implement UNPROFOR's mandate. Thus, two battalions and four sub-units were being repatriated, six other battalions were being reduced to a standard strength of about 965 all ranks, and portions of the rapid reaction force were being placed on stand-by in their home countries. As a result, the strength of UNPROFOR would be reduced from about 30,500 to about 21,600 by mid-December 1995. Those contingents not joining the new multinational force would be withdrawn as soon as practicable.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the Secretary-General's recommendation above, on 30 November the Security Council adopted resolution 1026(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions and in particular its resolutions 982(1995) of 31 March 1995 and 998(1995) of 16 June 1995,

Reaffirming its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Welcoming again the initialling of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Annexes thereto by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the other parties thereto on 21 November 1995, in Dayton, Ohio, signifying agreement between the parties to sign formally the Peace Agreement,

Stressing the need for all parties to comply fully with all provisions of the Peace Agreement, and, prior to the entry into force of that agreement, the need for all parties to cooperate fully with the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and to maintain the current cease-fire agreement,

Welcoming the positive role played by UNPROFOR, and paying tribute to the personnel of UNPROFOR in the performance of their mandate,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 November 1995,

Reaffirming its determination to ensure the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of United Nations peace-keeping operations in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and, to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 23 November 1995;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNPROFOR for a period terminating on 31 January 1996, pending further action by the Council with regard to the implementation of the Peace Agreement;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to keep the Council informed on developments in the peace process and to submit as soon as possible to the Council reports, containing the necessary information and recommendations, on aspects of the implementation of the Peace Agreement as they affect the United Nations in order to enable the Council to take a decision ensuring an orderly transfer of authority as envisaged in the Peace Agreement;

United States-led peace process

The United States-led peace process began on 19 August, when Under-Secretary of State for European and Canadian Affairs Richard Holbrooke undertook the first of his shuttles to the former Yugoslavia in a determined pursuit of that peace initiative. It gathered pace during the last quarter of the year, culminating in the initialling by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina on 21 November in Dayton, Ohio, and its formal signing on 14 December in Paris. That event was preceded by a commitment made by the signatories, under the auspices of the Contact Group, to certain basic principles that formed the basis for the peace negotiations.

Agreed Basic Principles

On 8 September in Geneva, the five-member Contact Group convened the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The latter country represented the Bosnian Serbs in a joint delegation. By a statement at the meeting's conclusion, the Contact Group announced that the Foreign Ministers, speaking for their Governments, had authorized it to issue the text of three basic principles they had agreed upon—referred to as the Agreed Basic Principles—as the basis for talks on ending the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The text and the statement were transmitted to the Secretary-General also on 8 September.⁽¹¹²⁾

According to the statement, as important as the agreement was, significant differences existed among the parties that required continued intense negotiations. While the parties returned to their capitals for consultations, Richard Holbrooke, acting as Chief United States Mediator, and EU Special Negotiator for the Former Yugoslavia, Carl Bildt, would be returning to the region with their delegations; on 9 September, First Deputy Minister Igor Ivanov of the Russian Federation would travel to Belgrade for consultations. The Contact Group would meet again in Geneva the following week, with subsequent meetings in Moscow and, in an expanded format, in Rome.

By the Agreed Basic Principles, Bosnia and Herzegovina would continue its legal existence with its present borders and continuing international recognition. It would consist of two entities: the existing Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina as established by the Washington agreements⁽⁸⁸⁾ and Republika Srpska, the territory to be divided 51 per cent for the former and 49 per cent for the latter; each entity would continue to exist under its current constitution, amended to accommodate the basic principles, and have the right to establish parallel special relationships with neighbouring countries; the two entities would enter into reciprocal commitments to hold elections under international auspices, to adhere to international human rights standards and obligations, and to engage in binding arbitration to resolve disputes between them. The entities would appoint: a Commission for Displaced Persons to enforce their obligation to enable displaced persons to repossess their homes or receive just compensation; a Human Rights Commission to enforce human rights obligations; jointly financed Bosnia and Herzegovina public corporations to own and operate transportation and other facilities; and a Commission to Preserve National Monuments.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 8 September and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽¹¹³⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council welcomes the meeting held under the auspices of the Contact Group in Geneva on 8 September 1995 between the Foreign Ministers of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, of the Republic of Croatia and of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). It welcomes the joint statement issued at the conclusion of that meeting and in particular the agreement by the parties on the Declaration of Principles. It strongly urges the parties to negotiate in good faith and expeditiously on the basis of that Declaration with the aim of achieving a lasting peace throughout the region.

Communication from the Secretary-General.

On 18 September, the Secretary-General communicated his conclusions following an in-depth review of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina on 16 September with his senior advisers, the UN Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee, the Special Representative and the Deputy Force Commander of UNPROFOR.⁽¹¹⁴⁾

He welcomed the United States peace initiative and took note of the two positive developments in the form of the Agreed Basic Principles of 8 September and the Framework for a Cessation of Hostilities within the Sarajevo Temporary Exclusion Zone, signed by the Bosnian Serb party in Belgrade on 14 September. He pointed out that, after more than three years' experience of international efforts to control and resolve the Bosnian conflict, it would be wrong to underestimate the difficulties in negotiating the further arrangements envisaged in those two agreements.

Believing, however, that there might finally be credible prospects for a viable and lasting peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and having re-examined the different ways in which the international community could support implementation of a peace agreement when concluded, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council authorize an ad hoc coalition of Member States, acting as appropriate with regional organizations or arrangements, to support all aspects of implementation of the agreement, with the exception of those relating to the relief and return of refugees and displaced persons, which should continue to be entrusted to UNHCR.

Should the current peace initiative not succeed and more enforcement action be decided upon by the Council, it was the Secretary-General's intention to recommend that UNPROFOR be replaced by a multinational force authorized by the Council to carry out such action and to assume responsibility for those aspects of UNPROFOR's existing mandate which would remain valid. In either case, urgent preparations would be required for an expeditious hand-over by UNPROFOR to the multinational force. The Council would also wish to consider appropriate arrangements to ensure that it was kept duly informed about the operations of such a force, including its civilian components.

Further Agreed Basic Principles

In New York on 26 September, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) agreed on three additional basic principles, referred to as the Further Agreed Basic Principles. These were intended to govern the entities' responsibilities regarding the international obligations of Bosnia and Herzegovina; free democratic elections and related freedom of movement, rights of displaced persons, freedom of speech and of the press, and human rights protection; and the governmental institutions to be constituted following elections.

1995 comprehensive cease-fire agreement

On 5 October, the three parties signed an agreement by which they would implement a cease-fire throughout all territory within the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina, effective 10 October, provided that at that time full gas and electrical utility services should have been restored in the city of Sarajevo, or effective at 0001 hours on the day following such restoration. The cease-fire would last 60 days or until completion of the proximity peace talks and a peace conference, whichever was later.

On the effective date, all parties would immediately cease all offensive operations, patrol and reconnaissance activities, offensive-weapons firings including sniper fire, laying mines and creating additional barriers. The parties would ensure the humane treatment of civilians and prisoners and the exchange of POWs under UNPROFOR supervision, cooperate with UNPROFOR's cease-fire monitoring activities, and provide free passage and unimpeded road access between Sarajevo and Gorazde along the two primary routes of Sarajevo-Rogatica-Gorazde and Belgrade-Gorazde for all non-military and UNPROFOR traffic. Further, the parties would honour their commitments to the Agreed Basic Principles, the Framework for a Cessation of Hostilities within the Sarajevo Temporary Exclusion Zone, and the Further Agreed Basic Principles, including the obligation to afford all persons freedom of movement and all displaced persons the right to return home and repossess their property.

The Further Agreed Basic Principles and the cease-fire agreement were transmitted by the Contact Group and Italy to the Secretary-General on 31 October.⁽¹¹⁵⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (6 and 12 October)

In the light of the cease-fire agreement, the Security Council met on 6 October and, after consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽¹¹⁶⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council welcomes the 5 October 1995 agreement by the Bosnian parties to a cease-fire, including by terminating all hostile military activities throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as of 10 October 1995 provided that full gas and electrical utility service is restored to Sarajevo. It welcomes all efforts to restore such service and calls upon the parties to cooperate fully with such efforts. The Security Council urges the parties fully to comply with all provisions in the cease-fire agreement once they come into effect.

The Security Council also welcomes the decision of the Governments of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia, and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to attend proximity peace talks by the end of this month, to be followed by a peace conference. It reiterates that there can be no military solution to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and strongly urges the parties to negotiate in good faith on the basis of the Geneva Declarations of Principles of 8 September 1995, and the Further Agreed Principles of 26 September 1995.

The Security Council also welcomes the 3 October 1995 agreement by the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Croatian Serb authorities in eastern Slavonia to Guiding Basic Principles for Negotiations. It strongly urges both parties to negotiate in good faith towards a peaceful final settlement to the conflict consistent with the Council's resolutions.

Meeting number. SC 3585.

On 12 October, when the cease-fire entered into force, the Council met again and authorized the President to make the following statement⁽¹¹⁷⁾ on its behalf:

The Security Council welcomes the entry into force of the cease-fire agreement between the Bosnian parties of 5 October 1995.

The Security Council takes this opportunity to express its gratitude to all those who negotiated the cease-fire agreement, and to the United Nations Protection Force and others who, often at risk to their own lives, have made possible, with the cooperation of all the parties, the restoration of gas and electricity supplies to the inhabitants of Sarajevo enabling them to live in more decent conditions.

The Security Council demands that all parties fully comply with the provisions of the cease-fire agreement and refrain from any military activity that could jeopardize the peace process. It expresses its deepest concern at any operation that provokes large-scale movements of population detrimental to the peace process and a final and fair settlement. The Council is particularly concerned about new reports related to the movements of the displaced population in the areas of Sanski Most and Mrkonjic Grad.

The Security Council reiterates its strong condemnation of all practices of ethnic cleansing wherever they occur and by whomsoever committed. It demands their immediate cessation and underlines the need to alleviate the sufferings caused by these acts. The Council urges all Bosnian parties to respect fully the rights of all communities, including their right to remain where they are or to return to their homes in safety.

The Security Council is in particular deeply concerned about new reports concerning acts of ethnic cleansing committed in the Banja Luka and Prijedor areas, especially about reports, including those by international humanitarian organizations, that non-Serb men and boys of draft age are being taken away by Bosnian Serb and other paramilitary forces. The Council demands that these persons be immediately released.

The Security Council demands that the Bosnian Serb party grants immediate and unimpeded access for United Nations personnel and the representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to all the areas of concern. It also demands that ICRC representatives be allowed to visit and register any persons detained against their will. The Council reiterates in this context the demands set out in resolution 1010(1995) and in the statement of its President of 7 September 1995 on Srebrenica and Zepa.

The Security Council reaffirms that those who have committed or have ordered the commission of violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible for them. The Council recalls in this context the establishment of the International Tribunal pursuant to its resolution 827(1993) and reiterates that all States shall cooperate fully with the Tribunal and its organs.

The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina

On 21 November, following a period of intense negotiations that began on 1 November in Dayton, Ohio, under the auspices of the United States Government, the three parties—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)—initialled the General Framework

Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including all the annexes thereto. Collectively known as the Peace Agreement, it was scheduled to be signed formally in Paris on 14 December. Its text was transmitted to the Secretary-General by the United States on 29 November.⁽¹¹⁸⁾

By the first of the Agreement's 11 articles, the parties agreed to conduct their relations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as well as with the Helsinki Final Act and other OSCE documents, to respect fully the sovereign equality of one another, to settle disputes by peaceful means and to refrain from action against the territorial integrity or political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina or any other State (article I).

By the other articles, the parties welcomed and endorsed the arrangements made concerning the following: the military aspects of the peace settlement and aspects of regional stabilization, as set forth in annex I A and B (article II); the boundary demarcation between the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska (annex 2, article III); the elections programme (annex 3, article IV); the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina (annex 4, article V); the arrangements on the establishment of an arbitration tribunal, a Commission on Human Rights, a Commission on Refugees and Displaced Persons, a Commission to Preserve National Monuments, and Bosnia and Herzegovina Public Corporations (annexes 5 to 9, article VI); human rights provisions (annex 6, article VII); arrangements for implementing the peace settlement, including those pertaining to non-military implementation and the international police task force (annexes 10 and 11, article VIII).

The parties further agreed to cooperate fully with all entities involved in implementing the peace settlement (article IX). Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Bosnia and Herzegovina agreed to recognize each other as sovereign independent States within their international borders (article X). The Agreement was to enter into force upon signature (article XI).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the initialling of the Peace Agreement, the Security Council convened on 22 November and adopted two resolutions, the first of which was 1021(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, and in particular its resolutions 713(1991) and 727(1992),

Reaffirming its commitment to a negotiated political settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Welcoming the initialling of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the Peace Agreement) by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the other parties thereto on 21 November 1995, in Dayton, Ohio, signifying agreement between the parties to sign formally the Peace Agreement,

Welcoming also the commitments of the parties set out in annex 1 B (Agreement on Regional Stabilization) of the Peace Agreement,

Determining that the situation in the region continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the embargo on deliveries of weapons and military equipment imposed by resolution 713(1991) shall be terminated as follows, beginning from the day the Secretary-General submits to the Council a report stating that the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia have formally signed the Peace Agreement:

(a) During the first ninety days following the submission of such a report, all the provisions of the embargo shall remain in place;

(b) During the second ninety days following the submission of such a report, all provisions of the arms embargo shall be terminated, except that the delivery of heavy weapons (as defined in the Peace Agreement), ammunition therefor, mines, military aircraft and helicopters shall continue to be prohibited until the arms control agreement referred to in annex 1 B has taken effect; and

(c) After the 180th day following the submission of such a report and after the submission of a report from the Secretary-General on the implementation of annex 1 B (Agreement on Regional Stabilization) as agreed by the parties, all provisions of the arms embargo terminate unless the Council decides otherwise;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare in a timely way and to submit to the Council the reports referred to in paragraph 1 above;

3. Maintains its commitment to progressive measures for regional stability and arms control and, if the situation requires, to consider further action;

4. Requests the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) to review and to amend its guidelines in the light of the provisions of this resolution;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1021(1995)

22 November 1995 Meeting 3595 14-0-1
10-nation draft (S/1995/977).

Sponsors: Argentina, France, Germany, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Oman, Rwanda, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Botswana, China, Czech Republic, France, Germany, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Nigeria, Oman, Rwanda, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Russian Federation.

The Russian Federation stated that the resolution raised serious doubts and concerns, since neither in spirit nor in letter did it follow the logic of the political process, which was aimed at ending military confrontation in the region. Because of its belief that the Balkans should never again pose a threat to international security and stability, the Russian Federation was in favour, not of an arms build-up in the region, but of an arms reduction. It would have preferred the resolution to provide for a more clear-cut mechanism to operate, should the peace process be derailed.

The second resolution that the Council adopted was 1022(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia,

Reaffirming its commitment to a negotiated political settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Commending the efforts of the international community, including those of the Contact Group, to assist the parties in reaching a settlement,

Praising the decision of the Governments of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to attend and participate constructively in proximity talks in the United States of America, and acknowledging with appreciation the efforts made by these Governments to reach a lasting peace settlement in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Welcoming the initialling of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the Peace Agreement) by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the other parties thereto on 21 November 1995, in Dayton, Ohio, signifying agreement between the parties to sign formally the Peace Agreement,

Noting the Concluding Statement issued at the adjournment of the proximity talks, in which all parties undertook, inter alia, to assist in locating the two French pilots missing in Bosnia and Herzegovina and to ensure their immediate and safe return,

Stressing the need for all parties to comply fully with all provisions of the Peace Agreement,

Noting that compliance with the requests and orders of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia constitutes an essential aspect of implementing the Peace Agreement,

Recognizing the interests of all States in the implementation of the suspension and subsequent termination of measures imposed by the Council, and in particular the interests of the successor States to the State formerly known as the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, with respect to the disposition of assets affected by the fact that that State has ceased to exist, and the desirability of accelerating the process now under way under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY) to reach a consensual agreement among the successor States as to the disposition of such assets,

Determining that the situation in the region continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the measures imposed by or reaffirmed in resolutions 757(1992), 787(1992), 820(1993), 942(1994), 943(1994), 988(1995), 992(1995), 1003(1995) and 1015(1995) are suspended indefinitely with immediate effect subject to the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 5 below, and provided that if the Secretary-General reports to the Council that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has failed formally to sign the Peace Agreement on the date announced by the Contact Group for such purpose, and that the other parties thereto have expressed their readiness so to sign, the measures described above shall be automatically reimposed from the fifth day following the date of such report;

2. Decides also that the suspension referred to in paragraph 1 above shall not apply to the measures imposed on the Bosnian Serb party until the day after the commander of the international force to be deployed in accordance with the Peace Agreement, on the basis of a report transmitted through the appropriate political authorities, informs the Council via the Secretary-General that all Bosnian Serb forces have withdrawn behind the zones of separation established in the Peace Agreement; and urges all parties concerned to take all necessary measures to assist in locating the two French pilots mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and to ensure their immediate and safe return;

3. Further decides that if at any time, with regard to a matter within the scope of their respective mandates and after joint consultation if appropriate, either the High Representative described in the Peace Agreement, or the commander of the international force to be deployed in accordance with the Peace Agreement, on the basis of a report transmitted through the appropriate political authorities, informs the Council via the Secretary-General that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia or the Bosnian Serb authorities are failing significantly to meet their obligations under the Peace Agreement, the suspension referred to in paragraph 1 above shall terminate on the fifth day following the Council's receipt of such a report, unless the Council decides otherwise taking into consideration the nature of the non-compliance;

4. Further decides that it will terminate the measures described in paragraph 1 above on the tenth day following the occurrence of the first free and fair elections provided for in annex 3 of the Peace Agreement, provided that the Bosnian Serb forces have withdrawn from, and have continued to respect, the zones of separation as provided in the Peace Agreement;

5. Further decides that so long as the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above remain suspended, or are terminated by a subsequent Council decision in accordance with paragraph 4 above, all funds and assets previously frozen or impounded pursuant to resolutions 757(1992) and 820(1993) may be released by States in accordance with law, provided that any such funds and assets that are subject to any claims, liens, judgements, or encumbrances, or which are the funds or assets of any person, partnership, corporation, or other entity found or deemed insolvent under law or the accounting principles prevailing in such State, shall remain frozen or impounded until released in accordance with applicable law, and decides further that obligations of States related to freezing or impounding funds and assets contained in such resolutions shall be suspended pursuant to paragraph 1 above with respect to all funds and assets not currently frozen or impounded until the measures concerned are terminated by a subsequent Council decision;

6. Further decides that the suspension or termination of obligations pursuant to this resolution is without prejudice to claims of successor States to the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia with respect to funds and assets; stresses the need for the successor States to reach agreement on the distribution of funds and assets and the allocation of liabilities of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; encourages all States to make provision under their national law for addressing competing claims of States, as well as claims of private parties affecting funds and assets; and further encourages States to take appropriate measures to facilitate the expeditious collection of any funds and assets by the appropriate parties and the resolution of claims related thereto;

7. Further decides that all States shall continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that there shall be no claim in connection with the performance of any contract or other transaction where such performance was affected by the measures imposed by the resolutions referred to in paragraph 1 above and related resolutions;

8. Requests the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) to review and to amend its guidelines in the light of the provisions of this resolution;

9. Pays tribute to the neighbouring States, the ICFY mission, the European Union/Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe Sanctions Coordinator, the Sanctions Communications Centre and the Sanctions Assistance Missions, the Western European Union operation on the Danube and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization/Western European Union Sharp Guard operation in the Adriatic Sea for their significant contribution to the achievement of a negotiated peace;

10. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1022(1995)

22 November 1995 Meeting 3595 Adopted unanimously

10-nation draft (S/1995/978).

Sponsors: Argentina, Czech Republic, France, Germany, Honduras, Italy, Russian Federation, Rwanda, United Kingdom, United States,

Pursuant to the Council's request in paragraph 1 of resolution 1021(1995), the Secretary-General informed the Council President on 14 December that, on that date, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and other parties thereto had formally signed the Peace Agreement in Paris.⁽¹¹⁹⁾

Peace Implementation Conference

Before the formal signature of the Peace Agreement, the United Kingdom convened a Peace Implementation Conference in London on 8 and 9 December, to mobilize the international community to assist in the Agreement's implementation.⁽¹²⁰⁾ The Conference set forth its conclusions on a series of implementation objectives, the realization of which would involve, at the initial phase, a wide range of international and regional organizations and agencies.

The Conference was briefed on implementation of the military aspects of the Agreement, to be undertaken by a multinational military Implementation Force (IFOR), whose primary tasks were to ensure the continued compliance with the 5 October cessation-of-hostilities agreement, the withdrawal of forces from the Agreed Cease-Fire Zone of Separation, and the separation of forces from the Inter-Entity Boundary Line. Its supporting tasks, to be performed within the limits of its capabilities, were to help secure the conditions necessary for the conduct by others of other tasks associated with the Agreement, prevent interference with the freedom of movement of civilian populations, including refugees and displaced persons, monitor minefield clearance, and assist UNHCR and other international organizations in their humanitarian missions.

The Conference strongly urged the parties to observe the deadlines set out in the Peace Agreement for agreeing on confidence-building and arms-control measures. It supported the commitment made by OSCE at its ministerial meeting (Budapest, Hungary, 7-8 December) to assist the parties' negotiations in this regard, and endorsed Germany's decision to convene an international meeting (Bonn, 18 December) to initiate this process.

Having been briefed also on the wide range of tasks involved in implementing the civilian aspects of the Agreement, the Conference approved the designation of Carl Bildt (Sweden) as the High Representative and invited the Security Council's agreement to that designation. As envisaged in the Agreement, a High Representative was to monitor the Agreement's implementation, and mobilize and, as appropriate, coordinate the activities of the civilian organizations and agencies involved. The Conference established a Peace Implementation Council (PIC), composed of all those States, international organizations and agencies attending the Conference, together with a Steering Board, to subsume ICFY and manage the peace implementation process (for details, see under "General aspects" above).

The Conference noted that the tasks involved in humanitarian assistance, refugee repatriation, the release of prisoners and the search for missing persons required extra effort by the international community and called for generous assistance and contributions to UNHCR, ICRC and other humanitarian agencies. It outlined urgent action required for the protection of human rights and noted that a task force would meet in Sarajevo to address that issue. It heard OSCE's presentation of its preparations for the elections, scheduled to take place six to nine months after the formal signature of the Agreement, and decided that PIC would give a lead in providing staff and resources as well as election monitors. The process of reconstructing the economic and physical infrastructure of Bosnia and Herzegovina would begin with a meeting (Brussels, 20-21 December) organized by the World Bank and the European Commission, to outline priority reconstruction proposals. The EU President, in his statement to the Conference, stressed that legitimate and effective political structures in Bosnia and Herzegovina were needed to enable the country to establish strong relations with EU.

In addition, an informal meeting was held in the margins of the Conference to discuss implementation of the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (see under "Croatia" below).

UN transition arrangements

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by Security Council resolution 1026(1995), the Secretary-General on 13 December submitted a report addressing those aspects of the Peace Agreement's implementation affecting the United Nations.⁽¹²¹⁾

Under the terms of the Agreement, the Council was to authorize Member States or regional organizations or arrangements to establish a multinational military Implementation Force, composed of ground, air and maritime units from NATO members and non-NATO States. IFOR would begin implementation of the Agreement's military aspects upon the transfer of authority for the forces deployed in Bosnia and Herzegovina from the UNPROFOR Commander to the IFOR Commander. Such transfer could occur within 96 hours of the Council's authorization; the UNPF Force Commander would become the Deputy Commander of IFOR, retaining his UNPF authority, however, over UNPROFOR units not transferring to IFOR, until their withdrawal from the theatre.

A United Nations Coordinator would be appointed by the Secretary-General to exercise authority over the Commissioner of the proposed international police task force and to coordinate other UN activities in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Coordinator's office, comprising political and legal advisers and information staff, would be located in Sarajevo close to that of the High Representative, from whom the Coordinator would receive guidance.

UNHCR would continue as lead agency for coordinating humanitarian relief assistance and in implementing a plan for the return of refugees and displaced persons. Its aim was to reduce the scale of the first task and redirect efforts towards the second to ensure organized and phased return movements. Accurate planning in this connection was difficult because the choice to return or resettle elsewhere was left to the refugees and displaced persons, who numbered 1.2 million inside Bosnia and Herzegovina and 900,000 elsewhere.

The Secretary-General proposed temporarily maintaining the Mine Action Centre at UNPF-HQ (with one civilian and six military personnel), saying the Centre had a wealth of mine-related information and databases for both Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia. He further proposed the temporary retention of four military mines information officers to work under the direction of the UN Coordinator.

As to the establishment of an international police task force, the Agreement specified that it be established by the Council as a UN civilian operation charged with monitoring, observing and inspecting law enforcement activities and facilities; advising and training law enforcement personnel; facilitating the parties' law enforcement activities; advising government authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the organization of effective civilian law enforcement agencies; accompanying the parties' law enforcement personnel as they discharged their responsibilities; and assisting the parties to ensure conditions for free and fair elections.

Based on the assessments of a mission recently dispatched to Bosnia and Herzegovina, and bearing in mind the tasks to be performed, the Secretary-General recommended that the proposed police task force set up its central headquarters in Sarajevo and five regional headquarters in Sarajevo, Banja Luka, Gornji Vakuf, Mostar and Tuzla, as well as 17 central police districts and 109 police stations. He further recommended that the locations of those regional headquarters, police districts and stations correspond with those of the local enforcement authorities and bodies. A total of 1,721 police monitors would be required, in addition to 45 civil affairs and public information officers to be assigned to the central headquarters.

The UN contribution in the human rights field would come from: UNHCR, whose mandate called for providing protection to newly returned refugees; the proposed police task force, whose responsibilities would include monitoring the local security forces' respect for human rights; and the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, which had declared its readiness to develop and facilitate training for human rights personnel, to make available a limited number of experienced human rights officers to deal with human rights violations, and to continue to support the work of the Special Rapporteur and of the Expert on the special process dealing with missing persons in the former Yugoslavia.

The Secretary-General indicated that the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, in his capacity as UN Focal Point for Electoral Assistance Activities, would provide technical advice to OSCE based on the extensive experience of the United Nations in that area. The UN system would play its usual role in the rehabilitation of the country's infrastructure and economic reconstruction. In addition, the Secretary-General had encouraged the High Representative to consider appointing some UNPROFOR civil affairs and public information officers, whose experience in Bosnia and Herzegovina would be of great assistance to him.

Regarding UN activities that would be discontinued, the Secretary-General accepted the recommendation of the Peace Implementation Conference that ICFY and its Steering Committee be dissolved on 31 January 1996 and, accordingly, extended the appointment of the UN Co-Chairman of the Steering Committee to that date. He recommended that the office and functions of the Special Coordinator for Sarajevo be subsumed, with effect from 30 April 1996, in the arrangements to be established by the World Bank, the European Commission and others for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and that the 1994 Council resolution which had created that office⁽⁴⁴⁾ be allowed to lapse on that date.

In view of the transfer to IFOR of UNPROFOR's military responsibilities, the Secretary-General recommended that UNPROFOR's monitoring of the ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina⁽¹²²⁾ be discontinued and the airfield monitors repatriated, and that its responsibilities for operating Sarajevo airport,⁽¹⁵⁾ as well as Tuzla airport and other airfields, be transferred to IFOR.

The Secretary-General recommended making the three UN operations in the former Yugoslavia fully independent of one another. UNPF-HQ would be restructured and its civilian and military personnel drastically reduced. The Office of the Special Representative could be phased out by the end of February 1996. However, because of the complex and time-consuming nature of the transition arrangements and the emplacement of new civilian operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, and in order to secure UN premises and assets during the liquidation of UNPROFOR and UNCRO, the Secretary-General recommended retaining a coordinated civilian and military capacity at UNPF-HQ in Zagreb for six months beyond the expiry of the mandates of UNPROFOR and UNCRO.

In a 15 December addendum to his report, the Secretary-General estimated the cost associated with the emplacement and maintenance of a UN international police task force at $89,952,000, to cover costs of 1,721 police monitors and 254 internationally and 811 locally recruited staff for an initial period of six months.⁽¹²³⁾ An itemized breakdown of the estimate was annexed to the addendum.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following receipt of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council met on 15 December and adopted resolution 1031(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia,

Reaffirming its commitment to a negotiated political settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, preserving the territorial integrity of all States there within their internationally recognized borders,

Responding to paragraph 19 of the foregoing resolution, the Secretary-General informed the Council President on 20 December that, on that date, the transfer of authority from UNPROFOR to IFOR had taken place in Sarajevo,⁽¹²⁴⁾ thus terminating the authority conferred upon States by Council resolutions 770(1992),⁽¹²⁵⁾ 781(1992),⁽¹⁷⁾ 816(1993),⁽¹²⁶⁾ 836(1993),⁽¹⁹⁾ 844(1993)⁽¹²⁷⁾ and 958(1994),⁽¹²⁸⁾ as well as the provisions of resolution 824(1993)⁽⁴³⁾ and subsequent resolutions concerning safe areas.

International Police Task Force and UN civilian office

The Security Council, having further considered the Secretary-General's report on transition arrangements,⁽¹²¹⁾ met on 21 December and adopted resolution 1035(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 1031(1995) of 15 December 1995,

Security Council resolution 1035(1995)

21 December 1995 Meeting 3613 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/1049).

Dayton Agreement on implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina

During the Dayton negotiations, on 10 November, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia signed the Dayton Agreement on implementing the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, to which was annexed a set of Agreed Principles for the interim statute for the City of Mostar, signed by the Mayors of West and East Mostar and the EU Administrator for Mostar. The text was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 7 December.⁽¹²⁹⁾

The Dayton Agreement set forth the general principles relating to the governance of the Federation and provided for the transfer of governmental functions from the Government of the Republic to the Government of the Federation, specifying the areas of responsibility for each. It further contained provisions concerning the Federation's boundaries; fiscal, customs and budgetary matters for the Federation; cantons and municipalities; ambassadors; police; defence; refugees and displaced persons; the administration of Mostar; and reporting obligations on the Agreement's implementation.

Ban on military flights

The ban on military flights established by Security Council resolution 781(1992),⁽¹³⁰⁾ reaffirmed by resolution 786(1992)⁽¹²²⁾ and extended by resolution 816(1993)⁽¹²⁶⁾ to flights by all fixed-wing and rotary-wing aircraft, except to flights authorized by UNPROFOR, remained in force until 19 December 1995.

By notes verbales addressed to the Council President, the Secretary-General drew attention to information received by UNPROFOR and annexed to the notes regarding apparent violations of the ban on flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina between 20 December 1994 and 16 December 1995.⁽¹³¹⁾ Since the ban's imposition on 9 October 1992 until 16 December 1995, the number of flights assessed as apparent violations totalled 7,552.

In accordance with paragraph 19 of Council resolution 1031(1995), the provisions of resolution 816(1993) were terminated with effect from 20 December 1995, the date on which the Secretary-General reported to the Council that the transfer of authority from UNPROFOR to IFOR had taken place.⁽¹³²⁾

Border control

ICFY Mission to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

The ICFY Mission to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), set up in 1994⁽¹³³⁾ with headquarters in Belgrade, continued in 1995 to monitor and verify whether Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was in compliance with that country's 1994 decision to close its border with Bosnian Serb-held areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina to all but shipments of humanitarian aid.⁽¹³⁴⁾ That decision, taken primarily to influence the Bosnian Serbs to accept the peace plan proposed by the five-member Contact Group,⁽¹⁰⁾ resulted in the suspension by the Security Council, for an initial 100-day period, of those restrictions and other measures imposed on Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) by its resolution 943(1994).⁽¹³⁵⁾

Based on the reports of the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee on the Mission's operations during the year, the Council, by four resolutions, successively extended the suspension period to: 22 April (resolution 970(1995)), 5 July (988(1995)), 18 September 1995 (1003(1995)), and 18 March 1996 (1015(1995)).

The border area monitored by the Mission extended 330 miles (approximately 527 kilometres) from the north of Serbia to the south of Montenegro. Besides providing static coverage at 19 border control posts on a 24-hour basis, the Mission conducted day and night mobile patrols along the border, usually in cooperation with the local army or police. The Mission was organized into five field sectors, between two and nine hours' drive from Belgrade and located as follows: Sector Belgrade, responsible for observing the loading and customs inspection of goods destined for points beyond the border with "Republika Srpska"; Sector Alpha, headquartered in Banja Koviljaca, responsible for the border area from the junction of the Drina and Sava in the north to Drlace in the south; Sector Bajina Basta, responsible for the border area from Drlace in the north to 3 kilometres north of Priboj and for checking and controlling freight trains into and out of "Republika Srpska"; Sector Bravo, headquartered in Priboj, responsible for the border area 3 kilometres north of Priboj to the Tara River in Montenegro; and Sector Charlie, headquartered in Niksic, Montenegro, responsible for the border area from the Tara River in the north to the point at which the border of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) with Bosnia and Herzegovina abuts the border of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) with Croatia, near the Adriatic coast.

As of 14 December, the Mission had 217 international members from 15 countries.

1994 activities

The Security Council met on 12 January 1995 in connection with the 1994 reports on the ICFY Mission activities⁽¹³³⁾ and adopted resolution 970(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, and in particular resolution 943(1994) of 23 September 1994,

Welcoming the measures taken by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular those detailed in the annex to the Secretary-General's letter of 4 January 1995 to the President of the Security Council, to maintain the effective closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, and noting that those measures were a necessary condition for the adoption of the present resolution,

Stressing the importance of the maintenance by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of the effective closure of that border, and of further efforts by them to enhance the effectiveness of that closure, including by the prosecution of persons suspected of violating measures to that end and by sealing border crossing points as requested by the Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY),

Expressing appreciation for the work of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the ICFY and of the ICFY Mission to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and stressing the importance it attaches to the availability of all necessary resources for the work of the Mission,

Noting that paragraph 9 of resolution 757(1992) of 30 May 1992 remains in force,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the restrictions and other measures referred to in paragraph 1 of resolution 943(1994) shall be suspended for a further period of 100 days from the adoption of the present resolution;

2. Calls upon all States and others concerned to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and international borders of all States in the region;

3. Reaffirms that the requirements in paragraph 12 of resolution 820(1993) that import to, export from and transshipment through the United Nations Protected Areas in the Republic of Croatia and those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, with the exception of essential humanitarian supplies including medical supplies and foodstuffs distributed by international humanitarian agencies, shall be permitted only with proper authorization from the Government of the Republic of Croatia or the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina respectively, apply to all shipments across the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

4. Requests the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) urgently to expedite its elaboration of appropriate streamlined procedures as referred to in paragraph 2 of resolution 943(1993), and to give priority to its consideration of applications concerning legitimate humanitarian assistance, in particular applications from the International Committee of the Red Cross and from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other organizations in the United Nations system;

5. Requests that every thirty days the Secretary-General submit to the Security Council for its review a report as to whether the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee certify that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are effectively implementing their decision to close the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, and are complying with the requirements of paragraph 3 above in respect of all shipments across the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council immediately if he has evidence, including from the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee, that those authorities are not effectively implementing their decision to close that border;

6. Decides that if at any time the Secretary-General reports that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are not effectively implementing their decision to close that border, the suspension of the measures referred to in paragraph 1 above shall terminate on the fifth working day following the report of the Secretary-General, unless the Security Council decides to the contrary;

7. Decides to keep the situation closely under review and to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the light of further progress in the situation;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

12 January 1995 Meeting 3487 14-0-1

Against: None.

Abstaining: Russian Federation.

The representative of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), who had been invited at his request, expressed disappointment at the extension for only another 100 days of what he called the very limited partial suspension of the sanctions against his country, reflecting a lack of political will to assess objectively his country's constructive role in the search for a peaceful solution to the civil war in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Sanctions Committee, instead of streamlining procedures for expediting applications for legitimate humanitarian assistance, as called for by Council resolution 943(1994),⁽¹³⁵⁾ had resorted, he said, to an ever-stricter implementation of the sanctions, consistently rejecting requests for the importation of gas and raw materials for the pharmaceutical industry. The Council itself had ignored the request for a one-shot export of $70 million worth of goods, whose proceeds would have been used for the import of emergency humanitarian items. He considered unacceptable any linking of the further suspension of sanctions against his country to conditions that were not valid at the time the sanctions were imposed, or had no connection with resolving the crisis in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Russian Federation cited the December 1994 economic agreement concluded between Croatia and the local Serb authorities in the UNPAs⁽¹³⁶⁾ and the cessation-of-hostilities agreement in Bosnia and Herzegovina,⁽¹⁾ as well as what it called the encouraging changes in the attitude of the Bosnian Serb leadership towards the Contact Group's peace proposal, due in large measure, it said, to the Yugoslav Government's constructive role during the past 100 days. It thus regretted that the Council could not agree on a draft text that would have provided further measures of encouragement to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)—in the form, not only of indefinitely extending suspension of the limited sanctions, but of a wider easing of the sanctions—and thereby give impetus to the peace process.

The 1995 activities of the ICFY Mission were covered in 30- and 10-day reports submitted by the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee to the Security Council, through the Secretary-General, on 2 February,⁽¹³⁷⁾ 1 March,⁽¹³⁸⁾ 30 March,⁽¹³⁹⁾ 11 April,⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ 17 May,⁽¹⁴¹⁾ 23 June,⁽¹⁴²⁾ 2 August,⁽¹⁴³⁾ 6 September,⁽¹⁴⁴⁾ 9 October,⁽¹⁴⁵⁾ 8 November⁽¹⁴⁶⁾ and 7 December.⁽¹⁴⁷⁾

In addition to providing up-to-date information on the Mission's organization and financing, staffing and logistic requirements, each report described in detail the Mission's monitoring and verification of the enforcement of national legislation to implement the 1994 Yugoslav decision, including enforcement shortcomings;⁽¹³⁴⁾ verification of information received from national and other sources relevant to the Mission's mandate; the status of the Mission's freedom of movement and security, noting curtailment of or threats thereto; the level of the cooperation accorded to the Mission by the national and local authorities; and the Mission's representations to those authorities for action to correct or resolve problems encountered in the course of its monitoring activities.

The main problems encountered included: smuggling operations, usually through bypass roads and tracks; lax customs checks; border police allowing military materiel and personnel to cross into Bosnia and Herzegovina; tampering with border barricades; and other isolated violations.

Each of the reports recorded the Co-Chairmen's consistent certification—based on the Mission's on-site observation and the Mission Coordinator's advice, and in the absence of contrary information from the air (through national technical means or NATO's airborne reconnaissance system)—that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was continuing to meet its 1994 commitment⁽¹³³⁾ to close the border between it and the areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina under Bosnian Serb control. The Co-Chairmen also concluded that, during the periods covered by the reports, there had been no commercial transshipments across the border between Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Bosnia and Herzegovina.

However, the certifications in the 30 March⁽¹³⁹⁾ and 11 April⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ reports noted the tracking of helicopter crossings between the two countries, as reported by UN airfield monitors working at the civilian radar screens at Surcin airport near Belgrade. Regarding 26 tracks of likely helicopter flights reported to have been observed moving from Bosnia and Herzegovina into Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in March, the latter wrote on 11 April⁽¹⁴⁸⁾ that its extensive investigations could confirm only six helicopter flights, and that their purpose was to transport the critically wounded from the "Republic of Srpska": four were authorized by UNPROFOR; two were not, as the transportees were in a life-threatening condition.

The 25 radar contacts similarly noted between 2 and 7 April and on 29 April were the subject of an expert inquiry, whose broader aim was to attempt to resolve the issue of over 100 unexplained radar contacts reported since 9 October 1994 by UNPROFOR airfield monitors at Surcin. Inquiry findings, transmitted by the Co-Chairmen on 9 May,⁽¹⁴⁹⁾ noted that while the radar system was found to be fully serviceable and well-suited to its primary purpose, namely, air traffic control of the airspace of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), shortcomings were observed when used for detection of difficult targets flying at the limit of the radar's operational parameters and in the difficult terrain in the area where the majority of the unexplained traces had been observed. A detailed analysis gave rise to the suspicion that some unauthorized border crossings by slow-flying objects might have taken place in the past, requiring other evidence, however, to prove or disprove each case conclusively. Apart from the unexplained trace on 29 April, which could not be reviewed by the inquiry, the flights appeared to have stopped. The conclusion was that the ICFY Mission, particularly at its staffing level, did not have the capability to monitor effectively the closure of the air border.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (21 April, 5 July, 15 September)

The Security Council met on three other occasions in order to consider the extension or termination of the suspension of sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), on the basis of the reports of the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee. With the exception of the third meeting, the representative of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), at his request, was again invited to address the Council.

The Council met on 21 April, just before the end of the second 100-day suspension period. Before it was the report on developments during the first 10 days of April,⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ supplementing the three previous 30-day reports and indicating confiscations by the Yugoslav authorities of, among other items, significant tons of petrol and diesel fuel, construction materials, cigarettes, food and other goods. On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 988(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, and in particular resolution 943(1994) of 23 September 1994 and resolution 970(1995) of 12 January 1995,

Noting the measures taken by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), as described in the annex to the Secretary-General's letter of 31 March 1995 and in the annex to the Secretary-General's letter of 13 April 1995, to maintain the closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs, and noting that those measures were a necessary condition for the adoption of the present resolution,

Concerned, however, about reports suggesting that helicopter flights may have crossed the border between the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and noting that an investigation of those reports is being undertaken by the Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY),

Noting with satisfaction that the cooperation of the ICFY Mission with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continues to be good and stressing the importance of effective closure by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and of further efforts by them to enhance the effectiveness of that closure, including by the prosecution of persons suspected of violating measures to that end and by sealing border crossing points as requested by the ICFY Mission,

Expressing appreciation for the work of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the ICFY and of the ICFY

Mission to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Noting that paragraph 9 of resolution 757(1992) of 30 May 1992 remains in force,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the restrictions and other measures referred to in paragraph 1 of resolution 943(1994) shall be suspended until 5 July 1995;

2. Confirms that commodities and products, including fuel beyond immediate needs for a flight or ferry voyage taking into account internationally recognized safety requirements, shall not be carried on flights and ferry services permitted in accordance with paragraph 1 above, except in accordance with the provisions of relevant resolutions and in conformity with the procedures of the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) of 15 December 1991; and that if a need is established for the supply of additional fuel for the operation of flights permitted in accordance with paragraph 1 above, the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) shall consider such applications on a case-by-case basis;

3. Reminds States of the importance of strict enforcement of measures imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter and calls upon all States which allow flights or ferry services permitted in accordance with paragraph 1 above from their territories or using their flag vessels or aircraft to report to the Committee established by resolution 724(1991) on the controls adopted by them to implement such measures in earlier relevant resolutions;

4. Calls upon all States and others concerned to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and international borders of all States in the region;

5. Underlines the importance it attaches to the work of the ICFY Mission, expresses its concern that a shortage of resources hampers the effectiveness of that work, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council within 30 days of the adoption of the present resolution on measures to increase the effectiveness of the work of the ICFY Mission, including on the question of helicopter flights;

Calls on the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to cooperate fully with the ICFY Mission, in particular in investigating alleged breaches of the closure of the border, whether by land or by air, between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and ensuring the continued closure of that border;

8. Stresses the importance it attaches to a thorough investigation of reports that helicopter flights may have crossed the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina; calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to comply with their commitment to cooperate fully in that investigation; and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the outcome of the investigation;

9. Reaffirms its decision that import to, export from and transshipment through the United Nations Protected Areas in the Republic of Croatia and those areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, with the exception of essential humanitarian supplies including medical supplies and foodstuffs distributed by international humanitarian agencies, shall be permitted only with proper authorization from the Government of the Republic of Croatia or the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina respectively;

10. Encourages the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to reinstate the severance of international telecommunication links between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces which they instituted in August 1994;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council immediately if he has evidence, including from the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee, that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are not implementing their decision to close the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

16. Encourages the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee to ensure that the ICFY Mission keep the Government of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) fully informed about the findings of the ICFY Mission;

17. Decides to keep the situation closely under review and to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the light of further progress in the situation;

18. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The representative of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) reiterated that the Council, by opting to maintain the greatest part of the comprehensive sanctions imposed on his country, was continuing its policy of punishing the Serbian and Montenegrin people for things they neither bore responsibility for nor had any control over—this, despite appeals by numerous States underscoring the superfluity of the sanctions, their ineffectual nature and their devastating effect on the economy, not only of his country but also of the whole of south-eastern Europe. None the less, he assured the Council that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) would continue to pursue the option of a peaceful and negotiated settlement of the crisis in the former Yugoslavia.

China recalled that all along it had been against the introduction of mandatory measures in connection with the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, for it was a proven fact that sanctions or pressure in no way helped resolve any issue but rather complicated and perpetuated it.

The Russian Federation stated that it was beyond its understanding as to why the Council had cut back the suspension period to 75 days (paragraph 1). It characterized as puzzling the resolution's provisions making fresh demands on Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), as illustrated by the harsh fuel restrictions for that country's flights and ferry voyages (paragraph 2), by linking its commitment to close its border with Bosnia and Herzegovina to the situation on its border with Croatia (paragraph 9), and by calling on it to reinstate the severance of telecommunication links with the Bosnian Serbs (paragraph 10). The Russian Federation hoped that in the future the Council would be guided in its decisions by the interests of achieving a comprehensive and truly just settlement in the former Yugoslavia.

The Council met again on 5 July, at the end of the 75-day suspension period, to consider its extension. Before it were the Co-Chairmen's report of 23 June⁽¹⁴²⁾ and a 5 July letter⁽¹⁵⁰⁾ from Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia stressing the utmost importance they attached to the need for timely and mutual recognition between all successor States of the former Yugoslavia within their internationally recognized borders. At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 1003(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, and in particular resolution 943(1994) of 23 September 1994, resolution 970(1995) of 12 January 1995 and resolution 988(1995) of 21 April 1995,

Calling upon all States and others concerned to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and international borders of all States in the region,

Noting the measures taken by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular those detailed in the annex to the Secretary-General's letter of 25 June 1995 to the President of the Security Council, to maintain the effective closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs and noting with satisfaction that the cooperation of the Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY) with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continues to be good,

Reaffirming the importance of further efforts by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to enhance the effectiveness of the closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs,

Underlining the particular importance it attaches to there being no provision of military assistance, in terms of finance, equipment, coordination of air defences or recruitment of troops, to the Bosnian Serb forces,

Expressing appreciation for the work of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the ICFY and of the ICFY Mission to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and underlining the importance of the necessary resources being made available so as to strengthen the ICFY Mission's capacity to carry out its tasks,

Noting with satisfaction that the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) of 15 December 1991 has adopted streamlined procedures for expediting its consideration of applications concerning legitimate humanitarian assistance, as well as a number of measures facilitating legitimate transshipments via the Danube River,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the restrictions and other measures referred to in paragraph 1 of resolution 943(1994) shall be suspended until 18 September 1995;

2. Decides also that the arrangements referred to in paragraphs 13, 14 and 15 of resolution 988(1995) shall continue to apply;

3. Renews its call for early mutual recognition between the States of the former Yugoslavia within their internationally recognized borders, recognition between the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) being an important first step, and urges the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to take it;

4. Reaffirms its decision to keep the situation closely under review and to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the light of further progress in the situation;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

The representative of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) stated that if the Council truly wished to open the road towards peace in the former Yugoslavia, it must make a resolute move and lift the sanctions against his country. Such a move would undermine the position of extremists in all camps who used the sanctions as a pretext to pursue the war option. He described as absolutely false the view that by lifting the sanctions against his country the international community would lose its leverage and influence on the policies of Belgrade. He reasoned that if the sanctions were lifted, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) would become a full and equal partner in the peace process and could even more effectively contribute to the attainment of a just and lasting settlement in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Russian Federation disagreed with the arbitrary attachment of irrelevant elements to the resolutions on the limited sanctions relief, such as the (fifth) preambular paragraph underlining the importance of not providing military assistance in the form of finance, equipment and coordination of air defences to the Bosnian Serbs. Application of that injunction to only one party, instead of to all, inevitably led to its interpretation as application of a double standard, with all of its negative consequences. The Russian Federation also disagreed with the call for mutual recognition between the States of the former Yugoslavia, with the recognition between Bosnia and Herzegovina and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) as a first step (paragraph 3).

On 15 September, three days before the expiry of the 75-day period of limited sanctions relief, the Council met in the light of the 6 September report of the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee.⁽¹⁴⁴⁾ The Council adopted resolution 1015(1995) extending the next suspension period to six months.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, and in particular resolutions 943(1994) of 23 September 1994, 970(1995) of 12 January 1995, 988(1995) of 21 April 1995 and 1003(1995) of 5 July 1995,

Calling upon all States and others concerned to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and international borders of all States in the region,

Noting the measures taken by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular those detailed in the annex to the Secretary-General's letter of 6 September 1995 to the President of the Security Council, to maintain the effective closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs and noting with satisfaction that the cooperation of the Mission of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY) with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continues to be generally good,

Reaffirming the importance of further efforts by the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to enhance the effectiveness of the closure of the international border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina with respect to all goods except foodstuffs, medical supplies and clothing for essential humanitarian needs,

Expressing appreciation for the work of the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the ICFY and of the ICFY Mission to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and underlining the importance of the necessary resources being made available so as to strengthen the ICFY Mission's capacity to carry out its tasks,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the restrictions and other measures referred to in paragraph 1 of resolution 943(1994) shall be suspended until 18 March 1996;

2. Decides also that the arrangements referred to in paragraphs 13, 14 and 15 of resolution 988(1995) shall continue to apply;

3. Reaffirms its decision to keep the situation closely under review and to consider further steps with regard to measures applicable to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in the light of further progress in the situation;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Violations of human rights and international humanitarian law

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (10 August)

The Security Council met on 10 August in connection with reports regarding the treatment of the civilian populations of Srebrenica and Zepa in the wake of the Bosnian Serb occupation in July of those two safe areas. The Council had before it communications from Kazakhstan⁽¹⁵¹⁾ and the Sudan⁽¹⁵²⁾ concerning recent events in those two areas in particular and in Bosnia and Herzegovina in general.

In statements before the Council, Bosnia and Herzegovina spoke of the expulsion of some 60,000 civilians from Srebrenica and Zepa. The United States estimated that, of those, about 10,000 from Srebrenica and 3,000 from Zepa were missing and unaccounted for, while Germany stated that the fate of some 7,000 to 8,000 male Bosnian Muslims was still unknown and that, so far, only 164 detainees from Srebrenica and 44 from Zepa had been registered by ICRC.

At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 1010(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier relevant resolutions, and reaffirming its resolution 1004(1995) of 12 July 1995,

Reaffirming also the statements of its President of 20 and 25 July 1995, and deeply concerned that the demands set out therein have not been fully complied with by the Bosnian Serb party,

Reiterating the unacceptability of the violation of the safe areas of Srebrenica and Zepa by Bosnian Serb forces,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Affirming its commitment to the search for an overall negotiated settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia ensuring the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all the States there within their internationally recognized borders, and stressing the importance it attaches to the mutual recognition thereof,

Deeply concerned at reports of grave violations of international humanitarian law in and around Srebrenica and at the fact that many of the former inhabitants of Srebrenica cannot be accounted for,

Concerned also at the plight of the civilian population and other persons protected under international humanitarian law, originating in the Zepa area,

Expressing its strong support for the efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in seeking access to displaced persons and condemning the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with their commitments to the ICRC in respect of such access,

1. Demands that the Bosnian Serb party give immediate access for representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the ICRC and other international agencies to persons displaced from Srebrenica and Zepa who are within the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, and that the Bosnian Serb party permit representatives of the ICRC to visit and register any persons detained against their will, including any members of the forces of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

2. Also demands that the Bosnian Serb party respect fully the rights of all such persons and ensure their safety, and urges that any persons detained be released;

3. Reiterates that all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council as soon as possible, and no later than 1 September 1995, with any information available to United Nations personnel regarding compliance with this resolution and concerning violations of international humanitarian law;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1010(1995)

10 August 1995 Meeting 3564 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/677).

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to the Security Council resolution above, the Secretary-General submitted a report on 30 August summarizing information gathered mainly by UNPROFOR, UNHCR and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by ICRC and the United States Government.⁽¹⁵³⁾ It indicated that investigators for the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 had been dispatched to the field, including Tuzla, to interview refugees and relevant military personnel. The information focused on questions of access, detention and violations of international humanitarian law following the fall of Srebrenica and Zepa. (See also PART THREE, Chapter III.)

(Annexed to the report was a chronology of events, beginning with the intensive bombardment of Srebrenica on 6 July and ending with the fall of Zepa and subsequent forced evacuation, by the Bosnian Serb forces, of several thousands of its residents to collective centres in the Zenica region from 25 to 27 July.)

According to the report, a fact-finding mission of the civil affairs component of UNPF, which had spent eight days in the Tuzla area working in conjunction with the Centre for Human Rights of the UN Secretariat, had gathered substantial evidence indicating the perpetration in Srebrenica of three categories of violations of international humanitarian law: arbitrary detention, abductions and disappearances; summary executions; and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment. The civil affairs mission to Zepa (25-30 July) identified looting and the reported demolition of a mosque, and confirmed the forced evacuation of some 4,800 Zepaljaci, mostly women and children, to the Zenica region via Kladanj (near the confrontation line north-west of Srebrenica), on the way to which 36 males of draft age had been taken off the convoys. Another 1,500 males of draft age reportedly escaped to the surrounding woods.

UNHCR presented unconfirmed reports of rape, robbery, executions, the separation of men from their families, and the shelling of civilians. From the testimony gathered, it appeared that between 6,000 and 8,000 men who began their escape from Srebrenica to Tuzla remained unaccounted for. The Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights confirmed much of the information presented by UNPROFOR; while he could not fully verify the allegations of mass executions, he provided pieces of information that appeared to be of relevance.

ICRC was granted access to the Bosnian Serb detention camps in Batkovic, where it registered 164 detained persons from Srebrenica, and in Rogatica (south of Zepa), where it registered 44 prisoners from Zepa. It evacuated 88 wounded from Bratunac and Potocari to Tuzla, but was not allowed to evacuate another 23 wounded from Bratunac. Considering the latter group to be POWs, ICRC registered their identities for follow-up purposes.

Information gathered by the United States Government indicated credible estimates of missing persons varying between 6,000 and 12,000 for Srebrenica and 3,000 for Zepa, as well as eyewitness accounts of alleged mass executions and photographs showing, inter alia, large groups of persons being held in fields near Nova Kasaba and patches of freshly disturbed earth in those fields taken a few days later.

Despite repeated requests by the Special Representative, UNHCR, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, ICRC (which in the past had limited access) and other international agencies, the Bosnian Serb authorities refused them access to persons displaced from Srebrenica and Zepa who were within the Bosnian Serb-controlled areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Special Representative's request that UNPROFOR be allowed to investigate a report on the existence of mass graves near Srebrenica had also been denied. It had thus not been possible to collect first-hand information on the extent to which the Bosnian Serbs had respected the rights of all displaced persons and ensured their safety.

The Secretary-General said there was significant prima facie evidence, however, of violations of international humanitarian law during and after the Bosnian Serb offensive on Srebrenica. The Council, he said, might therefore wish to reiterate its urgent call for full access to include a possible impartial international investigation to take place. However, he stressed that access weeks or months after the occurrence of the events cited could not adequately substitute for monitoring and investigation during or immediately following those events. There was little doubt that sufficient time had elapsed to permit interested parties to tidy up much of the evidence that could have been used to substantiate and expand on the findings noted in the current report. Access remained a crucial step in terms of establishing the full extent of violations of humanitarian law and human rights, and in addressing any persistent abuses, he concluded.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (7 September, 12 October, 9 November)

In the light of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council met on 7 September and, after consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the following statement⁽¹⁵⁴⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 30 August 1995 submitted pursuant to its resolution 1010(1995) of 10 August 1995.

The Security Council strongly condemns the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with the demands contained in resolution 1010(1995). The Bosnian Serb party's refusal to cooperate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) cannot but reinforce the deep concern expressed in that resolution and in previous resolutions and statements.

The Security Council stresses its determination that the fate of persons displaced from Srebrenica and Zepa be established. It reaffirms its demands to the Bosnian Serb party to give immediate access for representatives of the UNHCR, the ICRC and other international agencies to such persons who are within the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces, and to permit representatives of the ICRC to visit and register any persons detained against their will.

The Security Council also reaffirms its demands to the Bosnian Serb party to respect fully the rights of all such persons, to ensure their safety and to release them.

The Security Council reiterates that all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts.

The Security Council takes note of the investigations which are being carried out by the International Tribunal established pursuant to its resolution 827(1993). The Council reiterates in this context that all States shall cooperate fully with the Tribunal and its organs, including by providing access to sites the Tribunal deems important for its investigations.

The Security Council requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts and to report to the Council no later than 6 October 1995 regarding compliance with resolution 1010(1995) and any further relevant information that may become available.

The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3572.

In the presidential statement of 12 October,⁽¹¹⁷⁾ welcoming the 5 October cease-fire, the Council reiterated its strong condemnation of all practices of ethnic cleansing by whomsoever committed; urged the Bosnian parties to respect fully the rights of all communities, including their right to remain where they were or to return to their homes in safety; again demanded that the Bosnian Serb party grant immediate and unimpeded access for UN personnel and ICRC to all the areas of concern; and reaffirmed that those who had committed or had ordered the commission of violations of international humanitarian law would be held individually responsible for them.

By resolution 1019(1995) of 9 November, the Council reaffirmed its demand that the Bosnian Serb party grant unimpeded access to persons displaced or detained or reported missing from Srebrenica and Zepa, among other places, and that it respect the rights of all such persons, ensure their safety and release them immediately. It further demanded that all detention camps throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina be closed immediately.

Communications. On 31 October, Bosnia and Herzegovina noted that the Netherlands had properly undertaken an inquiry into the response of its troops who were on watch when the Bosnian Serbs overran Srebrenica and Zepa.⁽¹⁵⁵⁾ It enjoined the Security Council to undertake its own review of why its resolutions had been undermined—for the sake of its own credibility, if not of the thousands of victims who had been massacred or raped or forcibly relocated in pursuit of the policy of ethnic cleansing. The Netherlands report, it said, "should raise serious questions about the conduct of United Nations-mandated officials". Bosnia and Herzegovina called on the Council to "pay special heed to glaring contradictions" in the information provided to it by some of the most senior UNPROFOR officials.

Bosnia and Herzegovina further stated on 31 October that it was essential for the Council to remind all who were investigating the various aspects of the fall of Srebrenica and Zepa that it was a violation of international humanitarian law not only to commit war crimes but also to cover up evidence of their commission.⁽¹⁵⁶⁾ In particular, "shielding perpetrators, concealing evidence or even not making relevant information available" was "acquiescing or abetting in the crimes", it stated.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (9 November)

The Security Council met on 9 November and, ascertaining the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with its demands, including those contained in the presidential statements of 7 September and 12 October (and in the light of simultaneous reports of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Croatia), adopted resolution 1019(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its earlier resolutions on the situation in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and reaffirming its resolutions 1004(1995) of 12 July 1995 and 1010(1995) of 10 August 1995, and the statements of its President of 7 September 1995 and 12 October 1995, and deeply concerned that despite repeated calls that it should do so, the Bosnian Serb party has not complied with the demands contained therein,

Gravely concerned at reports, including by the representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, of grave violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in and around Srebrenica, and in the areas of Banja Luka and Sanski Most, including reports of mass murder, unlawful detention and forced labour, rape, and deportation of civilians,

Recalling also all its earlier relevant resolutions on the situation in the Republic of Croatia, and reaffirming its resolution 1009(1995) of 10 August 1995, and the statements of its President of 7 September 1995 and of 3 October 1995,

Deeply concerned at reports, including by UNCRO and United Nations humanitarian agencies, of serious violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the former sectors West, North and South, in the Republic of Croatia, including burning of houses, looting of property, and killings of civilians,

Reiterating its strong support for the efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in seeking access to displaced persons and to persons detained or reported missing and condemning in the strongest possible terms the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with their commitments in respect of such access.

Commending the efforts of the United Nations peace forces and other United Nations personnel in the former Yugoslavia, in particular in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, despite extreme difficulties,

Taking note of the letter to the President of the Security Council from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia of 31 October 1995,

Expressing its strong support for the work of the International Tribunal established pursuant to its resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993,

1. Condemns in the strongest possible terms all violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and demands that all concerned comply fully with their obligations in this regard;

2. Reaffirms its demand that the Bosnian Serb party give immediate and unimpeded access to representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the ICRC and other international agencies to persons displaced and to persons detained or reported missing from Srebrenica, Zepa, and the regions of Banja Luka and Sanski Most who are within the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces and that the Bosnian Serb party permit representatives of the ICRC (i) to visit and register any persons detained against their will, whether civilians or members of the forces of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and (ii) to have access to any site it may deem important;

3. Reaffirms also its demand that the Bosnian Serb party respect fully the rights of all such persons, ensure their safety, and release them immediately;

4. Reaffirms further the obligation on all the parties to ensure the complete freedom of movement of personnel of the United Nations and other relevant international organizations throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina at all times;

5. Demands that all detention camps throughout the territory of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina should be immediately closed;

6. Reaffirms its demand that the Government of the Republic of Croatia take urgent measures to put an end to violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights, and investigate all reports of such violations so that those responsible in respect of such acts be judged and punished;

7. Reiterates its demand that the Government of the Republic of Croatia respect fully the rights of the local Serb population including their right to remain or return in safety and reiterates also its call upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to lift any time-limits placed on the return of refugees to Croatia to reclaim their property;

8. Demands that all States, in particular those in the region of the former Yugoslavia, and all parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, comply fully and in good faith with the obligations contained in paragraph 4 of resolution 827(1993) to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal established pursuant to that resolution, including by providing access to individuals and sites the Tribunal deems important for its investigations and by complying with requests for assistance or orders issued by a trial chamber under article 29 of the Statute of the Tribunal, and calls upon them to allow the establishment of offices of the Tribunal;

9. Demands that all parties, and in particular the Bosnian Serb party, refrain from any action intended to destroy, alter, conceal or damage any evidence of violations of international humanitarian law and that they preserve such evidence;

10. Reaffirms its support for the actions of the United Nations peace forces, and other United Nations personnel, including the great importance of their contribution in the humanitarian field, and demands that all parties fully ensure their safety and cooperate fully with them;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council as soon as possible a written report based on all information available to the United Nations concerning recent violations of international humanitarian law in the areas of Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most;

Report of the Secretary-General. Responding to the Security Council's request, the Secretary-General submitted a report on 27 November concerning recent violations of international humanitarian law in Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most.⁽¹⁵⁷⁾ The report gave an overview of the current state of information on the key issues of missing persons, executions and the involvement of Bosnian Serb leaders and Serbian paramilitary forces, based on information available to the United Nations, UNHCR, UNPF and UNPROFOR. It pointed out, however, that UN personnel had had very limited access to the four areas in question.

The report stated that the Bosnian Serb offensive on Srebrenica from 6 to 11 July had led to the displacement of the entire Bosnian Muslim community there. The Bosnian Serb authorities organized the forcible evacuation of some 25,000 people on a convoy of buses and trucks. Between 10,000 and 15,000 persons, mostly men, left Srebrenica on foot, but the exact number of those who had arrived safely in Bosnian Government-held territory was not known. Most estimates put the number of Srebrenica's population before the offensive at between 38,000 and 40,000, although UNHCR's estimate for food distribution purposes was 42,600. The best current estimate of the number of missing persons, derived from all available information including ICRC data, was perhaps between 3,500 and 5,500.

The report indicated the existence of substantial evidence to support the conclusion that an unknown number of Bosnian Muslim men had been executed by Bosnian Serb soldiers. Such evidence fell into four categories: statements by eyewitnesses of executions, statements by UNPROFOR's Netherlands soldiers present in Srebrenica during the Bosnian Serb offensive, eyewitness reports of indirect evidence of executions (sightings of groups of detained persons and corpses), and other corroborative evidence (photographs of alleged mass graves and material evidence found at alleged execution sites). Witnesses and others mentioned several execution sites in the Srebrenica area: Nova Kasaba-Konjevic Polje (Kaldrumica), Kravica, Rasica Gai, Zabrde, Karakaj, Bratunac and Potocari.

Evidence further pointed to the involvement in those executions of Bosnian Serb leaders, including General Ratko Mladic, and of paramilitary forces (Drina Wolves, Seselj Militia, Specialna Policia, White Eagles, Arkan Tigers, Krajina Serbs). According to UN military observers, paramilitary leader Zeljko Raznatovic ("Arkan") and his troops had been positively identified at the scene of the evacuation of refugees in Potocari on 13 July. Other reports pointed to the involvement of paramilitary forces and soldiers from Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

ICRC reported it had had access to 793 Bosnian Muslims who had fled Zepa into Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), 10 per cent of whom, by UNHCR estimates, came from Srebrenica. As at the reporting date, 342 people were in detention in Mitrovo Polje and 450 in Slivovica, in the Uzice region. There were no reliable figures for missing persons from Zepa. UN observers in Zepa reported the presence of a large number of foreign mercenaries, including Greeks and Russians, among the Bosnian Serb forces. There were also reports that many buses used in the forcible evacuation of Zepa bore licence plates of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

In northern Bosnia and Herzegovina, at least 26,000 Croats and Muslims were evicted from Banja Luka in two waves. The first took place during August and September, during which some 14,000 Croats and 6,000 Muslims crossed into Croatia via Srbac-Davor on the Sava River. That wave of forced evictions was the result of the massive influx into the Banja Luka area of Bosnian Serbs in July (14,000), of Croatian Serbs in August (150,000), and of Bosnian Serbs in mid-September (127,000), who by their presence and, in some cases, their acts, exerted pressure on the Croats and Muslims to leave. The second wave of evictions occurred in October, when more than 6,000 Bosnian Muslims were expelled from their homes in the Bosnian Serb-held territories of Banja Luka, Bjeljina, Bosanska Dubica, Bosanski Novi, Doboj, Prijedor and Sanski Most, and forced to travel to Bosnian Government-held territory.

By all accounts, the persons reported as missing from those areas were males separated from their families, taken from convoys during expulsions, conscripted into forced labour, or summarily executed; others were the elderly who had died during the expulsions, most likely from exhaustion. In all, the missing numbered between 1,200 and 2,000. In meetings with United States Assistant Secretary of State John Shattuck in early November, Bosnian Serb authorities conceded that there were approximately 400 Bosnians missing from the Banja Luka area, and that another 1,000 had been conscripted for forced labour or detained or were "homeless".

The presence of Arkan paramilitary forces and, to a lesser extent, of Seselj units was observed in Sanski Most in September, where through harassment, killings and rape they provoked massive expulsions. As those forces moved to Bosanski Novi at the beginning of October, the attitude of the resident Serbs towards the Bosnian Muslims changed from friendly to hostile.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (21 December)

In the light of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council met on 21 December and adopted resolution 1034(1995).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its earlier relevant resolutions on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including its resolution 1019(1995) of 9 November 1995, and condemning the Bosnian Serb party's failure, despite repeated calls that it should do so, to comply with the demands contained therein,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General pursuant to resolution 1019(1995) on violations of international humanitarian law in the areas of Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most of 27 November 1995,

Gravely concerned at the information contained in the above-mentioned report that there is overwhelming evidence of a consistent pattern of summary executions, rape, mass expulsion, arbitrary detentions, forced labour and large-scale disappearances,

Reiterating its strong support for the work of the International Tribunal established pursuant to its resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993,

Noting that the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto initialled at Dayton, Ohio, on 21 November 1995 provides that no person who is serving a sentence imposed by the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, and no person who is under indictment by the Tribunal and who has failed to comply with an order to appear before the Tribunal, may stand as a candidate or hold any appointive, elective or other public office in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Condemning the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with their commitments in respect of giving access to displaced persons and to persons detained or reported missing,

Reiterating its concern expressed in the statement of its President of 7 December 1995,

Deeply concerned by the plight of hundreds of thousands of refugees and displaced persons as a result of hostilities in the former Yugoslavia,

1. Strongly condemns all violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and demands that all concerned comply fully with their obligations in this regard, and reiterates that all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

2. Condemns in particular in the strongest possible terms the violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights by Bosnian Serb and paramilitary forces in the areas of Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most as described in the report of the Secretary-General of 27 November 1995 and showing a consistent pattern of summary executions, rape, mass expulsions, arbitrary detentions, forced labour and large-scale disappearances;

3. Notes with the utmost concern the substantial evidence referred to in the report of the Secretary-General of 27 November 1995 that an unknown but large number of men in the area of Srebrenica, namely in Nova Kasaba-Konjevic Polje (Kaldrumica), Kravice, Rasica Gai, Zabrde and two sites in Karakaj, and possibly also in Bratunac and Potocari, have been summarily executed by Bosnian Serb and paramilitary forces and condemns in the strongest terms the commission of such acts;

4. Reiterates its strong support for the efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in seeking access to displaced persons and to persons detained or reported missing and calls on all parties to comply with their commitments in respect of such access;

5. Reaffirms its demand that the Bosnian Serb party give immediate and unimpeded access to representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the ICRC and other international agencies to persons displaced and to persons detained or reported missing from Srebrenica, Zepa and the regions of Banja Luka and Sanski Most who are within the areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces and that the Bosnian Serb party permit representatives of the ICRC (i) to visit and register any persons detained against their will, whether civilians or members of the forces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and (ii) to have access to any site it may deem important;

6. Affirms that the violations of humanitarian law and human rights in the areas of Srebrenica, Zepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most from July to October 1995 must be fully and properly investigated by the relevant United Nations and other international organizations and institutions;

7. Takes note that the International Tribunal established pursuant to resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993 issued on 16 November 1995 indictments against the Bosnian Serb leaders Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic for their direct and individual responsibilities for the atrocities committed against the Bosnian Muslim population of Srebrenica in July 1995;

8. Reaffirms its demand that the Bosnian Serb party give immediate and unrestricted access to the areas in question, including for the purpose of the investigation of the atrocities, to representatives of the relevant United Nations and other international organizations and institutions, including the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights;

9. Underlines in particular the urgent necessity for all the parties to enable the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal to gather effectively and swiftly the evidence necessary for the Tribunal to perform its task;

10. Stresses the obligations of all the parties to cooperate with and provide unrestricted access to the relevant United Nations and other international organizations and institutions so as to facilitate their investigations and takes note of their commitment under the Peace Agreement in this regard;

11. Reiterates its demand that all parties, and in particular the Bosnian Serb party, refrain from any action intended to destroy, alter, conceal or damage any evidence of violations of international humanitarian law and that they preserve such evidence;

12. Reiterates further its demand that all States, in particular those in the region of the former Yugoslavia, and all parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, comply fully and in good faith with the obligations contained in paragraph 4 of resolution 827(1993) to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and calls on them to create the conditions essential for the Tribunal to perform the task for which it has been created, including the establishment of offices of the Tribunal when the latter deems it necessary;

13. Reiterates its demand that all detention camps throughout the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina should be immediately closed;

14. Urges the parties to ensure full respect for the norms of international humanitarian law and of human rights of the civilian population, living in the areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina now under their control, which under the Peace Agreement will be transferred to another party;

15. Condemns the widespread looting and destruction of houses and other property, in particular by HVO forces in the area of Mrkonjic Grad and Sipovo, and demands that all sides immediately stop such action, investigate them and make sure that those who violated the law be held individually responsible in respect of such acts;

16. Demands that all sides refrain from laying mines, in particular in those areas now under their control, which under the Peace Agreement will be transferred to another party;

17. Urges Member States to continue to assist the efforts of the United Nations, humanitarian agencies and non-governmental organizations under way in the former Yugoslavia to alleviate the plight of hundreds of thousands of refugees and displaced persons;

18. Also urges all the parties to the conflicts in the territory of the former Yugoslavia to fully cooperate with these efforts with the view to create conditions conducive to the repatriation and return of refugees and displaced persons in safety and dignity;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed on progress reached in the investigation of the violations of international humanitarian law referred to in the report mentioned above;

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications. Twice during the year, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) transmitted to the Secretary-General information gathered by its Committee for the Collection of Data on Crimes Committed against Humanity and International Law. The first, dated 15 March, described in detail the forensic, medical and psychiatric aspects of the torture of Serbs in Bosniac-Croat detention camps.⁽¹⁵⁸⁾ The second, dated 23 August, concerned the genocidal practices of the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina against the Serb population in the country.⁽¹⁵⁹⁾

Humanitarian assistance

In their first (January-June) biannual report of 1995,⁽¹⁶⁰⁾ the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee noted that, following the entry into force on 1 January 1995 of the 1994 cessation-of-hostilities agreement,⁽¹⁾ the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bosnian Serb party agreed on 23 January 1995 to reopen the routes across the Sarajevo airport to civilian traffic, at the latest by 1 February. The routes were also to be used by UNHCR and other UN bodies (UNICEF, WFP, Office of the Coordinator for Sarajevo) and specialized agencies (FAO, UNESCO, WHO), ICRC and local humanitarian organizations assisting in normalizing life in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The parties also agreed to provide increased freedom of movement for Sarajevans, further POW exchanges in line with the ICRC plan, medical evacuations from Gorazde and freedom of residence.

Thus, UNHCR land convoys and airlifts regularly reached Sarajevo, Tuzla, Zenica and the eastern enclaves in quantities to permit stockpiling of contingency supplies for Sarajevo and other areas in central Bosnia. Besides food and medical supplies, assistance included seed fertilizers and pesticides for the planting season in March, as well as firewood for Sarajevo.

However, a breakdown in March of the cessation-of-hostilities agreement led to a deterioration of the security situation in the country in general and in Sarajevo in particular, causing the intermittent closure of the "blue routes" across Sarajevo airport, including the Mount Igman route, and an intermittent suspension of the humanitarian airlift. The NATO air strikes on 25 and 26 May and the retaliatory detention of UNPROFOR troops in Bosnian Serb custody led to an almost complete blockade of UNHCR operations in the Bosnian Serb-held territories and in the eastern enclaves and to a halt of full access to Sarajevo.

UNHCR reported it had encountered repeated obstructions posed by the escalating hostilities or by the Bosnian Serb party, which continually withheld convoy clearance and which, in rejecting the weekly Metkovic-Sarajevo convoy plan at the beginning of March, demanded 50 per cent of humanitarian deliveries—a significant increase from its allotted 23 per cent based on need. As to assistance to the Bihac pocket, to which virtually all supplies had been blocked since May 1994,⁽¹⁶¹⁾ two convoys arrived separately in the southern part of the pocket on 25 May and 29 June; a third convoy for the area obtained clearance to proceed on 30 June. The last convoy to reach Gorazde in the reporting period was on 20 May; that which reached Zepa on 21 June was the first since 24 May.

Through the joint UNHCR/IOM (International Organization for Migration) medical evacuation programme for Bosnia and Herzegovina, 51 patients were evacuated to third countries for medical treatment during the period.

In cooperation with the UNPROFOR civil affairs unit, UNHCR held numerous meetings with the Bosnian Serb authorities in Banja Luka to call a halt to the continuous pressure placed on the Bosnian Muslim and Croat minorities to leave the area. That pressure took the form of evictions, house bombings, midnight shooting raids, arrests and interrogations, telephone calls, veiled threats, harassment on the streets, physical and verbal assaults of women and students, and the rounding up of males between the ages of 17 and 70 to perform civilian work, often in the first and second front lines—all of which grew worse with the influx in May of approximately 10,000 Croatian Serb refugees from Western Slavonia into Bosnian Serb-controlled territory, especially in the Banja Luka region, where some 6,000 to 7,000 such refugees were registered.

According to the ICFY Co-Chairmen's second (July-December) biannual report,⁽¹⁶²⁾ the humanitarian situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina reached crisis proportions during the reporting period owing to the continuous and unprecedented influx of refugees and displaced persons. The fall on 11 and 25 July of the eastern enclaves of Srebrenica and Zepa to the Bosnian Serb forces resulted in the exodus of some 36,000 persons into Tuzla and Zenica. Responding to this emergency, UNHCR formed a committee to coordinate relief action and, with the help of UNPROFOR and a number of NGOs, set up transit camps at Tuzla airbase and in Zenica, where refugees were registered and supplied with emergency items. Also assisted were an estimated 14,000 Bosnian Serbs fleeing to the northern part of the country from Glamoc and Grahovo (directly south of Banja Luka), which fell in late July to the combined forces of the Croatian Defence Council and Croatian Army.

UNHCR temporarily redeployed a number of its field staff to Banja Luka to assist the thousands of Krajina Serbs who had taken refuge there in early August. With the help of two helicopters made available by the United Kingdom, relief supplies were transported from Zagreb to Banja Luka. Humanitarian activities in Banja Luka were hampered, however, by repeated hijackings at gunpoint, harassment and banditry.

The massive influx of Serb refugees into Banja Luka led to a dramatic deterioration of the plight of the resident Bosnian Muslim and Croat minorities, driving some 22,000 of them to Croatia. UNHCR extended full support to that country in providing assistance to those refugees, including shelter for the Bosnian Muslim refugees at UNCRO bases at Pustara and Novska in Western Slavonia. In addition, UNHCR took up with Croatia the issue of keeping its doors open to both Bosnian ethnic groups and refraining from selecting any of them for forcible repatriation.

Following the recapture of the Bihac region by the Bosnian Army on 7 August, UNHCR established a permanent presence at a refugee centre in the border town of Kuplensko in Croatia, where some 20,000 refugees from Velika Kladusa and Cazin, loyal to the Bosnian Muslim rebel leader Fikret Abdic,⁽¹⁾ were encamped. Together with other humanitarian agencies, UNHCR provided those refugees with food, shelter, water, sanitation and medical assistance and set in motion an operation to get them through the winter. Through a bus service instituted on 30 October, UNHCR had enabled the voluntary return of more than 4,200 of those refugees to their homes by mid-December.

Humanitarian assistance to Sarajevo—which was so irregular during the summer months that only 15 per cent of the target amount was delivered in June, 30 per cent in July and 45 per cent in August—improved with the reopening of the "blue routes" and the resumption on 16 September of the airlift.

Communications. Bosnia and Herzegovina informed the Secretary-General on 6 August that as many as 120,000 residents of the former Serb-occupied territories of Croatia were crossing into Bosnia and Herzegovina, some with the assistance of UN authorities.⁽¹⁶³⁾ Whereas it supported UN action providing for the welfare of those affected by war, it could neither accept nor provide for those incoming refugees, it said, especially as Croatia had guaranteed them full security and humanitarian assistance, consistent with that country's desire to reintegrate the former Serb-occupied territories with maximum respect for human and civil rights. Bosnia and Herzegovina stressed that a new influx of Serb paramilitaries, who were among those crossing into the country, posed a threat to non-Serb communities in Serb-occupied Bosnia and thus would significantly contribute to the deterioration of the situation in those communities.

On 7 August, Bosnia and Herzegovina expressed reservations on the agreement between Croatia and UNCRO on temporary measures intended to alleviate the hardships of the Serb residents leaving northern and southern Krajina, stressing that any such agreement should be consistent with the territorial integrity and sovereignty and consent of Bosnia and Herzegovina.⁽¹⁶⁴⁾ The agreement had facilitated the influx of Serb paramilitaries, who could not proceed to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), which had closed its borders, thus leaving them at the disposal of the Bosnian Serb authorities who would likely arm them. In the circumstances, Bosnia and Herzegovina asked that its representatives be present at all relevant centres, processing points and border crossings and demanded that UNHCR list all persons crossing into its territory, the better to facilitate their resettlement in Croatia or in other voluntarily chosen destinations.

On 11 August, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) categorically rejected Bosnia and Herzegovina's letter, and characterized as ill-intentioned the allegation that the Yugoslav borders had been closed to male Serbs of fighting age leaving the Krajina region so that, having no choice but to seek refuge in Bosnian Serb-controlled territory, they would be integrated into and expand the army of "Republika Srpska".⁽¹⁶⁵⁾

Croatia

Major developments occurred in Croatia during 1995 in respect of the designated UN protected areas (UNPAs)—Sectors East, West, North and South—that drastically altered the situation on the ground and, hence, the UN presence in the country.

Following the January withdrawal of Croatia's consent to the extension of the UNPROFOR mandate beyond its 31 March expiration and Croatia's subsequent intention to negotiate with the United Nations for a separate international presence under a new mandate, the Security Council, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, restructured UNPROFOR so that its operation in Croatia was replaced by the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation (UNCRO), entrusted with a new mandate. On the basis of a plan agreed upon by the Government and the local Serb authorities for the mandate's implementation, the Council authorized the deployment of UNCRO on 28 April.

Three days later, on 1 May, the Croatian Army launched a military offensive in Western Slavonia (Sector West), completely wresting the area from Croatian Serb control by 4 May. Notwithstanding the concerted efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Former Yugoslavia and the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee to forestall a full-scale outbreak of hostilities, the Croatian Army mounted another military offensive on 4 August, this time on the Krajina region (Sectors North and South), and declared on 7 August its complete control of the region.

The forcible reintegration into Croatia of the three Sectors of the UNPAs, or what became known in 1994 as the occupied territories of Croatia, left only one sector of operation for UNCRO: Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Sirmium (Sector East), thus eliminating the need for a substantial UN presence in Croatia.

As a result of several weeks of shuttle diplomacy by the UN Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee, the Government and the local Serb leaders in Sector East agreed on 11 guiding basic principles. These governed the parties' subsequent negotiations in Croatia, where, on 12 November, they signed the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, providing for the peaceful reintegration of that region into Croatia.

By the terms of the Basic Agreement, the Council was requested to establish a transitional administration and authorize deployment of an international force to implement the Agreement's relevant provisions. On 21 December, the Council indicated its readiness to consider the option that both be components of a UN operation. Meanwhile, on 30 November, the Council decided that, to allow for the orderly establishment of such an operation, the mandate of UNCRO should terminate after an interim period on 15 January 1996.

During the remainder of the year, arrangements were under way for further discussions with the parties regarding the Agreement's implementation and the practical aspects of establishing a UN operation for that purpose.

UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia

Communications. Croatia's President, Franjo Tudjman, informed⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General on 12 January 1995 of his Government's decision not to agree to extend UNPROFOR's current mandate in Croatia beyond its expiration on 31 March, for the reason that the condition described by the Secretary-General himself in 1994⁽²⁾ remained unchanged; that is, UNPROFOR's inability to implement fully the UN peace-keeping plan for Croatia⁽³⁾ and all other additional tasks authorized by subsequent Security Council resolutions. President Tudjman went on to say that although UNPROFOR had played an important role in stopping violence and major conflicts in Croatia, it was indisputable that the current character of the UNPROFOR mission did not provide conditions necessary for establishing order and lasting peace in the country.

Croatia would arrange with the Special Representative for the withdrawal of UNPROFOR on 31 March, or no later than three months thereafter. Croatia was prepared, however, to conclude with the United Nations an agreement on Croatia's continued logistic support for UNPROFOR operations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the uninterrupted functioning of UNPROFOR headquarters at Zagreb.

In a 12 March statement, however, President Tudjman indicated his intention to negotiate a new Council-mandated international presence in Croatia⁽⁴⁾ that would: control its international borders with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and with Bosnia and Herzegovina at such principal crossing points not currently controlled by Croatia; control access and communications for UNPROFOR and other humanitarian operations to Bosnia and Herzegovina through territory not currently under Croatian control; and facilitate implementation of the 1994 cease-fire⁽⁵⁾ and economic agreements,⁽⁶⁾ as well as implementation of any future agreement aimed at the reintegration of Croatia. Pending the successful negotiation of the new international presence, for a limited period, the Government of Croatia agreed that UNPROFOR might continue to perform functions essential to the implementation of the 1994 agreements and to those related to its mandate in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 17 January to consider Croatia's 12 January letter. After consultations among its members, the Council authorized the President to make the following statement⁽⁷⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council, which has begun its consideration of the Secretary-General's report of 14 January 1995 (see below) submitted pursuant to resolution 947(1994), has learned with concern of the position adopted by the Republic of Croatia on the extension of the mandate of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in Croatia beyond 31 March 1995, as set out in the letter from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Croatia to the Secretary-General of 12 January 1995. It is particularly concerned about the wider implications of this development for the peace process throughout the former Yugoslavia.

The Security Council reiterates its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia within its internationally recognized borders. It understands the concerns of the Government about the lack of implementation of major provisions of the United Nations peace-keeping plan for Croatia. It will not accept the status quo becoming an indefinite situation. It believes, however, that UNPROFOR's continued presence in the Republic of Croatia is of vital importance for regional peace and security, and that the United Nations in general and UNPROFOR in particular have a positive role to play in achieving the further implementation of the peacekeeping plan and bringing about a settlement which ensures full respect for the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Croatia. It recalls the important role UNPROFOR plays in helping to sustain the cease-fire in Croatia, facilitating humanitarian activities and international relief work, and supporting implementation of the Economic Agreement of 2 December 1994.

It is in that perspective that the Security Council hopes that discussions over the weeks ahead will lead to a re-examination of the position now taken in relation to the continuing role of UNPROFOR in the Republic of Croatia.

Meanwhile, the Security Council calls upon all parties and others concerned to avoid any action or statement which might lead to an increase in tension. It welcomes the conclusion, under the auspices of the Co-Chairmen of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, of the Economic Agreement of 2 December 1994, and urges the parties to continue, and accelerate, its implementation; it notes the need for adequate international financial support, and encourages the international community to respond to this need. It calls for the intensification in the coming weeks of all these efforts to consolidate this achievement and to bring about a political settlement in Croatia, and it also calls upon the parties to cooperate with these efforts and to negotiate in earnest to that end.

The Security Council affirms its commitment to the search for an overall negotiated settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia ensuring the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all the States there within their internationally recognized borders, and stresses the importance it attaches to the mutual recognition thereof.

Meeting number. SC 3491.

The Council met again on 7 February, having received additional communications from Croatia on the subject. Among those were an 18 January letter fixing the date of UNPROFOR's withdrawal,⁽⁸⁾ and a 27 January declaration by the House of Representatives of Croatia's Parliament rejecting all pressures on Croatia to change its decision, which, it emphasized, should not be interpreted as opening the path to the war option.⁽⁹⁾

Upon completion of its consultations, the Council authorized its President to make the statement below⁽¹⁰⁾ on the Council's behalf.

The Security Council reiterates its support for the efforts to bring about a political settlement in the Republic of Croatia which ensures full respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia and which guarantees the security and rights of all communities living in a particular area irrespective of whether they constitute in this area the majority or a minority.

The Security Council strongly supports the recent efforts of representatives of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, the European Union, the Russian Federation and the United States of America aimed at achieving a political settlement in the Republic of Croatia. The Security Council calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb authorities in the United Nations Protected Areas to enter urgently and without preconditions into negotiations on such a settlement, benefiting from proposals now made to them as part of these efforts. It calls upon all other relevant parties to support this process.

The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to the search for an overall negotiated settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia ensuring the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all the States there within their internationally recognized borders and stresses the importance it attaches to the mutual recognition thereof.

The Security Council reaffirms its view that UNPROFOR's continued and effective presence in the Republic of Croatia is of vital importance for regional peace and security and expresses its desire that discussions over the weeks ahead will lead the Government of the Republic of Croatia to re-examine its position taken on 12 January 1995 in relation to the continuing role of UNPROFOR in the Republic of Croatia.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by Security Council resolution 947(1994),⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an interim report on 14 January 1995 on progress towards implementation of the UN peace-keeping plan for Croatia and all relevant Council resolutions.⁽¹²⁾

The Secretary-General noted that effective UNPROFOR monitoring and verification of the 1994 cease-fire agreement had dramatically reduced the number of war casualties and allowed for an increasing normalization of life, an essential precondition for confidence-building and political reconciliation. Further progress had been brought about by the 1994 economic agreement, with the swift implementation of priorities identified by Croatia: opening part of the Zagreb-Belgrade highway through Sectors East and West of the UNPAs;⁽¹³⁾ opening of the Zagreb-Lipovac and Zagreb-Split railway lines and the Adriatic oil pipeline; and restoration (repair and de-mining phase) of the water and electricity infrastructure. As passage through local Serb-held territory became part of normal experience, conditions were expected gradually to improve for increased cooperation, political dialogue and conflict resolution.

The Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee and two ICFY negotiators, together with the Ambassadors of the Russian Federation and of the United States to Croatia, continued to work on a plan for a political settlement of the conflict between the Croatian Government and the local Serb authorities in the UNPAs. No progress had been made, however, on the deployment of international monitors on Croatia's international borders with Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia. For reasons outlined in his 1994 reports,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that UNPROFOR would be in no position to deploy monitors on those borders unless there was a significant change in the attitude of the local Serbs and unless substantial additional resources were made available to UNPROFOR.

Thus, with the cooperation of the parties, UNPROFOR's primary tasks over the preceding four months had developed beyond maintenance of the cease-fire agreement to encompass implementing the economic agreement and facilitating the start of a cooperative dialogue between the parties.

The Secretary-General pointed out that, despite the earlier inability of UNPROFOR to fulfil important parts of its mandate under the UN peace-keeping plan for Croatia, the successful implementation of the 1994 cease-fire and economic agreements had been positive steps towards confidence-building and reconciliation. He expressed disappointment that the potential for success through the three-step approach—cessation of hostilities, economic normalization and political negotiations—had not been fully explored before Croatia's decision to withdraw its support for the continuing role of UNPROFOR.⁽³⁾

The Secretary-General hoped for a reconsideration of that position before the expiration of the current UNPROFOR mandate. Failing that, he would have to make a detailed study of the practical consequences and financial implications of UNPROFOR's withdrawal, as well as an examination of whether the headquarters and logistic base of a peace-keeping force should be maintained in the capital of a country where a mandate or a troop presence no longer existed.

The Secretary-General stressed his concern that such a withdrawal would considerably increase the likelihood of a resumption of hostilities. However much Croatia might reiterate its commitment to a "peaceful reintegration of its occupied territories" and ask that its decision not be misunderstood, UNPROFOR's withdrawal would likely lead to the resumption of a war even more destructive than that which had raged in 1991-1992. Precisely because of that concern, he had consistently rejected recommending to the Council the option of a withdrawal.

UN Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia (UNCRO)

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 22 March report, the Secretary-General, commenting on developments affecting implementation of the UNPROFOR mandate in Croatia,⁽¹⁵⁾ noted that in the past two months the escalation of military activity and tension, the suspension of further cooperation in implementing the 1994 economic agreement, and the continued failure of the parties to begin serious political negotiations had brought them to the brink of a major war. He therefore welcomed the fact that President Tudjman, in his 12 March statement,⁽⁴⁾ had recognized the grave dangers that would result from a premature departure of UNPROFOR from Croatia and had agreed to its retention for the time being. Principal among the many factors that had precipitated the current crisis had been the lingering lack of trust and confidence between the parties, and the resulting political stalemate for the past three years.

The Secretary-General reiterated that a UN peace-keeping force could operate effectively only with the consent and full cooperation of the parties, and that the three-step approach to a durable peace was the only practical one. It was clear, however, that the retention of UNPROFOR with its current form and mandate would not enjoy Croatia's consent. It was equally clear that deployment under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations of a much larger force to perform the same tasks was not feasible, in either political or resource terms. At the same time, total UNPROFOR withdrawal would immediately result in a grave threat to peace and security extending beyond Croatia's borders. Renewed conflict would become highly probable, and participation of Bosnian Serb forces with support from forces belonging to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) could not be ruled out. Nor was it clear whether the UNPROFOR operation in Bosnia and Herzegovina could be continued without substantial UN presence and support facilities in Croatia.

The Secretary-General therefore welcomed the joint announcement on 12 March by President Tudjman and United States Vice-President Albert Gore, which opened the way to a solution along the lines of maintaining a reduced force in Croatia under a new mandate. That mandate should include support for implementation of the 1994 cease-fire and economic agreements, as well as of those elements of the existing UN peace-keeping plan for Croatia accepted by both parties as having continuing relevance, namely, maintenance of a UN presence on Croatia's international borders and confidence-building and humanitarian tasks (assistance to refugees and displaced persons, protection of ethnic minorities, mine clearance, convoy assistance). In addition to this "core mandate", the new force would continue to perform functions arising from the 1992 agreement on the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula⁽¹⁶⁾ and from relevant Council resolutions (monitoring of the ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina, extension of close NATO air support in Croatia).

Accordingly, and in response to the wishes of Croatia, as well as to those of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, the Secretary-General proposed that the UNPROFOR operations in those countries be replaced by three separate but interlinked peace-keeping operations (see "UN peace forces: UNCRO, UNPROFOR, UNPREDEP" above, under "General aspects"). The proposed new peace-keeping force in Croatia was approved by the Security Council resolution below.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 March, the Security Council adopted resolution 981(1995).

The Security Council,

Deployment

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to the Security Council resolution above, the Secretary-General reported on 18 April on the results of consultations on implementation of the UNCRO mandate.⁽¹⁷⁾ He noted that Thorvald Stoltenberg (Norway), UN Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee, acting as the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General, carried out those consultations with representatives of the Croatian Government and of the local Serb authorities, including with the military authorities of both sides. In the process, the Special Envoy kept in close contact with the Special Representative and the UNPF Force Commander.

The plan proposed by the Special Envoy set out in detail the functions and measures for implementing each of the six main tasks comprising the UNCRO mandate, as defined by resolution 981(1995). Under the task calling for "facilitating implementation of all relevant Security Council resolutions", the plan spelt out implementation measures for humanitarian aid, human rights protection, the return of refugees and displaced persons, and confidence-building.

The Special Representative and the UNPF Force Commander, having analysed the proposed plan, determined that some 8,750 troops would be required for the mandate's implementation, on the assumption that UNCRO would enjoy the cooperation of all concerned. The UNPROFOR troops currently in Croatia could be reduced to the assessed level and deployed under UNCRO, the deployment to be completed by 30 June.

Consultations were also pursued on a status-of-forces agreement for the presence in Croatia of UNCRO, UNPF-HQ and, for a transition period, UNPROFOR, as well as for the use of Croatian territory for the support of UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina and of UNPREDEP in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Notwithstanding the difficulties brought to the fore in the consultations, UNPF-HQ forwarded a draft agreement to Croatia on 14 April for its consideration.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council approve the arrangements set out in the report and authorize the deployment of UNCRO.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 28 April. It had before it, in addition to the foregoing report of the Secretary-General, a letter dated that day from Croatia, assuring the Council of its full cooperation and stressing, among its other views on the implementation plan, that UNCRO's primary concern should be the control of Croatia's internationally recognized borders.⁽¹⁸⁾

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 990(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions on the conflicts in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and in particular resolutions 981(1995) and 982(1995) of 31 March 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 18 April 1995,

Bearing in mind the importance of any information relevant to the implementation of all its previous resolutions being made available to the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming its determination to ensure the security and freedom of movement of personnel of United Nations peace-keeping operations in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and, to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General, and in particular approves the arrangements in paragraphs 11 to 28 for the implementation of the mandate of the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia, which is known as UNCRO;

2. Decides to authorize the deployment of UNCRO as set out in paragraph 29 of the above-mentioned report;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb authorities to cooperate fully with UNCRO in the implementation of its mandate;

4. Expresses its concern that an agreement on the status of forces and other personnel has not yet been signed, calls once again on the Government of the Republic of Croatia to conclude expeditiously such an agreement, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council no later than 15 May 1995;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 990(1995)

28 April 1995 Meeting 3527 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/334).

Occupied territories

Since their inception in 1992,⁽¹⁹⁾ the peace-keeping operations of the United Nations in Croatia were centred in the three designated UN protected areas where Croatian Serbs constituted a majority or a substantial minority of the population—divided into four sectors: Sector East (Eastern Slavonia, including Baranja and Sirmium), Sector North (northern Krajina), Sector South (southern Krajina) and Sector West (Western Slavonia).

Croatia, having defined the UNPAs in 1994 as Serb-occupied territories of the State and the pink zones outside the UNPAs as being under effective Serb occupation, requested the inclusion in the General Assembly's agenda for that year of an item entitled "The situation in the occupied territories of Croatia", in order to give all Member States an opportunity to contribute to finding a just solution to that situation.⁽²⁰⁾ For Croatia, that meant their eventual peaceful reintegration into the State's constitutional and legislative system. The item remained inscribed on the Assembly's 1995 agenda.

Pursuant to the Assembly's 1994 request, as contained in resolution 49/43 on the item,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on 18 October 1995, stating that developments in the "occupied territories" during the summer had dramatically altered the context in which that resolution had been adopted.⁽²²⁾ The report provided a detailed description of developments since then until the reporting date.

Those included the replacement of UNPROFOR in Croatia by UNCRO on 31 March; the authorized deployment of UNCRO on 28 April, on the basis of a detailed plan for the new mandate's implementation as agreed upon by the Government and the local Serb authorities in the UNPAs; the major military offensive launched by the Croatian Army on Sector West on 1 May, and another major offensive on Sectors North and South on 4 August, by which Croatia brought the first Sector under complete control on 4 May and the other two on 7 August.

Those forcible reintegrations left Sector East as the only occupied territory where UNCRO remained deployed. That Sector's proximity to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the Secretary-General pointed out, could increase the risk of spreading the conflict beyond the borders of Croatia, should it try to recover that Sector by force. An important, if tentative, step towards peace occurred on 3 October, however, when the parties agreed on 11 "guiding basic principles" for a settlement of their dispute.

The report noted that the recovery of the three Sectors by force constituted a defiance of the relevant Council resolutions; it ignored Assembly resolution 49/43, making its major elements irrelevant, and changed the status of most of the "occupied territories". From it a different form of crisis had resulted: large numbers of refugees and displaced persons, and reported human rights violations.

(For details on UNCRO, the four Sectors, refugees and displaced persons, and the resultant human rights situation, see below under those topics.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the basis of the Secretary-General's foregoing report and on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee,⁽²³⁾ the General Assembly, by decision 50/413 of 6 December, deferred consideration of the item entitled "The situation in the occupied territories of Croatia" and included it in the agenda of its fifty-first session.

Sector West (Western Slavonia)

Report of the ICFY Co-Chairmen. The Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee, in their report of 17 July describing their activities during the first half of the year,⁽²⁴⁾ stated that, following the conclusion of the economic agreement of 2 December 1994⁽⁶⁾ and the opening shortly thereafter of the Zagreb-Lipovac highway (running through Sectors East and West), their immediate priority was to expedite implementation of the agreement's remaining provisions, in cooperation with the ICFY negotiators and UNPROFOR. On 9 January 1995, the electricity poles were returned to the Obrovac power plant and, on 27 January, the oil pipeline running through Sector North was opened.

On 30 January, the so-called Zagreb Four (the Ambassadors of the Russian Federation and of the United States to Croatia, the EU Special Negotiator for the Former Yugoslavia and the ICFY negotiator) presented a plan for a peaceful resolution regarding the UNPAs. It was received by the Government, but the Croatian Serb "Assembly" in Knin (seat of the Croatian Serb administration in southern Krajina) declined to receive it. On 8 February, that "Assembly" decided to freeze all further implementation of the economic agreement because of President Tudjman's 12 January statement withdrawing consent to UNPROFOR's presence beyond 31 March.⁽¹⁾ Through constant consultations conducted by the ICFY Co-Chairmen and negotiators in Zagreb, Knin and Belgrade, the parties agreed on a text for a joint commercial oil company but postponed its signature until the political climate improved. Some progress was achieved towards opening the Zagreb-Okucani-Mirkovici railway and towards implementing a number of water projects. The Zagreb-Lipovac highway remained in full operation and, by mid-April, it was estimated that more than 250,000 vehicles had used it.

On 24 April, however, the Croatian Serbs closed that segment of the Zagreb-Lipovac highway running through Sector West for 24 hours. Although they reopened the highway, a series of incidents led to a rapid deterioration of the situation on the highway and around it. On 1 May, the Croatian Army mounted a military offensive in those areas of Sector West under Croatian Serb control. To avert further deterioration of the situation and in an effort to re-establish dialogue between the parties, the ICFY Co-Chairmen invited them for talks in Geneva. Their acceptance in principle notwithstanding, the level of military tension and the preconditions they posed precluded holding the meeting.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (1 and 4 May)

The Security Council, having been apprised of the situation, met on 1 May and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽²⁵⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council is deeply concerned by the resumption of hostilities in the Republic of Croatia over the last few days.

The Security Council demands that the Government of the Republic of Croatia put an end immediately to the military offensive launched by its forces in the area of Western Slavonia known as Sector West which started on the morning of 1 May 1995 in violation of the cease-fire agreement of 29 March 1994.

The Security Council also demands that the parties respect the economic agreement signed between them on 2 December 1994 and, in particular, take all necessary steps to ensure the safety and security of the Zagreb-Belgrade highway and its immediate environs.

The Security Council urges the parties to cease hostilities and comply with the existing cease-fire agreement.

The Security Council calls upon the parties to fully respect the safety and freedom of movement of all United Nations and European Community Monitoring Mission personnel in the area concerned, in the area known as Sector South and elsewhere, and therefore to remove all restrictions placed on UN personnel.

The Security Council urges the parties, in order to achieve these objectives, to accept without delay the proposals put to them by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General.

The Security Council expresses its full support to the Secretary-General and his Special Representative in their efforts. The Council further requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed of developments on the ground as well as in the ongoing talks.

Meeting number. SC 3529.

The Council met again on 4 May; after consultations among its members, it authorized the President to make the following statement⁽²⁶⁾ on the Council's behalf.

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the continuation of hostilities in the Republic of Croatia.

The Security Council reaffirms in this context its statement of 1 May 1995 in all its aspects, and demands that the parties comply with the requirements set out therein immediately and in full.

The Security Council condemns the incursions into the zone of separation by the forces of the Government of the Republic of Croatia in Sectors North and South, and by both sides in Sector East. It demands that the forces in question withdraw immediately.

The Security Council also condemns the bombardment of Zagreb and other centres of civilian population by the forces of the local Serb authorities and demands that they cease immediately.

The Security Council further condemns acts of harassment and intimidation against United Nations personnel and reminds the parties of their obligations to respect such personnel at all times and to ensure their safety, security and freedom of movement.

The Security Council calls on the parties to cooperate fully with UNCRO, UNHCR and the ICRC in protecting and assisting the local civilian population and any displaced persons. The Council is deeply concerned by reports that the human rights of the Serb population of Western Slavonia are being violated. It demands that the Government of the Republic of Croatia respect fully the rights of the Serb population concerned, in conformity with internationally recognized standards.

The Security Council insists that the authority of UNCRO be re-established and respected in Sector West and other areas affected by the hostilities.

The Security Council demands that the parties act in accordance with the proposals put to them by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, that they cease all hostilities immediately, and that they cooperate fully with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and with UNCRO.

The Security Council further calls upon the parties to enter without delay into the discussions in Geneva to which they have been invited by the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia.

The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter and will be ready to consider further steps as necessary.

Meeting number. SC 3531.

Communications. Croatia informed the Security Council President on 5 May that the situation in the formerly occupied Croatian territory of Western Slavonia (Sector West) was calm and that peace and order had been restored.⁽²⁷⁾ ICRC, UNHCR, the international media and the diplomatic corps had been allowed into the area and complete freedom of movement of UNCRO personnel, previously restricted for their own safety, had also been restored. The Zagreb-Vinkovci railway line had been reopened, the Okucani radio station had begun operating and elementary schools were continuing their educational programme. Health and social insurance had been extended to all citizens in the area. Croatia's Ministry of Social Services had appropriated a one-time financial grant to help all needy persons in the liberated territories, while the Ministry of Reconstruction was arranging grants and loans for rebuilding destroyed property.

Croatia's Abolition Act would be applied to the approximately 600 members of the disbanded paramilitary forces in Western Slavonia after they had been cleared of any allegations of war crimes. Civilians had been temporarily moved into hotels and other accommodations in Varazdin, Krapina and Novska until full normalization of living conditions in the Pakrac area was achieved. More than 3,000 Croatian Serbs had so far decided to remain in their towns and villages, but the Government would facilitate the departure of those opting to leave for another part of Croatia or for another country.

Croatia expressed dismay at the Council's acceptance of the serious accusations levelled against it by UN Under-Secretary-General Chinmaya R. Gharekhan (acting as Special Political Adviser to the Secretary-General), charging widespread violations of the human rights of the Serb populations in the liberated territory. As those had been proved unfounded by the European Community Monitoring Mission (ECMM) and the foreign media, as well as by the Special Representative, Croatia said, it demanded an apology from the Under-Secretary-General.

Also on 5 May, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) reported having received information about systematic crimes being committed by Croatia's armed forces and police units against captured soldiers and the defenceless population of the "Republic of Serb Krajina".⁽²⁸⁾ Serb refugees were being strafed and shelled while fleeing Okucani for Bosnia and Herzegovina. There were reports of continuing mass executions, arrests, harassment and maltreatment of civilians in violation of the cease-fire agreement recently negotiated by the Special Representative between Croatia and the "Republic of Serb Krajina".

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) demanded that the Council take steps under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter to put an immediate stop to those crimes, to ensure the withdrawal of Croatia's forces to their positions before 1 May and to prevent renewed aggression against the "Republic of Serb Krajina".

Croatia on 8 May informed the Council President of its proposal that representatives of its Army and of the Croatian Serb paramilitary forces meet under the auspices of the Special Representative to defuse tensions in the zones of separation of Sectors South (southern Krajina), North (northern Krajina) and East (Eastern Slavonia, including Baranja and Sirmium).⁽²⁹⁾ While all efforts were being made to normalize life in the liberated territories, the Government had detained some 1,475 members of the Serb paramilitary who, under ECHMM and ICRC supervision, had been taken to three processing centres in Varazdin, Pozega and Bjelovar. Of those, 554 had been released and the Abolition Act applied to them; a criminal investigative process had begun against 105; the processing of another 816 in Varazdin and Bjelovar was under way.

Croatia affirmed its commitment to the full and speedy implementation of the UNCRO mandate, aimed at the peaceful reintegration of the occupied territories into Croatia, and indicated its readiness to negotiate with the local Serbs in Knin to that end.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (17 May)

The Security Council met on 17 May and adopted resolution 994(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the conflicts in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and in particular resolutions 981(1995) of 31 March 1995, 982(1995) of 31 March 1995 and 990(1995) of 28 April 1995,

Deeply concerned that the objectives set out in the statements of the President of the Security Council of 1 May 1995 and of 4 May 1995 have not been implemented in all their aspects and that the agreement reached by the parties on 7 May 1995 through the mediation of the United Nations Peace Forces Headquarters (UNPF-HQ) has been violated, in particular regarding the withdrawal of forces from the zones of separation,

Emphasizing the necessity for full compliance by the parties with the Cease-Fire Agreement of 29 March 1994 and stressing the importance of such compliance for the implementation of the mandate of the United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia known as UNCRO,

Emphasizing further that withdrawal from the zones of separation is a condition for the implementation of the mandate of UNCRO,

Affirming its commitment to the search for an overall negotiated settlement of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia ensuring the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all the States there within their internationally recognized borders and stressing the importance it attaches to the mutual recognition thereof, and in this context welcoming all international efforts to facilitate a negotiated solution to the conflict in the Republic of Croatia,

Emphasizing that full observance of human rights, including appropriate international monitoring thereof, in particular in the area of Western Slavonia known as Sector West, is an essential step towards restoration of confidence between the parties and building a durable peace,

Condemning in the strongest terms all unacceptable acts which were directed at the personnel of the United Nations peace-keeping forces and determined to obtain strict respect of the status of such personnel in the Republic of Croatia as provided for in the Agreement between the United Nations and the Government of the Republic of Croatia signed on 15 May 1995,

Reaffirming its determination to ensure the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of United Nations peace-keeping operations in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and, to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the statements of the President of the Security Council of 1 May 1995 and 4 May 1995 issued as a result of the military offensive launched by the forces of the Government of Croatia in the area of Western Slavonia known as Sector West on 1 May 1995 in violation of the Cease-Fire Agreement of 29 March 1994;

2. Notes with satisfaction the steps taken so far to meet the requirements set out in the above-mentioned statements, but demands that the parties complete without further delay the withdrawal of all their troops from the zones of separation and refrain from any further violations of those zones;

3. Stresses the need for the early re-establishment of the authority of UNCRO in accordance with its mandate;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements in order to ensure full deployment of UNCRO, after the withdrawal of the troops of the parties, as provided for in its mandate established by resolutions 981(1995) and 990(1995);

5. Demands that the status and the mandate of UNCRO as well as the safety and security of its personnel be respected;

6. Demands also that the Government of the Republic of Croatia respect fully the rights of the Serb population including their freedom of movement and allow access to this population by international humanitarian organizations, in conformity with internationally recognized standards;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other relevant international humanitarian institutions, to assess the humanitarian situation of the local Serb population in Sector West, including the problem of refugees, and to report thereon as soon as possible;

8. Fully supports the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to achieve the objectives outlined in the statements of the President of the Security Council of 1 May 1995 and of 4 May 1995 and requests the parties to cooperate fully to this end;

9. Calls upon the parties to respect the Economic Agreement signed by them on 2 December 1994 and in particular to take all necessary steps to ensure the safety and security of the Zagreb-Belgrade highway and its immediate environs as provided for in that Agreement;

10. Demands that the parties refrain from taking any further military measures or actions that could lead to the escalation of the situation and warns that in the event of failure to comply with this demand it will consider further steps needed to ensure such compliance;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council for its consideration within two weeks on the implementation of the provisions of this resolution, including on the modalities for the implementation of the mandate of UNCRO in Sector West;

12. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 994(1995)

17 May 1995 Meeting 3537 Adopted unanimously

6-nation draft (S/1995/395).

Sponsors: France, Germany, Italy, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to Security Council resolution 994(1995), the Secretary-General submitted a report on 9 June describing developments in the UNCRO mission area since April, the resolution's implementation and modalities for implementing the UNCRO mandate, with particular reference to Sector West, and providing an initial assessment of the humanitarian situation of the local Serb population in that Sector, including the problem of refugees.⁽³⁰⁾

The report noted that in April, following the adoption of Council resolution 981(1995) creating UNCRO, tension between the Croatian Government and local Serb authorities decreased slightly, except in the areas along Croatia's border with the western part of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Both sides continued to fortify their defensive positions around the zones of separation, causing the number of violations of the 1994 Cease-Fire agreement to rise to 250 at the end of March. Restrictions to UNCRO's freedom of movement continued, particularly in and around Sectors East, West and South. On 24 April, the Serb authorities closed the highway through Sector West for a 24-hour period in protest over the number of trucks denied passage by the EU/OSCE Sanctions Assistance Mission in Croatia at the Lipovac crossing in Sector East because their passage would have violated the sanctions regime on Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

On 1 May, the Croatian Army and police entered Sector West from both directions on the Zagreb-Belgrade highway with some 2,500 troops, heavy equipment and air support. That operation was initially described by the Government as a police action intended only to restore security on the highway following the stabbing of a Serb by a Croatian refugee on 28 April, the subsequent retaliatory killing of three Croats by Serbs, and a further alleged attack on a Croat on 30 April. The operation cut off the Serb-controlled part of the Sector from Bosnian Serb-held areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Croatian military movements continued through 5 May in the central part of Sector West and in the main Serb town of Okucani, the Secretary-General said, revealing that Croatia's intention was to establish complete control over the Sector. As of 2 May, the Croatian Army had secured all militarily important positions. The Krajina Serbs responded by firing missiles on 2 and 3 May into urban areas of Zagreb and the Pleso airfield and shelling the towns of Karlovac and Sisak.

On 3 May, agreement was reached on a cessation of hostilities in all areas, including Sector West, and on arrangements to ensure the safe passage from that Sector into Bosnian Serb-controlled parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina for Serb civilians and soldiers who wished to leave under UNCRO and UNHCR surveillance. In the afternoon of 4 May, however, while UNCRO was attempting to negotiate implementation of the cessation-of-hostilities agreement with some 600 Serb soldiers in Pakrac, the Croatian Army began shelling the Serb-inhabited part of Pakrac in response to alleged attacks on Croatian police and attempts by Serb soldiers to escape. As a result, the Serbs surrendered to the Croatian Army and police, who then began to assemble the remaining Serb inhabitants, separating males and females. Males, mainly of draft age, were transported to three detention centres outside the Sector.

During the offensive on Sector West, Croatian forces advanced to improved tactical positions in the zone of separation near Osijek in Sector East, Petrinja in Sector North, and Gospic and Medak in Sector South, giving those forces considerable local tactical advantage, thereby further weakening the 1994 cease-fire agreement and threatening adjacent UN positions. The most significant Serb advance into the zone of separation in response to the Croatian action was in Sector East. Elsewhere, the Serbs removed heavy weapons from storage sites and impeded UN freedom of movement.

The Croatian Army's successes in Sector West seemed to have prompted a similar campaign in Sector South, despite assurances by the Government that it would not pursue further military objectives. On 4 June, the Croatian Army and Bosnian Croats launched a combined small-scale infantry and artillery attack in the area of Mount Dinara in Sector South, 20 kilometres south-east of Knin, shelling several villages in the environs. On 6 June, a similar attack was launched from the Mount Dinara area, resulting in several bouts of shelling, with three rounds impacting inside the Kenyan battalion camp of UNCRO at Civiljane.

Compliance with the Council's demand for all forces to withdraw from the Sector's separation zone had yet to be achieved. Croatian troops and heavy weapons had been observed inside the zone at different times and 28 heavy weapons were within the 10- and 20-kilometre zones, in violation of the terms specified for those zones in the cease-fire agreement. While Croatia had satisfied the technical demands of troop withdrawal, the current deployment of its troops in close proximity to the separation zone served neither to reduce tensions nor to allay the Serbs' apprehension of further attacks, the Secretary-General stated. Moreover, Croatia's position was that its forces would withdraw only to the positions they had held before the 1 May offensive. The Serb side maintained a major presence in the separation zone, including more than 1,700 troops and 84 heavy weapons, as well as a deployment of more than 300 heavy weapons in contravention of the 10- and 20-kilometre zones.

Attempts by the Special Representative and the Force Commander to stabilize the military situation met with difficulties. To their proposal for face-to-face negotiations between the military leaders of both sides, the Serbs placed preconditions calling for the withdrawal of all Croatian forces from the Mount Dinara area in Sector South and from Sector West, and the return of all heavy weapons confiscated during the offensive. Apart from the Serbs' refusal of ICFY's invitation to talks in Geneva, a move was afoot by the Krajina Serbs to establish a union with the Bosnian Serbs, the report stated. Croatia viewed with concern the effect such a union would have on the 1994 economic agreement and on political negotiations.

Until the 1 May offensive, the overall human rights and humanitarian condition of the Serbs in Sector West had been fragile but stable. About 5,000 of them lived among 35,000 Croats and other minorities in the northern part, but were concentrated in Pakrac, Daruvar and Grubisno Polje; between 13,500 and 17,000 lived in the formerly Serb-controlled part of the Sector, clustered around Okucani and Gavrinica. While UNCRO investigations revealed instances of serious human rights violations during the offensive, they were not indicative of a systematic or strategic design. It appeared that 1,494 persons had initially been detained, in three centres, in violation of the 3 May cessation-of-hostilities agreement. Visits to those detention centres by UNCRO and other international organizations revealed no reports of unsatisfactory conditions, but interviews of released detainees pointed to mistreatment, mostly beatings, not suggestive, however, of widespread or systematic violations.

The International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the Special Rapporteur of the UN

Commission on Human Rights had begun looking into possible violations in Sector West. UNCRO had received unconfirmed reports from local residents and other sources of looting by the Croatian Army, forced eviction of families from their dwellings, the burning or blowing up of scores of abandoned houses (Covac, Gredani, Okucani, Vrbovljani), harassment and intimidation of the local Serb population, and confiscation of personal documents (vehicle registrations and drivers' licences).

About 10,000 Serb civilians and military personnel living in areas immediately affected by the fighting crossed into Bosnia and Herzegovina using the Sava bridge. At the demand of the Krajina Serb authorities, the safe departure of the remaining 4,000 Serbs from Sector West was begun on 9 May under UNCRO's "Operation Safe Passage", with UNHCR assistance. In the meantime, UNCRO and UNHCR were trying to obtain government guarantees for the safety of the ethnic Serbs who had left in haste but wished to return and for the return of their homes and assets.

In view of the fear and uncertainty voiced by most Serbs remaining in Sector West, mainly in the Gavrinica area, the Croatian Government had taken steps to normalize life for them, which included infrastructure improvements (bus line and telephone links), small family grants and assistance from the Croatian Red Cross. A registration centre in Gavrinica had begun processing citizenship applications. Of a total 1,070 applications, 675 had been approved, for which citizenship papers had been issued. Civic committees had also been formed to promote local Serb participation in normalizing life in the Sector.

In meetings with the Special Representative following the 1 May offensive, the leaders of both sides had stated their desire for UNCRO to continue and complete deployment in Sector West, but for different purposes. For Croatia, it was so that UNCRO could attest to government efforts to pursue high standards of respect for the human rights of the Serbs remaining in the Sector. For the Serb side, it was so that UNCRO could monitor the situation of the local Serbs, facilitate the departure of those voluntarily wishing to leave, investigate human rights abuses and press for the withdrawal of the Croatian Army and police forces from the Sector. The Serb side had also sought international assistance for more than 10,000 refugees and displaced persons who had fled the Sector, but had restricted UNCRO movement in the Sectors it controlled, making it impossible for UNCRO to monitor the situation of the minority Croats in those Sectors.

Further, both sides had sought UNCRO's assistance in restoring the integrity of the 1994 cease-fire agreement, starting with full troop withdrawal from the separation zone and heavy-weapons withdrawal to the 10- and 20-kilometre lines specified in the agreement. While both sides recognized that a meeting between their military commanders was essential for stabilizing the tense situation, no progress had been made to bring about such a meeting.

The Secretary-General noted that, despite their declared support for UNCRO's mandate with respect to the cease-fire agreement, both sides had exhibited a high degree of cynicism towards their cease-fire obligations. It was thus vital for them to reaffirm their commitment to the agreement and their intention to cooperate with UNCRO. An essential step for the Serb side was to take firm action to stop the hijacking of UN vehicles and the armed robbery and intimidation of UNCRO personnel and to allow UNCRO full freedom of movement within the Sectors.

Of the six principal functions constituting UNCRO's mandate, there appeared to be common ground between the parties that the mission should fulfil the tasks arising from the 1994 cease-fire and economic agreements and from its humanitarian and human rights mandates. Given the hostility engendered by the Croatian offensive, the tasks associated with border monitoring required substantially more time than originally envisaged. The functions related to the Prevlaka peninsula and the delivery of humanitarian assistance through Croatian territory to Bosnia and Herzegovina remained unchanged. However, rather than UNCRO's complete deployment being achieved by 30 June as required by resolution 982(1995), it was likely to take up the major part of the mandate period.

As to the modalities for implementing the UNCRO mandate in Sector West, discussions with the Government were at an advanced stage for the comprehensive deployment throughout the Sector of UN civilian police and civilian affairs personnel. Their tasks would be to provide assistance to the needy, ensure respect for human rights, facilitate the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons and support confidence-building measures between communities.

The Secretary-General stressed that more than words were required to justify the expensive and dangerous UNCRO mission. He would therefore closely monitor the parties' level of cooperation with UNCRO, in particular the extent of their compliance with the 1994 cease-fire agreement, and of making good their word to allow UNCRO full freedom of movement and to ensure the security of its personnel. The Secretary-General expressed grave concern over the reported joint military manoeuvres by the Croatian Army and Bosnian Croat forces in the Mount Dinara area adjacent to Sector South, including the shelling of UNCRO positions.

Communications. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continued on 13 June to report atrocities committed by the Croatian armed forces during their 1 May offensive on Western Slavonia, including the massacre of columns of Croatian Serb refugees, destruction and looting of their property in seven villages, the taking of some 380 to 1,000 prisoners and of 1,000 to 1,200 wounded to unknown destinations—for all of which compelling evidence existed.⁽³¹⁾

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) further claimed on 16 June that the Croatian Army had killed more than 3,300 civilians and 1,000 soldiers of the "Republic of Serb Krajina" after they had complied with the cease-fire; more than 9,000 houses had been torn down, and the Sava River bridge had been blown up to prevent Serb refugees from returning.⁽³²⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (16 June)

The Security Council met on 16 June to consider the Secretary-General's 9 June report. After consultations among its members, the Council authorized the President to make the statement below⁽³³⁾ on the Council's behalf

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 9 June 1995 submitted pursuant to its resolution 994(1995) of 17 May 1995. It is concerned at the situation described therein, and at the continuing failure of the parties to cooperate satisfactorily with UNCRO and to comply fully with the demands of the Council. It condemns in particular the continuation of offensive actions and the intimidation of UNCRO personnel in violation of its resolution 994(1995).

The Security Council looks to the parties to cooperate fully and unconditionally with UNCRO in the performance of its mandate and to ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of its personnel. The Council demands that they fulfil their commitment under the cease-fire agreement of 29 March 1994, in particular in respect of the withdrawal of all forces and heavy weapons from the zones of separation, and fully implement the 2 December 1994 agreement on economic confidence-building measures. It calls upon the parties, and in particular the Government of Croatia, to cease all military action in and around Sector South. It also calls upon all parties to respect fully the international border between the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and to stop any action which extends the conflict across this border, since this is in violation of the Council's resolutions. It reiterates its warning that in the event of failure to comply with the demand in its resolution 994(1995) that the parties refrain from taking any further military measures or actions that could lead to the escalation of the situation, it will consider further steps needed to ensure such compliance.

The Security Council requests the Committee established under resolution 724(1991) of 15 December 1991 to continue to investigate, in accordance with its mandate, reports of violations of resolution 713(1991) of 25 September 1991.

The Security Council welcomes the agreement of the Government of Croatia to a continued UNCRO presence in the area of Western Slavonia known as Sector West for the purposes of implementing its mandate, in particular in respect of human rights, to which it continues to attach great importance. It endorses the Secretary-General's view as to the necessity for reconciliation and confidence-building in that Sector. It stresses the importance it attaches to full respect for the human rights of the Serb population there. It encourages the Secretary-General to continue his coordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights as well as other international organizations and agencies in this regard.

The Security Council notes the Secretary-General's judgement that completion of the redeployment of United Nations peace-keeping personnel in the Republic of Croatia by 30 June 1995 envisaged in its resolution 982(1995) of 31 March 1995 is no longer possible. It requests the Secretary-General to proceed as expeditiously as possible with this redeployment with the aim of fulfilling all UNCRO's tasks under its mandate. It demands that the parties cooperate with UNCRO's efforts to implement fully its mandate.

The Security Council notes the fact that both parties have stated their desire that the peace-keeping mission should continue, and are seeking UNCRO's assistance. It welcomes the Secretary-General's intention to monitor closely their cooperation with UNCRO and their compliance with the cease-fire agreement of 29 March 1994, and requests him to keep the Council fully informed. Such cooperation and compliance are essential for the implementation of UNCRO's mandate and for progress towards a negotiated settlement respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia and which guarantees the security and rights of all communities.

The Security Council could not countenance moves by the local Serb authorities in the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to establish a union between them, since this would be inconsistent with the Council's commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Security Council stresses that there can be no military solution to the conflict and calls upon the parties to reaffirm their commitment to a peaceful resolution of their differences.

The Security Council notes with distress the loss of life and casualties which have been suffered by UNCRO and extends its condolences to the families of the bereaved.

The Security Council will remain seized of the matter.

Report of the Secretary-General. In keeping with Security Council resolution 981(1995), the Secretary-General on 3 August reported⁽³⁴⁾ on developments in Croatia during the past four months, including their effect on UNCRO's ability to implement its mandate. He stated that given the high degree of uncertainty of developments in Croatia, which were inextricably linked with those in Bosnia and Herzegovina, it was not currently possible to make a recommendation as to the future of UNCRO.

Although there had been no further large-scale hostilities since the 1 May offensive when the Croatian Army and police had taken control of those areas of Western Slavonia previously held by the Croatian Serbs, continuous skirmishes, exchanges of fire, troop deployments within the zone of separation and increased violations of the 10- and 20-kilometre heavy-weapons exclusion zones had created a high level of tension in the three remaining Sectors. Those actions by both sides had eroded the credibility of the cease-fire agreement to the point where neither appeared committed to its key provisions. As of 30 July, there were 83 reported violations of the separation zone, 47 by the Krajina Serb side and 36 by the Croatian side, the Secretary-General stated.

Contrary to Croatia's assurances that it would not pursue military objectives before the end of the current UNCRO mandate, the attack launched on 4 June in the Mount Dinara area by the combined Croatian and Bosnian Croat forces had led to the seizure and occupation of positions in areas covered by the cease-fire agreement—indicating a possible decision by the Government to reintegrate the Serb Krajina region by force. The military situation and the constant restrictions imposed by both sides on freedom of movement had prevented UNCRO from taking any significant remedial action and, at times, even from monitoring the situation.

There were fire and shelling exchanges as the Krajina Serbs launched retaliatory attacks against Croatian positions in Sector South, using small arms, mortar and artillery, as well as air strikes from Udbina. Efforts by the Special Representative and UNCRO to defuse the situation had been thwarted. In line with its actions to the west of Sector South, the Croatian Army was conducting a series of exercises west of Sisak and south-west of Karlovac in the immediate proximity of the separation zone, further increasing tension and insecurity. The Krajina Serbs, who had also been conducting extensive military training, had placed Sectors North and South in a state of high alert and under martial law.

Croatian Defence Council (HVO) forces, apparently supported by Croatian Army (HV) elements, had also continued their attacks in the Livansko Polje area of western Bosnia and Herzegovina, adjacent to the Croatian border, capturing Bosansko Grahovo and Glamoc on 28 July, thus directly threatening Knin and cutting its main supply route to Banja Luka. Those forces had moved closer to the international border and set up a blocking position near Strmica. Between 25 June and 30 July, approximately 2,861 Croatian Army troops with vehicles and equipment had been observed crossing into Bosnia and Herzegovina at Kamensko, causing some 12,000 to 14,000 Bosnian Serbs to flee towards Banja Luka.

Sector North saw relatively little activity except in the area bordering the Bihac pocket. In response to an attack by the Bosnian Army's Fifth Corps on the Krajina Serb-controlled territory in Sector North to the pocket's east and west sides, the "Army of Serb Krajina" ("ARSK") and the separatist Bosnians under Fikret Abdic, supported by Bosnian Serb artillery along the southern confrontation line, mounted a major counter-offensive on 19 July that restored the 1994 confrontation line in the north-west and moved the western confrontation line 3 to 5 kilometres eastwards. Those operations in the Bihac pocket had caused some 8,000 civilians to abandon their homes and flee to Cazin. UNHCR humanitarian assistance to Bihac was obstructed by the Krajina Serbs, while that to the Sectors was obstructed by Croatia.

The Secretary-General noted the numerous restrictions to UNCRO's freedom of movement which impeded its monitoring of the cease-fire agreement, adding that UNCRO had received no cooperation from the Krajina Serbs in its efforts to deploy along the international border. From the 21 border checkpoints it had so far set up, it had observed a total of 7,946 soldiers with 1,212 vehicles entering and 8,610 soldiers with 1,049 vehicles leaving Croatia.

The Secretary-General also noted evidence of significant qualitative and quantitative improvements to the military capabilities of both sides. Croatia had acquired a minimum of 12 Mig-21 aircraft, and was capable of deploying six armed Mi-24 attack helicopters and new types of small arms and military vehicles. The Krajina Serbs had likewise recently displayed new arms and equipment, including small arms, night observation devices and re-engineered naval surface-to-surface missiles. After their set-back in Western Slavonia, the Krajina Serbs appointed a new military commander to professionalize the army and formulate a new military doctrine. The resultant improved army discipline had reportedly reduced robbery, hijackings and threats to UNCRO personnel and equipment.

Political trends within the area administered by the Krajina Serbs had remained volatile: differences had arisen between the regional factions in Sector East, where "separatist tendencies" favoured joining Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and those in Sectors North and South, which favoured union between the Krajina and Bosnian Serbs.

As to the humanitarian situation, both UNHCR and UNPF had lodged strong protests with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in response to reports of the forced mobilization there of more than 2,500 Serb refugees for military service in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the Krajina.

From 9 to 30 May, some 2,170 Serbs voluntarily left Western Slavonia under UNCRO's "Operation Safe Passage". UNHCR and UNCRO assisted another 130 Serbs to leave for Sector East and 16 for Banja Luka via Sector North, and were also assisting in the return to Western Slavonia of 84 Serb refugees. Of some 1,475 Serbs originally detained by Croatia after the 1 May offensive on Sector West, about 130 remained in detention. As for legal proceedings instituted against those accused of war crimes, there was concern regarding the nature of the charges and whether the right to legal counsel was being respected.

The Prevlaka peninsula remained an area of strategic interest to both Croatia and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Since the meeting of the Joint Inter-State Commission, convened by the Special Representative on 25 July, there had been relative stability in the area, especially since Croatia halted construction of defence works in the demilitarized zone. Ongoing local bilateral water negotiations were among the indications of the increased readiness of the parties to cooperate. However, their different interpretations of the established UN security modalities remained a potentially destabilizing factor. Furthermore, movement restrictions imposed by both parties on UN military observers inhibited investigations of violations. The Secretary-General had asked his Special Representative, in conjunction with the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee, to seek consensus on the modalities envisaged under Council resolutions 779(1992)⁽³⁵⁾ and 981(1995).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (3 August)

The Security Council met on 3 August and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽³⁶⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the deterioration in the situation in and around the Republic of Croatia.

The Security Council fully supports the efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Representative and of the Co-Chairman of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia to defuse the situation, in line with the Council's previous resolutions.

The Security Council stresses that there can be no military solution to the conflict in Croatia and welcomes the holding of talks between the parties in Geneva earlier today. It calls on both parties to commit themselves fully to that process, and to acceptance of the Draft Agreement drawn up by the Co-Chairman as a basis for continuing those talks.

The Security Council demands that the parties halt all military actions and exercise the utmost restraint.

Sector North (northern Krajina) and Sector South (southern Krajina)

Communication from Croatia. Croatia informed the Security Council on 4 August that, at 0500 hours that day, the Croatian military and police forces had begun a decisive operation aimed at restoring the rule of law, constitutional order and public safety in the occupied territories of Croatia, as defined in General Assembly resolution 49/43,⁽³⁷⁾ and helping to sustain the defence of the UN-designated safe area of Bihac.⁽³⁸⁾

Croatia provided some major reasons for its action: the Croatian Serbs' outright rejection of the Government's proposal, at the 3 August ICFY-mediated negotiations in Geneva, for the immediate reintegration into Croatia of the territories they occupied; the continued attacks on Croatian urban centres from the UNPAs; the unrelenting siege of the Bihac safe area, regarding which Croatia recalled its warning that it would be compelled to take action to secure the safe-area status of Bihac, if threatened, in order ultimately to secure Croatia's strategic interests;⁽³⁹⁾ the failure to implement the UNCRO mandate, especially control of Croatia's international borders to prevent military interference from Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro); the frustration of the Governments of the Republic and Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina over UNPROFOR's failure to discharge its mandate, especially with respect to preventing attacks on the safe areas; Croatia's obligation to fulfil its commitments under the Split Declaration of 22 July 1995,⁽⁴⁰⁾ among other agreements, for the joint defence of the two Governments against Serbian aggression; and the international community's continued policy of appeasement towards Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), sponsor of the occupation of parts of Croatia and of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Croatia said it would ensure the security of UNCRO troops, whom it considered repositioning to prevent their being taken hostage by the Serbs. It reaffirmed its intention to minimize civilian casualties and uphold all principles of international humanitarian law in the course of its operations. It referred to President Tudjman's appeal to the Serb population in the occupied territories to lay down their arms, and his assurances of amnesty for all mobilized Serb irregular forces and of guarantees for the safety and constitutional rights of the Serb community within Croatia. In the post-conflict restoration of Croatian authority, Croatia offered its cooperation to promote respect for human rights and reconciliation, and to help in the reconstruction of the occupied territories.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (4 August)

The Council convened on 4 August and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽⁴¹⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council is deeply concerned at the resumption of hostilities in and around the Republic of Croatia. The Council recalls the statement of its President of 3 August 1995. It strongly deplores the decision by the Croatian Government to launch a broad military offensive, thereby unacceptably escalating the conflict, with the risk of further consequent attacks by whatever party, and demands that all military action cease immediately and that there be full compliance with all Council resolutions including resolution 994(1995).

The Security Council condemns any shelling of civilian targets. It demands that no military action be taken against civilians and that their human rights be fully respected. It reminds the parties of their responsibilities under international humanitarian law and reiterates that those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts. The Council calls on the parties to cooperate fully with UNCRO, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross in ensuring access and protection to the local civilian population as appropriate.

The Security Council strongly condemns attacks by Croatian government forces on personnel of the United Nations peace-keeping forces which have resulted in casualties, including the death of one member of the peace-keeping forces. It demands that such attacks cease immediately and that all detained personnel be released. It also reminds the parties, and in particular the Croatian Government, that they have an obligation to respect United Nations personnel, to ensure their safety and freedom of movement at all times and to enable UNCRO to fulfil its mandate in accordance with the relevant Security Council resolutions. The Council expresses condolences to the Government of Denmark and to the family of the member of the United Nations peace-keeping forces who lost his life.

The Security Council deeply regrets the breakdown of the talks which began in Geneva on 3 August 1995. It calls upon the Croatian Government to return to the talks. It reiterates that there can be no military solution to the conflict in Croatia. It reaffirms its call for an unreserved commitment to the search for a negotiated settlement and to resumption of talks on the basis of the Draft Agreement drawn up by the Co-Chairman of the Steering Committee of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia.

The Security Council will remain seized of the matter, and will consider any further measures that may be necessary.

Other communications. The Croatian offensive on the Krajinas was the subject of an EU declaration on 4 August, demanding an end to Croatia's military operations, suspending negotiations on a trade and cooperation agreement with that country, and condemning the Krajina Serbs' involvement in the attacks on the Bihac pocket.⁽⁴²⁾ The Russian Federation, in a letter of the same date, stated it was forced to conclude that Croatia's delivery of ultimatums to the Croatian Serbs at the Geneva talks of 3 August indicated it had already decided to seek not a political but an exclusively military solution.⁽⁴³⁾

In four letters written between 4 and 7 August, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) condemned the Croatian aggression against the "Republic of Serb Krajina" and demanded that the Security Council take steps to compel Croatia to withdraw from the territory of that "Republic";⁽⁴⁴⁾ drew attention to the continuing Croatian aggression, to violations of international humanitarian law, especially ethnic cleansing, and to the displacement of more than 100,000 Krajina Serbs;⁽⁴⁵⁾ requested that the Special Representative and General Peeters of UNPROFOR intervene to prevent the further massacre of officers and soldiers of the "Republic of Serb Krajina";⁽⁴⁶⁾ and demanded that the international community and the Council in particular take measures to put an end to Croatia's aggression, killing of innocent civilians and ethnic cleansing.⁽⁴⁷⁾

Letter from the Secretary-General. On 7 August, the Secretary-General conveyed information to the Security Council President to the effect that tensions had remained high in the area of UNCRO operations since the Croatian Army's takeover of Western Slavonia in early May.⁽⁴⁸⁾ Croatian Army mobilization, troop movements and live-firing exercises had increased throughout June and July.

The pace of events gathered momentum after the Presidents of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina signed the Split Declaration on 22 July,⁽⁴⁹⁾ which committed Croatia militarily to assist Bosnia and Herzegovina in the defence of the Bihac pocket, under siege since 19 July by the Bosnian separatists and "ARSK". Responding to the HVO/HV capture of Bosansko Grahovo and Glamoc in western Bosnia and Herzegovina on 28 July, the Krajina and Bosnian Serbs declared states of war against the Croats and mobilized their respective armies.

As the Croatian Army continued a major troop build-up around Sectors North and South, the Supreme Defence Council of the Croatian and Bosnian Serbs convened on 1 August to appeal to all Serbs and to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to assist in defence of Serb territory. Meanwhile, in a meeting with President Tudjman on 29 July, the Special Representative sought Croatia's participation in political and military talks with Knin to forestall what appeared to be an imminent military confrontation. In indicating the Government's willingness to participate, the President stressed that talks must be followed by progress on the ground, failing which Croatia would do whatever it deemed necessary to redress the situation. The President specifically insisted on the reopening of the Adriatic oil pipeline within 24 hours, rapid agreement on the opening of the Zagreb-Knin-Split railway, and immediate progress on the political reintegration of the Serbs on the basis of Croatia's Constitution and Law on Minorities.

In emergency talks on 30 July with local Serb authorities, the Special Representative secured a six-point commitment⁽⁴⁸⁾ whereby they would: fully withdraw their forces from the Bihac pocket; desist from further cross-border interference, with the expectation that the Bosnian Army's Fifth Corps would take no further offensive action in the pocket; allow unhindered UNCRO monitoring of the border area between Krajina and the Bihac pocket; continue talks regarding setting up border monitoring posts in the Mount Dinara area; and allow the unhindered delivery of humanitarian assistance to the pocket, provided such assistance would also be allowed into the Krajina region. In addition, the "ARSK" commander would be prepared to meet with the Croatian Army commander under UNPF auspices as early as 31 July.

In a written reply,⁽⁴⁸⁾ President Tudjman rejected the six-point commitment on the grounds that it did not meet Croatia's terms, especially its firm request that UNCRO monitor not just the border towards the Bihac pocket and along the Mount Dinara area, but also the internationally recognized borders between Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina and between Croatia and Serbia, to which new Yugoslav Army formations and equipment had been transferred from across the Danube. The President stated that only under certain conditions would he propose holding negotiations with representatives of the "rebel Croatian Serbs from the occupied areas", namely: that negotiations should be with other than the "ARSK" commander, Milan Martić, among the war criminals listed by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia; and that negotiations would begin if the oil pipeline passing through the occupied areas became operational within 24 hours, if direct discussions would include opening all communication lines through those areas, particularly the Zagreb-Knin-Split railway line, and if Croatia's Constitution and Constitutional Law were immediately to be applied in the occupied areas.

At a preliminary round of talks in Geneva on 3 August, chaired by the UN Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee, the Croatian Government was firm in its position that the local Serb leadership immediately accept reintegration under Croatia's Constitution and Laws. The local Serb leadership, on the other hand, called for a complete cessation of hostilities as a starting-point, from which discussions on other issues would proceed. Following a series of bilateral meetings, the Co-Chairman presented a list of seven points covering, inter alia, the reopening of the oil pipeline and railway in question, and negotiations on a final settlement on the basis of the Zagreb Four plan. The Government rejected the seven-point paper as not addressing its fundamental concern regarding reintegration of the Krajina Serbs.

Despite concerted efforts by the United Nations and various Member States to avert an outbreak of hostilities, the Croatian Army launched a major offensive against Sectors North and South (northern and southern Krajina) at 0500 hours on 4 August. A significant number of UN observation posts were overrun and some came under fire, direct and indirect. On two occasions, UN troops and Serb prisoners were used as human shields by Croatian Army units as they pursued their offensive. Notwithstanding efforts by the Special Representative and the Force Commander to seek assurances for the safety of all UN personnel from the Croatian Commission for Relations with UNCRO and from the Chief of Staff of the Croatian Army, the United Nations had suffered 18 casualties, including three dead and two seriously injured.

On 6 August, the Special Representative secured a nine-point agreement⁽⁴⁸⁾ with the Croatian Commission on measures to: cope with the humanitarian difficulties caused by the offensive; monitor the human rights situation; permit the safe return of displaced persons; and guarantee the inviolability of UN premises and establishments, as well as all assets and those therein.

Also on 6 August, the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee, along with the EU Presidency and its External Relations Commissioner, met with Croatia's Foreign Minister to discuss the political consequences of the Croatian offensive. Croatia assured them that it would investigate reported incidents of attacks on UN troops and would guarantee access by humanitarian organizations to civilians displaced by the fighting.

Communications (8-10 August). On 8 August, the Russian Federation stated⁽⁴⁹⁾ that the massive Croatian offensive negated all efforts to continue the search for a political settlement. Croatia's inclination forcibly to integrate the Serb-populated areas had been indirectly encouraged from the capitals of major States. The principles of a just settlement, it said, were being sacrificed to the philosophy of fait accompli. Drawing attention to the exodus that had begun of more than 150,000 Serbs from Krajina, the Russian Federation said it expected the Secretary-General to take all measures to protect the civilian population, provide humanitarian assistance to the refugees, and exert pressure on Croatia fully to respect their human rights. It was of paramount importance to continue the UNCRO operation, Russia said, to prevent a complete humanitarian catastrophe and to ensure the objective monitoring of Croatia's actions with respect to the Serb population that had come under its control.

On 9 August, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) expressed⁽⁵⁰⁾ both astonishment and disappointment that the Security Council had still not convened an emergency meeting to condemn Croatia's brutal aggression. Such inaction and lenient attitude, it claimed, directly encouraged Croatian military aggression against Krajina and even against Bosnia and Herzegovina. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) urged the Council to condemn Croatia's aggression in the strongest terms, bring it to a halt and demand the withdrawal of the Croatian Army to its pre-offensive positions. It was moreover incumbent on the Council, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) stressed, to initiate action to identify, bring to trial and punish those responsible for genocide and other war crimes against the Serbs, including murder, the gunning down of trapped soldiers and civilians, the shelling of refugees in flight, mistreatment of civilians and POWs alike, blockade of humanitarian supplies, and mass destruction of Serb property.

On 10 August, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) reiterated⁽⁵¹⁾ its disappointment and resentment over the Council's reluctance to condemn Croatia's aggression against the "Republic of Serb Krajina", along with what it termed as monstrous crimes committed by the Croatian Army. It appealed to the Secretary-General to use his good offices to persuade the Council to adopt a resolution embodying such condemnation, a call for an immediate stop to the aggression and for the withdrawal of the Croatian Army from the UNPAs, guaranteed protection of the Krajina Serb populations encircled by the Croatian Army, particularly in Topusko, Petrova Gora and Glina, and punitive measures against Croatia for its aggression, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and human rights violations.

Meanwhile, on 9 August, Bosnia and Herzegovina denied⁽⁵²⁾ the allegations of UN officials that the Bosnian Army's Fifth Corps had engaged in unlawful acts in Croatia during the offensive on the Krajina region; however, should evidence surface to support such allegations, it would, it said, bring to justice all those responsible for any violations of international humanitarian law.

Security Council resolution 1009(1995)

10 August 1995 Meeting 3563 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/676).

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1009(1995), the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁵³⁾ on 23 August to assist the Council in considering the implications for the UNCRO mandate of Croatia's 4 August military offensive on Sectors North and South. The Secretary-General reported that since his letter of 7 August neither party had ceased military actions, nor had they complied fully with relevant Council resolutions.

The offensive against Sector South, which had been preceded by intense shelling, resulted in the fall of Knin on 5 August. With the collapse of the Krajina Serb defences, 700 civilians took shelter in UNCRO's headquarters in the Sector, while large numbers fled for Bosnian Serb-held territory. Meanwhile, the Bosnian Army's Fifth Corps launched a cross-border offensive against the Krajina Serbs in the Licko Ptrovo Selo area, linking up with the Croatian Army at Rakovica.

In Sector North, where resistance was stronger, particularly around Turnaj and Petrinja, attempts to conclude an agreement for the surrender of Krajina Serb elements collapsed when the latter tried to take heavy-weapons systems with them as they withdrew. However, a cease-fire was concluded on 8 August for the Topusko and Glina areas, providing for the surrender of Serb heavy weapons, the withdrawal of Krajina Serb soldiers with side-arms only, and the safe passage of civilians from those areas. A convoy of refugees from Sector North, moving through Sisak as authorized under that agreement, was nevertheless attacked by a mob of Croatian civilians on 9 August, resulting in injuries to many, death to one and damage to a large number of vehicles. Heavy fighting took place in the Dvor area, where UNCRO's Danish battalion reported witnessing a military unit of unknown identity kill 11 disabled civilians.

In the course of the fighting, several incidents occurred in which the safety of UN troops was not sufficiently considered by the parties. A total of 98 UN observation posts were destroyed by the Croatian Army, which also arrested and temporarily disarmed UN soldiers and seized UN equipment. On 5 August, several UN soldiers and a group of Krajina Serb POWs were used as human shields by a Croatian Army unit which forced them to walk ahead of its forward lines. In all, four UN peace-keepers died—three as a result of actions by Croatian troops and one by those of Krajina Serbs; 16 others were injured. In response to a vigorous protest lodged by UNPF, Croatia's Foreign Minister promised an investigation into the incidents.

As the situation in the former Sector South stabilized, Croatia's civilian authorities asserted control over the area and displaced Croatians began returning to identify and claim their homes. On 12 August, the Zagreb-Knin-Split railway started operating.

A humanitarian crisis of significant proportions had been created by the mass exodus of Krajina Serbs, estimated at 150,000 by UNHCR, to Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) through Bosnia and Herzegovina. Only about 3,500 Krajina Serbs remained in the former Sector North and about 2,000 in the former Sector South. Another group of some 21,000 refugees, largely Bosnian Muslims from the former "Autonomous Province of Western Bosnia" under Fikret Abdic, made its way from Velika Kladusa into Croatia. Through negotiations between Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Abdic representatives, agreement was reached for the return of the group to Velika Kladusa; many were unwilling to do so, however, without guarantees for their safety.

In view of the rapidly deteriorating humanitarian situation, the Special Representative set up a humanitarian crisis cell, composed of UNPF staff, to collate information on the observance of human rights, communicate with all humanitarian affairs agencies and coordinate responses through four recently created human rights action teams. The looting and burning of abandoned houses, as well as of crops, in the two former Sectors were reported by UNCRO soldiers and civilian police, as well as by human rights action teams. Some incidents of physical violence were also reported.

ICRC, which reported favourably on its access to all detained persons, had registered more than 600 detainees, most of whom had been subsequently released.

Commenting on the impact on UNCRO of recent events in the former Sectors North and South, the Secretary-General said that with the collapse and departure of the political leadership and armed forces of the Krajina Serbs, no longer was there a requirement, except in Sector East, that UNCRO monitor or control the confrontation line, separation zone, weapons-storage sites and areas of limitation set by the 1994 cease-fire agreement. Nor did UNCRO have to assist with economic projects across former confrontation lines, as specified in the 1994 economic agreement. The Croatian Government had established full control over its territory, with the exception of Sector East, and over access to its international borders. The remaining aspects of the UNCRO mandate, including confidence-building, assisting in humanitarian activities, and the protection of refugees and displaced persons had become primarily the responsibility of the Croatian Government and could in any case be performed without the presence of UNCRO infantry battalions, the Secretary-General stated.

Croatia's reintegration of former Sectors West, North and South by force had eliminated the need for infantry battalions in those areas. The UNCRO Force Commander had therefore begun the immediate reduction of UNCRO's troop strength to within the level authorized by Council resolution 990(1995), that is, 8,750 troops. The Secretary-General recommended Council approval of the further repatriation, during the remainder of the current mandate, of all remaining battalions, except two in Sector East.

In the light of the drastically changed situation on the ground, the Secretary-General had instructed his Special Representative to consult with the parties regarding a precise definition of UNCRO's mandate in Sector East (see below) and to discuss with the Government what tasks, if any, UNCRO could usefully continue to perform elsewhere in Croatia. Those could include: monitoring and good offices in relation to the Prevlaka peninsula and Dubrovnik; monitoring of Croatia's international border with Bosnia and Herzegovina; and monitoring of the Croatian police and other matters relating to human rights in those parts of Croatia where a minority Serb community remained.

The Secretary-General recommended no changes with respect to UNPF-HQ in Zagreb and the logistics bases there and elsewhere. He pointed out in this connection, however, that Croatia had yet to implement fully certain of its commitments under the status-of-forces agreement, concluded on 15 May, regulating the presence and functioning of the UNPF elements in the country, including making the necessary premises available rent-free and exempting UN forces and operations from various taxes and tolls. The amounts involved were substantial, running at about $2 million a month for taxes and fuel alone.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (29 August and 7 September)

On 29 August, the Security Council President conveyed⁽⁵⁴⁾ to the Secretary-General the Council's agreement with his recommendation concerning the repatriation of remaining UNCRO battalions, with the exception of the two in Sector East. The President further conveyed the Council's support for the possible future configuration and tasks of UNCRO as described, and expressed the Council's readiness to consider further recommendations. As to the status-of-forces agreement with Croatia, the Council looked to the Croatian Government to implement fully and unconditionally the terms of the agreement in all its aspects. The Council further expressed concern over the humanitarian problems described by the Secretary-General and stressed the importance it attached to the fulfilment of the provisions of the relevant Council resolutions and to the international community's efforts to alleviate the plight of refugees and displaced persons.

On 7 September, the Council met and, after consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the following statement⁽⁵⁵⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 August 1995 submitted pursuant to its resolution 1009(1995) of 10 August 1995 on Croatia and in particular the humanitarian situation and human rights violations described therein.

The Security Council expresses its deep concern at the grave situation of refugees and persons displaced during the Croatian offensive and at reports of violations of international humanitarian law as described in the report of the Secretary-General of 23 August 1995. The Council shares the view of the Secretary-General that the mass exodus of the local Serb population has created a humanitarian crisis of significant proportions. The Council is also concerned by reports of human rights violations including the burning of houses, looting of property and killings and demands that the Government of Croatia immediately investigate all such reports and take appropriate measures to put an end to such acts.

The Security Council reiterates its demand that the Government of the Republic of Croatia respect fully the rights of the local Serb population including their right to remain or return in safety.

The Security Council welcomes efforts made by the Secretary-General in coordination with international humanitarian organizations in response to this acute humanitarian situation. It calls upon all Member States to provide urgent humanitarian relief and assistance to these refugees and displaced persons.

The Security Council reiterates that all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts. The Council reiterates in this context that all States shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal established pursuant to its resolution 827(1993) and its organs.

The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3573.

Further report of the Secretary-General. In a further report⁽⁵⁶⁾ of 29 September, the Secretary-General conveyed to the Security Council the results of the Special Representative's consultations with the Croatian Government and the local Serb leadership on the tasks of UNCRO, in Sector East and in other areas of Croatia, for the remainder of its current mandate under what he called the radically changed situation in the country.

The requirements arising from that situation were stipulated in the report. First, both parties asked that UNCRO remain in Sector East to continue its mandated tasks and to facilitate the development of a peaceful solution. In that regard, it had been made clear to the parties that a new spirit of cooperation with UNCRO was indispensable. Second, in view of reports of continuing human rights abuses in the former Sectors North and South, the Government needed to create conditions conducive to the return of the Serbs who had fled (90 per cent) and for the residual Serbs (10 per cent) to remain. UNCRO could play a valuable role towards realizing that objective, the Secretary-General maintained. Third, the Government had asked that UNCRO monitor its border with both Bosnia and Herzegovina and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Its concern included those areas of Croatia close to or contiguous with Bosnian Serb-controlled territory in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including Dubrovnik and the Prevlaka peninsula.

Accordingly, the Special Representative proposed that the UNCRO mandate, as defined in Council resolution 981(1995), be modified to include performance of: those functions envisaged in the 1994 cease-fire and economic agreements only with respect to Sector East (paragraphs 3 (a) and (b)); monitoring and reporting only at the border crossings in that Sector where UNCRO remained deployed (3 (d)); and the new task of observing and reporting on military incidents in the vicinity of the Croatia-Bosnia and Herzegovina international border.

Withdrawal of UNCRO infantry battalions, except for the two in Sector East, was in progress, and troop strength should be reduced to about 2,500 in October. In the remaining mandate period, the tasks in Sector East could be accomplished by retaining the current numbers of infantry; those in the rest of Croatia could be performed by the existing UN military observers (UNMOs), civilian police and civilian support staff. The border crossing points in Sector East would be maintained by the battalions currently deployed there, while other border monitoring actions would be executed by UNMO mobile patrols.

In view of both sides' undertaking to improve their level of compliance with existing agreements and of their cooperation with UNCRO, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council approve the foregoing arrangements. They would apply to the remainder of UNCRO's current mandate, pending ongoing negotiations on the ultimate future of Sector East in the context of an overall political settlement of the crisis in the former Yugoslavia.

On 10 October, the Council agreed to the arrangements as recommended.⁽⁵⁷⁾

Sector East

On 11 August, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) warned⁽⁵⁸⁾ of a possible imminent armed attack on Sector East (Eastern Slavonia, including Baranja and Sirmium), based on reports of a massive troop build-up by the Croatian Army in the area and provocative artillery strikes against civilian targets and "ARSK" positions; an all-out attack on Sector East could endanger Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Hungary, leading to a spillover of the conflict to the wider Balkan region.

Reports of the Secretary-General (August, September). As described in the Secretary-

General's report of 23 August,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the situation in Sector East deteriorated rapidly as events unfolded in Sectors North and South during Croatia's 4 August offensive on those areas. Local Serb forces and the Croatian Army exchanged artillery, mortar and small-arms fire, and both began deploying in the separation zone. Tension and uncertainty among the local Serbs was reflected in a breakdown of law and order that saw the hijacking of UN vehicles, harassment of UN personnel and the temporary detention of five Sector headquarters staff by Serb elements. Both sides had adopted an aggressive stance against UNCRO, firing on its positions and seizing 16 of its observation posts, 14 by the Croatian Army and 2 by the Serb forces. Fearing an imminent Croatian offensive, the Serb forces sought tactically advantageous positions within the separation zone, while the Croatian forces appeared poised to apply pressure on the Sector by forcing UNCRO to evacuate its observation posts.

Adding to the tension were reports of the presence of "volunteers" from Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), of some 600 to 700 Serb police seen entering Baranja by way of the Batina bridge, and of Yugoslav Army units massed on the Yugoslav side of the Danube. Severe restrictions on all UN movements imposed by both sides critically hampered UNCRO's ability, not only to implement its mandate, but also to conduct such simple tasks as resupplying observation posts.

The Secretary-General felt that UNCRO's immediate task in Sector East was to re-establish the regime created by the 1994 cease-fire agreement. If that could be achieved, there would be a continuing role for UN forces (infantry, logistics units, UNMOs) in the Sector, which he would recommend only if the parties demonstrated a new spirit of cooperation. That required, inter alia, according UNCRO unrestricted freedom of movement, returning all seized observation posts and putting a complete stop to the hijacking of UN vehicles. The Special Representative had been instructed to pursue consultations with the Croatian Government and the local Serb leadership in order to define in detail a possible mandate for UNCRO that the Secretary-General could recommend to the Council.

In a 29 September report,⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Secretary-General recommended to the Council approval of the modified mandate for UNCRO, including those arrangements applicable to Sector East. He further stated that, after intensive consultations with both parties, the Special Representative had been assured of their willingness to resolve the issue of Sector East through negotiation.

The military commanders of both sides had met nine times between 25 August and 25 September in a Joint Commission convened by the UNCRO

Commander of Sector East in pursuit of a plan to stabilize the situation, which called for troop and weapons withdrawal from the separation zone, restoration of full freedom of movement to UNCRO and the return of seized observation posts. In addition, the local Serb authorities had given their word to comply with all the requirements of Council resolution 981(1995).

Reporting to the General Assembly on 18 October⁽⁵⁷⁾ on implementation of its request that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately cease any military and logistic support to the self-proclaimed authorities in the Serb-controlled parts of Croatia, the Secretary-General pointed to the difficulty of obtaining accurate information in that regard, but noted that the reported influx of Serb police into Baranja via the Batina bridge could be presumed to happen elsewhere, and that many roads from Serbia led into the southern part of Sector East, unmonitored by UNCRO, by which food, fuel and weapons could be brought in. Much of the Sector's infrastructure, including electricity, telephone lines, railway links and postal services, was provided by or linked with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The significant economic cooperation between them was thus based not only on recent circumstances but also on historic trade patterns.

The Secretary-General also spoke of persistent concern over the activities of Serb paramilitary groups, which had been operating in and from Sector East since fighting began in 1991. The so-called Arkan Tigers, whose training facility in Erdut was only a few hundred metres from the UNCRO Sector headquarters, were reported to have been responsible for recent atrocities in north-western Bosnia.

Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium

Following intensive negotiations throughout September and October, undertaken by the UN Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee, Thorvald Stoltenberg, and the United States Ambassador to Croatia, Peter Galbraith, that extended into further negotiations at the peace talks in Dayton, Ohio, a commitment was reached on 3 November between Croatia's President Franjo Tudjman and President Slobodan Milosevic of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to reinvigorate local negotiations. From those local negotiations emerged the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, signed in Croatia on 12 November between the Government of Croatia and the local Croatian Serb authorities in Eastern Slavonia. The text was communicated by Croatia to the Secretary-General on 15 November.⁽⁵⁹⁾

The negotiations were based on 11 principles embodied in a document titled "Guiding Basic Principles for Negotiations", signed also by the Government and the Croatian Serb authorities in Eastern Slavonia on 3 October in Erdut, Croatia, and transmitted to the Security Council on 6 October.⁽⁶⁰⁾ Agreement on those principles had been the result of discreet contacts made by the UN Co-Chairman of the ICFY Steering Committee with the parties throughout July and September.⁽⁶¹⁾

The objective of the Basic Agreement was the peaceful reintegration of the region in question into the country's constitutional and legal systems. To that end, the Basic Agreement provided for the following: a 12-month period of transition, which might be extended at most to another period of the same duration if so requested by one of the parties; a Transitional Administration to be authorized by the Security Council to govern the region during that period, to ensure the possible return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes of origin, to re-establish all public services, and to organize and train a temporary police force; an international force, also to be authorized by the Council, to demilitarize the region completely not later than 30 days after deployment; the presence of international monitors, to be authorized by the Government, along the region's international border to facilitate free movement of persons across existing border crossings; monitoring implementation of human rights and civil rights by interested countries and organizations; and, not later than 30 days before the end of the transition period, monitoring of local elections by international organizations and institutions, such as the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) (see "Cooperation with OSCE" below, under "Other issues"), and interested States.

Transition arrangements

Report of the Secretary-General. In his report⁽⁶²⁾ of 23 November, prepared to assist the Security Council in its deliberations on the future of the three UNPF missions before the expiration of their mandates on 30 November, the Secretary-General reported on UNCRO activities since his 29 September report,⁽⁶⁶⁾ and on arrangements to be made in the light of the Basic Agreement.

The Secretary-General noted that UNCRO continued its efforts to reduce the tension prevailing in Sector East and to monitor the situation of the Croatian Serb minorities in former Sectors North, South and West. At the same time, withdrawal and repatriation of all UN military personnel from those former Sectors were in progress, as was the closing of the three Sector headquarters, all of which should be completed no later than 21 December.

Against a background of Croatian troop build-up west of Sector East and repeated statements by Croatia of its intention to recapture the Sector should the ongoing negotiations for its peaceful reintegration be unsuccessful, UNCRO, in support of those negotiations, endeavoured to uphold the integrity of the zone of separation between the opposing forces and to initiate and foster confidence-building measures, such as family reunions and humanitarian visits. In cooperation with the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, UNHCR, UNCRO and ECMM continued to document serious violations of the human rights of the Serb minorities.

The Secretary-General stated that Croatia had yet to respond positively to the Council's call, most recently made in resolution 1019(1995), for lifting any time-limits placed on the return of refugees to Croatia to reclaim their property. The law on the temporary management of currently abandoned property in the formerly occupied territories, due to take effect on 3 December, allowed the Croatian Government to make abandoned houses and property available for housing displaced persons, unless their rightful owners returned to Croatia to reclaim them for personal use. Current administrative procedures and justified concerns for security, however, constituted virtually insurmountable obstacles to the return of Serbs to claim their property.

UNCRO had made a series of prison visits to follow up with regard to the approximately 800 Croatian Serbs who remained in detention, during which it received persistent complaints over the difficulty of access to lawyers and concerns over the lack of specificity of charges. UNCRO also provided civil affairs and civilian police assistance to the UNHCR operation at Kuplensko refugee camp in former Sector North, where there were more than 20,000 Bosnian refugees (loyal to Fikret Abdic) from Velika Kladusa.

In the context of the Basic Agreement's request for the establishment of a transitional administration and an international force, the Secretary-General identified two realistic options for the Council regarding UNCRO's future: terminate UNCRO on 30 November, when its mandate was due to expire, or authorize its continuation until the new arrangements had been emplaced.

President Tudjman had made clear to the Special Representative that he could not agree to a further extension of UNCRO, but would agree to retaining its two battalions in the region as a transitional arrangement, insisting that implementation of the Basic Agreement, particularly its demilitarization aspects, begin on 1 December. The Secretary-General thus suggested that the Council might confirm UNCRO's presence for two months as a transitional arrangement, pending the establishment of an international force; designate as quickly as possible a civilian transitional administrator for the region; and determine the date on which the Basic Agreement's implementation should begin. In this regard, the Secretary-General pointed to the absence of concurrence by the Government to the continuation of UNCRO's current functions, except perhaps for the monitoring of the Prevlaka peninsula as a confidence-building measure.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 30 November and adopted resolution 1025(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions and in particular its resolution 981(1995) of 31 March 1995,

Recalling also the Secretary-General's report of 29 September 1995 and the letter of the President of the Security Council to the Secretary-General of 10 October 1995,

Reaffirming its resolution 1023(1995) of 22 November 1995,

Reaffirming once again its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Croatia and emphasizing in this regard that the territories of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, known as Sector East, are integral parts of the Republic of Croatia,

Affirming the importance it attaches to full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms of all in those territories and elsewhere in the Republic of Croatia,

Welcoming again the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, signed on 12 November 1995 between the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb representatives,

Welcoming the positive role played by UNCRO, and paying tribute to the personnel of UNCRO in the performance of their mandate,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 November 1995,

Reaffirming its determination to ensure the security and freedom of movement of the personnel of United Nations peace-keeping operations in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and, to these ends, acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 23 November 1995;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit for consideration by the Council at the earliest possible date and no later than 14 December 1995 a report on all aspects of the establishment by the Council of an operation consisting of a transitional administration and a transitional peace-keeping force to implement the relevant provisions of the Basic Agreement including on the possibilities for assistance from the host country in offsetting the costs of the operation;

3. Decides that, in order to allow for the orderly establishment of the operation referred to in paragraph 2 above, the mandate of UNCRO shall terminate after an interim period ending on 15 January 1996 or when the Council has decided on the deployment, including on the necessary period for the transfer of authority, of the transitional peace-keeping force referred to in that paragraph, whichever is sooner;

4. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Further report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with the foregoing resolution, the Secretary-General submitted for the Security Council's consideration a report dated 13 December on all aspects of the establishment of an operation comprising the transitional administration and peace-keeping force required to implement the Basic Agreement, as well as on the possibilities for host-country assistance to offset the operating costs involved⁽⁶³⁾

The Secretary-General considered the Basic Agreement a landmark accomplishment, meriting full international support for its effective and timely implementation. Only a substantial military force deployed at the outset, he felt, could generate the mutual confidence necessary for the parties to take the difficult steps required of them under the Agreement. A mechanized division of two brigades, with combat capability, air support and a strong mobile, armoured reserve, operating under Chapter VII of the UN Charter, would provide the minimum strength necessary to implement the Basic Agreement and to deter attacks from other forces in the region. It would have sufficient combat power and robust rules of engagement to endorse compliance if required, the Secretary-General said.

He emphasized that anything less than a well-armed division-sized force would only risk repeating the failures of the recent past. He said the concept of deterrence by mere presence, as attempted in the "safe areas" in Bosnia and Herzegovina, would not be more likely to succeed in this instance. Should there be a mismatch between the international force's mandate and its resources, there would be a risk of failure, of international casualties and of undermined credibility for those who had put the force in the field.

The force, which could include the current UNCRO troops in Sector East, could deploy in two self-sufficient task forces, north and south of the Drava River, reporting to a single headquarters. If it was to be a UN force, deployment would take up to 180 days; once declared deployed, demilitarization of the region would begin, to be completed within 30 days. Rather than collect weapons in storage points, the force would assist in the destruction or disposal of all weapons, ammunition and explosives and would oversee the disbanding of existing military, paramilitary and police forces in accordance with the Basic Agreement.

In this regard, one of two options presented by the Secretary-General was to authorize the deployment and command of a force comprising approximately 9,300 troops plus logistic support, under a Chapter VII mandate, entrusted to a coalition of Member States rather than to the United Nations and attached to the 60,000-strong multinational military Implementation Force to be deployed in Bosnia and Herzegovina (see "UN transition arrangements" above, under "Bosnia and Herzegovina"). The other option was to entrust such an operation to a UN force. The Secretary-General considered the first option to be the best, given his reservations about the current ability of the United Nations to undertake an enforcement operation of the kind described, as well as of the imprecise nature of the Basic Agreement and the consequent risk of differing interpretations of some of its provisions.

As for the transitional administration, whose specified tasks were of a magnitude and complexity not to be underestimated, the Secretary-General proposed that the administration head (the "transitional administrator") should be a UN official under the direction of and reporting to the Secretary-General. Should the international force be a multinational one, not subject to the transitional administrator's authority, the Council would have to request that troop-contributing States instruct the force commander to cooperate closely with the administrator and to respond appropriately, were the latter to ask the force to come to the aid of the civil power.

Also proposed was an advisory transitional council, to be chaired by the transitional administrator and to include one representative each of the Government, the local Serb population, the local Croat population and other local minorities. Executive power would be vested exclusively in the administrator, who would establish functional implementation committees, the composition of which would be determined in consultation with the parties. The implementation committees would address questions of police, civil administration, restoration of public services, education and culture, the return of refugees and displaced persons, human rights, elections and records. In view of the importance of implementing the civilian aspects of the Basic Agreement as soon as possible, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council authorize establishment of the transitional council and local implementation committees.

The Secretary-General warned that the operation envisaged by the Basic Agreement would not succeed unless two conditions were fulfilled: active and sustained political support from the Council, particularly from those Member States that had played a vital part in concluding the Agreement; and immediate provision by Member States of the necessary troops and guarantees that the financial resources needed would be made available. In that connection, the Secretary-General had received no indication from Croatia that it would be willing to contribute in any significant manner to defraying the costs of the operation.

Communication from the Security Council. On 21 December, the President of the Security Council notified⁽⁶⁴⁾ the Secretary-General that the Council, having reviewed his report, stood ready to consider the option that both the transitional administration and the transitional international force be components of a UN operation, stressing that, if it so decided, the necessary financial resources should be made available in a timely fashion. The Council agreed that the force should operate under an appropriate mandate and be provided with the necessary protection. It encouraged the Secretary-General to accelerate discussions with possible troop contributors to allow deployment of the force at the earliest possible date.

Recognizing the complexity of the Basic Agreement and the danger that the two sides might have different interpretations of some of its provisions, the Council welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to send an envoy to the region as soon as convenient to discuss implementation of the Basic Agreement with the Croatian Government and the local Serbs, as well as the practical aspects of the proposed UN operation, including possible assistance from the host country in offsetting the cost.

Prevlaka peninsula

In his 13 December report,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Secretary-General pointed out that, in accordance with Council resolution 1025(1995), the UNCRO mandate would be terminated on 15 January 1996. On the basis of consultations with the parties in the area, however, he recommended the continuation of UNMO monitoring of the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula.⁽⁶⁵⁾ For the time being, the UNMOs would continue to report to UNPF-HQ in Zagreb. Given the dimensions of the "blue zone" in Prevlaka and of the "yellow zone", encompassing a demilitarized zone of 5 kilometres on either side of the tripartite border, and given also the need to establish a small local headquarters because of the isolation of the area, the Secretary-General recommended that the authorized strength of that UNMO operation be increased from 14 to 28. That would permit it to be self-sufficient, to patrol the areas concerned more reliably, and to maintain UNCRO's existing liaison teams in Dubrovnik and in Herceg Novi (Montenegro), some 45 kilometres south-east of Dubrovnik.

Communications. On 22 December, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) drew attention⁽⁶⁵⁾ to what it claimed was an existing territorial dispute between it (specifically Montenegro) and Croatia, centred in the Prevlaka peninsula in Boka Kotorska Bay—a dispute the existence of which had been noted by both parties in Dubrovnik on 25 April. The legal status of the territory in question, encompassing Cape Ostri and part of the Prevlaka hinterland, was regulated by the 30 September and 20 October 1992 joint declarations by the Presidents of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Croatia, as well as by Security Council resolutions 779(1992)⁽³⁵⁾ and 981(1995), pending a peaceful solution of the dispute.

Owing to the failure of its many attempts to resolve the dispute through negotiations with Croatia, including at the peace talks in Dayton, Ohio, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) asked the Council to adopt a decision, prior to the expiry of the UNPF missions in the former Yugoslavia, to continue the UN monitoring mission in the disputed area.

Responding on 3 January 1996, Croatia stated⁽⁶⁶⁾ that the untrue claims by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) were intended to justify its request for the prolongation of the UN presence in the Prevlaka peninsula in the Republic of Croatia beyond the expiration date of UNCRO. Croatia could not accept the notion of an existent "territorial dispute" as alleged, since the area in question had never been disputed or contested while Croatia was a constituent republic of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. In accordance with international law, the borders of those constituent republics became recognized as international borders among the successor States of the former Yugoslavia, Croatia asserted, adding that that legal fact had also been confirmed by the European Community Arbitration Commission and the EU Badinter Commission.

Croatia went on to say that the issues discussed at the Dayton proximity talks were well known, and the Prevlaka peninsula was not among them. Rather, it had been raised unilaterally, and a unilateral claim to a part of another State's territory could in no way be construed as a "firm commitment to a peaceful solution of the dispute in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations", especially since Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was still not prepared to recognize Croatia, despite the Council's numerous calls for such recognition. The Yugoslav claim was contrary to the spirit and letter of numerous Council and General Assembly resolutions protecting the territorial integrity of all successor States, including Croatia.

Croatia remained available to discuss all pertinent issues, including full normalization of relations with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), but under one fair and objective condition: the discussion must be between two equal States that fully recognized each other within their internationally recognized borders. (See also other "Succession issues" under "General aspects", above.)

Dubrovnik

On 13 April, Croatia drew attention⁽⁶⁷⁾ to an unprovoked artillery attack that day on Cilipi airport in Dubrovnik and nearby villages. The attack, Croatia alleged, had been launched by Bosnian Serb paramilitary units in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which had fired a total of twenty-two 130-millimetre shells, destroying a fuel depot at the airport. Croatia further alleged that, the day before, Serb paramilitary forces in the occupied territories of Croatia launched an SA-6 surface-to-air missile that had exploded in the village of Malik. Since such a missile was not in the arsenal of the occupied territories, Croatia could only conclude that its transportation from Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) had been allowed and was out of the control of UN peace-keepers. Croatia further reported⁽⁶⁸⁾ on 19 April that, on that day, the airport had again been shelled from Bosnian Serb-held territory.

On 14 August, Croatia wrote⁽⁶⁹⁾ of renewed shelling of the Dubrovnik region by Bosnian Serb paramilitary forces, with assistance from the Army of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The series of attacks, which began on 12 August and during which more than 3,000 impacts were recorded, had resulted in civilian casualties, numerous forest fires and severe damage to buildings and other property in the municipalities of Dubrovnik, Konavle and Ston. Cipili airport was closed due to heavy damage. Croatia urged the Security Council to bring such cross-border aggression to a halt.

A statement⁽⁷⁰⁾ by the EU Presidency on 19 August expressed the Union's deepest concern regarding the situation in and around Dubrovnik and urged the parties involved to stop all military activities forthwith and exercise restraint.

On 30 October, Croatia wrote⁽⁷¹⁾ of yet another unprovoked attack on the Dubrovnik area by the Bosnian Serbs, regarding which it had lodged a protest with ECMM and UNCRO.

Refugees and displaced persons

According to the Secretary-General's 18 October report,⁽²²⁾ about 116,000 people had been displaced from former Sectors North, South and West. Some 900 to 1,000 displaced Croats had returned to their homes in former Sector West. The number of those who returned to former Sectors North and South could not be confirmed, but was believed to be small. Accounting for that small number were the ongoing mopping-up operations by the Croatian Army and police, the looting and burning of Serb houses, the lack of economic prospects and the uncertain security environment, including the presence of mines.

Since early May, more than 480,000 persons had been forced from their homes. The movements directly involving Croatia included: in May, the more than 10,000 Croatian Serbs who fled Sector West for Sector East and the Banja Luka region (Bosnia and Herzegovina); in August, the exodus of about 200,000 Croatian Serbs from Sectors North and South, of whom 170,000 took refuge in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the rest in Sector East and in Banja Luka; also in August, the 25,000 Bosnian-Muslim followers of Fikret Abdic who fled the Bihac pocket (Bosnia and Herzegovina) for Croatia, and the more than 20,000 Croat and Muslim minorities, expelled by the Bosnian Serbs from Banja Luka, who poured into Croatia.

Remaining in the previously Serb-held area of former Sector West were about 1,200 Serbs and between 4,000 and 5,000 in its northern part, which had always been under Croatian government control. An estimated 3,000 Krajina Serbs remained in former Sector North and about 2,000 in former Sector South. According to Croatian officials, the Serb population in Croatia fell from 12 per cent to less than 3 per cent of the national population as a result of the "liberation of the occupied territories" (of former Sectors North, South and West).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 3 October to consider the question of the refugees and displaced persons who had fled Bosnia and Herzegovina for Croatia, as well as the ethnic Croatian Serbs who remained in former Sectors North, South and West or who had fled those areas and wished to return.

Following consultations among its members, the Council authorized the President to make the statement below⁽⁷²⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council expresses its concern at the humanitarian situation in and around the Republic of Croatia, including the situation of refugees from the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Security Council is particularly concerned at the withdrawal of refugee status from and the consequent ending of assistance to many refugees from the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina at present in the Republic of Croatia. The decisions of the Government of Croatia in this regard may lead to the involuntary return of tens of thousands of people to an area that is neither safe nor prepared to receive them. The Council stresses the importance of the principle of non-refoulement set out in the 1951 Geneva Convention on the Status of Refugees, to which Croatia is a party. The Council urges the Government of Croatia to continue to provide asylum to all refugees regardless of their origin.

The Security Council is also seriously concerned at the situation of the refugees from the Republic of Croatia wishing to return, as well as of those ethnic Serbs who have chosen to remain in the Republic of Croatia. It reiterates its demands, contained inter alia in its resolution 1009(1995), that the Government of Croatia respect fully the rights of the local Serb population including their right to remain or return in safety, investigate all reports of human rights violations and take appropriate measures to put an end to such acts. The Council calls upon the Government of Croatia to lift any time-limits placed on the return of refugees to Croatia to reclaim their property. The Council also calls on the Government to cooperate with international humanitarian organizations in the creation of conditions conducive for the repatriation of refugees in safety and dignity.

The Security Council will remain actively seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3584.

Violations of human rights and international humanitarian law

In view of the humanitarian situation resulting from Croatia's offensives in May and August, as reported by the Secretary-General on 3 August⁽³⁴⁾ and 7 August,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Security Council, by resolution 1009(1995), demanded that Croatia respect fully the rights of the local Serb population, including their rights to remain, leave or return in safety; allow access to the population by international humanitarian organizations; and create conditions conducive to the return of persons who had left their homes. It reiterated that demand on 7 September⁽⁵⁵⁾ and, in its 3 October statement, urged Croatia to continue to provide asylum to all refugees regardless of their origin.

By resolution 1019(1995) of 9 November, the Council reaffirmed its demand that Croatia take urgent measures to put an end to violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights, and investigate all reports of such violations so that those responsible could be brought to justice. It reiterated its demand that Croatia respect fully the rights of the local Serb population, as well as its call for the lifting of any time-limits placed on the return of refugees to reclaim their property. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to inform the Council regularly on measures taken by Croatia to implement resolutions 1009(1995) and 1019(1995).

Report of the Secretary-General (October). As noted in the Secretary-General's report of 18 October,⁽²²⁾ the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights conducted an on-site investigation of alleged human rights problems following the 1 May Croatian offensive on Sector West and, based on his findings, concluded that violations of human rights and humanitarian law had occurred during and after that offensive. Reports of such violations from Member States, EU, UNHCR, UNCRO and international human rights organizations persisted for more than eight weeks after the 4 August offensive on Sectors

North and South. During their investigations, UNPF action teams led by field officers of the Centre for Human Rights found evidence of extrajudicial executions, disappearances, ill-treatment and harassment of the remaining Serb population, and systematic and widespread destruction of Serb houses and entire villages in the Krajina by Croatia's Army and internal security forces. ECMM documented that, in the 243 villages it had investigated, 73 per cent of Serb houses had been burned and looted. In early October, incidents of armed robbery and personal threats were reported with increasing frequency, along with crimes against property.

While Croatian authorities maintained that the violations were perpetrated by uncontrolled elements, there were reports from international observers, including members of the press, who said they had witnessed the presence of the Croatian Army and special police units in several instances. Only after significant international criticism did President Tudjman announce investigations into 611 cases of looting, 27 bombings and seven murders. Under investigation by the authorities were another 36 murder cases, regarding which the President said it was not clear whether they were committed in war situations or in mopping-up operations or by "unbalanced individuals".

Confirmed reports of continuing human rights abuses had created a climate of deep apprehension hostile to the return of those wishing to do so. There were as yet no reliable government guarantees that returnees would enjoy safety and security, the Secretary-General said.

Furthermore, the Government had adopted a number of legislative measures since August that appeared incompatible with its stated intention to facilitate the return of refugees. Of grave concern was a decree of 31 August on the temporary expropriation and control by the Government of certain "abandoned" property in former Sectors North, South and West. The order was applicable to property anywhere in Croatia owned by individuals who had left the country since 17 August 1990 or who were residing in Sector East or Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) or in Serb-held areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It was also applicable to owners of such property who were citizens of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

The deadline for claims, as amended, required owners to claim their property "for possession and use" within 90 days from 4 September. Since return within that time-limit appeared neither feasible nor advisable under existing circumstances, that requirement constituted a potentially insurmountable obstacle to the return of Serbs currently outside Croatia, the Secretary-General observed. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights had made representations to President

Tudjman against this aspect of the decree, and, in its 3 October presidential statement, the Council had called for its lifting.

(The decree was the subject of an explanatory letter from Croatia on 7 September,⁽⁷³⁾ and of a protest lodged by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) on 14 September.⁽⁷⁴⁾)

Other legislative measures adopted by Croatia's Parliament, before its dissolution in early September, modified the electoral law to reduce the number of Croatian Serb representatives from 12 to 3 (with effect from the elections scheduled for 29 October); suspended constitutional provisions with respect to the political autonomy of the Serb-majority districts of Glina (northern Krajina) and Knin (southern Krajina); and called for a new population census in 1996, the Secretary-General reported.

Communication. On 30 October, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) transmitted a "Memorandum of October 1995 on the ethnic cleansing of and genocide against the Serb people of Croatia and Krajina".⁽⁷⁵⁾ The memorandum aimed to document mass killings, planned expulsions of the entire Serb population from Croatia and, in its words, the "systematic eradication of all traces of its centuries-long life" in the areas from which they were expelled. As a result of Croatia's policy of ethnic cleansing, it said, some 550,000 Serbs had been expelled from Krajina and other places between 1991 and 1995. Of those, 250,000 had been driven from former Sectors North, South and West. As a result, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) said it was now faced with the problem of providing shelter for refugees from those parts.

Further report of the Secretary-General. In response to Council resolution 1019(1995), the Secretary-General on 21 December reported⁽⁷⁶⁾ on Croatia's implementation of that resolution. Police-patrolling, a preventive measure which the Croatian authorities had assured would be increased throughout former Sectors North, South and West, was found inadequate. UN monitors in the countryside had observed only a few patrols, except in the area of Vrljika. On 9 October, UN officials were informed that joint Croatian-UN police patrols would be cancelled for lack of manpower and vehicles. In the week ending 19 November, substantial reductions in Croatian police checkpoints in former Sector South were reported, but were to be replaced by mobile patrols, which had so far not been in evidence.

The Secretary-General noted that the Government had been providing data showing the number of investigations undertaken with respect to killings, arson and looting, of the prosecutions under way, and the steps to trace suspected perpetrators. The Government had also established a special commission under the auspices of the Ministry of the Interior to follow up on serious crimes. A significant discrepancy existed between the number of suspicious deaths recorded by the United Nations and the number of murders registered by the Croatian authorities. Efforts to determine the number of civilians killed during and following the 4 August Croatian offensive had been impeded by the authorities' refusal of access to burial records concerning more than 750 freshly dug graves found by UN personnel in former Sectors North and South.

Likewise, a significant discrepancy existed between the UN estimate of at least 5,000 properties set on fire and the 2,787 cases of arson registered by the Government, which included 2,072 buildings said by Croatia to have been partly affected by combat operations and 715 partly or entirely destroyed in deliberate actions; only 11 persons had been charged with arson, it was reported. Government figures did not indicate the degree of military and police involvement. Croatia's claim that nearly 75 per cent of the buildings burned had been "affected by combat operations" was also inconsistent with UN reports documenting numerous fires in areas where hostilities had ceased days, weeks and sometimes even months before.

The Government established 1,054 cases of looting, of which 770 had been clarified. The number of persons charged—1,260—was high. A number of those cited were released, however, and Government figures did not indicate the number of Croatian soldiers and police involved. Efforts of Croatian authorities to confiscate and return property appeared insufficient to address the magnitude of the problem.

The right of the Krajina Serbs to remain in their homes had not been adequately safeguarded. Remaining Serbs had faced extensive harassment and intimidation; looters and armed thieves had robbed them of both their property and sense of security. Victims of those abuses who had complained to the Croatian police had been met with apathy or inaction or action that was neither timely nor sufficient.

The humanitarian situation of the more than 9,000 Serbs remaining in former Sectors North and South was reported to be grave, as was the situation of those remaining in former Sector West. Composed mainly of elderly and disabled people living in small villages deep in the countryside, those Serbs were in desperate need of food, medical assistance, hospitalization and proper shelter. The Croatian authorities reported having conducted a survey of 5,270 people and an assessment of their needs, described by one official as overwhelming.

The return of Croatian Serbs continued to be hampered by practical, legal, administrative and bureaucratic obstacles. Under a humanitarian policy of family reunification, only 59 of the 100 elderly Serb refugees stranded in Barc, Hungary, had been authorized to return to Croatia under UNHCR auspices, and only a handful of Croatian Serbs had returned on their own. The Government had stated that a mass return would not be possible in the absence of a specific agreement between it and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

Of concern was the failure to respect the right to a fair trial of the more than 700 Serbs who remained in detention on grounds of having committed "war crimes" or "armed rebellion". Inadequate access to legal counsel, vagueness of charges, trials in absentia and an excessive delay in preparing indictments appeared to be major problems. Court-appointed attorneys were reluctant to fulfil their duties and had little or no contact with defendants.

In September, the Croatian Parliament temporarily suspended several articles of the "Constitutional Law on Human Rights and Freedoms and the Rights of National and Ethnic Communities in the Republic of Croatia", namely, those guaranteeing the special status of districts predominantly populated by national minorities, providing for separate educational institutions, and providing for proportional representation in the parliament, government and the judiciary. The Secretary-General recalled that adoption of the foregoing articles was an essential condition for the international recognition of Croatia. Also suspended was the article providing for establishment of the Provisional Human Rights Court. The Ministry of Justice had created a working group, however, to consider relevant legal issues for the establishment of such a court.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the Secretary-General's report of 21 December, the Security Council met on 22 December and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽⁷⁷⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 December 1995, which it has just received.

The Security Council, as a matter of urgency, expresses its grave concern that, according to information in that report, the Government of the Republic of Croatia has ignored the call of the Council in the statement of its President of 3 October 1995 that it lift any time-limits placed on the return of refugees to reclaim their property. The requirement that owners must reclaim their property by 27 December 1995 constitutes a virtually insurmountable obstacle for most Serb refugees.

The Security Council strongly demands that the Government of the Republic of Croatia lift immediately any time-limits placed on the return of refugees to reclaim their property.

The Security Council shall continue its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General.

Meeting number. SC 3615.

Communication. On 27 December, Croatia stated⁽⁷⁸⁾ that it found the Secretary-General's 21 December report to be incorrect to the point of being biased, unnecessary and extremely unproductive. Rather than giving the relevant information requested in paragraph 12 of Security Council resolution 1019(1995), it merely recycled material submitted in previous reports and already acted upon by the Council and General Assembly.

The Secretary-General's report and the hastily issued presidential statement, Croatia said, had created a wrong impression of the actual situation in Croatia, which could affect the ongoing peace process, including implementation of the Basic Agreement, and engender reluctance on the part of Member States to contribute troops for the transitional military force. Croatia claimed it had fulfilled most of the demands in Council resolutions 1009(1995) and 1019(1995). In particular, the Government had suspended the time-limit for reclaiming property and would propose to the Parliament that it amend the 21 August decree so as to extend the deadline sine die.

Croatia restated its commitment to the peaceful reintegration of its remaining occupied territories, to fostering confidence-building measures and to normalizing relations with Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

Croatia-Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

During the year, Croatia addressed a number of letters to the Secretary-General alleging the active involvement of the Army of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (JA) in the Serb-occupied territories of Croatia and charging Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) with the violation of, among other things, the UN Charter, owing to its intervention across the international border of a sovereign State and its violation of the border closure referred to in Security Council resolution 943(1994).⁽⁷⁹⁾

On 28 June, Croatia restated⁽⁸⁰⁾ the charges it had made on 27 and 28 March and on 18 May⁽⁸¹⁾ regarding: the incremental transport of JA troops and materiel into the occupied territories; the assignment to the "Army of Serb Krajina" of a detachment of some 6,000 JA commissioned officers to direct the Krajina paramilitary units; the payment by Belgrade of the wages of those officers and members of the "proxy government and military", as evidenced by recently discovered payroll lists regularly forwarded to Belgrade; and the forcible mobilization, on a large scale, of Yugoslav citizens and Serb citizens of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina for military service in the occupied territories. Croatia on 27 July further spoke of a sharp increase of JA assistance, particularly in Vukovar in Sector East.⁽⁸²⁾

In the meantime, on 4 April, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) lodged a strong protest⁽⁸³⁾ against what it labelled as Croatia's tendentious and untrue charges and conveyed a strong denial by the JA Joint Chiefs of Staff that any military units or equipment were in deployment outside Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

In a series of charges and countercharges by the two countries, each accused the other of carrying out attacks on its territory.

On 13 August, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) charged⁽⁸⁴⁾ that Croatian armed forces, in joint operations with the "Muslims", continued to fight the Serbs "along the entire line of the front" of what it called the "former Bosnia and Herzegovina" at the same time that Croatia was carrying out attacks against the "territory of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia", the "territory" in question being the line of separation in Sector East near Osijek and the Trebinje, Debela Ljut and Kozen Do areas. Responding⁽⁸⁵⁾ on 28 August, Croatia expressed its indignation that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should be laying claim to parts of Croatian territory (Osijek in the Vukovar region in Sector East), as well as to parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina (Trebinje, Debela Ljut, Kozen Do), stressing that it regarded the claim to the Vukovar region as a hostile act against Croatia's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Croatia on 20 August reported⁽⁸⁶⁾ that Croatian Serb paramilitaries, assisted by the JA Novi Sad Corps, had launched a terrorist attack on Osijek from their positions in occupied Vukovar, killing three civilians and wounding 10 others, and inflicting material damage. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) on 24 August called that charge baseless and malicious, adding that Croatia was setting the stage for an offensive on Eastern Slavonia and on the Trebinje area.⁽⁸⁷⁾

On 30 August, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) alleged⁽⁸⁸⁾ that, two days before, the Croatian Army had launched three 82-millimetre mortar shells on Prasna Rupa, approximately 500 metres deep into Yugoslav territory, warning of grave consequences that might arise from Croatia's repeated criminal acts. Croatia, on 6 September, denied⁽⁸⁹⁾ the allegation, affirming it had no intention of raising tensions along the Croatia-Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) border, committed as it was to the ongoing peace process.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

At the end of March 1995, the Security Council decided that the UNPROFOR operation in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should be known as the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), reflecting by that name the essentially preventive mandate of the operation; that is, to monitor and report any developments along its borders that could undermine confidence and stability in the country.

The effective role of UNPREDEP was of major importance to the country, whose political situation remained divided across ideological and ethnic lines, whose economy remained precarious notwithstanding considerable government efforts with some outside assistance, and where a potential for confrontation still existed at its borders, as the Secretary-General had pointed out. Accordingly, the UNPREDEP mandate was extended beyond 30 November 1995 to 30 May 1996.

An event of major significance during the year was the signing of an Interim Accord on 13 September between Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, which strengthened the latter's international standing and paved the way for the establishment of diplomatic relations with its neighbours and for its admission to a number of European organizations. Most importantly, implementation of the Accord would normalize relations between the two countries and, it was hoped, resolve the contentious dispute between them over the name of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

UNPROFOR activities

Pursuant to Security Council resolution 947(1994),⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²⁾ on 22 March 1995 describing developments affecting UNPROFOR's implementation of its mandate in the main theatres of its operation—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia—to assist the Council in its consideration of that mandate before its expiration on 31 March.

In his observations relating to the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, the Secretary-General stated that, in the recent past, ethnic Albanian leaders had stepped up demands for improvements in their political, economic, social, cultural and educational status, including recognition of Albanian as the Republic's second official language. A project to establish an Albanian-language university in Tetovo had led to a confrontation between the Government and the project's ethnic Albanian proponents, who argued that the State's two universities in Skopje and Bitola, as well as the restoration of some instruction in the Albanian language within the Pedagogical Academy in Skopje, were insufficient. The Government held that to establish such a university outside the State system was against the Constitution and laws of the Republic and charged its advocates with using purportedly educational issues to advance their political ambitions. Police had intervened on several occasions to halt the Tetovo project. Such intervention at a 17 February demonstration for the project resulted in the death of an ethnic Albanian and injuries to a number of policemen. In addition, ethnic Albanians holding 19 of the 120 seats in Parliament boycotted parliamentary sessions in support of their demand for Albanian as the second official language.

Internal political, social and inter-ethnic difficulties continued to be exacerbated by the fragile state of the country's economy. Approximately 30 per cent of the workforce was unemployed; the 1994 inflation rate was 50 per cent. The 1994 trade embargo imposed by Greece⁽³⁾ and the UN sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continued to disrupt the country's principal export/import routes on its southern and northern borders. With some assistance from the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, EU and individual Member States, the economy was showing signs of strength in some areas, but still needed further international support.

Following the 1994 border incidents arising from the non-recognition of the country's international borders by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),⁽⁴⁾

UNPROFOR negotiated a military administrative boundary between the two countries which determined the northern limit of the area of operation for UNPROFOR troops, and both sides used that boundary for the reporting and management of border-crossing incidents. While UNPROFOR's monitoring of the boundary crossings by military patrols of both sides had revealed no tension between them, the potential for confrontation remained in the absence of a mutually recognized international border. The Secretary-General thus reiterated that a joint border commission should begin work forthwith to resolve that long-standing issue.

Summing up, he stated that the situation in the country was marked by a complex network of external and internal factors contributing to economic and political uncertainty and rising social tension. The country continued to labour under the combined constraints of the economic blockade imposed by Greece and the effects of sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the non-recognition of its borders by the latter, and inter- and intra-ethnic tensions, all of which continued to undermine its stability and pose a threat to its fragile democracy. Should threats to its peace and stability, either external or internal, increase to such an extent that a new mandate and reinforcements were judged necessary, the Secretary-General stood ready to submit appropriate recommendations to the Council.

Communications. On 27 March, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia transmitted a number of suggested revisions to the Secretary-General's report that, it said, reflected a more objective representation of the situation in the country.⁽⁵⁾ On the same date, Greece conveyed its objections to the report's reference not only to the "economic blockade" but also to the "trade embargo imposed by Greece". Continued use of those terms, Greece claimed, could mislead the Security Council and Member States, since they did not give the full picture, particularly with regard to the Skopje Government's long series of provocative acts that had preceded Greece's response.⁽⁶⁾

UN Preventive Deployment Force

Report of the Secretary-General (March). As noted in his 22 March report,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General, responding to the wishes of the host Governments of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, proposed that the UNPROFOR operations in those countries be replaced by three distinct but interlinked peace-keeping operations (for details, see "UN peace forces: UNCRO, UNPROFOR, UNPREDEP" under "General aspects" above). The proposal in respect of the peace-keeping operation in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia was approved by the Security Council in the resolution below.

Report of the Secretary-General (November).

In a report⁽⁷⁾ of 23 November, the Secretary-General brought the Security Council up to date on developments in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and reviewed progress in the implementation of UNPREDEP's mandate, which was to expire on 30 November.

The Secretary-General noted that, fortunately, the 3 October attempt on the life of President Kiro Gligorov had neither destabilized national life nor slowed down internal reforms and foreign policy initiatives. Although opposition parties continued to challenge the outcome of the 1994 parliamentary elections,⁽³⁾ the ruling coalition in the legislature had made possible passage of several significant laws in the areas of democratization, privatization, formation of political parties, local self-government and education.

To meet the concerns of the ethnic Albanian minority, the Government had released all persons imprisoned in connection with the 17 February demonstration for the Tetovo project, instituted a special four-year teachers' course in Albanian at the Pedagogical Academy in Skopje, reserved a 10 per cent quota for ethnic minority students at institutions of higher learning, and appointed the first ethnic Albanian general in the army.

Externally, there was little evidence of any imminent military threat to the territorial integrity of the country. Three of its four neighbouring countries had officially recognized it; recognition by the fourth, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), remained pending.

The Interim Accord (see below), which had strengthened the international standing of the country, was immediately followed by its establishment of full diplomatic relations with several other States, by its admission to OSCE and the Council of Europe, and by its participation in the "Partnership for Peace" initiative and other international and regional arrangements.

Government measures to stabilize the economy had met with partial success: whereas the inflation rate had been reduced and privatization and banking reforms were proceeding, industrial production had considerably declined and unemployment had increased to 50 per cent of the workforce.

The effective role of UNPREDEP had been of major importance to the country's highest authorities. UNPREDEP's regular contacts with a number of government ministries, as well as with all political parties including the opposition and ethnic minorities, had proved of special value to the functioning of UNPREDEP and to the implementation of its mandate. Mutually beneficial contacts had also been initiated by the UNPREDEP Commander with the military authorities of Albania and of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). There was consent that greater tolerance should be displayed during encounters along their common border with the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Consequently, border incidents had significantly decreased.

It was the Secretary-General's assessment that the continued presence of UNPREDEP, with the same mandate, strength and troop composition, was vital to the maintenance of peace and stability in the country. It was his intention to revert to the Council as soon as practicable to propose putting UNPREDEP on a fully independent footing, reporting directly to New York. That would entail adjustments to its administrative, logistic and military support and thus to its authorized strength. In the meantime, he recommended that UNPREDEP be renewed for a further 12-month period, irrespective of developments elsewhere in the theatre.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (30 November)

In the light of the Secretary-General's foregoing report, the Security Council met on 30 November and adopted resolution 1027(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions and in particular its resolution 983(1995) of 31 March 1995,

Reaffirming its commitment to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia,

Recalling its concern about possible developments which could undermine confidence and stability in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia or threaten its territory,

Welcoming the positive role played by the United Nations Preventive Deployment Force (UNPREDEP), and paying tribute to the personnel of UNPREDEP in the performance of their mandate,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 November 1995,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 23 November 1995;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNPREDEP for a period terminating on 30 May 1996;

3. Urges UNPREDEP to continue its cooperation with the mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

4. Calls upon Member States to consider favourably requests by the Secretary-General for necessary assistance to UNPREDEP in the performance of its mandate;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of any developments on the ground and other circumstances affecting the mandate of UNPREDEP, and in particular to submit, if possible by 31 January 1996, a report on all aspects of UNPREDEP in the light of developments in the region, for review by the Council;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

ICFY activities

According to the biannual reports of the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee, transmitted to the Security Council on 27 July 1995⁽⁸⁾ and on 2 January 1996,⁽⁹⁾ the ICFY Working Group on Ethnic and National Communities and Minorities intensified its efforts during 1995 to promote a series of legislative and practical improvements in favour of the ethnic Albanian and other minorities in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

The Working Group had organized 10 rounds of two-day talks, in which representatives of all Albanian parties and the Ministers of the Interior, Justice and Education participated. To supplement those talks, numerous individual meetings were held with representatives of Parliament, other government agencies, other minority groups (Muslims, Romas, Serbs, Turks, Vlachs), opposition groups outside Parliament, and the media. The talks focused on new legislation under consideration for all three levels of education (elementary, secondary, university) and on local self-government. Also discussed were language and citizenship issues, and display of national symbols.

In the media sector, the Working Group sponsored an agreement between the Governments of Denmark and Switzerland, on the one hand, and "Macedonian Radio and Television", on the other, providing for the delivery of television equipment and for the tripling of broadcast time in the Albanian language, as well as for a considerable increase in air time for languages of other nationalities. A similar radio project had been prepared by specialists from the European Broadcasting Union.

Relations with Greece

On 3 April, Greece registered its objection⁽¹⁰⁾ to the fact that the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, in its statement before the Security Council on the occasion of the adoption of resolution 983(1995) on 31 March, referred to itself as the "Republic of Macedonia". Greece recalled that the admission of that republic to the United Nations was provisionally as "the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia", pending settlement of the dispute with Greece over its name.

Responding⁽¹¹⁾ on 5 April, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia asserted that the name of any Member State was that State's exclusive right, which was respected and established in international legal norms and in the basic principles of the United Nations.

Interim Accord

The Secretary-General, by a letter of 13 September, informed the Security Council that the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia had signed an Interim Accord that day at UN Headquarters in New York. The Accord, the result of more than two years' mediation by the Secretary-General's Special Envoy Cyrus Vance (United States), pursuant to Council resolution 845(1993),⁽¹²⁾ was also signed by the Special Envoy as witness to the event. Annexed to the Secretary-General's letter⁽¹³⁾ was the text of the Accord.

The Accord contained a series of articles governing: friendly relations between the parties and confidence-building measures (articles 1 to 8); human rights and cultural rights (9 and 10); international, multilateral and regional institutions (11); treaty relations (12 to 14); and economic, commercial, environmental and legal relations (15 to 20). The final clauses (articles 21 to 23) concerned settlement of disputes exclusively by peaceful means, non-infringement by the Accord of existing bilateral and multilateral agreements with other States, and the Accord's duration and effective date, namely, the thirtieth day following the date of its signature on 13 September.

Under the Accord, the two neighbouring States agreed to respect each other's sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence and to establish diplomatic relations, ultimately at the ambassadorial level. They confirmed their common existing frontier as an inviolable international border. They agreed to refrain from the threat or use of force, to continue negotiations under the auspices of the Secretary-General on the contentious issue of the name of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and that the latter should cease to use in any way the symbol currently displayed on its national flag. They further agreed to refrain from imposing any impediment to the movement of people or goods between their territories.

In a statement⁽¹⁴⁾ on 14 September, the President of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia informed the Secretary-General that the signing of the Interim Accord had been preceded by the establishment of full diplomatic relations with the United States.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, having received the Interim Accord, met on 15 September and, after consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the following statement⁽¹⁵⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council welcomes the signing of the Interim Accord between Greece and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and looks forward to the establishment of a new relationship between the parties based on international law and peaceful, friendly relations. The Council believes the Accord will promote the strengthening of stability in the region.

The Security Council commends both parties, the Secretary-General, the Secretary-General's Special Envoy, Cyrus Vance, and the United States envoy, Matthew Nimetz, for their efforts in bringing about this important achievement, pursuant to Security Council resolutions 817(1993) and 845(1993). The Council encourages them to continue their efforts to resolve the remaining differences between the parties and urges the parties to implement fully the Interim Accord.

Meeting number. SC 3579.

Further communication. On 1 December, Greece, recalling the Interim Accord between it and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, stated⁽¹⁶⁾ that the Accord constituted an unmistakable proof of its resolve to settle disputes peacefully and to ensure harmonious relations with its neighbours, for which the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, along with other States, had expressed appreciation.

In this context, Greece was unpleasantly surprised that the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, in its statement before the Council on 22 November on the occasion of the suspension of sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), had once again referred to itself as the "Republic of Macedonia" and made other references that ran counter to the spirit and letter of the Interim Accord.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

In 1995, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), together with both Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, played a key role in contributing to the successful outcome of the peace process that led to their formal signing, on 14 December, of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Peace Agreement). It had similarly contributed to the negotiations that had led to the earlier signing, on 12 November, of the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, concluded between Croatia and the local Serb authorities in Eastern Slavonia.

As when the Security Council had acknowledged the significant step taken by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in 1994—closing its borders to the Bosnian Serbs to induce them to accept a negotiated settlement—by partially suspending the sanctions imposed against it, so too had the Council acknowledged, as early as the initialing on 22 November of the Peace Agreement, that country's spirit of cooperation and compromise during the peace process by suspending indefinitely and with immediate effect all sanctions imposed against it.

UNPF liaison office

Throughout 1995, the United Nations continued to maintain a liaison office in Belgrade, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), under UNPROFOR until 31 March and under UNPF thereafter, in order to conduct political liaison and public information functions. In addition, the office performed tasks relevant to the monitoring of the Prevlaka peninsula, as mandated by Security Council resolution 779(1992),⁽¹⁾ and, until 20 December, of the country's airfields, as mandated by resolution 786(1992).⁽²⁾

The liaison office enjoyed a level of cooperation with the Federal Government that proved vital to the effective functioning of UNCRO in Croatia, UNPROFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina and UNPREDEP in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Given the necessity of a continued UN presence in Belgrade, the Secretary-General said in a 23 November report⁽³⁾ to the Council that he felt it important for the Federal Government to extend to the United Nations, its personnel, property, funds and assets the necessary privileges and immunities deriving from Article 105 (1) of the UN Charter, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations⁽⁴⁾ and the customary principles and practices applicable to UN peace-keeping or similar operations.

Kosovo, Sandjak (Raska) and Vojvodina

Reports of ICFY Steering Committee Co-Chairmen. The biannual reports of the Co-Chairmen of the ICFY Steering Committee, transmitted to the Security Council on 27 July 1995⁽⁵⁾ and on 2 January 1996,⁽⁶⁾ indicated that ICFY had renewed its efforts to re-establish a dialogue between leaders of non-Serb ethnic communities in Kosovo, Sandjak (Sandzak or Raska) and Vojvodina. To that end, consultations had been held with leaders of the Kosovo Albanians and Sandjak Muslims, as well as with the municipal authorities in Pristina and Novi Pazar. Those contacts were continuing and possible modalities for dialogue were under consideration, it was reported.

Communications. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) transmitted to the Secretary-General on 24 March an aide-memoire regarding Kosovo and Metohija, asserting that that province was an integral part of the Republic of Serbia and, hence, of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).⁽⁷⁾

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) drew attention to what it termed Albania's recognition of the non-existent "Republic of Kosovo" in October 1991 and the successor Government's subsequent endorsement of that recognition in April 1992, as well as to the opening of a "representative office of the Republic of Kosovo" in Tirana. Albania, the aide-memoire stated, was according Kosovo's separatist leaders treatment befitting State representatives and had presented them as such to the national and international public. Albanian diplomatic missions in international organizations and forums (United Nations, OSCE, EU, European Parliament, Council of Europe, NATO) were representing the "Republic of Kosovo" and organizing the visits and meetings of its separatist leaders. A point in case was when the Permanent Mission of Albania to the United Nations had organized a press conference for Ibrahim Rugova on 8 December 1994, presenting him as "the President of the Republic of Kosovo".

The aide-memoire went on to say that Albania continued to encourage Kosovo's Albanian minority to be disloyal to the State in which they lived and to boycott its general elections and educational system. By its official statements, Albania sought to internationalize the question of Kosovo and Metohija and to promote secession of the province from Serbia.

On 19 April, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) reported⁽⁸⁾ that Albania continued to seize lands owned by ethnic Serbian and Montenegrin minorities (the Vracani and Podgoricani) in the villages of Stari and Mladi Boric, where they had lived for centuries. The official explanation was that those lands were being taken in exchange for other parcels of land as part of an administrative reorganization. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) expressed regret that international human rights organizations had tolerated that policy.

On 15 August, Albania charged⁽⁹⁾ that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) had begun to resettle Serb refugees from Croatia and from Bosnia and Herzegovina in Kosovo with the aim of changing the predominant ethnic Albanian composition of the population there. As that could aggravate an already tense situation in Kosovo, Albania asked the Security Council to take steps to stop what it called the ethnic cleansing of Kosovo's Albanians and include the Kosovo situation in the overall solution of the crisis in the former Yugoslavia. On the same date, Bosnia and Herzegovina drew attention⁽¹⁰⁾ to the resettlement of Serb refugees in Sandjak (Raska) and Vojvodina, in addition to Kosovo, with the obvious intention of changing the ethnic character of those areas in favour of the Serb population.

Replying on 18 August, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) declared⁽¹¹⁾ that instead of expressing compassion for the plight of the Serbs expelled from Krajina, Albania was using that humanitarian tragedy as an opportunity to generate fear among ethnic Albanians in Kosovo and provoke a spillover of the conflict to the entire region. It accused Bosnia and Herzegovina of interfering in the right of a sovereign Government to decide where in its territory—of which Raska (Sandjak) was an integral part—refugees would be accommodated. Similar points were made in a second letter⁽¹²⁾ of the same date.

On 6 October, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) raised its objection⁽¹³⁾ over Hungary's statement before the General Assembly on 28 September, wherein Hungary voiced concern over the settlement of Serb refugees in areas traditionally inhabited by other national minorities so as to change the composition of the population in those areas, and suggested that forcible means and intimidation had been used against Croat and Hungarian minorities in Vojvodina, an autonomous province of Serbia. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) labelled the suggestion baseless and reiterated its right as a sovereign State to decide where in its territory to resettle the refugees.

Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)—Croatia

In a number of communications addressed to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council between July and October, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) charged Croatia with many incidents of unprovoked attacks in flagrant violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The alleged incidents included Croatian Army attacks by anti-aircraft machine-gun fire and artillery at border positions of the Army of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) near Greda in the region of Boka Kotorska (4 and 9 July),⁽¹⁴⁾ as well as in the areas of Debela Ljut, Kozen Do (12 August),⁽¹⁵⁾ and Dunave Krajnje (Konavli) (12 August).⁽¹⁶⁾ Also reported were: two separate firings at JA border units from the Butkovina region (19 August),⁽¹⁷⁾ shelling of Sitnica village and the Borovik forest (21 August),⁽¹⁸⁾ renewed shelling of Sitnica (23 August),⁽¹⁹⁾ and mortar-fire attacks in the areas of Gusarska Jama (26 August)⁽²⁰⁾ and Prasna Rupa, approximately 500 metres deep into Yugoslav territory (28 August).⁽²¹⁾

Responding to the alleged attack on Prasna Rupa, Croatia countercharged that the area in question was 1,100 metres inside the territory, not of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), but of Bosnia and Herzegovina.⁽²²⁾

Further allegations of Croatian Army attacks during September, almost all launched from Cesmina Glava, claimed repeated shelling of Gusarska Jama, as well as sniper fire, penetrating Yugoslav territory some 300 metres and 250 metres, respectively (13 and 14 September);⁽²³⁾ and anti-aircraft gunfire on JA positions in the area of Sitnica village, 12 kilometres north-west of Herceg Novi (19 September),⁽²⁴⁾ and of Prasna Rupa.⁽²⁵⁾

On 22 September, Croatia denied⁽²⁶⁾ that its Army had launched any of the September attacks as charged, and pointed out, on the basis of an enclosed map, that Gusarska Jama, Sitnica and Borovik were all located within the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In connection with the letters containing the allegations, Croatia on 2 October drew attention to the fact that their author had signed his name as an official of the "Permanent Mission of Yugoslavia to the United Nations"; Croatia objected to the publication of the letters as UN documents, stating that the author did not represent a Member State and as such had no authority to request their publication.⁽²⁷⁾

On 9 October, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) further alleged that Croatia's attacks were aimed at provoking a response from JA so as to portray Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) as an aggressor engaged in military activity on that part of the border; it also pointed out that the administrative borders of the republics of the former Yugoslavia had never been precisely delineated, making it possible for all "secessionist Yugoslav republics to interpret them in an arbitrary fashion".⁽²⁸⁾

Other States

The Secretary-General in 1995 continued efforts towards an overall settlement of the Cyprus problem. The mandate of the UN peace-keeping force there was extended until 30 June 1996.

In accordance with an informal understanding between the United Nations and OSCE with respect to conflicts involving members of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), the United Nations continued its lead in peacemaking efforts in Abkhazia, Georgia, while OSCE retained its lead in Nagorny Karabakh, an enclave in Azerbaijan, as well as in South Ossetia, Georgia.

In April, the Security Council reiterated its support for the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Conference to assist in the conclusion of a political agreement of the armed conflict in and around the Nagorny Karabakh region. In September, the Secretary-General decided to send his Special Adviser for special assignments on preventive and peace-making efforts on a goodwill mission to the region, to demonstrate the Secretary-General's concern over the conflict and to underline his support for the peace-making efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group.

Despite efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for Georgia and Deputy Special Envoy, appointed in October, no agreement was reached in 1995 on a political status for Abkhazia, Georgia, acceptable to both sides. However, the parties complied with their 1994 agreement on a cease-fire and separation of forces, as verified by the UN Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG). In May, the Council extended the Mission's mandate until 12 January 1996.

Cyprus

During 1995, the Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus continued, within the overall framework set out by the Security Council in 1994.⁽¹⁾ It sought to achieve progress on both the substance of the Cyprus problem and the implementation of the package of confidence-building measures between the two Cypriot communities, which had been recommended by the Council in 1992,⁽²⁾ defined by the parties at the practical level in 1993⁽³⁾ and accepted by them in principle in 1994.⁽⁴⁾

The Secretary-General's Special Representative, Joe Clark, and Deputy Special Representative, Gustave Feissel, continued contacts with the leaders of both sides as well as with the Governments of Greece and Turkey and with other interested Governments, with a view to finding a basis for the resumption of direct talks. To that end, the Special Representative travelled to the region in March and May, visiting Nicosia, Cyprus, Ankara, Turkey and Athens, Greece. In a 5 June briefing, he informed the Security Council that it had not been possible to define a basis for resumed talks. Further efforts did not succeed in breaking the impasse by year's end, despite the presence on the negotiating table of almost all elements required for a just and lasting settlement.

UN efforts were supported by activities of the European Union (EU) and individual Member States. Missions to Cyprus were undertaken by senior government officials and special representatives from Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States; fact-finding visits were made by senior officials of France, Germany, Ireland, Spain and the European Commission. From 21 to 23 May, the United States, in cooperation with the United Kingdom, convened a meeting in London with representatives of the Cypriot leaders; however, no progress towards the resumption of direct talks was achieved.

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), established in 1964,⁽⁵⁾ continued to monitor the cease-fire, maintain the military status quo to prevent a recurrence of fighting, and carry out humanitarian and economic activities to promote a return to normal conditions on the island. The Security Council extended UNFICYP's mandate in June, and again in December, until 30 June 1996.

On 18 September, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the question of Cyprus and included it in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session (decision 49/502).

Communications. During 1995, Cyprus, Greece and Turkey addressed a number of communications to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President on various aspects of the Cyprus question. Most of the letters from Turkey transmitted communications from representatives of the Turkish Cypriot community.

In a 20 January letter,⁽⁶⁾ the Turkish Cypriot side expressed its readiness to implement the package of confidence-building measures, which included the reopening of the fenced area of Varosha and of Nicosia International Airport under UN administration, as well as 12 additional measures. In that regard, the letter set forth several proposals for action, including implementation of unmanning arrangements along the cease-fire lines; establishment of a transitional bicomunal body to develop and realize joint projects; and commencement, upon the conclusion of the confidence-building measures agreement, of substantive talks on a bicomunal and bizonal federal settlement and of negotiations on other measures, such as those of a military nature. In the meantime, the Turkish Cypriot side declared its unilateral implementation of measures to improve the living conditions of Greek Cypriots and Maronites in the northern part of the island, as well as procedures for family visits to the north by students studying in the south, and to promote bicomunal contacts. On 23 January, Turkey supported⁽⁷⁾ those proposals.

In its reply,⁽⁸⁾ communicated on 23 January, Cyprus pointed to the existing substantial differences between the two sides on all major aspects of the Cyprus question, including the political status and representation of both communities in a federal State, demilitarization, treaties of guarantees, settlers, territorial and constitutional issues, and accession of Cyprus to EU. The Greek Cypriot side was of the view that implementation of the confidence-building measures without finding a common basis on the main issues would not contribute to the solution, but rather would perpetuate the status quo.

In a 13 March letter,⁽⁹⁾ Greece referred to Turkey's position that the opening of negotiations on the membership of Cyprus in EU before an overall settlement of the Cyprus problem was undesirable and would lead to integration of the northern part of the island into Turkey. Greece stated that such a position undermined international efforts to promote the peace process on the island. In a similar vein, Cyprus on 15 March denounced⁽¹⁰⁾ what it termed recent threats by Turkish government officials to integrate the occupied part of Cyprus into Turkey, bringing about the permanent division of the island. On 29 March, the Turkish Cypriot side responded⁽¹¹⁾ that the application to join EU had been made unilaterally by the Greek Cypriot side and was therefore devoid of legal basis and not binding on the other side or on Cyprus as a whole. In further communications on the issue, the Turkish Cypriot side accused⁽¹²⁾ the other party of shifting the negotiating process to settle the Cyprus problem from the United Nations to the EU platform and of stepping up its militarization campaign. It also claimed⁽¹³⁾ that the Greek Cypriot side, while rejecting the implementation of the confidence-building measures and continuing an excessive rearmament, was trying to achieve enosis (union with Greece), by way of membership in EU, before a resolution of the Cyprus question.

On 20 October, Cyprus stated⁽¹⁴⁾ that the agreement on legal matters, concluded between what it termed the illegal entity in the occupied part of Cyprus—the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus"—and Turkey, constituted a violation of the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the Republic of Cyprus and contravened UN resolutions on the question of Cyprus. In a letter transmitted on 1 November,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Turkish Cypriot side responded that Turkey and the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus were two sovereign countries which formally recognized each other and that any interference with their reciprocal relationship was unwarranted. Acts of vandalism and desecration against places of worship in the northern part of the island was the subject of a 7 November communication⁽¹⁶⁾ from Cyprus, which accused the other party of systematic destruction of the cultural heritage in the north; in its reply,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Turkish Cypriot side countered that authorities in the north did their best to protect and preserve all cultural property regardless of origin, and that individual acts of vandalism or theft, which were a worldwide phenomenon, were partly due to the existence of a lucrative stolen-art market in the southern part of the island.

In several letters, Cyprus complained about violations of its airspace by Turkish military aircraft; the Turkish Cypriot side replied that all flights over the northern part of the island were made with full knowledge and consent of the authorities there, pointing out that Greek fighter planes had flown over the south during joint military exercises between the Greek Cypriot administration and Greece. A number of other communications from both parties dealt with excavations near the Old City of Nicosia, carried out by the Turkish Cypriot authorities (see below, under "Communications from the Secretary-General"). The Turkish Cypriot side also forwarded letters challenging the statements made by the other party in the General Assembly, and clarifying its position on the Cyprus question.

UNFICYP

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In a 15 June report⁽¹⁸⁾ on UNFICYP activities, covering the period from 13 December 1994 to 15 June 1995, the Secretary-General stated that the Force continued to monitor the cease-fire lines and to keep the area between the lines, known as the buffer zone, under constant surveillance from 22 permanent observation posts, two posts for day-time surveillance and 19 patrol bases for periodic daily surveillance. It also carried out periodic surveillance from 118 additional observation posts, conducted vehicle, foot and air patrols, and maintained surveillance of the seaward extension of the cease-fire lines.

During the period under review, both sides had generally respected the cease-fire and the military status quo; however, UNFICYP intervened in a number of minor incidents to correct violations and prevent any escalation, and reported the firing of weapons on numerous occasions. On 6 and 7 June, as part of a religious ceremony, the Greek Cypriot side temporarily deployed a sizeable armed guard of honour in the buffer zone near Athienou. It also continued with an extensive programme of strengthening its military positions and increasing their number along and behind its cease-fire line. Some excavations encroached upon the buffer zone but were filled in after representations by UNFICYP. The integrity of the buffer zone was also violated during a small number of Greek Cypriot demonstrations. For their part, the Turkish Forces in Cyprus carried out maintenance and some minor improvements of military positions along or behind their cease-fire line. Turkish Cypriot authorities also modified access to the fenced area of Varosha, despite UNFICYP protests, so as to allow public visits to a church located within the area, which was inaugurated on 2 May as an icon museum.

The number of air violations increased during the reporting period; in May, Turkish fighter aircraft entered Cypriot airspace in the north of the island as part of a military exercise, which was protested by the Greek Cypriot authorities. At the same time, Greek Cypriot tourist and fishing boats continued to cross the seaward extension of the Turkish Forces cease-fire line, and on two occasions crews of fishing vessels were apprehended by a Turkish Cypriot patrol.

Despite the Security Council's 1994 resolution⁽¹⁹⁾ urging a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in Cyprus, both sides continued to improve their military capabilities through the acquisition or upgrading of armaments and equipment and the recruitment of additional personnel. Nor was progress achieved in respect of the Council's calls for unmanning of other parts of the buffer zone, a ban on live ammunition or weapons other than hand-held weapons along the cease-fire lines, or the prohibition of the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone. The Turkish Forces refused to enter into discussions on those issues, referring UNFICYP instead to the Turkish Cypriot authorities, whereas the United Nations maintained that the Turkish Forces were a party to the cease-fire established in 1974⁽²⁰⁾ and could not abrogate their responsibility in that regard. Difficulties also remained regarding UNFICYP's freedom of movement in the northern part of the island.

The Force continued to facilitate a wide spectrum of humanitarian activities with agencies and authorities on both sides. It promoted bicomunal contacts and projects, delivered food and other supplies to the 520 Greek Cypriots and the 234 Maronites residing in the northern part of the island, assisted in organizing family visits across the buffer zone and in ensuring that permanent moves to the other side were voluntary, and engaged in discussions with authorities with regard to the living conditions of Greek Cypriots and Maronites located in the north and of Turkish Cypriots located in the south. UNFICYP also monitored the situation in the mixed village of Pyla in the buffer zone.

As at 1 June, the Force consisted of 1,138 military personnel from Argentina, Austria, Canada, Finland, Ireland and the United Kingdom, and 35 civilian police from Australia and Ireland. It was supported by 366 civilian staff, 42 of whom were recruited internationally. UNFICYP remained under the command of Brigadier-General Ahti T. P. Vartiainen (Finland), while the Secretary-General's Special Representative continued to act as Chief of Mission, with the resident Deputy Special Representative assuming that responsibility in his absence.

UN efforts to restore normal conditions in Cyprus included activities of various bodies and agencies of the UN system, coordinated by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). They involved programmes of technical assistance, UN fellowships and planning for future bicommunal projects. During the period under review, the Government of Cyprus received assistance in the areas of health care, radiation protection, financial management, statistics, industrial competitiveness, human development, capital investment, energy, family relations and the rights of women. UNDP administered 30 training fellowships for Cypriot nationals, totalling $80,500, and provided support to six UN workshops in Cyprus. Humanitarian assistance continued to be coordinated by UNHCR, and included bicommunal programmes in health care, forestry, pest control, the environment, water resources, architecture, civil engineering and education. Those programmes were funded through a $10-million annual grant provided to UNHCR by the United States Agency for International Development. UNHCR also cooperated with UNFICYP in addressing the needs of Turkish Cypriots in the south and Greek Cypriots in the north, and assisted in the operation of an exchange point to facilitate routine services between the two communities.

The Committee on Missing Persons did not meet during the reporting period, due to differences between the two sides over criteria for the conclusion of investigations; however, the Third Member of the Committee held regular bilateral meetings with both sides in an effort to find a compromise solution, and in March reported to the Secretary-General, who forwarded to the two leaders on 17 May his own proposals for the criteria in question. The Turkish Cypriot leader had replied positively to the proposed criteria; a response from the Greek Cypriot side was still pending.

The Secretary-General concluded that, in view of the prevailing circumstances, UNFICYP's presence on the island remained indispensable to achieving the objectives set by the Security Council. Accordingly, he recommended an extension of its mandate until the end of 1995, noting that the Governments of Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had indicated their concurrence with that recommendation, while Turkey continued to support the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, as expressed in previous Council meetings on the extension of the mandate. At the same time, the Secretary-General pointed out that the continuing quiet in Cyprus should not obscure the fact that there was only a cease-fire, not peace, on the island. In the absence of progress towards an overall settlement, the situation remained subject to sudden tensions. He also stressed that the excessive levels of armaments and forces in Cyprus and the rate at which they were being strengthened were a cause for serious concern.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 23 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 1000(1995).

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 15 June 1995,

Taking note of his recommendation that the Security Council extend the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 30 June 1995,

Reaffirming its earlier relevant resolutions on Cyprus, and in particular resolutions 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and 969(1994) of 21 December 1994,

Expressing its concern that there has been no progress towards a final political solution,

Noting that no progress has been made on extending the 1989 unmanning agreement,

Noting also that a review of the situation on the Secretary-General's mission of good offices in Cyprus remains in progress and looking forward to receiving a definitive report at an appropriate time,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period ending on 31 December 1995;

2. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to ensure that no incidents occur along the buffer zone and to extend their full cooperation to UNFICYP;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the structure and strength of UNFICYP with a view to its possible restructuring, bearing in mind the possible implications of an agreement on the extension of the 1989 unmanning agreement;

4. Expresses concern about the modernization and upgrading of military forces in the Republic of Cyprus and the lack of progress towards a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus, urges once again all concerned to commit themselves to such a reduction and to a reduction of defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus to help restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as described in the set of ideas, and calls upon the Secretary-General to promote efforts in this direction;

5. Expresses concern also about the failure by the military authorities on both sides to take reciprocal measures to prohibit along the cease-fire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone, and calls upon those authorities to enter into discussions with UNFICYP on this matter in line with paragraph 3 of resolution 839(1993) of 11 June 1993;

6. Regrets the failure to reach agreement on the extension of the 1989 unmanning agreement to cover all areas of the buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other, and calls upon the military authorities on both sides to cooperate urgently with UNFICYP to this end;

7. Urges the leaders of both communities to promote tolerance and reconciliation between the two communities as recommended in the relevant reports of the Secretary-General;

8. Welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to continue contacts with the two leaders, to make every effort to find common ground for the basis for a resumption of direct talks;

9. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to early progress being made on the substance of the Cyprus question and on the implementation of the confidence-building measures as called for in resolution 939(1994) of 29 July 1994;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 10 December 1995 on the implementation of the present resolution and on any obstacles he may have encountered;

11. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1000(1995)

23 June 1995 Meeting 3547 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/503).

Communications from the Secretary-General (July). On 7 July, the Secretary-General informed⁽²¹⁾ the Security Council that the Turkish Cypriot authorities had begun large-scale excavations immediately behind the Turkish Forces' cease-fire line in an area adjacent to the walls of the Old City of Nicosia known as the Roccas Bastion. He said that the area was specifically covered by the 1989 unmanning agreement. Although the declared purpose of the excavations was to build a playground, the extensive digging of trenches raised questions as to the real purpose. As provided for in the 1989 agreement, UNFICYP requested regular access to the excavations and a detailed briefing on construction plans; however, both requests were denied. For its part, the Government of Cyprus indicated that, if the existing situation was not rectified, it would deem the unmanning agreement to have been breached and would consider taking countermeasures. Despite UN representations to the Turkish Cypriot side, no progress was achieved towards a resolution of the problem.

On 11 July, the Security Council President reported⁽²²⁾ that Council members supported fully the efforts being made to secure UNFICYP inspection of the excavations, and requested the Secretary-General to inform the Council of the inspection's outcome.

In a 25 July letter,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General reported that his Deputy Special Representative had received a detailed briefing by Turkish Cypriot authorities on 13 July and that two UNFICYP inspections of the site were carried out on the following two days. The letter provided findings of the inspections as well as a construction sketch. It was concluded that, while the construction appeared unnecessarily elaborate and costly for its stated purpose, work carried out to date did not correspond to normal military specifications or to any evident military logic. The Turkish Cypriot authorities maintained that the trenches would serve to provide access to underground facilities for the planned public park and recreational area and to facilitate repair of the water and sewage pipes as well as electricity and telephone wires.

They agreed to provide UNFICYP with unhindered regular access to the site. The first follow-up inspection was carried out on 22 July.

Report of the Secretary-General (December).

In his report covering developments from 16 June to 10 December,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General stated that both sides had generally respected the cease-fire and the military status quo, but continued to upgrade their military capabilities. The Greek Cypriot side proceeded with a programme to improve its military positions along and behind the cease-fire line, while the Turkish Cypriot side stated that it intended to convert an UNFICYP observation post within the fenced area of Varosha to a student dormitory, a violation of the status quo in that area. UNFICYP maintained close liaison and cooperation with the military and civilian authorities on both sides; however, in three instances involving detention of persons who had crossed the buffer zone into the northern part of the island, UNFICYP received neither timely nor accurate information from the Turkish Forces and the Turkish Cypriot authorities. By 1 December, the total strength of the Force had increased to 1,184, including 1,150 military personnel and 34 civilian police. Hungary resumed its contribution to the Force on 14 November.

A number of incidents occurred during the reporting period. On several occasions, Greek Cypriot hunters discharged firearms in the buffer zone at Force members, causing slight injuries to one soldier and damage to an UNFICYP patrol vehicle; furthermore, military and police personnel from both sides occasionally entered the zone without authorization from UNFICYP. The integrity of the zone was also violated during Greek Cypriot demonstrations in August and November, resulting in minor injuries to 15 UNFICYP members. On 15 November, during the opening of the newly constructed park and playground near the Old City of Nicosia (see also above), Turkish Cypriots showered stones and other objects into the buffer zone and at Greek Cypriot residences and offices; the authorities subsequently assured UNFICYP that such actions would not be allowed to recur. They also agreed to provide the Force with unhindered monthly access to the site, to ensure that it was used for exclusively civilian purposes.

The Secretary-General expressed concern at the growing incidence of overflights by military aircraft, noting that Turkish fighter planes had entered Cypriot airspace in October as part of an annual land and sea exercise, and repeatedly overflew the northern part of Nicosia and, on one occasion, the buffer zone. On 14 November, UNFICYP received reports that two Turkish military aircraft had entered the Nicosia flight information region, circumnavigated the island and overflew the Karpas peninsula before returning to Turkey. The Government of Cyprus protested those actions; for their part, the Turkish Cypriot authorities and Turkey condemned the participation of Greek aircraft, using live ordnance, in an annual military exercise on the Greek Cypriot side.

In October, UNFICYP organized within the buffer zone in Nicosia an "open house" for children of both communities and their families, attended by more than 5,000 people—the largest bicomunal gathering since 1974—as well as a bicomunal friendship concert, with the participation of more than 1,000 persons. On both occasions, the Turkish Cypriot authorities waived restrictions on the movement of Turkish Cypriot civilians across the cease-fire line. The Force also continued to discharge humanitarian functions in respect of Greek Cypriots and Maronites located in the northern part of the island, whose numbers had decreased to 492 and remained at 234 respectively. UNFICYP discharged similar functions for Turkish Cypriots in the south, some 362 of whom had made themselves known to the Force. Following its review of the living conditions of those population groups, the Force made a number of recommendations for remedial action to authorities on both sides. The review found that Turkish Cypriots in the south, while enjoying the same legal rights as other citizens, were often victims of capricious discrimination or police harassment; there were also reports of maltreatment of detainees by the Cyprus police. At the same time, Greek Cypriots and Maronites living in the north were subject to severe restrictions, which curtailed the exercise of many basic freedoms and some economic and social rights.

In a series of replies concerning the review, the Government of Cyprus stated its commitment to equal treatment of all Cypriot citizens and its readiness to examine carefully complaints or reasonable demands by Turkish Cypriots residing in the south. It declared that it had initiated an inquiry into police misconduct, and announced a number of additional steps in response to UNFICYP recommendations. The Turkish Cypriot authorities, in their response to UNFICYP, cited the existing regulations concerning north-south family visits of Greek Cypriots and Maronites, as well as measures to be taken for improving their living conditions in the north, including the upkeep of their places of worship and education, possible restoration of holy places, installation of telephones, improvements to the water supply and road systems, and establishment of a medical centre.

The report further noted that bodies and agencies of the UN system continued their economic and social activities in Cyprus. UNDP carried out bicomunal projects in the field of health, including the campaign against AIDS, and arranged UN fellowships for Cypriots outside the country. UNHCR administered a bicomunal humanitarian programme in the areas of sanitation, agriculture, health, forestry, environmental monitoring and architecture; convened regular bicomunal meetings on its premises in Cyprus; and sponsored bicomunal seminars and training sessions both within and outside the island. As for the Committee on Missing Persons, the Secretary-General stated that both sides had responded positively to his 17 May proposal (see above), agreed that no further cases would be submitted after the end of 1995, and decided to resume the Committee's activities.

The Secretary-General concluded that UNFICYP's presence on the island remained indispensable, and recommended an extension of its mandate for a further six months, until 30 June 1996. The Council was informed that the Governments of Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had indicated their concurrence with the proposed extension, while Turkey continued to support the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, as expressed in previous Council meetings on the extension of the mandate.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 19 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 1032(1995).

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 10 December 1995,

Taking note of his recommendation that the Security Council extend the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP),

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 31 December 1995,

Reaffirming its earlier relevant resolutions on Cyprus, and in particular resolutions 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and 1000(1995) of 23 June 1995,

Expressing its concern that there has been no progress towards a final political solution,

Noting that no progress has been made on extending the 1989 unmanning agreement,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period ending on 30 June 1996;

2. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to ensure that no incidents occur along the buffer zone and to extend their full cooperation to UNFICYP;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the structure and strength of UNFICYP with a view to its possible restructuring, and to present any new considerations he may have in this regard;

4. Welcomes the humanitarian review undertaken by UNFICYP with regard to the living conditions of the Greek Cypriots and the Maronites living in the northern part of the island and of Turkish Cypriots living in the southern part of the island, supports UNFICYP's recommendations contained in the Secretary-General's report, and decides to keep the matter under review;

5. Expresses concern about the continuing modernization and upgrading of military forces in the Republic of Cyprus and the lack of progress towards a significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus, urges once again all concerned to commit themselves to such a reduction and to a reduction of defence spending in the Republic of Cyprus to help restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as described in the set of ideas, and calls upon the Secretary-General to promote efforts in this direction;

6. Expresses concern also about the failure by the military authorities on both sides to take reciprocal measures to prohibit along the cease-fire lines live ammunition or weapons other than those which are hand-held and to prohibit also the firing of weapons within sight or hearing of the buffer zone, and calls upon those authorities to enter into discussions with UNFICYP on this matter in line with paragraph 3 of resolution 839(1993) of 11 June 1993;

7. Regrets the failure to reach agreement on the extension of the 1989 unarming agreement to cover all areas of the buffer zone where the two sides are in close proximity to each other, and calls upon the military authorities on both sides to cooperate urgently with UNFICYP to this end;

8. Welcomes the initiative of UNFICYP in organizing successful bicomunal events, urges the leaders of both communities to promote tolerance, confidence and reconciliation between the two communities as recommended in the relevant reports of the Secretary-General, and calls upon them to promote further bicomunal contacts and to remove obstacles to such contacts;

9. Welcomes the Secretary-General's decision to continue contacts with the two leaders, to make every effort to find common ground for the basis for a resumption of direct talks;

10. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to early progress being made on the substance of the Cyprus question and on the implementation of the confidence-building measures as called for in resolution 939(1994) of 29 July 1994;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report during the coming mandate period on his mission of good offices, including a full assessment of his efforts towards reaching a settlement of the situation in Cyprus;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 10 June 1996 on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 1032(1995)

19 December 1995 Meeting 3608 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/1045).

Financing

Reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ (April-June). In a 25 April report on financing of UNFICYP,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the resources made available to the Force from 16 June to 15 December 1994 had totalled $22,800,000 gross ($22,357,700 net), including the one-third share of the cost met through voluntary contributions from the Government of Cyprus ($7.6 million) and one half of the annual pledge of $6.5 million from the Government of Greece. Expenditures for the period from 16 June to 31 December 1994 amounted to $22,550,100 gross ($22,166,800 net), leaving an unencumbered balance of $249,900 gross ($190,900 net). Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁶⁾ Member States' respective share in that balance was set off against their assessment for the period from 1 January to 30 June 1995. Accordingly, no further Assembly action was required. The report also noted that outstanding assessed contributions due from Member States for the period from 16 June 1993 to 31 December 1994 totalled $5.1 million as at 31 March 1995.

In a 30 May report,⁽²⁷⁾ the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions pointed to the distortions between the Secretary-General's April report and his October 1994 report⁽²⁸⁾ containing preliminary estimates for the period ending 31 December 1994, and recommended that, in the future, financial performance reports for any given period should be submitted after the conclusion of that period. ACABQ did not recommend any change in the level of appropriations for UNFICYP.

In his June report on UNFICYP⁽¹⁸⁾ (see above), the Secretary-General estimated the cost of maintaining the operation from 1 July to 31 December 1995 at $21.7 million, of which $11.2 million was to be assessed on Member States in accordance with a 1993 Assembly resolution.⁽²⁹⁾ As at 31 May 1995, unpaid contributions to the UNFICYP Special Account amounted to $9.6 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

On 12 July, the General Assembly, by decision 49/484, approved ACABQ's observations and recommendations.

Reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ (November/December). On 6 November, the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁰⁾ that UNFICYP's financial performance from 1 January to 30 June 1995 had resulted in an overexpenditure of $333,000 gross ($344,800 net), owing primarily to the change in the supplier of rations from the British Forces Cyprus to a commercial supplier, as well as to pre-employment medical examinations of 300 locally employed civilian personnel who were converted to locally recruited UNFICYP staff on 1 July. There were also unforeseen additional requirements for utilities, contractual services, and medical treatment and services. Accordingly, the Secretary-General proposed appropriation and assessment of the overexpended amount.

ACABQ, in a 4 December report,⁽³¹⁾ noted that the change in the rations supplier had been expected during the mandate period in question and that the anticipated additional expenditure should have been included in the budget for that period. In that regard, ACABQ believed that, in a long-established operation such as UNFICYP, unplanned activities should be at a minimum, and that greater managerial control should be exercised. In its opinion, no additional appropriation was needed at the current time, especially since the question of indemnity payment to locally employed civilians was still under legal review. Such additional appropriation as might be necessary should be reflected in the performance report for the period July to December 1995.

According to the Secretary-General's December report on UNFICYP⁽²⁴⁾ (see above), the Force's estimated costs from 1 January to 30 June 1996 amounted to $21.7 million, with $11.2 million to be borne by Member States, while outstanding assessed contributions totalled $9.2 million as at 30 November 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 22 December, the General Assembly, by decision 50/448, endorsed ACABQ's observations and recommendations.

On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue its consideration of the item on financing of UNFICYP at its resumed fiftieth session (decision 50/469).

Armenia-Azerbaijan

The unresolved situation in and around the enclave of Nagorny Karabakh in Azerbaijan continued in 1995 to draw that country and Armenia into conflict. With support from the United Nations, the Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Minsk Conference continued their efforts, through the OSCE Minsk Group, to bring that conflict to a speedy resolution and to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons.

Communications (22 January-9 March). On 22 January, Armenia drew attention⁽¹⁾ to what it described as Azerbaijan's increased military activities along their common border over the past 20 days, and asked the international community to defuse the resultant tension. In addition to new military deployments along the front line, rearrangement of artillery positions, redeployment of four regiments from Nakhichevan to the Horadiz front and increased sniping, Armenia accused Azerbaijan of engaging in a new wave of hostile propaganda and of once more blowing up a section of the gas pipeline running through Georgia to Armenia.

Azerbaijan in turn on 26 January charged⁽²⁾ Armenia with regrouping and redeploying troops along the cease-fire line, moving equipment and troops towards Azerbaijani positions at the Geranboy and Terter sectors of the front, stepping up ground and air reconnaissance activities, resettling Armenians in the occupied territories of Azerbaijan and organizing provocative official visits to those territories. By such acts, Azerbaijan claimed, Armenia was derailing the ongoing peace process within the framework of OSCE, just when the latter had intensified efforts to organize a peace-keeping force aimed at creating conditions for a political settlement of the conflict.

In a statement on 24 February, Azerbaijan, in connection with the forthcoming seventh anniversary of Armenia's undeclared war on the country aimed at seizing its Nagorny Karabakh region, recalled what it said were crimes committed by Armenia in pursuit of that objective.⁽³⁾

On 6 March, Azerbaijan issued a press release stating that beginning on the night of 4/5 March, Armenian forces had subjected the border settlements in the Taz, Kazakh and Akstafa districts to intense shelling through the morning of 6 March; Armenia was reportedly destabilizing the situation along the country's north-western border to divert attention from a projected attack on northern Karabakh.⁽⁴⁾ None the less, on 9 March, Azerbaijan reaffirmed⁽⁵⁾ its commitment to a political settlement; Armenia, however, in Azerbaijan's view, maintained its destructive position, refusing to discuss the question of liberating the occupied Azerbaijani territories, including the Lachin and Shusha districts, thus stalling the OSCE Minsk negotiating process. Referring to the possible deployment of a multinational peace-keeping force as an essential element of a political agreement on the cessation of armed conflict under the auspices of the OSCE Minsk Group, Azerbaijan proposed inclusion in that agreement of a provision guaranteeing safe passage along the Hankendi/Stepanakert-Shusha-Lachin-Goris road, the complete withdrawal of armed forces from Lachin, and a fixed date for the return of displaced persons to that district.

Reports of the Co-Chairmen, OSCE Minsk Conference. On 21 March, the Co-Chairmen (Sweden and the Russian Federation) of the OSCE Minsk Conference reported on progress made towards a peaceful settlement of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict since the OSCE Budapest decision of 6 December 1994 to intensify action to resolve that conflict.⁽⁶⁾ The Co-Chairmen reported that the 1994 cease-fire,⁽⁷⁾ reconfirmed several times, remained largely respected; that, through an exchange of letters the parties had undertaken to strengthen the cease-fire through direct contacts and other confidence-building measures; but that the understanding within the Minsk Group to establish an OSCE presence in the region remained unimplemented. An agreed basis for further negotiations presented to the parties was discussed at a round of negotiations held in Moscow in February.

It remained the view of the parties that a peace-keeping operation was necessary to give maximum guarantee to a political agreement. The High-level Planning Group, established by the Budapest decision, was in the process of formulating recommendations for such a force.

On 20 April, the Co-Chairmen pointed out⁽⁸⁾ that continuing support from the Security Council for the possible deployment of an OSCE peace-keeping force, as well as continued UN technical advice and expertise, would be required, should such an operation materialize. The Co-Chairmen continued to pursue implementation of agreed measures for confidence-building and strengthening the cease-fire. They continued to seek the release of civilian detainees, including the sick, the wounded and persons over 50 years old, as well as of POWs. They asked all States to respond generously to the recently launched UN inter-agency appeal for humanitarian assistance to the Caucasus, where the number of war refugees and displaced persons had reached more than a million.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the light of the foregoing reports, the Security Council met on 26 April and, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement below⁽⁹⁾ on the Council's behalf:

The Security Council has considered the reports of the Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Minsk Conference on Nagorny Karabakh presented in accordance with paragraph 8 of its resolution 884(1993). It expresses its satisfaction that the cease-fire in the region agreed upon on 12 May 1994 through the mediation of the Russian Federation in cooperation with the OSCE Minsk Group has been holding for almost a year.

At the same time, the Council reiterates the concern it has previously expressed at the conflict in and around the Nagorny Karabakh region of the Azerbaijani Republic and at the tensions between the Republic of Armenia and the Azerbaijani Republic. In particular, it expresses its concern at recent violent incidents and emphasizes the importance of using the mechanism of direct contacts for the settlement of incidents as agreed upon on 6 February 1995. It strongly urges the parties to the conflict to take all necessary measures to prevent such incidents in future.

The Council reaffirms all its relevant resolutions, inter alia, on the principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States in the region. It also reaffirms the inviolability of international borders and the inadmissibility of the use of force for the acquisition of territory.

The Council reiterates its full support for the efforts of the Co-Chairmen of the Minsk Conference to assist in conducting speedy negotiations for the conclusion of a political agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict, the implementation of which will eliminate major consequences of the conflict for all parties, inter alia, ensuring withdrawal of forces, and permit the convening of the Minsk Conference.

The Council stresses that the parties to the conflict themselves bear the main responsibility for reaching a peaceful settlement. It stresses the urgency of concluding a political agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict on the basis of the relevant principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of the OSCE. It strongly urges those parties to constructively conduct negotiations without preconditions or procedural obstacles and to refrain from any actions that may undermine the peace process. It emphasizes that the achievement of such an agreement is a prerequisite for the deployment of a multinational OSCE peace-keeping force.

The Council welcomes the decision of the Budapest summit of the CSCE of 6 December 1994 on the "Intensification of CSCE action in relation to the Nagorny Karabakh conflict". It confirms its readiness to provide continuing political support, inter alia, through an appropriate resolution regarding the possible deployment of a multinational OSCE peace-keeping force following agreement among the parties for cessation of the armed conflict. The United Nations also stands ready to provide technical advice and expertise.

The Council underlines the urgency of the implementation by the parties of confidence-building measures, as agreed upon within the Minsk Group on 15 April 1994, in particular in the humanitarian field, including the release of all prisoners of war and civilian detainees by the first anniversary of the cease-fire. It calls upon the parties to prevent suffering of the civilian populations affected by the armed conflict.

The Council reiterates its request that the Secretary-General, the Chairman-in-Office of the OSCE and the Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Minsk Conference continue to report to the Council on the progress of the Minsk process and on the situation on the ground, in particular, on the implementation of its relevant resolutions and on present and future cooperation between the OSCE and the United Nations in this regard.

The Council will keep the matter under consideration.

Meeting number. SC 3525.

Further communications. Azerbaijan on 17 May labelled as unverified and a product of Armenia's propaganda machinery a 15 May broadcast by "Svoboda" radio in the Armenian-occupied Azerbaijani town of Hankendi, alleging Azerbaijani troop movements in the Barda, Agjabedi and Beilagan areas along the confrontation line.⁽¹⁰⁾

Armenia reported⁽¹¹⁾ another explosion on 21 May that destroyed a section of the gas pipeline running through the Azeri-populated Marneuli district of Georgia into Armenia, stressing that since 1992 this was the sixteenth such explosion, in addition to 34 acts of sabotage on the railway and seven explosions on the rail bridge over the Khram River connecting Armenia to Georgia. As a result, not only had Armenia been deprived of natural gas supply for close to 200 days, but its economy had also suffered incalculable damage.

Azerbaijan on 23 May responded⁽¹²⁾ to Armenia's decision to suspend its participation in the negotiations under the auspices of the OSCE Minsk Group due to the gas-pipeline explosions attributed by Armenia to "agents of the Azerbaijani Government". Azerbaijan stated that as a country which had experienced the consequences of such acts, it had condemned, as it was condemning on this occasion, such acts of "international terrorism". On 6 June, Azerbaijan welcomed⁽¹³⁾ Armenia's decision to continue to participate in the negotiations, as well as Georgia's statement that, pending completion of an investigation into the explosion, attributions of responsibility for it were premature and groundless.

Armenia on 2 June welcomed⁽¹⁴⁾ the condemnation of the pipeline explosion by the OSCE Chairman-in-Office, as well as the latter's request that the OSCE Mission in Georgia work closely with that country's authorities to investigate the incident. Armenia insisted, however, that such "terrorist acts" were "acts of war" and contrary to the spirit and letter of the cease-fire agreement.

Azerbaijan, by letters⁽¹⁵⁾ of 21 and 30 November and 5 December, drew attention to a what it called a flagrant political mistake in a Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report⁽¹⁶⁾—namely, that it had ignored the fact that Nagorny Karabakh was an integral part of the Republic of Azerbaijan, while correctly identifying Abkhazia and South Ossetia as parts of the Republic of Georgia. Azerbaijan found it perplexing that the JIU inspectors, while abundantly citing Security Council and General Assembly resolutions that unequivocally reaffirmed the status of Nagorny Karabakh as an integral part of Azerbaijan, had ignored that fact, thus undermining the sovereignty of a State Member of the United Nations. Azerbaijan rejected as invalid the inspectors' explanation that their report's treatment of the region was analogous to the use of the title "Nagorny Karabakh" for a separate subsection in the Secretary-General's draft report on the work of the Organization, which, in its final version,⁽¹⁷⁾ Azerbaijan pointed out, did not contain that title.

Further report of the Co-Chairmen, OSCE Minsk Conference. The Co-Chairmen of the OSCE Minsk Conference reported on 5 July that two other rounds of talks had taken place (Moscow, 15-18 May; Helsinki, Finland, 15-19 June), followed by consultations among members of the Minsk Group and representatives of the parties.⁽¹⁸⁾ Discussions focused on the various elements for a draft political agreement.

On 12 May, the first anniversary of the cease-fire agreement, Armenia released all POWs and detainees and repatriated them to Baku, Azerbaijan. Azerbaijan had reciprocated accordingly, as had the Nagorny Karabakh leadership. The Minsk Group had followed up those reciprocal gestures of good will with a call on the conflicting parties to declare an amnesty for those who had participated in the armed conflict.

The OSCE Chairman-in-Office continued endeavours to obtain the necessary international support for a multinational OSCE peace-keeping operation.

Statement for the Secretary-General. According to a statement issued by his Spokesman on 8 September, the Secretary-General had decided to send his Special Adviser for special assignments on preventive and peacemaking efforts, Under-Secretary-General Aldo Ajello, on a goodwill mission in connection with the conflict over Nagorny Karabakh. The mission's purpose was to demonstrate the Secretary-General's concern about the conflict and to underline his support for the continuing peacemaking efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group, which had the leading role in assisting the parties to reach a peaceful solution to the conflict.

Mr. Ajello's itinerary was to include Moscow, where he would attend a meeting of the OSCE Minsk Group on Nagorny Karabakh (11-12 September); Armenia and Azerbaijan, to consult with senior government officials of those two countries and meet with representatives in the Azerbaijani region of Nagorny Karabakh; and Vienna, to consult with the Chairman-in-Office of OSCE and other officials of its secretariat.

Georgia

During 1995, despite efforts by the United Nations and the Russian Federation as facilitator, the political process to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia—a region located on the Black Sea in the north-western part of Georgia—remained deadlocked. The Secretary-General's Special Envoy, Edouard Brunner (Switzerland), convened a new round of talks in February and held separate consultations with the Georgian Government and Abkhaz authorities on a number of occasions. However, no agreement was reached on a status for Abkhazia which would be acceptable to both sides. Formal repatriation of refugees and displaced persons to Abkhazia under UNHCR auspices, within the framework of the 1994 quadripartite agreement,⁽¹⁾ was also at a standstill, although spontaneous returns continued.

Both sides had complied with the 14 May 1994 agreement on a cease-fire and separation of forces.⁽²⁾ The UN Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG), established in 1993,⁽³⁾ continued to monitor and verify implementation of the agreement and to fulfil other tasks mandated by the Security Council in 1994,⁽⁴⁾ in close coordination with the CIS peace-keeping force. The Council extended the Mission's mandate in January and again in May, until 12 January 1996. During 1995, UNOMIG maintained its full authorized strength of 136 military observers. On 28 October, Major-General Per Källström (Sweden) replaced Brigadier-General John Hvidegaard (Denmark) as Chief Military Observer. Also in October, Liviu Bota (Romania) was appointed resident deputy to the Special Envoy and Head of UNOMIG.

Report of the Secretary-General (January). In a 6 January report concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of political and humanitarian developments that had occurred from October through December 1994.⁽⁶⁾ He noted that the parties continued to comply with the 14 May agreement, with all armed forces and heavy military equipment having been withdrawn from the security zone and no heavy military equipment remaining in the restricted weapons zone. He described the situation in UNOMIG's area of operations as generally stable but tense, due to the high crime rate, the regular occurrence of sporadic shooting, robbery and looting, and the inability of local authorities to control banditry. Operating at its full authorized strength of 136 had allowed UNOMIG to intensify activities in the area west of Zugdidi, where most refugees were returning, and along the Gali Canal, to observe and possibly prevent the infiltration of armed personnel into the security zone. It continued to monitor the weapons storage sites on both sides, and conducted regular patrols in the Kodori valley until weather conditions prevented it from doing so. Those activities were undertaken in close coordination with the CIS peace-keeping force. UNOMIG maintained three sector headquarters, in Sukhumi, Gali and Zugdidi, and two semi-static observation posts in the Gali sector; in addition, its liaison office in Tbilisi, Georgia's capital, became operational. On 6 January, the Chairman of the CIS Council of Heads of State confirmed his agreement with the Secretary-General's proposals regarding the respective roles and responsibilities of UNOMIG and the CIS peace-keeping force.

At the same time, the political process to reach a comprehensive settlement of the conflict remained at a standstill over the question of a political status for Abkhazia acceptable to both sides. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General expressed his conviction that negotiations between the parties were the only way to resolve the issue, and recommended that UNOMIG's mandate be extended until 15 May 1995, to coincide with the duration of the mandate of the CIS peace-keeping force. He pointed out that in case of extension, the monthly cost of maintaining the Mission would be limited to the commitment authority approved by the General Assembly in December 1994.⁽⁷⁾ The Secretary-General also noted that the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the 14 May agreement, established in response to a 1994 Security Council request,⁽⁸⁾ had to date received no contributions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

On 12 January, the Security Council adopted resolution 971(1995).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 849(1993) of 9 July 1993, 854(1993) of 6 August 1993, 858(1993) of 24 August 1993, 876(1993) of 19 October 1993, 881(1993) of 4 November 1993, 892(1993) of 22 December 1993, 896(1994) of 31 January 1994, 906(1994) of 25 March 1994, 934(1994) of 30 June 1994 and 937(1994) of 21 July 1994,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, and in this context recalling the statement by the President of the Security Council of 2 December 1994,

Reaffirming also the right of all refugees and displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions in accordance with international law and as set out in the Quadripartite Agreement on voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons, signed in Moscow on 4 April 1994,

Urging the parties to refrain from any unilateral actions which could complicate or hinder the political process aimed at an early and comprehensive settlement of the conflict,

Deeply concerned about the lack of progress regarding a comprehensive political settlement as well as the slow pace of return of refugees and displaced persons,

Calling upon the parties to intensify efforts, under the auspices of the United Nations and with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator and with the participation of representatives of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), to achieve an early and comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, fully respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia,

Expressing its satisfaction with the close cooperation and coordination between the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) peace-keeping force in the performance of their respective mandates, Commending the contribution of the CIS peace-keeping force and of UNOMIG to the maintenance of a Cease-Fire and to the stabilization of the situation in the zone of the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 6 January 1995;

2. Decides to extend the mandate of UNOMIG, as set out in its resolution 937(1994), for an additional period terminating on 15 May 1995;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report within two months of the adoption of this resolution on all aspects of the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia and calls upon the parties to reach substantive progress in the negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations and with the assistance of the Russian Federation as facilitator and with participation of representatives of the OSCE;

5. Calls upon the parties to comply with their commitments with regard to the return of refugees and displaced persons, as undertaken in the Quadripartite Agreement, and in particular calls upon the Abkhaz side to accelerate the process significantly;

6. Decides to undertake, on the basis of a report from the Secretary-General submitted by 4 May 1995 and in the light of any progress achieved towards a political settlement and the return of refugees and displaced persons, a thorough review of the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia;

7. Requests also the Secretary-General to examine, within UNOMIG's existing mandate, in cooperation with the relevant representatives of the CIS peace-keeping force the possibility of additional steps to contribute to conditions conducive to the safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons;

8. Reiterates its encouragement to Member States to contribute to the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the Agreement on a Cease-fire and Separation of Forces signed in Moscow on 14 May 1994 and/or for humanitarian aspects including demining, as specified by the donors;

9. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 971(1995)

12 January 1995 Meeting 3488 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/23).

Further report of the Secretary-General (March). On 6 March, the Secretary-General reported(8) that his Special Envoy for Georgia had convened a further round of negotiations in Geneva from 7 to 9 February. The two sides reached an understanding on certain provisions of a future agreement concerning a State within the boundaries of the former Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic as at 21 December 1991, including the establishment of a "federal legislative organ" and a "supreme organ of executive power" acting within the bounds of agreed competences. During subsequent expert group meetings in Moscow, from 15 to 17 February and from 1 to 3 March, further progress was achieved on formulations for basic provisions of an agreement on a political settlement; however, the parties continued to diverge on the issues of recognition of Georgia's territorial integrity, characterization of the union State as federal in nature, the question of a joint army, and popular legitimization of an agreement.

Following the talks, the Quadripartite Commission, overseeing the implementation of the agreement on the return of refugees, met in Moscow on 16 February for the first time in two months. The Government of Georgia and the Abkhaz authorities agreed to consider a pragmatic repatriation timetable and to adopt measures to restore acceptable security conditions in the areas of return. However, due to Abkhaz unwillingness to accept returnees in any significant numbers, as well as to the deteriorating security situation in the Gali region, organized repatriation remained at a standstill, with only 311 refugees returning under UNHCR procedures, while the number of people leaving Abkhazia for safer areas exceeded that of people returning to the region, according to a UNOMIG assessment. In addition, the lack of funding for humanitarian programmes in Georgia had compelled UNHCR to reduce its presence in the country.

The situation on the ground remained tense, except in the Kodori valley. Both sides attempted to reintroduce heavy military equipment and armaments into the security and restricted weapons zones, while uncontrolled armed elements continued to commit human rights violations and clashed with the local police. The number of ambushes in the Gali region had increased; those involved 23 casualties, including one fatality, among CIS soldiers. In addition, six people, including four CIS soldiers, were killed by mines, and 15 others were killed or wounded in other incidents. In an effort to improve the security situation, the CIS peace-keeping force imposed a curfew in the area. At the same time, UNOMIG continued to monitor the weapons storage sites and to conduct daily patrols, and expanded the area patrolled on a 24-hour basis. The Mission's permanent presence and frequent patrolling in areas of high criminality had a certain deterrent effect and instilled a sense of safety in the population, while its protests against violations of the 14 May agreement, coupled with action by the CIS peace-keeping force, helped to reduce their number and duration.

The Secretary-General concluded that the presence of both UNOMIG and the CIS peace-keeping force in the region had contributed greatly to preventing a renewal of hostilities and paved the way for continued political negotiations. He observed, however, that the lack of progress on the refugee question could result in explosive developments likely to derail the political process and lead to the resumption of conflict, a point which was brought to the attention of Abkhaz leader Vladislav Ardzinba by the Secretary-General's Special Envoy. At the same time, the Secretary-General remained confident that, with patience and perseverance, solutions to the situation could be found.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 17 March, the Council President made the following statement⁽⁹⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the interim report of the Secretary-General concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia. The Council also welcomes the recent efforts of the Secretary-General's Special Envoy which enjoy the Council's full support.

The Security Council reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia and calls upon the parties to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia.

The Security Council notes that there has been little overall progress in achieving a comprehensive political settlement and that a stalemate exists with respect to the return of refugees and displaced persons.

The Security Council takes note of the movement which has occurred in the political talks which resumed in Geneva from 7 to 9 February 1995 and calls upon the parties to exert determined efforts towards achieving substantive progress during the next round of talks.

The Security Council notes with concern that despite the efforts of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) and the CIS peace-keeping force, the security situation, in the Gali region in particular, has deteriorated, causing great difficulty in the delivery of humanitarian supplies. The Council also notes with concern that reports of human rights abuses, largely against the Georgian population, have become more frequent. The Council calls upon the parties to provide a secure environment, inter alia, to provide security for returning refugees and displaced persons and to ensure that international relief supplies can be delivered safely.

The Security Council is deeply concerned about the lack of progress regarding the return of refugees and displaced persons. The Council deplores the continued obstruction on this issue displayed by the Abkhaz authorities and, in particular, the position taken by those authorities in the recent meeting of the Quadripartite Commission in Moscow. The Council expects the parties to implement fully their obligations under the Quadripartite Agreement on voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons. The Council urges the Abkhaz authorities to agree to a timetable on the basis of that proposed by UNHCR. The Council notes that cooperation between UNOMIG and UNHCR is critical to the safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons.

The Security Council, while welcoming the pledge that has been announced to the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the Agreement on a Cease-fire and Separation of Forces, notes the lack of contributions to this fund and reiterates its encouragement to Member States to make contributions to the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the Agreement on a Cease-fire and Separation of Forces and/or for humanitarian aspects including demining, as specified by the donors. The Council also welcomes all other relevant humanitarian contributions of Member States.

The Security Council welcomes the steps taken by UNOMIG and the CIS peace-keeping force aimed at improving conditions for the safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons. The Council notes UNOMIG's increased patrolling and looks forward to further information on intensification of its activities within its mandate. The Council also welcomes the strengthening of cooperation between UNOMIG and the OSCE representatives in Georgia.

The Security Council agrees with the observation of the Secretary-General that, with patience and perseverance, solutions can be found to the situation in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia. The Council underlines that without progress in this direction it will not be possible to maintain the support of the international community.

The Security Council will remain seized of the matter.

Meeting number. SC 3509.

Communications and report of the Secretary-General (March and May). On 13 March, Georgia transmitted⁽¹⁰⁾ a statement by its State Commission for Investigation of the Policy of Ethnic Cleansing/Genocide against the Georgian Population in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia. In a foreword to the statement, Eduard Shevardnadze, Head of State of the Republic of Georgia, called for bringing to justice those responsible for crimes against humanity in the territory of Abkhazia and expressed his hope that the United Nations would create an international body to investigate and punish the perpetrators of such crimes. On 20 March, Georgia communicated⁽¹¹⁾ a 15 March statement by Mr. Shevardnadze regarding the escalation of the situation in Abkhazia. The statement said that between 11 and 14 March, more than 500 militiamen, led by some leaders of the Abkhaz separatists, had intruded into and burned Georgian villages in the Gali region, stealing cattle and other property, executing 24 people, capturing more than 150 and torturing many others. According to the statement, international observers in the area were indifferent towards the crimes committed and were not providing information to their Governments and relevant international organizations. The neutrality of commanders of the CIS peace-keeping force was inconsistent with its mandate of creating necessary conditions for the secure return of refugees, the statement said.

In a 1 May report,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the situation in the security and restricted weapons zones had been extremely unstable from March to mid-April, during which time 28 people had died, 17 had been wounded and some 20 others kidnapped as a result of criminal activities, and incidents of looting and burning of houses and tea plantations were reported. Most of those acts were committed by armed elements on both sides, beyond the control of either the Government of Georgia or the Abkhaz authorities. However, in March and early April, the Abkhaz authorities carried out two militia operations in the Gali region, reportedly to "clamp down on subversive elements" and to "check identification cards" of residents. In the wake of the first operation, which involved some 400 militia personnel, UNOMIG observed the bodies of 13 men, several of whom showed signs of having been tortured; in addition, some 200 civilians were detained but later released. Following the Mission's protest, the Abkhaz authorities admitted to having been unable to exercise full control over the militia and other elements present in the area. The second operation, involving some 170 militia personnel and provoked by an ambush on an Abkhaz funeral procession that had resulted in three fatalities and several injuries, had been more closely controlled by the authorities and monitored by both UNOMIG and the CIS peace-keeping force, but had led, nevertheless, to one death and seven arrests. On the other hand, the situation in the Kodori valley remained calm.

The Secretary-General further reported that his Special Envoy had visited Moscow on 19 and 20 April to hold separate consultations with representatives of the Russian Federation, the Georgian side and the Abkhaz side. The two parties received a draft text which developed elements discussed on earlier occasions, providing for a solution on the basis of a federal State within the borders of Georgia as at 21 December 1991, with certain competences for Abkhazia. The Abkhaz side rejected the draft, stating that fundamental principles of a possible solution had been set out in the 1994 declaration on measures for a political settlement,⁽¹⁾ and that the competences being offered to Abkhazia were less than those given to it in 1978 by the USSR. The Georgian side said that, in recognizing a federal solution to the conflict, the draft text went as far as Georgia was prepared to go. It also reaffirmed the utmost importance of a prompt and massive return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes. The Abkhaz side, while stating that the grave security situation in the area precluded it from accepting large numbers of refugees, had nevertheless communicated to UNHCR on 17 April an offer to register some 40,000 spontaneous returnees and to consider UNHCR-sponsored returnees at the rate of 200 per week.

As of April 1995, contributions to the UNHCR assistance programme for refugees and displaced persons in Georgia amounted to $943,424, only 10.3 per cent of the 1995 budget requirements, jeopardizing continuation of that programme. An inter-agency mission visited the country from 29 January to 4 February to assess the humanitarian situation and finalize a consolidated inter-agency appeal for the period from 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996. Contributions under the appeal covering the preceding 12 months represented only 50.1 per cent of total funding requirements for Georgia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). At the same time, no further pledges had been made or contributions received for the voluntary fund in support of the implementation of the 14 May agreement.

The report noted that UNOMIG's concept of operations had been adjusted to allow for closer monitoring of the situation and a more flexible response to developments on the ground, and was now based on mobile patrols operating from the three sector headquarters and four team-site bases, including three in the Gali region and one in the Zugdidi region. However, the Mission was being prevented by the Georgian side from monitoring its weapons storage site and by the Abkhaz side from patrolling parts of the Gali Canal; in addition, two warning shots had been fired at military observers, and a wire-commanded mine had been detonated in the vicinity of a UNOMIG vehicle. The Mission continued to cooperate with the OSCE office in Tbilisi, UNHCR and other humanitarian agencies; its cooperation with the CIS peace-keeping force involved regular exchanges of information, mutual assistance and joint patrolling.

The Secretary-General observed that security conditions in the region would remain unstable without an agreement on the number and type of personal weapons allowed in the security zone and in the absence of an earnest attempt by the parties to control armed elements in the area. In that regard, he intended to instruct the Chief Military Observer of UNOMIG to discuss with both sides the definition of personal weapons. The Secretary-General further pointed out that the untimely withdrawal of the CIS peace-keeping force and UNOMIG would lead to the resumption of conflict, and recommended that the Mission's mandate be extended until 15 November 1995, subject to revision in the light of the decision on the mandate of the CIS peace-keeping force. In case of extension, the monthly cost of maintaining UNOMIG until 13 July would be limited to the commitment authority approved by the Assembly in 1994.⁽⁷⁾

12 May 1995 Meeting 3535 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/384).

Further communication and report of the Secretary-General (June and August). On 2 June, the Russian Federation communicated⁽¹³⁾ decisions and a statement adopted on 26 May by the Council of the CIS Heads of State in Minsk, Belarus. The Council defined more precisely the mandate of the Collective Peace-keeping Forces in the conflict zone in Abkhazia, Republic of Georgia, and extended its validity and the length of stay of the Forces until 31 December 1995. In the statement, the Council affirmed its commitment to the territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia, advocated the continuation and an early conclusion of talks, and called on the parties to strive for a comprehensive settlement of the conflict within the framework of a unified federative State. It also welcomed the readiness of Georgia to hold consultations on its new constitution, to serve as the basis for an appropriate resolution of all the contentious issues of State organization.

On 7 August, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴⁾ that his Special Envoy had visited the region from 15 to 18 July to meet with representatives of the Russian Federation and the parties to the conflict. The basis for discussions was a draft protocol aimed at identifying an acceptable status for Abkhazia within the borders of the former Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic, including competences of federal authorities, the establishment of a federal legislative body and the treatment by it of questions directly affecting Abkhaz interests, as well as issues concerning the early and safe return of refugees and displaced persons. The Abkhaz side found that without a number of changes the draft was unacceptable, and stated that a federative arrangement had to be between two equal entities. It also found unacceptable that the CIS peace-keeping force should take an active part in providing security for returnees, asserting that there could be no police functions for anyone other than the Abkhaz authorities. The Georgian side, on the other hand, felt that further concessions on its part would be unacceptable. The Special Envoy also met in Tbilisi with representatives of displaced persons, ambassadors of the "Friends of Georgia" group of States (France, Germany, Russian Federation, United States), as well as representatives of OSCE, ICRC and UN agencies operating in Georgia.

The Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his decision to appoint a resident deputy to the Special Envoy, who would be also the Head of UNOMIG, following the model of other operations, as in Cyprus and Tajikistan. He further described the humanitarian situation in the region, noting that the Quadripartite Commission had met in Moscow on 19 May to explore possibilities for resuming the voluntary repatriation programme under UNHCR auspices. During the meeting, the Abkhaz side maintained its position of allowing only 200 returnees per week, which continued to be unacceptable to the other parties. Subsequently, the Abkhaz authorities announced the beginning of their own repatriation programme as well as of registration of all inhabitants of the Gali district; UNHCR dissociated itself from that action. In July, the Abkhaz side claimed to have registered some 2,600 of the 30,000 to 40,000 refugees and displaced persons it asserted had returned spontaneously. In the meantime, UNHCR distributed clothes, high-protein biscuits and World Food Programme (WFP) provisions to more than 7,000 children, and continued to monitor, to the best of its ability, the situation of returnees and the local population. The Secretary-General noted that, while Georgia continued to suffer from the scarcity of basic foods and energy supply and to lack resources for basic social services, with its health care almost entirely dependent on international assistance, the second consolidated inter-agency appeal for that country, launched on 23 March, had collected no more than $5 million as at 30 June.

Efforts were undertaken by the Special Envoy and the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights to secure agreement for the establishment of a human rights monitoring mission in the Gali region, including a visit by a senior human rights officer to Georgia from 24 June to 2 July. While the Georgian side supported the proposal, the Abkhaz side strongly objected to the establishment of such a mission in Gali, and expressed the view that periodic visits by human rights monitors would be more acceptable for the time being. At the same time, the situation in the security zone remained unstable, with 7 killings and 12 kidnappings recorded from May through July. Looting and destruction of property also continued, albeit at a lower level; nevertheless, the number of spontaneous returns to the Gali region had increased. According to UNOMIG, significant quantities of weapons remained in the area despite a weapons-permit regime administered by the CIS peace-keeping force, and not all elements of interior forces present in the region were under the full control of the Georgian authorities. The Abkhaz side continued defensive preparations in the restricted weapons zone, and occasional violations of its northern boundary were reported. UNOMIG established two additional team-site bases, in the Zugdidi region and in the Kodori valley, and continued to cooperate closely with the CIS peace-keeping force.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (August)

On 18 August, the Security Council President made the following statement⁽¹⁵⁾ on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, of 9 August 1995 pursuant to its resolution 993(1995).

The Security Council notes there has been little overall progress in achieving a comprehensive political settlement and that a stalemate exists with respect to the return of refugees and displaced persons.

The Security Council expresses its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and those of the Russian Federation in its capacity as facilitator aimed at achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the conflict, including on the political status of Abkhazia, respecting fully the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Georgia. The Council renews its call to the parties, in particular the Abkhaz side, to reach substantive progress in the political negotiations as a matter of urgency.

The Security Council remains deeply concerned at the continued obstruction of the return of the refugees and displaced persons by the Abkhaz authorities, which is totally unacceptable. Reaffirming its resolution 993(1995), the Council reiterates its call to the Abkhaz authorities to accelerate the return process significantly, to guarantee the safety of all returnees and to regularize the status of spontaneous returnees, in accordance with internationally accepted practice and in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

The Security Council welcomes the continuing close cooperation and coordination between UNOMIG and the CIS peace-keeping force in the performance of their respective mandates. It reminds the parties of their obligations to cooperate fully with UNOMIG and the CIS peace-keeping force and to ensure the safety and freedom of movement of all United Nations and CIS personnel.

The Security Council takes note with appreciation of the decision of the Secretary-General regarding the resident Deputy to his Special Envoy. The Council also supports the Secretary-General's efforts with regard to the establishment of a human rights monitoring mission in the area. It encourages the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with the parties to this end.

Meeting number. SC 3567.

Communications and report of the Secretary-General (October/November). On 2 October,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had appointed Liviu Bota (Romania) as resident deputy to the Special Envoy and Head of UNOMIG. The Council's agreement to the appointment was communicated to the Secretary-General on 5 October.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Deputy Special Envoy arrived in the area at the beginning of October.

In an 8 November report,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General observed that the political process remained deadlocked. The Special Envoy had met with the parties in Moscow on 28 and 29 August; however, the Abkhaz side refused to accept the draft protocol (see above) as a basis for negotiation. At a further meeting, convened under the auspices of the Russian Federation on 24 October, the Abkhaz delegation made the resumption of negotiations conditional on the lifting of the Russian-imposed naval blockade of Sukhumi. Subsequently, both sides agreed to a new round of talks, under the same auspices, which began on 2 November. In the meantime, the Georgian Parliament adopted on 24 August the text of a new constitution, declaring the Republic of Georgia to be an independent, single and indivisible State, with internal territorial arrangements to be defined upon restoration of the Government's jurisdiction over the State's whole territory.

The humanitarian situation also remained largely unchanged. UNHCR reported that the number of displaced persons crossing the Inguri River in both directions continued to be high, but the official Abkhaz claim that 50,000 persons had returned to the Gali district appeared to be excessive. Since August, UNHCR had discontinued monitoring the situation in the area after an attack on one of its vehicles, maintaining only an intermittent presence. It provided construction material to a number of returnees whose houses had been destroyed, and distributed school kits in the district. As at 1 September, some $20 million, or 52.3 per cent of the total requested, had been received under the consolidated inter-agency appeal. The situation on the ground was tense, except in the Kodori valley, and involved 15 violent incidents against the civilian population, mainly robberies. Six people were killed and 12 injured; in addition, there were six mine casualties, including five civilians and one CIS force member. A new system of weapon permits was introduced in the security zone.

The Mission had recently changed its disposition on the ground, the Secretary-General reported, to increase the number of military observers positioned permanently in the security zone and to redeploy military staff from Pitsunda to Sukhumi, while maintaining administrative headquarters at Pitsunda. The main headquarters at Sukhumi retained responsibility for patrolling the Kodori valley, but passed its patrolling function in the restricted weapons zone to the sector headquarters in Gali; a small forward headquarters, co-located with the sector headquarters, was set up in Zugdidi. The Mission continued to experience difficulties with regard to access to the weapons storage sites on both sides; its ability to implement mandated tasks was adversely affected by the pervasive lawlessness in the security and restricted weapons zones. On the Abkhaz side, there were incidents of restriction on the freedom of movement of UNOMIG personnel and of armed robberies committed against them, mostly in the restricted weapons zone; however, all of the robberies were deemed to be criminally motivated.

Further developments. In the light of the continuing stalemate in the political process, the Georgian side stated that new initiatives were needed, while the Abkhaz side maintained its position that the 1994 declaration on measures for a political settlement of the conflict and Quadripartite Agreement on voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons⁽⁷⁾ were the only basis for a successful continuation of the talks, and that a union agreement between Georgia and Abkhazia in which both sides enjoyed equal rights would represent a guarantee against the renewal of hostilities. On 5 November, Eduard Shevardnadze was elected President of Georgia; a new Parliament was formed, which held its first session on 25 November. Georgia and the Russian Federation reached a number of agreements relevant to the conflict, concerning consular affairs, trade facilities and restoration of railway lines, among other matters. The Special Envoy and his Deputy initiated consultations with the Abkhaz authorities and the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights on a programme for the protection and promotion of human rights in Abkhazia. As for the humanitarian situation, WFP assisted some 2,500 people in the Kodori valley, UNICEF launched an emergency diphtheria control campaign in Abkhazia, and on 20 December UNHCR resumed its monitoring activities in the Gali region. There were 23 violent incidents reported in UNOMIG's area of responsibility, mainly robberies and kidnappings, of which 21 occurred on the Abkhaz side; those resulted in seven fatalities and as many injuries, and two cases involved torture. In addition, there were two mine casualties, involving an Abkhaz soldier and a soldier of the CIS peace-keeping force.

UNOMIG financing

Reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ (May/June). On 19 May, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁹⁾ that UNOMIG's financial performance for the period since its inception until 15 May 1995 resulted in an unencumbered balance of $3,714,186 gross ($3,612,298 net) from the total of $20,261,036 gross ($19,372,636 net) made available for its maintenance for that period. An unencumbered balance for the most recent period, from 1 July 1994 to 13 January 1995, amounted to $3,280,600 gross ($3,227,900 net). At the same time, outstanding contributions by Member States in respect of UNOMIG stood at $1,501,301 as at 30 April 1995. The Secretary-General noted that his current commitment authority was until 13 July 1995, and requested the General Assembly to make appropriate provision for the Mission's expenses beyond that date.

He estimated the cost of maintaining UNOMIG from 14 July 1995 to 30 June 1996, at a strength of 135 military observers and 136 civilian staff, at $16,115,300 gross ($15,088,700 net), which represented a 19 per cent decrease on a monthly basis from the commitment authorized by the Assembly in 1994.⁽⁷⁾ The Secretary-General set out specific proposals concerning the appropriation and assessment of resources for the periods from 14 January to 15 May 1995 and from 16 May 1995 to 12 January 1996, and requested commitment authorization at a monthly rate of $1,334,500 gross ($1,246,000 net) after 12 January 1996. He also requested that special arrangements regarding the Financial Regulations, approved by the Assembly in 1993⁽²⁰⁾ in respect of UNPROFOR, be applied to UNOMIG as well.

ACABQ, in a 2 June report,⁽²¹⁾ recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

On 12 July, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/231 B on the financing of UNOMIG.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 854(1993) of 6 August 1993, by which the Council approved the deployment of an advance team of up to ten United Nations military observers for a period of three months and the incorporation of the advance team into a United Nations observer mission if such a mission was formally established by the Council,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 858(1993) of 24 August 1993, by which the Council decided to establish the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Observer Mission, the most recent of which was resolution 993(1995) of 12 May 1995,

Recalling further its decisions 48/475 A of 23 December 1993 and 48/475 B of 5 April 1994 and its resolutions 48/256 of 26 May 1994 and 49/231 A of 23 December 1994 on the financing of the Observer Mission,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Observer Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decision regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Observer Mission, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Observer Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia as at 12 June 1995, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 4,015,801 United States dollars, and urges all Member States concerned to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, due to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments, particularly Member States in arrears;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Observer Mission promptly and in full;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Approves, on an exceptional basis, the special arrangements for the Observer Mission with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Mission shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Observer Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia the amount of 6,880,136 dollars gross (6,468,136 dollars net) for the period from 14 January to 15 May 1995, authorized and apportioned under the terms of its resolution 49/231 A;

8. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account a total amount of 11,948,718 dollars gross (11,220,568 dollars net), inclusive of the amount of 3,440,068 dollars gross (3,234,068 dollars net) authorized and apportioned under the terms of resolution 49/231 A, for the maintenance of the Observer Mission for the period from 16 May 1995 to 12 January 1996;

9. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, and taking into account the amount of 3,440,068 dollars gross (3,234,068 dollars net) already apportioned in accordance with resolution 49/231 A, to apportion an additional amount of 8,508,650 dollars gross (7,986,500 dollars net) for the period from 16 May 1995 to 12 January 1996 among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1995, 1996 and 1997 as set out in Assembly resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994;

10. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated additional staff assessment income of 522,150 dollars approved for the Observer Mission for the period from 16 May 1995 to 12 January 1996;

11. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 3,714,186 dollars gross (3,612,298 dollars net) in respect of the period from 7 August 1993 to 13 January 1995;

12. Decides further, with regard to the period beyond 12 January 1996, to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for a period of 5.7 months, at a monthly rate not to exceed 1,334,500 dollars gross (1,246,000 dollars net), in connection with the maintenance of the Observer Mission, to be apportioned in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Observer Mission beyond 12 January 1996;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Observer Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia".

In a 4 December report,⁽²³⁾ ACABQ pointed out that outstanding contributions to UNOMIG amounted to $2.4 million as at 15 November, and recalled that under the current practice, an unencumbered balance was to be returned to Member States, unless the Assembly decided otherwise.

Relations among Balkan States

Report of the Secretary-General. In keeping with a 1993 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, by a note verbale, sought the views of Member States, particularly those from the Balkan region, on the development of good-neighbourly relations in the region and on measures and preventive activities aimed at the creation of a stable zone of peace and cooperation in the Balkans by the year 2000.

In a report of 7 September 1995, with a later addendum, the Secretary-General reproduced the replies received from nine States, among them five from the Balkan region: Albania, Bulgaria, Croatia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).⁽²⁾

Communications. On 23 October, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) referred to Albania's reply, noting the latter's statement to the effect that its foreign policy was aimed at respecting sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence, and not at changing borders by force. Underscoring the political significance of that statement, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) said it expected Albania to revoke, as a matter of urgency, its 1991 decision recognizing the province of Kosovo and Metohija—an integral part of the Republic of Serbia and thus of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)—as a sovereign and independent State.⁽³⁾

In connection with the call for the development of good-neighbourly relations, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) on 30 October transmitted a "declaration for a better future" and a joint communique adopted at an international conference, held in its capital, of municipal organizations of socialist and social-democratic parties from the Balkans (Belgrade, 22-24 September).⁽⁴⁾

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/80 B.

Development of good-neighbourly relations among Balkan States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, the annex to which contains the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and its resolutions 46/62 of 9 December 1991 and 48/84 B of 16 December 1993,

Affirming its determination that all nations should live together in peace with one another as good neighbours,

Emphasizing the urgency of the consolidation of the Balkans as a region of peace, security, stability and good-neighbourliness, thus contributing to the maintenance of international peace and security and so enhancing the prospects for sustained development and prosperity for all its peoples,

Noting the desire of the Balkan States to develop good-neighbourly relations among themselves and friendly relations with all nations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Welcoming the present international efforts aimed at achieving an overall political settlement of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the development of good-neighbourly relations among the Balkan States,

Stressing the importance of the ongoing cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Taking note of its deliberations on the subject at its present session,

1. Notes with interest the views of some States on the development of good-neighbourly relations among the Balkan States contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Urges relevant international organizations and competent bodies and organizations of the United Nations system to submit to the Secretary-General their views on the subject;

3. Calls upon all Balkan States to endeavour to promote good-neighbourly relations and continually to undertake unilateral and joint activities, particularly confidence-building measures as appropriate, in particular within the framework of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

4. Emphasizes the importance for all Balkan States to promote mutual cooperation in all fields;

5. Stresses that closer engagement of Balkan States in cooperation arrangements on the European continent will favourably influence the political and economic situation in the region, as well as the good-neighbourly relations among all Balkan States;

6. Urges normalization of the relations among all States of the Balkan region;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to seek the views of the Member States, particularly those from the Balkan region, and of international organizations, as well as of competent organs of the United Nations, on the development of good-neighbourly relations in the region and on measures and preventive activities aimed at the creation of a stable zone of peace and cooperation in the Balkans by the year 2000, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session taking into account, inter alia, the views expressed by Member States;

8. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the subject at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 50/80 B

12 December 1995 Meeting 90 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/50/601) without vote, 16 November (meeting 23); 29-nation draft (A/C.1/50/L.43); agenda item 81.

Cooperation with OSCE

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/13,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General issued a report⁽⁶⁾ on 16 October noting a further enhancement and consolidation of the cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) (formerly the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe).

In continuation of the informal tripartite consultations initiated in 1994,⁽⁷⁾ the Chairman-in-Office (Hungary) hosted a round of consultations in Budapest in February 1995, which gave an important impetus to the dialogue between OSCE and humanitarian organizations. In accordance with the agreement reached at the meeting to strengthen the tripartite process by target-oriented meetings on major humanitarian operations, two such meetings were subsequently held, one in April, on Chechnya, and another in May, on the Caucasus and Tajikistan.

The report noted that the tripartite consultation process was a useful forum for regular information sharing and coordination of action, as well as for ensuring participation by OSCE institutions and the Chairman-in-Office in regular dialogue with humanitarian organizations, thereby assuring an essential link between prevention/conflict resolution processes and humanitarian operations. The process was further enhanced by a meeting in June of all OSCE field mission heads and humanitarian agencies. Given the emphasis of the process on humanitarian activities, participation in the consultations also included ICRC, the International Organization for Migration and the EU Commission, on the basis of their involvement in the areas under discussion.

Communication. On 11 December, Hungary transmitted the texts of the summary of the fifth meeting of the Ministerial Council of OSCE (Budapest, 7-8 December) and of the meeting's decisions on OSCE action for peace, democracy and stability in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as on the question of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict.⁽⁸⁾

According to the summary's account of activities in respect of the former Yugoslavia, OSCE welcomed the role envisaged for it by the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (see that topic above, under "Bosnia and Herzegovina") and agreed to supervise the preparation, conduct and monitoring of elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina, certifying when conditions would permit elections to take place. It would closely monitor human rights throughout the country and, to that end, had appointed an international human rights ombudsman. It would assist in arms control negotiations, in confidence- and security-building and in implementation and verification of resulting agreements, with the aim of promoting long-term stability through reduced and verified armament levels.

At the invitation of Croatia, two missions visited that country for the purpose of exploring the possible establishment of a long-term OSCE presence there, in order to assist central and local authorities in building democracy, protecting human and minority rights and promoting the safe return of refugees. The OSCE mission in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia continued to be at the Government's disposal to assist with addressing issues relating to education, minority rights, confidence-building measures and economic development. Regarding human and minority rights in Kosovo, Sandjak (Raska) and Vojvodina in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), OSCE underlined the urgent need for the return to those provinces of OSCE missions of long duration.

As to certain CIS members, while agreement on basic principles for the resolution of the Nagorny Karabakh conflict continued to elude the OSCE Minsk process, the sole forum for the settlement of that conflict, OSCE had succeeded in establishing a long-term presence in Chechnya in the form of its assistance group, whose role was to facilitate negotiations between the warring parties and to monitor human rights.

The summary also noted, among other matters, that the Pact on Stability in Europe, with its Baltic and Central European tables, had been passed on to OSCE, where discussions were continuing on sustaining and, when possible, expanding the efforts initiated by the Pact, and building on its regional approach.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

At its meeting on 18 December, the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report of 16 October 1995 and the Document of the OSCE Budapest Summit of 1994,^(c) adopted resolution 50/87.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/5 of 13 October 1993 on observer status for the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, and the framework for cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe signed on 26 May 1993, as well as its resolution 49/13 of 15 November 1994 on cooperation between the two organizations,

Recalling also the declaration at the 1992 Helsinki Summit by the heads of State or Government of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe of their understanding that the Conference is a regional arrangement in the sense of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations and as such provides an important link between European and global security,

Taking note of the Document of the Budapest Summit of 1994 of the Conference, in particular the decision that, in order to reflect the fundamental change in the Conference and the dramatic growth in its role in shaping a common security area, the Conference would henceforth be known as the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 16 October 1995 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Acknowledging the increasing contribution of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security in its region through activities in early warning, preventive diplomacy, crisis management, arms control and disarmament, and post-crisis stabilization and rehabilitation measures, and its efforts in supporting the economic dimension, as well as its crucial role in the human dimension,

Taking note of the statement of the Budapest Summit of 1994 in which it was agreed that participating States might, in exceptional circumstances, jointly decide that a dispute would be referred to the Security Council on behalf of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Welcoming the fact that, since the Budapest Summit of 1994, cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe has developed further on both the political and organizational levels and that joint efforts in several areas are being undertaken, such as humanitarian activities, monitoring of human rights, election monitoring and the implementation of sanctions regimes,

Welcoming also the progress made in the development and consolidation of contacts and cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe with regard to the activities of the field missions of the latter,

Recalling that the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe has already established a long-term presence in several countries, including the conflict zones in its region,

Stressing the importance of the full implementation of Security Council resolution 855(1993) of 9 August 1993, as well as the decisions of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe concerning the resumption of the activities of its mission to Kosovo, the Sandzak and Vojvodina in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Underlining the possibilities for regional action by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe for the maintenance of international peace and security as provided for under Chapter VIII of the Charter,

Welcoming the ongoing work within the framework of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on the elaboration of a common and comprehensive security model for the Europe of the twenty-first century,

Welcoming also the further development of closer contacts between the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the non-participating Mediterranean States with special regard to their seminar at Cairo on the experience of the Organization in confidence-building measures, as well as the increased cooperation between the Organization and States in Asia, and looking forward to the continuation of those contacts,

Welcoming further the decision of the Permanent Council of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, which met at Budapest on 7 December 1995, that the above-mentioned Mediterranean States would be known henceforth as "Mediterranean Partners for Cooperation" and the above-mentioned States in Asia as "Partners for Cooperation",

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the intensified cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on the basis of the framework agreement, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to explore with the Chairman-in-Office and the Secretary-General of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe possibilities for further improvement, with special regard to the mutual provision in advance of information in those areas where both organizations have their own respective roles to play;

3. Also welcomes the support extended by the United Nations in sharing its experience with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in conflict prevention and peace-building and peace-keeping activities;

4. Supports the activities of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe aimed at contributing to stability and the maintenance of peace and security within its region, and stresses the importance of the work done by its field missions;

5. Encourages the States members of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to make every effort to achieve peaceful settlement of disputes in the region, through conflict prevention and crisis management by the Organization, including peace-keeping;

6. OSCE chairmanship

On 18 October, Hungary informed the President of the General Assembly that Switzerland would hold the office of Chairman of OSCE for one year, beginning on 1 January 1996. Thus, in conformity with the framework for cooperation and coordination between the UN Secretariat and OSCE, the Permanent Observer of Switzerland to the United Nations would serve as the OSCE contact at UN Headquarters.⁽¹⁰⁾

To enable Switzerland to carry out the responsibilities of that office, Hungary requested that the Assembly grant it the necessary authorization to transmit OSCE communications for circulation as UN documents, to represent OSCE at UN meetings and to participate in Assembly discussions of direct concern to OSCE.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 50/423 of 18 December, the General Assembly decided to authorize Switzerland, on an ad hoc basis, as the State holding the chairmanship of OSCE from 1 January to 31 December 1996, to submit communications on behalf of the States members of OSCE for circulation as UN documents and to participate in Assembly discussions during that period.

Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region

In response to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽¹²⁾ reproducing replies from five States to his request for their views and suggestions on means to strengthen security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/75.

Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, including resolution 49/81 of 15 December 1994,

Reaffirming the primary role of the Mediterranean countries in strengthening and promoting peace, security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region,

Bearing in mind all the previous declarations and commitments, as well as all the initiatives taken by the riparian countries at the recent summits, ministerial meetings and various forums concerning the question of the Mediterranean region,

Recognizing the efforts made so far and the determination of the Mediterranean countries to intensify the process of dialogue and consultations with a view to resolving the problems existing in the Mediterranean region and to eliminate the causes of tension and the consequent threat to peace and security,

Recognizing also the indivisible character of security in the Mediterranean and that the enhancement of cooperation among Mediterranean countries with a view to promoting the economic and social development of all peoples of the region will contribute significantly to stability, peace and security in the region,

Recognizing further that prospects for closer Euro-Mediterranean cooperation in all spheres can be enhanced by positive developments worldwide, in particular in Europe, in the Maghreb and in the Middle East,

Noting with satisfaction the positive developments in the Middle East peace process that will lead to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region and therefore to promoting confidence-building measures and a good-neighbourly spirit among the countries of the area,

Expressing satisfaction at the growing awareness of the need for more joint efforts by all Mediterranean countries so as to strengthen economic, social, cultural and environmental cooperation in the region,

Reaffirming the responsibility of all States to contribute to the stability and prosperity of the Mediterranean region and their commitment to respect the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern at the persistent tension and continuing military activities in parts of the Mediterranean that hinder efforts to strengthen security and cooperation in the region,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on this item,

1. Reaffirms that security in the Mediterranean is closely linked to European security as well as to international peace and security;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the continuing efforts by Mediterranean countries to contribute actively to the elimination of all causes of tension in the region and to the promotion of just and lasting solutions to the persistent problems of the region through peaceful means, thus ensuring the withdrawal of foreign forces of occupation and respecting the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all countries of the Mediterranean and the right of peoples to self-determination, and therefore calls for full adherence to the principles of non-interference, non-intervention, non-use of force or threat of use of force and the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, in accordance with the Charter and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. Commends the efforts by the Mediterranean countries in meeting common challenges through coordinated overall responses, based on a spirit of multilateral partnership, towards the general objective of turning the Mediterranean basin into an area of dialogue, exchanges and cooperation, guaranteeing peace, stability and prosperity;

4. Recognizes that the elimination of the economic and social disparities in levels of development as well as other obstacles in the Mediterranean area will contribute to enhancing peace, security and cooperation among Mediterranean countries through the existing forums;

5. Calls upon all States of the Mediterranean region that have not yet done so to adhere to all the multilaterally negotiated legal instruments related to the field of disarmament, thus creating the necessary conditions for strengthening peace and cooperation in the region;

6. Encourages all States of the region to favour the necessary conditions for strengthening the confidence-building measures among them by promoting genuine openness and transparency on all military matters, by participating, inter alia, in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures as well as by providing accurate data and information to the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms;

7. Encourages the Mediterranean countries to strengthen further their cooperation in combating terrorism, which poses a serious threat to peace, security and stability in the region and therefore to the improvement of the current political, economic and social situation;

8. Invites all States of the region to address, through various forms of cooperation, problems and threats posed to the region, such as terrorism, international crime and illicit arms transfers, as well as illicit drug production, consumption and trafficking, which jeopardize the friendly relations among States, hinder the development of international cooperation and result in the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and the democratic basis of pluralistic society;

9. Also encourages the continued widespread support among the Mediterranean countries for the convening of a conference on security and cooperation in the Mediterranean, as well as the ongoing regional consultations to create the appropriate conditions for its convening;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on means to strengthen security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region".

Chapter VI

Middle East

During 1995, the Arab-Israeli peace process, which was launched in October 1991 in Madrid, Spain, proceeded despite a number of difficulties. An important further step in that process was the signing of the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in September. In accordance with this and previous accords, the Palestinian Authority pursued its efforts to establish and maintain central institutions of administration, not only in the self-rule areas of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank area of Jericho, but throughout the West Bank.

The United Nations continued to support the overall peace process and remained involved in the Middle East in a number of ways—through its peace-keeping operations, through the good offices of the Secretary-General and its active participation in the multilateral negotiations on regional issues, and through significantly broadened programmes of economic, social and other assistance. The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories reported to the General Assembly on situations in the Golan Heights, the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) and the Gaza Strip. The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People continued to mobilize support and assistance to the Palestinians, expanding its cooperation with non-governmental organizations.

The Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories served as the focal point for United Nations assistance to the Palestinians. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to provide a wide-ranging programme of education, health, relief and social services to Palestinian refugees. On various occasions throughout the year, UN bodies expressed their support for the ongoing negotiations, which were sometimes hampered by repeated delays and acts of violence, reaching a critical juncture with the assassination on 4 November of Yitzhak Rabin, the Prime Minister of Israel.

The ongoing construction and expansion of settlements in the occupied territories, and Israel's orders in April to expropriate 53 hectares of land in East Jerusalem, caused an outcry in many quarters. The Security Council met in February and again in May to consider those matters, but did not adopt resolutions in either case. Both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly discussed the economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people.

The situation in southern Lebanon remained both tense and volatile. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) continued efforts to limit the conflict and protect inhabitants from its consequences. Upon Lebanon's request, the Security Council in 1995 twice extended the UNIFIL mandate. It also extended the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights. The United Nations Truce Supervision Organization, headquartered in Jerusalem, continued to assist both peace-keeping operations in their tasks.

On 18 September, the General Assembly deferred (decision 49/500) consideration of the agenda item entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security", and placed it on the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session. On 21 December, the Assembly again deferred (decision 50/444) the item and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first (1996) session. The item had been inscribed yearly on the Assembly's agenda since 1981, following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad.^a

Peace process

Overall situation

A further step in the peace process was taken on 28 September 1995, in Washington, DC., with the signing of the historic Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip,⁽¹⁾ which superseded all earlier agreements in implementation of the 1993 Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements.⁽²⁾ On 27 August 1995, the parties had signed in Cairo, Egypt, the Protocol on Further Transfer of Powers and Responsibilities.

^a YUN 1981, p. 275.

The September accord, which set out self-government arrangements in its 31 articles and six annexes, provided for the dissolution of the Israeli civil administration and the withdrawal of the Israeli military government, with a scheduled transfer of powers and responsibilities to the Palestinian Interim Self-Governing Authority, which was to replace the Palestinian Authority established under the May 1994 Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area.⁽⁵⁾ The new Interim Self-Governing Authority was to be composed of an 82-member Council and the Head of its Executive Authority, both elected in January 1996 for a transitional period until May 1999 at the latest. The new Agreement further contained modalities for participation in the elections by the Palestinians of the West Bank, Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip, and made provision for international observation of the election process.

Prior to the elections, Israeli military forces were scheduled to be redeployed, first from the cities of Jenin, Nablus, Tulkarm, Kalkiliya, Ramallah and Bethlehem, and then from 450 towns, villages, refugee camps and hamlets. Redeployment would also take place in Hebron, with special security arrangements, including a temporary international presence. The Agreement provided for the gradual assumption of civil powers and responsibilities by the Palestinian Council. Further Israeli military redeployments were to take place at six-month intervals (for a period of 18 months) following the Council's inauguration, with concomitant extensions of the territorial jurisdiction of the Council except for areas subject to final-status negotiations. Arrangements were set out for the transfer of agreed-upon powers and responsibilities from the Israeli civil administration to the Council; the establishment of a Palestinian police force; and other provisions regarding legal matters, religious sites, human rights, water, a phased release of Palestinian detainees and prisoners, and cooperation in the areas of environment, economics, technology and science, and in fostering dialogue and mutual understanding.

The Agreement reaffirmed the parties' understanding that the interim self-government arrangements provided therein were an integral part of the whole peace process and that the negotiations on the permanent status, scheduled to start no later than 4 May 1996, would lead to the implementation of Security Council resolutions 242(1967)(4) and 338(1973).⁽⁶⁾

Throughout 1995, the Palestinian Authority pursued its efforts to establish and maintain central institutions of administration, not only in the self-rule areas of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank area of Jericho, but throughout the West Bank, in five key delegated spheres: civil administration, including education and culture, health, social welfare, tourism and direct taxation.

The peace process was affected throughout the year by acts of violence and terrorist incidents.

Terrorist acts

On 22 January 1995, the fundamentalist organization Islamic Jihad claimed responsibility for two explosions, several minutes apart, at a crowded bus stop at the Sharon Junction (Beit Lid) in central Israel. Rescuers assisting victims of the first explosion themselves became victims of the second. Some 19 people were killed and another 66 wounded. Israel, reporting the incident to the Secretary-General on 23 January,⁽⁶⁾ said that 110 Israelis had been killed by Palestinian terrorists in 49 separate incidents since the signing of the Declaration of Principles in 1993.⁽⁷⁾

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

After consultations of the Security Council held on 24 January 1995, the President of the Council made the following statement to the media on behalf of the Council members:⁽⁷⁾

The members of the Security Council strongly condemn the terrorist attack which took place in Nordiya, Israel, last Sunday, 22 January 1995, with the clear purpose of trying to undermine the Middle East peace efforts.

The members of the Security Council extend their condolences to the families of those who died as a consequence of the explosions and wish a speedy recovery of the wounded.

The members of the Security Council call upon all parties to continue their efforts to consolidate the peace process. The members of the Security Council believe that common ground can only be found through the practice of dialogue, respect and tolerance.

Rabin assassination

On 4 November, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin was assassinated at a pro-Government rally in Tel Aviv. In a statement on the same day, the Secretary-General strongly condemned the assassination as an outrageous act of terror which had struck one of the greatest leaders in Israel's history.

The General Assembly and its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, on 6 November, paid tribute to Prime Minister Rabin and, on 5 December, the Assembly held a special meeting in his memory. The assassination was also condemned by the Bureau of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights).

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/52

28 July 1995 Meeting 57 47-1-1 (roll-call vote)

34-nation draft (E/1995/L.39); agenda item 7.

Meeting numbers. ESC 45, 46, 49, 57.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bahamas, Belarus, Bhutan, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Denmark, Egypt, France, Gabon, Germany, Ghana, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

Abstaining: Malaysia.

Speaking before the vote, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya objected to the text on the grounds that it was a purely political matter unrelated to the Council's terms of reference. With regard to the declarations signed in Casablanca and Washington, it noted that not all the States in the region had been present. The Syrian Arab Republic remarked that paragraph 3 lacked any mention of two basic principles on which the Peace Conference on the Middle East had been based: the principles of land for peace, and Israel's immediate and unconditional withdrawal from Lebanon. The Sudan explained that it would not participate in the vote as it had reservations concerning what it called loopholes in the peace process that did not serve the purposes of peace in the region.

After the vote, Israel stated that the resolution did what the Council should be doing, namely, putting its weight and that of the international community behind the peace process. Israel hoped that States which had not yet done so would join the multilateral, regional track of that process which, as underlined in paragraphs 6 and 10, was designed to bring the parties closer by dealing with social and economic issues of concern to all.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 7 November, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁸⁾ to the General Assembly on his efforts to promote peace in the Middle East. Pursuant to a request made in a 1994 Assembly resolution on the peaceful settlement of the Palestine question,⁽⁹⁾ he had in September sought the views of the Security Council and the parties concerned—i.e., Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO)—on continuing efforts to advance the search for peace. On 25 September, the Security Council stated that it continued to be determined to provide the necessary backing to the Middle East peace process, giving full support to its achievement, including the 1993 Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements between Israel and PLO, as well as subsequent implementation agreements. The Council believed that the parties should be further encouraged to adhere to and fully implement those agreements.

On 11 September, Israel recalled that it had voted against the 1994 resolution (49/62 D) and that its position remained unchanged. It had long advocated direct negotiations without preconditions, freely agreed on by all parties, as the only framework to advance peace. The peace process begun in Madrid was based on that principle and, within its framework, Israel and PLO had signed the 1993 Declaration of Principles, the May 1994 Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area and the August 1994 Agreement on Preparatory Transfer of Powers and Responsibility.⁽³⁾ In addition, Israel and Jordan had signed a peace treaty on 26 October 1994.⁽¹⁰⁾ Bilateral and multilateral negotiations between Israel and its neighbours continued, and Israel looked forward to progress on all tracks of the peace process.

Israel believed that resolution 49/62 D stood in direct contradiction to the principle of direct negotiations without preconditions; moreover, its paragraph 5 (stressing the need for resolving the problem of the Palestinian refugees in conformity with Assembly resolution 149(III) of 11 December 1948⁽¹¹⁾) was intended to predetermine the outcome of the final-status talks agreed upon in the Declaration of Principles, as well as the results of the negotiations on the other tracks, and was therefore contrary to any notion of genuine negotiations.

Conveying the position of the PLO leadership and the Palestinian National Authority, the Permanent Observer of Palestine on 16 October noted that the sponsors of the 1994 resolution, while retaining essential principles, had introduced important changes to accommodate the positions of some Member States and, as a result, received overwhelming support from the Assembly Members. The resolution provided support for the peace process, a more active and expanded UN role in that process, and the basis for a just settlement of the Palestine question. Since the adoption of that resolution, further positive developments had taken place, in particular the signing on 28 September 1995 of the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and Gaza Strip (the second implementation agreement of the Declaration of Principles), which provided for the extension of the self-government arrangements to the rest of the West Bank and the holding of general and democratic Palestinian elections.

There had been various delays in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles and some lack of compliance with the provisions of the September agreement; both sides, however, had recently indicated their firm commitment to implementing the agreement in good faith, fully and according to the agreed timetable. They had also reaffirmed their intention to enter into the final-status negotiations in accordance with the Declaration of Principles.

The Palestine side strongly believed that the international community and the Assembly should always uphold the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, international law, international humanitarian law and the validity of Security Council resolutions. The Assembly had to uphold its positions with regard to the inalienable rights of the Palestinians and should maintain its positions related to the final-status issues, where Israel had already created illegal, de facto situations, until negotiations on those issues took place and a final settlement was achieved.

The Palestinian side hoped that the United Nations would become more involved in the peace process itself. In that context, it regarded United Nations participation in the steering committee of the multilateral working groups as a normal step forward; another step would be United Nations participation in the supervision of the upcoming Palestinian elections, and further involvement of the Security Council would be a very important element.

Finally, the Secretary-General, in the 7 November report, observed that the past year had seen important progress in the Middle East peace process. The September 1995 Interim Agreement had been a significant step forward and provided a solid basis for the realization of Palestinian rights, a long-sought goal of the United Nations. He hoped that the resolve and dedication to peace shown by Israeli and Palestinian leaders would continue to guide them through the transitional stage until a permanent settlement on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) was reached.

The Secretary-General further hoped that those developments, together with the ongoing implementation of the October 1994 Israeli-Jordanian peace accord, would generate momenturn for progress on the Israeli-Syrian and Israeli-Lebanese tracks of the peace talks, leading to a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The United Nations, he added, would continue to support the peace process, politically and economically, in order to reinforce what was achieved in the negotiations and to help build the foundations for a new post-conflict Middle East. It already participated actively in the multilateral negotiations on regional economic, security, environment, water and refugee issues. Its agencies and programmes were doing their utmost to assist the Palestinians in Gaza and the West Bank. The United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories and his Office (UNSCO) were instrumental in supporting and facilitating those peace-building activities and during the transitional period would continue to serve as a focal point for United Nations economic, social and other assistance to the Palestinians throughout the occupied territories.

Against: Iran, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Syrian Arab Republic.
Abstaining: Sudan.

Explaining its vote, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said the contents of the text did not include the full prerequisites of a just and comprehensive Middle East peace, failing to call on Israel to withdraw from southern Lebanon in accordance with Security Council resolution 425(1978).⁽¹²⁾ Also, the text did not mention the return of the Palestinians to their country and homes. The Syrian Arab Republic noted that the text did not refer to Council resolutions 425(1978), 242(1967)(4) and 338(1973),⁽⁶⁾ the foundations on which the peace process was built. France considered the omission of references to resolution 425(1978) regrettable, as it attached particular importance to the principles enshrined in it.

Introducing the draft on behalf of sponsors, Norway said the past year had seen great achievements in the Middle East peace process. The Interim Agreement was a major accomplishment and produced remarkable results. Important consequences had been the Palestinian elections to be held on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip in January 1996, as well as the Israeli redeployment from the West Bank town of Jenin. It was hoped that the final-status negotiations would begin as scheduled in spring 1996. Another milestone along the road to comprehensive peace was the Economic Summit held in October in Amman, Jordan, in which 1,500 international businessmen and politicians, including those from the Middle East and North Africa, had participated. The new climate of coexistence and cooperation must be protected and expanded. The tragic death of Prime Minister Rabin was a reminder that the peace process demanded not only commitment and a clear vision of the future, but also considerable courage.

Israel declared that despite the pain of Mr. Rabin's assassination, the Government of Prime Minister Shimon Peres was determined to push forward and achieve a comprehensive peace; terrorists would not be allowed to stop that process. The peace which was being created would translate into full regional cooperation that had begun last year with the convening in Casablanca, Morocco, of the first Middle East/North Africa economic summit, followed by the second summit in Amman.

From such tragic times, said the United States, must come a renewed determination to go forward on the path of peace.

In the view of the Observer of Palestine, Mr. Rabin's assassination was proof that terrorism had grown in a climate nurtured by Israeli parties. The Committee on Palestinian Rights hoped that that tragic act would not lead to a setback in the peace process; the outpouring of support by the international community, as well as by Israeli public opinion, showed that the path which the parties were following was the correct one.

Jerusalem

Since ancient times, Jerusalem has been a city at the heart of three major world religions—Christianity, Judaism and Islam. The November 1947 General Assembly plan for partition had specified that Jerusalem was to be placed under international status, with Palestine to be partitioned into an Arab State and an Israeli State. The plan was not accepted by the Palestinian Arabs and the Arab States, and hostilities ensued after Israel declared its independence on 14 May 1948. During the early fighting in Jerusalem, a neutral zone was established in the area of the building and grounds of Government House—the headquarters of the former British Mandatory Administration—which later became the headquarters of the UN Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO). On 7 October 1948, following renewed fighting, during which the status of the neutral zone was violated by both Israeli and Jordanian forces, Government House and its surrounding grounds were transferred to United Nations protection by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), which had been holding the area in trust for a successor administration. Both States parties were informed of those arrangements and did not raise any objections. A cease-fire agreement of 30 November 1948 left that arrangement in place. The General Armistice Agreement concluded between Israel and Jordan on 3 April 1949 provided that in the Jerusalem sector the Armistice Demarcation Lines should correspond to the lines defined in the cease-fire agreement of 30 November 1948, and therefore the status of Government House and the neutral zone remained unaltered.

On 5 June 1967, after fighting erupted in Jerusalem during the six-day war, Israeli forces occupied Government House and escorted UNTSO staff out of its premises. When a cease-fire went into effect on 10 June, Israel was occupying parts of the Sinai Desert, the Golan Heights, the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and East Jerusalem. After negotiations, Israel agreed on 22 August 1967 that UNTSO personnel could return to their headquarters at Government House.

Jerusalem since the 1967 six-day war has been the subject of many UN resolutions, with the Security Council and the General Assembly calling on Israel to rescind measures to alter the status of the Holy City and not to take further actions which might alter its status, and declaring as invalid any changes in its status. Demonstrations, outbreaks of violence, excavations at holy sites and, most recently, expropriation of land for residential construction in East Jerusalem have been the subject of discussion and action at the UN. Questions centring on Jerusalem are considered a "final-status" negotiation issue in the ongoing Middle East peace process, and the status of the Holy City in 1995 continued to be a central focal point of United Nations concern.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 24 October 1995, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽¹³⁾ containing replies of four Member States to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement a 1994 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁴⁾ dealing with the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem and calling on them to abide by the relevant UN resolutions. Of the responding States, Austria and Mexico said they maintained embassies in Tel Aviv. Cape Verde stated that it had not taken any action contrary to the 1994 resolution. Japan expressed support of that resolution, as it had adhered to previous resolutions on the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/22 A.

Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 D of 11 December 1987, 43/54 C of 6 December 1988, 44/40 C of 4 December 1989, 45/83 C of 13 December 1990, 46/82 B of 16 December 1991, 47/63 B of 11 December 1992, 48/59 A of 14 December 1993 and 49/87 A of 16 December 1994, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of

Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 24 October 1995,

1. Determines that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;
2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980), and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;
3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/22 A

4 December 1995 Meeting 79 133-1-13 (recorded vote)

19-nation draft (A/50/L.37 & Add.1); agenda item 44.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: plenary 76, 77, 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Dominica, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Swaziland, United States.

After the vote, the United States said it had abstained, as Jerusalem had to remain undivided; the Assembly should not interject itself into that most complex issue when the parties themselves had decided to defer its discussion to their already scheduled permanent-status negotiations. Swaziland held the view that resolutions which sounded harsh and reprimanding were no longer rewarding or productive.

In Palestine's view, the resolution sent a clear message to the international community to the effect that all parties must refrain from taking measures that would introduce changes on the ground which might influence the negotiation process on Jerusalem.

Iran expressed reservations on the parts of the resolution which might be construed as any recognition of Israel. Iraq noted that the text was incomplete, as it ignored the United States' decision to move its embassy to Jerusalem in 1999, which it called a provocation. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also regarded that decision as a flagrant violation of international legality, as embodied in Security Council and Assembly resolutions.

(For the question of Israeli settlements and land expropriation in East Jerusalem, see below, under "Occupied territories".)

Occupied territories

Special Committee on Israeli Practices

The situation in territories occupied by Israel as a result of armed conflicts in the Middle East continued to be of concern to the United Nations in 1995. The three-member Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories, established in 1968,⁽¹⁵⁾ reported for the twenty-seventh time to the General Assembly on events in those territories it considered to be occupied, namely the Golan Heights of the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) and the Gaza Strip.

In addition to that annual report,⁽¹⁶⁾ two periodic reports were also prepared in 1995 by the Special Committee at the request of the General Assembly,⁽¹⁷⁾ one in May,⁽¹⁸⁾ the other in July.⁽¹⁹⁾ The three reports, which covered developments between 26 August 1994 and 18 August 1995, contained information obtained from: the Arab and Israeli press; testimony given at hearings held in Amman (Jordan), Cairo (Egypt) and Damascus (Syrian Arab Republic) between 13 and 23 May 1995; Israeli government policy statements; and other communications and reports. The Committee reported that the Governments of Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic had provided information. As in the past, it said, Israel had not responded to requests for cooperation with the Committee.

Chairman Herman Leonard de Silva of Sri Lanka said the Special Committee presented a composite picture of the realities in the occupied territories as they affected the human rights of the civilian population. Recent historic events—the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, on 13 September 1993,⁽²⁾ and the Israel-PLO Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area, on 4 May 1994,⁽²⁰⁾ and the subsequent establishment of the Palestinian National Authority, as well as the September 1995 agreement on the West Bank and Gaza—had given rise to very high expectations concerning the improvement of the human rights situation in the occupied territories among their population, he said. It was expected that those agreements would usher in a new era, with the establishment of peace, justice, understanding and respect for human rights in the region. The information in the twenty-seventh report showed, however, that the general situation of human rights in the territories still remained very serious and a matter for grave concern.

A major factor contributing to the lack of improvement in the human rights situation was the repeated closures of the territories by the Israeli authorities after serious security incidents in Israel, caused by groups on both sides opposed to the peace process, the Chairman stated.

The closures had entailed a significant deterioration in the economic and social situation in the occupied territories, in particular the Gaza Strip, he went on, and had resulted in a significant reduction in the number of Palestinians allowed to work in Israel. Restrictions on freedom of movement had also had adverse consequences in the fields of health and education, and on freedom of worship.

A continuing source of tension was the existence of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, the Chairman declared. The situation regarding expropriation of Arab-owned land and the expansion of the settlements was particularly serious in Jerusalem. While the overall level of violence and number of deaths had declined, the nature of the violence perpetrated by the Israel Defence Forces was of an aggravated kind. Also, situations of prisoners and conditions at places of detention had not improved. Deficiencies continued to be noted in the administration of justice by Israeli authorities.

The Committee welcomed several positive developments: the transfer to the Palestinians of additional responsibilities in the fields of statistics, fuel, insurance, commerce and industry, labour and local government; the allocation of additional water resources to the territories' inhabitants; the decrease in demolition orders for Palestinian-owned houses; the increase in approvals of requests for family reunification; and the approval of a number of requests, made by Palestinians expelled by the security forces before the intifadah, to return to their homes in the West Bank.

Unless progress was made with regard to the enjoyment of human rights by all the inhabitants of the occupied territories, the Chairman declared, support for the peace process would erode further and give way to despair. All parties concerned must endeavour to build a truly meaningful culture of respect for human rights in the occupied territories so that the recent significant achievements might enable the people of the region to live together in dignity, peace, security and mutual respect. Progress in the peace process, he concluded, must go hand in hand with full compliance with all relevant UN resolutions and all universally accepted standards of human rights.

The Committee, in its report, stated that it hoped its findings would be taken into account when concrete measures were drawn up in order to give life to the spirit of the recent important developments. In the meantime, it recommended once more measures for safeguarding the basic human rights of the Palestinians and other Arabs in the territories, including full application by Israel of the fourth Geneva Convention and compliance with all UN resolutions pertinent to the territories; Israeli cooperation with UNSCO and the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), and full support by Member States of the activities of UNRWA and ICRC; access by ICRC representatives to detained persons; renewed efforts to convince Israel of the need for increased human rights protection through international monitoring; and Israeli cooperation with the UN Centre for Human Rights with regard to implementation of human rights advisory assistance in areas falling under the Interim Self-Government Arrangements.

The Committee appealed to Israel to act in conformity with the spirit animating the peace process, by giving serious consideration to the following concrete measures: (a) establishing clear rules of engagement for its security forces; exercising restraint in responding to outbreaks of violence and investigating all shooting incidents; and ending immediately the activities of undercover units, in particular, extrajudicial and summary executions; (b) controlling violence and abuses by settlers and bringing those responsible to justice; (c) reviewing its settlements policy, halting the expansion of settlements and ending land confiscation; and ending pressure on Arabs in East Jerusalem to sell their houses; (d) enforcing the law equitably and ensuring all legal safeguards for the Arab population and prompt and impartial administration of justice; (e) ending torture and ill-treatment and investigating those responsible; making guidelines concerning interrogation procedures transparent and conforming them to international human rights standards; (f) reviewing the situation of Palestinian and Arab prisoners, especially political detainees or those having committed non-violent crimes, and expediting their release; refraining from detaining residents of the territories within Israel; and improving conditions of detention, to conform with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners adopted in 1955 by the first United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;⁽²¹⁾ (g) allowing all deported or expelled persons to return to the territories and have their properties restored; and (h) ending all measures of collective punishment, which affected adversely the economic and social situation of the population of the territories and hindered the enjoyment of fundamental rights and freedoms of movement, education, religion and expression; and refraining from imposing curfews and closures, destroying property, demolishing houses and uprooting trees, as well as from discriminatory measures concerning the use of water resources.

During consideration by the General Assembly's Fourth Committee, the representative of Israel and the Observer from Palestine made statements on 17 November regarding the Special Committee report.

Israel said the Fourth Committee should note that certain resolutions adopted when the Arab-Israeli conflict was at its height did not reflect the new reality in the Middle East. Israel considered that the Special Committee on Israeli Practices wasted the limited financial resources of the UN without bringing any benefit at all to the Palestinian people.

Palestine expressed regret regarding the refusal of the Israeli authorities to cooperate with the Special Committee, believing the current situation warranted the continued work of the Committee. It hoped the report for next year would reflect further progress and positive change on the ground.

During the year, Israel had reported a number of terrorist incidents to the Secretary-General, including three bomb attacks against Israeli public buses, on 9 April,⁽²²⁾ on 24 July⁽²³⁾ and on 21 August.⁽²⁴⁾ On 10 April, Israel stated⁽²²⁾ that since the signing of the 1993 Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, 125 Israelis had been killed by Palestinian terrorists in 52 separate attacks, most committed by Islamic fundamentalist organizations which received support and guidance from like-minded States in the region, especially Iran.

On 12 April, Iran, in a letter to the Secretary-General,⁽²⁵⁾ rejected that allegation, stressing that the course of events and developments in the occupied territories had nothing to do with Iran, but rather stemmed from the inherent expansionist agenda of the Zionist regime, which had serious repercussions for the peace and security of the region.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 20 October 1995, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁶⁾ that all necessary facilities had been provided to the Special Committee on Israeli Practices, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽¹⁷⁾ Arrangements had been made for meetings in March, May and August, and field missions to Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic were carried out in May. Committee reports were circulated to Member States, and press releases in English and French had been issued.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the reports of the Committee on Israeli Practices, the General Assembly on 6 December 1995 adopted four resolutions under the general title "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories", among them resolution 50/29 A.

Fourth Geneva Convention

Committee report. The Special Committee on Israeli Practices, in its annual report,⁽¹⁶⁾ reiterated that the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention remained the main international instrument in humanitarian law that applied to the occupied territories, and its applicability to those territories had repeatedly been reaffirmed by the Security Council, the General Assembly and other UN organs.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 20 October, the Secretary-General informed⁽²⁷⁾ the General Assembly that Israel had not replied to his May request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement a 1994 Assembly resolution⁽²⁸⁾ demanding that Israel accept de jure applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention and comply scrupulously with its provisions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/29 B under the general title "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories".

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Stressing that Israel, the occupying Power, should comply strictly with its obligations under international law, spect for its provisions by Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Palestinian prisoners

Committee report. According to the annual report of the Special Committee on Israeli Practices,⁽¹⁶⁾ the release of Palestinian prisoners in accordance with the May 1994 agreement had fallen behind schedule, with some 5,400 Palestinians still in Israeli detention centres, a fact that remained a considerable source of tension. The so-called "exceptional dispensations" accorded to the Israeli General Security Service were a source of particular concern to the Committee, which also noted deficiencies in the administration of justice, notably in the severity of sentences handed down to Palestinians as compared with those given to Israelis.

Large-scale arrests of members of the Hamas movement had been undertaken in the wake of suicide bombings and other attacks on Israeli civilians and military personnel. More than 4,000 Hamas activists were reported to have been apprehended since a suicide bus bombing in Tel Aviv in October 1994. Members of the Islamic Jihad had also been arrested during similar operations, with several hundred of those arrested reportedly placed in administrative detention. On 5 February 1995, the maximum period of administrative detention was extended from six months to one year, on a renewable basis. At the end of 1994, there were 239 persons in administrative detention. The maximum period that a person could be held before being brought before a judge was officially reduced from 18 to 11 days. According to Amnesty International, detainees were held without access to lawyers for up to 30 days, and without access to families for up to 140 days.

Conditions of detention and treatment of detainees in Israeli prisons had deteriorated during the period under review, the Committee reported. Aggravated forms of torture were frequently used during interrogations of persons arrested for security reasons, sometimes resulting in their deaths. Torture had become more severe after the October 1994 suicide bombing in Tel Aviv, the Committee stated.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 20 October report,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had not received any response from Israel to his May request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement relevant provisions of a 1994 General Assembly resolution⁽³⁰⁾ calling on Israel to accelerate the release of all remaining Palestinians arbitrarily detained or imprisoned, in line with agreements reached, and to facilitate the return of the remaining deportees to the occupied territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 50/29 C, under the general title "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories", the General Assembly called on Israel to accelerate the release of all remaining Palestinians arbitrarily detained or imprisoned, in line with agreements reached.

Palestinian women

Report of the Secretary-General. In March 1995, the Secretary-General reported⁽³¹⁾ to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women, as requested by the Commission in 1994.⁽³²⁾ The report addressed the problem of violence related to occupation as it affected women, and monitored the participation of women in development and political decision-making, as well as women's situation in health, education and employment.

Women were victims of violence by Israeli soldiers and settlers, and experienced violence during interrogation and imprisonment. In addition, Palestinian women were confronted with various kinds of physical, sexual or psychological violence from the family or from society in general, the report stated. With the launching of Palestinian self-rule, however, women's contribution to institution-building and legislation had gained importance and public awareness of women's status had increased. Respect for and acceptance of the work of women's organizations was high and women were prepared to play an active role in government. The number of women in leadership positions was growing. After implementation of the self-rule agreement, a woman had been appointed Minister for Social Affairs of the Palestinian Authority and another had become head of the 70-strong women's police force. At the request of women's organizations, the Palestinian Authority had established a women's affairs technical committee, with the objective of ensuring equal participation in future legislative, executive and judicial structures.

The report concluded that, as the peace process in the occupied territories and the self-rule area of Jericho and the Gaza Strip was being consolidated, the importance of integrating the gender perspective in all areas of legislation, infrastructure development and human resource and economic development was being recognized. Preparing for de facto and de jure equality between men and women was of primary importance at this juncture. Palestinian women needed practical support and assistance at all levels, from inside and outside the territories. There was potential for development, and resources and support had to be made available immediately in order to create the necessary infrastructure, especially in education, health and employment.

Action by the Commission on the Status of Women. The Commission on the Status of Women, in 1995, adopted a resolution on the integration of women in the Middle East peace process,⁽³³⁾ emphasizing that the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace was vital for the implementation of the human rights of women in the area. The Commission urged Governments, intergovernmental bodies and NGOs to include women in the peace process, to support the Declaration of Principles and to help ensure Palestinian women's political development and participation. It urged Member States to expedite economic, financial and technical assistance to Palestinian women.

The Commission also recommended a draft resolution on Palestinian women for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/30.

Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning Palestinian women and children,

Recalling also Commission on the Status of Women resolution 38/4 of 18 March 1994 and other relevant United Nations resolutions,

Further recalling the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women as it concerns the protection of civilian populations,

Welcoming the signing by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, in Washington, on 13 September 1993, as well as the implementation of the agreements reached between the two sides, Deeply concerned about the continuing deterioration of all aspects of the situation of the Palestinian women in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem,

Gravely concerned about the severe consequences of the continuous Israeli illegal settlements activities, as well as the measures which isolate Jerusalem from the West Bank and Gaza Strip, on the situation of Palestinian women and their families,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli occupation constitutes a major obstacle for Palestinian women with regard to their advancement, self-reliance and integration in the development plan of their society;

2. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with the provisions and principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 18 October 1907 and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949, in order to protect the rights of Palestinian women and their families;

3. Calls upon Israel to facilitate the return of all refugee and displaced Palestinian women and children and those who are political deportees to their homes and properties in the occupied Palestinian territory, in compliance with the relevant United Nations resolutions;

4. Urges Member States, international financial organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and other relevant institutions to intensify their efforts to provide financial and technical assistance to Palestinian women for the creation of projects responding to their needs, especially during the transitional period;

5. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to continue to monitor and take action with regard to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning Palestinian women and children;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to review the situation and to assist Palestinian women by all available means, and to submit to the Commission, at its fortieth session, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/30

25 July 1995 Meeting 51 43-1-4 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on women (E/1995/26); agenda item 5 (el. Meeting numbers. ESC 49-51.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bahamas, Bhutan, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Egypt, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Uganda, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Canada, Cote d'Ivoire, Norway, Ukraine.

Explaining its vote, the United States said it believed that Council consideration of issues which the parties to the peace process should address only distracted from those efforts and complicated the ongoing search for peace. Spain, on behalf of the European Union (EU), noted that some language did not properly reflect recent developments; it would have been more appropriate to examine the text in conjunction with the consensus resolution adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women on the integration of women in the Middle East peace process (see above). Iran said it was concerned over both the continuing deterioration of the situation of Palestinian women and the major obstacle which Israeli occupation constituted for Palestinian women with regard to advancement, self-reliance and integration into the development plans of their society.

Israeli settlements

Committee report. In its annual report,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Special Committee on Israeli Practices stated that Israel's policy of establishing Jewish settlements in the occupied territories had been, since its inception in 1968, at the heart of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Although Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin had declared, when his Government came to power in 1992, that no new settlements would be built, the expansion of existing ones had continued unabated, the Committee stated. Israel, it was stated, had circumvented its pledge not to build new settlements by withholding official financial support but not preventing private funding. The time-frame for the completion of most projects was three to five years, i.e., before the negotiations on the final status of the territories. It had been reported that an average 1,500 acres of Arab land had been confiscated each month since the signing of the September 1994 Oslo agreement on the economic and social development of the Palestinians.⁽¹⁷⁾

The situation regarding expropriation of Arab land and the expansion of settlements was considered particularly serious in East Jerusalem, where intensive priority construction was taking place. The Committee felt Israel's policy was aimed at reducing the number of Arabs there and creating a new demographic, geographic and political situation. If completed, it went on, "Greater Jerusalem" would stretch to Jericho, converting the Palestinian villages in its vicinity into isolated islands. It had been estimated that some 50,000 Palestinians had ceased to live within Jerusalem's municipal boundaries since 1967.

The largest settlement in the occupied territories was Maaleh Adumim, east of Jerusalem in the West Bank, with an estimated population of 20,000. In December 1994, it was reported that the Ministry of Housing and Construction was building 2,000 housing units there and that others were in the planning stage. As a result, some 800 members of the Jahalin Bedouin tribe faced forcible eviction, having already been evicted in 1950 from the Arad area.

An additional problem linked to the settlements was the behaviour of their inhabitants, who had become, the Committee said, more violent and aggressive, in both harassing the Arab population and staking claims on land. The tension was particularly felt in Hebron where settlers lived in the centre of that West Bank town. Settlers from Hebron and Kiryat Arba had repeatedly attacked Palestinians and vandalized their property with complete impunity, the Committee stated.

Committee report. The Committee on Palestinian Rights, in its annual report,⁽¹⁾ had noted with concern that the presence of large numbers of armed Israeli settlers in the immediate vicinity of densely populated Palestinian areas generated tension often resulting in acts of violence. According to the Committee, the campaign launched by settlers in opposition to the new agreements added to the sense of insecurity and lack of protection felt by Palestinians living near the settlements. Further, the Committee noted plans for the construction of additional settler housing and for roads linking the settlements that would lead to the fragmentation of the West Bank and the isolation of East Jerusalem.

The Committee noted Israel's positive decision, in May, to suspend the planned confiscation of Palestinian land in East Jerusalem. It also reaffirmed that the settlement policy was in contradiction to Israel's obligations as the occupying Power under the fourth Geneva Convention and called on the Government to end that policy once and for all.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The situation in the occupied Arab territories was discussed in the Security Council in February and again in May. A debate was held on 28 February centring on Israel's settlement policy; no action was taken. Following debate held between 12 and 17 May on expropriation of land in East Jerusalem, the Council voted on a draft resolution calling the expropriation action invalid. The text was not adopted due to the negative vote of a permanent member.

28 February debate

Djibouti, in its capacity as Chairman of the Arab Group, on 22 February requested⁽³⁴⁾ a Council meeting to consider the question of "the establishment of Israeli settlements in the territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the dangerous consequences of those activities on the Palestinian people and on the Middle East peace process."

Sixteen States—Algeria, Brunei Darussalam, Djibouti, Egypt, Iran, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Malaysia, Morocco, Pakistan, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates—were invited under Council provisional rule 37^b to participate in the debate. Under provisional rule 39,^c the Permanent Observers of Palestine and of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), as well as the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, were also invited to participate.

Leading off the debate on 28 February, the Observer from Palestine stated that throughout recent history the Palestinian people had been subjected to grave injustices, including the uprooting of a large proportion of them from their land and homes and the subjugation of those who remained to occupation, repression and the denial of their right to self-determination.

One of the harshest things endured was the campaign of settler colonialism waged on Palestinian lands occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, Palestine said. Since the early days of occupation, Israel had confiscated Palestinian and State-owned land for the purpose of constructing many settlements, and had transferred large numbers of Israeli settlers to those settlements in an obvious campaign to change the land's demographic structure, thus paving the way to total or partial annexation.

The failure of the Council to impose its will, Palestine continued, had allowed Israel to pursue its settlement policy—resulting in approximately 140 settlements inhabited by about 300,000 settlers, including those brought to East Jerusalem. The settlers were a major source of repression, injustice and outright harassment, stealing land and water from the Palestinians and interfering in and even destroying their daily lives, the Observer maintained.

The minimum requirement for negotiations in good faith was that the parties desist from creating facts on the ground that affect and pre-empt the negotiating process. Any settlement activity in the occupied Palestinian territory, including

^b Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35(1) of the Charter."

^c Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Jerusalem, constituted a flagrant violation of the letter and spirit of the 1993 Declaration of Principles, the fourth Geneva Convention and relevant Security Council resolutions, Palestine declared.

Djibouti, speaking for the Arab Group, said that a widespread and pervasive mood of mounting disenchantment had begun to permeate the Arab world—the direct consequence of the near-total lack of progress in negotiations between the Palestinians and the Israeli authorities since 1993. Few impediments to progress were more implacable and emotional than that of Israeli settlers. For the peace process to resume in a meaningful way, settlements in the West Bank must be immediately frozen and those in Gaza dismantled.

Israel considered the PLO initiative to discuss the issue of settlements in the Council as incompatible with its signed commitments to resolve all permanent-status issues, such as settlements and Jerusalem, in direct and bilateral negotiations with Israel. The present Government, formed in July 1992, had substantially changed Israel's settlement policy, based on its profound belief that the best alternative was peace based on security, understanding and cooperation. Therefore, no new settlements had been established in the territories since then, nor would they be. The Government had stopped allocating public resources to support the extension of existing settlements. No land had been or would be confiscated to establish new settlements. Yes, Israel said, it had continued to build in Jerusalem, as the Arabs had. "They have not stopped building, and this is their right. We have not stopped building, and this is our right."

Direct dialogue was the only way "to solve the issues that divide us", Israel declared. Military conflict and solutions imposed from the outside had not solved the Arab-Israeli conflict. New problems did not distinguish between Arab and Israeli: economic, environmental, humanitarian and so on. "We can solve them only by working together."

Terrorism was now the main obstacle to peace. Radical fundamentalists with ties to Iran had the goal of derailing the peace process. Their strategy was to provoke a cycle of violence and sow anger, hatred and resentment towards further progress, Israel stated. Their method was to kill Israeli men, women and children going about their daily lives. Israel could not view such attacks with indifference. Morally and humanly, it was obligated to protect its people's lives. Within Israel, the most important task before all supporters of peace was credibly to address the growing sense in Israeli public opinion that the Palestinians were unable to meet their commitments to fighting terrorism. Israel expected the Palestinian Authority to disarm all those who were forbidden to possess arms, and to do all in its power to combat terrorism and to bring to justice all those involved in murderous activities.

Israel believed that great progress, irreversible progress, had been made with its Palestinian partners; their shared goals and hopes had to be pursued in a commitment to a comprehensive peace.

During the debate, many speakers called into question Israel's settlement policy. It was stated that the policy was hampering the ongoing peace process and seriously compromising recent agreements reached between major parties, including the 1993 Declaration of Principles, the May 1994 Gaza-Jericho Agreement, the August 1994 Agreement on the Preparatory Transfer of Powers and Responsibilities, and the October 1994 peace treaty between Israel and Jordan.

Some speakers stressed that the settlement activity was undermining not only the confidence of the Palestinians in the peace process, but the process as a whole. The continued construction of settlements not only would jeopardize ongoing negotiations between Israel and PLO, but would also threaten and jeopardize the overall peace process in the region. An end to the settlement policy, it was generally felt, could be a determining factor in a successful progression towards the achievement of a just and lasting peace. It was stated that if progress to remove the settlements was not made, support for the anti-peace camps on both sides would increase.

Some countries of the region charged that Israel was using the issue of security as a pretext for continuing its settlement policy; it was stated that Israel had no justification for continuing to build and expand its settlements. Many others stated that the issue was just one aspect of the complex relations between Israel and the Palestinians and should be left to bilateral negotiations, outside the spotlight of international attention.

Still other nations felt the debate might provide an appropriate forum for expressing support for the peace process; they called for redoubled efforts to attain peace.

Views of permanent Council members. China expressed concern over the suddenly sharpened discord between the parties regarding Israeli settlements. With the peace process at a very critical moment, both sides must exercise restraint, build mutual trust, continue removing obstructions and persist in settling disputes through negotiations.

France encouraged Israel to find a way to halt work on expanding the settlements, which was being carried out by private interests and with private financing. It understood that Israeli public opinion was traumatized by the resurgence of terrorism, and called on the Palestinian Authority to do all it could to prevent and punish such acts. Later, speaking for EU, France vigorously condemned blind violence, and stated that the question of security must not become an obstacle to progress in the negotiations.

The Russian Federation said it believed in timely and complete compliance, in good faith, with the letter and spirit of the 1993 Declaration of Principles. The parties should refrain from any acts to disturb the status quo and prejudice a Palestinian-Israeli settlement.

The United Kingdom understood the frustration felt by the Palestinians over Israel's settlement activity, which it considered illegal. The Declaration of Principles had defined settlements as a final-status issue, and the implication of that was that the status quo would remain in the meantime. Any expansion, therefore, went against the spirit of the Declaration. At the same time, the United Kingdom did not underestimate or seek to belittle Israel's legitimate security concerns.

The United States said that Israel and Palestinian negotiators were seeking a balance to address both Israeli security concerns and Palestinian political and economic concerns. Council debate at such a sensitive time could only sour the atmosphere and deflect the parties from the need to work on the path they had set for themselves. The United States opposed any activity that would only complicate efforts to spur the negotiation process.

Views of non-permanent members. Argentina wanted the Israeli and Palestinian authorities to speed up the joint quest for a solution to the sensitive question of settlements. Botswana said that whatever action might be taken should in no way accentuate the complications or difficulties currently encountered by the negotiations. The Czech Republic, which considered the settlements to be illegal and not conducive to the peace process, nevertheless conceded that Israel had effected important changes in its policy.

Germany said both sides had to understand the other's concerns and fears and should redouble their efforts through direct negotiations: increased acts of terrorism legitimately concerned Israelis; settlement activities were of major concern to Palestinians. Honduras declared that the achievement of peace in the region had to be based on the principle of "land for peace" and withdrawal from all occupied territories. Indonesia called for a speedy dismantlement of settlements, leading to a mutually supportive and positively reinforcing approach, such as that which had resulted in important breakthroughs in the past.

Italy said the debate ought not to interfere with ongoing negotiations between Israel and PLO, but rather provide an opportunity for a constructive exchange of thoughts. Nigeria warned that the continued settlement activities could lead to an entrenchment of extremist views within radical sections of Middle East society. In Oman's opinion, there could be no potential breakthrough in the course of bilateral or other negotiations unless Israel ended its settlement policy immediately and resolved the question of existing settlements through peaceful negotiations.

May meetings

Morocco, as Chairman of the Islamic Group,⁽³⁵⁾ and the United Arab Emirates⁽³⁶⁾ on 8 May requested an urgent Council meeting, to discuss in particular a recent Israeli confiscation order in respect of Palestinian land in East Jerusalem. Urgent measures by the Council had been called for earlier by Palestine, which had reported, in a 28 April letter to the Secretary-General,⁽³⁷⁾ that on the previous day Israel had ordered the confiscation of 53 hectares of Palestinian land within East Jerusalem.

At meetings held on 12, 15, 16 and 17 May, the Council considered the situation in the occupied Arab territories. Twenty-six nations were invited, under Council provisional rule 37,^b to participate in the debate without vote: Algeria, Australia, Bangladesh, Canada, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mauritania, Morocco, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates. Under provisional rule 39,^c the Observer from Palestine and the Acting Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights also were invited to participate.

Opening the debate on 12 May, the Observer from Palestine said the Council was addressing a dangerous Israeli action: the recent order to confiscate 53 hectares of land in the area of occupied East Jerusalem. Under Security Council resolution 181(II),⁽³⁸⁾ a demilitarized Jerusalem had been designated as a corpus separatum under the UN Trusteeship Council. The land confiscated by Israel in an expanded East Jerusalem through the years added up to 2,400 hectares, on which 35,000 units for settlement had been built and allocated to Jewish settlers; by 1993, Jewish settlers in Jerusalem numbered 150,000. The Palestinians had been left with minimal land—14 per cent of East Jerusalem in its expanded municipal boundaries.

Negotiation in good faith required that the parties did not make changes on the ground that would prejudice the results of the negotiations or influence it, Palestine said. By ordering the confiscation and announcing plans for constructing more residential units for settlers, Israel had violated international law, as well as its obligations under recent agreements.

Israel could not go on with its occupation mentality; it could not achieve peace and demand normal relations with its neighbours and their friends while continuing to maintain its grip on Jerusalem. The Council must guarantee the rescinding of the confiscation orders through adopting a clear resolution and make Israel understand the importance of not repeating such acts in the future, Palestine concluded.

Israel responded that its recent decision to expropriate, not confiscate, barren land for construction, not for settlements, was based on its long-standing policy to ensure that development in Jerusalem kept pace with the changes that were a natural feature of any living city. Construction and development for all residents had always been regular features of Jerusalem life and would continue to be in the future. The people of the city—Jews and Arabs alike—could not be deprived of sufficient schools, roads, housing and workplaces. Some of the designated land was under Jewish ownership. All owners had the right to appeal the expropriation orders. If expropriation was upheld, owners would be compensated.

Jerusalem had been established by King David as the capital of Israel 3,000 years ago. Its centrality had sustained the Jews as a people in their darkest days. Israel was sensitive to the importance of Jerusalem to Christians and Moslems and in 1967 had opened the city, for the first time, to pilgrims and worshippers of all religions.

There was, in Israel's view, no contradiction between the peace process and continued development in Jerusalem for the benefit of all its residents, both Jewish and Arab. The 1993 Declaration of Principles did not prohibit development activity in the city. If the PLO leadership felt otherwise, the issue should be addressed in bilateral negotiations; any attempts to do so outside the agreed-upon framework contradicted the letter and spirit of agreements between both parties. Israel called on the Council not to take any action.

During the course of the debate, most speakers considered that the expropriation orders contravened the spirit of UN resolutions and recent agreements between Israel and PLO. Many, while expressing concern over their effect on the peace process, called on Israel to rescind its recent decision and make the necessary compromises with the Palestinians in order to accelerate implementation of the relevant agreements.

On 17 May, the Council did not adopt, due to the negative vote of a permanent member, a draft resolution⁽³⁹⁾ submitted by Botswana, Honduras, Indonesia, Nigeria, Oman and Rwanda. By that text, the Council, stating its awareness of the negative impact of the expropriation on the Middle East peace process, would have: confirmed that the expropriation of land in East Jerusalem by Israel was invalid and violated relevant Council resolutions and the fourth Geneva Convention; called on Israel to rescind the expropriation orders and refrain from such action in the future; expressed full support for the peace process and its achievements, including the 1993 Declaration of Principles and subsequent agreements; and urged the parties to adhere to them and follow up with their full implementation.

The vote was 14 in favour (Argentina, Botswana, China, Czech Republic, France, Germany, Honduras, Indonesia, Italy, Nigeria, Oman, Russian Federation, Rwanda, United Kingdom) to 1 against (United States).

In explanation of vote, the United States, noting that it was the first time in five years that it had cast a veto, said it was compelled to oppose the resolution because the Council had sought to declare itself on a permanent-status issue—Jerusalem—and had thus violated the principle that the only path to achieving a just and lasting peace was through direct talks between the parties.

Meeting numbers. SC 3536, 3538.

Palestine, in identical letters of 24 May to the Secretary-General and to the Security Council President,⁽⁴⁰⁾ referred to the unanimous expression of disagreement, during Council debate, by all members, including the United States, with Israel's confiscation orders. It noted an Israeli Cabinet decision on 22 May to suspend the expropriation of 53 hectares of land in Jerusalem, and cited a 15 May statement by Israel that the Cabinet had no intention of carrying out additional expropriation of land in Jerusalem for housing purposes. While those could be considered as steps in the right direction, they were hardly enough to satisfy previous Council resolutions and international law. Palestine believed that the Council should remain seized of the matter and keep itself apprised of any further Israeli measures with regard to the land in question, to ensure that the confiscation orders were not being carried out and no building would take place on that or any other land in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 20 October report,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his May request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1994 Assembly resolution⁽³⁰⁾ reaffirming that Israeli settlements in the territories, including Jerusalem, were illegal and an obstacle to a comprehensive settlement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/29 C under the general title "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories".

Concerned in particular about the dangerous situation resulting from actions taken by the illegal, armed Israeli settlers in the occupied territory, as illustrated by the massacre of Palestinian worshippers by an illegal Israeli settler in Al-Khalil on 25 February 1994,

Convinced of the positive impact of a temporary international or foreign presence in the occupied Palestinian territory for the safety and protection of the Palestinian people,

Expressing its appreciation to the countries that participated in the Temporary International Presence in Hebron for their positive contribution,

Economic and social repercussions

A report⁽⁴¹⁾ prepared by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) and submitted in July by the Secretary-General, in accordance with 1994 requests of the Economic and Social Council⁽⁴²⁾ and the General Assembly,⁽⁴³⁾ dealt with the economic and social repercussions of Israeli settlements on the Palestinians in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967, and on the Arab population of the Syrian Golan.

The report stated that construction activities in West Bank settlements had proceeded at an unprecedented rate during the review period from April 1994 to March 1995, in contrast to the policy adopted by the Israeli Government. A study by Israeli experts had determined that building operations were being carried out by private companies, without government financing but with permits from the local councils and Israeli ministry officials. The study's findings showed that the Government was facilitating the sale of privately built housing units and continued to provide the necessary public utilities and infrastructure.

ESCWA reported that the stepped-up settlement policy and relocation of thousands of Jews to Jerusalem were at the expense of the Palestinian residents. Many of them had had to build homes without permits owing to the limited land allocated for construction by Arabs, and the Israeli authorities continued to destroy about 50 such homes each year.

In the Golan Heights, a new Israeli settlement in August 1994 brought the total built since 1967 to 33; total inhabitants numbered 13,160 in March 1994.

The use of water resources in the territories had negatively affected the lives of Palestinians, with per capita water consumption among Palestinians in the West Bank ranging between 22 and 28 cubic metres as compared with 165 cubic metres for the Israeli population. The disparity, it was stated, was due to military orders restricting the use of water by Palestinians and preventing them from drilling new wells or developing existing ones, while allowing Israeli settlers to do so and to pump large quantities of water without restriction.

According to Palestinians, the Israeli water policy in the Gaza Strip had led to a dangerous and distressing situation. Water experts believed that the depletion of water reserves in the Gaza Strip and sea-water intrusion had caused the salinity of the water to be six times higher than the internationally accepted level, with 60 per cent of the water no longer suitable for drinking or irrigation.

The uprooting of fruit trees was a daily Israeli practice in the West Bank, as it had been previously in the Gaza Strip. During the intifadah, an estimated 117,000 olive trees had been uprooted for construction and security reasons. Sewage leaking from Israeli settlements had spoilt more than 500 dunums of vineyards in the West Bank. The resulting annual loss was an estimated $1.5 million, with the overall loss exceeding $10 million.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/49.

Economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 49/132 of 19 December 1994,

Recalling also its resolution 1994/45 of 29 July 1994,

Reaffirming the principle of the permanent sovereignty of people under foreign occupation over their national resources,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force and recalling Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 and other resolutions affirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 904(1994) of 18 March 1994, in which, among other things, the Council called upon Israel, the occupying Power, to continue to take and implement measures, including, inter alia, confiscation of arms, with the aim of preventing illegal acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and called for measures to be taken to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians in the occupied territory,

Aware of the negative and grave economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan,

Welcoming the ongoing Middle East peace process started at Madrid, in particular the signing at Cairo, on 4 May 1994, by the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, of the first agreement on the implementation of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, namely, the Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms that Israeli settlements in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 are illegal and an obstacle to economic and social development;
3. Recognizes the economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied by Israel since 1967, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan;
4. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and the population of the Syrian Golan to their natural and all other economic resources, and regards any infringement thereof as being illegal;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/49

28 July 1995 Meeting 57 45-1-5 (roll-call vote)

6-nation draft (E/1995/L.42), orally corrected; agenda item 8.

Sponsors: Bahrain, Egypt, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, United Arab Emirates. Meeting numbers. ESC 53, 56, 57.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bahamas, Bhutan, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Egypt, France, Gabon, Germany, Ghana, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Uganda, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belarus, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Russian Federation, Ukraine.

After the vote, the United States said the intemperate and unbalanced criticism of Israel was unhelpful to the search for a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict; it was the Council's duty to promote peace, not to adopt inflammatory resolutions. The Russian Federation considered that issues such as those contained in the text would be more appropriately discussed in other forums. In Israel's view, the resolution reflected the thinking of those opposed to the peace process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/129.

Economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/49 of 28 July 1995,

Reaffirming the principle of the permanent sovereignty of people under foreign occupation over their national resources,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, and recalling Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 904(1994) of 18 March 1994, in which, among other things, the Council called upon Israel, the occupying Power, to continue to take and implement measures, including, inter alia, confiscation of arms, with the aim of preventing illegal acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and called for measures to be taken to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians in the occupied territory,

Aware of the negative and grave economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and on the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan,

Welcoming the ongoing Middle East peace process started at Madrid, in particular the two implementation agreements embodied in the Agreement on the Gaza Strip and Jericho Area, of 4 May 1994, and the interim agreement on the West Bank and Gaza Strip of 28 September 1995,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms that Israeli settlements in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 are illegal and an obstacle to economic and social development;

General Assembly resolution 50/129

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 126-2-28 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/615/Add.1) by recorded vote (91-22), 30 November (meeting 40); 5-nation draft (A/C.2/50/L.13); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt (as Chairman of Arab Group), Indonesia, Malaysia.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 29, 32, 40; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, Denmark, Djibouti, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands,* South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, Uganda, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Speaking before the vote, Israel urged that the text be deferred, since the criteria for adopting resolutions on the Middle East should reflect the positive developments in the peace process and the hopes for a better future in the region.

The United States considered that rather than participating in a meaningless exercise, it would be more appropriate for Member States to express their strong support for the peace process and encourage the parties as they proceeded with their negotiations. The resolution was flawed because it purported to deal with an issue which, in accordance with the 1993 Declaration of Principles, was to be covered in negotiations no later than the third year of the interim period, or May 1996.

In Australia's view, any infringement of Palestinian water rights, as mentioned in paragraph 4, was illegal, but the matter should be resolved in negotiation.

Iran emphasized that its positive vote should not be construed as recognition of the State of Israel. Similarly, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya expressed reservations on all points of the text that could be taken as recognition of Israel or the Middle East peace process; the only way to achieve peace, it added, was by repatriating the Palestinian people.

According to the Observer for Palestine, the illegal settlements were a major obstacle to peace and their mere presence would lead to extremism and violence. Adoption of the resolution was not a meaningless exercise since the text reaffirmed the international community's position with regard to a dangerous element that might jeopardize the peace process.

Issues related to Palestine

General aspects

During 1995, the General Assembly continued to grapple with the question of Palestine. Following consideration of the annual report of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, the Assembly in December adopted four resolutions, reaffirming, among other things, the necessity of achieving a peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine—the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict—in all its aspects and again stressing the need for the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, primarily the right to self-determination, as well as for Israeli withdrawal from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967.

In commemoration of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, celebrated annually in accordance with a 1977 Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Committee held a solemn meeting on 29 November to which all Member States, specialized agencies and observers were invited.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/84 D.

Peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 7 November 1995, submitted pursuant to the request made in its resolution 49/62 D of 14 December 1994,

Convinced that achieving a final and peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, is imperative for the attainment of a comprehensive and lasting peace in the Middle East,

Aware that the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples is among the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Affirming the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war,

Affirming also the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the territory occupied since 1967 and of Israeli actions aimed at changing the status of Jerusalem,

Affirming once again the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

Aware of the mutual recognition between the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, and the signing by the two parties of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements in Washington on 13 September 1993, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington on 28 September 1995,

Noting with satisfaction the withdrawal of the Israeli army, which took place in the Gaza Strip and the Jericho area in accordance with the agreements reached by the parties, and the initiation of the Palestinian Authority in those areas, as well as the beginning of the redeployment of the Israeli army in the rest of the West Bank,

Aware also that the United Nations has participated as a full, extraregional participant in the work of the multilateral working groups of the Middle East peace process,

Noting the appointment of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories by the Secretary-General, and the positive contribution in this regard,

Welcoming the convening of the Conference to Support Middle East Peace at Washington on 1 October 1993 and all follow-up meetings,

1. Reaffirms the necessity of achieving a peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, in all its aspects;

2. Expresses its full support of the ongoing peace process which began in Madrid and the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, and expresses the hope that the process will lead to the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

3. Calls for the timely and scrupulous implementation of the agreements reached between the parties towards the negotiation of the final settlement;

4. Stresses the need for:

(a) The realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, primarily the right to self-determination;

(b) The withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967;

5. Stresses also the need for resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees in conformity with its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948;

6. Urges Member States to expedite the provision of economic and technical assistance to the Palestinian people during this critical period;

7. Emphasizes the importance for the United Nations to play a more active and expanded role in the current peace process and in the implementation of the Declaration of Principles, including the monitoring of the forthcoming Palestinian elections;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the parties concerned, and in consultation with the Security Council, for the promotion of peace in the region and to submit progress reports on developments in this matter.

General Assembly resolution 50/84 D

15 December 1995 Meeting 93 143-3-3 (recorded vote)

17-nation draft (A/50/L.50 & Add.1); agenda item 42.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: plenary 74, 75, 93.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, Micronesia, United States.

Abstaining: Costa Rica, Marshall Islands, Russian Federation.

In the view of the United States, it was both inappropriate and unhelpful for the General Assembly to take a position and speak conclusively on issues under direct negotiation between the parties. The Assembly should support the negotiation process rather than focus on divisive and polarizing issues and statements. Three of the texts adopted under the agenda item were remnants of an earlier time and had been overtaken by events. They promoted institutions and activities whose approach to Middle East peace was both unbalanced and outdated and did little to support the negotiations under way; nor did those texts reflect, except in perfunctory ways, the remarkable progress that had been achieved. Those institutions and activities, which absorbed about $7 million worth of financial and human resources, could be better used in another way, for example through UNSCO for programmes directly benefiting Palestinians.

Speaking after the vote, Palestine expressed regret over the positions taken by Israel and the United States which, it said, appeared to aim principally at setting aside international law and at forcing the Palestinians to accept the results of illegal Israeli policies that had been condemned by the international community for many years, subjecting the final settlement to an imbalance of power in favour of Israel.

The Syrian Arab Republic said its favourable vote did not mean that it supported or opposed the Declaration of Principles referred to in the text. Iran expressed reservations on those parts of the resolutions adopted under the agenda item which might be construed as any recognition of Israel. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated similar reservations; it also reserved its position on the provisions welcoming or supporting the current peace process. That process, it felt, did not provide a just, comprehensive and final solution.

The right of the Palestinians to self-determination was reaffirmed by the Commission on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter II) and by the Assembly in resolution 50/140. The Assembly expressed the hope that they could soon be exercising that right within the peace process and urged for continued support in their quest for self-determination.

Committee on Palestinian Rights

As mandated by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽²⁾ the Committee on Palestinian Rights, established in 1975,⁽³⁾ kept under review the situation relating to the Palestine question, reported on it and made suggestions to the Assembly or the Security Council. The Committee continued to promote the exercise of the rights of the Palestinians and heighten international awareness of the facts relating to the question, making adjustments in its approach and work programme as necessary in order to promote implementation of the agreements reached and to mobilize support and assistance to the Palestinians. In carrying out its mandate, the Committee also expanded its cooperation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs). During the year, it organized regional seminars and meetings and oversaw the preparation of studies and publications. As in the past, it invited Palestinian and Israeli personalities to participate in all events organized under its auspices, with a view to promoting constructive debate and analysis of the most important issues relating to the Palestine question, the transition period and the peace process.

In establishing its 1995 work programme, the Committee decided not to hold any North American seminar and to devote some of the resulting savings to the North American NGO symposium. It also decided to devote resources earmarked for a European seminar to one on Palestinian administrative, managerial and financial needs and challenges (see Committee report below, under "Assistance to Palestinians"). The Committee initiated consultations with regard to identifying a venue for an Asian seminar and NGO symposium; that event and an event in Africa, however, could not be held during 1995.

The Latin American and Caribbean Regional Seminar (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 20-23 March), held in support of the peace process, was attended by 17 panellists from that region, as well as Palestinians and Israelis, representatives of 17 Governments, 3 United Nations organs and intergovernmental organizations, 16 NGOs, media representatives, and faculty and students of universities and institutes. A regional NGO symposium on the same theme was held in conjunction with that seminar, as were workshops on mobilizing NGOs to promote assistance to the Palestinians and on NGO activities to mobilize public opinion for a just and lasting solution to the Palestine question.

The twelfth United Nations North American NGO Symposium on the Question of Palestine (New York, 19-21 June), held in cooperation with the North American Coordinating Committee for NGOs on the Question of Palestine, was attended by 73 NGOs, 18 panellists and workshop leaders, 11 Governments and 2 intergovernmental organizations. Panel topics included: Jerusalem and settlements; the situation of the refugees; securing respect for international humanitarian law; building civil society; advancing women's concerns; promoting social development; and the continuing commitment of NGOs to the Palestine question.

The twelfth United Nations International NGO Meeting and Ninth European NGO Symposium on the Question of Palestine were combined (Vienna, 29 August-1 September) and attended by 26 panellists and workshop leaders, 51 NGOs, 37 Governments, 10 UN agencies and bodies, 3 intergovernmental organizations, 5 NGO coordinating committees and a delegation from Palestine. Participating NGOs adopted a communique, welcoming the positive developments in the Middle East peace process as a result of the 1993 Declaration of Principles,⁽⁴⁾ noting with concern the delays in implementing the agreement and exhorting Israel to honour its commitments in a timely manner.

In its 1995 report to the Assembly,⁽⁵⁾ the Committee continued to stress that a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Palestine question—the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict—had to be based on the relevant United Nations resolutions and the following principles: Israeli withdrawal from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and from the other occupied Arab territories; respect for the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized boundaries; and recognition and exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, primarily the right to self-determination.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that the peace process continued despite many difficulties and that the parties had affirmed its irreversibility. As an important further step in that process, the Committee welcomed the signing in September of the Interim Agreement.

The Committee expressed its commitment to continue and intensify its support for the Palestinian people and its leadership during the transition. It reaffirmed that the United Nations had a permanent responsibility with respect to the Palestine question until a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement was reached, and reiterated that the involvement of the United Nations in the peace process, both as guardian of international legitimacy and in mobilizing and providing international assistance, was essential for the successful outcome of the peace efforts. During the interim period, the Committee believed, Israel had to recognize and respect its obligations as the occupying Power under the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention).

Despite positive developments, the Committee noted that the situation in the areas still under Israeli occupation gave reason for concern and continued to create facts on the ground that had potential negative effects on the future exercise of Palestinian rights and the peace process itself. Of utmost importance was the issue of land confiscation and settlements, including in East Jerusalem (see above, under "Occupied territories").

The Committee expressed profound concern at the repeated closures, for security reasons, of the occupied territory and the self-rule areas and at the isolation of East Jerusalem, which had a devastating effect on the overall livelihood of the Palestinian population in an economy much intertwined with that of Israel, as well as on Palestinian education and health. The Committee was also concerned that thousands of Palestinian prisoners and detainees remained in Israeli prisons, under conditions that had been repeatedly decried by human rights organizations. It called on Israel to implement the planned releases speedily and work to ameliorate conditions of detention (see above).

The Committee voiced concern at the continued deterioration of the living conditions of the Palestinians in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and particularly in the Gaza Strip. It stressed that the destruction of the Palestinian economic infrastructure as a result of the prolonged occupation required the urgent attention of the international community.

An important first step towards integrating the Palestinian economy into a wider regional economic framework was, in the Committee's view, the first Middle East/North Africa Economic Summit (Casablanca, Morocco, 30 October-1 November 1994) and the adoption of the Declaration of Casablanca,⁽⁶⁾ as a dynamic economy and prosperity were important underpinnings of peace and stability, ideas that were reaffirmed in a joint communique issued on 12 February 1995 by the United States, Egypt, Israel, Jordan and the Palestinian Authority. The Committee welcomed the convening of the Second Middle East/North Africa Economic Summit (Amman, 29-31 October) which, it believed, would facilitate the expansion of investment in the region and enhance regional cooperation and development, thereby promoting stability and an atmosphere conducive to peace.

The Committee expressed great appreciation to those States that had supported its work and facilitated the organization of events held under its auspices; it believed that the time had come for all States to recognize its contribution as a valuable forum for dialogue, analysis, exchange of expertise, mobilization of public opinion and action in support of the peace efforts and the rights of the Palestinians, as well as their socio-economic development. The Committee considered that a broadening of its membership to include countries that supported its objective but had not hitherto participated in its work would greatly enhance the contribution of the United Nations to promote peace.

The Committee further considered that its seminars on economic and social issues confronting the Palestinians in the occupied territory had been particularly useful in bringing together experts, donor countries, UN departments, agencies and organizations, NGOs and others. In view of the new situation created by the 1993 Declaration of Principles and subsequent implementation agreements and mindful of the measures taken by the Palestinian Authority to establish an effective administration, which required continued international support, the Committee felt that an event under its auspices should be held as soon as possible to address various aspects of the transition period.

The Committee stressed the value of its role as a catalyst in bringing together and developing a network of NGOs interested in the Palestine question, and in promoting solidarity activities as well as concrete assistance. Noting the increasing interest and participation of Governments, in particular of donor countries, and UN organizations and agencies in NGO events organized under its auspices, the Committee also intended to continue its meetings in the various regions, seeking to structure them for maximum usefulness and to cooperate with NGOs with a view to developing effective follow-up mechanisms and encouraging a wider and more active participation of NGOs.

The Committee also made recommendations regarding the activities of the UN Division for Palestinian Rights and the special information programme on the question of Palestine of the Department of Public Information (DPI) (see below).

Finally, the Committee said it would continue to strive to achieve maximum effectiveness in implementing its mandate and to adjust its work programme in the light of developments, in order to continue to contribute, to the extent possible, to the realization of the common UN objective of achieving a just and lasting solution to the question of Palestine.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/84 A.

Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People

The General Assembly,

Public information activities

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽⁷⁾ DPI continued its special information programme on the Palestine question, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America. In doing so, it provided press coverage of all meetings of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, as well as of seminars and symposia. It cooperated with the Division for Palestinian Rights in media promotion and other arrangements for the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, held annually on 29 November. The Department distributed various publications covering Palestinian issues, including Prerequisites for Peace in the Middle East: An Israeli-Palestinian Dialogue, based on the proceedings of a 1994 international encounter for journalists.⁽⁸⁾

DPI's Public Inquiries Unit responded to requests for information on Palestine and the Middle East. The subject was included in presentations made to visitors taking guided tours of the United Nations, and the DPI Group Programme Unit organized seven briefings on the question.

A wide range of information material was disseminated through the Internet and other electronic networks.

A video with the working title "Palestine: Fifty Years On" was produced by the Media Division and distributed to all UN information centres (UNICs) and services and United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) libraries. DPI'S Video Section produced four "UN in Action"/CNN World Report segments on: the Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation in Jericho; training of the Palestinian police force; Palestinian women setting up business in the West Bank; and a UNDP-assisted banana plantation in Jericho.

The Radio Section produced a number of feature programmes and covered various aspects of the Palestine question in news and current affairs radio programmes in official and non-official languages worldwide.

The global network of UNICs continued to disseminate information on the Palestine question to mass media, academics, NGOs and the general public, through newsletters, press releases and briefings.

In cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and with the support of the Institute for Cooperation with the Arab World of the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, DPI organized a Seminar on Assistance to the Palestinian People in the Field of Media Development (Madrid, Spain, 29-31 March). Palestinian media practitioners participated, together with representatives of international media organizations, training institutions and foundations, with the aim of strengthening Palestinian media capability. DPI also organized a training programme for Palestinian media practitioners at Headquarters (7 October-22 November).

The Committee on Palestinian Rights, in its 1995 report,⁽⁵⁾ stated that DPI's special information programme was very useful in raising the awareness of the international community concerning the complexities of the Palestine question and the Middle East situation. The Committee believed that the programme was contributing effectively to an atmosphere conducive to dialogue and supportive of the peace process, and should follow and reflect the new realities, assist Palestinian media development and continue to inform about the cause of the Palestinians, in addition to supporting dialogue in the effort to build peace.

Assistance to Palestinians

UN involvement

Report of the Secretary-General. On 13 July, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁹⁾ on assistance to the Palestinians, specifying needs, ongoing programmes and proposals for additional assistance. According to the report, the Palestinian Authority faced growing financial difficulties, with a projected budget deficit of $136 million. On 27 April in Paris, the Palestinian Authority, Israel and, on behalf of the donors, the Chair of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee (the main donor-led body overseeing the assistance effort) concluded a Tripartite Plan of Action elaborating commitments and responsibilities for each party to bridge the budget deficit.

At that meeting, a Joint Liaison Committee was re-established to provide a forum for discussing with the Palestinian Authority economic policy and practical matters related to donor assistance. That Committee was comprised of: the Palestinian Authority as gavel holder; Norway, in its capacity as Chair of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee, as shepherd; the United Nations and the World Bank as joint secretariat; as well as the United States and EU. Japan was also asked to take part in the meetings. In addition to taking up bilateral issues relating to donor assistance, the Joint Liaison Committee was to discuss progress in implementing the Tripartite Programme of Action. The Joint Liaison Committee, which began meeting on 15 May, decided to create a Task Force on Project Implementation—comprised of the Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction as gavel holder, the United States and the European Commission as co-shepherds, UNSCO as secretariat, and the World Bank, UNDP and UNRWA—to examine technical and other obstacles to timely project implementation and to seek solutions for addressing such obstacles. The Task Force reported to the Joint Liaison Committee, which then would discuss obstacles with the appropriate party, whether the Palestinian Authority, Israel, donors or the implementing agencies.

Terje Roed Larsen (Norway), the Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, appointed in June 1994,⁽¹⁰⁾ convened a second inter-agency meeting in Gaza in June 1995 to examine the evolving role of the United Nations in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and to review progress made in implementing the UN coordinating mechanisms agreed on at the first inter-agency meeting, held in December 1994. A central objective of the meeting was to discuss draft sectoral strategy papers under preparation by the priority sector focal points in consultation with interested UN organizations. Those sectoral papers and accompanying project documents were to form the core of a strategy coordinated, targeted and unified by the UN to expand its ongoing programmes and undertake new initiatives for the benefit of the Palestinian Authority and the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza. More than 20 UN agencies and programmes participated. The sectoral papers and project documents were also to provide a basis for fund-raising by the Special Coordinator, on behalf of and in coordination with implementing agencies.

Among the ongoing assistance programmes (see below), UNDP's was oriented towards water supply, sanitation, agriculture, industry and housing, while UNRWA had provided basic infrastructure facilities for more than 450,000 Palestinian refugees in camps throughout the West Bank and Gaza. Under its Peace Implementation Programme (PIP), launched in 1993, UNRWA carried out environmental and health projects, constructed and improved educational institutions, and rehabilitated shelters. Some 5,000 UNRWA teachers provided primary, preparatory and vocational schooling to 145,000 students. The Agency offered basic health and social services to more than 1 million registered refugees, operating 230 outpatient facilities and employing more than 500 health-care workers, including 100 doctors. In the Gaza Strip, UNRWA provided monthly in-kind support to almost 100,000 of the poorest refugees.

The United Nations also assisted the Palestinian Authority in institution-building. UNDP gave public-sector support at municipal and local levels. It supported rural infrastructure investments, and provided start-up funding and procurement support to the 14 ministries of the Palestinian Authority, as well as to the Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction, the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, the Palestinian Computer Centre, the Civil Defense Department, Palestinian TV and the Palestinian Environmental Protection Agency. A key starting point in public administration development was the May 1995 UNDP mission to work with the Palestinian Authority to identify needs for action in public administration development and to begin the process of formulating an overall national strategy.

Since early 1995, UNDP had managed TOKTEN (Transfer of Knowledge Through Expatriate Nationals Programme), which sponsored the return of Palestinian expatriates living abroad for short-term missions to provide advisory services, consultancy studies and training to the Palestinian Authority ministries and private-sector institutions.

In late 1994, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) developed a programming strategy for services to the Palestinian people, to provide technical assistance in the areas of private-sector development, development of small- and medium-scale enterprises, human resources development for the industrial sector, acquisition and application of technology to enhance competitiveness and industrial regional cooperation and integration.

The International Labour Organisation's (ILO) ongoing activities included reintegration, through employment, of ex-detainees; assistance in the creation of a Ministry of Labour and the development of labour policy and legislation; capacity-building for the Federation of Palestinian Chambers of Commerce and for the Palestinian trade union federation; an income-generating programme for the disabled; assistance to the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, including a regular labour force survey; and technical assistance for labour-intensive infrastructure.

UNRWA also increased its job creation activities, from $1 million to $2 million per year prior to September 1993 to about $35 million in 1994, while UNDP's activities doubled to $22 million. Under its income generation programme, UNRWA supplied credit to small businesses, 170 of them in the Gaza Strip alone. Working closely with the Agency, the Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction was managing over $15 million worth of infrastructure projects.

Based on consultations with the Ministry of Education, a United Nations inter-agency meeting (Gaza, 15-16 June) agreed on principles for a UN education strategy, which included: UN compliance with the strategies and priorities established by the Ministry of Education; cooperation among UN agencies, in close coordination with the Special Coordinator, the donor community and NGOs; consultations among agencies to emphasize complementarity of programmes; sharing of expertise and experiences between UN agencies and the Palestinian Authority; and coordinated fund-raising efforts.

The activities of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) focused on four key areas: primary health care, primary education, early childhood development, and youth and community development. Since the establishment of the Palestinian Authority, those priorities had shifted towards a long-term institution-building approach. UNICEF supported the Palestinian Authority in developing a national programme of action for the Palestinian child, to provide a broad policy framework for addressing children's issues.

In partnership with the Palestinian Authority, UNESCO developed a programme of assistance consisting of more than 20 priority projects which included strengthening of the Ministries of Education and Culture.

As a result of several missions, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and ESCWA jointly recommended an action programme for the restructuring, development and strengthening of the Palestinian public agricultural institutions.

The World Health Organization (WHO) focused principally on institutional development and building infrastructure for primary and secondary health care and environmental health, particularly in the Gaza Strip. It provided resources for the establishment and operation of a number of departments of the Palestinian Health Authority and assisted in the transfer of health services from the Palestinian Council for Health to the Palestinian Authority.

The Department for Development Support and Management Services of the Secretariat undertook two needs assessment missions at the invitation of the Palestinian Authority, one on strengthening the capacities of the Ministry of Planning and International Cooperation and the Ministry of Local Government Affairs, and another on developing the institutional capacity of the Palestinian Authority in terms of civil service training and strengthening the administrative functioning of the various ministries. The Special Coordinator oversaw the training of and other assistance to the Palestinian Police Force (see below).

The United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) designed a training programme on the use of information system techniques for map production. During an April mission to the occupied territories, the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) emphasized the need to restructure the Palestinian Civil Aviation Authority and to establish a comprehensive training programme with the technical assistance of ICAO.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/314 of 28 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report. In resolution 1995/30 (see above), the Council called for intensified financial and technical assistance to Palestinian women. The situation of and assistance to Palestinian women was the subject of a March report of the Secretary-General to the Commission on the Status of Women (see above, under "Occupied territories").

Committee report. In its annual report,⁽⁵⁾ the Committee on Palestinian Rights noted with satisfaction that a coordination mechanism for international assistance had been established and a plan of action elaborated. The Committee called on the international donor community to increase assistance as a matter of high priority and urgency. It noted with appreciation the contribution of funds by donor countries and EU to the Palestinian Police Force, as well as to various development projects.

The Committee noted the diversified assistance to the Palestinians by the UN system, which had significantly widened over the years. It expressed appreciation for the efforts by the Special Coordinator to mobilize and coordinate such assistance. It continued to give priority to promoting international assistance to the Palestinians in order to meet their socio-economic and development needs and to support the Palestinian Authority in its institution-building efforts. The Committee structured its programme of regional meetings to that end and convened at UNESCO headquarters a seminar on Palestinian administrative, managerial and financial needs and challenges (Paris, 28-30 June 1995). It was attended by donor countries, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, UN bodies and agencies, as well as by Palestinian, Israeli and other experts. The final report⁽¹⁾ of the seminar was submitted to the Economic and Social Council in July.

In closing remarks, the Chairman said the Committee would continue to act primarily in the international political arena and address such fundamental issues as the question of Jerusalem, Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, and Palestine refugees. At the same time, the Committee increasingly felt the need to contribute to promoting international assistance for reconstruction and development and for strengthening Palestinian institutions on the ground during the transition period. Meeting the needs of the Palestinians in establishing a viable and effective administration in the area under the Palestinian Authority was an essential stepping-stone in the struggle for self-determination, he said. Well-functioning government institutions, a developing economy, the creation of employment opportunities and the effective provision of social services were interrelated issues which, if addressed satisfactorily, would provide solid foundations for the new stages of the peace process.

UNDP action

In March 1995, the UNDP Administrator reported⁽¹²⁾ on activities during 1994 within the framework of the UNDP Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People (PAPP). He noted that after the signing of the May 1994 Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area, which established Palestinian self-rule, the Programme had placed high priority on providing start-up support to the Palestinian Authority and its various sectoral departments and supporting institutions. The Programme strategy in 1994, formulated in full collaboration with the Authority, had focused on four broad objectives: protection and management of the environment; encouragement of sustainable human development; support of economic development; and strengthening of public administration. UNDP continued to play a major role in placing its experience at the disposal of the Special Coordinator.

Taking note of the report, the UNDP/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) Executive Board in April⁽¹³⁾ encouraged the international donor community to increase contributions to the Programme and to take full advantage of its unique and effective delivery capacity.

In 1995, PAPP was enlarged considerably in response to the developments in the peace process between Israel and PLO.⁽¹⁴⁾ The Programme strategy in 1995 was to mobilize and target bilateral donor contributions to meet rapidly emerging priorities, emanating from the changes in Palestinian society and institutions. It was aimed at translating those changes into immediate and tangible impacts. Within that context, PAPP activities in 1995 had three overriding objectives: to support the Palestinian Authority's institution- and capacity-building; to progress from direct PAPP programme execution, which had been necessary before the establishment of the Authority, to a new generation of projects where PAPP's role centred on technical support, supervision and facilitation; and to focus on poverty elimination by helping create employment opportunities, especially in Gaza, where widespread unemployment was the primary obstacle impeding economic growth.

In extensive consultations with the Authority, bilateral donors, UN agencies, EU and the World Bank, PAPP formulated a comprehensive and forward-looking framework to guide its activities over the coming three years (1996-1998), providing strategies and concrete initiatives in six key areas: public administration management; gender in development; agricultural development; private-sector development; employment-generating public works programme; and environmental and social infrastructure. The total programme was projected at $94 million for the three-year period.

Total PAPP expenditures in 1995 were estimated at $34 million, an increase of more than 50 per cent over 1994 expenditures of $22 million, made possible through large-scale bilateral contributions. During 1995, PAPP received contributions from various donors for programme activities in 1996: $11 million from Japan; $4 million from Norway; $2.1 million from Italy; $1.75 million from Sweden; $350,000 from Finland; $20,000 from the Netherlands; $400,000 from the United States Agency for International Development (USAID); $1.5 million from the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF); and $35,000 from UNFPA. In addition, eight donors (USAID, Canada, Finland, France, Japan, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States) pledged a total of an additional $25 million.

In order to deliver its greatly expanded programme, PAPP's operational capacity was considerably strengthened during 1995, primarily through the recruitment of highly skilled Palestinian technical, engineering and programming professionals. Two new technical sections, in public administration management and rural development, were added. The Gaza Office was given a large degree of delegated responsibility and was also significantly reinforced, as 60 per cent of ongoing PAPP programme activities were based in the Gaza Strip. Another important trend in the latter half of 1995 was the integration of UNDP-financed expertise into the emerging Palestinian public administration.

Despite increased expenditures, PAPP was still hindered in its programme delivery during the year for two primary reasons: frequent closures of the border between the Gaza Strip and Israel, which at times severely restricted a free flow of goods and persons; and the difficulty experienced by many newly established counterpart Palestinian institutions to define clearly their mandates, priorities and needs for technical cooperation and capital assistance, an aspect UNDP attempted to mitigate through advisory services in public administration management.

A multi-project employment-generation programme, begun as an emergency scheme in 1994 primarily to provide immediate employment opportunities in the Gaza Strip, had become a major infrastructure rehabilitation programme involving numerous Palestinian contractors. In 1995, donors committed a total of $19 million to that programme. PAPP's large-scale infrastructure development programme included construction, rehabilitation and extension of water-supply systems in rural villages and cities in the West Bank and Gaza; continued construction of two main West Bank hospitals; the launching of a small-scale infrastructure rehabilitation and maintenance programme in partnership with the Municipality of Gaza; and construction and renovation work at the Jericho school and sports complex.

PAPP's gender-in-development programme, aimed at promoting the role of Palestinian women in decision-making processes and empowering them through leadership and gender training, continued to expand in 1995. A number of advocacy initiatives were carried out, including a comparative review of existing legislation from a gender perspective with suggested refinements to make the legal system more gender sensitive, and support for a coalition of Palestinian women's health professionals working on women's health policy.

PAPP also initiated activities in 1995 related to formulating a human development profile in the West Bank and Gaza Strip as a crucial step towards defining long-term development goals and facilitating dialogue between the Palestinian Authority, civil society, the United Nations and donors. As part of its capacity-development efforts, PAPP responded to the most urgent needs of the Palestinian Authority by providing emergency start-up support of more than $10 million to more than 20 major institutions, primarily the ministries. PAPP subsequently launched a public administration development programme to support further the Palestinian Authority institutions in operational, administrative and human resources management tasks. The PAPP water resources action programme provided key technical support to facilitate the establishment of a central Palestinian Water Authority in April 1995. Two new programmes in 1995 aimed primarily at developing the capacities of Palestinian institutions. In private-sector development, in close consultation with the Special Coordinator, PAPP sponsored a pioneering mission to help the Palestinian Authority define its strategy for establishing industrial parks. An integrated rural development programme, introduced in 1994, continued to expand in the poorest area of the West Bank, utilizing participatory development planning and implementation tools and focusing on strengthening village-level planning, financial and project management capacities.

In an effort to support the progressive integration of the West Bank and Gaza Strip into the region, PAPP promoted Palestinian participation in regional conferences and training seminars. UNDP facilitated implementation of a regional project against desertification, involving experts from the Palestinian Authority, Israel and Jordan. It also initiated an exchange of experts in agricultural research and extension.

PAPP supported UNFPA in preparatory work for a population and housing census, to provide essential data and information for developing economic and social policies. In addition, PAPP worked with FAO to provide policy advisory support in the field of agriculture, with collaborative relationships with UNICEF, UNRWA, UNIDO and ILO.

UNCTAD activities

In July, the secretariat of the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) reported⁽¹⁵⁾ on developments in the economy of the occupied Palestinian territory and proposed a programme of technical assistance. Once Israel had granted UNCTAD staff access to the Palestinian territory in March, its secretariat consulted with the Palestinian Authority, as well as with UNDP and the Special Coordinator. During a follow-up mission in May, consultations were held on substantive issues related to private investment.

The programme aimed to provide Palestinians with support in the areas of trade, finance and transport, and specifically to help them: strengthen the technical, managerial and information capacities of the public and private-sector institutions responsible for formulating and implementing policies; formulate policy and strategy options; enhance the capacity of the commodity-producing sectors; establish the necessary infrastructures for an efficient transport system for trade; reform the overall legal and regulatory framework, along with institutional capacities, for mobilizing financial resources, promoting investments and improving the performance of public utilities; and strengthen technical and institutional capacities in management of financial flows and maximization of insurance resources and their efficient allocation. Ultimately, the programme would be presented to the Palestinian Authority for approval and then to potential bilateral and multilateral sources for funding.

The Trade and Development Board, at its September session, took note⁽¹⁶⁾ of the report and the proposed programme of technical assistance.

Financing of the Palestinian Police Force

On 6 April, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁷⁾ that UNRWA would continue to be responsible for disbursing donor contributions for salaries and other start-up costs of the Palestinian Police Force, with the cooperation of the Special Coordinator and UNDP. From September 1994, when a Memorandum of Understanding was signed in Gaza by representatives of the Palestinian Police Force and UNRWA,⁽¹⁸⁾ through March 1995, seven donor countries (Denmark, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, United Kingdom) and EU contributed funds, channelled through UNRWA.

Under the May 1994 Agreement on the Gaza Strip and Jericho Area, the Force had an authorized strength of 9,000 policemen. The cost for their net salaries, from September through March, the Secretary-General reported, was $30.2 million, of which $29.8 million had been funded.

Although the Memorandum of Understanding included other recurrent costs of about $1.9 million per month, there were not always sufficient donor contributions for them. UNRWA reviewed monthly expenditures by the Force only when funds were available to offset them.

Total costs incurred by UNRWA, acting as the disbursement mechanism, amounted to $134,000 by March 1995. The Agency had received, either as reimbursement for costs or in programme support costs or earned interest, about $521,000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 April 1995, following consideration of the Secretary-General's report, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/21 O, under the general title "Special economic assistance to individual countries or regions".

Financing of the Palestinian Police Force

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/21 B of 2 December 1994 on the financing of the Palestinian Police Force,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 6 April 1995 and his designation of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in pursuance of paragraph 1 of resolution 49/21B,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to designate once again the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to disburse, with due attention to the need for thorough accounting, the voluntary contributions given by donors in light of the activities of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee for salaries and other start-up costs of the Palestinian Police Force, for a period ending not later than 31 December 1995;

2. Encourages all Member States to contribute funds for this purpose through the Agency;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 49/21 O

13 April 1995 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

19-nation draft (A/49/L.65 & Add.1); agenda item 37 (b).

Before the vote, the United States said the UN mechanism had been a crucial and effective instrument in facilitating much needed support to the Palestinian Police Force which was in the mutual interest of both Israel and the Palestinians and was critical to the successful implementation of the Declaration of Principles and its follow-on agreements.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General on 17 November 1995 reported⁽¹⁹⁾ that at his request, pursuant to Assembly resolution 49/21 O (see above), UNRWA, in coordination with the Special Coordinator, had effected payment of salaries to the Palestinian Police Force for the month of July. Contributions for the months April through June had not been received, nor had they for months after July. UNRWA had therefore not been involved in disbursing Palestinian police salaries during those months. The July disbursement was for contributions from the Netherlands ($3,434,066 net of UNRWA programme support costs), Norway ($1,995,335 net) and Greece ($89,286 net). Of those contributions, UNRWA disbursed $4,508,091 in net salaries for 9,000 policemen and $375,264 in salary deductions for the Police Force pension, health and social security funds. The unutilized surplus of $635,332 was paid to the Police Force to cover other running costs for July, as agreed to by the donors.

In August, an independent review was conducted, on behalf of the European Commission, of the 10 million European currency units disbursed by UNRWA for salaries and running costs of the Police Force for December 1994 and January 1995. The report concluded that those funds had been disbursed in accordance with relevant agreements and that controls and procedures continued to be implemented effectively by the Palestinian Authority and UNRWA in months when donor funds were involved.

The UN and Palestine refugees

In 1995, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

(UNRWA) marked 45 years of humanitarian service to persons displaced from their homes and property as a result of four major conflicts in the Middle East. In June, more than 3 million refugees were registered with UNRWA, living both in and outside camps in the West Bank and the new Self-Rule Area of Jericho (517,000) and Self-Rule Area of the Gaza Strip (683,000), as well as in Jordan (1.3 million), Lebanon (346,000) and the Syrian Arab Republic (337,000).

The future of UNRWA was under discussion as the Palestinian Authority, headquartered in the Gaza Strip, took over some of the services previously provided by UNRWA, which took steps to move its headquarters from Vienna to Gaza in 1995. Major areas of service by UNRWA continued to be in the areas of education, health, and relief and social services.

Introducing his annual report⁽²⁰⁾ on the work of the Agency (1 July 1994-30 June 1995) to the General Assembly's Fourth Committee on 30 October, the UNRWA Commissioner-General said that the Agency was in the contradictory position of planning for its own eventual dissolution while expanding its programmes and operations. UNRWA had been closely associated with the fate of the Palestine refugees for 45 years, trying to mitigate their sufferings, helping them preserve their cultural identity, educating their children, providing them with primary health care and hospitalization, creating employment opportunities and assisting their poorest.

Tens of thousands of Palestinians had served as UNRWA staff over the years with exceptional dedication to their own community and to the United Nations, he said. Now, the Palestine refugees, among them the 21,000-strong staff of UNRWA, eagerly awaited a solution to the refugee problem as foreseen in the agreements between Israel and the Palestinians. They were feeling the inevitable strain of a transition period and of the imponderables of a not-yet-defined future. The situation facing UNRWA in the West Bank and Gaza Strip was evolving rapidly. As the Palestinian Authority had taken greater responsibilities for education, health and social services, it had become UNRWA's exclusive interlocutor in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. At the same time, the effective running of Agency operations required the support of the Israeli authorities which remained in control of borders, customs, security and movement into and out of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. Restrictions on movement and security measures by Israeli authorities had affected UNRWA operations, in particular causing delays in receiving equipment and supplies. However, in comparison to the previous year, there had been a marked reduction in the number of incursions into Agency installations by members of the Israeli security forces.

The work of UNRWA

The UNRWA Commissioner-General, in his annual report, observed that during the ongoing Middle East peace process, UNRWA had broadened its efforts to substantively improve the socioeconomic conditions of Palestine refugees in the transitional period. UNRWA had entered into a close working relationship with the new Palestinian Authority, focusing on harmonizing mutual activities in education, health, and relief and social services in preparation for an eventual handover of the administration of those areas. As the seat of both the Chairman of PLO and the Palestinian Authority, the Gaza Strip was the focal point of UNRWA relations with the Palestinian leadership.

Palestine refugees in the self-rule areas, comprising 22 per cent of all refugees registered with UNRWA, benefited from the absence of daily tension that had characterized the period prior to the Israel-PLO agreements. UNRWA schools, clinics and community centres functioned with minimal disruption for the first time since the intifadah and Israeli countermeasures, which began in December 1987. UNRWA established coordination mechanisms with Palestinian Authority counterparts in the education, health, and relief and social services sectors. In education, the focus was on the admission of returnee children to UNRWA schools, the introduction of a tenth year in the basic education cycle, teacher training and vocational programmes. In health, priority issues included medical insurance, treatment of refugee patients in Palestinian Authority hospitals, school health services and immunization policies. Coordination in relief and social services was sought in the areas of direct relief assistance, housing and land use in Gaza camps, housing for returnees, and national plans for youth and children.

Peace Implementation Programme

By mid-1995, most projects UNRWA had introduced through its Peace Implementation Programme (PIP) were under way.⁽²¹⁾ A comprehensive investment programme begun in 1993 to improve infrastructure and stabilize socioeconomic conditions, PIP aimed at making the results of the peace process felt at the local level. Its main focus was infrastructure development—through construction and renovation of schools, clinics and community centres, rehabilitation of shelters, and provision of adequate sewage and drainage systems in camps. PIP also gave priority support to the Palestinian private sector through income-generation initiatives. It was estimated that during the first phase of PIP, which ended in September 1994, more than 5,500 jobs had been created in the Gaza Strip alone, each for an average period of four months. The Programme's second phase (PIP II) consisted of projects valued at $311 million in mid-1995, including $78 million in unfunded projects transferred from PIP I. PIP II was developed in conjunction with relevant ministries of the Palestinian Authority, as well as with the Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction (PECDAR).

Special emphasis was placed on assisting the Palestinian Authority in addressing the needs of returnees, particularly additional schools and classrooms. In conjunction with local municipalities, UNRWA developed comprehensive project proposals for internal sewage and storm-water drainage systems, treatment plants and pumping stations for 11 camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, valued at more than $124 million. By 30 June 1995, the Agency had received $29.5 million in funds and pledges for PIP II, of which $24.5 million was for the Gaza Strip, $1 million for the West Bank and $4 million for the Agency's other three fields of operation.

A separately funded project, well under way by the end of 1995, was the construction of the 232-bed European Gaza Hospital, an UNRWA initiative financed by EU. Construction also began on the Gaza College of Nursing and Allied Health Sciences, to be affiliated with the Gaza Hospital. UNRWA also was improving and expanding infrastructure newly taken over by the Palestinian Authority from the Israeli civil administration, building one secondary school, renovating 14 Palestinian Authority schools, upgrading municipal garbage depository sites and undertaking maintenance on existing water and sewerage systems.

Major service areas

Education

The UNRWA education programme, covering schools, vocational training and teacher education, in 1995 remained UNRWA's largest single activity, accounting for about half of the Agency's regular budget. More than 408,000 elementary, preparatory and secondary school pupils attended UNRWA's 644 schools, an increase of 10,000 pupils over the preceding school year. Vocational training, comprising two-year, post-preparatory trade courses and two-year, post-secondary technical courses, was available to some 4,500 persons, with some new courses introduced. UNRWA schools followed the host Governments' curricula and operated with assistance from UNESCO.

To improve academic achievement levels, UNRWA had developed remedial plans, including diagnostic tests, curriculum enrichment materials and self-learning kits. The Agency worked closely with the Palestinian Authority Ministry of Education in the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area, with the Authority assuming control in 1995 of the school system formerly run by the Israeli civil administration. Following the establishment of the Authority, thousands of refugees had returned to the Gaza Strip from other countries in the region, markedly increasing the student population there. An UNRWA proposal to provide in-service training for 12,000 teaching staff in West Bank and Gaza Strip public schools was withdrawn after the Palestinian Authority undertook its own initiative in that regard. A joint study with the Palestinian Authority identified areas for improvement in vocational and technical training programmes in the West Bank and Gaza.

In Jordan, 202 UNRWA schools provided basic education to 149,932 pupils, 1,675 fewer than in the preceding year. The decrease was attributed to the transfer of refugee pupils to new government schools opened in or near refugee camps at the beginning of the academic year, which offered smaller class sizes, superior facilities and a five-day school week. By contrast, severely overcrowded UNRWA schools operated on a six-day week, with 93 per cent running on a double shift, effectively depriving pupils of extracurricular activities. A quarter of UNRWA schools were still using rented premises, usually with inadequate classroom space, laboratories, libraries and playgrounds. In 1995, UNRWA constructed a 20-classroom girls' school in Baqa'a camp and work progressed on six other schools, the last to be replaced by UNRWA in Jordan. All new schools were being provided with fully equipped computer laboratories. Special classes for children with learning difficulties were established in schools at the Marka and Souf camps. Some 600 disabled and slow learners were integrated into the regular education programme after attending remedial classes. In-service training was given to 365 UNRWA teachers, and pre-service teacher training was also provided. UNRWA's Amman and Wadi Seer training centres offered places to 1,224 students in trades and semi-professional courses. UNRWA awarded scholarships to 231 Palestine refugee students, including 89 women, to universities in Jordan.

The improved security situation in Lebanon allowed the 75 UNRWA schools there to operate without disruption, with no days lost owing to strikes and disturbances. A total of 35,207 pupils were enrolled in UNRWA elementary, preparatory and secondary schools, 1,560 pupils more than the preceding year. That unusually high increase was attributed to transfers from tuition-based private schools. The Siblin Training Centre provided vocational and technical instruction to 624 trainees. UNRWA in 1995 awarded 54 university scholarships to Palestine refugees in Lebanon.

Some 60,000 students were enrolled in 108 UNRWA elementary and preparatory schools in the Syrian Arab Republic in the 1994-1995 school year, a decrease of 520 pupils from the preceding year. Overcrowding remained a serious problem, with 98 per cent of elementary classes and 91 per cent of preparatory classes operating on a double-shift basis. UNRWA's Damascus Training Centre offered vocational courses and semi-professional courses to 767 trainees. The Agency provided university scholarships to 208 Palestine refugee students, including 74 women, to study at Syrian universities.

In the West Bank, 100 UNRWA schools served 44,573 pupils, about 2,000 more than during the preceding school year. The return of families to the West Bank after the establishment of the Palestinian Authority was considered the principal reason for the increase.

UNRWA reported that schools within the municipal boundary of Jerusalem were adversely affected by movement restrictions imposed in February 1994 on Palestinians holding West Bank identity cards. As a result, many West Bank residents employed as teachers or education staff at Jerusalem-area schools could not reach their place of work. To help compensate for lost teaching time and improve achievement levels, UNRWA offered remedial classes, particularly in core subjects such as reading, writing, mathematics and English. Three UNRWA training centres in the West Bank provided 1,248 vocational and technical training places. At the Ramallah Women's Training Centre, courses were offered in hairdressing, clothing production, business administration, ceramics production, social work and computer studies, as well as programmes to prepare for jobs as laboratory technicians, assistant pharmacists, physiotherapy assistants and executive secretaries. The Ramallah Men's Training Centre provided instruction in business administration, computer science, financial management and marketing. The Kalandia Training Centre offered training in the building, electrical and mechanical trades and post-secondary technical courses for construction technicians and land surveyors. A new workshop was constructed for a diesel engine and heavy equipment mechanics course. UNRWA awarded university scholarships to 150 West Bank students, including 88 women, to attend universities in the region.

In the Gaza Strip, UNRWA's 159 elementary and preparatory schools served 118,406 pupils, some 8,000 more than the preceding year. That sizeable increase was due to returning refugee families. To accommodate the increase, the Agency hired 276 extra teachers on one-year contracts.

UNRWA schools in the Gaza Strip continued to be overcrowded, with classes averaging 47.2 pupils, the highest classroom occupancy rate in UNRWA's five fields of operation. Many schools were still housed in cement-brick buildings dating from the 1950s and 1960s, originally built as temporary structures. Three schools operated on a triple-shift basis after some premises were declared unsafe.

Donor countries provided $27.7 million through PIP for expanding and upgrading educational infrastructure and other projects in Gaza. During the reporting period, construction was completed on 7 new school buildings and 2 specialized rooms; work was under way on an additional 21 schools and 86 more classrooms. At the Gaza training centre, 629 men and 25 women were enrolled in 16 two-year vocational and semi-professional courses. In response to growing demand for skilled labour in the local construction sector, the centre offered 12-week vocational courses in aluminium fabrication, concrete forming and plumbing. UNRWA awarded university scholarships to 220 Palestine refugee students from Gaza, including 102 women.

For the first time in more than 15 years, UNRWA teachers participated in administering secondary (tawjihi) examinations, in cooperation with colleagues from the Palestinian Authority.

Health

The Agency's network of 123 health centres or points provided a full range of preventive, curative, support and community health services, including paediatrics, obstetrics and gynecology, cardiology and ophthalmology. Special care was available for treatment of chest diseases and ear, nose and throat illnesses, as well as for the management of diabetes mellitus and hypertension. Maternal and child health programmes and family-planning services were available. Seventy-six centres offered comprehensive dental care; 84 had medical laboratories.

Some 6.5 million patient visits a year were handled by the Agency, with a relatively high average of 94 consultations per doctor per day and a continuing heavy workload for dental consultations and other support services. The UNRWA health programme employed 3,296 professional and support staff, the majority locally recruited Palestinians. UNRWA continued to cooperate with WHO, which provided staff, including the Director of Health.

In spring 1995, UNRWA participated in a national immunization campaign against poliomyelitis throughout its areas of operations, implemented according to a WHO regional strategy in coordination with UNICEF and local health authorities. In all, 200,000 refugee children received oral polio vaccines. UNRWA also developed a special curriculum on HIV/AIDS prevention for schools in coordination with WHO, and it developed a youth-centred programme against tobacco use.

More than 205,000 children under three years of age, 73,000 pregnant women and 31,000 family-planning acceptors received health care at UNRWA mother and child health and family-planning clinics. Supplementary nutritional assistance was provided to 74,000 pregnant and nursing women and 121,000 children under the age of two; immunization and growth monitoring were provided to children under the age of three. An expanded maternal health and family-planning programme in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, under joint implementation since 1992 by UNRWA and UNFPA, was deemed successful upon completion of its implementation.

The Agency participated in a tripartite mission in March 1995 to assess the needs of the Palestinian health authorities. As a result, a strategic plan and operational framework for a sustainable women's health programme, including reproductive health and family planning, was developed.

To ensure acceptable environmental health standards within refugee communities, UNRWA provided services related to sewage disposal, storm water run-off, safe drinking water, refuse disposal, insect control and rodent infestation. Feasibility studies and preliminary designs for improving sewerage, drainage and solid-waste management were completed for 11 camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. UNRWA undertook efforts to strengthen primary health-care facilities and sought more economical options for provision of essential hospital care.

In preparing for an eventual handover of UNRWA's health-care system to the Palestinian Authority, the Agency focused on maintaining and upgrading infrastructure at the primary level, coordinating and harmonizing health policies and services with those of the Palestinian Authority, and gradually re-deploying resources to Palestinian Authority hospitals. Significant progress was achieved during the reporting year in the construction of Gaza General Hospital and other health facilities which would become part of the Palestinian health infrastructure.

Relief and social services

UNRWA's relief and social services programme continued to provide direct relief to those refugees unable to meet their own life-sustaining needs. Under the UNRWA special hardship programme, more than 181,000 refugees were receiving basic bimonthly food rations, shelter rehabilitation, subsidized medical care, preferential access to vocational training and assistance in establishing income-generating projects. Many other families were reported as facing extreme socio-economic difficulties but were ineligible for the programme, since their problem stemmed not from the absence of an employable male adult, but from the lack of employment opportunities, especially in the Gaza Strip and Lebanon. Moreover, for the first time in several years there was marked growth in demand for welfare assistance from refugees in Jordan. Cash assistance was provided on an ad hoc basis to special hardship families facing extreme difficulty.

More than 4,000 shelters were upgraded—mostly in the West Bank and Gaza Strip—as part of UNRWA's multimillion dollar programme to rehabilitate substandard refugee housing. The funds were provided under PIP, which as at 30 June 1995 had received a total of $31.2 million for that purpose. The Agency continued to cooperate with the Palestinian Authority in studying how to harmonize direct relief assistance programmes, and they were coordinating other issues such as shelter rehabilitation, land use and housing for returnees.

In Lebanon, UNRWA's main concern was the rehousing of displaced refugees evicted from properties where they had been illegally squatting. Under the Palestinian Women's Initiative Fund, four new projects provided for functional literacy classes in Lebanon, training in maintenance and repair of sewing and knitting machines in Gaza, a community-run kindergarten at a women's programme centre in the West Bank, and a food production unit in a refugee camp in Jordan. A fund-raising campaign was launched in February for phase two of the Fund, which supported projects aimed at self-reliance for women and women's institutions.

Activities within UNRWA community centres included promotion of legal literacy, civic education and early childhood development through women's programme centres; linking community rehabilitation programmes with mainstream UNRWA services, especially the integration of disabled children into the regular school education system; and participation in such multidisciplinary campaigns as the Agency's HIV/AIDS awareness campaign. UNRWA refugee community centres provided training, technical assistance and partial financial support to 17,000 persons in 71 women's programme centres and 29 community rehabilitation centres in the five fields of operation, as well as 27 youth activity centres in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Increasing attention was given to income-generation initiatives. UNRWA reported that as a result of the Persian Gulf War, remittances from expatriate workers to their families had dwindled, eroding household purchasing power and causing local economies to stagnate. Simultaneously, growing domestic pressure on Governments of the region had significantly reduced employment opportunities for refugees, particularly in Lebanon, the West Bank and Gaza Strip. UNRWA's revolving loan fund for small businesses, initiated in 1991, created employment for Palestine refugees by making finance capital available at reasonable interest rates to be used to expand existing enterprises or establish new ones. The programme aimed to support small-scale entrepreneurs in the formal and informal sectors of the economy producing goods for sale locally and abroad. Often ineligible for formal banking credit, most entrepreneurs raised investment capital from individual and family savings. Since 1991, the revolving loan fund had made loans to more than 800 small-scale enterprises and had acquired a total capital base of $7.2 million. In many cases, enterprises were owned and managed by skilled labourers who had previously been unemployed. The leading field-based income-generation programme was in Gaza, which utilized more capital than the other three fields served by UNRWA combined. Its capital base was more than $4 million; the overall loan recovery rate was 98 per cent.

In Gaza, UNRWA also operated a solidarity-group lending programme, providing credit to women working in micro-enterprises and as street vendors. Some 400 loans averaging $400 were provided to individual women organized in 74 solidarity groups.

UNRWA's poverty alleviation programme was established in 1993 for special hardship cases of working age. While the revolving loan fund was intended to generate employment opportunities within the refugee community at large, the poverty elimination programme specifically sought to raise the income of the neediest families so they could be removed from the special hardship rolls. The programme included skill-training, apprenticeships and access to credit. Low-interest loans averaging $3,000 were provided on an individual, family or group-guaranteed basis for the establishment of self-support projects. To assist loan applicants, courses on starting a business were offered in the West Bank, Gaza Strip and Jordan. Special attention was devoted to the needs of women income-earners and to the development of sustainable income-generating enterprises to support affiliated community organizations.

In the wake of the restrictions on movement in the Gaza Strip in early 1995, UNRWA reported serious hardship to many families, and distributed flour rations to 26,000 families in the West Bank and 14,000 families in the Gaza Strip. In Lebanon, some basic commodities and cash assistance were given to refugee families with emergency needs.

Future of UNRWA

At an informal meeting with major donor and host Governments, held in Amman, Jordan, in March 1995, UNRWA proposed a five-year financial and planning horizon, coinciding with the interim period set out in the Declaration of Principles, to establish for donors, host countries and the Palestinian Authority a financial framework for UNRWA services during the interim period. A clear consensus arose that UNRWA services would continue to be required until a political solution to the refugee problem was found. Participants considered it premature to place a time limit on UNRWA's existence, as the period for which its services would be required could not be predicted until there was such an agreed solution. Participants concurred that the eventual transfer of UNRWA operations to the Palestinian Authority should be made when political, economic and financial conditions so permitted, and at the Authority's request. Until then, UNRWA should focus on harmonization of services and coordination and cooperation with other agencies operating in the field. (See also "UNRWA financing" below.)

Move to Gaza

UNRWA took steps to relocate its Vienna headquarters to Gaza, in accordance with a decision of the Secretary-General⁽²²⁾ endorsed by the General Assembly in December 1994.⁽²³⁾ UNRWA developed a budget and plan for the move, including the design of a new headquarters building in Gaza town. The Agency estimated the move would cost $13.5 million, to be funded through special voluntary contributions. By mid-1995, over $4 million in pledges or contributions having been received, construction of the new headquarters was begun.

General Assembly resolutions related to Palestine refugees

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted seven resolutions relating to Palestine refugees: assistance to Palestine refugees (50/28 A); financing of UNRWA (50/28 B); displaced persons (50/28 C); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (50/28 D); operations of UNRWA (50/28 E); revenues from Palestinian refugee properties (50/28 F); and the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees (50/28 G).

By an 8 June note,⁽²⁴⁾ Israel stated that its position on the resolutions on Palestine refugees had been set forth in successive annual replies, the latest of which was included in a 1994 report by the Secretary-General.⁽²⁵⁾ Israel also said that while the number of resolutions regarding UNRWA had been reduced in the previous year from 10 to 7, their content remained occupied with political issues irrelevant to the Agency's work. While Israel believed that UNRWA could play an important role in promoting the social and economic advancement foreseen in agreements between Israel and PLO, and accordingly looked forward to continuing cooperation with UNRWA, it considered it essential that the Assembly consolidate the UNRWA resolutions into one directly related to the Agency's humanitarian tasks.

State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, and the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area signed at Cairo on 4 May 1994 and the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington on 28 September 1995,

On 6 December 1995, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/28 A.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/35 A of 9 December 1994 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995,

Welcoming the signature by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements in Washington on 13 September 1993,

Welcoming also the signature by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization of the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in Washington on 28 September 1995,

Commending the work of the Multilateral Working Group on Refugees of the Middle East peace process,

1. Notes with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees, as provided for in paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III), has not yet been effected and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and to private organizations for their valuable work in assisting refugees;

3. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the General Assembly as appropriate, but not later than 1 September 1996;

4. Notes the significant success of the peace implementation programme of the Agency since the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements;

5. Urges all Member States to extend and expedite aid and assistance with a view to the economic and social development of the Palestinian people and the occupied territories;

6. Also notes the progress achieved to date in the transfer of the Agency's headquarters to its area of operations, and requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to present to the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East an updated plan for the transfer;

7. Reiterates its concern about the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

8. Notes with profound concern that the structural deficit problem confronting the Agency portends an almost certain decline in the living conditions of Palestine refugees and therefore has possible consequences for the peace process;

9. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, including the costs of moving the headquarters to Gaza, and urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: United States.

In the Committee, Spain, on behalf of EU, said that members voted for the text as UNRWA was in a prominent position to complement and consolidate the peace process. Unfortunately, support for the renewal of UNRWA's mandate had not been unanimous and therefore EU had not been able to submit the draft resolution as in previous years.

The United States, saying that it would continue to support important educational, health, social and humanitarian programmes of UNRWA, was disappointed that efforts to reach a consensus on the renewal of the Agency mandate had not been successful. Sponsors had chosen to introduce the text in a manner that had forced the United States to abstain. UNRWA's mission should not be tied to a political agenda.

Israel said it had voted against the text, as it had addressed political issues which had nothing to do with UNRWA and were contrary to the spirit of the agreements between Israel and Palestinians. However, it was important for UNRWA to continue providing humanitarian assistance to Palestine refugees and Israel supported the proposed extension of the Agency's mandate.

Displaced persons

The Secretary-General reported⁽²⁴⁾ on 20 September on compliance with a 1994 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁶⁾ calling for the accelerated return of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967.

He said that since the Agency was not involved in arrangements for either refugees or displaced persons not registered with it, UNRWA information was based on requests by returning registered refugees for transfer of their entitlements for services to their areas of return. The Agency was unable to estimate the total number of displaced inhabitants who had returned, as it kept records only of registered refugees, which might be incomplete, particularly with regard to the location of such refugees. Displaced refugees known by UNRWA to have returned to the West Bank and the Gaza Strip since June 1967 numbered about 14,170. Between 1 July 1994 and 30 June 1995, 244 registered refugees had returned to the West Bank, and 726 to the Gaza Strip. Some of the refugees might not have been displaced in 1967, but might be family members of a displaced registered refugee whom they either had accompanied on return or joined later.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/28 C.

Persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2341 B(XXI) of 19 December 1967 and all subsequent related resolutions,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 237(1967) of 14 June 1967 and 259(1968) of 27 September 1968,

Taking note also of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995,

Concerned about the continuing human suffering resulting from the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities,

Taking note of the relevant provisions of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, signed in Washington on 13 September 1993 by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, with regard to the modalities for the admission of persons displaced in 1967,

1. Reaffirms the right of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Expresses the hope for an accelerated return of displaced persons through the mechanism agreed upon by the parties in article XII of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements;

3. Endorses, in the meanwhile, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis, and as a temporary measure, to persons in the area who are currently displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

4. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously to the Agency and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned for the above purposes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly before its fifty-first session on the progress made with regard to the implementation of the present resolution.

Education, training and scholarships

In September, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁷⁾ on responses to the General Assembly's 1994 appeal⁽²⁸⁾ to augment special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

In the 1994/95 academic year, Japan offered 10 vocational fellowships for study in that country to Palestine refugees in UNRWA's employ. Under a five-year grant of $400,000 made by Japan in 1992, 205 Palestinian students were participating in the UNRWA university programme in 1994/95. Contributions from Switzerland in 1994 and 1995 totalling nearly $500,000 allowed some 250 Palestinians to pursue university studies. UNRWA and the United World Colleges provided four scholarships in 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/28 D.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for Palestine refugees

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

In keeping with a General Assembly request of 1994,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁰⁾ in October 1995 on the proposal to establish a university for Palestine refugees at Jerusalem. First considered by the Assembly in 1980,⁽³¹⁾ it had been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General.

To assist in the preparation of a feasibility study and at the Secretary-General's request, the Rector of the United Nations University asked Dr. Mihaly Simai to visit the area and meet with competent Israeli officials. By a note verbale of 11 September, the Secretary-General requested Israel to facilitate the expert's visit.

Israel replied on 18 September that its position remained unchanged. It had voted consistently against resolutions on the proposed university, whose sponsors, it said, sought to exploit higher education for political purposes extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Accordingly, Israel was of the opinion that the proposed visit would serve no useful purpose.

The Secretary-General reported that it had not been possible to complete the feasibility study as planned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/28 G.

University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 G of 16 December 1981, 37/120 C of 16 December 1982, 38/83 K of 15 December 1983, 39/99 K of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D and K of 16 December 1985, 41/69 K of 3 December 1986, 42/69 K of 2 December 1987, 43/57 J of 6 December 1988, 44/47 J of 8 December 1989, 45/73 J of 11 December 1990, 46/46 J of 9 December 1991, 47/69 J of 14 December 1992, 48/40 I of 10 December 1993 and 49/35 G of 9 December 1994,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995,

1. Emphasizes the need for strengthening the educational system in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds", in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances that it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds";

Property rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General in September 1995 reported⁽³³⁾ on steps taken to protect and administer Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners. He indicated that he had transmitted the resolution to Israel and to all other Member States, requesting information on any steps taken or envisaged with regard to its implementation.

In an 8 June reply, reproduced in the report, Israel stated its view that while the number of resolutions regarding UNRWA had been reduced from 10 to 7, their content remained occupied with political issues irrelevant to the Agency's work. While it believed that UNRWA could play an important role in promoting the social and economic advancement foreseen in agreements between Israel and PLO, and accordingly looked forward to continuing cooperation with UNRWA, Israel considered it essential that the Assembly consolidate its resolutions into one directly related to UNRWA's humanitarian tasks.

In 1995, UNRWA reported that no progress had been made with regard to various claims against Governments.

Report of the Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its forty-ninth report, covering the period from 1 September 1994 to 31 August 1995,⁽³⁴⁾ stated that it had nothing new to report since the submission of its October 1994 report.⁽³⁵⁾

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/28 F.

Revenues derived from Palestine refugees' properties

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981 and all its subsequent resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General in pursuance of resolution 49/35 F of 9 December 1994,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine covering the period from 1 September 1994 to 31 August 1995,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her private property,

Considering that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived therefrom, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity,

Recalling in particular its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the Conciliation Commission, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the Conciliation Commission in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for the receipt of income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners;

2. Calls once more upon Israel to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Calls upon the Governments of all the other Member States concerned to provide the Secretary-General with any pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel which would assist the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Explaining its abstention, Canada said the text might prejudice the outcome of the multilateral negotiations under way. The Russian Federation felt that the resolution contained provisions that went beyond UNRWA's strictly humanitarian mandate.

UNRWA financing

Voluntary contributions remained the principal means of financing UNRWA's operations, accounting for 97 per cent of Agency funding. The remaining 3 per cent represented the core of UNRWA's international staff costs—92 international posts during the period from 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995, funded by the United Nations. Most contributions were received in cash, although 12.5 per cent of UNRWA's total funding was received in kind, usually in the form of food for distribution to needy refugees.

The Commissioner-General reported⁽²⁰⁾ that UNRWA's ability to provide expanded services was constrained by financial shortfalls for the third consecutive year. The inability of some donors to increase their contributions commensurate with the Agency's annual budget growth rate of 5 per cent—needed to offset natural population growth and inflation—was a matter of concern.

At the end of the 1994-1995 budget biennium, UNRWA recorded a deficit of $8.4 million in its General Fund budget, which covered its core programmes. In December 1994, the Agency had a deficit of $6 million, which had reduced working capital from $22.6 million at the beginning of 1994 to $16.6 million. By June 1995, working capital had again been reduced, standing at $8.2 million, and the 1995 deficit was projected at $16 million—which, if realized, would virtually eliminate its working capital. An accumulated deficit of $17.8 million in the fund for Extraordinary Measures in Lebanon and the Occupied Territory (EMLOT) could, however, be accommodated only by drawing on the working capital.

Furthermore, the estimated shortfall did not include the cost of lifting the remaining austerity measures, which would require an additional $11.2 million. The lack of working capital would mean reduced services, not merely a freeze on growth. The Agency's budget had to expand over time even to maintain current levels of services. Austerity measures included a general salary freeze and cuts in the budget for additional teacher posts. Funding requirements for 1996 would be $342.3 million, including $2.25 million for EMLOT, as well as the value of needed in-kind donations.

In response to changing political circumstances and the prospect of an eventual handover of Agency services, a five-year financial and policy planning framework was adopted to establish the Agency's minimum financial requirements for the period 1995-1999. The framework provided for an unavoidable 5 per cent annual increase. In addition, a certain sum was to be set aside each year towards payment of an estimated $127 million in termination indemnities accruing to area staff upon dissolution of the Agency. Project funding was not covered by the framework. The five-year planning horizon had been endorsed by the major donor and host Governments at an informal meeting in Amman in March (see "Future of UNRWA" above). The 1996-1997 biennial budget was prepared in accordance with those basic assumptions. The move of UNRWA's Vienna headquarters to the area of operations—primarily the Gaza Strip with some units in Amman—was budgeted at $13.5 million. In approving relocation of the headquarters, major donors stipulated that the move should not be financed from the regular budget. Consequently, UNRWA took steps to raise the required funds directly from donors.

Working Group on financing. The Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA held two meetings in 1995, on 14 September and 13 October. In its 19 October report to the General Assembly,⁽³⁶⁾ the Working Group noted that by the end of 1994, UNRWA's recorded financial balance for the year showed expenditures of $265.8 million on regular programmes, against income from contributions of $298.2 million, leaving a book surplus of $32.4 million. Included in that book surplus, however, were late contributions of $38.4 million, received and recorded in 1994 but intended for the 1993 regular programme. If applied to the 1994 accounts, that amount would account for the resulting deficit of $6 million and the reduction in working capital to $16.6 million (see above). In addition, some $13.4 million had been spent on EMLOT activities in 1994, against a total income of $7.9 million, leaving a deficit of $5.5 million which had to be funded from working capital. The Agency also operated three extrabudgetary project funds in 1994: the Expanded Programme of Assistance (EPA), the European Gaza Hospital fund and PIP. EPA, which had become redundant with the establishment of PIP, was being phased out as projects were completed.

Having begun 1995 with such a deficit, the Agency's financial prospects for the year were not favourable, the Working Group stated. The growth of contributions was not keeping pace with the rising number of UNRWA beneficiaries and cost increases due to inflation. Unexpected emergency needs required additional funds. Austerity measures were having a negative impact on the quality of UNRWA services. By the last quarter of 1995, UNRWA's estimated deficit was $4 million, but if one included the $12 million reserve for salary increases for 21,000 area staff which was frozen as a result of the deficit, that figure would be $16 million.

In meetings with major donors and other concerned government representatives, the Commissioner-General had once again appealed for help in finding ways to alleviate the structural deficit problem. While some additional and special contributions were received by the Agency for its regular budget during the year, they fell short of the amounts required to address the Agency's current requirements and projected future needs, and the situation remained serious.

The Working Group noted that the past year had continued to see dramatic political developments in UNRWA's area of operations. Donors had supported the ongoing peace process by devoting unprecedented resources to projects benefiting Palestinians, particularly in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. PIP had met with a particularly generous response from donors. The budgets for PIP projects included programme support costs, which alleviated some of the burden on UNRWA's own resources and infrastructure. Nevertheless, some of the additional tasks which the Agency was asked to carry out would inevitably have financial implications. The prospect of eventually phasing out UNRWA, which would become more apparent as the political process unfolded, also raised the issue of termination indemnities that would have to be paid to the area staff once the Agency began to cease operations and handed over its functions to other authorities; donors had agreed that UNRWA should begin to include a provision for those termination indemnities in its budget, beginning with $25.4 million in the 1996-1997 biennium. The planned relocation of UNRWA's headquarters also had potential financial implications, as it could not be financed out of the regular budget. However, contributions to the special fund established for that purpose had fallen considerably short of the budget for the move arrived at in consultation between UNRWA and the United Nations Secretariat. While proceeding with the first phases of the move as funds became available, the Commissioner-General had appealed to donors to help make up that shortfall.

The Working Group expressed concern that UNRWA had been able to carry out its regular activities once again only by drawing on its working capital reserves in 1994 and expected again to sustain a budget deficit in 1995. The Group voiced special concern about the negative cumulative effect of austerity measures, but commended the Commissioner-General for his fund-raising efforts, particularly those for PIP, which had succeeded in attracting financial support from some donors surpassing their previous contributions. The Working Group shared the Commissioner-General's concern that UNRWA's core activities—education, health care, and relief and social services—were increasingly threatened by chronic deficits, and stressed that it would be unfortunate if the substantial social and economic benefits promised by programmes such as PIP were undermined by the inability of the international community to provide the resources needed to preserve those regular services. The Group urged Governments to continue contributing generously and consider additional contributions in support of both emergency-related and special programmes, as well as current and future phases of PIP, the operating costs of the European Gaza Hospital and the special fund for the relocation of UNRWA's headquarters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/28 B.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 49/35 B of 9 December 1994 and the previous resolutions on this question,

Peace-keeping operations

UN peace-keeping operations were born in the Middle East, with the establishment in May 1948 of the Organization's first and oldest operation—the UN Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), originally established to monitor the cease-fire called for by the Security Council in May 1948 in newly partitioned Palestine. Over the course of nearly four decades, its unarmed military observers have fulfilled changing mandates—from supervising the original four armistice agreements between Israel and its Arab neighbors—Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and Syria—to observing and monitoring other cease-fires, as well as other tasks. In the wake of regional wars in 1956, 1967 and 1973, its functions have been adapted to changing circumstances. UNTSO headquarters are located at Government House in Jerusalem.

In 1995, UNTSO personnel worked with the two remaining UN peace-keeping forces in the Middle East—its Observer Group Golan (OGG) with the UN Disengagement Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights, and Observer Group Lebanon (OGL) with the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL). UNTSO observers in 1995 also maintained a presence in the Sinai peninsula—Observer Group Egypt (OGE), with headquarters in Ismailia. In addition, UNTSO in 1995 had offices in Amman, Beirut and Gaza. The Amman office was closed in July following the Israeli-Jordanian peace agreement of October 1994.

Lebanon

A report⁽¹⁾ by the Secretary-General described the situation at the end of 1995 as tense and volatile, with Israel continuing to maintain its occupation of parts of south Lebanon. The Israeli Defence Forces (IDF) and their local Lebanese auxiliary, the so-called de facto forces (DFF), continued to be targets of attacks in that area by groups proclaiming their resistance to the occupation. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), established in 1978⁽²⁾ to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restore international peace and security, and assist the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area, maintained its efforts in 1995 to limit the conflict and to protect the inhabitants from the fighting. The Secretary-General stated that the Force, through a network of checkpoints and observation posts and active patrolling, was doing its best to prevent its area of operations from being used for hostile activities. It also was deployed as necessary to provide a measure of protection to the villages and to farmers working in the fields. Its mandate, although repeatedly reaffirmed over the years, nevertheless remained unfulfilled.

In notes issued on 17 January⁽³⁾ and on 10 July,⁽⁴⁾ both requesting the extension of the mandate of UNIFIL (see below), Lebanon declared that national reconstruction and rehabilitation were proceeding (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). Efforts to rebuild the new commercial centre in downtown Beirut and to modernize the nation's infrastructure were ongoing, with priority given to such basic services as electricity, telecommunications, transportation, waterworks, schools and hospitals. Despite those positive developments and coordinated efforts by UNIFIL and the Lebanese authorities to deploy the Lebanese army throughout the southern part of the country, Lebanon said that Israel's occupation and its continued aggression against Lebanon and its citizens remained the major obstacle to national recovery. Constant shelling of villages and towns in the south and aerial bombardments of different parts of the country continued to result in deaths and injuries of many civilians and the destruction of property. Furthermore, Lebanon said, Israel still refused to allow ICRC to visit hundreds of Lebanese detainees held for years in Israeli jails and detention camps in Al-Khiam and Marjayoun, in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention.

In view of Israel's continued aggressions, Lebanon went on, and the threat to the peace process, implementation of resolution 425(1978) remained the only way to stop the violence. By taking long-overdue measures towards that end, the Security Council could play a positive role in securing peace for the region and enabling the Lebanese Government to extend its authority up to its internationally recognized boundaries and to re-establish law and order throughout the entire south of the country.

On 1 March, Lebanon reported⁽⁵⁾ that an Israeli naval blockade had spread to all southern Lebanese port cities. In addition, Israeli naval patrols were preventing Lebanese fishermen from fishing in Lebanese territorial waters. Daily artillery shelling and air raids had resulted in numerous civilian casualties and considerable material damage. Lebanon requested⁽⁶⁾ that the Security Council take all necessary action to bring about the lifting of the illegal blockade, cessation of bombarding civilians, and respect by Israel of Lebanon's sovereignty, territorial integrity and territorial waters, in accordance with Council resolutions 425(1978),⁽²⁾ 426(1978)⁽⁷⁾ and 509(1982).⁽⁸⁾ Throughout the year, Lebanon continued to report Israeli attacks and other operations against southern Lebanon and the Bekaa.

In a 5 July letter,⁽⁹⁾ the Foreign Minister of Lebanon called for the release of 225 Lebanese detainees held in Israeli detention camps since 1984, in defiance of resolution 425(1978), against whom, he said, no legal charge had been brought while they continued to be subjected to inhumane treatment and torture. He specifically called for the closure of the Al-Khiam camp.

Israel, in an 18 January letter,⁽¹⁰⁾ had confirmed its position on the situation in southern Lebanon, as previously outlined in August 1994,⁽¹¹⁾ when it had stated that its measures there had to be viewed in the light of its right to self-defence and were intended solely to prevent acts of terror against the Israeli population. Terrorist organizations such as Hezbollah and others were openly intent on undermining the peace process; they functioned with impunity in Lebanon where they were free to plan and carry out their attacks, Israel declared.

By a 7 March resolution,⁽¹²⁾ the Commission on Human Rights deplored the continued Israeli violation of human rights in the occupied zone of southern Lebanon and the western Bekaa, demonstrated in particular by the kidnapping and arbitrary detention of civilians, the destruction of their dwellings, confiscation of their property, expulsion from their land, and the bombing of villages and civilian areas. It called on Israel immediately to end such practices, which were manifested recently by an escalation of air raids and the use of prohibited weapons such as fragmentation bombs, and to release immediately all kidnapped and detained Lebanese.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/278, approved the Commission's request that the Secretary-General bring its resolution to Israel's attention and invite Israel to provide information concerning the extent of its implementation.

UNIFIL

The Security Council in 1995 twice extended the mandate of UNIFIL, in January and July, each time for a six-month period.

Established by the Council in March 1978⁽²⁾ following Israel's invasion of Lebanon,⁽¹³⁾ UNIFIL originally was entrusted with confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restoring international peace and security, and assisting the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. A second Israeli invasion in June 1982⁽¹⁴⁾ radically altered the situation in which UNIFIL had to function. Shortly thereafter, the Council authorized the Force to carry out, in addition to its original mandate, the interim tasks of providing protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population, while maintaining its positions in its area of deployment.⁽¹⁵⁾ During 1995, UNIFIL continued to carry out its mandated tasks.

The Force maintained close contact and cooperated with the Lebanese authorities on matters of mutual concern. Those authorities provided valuable assistance in connection with the rotation of troops and the increasing volume of logistic activities in Beirut. The Lebanese army was particularly helpful in defusing confrontations with armed elements. UNIFIL also continued to cooperate with the Lebanese gendarmerie on matters pertaining to the maintenance of law and order.

In January 1995, UNIFIL's military personnel numbered 5,001. They were provided by nine countries: Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, Norway and Poland. Civilian support was provided by a staff of 521, of whom 136 were recruited internationally and 385 locally. By July, at the beginning of the second 1995 mandate period, troop strength had decreased slightly, to 4,967, and civilian staff numbers had changed to 524, 159 and 365, respectively.

Major-General Trond Furuhoide of Norway ended his tour of duty as Force Commander on 22 February and was succeeded on 1 April by Major-General Stanislaw F. Wozniak of Poland.

UNIFIL was assisted by 59 military observers of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) organized as Observer Group Lebanon, under the operational control of the UNIFIL Commander. UNTSO observers manned five observation posts along the Lebanese side of the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line and operated five mobile teams in the part of the area of operation controlled by Israel (ICA, Israeli-controlled area).

Activities

Report of the Secretary-General (January). In a 23 January report⁽¹⁶⁾ on developments from 21 July 1994 to 20 January 1995 in the UNIFIL area of operation, the Secretary-General stated that Israel continued to control an area, manned by IDF and DFF, whose boundaries were not clearly defined but determined by the forward positions of those forces. ICA included territory adjacent to the armistice demarcation line, parts of the Fijian, Finnish, Ghanaian, Irish and Nepalese battalion sectors, and the entire Norwegian battalion sector, as well as sizeable areas to the north of the UNIFIL area. Within those areas, IDF/DFF manned 69 military positions. Within ICA, Israel maintained a civil administration and a security service. Movement between ICA and the rest of Lebanon was strictly controlled; crossings were closed frequently. ICA remained economically dependent on Israel. An estimated 3,000 jobs in Israel were held by Lebanese from ICA; access to those jobs was controlled by DFF and the security services. There were continued reports of forced recruitment to DFF, including that of persons under the age of 18, the Secretary-General reported.

During the period under review, UNIFIL observers reported 87 operations against IDF/DFF by armed elements who had proclaimed their resistance against Israeli occupation. Numerous attacks took place against IDF/DFF positions north of the Litani River. The armed elements employed roadside bombs, rockets, mortars, rocket-propelled grenades and anti-tank missiles. IDF/DFF continued their attacks and retaliatory firing against armed elements. UNIFIL recorded more than 16,000 artillery, mortar and tank rounds fired by IDF/DFF, compared to 10,500 during the previous six months.

In some cases, IDF/DFF fire was directed at villages, causing damage and casualties. In two incidents, armed elements reportedly responded by firing rockets into northern Israel. On 4 October, an Israeli aircraft bombed a village near the town of Nabatiyeh, killing and injuring several civilians; the bombing, which Israeli authorities said was a mistake, was followed by the firing of several rockets into northern Israel, injuring three civilians. On 20 October, IDF/DFF artillery and tank fire killed seven civilians and wounded six others in villages near Nabatiyeh, to the north of the UNIFIL area of deployment. The shelling was strongly protested to Israeli authorities. Several rockets were fired into northern Israel in response to that shelling.

During the period under review, there were 197 instances of firing by IDF/DFF at or close to UNIFIL positions and personnel; all such firings were routinely protested to the Israeli authorities.

UNIFIL continued to oppose attempts by armed elements to use its area for hostile purposes. At times, that led to friction at UNIFIL checkpoints, followed by harassment and threats directed at Force members. Such cases were generally resolved through negotiations. There were 17 instances of firing at or close to UNIFIL positions by Lebanese armed elements; they were protested through the Lebanese army. On 22 September, three Fijian soldiers were wounded and their vehicle seriously damaged by a roadside bomb explosion. In a similar incident on 7 November, south of the village of Al Hinniyah in the Nepalese sector, two Polish soldiers were lightly wounded and their vehicle seriously damaged.

As in the past, UNIFIL detonated mines, roadside bombs and unexploded remnants of war and dismantled ordnance of various types in the area of deployment; a total of 412 controlled explosions were carried out.

Within available resources, UNIFIL continued to extend humanitarian assistance to the civilian population in its area, in the form of medical supplies, water, clothes, blankets, food, fuel and electricity. Engineering work was executed and repairs were made to buildings damaged by firing. Force personnel escorted farmers to their fields within range of IDF/DFF positions. Troop-contributing Governments made available resources for water projects, equipment or services for schools, and supplies for social services and needy people. UNIFIL medical centres and mobile teams provided care for about 2,500 civilian patients per month. Some 500 patients per month were treated under a field dental programme. In those areas, UNIFIL cooperated closely with the Lebanese authorities, UN agencies and programmes operating in Lebanon, ICRC and NGOs.

Also during the period under review, two Ghanaian soldiers died of natural causes. Since UNIFIL's establishment, 202 military members of the Force had died, 76 as a result of firing or mine or bomb explosions, 82 in accidents and 44 from other causes. A total of 312 were wounded by firing or by mine or bomb explosions.

The Secretary-General concluded that, although there had been no progress towards implementation of the UNIFIL mandate, the Force's contribution to stability in the area and protection for the inhabitants remained important. He therefore recommended that the Security Council accept Lebanon's request and extend UNIFIL's mandate for another six months, until 31 July 1995.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council on 30 January adopted resolution 974(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 23 January 1995, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 16 January 1995 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 July 1995;
2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;
3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;
4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;
5. Endorses the Secretary-General's intention to pursue the possibilities for streamlining and achieving economies in the areas of maintenance and logistic support;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 974(1995)

30 January 1995 Meeting 3495 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/81).

In a 30 January statement⁽¹⁷⁾ complementing the resolution on the mandate extension for UNIFIL, the Council reaffirmed its commitment to Lebanon's full sovereignty, independence, integrity and national unity within its internationally recognized boundaries. In that context, any State should refrain from the threat or use of force against the political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations, the statement said. In extending UNIFIL's mandate, the Council again stressed the urgent need for implementing resolution 425(1978) in all its aspects. It reiterated its full support for the 1989 Taif Agreement and for the continued efforts of the Lebanese Government to consolidate peace, national unity and security in the country while successfully carrying out the reconstruction process. The Council commended the Government for its successful effort to extend its authority in the south of the country in full coordination with UNIFIL.

The Council again expressed concern over the continuing violence in southern Lebanon, regretted the loss of civilian life and urged all parties to exercise restraint. Finally, it expressed appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in that regard, and commended UNIFIL's troops and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances.

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In a 19 July report⁽¹⁸⁾ to the Security Council on developments during the period from 21 January to 20 July 1995, the Secretary-General noted that the level of hostilities in the UNIFIL area had increased and that civilians on both sides had been killed or injured. Exchanges were sparked by indiscriminate fire or the targeting of populated areas by IDF/DFF, followed by the firing of rockets into Israel, for which a group known as the Islamic Resistance claimed responsibility. In some instances, armed elements launched attacks from the vicinity of villages in the UNIFIL area of deployment, drawing retaliatory fire. There had been 51 instances of firing at or close to UNIFIL positions and personnel by armed elements, compared to 17 during the July-to-January reporting period just past. Such firings had been reported to the Lebanese army and, where possible, were protested to the leadership of the groups involved. On 19 March, a Nepalese soldier was seriously injured when an anti-personnel mine exploded at a newly established observation post at Yatar. A similar mine was found at the same location a few days later. There were 208 instances of firing by IDF/DFF at or close to UNIFIL positions and personnel, which were protested to the Israeli authorities.

UNIFIL observers reported on 129 operations against IDF/DFF by armed elements who had proclaimed their resistance against Israel's occupation. There were also numerous reports of attacks against IDF/DFF positions north of the Litani River, mostly carried out by the Islamic Resistance. IDF/DFF continued their attacks and retaliatory firing against armed elements; UNIFIL recorded more than 16,500 artillery, mortar and tank rounds fired by them. IDF also stepped up night-time ambushes and long-range patrolling and increasingly made use of assault helicopters. While air attacks were less frequent than during the previous periods, flights by Israeli military aircraft over Lebanese territory continued. From February on, Israel imposed restrictions on the movement of Lebanese fishermen in southern Lebanese territorial waters, enforcing those restrictions by naval vessels—which, at times, involved firing at fishing boats and temporary detention of fishermen.

In its efforts to detonate mines, roadside bombs and unexploded remnants of war, UNIFIL carried out 105 controlled explosions during the period under review. It also continued to protect and assist the population, helping to execute a school project financed by UNICEF and UNESCO, and assisting UNDP in its South Lebanon Emergency Rehabilitation Programme (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), among many other activities.

On 16 April, Israel deported to Lebanon two Palestinians who had just been released from prison. However, they were denied entry into the country by the Lebanese authorities and were subsequently turned over to UNIFIL. Since 18 April, the two men had been accommodated at UNIFIL headquarters, the report stated, and efforts continued to arrange passage to a country or territory willing to accept them.

Expressing particular concern at the targeting of civilians and the number of those killed or injured, the Secretary-General said he had urged the parties to exercise restraint. He was also conscious of the risk of escalation inherent in the exchanges of hostilities, observing that UNIFIL continued to make every effort to limit the conflict. Although there had been no progress towards implementation of its mandate, the Force's contribution to stability in the area and the protection it afforded the inhabitants remained important. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council accept Lebanon's request and extend the UNIFIL mandate for another six months, until 31 January 1996.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 28 July, the Security Council adopted resolution 1006(1995).

The Security Council,
Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 19 July 1995 and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 10 July 1995 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further period of six months, that is, until 31 January 1996;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Condemns the increase in acts of violence committed in particular against the Force and urges the parties to put an end to them;

6. Concurs with the streamlining of the Force, described in paragraph 11 of the report of the Secretary-General, and stresses that its implementation will not affect the operational capacity of the Force;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 1006(1995)

28 July 1995 Meeting 3558 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/619).

Also on 28 July, complementing the Council's extension of UNIFIL, its President made a statement⁽¹⁹⁾ similar to that made on 30 January (see above).

Financing

Report of the Secretary-General (May). In May 1995, the Secretary-General provided financial information⁽²⁰⁾ on UNIFIL for the period from 1 February 1994 to 31 January 1995, which reflected an overall unencumbered balance of $1,755,000 gross ($16,000 net), due mainly to savings from lower military personnel costs. As at 31 March 1995, outstanding assessments for UNIFIL from its inception in 1978 to 31 January 1995 amounted to $206.6 million. The Secretary-General proposed that the General Assembly credit Member States with the unencumbered net balance of $16,000 against their assessments in respect of any future mandate periods. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a June report,⁽²¹⁾ concurred with the proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

Following consideration of reports by the Secretary-General and ACABQ, the General Assembly on 12 July (decision 49/483) decided that there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, in respect of future mandate periods of UNIFIL as might be approved by the Security Council, their respective shares in the unencumbered balance of $1,755,000 gross ($16,000 net) for the period from 1 February 1994 to 31 January 1995. The Assembly's decision was adopted without vote, after the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, on 23 June, had approved, also without vote, a draft⁽²²⁾ submitted by its Chairman following informal consultations.

Report of the Secretary-General (October). In an 11 October report,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General presented cost estimates of $53,874,000 gross ($52,448,000 net) for the maintenance of UNIFIL from 1 February to 30 June 1996, conforming with the new budget cycle from 1 July to 30 June decided on by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽²⁴⁾ Those cost estimates provided for a phased reduction of contingent personnel from 5,015 to 4,513 by May 1996, as well as for a reduction of 37 civilian staff, down to 143 internationally recruited and 193 locally recruited staff.

Those reductions resulted in a decrease of 4.1 per cent on a monthly basis in gross terms; monthly requirements were estimated at $10,774,800 gross ($10,489,600 net), down from $11,234,500 gross ($10,870,830 net) authorized by the Assembly in December 1994.⁽²⁵⁾

The Secretary-General noted that as at 30 September 1995, a total of $2,575.6 million had been appropriated for UNIFIL from its inception to 31 January 1996. Assessed contributions received for the same period amounted to $2,312.8 million, leaving an outstanding balance of $232 million. As a result of the withholding or delay in payment of assessed contributions, UNIFIL was unable to meet its obligations on a current basis or in full, in particular those due to the troop-contributing countries. However, full reimbursement had been made to them up to the period ending 31 January 1995.

ACABQ⁽²⁶⁾ concurred with the Secretary-General's proposal that the Assembly authorize entering into commitments not to exceed $10,774,800 gross ($10,489,600 net) per month. The Advisory Committee noted that, as at 31 August, $30.7 million was due to troop-contributing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/89 A.

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 1006(1995) of 28 July 1995,

Recalling its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions and decisions thereon, the latest of which were resolution 49/226 of 23 December 1994 and decision 49/483 of 12 July 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 34/9 E of 17 December 1979 and the subsequent resolutions in which it decided that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations should be suspended, the latest of which was resolution 49/226,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Force on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have been used up for meeting expenses of the Force in order to compensate for the lack of income resulting from non-payment and late payment by Member States of their contributions and have consequently been exhausted,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon as at 13 December 1995, including the contributions unpaid in the amount of 216,216,752 United States dollars, representing 9 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 31 January 1996, notes that some 22 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, particularly those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, particularly as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, notably those troop-contributing Member States that have paid their assessed contributions in full, which bear an additional burden owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Force promptly and in full;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon the amount of 67,407,000 United States dollars gross (65,224,980 dollars net) authorized and apportioned by the General Assembly in paragraph 10 of its resolution 49/226 for the operation of the Force from 1 August 1995 to 31 January 1996, inclusive;

7. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Force at a rate not to exceed 10,774,800 dollars gross (10,489,600 dollars net) per month for a period of up to five months beginning 1 February 1996, and to assess the amount of 32,324,400 dollars gross (31,468,800 dollars net) on Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 1006(1995);

8. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount referred to in paragraph 7 above among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1996, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 31 January 1996 and the mandate periods to be decided upon by the Council;

9. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the estimated income of 4,800 dollars other than staff assessment income for the period from 1 February to 30 April 1996, inclusive;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 850,800 dollars for the period from 1 February to 30 April 1996, inclusive;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

12. Decides to keep the sub-item entitled "United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon" under the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Middle East" under review during its fiftieth session.

General Assembly resolution 50/89 A

19 December 1995 Meeting 95 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/824) without vote, 17 December (meeting 41); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.11), orally amended by Latvia; agenda item 122 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 26, 41; plenary 95.

By decision 50/469 of 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of agenda item 122, the financing of UN peace-keeping forces in the Middle East, at its resumed fiftieth session.

The Syrian Arab Republic

The General Assembly in 1995 continued to call for Israel's withdrawal from the Golan Heights, an area in the southern part of the Syrian Arab Republic near its borders with Israel and Lebanon. Israel occupied the Golan Heights following the 1967 war, effectively annexing that area when it extended its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the territory towards the end of 1981.⁽²⁷⁾ The annexation was confirmed by the Israeli Knesset in November 1991.⁽²⁸⁾

Israeli practices affecting the human rights of the population in the Golan Heights and other occupied territories have been monitored by the Special Committee on Israeli Practices since 1968 (see below) and have also been the subject of resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and the General Assembly.

The Golan Heights

Committee report. In its annual report,⁽²⁹⁾ the Special Committee on Israeli Practices noted that the situation in the Syrian Arab Golan did not change significantly during the period under review (August 1994–August 1995), despite continuing negotiations. The problems linked to the affirmation by the citizens of the Golan of their Syrian national identity continued, and a number of persons were arrested in that connection. Practices amounting to administrative harassment also continued. Israel, it was stated, had relentlessly pursued its settlement policy and continued to impose restrictions on the use of water, the consumption of which was said to be subjected to full Israeli control and was reportedly managed through a quota system, with settlers receiving an annual per capita volume of 600 cubic metres, while Syrian citizens were allocated 120 cubic metres. Orders were issued to demolish rainwater reservoirs used for irrigation. Meanwhile, settlers from the Golan Heights had launched a campaign aimed at sensitizing Israeli opinion to the need for the Golan to remain under Israeli control, and investment in both housing and industry was increasing.

The Special Committee recalled the position taken by the General Assembly and the Security Council that the annexation by Israel of the occupied Golan was illegal, and therefore, null and void. It hoped for further progress in the near future in the negotiations concerning the Golan within the framework of the Middle East peace process.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁰⁾ that he had received no reply from Israel to his May request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement a 1994 Assembly resolution⁽³¹⁾ calling on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan, and in particular to desist from establishing settlements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/29 D under the general title "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories".

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Syrian Golan occupied since 1967 has been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its previous relevant resolutions, the last of which was 49/36 D of 9 December 1994,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 20 October 1995,

Recalling further its previous relevant resolutions in which, inter alia, it called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of the decision of 14 December 1981 taken by Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian Golan, Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Welcoming the convening at Madrid of the Peace Conference on the Middle East on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 aimed at the realization of a just, comprehensive and lasting peace, and stressing the need for rapid progress in all bilateral negotiations,

1. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to comply with the relevant resolutions on the occupied Syrian Golan, in particular Security Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void and without international legal effect, and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decisions;

2. Also calls upon Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and in particular to desist from the establishment of settlements;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan are null and void, constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Further calls upon Israel to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan, and to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the occupied Syrian Golan;

5. Deplores the violations by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

6. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/29 D

6 December 1995 Meeting 82 139-1-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by Fourth Committee (A/50/606) by recorded vote (121-1-11), 30 November (meeting 25); 12-nation draft (A/C.4/50/L.21); agenda item 85. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 4th Committee 24, 25; plenary 82. Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Report of the Secretary-General. On 24 October, the Secretary-General issued a report⁽³²⁾ reproducing replies from States responding to his 31 August notes verbales requesting information from Israel and other Member States on steps taken or envisaged to implement a 1994 General Assembly resolution⁽³³⁾ demanding Israel's withdrawal from all the occupied Syrian Golan. In the report, Austria expressed the hope that the question of Israeli occupation of the Golan Heights would be resolved in the near future through intensified negotiations. Japan stated that it did not recognize the occupation of the Syrian Golan by Israel as legitimate, and hoped to see a peaceful solution of the problem. In that connection, the Japanese Prime Minister had encouraged direct negotiations on the occasion of his visit to both countries in September 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1995, under the agenda item on the situation in the Middle East, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/22 B.

The Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 24 October 1995,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian Golan, Deeply concerned that Israel has not withdrawn from the Syrian Golan, which has been under occupation since 1967, contrary to the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the convening at Madrid of the Peace Conference on the Middle East on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973, with the hope that substantial and concrete progress will be achieved on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks for the realization of a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region,

1. Declares that Israel has failed so far to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981);

2. Declares also that the Knesset decision of 11 November 1991 annexing the occupied Syrian Golan constitutes a grave violation of resolution 497(1981) and therefore is null and void and has no validity whatsoever, and calls upon Israel to rescind it;

3. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under those instruments in all circumstances;

4. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Golan and its de facto annexation constitute a stumbling-block in the way of achieving a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region;

5. Demands once more that Israel withdraw from all the occupied Syrian Golan to the line of 4 June 1967 in implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/22 B

4 December 1995 Meeting 79 66-2-79 (recorded vote)

20-nation draft (A/50/L.38 & Add.1); agenda item 44.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: plenary 76, 77, 79.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Niger, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Philippines, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Syria, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominica, El Salvador, Estonia, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Latvia, Lesotho, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Samoa, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Explaining its vote, the United States said the text served only to complicate the achievement of a mutually acceptable outcome and made the goal of a comprehensive peace much more difficult to attain, as Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic were engaged in a negotiating process to resolve their differences and achieve a lasting agreement. Among those abstaining, Canada regretted not only that the text remained largely unchanged from previous years, but also that a reference to a specific boundary had been added to it (see paragraph 5). In Australia's view, the resolution's new language did not sufficiently reflect the importance of both parties redoubling their efforts to reach agreement on a lasting peace and could complicate their negotiations. Argentina could have voted in favour, had the text not included new elements, such as the reference to the line of 4 June 1967. On behalf of EU, Spain expressed regret over the new wording in paragraph 5, which it felt tried to prejudice the peace negotiations between the parties. Swaziland held the view that harsh-sounding and reprimanding resolutions were no longer rewarding or productive.

Iraq, while supporting the objectives of the resolution, voiced reservations with regard to the last preambular paragraph of the text. Iran had reservations on parts of the text which might be construed as any recognition of Israel. Similarly, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stressed that its positive vote should not be construed as any recognition of what was called Israel.

UNDOF

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), established by the Security Council in 1974,⁽³⁴⁾ as called for under the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic concluded that year,⁽³⁵⁾ was charged with supervising the observance of the cease-fire between Israel and Syria in the Golan Heights area and ensuring the separation of their forces. Assisting UNDOF as required were observers from UNTSO.

The Force's mandate was renewed twice in 1995, in May and November, each time for a six-month period.

Composition and deployment

In November 1995, UNDOF personnel numbered 1,038 troops (down from 1,041 in May) from Austria, Canada and Poland, plus four military observers from UNTSO. In addition, it was assisted by more than 80 observers of the Observer Group Golan of UNTSO assigned to the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission. By a 6 December letter,⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General proposed that Japan be added to the list of Member States providing troops to UNDOF. The Security Council President, in a reply on 8 December,⁽³⁷⁾ expressed the Council members' agreement with the proposal.

UNDOF headquarters were at Camp Faouar, with an office in Damascus. The Force was deployed within, and close to, the area of separation, with base camps and a logistics unit. The Austrian battalion, deployed in the northern part of the area, maintained 16 positions and nine outposts. The Polish battalion, in the southern part, maintained 14 positions and eight outposts. Both battalions conducted mine-clearing under the operational control of headquarters. The Canadian logistics unit—based, like the Polish battalion, in Camp Ziouani—had a detachment at Camp Faouar and performed second-line general transport tasks, rotation transport, control and management of goods received by UNDOF and maintenance of heavy equipment. First-line logistic support, which included the transport of supplies to the positions, was internal to the contingents. Third-line support was provided through normal supply channels by the United Nations. Damascus International Airport served as UNDOF's airhead, with Tel Aviv International Airport also being used. In-theatre air support was provided by UNTSO on request. The ports of Latakia and Haifa were used for shipments by sea.

On 17 January, Major-General Johannes C. Kusters of the Netherlands assumed command of UNDOF, taking over from Colonel Jan Kempa of Poland, who had been acting Force Commander since the departure of Major-General Roman Misztal, also of Poland, in November 1994.

Activities

UNDOF in 1995 continued to supervise the area of separation between Israeli and Syrian troops in the Golan Heights, to ensure that no military forces of either party were deployed there, by means of permanently manned positions and observation posts and by foot and mobile patrols operating at irregular intervals on predetermined routes by both day and night. In addition, temporary outposts were established and patrols conducted as necessary. UNDOF made fortnightly inspections of armament and force levels in the areas of limitation. Liaison officers from the party concerned accompanied the inspection teams, whose movements were, however, restricted by both sides and which were denied access to some positions.

The Force Commander and his staff maintained close contact with the military liaison staff of Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic. Both parties cooperated with the Force in the execution of its tasks.

UNDOF also assisted ICRC with mail facilities and the passage of persons through the area of separation. Within the means available, medical treatment was provided on request to the local population.

Reports of the Secretary-General (May and November). Before the expiration on 31 May and again on 30 November of the UNDOF mandate, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities which had taken place since 22 November 1994,⁽³⁸⁾ and again from 17 May to 17 November 1995.⁽³⁹⁾ Both reports noted that UNDOF continued to fulfil its functions effectively, with the cooperation of the parties.

In concluding observations, the Secretary-General noted that despite the quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached. He hoped for determined efforts by all concerned to tackle the problem in all its aspects, with a view to arriving at a just and durable peace settlement, as called for by the Security Council in resolution 338(1973).⁽⁴⁰⁾ Stating that he considered UNDOF's continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the agreement of both Syria and Israel, each time recommended that the UNDOF mandate be extended for a further six months, until 30 November 1995 in the first instance and 31 May 1996 in the second.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May and November)

Meeting on 30 May, the Security Council, without debate, adopted resolution 996(1995).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force of 17 May 1995,

Decides:

- (a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;
- (b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1995;
- (c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 996(1995)

30 May 1995 Meeting 3541 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/430).

On 28 November, the Council, also without debate, adopted resolution 1024(1995).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force of 17 November 1995;

Decides:

- (a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;
- (b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1996;
- (c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 1024(1995)

28 November 1995 Meeting 3599 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/990).

After the adoption of each resolution, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council:⁽⁴¹⁾

As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 18 (14 in the November report): "Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached". That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council.

Financing

Report of the Secretary-General (April). In April 1995, the Secretary-General provided information⁽⁴²⁾ on the financial performance of UNDOF for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 November 1994, reflecting overall savings of $805,000 gross ($891,000 net), due mainly to savings from lower personnel costs. As at 31 March 1995, for the period from UNDOF's inception in 1974 to 30 November 1994, outstanding assessments amounted to $61.4 million.

The Secretary-General proposed that the General Assembly credit Member States with the unencumbered net balance of $891,000 against their assessments in respect of any future mandate period. ACABQ, in a June report,⁽²¹⁾ concurred with the proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

Following consideration of those reports from the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee, the General Assembly on 12 July decided that there should be set off against the apportionment among Member States, in respect of future mandate periods of UNDOF as might be approved by the Security Council, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of $891,000 net for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 November 1994. The Assembly adopted decision 49/413 B without vote, after the Fifth Committee, on 23 June, had approved, also without vote, the draft⁽⁴³⁾ submitted by its Chairman following informal consultations.

Report of the Secretary-General (September).

In a 7 September report,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General presented cost estimates of $18,753,000 gross ($18,221,000 net) for the maintenance of UNDOF from 1 December 1995 to 30 June 1996, conforming with the new budget cycle from 1 July to 30 June decided on by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽²⁴⁾ The cost estimates provided for the continuation of an average mission strength of 1,036 military personnel, 36 international civilian staff and 84 locally recruited staff.

Those estimates reflected an increase of 0.4 per cent over the monthly commitments of $2,677,583 gross authorized in December 1994 by the Assembly⁽⁴⁵⁾ for the period from 1 June 1995.

The Secretary-General noted that as at 31 July 1995, a total of $1,116.6 million had been appropriated for UNDOF and the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) from inception to 30 November 1995. Assessed contributions for the same period amounted to $1,083.5 million, while contributions received totalled $1,015.5 million, leaving an outstanding balance of $68 million. Troop contributors had been fully reimbursed through 31 May 1995.

ACABQ in October recommended⁽⁴⁶⁾ that the Assembly appropriate $16,065,498 gross ($15,564,000 net) for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1995. Additionally, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond that date, the Committee recommended that the Secretary-General be authorized to enter into monthly commitments of $2,679,000 gross ($2,603,000 net) for the period from 30 November 1995 to 30 June 1996, and that the Assembly assess such amounts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 1 December 1995, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/20 A.

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, by which the Council established the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 996(1995) of 30 May 1995,

Recalling its resolution 3211 B(XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 49/225 of 23 December 1994, and decision 49/413 B of 12 July 1995,

Reaffirming that the costs of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Suspense Account for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have been used to meet expenses of the Force in order to compensate for the lack of income resulting from non-payment and late payment by Member States of their contributions,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force as at 20 November 1995, including the contributions unpaid in the amount of 64,565,741 United States dollars, representing 6 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 30 November 1995, notes that some 30 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, particularly those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peace-keeping activities, particularly as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force promptly and in full;

4. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force the amount of 16,065,498 dollars gross (15,564,000 dollars net), authorized and apportioned by the General Assembly in paragraph 11 of its resolution 49/225 for the operation of the Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1995, inclusive;

7. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed 2,679,000 dollars gross (2,603,000 dollars net) per month for a period up to seven months from 1 December 1995, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 996(1995), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

8. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount referred to in paragraph 7 above among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991 and 47/218 A of 23 December 1992 and its decision 48/472 A of 23 December 1993, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1995 and 1996, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force beyond 30 November 1995 and the mandate periods to be decided upon by the Council;

9. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 532,000 dollars for the period from 1 December 1995 to 30 June 1996, inclusive;

10. Decides further that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the estimated other income of 9,000 dollars for the period from 1 December 1995 to 30 June 1996, inclusive;

11. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the unnumbered balance of 805,000 dollars gross (891,000 dollars net) for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 November 1994, inclusive, pursuant to General Assembly decision 49/413 B;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolutions 43/230 of 21 December 1988, 44/192 A of 21 December 1989 and 45/258 of 3 May 1991;

13. Decides also to keep the sub-item entitled "United Nations Disengagement Observer Force", under the agenda item entitled "Financing of the United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Middle East", under review during its fiftieth session.

General Assembly resolution 50/20 A

1 December 1995 Meeting 76 Adopted without vote

PART THREE

Human rights

Chapter I

Promotion of human rights

Over the last half century, the United Nations has created a strong and effective infrastructure to support its Charter goals of reaffirming faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained.

Each year, the Commission on Human Rights, its subsidiary body—the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities—and human rights treaty-monitoring bodies report to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly on their work to promote respect for human rights. In addition, the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, with the assistance of the UN Centre for Human Rights, supports activities to alleviate human suffering and ensure human dignity and equality in all regions of the world.

A panoply of human rights instruments has also been assembled by the United Nations over the years to complement and to further efforts to protect and promote human rights. The adoption in 1948 of the 30-article Universal Declaration of Human Rights was a landmark action by the United Nations. Two International Covenants, covering a wide spectrum of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, were adopted by the General Assembly in 1966, and, together with the Universal Declaration, are known as the "International Bill of Human Rights". Other UN human rights instruments deal with specific problems, such as genocide and torture, and specific groups of people, such as women, children and migrant workers; the implementation of some human rights instruments is monitored by expert committees which meet under UN auspices. A host of advisory services are offered to assist countries in ensuring human rights protection.

World conferences on human rights were convened by the United Nations in 1968 in Tehran, during the International Year for Human Rights, and in Vienna in June 1993. A World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights was launched in 1994 and a UN Decade for Human Rights Education began on 1 January 1995. Human Rights Day is observed each year on 10 December.

UN machinery

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its fifty-first session in Geneva from 30 January to 10 March 1995,⁽¹⁾ during which it adopted 93 resolutions and 15 decisions. Another 56 texts—8 draft resolutions and 48 draft decisions—were recommended for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. On 28 July, the Council, by decision 1995/314, noted the Commission's report on its fifty-first session.

On 31 January, the Commission invited⁽²⁾ experts, special rapporteurs, special representatives and chairmen/rapporteurs of various working groups to participate in the discussion of their reports at Commission meetings.

On 3 February, the Commission invited⁽³⁾ the representative of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances dealing with the issue of enforced disappearances in the territory of the former Yugoslavia to participate in meetings dealing with the agenda item on enforced or involuntary disappearances.

Organization of work in 1996

On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission, in accordance with a 1994 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽⁴⁾ recommended⁽⁵⁾ that its next regular session be rescheduled, to later in the year, on a one-year trial basis (from 18 March to 26 April 1996). The Council approved that recommendation on 25 July, by decision 1995/296.

The Commission on 10 March recommended⁽⁶⁾ that the Council authorize 40 fully serviced additional meetings, to be used only if necessary, for the Commission's fifty-second (1996) session. By decision 1995/301 of 25 July, the Council approved that recommendation.

Thematic procedures

As requested by the Commission in 1994,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretariat issued in February a note⁽⁸⁾ containing the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission's thematic special rapporteurs and working groups.

Commission action. On 8 March, the Human Rights Commission encouraged⁽⁹⁾ Governments encountering human rights problems to cooperate more closely with it through thematic procedures, particularly by inviting a thematic special rapporteur or working group to visit their countries. Governments were invited to study carefully recommendations addressed to them under thematic procedures and to keep relevant mechanisms informed on progress made in their implementation. Special rapporteurs and working groups were asked to provide comments on problems of responsiveness and the results of analyses, and to make suggestions on areas that might use the advisory services of the Centre for Human Rights. They should also include in their reports gender-disaggregated data and information on human rights violations directed against women. The Secretary-General should consider convening a meeting of all thematic special rapporteurs and working group chairmen to enable an exchange of views and closer cooperation; to issue annually the conclusions and recommendations of special rapporteurs and working groups; to ensure the availability of resources for effective implementation of all thematic mandates; and to provide in 1996 a list of all persons currently constituting the thematic and country procedures, including their country of origin.

Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

Forty-seventh session

The Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, at its forty-seventh session (Geneva, 31 July-25 August),⁽¹⁰⁾ adopted 40 resolutions and 19 decisions, and recommended for adoption by the Commission on Human Rights two draft resolutions and 10 draft decisions.

The Subcommission adopted decisions relating to its organization of work,⁽¹¹⁾ its methods of work,⁽¹²⁾ the composition of its pre-sessional working groups⁽¹³⁾ and its 1995 agenda.⁽¹⁴⁾

Report of Subcommission Chairman. In January, the Subcommission's 1994 Chairman, Judith Sefi Attah (Nigeria), reported⁽¹⁵⁾ on progress made in implementing a 1994 Commission resolution⁽¹⁶⁾ on improving the Subcommission's work.

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission called on⁽¹⁷⁾ the Subcommission, in fulfilling its functions and duties, to be guided by relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council. The Subcommission was asked to implement the guidelines annexed to a 1992 Subcommission resolution,⁽¹⁸⁾ including those related to the number of studies and requirements for submission. It asked the Subcommission to re-evaluate its 1994 decision⁽¹⁶⁾ regarding item 6 entitled "Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including policies of racial discrimination and segregation and of apartheid, in all countries, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories: report of the Subcommission under Commission on Human Rights resolution 8(XXIII)". Also, the Subcommission was to ensure that each completed study was accompanied by a short summary, to help secure the widest possible dissemination.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/261, approved a Commission invitation to the 1994 Subcommission Chairman to consult with Bureau members and to invite the 1995 Subcommission Chairman to report on progress made regarding the Subcommission's work.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission decided⁽¹⁹⁾ to continue the practice of considering agenda item 6 as soon as its agenda was approved.

Review of Subcommission work

In a June note,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General provided a review of developments between 15 June 1994 and 1 May 1995 in areas of concern to the Subcommission. These related to: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;⁽²¹⁾ the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights;⁽²²⁾ the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;⁽²³⁾ the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;⁽²⁴⁾ the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child;⁽²⁵⁾ and the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families.⁽²⁶⁾ The Subcommission also dealt with effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations of States parties.

Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights

Reports of the High Commissioner. In 1995, the Commission on Human Rights had before it a February report⁽²⁷⁾ submitted by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Jose Ayala Lasso (Ecuador), appointed in 1994,⁽²⁸⁾ in which he discussed activities undertaken to fulfil his mandate.

In accordance with a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽²⁹⁾ the High Commissioner in July provided updated information on his activities and on policy matters.⁽³⁰⁾ On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/314, noted the High Commissioner's report.

In a November report,⁽³¹⁾ the High Commissioner described activities related to the promotion and protection of human rights, thematic issues and various elements of UN human rights machinery. Since submitting his first report in 1994,⁽²⁸⁾ the High Commissioner had visited Burundi and Rwanda (March) to review the ongoing UN human rights activities there (see PART TWO, Chapter II and PART THREE, Chapter III). He also visited Australia, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, the Holy See and Italy, India, Panama, Spain and the United States.

The success of the human rights programme and of the High Commissioner depended on support and understanding from the international community and on cooperation with Governments, international organizations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and people throughout the world. Adequate human and financial resources had to be provided to implement the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights,⁽³²⁾ and the activities of both the High Commissioner and the Centre for Human Rights.

Commission action. On 7 March, the Commission asked⁽³³⁾ for additional resources to enhance the capability of the High Commissioner and the Centre to fulfil effectively their respective mandates. Noting a February announcement by the High Commissioner⁽²⁷⁾ of a review of Secretariat structures dealing with human rights, particularly the Centre, the Commission asked that he continue to keep Member States informed. The Secretary-General, in preparing the proposed 1996-1997 programme budget, was to take into account recommendations resulting from the review.

Centre for Human Rights

Commission action. On 10 March, the Human Rights Commission stressed⁽³⁴⁾ that restructuring of the Centre for Human Rights should ensure full implementation of the 1993 Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and of all mandates established by human rights bodies. It requested the Secretary-General to convene, at least twice yearly in Geneva, meetings with all interested States to provide information on Centre activities and restructuring process.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/293 of 25 July, approved the Commission's request.

Secretary-General reports. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General in January submitted to the Commission an interim report⁽³⁶⁾ on developments to strengthen the Centre for Human Rights. In October, he reported⁽³⁷⁾ to the Assembly regarding the allocation of resources to the Centre.

Composition of staff

Commission action. On 7 March, the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 35 to 16, with 1 abstention, asked⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General to adopt measures regarding recruitment for the Centre of personnel from developing countries. In signing agreements with countries on the hiring of junior professional officers (JPOs), those countries should ensure financial resources to guarantee that personnel from developing countries were able to work as JPOs, with a view to conforming to the principle of equitable geographical distribution. The Secretary-General was to report to the Assembly in 1995 on the geographical composition and functions of Centre staff, and to make recommendations to improve the current situation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/275.

Composition of the staff of the Centre for Human Rights

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/61 of 7 March 1995, endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the geographical composition and functions of the staff of the Centre for Human Rights and other categories of officers involved in its activities, including measures adopted and their results, and recommendations for improving the current situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, by decision 50/462, noted part six of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee's report.⁽⁴⁰⁾ In addition, by decision 50/464, also adopted on 22 December, the Assembly included in its provisional agenda for 1996 and subsequent sessions a sub-item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights" under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/187.

Strengthening of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/
Centre for Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/135 of 15 December 1989, 45/180 of 21 December 1990, 46/111 and 46/118 of 17 December 1991, 47/127 of 18 December 1992, 48/129 and 48/141 of 20 December 1993 and 49/195 of 23 December 1994, and bearing in mind all relevant resolutions of the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights,

Considering that the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms is one of the basic purposes of the United Nations enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and a priority activity of the Organization,

Taking into account the fact that in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, concerned by the growing disparity between the activities of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and the human, financial and other resources available to carry them out, and bearing in mind the resources needed for other important United Nations programmes, requested the Secretary-General and the General Assembly to take immediate steps to increase substantially the resources for the human rights programme, from within the existing and future regular budgets of the United Nations, and to take urgent steps to seek increased extrabudgetary resources,

Noting that in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights stressed the importance of strengthening the Centre,

Taking into account the establishment of the post of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as well as the mandate for the post, including its coordinating role and its overall supervision of the Centre, as well as the request by the General Assembly in resolution 48/141 for appropriate staff and resources to enable the High Commissioner to fulfil his mandate,

Noting with concern that the response to these requests has not been commensurate with the needs, resulting in a serious imbalance between the mandates assigned to the High Commissioner and the Centre by the competent bodies of the United Nations system in the field of human rights and the resources available to fulfil all of these mandates,

Taking into account the fact that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights urged all United Nations organs, bodies and the specialized agencies whose activities deal with human rights to cooperate in order to strengthen, rationalize and streamline their activities, taking into account the need to avoid unnecessary duplication,

Noting that the High Commissioner and the Centre are a unity whereby the High Commissioner, in accordance with resolution 48/141, sets the policy directions and the priority of action and the Centre implements those policies under the direction of the head of the Centre, the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights,

Taking into account the fact that the responsibilities of the High Commissioner include, inter alia, engaging in a dialogue with all Governments in the implementation of his mandate with a view to the promotion and protection of all human rights, and rationalizing, adapting, strengthening and streamlining the United Nations machinery in the field of human rights with a view to improving its efficiency and effectiveness,

Acknowledging that, while further improvement in the functioning and efficiency of the Centre, together with a strong emphasis on good management practices, is needed in order to enable the Centre to cope with its constantly increasing workload, good management practices need to be complemented by additional resources commensurate with additional mandates,

Taking note of the information provided by the High Commissioner with regard to the ongoing process aimed at increasing the efficiency and effectiveness of the Centre, and bearing in mind, in this context, the request of the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1995/93 of 10 March 1995 to the Secretary-General to convene, at least twice a year at Geneva, meetings with all interested States to provide information on the activities conducted by the Centre and its process of restructuring,

Recognizing that this process should contribute to the strengthening of the functional framework for integrated and consolidated activities of the Secretariat in the field of human rights,

Recalling that in its report to the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that the paramount consideration in the employment of staff at every level was the need for the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, and that it was convinced that that was compatible with the principle of equitable geographical distribution, and bearing in mind Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the strengthening of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and the note by the Secretary-General on the geographical composition and functions of the staff of the Centre, as well as the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

1. Supports and encourages the efforts of the Secretary-General to enhance the role and further improve the functioning of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, under the overall supervision of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

2. Reiterates the need to ensure that all the necessary human, financial, material and personnel resources are provided without delay to the High Commissioner and the Centre to enable them to carry out efficiently, effectively and expeditiously the mandates assigned to them;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make available additional human and financial resources, within the overall regular budget of the United Nations, to enhance the capability of the High Commissioner and of the Centre to fulfil effectively their respective mandates and their ability to carry out mandated operational activities and to coordinate efficiently with other relevant departments of the Secretariat, as well as other organs, bodies and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, including on logistical and administrative questions, having due regard to the need to finance and implement activities of the United Nations related to development;

4. Supports fully the High Commissioner in his efforts to strengthen the human rights activities of the United Nations, inter alia, through measures aimed at restructuring the Centre to improve its efficiency and effectiveness;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit an interim report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session and a final report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the strengthening of the human rights programme and on the measures taken to implement the present resolution.

Strengthening UN action

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/174.

Strengthening of United Nations action in the human rights field through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and reaffirming also its determination to promote social progress and better standards of living in greater freedom,

Bearing in mind that among the purposes of the United Nations are those of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and taking other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace, as well as achieving international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling that, in accordance with Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Organization shall promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being that are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and that, in accordance with Article 56, all Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55,

Reiterating that Member States should continue to act in the human rights field in conformity with the provisions of the Charter,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that such international cooperation should be based on the principles embodied in international law, especially the Charter, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant instruments,

Deeply convinced that United Nations action in this field should be based not only on a profound understanding of the broad range of problems existing in all societies but also on full respect for the political, economic and social realities of each of them, in strict compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter and for the basic purpose of promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through international cooperation,

Reaffirming all its resolutions in this regard,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 2131(XX) of 21 December 1965, 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970 and 36/103 of 9 December 1981,

Reaffirming the importance of ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues, as affirmed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Aware of the fact that the promotion, protection and full exercise of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as legitimate concerns of the world community should be guided by the principles of universality, non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends,

Affirming the importance of the objectivity, independence and discretion of the special rapporteurs and representatives on thematic issues and countries, as well as of the members of the working groups, in carrying out their mandates,

Affirming also the need to cooperate so as to strengthen, rationalize and streamline United Nations activities on human rights, taking into account the need to avoid unnecessary duplication,

Underlining the obligation that Governments have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the Charter, including respect for territorial integrity;

2. Reaffirms that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States, in cooperation with the Organization, to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur;

3. Calls upon all Member States to base their activities for the protection and promotion of human rights, including the development of further international cooperation in this field, on the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and other relevant international instruments, and to refrain from activities that are inconsistent with that international framework;

4. Considers that international cooperation in this field should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

5. Affirms that the promotion, protection, and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, as legitimate concerns of the world community, should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity, and should not be used for political ends;

6. Requests all human rights bodies within the United Nations system, as well as the special rapporteurs and representatives, independent experts and working groups, to take duly into account the contents of the present resolution in carrying out their mandates;

7. Expresses its conviction that an unbiased and fair approach to human rights issues contributes to the promotion of international cooperation as well as to the effective promotion, protection and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

8. Stresses, in this context, the continuing need for impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events of all countries;

9. Invites Member States to consider adopting, as appropriate, within the framework of their respective legal systems and in accordance with their obligations under international law, especially the Charter, and international human rights instruments, the measures that they may deem appropriate to achieve further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to take duly into account the present resolution and to consider further proposals for the strengthening of United Nations action in the human rights field through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity;

11. Decides to consider this matter at its fifty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Human rights instruments

General aspects

At the outset of 1995, there were seven human rights treaty instruments in force, which required monitoring of their implementation by expert bodies. Those instruments and their treaty bodies were: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁽¹⁾ (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD)); the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights) and the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽²⁾ (Human Rights Committee); the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid⁽³⁾ (Group of Three); the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women⁽⁴⁾ (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment⁽⁵⁾ (Committee against Torture); and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child⁽⁶⁾ (Committee on the Rights of the Child).

On 17 February 1995, the Commission on Human Rights, in view of developments in South Africa, decided⁽⁷⁾ to suspend meetings of the Group of Three as at 17 February (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission urged⁽⁸⁾ States parties to meet their reporting obligations and to contribute to identifying and implementing ways to streamline further and improve reporting procedures. It urged treaty bodies to examine ways to reduce both duplication of reporting and the reporting burden on Member States and presented measures for doing so. It recommended that reporting guidelines be amended to identify gender-specific information. The UN Department of Public Information was asked to publish at the end of each year a compilation of all concluding observations adopted during that year by the treaty bodies.

The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to prepare an inventory of all international human rights standard-setting activities to facilitate better-informed decision-making. The Manual on Human Rights Reporting⁽⁹⁾ should be made available in all official languages at the earliest opportunity, and due regard paid to recommendations concerning that publication made at the 1994 meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies.⁽¹⁰⁾ The Secretary-General was to report on measures taken to establish a computerized database to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the functioning of the treaty bodies, and to expedite implementation of the 1990 recommendations of the Task Force on Computerization⁽¹¹⁾ by asking Member States to contribute voluntarily to cover the cost of the proposed system. He was also to report on financing and staff resource issues to the General Assembly in 1995 and the Commission in 1996.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In 1995, the Commission considered a report of the Secretary-General containing an inventory of all international human rights standard-setting activities,⁽¹²⁾ covering work and activities that fell under the purview of the Commission.

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴⁾ in October on ensuring financing and adequate staffing resources for the operations of the human rights treaty bodies. Also in October,⁽¹⁵⁾ he transmitted the report of the sixth meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies (Geneva, 18-22 September 1995), convened pursuant to a 1994 Assembly resolution.⁽¹³⁾

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/170.

Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/178 of 23 December 1994, as well as other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the relevant paragraphs of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Welcoming the call in the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, both for intensified efforts to integrate the equal status and the human rights of all women and girls into the mainstream of United Nations system-wide activities and to address these issues regularly and systematically throughout relevant bodies and mechanisms, and for the related actions to be taken by, inter alia, the human rights treaty-monitoring bodies,

Taking note of the recommendations proposed by the expert group on the integration of gender perspectives into United Nations human rights activities and programmes, which met at Geneva from 3 to 7 July 1995,

Reaffirming that the full and effective implementation of United Nations human rights instruments is of major importance to the efforts of the Organization, pursuant to the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the effective functioning of the treaty bodies established pursuant to United Nations human rights instruments is indispensable for the full and effective implementation of such instruments,

Conscious of the importance of coordination of the human rights promotion and protection activities of the United Nations bodies active in the field of human rights,

Noting with appreciation the initiatives taken by a number of treaty bodies to elaborate early-warning measures and urgent procedures, within their mandates, with a view to preventing the occurrence, or reoccurrence, of serious human rights violations,

Recalling the reports of the five meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held from 1988 to 1994,

Expressing concern about the non-fulfilment by many States parties of their financial obligations under the relevant United Nations instruments on human rights,

Reaffirming its responsibility to ensure the effective functioning of human rights treaty bodies established pursuant to instruments adopted by the General Assembly, and in this connection further reaffirming the importance of:

(a) Ensuring the effective functioning of the periodic reporting by States parties to these instruments;

(b) Securing sufficient financial, human and information resources to overcome existing difficulties with their effective functioning;

(c) Promoting greater efficiency and effectiveness through better coordination of the activities of the United Nations bodies active in the field of human rights, taking into account the need to avoid unnecessary duplication and overlapping of their mandates and tasks;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that the two committees established under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment meet as scheduled until the amendments enter into force;

7. Welcomes the continuing efforts by the treaty bodies and the Secretary-General aimed at streamlining, rationalizing and otherwise improving reporting procedures, and urges the treaty bodies and the meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies to continue to examine ways of reducing the duplication of reporting required under the different instruments, without impairing the quality of reporting, and of generally reducing the reporting burden on Member States, including through:

(a) Identifying where cross-referencing can be used in report writing;

(b) Recommending, where appropriate, the designation of specific national administrative units to coordinate reports to all treaty bodies;

10. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to ensure, from within existing resources, that the revision of the United Nations Man-

(b) Encourages the treaty bodies to continue to identify possibilities for technical assistance in the regular course of their work of reviewing the periodic reports of States parties;

17. Welcomes also the recommendation by the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies that treaty bodies urge each State party to translate, publish and make widely available in its territory the full text of the concluding observations on its reports to the treaty-monitoring bodies, and requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to make every effort to ensure that recent reports and the summary records of committee discussions pertaining to them, as well as concluding observations and final comments of the treaty bodies, are made available in the United Nations information centres in the countries submitting those reports;

18. Welcomes further the contribution to the work of the human rights treaty bodies made by the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, and invites the specialized agencies, other United Nations bodies and the treaty bodies to continue to pursue further cooperation between them, bearing in mind the responsibilities of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the desirability of avoiding unnecessary duplication;

Successor States and human rights treaties

As requested by the Commission in 1994,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General presented information on successor States that were UN Members regarding action taken with respect to their accession to or ratification of international human rights treaties to which the predecessor States had not been parties.⁽¹⁷⁾

On 24 February, the Commission requested⁽¹⁸⁾ the human rights treaty bodies to consider further the applicability of the respective international human rights treaties to successor States, with the aim of assisting them in meeting their obligations. It asked the Secretary-General to encourage successor States to confirm their obligations under the treaties to which their predecessors had been parties, and to report in 1996 on action taken.

Support for International Covenants

On 24 February, the Commission asked⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General to consider assisting States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights⁽²⁾ in preparing their reports, including holding seminars or workshops to train government officials responsible for doing so, and to explore other possibilities under the programme of advisory services. It also asked him to report in 1996 on the status of the Covenants.

In October, the Secretary-General provided information⁽²⁰⁾ on the status of the Covenants as at 1 September. He also reported⁽²¹⁾ to the Commission on their status as at 1 November.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/171.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/119 of 20 December 1993, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/22 of 24 February 1995,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Noting that many States Members of the United Nations have yet to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Welcoming the submission to the General Assembly of the annual report of the Human Rights Committee and the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the relevant provisions of international instruments on human rights plays a fundamental role and hence represents an important continuing concern of the United Nations,

Noting with concern the critical situation with regard to overdue reports from States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major parts of international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Appeals strongly to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights as well as to accede to the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to make the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to intensify systematic efforts to encourage States to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights and, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to assist such States, at their request, in ratifying or acceding to the Covenants and to the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

5. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and underlines the necessity of strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency so that the justification for the appropriateness of measures taken in these circumstances can be assessed;

6. Also stresses the importance of fully taking into account the gender perspective in the implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights at the national level, including the national reports, and in the work of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

7. Encourages the States parties to consider limiting the extent of any reservations they lodge to the International Covenants on Human Rights, to formulate any reservations as precisely and narrowly as possible and to ensure that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the relevant treaty or otherwise contrary to international law;

8. Also encourages the States parties to review regularly any reservations made in respect of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights with a view to withdrawing them;

9. Takes note with appreciation of the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth and fiftieth sessions;

10. Also takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its tenth and eleventh sessions;

11. Expresses its satisfaction with the serious and constructive manner in which both Committees are carrying out their functions;

12. Invites the Committees to identify specific needs of States parties that might be addressed through the advisory services and technical assistance programme of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, with the possible participation of members of the Committees where appropriate;

13. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to strive for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights, and appeals to other bodies dealing with similar human rights questions to respect these uniform standards, as expressed in the general comments of the Human Rights Committee;

14. Urges States parties to fulfil in good time such reporting obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights as may be requested and to make use of gender-disaggregated data in their reports;

15. Also urges States parties to take duly into account, in implementing the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights, the observations made at the conclusion of the consideration of their reports by the Human Rights Committee and by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

16. Invites States parties to give particular attention to the dissemination at the national level of the reports they have submitted to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the summary records relating to the examination of those reports by the Committees and the observations made by the Committees at the conclusion of the consideration of the reports;

17. Encourages once again all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many local languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to consider ways and means of assisting States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights in the preparation of their reports, including seminars or workshops at the national level for the purpose of training government officials engaged in the preparation of such reports, and the exploration of other possibilities available under the regular programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Centre for Human Rights effectively assists the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of their respective mandates;

20. Once again urges the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Human Rights Committee, to take determined steps to give more publicity to the work of that Committee and, similarly, to the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

21. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including all reservations and declarations.

General Assembly resolution 50/171

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.1) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); 29-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.53), orally revised; agenda item 112 (al).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-49, 52, 54; plenary 99.

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1995, parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽²³⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽²³⁾ totalled 132 and 87 States, respectively.⁽²⁴⁾ Chad, Uganda and Uzbekistan became parties to the Covenant in 1995; Bosnia and Herzegovina, Chad, Croatia, El Salvador, Paraguay, Uganda and Uzbekistan acceded to or ratified the Optional Protocol.

Parties to the Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty—adopted by the Assembly in 1989⁽²⁵⁾ and in force since 1991⁽²⁶⁾—totalled 29 States as at 31 December 1995.⁽²⁴⁾ Croatia, Italy and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia ratified or acceded to it in 1995.

On 24 February, the Human Rights Commission appealed⁽²⁷⁾ to States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant and Optional Protocols and to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to provide the Human Rights Committee—the expert body responsible for monitoring implementation of the Covenant—with additional means to deal with its increasing workload and to report in 1996 on the status of the Covenant and its Protocols.

Fair trial protocol. On 3 March, the Commission decided⁽²⁸⁾ to consider in 1996 the establishment of an open-ended working group to draft a third optional protocol to the Covenant, aiming at guaranteeing the right to a fair trial and a remedy.

Monitoring body. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, held three sessions in 1995: its fifty-third from 20 March to 7 April in New York, and its fifty-fourth from 3 to 28 July and fifty-fifth from 16 October to 3 November, both in Geneva.

At those sessions, the Committee considered reports from 14 States—Afghanistan, Argentina, Estonia, Haiti, Latvia, New Zealand, Paraguay, Russian Federation, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Kingdom concerning Hong Kong, United States, Yemen—under article 40 of the Covenant. It adopted views on 18 communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated, and decided that 15 other such communications were inadmissible. Those views and decisions were annexed to the Committee's report.⁽²⁹⁾

In April, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the text of a general comment⁽³⁰⁾ adopted by the Committee in 1994 concerning issues related to reservations made upon accession to or ratification of the Covenant.⁽³¹⁾

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

On 24 February, the Commission on Human Rights encouraged⁽³²⁾ States parties to the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights⁽³³⁾ to support and cooperate with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Noting steps taken by the Committee to draft an optional protocol to the Covenant granting the right of individuals or groups to submit communications concerning non-compliance, it asked the Committee to report in 1996 thereon.

The Commission recommended that, as a follow-up to the 1993 seminar on indicators to measure achievements in realizing economic, social and cultural rights,⁽³⁴⁾ the UN Centre for Human Rights convene expert seminars to clarify the content of specific economic, social and cultural rights for chairmen of the human rights treaty-monitoring bodies and representatives of States, specialized agencies and NGOs. Taking note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights, submitted in 1990,⁽³⁵⁾ 1991⁽³⁶⁾ and 1992,⁽³⁷⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to ensure the publication of the reports in a single document. It also asked him to invite international financial institutions to consider organizing an expert seminar on their role in realizing economic, social and cultural rights. It asked the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to promote coordination of UN human rights activities and those of development agencies, with a view to drawing on their expertise and support.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/257, approved the Commission's recommendation that the Centre for Human Rights convene expert seminars for the chairmen of the human rights treaty-monitoring bodies and representatives of specialized agencies, NGOs and States.

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1995, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966⁽³³⁾ and in force since 1976,⁽²³⁾ had been ratified, acceded to or succeeded to by 133 States. Chad and Uzbekistan became parties in 1995.⁽²⁴⁾

Implementation

Commission action. On 24 February, the Human Rights Commission appealed⁽³⁸⁾ to all States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant. It welcomed the efforts of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to strive for uniform standards in implementing Covenant provisions and encouraged Governments to publish the Covenant in as many languages as possible and to disseminate it widely. It asked the Secretary-General to report in 1996 on the status of the Covenant.

Monitoring body. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights⁽³⁹⁾ held its twelfth and thirteenth sessions in Geneva, from 1 to 19 May and from 20 November to 8 December, respectively.⁽⁴⁰⁾ The holding of an additional session during the second half of 1995 was authorized on 10 February by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1995/217. The Committee's pre-session, five-member working group, established in 1988,⁽⁴¹⁾ met in Geneva from 12 to 16 December 1994 and from 22 to 26 May 1995, to identify issues that might most usefully be discussed with representatives of reporting States.

Under Covenant articles 1 to 15, the Committee examined reports from Algeria,⁽⁴²⁾ Colombia,⁽⁴³⁾ Mauritius,⁽⁴⁴⁾ Norway,⁽⁴⁵⁾ Portugal,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Republic of Korea,⁽⁴⁷⁾ Suriname,⁽⁴⁸⁾ Sweden⁽⁴⁹⁾ and Ukraine.⁽⁵⁰⁾ Rights covered by articles 10 to 12 were examined in a report from the Philippines.⁽⁵¹⁾

The Committee had two days of general discussion. In May, it focused on the interpretation and practical application of the obligations incumbent upon States parties to the Covenant. In December, the general discussion was devoted to the draft optional protocol on communications to the Covenant.

As a follow-up to its technical assistance mission to Panama (16-22 April 1995) to look into the right to adequate housing, the Committee considered information submitted by NGOs concerned with human rights. The report of the two-member mission was annexed to the Committee's report.

On 24 November, the Committee adopted a general comment on the economic, social and cultural rights of older persons,⁽⁵²⁾ which was intended to guide States parties to understand better their obligations in implementing respect for those rights.

Concerning a draft optional protocol to the Covenant providing for an optional communications procedure, the Committee requested its Chairman to revise his 1994 report on the subject,⁽⁵³⁾ with a view to forwarding a final report to the Commission on Human Rights in 1996.

Annexed to the Committee's report was a list of States parties to the Covenant and the status of their submission of reports as at 8 December 1995, as well as the Committee's general comment on older persons.

In accordance with a 1976 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the eighteenth,⁽⁵⁵⁾ nineteenth⁽⁵⁶⁾ and twentieth⁽⁵⁷⁾ reports of the International Labour Organization concerning implementation of the Covenant.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/39.

Annual sessions of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1985/17 of 28 May 1985, by which it established the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to assist it in relation to the various functions entrusted to it under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling also that in its resolution 1985/17 it decided to review the composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Committee every five years beginning in 1990,

Noting that since its first session in 1987 the Committee has held 12 sessions, examined 103 reports of States parties and adopted five very detailed general comments,

Recognizing that the Committee has succeeded in developing constructive and effective methods of work, including in relation to its dialogue with States parties,

Recalling the emphasis contained in the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development on the important role of the Committee in monitoring those aspects of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action that relate to compliance by States parties with the Covenant,

Noting that the number of States parties to the Covenant has increased by more than 50 per cent since the Council resolved to establish the Committee and that there are now 131 States parties,

Noting also that the Committee has consistently needed to hold two annual sessions in recent years in order to cope with its workload and that it continues to be faced with a backlog of reports to be considered,

1. Authorizes the holding of two annual sessions by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in May and November-December, each of three weeks' duration, in addition to a pre-session working group of five members to meet for five days immediately after each session to prepare the list of issues for consideration at the subsequent session;

2. Requests the Committee to give careful consideration to the possible means by which it might contribute to the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, having particular regard to the commitments contained in the latter concerning the adoption of national strategies for social development and the definition of time-bound goals and targets for reducing overall poverty.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/39

25 July 1995 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Draft by Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (E/1995/L.21); agenda item 5 (d).

By decision 1995/303, the Council on 25 July endorsed the Committee's proposal to include annually $10,000 within the overall budget of the Centre for Human Rights to enable the Committee to bring in specialists to participate in its days of general discussion and to commission papers dealing with technical aspects of its work. The Council noted that the relevant funds would not be spent on Committee members and would be committed only with the approval of the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights.

Concerning the payment of honorariums to Committee members, the Council, by decision 1995/302 A of 25 July, recalled its 1993 decision⁽³⁰⁾ endorsing the Committee's request to the General Assembly to authorize payment to each Committee member of an honorarium equivalent to that payable to the members of other treaty bodies, noted that the Assembly had taken no action and urged it to do so. On the same date, by decision 1995/302 B, the Council, noting that members of all human rights treaty bodies, except for those of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, were receiving or would soon receive a modest honorarium, urged the Assembly to authorize payment to each Committee member of an honorarium equivalent to that payable to the members of other treaty bodies.

On 28 July, the Council, by decision 1995/314, took note of the reports of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its 1994 sessions.⁽⁵³⁾

Other human rights instruments

In addition to the 1966 Covenants, which together with the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights constitute what is known as the "International Bill of Human Rights", there exist scores of instruments which deal with protection of human rights in many areas, many of which were formulated before the birth of the United Nations in 1945 and predate even the League of Nations. Taken together, they form a strong front-line of defence against human rights abuses worldwide. The following are rights instruments which were the subject of direct United Nations action in 1995.

Convention against racial discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1995,⁽¹⁾ there were 146 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in 1965⁽²⁾ and in force since 1969.⁽³⁾ Japan, Monaco, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan acceded during 1995.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under article 8 of the Convention, held two sessions in 1995, both in Geneva: the forty-sixth from 27 February to 17 March and the forty-seventh from 31 July to 18 August.⁽⁴⁾

CERD mainly devoted its work to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions. It considered periodic reports submitted by 22 States parties; reviewed the implementation of the Convention by three States parties based on their previous reports; and examined further information submitted by two States parties in reply to a 1993 request of the Committee.⁽⁵⁾ In its report, CERD summarized its members' views on each country report and the statements made by the States parties concerned.

Under an item dealing with the prevention of racial discrimination, including early-warning measures and urgent procedures, the Committee in March requested the urgent submission of periodic reports from: Algeria, in view of continuing violence; Burundi, due to reports of continuing ethnic tension; Papua New Guinea, in view of reports of serious human rights violations in Bougainville; the Russian Federation, in view of human rights violations in Chechnya; and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, due to reports of ethnic tension. In a statement adopted by the Committee, Israel was requested to submit its periodic reports, which were due in 1992 and 1994. In another decision, CERD requested Mexico to submit further information regarding reports of serious conflicts in the State of Chiapas which affected some indigenous populations. In a further decision, the Committee endorsed the conclusions of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Rwanda⁽⁶⁾ and underlined the conclusions of the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons,⁽⁷⁾ asking that its decision be transmitted to the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights.

In August, CERD asked the General Assembly and the Security Council to take steps with a view to stopping all violence and preventing another conflict in Burundi and to begin implementing its recommendations, which called for: creating a new police force; reducing and reorganizing the army; reorganizing and retraining the judiciary and civil administration; halting incitement to or promotion of racial or ethnic hatred disseminated by the mass media; rehabilitating ethnically mixed residential neighbourhoods in Bujumbura; establishing a national institution to promote and protect human rights; and maintaining an international presence, including a team of human rights observers. It also asked the Assembly to appeal to all States and the Council to halt the supply of arms to all parties until law and order were secured. (See also PART TWO, Chapter II.)

In a decision on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, CERD demanded that all parties to the conflict ensure the safety of detained persons and disclose information concerning those missing; demanded that persons be given the opportunity to return safely to the places they inhabited before the beginning of the conflict; called on the international community to assist refugees and detained persons through the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other refugee assistance organizations; called on States to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, established by the Security Council in 1993;⁽⁸⁾ demanded that States implement legislation to ensure their cooperation with the Tribunal; called for the provision to Bosnia and Herzegovina of all means to protect itself in accordance with Article 51 of the UN Charter; and expressed its solidarity with the former Special Rapporteur on the situation. It decided to transmit its decision to the Secretary-General for his attention and, through him, to the Assembly and the Council, and recommended that the United Nations take measures to provide for the strict implementation of resolutions in the areas referred to and to undertake urgent efforts to assist refugees and detained persons. (See also PART TWO, Chapter V.)

Concerning the situation in Papua New Guinea, the Committee regretted the Government's failure to submit outstanding reports or to respond to its request to renew a dialogue, and noted that the information on the human rights situation received was not sufficient to assess the situation in Bougainville. The Committee brought its decision to the attention of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees and asked her to take any action possible under her mandate to implement it. The Committee deferred further consideration of the Russian Federation and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia until 1996.

In conformity with article 14 of the Convention, CERD considered communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD's competence to receive and consider such communications. Twenty-two States parties (Algeria, Australia, Bulgaria, Chile, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Russian Federation, Senegal, Slovakia, Sweden, Ukraine, Uruguay) had declared such recognition. The Committee's opinion on one communication, declared inadmissible, was annexed to its report.

Under article 15, the Secretary-General transmitted to CERD documents related to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. CERD observed that it found it impossible to fulfil its function under article 15 as the documents did not include copies of petitions and did not contain valid information concerning legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures directly related to the Convention's principles and objectives. The Committee asked that appropriate information be furnished.

On 17 August, the Committee adopted a general recommendation concerning article 3 (prevention, prohibition and eradication of all practices of racial segregation and apartheid).

The Committee issued a commentary to a 1994 report of the Secretary-General⁽⁹⁾ concerning the UN Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), in which it stated its position on various proposals contained therein.

In a September report,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that, as at 5 September 1995, 17 States parties had accepted an amendment to the Convention regarding the financing of CERD. The amendment, adopted in 1992,⁽¹¹⁾ was to enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties. The Secretary-General reported that as at 31 July outstanding assessments and arrears totalled $232,725.

On 8 March,⁽¹²⁾ the Commission on Human Rights urged States parties to notify the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Convention, of their acceptance of the amendment and called on them to fulfil their outstanding financial obligations under the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/137.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and its resolutions on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Reiterating the importance of the Convention, which is one of the most widely accepted human rights instruments adopted under the auspices of the United Nations,

Aware of the importance of the contributions of the Committee to the efforts of the United Nations to combat racism and all other forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular section II.B, relating to equality, dignity and tolerance, and General Assembly resolution 49/208 of 23 December 1994, in particular paragraph 7 thereof,

Concerned that the amendment to the Convention regarding the financing of the Committee, as decided upon at the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on 15 January 1992 and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992, has not yet entered into force,

Welcoming efforts of the Secretary-General to ensure interim financial arrangements for the financing of the expenses incurred by the Committee,

Stressing the importance of enabling the Committee to function smoothly and to have all necessary facilities for the effective performance of its functions under the Convention,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee,

1. Commends the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination for its work with regard to the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and its contribution to the preparation for the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

3. Welcomes the cooperation and exchange of information between the Committee and the relevant structures and mechanisms of the United Nations, such as meetings held with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and encourages their continuation in the future, including with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

4. Encourages the use of innovative procedures by the Committee for reviewing the implementation of the Convention in States whose reports are overdue and the formulating of concluding observations on reports of States parties to the Convention;

5. Commends the Committee for its continuous efforts to improve its contribution to the prevention of racial discrimination, including early warning and urgent procedures, and welcomes its relevant decisions and action thereon;

6. Welcomes decision 9(46) of 17 March 1995 adopted by the Committee, entitled "Contribution of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education" and general recommendation XIX(47) on article 3 of the Convention;

7. Urges all States which have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible;

8. Encourages States to limit the extent of any reservation they lodge to the Convention and to formulate any reservation as precisely and as narrowly as possible while ensuring that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise contrary to international law;

9. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties have still not fulfilled their financial obligations, as shown in the report of the Secretary-General;

10. Urges States parties to accelerate their domestic ratification procedures with regard to the amendment to the Convention concerning the financing of the Committee and expeditiously to notify the Secretary-General in writing of their agreement to the amendment, as decided upon at the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on 15 January

1992 and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992;

14. Strongly appeals to all States parties which are in arrears to fulfil their outstanding financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to invite those States parties which are in arrears to pay the amounts in arrears and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the present resolution to the attention of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

General Assembly resolution 50/137

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/626) without vote, 2 November (meeting 18); 41-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.9), orally revised; agenda item 103. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 3-8, 15, 18; plenary 97.

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1995,⁽¹⁾ 93 States had become parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,⁽¹³⁾ seven of them (Chad, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan) in 1995. The Convention entered into force in 1987.⁽¹⁴⁾ Amendments to articles 17 and 18, adopted in 1992,⁽¹⁵⁾ had been accepted by 17 States parties by the end of the year. The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claims that another is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) also entered into force in 1987; 38 parties had made the required declarations.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 15 November 1995.⁽¹⁶⁾

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission urged⁽¹⁷⁾ all States to become parties to the Convention and invited all ratifying or acceding States and those States parties that had not done so to make the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to consider withdrawing their reservations to article 20. States parties were encouraged to notify the Secretary-General of their acceptance of the amendments to articles 17 and 18.

Draft optional protocol

On 3 March, the Commission welcomed⁽¹⁸⁾ progress made by the working group at its 1994 session⁽¹⁹⁾ to elaborate a draft optional protocol to the Convention. The protocol would establish a system of visits to be carried out by a committee of experts to places of detention within the jurisdiction of States parties to the protocol. The Commission asked the group to meet for a two-week period prior to its 1996 session and to submit a new report. It requested the Secretary-General to transmit the group's report to Governments, specialized agencies, chairmen of the human rights treaty bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, and to invite them to submit their observations to the group. It also requested him to invite Governments, specialized agencies, NGOs, the Chairman of the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur to participate in the group's activities and to extend all the necessary facilities to the group for its meeting.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1995/33, authorized the working group to meet for a two-week period prior to the Commission's 1996 session.

Working group activities. The working group on the draft optional protocol to the Convention (Geneva, 30 October-10 November 1995)⁽²⁰⁾ examined and revised the text of articles 10 and 11 and 14 to 21 of the draft as submitted by Costa Rica in 1991.⁽²¹⁾ The group adopted new articles, 18 bis, 19 bis, 19 tertio and 20 bis. Annexed to the group's report was the text of the first reading of draft articles 1 to 21.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its fourteenth session in Geneva from 24 April to 5 May.⁽²²⁾ It examined reports submitted by Italy, Jordan, Mauritius and the Netherlands under article 19 of the Convention. It postponed consideration of a report by Guatemala.

In four closed meetings devoted to its activities under article 20, the Committee studied confidential information that appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party to the Convention. Under article 22, the Committee adopted its views on a communication considered in 1990⁽²³⁾ and declared three others inadmissible, one of which was considered in 1994.⁽¹⁹⁾

The Committee held its fifteenth session, also in Geneva, from 13 to 24 November,⁽²⁴⁾ at which it examined reports submitted by Colombia, Denmark, Guatemala and the United Kingdom. It postponed consideration of reports from Armenia and Guatemala. Concerning a procedure relating to article 20, the Committee decided to ask a working group to draft a new proposal, based on texts concerning the participation of a member in the examination of the report of his own country, confidential investigations and the confidential examination of communications regarding his country.

Convention on Elimination of Discrimination against Women

After many years of negotiation, the General Assembly in 1979 adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.⁽²⁵⁾ The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women was established in 1982 to monitor its implementation. In 1995, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/202 on 22 December, urging approval of an amendment to the Convention, as called for at the Fourth World Conference on Women. (For details, see PART FOUR, Chapter X; for other aspects concerning women's rights, see next chapter.)

Convention on the rights of the child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December,⁽¹⁾ there were 185 parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child,⁽²⁶⁾ which entered into force on 2 September 1990. During 1995, 17 States became parties to the Convention. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 November.⁽²⁷⁾

Implementation

Monitoring body. In 1995, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) held its eighth (9-27 January),⁽²⁸⁾ ninth (22 May-9 June)⁽²⁹⁾ and tenth (30 October-17 November)⁽³⁰⁾ sessions, all in Geneva.

Under article 44 of the Convention, the Committee considered initial reports from 17 States parties: Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Germany, Holy See, Italy, Jamaica, Nicaragua, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Kingdom. It planned to consider in 1996 the initial report of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

At its eighth and tenth sessions, respectively, the Committee held thematic discussions on the situation and human rights of girls and on the administration of justice.

In accordance with article 43, the Secretary-General convened the fifth meeting of the States parties to the Convention (New York, 21 February) to elect five Committee members to replace those whose terms were due to expire on 28 February.⁽³¹⁾ The terms of the remaining five Committee members were to expire on 28 February 1997.

Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission urged⁽³²⁾ States that had not done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority and urged States parties that had made reservations to review the compatibility of their reservations with article 51 of the Convention and other relevant rules of international law. It asked UN bodies and organs, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to disseminate information on the Convention, promote its understanding and assist Governments in its implementation. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure the provision of staff and facilities for the effective performance of the Committee and to report on the status of the Convention in 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly on 21 December 1995 adopted resolution 50/153.

The rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/209, 49/210, 49/211 and 49/212 of 23 December 1994,

Recalling also the recommendation in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, that measures be taken to achieve, by 1995, universal ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989, and the universal signing of the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s adopted by the World Summit for Children, as well as their effective implementation,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1995/78 and 1995/79 of 8 March 1995,

Convinced that the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as a standard-setting accomplishment of the United Nations in the field of human rights, makes a positive contribution to protecting the rights of children and ensuring their well-being,

Seriously concerned about those reservations to the Convention that are contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise contrary to international treaty law, and recalling that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action urges States to withdraw such reservations,

Reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, which states that national and international mechanisms and programmes should be strengthened for the defence and protection of children, in particular the girl child, abandoned children, street children, economically and sexually exploited children, including through child pornography, child prostitution or sale of organs, children victims of diseases including acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, refugee and displaced children, children in detention, children in armed conflict and children victims of famine, drought and other emergencies, and also requires measures against female infanticide and harmful child labour,

Reaffirming also that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations and of the United Nations Children's Fund in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Noting with appreciation the important work carried out by the United Nations, in particular the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the expert designated by the Secretary-General to undertake the study on the effect of armed conflicts on children,

Recognizing also the valuable work done by relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

Reaffirming that the rights of children require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as for their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Profoundly concerned about the continuing deterioration in the situation of children in many parts of the world as a result of armed conflicts, and convinced that immediate action is called for,

Convinced that children affected by armed conflicts require the special protection of the international community and that there is a need for all States to work towards the alleviation of their plight,

Profoundly concerned also that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of inadequate social and economic conditions, natural disasters, armed conflicts, exploitation, intolerance, unemployment, rural-to-urban migration, illiteracy, hunger and disability, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Deeply concerned by the persistence of the practice of the use of children for prostitution, sexual abuse and other activities, which may also often constitute exploitation of child labour,

Recognizing the existence of a market which encourages the increase of such criminal practices against children,

Concerned by the exploitation of child labour and by the fact that it prevents a large number of children from an early age, especially in poverty-stricken areas, from receiving basic education and may unduly imperil their health and even their lives,

Alarmed, in particular, by the exploitation of forced labour in its most extreme forms, including forced labour, bonded labour and other forms of slavery,

Encouraged by measures taken by Governments to eradicate the exploitation of child labour,

Determined to safeguard children's right to life, and recognizing the duty and responsibility of Governments to investigate all cases of offences against children, including killing and violence, and to punish offenders, concerned about the growing number of street children worldwide and the squalid conditions in which these children are often forced to live,

Welcoming the efforts made by some Governments to take effective action to address the question of street children,

Recognizing that legislation per se is not enough to prevent violations of human rights and that Governments should implement their laws and complement legislative measures with effective action, inter alia, in the fields of law enforcement and in the administration of justice, and in social, educational and public health programmes,

I

Requests that all States support efforts in the context of the United Nations system aimed at adopting efficient international measures for the prevention and eradication of all those practices and consider contributing to the drafting of an optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

17. Welcomes the convening of the first world congress against the commercial sexual exploitation of children, to be held at Stockholm from 26 to 31 August 1996;

IV

Elimination of exploitation of child labour

18. 19. Calls upon Governments to take legislative, administrative, social and educational measures to ensure the protection of children from economic exploitation, in particular the protection from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development;

20. Urges Governments to take all necessary measures to eliminate all extreme forms of child labour, such as forced labour, bonded labour and other forms of slavery;

21. Requests that measures be taken by Governments, at the national and international levels, within the framework of multisectoral approaches, to end exploitation of child labour in line with the commitments undertaken at the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen in March 1995, and the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing in September 1995, and taking into account the results of other relevant United Nations conferences;

22. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and other relevant actors, to report on current initiatives and programmes of the United Nations and its affiliated agencies which address the exploitation of child labour and on how to improve cooperation at the national and international levels in this field;

25. Strongly urges all Governments to guarantee the respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, particularly the right to life, and to take urgent measures to prevent the killing of street children and to combat torture and violence against them;

26. Emphasizes that strict compliance with the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other relevant human rights instruments constitutes a significant step towards solving the problems of street children, and recommends that the Committee on the Rights of the Child and other relevant treaty-monitoring bodies give attention to this growing problem when examining reports from States parties;

27. Conference of States Parties

The Conference of States Parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child (New York, 12 December) considered an amendment to article 43 of the Convention put forth by Costa Rica proposing that the CRC membership be increased from 10 to 18 experts.⁽³³⁾ A Secretariat statement⁽³⁴⁾ indicated that the increase would cost $518,000 for the 1996-1997 biennium. Until the amendment was approved by the General Assembly and accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties, the Committee would continue to consist of 10 members in accordance with the existing text of the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/155.

Conference of States Parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child

Children in armed conflicts

Reports of the Secretary-General. In 1995, the Commission on Human Rights had before it a report of the Secretary-General⁽³⁵⁾ describing action taken pursuant to a 1993 General Assembly resolution.⁽³⁶⁾

As requested by the Assembly in 1994,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General in October submitted a second progress report⁽³⁸⁾ on the study on the impact on children of armed conflict. A first progress report on the study was submitted in 1994.⁽³⁹⁾ The Secretary-General stated that the expert appointed to undertake the study, Graça Machel (Mozambique), working closely with the Centre for Human Rights and the UN Children's Fund, had visited Angola, Cambodia, Lebanon and Rwanda. Other field visits were planned. An inter-agency task force met periodically to ensure a coordinated response, and regional consultations were under way. A final report was to be made to the Assembly in 1996.

Also in October, the Secretary-General summarized⁽⁴⁰⁾ the replies of two UN bodies and one NGO on measures taken to alleviate the situation of children in armed conflicts.

Commission action. On 8 March, the Human Rights Commission asked⁽⁴¹⁾ the Secretary-General to transmit the report, on its first (1994) session,⁽⁴²⁾ of the working group for the elaboration of a draft optional protocol on involvement of children in armed conflict to Governments, relevant specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, CRC, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the expert appointed to undertake the study on the impact of armed conflicts on children, and to invite their comments thereon in time for circulation prior to the group's second session in 1996. The Commission invited CRC to offer comments on the draft optional protocol and to be represented at future sessions of the working group.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/37.

It invited the Special Rapporteur and a representative of CRC to attend the group's next meeting and asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance needed to enable them to participate in the development of the draft optional protocol.

As at 31 December 1995,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in 1990,⁽⁴⁹⁾ had been ratified by Morocco and the Philippines, acceded to by Colombia, Egypt, Seychelles and Uganda, and signed by Chile and Mexico.

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 31 August 1995⁽⁵⁰⁾ and to the Commission on Human Rights as at 1 November.⁽⁵¹⁾

Commission action. On 24 February, the Commission called on⁽⁵²⁾ all Member States to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority, and invited UN agencies and organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to disseminate information on it and promote its understanding. The Secretary-General was to provide all assistance necessary to promote the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights and the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights and to report in 1996 on the Convention's status and on efforts made by the Secretariat to promote it and the protection of the rights of migrant workers.

(For further information on migrant workers, see next chapter.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/169.

International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and norms set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Bearing in mind the principles and norms established within the framework of the International Labour Organization and the importance of the work done in connection with migrant workers and members of their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that, despite the existence of an already established body of principles and norms, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and to guarantee respect for the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Aware of the situation of migrant workers and members of their families and the marked increase in migratory movements that has occurred, especially in certain parts of the world,

Considering that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, all States are urged to guarantee the protection of the human rights of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Underlining the importance of the creation and promotion of conditions to foster greater harmony and tolerance between migrant workers and the rest of the society of the State in which they reside, with the aim of eliminating the growing manifestations of racism and xenophobia taking place in segments of many societies and perpetrated by individuals or groups against migrant workers,

Recalling its resolution 45/158 of 18 December 1990, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Bearing in mind that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, States are invited to consider the possibility of signing and ratifying the Convention at the earliest possible time,

Recalling that, in its resolution 49/175 of 23 December 1994, it requested the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fiftieth session a report on the status of the Convention,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the growing manifestations of racism, xenophobia and other forms of discrimination and inhuman or degrading treatment directed against migrant workers in different parts of the world;
2. Welcomes the signature or ratification of, or accession to, the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families by some Member States;

3. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority, and expresses the hope that it will enter into force at an early date;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to provide all facilities and assistance necessary for the promotion of the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

5. Invites the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on and promoting understanding of the Convention;

6. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to submit to it at its fifty-first session an updated report on the status of the Convention;

7. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its fifty-first session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments".

Other activities

Follow-up to 1993 World Conference

Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission on Human Rights asked⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General to distribute as widely as possible the 1993 Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action.⁽²⁾ States were urged to continue to give those documents widespread publicity. Special representatives, special rapporteurs, independent experts and thematic working groups were called on to take into account the recommendations of the Declaration and Programme of Action within their respective mandates. The Commission also asked the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, the General Assembly and other UN entities related to human rights to take further action with a view to implementing fully all recommendations of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights. The High Commissioner was to continue to coordinate human rights promotion and protection activities and to report on measures taken and progress achieved in implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action. The Secretary-General was asked to propose adequate resources in the 1996-1997 programme budget to implement them.

Reports of the High Commissioner. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1994,⁽³⁾ the High Commissioner reported⁽⁴⁾ on progress made towards full implementation of the recommendations of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. Those documents, he said, provided a dynamic and creative framework for action at all levels to promote and protect human rights. The UN organs had placed their human rights activities within the perspective of the Declaration and had resolved to achieve its objectives. Governments had reaffirmed the relevance of the Declaration to national needs and the importance of cooperating internationally within its framework. NGOs had been inspired by the Declaration and many reported adopting new methods and initiating new activities to achieve its objectives. The High Commissioner stated that the creation of his post had been the most concrete result of the Declaration and that he had taken that Declaration and its objectives as the foundation of his activities.

In November, the High Commissioner noted⁽⁵⁾ that under the impact of the Declaration and Programme of Action and the mandate entrusted to him, the UN human rights programme was undergoing a profound transformation. In coordinated efforts aimed at implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action, emphasis was placed on strengthening UN human rights machinery and adapting it to new challenges, including human rights field operations and follow-up of recommendations and decisions of human rights organs and bodies; assistance to vulnerable groups; enhancement of various forms of activities taken by Governments and civil society to promote and protect human rights; and strengthening cooperation in implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action.

In October, the High Commissioner transmitted the report⁽⁶⁾ of a meeting of special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and chairmen of working groups of the special procedures and advisory services of the Commission (Geneva, 29-31 May), as called for in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. The participants reviewed items addressed at their first meeting in 1994(3) and discussed: cooperation with the High Commissioner; working relations with the Commission; coordination of extra-conventional mechanisms, with particular emphasis on implementation of additional thematic resolutions adopted by the Commission; integrating the human rights of women; resources and administration; and restructuring the Centre for Human Rights.

Participants regretted the scarcity of resources allotted for the protection of human rights. The situation was even more disturbing in the light of the widening discrepancy between real growth, if any, in Secretariat resources and the exponential growth in mandates requiring Secretariat servicing. They recommended greater administrative and technical support for participants' activities.

In an addendum,⁽⁷⁾ the High Commissioner transmitted the text of his address and that of the UN Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights at the meeting.

The next meeting was scheduled for May 1996 in Geneva.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/201.

Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/121 of 20 December 1993, in which it endorsed the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, as well as its resolution 49/208 of 23 December 1994 on the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1994/95 of 9 March 1994, in which the Commission decided to review annually the progress towards the full implementation of the recommendations contained in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Reaffirming the view of the World Conference on Human Rights that the promotion and protection of human rights is a matter of priority for the international community,

Considering that the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms is one of the basic purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and one of the main priorities of the Organization,

Recognizing the urgency of eliminating denials and violations of human rights, as expressed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Convinced that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action has to be translated into effective action by States, the competent United Nations organs and organizations and other organizations concerned, including non-governmental organizations,

Recognizing the importance of dialogue and cooperation between Governments and non-governmental organizations in the field of human rights,

Noting that the activities envisaged in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action add further to the workload and the responsibilities of the United Nations human rights system and that so far only initial steps have been taken towards bridging the gap between resources and the mandated outputs, Recalling the request of the Conference to the Secretary-General and the General Assembly to take immediate steps to increase substantially the resources for the human rights programme from within the existing and future regular budgets of the United Nations,

Welcoming the fact that the call of the Conference for a United Nations system-wide approach to human rights issues has been reflected in the recommendations of major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, in particular in the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995 and the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995,

Noting the ongoing efforts to ensure a coordinated follow-up to major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields,

Recognizing that the interdependence of democracy, development and respect for human rights, as stated in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, requires a comprehensive and integrated approach to the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling that in its resolution 48/141 the General Assembly decided to create the post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights as the United Nations official with principal responsibility for United Nations human rights activities, including coordination of the human rights promotion and protection activities throughout the United Nations system,

Noting that at the first regular session of 1994 of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, in April 1994, the executive heads of all United Nations agencies discussed the implications of the results of the Conference for their respective programmes and committed themselves to supporting the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the coordination of the United Nations organs, bodies and the specialized agencies whose activities deal with human rights, as set out in resolution 48/141,

Noting also that the High Commissioner has established a permanent dialogue with the United Nations programmes and agencies whose activities deal with human rights in order to maintain systematic exchanges of information, experience and expertise,

Having considered the report of the High Commissioner,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

2. Endorses the reaffirmation in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the importance of the promotion of universal respect for, and observance and protection of, all human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms the views of the World Conference on Human Rights on the urgency of eliminating denials and violations of human rights;

4. Recognizes that the international community should devise ways and means to remove current obstacles and meet the challenges to the full realization of all human rights and to prevent the continuation of human rights violations resulting therefrom throughout the world;

5. Calls upon all States to take further action with a view to the full realization of all human rights in the light of the recommendations of the Conference;

6. Urges all States to continue to give widespread publicity to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action in order to promote increased awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Reiterates the request of the Conference that immediate steps be taken to increase substantially the resources for the human rights programme from within existing and future regular budgets of the United Nations;

8. Welcomes with appreciation the work of the High Commissioner accomplished thus far, and expresses its commitment to continue to cooperate with and support the High Commissioner in the discharge of his mandate, as set out in resolution 48/141;

9. Requests the High Commissioner, the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and other organs and bodies of the United Nations system related to human rights to take further action with a view to the full implementation of all the recommendations of the Conference;

10. Also requests the High Commissioner to continue to coordinate the human rights promotion and protection activities throughout the United Nations system, as set out in resolution 48/141, including through a permanent dialogue with the United Nations agencies and programmes whose activities deal with human rights;

11. Invites the Administrative Committee on Coordination to continue to discuss the implications of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action for the United Nations system;

12. Requests the High Commissioner to continue to report on the measures taken and the progress achieved in the comprehensive implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

13. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-first session under the sub-item "Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action".

General Assembly resolution 50/201

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.4) without vote, 11 December (meeting 53); 90-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.50), orally revised; agenda item 112 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-53; plenary 99.

Advisory services

In 1995,⁽⁸⁾ under the UN programme of advisory services in human rights established in 1955,⁽⁹⁾ some 215 activities were implemented, compared with 130 in 1994. In addition, 19 countries benefited from the 1995 fellowship programme. Supplementing that were 13 global programme development activities; two interregional project formulation activities; four regional projects; and four regional project formulation activities. Activities were funded by the UN regular budget and by the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, established in 1987.⁽¹⁰⁾ They covered national plans of action for human rights; constitutions; elections; legislative reform; national human rights institutions; law enforcement; the judiciary; the armed forces; conflict resolution; parliament; curriculum development; teacher training; treaty reporting and international obligations; NGOs and civil society; the mass media; information and documentation; regional institutions and arrangements; human rights support in peace-keeping and human rights training for international civil service; national needs assessment; and the annual UN Human Rights Fellowship Programme.

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission, noting the Secretary-General's report on advisory services in human rights during 1994, including the Voluntary Fund,⁽¹¹⁾ called⁽¹²⁾ for implementation of all advisory service activities on the basis of clearly defined objectives and themes; allocation of more human and financial resources to widen advisory services; an inventory and analysis of available advisory services and technical cooperation in the field of human rights from all sources; and an annual report to the Commission on progress in implementing the programme and on operation and administration of the Voluntary Fund. The Commission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to explore the possibilities offered by cooperation between the Centre and UN specialized bodies and other organizations, as well as NGOs.

More efficient management of the Voluntary Fund was requested, as was strict and transparent project management rules, periodical evaluations of the programme and projects, dissemination of evaluation results and the holding of annual information meetings. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1995/269 of 25 July. The Commission asked the Fund's Board of Trustees to exercise its full mandate as an advisory body to promote and solicit contributions and to assist the High Commissioner in monitoring, reviewing and improving the process of selecting and implementing technical assistance projects, the conduct of needs assessments and project evaluation. The Secretary-General was to provide the Board with administrative assistance and to arrange Board meetings so that the Board's report could be included in his annual report to the Commission on advisory services and technical cooperation. It also asked for the incorporation into his next report of Board activities.

Board of Trustees of Voluntary Fund

The Board of Trustees of the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights in 1995 held its third and fourth sessions (Geneva, 20-24 March, 30 October-3 November).⁽⁸⁾

At its fourth session, the Board agreed on priority for financing of the following categories of endorsed projects: projects complementing other initiatives or constituting an integral part of a large programme, financed by different bi- or multi-lateral donors; projects which were reviewed previously and given favourable response by the Board; projects responding to specific mandates of the High Commissioner for Human Rights or to a special programme developed by the Centre for Human Rights; and projects addressing issues relating to the mandates emanating from the Vienna Declaration and Plan of Action. The Board also recommended that the existing administrative and financial procedures of the UN Development Fund and other agencies providing technical cooperation be applied mutatis mutandis to the technical cooperation projects financed under the Voluntary Fund. Projects were endorsed for Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bhutan, El Salvador, Georgia, Haiti, Latvia, Malawi, Nepal, Palestine, Paraguay, Rwanda and Togo. In addition, the Board endorsed a project for regional training in human rights for heads of military academies in Africa; interregional human rights training for heads of military academies from African Lusophone and Commonwealth of Independent States countries; and for a global human rights training programme for the armed forces.

Funds available within the Voluntary Fund to cover 1995 activities amounted to $5,732,383. Also, in 1995, a new full-time Fund Coordinator was appointed.

Albania

In 1995, the Commission on Human Rights considered a report of the Secretary-General on the human rights situation in Albania,⁽¹³⁾ as requested by the Commission in 1994.⁽¹⁴⁾ He stated he had received no reply from the Government to his request for information on implementation of the Commission's 1994 resolution. The Secretary-General summarized advisory services and technical assistance provided to Albania since its 1992 agreement with the Centre for Human Rights.⁽¹⁵⁾

Cambodia

In a January report,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for human rights in Cambodia, Michael Kirby (Australia), described his fourth visit to the country (16-18 November 1994) to take stock of the most recent human rights developments since July 1994. He presented an overview of activities implemented by the Centre for Human Rights in Cambodia from July to November 1994 and discussed the Centre's administrative and financial problems resulting from inadequate budgets approved by the General Assembly.

In a February addendum to that report,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Special Representative presented recommendations following his fifth visit to Cambodia (19-27 January 1995). These related to cultural rights; the rights to health, education, work, a healthy environment and sustainable development; new laws and practices; judicial independence and the rule of law; prisons and other custodial institutions; freedom of expression and the press law; the right to be elected and take part in government; vulnerable groups; Cambodia's fulfilment of its reporting obligations under the conventions to which it was a party; security issues; and ongoing technical support and assistance.

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission asked⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General to assure the protection of the rights of all people in Cambodia and to ensure sufficient resources for the enhanced functioning of the presence in the country of the Centre for Human Rights. Expressing concern at the serious human rights violations detailed by the Special Representative, the Commission endorsed his conclusions and recommendations and asked him to evaluate the extent to which the recommendations were followed up and implemented. It noted with appreciation the Secretary-General's use of the UN Trust Fund for a Human Rights Education Programme in Cambodia to finance Centre activities. The Commission decided to review in 1996 the programmes and mandates set out in a 1993 resolution.⁽¹⁹⁾ It asked the Centre, in cooperation with relevant UN specialized agencies and development programmes, to develop and implement programmes, with the consent and cooperation of the Government, in priority areas identified by the Special Representative, paying particular attention to vulnerable groups. The Special Representative was to report to the Commission in 1996 and to the General Assembly in 1995. The Secretary-General was asked to renew the Special Representative's mandate, to provide resources to enable him to fulfil his tasks, and to report in 1996 on the role of the Centre in assisting Cambodia and on the Special Representative's recommendations.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/271, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to renew the Special Representative's mandate and to provide the necessary resources. It also approved the request for reports from the Special Representative.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October report,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed human rights activities in Cambodia carried out by the UN system. He also discussed the Special Representative's recommendations and the role of the Centre for Human Rights in assisting the Government and people of Cambodia to promote and protect human rights. The Special Representative's recommendations submitted between August 1994 and August 1995 were annexed to the report together with a summary of any action known to have been taken by the Government. The Secretary-General also discussed the Special Representative's sixth visit to Cambodia (5-16 August 1995) and reviewed his earlier recommendations and action subsequently taken.

The Secretary-General updated data on human rights issues concerning health care, education, the right to work, housing, the right to a healthy environment and to sustainable development, new laws and practices, judicial independence and the rule of law, conditions in prisons and other custodial institutions, freedom of expression and the press law, the right to be elected and to participate in government, the situation of vulnerable groups, including women, children and minorities, Cambodia's reporting obligations under international covenants to which it was a party and security issues. He made recommendations regarding the rights to health, education, housing and a healthy environment; new laws and practices; judicial independence; prisons and other custodial institutions; press law and freedom of expression; the right to be elected and take part in government; vulnerable groups; Cambodia's reporting obligations under international instruments; security issues; and ongoing technical advice and assistance.

Activities and programmes implemented in Cambodia by the Centre for Human Rights between December 1994 and 31 July 1995 were described. Most were to be financed from voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for a Human Rights Education Programme in Cambodia which, as at 30 June 1995, had received some $1.3 million. The Centre assisted in creating a legal framework consistent with international human rights standards and securing the promotion and protection of human rights; developing and strengthening national institutions; establishing a system for the administration of justice consistent with international human rights standards; developing expertise in preparing reports to UN treaty bodies; developing human rights curricula and teacher training; organizing training on freedom of expression for journalists; disseminating human rights information and documentation; training health officials; organizing meetings concerning children in armed conflict; and strengthening human rights activities at the local and provincial levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/178.

Situation of human rights in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note of the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict, signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, including part III thereof, relating to human rights,

Taking note also of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/55 of 3 March 1995, and recalling General Assembly resolution 49/199 of 23 December 1994 and previous relevant resolutions, including Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/6 of 19 February 1993, in which the Commission recommended the appointment of a special representative for Cambodia, and the subsequent appointment by the Secretary-General of a special representative,

6. Notes that communal elections are due to be held in 1996 or early 1997 and National Assembly elections in 1998, and urges the Government of Cambodia to promote and uphold the effective functioning of multi-party democracy, including the right to form political parties, stand for election, take part freely in a representative government and to freedom of expression, in accordance with the principles set out in paragraphs 2 and 4 of annex 5 to the Agreement signed in Paris on 23 October 1991;

12. Expresses particularly grave concern at the comments made by the Special Representative concerning the reluctance of the courts to charge members of the military and other security forces for serious criminal offences, and encourages the Government of Cambodia to address this problem, which in effect places persons in authority above the principle of equality before the law;

13. Further expresses grave concern at the devastating consequences and destabilizing effects of the indiscriminate use of anti-personnel land-mines on Cambodian society, encourages the Government of Cambodia to continue its support and efforts for the removal of these mines, and welcomes the intention of the Government of Cambodia to ban all anti-personnel land-mines;

General Assembly resolution 50/178

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 53); 18-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.40), orally revised; agenda item 112 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 53; plenary 99.

El Salvador

On 7 March, the Commission on Human Rights, noting the January report of independent expert Pedro Nikken (Venezuela),⁽²¹⁾ commended⁽²²⁾ him for his work and welcomed his proposal for the conclusion of a technical cooperation agreement between the Government of El Salvador and the Centre for Human Rights. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to facilitate the implementation of the agreement. The Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights was urged to support the technical cooperation programme agreed upon. The Commission decided to conclude consideration of the matter.

Other action. A March note by the Secretariat⁽²³⁾ contained a 23 February letter from the Director of the Human Rights Division of the UN Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL) addressed to the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, referring to the independent expert's proposal that the Centre's technical assistance programme be carried out in close coordination with the mechanism to be elaborated by the Secretary-General and the Security Council after the withdrawal of ONUSAL. The Director pointed out that, following ONUSAL's withdrawal on 30 April, the Secretary-General had proposed that the UN establish, for an initial period of six months, an on-site team to provide good offices, verify implementation of outstanding points on the peace agreements and provide information to the Secretary-General. Council members welcomed the proposal (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

Guatemala

Commission action. Noting the report by independent expert Monica Pinto (Argentina) on the situation of human rights in Guatemala,⁽²⁴⁾ the Commission on 3 March asked⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General to continue to provide that country and NGOs with advisory services. It also asked that the expert's mandate be extended so that she could continue to examine the situation, provide assistance to the Government and report in 1996 on measures taken by Guatemala.

By decision 1995/268 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's requests.

Subcommission action. On 18 August, the Subcommission asked⁽²⁶⁾ the Government of Guatemala to enable elections to take place in an appropriate political climate and asked parties to the negotiations to consider measures to ensure unrestricted exercise of political rights. The Government was requested to support the Supreme Electoral Tribunal's programmes and to give priority to the expansion of economic and social development programmes. The Commission of the European Union, the Organization of American States and the UN were asked to provide the economic and practical support that the Supreme Electoral Tribunal might seek to ensure a clear and transparent electoral process. The Subcommission asked the General Assembly to look favourably on the extension of the mandate of the UN Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala (see PART TWO, Chapter III), established in 1994.⁽²⁷⁾ It also asked the Government and Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca to step up efforts to apply the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights⁽²⁸⁾ and called on them to pursue the negotiating process. The Secretary-General was called on to provide the necessary means for that process, and the Assembly of Civil Society was asked to continue to take part in it.

Romania

In a March report,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General evaluated the first comprehensive country programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights implemented in Romania. Two external experts appointed by the Centre for Human Rights and two experts appointed by the Government had conducted interviews with selected categories of beneficiaries of the programme, such as ministry staff, professionals, NGOs and the Romanian Institute for Human Rights (IRDO).

The team concluded that the seminars had provided a basis for or complement to wider reform efforts. Laws to protect human rights had been drafted and institutions were being strengthened. However, the extent to which knowledge of human rights had been spread within the society at large remained unclear. The team noted that the ultimate responsibility for enhancing the effects of the programme must be assumed by the Government, which was the guarantor of its sustainability.

The team also made recommendations concerning coordination and planning; NGOs; participation of civilians; international and national experts; decentralization of programme activities; topic selection for seminars; and programme evaluation and cost. An independent review of IRDO was urged to take stock of its experience and examine its priorities.

Somalia

On 3 March, the Commission, recalling its 1994 request for the independent expert to report on conditions in Somalia,⁽³⁰⁾ and noting that the expert had not been able to carry out his mandate owing to the circumstances in Somalia, called on⁽³¹⁾ all parties to the conflict to work towards a peaceful solution to the crisis (see PART TWO, Chapter II). The Commission urged them to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, to prevent violations of international humanitarian law and human rights, to apply criminal justice standards and to protect UN personnel. It asked the independent expert to study how best to implement a programme of advisory services for Somalia, upon request. The Secretary-General was asked to provide resources to fund the activities of the independent expert and the Centre, and Governments and organizations in a position to do so were invited to respond positively to requests by the Secretary-General for assistance. The Secretary-General was asked to report to the Commission in 1996. The requests to the Secretary-General and the expert were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1995/272 of 25 July.

On 31 July, the Secretary-General approved the appointment of Mohamed Charfi (Tunisia) as independent expert on Somalia.

Togo

On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission welcomed⁽³²⁾ the forthcoming dispatch to Togo of an evaluation mission of the Centre for Human Rights, with a view to developing a programme of technical assistance to strengthen human rights promotion and protection under the Centre's programme of advisory services and technical assistance. The Secretary-General was to report to the Commission in 1996, with a view to ending consideration of the question.

Public information

Pursuant to a 1994 request of the Commission on Human Rights,⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁴⁾ on public information activities in the area of human rights, including the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights, launched by the General Assembly in 1988⁽³⁵⁾ and carried out by the Centre for Human Rights and the Department of Public Information (DPI). Campaign activities included: the publications programme; the translation programme; briefings, exhibitions and human rights observances; fellowships and internships; and workshops, seminars and training courses.

The Secretary-General stated that the Campaign was firmly in place and that a strategy had been developed to ensure its continued, effective implementation. However, currently the Centre was unable to guarantee the strategy's full implementation. Adequate resources were needed to ensure that the opportunity offered by an upsurge in public interest in UN work in the area of human rights was not wasted.

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission urged⁽³⁶⁾ the Centre for Human Rights to finalize its comprehensive review of the programme of information and publications, including the elaboration of a new information strategy, to assess the effectiveness of the programme and to report in 1997. The Centre should continue to develop training courses and materials, including targeted training manuals for professional audiences. DPI was urged to utilize more effectively UN information centres (UNICs) for the timely dissemination of basic information and reference materials on human rights and fundamental freedoms, and to ensure that UNICs were supplied with adequate materials in UN official languages and relevant national languages and that available resources were used to produce factual information materials on human rights in all regions. Member States were encouraged to provide and promote publicity for UN human rights activities and to accord priority to disseminating, in their national and local languages, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁽³⁷⁾ the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights⁽³⁸⁾ and other international instruments.

The Commission called on the High Commissioner for Human Rights to coordinate and harmonize human rights information strategies, to ensure close cooperation between the Centre and DPI in implementing the aims of the World Public Information Campaign, and to coordinate with the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization regarding education for human rights. It asked the Secretary-General to take advantage of the collaboration of NGOs in implementing the Campaign, to consider making available resources from the UN regular budget to allow the Centre to implement fully its publications programme and to submit in 1997 a report on public information activities.

Human rights education

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission called⁽³⁹⁾ on Governments to contribute, in cooperation with NGOs, educators and the media, to the implementation of the Plan of Action for the UN Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽⁴⁰⁾ The High Commissioner was to submit proposals in 1996 to supplement the Plan, taking into account the views submitted by Governments, and to coordinate implementation of the Plan and carry out other tasks enumerated therein. He was also asked to conduct the survey of human rights education and prepare a preliminary report provided for in the Plan as soon as possible; and to convene the international planning conference for the Decade. The Centre for Human Rights was to support the High Commissioner's efforts in implementing the Plan. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of establishing a voluntary fund within the High Commissioner's Office to be used in implementing the Plan. It asked human rights monitoring bodies to emphasize implementation by Member States of their obligation to promote human rights education. It invited the specialized agencies to contribute to the implementation of the Plan for the Decade and called on NGOs to increase their involvement in education in human rights and to cooperate with the Centre in implementing the Plan.

Report of the High Commissioner. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted a report⁽⁴¹⁾ of the High Commissioner on implementation of the Plan of Action by States, the Secretariat, human rights treaty bodies, UN specialized agencies and programmes, NGOs and other institutions. Future activities included: an international consultation to consider the relevance of education theories and practices to human rights education, to be organized by Costa Rica; a preliminary survey on existing human rights education programmes and initiatives; a survey of existing versions (printed, pictorial, audiovisual, etc.) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; and the establishment of a media advisory board for public information and education on human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/173.

United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education: towards a culture of peace

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that, in the context of respect for the permanent values on which the United Nations system is based, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization has, since its founding, worked to ensure the free circulation of ideas, to bring individuals and cultures closer together and to ensure respect for human rights, the effective exercise of democracy, justice and freedom,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 48/126 of 20 December 1993 and 49/213 of 23 December 1994 on the proclamation of the United Nations Year for Tolerance, and its resolution 49/184 of 23 December 1994 proclaiming the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education,

Welcoming with appreciation resolution 5.3 adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-eighth session, which invites the Director-General to implement the activities of the transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace", in particular unit 1, entitled "Education for peace, human rights, democracy, international understanding and tolerance",

Considering that the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004 will make a fundamental contribution to understanding and peaceful coexistence among individuals and nations and is consistent with the transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace",

1. Expresses its satisfaction at resolution 5.3 adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-eighth session, which contains the transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace";

2. Encourages countries, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to take all necessary action to ensure education for peace, human rights, democracy, international understanding and tolerance;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the progress of educational activities in the framework of the transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace".

General Assembly resolution 50/173

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 53); 66-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.33); agenda item 112 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 53; plenary 99.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/177.

United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming article 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, according to which "education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms",

Recalling the provisions of other international human rights instruments, such as those of article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and article 28 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, that reflect the aims of the aforementioned article,

Taking into account Commission on Human rights resolution 1993/56 of 9 March 1993, in which the Commission recommended that knowledge of human rights, both in its theoretical dimension and its practical application, should be established as a priority in educational policies,

Convinced that human rights education should involve more than the provision of information and should constitute a comprehensive life-long process by which people at all levels in development and in all strata of society learn respect for the dignity of others and the means and methods of ensuring that respect in all societies,

Convinced also that human rights education contributes to a concept of development consistent with the dignity of women and men of all ages that takes into account the diverse segments of society such as children, indigenous people, minorities and disabled persons,

Taking into account the efforts to promote human rights education made by educators and non-governmental organizations in all parts of the world, as well as by inter-governmental organizations, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund,

Convinced further that each woman, man and child, to realize their full human potential, must be made aware of all their human rights—civil, cultural, economic, political and social,

Believing that human rights education constitutes an important vehicle for the elimination of gender-based discrimination and ensuring equal opportunities through the promotion and protection of the human rights of women,

Aware of the experience in human rights education of United Nations peace-building operations, including the United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador and the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia,

Considering the World Plan of Action on Education for Human Rights and Democracy, adopted by the International Congress on Education for Human Rights and Democracy convened by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at Montreal from 8 to 11 March 1993, according to which education for human rights and democracy is itself a human right and a prerequisite for the realization of human rights, democracy and social justice,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular section II, paragraphs 78 to 82 thereof,

Recalling that it is the responsibility of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to coordinate relevant United Nations education and public information programmes in the field of human rights,

Recalling its resolution 49/184 of 23 December 1994, by which it proclaimed the ten-year period beginning on 1 January 1995 the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, welcomed the Plan of Action for the Decade, and requested the High Commissioner to coordinate the implementation of the Plan of Action,

Taking note of the report of the High Commissioner to the General Assembly, in which he stated that human rights education was essential for the encouragement of harmonious intercommunity relations, for mutual tolerance and understanding and, finally, for peace,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the implementation of the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/184;

2. Appeals to all Governments to contribute to the implementation of the Plan of Action, and in particular, in accordance with national conditions, to establish a national focal point (national committee) for human rights education and a resource and training centre for human rights education or, where such a centre already exists, to work towards its strengthening, and to develop and implement an action-oriented national plan for human rights education, as foreseen in the Plan of Action;

3. Requests the High Commissioner to coordinate the implementation of the Plan of Action and to carry out the tasks enumerated therein;

4. Requests the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and the Commission on Human Rights, in cooperation with the existing human rights monitoring bodies, United Nations specialized agencies and programmes and other competent intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to support efforts by the High Commissioner in the implementation of the Plan of Action;

5. Requests the existing human rights monitoring bodies to place emphasis on the implementation by Member States of their international obligation to promote human rights education;

6. Invites all relevant specialized agencies, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organization, United Nations bodies, especially the United Nations Children's Fund, and other intergovernmental organizations to contribute, within their respective spheres of competence, to the implementation of the Plan of Action and to cooperate with the High Commissioner for that purpose;

7. Calls upon international, regional and national non-governmental organizations, in particular those concerned with women, labour, development and the environment, as well as other social justice groups, human rights advocates, educators, religious organizations and the media, to increase their involvement in formal and non-formal education in human rights and to cooperate with the High Commissioner and the Centre for Human Rights in implementing the Plan of Action;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of establishing a voluntary fund for human rights education, with special provision for the support of the human rights education activities of non-governmental organizations, to be administered by the Centre for Human Rights;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community and to intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned with human rights and education;

10. Decides to consider this matter at its fifty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 53); 85-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.38); agenda item 112 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 53; plenary 99.

National institutions and regional arrangements

National institutions for human rights protection Reports of the Secretary-General. In a January report,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General presented the views of six Governments and five national institutions concerning possible forms of participation by national institutions in UN meetings dealing with human rights. Most States felt that national institutions should act with complete independence and that they might participate in UN meetings in their own right, which would imply that they were credible. The national institutions wished to participate in the annual sessions of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Sub-commission, periodic meetings of treaty bodies and meetings of the General Assembly's Third Committee.

The Secretary-General recommended that if the Commission decided that national institutions should participate in meetings of UN human rights bodies, it should state that their structure and operation must conform with the principles relating to the status of national institutions as adopted by the Assembly in 1993.⁽⁴³⁾ He also recommended that the Commission should be informed whenever a national institution was established in order to accord it the appropriate status.

In September, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁴⁴⁾ on activities taken by the Centre for Human Rights to establish and strengthen national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights. The Centre held an international workshop (see below) and assisted national institutions under its programme of advisory services and technical assistance. The Coordination Committee for national institutions, set up to promote the establishment and strengthening of national human rights mechanisms, held its second session (Geneva, 22-23 February 1995), at which it emphasized strengthening its links with the High Commissioner and the Centre. The Secretary-General described action taken at the national and regional levels by national institutions and measures taken by Governments to promote those institutions. As to the status of the institutions, the Secretary-General noted that, according to the Coordination Committee, national institutions should be granted the same status as the specialized agencies and space should be made available so that their representatives could express their views as representatives of independent bodies. The Committee also asked that it should be consulted by the Centre about which national institutions should be entitled to participate in meetings of UN human rights bodies. The Secretary-General replied that he believed that the question of the status of national institutions at such meetings was a matter for the Commission and the Economic and Social Council to decide and he expected them to reach an appropriate decision. He would report to the Commission in 1996 and the Commission would decide on the status of national institutions in relation to UN human rights bodies.

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission asked⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General to give high priority to requests from Member States for assistance in establishing and strengthening national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights as part of the programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights. It also asked him to invite Member States that had not done so to inform him of their views concerning possible forms of participation by national institutions in UN meetings dealing with human rights, and to include that information in his 1996 report; and to ensure that national institutions were informed about the relevant activities of the Centre for Human Rights. The Centre was asked to provide technical assistance for States wishing to establish or strengthen their national institutions and to organize training programmes.

International workshop. The third International Workshop on National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (Manila, 18-21 April),⁽⁴⁶⁾ organized by the Centre for Human Rights in cooperation with the Philippine Commission for Human Rights, was held to assess the implementation of the 1993 principles and to consider ways of strengthening existing national institutions and encouraging their creation in countries where they did not exist. It also addressed national institutions and the fight against racism and racial discrimination, national institutions and the protection of migrant workers, national institutions and indigenous peoples, and relations between national institutions and the Commission on Human Rights and other UN forums. On 21 April, the Workshop adopted the Manila Declaration and recommendations for the Commission. The first two workshops were held in 1991⁽⁴⁷⁾ and 1993.⁽⁴⁸⁾

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 53); 28-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.37), orally revised; agenda item 112 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-53; plenary 99.

Regional arrangements

The Commission on Human Rights had before it in 1995 a report of the Secretary-General on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,⁽⁴⁹⁾ in which he drew the Commission's attention to a report he had submitted to the General Assembly in 1994.⁽⁵⁰⁾

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission asked⁽⁵¹⁾ the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen exchanges between the UN and regional intergovernmental organizations dealing with human rights. He was to submit in 1997 a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, to formulate concrete proposals and recommendations on ways to strengthen the cooperation between the UN and regional arrangements in the field of human rights and to include the results of action taken in pursuance of the Commission's resolution.

Asia and the Pacific

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in 1994,⁽⁵²⁾ the Secretary-

General submitted a report⁽⁵³⁾ on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in Asia and the Pacific. He discussed cooperation with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) (Bangkok, Thailand), and contacts with Bhutan, Cambodia, Indonesia, Japan, Mongolia, Nepal and the Republic of Korea, which were pursued and strengthened by the High Commissioner and the Centre through the programme of advisory services and technical assistance. The Secretary-General described activities of NGOs and summarized the views of States in the region regarding the Commission's 1994 resolution.

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission asked⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Secretary-General to facilitate the exchange of ideas and information regarding matters of common human rights interest in Asia and the Pacific and to give attention to countries in the region by allocating more resources from existing UN funds to enable them to benefit from all activities under the programme of advisory services and technical assistance. It called on the Centre for Human Rights to facilitate better access to and fuller utilization of the programmes by all countries in the region. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1996 on progress achieved in implementing the Commission's resolution.

The Commission's requests to the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1995/267 of 25 July. The Council also endorsed the conclusions of the third workshop for the Asia and Pacific region on human rights issues,⁽⁵²⁾ contained in the Chairman's concluding remarks, that such workshops should be organized regularly and if possible annually.

Cooperation with UN human rights bodies

As requested by the Commission in 1994,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Secretary-General in February 1995 summarized information on specific cases, received and processed by UN human rights bodies, in which persons alleged that they had been intimidated or prevented from availing themselves of UN procedures established for the protection of human rights or had suffered reprisals for having done so or for having provided information on human rights violations.⁽⁵⁶⁾ The reported reprisals ranged from veiled threats to extrajudicial executions and the alleged victims were private individuals or members of NGOs that were or had been sources of information about human rights violations for UN human rights bodies.

On 8 March, the Commission urged⁽⁵⁷⁾ Governments to refrain from acts of intimidation or reprisal against: persons who sought to cooperate or had cooperated with representatives of UN human rights bodies, or who had provided testimony or information to them; individuals who availed themselves of UN procedures and those who had provided legal assistance to them for that purpose; those who submitted communications under procedures established by human rights instruments; and relatives of victims of human rights violations. It requested representatives of UN human rights bodies and treaty bodies monitoring the observance of human rights to help prevent the hampering of access to UN human rights procedures and to continue to take urgent steps to prevent the occurrence of intimidation or reprisal. It also requested them to include in their reports a reference to allegations of intimidation or reprisal, as well as an account of action taken. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to draw its resolution to the attention of UN human rights and treaty bodies and to report in 1996.

Chapter II

Protection of human rights

In 1995, the United Nations continued to devote significant efforts to protecting the citizens of the world from basic human rights abuses and to seek redress and protection for victims. Explosive regional conflicts, often ethnic-based, and continuing political and social upheavals in many countries spurred extensive UN involvement in human tragedies involving mass exoduses, terrorism, genocide and other human rights-related areas.

During the year, progress was made on a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Racial and ethnic discrimination—a particularly odious and widespread human rights abuse—continued in many parts of the world, despite relentless efforts by the United Nations. One success in this area was the elimination of apartheid, the institutionalized system of racial separation in South Africa, due in large part to more than four decades of UN activity, including economic and other types of strictly enforced global sanctions.

Details of the ongoing work of the United Nations in 1995 to address human rights problems follow.

Racial discrimination and racism

Third Decade against racism

The General Assembly in 1993 proclaimed the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2003) and adopted the Decade's Programme of Action.⁽¹⁾ The Third Decade's goals and objectives were those adopted by the Assembly in 1973 for the first Decade.⁽²⁾

The Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993), proclaimed by the Assembly in 1983,⁽³⁾ was carried out in accordance with the plan of activities for 1985-1989 put forward in 1984⁽⁴⁾ and the plan, approved by the Assembly in 1987,⁽⁵⁾ covering the remainder of the Decade, 1990-1993.

Implementation of Programme for the Decade

Reports of the Secretary-General. In January, the Secretary-General provided information on activities to combat racism and racial discrimination carried out by two Governments, one UN body and six non-governmental organizations (NGOs).⁽⁶⁾

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in July to the Economic and Social Council a report⁽⁷⁾ describing activities undertaken or planned by UN bodies and the specialized agencies to combat racism and racial discrimination within the framework of the Third Decade. In an addendum,⁽⁸⁾ he provided similar information received from 10 Governments, three intergovernmental organizations and an NGO.

The Secretary-General stated that the Centre for Human Rights had not been in a position to initiate the implementation of the plan of activities for the first third of the Decade (1994-1997) due to a lack of resources. In that regard, he noted the need to establish a focal point to coordinate activities for the Decade. He concluded that contributions to the work of the Decade made by UN bodies and organizations, Governments, inter-governmental organizations and NGOs represented global and concerted efforts to address the issues and to provide long-lasting solutions. He recommended government implementation of the Plan of Action for the UN Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004) (see preceding chapter); measures to promote information and publications about human rights; strengthening national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights; and establishing "community relations commissions" to identify the seeds of future tension and take preventive action. The Secretary-General proposed that the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism and racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance take account of all types of information, including from the mass media, and that the Centre build up its database and access information from diverse sources to support his work.

As requested by the Assembly in 1994,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General supplemented⁽¹⁰⁾ in October information submitted to the Economic and Social Council in July. He described efforts taken by the UN and NGOs to prevent and combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance.

On 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 50/441, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Commission action. On 24 February, the Commission on Human Rights appealed⁽¹¹⁾ to all States that had not ratified or acceded to the relevant international instruments to combat racism and racial discrimination to do so. It urged Governments to combat new forms of racism and asked them, international organizations and NGOs to increase activities to combat racism and racial discrimination and to assist the victims of those phenomena. It asked the Secretary-General to coordinate the programmes of UN bodies with a view to achieving the objectives of the Third Decade; to accord special attention to the situation of migrant workers and their families and to include information on them in his reports; to continue to study the effects of racial discrimination on children of minorities and those of migrant workers in the areas of education, training and employment, and to submit recommendations on measures to combat those effects; and to publish and distribute as soon as possible the revised model legislation for the guidance of Governments in the enactment of further legislation against racial discrimination, submitted to the General Assembly in 1993.⁽¹²⁾ The Commission asked the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and aids to promote educational and training activities on human rights and against racism and racial discrimination.

Regretting that some activities scheduled for the Second Decade had not been implemented due to a lack of resources, the Commission called on the international community to provide financial resources for efficient action against racism and racial discrimination, appealed for generous contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and asked the Secretary-General to ensure that financial resources were provided to implement the activities of the Third Decade in the 1994-1995 and 1996-1997 bienniums. It asked Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, other intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to participate in activities of the Third Decade. The Commission recommended that activities to be carried out in the first third of the Decade (1994-1997), detailed in a 1994 report of the Secretary-General,⁽¹³⁾ be implemented. The Secretary-General should establish a focal point within the Centre for Human Rights to review information concerning activities carried out under the Third Decade and to make recommendations on activities to be undertaken. He was to submit an annual report on all activities of Member States, UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs, analysing information received on activities to combat racism and racial discrimination, and on measures to improve the coordination of the activities of the Programme of Action or to supplement it.

Contemporary forms of racism

Report of the Special Rapporteur (January). As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1994,⁽¹⁴⁾ Special Rapporteur Maurice Glélé-Ahanhanzo (Benin) submitted in January a progress report describing his activities in 1994 and those planned for 1995, with detailed information on incidents of contemporary manifestations of racism and racial discrimination brought to his attention.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Special Rapporteur also presented information on measures taken by seven Governments and one intergovernmental body to prevent and punish racist and xenophobic acts and practices.

In an addendum,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Special Rapporteur discussed his 1994 visit to the United States (9-22 October) to verify allegations of racism and racial discrimination against various ethnic groups and in the administration of criminal justice.

Commission action. On 24 February, the Human Rights Commission appealed⁽¹⁷⁾ to Governments to promote measures to eradicate all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance by making efforts to harmonize their domestic legislation, and to Governments, UN organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to supply information to the Special Rapporteur. It asked him to continue to examine incidents of contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, any form of discrimination against blacks, Arabs and Muslims, xenophobia, negrophobia, anti-Semitism and related intolerance, as well as governmental measures to overcome them, and to report in 1996. The Commission also asked him to exchange views with relevant mechanisms and UN treaty bodies and to use sources of information, including country visits and an evaluation of mass media, and to elicit the responses of Governments regarding allegations of violations. It encouraged him to present further recommendations concerning human rights education and recommendations on measures to prevent and eradicate problems within the purview of his mandate. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to seek the views of Governments on the possibility of using existing voluntary funds and of establishing a voluntary fund for the rehabilitation and social reintegration of victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and to report to the General Assembly in 1995. Regretting the difficulties encountered by the Special Rapporteur in preparing his 1995 report due to the lack of necessary resources, it asked the Secretary-General to assist him to provide an interim report to the Assembly in 1995 and a comprehensive report to the Commission in 1996; those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1995/255 of 25 July.

The Commission took note of a 1994 recommendation⁽¹⁴⁾ of its Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities relating to the possible convening in 1997 of a world conference against racism, racial and ethnic discrimination, xenophobia and other related contemporary forms of intolerance.

In March, Cuba introduced in the Commission a draft text entitled "Violation of human rights in the United States of America as a result of racism and racial discrimination persisting in United States society".⁽¹⁸⁾ At the request of the United States, a roll-call vote was taken by which the draft was rejected (32 to 3, with 18 abstentions).

Report of the Special Rapporteur (September). In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a progress report of the Special Rapporteur,⁽¹⁹⁾ describing his activities in 1995; summarizing problems faced in efforts to combat racism, together with recent incidents of racism and racial discrimination brought to his attention; and providing information on measures taken by Governments to remedy situations. The Special Rapporteur concluded that racism and racial discrimination were on the rise, fed by economic, religious and social causes, and xenophobia was becoming commonplace. He recommended compulsory human rights teaching and mobilizing the mass media to ensure the dissemination of human rights information. He stated that the Assembly should establish a mechanism for monitoring the use of the media to incite hatred and that States should be more liberal in granting visas to nationals of the South and call on their populations to be more receptive to foreigners and cultural interchange.

On 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 50/441, took note of the Special Rapporteur's report.

Other action. In August, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) held a joint meeting with the Subcommission and the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia,⁽²⁰⁾ as decided in 1994.⁽¹⁴⁾ At the conclusion of the meeting, the CERD and Subcommission Chairmen issued an agreed declaration for joint and cooperative action whereby: the bureaux of the two bodies would meet annually and the two bodies might hold joint meetings in the future; a speedy and efficient flow of information would start immediately; a joint study would begin concerning article 7 (dealing with the adoption of measures to combat prejudices leading to racial discrimination and the promotion of understanding, tolerance and friendship among nations and racial or ethnic groups) of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;⁽²¹⁾ and the two bodies would issue a joint statement concerning massive and gross occurrences of racial and related discrimination.

In their declaration,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Chairmen, among other things, declared their determination to mobilize their efforts to eliminate all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and reiterated their condemnation of human rights violations, in particular genocide and ethnic cleansing. They called for firm and urgent measures by the United Nations and the international community to end the violations, to continue to fight policies and practices of racial discrimination, to help save human lives, to stop ethnic cleansing, to help the voluntary and safe return of refugees to their homes, and to find just political solutions to existing racial, ethnic and related conflicts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/135.

Measures to combat contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/147 of 23 December 1994 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/12 of 24 February 1995,

Bearing in mind the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and, in particular, the attention given in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Aware that racism, being one of the exclusionist phenomena plaguing many societies, requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

Having examined the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including its conclusions and recommendations,

Deeply concerned that, despite continued efforts, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, as well as acts of racial violence, persist and even grow in magnitude, incessantly adopting new forms, including tendencies to establish policies based on racial, religious, ethnic, cultural and national superiority or exclusivity,

Conscious of the fundamental difference between, on the one hand, racism and racial discrimination as governmental policy or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity and, on the other hand, other manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance taking place in segments of many societies and perpetrated by individuals or groups, some of which are directed against migrant workers and members of their families,

Underlining the importance of creating conditions which foster greater harmony and tolerance within societies,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

2. Expresses its full support for the work of the Special Rapporteur, and requests him to continue his exchange of views with relevant mechanisms, related United Nations organs and specialized agencies in order to further their effectiveness and mutual cooperation;

3. Expresses its profound concern at and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and all racist violence, including related acts of random and indiscriminate violence;

4. Expresses its deep concern at and condemnation of manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against migrant workers and members of their families and other vulnerable groups in many societies;

5. Encourages all States, in accordance with the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur in his most recent report, to include in their educational curricula and social programmes, at all levels, as appropriate, knowledge of and tolerance and respect for foreign cultures, peoples and countries;

6. Supports the efforts of Governments in taking measures aimed at the eradication of all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

7. Recognizes that Governments should implement and enforce legislation to prevent acts of racism and racial discrimination;

8. Calls upon all Governments and intergovernmental organizations, with the assistance of non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, to continue to cooperate with and to supply relevant information to the Special Rapporteur;

9. Urges all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur, with a view to enabling him to fulfil his mandate;

10. Requests once again the Secretary-General promptly to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary human and financial assistance in carrying out his mandate and enabling him to submit, in a timely manner, a preliminary report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on this question.

General Assembly resolution 50/135

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/626) without vote, 2 November (meeting 18); draft by Mexico, Philippines (for Group of 77 and China) and Turkey (A/C.3/50/L.5/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 103.

World conference

On 24 February,⁽²²⁾ the Commission, taking note of a 1994 Subcommission resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ decided to recommend, through the Economic and Social Council, that the General Assembly consider at its fiftieth (1995) session the possibility of convening a world conference against racism, racial and ethnic discrimination, xenophobia and other related contemporary forms of intolerance.

By decision 1995/294 of 25 July, the Council approved the Commission's recommendation. No action was taken on the matter by the Assembly in 1995.

Discrimination against minorities

Declaration

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission authorized(¹) the Subcommission to establish, initially for three years, an inter-sessional working group, consisting of five of its members, to meet each year for five working days to promote the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the 1992 Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities,⁽²⁾ particularly to: review the promotion and practical realization of the Declaration; examine possible solutions to problems involving minorities; and recommend further measures to promote and protect the rights of minorities. It asked the Subcommission to make available the working group's annual report and called on States, intergovernmental organizations, UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs to participate in the group's work. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide the group, within existing UN resources, with the services and facilities necessary to fulfil its mandate and to submit a report in 1996.

The Commission urged States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the Declaration, and to give effect to the Declaration. It appealed to them to consider making bilateral and multilateral arrangements or agreements to protect the rights of such minorities. It called on the High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote the implementation of the Declaration and urged treaty bodies and special representatives, special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission to give due regard to it. The Commission called on the Secretary-General to make available, as part of the programme of advisory services and technical assistance of the Centre for Human Rights, qualified expertise on minority issues, including prevention and resolution of disputes to assist situations involving minorities. The Commission called on the Subcommission to examine ways to promote and protect the rights of minorities, as set out in the 1992 Declaration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/31.

Rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/24 of 3 March 1995,

1. Decides to authorize the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to establish an inter-sessional working group of the Subcommission, consisting of five of its members, which shall meet each year for five working days, initially for a three-year period, in order to promote the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, and in particular:

(a) To review the promotion and practical realization of the Declaration;

(b) To examine possible solutions to problems involving minorities, including the promotion of mutual understanding between and among minorities and Governments;

(c) To recommend further measures, as appropriate, for the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Working Group, within existing resources, with all the necessary services and facilities to fulfil its mandate.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Minorities at its first session (Geneva, 28 August-1 September 1995)⁽⁵⁾ reviewed the promotion and practical realization of the Declaration and decided that at its next session it would give priority attention to the constitutional and main legal provisions protecting the existence and identity of minorities; the rights to use their own language, profess and practise their religion and enjoy their own culture; the effective participation of minorities; educational issues; national recourse and conciliation machineries; regional mechanisms for the protection of minorities; the contribution of advisory services and technical assistance; and cooperation and coordination with the international community.

As to possible solutions to problems involving minorities, the Group considered recommendations contained in a 1993 report of its Chairman/Rapporteur concerning measures to facilitate the peaceful and constructive solution of problems involving minorities.⁽⁴⁾ It decided to discuss at its next session the causes and nature of the problems affecting minorities, the facilitation of dialogue between minorities and Governments, technical cooperation, prevention and early-warning systems, and the role of the media. Recommendations for further measures to protect minorities included: the provision of advisory services and technical assistance following the identification of minority problems; the establishment of an early-warning and rapid-action system; and the coordination between UN bodies and organs, Governments, the specialized agencies, international and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General in October described measures for the effective promotion of the Declaration undertaken by 15 Governments, four UN bodies, a UN specialized agency, two UN treaty bodies, four special rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights, two intergovernmental bodies and two NGOs.⁽⁶⁾

In December, the Secretary-General presented information on issues relating to the promotion and implementation of the Declaration received from one Government and one NGO,⁽⁷⁾ as requested by the Commission in 1994.⁽⁸⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/180.

Effective promotion of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/135 of 18 December 1992, by which it adopted the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, as well as its resolution 49/192 of 23 December 1994,

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/31 of 25 July 1995, in which the Council authorized the establishment of the working group, ing the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities,

Acknowledging that the United Nations has an increasingly important role to play regarding the protection of minorities by, inter alia, taking due account of and giving effect to the Declaration,

Concerned by the growing frequency and severity of disputes and conflicts concerning minorities in many countries, and their often tragic consequences,

Affirming that effective measures and the creation of favourable conditions for the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, ensuring effective non-discrimination and equality for all, contribute to the prevention and peaceful solution of human rights problems and situations involving minorities,

Considering that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contribute to political and social stability and peace and enrich the cultural heritage of society as a whole of the States in which such persons live,

Reaffirming the obligation of States to ensure that persons belonging to minorities may exercise fully and effectively all human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law in accordance with the Declaration,
