As requested by the UNEP Governing Council in 1993,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report⁽⁵⁷⁾ describing developments resulting from the work of the Joint International Atomic Energy Agency/International Maritime Organization (IMO)/UNEP Working Group on the carriage of irradiated nuclear fuel by sea. She stated that consultations were ongoing in the relevant IMO committees and subcommittees. In 1995, the IMO Assembly reviewed the Code for the Safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-level Radioactive Wastes in Flasks on Board Ships, which was adopted in 1993.⁽⁵⁸⁾

On 25 May, the Governing Council took note of the Executive Director's report and asked UNEP to continue its collaboration with the relevant organizations and to report on progress in 1997.⁽⁵⁹⁾

Environmental technologies

In a decision of 26 May,⁽⁶⁰⁾ the UNEP Governing Council took note of a report of the Executive Director on cleaner production, environmental technology assessment, awareness and preparedness for emergencies at the local level, and development of international guidelines on information on potential environmental impacts that exporters of a technology could feasibly provide to importers.⁽⁶¹⁾ The Council called on the Executive Director to continue to support Governments and industry in developing cleaner production demonstration countries and to support and monitor the activities of the National Cleaner Production Centres. In collaboration with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the UNEP Industry and Environment/Programme Activity Centre was engaged in establishing National Cleaner Production Centres in a number of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to raise the awareness and strengthen the skills of government and industry managers, promote cooperation with other countries, and launch local demonstration projects and research. While noting progress made in those areas, the Council expressed concern that environmentally unfriendly technologies continued to remain in use. It asked the Executive Director to develop draft international guidelines on information on potential environmental impacts that technology exporters or suppliers should provide to technology importers or users and to develop initial mechanisms of verification. It also requested her to report on progress in 1997.

Hazardous wastes used by the military

Taking note of a February report of the Executive Director on the application of environmental norms by military establishments,⁽⁶²⁾ the UNEP Governing Council, on 25 May,⁽⁶³⁾ authorized the Executive Director to arrange, within available resources, regional meetings, in cooperation with the regional commissions and regional organizations, for implementing a 1993 Council decision⁽⁶⁴⁾ concerning the design and implementation of environmental plans for military establishments relating to hazardous waste management.

Environmental monitoring and assessment

Earthwatch

As requested by the General Assembly in 1993,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Executive Director reported in February on the UN system-wide Earthwatch (environment assessment activities), environment monitoring and environment assessment within UNEP.⁽⁶⁶⁾ Earthwatch was first proposed at the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment⁽⁶⁷⁾ as a UN system-wide mechanism, coordinated by UNEP, to monitor major global disturbance in the environment and to give early warning of problems requiring international action. The first meeting of the inter-agency Earthwatch Working Party in 1994⁽⁶⁸⁾ redefined the mission of Earthwatch as being to coordinate, harmonize and integrate observing, assessment and reporting activities across the UN system to provide environmental and appropriate socioeconomic information, and for early warning of emerging problems requiring international action.

The Executive Director stated that Earthwatch was being revitalized as a collaborative set of international efforts to coordinate, harmonize and integrate observing, assessment and reporting activities. Regarding environment monitoring, she stated that building on the experience of the Global Environment Monitoring System (GEMS) and other efforts, international scientific planning and inter-agency cooperative efforts were underway to advance a set of complementary global observing systems—the Global Climate Observing System, the Global Ocean Observing System, and the Global Terrestrial Observing System. UNEP was a co-sponsor of those systems which intended to go beyond time-limited research programmes towards the operational data collection and assessment necessary to identify and respond to changes which might affect the human condition. Environmental assessment within UNEP included the assessment and reporting functions of GEMS, the data management functions of the Global Resource Information Database, the capacity-building and regional networking of the environment and natural resources information networks and UN system-wide Earthwatch coordination. The programme had been reshaped to attend more explicitly to the needs of policy makers and to the data- and information-handling capacities of countries. The Executive Director outlined a funding strategy for the programme.

By a 25 May decision,⁽⁶⁸⁾ the Governing Council endorsed the refocused strategy of the Programme to undertake, at the request of Governments or their representative bodies, policy-relevant assessment and reporting of environment and development issues through cooperating networks of national and regional agencies, organizations or institutions, and to promote the development of data and information management capacity in the bodies situated in developing countries to ensure their full participation. It asked the Executive Director to continue to provide assistance, within available resources, to developing countries to build capacity to enable them to use and benefit from the data and information acquired through the Earthwatch programme. The Council authorized her to transmit her report and its decision through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session. The report was transmitted by a note of the Secretary-General on 24 August⁽⁶⁹⁾ and was considered by the Assembly before its adoption of resolution 50/110 of 20 December.

By a March note,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Executive Director transmitted to the Governing Council a report of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), which recommended to the Council and interested UN organizations that sufficient resources be allocated to Earthwatch and to capacity-building for information gathering. ACC considered that the Council might wish to address ways to promote ready access to the environmental information essential to ensure a coordinated and efficient approach to informed decision-making for sustainable development, including the implementation of a UN system-wide Earthwatch. In that regard, the report stated that UNEP might be asked to convene an ad hoc governmental expert group to further clarify the matter. ACC recommended that UNEP and other organizations involved in Earthwatch should continue to develop approaches to linking socio-economic and environmental assessment and reporting, and that the Earthwatch Working Party give further attention to the conceptual issues involved. It also recommended that UNEP and concerned organizations of the UN system participate in the process underway to initiate a Development Watch, suggested by the 1994 Earth-watch Working Party,⁽⁵²⁾ and to ensure its close interlinkage with Earthwatch.

On 25 May, the ACC recommendations were endorsed by the Governing Council.⁽⁶⁸⁾ On the same date, the Governing Council asked ACC to continue to report to the Council at its regular sessions.⁽⁷¹⁾

Commission on Sustainable Development.

The Commission on Sustainable Development considered the Secretary-General's March report on information for decision-making,⁽⁷²⁾ in which he proposed that through the coordination of UNEP, the UN system, with NGOs, should support, strengthen and operationalize Earthwatch. He stated that UNDP, UNEP and the UN Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, in cooperation with other interested organizations, should further define Development Watch. The Secretary-General noted that Earthwatch and Development Watch should evolve as two closely linked support systems for monitoring and assessing sustainable development. A programme of work for Development Watch and its linkage to Earthwatch should be provided to the Commission in 1997.

At its April session,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission requested UNEP, with the UN Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, UNEP, the World Bank, WHO and FAO, in cooperation with the regional commissions and other interested organizations, to further define Development Watch and to submit a progress report on the implementation of the programme of work for Development Watch in 1997, taking into account the need for a close linkage between Development Watch and Earthwatch. It urged Governments and major groups, as well as relevant international organizations and the scientific community, to participate in strengthening Earthwatch.

State of the environment

Statement on the environment

In a March report,⁽⁷³⁾ the Executive Director presented to the UNEP Governing Council a statement on the environment, which covered the important new environmental challenges addressed in a proposed sub-programme on globalization trends and the environment, with particular emphasis on trade and environment. She proposed that future statements on the environment focus on one or two critical issues, such as major emerging environmental threats or driving forces of environmental change.

On 26 May, the Governing Council, having considered the Executive Director's statement, welcomed the proposed format of her statement and asked her to continue to improve it.⁽⁷⁴⁾

State of the environment report

In a 26 May decision,⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to prepare a new, comprehensive report on the state of the world environment, consisting of three parts: the present state of the global environment; the state of the global environment in the year 2015; and findings, conclusions and recommendations. It recommended for inclusion in the first two parts issues dealing with essential problems of and threats to the environment and the global effects of expected development growth, population increase and main trends of consumption, production and urbanization patterns. For inclusion in the second part, it recommended the expected impact of population increase, consumption and production patterns and economic development on the environment. The third part should include recommended measures and actions that could effectively reverse unwelcome trends and challenge principal threats to the environment, and specific institutional and legal measures for the implementation of proposed actions. The Council asked that the preparation of the report be based on the existing data collected and prepared by UNEP, in cooperation with UNDP, WHO, FAO, the World Bank and other UN agencies and bodies, and on the results of research and studies by public and private scientific and statistical institutions engaged in the formulation of environmental and development assessments and forecasts. It asked the Executive Director to consult periodically with the Committee of Permanent Representatives regarding the preparation of the report and to submit a first report in 1997.

Environmental indicators

On 25 May, the Governing Council, taking note of the Executive Director's progress report, including a plan of action, on the development and use of environmental indicators,⁽⁵²⁾ endorsed the plan of action on environmental and sustainable development indicators to be carried out in collaboration with other agencies and parties.⁽⁷⁶⁾

Other matters

Global Environment Facility

In a March report,⁽⁷⁷⁾ the Executive Director reviewed UNEP's role in the Global Environmental Facility (GEF) on the basis of the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured GEF, which was adopted in 1994 by the three implementing agencies of GEF—UNDP, UNEP and the World Bank.⁽⁷⁸⁾ UNEP maintained a portfolio of five pilot-phase projects totalling $19.3 million and one pre-investment study of $0.1 million. Three projects were on biodiversity and two were on climate change. Two additional projects were approved by the GEF Council in February, both dealing with climate change.

UNDP action. In his report covering 1995 activities,⁽⁷⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that all 55 UNDP-GEF pilot-phase projects, authorized between 1991 and 1994 and totalling $242.5 million, had been approved as at September 1995; 53 were being implemented. Twenty-one pre-investment projects, totalling $20.8 million, and $13 million for its Small Grants Programme were also approved, bringing the total of the UNDP pilot phase portfolio to $276.5 million. For the UNDP-GEF I portfolio, approvals were granted in 1995 for 31 technical cooperation projects; 20 GEF Project Development Facility (PDF) Block A projects; and 18 GEF PDF Block B projects, including a replenishment of the Small Grants Programme for $25.9 million, bringing the UNDP-GEF I portfolio to $76.5 million.

World Bank. As at the end of fiscal year 1995 (30 June 1995), 63 projects, valued at $558 million, were allocated for World Bank GEF investment projects. The allocation of the Bank's GEF investment project resources, by focal areas, was: 50 per cent for biodiversity; 30 per cent climate change; 12 per cent international waters; 7 per cent the reduction of ozone-depleting substances; and 1 per cent multiple thematic areas.

Environmental law and sustainable development

In a 26 May decision,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Governing Council, expressing concern that three years after UNCED's adoption of Agenda 21 in 1992,⁽²⁵⁾ only limited progress had been made in realizing its goals and objectives and that existing and proposed legal and institutional instruments and arrangements had so far been ineffective in halting the deterioration of the global environment, asked the Executive Director to monitor the implementation of international legal instruments concerning the environment, to elaborate and recommend, where necessary, means to enhance their effectiveness and to provide support to the convention secretariats. It also asked her to update, within available resources, a compilation of international environmental instruments and, in implementing the mandate for a database on national and international environmental law, to use the existing World Conservation Union database as the core archival system. It further asked her to develop a position paper for international environmental law aiming at sustainable development, to prepare a study on the need for and feasibility of new international environmental instruments aiming at sustainable development and to keep the Committee of Permanent Representatives informed of UNEP's progress and to submit a report thereon in 1997.

Environmental standards within the UN

The Governing Council, by a 25 May decision,⁽⁸¹⁾ called on the Executive Director to recommend strategies to promote environmental housekeeping by UNEP, and to advise and encourage the rest of the UN system to develop and apply similar strategies for improving their own environmental performance and promoting sustainable development. It asked the General Assembly to adopt a resolution calling for the application of good environmental housekeeping practices by the UN system as soon as possible and invited the Executive Director to report to the Council, at each of its regular sessions, on the steps taken and progress achieved by UNEP and other entities of the UN system.

Environmental emergencies

In a February report,⁽⁸²⁾ the Executive Director described activities and services provided by the Joint UNEP/UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs Environment Unit, which was set up in 1994⁽⁸³⁾ to deal with environmental aspects of emergencies to Governments upon request. Annexed to the report were the draft terms of reference of the Advisory Group on Environmental Emergencies, which held its first meeting in January 1995.

By a 26 May decision,⁽⁸⁴⁾ the Governing Council welcomed the establishment of the Joint Unit and invited Governments and relevant UN agencies, bodies and programmes to cooperate with it in its efforts to assist countries, particularly developing countries, facing environmental emergencies. It asked the Executive Director to allocate the necessary resources for the 1996-1997 biennium for the administration and operation of the Joint Unit with strict regard to economy. It also asked her to submit in 1997 a progress report on the activities of the Joint Unit.

Women and environment

The UNEP Governing Council, by a 26 May decision,⁽⁸⁵⁾ took note of a report of the Executive Director on the role of women in environment and development,⁽⁸⁶⁾ and of her intention to integrate fully a gender perspective and balance into UNEP's work and activities. It urged Governments to assist her in achieving those goals by proposing qualified candidates of both sexes for vacancies announced to Governments. The Council decided to send a message, which was annexed to its decision, to the Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). The Executive Director was urged to ensure an input and contribution from UNEP on gender and environment in the preparation of other subsequent conferences, particularly the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (see next chapter) and asked her to report in 1997 on the implementation of its decision.

Occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

Taking note of a report of the Executive Director on the environmental situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories,⁽⁸⁷⁾ the Governing Council, on 25 May,⁽⁸⁸⁾ asked her to update the report and to implement a 1993 Council decision,⁽⁸⁹⁾ which requested her to provide technical assistance in Palestinian institutional and self-capacity-building in the environment.

Regional concerns

Africa

On 26 May,⁽⁹⁰⁾ the UNEP Governing Council asked the Executive Director to ensure that in implementing the proposed programme of work and budget for the 1996-1997 biennium,⁽⁹¹⁾ emphasis was placed on areas of concern to Africa, including land resources, with support for implementing the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,⁽⁹²⁾ and conservation and rehabilitation strategies in conflict areas; water resources, including strengthening African inland water management groups and regional technical cooperation networks, and reclamation and rehabilitation of African lakes and wetlands areas; biological resources, with the promotion of the implementation of the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity,⁽⁹³⁾ and related programmes in Africa; coastal and marine resources, including an updated inventory of coastal and marine resources of four African regional seas programmes, and ratification and implementation of African regional seas conventions and protocols; support to the African preparations for the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women (1995) (see PART FOUR, Chapter X); and global and regional servicing and support, including support to the programmes of the 1993 African Ministerial Conference on the Environment⁽⁹⁴⁾ and capacity-building of its secretariat, strengthening of the Regional Office for Africa, a focus on capacity-building, and public awareness, information and participation programmes. It also asked her to implement the activities within available resources and to report in 1997.

In another decision of the same date,⁽⁹⁵⁾ the Council urged the Executive Director to work closely in partnership with UNDP to increase support for technical cooperation among African countries in the area of environmental management and sustainable development and to urge UNDP to explore the possibility of opening a special window for technical cooperation among African countries; to facilitate measures to promote technical cooperation among African countries and capacity-building and utilization in environmental management and sustainable development for the African region; to collaborate with UNDP in seeking support for the mobilization of resources from within the UN system, bilateral and multilateral agencies, NGOs and the private sector to facilitate the development and implementation of further measures for technical cooperation among African countries. It asked her to urge the Economic Commission for Africa to incorporate environmental management and sustainable development into its capacity-building and utilization initiative for Africa and to urge the Organization of African Unity and subregional organizations to incorporate measures and mechanisms for technical cooperation among African countries and capacity-building and utilization for Africa into the programming of their resource mobilization and policy design strategies. The Executive Director was authorized to ask UNDP to carry out a study of the feasibility, modalities, approaches, measures and resource requirements for the successful implementation of technical cooperation among African countries and to collaborate with UNEP on those aspects of the study relating to environmental management and sustainable development; to request UNDP to submit the report of the study to the Economic and Social Council in 1996; and to report to the Governing Council in 1997 on the results of those efforts.

Asia and the South Asian Seas region

By a 25 May decision,⁽⁹⁶⁾ the Governing Council asked the Executive Director to support, within available resources, the objectives of the North-East Asia Regional Environment Programme through technical and financial support to the third meeting on environmental cooperation in north-east Asia, scheduled for early 1996 in Mongolia, and through technical support to the priority project proposals adopted at the second meeting on environmental cooperation in north-east Asia.⁽⁹⁷⁾ On 26 May, the Council asked the Executive Director to support, within available resources, the Regional Office for West Asia.⁽⁹⁸⁾

By another decision of the same date,⁽⁹⁹⁾ the Council called on the Executive Director to give due attention, within the context of UNEP's regional seas programme, to the further development and implementation of the Action Plan for the Protection and Management of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the South Asian Seas region, adopted at a Meeting of Plenipotentiaries (New Delhi, India, 24 March 1995), and to provide, within available resources, adequate finances and staff time for implementing the Action Plan.

Council of Arab Ministers

The Governing Council, on 26 May, asked the Executive Director to support, within available resources, the aims of the Council of Arab Ministers Responsible for the Environment, particularly the Arab priority project proposals under Arab programmes for sustainable development approved for implementation by the Council of Arab Ministers.⁽⁹⁸⁾

Europe

In a March report,⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ the Executive Director described activities carried out within the "Environment for Europe" process for countries with economies in transition during the 1994-1995 biennium and presented activities planned for 1996-1997.

On 25 May, the Governing Council took note of the progress achieved in assisting countries in transition with their environmental problems and asked the Executive Director to continue those efforts.⁽¹⁰¹⁾

Regional representation

On 26 May, the UNEP Governing Council adopted three decisions concerning UNEP's regional representation.

By the first,⁽¹⁰²⁾ the Council took note of the Executive Director's report on the role and function of the regional representation of UNEP;⁽¹⁰³⁾ endorsed the measures that she was taking to strengthen the regional office system and asked her to keep under review the configuration of regional offices, the relationship between regional and out-posted offices of UNEP and the future development of subregional offices. It urged the Executive Director to consider locating, wherever possible and necessary, the regional offices of UNEP at the same venues as the regional commissions.

In another decision related to decentralizing and strengthening of the UNEP regional offices,⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ the Council asked the Executive Director to continue the process of decentralizing UNEP by strengthening the role and function of its regional offices and granting them greater functional and administrative capacities. The Council outlined a series of elements for that process and recommended that the Executive Director, at least once a year, include in the agenda of the Committee of Permanent Representatives the subject of strengthening the regional offices.

In the third decision, which dealt with strengthening regional coordination,⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ the Council called on the Executive Director, within available resources, to encourage the holding of annual meetings at the ministerial level to evaluate and design policies and strategies to guide the activities of the regional offices, and to hold consultations annually in Nairobi with the permanent representatives and delegations of countries to assess the progress of the programme.

Training networks

On 26 May, the Governing Council urged the Executive Director to strengthen the environmental training networks in each region, with a view to achieving the implementation of environmental education and training.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾

By another decision of the same date,⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ the Council asked the Executive Director to ensure that training courses in integrated environmental management aimed at strengthening the capacity of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, as well as courses in collaboration with other bilateral and multilateral organizations, continued to be organized.

Chapter VIII

Population and human settlements

At mid-1995, world population stood at 5.75 billion and, while the rate of growth was declining, world population was increasing by more than 86 million persons annually. During the year, UN bodies, particularly the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), continued to implement the Programme of Action adopted at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development. UNFPA strengthened its collaborative and coordination efforts with its partner agencies and organizations within the UN system and with bilateral agencies and non-governmental organizations. The Fund's population assistance expenditures in 1995 totalled some $311 million. By year's end, 2,479 projects were being assisted. In December, the General Assembly urged all countries to consider their current spending priorities with a view to making additional contributions for the Programme of Action's implementation.

The Commission on Population and Development, formerly the Population Commission, met in February/March to review population needs, policies and programmes, discuss follow-up action to the Conference and consider the programme of work in population. The Commission discussed the work carried out by the Population Division of the UN Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis, which included population projections and the analysis of demographic variables at the world level covering fertility and family planning, mortality, and international and internal migration. The Division provided technical assistance services to more than 80 projects in 45 developing countries and countries with economies in transition during the year.

In the area of human settlements, preparations continued for the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), also known as "The City Summit". The Conference's Preparatory Committee held its second substantive session in April/May, when it considered progress made by the Conference secretariat in preparing for the Conference and progress in national preparations. It also worked on a draft statement of principles and global plan of action to be considered by the Conference.

In December, the Assembly renewed its appeal to all Governments, as well as to international and regional financial institutions, to make substantial contributions to the voluntary fund established for the purpose of financing the Conference's preparatory activities.

The Commission on Human Settlements, which held its fifteenth session in April/May, had as its major themes a review of national action on housing since the 1976 UN Conference on Human Settlements and sustainable human settlements in an urbanizing world. It also carried out a mid-term review of the 1988 Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and transmitted a report on the subject to the Assembly, which endorsed it in December. The UN Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) supported 193 technical cooperation programmes and projects in 79 countries and 42 global, regional and interregional programmes in 1995, with an overall budget of more than $19.6 million.

Follow-up to the 1994 Conference on Population and Development

Commission on Population and Development consideration. In response to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Population and Development a report⁽²⁾ on the implications of the recommendations of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD)⁽³⁾ for the work programme of the UN Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis (DESIPA) on population. The report summarized the substantive results of the Conference, examined the programmatic implications of the results for DESIPA's medium-term plan of work and considered the institutional implications for the United Nations of the Conference recommendations.

The Commission adopted a decision,⁽⁴⁾ which it brought to the Economic and Social Council's attention, in which it transmitted its views on the implications for the Commission of the follow-up to the Conference. Those views addressed the functioning of the Commission, including its proposed terms of reference and membership, secretariat support, management, inter-agency coordination and resource base, and its work programme.

UNFPA programme priorities. In response to a 1993 UNDP Governing Council request,⁽⁵⁾ the Executive Director of UNFPA submitted to the annual session (June) of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/UNFPA a report⁽⁶⁾ on programme priorities and future directions of UNFPA in the light of ICPD. On 13 January,⁽⁷⁾ the Board had taken note of an interim report on the same subject.⁽⁸⁾

The Executive Director noted that all activities in UNFPA-assisted programmes would be undertaken in accordance with the principles and objectives of the ICPD Programme of Action.⁽³⁾ UNFPA proposed to concentrate its funding in three core areas: reproductive health and family planning; population policy; and advocacy. Within each area, support would be given for research, training, awareness creation and information dissemination. ICPD had recognized that there could be no sustainable development without the full and equal participation of women, gender equality and equity and the empowerment of women; gender concerns would therefore be integral components of all aspects of UNFPA programming.

With regard to its operational strategy, UNFPA, in all its programming, would work closely with Governments to assure that activities were tailored to their specific needs; build partnerships with implementing agencies, including non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the private sector; and expand coordination with UN funds, programmes and organizations. It would also continue to provide technical assistance through UNFPA country support teams under inter-agency technical support service arrangements.

As to resource allocation, UNFPA would base its system on the principles and goals recommended in the ICPD Programme of Action: all countries seeking UNFPA assistance should adhere to the principles contained in the Programme of Action; technical assistance would be provided to all developing countries requesting it; financial assistance would be focused on countries with the lowest level of achievement with regard to ICPD goals related to access to reproductive health and family planning services, access to education by girls and women, and levels of infant and maternal mortality; financial assistance to countries that were close to or had surpassed ICPD goals would be phased out or limited; temporary financial assistance would be provided to countries with economies in transition, particularly for family planning and reproductive health; and South-South cooperation would be promoted.

On 25 July, the Inter-Agency Task Force for the Implementation of ICPD held its second meeting in New York. Its aim was to enhance inter-agency collaboration and coordination in implementing the ICPD Programme of Action at the country level, under the leadership of the resident coordinator. The Task Force had prepared a set of Guidelines for the UN Resident Coordinator System and developed a Common Advocacy Statement on Population and Development. At its second regular session of 1995 (12-13 October),⁽⁹⁾ the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) agreed that the Task Force should be expanded to focus more broadly on social services for all.

On 14 June, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board supported⁽¹⁰⁾ the broad outline of the future programme of assistance of UNFPA. It endorsed the core programme areas and requested the Executive Director to concentrate assistance within those areas, while stressing that population policies were an integral part of a strategy for sustainable development and the need for UNFPA to cooperate with other partners in formulating its strategies. It took note of the approach proposed for allocating resources and invited the Executive Director to refine that approach, based on the relevant provisions of the ICPD Programme of Action, as well as on other qualitative and quantitative indicators, and taking into account the views of delegations and the need to give special attention to the least developed countries and Africa, and to report to the Board in 1996. The Executive Director was asked to submit to the Board in 1996: a background note on the issue of whether the Board should consider becoming a member of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF)/World Health Organization (WHO) Joint Committee on Health Policy; and a draft mission statement for UNFPA based on her report,⁽⁶⁾ taking into account the Board's discussion.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, through the Economic and Social Council, a report⁽¹¹⁾ on the implementation of that resolution, which dealt with the report of ICPD. The report addressed the question of requirements for international assistance and flow of financial resources for assisting the implementation of the Programme of Action; institutional follow-up issues and reporting procedures; implementation by the specialized agencies and all related organizations of the UN system; implementation by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board; and implementation by the Commission on Population and Development.

International migration and development

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report on international migration and development.⁽¹³⁾ The report gave an overview of migration trends and policies, described the economic and social aspects of international migration and gave the views of Governments regarding the convening of an international conference on international migration and development. In that context, the report discussed the organizational modalities of other UN conferences and described the relevant activities of UN bodies and other organizations.

On 27 July, by decision 1995/313, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and recommended that the Assembly continue consideration of the question, including the convening of a conference.

By a September note,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretariat summarized the Council's decision and noted that the Secretary-General's report would be made available to the Assembly.

UN Population Fund

UNFPA activities

In her report for 1995⁽¹⁵⁾ to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, the Executive Director stated that, on 18 June, 240 UNFPA staff members had met in Rye, New York, for a four-day meeting on the future direction and programme priorities of the Fund, in the light of the 1994 ICPD (see above). UNFPA staff members from all over the world understood that, in order to meet the goals of the ICPD Programme of Action, the Fund would need to be more focused in its programmes and resource allocations, and welcomed the Executive Board's decision (see above) to focus on three priority areas: reproductive health, including family planning and sexual health (referred to as reproductive health); population and development strategies; and advocacy. In addition to the new programme directions, the Rye participants focused on the need for improved programme coordination and complementarity between and among UN agencies, bilateral donors and NGOs. They also agreed that full transparency and accountability in programme management was critical to the effectiveness and impact of UNFPA activities.

UNFPA support for reproductive health was based on a public health, pragmatic and participatory approach. Reproductive health initiatives covered reproductive tract infections, maternal mortality, female genital mutilation, reproductive health in emergency situations and the activities of the Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs. In addition, UNFPA began to elaborate ways in which men's responsibilities in the area of reproductive health could be fostered and in which adolescents could be encouraged to exercise responsible sexual behaviour. UNFPA also supported HIV/AIDS prevention and control activities within the global strategy of the Joint and Co-sponsored UN Programme on HIV/AIDS, developed programme initiatives with strong information, education and communication components, and promoted community participation in reproductive health programmes.

A primary focus of the UNFPA programme in population and development strategies during 1995 was to provide a framework to translate ICPD's global commitments and goals to the national level, outlining approaches as to how to integrate such commitments and goals into national population and development planning.

In the area of advocacy, the Fund worked with Governments, UN agencies, NGOs and other members of civil society in an effort to build broad-based support for population issues and the ICPD goals. Population, particularly reproductive health, continued to be the Fund's primary focus for advocacy activities, but it was also an advocate for human rights, including women's rights, and development issues such as education, poverty, basic health services, empowerment of women and people's participation. In addition, the Fund worked to mobilize political support and financial resources for population and development activities.

At year's end, UNFPA was assisting 2,479 projects—775 country and regional projects in Africa, 594 in Asia and the Pacific, 456 in Latin America and the Caribbean, 352 in the Arab States and Europe, and 302 interregional projects. During the year, 307 new country projects were approved, amounting to $56.4 million, compared to 448, amounting to $46 million, in 1994. UNFPA undertook programme review and strategy development missions to five countries—Cape Verde, Ghana, Honduras, Sri Lanka and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Family planning programmes received an allocation of $165.8 million, or 48.7 per cent of all programme allocations ($340.4 million). Communication and education received $64.9 million (19.1 per cent); formulation and evaluation of population policies, $29.2 million (8.6 per cent); special programmes, $26.8 million (7.9 per cent); basic data collection, $18.9 million (5.5 per cent); population dynamics, $17.4 million (5.1 per cent); multisector activities, $16 million (4.7 per cent); and implementation of policies, $1.5 million (0.4 per cent).

UNFPA's The State of World Population 1995, entitled "Decisions for Development: Women, Empowerment and Reproductive Health", contained chapters on progress in population and development; the empowerment of women; reproductive health and family planning; and conclusion: after Cairo, which discussed country responses to ICPD.

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board action. On 16 June,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's annual report for 1994.⁽¹⁷⁾ By a 14 June decision, the Board recommended⁽¹⁸⁾ that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly endorse the agreement between UNDP and UNFPA to designate UNFPA resident country directors as UNFPA representatives on the understanding that UNFPA would take measures to enhance cooperation with and active support for resident coordinators for operational activities of the United Nations and on the understanding that the agreement would not result in increased administrative expenditure for UNFPA.

In accordance with decision 1995/224 of 5 May, the Council considered as a principal theme of its high-level meeting of the operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation segment (June) the implementation by the UN system of the ICPD Programme of Action. By decision 1995/231 of 13 July, the Council endorsed and recommended to the Assembly for endorsement the agreement between UNDP and UNFPA to designate Fund resident country directors as Fund representatives under the same conditions as those outlined in the Board's decision. The Assembly, by decision 50/438 of 20 December, also endorsed the agreement.

Annual report to the Economic and Social Council. In response to a 1994 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹⁹⁾ UNFPA prepared a report⁽²⁰⁾ outlining measures taken to implement the provisions of the 1992 triennial policy review of operational activities.⁽²¹⁾ The report also covered follow-up to ICPD and to the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX).

On 8 June, the Executive Board transmitted⁽²²⁾ the report to the Council together with its comments. It requested UNFPA to ensure that future reports on the implementation of the triennial policy review addressed more thoroughly problems and opportunities that had been identified, particularly at the field level, and that they contained any appropriate recommendations and requests for guidance from the Board. It asked the Executive Director, together with the UNDP Administrator and the UNICEF Executive Director, to consider producing a common report on the triennial policy review implementation, which should contain both a common section and sections by each of the three bodies.

By decision 1995/233 of 13 July, the Council took note of the annual report of UNFPA.

Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements

In response to a 1994 Executive Board request,⁽²³⁾ the UNFPA Executive Director submitted a status report⁽²⁴⁾ on the Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs in Developing Countries in the 1990s, covering the Initiative's 1994 activities.

On 14 June, the Board requested⁽²⁵⁾ the Executive Director to submit to it in September a proposal, in the context of the UNFPA intercountry programme, for the continuation of the Initiative beyond 1995, including an outline of the objectives, modalities and procedures for a possible future global contraceptive arrangement. She was also asked to submit in 1996 a report containing a reappraisal of UNFPA's future role in assessing and meeting the unmet needs for contraceptives and the requirements for logistics management.

In response to that request, the Executive Director submitted a later report on the Global Initiative,⁽²⁶⁾ in which she proposed that the Initiative, funding for which would end in 1995, be continued. The Consultative Group on Contraceptive Requirements had recommended that the Initiative's secretariat should be made an integral part of UNFPA. The Fund therefore proposed that the secretariat (two Professional and one General Service staff) be continued. Activities proposed for the next four years included: medium-term follow-up to the in-depth studies already undertaken; technical assistance and training in logistics management and forecasting; development and regular updating of the contraceptive commodity database; publication of additional technical reports; development of mechanisms for coordinated procurement; and monitoring of country follow-up plans. The implementation of those activities was contingent upon continuation of the three-person secretariat and the provision of $2 million.

With regard to a possible global contraceptive arrangement, the Executive Director stated that the establishment of such a facility was deemed necessary to ensure that all developing countries were able to secure contraceptives at the lowest possible cost; to ensure that the contraceptives provided were of appropriate quality; and to facilitate a prompt response to urgent demands in order to avert potentially critical disruptions to contraceptive supply and the resultant problems.

Noting that three prerequisites were necessary for the establishment of the facility—funding, staffing and operational criteria—the Executive Director stated that UNFPA intended to set up a revolving fund and provide an initial $2 million to commence the arrangement. An additional $3 million would be sought from interested donor organizations.

On 15 September, the Executive Board emphasized⁽²⁷⁾ that contraceptive commodity procurement and logistics activities in UNFPA should be undertaken as an integral component of the Fund's overall work in strengthening reproductive health programmes, including family planning and sexual health, and that those activities should be monitored to ensure their adherence to technical standards of safety and quality. It noted that a strengthened role for UNFPA in contraceptive commodity procurement and logistics should support the objective of building national self-reliance, including financial and technical capacity for local production where feasible, and urged the Executive Director to take steps towards that objective. The Board agreed in principle to the establishment of a global contraceptive commodity programme whose objectives would be to anticipate demand and facilitate a prompt response in order to avert critical disruptions to contraceptive supplies; to achieve economies of scale and lower costs to recipient countries; to ensure the quality of contraceptives provided by UNFPA; and to build national capacity to manage and finance contraceptive procurement and logistics on a self-reliant basis, so that the programme would no longer be needed. The Executive Director was asked to submit in 1996 a comprehensive report on the envisaged global contraceptive commodity programme, including the objectives and scope, administrative and financial aspects, and the efforts made by UNFPA to promote national capacity-building, drawing on the experience of other UN agencies, particularly UNICEF, WHO, and the Inter-Agency Procurement Service Office, in order to take a final decision on the matter.

Country and intercountry programmes

UNFPA's provisional project expenditures for country and intercountry (regional and inter-regional) programmes in 1995 totalled $230.6 million, compared to $202.1 million in 1994.⁽¹⁵⁾ A total of 307 new country projects were approved in 1995, compared to 448 new projects in 1994. In accordance with the criteria approved by the UNDP Governing Council in 1988,⁽³⁾ 58 countries had priority status (32 in Africa, 17 in Asia and the Pacific, 5 in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 4 in Arab States) and were allocated $192.7 million, compared to $154.2 million in 1994.

Allocations to programmes for sub-Saharan Africa totalled $109 million, with projected expenditures of between $67 million and $74 million, up considerably from the $57 million recorded in 1994. Most resources were allocated to the family planning (44.5 per cent) and communication and education (22.6 per cent) sectors. In the countries of the region, increased political and general awareness of population issues continued to translate into growing demand for population programmes and services. At the same time, institutional and operational capacity to deliver such services was constrained by events ranging from political instability in several countries to a more widespread economic malaise, often coupled with constraints associated with structural adjustment programmes. HIV/AIDS threatened to drain overall health budgets in many countries by drawing greater proportions of available resources into treatment and away from prevention. UNFPA convened a series of regional meetings during the year to develop strategies to implement the ICPD Programme of Action and the follow-up to the 1992 Dakar/Ngor Declaration on Population, Family and Sustainable Development.⁽⁶⁾ Effecting the switch from a maternal and child health and family planning emphasis to a broader reproductive health approach was the common thread underlying regional consultations. The Fund also examined post-ICPD priorities in terms of information, education and communication, and demographic, population and development training needs and assessed the relative roles to be played by national and regional training institutions, in some instances with a view as to whether certain projects should be included or modified in the next regional programming cycle (1996-1999). Recommendations included training a cadre of qualified personnel at the national level and incorporating population and development concerns into undergraduate courses. At the country level, Mauritania and Uganda adopted national population policies, bringing to 17 the number of countries in the region to have done so. Mid-term reviews of 20 ongoing country programmes allowed for some reshaping to make programmes more responsive to ICPD. Emergency situations continued to complicate UNFPA efforts to provide population assistance in Burundi, Liberia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and Zaire. A first priority was given to providing reproductive health care, including family planning services, to afflicted but reachable populations. A second priority, for countries where major population movements had occurred, entailed support for quick surveys to ascertain their size and relocation sites as a help to critical humanitarian relief planning.

The Arab States and Europe were allocated $41.1 million in 1995, compared to expenditures of $19.4 million in 1994. Of the total, 50 per cent went to family planning and 15.2 per cent to communication and education. Almost all the national population policies adopted in the Arab States had a strong focus on increasing access to and improving the quality of reproductive health services as well as on promoting gender equity and equality and the empowerment of women. Jordan and Yemen updated their national population policies to integrate the ICPD goals, and the Syrian Arab Republic adopted the ICPD goals as its own and was in the process of adopting a national population policy. With regard to government structures, Egypt merged ministerial health and population portfolios and Morocco established a Ministry of Population. With UNFPA support, comprehensive reproductive health was being promoted through review and enhancement of current programmes and the formulation of new ones. Covering the entire region, the Amman-based country support team undertook more than 100 missions to 20 countries in 1995, advising on reproductive health; information, education and communication; gender; and data collection and analysis. It was also involved in the programme review and strategy development exercise in the Syrian Arab Republic and mid-term reviews in Egypt, Jordan, Morocco and Yemen. The second phase of the Gulf Family Health Survey Programme was launched at the beginning of 1995 to provide detailed information on the demographic and health status of the population in the Arab Gulf States. In 1995, UNFPA supplied humanitarian assistance for emergency situations in Iraq, Somalia and the Sudan.

Reflecting the ICPD Programme of Action's recognition that countries with economies in transition should receive temporary assistance for population and development activities given their difficult economic and social problems, 1995 saw a surge of requests for UNFPA assistance from Central and Eastern Europe. The Fund approved 26 projects totalling $5 million, covering country and regional activities in the reproductive health field. It also organized a regional workshop on how countries with economies in transition could follow through on the Programme of Action. To upgrade the skills and knowledge of modern family planning methods and management among 170 health care professionals from the region, UNFPA was working with the University Medical School of Debrecen, Hungary, to set up a three-year training course. In response to the humanitarian emergency situation, UNFPA and WHO were collaborating in sending reproductive health equipment and supply kits to government-run clinics in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where they were also training staff. In Croatia, UNFPA and Marie Stopes International were providing reproductive health and psycho-social care to refugees.

Some $98.4 million was allocated to Asia and the Pacific in 1995, representing almost 29 per cent of all UNFPA project assistance. Countries of the region quickly set about translating commitment to the Programme of Action into concrete population and development policy initiatives, in addition to promoting reproductive health care measures at the operational level and involving NGOs more closely in programme design and implementation.

Fiji, the Marshall Islands, Palau, Solomon Islands and Tonga led the way in the South Pacific in revising national population policies to reflect ICPD priorities. Cambodia and Myanmar upgraded government capacity to advise on population issues. UNFPA helped Pakistan to organize a national symposium on the population situation there that was addressed by the Prime Minister. In India, a new set of indicators designed to track social-sector spending and gauge progress towards the ICPD goals could strengthen the UN system's advocacy for increased government and donor support for population and development programmes. The Indian Government released one district in each state from method-specific family planning targets; the effect of that decision on family welfare services would be surveyed with UNFPA assistance. Male methods of contraception continued to be promoted in the region. Cambodia, Indonesia, Thailand and Viet Nam were among countries encouraging condom use both for family planning and for HIV/AIDS prevention. In India, UNFPA was assisting a project for the nationwide expansion of no-scalpel vasectomy. Two new country programmes were approved in 1995 for Azerbaijan and Kazakhstan, totalling $23 million, $18 million from regular and $5 million from multi-bilateral resources. A project formulation mission was fielded in November to Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan and programme review and strategy development missions were undertaken to Sri Lanka and Viet Nam. South-South cooperation—a regional strong point—was best evidenced by the continuing efforts of Indonesia, the Republic of Korea and Thailand to facilitate regional colleagues seeking to study and learn lessons from their programmes.

UNFPA allocations to Latin America and the Caribbean in 1995 totalled $43.6 million, or 12.8 per cent of total project allocations. Despite an unfavourable economic climate, concerted efforts continued to sustain the momentum required to realize the targets set by the Programme of Action and increase resources available to address priority population issues, such as teenage pregnancy, maternal mortality and persistently high fertility rates among underserved segments of the population. Support from Governments was significant. In August, ministers and high-level government officials of the educational, cultural and youth ministries of the Central American region passed a strong declaration in favour of population education within the framework of the ICPD recommendations. Ecuador adopted a new National Action Plan on Population which would extend maternal health, including reproductive health, care to members of the armed forces and would bring services to adolescents and women. A parliamentary commission on population and development was established in Nicaragua, and in El Salvador UNFPA funded two reproductive health projects for adolescents. The region's new country programmes and those up for review and/or extension were reshaped during 1995 to accentuate reproductive health, increased involvement of NGOs and special emphasis on reaching young people. More countries in the region were involved in HIV/AIDS prevention, with Cuba and Haiti, in particular, having channelled their support into social mobilization campaigns.

Allocations for interregional programmes amounted to $36.6 million in 1995. UNFPA-supported projects offered opportunities for countries and organizations to confer, combine their knowledge and experience, and put useful and practical programmes into effect. UNFPA's Global Programme of Training in Population and Development started 10-month population and development training courses in Botswana and Morocco for mid-level civil servants, NGO staff and university students.

The UNFPA Executive Director presented proposals to the Executive Board's second regular session (April) for country programmes for Benin, the Comoros, Indonesia, Mauritius, Mozambique, the Sudan and Turkey and for Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, all of which were approved⁽³⁰⁾ by the Board on 7 April, when it also approved assistance to Cambodia for the National Population Census and for institutional strengthening and family health improvement through birth spacing. At its annual session (June), the Board approved⁽¹⁶⁾ increased funding authority for the Namibia country programme by $3.7 million, as requested by the Executive Director. At its third regular session (September), the Board approved⁽³¹⁾ the UNFPA intercountry programme for 1996-1999⁽³²⁾ and the country programme for Costa Rica.

Assistance to Rwanda

On 8 June, the Executive Board approved⁽³³⁾ the continued implementation of its 1994 decision⁽³⁴⁾ allowing for flexibility in sectoral expenditure from Rwanda's third country programme resources and for overall expenditures of up to $7.8 million, to enable UNFPA to continue to respond to the evolving needs of the Government of Rwanda for reconstruction and development.

Financial and administrative questions

UNFPA's estimated income in 1995 increased to $312.6 million from $265.3 million in 1994, said the Executive Director in her annual financial review, 1995.⁽³⁵⁾ Expenditures totalled $312.1 million, compared with $274.4 million the previous year. Total contributions pledged by 85 Governments in 1995 reached $302.8 million, an increase of $47.6 million in dollar terms over 1994. Of UNFPA's major donors, significantly increased contributions were received from Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway and the United Kingdom. The cumulative outstanding balance of unpaid pledges for 1995 and prior years was $629,637.

By a 15 September decision,⁽³⁶⁾ the Executive Board took note of the UNFPA financial review for 1994.⁽³⁷⁾

The Executive Director submitted to the Executive Board budget estimates for UNFPA administrative and programme support services for the 1996-1997 biennium.⁽³⁸⁾ She requested net appropriations of $127.4 million for the biennium ($137.4 million gross). The proposed budget assumed an income level of $702 million for the biennium, as reflected in the Fund's work plan for 1996-1999.⁽³⁹⁾ That amount, which included $30 million in multi-bilateral resources, was calculated by assuming an average 8 per cent a year increase in most contributions.

By a 15 September decision,⁽³⁶⁾ the Board, having also considered the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the budget estimates,⁽⁴⁰⁾ took note of ACABQ's concerns with respect to the accuracy of income projection and asked the Executive Director to keep them under continuous review. She was also asked to continue to make efforts to minimize administrative expenditure, particularly at headquarters, and to report to the Board in 1996 on possible measures to increase the total volume reduction at headquarters and Geneva from 1.2 per cent to 2 per cent and on steps taken to reduce administrative expenditures should projected levels of income not be realized. The Board further asked the Executive Director to report in 1996 on the effectiveness of its publications programme, taking into account the need for publications to be available in a range of languages, and to conduct an evaluation of training activities, reporting to the Board through ACABQ no later than 1997. The Board approved appropriations in the amount of $137,346,000 gross to finance the 1996-1997 biennial budget for administrative and programme support services and agreed that overhead credits available to the Fund, estimated at $9 million, and the miscellaneous income from trust funds for support services, in the amount of $1 million, should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $127,346,000. The Board approved the reclassification or establishment of a number of posts and decided that the number of Country Directors at the D-1 level should not exceed 25 per cent of the total number of Country Directors. It endorsed the opening of a country office in South Africa.

Technical Support Services

In a report to the Executive Board,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Executive Director analysed the effectiveness of the successor support-cost arrangements, known as the Technical Support Services (TSS) arrangements, which were established in 1992 to replace the previous arrangements of providing technical assistance through regional advisers based in UN agency regional offices. The objectives were to provide effective and timely support for population programmes and policies in developing countries, to enhance and maximize the use of national and regional capacities in population activities, to use the most appropriate and competitive sources of technical assistance, to bring technical advice closer to field-level activities, to help Governments assume the management of UNFPA-funded programmes and projects, and to continue the practice of cost-sharing between UNFPA and the agencies of the UN system participating in the new successor arrangements. The report described the implementation of the TSS arrangements and their overall effectiveness. It presented proposals for strengthening the arrangements and gave the financial implications of those proposals.

On 15 September,⁽⁴²⁾ the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's proposals and welcomed her plan to strengthen the TSS arrangements, particularly the country support teams. It requested her to enhance the contribution of the arrangements towards national capacity-building. Noting the heavy workloads of some staff of the country support teams, the Board asked the Executive Director to monitor carefully the adequacy of the arrangements proposed, especially in relation to Africa, and to consider further the probable need to reassign TSS specialist posts to country support teams. It stressed the need to ensure that those teams had staff with the skills and experience to contribute to national efforts to attain those goals of the ICPD Programme of Action for which UNFPA had responsibility, especially in relation to reproductive health. The Executive Director was asked to report annually to the Board, starting in 1997, on the implementation and monitoring of the TSS arrangements. She was also asked to include in her report in 1997: details of progress made in implementing the TSS arrangements with regard to the proposed change of coordinator posts to specialist posts at the United Nations and its regional commissions and at WHO regional offices; and an assessment of the appropriateness and effectiveness of the specialist posts, and details of measures taken to strengthen the teamwork between TSS specialists and country support teams and to strengthen the advocacy function of TSS specialists. The Executive Director was authorized to commit $107 million for the four-year period 1996-1999 to implement the TSS arrangements.

In a report⁽³⁹⁾ to the Executive Board's annual session (June), the Executive Director examined the utilization of resources by UNFPA in 1994, described the work plan for 1996-1999, including information about projected resources and the proposed use of programmable resources among country and intercountry activities as well as among geographical regions, and presented the proposed programme expenditure authority for 1996 from regular resources, the estimates of new programmable regular resources for the 1997-1999 period and the estimates of new programmable resources from multi-bilateral funding. The proposed expenditure authority for 1996 amounted to $263 million, and the new programmable resources for 1997, 1998 and 1999 were estimated at $280 million, $298 million and $319 million, respectively.

On 8 June, the Board endorsed⁽⁴³⁾ the Executive Director's programme resource planning proposals, while taking into account its request⁽⁴⁰⁾ that UNFPA assistance be concentrated within the core programme areas (see above). It approved the request for 1996 programme expenditure authority at a level equal to new programmable resources for 1996, estimated at $263 million. The Board endorsed the use of the following estimates of new programmable resources from regular resources for the 1997-1999 period: $280 million for 1997; $298 million for 1998; and $319 million for 1999. It further endorsed the use of the following estimates of new programmable resources from multi-bilateral funding: $15 million per year for the years 1996-1999.

UN Population Award

The 1995 United Nations Population Award was presented to Dr. Halfdan Mahler of Denmark, the Secretary-General of the International Planned Parenthood Federation, and to the Inter-African Committee on Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children (IAC). Dr. Mahler, who was Director-General of WHO from 1973 to 1988, was chosen for his distinguished career in public health, which included strong leadership in reproductive health, family planning and worldwide population issues. IAC, an Ethiopia-based NGO, was chosen for its efforts to create the social, cultural and public health conditions that allowed women to exercise their reproductive rights, including the practice of family planning.

At a ceremony on 5 June, the laureates each received an award of $12,500. The Award was established by the General Assembly in 1981,⁽⁴⁴⁾ to be presented annually to individuals or institutions for outstanding contributions to increased awareness of population problems and to their solutions. The Award's Trust Fund totalled $630,078 as at 31 December 1994.

In an April report,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the UNFPA Executive Director's report on the status of the Award. The Assembly took note of it by decision 50/439 of 20 December.

Other population activities

Commission on Population and Development

The Commission on Population and Development (formerly the Population Commission and renamed by the General Assembly in 1994⁽⁴⁾), at its twenty-eighth session (New York, 21 February-2 March),⁽⁴⁶⁾ reviewed population trends, policies and programmes, discussed follow-up action to ICPD (see above), and considered the Organization's programme of work in population. By decision 1995/209 of 10 February, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Assembly's decision that the Population Commission should be renamed and that it should meet annually.

The Council, by decision 1995/236 of 17 July, took note of the Commission's report on its twenty-eighth session and approved the provisional agenda for the twenty-ninth (1996) session. On 12 December, the Council decided (decision 1995/320) that the Commission's membership should be increased from 27 to 47 (see APPENDIX III).

1995 UN activities

In a report on the work of DESIPA during 1995,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Secretary-General described the research and technical cooperation work and information activities carried out by the Population Division. The Division's analysis of demographic variables at the world level covered fertility and family planning, mortality and international and internal migration. Work on world population projections included the completion of World Population Prospects: The 1994 Revision⁽⁴⁸⁾ and continuation of the preparation of The 1996 Revision. World Urbanization Prospects: The 1994 Revision⁽⁴⁹⁾ was also completed and planning for The 1996 Revision commenced.

With regard to population policy and socio-economic development, a world survey of international migration policies and programmes continued, as did research on policy issues resulting from rapid population growth in the world's largest cities. The Challenge of Urbanization: The World's Large Cities,⁽⁵⁰⁾ which presented profiles of 100 of the world's largest agglomerations, was published and was expected to be an important input for the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements. The publication Abortion Policies: A Global Review, volume III, Oman to Zimbabwe⁽⁵¹⁾ was issued in 1995. The population data bank maintained by the Division was being continuously updated. In 1995, the fifth edition of Global Population Policy Database and the companion volume Population Policy Diskette Documentation, 1995 were completed and submitted for publication. A study of government views on the relationships between population and the environment was issued as a working paper pending its publication. The study was based on a review of official governmental statements, national reports and the draft and final documents adopted at major intergovernmental conferences dealing with population, environment and development issues from the early 1970s through ICPD in 1994, as well as of the international development strategies for the UN development decades since 1960. An updated version of the database on population, resources, the environment and development was issued, incorporating information from The 1994 Revision of population estimates and projections. It included updates of other data series and incorporated a number of additional indicators. Also ongoing during 1995 was a study of demographic aspects of poverty. The focus was methodological, with the long-term aim of increasing the amount of attention given to demographic factors in poverty research, and vice versa. The study included an overview of approaches to measuring poverty and a discussion of data requirements for linking poverty measurement to the study of demographic factors. It also considered ways in which measurement choices might affect the demographic profile of households classified as poor.

As to coordination and dissemination of population information, the global Population Information Network (POPIN) Coordinating Unit, in collaboration with the regional commissions, continued in 1995 to focus on strengthening the Network and its ability to collect and disseminate information among UN entities and NGOs. POPIN continued to promote the use of electronic mail and the Internet to facilitate and enhance communication among the regional networks, specialized agencies, NGOs and the broader population community. Meetings of the POPIN Advisory Committee and Information Technology Working Group were held in Bangkok, Thailand, from 12 to 21 June to review the status of POPIN activities and electronic computer networking in each of the regions, to present the POPIN work programme and future plans, and to draft a strategy for activities for the next biennium (1996-1997). The Population Division continued to publish the results of its research studies in a variety of formats to meet the needs of different audiences. It also continued to receive and respond to numerous requests for population information from UN organizations, research institutions and individual scholars.

During 1995, the Population Division provided technical assistance services to more than 80 projects in 45 developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the areas of population and development training, institutionalizing analysis and research on socio-economic and demographic data obtained from population censuses, surveys and vital registration systems, population policy, and population and development. TSS specialists in demographic analysis, population and development, population policy, fertility and family planning, and teaching and training in demography augmented substantive support provided to the eight country support teams. In addition, a number of missions were undertaken by TSS specialists to country support teams in Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Dakar (Senegal), Harare (Zimbabwe), Santiago (Chile) and Suva (Fiji).

Programme questions

The Commission on Population and Development had before it the proposed programme of work on population for the biennium 1996-1997. In a note to the Commission,⁽⁵²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the programme of work had been designed to undertake follow-up activities relating to ICPD, to carry out research findings in the most effective manner possible, and to provide substantive support for technical cooperation projects in the field of population.

The Commission adopted a decision⁽⁵³⁾ by which it transmitted its views on programme questions to the Economic and Social Council for consideration. Those views, which were attached to the Commission's report, gave suggestions for the work programme. The Commission stressed that the Population Division should continue to work closely with States, organizations of the UN system, other intergovernmental organizations and NGOs in implementing programmes. It noted that the follow-up to ICPD would require the Division to be involved in new work, such as the elaboration of reproductive health indicators and the interrelationship between migration and development. The Commission recommended the strengthening of the Secretariat in the field of population, from within existing resources, in order to ensure adequate preparation and support for the Commission.

Human settlements

Preparations for Habitat II (1996)

Preparatory Committee

The Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) held its second substantive session in Nairobi, Kenya, from 24 April to 5 May 1995.⁽¹⁾ The Conference, also known as "The City Summit", was to take place in Istanbul, Turkey, in 1996, 20 years after the first UN Conference on Human Settlements.⁽²⁾

Among the documents before the Preparatory Committee were progress reports by the Conference Secretary-General on the activities of the Conference secretariat⁽³⁾ and on national preparations,⁽⁴⁾ a note by the secretariat on updated guidelines for national preparations,⁽⁵⁾ and a draft statement of principles and global plan of action,⁽⁶⁾ formulated in response to recommendations made by the Preparatory Committee at its first (1994) session.⁽⁷⁾ Also before the Committee was a report by the Conference Secretary-General,⁽⁸⁾ in which he reviewed contributions to the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the UN Conference on Environment and Development in 1992,⁽⁹⁾ of national and international action in the area of human settlements.

On 5 May, the Preparatory Committee adopted nine decisions, the first four of which were referred to the General Assembly for further action. In a decision on financing of the Conference and its preparatory activities,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Committee urgently called on Governments and international regional financial institutions to increase their in-cash and in-kind contributions to the two Trust Funds established to finance the preparatory process, and called on Governments to disburse undistributed resources pledged to the ad hoc secretariat of Habitat II. The Conference Secretary-General was called on to explore all avenues for funding, including the private sector and public foundations, and the Assembly was asked to allocate sufficient funds to cover the costs of general temporary assistance, advisory services, secretariat operations, communications, consultants, information dissemination and miscellaneous expenses for the period October 1995 to July 1996. The other decisions requiring action by the Assembly dealt with the Preparatory Committee's third session (February 1996),⁽¹¹⁾ recommendations on the Conference's organization of work, including the establishment of committees and procedural matters,⁽¹²⁾ and adoption of the rules of procedure for the Conference.⁽¹³⁾ Other decisions concerned preparatory activities at the national, regional and international levels;⁽¹⁴⁾ substantive documentation for the Conference;⁽¹⁵⁾ criteria for nominating and selecting best practices;⁽¹⁶⁾ inter-sessional arrangements for drafting the statement of principles and commitments and the global plan of action;⁽¹⁷⁾ and accreditation of NGOs.⁽¹⁸⁾

Other preparatory activities

Regional preparations for Habitat II were carried out during the year in the UN regional commissions for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean and Western Asia (see also PART FOUR, Chapter V). In a note to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁹⁾ submitted in response to a 1994 request,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed key activities carried out during the year.

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) participated in the subregional Ministerial Meeting for Eastern and Southern Africa on Preparations for the UN Conference on Human Settlements (Kampala, 26-28 February), which was jointly organized by the UN Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) and the Government of Uganda, with support from UNDP and Shelter Afrique. The Meeting resulted in the Kampala Declaration,⁽²¹⁾ in which the Ministers committed themselves to design, adopt and implement enabling, participatory and innovative human settlements development strategies towards realizing the objectives of Habitat II: adequate shelter for all and sustainable human settlements development in an urbanizing world. ECA also participated in the subregional Ministerial Meeting for Central Africa on Preparations for the UN Conference on Human Settlements (Brazzaville, 10-12 April), which was jointly organized by UNCHS and the Government of the Congo, with support from UNDP and the Organization for the Promotion and Management of Real Estate in the Congo. The Ministers adopted the Brazzaville Declaration,⁽²²⁾ in which they pledged to adopt and implement enabling, participatory and innovative policies in the field of urban development, land and urban management and housing in order to achieve the goals of Habitat II. The Regional Ministerial Meeting for Africa Preparatory to Habitat II (Johannesburg, South Africa, 16-18 October) adopted the Johannesburg Declaration, which stated the consolidated African position for country, subregional and regional strategies for effective African participation in the Habitat II process.

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), in cooperation with the Government of Hungary and UNCHS, organized the fourth meeting of ministers from countries in transition responsible for human settlements (Budapest, 13-14 June), which formulated common goals and commitments to be achieved and implemented in connection with the Conference's two main themes. ECE's Committee on Human Settlements established a task force to assist it in carrying out the preparatory work for the Conference, and a regional workshop on housing and urban indicators for countries in transition was held in Budapest in June.

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean organized the Regional Latin America and Caribbean Meeting Preparatory to Habitat II (Santiago, Chile, 13-17 November), which approved a Regional Plan of Action for Human Settlements.

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia helped to organize the Regional Preparatory Expert Group Meeting for the Conference (Amman, Jordan, 23-26 January). The meeting reviewed the housing situation in the Arab region, assessed policies and programmes on the sustainable development of human settlements and made relevant proposals and practical suggestions.

In a November progress report on the activities of the secretariat,⁽²³⁾ the Conference Secretary-General stated that the in-country preparatory process was in full swing. By 15 November, the secretariat had received progress reports from 89 countries, of which 47 had submitted reports of a substantial nature, including draft national plans of action, reviews of the current situation and identification of priority issues. The Best Practice Initiative had generated much interest and enthusiasm. By mid-November, 314 submissions for best practices had been received from 72 countries. With regard to information and awareness building, the secretariat continued to issue its series of regular publications that focused on the human settlements issues to be addressed at the Conference. Five issues of the newsletter Countdown to Istanbul were issued during the year, as were four issues of Habitat Debate, the UNCHS journal on the Centre's substantive programmes. In collaboration with the UN Department of Public Information, a number of promotional activities were carried out.

The Dubai (United Arab Emirates) International Conference for Habitat II on Best Practices in Improving the Living Environment took place from 19 to 22 November.⁽²⁴⁾ Some 29 Best Practices were presented. The Conference adopted the Dubai Declaration, and the Dubai Municipality announced the establishment of the Dubai Award for Best Practices, which would be administered in collaboration with UNCHS, for an annual amount of $150,000.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁵⁾ the UN Secretary-General, in consultation with the Conference Secretary-General, reported on progress made in the preparations for the Conference. He described the action taken at the second session of the Preparatory Committee (see above) and progress made since that session, noting that the first inter-sessional meeting of the informal drafting group for the draft statement of principles and commitments and the global plan of action met in Nairobi from 17 to 21 July.

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/100.

United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

The General Assembly,

Commission on Human Settlements

The Commission on Human Settlements held its fifteenth session in Nairobi from 25 April to 1 May,⁽²⁵⁾ when it adopted 14 resolutions and six decisions. The Commission adopted a resolution on the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000⁽²⁶⁾ (see below) and recommended a draft text on the subject to the General Assembly for adoption. Other resolutions dealt with a housing rights strategy (see below);⁽²⁷⁾ promoting the participation of women in human settlements development (see below);⁽²⁸⁾ the role of UNCHS in assisting refugees, returnees and displaced persons and their families in Africa;⁽²⁹⁾ assistance to countries with economies in transition;⁽³⁰⁾ urban and housing performance indicators;⁽³¹⁾ strengthening the presence of UNCHS in the Latin American and Caribbean region;⁽³²⁾ cooperation between UNCHS and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) on the urban environment (see PART FOUR, Chapter VII);⁽³³⁾ the progress report of the UNCHS Executive Director on the activities of the Centre;⁽³⁴⁾ priorities for national action to provide housing for all (see below);⁽³⁵⁾ sustainable human settlements in an urbanizing world, including issues related to land policies and mitigation of natural disasters (see below);⁽³⁶⁾ coordination matters;⁽³⁷⁾ cooperation between Governments and NGOs in the field of human settlements development;⁽³⁸⁾ and concrete measures towards the full realization of children's housing rights.⁽³⁹⁾

The Commission's decisions dealt with its fourth report to the Assembly on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 (see below);⁽⁴⁰⁾ preparations for Habitat II;⁽⁴¹⁾ the work programme of UNCHS for the biennium 1996-1997;⁽⁴²⁾ the budget of the UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation for the biennium 1996-1997;⁽⁴³⁾ the new objectives, role and place of UNCHS within the UN system;⁽⁴⁴⁾ and themes for consideration by the Commission at its sixteenth (1997) session (the contribution of the private and non-governmental sectors to shelter delivery to low-income groups and the management of natural resources in the context of human settlements).⁽⁴⁵⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1995/207 B of 10 February, the Economic and Social Council decided that, when reviewing the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on its fifteenth session, it would not consider new draft proposals, except for specific recommendations contained in those reports that required action by the Council and proposals on matters relating to the coordination aspects of the work of those bodies.

On 17 July, by decision 1995/234, the Council took note of the report of the Commission on its fifteenth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/99.

Commission on Human Settlements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/162 of 19 December 1977, by which it established the Commission on Human Settlements and its secretariat, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), to serve as the institutional focus for human settlements activities within the United Nations system,

Recalling also its resolution 43/181 of 20 December 1988, in which it designated the Commission on Human Settlements as the United Nations intergovernmental body responsible for coordinating, evaluating and monitoring the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,

Recalling further its resolution 47/180 of 22 December 1992, by which it decided to convene the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) from 3 to 14 June 1996 and requested the Secretary-General to establish an ad hoc secretariat for the Conference, which should be organizationally part of the Centre,

Noting with satisfaction the positive role played by the Centre in the implementation of the Global Strategy and the human settlement aspects of Agenda 21,

Aware of the fact that two thirds of the entire increase in world population currently occurs in urban areas, so that by the year 2000 almost half of the world population will be living in towns and cities, and noting with concern that high-level urbanization is straining the capacity of Governments, at both the national and the local levels, to mobilize the financial, technical and managerial resources necessary to sustain such human settlements,

1. Endorses the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the work of its fifteenth session (Nairobi, 25 April-1 May 1995), including its resolution 15/1 on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, and the report of the Commission on the implementation of the Global Strategy;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the contribution of the Commission and of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to the preparations at the national, regional and global levels for the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996;

3. Encourages the Centre to submit its contributions to the preparations for the Conference to the Preparatory Committee for the Conference at its third session, to be held in New York between 5 and 16 February 1996.

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.2) without vote, 5 December (meeting 41); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.53), orally revised and based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.30); agenda item 95 (b).

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

The Commission on Human Settlements had before it a report⁽⁴⁶⁾ by the Executive Director of UNCHS on the mid-term review of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, adopted by the General Assembly in 1988.⁽⁴⁷⁾ In undertaking the review, UNCHS analysed information obtained from a variety of sources. It had invited member countries to provide information on their experiences and issued a brief questionnaire to all Governments. Some 74 Governments responded and some provided additional information. Information was also received from international and non-governmental organizations. Another report by the Executive Director⁽⁴⁸⁾ described briefly the findings of the questionnaire and gave examples of "best practice" in each of the major components of enabling strategies in the shelter sector: political commitment to enabling strategies; policy and institutional framework; regulating land and housing development; property rights; developing long-term housing finance; rationalizing subsidies; providing infrastructure; and organizing the building industry. The report also summarized actions taken by external support agencies and by organizations within the UN system.

The review indicated that while a large number of countries had adopted an enabling approach to shelter in their policies, very few had put into action the full range of implementing mechanisms.

By a 1 May resolution,⁽²⁶⁾ the Commission adopted its report on the implementation of the Global Strategy,⁽⁴⁹⁾ including the proposed plan of action and timetable for 1996-1997, and requested the Executive Director to transmit it to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council. The Commission requested the Executive Director to report to it at its sixteenth (1997) session on the implementation of the next phase of the Global Strategy and urged the Preparatory Committee for Habitat II to take into account the conclusions of the mid-term review in preparing the Global Strategy Plan of Action. A draft resolution on the Strategy was recommended to the Assembly for adoption. Also on 1 May, the Commission adopted a decision,⁽⁴⁰⁾ by which it incorporated into its report on the implementation of the Global Strategy additions and amendments submitted by delegations relating to their respective countries.

On 17 July, by decision 1995/234, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on the implementation of the Global Strategy.⁽⁴⁹⁾

The Assembly took no action on the Commission's proposed text but, in resolution 50/99, endorsed both the resolution on the implementation of the Global Strategy⁽²⁶⁾ and the report on the subject.⁽⁴⁹⁾

UN Centre for Human Settlements

Activities

In 1995, UNCHS, through its Technical Cooperation Division, supported 193 technical cooperation programmes and projects in 79 countries and 42 global, regional and interregional programmes, with an overall budget in excess of $29.6 million. Eleven new projects were approved and became operational during the year, while 10 others were completed.

The 1994-1995 UNCHS work programme comprised the following subprogrammes: global policies and strategies; national policies and instruments; managing human settlements development, including financial and land resources; improving infrastructure and the living environment; managing disaster mitigation, reconstruction and development; housing for all; strengthening local communities; and reducing poverty and promoting equity.

During the year, preparations for Habitat II (see above) received the highest priority in the Centre's work on global policies and strategies. Those activities focused on expanding partnerships with national Governments, local authorities, UN agencies, NGOs and the scientific/professional community in defining the relevance of local human settlements issues to the global development agenda.

The global monitoring capacity of the Centre was strengthened. The Compendium of Human Settlements Statistics 1995 and two wall charts on human settlements conditions in some 300 cities and 120 countries were published, as was the Human Settlements Statistical Database Version 4, which contained a pre-selected set of human settlements indicators to enable users to make a quick preview of a country's human settlements conditions.

Under the subprogramme on national human settlements policies and instruments, various capacity-building and training-of-trainers efforts were carried out. The "Localizing Agenda 21: Action Planning for Sustainable Urban Development" programme started operations in 1995. Its purpose was to support local authorities in undertaking consultative processes to develop and implement a local Agenda 21 for their communities. In a report to the Commission on developments in urban and housing indicators,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Executive Director stated that, following further retesting and comments by member countries, the number of key urban indicators had been substantially reduced from 51 to 27, plus nine background information indicators, and the elements in the system had been renumbered. The final material for the Indicators Programme was issued. It included three volumes of the complete Programme, and an abridged Key Indicators Worksheet, which was translated into French and Spanish. Major country programmes had begun in Brazil, India, Nigeria and South Africa and smaller programmes were under way in other countries. Overall, some 130 countries were involved in the Programme by attending seminars, receiving worksheets or collecting information.

The subprogramme on managing human settlements development continued its technical cooperation efforts and its work on the Urban Management Programme. Integrated settlements management was the focus of 79 projects in 1995, ranging over 42 countries plus a number of global projects and programmes. Reports published under the first three subprogrammes included Metropolitan Planning and Management in the Developing World,⁽⁵¹⁾ A Reappraisal of the Planning Process,⁽⁵²⁾ The Place, Role and Prospects of Urban Planning⁽⁵³⁾ and

Guidelines for Settlements Planning in Disaster-prone Areas.⁽⁵⁴⁾

The improving infrastructure and the living environment subprogramme continued to implement three major global programmes: the Settlements Infrastructure and Environment Programme (SIEP), the Sustainable Cities Programme (SCP) and the Urban Management Programme (UMP). In 1995, SIEP implemented a demonstration project on a community-based environmental management information system in Ghana and Indonesia and publications were produced on major aspects of environmental infrastructure. UNCHS was identified by ACC in 1995 as the UN focal point for urban water issues and the lead agency for the World Day for Water (22 March). It began implementation of a global capacity-building project on the integrated management of water and environmental infrastructure. Throughout the year, SCP continued its activities in nine fully fledged city demonstration projects and initiated activities and pipeline projects in five more, building capacities at the local level in environmental planning and management, and developing networks of expertise and information-sharing at the national level. The agreement making SCP a joint UNCHS-UNEP facility enabled the Programme to draw on the resources and expertise of both agencies, while providing them with an efficient vehicle for on-the-ground project implementation. UMP activities included regional interchange of successful experiences of Brazil and Colombia on solid waste; ongoing demonstrations of urban environmental planning and management in Chile, Ecuador, Egypt, Ghana, India, Nigeria, Poland, Senegal and the United Republic of Tanzania; and city consultations in Concepcion (Chile), Dar es Salaam (United Republic of Tanzania), Ibadan (Nigeria), Madras (India) and Tunis (Tunisia).

Under its subprogramme on managing disaster mitigation, reconstruction and development, UNCHS continued to assist countries in post-war and post-conflict situations. It embarked on a medium-term urban rehabilitation programme in Afghanistan, providing institutional strengthening, rehabilitation and development to its three principal urban centres. In Sierra Leone, UNCHS assisted the Government to develop and implement a programme for the reconstruction of war-torn areas. Assistance was also provided to Angola, Guatemala, Haiti, Palestine, the Philippines, Rwanda, Somalia, the United Republic of Tanzania and Yemen. The Centre organized the first UNDP-UNCHS consultation on African countries in crisis, covering Burundi, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire.

As part of the Centre's strategy for reducing poverty and promoting equity, the Urban Poverty partnership with the International Labour Organization (ILO) and UNDP continued with support from the UN Volunteers. The Centre and ILO sent a joint call to the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX) for a poverty-eradication strategy joining the goals of shelter for all and full employment.

A new journal, Habitat Debate, was launched, with four issues appearing in 1995. A number of technical publications, audiovisual aids and information kits were also prepared.

The 1995 Habitat Scroll of Honour Awards for outstanding contributions by individuals, organizations and projects to the shelter delivery process were presented to the Comunidades Programme of the State Government of Ceará (Brazil), the Foundation in Support of Local Democracy (Poland), the Urban Community Development Office (Thailand), Gangadhar Rao Dattatri (India), the Projet de Taza, Agence Nationale de Lutte contre l'Habitat Insalubre (Morocco), La cooperative des veuves de Save "Duhozanye" (Rwanda), the Shanghai Municipal Housing Project (China) and Joe Slovo (deceased) (South Africa).

Human settlements and political, economic and social issues

The right to adequate housing

In response to a 1993 Commission request,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Executive Director of UNCHS submitted a report on practical contributions that the Centre could make towards promoting, ensuring and protecting the full realization of the human right to adequate housing.⁽⁵⁶⁾ A detailed proposal for a consolidated approach was contained in a background paper.⁽⁵⁷⁾ The proposed strategy was premised on a six-point agenda: promotional activities; advisory services and technical cooperation; monitoring activities; promoting the housing rights of specific social groups; networking; and Habitat II and housing rights.

On 1 May,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Commission asked the Executive Director to undertake a further examination and update of his report, taking into consideration the legal, social, economic, political and practical aspects of the subject and the views and concerns of Member States, including those regarding the existence and/or legal status of the right to adequate housing. He was asked to report on the matter in 1997.

Women and human settlements

In response to a 1993 Commission request,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report on the activities of UNCHS on promoting the advancement of women in human settlements development.⁽⁵⁸⁾ The report described the focus of the Centre's main achievements regarding women's participation and the inclusion of a gender perspective within its work at the national, regional and global levels in cooperation with member States, community-based organizations and NGOs. The Centre's contribution to the Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X) was outlined in an annex to the report.

On 1 May,⁽²⁸⁾ the Commission requested the Executive Director to continue to strengthen the role and competence of the Centre in gender-sensitive human settlements development and to include in the guidelines on legal rights to housing and land tenure and access to credit for women the issue of gender-impact analysis on human settlements programmes and policies. He was asked to incorporate those measures in all relevant parts of the Centre's work programme for 1996-1997 and to report to the Commission in 1997 on the implementation of those recommendations.

Housing for all

In response to a 1993 Commission request,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report⁽⁶⁰⁾ in which he reviewed national action to provide housing for all since the 1976 UN Conference on Human Settlements.⁽²⁾ The report described national and international action on developing and implementing shelter strategies, including a summary of their results. It analysed the main bottlenecks and successful approaches in the shelter process, paying particular attention to scale, sustainability and poverty-reach, and to the needs of particularly vulnerable groups. It also identified a series of common themes, issues and challenges that had emerged from the experience of the previous two decades and assessed the extent of progress made.

On 1 May,⁽³⁵⁾ the Commission urged the international community to pay greater attention to assisting developing countries to alleviate land market constraints, encourage shelter development and improve urban management, especially by concentrating on capacity-building to ensure sustainable progress. The Executive Director was asked to intensify the monitoring and evaluation of progress in national action to improve shelter conditions, to incorporate the findings of that research in the Centre's work programme and to report on the results in 1997.

Sustainable human settlements

In response to a 1993 Commission request,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Executive Director submitted a report on sustainable human settlements in an urbanizing world, including issues related to land policies and mitigation of natural disasters.⁽⁶¹⁾ The report discussed the main environmental, technological, economic and socio-political dimensions of sustainable development and addressed land issues in the context of sustainable urban development, focusing on the rising demand for land, the physical degradation of land, and the need to utilize land for raising urban municipal finance. It also considered the issues of mitigation of natural disasters within urban settlements with regard to the location and land-use policies required to minimize encroachment into hazardous areas, and the building technologies suited to disaster mitigation. The report further discussed action necessary for implementing sustainable human settlements policies at local, national and international levels, including the specific needs of land use and the mitigation of disasters.

On 1 May,⁽³⁶⁾ the Commission recommended that Governments adopt and ensure implementation of the following measures for the sustainable development of human settlements: decentralization of decision-making and creation of an enabling environment to support the initiatives of local authorities and community organizations; formulation and implementation of local Agenda 21 plans and improvement of intersectoral coordination at the local, regional and national levels; establishment of regulatory and incentive structures to encourage sustainable use of resources; promotion of the use of non-polluting appropriate technologies in human settlements activities; and increased financial resources at the local level for promoting national sustainable urban development objectives.

As to sustainable urban land development and management, the Commission called on Governments to adopt the following measures: promotion of access to land and security of tenure for all urban residents, particularly the poor; decentralization and simplification of land registration and privatization of land survey departments; promotion of land-use planning; strengthening of conservation measures; strengthening the role of land as the cornerstone of urban municipal finance; and compiling national inventories of land and other ecological resources and formulating long-term spatial strategies to guide land resources development.

With regard to the mitigation of natural disasters, Governments were urged, taking into account the outcome of the 1994 World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction,⁽⁶²⁾ to promote and implement the following measures: setting up of institutional structures and decision-making processes to ensure that mitigation of natural disasters became an integral part of sustainable human settlements development; building up of national collective memories of disasters; improving and regulating access to land for housing the poor in order to limit encroachment onto hazardous sites; encouragement of and assistance to local authorities to direct human settlements development onto vacant public land in relatively safe locations through the provision of infrastructure; identification of hazardous sites and their conversion into alternative uses; reduction and elimination of the threats of already identified hazardous sites; development and use of housing designs, building materials and construction methods that could mitigate the effects of natural disasters; and enhancement of technical assistance to regional and local institutions and provision of training in managing natural disasters to technicians, professionals and administrators.

The Executive Director was asked to review recent trends in the development of urban informal settlements in developing countries and in countries in transition, and to prepare further practical guidelines for sustainable human settlements planning and management in areas prone to natural disasters.

Financing

During 1995, the UNCHS work programme continued to be financed from the UN regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources. Programme support income from projects financed by UNDP and trust funds amounted to $2.1 million, while income from the UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation was $7.7 million.

UNCHS project delivery amounted to $33.3 million, including projects financed by UNDP ($22.2 million), the Foundation ($5.5 million) and other sources ($5.6 million).

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

During 1995, the combined income of the UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, including contributions from Governments on the basis of firm pledges and from the Danish International Development Agency, totalled $12.5 million. Expenditures totalled $14.9 million.

Chapter IX

Social policy, crime prevention and human resource development

Major international conferences were organized by the United Nations in 1995 in the areas of social development and crime prevention. The World Summit for Social Development, which was held in March in Copenhagen, Denmark, adopted the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, which were both endorsed by the General Assembly in December. The core issues addressed in those documents were the enhancement of social integration, poverty alleviation and expansion of productive employment.

The Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders took place in Cairo, Egypt, in April/May. It adopted nine substantive resolutions, one of which dealt with the four major topics considered—international cooperation for strengthening the rule of law; action against national and transnational economic and organized crime; criminal justice and police systems; and crime prevention strategies. In December, the Assembly endorsed the Congress resolutions and invited Governments to be guided by them when formulating legislation and policy directives. Having considered the report of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, which met in May/June, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue strengthening the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme by providing it with needed resources. As recommended by the Commission, the Economic and Social Council, in July, took note of the draft international code of conduct for public office holders and urged States to comment on it so as to facilitate further revision of the draft.

The United Nations Year for Tolerance was officially launched on 21 February 1995. On 20 November, the Assembly held a special commemorative meeting to mark the Year. The Secretary-General made a number of proposals to the Assembly with regard to the follow-up to the International Year of the Family (1994). The proposals were welcomed by the Assembly, which invited Governments to continue action to build family-friendly societies. The Assembly also considered a mid-decade review of the follow-up to International Literacy Year (1990) and appealed to Governments and economic and financial organizations to lend greater financial and material support to efforts to increase literacy and achieve education for all.

In its twentieth anniversary year, the United Nations University established the International Leadership Academy in Amman, Jordan, and the Institute of Advanced Studies in Tokyo, Japan.

World Summit for Social Development

The World Summit for Social Development was held in Copenhagen, Denmark, from 6 to 12 March 1995,⁽¹⁾ as decided by the General Assembly in 1992.⁽²⁾ The core issues addressed by the Summit were the enhancement of social integration, particularly of the more disadvantaged and marginal groups; alleviation and reduction of poverty; and expansion of productive employment.

The Summit was attended by representatives from 186 States, including 117 heads of State or Government, and the European Community, the observers for Macau, the Netherlands Antilles and Palestine, the five regional commissions, UN organizations and specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). During the Summit, a variety of special events (meetings, symposia, round tables, workshops and panel discussions) were held with a view to enriching the debate on social issues and the follow-up to the Summit. Parallel to the Summit, an NGO Forum was held in Copenhagen from 3 to 12 March.

The Summit elected as its President Poul Nyrup Rasmussen, Prime Minister of Denmark; it also elected a Rapporteur-General and 28 Vice-Presidents, one of them ex officio from Denmark. (See APPENDIX III.)

In his statement to the opening session, the Secretary-General said that the aim of the Summit was to make social development a major priority for the international community. It was part of the process of reflection and debate on which the international community had embarked—about itself and its future, and about the role of the individual human being. He identified as "priority objectives": providing social protection for the individual; assisting social integration; and maintaining social peace. He hoped that the United Nations might acquire the means to follow up the Conference and trusted that the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund) would play a full role in the social action that was being redefined and reinvented. Giving social issues the status of universal priorities showed the determination to accept responsibility for the collective destiny of international society and to establish a new planet-wide pact of solidarity.

On 12 March, the Summit adopted the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development,^a which it recommended to the General Assembly for endorsement.

Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development. The Copenhagen Declaration comprised an overview of the current social situation, a section on principles and goals, and ten commitments for action at the national and international levels.

With regard to the current situation, the Summit acknowledged that while there had been progress in some areas of social and economic development, far too many people, particularly women and children, were vulnerable to stress and deprivation. The gap between rich and poor had increased in many societies and more than one billion people in the world lived in abject poverty, most of them going hungry every day. There were serious social problems in countries with economies in transition and those experiencing fundamental political, economic and social transformations. The major cause of continued deterioration of the global environment was the unsustainable pattern of consumption and production, which aggravated poverty and imbalances. At the same time, continued growth of the world population challenged the adaptive capacities of Governments, social institutions and the natural environment. Over 120 million people worldwide were officially unemployed and many more were underemployed, while millions of others were refugees or internally displaced persons. Women carried a disproportionate share of the problems of coping with poverty, social disintegration, unemployment, environmental degradation and the effects of war.

People with disabilities were too often forced into poverty, unemployment and social isolation and older persons could be particularly vulnerable to social exclusion, poverty and marginalization. The situation in developing countries, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries (LDCs), was critical and required special attention and action. Countries with economies in transition and those undergoing fundamental political, economic and social transformation also required the support of the international community. The challenge was to establish a people-centred framework for social development, to build a culture of cooperation and partnership, and to respond to the immediate needs of those most affected by human distress.

In the principles and goals contained in the Declaration, the heads of State and Government stated that they would create a framework for action that would, among other things: place people at the centre of development; ensure equity among generations and protect the integrity and sustainable use of the environment; recognize that social development could not be successfully achieved without the commitment and efforts of the international community; integrate economic, cultural and social policies and acknowledge the interdependence of public and private spheres of activity; recognize that achieving sustained social development required sound economic policies; promote democracy, human dignity, social justice and solidarity and ensure tolerance, non-violence, pluralism and non-discrimination; promote the equitable distribution of income and greater access to resources; recognize the family as the basic unit of society; ensure that disadvantaged and vulnerable persons and groups were included in social development; promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, including the right to development; reaffirm the right of self-determination of all peoples; recognize and support indigenous people in their pursuit of economic and social development; underline the importance of transparent and accountable governance and administration; and recognize that empowering people, particularly women, to strengthen their own capacities was a main objective of development and its principal resource.

The ten commitments adopted, each containing actions to be taken at the national and international levels, dealt with: creating an environment to enable people to achieve social development; the eradication of poverty; promoting the goal of full employment; promoting social integration; promoting full respect for human dignity and equality and equity between men and women; promoting and attaining the goals of universal and equitable access to quality education and the highest standards of physical and mental health; accelerating the economic, social and human resource development of Africa and LDCs; ensuring that structural adjustment programmes included social development goals; allocating adequate resources to social development; and improving and strengthening the framework for international, regional and subregional cooperation for social development.

Programme of Action. The five-chapter Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the draft text of which had been established by the Summit's Preparatory Committee (see below), outlined policies, actions and measures to implement the principles and fulfil the commitments enunciated in the Copenhagen Declaration.

Chapter I, which addressed the need for an enabling environment for sustainable development, listed actions required to promote a favourable national and international economic, political and legal environment. Those actions included: establishment of an open, equitable, cooperative and mutually beneficial economic environment; implementing sound and stable macroeconomic and sectoral policies; promoting enterprise, productive investment and expanded access to markets and to technologies; full implementation of the Final Act (1994) of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;⁽³⁾ refraining from creating obstacles to trade relations among States; increasing food production and improving access to food by low-income people in developing countries; strengthening capacity-building in developing countries, particularly in Africa and LDCs; ensuring, in accordance with Agenda 21,⁽⁴⁾ adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992, the need to protect the environment and the interests of future generations; and ensuring that the special needs of small island developing States were adequately addressed by implementing the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States.⁽⁵⁾ Actions identified to ensure that the benefits of global economic growth were equitably distributed among countries included debt alleviation, strengthening technical and financial assistance to developing countries and changing unsustainable consumption and production patterns. Within the framework of support to developing countries, giving priority to the needs of Africa and LDCs, actions required included improving the functioning of commodity markets and supporting commodity diversification efforts; immediate implementation of the terms of debt forgiveness agreed on in the Paris Club of creditor Governments in 1994 (see PART FOUR, Chapter IV); increasing official development assistance (ODA) and improving its impact; and striving to attain the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for ODA and 0.15 per cent to LDCs. Recommendations were also made regarding actions to make economic growth and the interaction of market forces more conducive to social development and to ensure that fiscal systems and other public policies were geared towards poverty eradication and did not generate socially divisive disparities.

In order to ensure that the political framework supported social development, it was necessary, among other things, to ensure that government agencies responsible for social policies had the resources necessary to give high priority to social development. The full involvement of women at all levels in the economic and political decision-making and implementation process was needed, as was the removal of all legal impediments to the ownership of means of production and property by men and women. Human rights and fundamental freedoms should be promoted and protected, including the right to development, and an open political and economic system required access by all to knowledge, education and information. International support for national efforts to promote a favourable political and legal environment called for the following actions: making use of the capacity of the United Nations and other organizations to prevent and resolve armed conflicts and promote social progress and better standards of life; coordinating measures to combat terrorism, all forms of extremist violence, illicit arms trafficking, organized crime and illicit drug problems, money laundering and related crimes, and trafficking in women, adolescents, children, migrants, and human organs; international cooperation to support the efforts of developing countries for the full realization of the right to development and the elimination of obstacles to development; ensuring that human persons were at the centre of social development; reinforcing the capacity of national, regional and international organizations to promote the implementation of all human rights and fundamental freedoms; elaborating policies to support the objectives of social development and contribute to institutional development through capacity-building and other forms of cooperation; strengthening the capacities of Governments, the private sector and civil society (especially in Africa and LDCs) to enable them to meet their specific and global responsibilities; and reinforcing the capacities of those groups in countries with economies in transition, with a view to helping them to transform their economies from centrally planned to market-oriented ones.

Chapter II, on eradication of poverty, acknowledged that over 1 billion people lived under unacceptable conditions of poverty, mostly in developing countries. Poverty could not be eradicated through anti-poverty programmes alone but needed democratic participation and changes in economic structures and universal access to economic opportunities, as well as special efforts to facilitate access for the disadvantaged. The Programme of Action described actions required in that regard, grouping them under the headings: formulation of integrated strategies; improved access to productive resources and infrastructure; meeting basic human needs of all people; and enhanced social protection and reduced vulnerability. Governments should give greater focus to eradicating absolute poverty and reducing overall poverty substantially by formulating—preferably by 1996—and implementing national poverty eradication plans to address the structural causes of poverty, giving particular attention to employment creation, health and education, basic social services, generating household income and promoting access to productive assets and economic opportunities. Each country should develop a precise definition and assessment of absolute poverty (preferably by 1996, the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty) and elaborate the measurements, criteria and indicators for determining the extent and distribution of absolute poverty. Governments should implement the commitments made to meet the basic needs of all, including the following objectives to be accomplished by the year 2000: universal access to basic education and completion of primary education by at least 80 per cent of primary school-age children; life expectancy of not less than 60 years in any country; reduction of mortality rates of infants and children under five by one third of the 1990 level, or 50 to 70 per 1,000 live births, whichever was less; a reduction in maternal mortality by one half of the 1990 level; a reduction of severe and moderate malnutrition among children under five by one half the 1990 level; ensuring primary health care for all; reducing malaria mortality and morbidity by at least 20 per cent compared to 1995 levels in at least 75 per cent of affected countries; and eradicating or controlling major diseases in accordance with Agenda 21.(4) Particular efforts should be made to improve the situations of children, youth and ageing persons. People and communities should be protected from impoverishment and long-term displacement resulting from disasters by designing mechanisms to reduce the impact of natural disasters, developing contingency plans to mitigate natural disasters and famine and establishing logistical mechanisms to enable quick and effective response to provide food and care to victims. Governments should also reduce vulnerability to natural disasters through the development of early warning systems.

Chapter III of the Programme of Action addressed the expansion of productive employment and reduction of unemployment. Full and adequately remunerated employment was an effective method of combating poverty and promoting social integration. It required that the State and the other parts of civil society at all levels cooperate to create conditions for everyone to participate in and benefit from productive work. Suggested actions to expand productive employment included placing the issue at the centre of sustainable development strategies and economic and social policies; minimizing the negative impact on jobs of measures for macroeconomic stability; promoting patterns of economic growth that maximized employment creation; and enhancing opportunities for the creation and growth of private-sector enterprises that would generate additional employment. It was also necessary to facilitate people's access to productive employment in the rapidly changing global environment and develop better quality jobs; and help workers to adapt and to enhance their employment opportunities under changing economic conditions. Governments should enhance the quality of work and employment and remove exploitation, abolish child labour, raise productivity and enhance the quality of life in order to achieve a healthy and safe working environment. Measures were also recommended for the full participation of women in the labour market and their equal access to employment opportunities. In terms of enhancing employment opportunities for groups with specific needs, action was suggested for improving the design of policies and programmes, better addressing the problem of short- and long-term unemployment through employment policies, establishing programmes for entry or re-entry into the labour market, and policies to guarantee all youth constructive options for their future. Action to promote the full participation of indigenous people in the labour market and their equal access to employment opportunities was advised, as were broadening the range of employment opportunities for persons with disabilities and intensifying international cooperation and national attention to migrant workers and their families. Recommendations were made for a broader recognition and understanding of work and employment and for developing additional socially useful new types of employment and work.

Chapter IV stated that the aim of social integration was to create a "society for all", based on respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, cultural and religious diversity, social justice and the special needs of vulnerable and disadvantaged groups, democratic participation and the rule of law. While progress, such as decolonization, the elimination of apartheid, the spread of democracy and the wider recognition of the need to respect human rights, was noted, violence was a growing threat to the security of individuals, families and communities everywhere. Actions recommended included the promotion and protection by Governments of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, bearing in mind the interdependent and mutually reinforcing relationship between democracy, development and respect for human rights; making public institutions more responsive to people's needs; and encouraging the fullest participation in society. At the national and international levels, it was necessary to eliminate discrimination and promote tolerance and mutual respect for the value of diversity. Governments should also promote equality and social justice and respond to the special needs of social groups, especially the vulnerable and the disadvantaged. In addition, they should address the special needs of refugees, displaced persons, and asylum-seekers; promote the equitable treatment and integration of documented migrants, particularly workers and their families; and address the concerns and basic needs of undocumented migrants. They should deal with the problems created by violence, crime, substance abuse and the production and use of and trafficking in illicit drugs and promote the rehabilitation of addicts. The family, as the basic unit of society, should be strengthened, with husband and wife as equal partners, and helped in its supporting, educating and nurturing roles.

Chapter V, which dealt with the implementation and follow-up to the Declaration and Programme of Action, stated that social development and the implementation of the Programme of Action of the Summit were primarily the responsibility of Governments, although international cooperation and assistance were essential. It required an integrated approach at the national level, in accordance with national specificities. Among the recommendations made were for the formulation or strengthening by 1996 of comprehensive cross-sectoral strategies and national strategies for social development for implementing the Summit outcome, and the development of quantitative and qualitative indicators of social development. Other action identified included international support for the formulation of national strategies for social development requiring action by bilateral and multilateral agencies. Effective implementation also required strengthening community organizations and non-profit NGOs in the spheres of education, health, poverty, social integration, human rights, improvement of the quality of life, and relief and rehabilitation, enabling them to participate constructively in policy-making and implementation. At the national level, substantial new and additional resources were needed in both the public and private sectors. Likewise, implementation in developing countries, particularly in Africa and LDCs, would need additional financial resources and more effective development cooperation and assistance. That would require translating the commitments of the Summit into financial implications for social development programmes in those countries; striving for the fulfilment of the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of GNP for overall ODA and increasing the share of funding for social development programmes; agreeing on a mutual commitment between interested developed and developing country partners to allocate 20 per cent of ODA and 20 per cent of the national budget, respectively, to basic social programmes; giving high priority in ODA to the eradication of poverty in developing countries; and providing assistance, including in the form of grants and loans, for social-sector activities such as rehabilitation and development of social infrastructure. Economies in transition would need continued international cooperation and assistance, including assessing the financial implications of the commitments of the Summit for social development programmes. Substantial debt reduction was needed to enable developing countries to implement the Declaration and the Programme of Action. Building on the momentum of the 1994 meetings of the seven major industrialized nations and of the governors of the World Bank and IMF, further progress could be achieved by inviting the international community to continue to explore ways to implement additional measures to alleviate the debt burdens of developing countries; adopting measures to reduce substantially the bilateral debt of LDCs, particularly the countries of Africa; giving special consideration to developing countries where multilateral debt was an important part of total debt; and encouraging debt swaps for social development, with resources released by debt cancellation or reduction being invested in social development programmes. Governments should cooperate with international financial institutions and other international organizations to ensure that structural development programmes included social development goals, in particular the eradication of poverty, the generation of productive employment and the enhancement of social integration, including the protection of basic social programmes and expenditures, particularly those affecting the poor and vulnerable segments of society, from budget reductions. International financial institutions should contribute to the mobilization of resources for implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action by further integrating social development goals in their policies, programmes and operations, including giving higher priority to social-sector lending. The Bretton Woods institutions and the UN system should work with concerned countries to improve policy dialogues and develop new initiatives to ensure that structural adjustment programmes promoted sustained economic and social development, with particular attention to their impact on the poor and vulnerable groups. In addition, relevant UN bodies, particularly the Economic and Social Council, should consider new and innovative ideas for generating funds.

The Programme of Action also addressed the role of the UN system in its implementation. A framework for international cooperation should be developed in the context of an agenda for development⁽⁶⁾ to ensure the integrated and comprehensive implementation, follow-up and assessment of the outcome of the Summit, together with the results of other recent and planned UN conferences related to social development. The financial and organizational implications of the commitments, goals and targets should be assessed, priorities established, and budgets and work programmes planned. As to considering social development at the intergovernmental level, the General Assembly should include the follow-up to the Summit in its agenda and, in 1996, review the effectiveness of the steps taken to implement the outcome of the Summit with regard to poverty eradication, as part of the activities of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty. It should hold a special session in the year 2000 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit and consider further action and initiatives and, at its fiftieth (1995) session, declare the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) and convene meetings of high-level representatives on critical social issues and on policies for addressing them. The Assembly should draw on the initial work of the Ad Hoc open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on an Agenda for Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) on a common framework for implementing the outcome of conferences. The Economic and Social Council would oversee and make recommendations for system-wide coordination in implementing the Summit outcome and should look for ways to strengthen its role, authority, structures, resources and processes, bringing specialized agencies into a closer working relationship with it so that it could review progress in implementing the Summit's outcome. At its 1995 substantive session, the Council should review the mandate, agenda and composition of the Commission for Social Development, including strengthening the Commission. It should also review the reporting system in social development with a view to establishing a coherent system that would result in clear policy recommendations for Governments and international actors. The Council should consider holding joint meetings with the Development Committee of the World Bank and

IMF. The Secretary-General and the heads of IMF, the World Bank, the International Labour Organization (ILO), UN funds and programmes and other relevant agencies should hold joint meetings to consider implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action prior to the Development Committee sessions. To promote implementation at the regional and subregional levels, the regional commissions, in cooperation with the regional intergovernmental organizations and banks, could convene biennial meetings to review progress. The UN system should provide technical cooperation and other forms of assistance to the developing countries, in particular in Africa and LDCs, in implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action. To that end, specialized agencies and related organizations of the system were invited to strengthen and adjust their activities, programmes and medium-term strategies to take into account the follow-up to the Summit, while relevant governing bodies should review their policies, programmes, budgets and activities. The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) should consider how its participating agencies might best coordinate their activities to implement the objectives of the Summit. The UN system should also provide technical cooperation and other forms of assistance to the countries with economies in transition. To ensure coherence in implementing the Declaration and the Programme of Action, the General Assembly should strengthen coordination of UN system activities, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization (WTO), invite WTO to consider how it might contribute and request ILO to contribute to the implementation. UN operational activities for development should be strengthened and the UN Development Programme (UNDP) should organize UN efforts towards capacity-building, support the coordinated implementation of social development programmes through its network of field offices, and improve coordination at the country level through the resident coordinator system. UN developmental efforts should be supported by a substantial increase in resources for operational activities for development on a continuous and assured basis. The support of major groups, as defined in Agenda 21,⁽⁷⁾ was essential for planning, elaboration, implementation and evaluation at the national and international levels. To that end, mechanisms were needed to support, promote and allow their effective participation in all relevant UN bodies, including mechanisms for reviewing the implementation of the Programme of Action.

Other action. In addition to adopting the Declaration and the Programme of Action, the Summit adopted a resolution expressing its gratitude to the Government and the people of Denmark for their hospitality. By another resolution, the Summit approved the report of its Credentials Committee.

Documentation. The Summit had before it a note by the Secretary-General transmitting the draft declaration and draft programme of action, as approved by the Preparatory Committee (see below)⁽⁸⁾ and a note by the Secretariat transmitting the texts of additional proposals for those drafts.⁽⁹⁾ By a 2 February note verbale,⁽¹⁰⁾ Bangladesh, on behalf of the secretariat of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC), submitted the report of the SAARC Workshop to Formulate a Collective Position for the World Summit for Social Development (New Delhi, India, 12-13 December 1994). Greece, in an 11 March note verbale⁽¹¹⁾ addressed to the Summit secretariat, requested that, at the World Summit, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia should use that name and not that of "the Republic of Macedonia", in accordance with a 1993 Security Council resolution.⁽¹²⁾ Also before the Summit was the report of the Credential Committee⁽¹³⁾ and several notes by the Secretariat dealing with organizational and procedural matters,⁽¹⁴⁾ accreditation of NGOs,⁽¹⁵⁾ and participation of intergovernmental organizations.⁽¹⁶⁾

Preparations for the Summit

The Preparatory Committee for the World Summit held its third and final session in New York from 16 to 28 January,⁽¹⁷⁾ during which it approved the draft declaration and draft programme of action of the Summit⁽¹⁸⁾ and a list of NGOs⁽¹⁹⁾ for accreditation and recommended a provisional agenda and organization of work for adoption by the Summit. The Committee considered a number of contributions of organs, organizations and programmes of the UN system⁽²⁰⁾ to the Summit and also considered the status of the preparations for the Summit. It had before it a 1994 secretariat note⁽²¹⁾ on the status of preparations for the Summit, the report of the 1994 Seminar on the Ethical and Spiritual Dimensions of Social Progress⁽²¹⁾ and the report of the Symposium on Social Development (Beijing, China, 7-9 October 1994).⁽²²⁾

Follow-up to the Summit

Commission for Social Development. The Commission for Social Development, at its April (1995) session⁽²³⁾ (see below), considered the agenda item, "Priority subject: World Summit for Social Development". It had before it a note⁽²⁴⁾ by the Secretariat on follow-up to the Summit, which contained information on the Commission's establishment and functions and outlined those provisions of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action that were of relevance to international cooperation and the follow-up to the Summit, including Commitment 10 of the Declaration and Chapter V of the Programme of Action.

The Commission adopted a 20 April resolution,⁽²⁵⁾ by which it transmitted to the Economic and Social Council its views on the follow-up to the Summit. It considered that implementation of the commitments and policy recommendations involved Governments, the international community and all actors of civil society, as well as regional and international organizations, which had a responsibility to provide support to Governments. The Commission should have a central role to play in the follow-up, which should be compatible with that of other relevant bodies, organs and organizations of the UN system. The Council should review the Commission's mandate, agenda and composition, including an expansion of its membership and the annualization of its meetings, as well as its reporting system and methods of work, with a view to enhancing its contribution to the Summit follow-up. Its mandate should be adapted to ensure an integrated approach to social development, taking into account the relationship between social and economic development as defined by the Summit. The Commission should open its debates to experts and the main actors of civil society; update its methods of work; contribute to the review of the Declaration and Programme of Action by the Assembly and the Council; and develop a work programme for considering the Declaration and Programme of Action.

By an 11 May note,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretariat submitted the views of the Commission to the Council.

Economic and Social Council. In accordance with decision 1995/214 of 10 February, the Economic and Social Council, at its resumed organizational session, discussed the manner in which the discussion on the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development could be organized during the high-level meeting of the operational activities segment of its 1995 substantive session. In decision 1995/224 of 5 May, the Council decided that the high-level meeting would have as one of its themes a preliminary exchange on the follow-up by the UN system to the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development. It would consider the direction to be taken by the UN system for adopting an approach to social development issues in accordance with the framework developed by the Summit.

In a 27 June note,⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretariat examined the general approach to the follow-up to the Summit, follow-up at the national level, involvement of civil society and follow-up at the regional and international levels. It identified the roles of the General Assembly, the Council and the Commission for Social Development and other subsidiary bodies of the Council. The report stated that follow-up to the Summit should be innovative, allowing existing mechanisms to be transformed and new approaches and arrangements to be put in place; open in its orientation; universal; and holistic. The Secretariat recommended that the Council provide for the Commission on Social Development a central role in the implementation and follow-up of the Summit, as well as roles for most of its subsidiary bodies and other organs of the UN system; approve the provisional agenda for the Commission's next session; consider aligning the periodicity of the Commission's session with that of other bodies engaged in the follow-up to major conferences, starting in 1996 with a special session on the follow-up to the Summit; and consider ways to involve experts and the main actors of civil society at the next session of the Commission and request the Secretary-General to report in 1996 on the experience gained. Also in 1996, it should review the membership of the Commission and the reporting system in the area of social development in the light of proposals made by the Secretary-General and taking into consideration the outcome of the General Assembly discussion and relevant developments in other forums. The Council should request other functional commissions and committees to place on their agendas relevant aspects of the follow-up to the Summit.

UNDP action. The United Nations Development Programme Administrator, in a 26 April report⁽²⁸⁾ to the UNDP/UN Population Fund (UNFPA) Executive Board and in UNDP's annual report⁽²⁹⁾ to the Council, discussed the follow-up to the Summit. In February, in anticipation of its role in supporting countries implementing the outcome of the Summit, UNDP had established a Summit follow-up strategy group to work with country officers and country-level partners in developing specific strategies and programmes for implementing the Programme of Action. The Summit's commitments closely paralleled UNDP's core mission and strategy as outlined in the Administrator's 1994 proposed initiatives for change.⁽³⁰⁾ UNDP was in a strong position to respond quickly and concretely to the challenges of the Summit follow-up. Its follow-up strategy included immediate support to countries in integrating the Summit commitments and related conference agreements into their long-term development plans and frameworks, particularly strategies for the eradication of poverty; dialogue among UN specialized agencies and other development partners on the integration of follow-up strategies and for improved aid coordination and cooperation; and a possible capacity development window for the Summit follow-up, comparable to Capacity 21, launched in 1992⁽³¹⁾ as follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. National partnership facilities would be a key element of that strategy, facilitating the mobilization of funds for national capacity-building and the coordination of activities in that area.

UNFPA action. The UNFPA Administrator, in a 20 April report⁽³²⁾ to the Executive Board and in UNFPA's annual report to the Council,⁽³³⁾ stated that, immediately following the Summit's conclusion, UNFPA had shared with its field and headquarters staff those elements of the Programme of Action related to the consensus reached at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development.⁽³⁴⁾ It would implement all relevant recommendations that were within its mandate and would serve as a strong advocate for recommendations on other population-related social goals, objectives and commitments adopted at Copenhagen.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/60.

Social development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, in particular commitment 10, and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, in particular chapter V on implementation and follow-up, in which, inter alia, the Economic and Social Council was invited to review, at its substantive session of 1995, the mandate, agenda and composition of the Commission for Social Development, including consideration of the strengthening of the Commission, taking into account the need for synergy with other related commissions and conference follow-up,

Taking note of the report of the Commission for Social Development on its thirty-fourth session, at which the World Summit for Social Development was the priority subject,

Taking into account Commission resolutions 34/4 and 34/5 of 20 April 1995, including the annexes thereto, concerning the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development, in particular the recommendation that the Commission should have a central role in the follow-up to the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action,

Reaffirming that the Economic and Social Council should oversee system-wide coordination in the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and make recommendations to the General Assembly in this regard,

Reiterating that the Commission for Social Development will assist the Council in the intergovernmental review of the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action so as to ensure an integrated approach to social development,

Bearing in mind the coordinated follow-up to major United Nations conferences and the overall responsibilities of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council,

Considering that all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should be involved in the follow-up to the Summit, in accordance with their mandates,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretariat;
2. Decides that the Commission for Social Development, as a functional commission of the Economic and Social Council, in promoting the integrated treatment of social development issues in the United Nations system, should review, on a periodic basis, issues related to the follow-up and implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action, in a manner consistent with the functions and contributions of other relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, and that, to this end, the Commission should:

- (a) Improve international understanding of social development, including through exchanges of information and experiences, and through discussions on emerging issues;

- (b) Make recommendations regarding social development to the Economic and Social Council;

- (c) Elaborate practical measures aimed at furthering the recommendations of the World Summit for Social Development;

3. Decides also that the Commission for Social Development should:

- (a) Adapt its mandate so as to ensure an integrated approach to social development, taking into account the relationship between social and economic development as defined in the recommendations of the World Summit for Social Development; it should, inter alia, contribute to the identification of practical measures;

- (b) Develop a multi-year programme of work to the year 2000, selecting specific themes and addressing them from an interrelated and integrated perspective;

- (c) Establish the practice of opening its debates to experts and the main actors of civil society so as to enhance the exchange of information and experience, knowledge and understanding of social development;

In decision 1995/324 of 12 December, the Council decided that the special session of the Commission for Social Development would be held in New York from 21 to 30 May 1996 and that its theme would be strategies and actions for the eradication of poverty.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 26 October report to the General Assembly on implementation of the outcome of the Summit,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General discussed an improved and strengthened framework for cooperation for social development and reviewed the roles of the UN system and the Assembly in implementing the Declaration and the Programme of Action. He had informed heads of State or Government who had participated at the Summit of his intention to ensure a coordinated UN response to the commitments agreed to there, based on a clear division of labour. He had suggested the designation of a national focal point on the implementation of the Summit and requested the views of leaders on ways to maintain the momentum towards the agreed objectives. He had also emphasized that the situation of LDCs should be taken into account in the Summit follow-up. In response, Governments had emphasized their determination to foster social development and to implement the objectives and commitments of the Summit. Focal points were being designated in central ministries, and some national committees established for the preparation of the Summit were being maintained, while in other cases new ones were being set up.

As Chairman of ACC, the Secretary-General wrote to the heads of UN programmes and specialized agencies and the Bretton Woods institutions, stressing the need for an integrated approach to the follow-up to UN conferences. At its second regular session of 1995 (New York, 12-13 October),⁽³⁶⁾ ACC considered proposals for mobilizing the UN system in support of programmes to implement the commitments and plans of action emanating from recent UN conferences, in particular at the country level, and in support of national follow-up. In that regard, the Secretary-General drew attention to the agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council at its coordination segment,⁽³⁷⁾ which provided a framework for follow-up arrangements (see PART SIX, Chapter IV).

The Secretary-General described follow-up action by UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and the United Nations Environment Programme. He also indicated that the five United Nations regional commissions were planning activities in relation to poverty eradication and the observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (see PART FOUR, Chapter I), including the development of regional programmes of action. Following the adoption by the Rio Group (Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela) Buenos Aires, Argentina (4-5 May) of a declaration on the follow-up to the Summit and actions to be taken at the regional level, a regional meeting of the Rio Group, the UN system and lending institutions took place in Quito, Ecuador, in November. A regional project on social indicators was to be launched for the Latin American region with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and UNDP with the support of the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank.

The Development Committee of the World Bank and IMF considered, at its October meeting, the implications of the Summit for developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The two institutions identified activities in the area of poverty reduction, with emphasis on the role of public expenditure, aspects of their work to be strengthened and ways of enhancing cooperation between the Bretton Woods institutions and other multilateral and bilateral donors in support of poverty-reduction strategies of developing and transition economies. In November, the ILO Governing Body discussed action to be taken to follow up the Summit. It agreed that it would strengthen its dialogue and cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions in the field of employment and undertake several national employment policy reviews. The UN Secretariat's contribution to implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action would be provided mainly through the technical and substantive servicing of the relevant intergovernmental bodies.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly might wish to hold a special session in 2000 for an overall review and appraisal of the outcome of the Summit; include in its agenda, between 1996 and 2000, an item on the implementation of the outcome of the Summit; and consider convening in 1997 a meeting of high-level representatives to consider issues of social development, with particular emphasis on the commitments adopted at the Summit. In that context, the Assembly could invite the Economic and Social Council to consider arrangements to maximize its contribution to the review and appraisal of the Summit in 2000, including an assessment of technical assistance provided by the UN system. The Commission for Social Development should play a central role, and the Secretariat would report to the Council on the activities and findings of other relevant functional commissions. The Council would report to the Assembly on the results of the review and invite regional commissions to hold, between 1996 and 1998, a meeting at a high political level to review implementation of the outcome of the Summit so that the results could be used by the Council in 1999 and by the Assembly in 2000.

The Assembly might encourage Governments to prepare periodic national reports outlining successes, problems and obstacles, particularly with regard to defining time-bound goals and targets for reducing poverty and eradicating absolute poverty, expanding employment, reducing unemployment and enhancing social integration. It could request the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the outcome of the Summit for the Assembly in 2000, and in 1997, in the context of its meeting of high-level representatives. The Assembly could ask him to report to the Council in 1999 on the activities of the United Nations system to promote international cooperation for the implementation.

22 December 1995 Meeting 98 Adopted without vote

38-nation draft (A/50/L.66 & Add.1); agenda item 161.
Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: plenary 83-86, 98.

The draft programme for the observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (1996)⁽³⁸⁾ (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) took into account, and followed closely, the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development.

The Assembly, in resolution 50/107 of 20 December, as recommended in the Programme of Action, proclaimed the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006).

World social situation

In an interim report on the world social situation⁽³⁹⁾ submitted to the General Assembly and to the Economic and Social Council, in response to a 1989 Assembly request,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General updated the main social issues and trends of international concern that had emerged since the publication of the Report on the World Social Situation 1993⁽⁴¹⁾ and set out the draft framework for the 1997 report.

It was noted that intense discussions of the world social situation since the 1993 Report had mostly related to the six major UN conferences dealing directly with social development questions, four of which had concluded—the 1992 International Conference on Nutrition,⁽⁴²⁾ the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights,⁽⁴³⁾ the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development⁽⁴⁴⁾ and the World Summit for Social Development (see above)—and two still to be held—the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X) and the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements. That upsurge of interest was consequent upon a perceived deterioration of social conditions, the incapacity of current paradigms, institutions, policies and programmes to address effectively problems of social development and the earnest desire of Governments to harness national and international strengths to meet those challenges.

Claims for equality between men and women gained momentum during the course of preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women, and much knowledge was gained on levels of well-being, access to income-earning assets and social services and sharing of power, whether in families, enterprises or institutions of Government. The scarcity of adequate employment opportunities continued to be a common feature. Even where the increase in the pace of economic growth was most pronounced, as in developed market economies, rates of unemployment, especially among the long-term unemployed, remained high. There was evidence that income distribution was more uneven than a decade before, with the exception of countries in Asia that were growing consistently at very high rates. In economies in transition, the worsening income distribution situation resulted from their abandonment of a set of economic and social institutions that set out to secure a high degree of equality in incomes and living conditions. Structural adjustment programmes in many developing countries had been slow to show salutary effects, and there was less enthusiasm for sudden sharp changes in policies than for slow and gradual changes. The increased incidence of crime and its adverse effect on individuals and communities was a growing concern in many societies. It posed challenges to policy makers in several areas and tested the capacity of the criminal justice system to dispose of cases and mete out deserved punishment.

The 1997 report would be written in the context of the conclusions of the six major UN conferences and the unusually rapid change in several fundamental social and political institutions and economies. The unifying theme would be the manner in which individuals responded to the challenge posed by those rapid and fundamental changes. It would deal with demographic changes and their social consequences; "traditional" social concerns: health, nutrition, housing, sanitation and education; economic transformation and adjustment policies and their consequences for the social situation and policies; social security; crime and policies for its prevention; the situation and policies relating to children, youth, the aged and the handicapped; aggravating situations caused by ethnic and religious conflicts; the nature of people's rights; and the relations between Government and the market, from the points of view of growth, efficiency and equity.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/314 of 28 July, took note of the report of the Secretary-General, as did the General Assembly by decision 50/442 of 21 December.

Social welfare issues and activities

The Commission on Social Development, at its April session,⁽²³⁾ considered the monitoring of international plans and programmes of action. It had before it a report⁽⁴⁴⁾ of the Secretary-General on major issues and programme activities of the UN Secretariat and the regional commissions relating to social development and welfare, youth, ageing, disabled persons and the family. In an addendum,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General outlined the social welfare and social development activities of the regional commissions for 1993-1994. The Commission also had before it reports of the Secretary-General on the conceptual framework of a programme for the preparation and observance of the International Year of Older Persons (1999)⁽⁴⁶⁾ (see PART FOUR, Chapter XI); on measures taken to observe the International Day of Disabled Persons⁽⁴⁷⁾ (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIII); on the draft world programme of action for youth to the year 2000 and beyond;⁽⁴⁸⁾ (see PART FOUR, Chapter XI) and on the International Year of the Family (1994)⁽⁴⁹⁾ (see below).

In accordance with a 1993 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Commission reconsidered the text of a draft decision⁽⁵¹⁾ entitled "Contribution of comprehensive national social policies to societal management and to the solving of economic, environmental, demographic, cultural and political problems", which the Commission, at its 1993 session, had recommended for adoption by the Council.

On 20 April, the Commission decided to take no action on the draft decision.

UN Year for Tolerance (1995)

The General Assembly in 1993 had proclaimed 1995 the UN Year for Tolerance,⁽⁵²⁾ and the Year was officially launched on 21 February 1995. In accordance with a 1994 resolution,⁽⁵³⁾ the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the lead organization for the Year, adopted a Declaration of Principles on Tolerance and a Follow-Up Plan of Action for the UN Year for Tolerance on 16 November 1995.⁽⁵⁴⁾ The Declaration recalled relevant human rights instruments and addressed intolerance in its many forms, including violence, terrorism, injustice and exclusion. It proclaimed 16 November the International Day for Tolerance and decided to submit the Declaration and the Follow-Up Plan of Action to the Assembly in 1996.

On 20 November, the Assembly, in accordance with a 1994 resolution,⁽⁵⁵⁾ held a special commemorative meeting to mark the UN Year for Tolerance. In a message to mark the occasion, the Assembly President said that intolerance was a complex human phenomenon where prejudice, feelings, impulses, social hierarchies and irrational fear of the "other" brought forces together to make it difficult to design clear strategies of action. The international community had a duty to create a climate favourable to tolerance through the construction of democratic institutions and the curbing of acts of intolerance, violence, discrimination and exclusion. He called on States to transcend differences in order to renew their determined commitment to promoting the concept of tolerance as a prerequisite for a peaceful and non-violent world. In his message, the Secretary-General called for a redoubling of efforts to close the apparent divides between peoples and overcome momentary differences and ideological and cultural barriers.

Follow-up to the International Year of the Family

Meeting of national coordinators. As part of the follow-up to the 1994 observance of the International Year of the Family,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the UN Inter-regional Meeting of National Coordinators/Focal points for the Year, was held in Bratislava, Slovakia, from 4 to 7 February.⁽⁵⁶⁾ Organized by the secretariat for the Year, in collaboration with the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, the meeting reviewed the global observances of the Year and their implications for national social policies in the process of sustainable development; considered concepts and forms of international cooperation on family issues, with emphasis on assistance to developing countries; and described national, regional and international follow-up to the Year. It adopted a number of specific conclusions and recommendations.

Commission for Social Development. In a 22 March note,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported to the Commission for Social Development on the status of the implementation of a 1993 General Assembly resolution on the International Year of the Family.⁽⁵⁸⁾ The report described the 1994 International Conference on Families,⁽⁵⁹⁾ outlined suggestions regarding a declaration on the role, responsibilities and rights of families and made specific proposals on the follow-up to the Year. Only eight responses had been received from Commission members to requests for their views on the proposed declaration. The Secretary-General would submit to the Assembly's fiftieth session proposals regarding the follow-up to the Year (see below).

On 20 April,⁽⁶⁰⁾ the Commission noted that the Secretary-General would submit to the Assembly specific proposals on the follow-up to the Year, intended to serve as an indicative guide for action, primarily at the local and material levels. It requested him to prepare a concise draft reflecting the outcome of the relevant UN conferences and national experiences of the International Year of the Family.

Inter-agency meeting. The Fifth Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on the International Year of the Family (Vienna, 22-23 May)⁽⁶¹⁾ reviewed the implementation of inter-agency projects for the Year; carried out an assessment of the Year from the perspective of the UN system and NGOs and of the work of the ad hoc inter-agency mechanism; and discussed strategies and priorities for the follow-up to the Year.

The Meeting recommended that concerned organizations and agencies should continue to serve as important partners in the global effort to achieve long-term development objectives regarding families by providing substantive leadership on family-specific dimensions of their mandates and adequately reflecting a focus on family issues in their programmes and budgets. They should appoint permanent focal points on family issues to facilitate a coordinated system-wide follow-up to the Year. Based on the experience of the inter-agency mechanism for the Year, ad hoc inter-agency meetings on family issues should be instituted on a biennial basis to coordinate the follow-up to the Year, facilitate the exchange of information and collaboration, harmonize approaches and understanding of relevant concepts and implement projects. The first meeting should be held in 1996. The ad hoc inter-agency meetings on family issues would also implement the long-term project on support for capacity-building and empowering families, led by the World Health Organization. The themes for the annual observances of the International Day of Families (15 May) in the years 1996 to 2000 would be, respectively: Families—victims of poverty and homelessness; Building families on equality and equity; Family—source of education for human rights; Families for all ages; Families—agents of development and social progress. UN organizations and agencies should give adequate attention to family issues in their substantive contributions to the Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X) and the UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held in 1996. NGOs and institutions devoted to family issues should be allowed to participate as partners in family-related work of the UN system and NGOs should be represented as observers at meetings of the ad hoc inter-agency meetings on family issues.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September report⁽⁶¹⁾ on the observance of the International Year of the Family. The report discussed the background and operational modalities to the Year, major instruments, campaigns and special initiatives, relevant intergovernmental conferences, action taken at the national and regional levels, and action by intergovernmental bodies, the Secretariat, the UN system and inter-agency cooperation, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, and research and academic institutions. It also listed in-kind contributions made to the secretariat for the Year and to the Voluntary Fund for the Year. Among proposals made on the follow-up of the Year were translation of the increased awareness regarding families into concrete measures; implementation of family dimensions of the outcomes of major international conferences in the 1990s; elaboration of long-term national plans of action on families; exchange of information and experience, mobilization of resources and expertise and the provision of technical assistance, with a focus on the least developed and developing countries; the promotion of networks and partnerships in support of families; and the continuation of a voluntary fund for families as a means of resource mobilization and financial assistance, including from the private sector through innovative fund-raising approaches.

The Secretary-General stated that the Year's observance had resulted in a significant record of accomplishment. It increased the understanding of the interrelationship of families to society, and underscored the need for appropriate and timely policies. A major outcome was the greater awareness of the extent to which policy decisions affected families and the value of a family-sensitive perspective in policy development and implementation. He suggested that its achievements should be built upon through long-term action, including effective follow-up at all levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/142.

Follow-up to the International Year of the Family

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the results of the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women, within which it was noted that the family is the basic unit of society and as such should be strengthened, that it is entitled to receive comprehensive protection and support, that in different cultural, political and social systems various forms of family exist and that the rights, capabilities and responsibilities of family members must be respected,

Noting the accomplishments resulting from the observance of the International Year of the Family, inter alia, the new initiatives and long-term activities in support of the family all over the world, in particular at the local and national levels, and the value of international cooperation on family issues,

2. Urges Governments to ratify or accede to and to ensure implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women so that universal ratification can be achieved by the year 2000 and to take urgent measures to achieve universal ratification of or accession to the Convention on the Rights of the Child before the end of 1995, and urges those who have not yet done so to become party to the Convention in order to achieve universal implementation by the year 2000;

3. Welcomes the proposals, contained in the report of the Secretary-General, on the follow-up to the International Year of the Family;

(d) To continue the operation of the Voluntary Fund for the International Year of the Family, to be renamed the United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities, to provide financial assistance for activities specific to the family and projects of direct benefit to it, with special focus on least developed and developing countries, giving particular attention to non-traditional resources;

6. Calls upon Governments, as well as organizations, individuals and the private sector, to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities.

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/628) without vote, 8 November (meeting 21); 30-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.10), orally revised; agenda item 105. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 8-12, 18, 21; plenary 97.

Promotion of literacy

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1991 General Assembly request,⁽⁶²⁾ transmitted to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on progress made and problems encountered in the quest to achieve a literate world.⁽⁶³⁾ The report also summed up the existing situation and discussed action taken for improving future prospects. The UNESCO Director-General reported that progress could be seen in the rising literacy rates, approximately 0.5 per cent per year or 5.0 per cent per decade since 1960, despite rapid population growth; a dramatic increase in the number of literate adults, especially in the developing countries; and a steady expansion in educational enrolments, with average annual growth projected at 1.7 per cent in the 1990s.

The increase in enrolments was brought about in part by the renewed emphasis placed on primary education by Governments, international organizations and agencies following the 1990 World Conference on Education for All.⁽⁶⁴⁾ However, the problems were equally apparent: more than one adult in five was still illiterate, amounting to an estimated 885 million in 1995; more than three illiterates in five were women; an estimated 129 million primary school-age children were not enrolled in school; and many children who were enrolled attended schools inadequate in terms of staffing, equipment and facilities.

In terms of future prospects, the Director-General reported that UNESCO had pursued the follow-up to International Literacy Year, observed in 1990, and the World Conference on Education for All through a unified programme of initiatives and activities, including the establishment of an International Consultative Forum on Education for All to monitor progress towards education for all and to promote consultation and cooperation at the global level. It developed a core programme and an extended programme to support the education for all movement. In collaboration with UNICEF, UNESCO established a joint project for monitoring learning achievement, and was carrying out another project "Education for all: Making it work", with UNICEF, UNDP, Germany and other partners, to identify and make known effective and innovative educational strategies. UNESCO was also conducting a mid-term review of its 1989 Plan of Action, covering the decade 1990-1999.

The Director-General stated that the World Conference had encouraged additional aid to basic education and literacy and improved the effectiveness of such assistance. The World Bank increased aid to basic education fourfold; UNDP reported that basic education received 32 per cent or $43 million of total expenditures during 1993; and UNICEF increased the portion of its programme budget spent on education from 8 to 11 per cent and planned to achieve a 20 per cent rate of expenditure by the end of the decade. However, bilateral aid appeared to be receding.

By decision 1995/314 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/143.

Progress made and problems encountered in the struggle against illiteracy: a mid-decade review—cooperation to achieve education for all

The General Assembly,

Recalling further its resolution 45/126 of 14 December 1990, in which it called for strengthening efforts towards the elimination of illiteracy of women of all ages,

Mindful of the fact that the eradication of illiteracy is one of the paramount objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Convinced that literacy, especially functional literacy and adequate education, represents an indispensable element for the development and harnessing of science, technology and human resources for economic and social progress,

Welcoming the setting up of the International Consultative Forum on Education for All entrusted with the task of monitoring the progress towards education for all and promoting consultation and cooperation at the global level,

Recognizing that, despite the significant advances registered in the growth of literacy rates in many parts of the world, major problems still persist which require greater mobilization of efforts at both national and international levels to achieve the goal of education for all,

Stressing the importance of the effective implementation of the World Declaration on Education for All, and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization Plan of Action for the Eradication of Illiteracy by the Year 2000, as well as the relevant commitments and recommendations to promote literacy contained, inter alia, in the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s of the World Summit for Children, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the Delhi Declaration of the Education for All Summit of Nine High-Population Developing Countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Progress made and problems encountered in the struggle against illiteracy: a mid-decade review";

2. Notes with appreciation the close collaboration and commendable work being pursued as a follow-up to the International Literacy Year and the World Conference on Education for All by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Development Programme;

3. Commends those Governments which have launched national literacy programmes and attained notable progress in meeting the objectives of the International Literacy Year and those set forth in the World Declaration on Education for All;

4. Invites Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to further intensify their efforts to effectively implement the World Declaration on Education for All, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization Plan of Action for the Eradication of Illiteracy by the Year 2000, as well as the relevant commitments and recommendations to promote literacy contained, inter alia, in the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s of the World Summit for Children, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, and the Delhi Declaration of the Education for All Summit of Nine High-Population Developing Countries, with a view to better coordinating their activities and increasing their contribution to development;

5. Appeals anew to Governments and economic and financial organizations and institutions, both national and international, to lend greater financial and material support to the efforts to increase literacy and achieve education for all;

6. Calls upon the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue assuming the role of lead organization in ensuring an effective follow-up to the International Literacy Year and to pursue, in cooperation with other sponsors of the World Conference on Education for All, the implementation of the World Declaration on Education for All;

7. Notes with satisfaction the firm commitment and active involvement of many non-governmental organizations, the mass media and the private sector in support of and in the follow-up to the International Literacy Year;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly, at its fifty-second session, in 1997, through the Economic and Social Council, a progress report on the implementation process of the education for all objectives, including the recommendations of the International Consultative Forum on Education for All, taking into account the possible measures, if any, to improve the reporting procedure;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the question of cooperation to achieve education for all under the item on social development.

One resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers dealt with the role of the Olympic ideal in the building of a peaceful world.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/13.

The Olympic Ideal

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/29 of 7 December 1994, in which it requested the Secretary-General to encourage ministers of youth and sport or concerned officials of Member States to participate in the consideration by the General Assembly at its fiftieth session of an item entitled "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic Ideal" on the eve of the centenary of the revival of the Olympic Games in 1896 at Athens, on the initiative of a French educator, Baron

Pierre de Coubertin, and called upon Member States to reaffirm during the fiftieth session of the Assembly the observance of the Olympic Truce, during the next Summer Olympic Games,

Recalling also its resolution 48/11 of 25 October 1993, which, inter alia, revived the ancient Greek tradition of ekecheria or "Olympic Truce", calling for all hostilities to cease during the Games, thereby mobilizing the youth of the world in the cause of peace,

Taking into account resolution CM/Res.28(LXII), adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 21 to 23 June 1995, and endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization, which supports the appeal for an Olympic Truce,

Reaffirming that the Olympic Ideal promotes international understanding, particularly among the youth of the world, through sport and culture in order to advance the harmonious development of humankind,

Noting with satisfaction the increasing number of joint endeavours of the International Olympic Committee and the United Nations system, such as recent meetings on "Sport against drugs" with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, "Sport and the environment" with the United Nations Environment Programme, "Sport for all and health for all" with the World Health Organization and "Forum on physical activity and sport" with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

1. Calls upon Member States to reaffirm the observance of an Olympic Truce during the Games of the XXVI Olympiad, the Centennial Games, to be held at Atlanta, United States of America, from 19 July to 4 August 1996, and also calls upon them to reaffirm the observance of the Olympic Truce in advance of each Summer and Winter Olympic Games;

3. Welcomes the participation of ministers of youth and sport and concerned officials and the presence of the President of the International Olympic Committee in its consideration of the item entitled "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic Ideal" at its fiftieth session;

4. Suggests that national ministries of youth and sport consider collaborating with the Olympic Movement, in the spirit of Olympic ethics and fair play, on preventive education programmes such as anti-doping programmes, drug abuse prevention, environmental protection and enhancing the participation of women in all aspects of the sport movement;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee in joint endeavours for the promotion of peace, equality among nations and the harmonious development of humankind;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic Ideal" and to biennialize this item so that it will be considered in advance of each Summer and Winter Olympic Games.

Crime prevention

Ninth UN Crime Congress

The Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders was held in Cairo, Egypt, from 29 April to 8 May.⁽¹⁾ By decision 1995/211 of 10 February, the Economic and Social Council had changed the Congress dates; instead of 29 April to 10 May with two days for pre-Congress consultations, it would be held from 28 April to 8 May with one day for consultations. The Congress, the theme of which was "Less crime, more justice: security for all", was attended by 138 States and by observers from Palestine, UN offices and organs and specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, and 190 individual experts (see APPENDIX III).

Four major topics were considered: international cooperation and practical technical assistance for strengthening the rule of law: promoting the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme; action against national and transnational economic and organized crime, and the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment: national experiences and international cooperation; criminal justice and police systems: management and improvement of police and other law enforcement agencies, prosecution, courts and corrections, and the role of lawyers; and crime prevention strategies, in particular as related to crime in urban areas and juvenile and violent criminality, including the question of victims: assessment and new perspectives. The Congress also held two special plenary sessions on experiences in practical measures aimed at combating corruption involving public officials and on technical cooperation.

During the Congress six workshops were held on the following subjects: extradition and international cooperation; mass media and crime prevention; urban policy and crime prevention; prevention of violent crime; environmental protection at the national and international levels: potentials and limits of criminal justice; and international cooperation and assistance in the management of the criminal justice system.

Farouk Seif El-Nasr, Minister of Justice of Egypt, was elected President of the Congress.

The Secretary-General, in his message to the Congress, noted that new and rapacious forms of criminality had been taking advantage of the very trends that had brought so many benefits: improvements in information and transportation technologies, relaxation of border controls, and internationalization of world markets. Every country had a duty to do whatever was possible to protect its children and future generations from the scourge of crime, which in some countries had reached the point of challenging legitimate Governments, jeopardizing their economic and social fabric. Rising crime was impairing the process of development and the general well-being of humanity. Crime in its various dimensions required coordinated, international action with close cooperation among States.

Resolutions of the Congress

The Congress adopted nine substantive resolutions on a broad range of crime-related issues. It also adopted a resolution thanking the Government of Egypt for its hospitality and welcoming its proposal to establish a regional centre for training and research on crime prevention and criminal justice for the Mediterranean States in Cairo. Another resolution concerned the credentials of representatives attending the Congress.

In a resolution containing recommendations on its four substantive topics, the Congress, in the section relating to international cooperation and technical assistance, urged Member States to intensify efforts to improve the rule of law through international cooperation and practical technical assistance. It invited them to improve policy development, increase the use of bilateral or multilateral cooperation agreements and conduct more extensive research on traditional organized crime, terrorist crimes and their links, violent activities in urban areas, illicit trafficking in drugs and arms, international trafficking in minors, alien smuggling, economic crime, forgery of currency, environmental crime, corruption, crime against cultural property, motor vehicle theft, computer and telecommunications-related crime, money laundering and the infiltration of legitimate economies by organized criminal groups and the effects of those activities on society. It called on Member States to establish integrated regional policies, programmes, plans and mechanisms and to intensify subregional and regional cooperation and invited them to support the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme by extrabudgetary contributions. They were also called on to contribute to the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund. The Congress invited the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to call on UNDP, the World Bank and other international, regional and national funding agencies to support technical cooperation activities to strengthen the rule of law and cooperation with the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme. It invited the Commission to encourage the Secretary-General to recommend the inclusion of the re-establishment and reform of criminal justice systems in peace-keeping operations, and to request him to strengthen operational activities in developing countries and countries in transition. The Commission should call on relevant international and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to develop manuals and training curricula and organize courses in crime prevention and criminal justice.

In a section of the resolution that dealt with organized crime and the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment, the Congress urged Member States to cooperate for the prevention and control of transnational and organized crime, with emphasis on extradition and mutual assistance, to avoid the commission of offences fully or partially in different countries with impunity; to establish cooperation with regard to the institution of extradition; and to update domestic legislation in crime prevention and criminal justice. Member States should promote cooperation between their national crime prevention and criminal justice sectors and improve the exchange of information, particularly at the regional level; facilitate transnational criminal investigations by extending legal assistance to each other; study ways to promote prompt mutual assistance in criminal procedures and adopt penalties related to the possession of the proceeds of economic crime. They should establish multidisciplinary units specializing in the investigation of economic or financial crime; help to identify major commercial networks influenced by transnational criminal organizations; cooperate in identifying specific measures against corruption, bribery and the abuse of power and in identifying and combating new forms of transnational organized crime, terrorist crimes and their links; and provide further assistance to prevent and combat such crime effectively, including the conclusion of mutual-assistance agreements.

Member States should strengthen the exchange of information on transnational organized and terrorist crimes and their links, and supply information on experiences and practices to the Secretariat; enact legal provisions, including the establishment of enforcement and monitoring mechanisms, concerning economic crime; and consider developing legislation concerning the registration of unregistered imported motor vehicles and other measures to promote international cooperation in combating theft and illegal traffic of motor vehicles. The Commission should consider measures for the prevention and suppression of illegal traffic in motor vehicles. In the area of the environment, Member States were called on to enact environmental protection legislation and penal provisions on the protection of the environment, endangered species and cultural property; create special prosecutors and investigative bodies; and include the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment in curricula on criminal law and in the training of law enforcement and criminal justice personnel.

The Commission was asked to emphasize the development of strategies for the prevention and control of transnational and organized crime and the role of criminal law in the protection of the environment, and to request the Secretary-General to establish an integrated information system on national legislation in crime prevention and criminal justice. Member States were urged to provide the relevant data. The Secretary-General should be asked by the Commission to continue to study transnational and organized crime and effective measures for its control, and to assist Member States in adjusting their national legislation with a view to making the investigation, prosecution and adjudication of transnational crime more effective. He should be asked to ensure close coordination between the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch and other UN entities, in particular the UN International Drug Control Programme and the Centre for Human Rights, and to encourage further cooperation with the International Criminal Police Organization (ICPO/Interpol) and other international and intergovernmental bodies. Member States that had not yet done so were urged to ratify or accede to the 1988 UN Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances.⁽²⁾

Concerning criminal justice and police systems, the Congress called on Member States to ensure the independence and impartiality of the judiciary and the proper functioning of prosecutorial and legal services; promote operational research on designing plans to curb crime and upgrade the skills of law enforcement and criminal justice personnel; increase the use of non-custodial measures to reduce the use of detention and the prison population; and ensure the most basic rights of detainees. It encouraged donor countries and international funding agencies to support developing countries' efforts to improve prison conditions. Member States were also asked to take measures against the spread of HIV/AIDS and other diseases among the prison population. Affirming that it was essential for law enforcement and criminal justice personnel to respect human rights, it called on Member States to adopt the community policing approach and forge partnerships with local communities and the private sector when undertaking crime prevention activities. It recommended that Member States strengthen the role of the office of the public prosecutor, in particular its autonomy, and adopt measures to enhance the professional calibre of staff in all sectors concerned with crime prevention and criminal justice.

The Congress urged Member States to review the penitentiary system and recommended enhancement of coordination between the prison system and the broader criminal justice system and closer involvement in research in policy development and drafting of legislation. It called for improving schools for training prison officers and personnel; the organization of regular training programmes and the exchange of information and personnel between the prison administration and the academic community; enhancement of the exchange of information and technical cooperation to further the training of correctional personnel; the use of alternatives to imprisonment of offenders; and reviewing and changing, as necessary, regulations governing prison systems. The Commission should request the Secretary-General to promote technical cooperation projects on penal law reform and on the modernization of criminal justice administration; urge developed countries to provide technical aid for law enforcement agencies in developing countries; and expedite the dissemination of the 1990 Commentary on the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (Tokyo Rules).⁽³⁾

The Congress invited Member States to develop strategies and programmes for the prevention and control of urban crime, juvenile delinquency and violent crime (including domestic violence) and for the reduction of levels of victimization, and to develop projects related to juvenile delinquency and on the prevention and control of crimes committed by children and young persons, with emphasis on the problem of street children and their exploitation for criminal purposes. They were invited to pay attention to crime prevention activities aimed at young children and to study the factors associated with criminality and establish prevention mechanisms, including counselling services. The Congress recommended that the Commission consider the impact of migratory flows on urban criminality, while Member States should consider the problems arising from such flows and take them into account when drawing up strategies for crime prevention in urban areas.

Member States were urged to adopt short- and medium-term preventive measures in urban planning, housing, education and vocational training, as well as recreational and sports facilities, in high-risk areas, and to adopt measures to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance; promote the regulation of firearms and other high-risk weapons; and support the organization of workshops and training programmes on urban criminality, paying attention to its relationship to social development. They were further urged to develop educational, social and other programmes based on mutual tolerance, to give attention to public awareness and promote the role of information in crime prevention. The Commission was invited to request the Secretary-General to prepare a manual for public awareness campaigns to guide States in formulating national public awareness programmes.

The Congress recommended that Member States adopt policies on the prevention of juvenile delinquency and enact legislation on juvenile justice and invited the Commission to call on the regional commissions, the institutes of the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme network and other relevant entities to plan and implement joint activities in the area of juvenile justice. Member States should establish local, regional and national bodies for crime prevention and criminal justice and allocate or reallocate resources to facilitate the development of such bodies for the implementation of crime prevention measures. The Commission was invited to continue studying the effects of criminality in urban areas, its contributing factors and prevention measures; organize seminars and training programmes to search for ways to prevent crime in urban and other areas; and promote technical cooperation projects on the improvement of juvenile justice systems.

In its resolution on international cooperation and practical assistance for strengthening the rule of law (resolution 2), the Congress urged the Commission to convene an intergovernmental expert group to examine recommendations for the further development and promotion of international cooperation, including UN model treaties on international cooperation in criminal matters. The group should develop model legislation on extradition and related forms of international cooperation in criminal matters; explore ways of increasing the efficiency of extradition and related mechanisms, including technical assistance in the development of bilateral and multilateral agreements based on UN model treaties and other sources; and draft model legislation or agreements, alternative or complementary articles for existing treaties and articles for possible model multilateral instruments. A report on the implementation of the resolution should be presented to the Commission at its fifth (1996) session.

In the resolution dealing with international instruments against organized transnational crime (resolution 3), the Congress invited the Commission to give priority to initiating the process called for by the 1994 World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime,⁽⁴⁾ by requesting the views of Governments on elaborating new international instruments such as a convention or conventions. It was also asked to consider whether it would be useful to propose to Governments a list of issues and elements that could be dealt with in such instruments. Possible examples of such issues were listed in the resolution's annex.

The resolution on the link between terrorist crimes and transnational organized crimes (resolution 4) called on States to take measures to ensure the prevention and suppression of terrorist crimes and transnational organized crime, to enhance international cooperation to combat such crimes, to exchange technical information and share experiences in combating the use of the proceeds of crime, particularly organized crime, for financing terrorist crimes and to cooperate in the legal and judicial fields, particularly with regard to the extradition of offenders, by means of bilateral, regional or international conventions or other arrangements. The Commission was invited to request UN bodies to collect information on the links between transnational organized crime and terrorist crimes and facilitate the access of States to such information, and to establish an open-ended intergovernmental working group to consider measures to combat transnational organized crime, with due regard to the growing danger of links with terrorist crimes, with the aim of drafting a code of conduct or other legal instrument. The working group would report to the Commission, which would include in the agenda of its Tenth Congress an item entitled "The links between transnational organized crime and terrorist crimes".

In a resolution on the practical implementation of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners⁽⁵⁾ (resolution 5), the Congress invited Member States to respond as a matter of urgency to the questionnaire on the Rules; exchange views on improving prison conditions and strengthen their cooperation; share information on conditions in penal institutions with the public, professional organizations, scientific institutions and NGOs; stimulate and support studies of prison systems undertaken by academia and NGOs; and enhance transparency in prison systems and their functioning by providing ways of monitoring them by independent national bodies. The Commission was invited to keep the matter under review. Its open-ended in-session working group on UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice should discuss, during the Commission's 1996 session (see below), the establishment of efficient information-gathering mechanisms to that end, taking into account the forthcoming results of the UN survey on the use and application of the Rules.

Concerning criminal justice management (resolution 6), the Congress called on Member States to intensify efforts to exchange experiences and innovations in criminal justice operations and encouraged States, intergovernmental organizations and professional NGOs to include in their programmes of work developmental projects dealing with criminal justice management issues in a more comprehensive manner. It requested the Commission to review the membership and databases of the UN Crime and Justice Information Network, with a view to increasing participation of Member States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and academic and other research institutions. It also asked developed countries to promote the broader participation of developing countries in the Network by assisting them in reviewing data and other information needs in their criminal justice operations, with a view to making them a more accountable part of public administration; financing the training of criminal justice and technical staff involved in collecting, providing and disseminating data and other information to be included in national criminal justice statistical databases and in the Network; and organizing study tours, donating computer equipment and programs and covering telecommunications expenses. The Commission was asked to consider establishing an ad hoc expert group on statistical and computerized criminal justice applications to advise it on related technical cooperation projects, including their funding; to improve the management and information functions of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch and other elements of the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme; and to request the Secretary-General to prepare a model plan on criminal justice management and to report to the Tenth Congress on the implementation of that action plan.

In the resolution dealing with children as victims and perpetrators of crime and the UN criminal justice programme (resolution 7), the Congress recommended that the Commission invite the Secretary-General to elaborate a programme of action for promoting the use and application of relevant UN human rights instruments, standards and norms and integrate them into the information-gathering process. It called upon States to support the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme in developing initiatives to promote universal recognition and application of these norms, in particular with regard to children; provide for legislative and other mechanisms and procedures, as well as adequate resources; and give due regard to the special situation of children. Those States that were not parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child⁽⁶⁾ were urged to become parties and those that were parties were urged to consider withdrawing those reservations that were incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, particularly those relevant to the issue of violence against children. States should enable children to participate in criminal justice proceedings, to be heard and to be given information about their status and any subsequent proceedings. States were invited to develop multidisciplinary training for law enforcement personnel and other professionals concerned with children; ensure that all structures, procedures and programmes in the administration of justice with regard to child offenders allowed children to take responsibility for their actions and encouraged, inter alia, reparation, mediation and restitution; and to foster the independent monitoring of juvenile detention and other custodial facilities.

The Congress urged States and relevant international bodies to promote research, collect data and compile statistics relating to the extent and incidence of violence against children including their exploitation and use in criminal activities; encourage research on the causes, nature, seriousness and consequences of such misuse and on the effectiveness of measures to prevent and redress such violence; and study and exchange information on the extent to which experiences of violence suffered by children contributed to their subsequent criminal or deviant behaviour or mental health problems. States were urged to implement prevention and early intervention and treatment programmes for perpetrators and victims. The Congress recommended a series of measures for States to adopt to eliminate all forms of violence against children, in the absence of existing laws. It urged States to ensure that children subjected to violence had access to assistance to promote their safety and physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration; develop programmes in schools that promoted non-violence, mutual respect and tolerance and that enhanced self-confidence and self-esteem and taught students how to resolve their conflicts in a peaceful manner; and support public education and information activities to heighten public awareness of violence against children and its criminal nature. It invited the Commission to request the views of States regarding the elaboration of an international convention on the illicit traffic in children and to protect children from violence in situations of armed conflict.

The Commission was asked to invite the Secretary-General to continue to include in the various advisory services and technical assistance programmes specific arrangements for technical assistance in the field of criminal justice and the administration of justice with regard to children. It recommended that such technical cooperation programmes should entail appropriate evaluation and follow-up procedures and should involve UN regional institutes, the United Nations Children's Fund and other relevant UN bodies, national institutions and NGOs. The Secretary-General should publish and distribute the draft UN manual on juvenile justice; ensure that Strategies for Confronting Domestic Violence: a Resource Manual was published in the other official languages of the UN; and enhance inter-agency cooperation in the area of administration of justice with regard to children. The in-session working group of the Commission, at its 1995 session, should develop and undertake activities, including training, research and advisory services, for preventing and eradicating violence against children. The Commission should make the elimination of such violence one of the priorities of the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme in 1996-1997 and request the Secretary-General to submit a report on the subject to its sixth (1997) session.

In a resolution on elimination of violence against women (resolution 8), the Congress recommended a number of initiatives which it urged Member States to adopt in the absence of existing laws. It urged them to enforce their laws relating to violence against women; take action to eliminate violence against women in detention; promote access by women subjected to violence to assistance for their safety and physical and psychological healing; promote the involvement and participation of women in decision-making processes concerning crime prevention and criminal justice; develop intervention programmes and treatment services; promote multidisciplinary training and educational and information-sharing activities to sensitize law enforcement officials, justice personnel and other relevant professions to problems related to violence against women; promote and support public education and information activities to ensure gender equality; and heighten public awareness of violence against women and of its criminal nature. Member States should also promote research, collect data and compile statistics on the various forms of violence against women and encourage research on its causes, nature, seriousness and consequences; invite the media, schools and other relevant partners to contribute to the eradication of violence against women and enhance respect for their dignity; and take special account of women's vulnerability to violence in situations of armed conflict. They were further asked to study, disseminate, and encourage utilization of the publication Strategies for Confronting Domestic Violence: a Resource Manual. The Congress requested the in-session working group of the Commission, at its 1995 session, to develop activities to achieve the goal of preventing and eradicating violence against women. It urged the Commission to consider the issue of violence against women as a priority in its programme's training and technical assistance efforts.

The Congress, in its resolution on firearms regulations for the purposes of crime prevention and public safety (resolution 9), requested the Commission urgently to consider the measures to regulate firearms commonly applicable in Member States, with a view to suppressing the use of firearms in criminal activities. It recommended that the Commission request the Secretary-General to establish close cooperation with Member States and intergovernmental and other organizations, especially ICPO/Interpol, which are active in the field of firearms regulation; initiate a study on, inter alia, criminal cases, accidents and suicides in which firearms were involved, transnational illicit trafficking in firearms, relevant national legislation and regulation, and initiatives for firearms regulation at the regional and inter-regional levels. The Congress reiterated the need for allocating sufficient resources to the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to facilitate UN activities in the field of firearms regulation. It called on States to promote adequate regulation of firearms and take action against illicit trafficking in firearms and urged UN organs, bodies and specialized agencies to take up more seriously the issue of firearms regulation. The Congress recommended that the Commission request the Secretary-General to report to it, at its 1996 session, on the implementation of the resolution and submit recommendations for further action at the national and transnational levels, including the possibility of seeking the views of Member States on the preparation of a declaration.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/145.

Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Emphasizing the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 155 C(VII) of 13 August 1948 and General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950,

Acknowledging that the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, as major intergovernmental forums, have influenced national policies and practices and promoted international cooperation in this field by facilitating the exchange of views and experiences, mobilizing public opinion and recommending policy options at the national, regional and international levels,

Recalling its resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, in the annex to which Member States affirmed that the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders should be held every five years and should provide a forum for, inter alia, the exchange of views between States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individual experts representing various professions and disciplines, the exchange of experiences in research, law and policy development and the identification of emerging trends and issues in crime prevention and criminal justice, Bearing in mind the theme for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, which was "Less crime, more justice: security for all", and the importance of achieving this goal at the national and international levels,

Deeply concerned about the rising levels of crime in many parts of the world, particularly transnational organized crime and its negative effects on socio-economic development, political stability and the internal and external security of States, as well as on the well-being of people,

Convinced that the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme has a significant role to play in enhancing regional and interregional cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice in order to achieve further progress in this area, including the mobilization and coordination of efforts by Member States to combat crime in all its forms and to ensure greater justice,

Recalling its resolution 49/157 of 23 December 1994, in which it requested the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to give priority attention at its fourth session to the conclusions and recommendations of the Ninth Congress, with a view to recommending, through the Economic and Social Council, appropriate follow-up by the General Assembly at its fiftieth session,

Having considered the report of the Ninth Congress and the related recommendations made by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its fourth session,

1. Expresses its satisfaction with the results achieved by the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995;

2. Expresses its profound gratitude to the Government and people of Egypt for the generous hospitality extended to the participants at the Ninth Congress and for the efficient facilities, staff and services placed at their disposal;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ninth Congress, which contains the results of the Congress, including the recommendations and suggestions made at the workshops, at the special plenary meeting on combating corruption involving public officials and at the special plenary meeting on technical cooperation;

4. Endorses the resolutions adopted by the Ninth Congress, as approved by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and also endorses the recommendations made by the Commission, at its fourth session, and by the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 1995, on the implementation of the resolutions and recommendations of the Ninth Congress, as contained in Council resolution 1995/27 of 24 July 1995;

5. Invites Governments to be guided by the resolutions and recommendations of the Ninth Congress in formulating legislation and policy directives and to make all efforts to implement the principles contained therein, in accordance with the economic, social, legal, cultural and political circumstances of each country;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to pay particular attention to the operational aspects of the follow-up to the Ninth Congress in order to assist interested States in strengthening the rule of law by reinforcing their national machinery, promoting human resource development, undertaking joint training activities and executing pilot and demonstration projects, and urges the Department for Development Support and Management

Services of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other funding agencies to continue to provide financial support and assistance within the framework of their technical cooperation programmes;

7. Urges all entities of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, the regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and the relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to become actively involved in the implementation of the resolutions and recommendations of the Ninth Congress, paying particular attention to the needs and priorities identified by Member States;

8. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States, institutes and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations which have provided human and financial resources, particularly on the occasion of the Ninth Congress, and invites Governments to lend their support to the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and to increase their financial contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Trust Fund;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the report of the Ninth Congress to Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, so as to ensure that it is disseminated as widely as possible, and to conduct appropriate public information activities in this field;

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/629) without vote, 10 November (meeting 25); draft recommended by ESC in res. 1995/8 (A/C.3/50/L.3); agenda item 106.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 12-17, 19, 25; plenary 97.

Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, established by the Economic and Social Council in 1992,⁽¹⁴⁾ held its fourth session in Vienna from 30 May to 9 June,⁽¹¹⁾ in accordance with Council decision 1995/210 of 10 February. The Commission recommended one draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly and eight draft resolutions and three draft decisions for adoption by the Council.

The Commission adopted three resolutions to be brought to the attention of the Council. By a resolution on the succession of States in respect of international treaties on combating crime,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Commission urged successor States that had not yet done so to become parties to those treaties to which their predecessor States were not parties. It requested the Secretary-General to render advisory services in that regard and to include in his report to the Commission's 1996 session information received from Member States on progress achieved. By a resolution on a proposal for the development of minimum rules for the administration of criminal justice,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Commission requested the Secretary-General to seek more comments from States on the draft minimum rules and to submit an analytical report, including options on how to proceed, to the Commission in 1996. In a resolution on the provision of information in accordance with the plan for strategic management by the Commission of the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission decided on, and set out in an annex, the type of information that would be useful in considering draft resolutions. It also decided that the Secretariat should report annually on progress in implementing any proposed activity and that a standing item should be included in its agenda so that it could review the extent to which activities had been successfully implemented.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/243, took note of the Commission's report on its fourth session⁽¹¹⁾ and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its fifth (1996) session. On the same date, by decision 1995/242, the Council decided that the Commission's fifth session, in addition to plenary meetings, should be provided with full interpretation services for a total of 14 meetings for informal consultations on draft proposals and for meetings of open-ended working groups, on the understanding that no more than two meetings would be held concurrently, in order to ensure maximum participation of delegations.

UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme

In a report on strengthening the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme⁽¹⁸⁾ submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the Secretary-General recalled the various mandates of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for strengthening the programme and referred to the proposed programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice for 1996-1997 (see below),⁽¹⁹⁾ including the Secretary-General's proposal to upgrade the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat to a division and strengthen its staff with two additional posts at the Professional level.

In a 14 September report,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General described progress made in implementing a 1994 General Assembly resolution⁽²¹⁾ on strengthening the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme. He examined the critical need for crime prevention and criminal justice and reviewed programme activities during the year, especially research and information dissemination, implementation of UN standards and norms, operational activities, support to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and collaborative initiatives. He discussed recent mandates and their programme implications and proposals and action to strengthen programme capacity.

The proliferation of requests for crime and justice-related assistance led to the provision of a second interregional adviser post under the regular programme of technical cooperation in the 1994-1995 programme budget so that short-term missions could be resumed in late 1994 after a hiatus of almost a year. Needs assessment missions were carried out by both advisers and the Ninth Congress provided opportunities for consultations with government officials regarding their requirements. Other needs assessments were carried out in the context of peace-keeping operations, as for Haiti and Rwanda. Some requests for interregional advisory services sought expert guidance in defining needs in a specific area or sub-sector. Needs assessments were carried out in Albania, Pakistan, Peru, and Caribbean countries. Advisory services were also provided by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine. A substantial number of training courses, seminars and workshops were organized and serviced during the year, a major initiative being a series of workshops for prison personnel in Argentina, Barbados, Brazil and Uganda.

The Secretary-General stated that the amount of resources for the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch (0.1 per cent of overall UN resources) was considered a bare minimum that did not redress the acute imbalance in the amount of work to be done vis-a-vis the means for doing it. Taking into account the additional mandates deriving from the Ninth Congress, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as well as the extensive crime and justice-related needs facing countries, a careful assessment of the steps to be taken was necessary in order to optimize and supplement programme capabilities. The programme required a recognized place in the mainstream of UN development assistance. The UNDP Administrator had noted new areas for UNDP aid, such as assistance in the reform of criminal codes and access to due process. Other international funding agencies, such as the World Bank and the International Development Association, had been called on to support efforts related to crime prevention and criminal justice, but so far to little avail. In addition, the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund was in a precarious situation.

The Secretary-General concluded that 1994/1995 had been significant in the history of the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme, which was called upon to meet the unprecedented challenges that crime in its new forms and dimensions posed to the world. Although much had been done, much more remained to be done for improved crime prevention, greater justice and effective international cooperation against the mounting threat of transnational crime. The rising toll of violence linked to civil strife, terrorism and ordinary street crime, and the price exacted by organized, economic and environmental criminality, had jeopardized some of the gains of development and undermined future prospects. It was clear that security and justice were indispensable conditions for sustained development and human well-being, and for both national and world progress.

The Secretary-General also submitted an 18 September report⁽²²⁾ on the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/146.

Strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, particularly its technical cooperation capacity

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the direct relevance of crime prevention and criminal justice to sustained development, stability, security and improved quality of life,

Convinced of the desirability of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating crime, including drug-related crimes such as terrorist crimes, illicit arms trade and money laundering, and bearing in mind the role that could be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations in this respect,

Bearing in mind the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Recognizing the urgent need to increase technical cooperation activities to assist countries, particularly developing countries and countries in transition, with their efforts in translating United Nations policy guidelines into practice, including training and upgrading of national capacities,

Noting the continued increase in the workload of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat, as well as the considerable obstacles to the full and effective implementation of its programme activities, resulting from the lack of appropriate institutional capacity,

Convinced that the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch can be effective only if it is provided with resources commensurate to its requirements and adequate to allow it to implement its mandates and to respond in a timely and efficient manner to the increasing requests of Member States for its services,

Recalling its resolution 49/158 of 23 December 1994, in which it requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to give effect to General Assembly resolutions 47/91 of 16 December 1992 and 48/103 of 20 December 1993, and to Economic and Social Council resolutions 1992/22 of 30 July 1992, 1993/31 and 1993/34 of 27 July 1993 and 1994/16 of 25 July 1994 by providing the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme with sufficient resources for the full implementation of its mandates, in conformity with the high priority attached to the programme,

Recalling also its resolution 49/159 of 23 December 1994, in which it resolved to take decisions at its fiftieth session on the allocation of adequate resources to the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme on the basis of proposals for the modification of the programme to be submitted by the Secretary-General, taking into account the responsibilities entrusted to the United Nations pursuant to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime,

Recalling further its resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in which it approved the statement of principles and programme of action annexed to the resolution, in which it was recommended to the Secretary-General that an upgrading of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch into a division should be effected as soon as possible,

Concerned about the fact that despite the repeated calls by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to upgrade the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to a division, action has not been taken to give effect to the relevant Assembly and Council resolutions,

Noting that the Secretary-General, in section 13 (Crime control) of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, proposes the strengthening of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme in response to the repeated calls by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to that effect,

Noting also the additional information provided in the introductory statement by the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna on the proposed programme budget,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 49/158 on strengthening the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, particularly its technical cooperation capacity, and on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 49/159 on the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and the crucial role it has to play in promoting international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in responding to the needs of the international community in the face of both national and transnational criminality and in assisting Member States in achieving the goals of preventing crime within and among States and improving the response to crime;

3. Also reaffirms the priority of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in accordance with its resolutions 46/152, 47/91, 48/103 and 49/158, and the need for an appropriate share of the existing resources of the United Nations for the programme;

4. Welcomes the proposed strengthening of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in response to the repeated calls by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to that effect and, in particular, welcomes the proposal of the Secretary-General to upgrade the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat into a division, in accordance with Assembly resolutions 46/152, 47/91, 48/103 and 49/158;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue strengthening the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme by providing it with the resources necessary for the full implementation of its mandates, including follow-up action to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime and to the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

6. Reaffirms the high priority attached to technical cooperation and advisory services as a means for the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme to respond to the needs of the international community in the face of both national and transnational criminality and to assist Member States in achieving the goals of preventing crime within and among States and improving the response to crime, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/152 and in line with the recommendations of the Ninth Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

7. Stresses the importance of continuing to improve the operational activities of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, particularly in developing countries and countries in transition, in order to meet the needs of Member States, at their request, for support in crime prevention and criminal justice;

8. Calls upon States and funding agencies to make significant financial contributions for operational activities for crime prevention and criminal justice, and encourages all States to make voluntary contributions for that purpose to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Trust Fund, also taking into account the activities required for the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to facilitate, as appropriate, the creation of joint initiatives, including bilateral activities, and the joint formulation and implementation of technical assistance projects benefiting developing countries and countries in transition, involving interested donor countries and funding agencies, particularly the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, with a view to establishing and maintaining efficient criminal justice systems on a country-by-country basis as an essential component of developmental efforts;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to assist the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as the principal policy-making body in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in performing its functions and to ensure the proper coordination of all relevant activities in the field, in particular with the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

11. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other international, regional and national funding agencies to support technical cooperation activities devoted to crime prevention and criminal justice at country level and, in pursuance of their mandates, to include such activities in their programmes, emphasizing social development aspects and utilizing the expertise of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme in such activities and cooperating closely on relevant technical assistance projects and advisory missions;

12. Expresses its appreciation for the provision of services of two interregional advisers for crime prevention and criminal justice;

13. Takes note with appreciation of the contributions of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme to United Nations peace-keeping and special missions, as well as its contributions to the follow-up to those missions, inter alia, through advisory services, and encourages the Secretary-General, as a way of strengthening the rule of law, to recommend the inclusion of the re-establishment and reform of criminal justice systems in peace-keeping operations;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen cooperation between the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to provide improved services, at its future sessions, to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as the principal policy-making body in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, with a view to ensuring full implementation of the relevant Commission resolutions on the strategic management by the Commission of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme in the context of United Nations rules and regulations;

16. Reaffirms the importance of rule 28 of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, and urges the Secretary-General to provide the appropriate information to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/629) without vote, 10 November (meeting 25); 35-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.15), orally revised; agenda item 106. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 12-17, 19, 25; plenary 97.

Programme questions

The Secretary-General, in a 22 May note,⁽¹⁹⁾ submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice the proposed programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice for 1996-1997. The proposed programme was also submitted to the General Assembly as part of the proposed UN programme budget for 1996-1997.⁽²³⁾ The programme would focus on providing Member States with assistance and advisory services and on enabling the Commission to perform as the principal UN policy-making body in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice. Member States would also be assisted in the implementation of the 1994 Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Transnational Organized Crime⁽⁴⁾ and follow-up to the recommendations of the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see above). The Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch would be upgraded to a division in order to reflect the programme's expanded mandate.

The Commission annexed to the report on its May/June session⁽¹¹⁾ the text of a draft resolution proposed by its Chairman concerning programme questions. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council take the proposed text into account in its consideration of programme questions relating to crime control.

On 28 July, the Council, by decision 1995/315, deferred consideration of a draft resolution⁽²⁴⁾ entitled "Programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice" to its 1995 resumed substantive session. On 25 October, the draft resolution was withdrawn.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/214 of 23 December, approved the upgrading of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to a division. It requested the Secretary-General, in strengthening the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division, to review the adequacy of resources for crime prevention activities at the regional level and to report to the Assembly in 1996. He was also asked to report on the implementation of the strategic management plan of the Division, including those activities that had achieved demonstrable results in combating international crime, assisting international law enforcement or otherwise meeting current mandates of the United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and of the Commission.

In a 28 April report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General examined technical cooperation and advisory services of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme carried out or initiated between November 1993 and April 1995 by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, the two interregional advisers for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice based in Vienna and the regional adviser based in Bangkok. He discussed increased technical cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice; an overview of technical assistance activities; interregional advisory services; development of a database on technical assistance needs; and future technical assistance activities and their funding.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Secretary-General stated that future operational activities of the programme would involve mobilizing resources for project implementation; collaborating with traditional partners and NGOs; preparing a needs assessment instrument to guide future technical assistance activities and development of an evaluation instrument; and expansion of the fellowship programme. He suggested that the Commission recommend that the high priority given to technical cooperation be reaffirmed; the interregional advisory service programme be strengthened, including resources for short-term advisory services, field projects, training and fellowships; Member States, funding agencies and other relevant institutions be called on to contribute human and material resources and the means for technical assistance projects; and that donors' meetings be held to encourage close cooperation among them, including joint implementation of technical assistance activities. In addition, the Secretary-General should make further use of the capacity of the programme in connection with peace-keeping operations, including training courses for peace-keeping police, needs assessment missions and advisory services for rebuilding national structures, including training criminal justice practitioners and helping local judges to render justice. The branch should be advised on the development of the database on technical cooperation.

12. Reiterates its appreciation for the provision of the services of two interregional advisers for crime prevention and criminal justice and strongly recommends to the Secretary-General that those posts should be retained and that the interregional advisory services of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme should be further strengthened to support technical assistance activities, including short-term advisory services, needs assessment, feasibility studies, field projects, training and fellowships;

Clearing-house capacity

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice proposals⁽²⁶⁾ for improving the clearing-house capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme. The improvement was based on a three-pronged strategy involving: a system for electronic exchange of information; computerization of criminal justice administration; and collection and dissemination of criminal justice data and information. Responding to a 1993 Economic and Social Council request,⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretariat initiated studies on the further development of the United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network, with a view to designing and implementing a properly functioning on-line crime and justice clearing-house. While its ultimate objective would be to strengthen the capacities of Governments to produce, acquire, store, analyse and disseminate electronic information on crime prevention and criminal justice, the intermediate goals of the strategy were several. It was designed to serve as an effective broker between intergovernmental, non-governmental and other relevant organizations, sectors of public administration and the private sector, including individual experts and other professionals. It was also to provide regularly electronic information on crime and justice; facilitate the computerization process by promoting the more widespread use of automated data processing in, and exchange of such data between, criminal justice systems, as well as assist developing countries in the transfer of know-how on such computerization; and collect and disseminate criminal justice data and information, analyse the results of periodic crime surveys and prepare the data for electronic dissemination. A further objective was to improve the survey of transnational crime and produce the report on crime and justice in the world, and in a format to permit electronic dissemination.

To achieve those goals, a number of major tasks were identified to be accomplished within the 1994-1995 and the 1996-1997 bienniums, including the transfer of the United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network from the State University of New York at Albany to the Vienna University and the UN Office in Vienna. In addition, a needs assessment study should be carried out to review existing and projected programme facilities and resources devoted to the clearing-house functions with a primary focus on electronic data exchange.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/12.

Establishment of a clearing-house for international projects in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, in which the Assembly decided that the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme should be devoted to providing States with practical assistance to achieve the goals of preventing crime and improving the response to crime,

Recalling also its resolution 1994/22 of 25 July 1994, in which it requested the Secretary-General to establish a database on technical assistance, integrating needs of Member States, particularly developing countries, as well as on existing collaborative arrangements and funding, taking into account regional concerns,

Recognizing the need for maximum efficiency and effective utilization of increasingly scarce developmental assistance at a time of growing difficulties in the prevention and control of crime,

Recognizing also that improving the clearing-house capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme requires a steady and concerted effort on the part of Member States and other entities including institutes cooperating within the programme to work more closely and effectively in advancing the electronic exchange of information, the computerization of the administration of criminal justice, and the collection and dissemination of crime and justice information,

Recognizing further that the improvement of the clearing-house capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme requires continuous efforts to create and maintain databases on current crime and justice developments globally, regionally and subregionally, the information from which should be made available through the computerized United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network, as part of a broader clearing-house function carried out by that programme,

Conscious that the present capacity of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat lags behind the growing need to provide timely information at the request of Member States and other interested parties, and that the management of the databases listed in the programme budget for the Branch requires a coordinated effort on the part of those parties,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on proposals for improving the clearing-house capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, prepared in response to resolution 3/3 of 5 May 1994 of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,

Noting that, in recent years, many international projects on crime prevention and criminal justice have targeted States in Central and Eastern Europe,

Fully aware that international cooperation is essential to successful efforts against international criminal activity,

Recognizing that there is no existing central repository with information on planned, ongoing or projected training and other projects in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on proposals for improving the clearing-house capacity of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, which consolidate the approach to relevant crime and justice information activities that should be further intensified and made operational,

Taking note also of the initiatives taken by the European Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, in the areas to which the present resolution refers,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funds, to initiate a project to establish a regional database on international training and technical assistance projects in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice which, upon completion, would provide interested Governments, international organizations and other entities with information on concluded, ongoing or planned international projects in consultation and cooperation with the European Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, which has offered to manage the database;

2. Invites all Member States, international organizations and other entities engaged in collaborative training and technical assistance projects in Central and Eastern Europe in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice to provide, to the extent of their ability, information to the Secretary-General for a regional clearing-house to facilitate the exchange of information to assist policy makers in all Member States in better allocating resources, identifying potential partners in cooperative projects and opportunities for collaborative action and improving support for an incremental approach to better prevent crime and ensure criminal justice, on the understanding that all information provided to the database may be restricted at the request of the provider;

3. Takes note of the form for providing information on technical assistance in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, contained in annex II to the report of the Secretary-General on the technical cooperation and advisory services of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme;

4. Recommends that the Secretary-General should view the project as a pilot project aimed at demonstrating the utility of a regional database on crime prevention and criminal justice, with a view to considering additional regional databases, or a global database;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the results of the pilot project to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its fifth session.

UN standards and norms

In response to a 1994 Economic and Social Council request,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice a report⁽²⁹⁾ which provided an overview of development activities in promoting the use and application of UN standards and norms. He stated that he had received replies from 31 countries to a questionnaire on the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners;⁽⁵⁾ replies from 32 countries to the questionnaire on the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, including the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials;⁽³⁰⁾ replies from 17 countries to the questionnaire on the 1990 Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power;⁽³¹⁾ and replies from 28 countries to the questionnaire on the 1985 Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary.⁽³²⁾ Information collected would be used to establish databases on the respective subjects. The Secretary-General also reported that China, France, the Russian Federation and Spain had committed themselves to funding publication of the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice⁽³³⁾ in their languages, while the United Kingdom had provided resources for its reprinting in English and Portugal had agreed to publish it in Portuguese.

In response to a 1994 Economic and Social Council request,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an addendum to the report,⁽³⁵⁾ stating that, by 25 April, he had received replies from 27 Member States and comments from 6 inter-regional and regional institutes on the desirability of preparing and adopting United Nations minimum rules in the field covered by the draft minimum rules for the administration of justice, prepared by an expert commission.⁽³⁶⁾

Organized transnational crime

In a report⁽³⁷⁾ to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the Secretary-General made proposals related to the programmable aspects of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime in 1994⁽⁴⁾ and approved by the General Assembly later that year.⁽³⁸⁾ To improve the international community's knowledge of criminal organizations and their dynamics, it was proposed that the United Nations initiate a comprehensive comparative study of the situation in the various regions of the world by an expert team with experience in the field of prevention and control of organized crime. In addition, the United Nations could establish a central repository of existing legislative and regulatory measures and information on organizational structures designed to combat organized crime and, based on the information accumulated through the comprehensive comparative study, develop practical models of and guidelines for substantive and procedural legislation, in cooperation with relevant international organizations and individual States. It could assist States in assessing their immediate needs through the provision of advisory services to identify and put in place modalities for strengthening their capacity to respond to problems created by new manifestations of organized transnational crime; provide expert advice and options on establishing special investigative units and developing reliable evidence-gathering techniques; and assist in creating special mechanisms and implementing measures to strengthen the capacity of States to cooperate and exchange information, intelligence and experience. The UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme should be geared towards developing expertise and promoting the highest standards of professionalism and specialization.

On 25 May, Italy submitted to the Commission a preliminary report⁽³⁹⁾ of the first meeting (Rome, Italy, 17-18 May) of the international task-force to study the feasibility of establishing an international training centre for law enforcement and criminal justice personnel. A general agreement was reached that, in the short term, the most logical location for the centre would be the existing centre of advanced studies for personnel of law enforcement agencies in Rome. The setting up of a UN centre would not be advisable. Italy intended to provide the site for the centre, as well as administrative staff and infrastructure needed for its functioning. It was also considering offering accommodation and board to participants. Other Governments would be invited to contribute to the centre's activities on a voluntary basis.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/11.

11. Requests the Secretary-General to avail himself of the assistance of experts with extensive experience in the field of prevention and control of organized crime indicated by Member States, who might be called upon in connection with technical cooperation activities;

12. Welcomes with appreciation the preliminary report of the international task force on the study of the feasibility of establishing an international training centre for law enforcement and criminal justice personnel, and encourages the Government of Italy and the Governments of the other States members of the task force to continue and finalize its work, in accordance with the resolution adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, with a view to informing the General Assembly at its fiftieth session;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the implementation of the present resolution, including proposals for further action aimed at the full implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/11

24 July 1995 Meeting 49 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (E/1995/30); agenda item 5 (g).

Meeting numbers. ESC 47-49.

In response to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽³⁸⁾ which dealt with the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²²⁾ on the implementation of that resolution. He discussed action taken by the Commission (see above); steps taken within the international community towards making action against organized transnational crime a global priority; the programmatic aspects and modalities of implementing the Naples Political Declaration, including strengthening international cooperation, increasing reliable knowledge, providing assistance in the legislative and regulatory fields; and technical cooperation.

In his conclusions, the Secretary-General said that States should specify the activities that needed to be undertaken for implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan, agree on the pace of such implementation and devote their energies and attention to achieving the common goals identified therein. Such action would enable the Commission and the United Nations to undertake rational and effective planning. He had begun implementing the priority attached to the fight against organized transnational crime in the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997. However, there was need for the regular budget to be supplemented by extrabudgetary resources, due to the vast needs of developing countries and countries in transition.

In resolution 50/146, the Assembly called on States and funding agencies to make financial contributions for operational activities for crime prevention and criminal justice and encouraged States to contribute to the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Trust Fund, also taking into account activities required to implement the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan.

Action against corruption

Pursuant to a 1994 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,⁽¹⁾ at a special session held on 4 and 5 May, considered experiences in practical measures aimed at combating corruption involving public officials, based on a background paper prepared by the Secretariat.⁽⁴¹⁾

Among practical measures to be adopted at the national level, which were proposed at the Congress, were that independent bodies be established to monitor the activities of various government agencies, free from interference and undue influence. The judiciary should exercise effective control over the executive branch of government. At the administrative level, measures were required to eliminate unnecessary and cumbersome procedures, and checks and balances should be instituted at various levels of management and administration. Budgetary allocations and expenditures should be closely monitored and subjected to professional and independent auditing.

International cooperation was essential to combat corruption. Several countries had already engaged in and supported multilateral activities. The potential of the United Nations in that regard was highlighted. The draft manual on practical measures against corruption⁽⁴²⁾ was considered a commendable initiative, particularly in the context of technical cooperation. The draft international code of conduct for public office holders, prepared by the Secretariat, would constitute a useful complement of relevant efforts when revised and further considered. Several delegations indicated their intention to provide their comments on the draft to the Secretariat. It was suggested that technical assistance in the training of public officials, law enforcement and judicial personnel, and the staff of regulatory agencies should be strengthened and that the United Nations designate an international year to the fight against corruption.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/14.

Action against corruption

The Economic and Social Council,

Concerned at the seriousness of problems posed by corruption, which may endanger the stability and security of societies, undermine the values of democracy and morality and jeopardize social, economic and political development,

Also concerned about the links of corruption with other forms of crime, particularly organized crime, economic crime and money-laundering,

Convinced that since corruption is a phenomenon that can cross national borders and affect all societies and economies, international cooperation to prevent and control it is essential,

Deeply concerned about the problems faced by States in this regard,

Also convinced of the need to provide technical assistance to developing countries and countries in transition designed to improve public management systems and enhance accountability and transparency,

Recalling the resolution on corruption in government, adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 45/121 of 14 December 1990 and 46/152 of 18 December 1991 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1992/22 of 30 July 1992, 1993/32 of 27 July 1993 and 1994/19 of 25 July 1994,

Welcoming the results of the special plenary meeting on corruption involving public officials, held during the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

1. Urges States, as necessary, to develop and implement specific and comprehensive anti-corruption strategies to enhance accountability, by adopting and enforcing civil, administrative, fiscal and criminal law measures, emphasizing, inter alia, transparency and fairness, including legislation to regulate and sanction corrupt forms of corporate behaviour and provide for the forfeiture and/or confiscation of proceeds derived from corrupt practices;

2. Also urges States to increase their capacity for the prevention, detection, investigation and prosecution of corrupt practices, by promoting public awareness, by appropriately strengthening their criminal justice systems and by establishing, as appropriate, independent bodies for the prevention and control of corruption;

3. Further urges States to increase and improve international cooperation for the prevention and control of corruption, including the use of arrangements for extradition, mutual legal assistance, the sharing of information and the collection of evidence;

4. Takes note of the draft international code of conduct for public office holders, in its revised form, annexed to the present resolution, and of the work done to date in revising the text on the basis of comments received from Governments, and requests the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with Governments to revise the text further and to submit it to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its fifth session for consideration and action;

5. Urges States to provide their comments to the Secretary-General so as to facilitate the further revision of the draft international code of conduct for public office holders;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to review and expand the manual on practical measures against corruption, seeking contributions from relevant international organizations, with a view to increasing its use, in advisory services, training and other technical assistance activities;

Also requests the Secretary-General to cooperate and coordinate with other entities of the United Nations system and relevant international organizations, within their respective mandates, in undertaking joint activities in the field of the prevention and control of corruption and in maximizing the effect of such activities;

8. Calls upon States, relevant international organizations and financing institutions to extend to the Secretary-General their full support and assistance in the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the interregional and regional institutes of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme network, to study the effects of anti-corruption strategies in order to provide a comparative review of the most effective practices and to develop training and awareness curricula;

10. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to keep the issue of action against corruption under regular review;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Annex

Draft international code of conduct for public office holders

I. General principles

1. A public office, as defined by national law, is a position of trust, implying a duty to act in the public interest. Therefore, the primary loyalty of public office holders shall be to the public interests of their country as expressed through the democratic institutions of government, and not to persons, political parties or specific government departments or agencies.

2. Public office holders shall ensure that they perform their functions in an efficient and effective manner. They shall at all times seek to ensure that public resources for which they are responsible are administered in the most effective and efficient manner.

[2bis. Public office holders shall be responsible for the proper conduct of the functions assigned to them by their hierarchical superior. Public office holders shall be under the obligation not to obey orders which do not conform to law and to inform their hierarchical superior accordingly. If their hierarchical superior reiterates the order in writing, such order shall be executed. In this case, responsibility shall rest with the hierarchical superior. The order whose objective constitutes a crime shall not be executed under any circumstances.]

3. Public office holders shall be attentive, fair and impartial in the performance of their functions and, in particular, in their relations with the public. They shall at no time afford any undue preferential treatment to any group or individual, discriminate against any group or individual, or otherwise abuse the power and authority vested in them. [This provision should not be interpreted as excluding any officially approved affirmative action policies to assist disadvantaged groups.]

II. Conflicts of interest and disqualification

4. Public office holders shall never in any way use their official authority for the advancement of their own or their family's personal or financial interest. They shall not engage in any transaction, acquire any position or function, or have any financial, commercial or other comparable interest that is incompatible with their office, functions and duties, or the discharge thereof.

5. All public office holders designated under national law shall, unless exempted, declare relevant business, commercial and financial interests, or activities undertaken for financial gain upon entering the service. This information shall be updated regularly. In situations of possible or perceived conflict of interest between public office holders' public duties and private interests, they shall disqualify themselves from any decision-making process relating to such conflict of interest.

6. Public office holders shall at no time use public property, services, or information acquired in the performance of, or as a result of, their official duties for activities not related to their official work.

7. Within a stated period after separation from public service, public office holders holding managerial positions shall, within the framework of national law, obtain governmental permission prior to accepting employment or consultancy assignments from business or private concerns that are in financial relationship with the governmental department or agency in which such officials were employed. During the same period after separation, such permission shall also be required prior to engaging in any private or business activity related to, or dependent on, their previous position in public service.

III. Disclosure of assets

8. Public office holders holding managerial or policy-making positions as designated by and pursuant to procedures established by national law, shall disclose all personal property, assets and liabilities, as well as those of their spouses and/or other dependants. Such office holders shall also provide detailed information on the source of any property or asset acquired after their appointment to a senior post. All information provided shall be treated as confidential and may be disclosed only within the framework of special procedures.

IV. Acceptance of gifts or other favours

9. Public office holders shall not place themselves in a position of being under the moral obligation to accord preferential treatment of special consideration to any person or entity [, for instance by accepting directly or indirectly any gift, gratuity, favour, entertainment, loan or anything of monetary value, above a certain limit to be defined by their employer].

[Alternative formulation: Public office holders must, as a matter of principle, refuse any gift which may have an influence on the exercise of their functions, performance of their duties or their judgement.]

V. Confidential information

10. Matters of a confidential nature in the possession of public office holders shall be kept confidential, unless the performance of duty or the needs of justice strictly require otherwise. Such restrictions shall apply also after separation from service.

VI. Political activity

11. The political activity of public office holders shall not be such as to impair public confidence in the impartial performance of their functions and duties.

VII. Reporting, disciplinary action and implementation
[12. Public officials should report violations of this code to the appropriate authorities.]

[13. Public officials who knowingly and deliberately, or recklessly disregard the provisions of this code shall be subject to the appropriate disciplinary and administrative measures.]

[14. Serious violations of the provisions of this code may also be punishable by criminal sanctions, including forfeiture and confiscation of illicit proceeds with compensation to any injured party.]

[Alternative formulations for a single paragraph to replace paragraphs 13 and 14:

Alternative 1:

Public office holders who violate the provisions of this code shall be subject to the appropriate disciplinary, administrative or penal measures, as determined by national legal principles and procedures.

Alternative 2:

Public office holders who deliberately or negligently violate the provisions of this code shall be subject to disciplinary measures. Serious violations may also be punishable by criminal sanctions, including forfeiture and confiscation of illicit proceeds with compensation to any injured party.]

Alien smuggling

In a report⁽⁴³⁾ to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the Secretary-General presented information received from Barbados, Brunei Darussalam, Cuba, France, Germany, Malawi, Nepal, Oman, Spain and the Syrian Arab Republic and from the International Organization for Migration on measures to combat alien smuggling. The report updated information on the subject that he supplied to the General Assembly in 1994.⁽⁴⁴⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/10.

Criminal justice action to combat the organized smuggling of illegal migrants across national boundaries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 48/102 of 20 December 1993, requested the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its third session to consider giving special attention to the question of the smuggling of aliens, in order to encourage international cooperation to address that problem within the framework of its mandate,

Recalling also its resolution 1994/14 of 25 July 1994, adopted on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its third session, in which it, inter alia, condemned the practice of smuggling illegal migrants, recognized that such smuggling was a widespread criminal activity frequently involving highly organized international syndicates, acknowledged the substantial role played by organized transnational crime in such smuggling and called upon all States to take effective and expeditious measures, such as the enactment or amendment of domestic criminal law, providing appropriate penalties to combat all aspects of organized crime activities constituting such smuggling,

Alarmed by the significant increase in the activities of transnational criminal organizations that profit illicitly by smuggling illegal migrants and threatening the lives and human rights of migrants,

Concentrating its attention on crime prevention and criminal justice, in particular the activities of those who organize and facilitate the smuggling of illegal migrants,

Recognizing that organized international criminal groups are becoming increasingly active and successful in smuggling individuals across national boundaries,

Recognizing also that by trafficking in illegal migrants such criminal groups often make enormous profits that are frequently used to finance numerous other criminal activities, thus bringing great harm to the States concerned,

Concerned that such activities endanger the lives of the individual migrants involved and entail severe costs for the international community, including the costs of rescue, medical care, food, housing and transportation,

Acknowledging that socio-economic factors influence the problem of illegal migrant smuggling and also contribute to the complexity of current international migration,

Aware that smugglers, particularly in the State of destination of the illegal migrants being smuggled, often force migrants into forms of debt bondage or servitude, commonly involving criminal activities, in order to pay for their passage,

Convinced of the need for all States to provide humane treatment and to protect fully the human rights of migrants,

Recognizing that such illegal migrant smuggling has high social and economic costs, often contributing to official corruption, and burdens law enforcement agencies in all States where illegal migrants transit or are found,

Recalling the undertaking of States parties to the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, done at Geneva on 7 September 1956, to take all practicable and necessary legislative and other measures to bring about progressively and as soon as possible the complete abolition or abandonment of the practice of debt bondage,

Reaffirming respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, including their right to control immigration flows,

Concerned that the smuggling of illegal migrants undermines public confidence in policies and procedures for lawful immigration and for ensuring the protection of genuine refugees,

Noting that the smuggling of illegal migrants can involve criminal activities in many States, including the State where the smuggling scheme was planned, the State of nationality of the migrants, the State where the means of transport was prepared, the flag State of any vessels or aircraft that transport the migrants, States through which the migrants transit to their destination or in order to be repatriated, and the State of destination,

Commending those States that have enacted effective domestic legislation permitting seizure and forfeiture of all property, both real and personal, that is knowingly used in organized criminal activities aimed at smuggling illegal migrants, as well as all property, both real and personal, that constitutes, or is derived from, the proceeds of the smuggling, illegal transport, or labour of illegal migrants,

Gravely concerned that a significant number of States have not yet enacted domestic criminal legislation to combat all aspects of the smuggling of illegal migrants,

1. Condemns once again the practice of smuggling illegal migrants in violation of international standards and national law, and without regard to the safety, well-being and human rights of the migrants;

2. Recognizes that the smuggling of illegal migrants continues to be a widespread international criminal activity frequently involving highly organized international syndicates that traffic in human cargo, without regard for the dangerous and inhumane conditions to which illegal migrants are subjected, and in flagrant violation of domestic laws and international standards;

3. Acknowledges the substantial and harmful role played by organized transnational crime in activities related to the smuggling of illegal migrants in many parts of the world;

4. Urges States to share information, to coordinate law enforcement activities between national authorities in cooperation with the competent international bodies and carriers engaged in international transport, and otherwise to cooperate, if their law permits, in order to trace and arrest those who organize the smuggling of illegal migrants and to prevent the illegal transport by smugglers of third-country nationals through their territory;

5. Calls upon Member States and relevant specialized agencies and international organizations to take into account socio-economic factors and to cooperate at the bilateral and multilateral levels in addressing all aspects of the problem of organized smuggling of illegal migrants, including by promoting technical assistance so as to assist countries, at their request, in developing and implementing policies to prevent and criminalize clandestine traffic in illegal migrants and to punish those who engage in organizing such activity;

6. Reaffirms the need fully to observe international and national law in dealing with the smuggling of illegal migrants, including the provision of humane treatment and strict observance of all human rights of migrants;

7. Reiterates that international efforts to prevent the smuggling of illegal migrants should not inhibit legal migration or freedom of travel, or undercut the protection provided by international law to refugees;

8. Encourages States to take prompt and effective preventive measures, such as increasing vigilance at coastal ports, airports and land borders, as well as enhancing the professional skills of relevant personnel, to frustrate the objectives and activities of those who organize the smuggling of illegal migrants, thus protecting would-be migrants from exploitation and loss of life;

9. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take effective and expeditious measures such as the enactment or amendment if necessary of domestic criminal law, with a range of enforcement measures, providing appropriate penalties to combat all aspects of organized criminal activities constituting the smuggling and transport of illegal migrants, such as the production or distribution of false travel documents, money-laundering, extortion and misuse of international commercial aviation and maritime transport in violation of international standards;

10. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and the note by the Secretariat on measures taken by Member States and relevant specialized agencies and inter-governmental organizations to combat the smuggling of illegal migrants, which were prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/102;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to remind Member States which have not yet done so of the importance of responding to the notes verbales sent to all Member States on 10 February and 9 June 1994 concerning the criminal legislation that they have enacted and other measures that they have taken to combat the smuggling of illegal migrants, and to submit to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its fifth session an updated report on measures to combat such smuggling, containing a compilation and an analysis of the responses of Member States;

12. Decides that the ever-growing problem of organized smuggling of illegal migrants across national borders requires the continuing scrutiny of the international community in general and should be considered by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its fifth session in the context of the broader problem of organized transnational crime.

International traffic in minors

In accordance with a 1994 Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice decision,⁽⁴⁵⁾ a report⁽⁴⁶⁾ on the world situation with regard to international traffic in minors, prepared by the Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, was submitted to the Commission's May/June 1995 session. The report described UN action to deal with criminal offences involving minors and various illicit practices in the international traffic in minors, and analysed current legislation at the international, regional and national levels in respect of each aspect of the traffic in minors.

The report concluded that international traffic in minors was conducted by criminal organizations with international connections. Although some progress had been made, the machinery for the trafficking in and sale of children was to a large extent still unknown and insufficiently controlled. Furthermore, there was no international convention specifically covering the traffic in and sale of children and adolescents, and national legislation in many cases was not applied.

The report suggested that the Commission might strengthen its role in combating international traffic in minors by bringing up to date research on the features of such offences and the measures that could be adopted to counter them; evaluate the scope and applicability of criminal law and initiate a pro-child and anti-crime network in association with ICPO/Interpol, national police, immigration authorities and local community groups to increase awareness of child abuse and exploitation; collaborate with bodies concerned with military matters to prevent children from being the object of abuse in situations of armed conflict; study ways to prevent the international traffic in minors and punish traffickers; show how criminal law should be used to eliminate discriminatory practices and promote changes in behaviour; mount publicity campaigns; and analyse the aspects that could form the basis of specific legislation to be adopted at the national level against the sale of and trafficking in children, exploitation of children at work, sexual exploitation of children and trafficking in organs.

Urban crime

In 1995, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice finalized the proposed guidelines for the prevention of urban crime, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1994⁽⁷⁾ and by the 1995 Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.⁽¹⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/9.

Guidelines for the prevention of urban crime

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/20 of 9 May 1979, 1984/48 of 25 May 1984, 1990/24 of 24 May 1990 and 1993/27 of 27 July 1993 and General Assembly resolutions 45/121 of 14 December 1990 and 46/152 of 18 December 1991,

Recalling also its resolutions 1992/22 of 30 July 1992 and 1993/34 of 27 July 1993,

Recalling further its resolution 1994/20 of 25 July 1994, and resolution 1, section IV, of the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in which the Ninth Congress invited the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its fourth session, to finalize and adopt the proposed guidelines for cooperation and technical assistance in the field of urban crime prevention, annexed to resolution 1994/20,

Recalling the Milan Plan of Action, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (the Beijing Rules), the United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (the Riyadh Guidelines), the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (the Tokyo Rules), the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, and the resolution on the prevention of urban crime adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, Aware of the universal character of urban crime,

Recognizing the usefulness of establishing guidelines to facilitate the prevention of urban crime,

Seeking to respond to the call by many States for technical cooperation programmes adapted to local conditions and needs,

1. Adopts the guidelines for cooperation and technical assistance in the field of urban crime prevention, annexed to the present resolution, which were considered by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its second, third and fourth sessions and by the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995, and which are designed to make urban crime prevention more effective;

2. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to ensure the publication of the guidelines in the most appropriate form;

3. Exhorts Member States to report to the Secretary-General on their experiences in elaborating and evaluating projects dealing with urban crime prevention, taking into account the guidelines;

4. Invites the interregional, regional and affiliated institutes cooperating with the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and non-governmental organizations to share their experiences in urban crime prevention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the guidelines to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held at Istanbul from 3 to 14 June 1996;

6. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to consider practical ways of ensuring follow-up on the use and application of the guidelines;

7. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme, other relevant United Nations organizations and bodies and international financial institutions to give appropriate consideration to the inclusion in their assistance programmes of projects dealing with urban crime prevention.

Annex

Guidelines for cooperation and technical assistance in the field of urban crime prevention

A. Design and implementation of cooperation and assistance activities

1. Cooperation projects for urban crime prevention should take account of the principles set out below.

1. Local approach to problems

2. Urban crime is characterized by a multiplicity of factors and forms. A multi-agency approach and a coordinated response at the local level, in accordance with an integrated crime prevention action plan, will often be helpful. This should involve:

(a) A local diagnostic survey of crime phenomena, their characteristics, factors leading to them, the form they take and their extent;

(b) The identification of all the relevant actors that could take part in compiling the above-mentioned diagnostic survey in crime prevention as well as in the fight against crime, for example public institutions (national or local), local elected officials, the private sector (associations, enterprises), the voluntary sector, community representatives etc.;

(c) The establishment, wherever appropriate, of consultation mechanisms promoting closer liaison, the exchange of information, joint work and the design of a coherent strategy;

(d) The elaboration of possible solutions to these problems in the local context.

2. Integrated crime prevention action plan

3. The authors of an integrated crime prevention action plan, in order for it to be comprehensive and efficient, should:

(a) Define:

(i) The nature and types of crime problems to be tackled, such as theft, robbery, burglary, racial attacks, drug related crimes, juvenile delinquency and illegal possession of firearms, taking into account all the factors that may directly or indirectly cause such problems or contribute to them;

(ii) The objectives being pursued and the time by which they should be attained;

(iii) The action envisaged and the respective responsibilities of those involved vis-a-vis the implementation of the plan (for example, whether local or national resources are to be mobilized);

(b) Consider involving a range of actors representing in particular:

(i) Social workers and education, housing and health workers, in addition to the police, the courts, public prosecutors and probation services etc.;

(ii) The community: elected officials, associations, volunteers, parents, victims' organizations etc.;

(iii) The economic sector: enterprises, banks, business, public transport etc.;

(iv) The media;

(c) Consider the relevance to the crime prevention action plan of such factors as:

(i) Relationships in the family, between generations or between social groups etc.;

(ii) Education, religious, moral and civic values, culture etc.;

(iii) Employment, training, measures for combating unemployment and poverty;

(iv) Housing and urbanism;

(v) Health, drug and alcohol abuse;

(vi) Government and community welfare aid for the least fortunate members of society;

(vii) Combating the culture of violence and intolerance;

(d) Consider providing for action at various levels:

(i) Primary prevention by:

a. Promoting situational criminal prevention measures, such as target hardening and opportunity reduction;

b. Promoting welfare and health development and progress and combating all forms of social deprivation;

c. Promoting communal values and respect for fundamental human rights;

d. Promoting civic responsibility and social mediation procedures;

e. Facilitating the adaptation of the working methods of the police and the courts;

(ii) Prevention of recidivism by:

a. Facilitating the adaptation of methods of police intervention (rapid response, intervention within the local community etc.);

b. Facilitating the adaptation of methods of judicial intervention and implementation of alternative remedies:

i. Diversification of methods of treatment and of measures taken according to the nature and seriousness of the cases (diversionary schemes, mediation, a special system for minors etc.);

ii. Systematic research on the reintegration of offenders involved in urban crime through the implementation of non-custodial measures;

iii. Socio-educational support within the framework of the sentence, in prison and as preparation for release from prison;

c. Giving an active role to the community in the rehabilitation of offenders;

(iii) After the sentence has been served: aid and socio-educational support, family support etc.;

(iv) Protection of victims by practical improvements in their treatment by means of the following:

a. Raising awareness of rights and how to exercise them effectively;

b. Reinforcing rights (in particular the right to compensation);

c. Introducing systems of victim assistance.

B. Implementation of the action plan

1. Central authorities

4. The central authorities, to the extent consistent with their competence, should:

(a) Provide active support, assistance and encouragement to local actors;

(b) Coordinate national policy and strategies with local strategies and needs;

(c) Organize consultation and cooperation mechanisms between the various administrations concerned at the central level.

2. Authorities at all levels

5. Competent authorities at all levels should:

(a) Be constantly mindful of respect for the fundamental principles of human rights in promoting these activities;

(b) Encourage and/or implement appropriate training and information to support all professionals involved in crime prevention;

(c) Compare experiences and organize exchanges of know-how;

(d) Provide a means of evaluating regularly the effectiveness of the strategy implemented and provide for the possibility of revising it.

Crime prevention institutes

In a report⁽⁴⁸⁾ to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the Secretary-General reviewed the 1994 activities of UN bodies and institutions concerned with crime prevention, including the UN Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI), regional institutes affiliated with the United Nations—the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI), the Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the European Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the UN, and the Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders—and associate institutes, such as the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre, the Australian Institute of Criminology, the International Centre for Criminal Law Reform and Criminal Justice Policy and the International Institute of Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences. He also reported on the activities of the International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council. The Secretary-General drew a number of matters to the attention of the Commission and said that, despite the increasing demands made on it and without the human and financial resources to match them, the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme network continued to support and reinforce the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

In an addendum to his report,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Commission to the list of nominees to fill the three vacancies on the Board of Trustees of UNICRI.

On 24 July, by decision 1995/241, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the appointment by the Commission of Jan J. van Dijk (Netherlands), Karoly Bard (Hungary) and Adedokun A. Adeyemi (Nigeria) to fill the vacancies on the Board of UNICRI.

UNAFRI

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁵¹⁾ on the status of UNAFRI's recent operations, its staffing, programme activities and funding.

UNAFRI continued to conduct training activities to upgrade the skills, knowledge and expertise of crime prevention and criminal justice personnel in the region. It conducted studies on the resettlement of street children in Kampala, Uganda, and on the rehabilitation of prisoners. The Governing Board approved two research activities for implementation in 1995: the continuation of the African crime, victimization and criminal justice administration survey, and a study on the resettlement of street children in other African countries. The Institute improved cooperation with other relevant organizations and agencies operating in the area and published its biannual newsletter. It expanded compilation of African country profiles and the roster of African experts in crime prevention and criminal justice and continued to develop a specialized reference library on crime prevention and the treatment of offenders.

In January, the Governing Board appointed Isam Abugideri as Director of the Institute.

Financial situation

The financial situation of the Institute remained precarious in 1995. On 6 April, the General Assembly, by decision 49/480, redeployed the amount of $119,700 from section 3 of the 1994-1995 programme budget to section 15 (Economic Commission for Africa). That additional funding would enable UNAFRI to meet its 1995 administrative expenses.

The Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 26-27 April)⁽⁵²⁾ appealed to those States that had not done so to make timely contributions, including payment of arrears, within a reasonable time to guarantee the survival and the implementation of the work programme of the Institute. It also appealed to the Administrator of UNDP to renew its programme support to the Institute, taking into account the difficult economic and financial situation faced by most countries in the African region, and to continue its financial support to enable the Institute to meet its administrative obligations on a sustained basis. ECA also endorsed the recommendation of the Governing Board that the Chairmanship of the Board should be held by member States on a two-year rotational base from among members of the Board and approved the composition of the Board for 1995-1999.

In his report to the Assembly on the Institute,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that major efforts had been made to mobilize financial, technical and political support for the Institute. However, while some limited contributions might be forthcoming, the financial situation of the Institute remained a matter of serious concern. He proposed that the Assembly authorize the appropriation of additional funds for the Institute in the 1996-1997 programme budget. In the meantime, the Institute would urge its members to speed up payment of their assessed contributions through a special appeal and mount a vigorous fund-raising campaign for additional donations. It was also important that UNDP continue supporting the Institute beyond 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/147.

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/156 of 23 December 1994, Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1994/21 of 25 July 1994,

Aware of the financial difficulties that the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders continues to face as a result of the fact that many States of the African region are in the category of least developed countries and therefore lack the necessary resources with which to support the Institute,

Conscious of the efforts made thus far by the Institute in fulfilling its mandate through, inter alia, the organization of training programmes and regional seminars, as well as the provision of advisory services,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Commends the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders for the activities it has undertaken, despite its difficulties in fulfilling its mandate, as reflected in the progress report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and other institutes;

2. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and intergovernmental bodies which have supported the Institute in the discharge of its responsibilities;

3. Appeals to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial and technical support to the Institute to enable it to fulfil its objectives, in particular those concerning training, technical assistance, policy guidance, research and data collection;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Institute is provided with adequate funds, within the overall appropriation of the programme budget and from extrabudgetary resources, and to submit proposals for any necessary additional funding of the Institute, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/156 and its decision 49/480 of 6 April 1995;

5. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to reconsider its decision with regard to its financial support to the Institute and to continue providing appropriate funds for the institutional strengthening and the implementation of the programme of work of the Institute, taking into account the difficult economic and financial situation faced by many countries in the African region;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure proper follow-up with all concerned on the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session and to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its fifth session.

Human resources

Human resource development

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²⁾ on developing human resources for development. He examined the status of human resource development: the concept, constraints and definitions; reviewed progress made by developing countries at the national level, described the operational activities of the UN system, the coordination of its activities and development of an integrated approach; and discussed the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development as they related to human resource development.⁽³⁾

The Secretary-General recommended that the UN system should continue to move towards greater specificity in its definitions and conceptualization of human resource development, and that the participating agencies in the Administrative Committee on Coordination Subcommittee on

Rural Development should explore ways to deepen their understanding and pool their knowledge and experiences on human resource development and design mechanisms for coordination at the regional and national level. The fundamental global changes in the areas of employment and work should be a major research and policy/priority for the UN system. Overall government frameworks were needed to provide useful structure, coordination and monitoring for national human resource development strategies, with a focus on involving organizations of civil society more directly to deliver services at all levels in social development efforts.

Regional initiatives to assist countries in making integrated human resource development strategies operational should be continued, with the UN system supporting those efforts by improving linkages and providing global communication of commonalities and differences across regions. The needs of women and girls, the vulnerable, the disabled and the ageing in the developing world should be given special attention by the UN system during the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development. The United Nations should also ensure that training was focused on sustainable learning of lasting benefit to those trained, and that its support reached substantial portions of those in need of training. It should improve the monitoring of its own efforts and strengthen countries' abilities to monitor theirs. The UN Statistical Commission and the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis should develop a common system of social development indicators, social impact assessment and performance appraisal methods. Countries and UN agencies should cooperate to identify resource and expenditure flows to permit identification of people-centred development costs as a proportion of total costs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/105.

Developing human resources for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 48/205 of 21 December 1993, 46/143 of 17 December 1991 and 45/191 of 21 December 1990, as well as its resolutions S-18/3 of 1 May 1990 and 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Reaffirming that people are central to all activities related to development and that human resources development is an essential means of achieving sustainable development goals,

Recognizing that human resources development should contribute to total human development, which enlarges the choices available to people in developing their lives and fulfilling their aspirations, and that there is a need to integrate human resources development into comprehensive strategies for human development that main-streams a gender perspective, taking into account the needs of all people, in particular the needs of women,

Stressing that there is need for a supportive and favourable international economic environment that will enhance human development in developing countries and promote economic growth and development,

Recognizing that, while economic reforms and structural adjustment programmes are intended to promote economic growth and development, elements of such programmes may have an adverse impact on human resources development, and also that there is a need to take action, in the formulation and implementation of these programmes, to mitigate any negative effects,

Stressing the need for adequate resources to enhance the capacity of Governments of developing countries to promote human resources development in pursuit of their national programmes, plans and strategies for development,

Stressing also that Governments of developing countries have the primary responsibility for defining and implementing appropriate policies for human resources development,

Recognizing the vital role that South-South and North-South cooperation play in supporting national efforts in human resources development, bilaterally as well as multilaterally,

Emphasizing the need for coordination and integration among the organs and organizations of the United Nations system in assisting developing countries to foster the development of their human resources, especially that of the most vulnerable, and for the United Nations to continue to give priority to human resources development in developing countries,

Recognizing the importance accorded in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and in the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development to the human component of development,

Recognizing also the importance of the Platform for Action adopted at the recently concluded Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on developing human resources for development;

2. Emphasizes that, in the development of human resources, an overall, well-conceived and integrated approach that mainstreams a gender perspective and takes into account the needs of all people should be adopted, incorporating such vital areas as population, health, nutrition, water, sanitation, housing, communications, education and training, and science and technology, as well as taking into account the need to create more opportunities for employment in an environment that guarantees opportunities for political freedom, popular participation, respect for human rights, justice and equity, all of which are essential for enhancing human capacity to meet the challenge of development;

3. Encourages all countries to accord priority, in particular in national budgets, to human resources development in the context of the adoption of economic and social policies;

4. Emphasizes the need to ensure the full participation of women in the formulation and implementation of national policies to promote human resources development;

5. Calls upon the international community to support national efforts to develop human resources for development by increasing the priority of resources for those activities;

6. Calls upon the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to ensure the coordination of activities in support of national and regional action in the area of human resources development;

7. Emphasizes that structural adjustment programmes should include social development goals, in particular the eradication of poverty, the promotion of full and productive employment, and the enhancement of social integration;

8. Also emphasizes that Governments and relevant institutions should ensure, where appropriate, an adequate social safety net under structural adjustment programmes and should develop policies to reduce the negative effects of these programmes and to improve their positive impact, bearing in mind that social safety nets associated with economic restructuring are short-term by nature and should be considered as complementary strategies;

9. Acknowledges the action taken thus far by the United Nations system in operational activities in the area of human resources development, and urges further action in accordance with resolutions of the General Assembly on human resources for development;

10. Notes with serious concern the worrisome trend of a decrease in overall development assistance, which affects the level of resources for human resources development, and emphasizes that financial commitment to human resources development is of critical importance in contributing to the enhancement of the concept of people-centred sustainable development;

11. Calls for follow-up action to be taken as recommended in the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and in the Platform for Action adopted at Beijing, in order to ensure the strengthening of human resources development;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the outcome of the upcoming United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) in the context of human resources development;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the activities of the United Nations system in human resources development and to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including further action taken by the United Nations system with regard to human resources development and the enhancement of inter-agency coordination;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development and international economic cooperation", a sub-item entitled "Human resources development".

UN research and training institutes

UN Institute for Training and Research

In a note to the General Assembly,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a summary of ongoing activities and a brief identification of potential developments of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), prepared at the request of the Board of Trustees of the Institute. UNITAR had completed its restructuring phase and was entering a phase of consolidation. Programmes were developing and gaining credibility and the financial situation, though still fragile, was more stable. Training programmes in the areas of multilateral diplomacy and related disciplines and economic and social development had been continuously expanding and evolving through the restructuring process. As the number and range of activities increased, so did the need to better register and document methodology and end-results. There was a pressing need to have the capacity to design and develop appropriate training materials and to excel in the conduct of problem-clarification exercises with key players.

The Secretary-General stated that UNITAR now had the possibility to enhance its intellectual relevance, further strengthen the credibility of its training activities, and ensure that those, as well as the financial means of accomplishing them, reached a certain critical mass. However, a coherent and efficient funding strategy had to be designed to ensure a minimum of predictability and sustainability. Such a secure financial basis would also consolidate existing programmes and accelerate their development, thus enabling the Institute to respond more promptly to requests for training. To enhance and extend the quality and number of training services provided to Member States, the Board of Trustees had decided that the Institute would open, without delay, a liaison office in New York.

On 27 November, during consideration by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the Director of Financial Management, Department of Administration and Management, said that, following the Committee's decision to consider issues relating to UNITAR on a biennial basis, the Secretary-General would submit an oral report during the current year. In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General had provided office space for the Institute in Geneva as well as administrative and logistic support. As the financial situation had improved, the Board of Trustees had initiated discussions on the setting up of a liaison office in New York. Related expenditure would be covered by the Institute's resources, and the Board would ensure that the funds were available before proceeding. The Secretary-General had instructed the Head of the Training Service to coordinate the training programmes offered in New York, and the Board had set up a subcommittee to study the strengthening of cooperation between the Institute and other national and international institutions, including the International Training Centre of the International Labour Organization in Turin, Italy. UNITAR envisaged offering a training programme on international trade in collaboration with the World Trade Organization and was considering other subjects. It was also studying using the facilities in Turin.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/121.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/227 of 8 April 1993, 48/207 of 21 December 1993 and 49/125 of 19 December 1994,

Recognizing the successful implementation of the transfer of the headquarters of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research from New York to Geneva and the Institute's consolidating itself at its new location,

Taking note with interest of the measures taken to complete the restructuring process of the Institute,

Welcoming the measures already taken pursuant to resolution 49/125 in order to resolve the problem the Institute had been experiencing with respect to the rent of its Geneva headquarters,

Recognizing that training activities should be accorded a more visible and larger role in support of the management of international affairs and in the execution of the economic and social development programmes of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms the relevance of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, particularly in view of the many training requirements of all Member States;

2. Invites the Institute to further develop its cooperation with United Nations institutes and other relevant national, regional and international institutes;

3. Welcomes the decision of the Board of Trustees of the Institute, at its thirty-third session and at its special session, inviting the Institute to open a liaison office in New York, in so far as this is possible within its existing resources and pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 47/227 and 49/125, in order to respond to the training needs of the Missions and delegations of Member States in New York and in order to strengthen its cooperative relationship with the United Nations Secretariat;

4. Urges all Member States to consider resuming or increasing their voluntary contributions to the restructured United Nations Institute for Training and Research, in particular to its General Fund;

5. Encourages the Secretary-General to take relevant measures with respect to the regularization of the Executive Director of the Institute, taking into account the recommendations of the Board of Trustees;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, duly taking into account the deliberations of the Board of Trustees, to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on possible ways to strengthen the training activities of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and to better define its role.

Financial report and audited financial statements

In the financial report and audited financial statements covering UNITAR for the year ended 31 December 1994,⁽⁶⁾ the Board of Auditors welcomed the improved financial control of UNITAR operations. The UNITAR General Fund administrative expenditure was reduced to $595,977 in 1994 compared with $700,129 in 1993 and expenditure was substantially within the budget set by the Board of Trustees ($776,100). Total income generated by the General Fund was $800,430, resulting in an operating surplus for 1994 of $204,453.

The Board recommended that expenditure statements in respect of UNDP-financed projects should be submitted by UNITAR each year, to allow programme support income to be accounted for promptly. Also, UNITAR should follow UN procurement procedures and adhere more closely to UN Financial Regulations and Rules on procurement of goods and services.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/204 D.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/211 of 23 December 1992 and 48/216 B of 23 December 1993, as well as previous relevant resolutions,

1. Regrets the delay in the submission of a report on measures taken or proposed to be taken by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in response to the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the year ended 31 December 1994;

2. Requests the Institute to submit such reports in a timely manner in order to allow Member States to consider them properly before the beginning of formal discussions during future sessions of the General Assembly.

UN University

UNU activities

The year 1995 marked the twentieth anniversary of the United Nations University (UNU), an autonomous academic institution within the UN system. During the year,⁽⁷⁾ UNU continued to carry out its research on universal human values and global responsibilities; new directions in the world economy; sustaining global life-support systems; advances in science and technology; and population dynamics and human welfare. Four UNU research and training centres were fully operational: the World Institute for Development Economics Research (WIDER) (Helsinki, Finland); the Institute for New Technologies (INTECH) (Maastricht, the Netherlands); the International Institute for Software Technology (IIST) (Macau); and the Institute for Natural Resources in Africa (INRA) (Accra, Ghana). In addition, the University established a new International Leadership Academy in Amman, Jordan, in 1995. It also continued its Programme for Biotechnology in Latin America and the Caribbean (BIOLAC) in Caracas, Venezuela, and established a new research and training centre, the Institute of Advanced Studies (IAS) in Tokyo, Japan.

During 1995, 82 fellowships were awarded for training in UNU research and training centres and associated and other cooperating institutions. They included 23 in natural resources and the environment; 16 in geothermal energy; 15 in biotechnology at UNU/IIST and 12 at UNU/BIOLAC; 11 in food and nutrition; 1 in micro-informatics; and 4 in other fields. In addition, some 500 individuals attended UNU training workshops.

Among the 29 titles published during the year were The United Nations System: The Policies of Member States; State, Society, and the United Nations System: Changing Perspectives on Multilateralism; Hydropolitics along the Jordan River: Scarce Water and Its Impact on the Arab-Israeli Conflict; Managing Water for Peace in the Middle East: Alternative Strategies; Steering Business Toward Sustainability; Amazonia: Resiliency and Dynamism of the Land and its People; Regions at Risk: Comparisons of Threatened Environments; In Place of the Forest: Environmental and Socio-economic Transformation in Borneo and the Eastern Malay Peninsula; Emerging World Cities in Pacific Asia; Global Employment: An International Investigation into the Future of Work; and Ethnicity and Power in the Contemporary World.

UNU Council

At its forty-second session (Tokyo, 4-8 December),⁽⁷⁾ the UNU Council examined the University's work in the final year of its second Medium-Term Perspective (1990-1995) and reviewed the draft third Medium-Term Perspective (1996-2001). The Council noted the need for more systematic reporting of the work of the University to permit a more critical assessment by the Council of its activities. It expressed concern about the state of UNU/INRA and the lack of staff and financial resources which had hampered implementation of programme activities. The Council urged the Rector to continue to harmonize standards and procedures for electronic communication throughout the UNU system. It asked him to assess UNU fellowship and training activities and to develop a strategy to ensure a more coherent implementation of those activities, including an appropriate geographic balance in their distribution; and to study UNU's publishing activities with the aim of improving efficiency and cost-effectiveness. The Council designated members of a Nominating Committee to prepare a list of candidates for the post of Rector, who would begin his/her term in September 1997.

On 27 July, by decision 1995/310, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the UNU Council for 1994.⁽⁸⁾

University for Peace

In accordance with a 1993 resolution,⁽⁹⁾ the General Assembly considered at its 1995 session the item entitled "University for Peace".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/41.

University for Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 34/111 of 14 December 1979 it approved the idea of establishing the University for Peace as a specialized international centre for post-graduate studies, research and the dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training and education for peace and its universal promotion within the system of the United Nations University,

Recalling also that in its resolution 35/55 of 5 December 1980 it approved the establishment of the University for Peace in conformity with the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace,

Recalling further its resolutions 45/8 of 24 October 1990 and 46/11 of 24 October 1991, on the tenth anniversary of the University for Peace and the report of the Secretary-General on that anniversary, and its resolution 48/9 of 25 October 1993, in which it decided to include in the agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "University for Peace",

Recognizing that the University has suffered from financial limitations which have impeded the full development of the activities and programmes necessary for carrying out its important mandate,

Recognizing also the important and varied activities carried out by the University during the period 1993-1995, largely thanks to the financial contributions made by Canada, Costa Rica, the Netherlands and Spain and contributions by foundations and non-governmental organizations,

Noting that in 1991 the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, established a Trust Fund for Peace consisting of voluntary contributions in order to provide the University with the means necessary to extend its sphere of activity to the rest of the world, to take full advantage of its potential capacity for education, research and support of the United Nations and to carry out its mandate of promoting peace in the world,

Noting also that the University has placed special emphasis, in the context of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", on the area of conflict prevention, peace-keeping and peace-building, as well as on the peaceful settlement of disputes,

Considering the importance of promoting an education for peace which will help to foster respect for the values inherent in peace and universal coexistence among human beings, such as respect for life, friendship and solidarity between peoples and the dignity and integrity of persons irrespective of their nationality, race, sex, religion or culture,

Taking into account the efforts being made by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the development and promotion of a new culture of peace,

Noting further the research activities for international peace and security being carried out by the United Nations University,

Recalling that Turkey acceded to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace on 27 November 1995,

Recalling also that in its resolution 46/11 it decided to include in the agenda of its forty-eighth session and biennially thereafter an item entitled "University for Peace",

1. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the establishment of the new Council of the University for Peace, which held its ninth regular meeting on 3 October 1994;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to consider ways of strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and the University for Peace and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

3. Invites Member States, non-governmental organizations and intergovernmental bodies, as well as interested individuals and organizations, to contribute directly to the Trust Fund for Peace and to the budget of the University;

4. Invites Member States to accede to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace, thereby demonstrating their support for a global peace studies institution whose mandate is the promotion of a global culture of peace;

5. Decides to include in the agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "University for Peace".

Chapter X

Women

Aiming to accelerate a process begun two decades earlier to advance the status of women worldwide, the United Nations in September 1995 convened the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing (4-15 September). The two-week global convocation culminated with the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, a comprehensive, ground-breaking plan designed to speed implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and to promote the goals of equality, development and peace.

Some 17,000 representatives of Governments, non-governmental organizations, international organizations and the media attended the gathering in Beijing's International Conference Centre, making it one of the largest UN conferences ever held. In addition, more than 30,000 participants attended a parallel forum organized by non-governmental organizations in suburban Huairou.

The Conference aimed to build upon and expand a process that formally began in 1975, during the UN-proclaimed International Women's Year, when the first UN conference on women, held in Mexico City, squarely placed women's issues on the international agenda. In 1979, the General Assembly adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which entered into force in 1981 and set an international standard to ensure equality between women and men. The second UN women's conference was held in Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1980. In 1985, the third women's conference convened in Nairobi to review the achievements of the UN Decade for Women (1976-1985), a worldwide effort to examine the status and rights of women and to bring women into decision-making at all levels. The conference adopted the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women to the year 2000, which provided a framework for action at the national, regional and international levels to promote empowerment of women and their enjoyment of human rights. A 1990 evaluation of the Strategies revealed that, while the international community had become more conscious of issues affecting women, there seemed to be some loss of momentum for implementation.

The Fourth World Conference on Women built also on agreements reached at a continuum of international meetings convened by the United Nations in the 1990s to address interrelated problems of economic and social development, human rights and other matters. In December 1995, the General Assembly endorsed the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action. The Declaration recognized that the status of women had advanced in some important respects in the past decade, but that progress had been uneven, inequalities between women and men had persisted and major obstacles remained, with serious consequences for the well-being of all people. The Platform for Action described an agenda for women's empowerment which established a basic group of priority actions to be carried out by the year 2000, focusing in particular on 12 critical areas of concern. It reflected a review and appraisal of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies and expanded on the General Assembly's 1993 Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, confronting issues such as domestic and sexual abuse, forced pregnancy and sexual slavery.

The Beijing Platform set forth new measures related to such matters as the right to inherit, parental responsibility, the role of the family, freedom of culture and religion, the rights of the girl child and women's rights to control and decide freely about matters such as sexuality and reproductive health, among others.

The Economic and Social Council addressed issues related to the Fourth World Conference on Women; commended the efforts of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women to address all levels of poverty that hampered the advancement of women; and created a working group to consider elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. The Council also welcomed the intention of the Secretary-General to ensure implementation of the strategic plan of action to improve the status of women in the UN Secretariat.

The Commission on the Status of Women, as preparatory body for the Beijing Conference, formulated the draft Declaration and Platform for Action. In 1995, the Commission also urged the release of women and children taken hostage in armed conflicts, condemned the rape and abuse of women and children in the former Yugoslavia and addressed such issues as violence against women migrant workers, traffic in women and girls and integrating women into the development process.

In 1995, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at its fourteenth session examined reports from 13 States parties to the 1979 Convention.

Fourth World Conference on Women

Conference preparations

In 1990, the General Assembly had endorsed⁽¹⁾ a recommendation of the Economic and Social Council that the United Nations convene a world conference on women in 1995, and requested the Commission on the Status of Women to serve as the preparatory committee for the Fourth World Conference on Women. In December 1992, Gertrude Mongella, a former cabinet minister of the United Republic of Tanzania, was appointed Secretary-General of the Conference.

Preparatory activities were characterized by intense collaboration among Governments, the UN Secretariat and UN organizations, and by an unprecedented involvement of and strong support from other intergovernmental organizations and a broad spectrum of non-governmental actors at the international, regional, subregional and national levels.

Preparatory meetings for the Conference were convened by the five UN regional commissions, which resulted in regional plans or programmes providing perspectives for the draft Platform for Action.⁽²⁾ Consultations with representatives of youth organizations at each regional meeting resulted in youth statements on the Platform for Action.

Support for the Conference at the international level was further provided by an Advisory Group composed of 19 eminent persons. Meeting three times prior to the Conference, the Group provided advice to the Secretary-General and assisted in mobilizing political interest and public attention for the Conference.

Preparatory meeting

In 1995, the Commission on the Status of Women, at its third and final preparatory meeting, held during its thirty-ninth session (15 March-7 April),⁽³⁾ set up a working group to finalize the draft Platform for Action as well as other matters related to Conference preparations, including draft rules of procedure, applications from non-governmental organizations for accreditation and issues related to Conference follow-up. The Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General containing information on the status of preparations.⁽⁴⁾

After extending the session by three days, to 7 April, the Commission approved the draft Platform and decided⁽⁵⁾ to transmit it to the World Conference for adoption. The Commission also approved the provisional agenda and organization of work for the Conference⁽⁶⁾ and decided to transmit the provisional rules of procedure for the Conference⁽⁷⁾ to the General Assembly, which approved them on 21 April by decision 49/482.

The Commission further decided⁽⁸⁾ to establish an informal contact group to seek agreement on the commonly understood meaning of the term "gender" in the context of the draft Platform for Action. The group met twice in May and decided that the Conference President should read a statement at the Conference indicating the commonly understood meaning of the term.

Beijing Conference

The Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing, 4-15 September 1995) addressed the inter-related issues of development, equality and peace, and defined an agenda for action to empower women socially, politically and economically, in both private and public life, and to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women. It emphasized the connection between the advancement of women and progress for society as a whole, and reaffirmed that societal issues must be addressed from a gender perspective in order to ensure sustainable development.

The Beijing Conference carried forward the themes of "Equality, Development and Peace", adopted at the first UN-sponsored global conference on women, held in Mexico City (1975), which were subsequently developed during the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985).⁽¹⁰⁾ The second women's conference, held in Copenhagen (1980), added three sub-themes: education, employment and health,⁽¹¹⁾ and the third UN conference on women (1985) incorporated those themes into the "Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women".⁽¹²⁾ A major challenge before the Fourth World Conference was to find ways and means to accelerate the application of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies. Its mission was not further analysis, but a deeper level of action.

Consultations were held in Beijing on 2 and 3 September to consider procedural and organizational matters, and the Conference opened on 4 September with representatives of 189 Governments in attendance. At the first session, Chen Muhua, Vice Chairman of the Standing Committee of the Eighth National People's Conference of China and President of the Executive Committee of the All-China Women's Federation, was elected Conference President.

Boutros-Ghali said that securing equality for women and men, in fact as well as in law, was the great political project of the twentieth century. Over the past decade, a continuum of global conferences had worked to define the new global agenda; it had become clear that progress would require the full and equal participation of women and men in promoting peace, safeguarding the environment, securing sustainable development, and making advances in human rights, population, health, education, government, the home and civil society. Conference Secretary-General Gertrude Mongella also spoke, describing the Platform for Action as a document for everyone. She said there could be no spectators or abstainers from the crucial social agenda affecting all humanity.

While the Conference's Main Committee addressed the chapter-by-chapter process of negotiating agreement on contentious issues, plenary sessions featured a general exchange of views on key issues affecting the realization of the rights of women. Statements were made by representatives of 186 Member States—including 5 heads of State or Government—as well as 3 associate members, 16 intergovernmental organizations, 32 UN agencies and programmes and 50 NGOs. Representatives of the European Union and other international and regional organization speakers also addressed the Conference.

Governments were invited to make use of the general exchange of views to express their commitments to the advancement of women. Most commitments dealt with improving the status of women through reform of national policies, numerical targets for the year 2000 and frameworks for international development cooperation. Commitments made during the general exchange of views, along with the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, constituted the major results of the Conference.

On 15 September, the Conference concluded with the unanimous adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action,⁽¹³⁾ which was recommended to the General Assembly for endorsement. After adoption of the final documents, general or interpretive statements were made or reservations expressed on the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action by representatives of the following countries: Algeria, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Ghana, Guatemala, Holy See, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Morocco, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman,

Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, South Africa, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Vanuatu, Venezuela and Yemen. The observer for Palestine also made a statement. Conference participants also expressed thanks to the people and Government of the People's Republic of China and approved the report of the Conference Credentials Committee.⁽¹⁴⁾

Beijing Declaration

The Beijing Declaration⁽¹³⁾ embodied the commitment of the international community to advance the goals of equality, development and peace and to implement the Platform for Action, ensuring that a gender perspective was reflected in all policies and programmes.

Among the 38 provisions of the Declaration, Governments declared that women's rights were human rights and expressed their determination to intensify efforts and actions to achieve the goals of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women by the end of the century.

In the Declaration, Governments expressed determination to promote women's economic independence and employment; "people-centred" sustainable development, including sustained economic development through the provision of basic education, lifelong education, literacy and training; and primary health care for girls and women. Recognizing the leading role that women played in the peace movement, Governments committed themselves to working towards general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control and supported negotiations on the conclusion, without delay, of a universal, multilaterally and effectively verifiable nuclear-test-ban treaty.

The Declaration called for elimination of all forms of violence against women and girls. Governments pledged to intensify efforts to ensure equal enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms for women and girls. They committed themselves to implementing the Platform for Action and ensuring that a gender perspective was reflected in all their policies and programmes. They urged the UN system, regional and international financial institutions and all women and men to commit themselves to action as well.

Platform for Action

The six chapters of the Platform for Action⁽¹³⁾ set out measures for national and international action for the advancement of women, and aimed to hasten the removal of the remaining obstacles to women's full and equal participation in all spheres of life. It also strove to protect women's human rights and to integrate women's concerns into all aspects of sustainable development. It outlined strategic objectives and actions related to the critical areas of concern, and addressed institutional and financial arrangements.

The Platform's "Mission Statement" emphasized that women and men shared common concerns which could only be addressed by working together and in partnership towards the common goal of gender equality throughout the world. It asserted that the success of the Platform for Action would require a strong commitment on the part of Governments, international organizations and institutions at all levels.

The "Global Framework" stated that the Platform's implementation was the responsibility of each State and that their communities should contribute to the full enjoyment by women of their human rights in order to achieve equality, development and peace. It stated that structural adjustment programmes had led to a reduction in social expenditure, thereby adversely affecting women. While one fourth of all households worldwide were headed by women, and growing numbers of women had achieved economic independence through employment, women were not adequately represented in decision-making structures, including in the United Nations.

Critical areas of concern

The third chapter of the Beijing Platform for Action outlined 12 critical areas of concern: poverty, education, health, violence against women, armed conflict, economic structures, power sharing and decision-making, mechanisms to promote the advancement of women, human rights, the media, the environment and the girl child. There was a need, according to the text, for mechanisms of accountability for all the areas of concern, which were interrelated, interdependent and of high priority.

The fourth chapter of the Platform contained the strategic objectives and actions for each critical area of concern. On women and poverty, the Platform set out actions to achieve four strategic objectives, such as: bringing about macroeconomic and development policies to address women in poverty; revising laws to ensure access to economic resources; providing women with access to savings and credit; and developing gender-based methodologies and conducting research to address the feminization of poverty.

Among the objectives outlined to promote education and training of women were equal access to education, eradication of illiteracy, development of non-discriminatory education and training and promotion of lifelong education. In the area of health, the Platform called for increasing women's access to appropriate, affordable and quality health care, strengthening preventive programmes, promoting research on women's health and un-

The Platform also described measures Governments, citizens' groups, employers, international organizations and others could and should take to prevent violence against women and to eliminate trafficking in women. Regarding armed conflict, the text called for increasing the participation of women in conflict resolution at decision-making levels and aimed to reduce excessive military expenditures, control the availability of armaments and reduce the incidence of human rights abuse in conflict situations. Other goals were to promote women's contribution to fostering a culture of peace and to provide protection, assistance and training to refugee women and other women in need of international protection.

With regard to economic matters, the Platform outlined actions to promote women's economic rights and independence; facilitate women's equal access to resources, employment, markets and trade; and provide business services, training and access to information and technology, particularly to low-income women. Other aims included strengthening women's economic capacity and commercial networks, eliminating occupational segregation and all forms of employment discrimination and promoting harmonization of work and family responsibilities for women and men.

The Platform sought to ensure women's equal access to and full participation in power structures, leadership and decision-making, and described actions to be taken by Governments, national bodies, the private sector, political parties, trade unions and others to increase women's capacity to participate in those areas.

Objectives related to institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women included creation of national machineries; integration of gender perspectives in legislation; and dissemination by Governments, the United Nations and other national, regional and international bodies of gender-disaggregated information for planning and evaluation.

To promote and protect the human rights of women, the Platform called for the full implementation of all human rights instruments, especially the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Platform also aimed to ensure equality and non-discrimination under the law and in practice and to achieve legal literacy.

Goals related to the media included increasing access to expression and decision-making in and through the media and new communication technologies and promoting a balanced and non-stereotyped portrayal of women in the media. In terms of the environment, the Platform called for actions to involve women actively in environmental decision-making at all levels. It also aimed to integrate gender concerns and perspective in sustainable development programmes, as well as to establish mechanisms to assess the impact of development and environmental policies on women.

Among nine strategic objectives related to the girl child, the Platform called for eliminating negative cultural attitudes and practices against girls and eliminating discrimination against girls in education and health. It also outlined action to eradicate violence against the girl child; to promote the girl child's participation in social, economic and political life; and to eliminate the economic exploitation of child labour and protect young girls at work.

Institutional and financial arrangements

In the Platform's chapters on institutional and financial arrangements for follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women, Governments were called on to develop strategies to implement the Platform by the end of 1996, with time-bound targets. Benchmarks for monitoring as well as proposals for allocating resources for implementation were included. The Secretary-General was invited to establish a high-level post to act as his adviser on gender issues and help ensure system-wide implementation of the Platform. Emphasis was placed on the role of the Commission on the Status of Women, which should have a clear mandate and necessary financial support to play a central role in monitoring the Platform's implementation. Ultimately, the Platform said, the Commission should serve as the gender-analysis arm of the Economic and Social Council.

Reports of the Conference

Second review and appraisal

The Fourth Women's Conference considered a report of the Secretary-General on the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.⁽¹⁶⁾ The first review and appraisal took place in 1990.

The report was based on information contained in national reports, the results of the regional conferences and information provided by UN specialized agencies, as well as other governmental and non-governmental organizations. The report reviewed progress achieved and persistent gaps in implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies from the perspective of each of the critical areas of concern contained in the Platform for Action. It also provided an overview of the social, political and economic framework against which progress should be assessed. According to the report, changes in the global economic, social and political framework had affected the work and lives of women all over the world. Democratization provided opportunities for women to participate in their societies on an equal footing with men. At the same time, the absence of democratic institutions in societies in transition led, at least initially, to the marginalization of vulnerable groups. Studies had shown that the short-term costs of adjustment and stabilization were often distributed disproportionately, so that women came to bear the greater share of the burden. On the other hand, there was evidence of a strong relationship between economic growth and the economic advancement of women.

Other documents

Other documents before the Conference included the 1994 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development,⁽¹⁷⁾ and The World's Women: Trends and Statistics.⁽¹⁸⁾ The World Survey, the third to be published, examined the role of women in efforts to achieve sustainable development and international economic cooperation, and found that economic growth and development appeared to be intricately related to the advancement of women. Where women had advanced, economic growth had usually been steady; where women had not been allowed to be full participants, there had been stagnation. According to The World's Women, women had made significant progress in some areas since the first World Conference on Women was held in Mexico City in 1975; however, statistical data provided by the report also made it clear that greater efforts were required to achieve social, political and economic equality between genders.

Also before the Conference were: a preliminary report submitted by the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences;⁽¹⁹⁾ the Plan of Action for the Elimination of Harmful Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children,⁽²⁰⁾ the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women⁽²¹⁾ and reports of the regional conferences and other international conferences.⁽²²⁾

On 8 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/42.

Fourth World Conference on Women

The General Assembly,

Noting with satisfaction the successful conclusion of the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, which culminated in the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, aimed at accelerating the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women to the year 2000,

1. Expresses its profound gratitude to the Government of the People's Republic of China for having made it possible for the Fourth World Conference on Women to be held at Beijing and for the excellent facilities, staff and services so graciously placed at the disposal of the Conference;

2. Takes note of the report of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

3. Endorses the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action as adopted at the Conference on 15 September 1995;

4. Calls upon all States and all bodies of the United Nations system and other international organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to take action for the effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action.

8 December 1995 Meeting 86 Adopted without vote

105-nation draft (A/50/L.46 & Add.1); agenda item 165.

Conference follow-up

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1994 request of the General Assembly,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁴⁾ in November on implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women. The Secretary-General said he would ensure that Conference recommendations addressed to him were implemented swiftly and effectively, and that he was committed to integrating the gender perspective into all aspects of the work of the Organization. He added that he would work with his colleagues, the executive heads of UN specialized agencies and UN programmes and funds to ensure a coordinated system-wide response, integrating the follow-up of the Fourth Conference with that of other global conferences.

The report said that deeply entrenched attitudes and practices perpetuated inequality and discrimination against women, in both public and private life, in all parts of the world. Accordingly, implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action would require changes in values, attitudes, practices and priorities at the national, regional and international levels. A clear commitment to international norms and standards of equality between men and women, as well as measures to protect and promote the human rights of women and girl children as an integral part of universal human rights, must underlie all action. Institutions at all levels must be reoriented to expedite implementation, and an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective should be promoted by Governments, the UN system and all other relevant organizations.

New senior adviser

Responding to a Conference recommendation that a new high-level post be established in the office of the Secretary-General to help ensure system-wide implementation of the Platform for Action, the Secretary-General on 28 December designated Assistant Secretary-General Rosario Green as his senior adviser on gender issues.

Inter-agency meeting

The twentieth Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Women (New York, 16-17 November) centred on revision of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001, and included discussion of the role of the UN system in follow-up to the Conference.⁽²⁵⁾ Concern was expressed that roles and functions remained unclear, as did the mechanisms for interaction, coordination and reporting in the intergovernmental and inter-agency areas. In particular, the apparatus for women's and gender issues and for Conference follow-up under the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) needed to be clarified. The Meeting decided to continue its discussion of the matter and to make recommendations for submission to ACC at its twenty-first meeting in March 1996.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/203.

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/129 of 14 December 1990, 46/98 of 16 December 1991 and 47/95 of 16 December 1992, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/12 of 24 May 1990 and Council decision 1992/272 of 30 July 1992, recommending that a world conference on women be held in 1995,

Reaffirming the importance of the outcome of the previous World Conferences on Women, held at Mexico City in 1975, at Copenhagen in 1980 and at Nairobi in 1985,

Building on the consensus reached and the progress made at previous United Nations conferences and summits, for children in New York in 1990, on environment and development at Rio de Janeiro in 1992, on human rights at Vienna in 1993, on population and development at Cairo in 1994 and on social development at Copenhagen in 1995, towards achieving equality, development and peace,

Expressing its satisfaction that the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace reached a successful conclusion and adopted the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action,

Expressing its profound gratitude to the Government of the People's Republic of China for having made it possible for the Conference to be held at Beijing and for the excellent facilities, staff and services so graciously placed at the disposal of the Conference,

Recognizing the significance of the outcome of the Conference to make a real change for the empowerment of women and thus to the fulfilment of the goals adopted in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Deeply convinced that the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action are important contributions to the advancement of women worldwide and must be translated into effective action by all States, the United Nations system and other organizations concerned, as well as non-governmental organizations,

Recognizing that the implementation of the Platform for Action rests primarily at the national level, that Governments, non-governmental organizations and public and private institutions should be involved in the implementation process and that national mechanisms also have an important role to play,

Bearing in mind that promotion of international cooperation is essential for the effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action,

Recognizing that the implementation of the Platform for Action requires commitment from Governments and the international community,

Recognizing also the important role played by States, the United Nations, the regional commissions and other international organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and women's organizations, in the preparatory process of the Conference and the importance of their involvement in the implementation of the Platform for Action,

Taking into account the fact that the follow-up to the Conference should be undertaken on the basis of an integrated approach to the advancement of women within the framework of a coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the results of the major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields, as well as the overall responsibilities of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its resolution 50/42 of 8 December 1995, Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the Secretary-General of the Conference and the staff of the Secretariat for the effective preparations and services provided for the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Fourth World Conference on Women, as adopted on 15 September 1995;

2. Endorses the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action as adopted by the Conference;

3. Calls upon States, the United Nations system and all other actors to implement the Platform for Action, in particular by promoting an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective at all levels, including in the design, monitoring and evaluation of all policies, as appropriate, in order to ensure effective implementation of the Platform;

4. Stresses that Governments have the primary responsibility for implementing the Platform for Action, that commitment at the highest level is essential for its implementation and that Governments should take a leading role in coordinating, monitoring and assessing progress in the advancement of women;

5. Calls upon States, with the assistance of non-governmental organizations, to disseminate the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action widely;

6. Emphasizes that Governments should, as soon as possible and no later than 1996, develop comprehensive implementation strategies or plans of action, including time-bound targets and benchmarks for monitoring, in order to implement the Platform for Action fully;

7. Calls upon Governments to create a national machinery where it does not exist and to strengthen, as appropriate, existing national machineries for the advancement of women;

8. Encourages non-governmental organizations to contribute to the design and implementation of these strategies or national plans of action in addition to their own programmes that complement government efforts;

9. Recognizes the importance attached to the regional monitoring of the global and regional platforms for action by regional commissions and other subregional or regional structures, within their mandates, in consultation with Governments, and the necessity of promoting cooperation among national Governments of the same region in this respect;

10. Invites the Economic and Social Council, in order to facilitate the regional implementation, monitoring and evaluation process, to consider reviewing the institutional capacity of the United Nations regional commissions, within their mandates, including their women's units or focal points, to deal with gender-related issues in the light of the Platform for Action, as well as the regional platforms and plans of action, and to give consideration, inter alia, and where appropriate, to strengthening the capacity in this respect;

11. Calls upon States to take action to fulfil the commitments made at the Conference for the advancement of women and for the strengthening of international cooperation, and reaffirms that adequate financial resources should be committed at the international level for the implementation of the Platform for Action in the developing countries, in particular in Africa, and in the least developed countries;

12. Recognizes that implementation of the Platform for Action in the countries with economies in transition requires continued international cooperation and assistance, as indicated in the Platform for Action;

13. Stresses that full and effective implementation of the Platform for Action will require a political commitment to make available human and financial resources for the empowerment of women, the integration of a gender perspective in budgetary decisions on policies and programmes, as well as adequate financing of specific programmes for securing equality between women and men;

14. Reaffirms that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, a reformulation of policies and reallocation of resources may be needed, but that some policy changes may not necessarily have financial implications;

15. Reaffirms also that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, adequate mobilization of resources at the national and international levels, as well as new and additional resources to the developing countries, in particular in Africa, and the least developed countries, from all available funding mechanisms, including multilateral, bilateral and private sources for the advancement of women, will also be required;

16. Calls upon those States committed to the 20:20 initiative to integrate a gender perspective fully into its implementation, as referred to in paragraph 358 of the Platform for Action;

17. Recognizes that the creation of an enabling environment is necessary to ensure the full participation of women in economic activities;

18. Reaffirms further that the implementation of the Platform for Action will require immediate and concerted action by all to create a peaceful, just and humane world based on all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the principle of equality for all people of all ages and from all walks of life, and to this end, recognizes that broad-based and sustained economic growth in the context of sustainable development is necessary to sustain social development and social justice;

19. Considers, in relation to the United Nations, that the Platform for Action should be implemented through the work of all the bodies and organizations of the system during the period 1995-2000, specifically and as an integral part of wider programming;

20. Considers also that an enhanced framework for international cooperation for gender-related issues must be developed during the period 1995-2000 in order to ensure the integrated and comprehensive implementation, follow-up and assessment of the Platform for Action, taking into account the results of global United Nations summits and conferences;

21. Decides that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on the Status of Women, in accordance with their respective mandates and in accordance with Assembly resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and other relevant resolutions, shall constitute a three-tiered intergovernmental mechanism that will play the primary role in the overall policy-making and follow-up, and in coordinating the implementation and monitoring of the Platform for Action, reaffirming the need for a coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the results of major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields;

22. Also decides to appraise the progress on a regular basis and to include in the agenda of its forthcoming sessions, starting from 1996, an item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women", with a view to assessing, in the year 2000, the progress achieved in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the Platform for Action in an appropriate forum;

23. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider devoting to this matter one high-level segment, one coordination segment and one operational segment, before the year 2000, taking into account the multi-year programme of work of the Commission on the Status of Women and all other functional commissions of the Council;

24. Advancement of the status of women

UN mechanisms

Convention on discrimination against women

The 30-article Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted in 1979 by the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ spells out constitutional, legislative and other measures which aim to promote equality for women through affirmative action, maternity protection, equal education and employment opportunities, and equality before the law. It sets standards by which countries aim to improve the status of women in many areas and the conditions under which they work and live. (See also PART THREE, Chapter I.)

CEDAW session

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982⁽²⁾ to monitor compliance with the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, held its fourteenth session in New York from 16 January to 3 February 1995.⁽³⁾

The 23-member Committee had before it initial and periodic reports of 13 States parties (Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Finland, Hungary, Mauritius, Norway, Peru, Russian Federation, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukraine). States parties to the Convention are required to submit an initial report within one year of accession to the Convention and periodic reports at least every four years, giving account of measures adopted and progress achieved by States towards implementing the Convention. The Committee also considered a report submitted by Croatia on an exceptional basis, pursuant to a 1993 CEDAW request⁽⁴⁾ for reports from countries of the former Yugoslavia, regarding violence against women.

In 1995, CEDAW adopted a general recommendation⁽⁵⁾ that would have States parties consider amending article 20 of the Convention in respect of the meeting time of the Committee, so as to allow it to meet annually for such duration as necessary for the effective performance of its functions under the Convention. It also recommended that the General Assembly authorize the Committee to meet exceptionally in 1996 for two sessions, each of three weeks' duration.

The Committee also adopted a suggestion⁽⁶⁾ on elements of an optional protocol, which would introduce petition procedures to the Convention. The Committee suggested that States parties should have the option to ratify the optional protocol, which should include both a communications procedure and an inquiry procedure. The Committee recommended that communications be submitted by an individual, group or organization suffering detriment from a violation of rights in the Convention or claiming to be directly affected by the failure of a State party to comply with its obligations under the Convention or by a person or group having a sufficient interest in the matter. The State party should have the right to cooperate in examining the information and in submitting observations on it, after which the Committee should have the power to designate one or more members to conduct an inquiry and report urgently to the Committee.

Another suggestion⁽⁷⁾ related to follow-up to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development. The Committee decided that CEDAW should develop a jurisprudence of standards of international law in the field of women's reproductive health, and that the Committee should employ its reporting procedures to follow implementation of the Programme of Action adopted at that Conference.

The Committee adopted decisions on ways to improve its work, including a request to locate the Committee in Geneva with servicing provided by the Centre for Human Rights. It also decided to transmit, as its contribution to the Fourth World Conference on Women, its report⁽⁸⁾ on the progress achieved in implementing the Convention.

Annexed to the Committee's report were a list of States parties to the Convention and a chart showing the status of submission and consideration of reports by States parties under article 18 of the Convention, both as at 3 February.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/29.

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind that the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women is a key international human rights instrument for the promotion of equality between women and men,

Welcoming the increasing number of States parties to the Convention, which has reached one hundred and thirty-nine,

Noting with deep concern that the Convention is still one of the human rights instruments with a large number of reservations, many of which run contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, despite the fact that some States parties have withdrawn their reservations to it,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held from 14 to 25 June 1993, in which the Conference stipulated that the human rights of women and of the girl child were an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights,

Recalling also that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the Conference recommended the adoption of new procedures to strengthen the implementation of the commitment to women's equality and human rights and called upon the Commission on the Status of Women and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to examine quickly the possibility of introducing the right of petition through the preparation of an optional protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Taking note of suggestion 7, on elements for an optional protocol to the Convention, adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at its fourteenth session,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 47/94 of 16 December 1992, relating to the scheduling of the meetings of the Committee,

Recalling also its resolution 1994/7 of 21 July 1994 and relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly to support the work of the Committee,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 49/164 of 23 December 1994 and decision 49/448 of 23 December 1994, providing for a meeting of States parties to the Convention in 1995 to consider the revision of article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention,

Aware that the workload of the Committee has increased because of the growing number of States parties to the Convention, and that the annual session of the Committee is still the shortest of all the annual sessions of the human rights treaty bodies,

Welcoming the Committee's efforts further to improve its working methods, inter alia, by adopting concluding observations containing specific suggestions and recommendations,

1. Welcomes the fact that the States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, at their eighth meeting, held on 22 May 1995, have already considered the revision of article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention in order to allow the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to meet annually with sufficient time for the effective performance of its functions under the Convention;

2. Supports the request made by the Committee at its twelfth session for additional meeting time, with adequate support from the Secretariat, so as to allow the Committee to meet for three weeks for its fifteenth session, and recommends that the request made by the Committee at its fourteenth session to hold two sessions in 1996, each of three weeks' duration, be considered favourably, within the existing level of budgetary resources;

3. Welcomes the efforts made by the Committee to improve its procedures and working methods, and encourages it to continue such efforts, within its mandate;

4. Notes that suggestion 7, on elements for an optional protocol to the Convention, adopted by the Committee at its fourteenth session, was transmitted to the Commission on the Status of Women for consideration;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to submit their views on an optional protocol to the Convention, including those related to feasibility, taking into account the elements suggested by the Committee in its suggestion 7;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its fortieth session a comprehensive report, including a synthesis, on the views expressed in accordance with paragraph 5 above, if possible six weeks prior to the commencement of the session;

7. Decides that the Commission should establish an in-session open-ended working group for a two-week period at its fortieth session to consider the report requested in paragraph 6 above with a view to elaborating a draft optional protocol to the Convention;

8. Once again urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention;

9. Encourages States to consider limiting the extent of any reservation they lodge to the Convention, to formulate any reservation as precisely and as narrowly as possible, and to ensure that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise contrary to international law;

10. Requests States parties to the Convention to review their reservations regularly with a view to withdrawing them expeditiously so that the Convention may be fully implemented;

11. Also encourages States parties that are behind schedule in submitting their periodic reports to the Committee to do so promptly, and requests the Committee to follow up this problem;

12. Urges the Secretary-General to continue to publicize widely the decisions and recommendations of the Committee.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/29

24 July 1995 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on the Status of Women (E/1995/26), orally amended; agenda item 5 (e).

Meeting numbers. ESC 49, 50.

On 28 July, in decision 1995/314, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of CEDAW on its fourteenth session.

CEDAW working methods

Pursuant to a 1994 request of the General Assembly,⁽⁹⁾ States parties to the Convention convened their eighth meeting in May and decided by consensus to amend article 20 of the Convention so that the duration of the Committee's annual meetings would be determined by the States parties, subject to the General Assembly's approval, rather than restricted to two weeks in duration as originally specified. The amendment, which was proposed in December 1994⁽¹⁰⁾ by Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, would enter into force following consideration by the Assembly and acceptance by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/202.

Amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/164 of 23 December 1994 on the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and its decision 49/448 of 23 December 1994 on the consideration of the request for the revision of article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention,

Noting the decision of the States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women of 22 May 1995 to amend article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention,

Welcoming the call for broad ratification of this amendment in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995,

Reiterating the importance of the Convention as well as the contribution of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to the efforts of the United Nations to eliminate discrimination against women,

1. Takes note with approval of the resolution regarding the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the States parties to the Convention on 22 May 1995;

2. Urges States parties to the Convention to take appropriate measures so that acceptance by a two-thirds majority of States parties can be reached as soon as possible in order for the amendment to enter into force.

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/816) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); 5-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.63), orally revised; agenda item 165. Sponsors: Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Sweden. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 24, 26-31, 54; plenary 99.

Ratifications, accessions and signatures

As at 31 December 1995,⁽¹¹⁾ there were 151 States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. During the year, Azerbaijan, Chad, Cote d'Ivoire, Eritrea, Fiji, Lesotho, Liechtenstein, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, Singapore, South Africa, Uzbekistan and Vanuatu became parties.

As at 31 December 1995, no States parties to the Convention had accepted the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, which had been adopted by the States parties at their eighth meeting on 22 May and noted with approval by the General Assembly on 22 December. The amendment would enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

In August, the Secretary-General submitted his annual report⁽¹²⁾ to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention, which contained information on signatures, ratifications, successions and accessions as at 1 August 1995 and on reservations, objections to reservations and withdrawals of reservations and declarations between 1 August 1994 and 1 August 1995. On 22 December, the General Assembly, by decision 50/459, took note of his report.

Implementation of Nairobi Strategies

A major review of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women⁽¹³⁾ was conducted by participants in the Fourth World Conference on Women. Objectives and actions designed to accelerate implementation of the Strategies were contained in the final documents of the Conference, known as the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action.⁽¹⁴⁾

In September, pursuant to requests in 1985⁽¹⁵⁾ and 1994,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁷⁾ on measures taken by the UN system and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to implement the Strategies. The report included an assessment of recent developments relevant to the priority themes of equality, development and peace, as well as a review of progress made in finalizing the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2000.

The Secretary-General also provided information on the integration of older women in development, pursuant to a request of the General Assembly in 1994.⁽¹⁸⁾ He noted that a life-cycle approach to dealing with the advancement of women had become normal in the activities of the organizations of the UN system; the UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), in particular, had projects targeting older women and addressing their needs and interests. The report also outlined the references to older women's concerns in the Copenhagen Declaration, adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development, and in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women.

Commission on Status of Women

Completing preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women, especially the draft Platform for Action, was the focus of the thirty-ninth session of the Commission on the Status of Women, held at UN Headquarters from 15 March to 7 April.⁽¹⁹⁾ The Commission considered the draft rules of procedure, applications from NGOs for accreditation and issues related to Conference follow-up. In its regular work of monitoring activities to advance the status of women worldwide, the Commission adopted eight resolutions and four decisions, and also recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of three additional draft resolutions: on improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (see PART SIX, Chapter III); on Palestinian women; and on the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

During the three-week session, the Commission considered three priority themes related to equality, development and peace; expert meetings were held on each topic before the session was convened, and the results incorporated into reports submitted to the Commission by the Secretary-General. The reports dealt with equality in economic decision-making,⁽²⁰⁾ promotion of literacy, education and training,⁽²¹⁾ and the involvement of women in international decision-making.⁽²²⁾

The Commission also considered a note by the Secretary-General⁽²³⁾ transmitting an expert report on existing technical and financial programmes in favour of women. As part of the Commission's preparations for the Fourth World Conference, the report offered guidelines for overcoming constraints and increasing cooperation in critical areas of concern as well as recommendations for strengthening the impact of UN assistance and financing for the advancement of women. The recommended measures included strategies for integrating gender analysis in policy, planning and implementation, and for increased accountability for improving the status of women through technical cooperation and financial assistance programmes.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/252, took note of the report of the Commission on its thirty-ninth session, and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's fortieth session. On 25 July, by decision 1995/253, the Council observed that, in paragraph 5 of the Commission's resolution on women in agriculture and rural development, the word "equity" should be replaced by the word "equality".

Communications

The Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-ninth session had before it a confidential list of communications concerning the status of women, which was distributed in a sealed envelope to the representatives of each of its States members, as well as a non-confidential list of communications, which were considered by the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women. The Group was appointed in 1994,⁽²⁴⁾ on the basis of a 1983 recommendation of the Economic and Social Council.⁽²⁵⁾ In March, the Rapporteur of the Working Group expressed support for the communication procedure, but said that the communications had not reflected all aspects of violations of the human rights of women worldwide. The Secretariat should give more publicity to the communication procedure, and the report of the group should be published, according to the Rapporteur.⁽¹⁹⁾

UN Development Fund for Women

The Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women at its thirty-fifth session (New York, 3-7 April) reviewed progress in UNIFEM's work in various areas during the 1993-1994 biennium, as well as initiatives related to the Fourth World Conference on Women and the financial situation of the Fund. UNIFEM, formerly the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women,⁽²⁶⁾ was created to address the economic and social advancement of women and provide direct technical and financial support to women in developing countries.

The Consultative Committee noted that the Fund had a critical role to play in the Fourth World Conference on Women and in implementation of the Platform for Action. It recommended that when post-Beijing institutional arrangements and mandates were discussed, the question of UNIFEM's role in Eastern Europe should be seriously considered. Since 1994, UNIFEM, within the confines of its mandate limiting the commitment of its financial resources to what had been traditionally understood as the developing world, had provided technical assistance to the countries of Eastern Europe.

Regarding a resolution of UNIFEM's financial problem, the Committee expressed approval for establishment of a line of credit from the UN Development Program (UNDP) and co-financing of UNIFEM projects by UNDP and other agencies and donors. The Committee recognized the importance of maintaining UNIFEM's presence in the developing world through its regional programme advisers.

In the biennium 1993-1994, UNIFEM initiatives included launching programmes in every developing region to help women gain the skills needed to make advances in the area of decision-making. An important emphasis of the Fund's work was in linking women's development initiatives at the grass-roots level with the macroeconomic policy formulation that shaped their future. In Africa, UNIFEM focused on promoting agriculture and food security, trade and industry and the protection of the environment. In Asia and the Pacific, the Fund aimed to develop mechanisms to link women to formal decision-making structures that closely affected their lives and livelihoods. In Latin America and the Caribbean, the programme addressed environmental management and education, citizenship development and democratization, the institutional capacity-building of women's organizations, advocacy and support for initiatives addressing violence and poverty alleviation.

In May, the UNDP Administrator reported⁽²⁷⁾ that the main reason for the current financial situation was inadequate performance and oversight by key UNIFEM staff as to financial reviews, monitoring and controls in connection with the partial funding system (which permitted the Fund to allocate funds to projects in excess of available resources) and the decision to reduce the unexpended resources. The resulting financial deficit had remained undetected until August 1994.

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UNDP Administrator on the 1994 activities of UNIFEM.⁽²⁸⁾ UNIFEM's work was organized around a framework, the women's development agenda, which aimed for the economic and political empowerment of women. Economically, UNIFEM programmes had focused on economic restructuring, sustainable livelihoods and building stable lives and healthy communities, while political empowerment was ensured through programmes in peace building, conflict resolution and ethical governance and respect for civil society. The report also reviewed UNIFEM's strategy for the Fourth World Conference on Women, which had focused on ensuring that the concerns of diverse groups of women were heard during all preparatory activities. International Research and Training Institute

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) held its fifteenth session in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 24 to 28 April 1995.⁽²⁹⁾ INSTRAW is an autonomous institution undertaking research and training programmes in close cooperation with other agencies, both within the UN system and on national, regional and international levels. Its aims are to contribute to the advancement and mobilization of women in development, to raise awareness of women's issues worldwide and to better assist women to meet new challenges and directions.

In 1995, the Board gave special attention to its preparation for the Fourth World Conference on Women and recommended that close attention be paid to the critical areas of concern in the Platform for Action submitted to the Conference. It stressed that INSTRAW should retain its original mandate, as stipulated by the General Assembly in 1975,⁽³⁰⁾ as well as a distinct capacity to carry out research and training for the advancement of women. The Board decided that INSTRAW should continue its work and establish priorities in areas where it had already acquired valuable research and training expertise. It proposed that an international conference on research and training on gender issues be convened in early 1996, to be hosted by the International Labour Organization (ILO) in Turin, Italy.

The Board also adopted the work programme for the biennium 1996-1997, focusing on the economic and political empowerment of women; women, environment and sustainable development; women, communication and the media; statistics and indicators on gender issues; and issues related to different population groups, including older and displaced women, refugee and migrant women and women in rural areas.

INSTRAW activities

INSTRAW organized two panels at the Fourth World Conference and four workshops at the parallel NGO forum. In 1995, the Institute addressed such topics as the performance of a gender impact analysis of credit; methods for valuing the contribution of women; and development of communications materials for women and development. Among activities related to women, environment and sustainable development, INSTRAW conducted national training seminars on women, water supply and sanitation in Ecuador, Guyana and Namibia. It also prepared, in cooperation with ILO, the modular training package Women, Environmental Management and Sustainable Development. Other INSTRAW publications in 1995 included research studies and training manuals, two issues of INSTRAW News and a handbook entitled Content Discontent: Towards a Fair Portrayal of Women in the Media.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/45.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

Reaffirming the original mandate and distinct capacity of the Institute to carry out research and training for the advancement of women, as stipulated in General Assembly resolution 3520(XXX) of 15 December 1975,

Taking note of the recommendation of the Board of Trustees that the Institute should implement the recommendations emanating from the Fourth World Conference on Women, especially those related to research and training needs for the advancement of women, and coordinate effectively with United Nations bodies and organizations to avoid duplication,

Taking into account the fact that the Fourth World Conference on Women will consider the issue of institutional arrangements in the Platform for Action,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its fifteenth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Takes note of the analysis done by the Board of Trustees and its recommendation that the Institute should also report to the Second Committee of the General Assembly under relevant agenda items, in order to improve the coordination and synergy of its programmes with other economic and social issues;

3. Commends the efforts of the Institute to address all levels of poverty that hamper so dramatically the advancement of women, through research and training activities in the areas of empowerment of women; statistics and indicators in gender issues; communications; women, natural resources and sustainable development; water and sanitation; waste management; renewable sources of energy; and issues related to different population groups, such as older persons and displaced, refugee and migrant women;

4. Also commends the Institute for its efforts further to develop active and close cooperation with the specialized agencies and related organizations of the United Nations system, the International Training Centre of the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations University, the regional commissions and other organs, programmes and institutions, in order to promote programmes that contribute to the advancement of women;

6. Calls upon States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute through voluntary contributions and pledges to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, thus enabling the Institute to continue to respond effectively to its mandate.

Pursuant to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General in October reviewed⁽³²⁾ the activities of INSTRAW for the biennium 1994-1995, focusing on the Institute's specific objectives for the Fourth World Conference on Women, as well as its efforts to establish stronger linkages between the improvement of the status of women and the achievement of equitable sustainable development goals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/163.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/105 of 20 December 1993,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/45 of 27 July 1995,

Taking note also of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its fifteenth session,

Taking note further of the analysis done by the Board of Trustees and its recommendation that the Institute should also report to the Second Committee of the General Assembly under relevant agenda items, in order to improve the coordination and synergy of its programmes with other economic and social issues,

Reaffirming the original mandate and distinct capacity of the Institute to carry out research and training for the advancement of women, as stipulated in General Assembly resolution 3520(XXX) of 15 December 1975,

Stressing the need for independent research to ensure that policy-making and project implementation address issues and emerging areas of concern to women, and the role of the activities of the Institute therein,

Noting the recommendation of the Board of Trustees that the Institute should implement the recommendations emanating from the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women, especially those related to research and training needs for the advancement of women, and coordinate effectively with United Nations bodies and organizations to avoid duplication,

Convinced that sustainable development cannot be achieved without the full participation of women,

Taking into account paragraph 334 of the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women at Beijing on 15 September 1995,

1. Expresses its satisfaction with the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, and commends the Institute for its efforts to focus on problems that constitute barriers to improving the status of women and their full participation in the sustainable development process;

2. Emphasizes the unique function of the Institute as the only entity within the United Nations system devoted exclusively to research and training for the integration of women in development, and stresses the importance of making its research findings available for policy purposes and for operational activities;

3. Commends the efforts of the Institute to address all levels of poverty that hamper so dramatically the advancement of women, through the coordination of research and training activities in the areas of empowerment of women; statistics and indicators in gender issues; communications; women, natural resources and sustainable development; water, sanitation and waste management; renewable sources of energy; and issues related to different population groups, such as older and displaced women, refugee and migrant women and women in rural areas;

4. Encourages the Institute to further develop active and close cooperation with the specialized agencies and related organizations of the United Nations system and with other institutions, such as universities and research institutions, so as to promote programmes that contribute to the advancement of women;

5. Reiterates the importance of maintaining the level of resources devoted to independent research and related training activities which are crucial for the situation of women;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and organizations which have contributed to and supported the activities of the Institute;

7. Invites Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute, through voluntary contributions and pledges, to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, thus enabling the Institute to continue to respond effectively to its mandate;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the activities of the Institute, especially on those activities related to research and training needs for the advancement of women as contained in the follow-up process of the plans and platforms emanating from the major United Nations conferences, under the item entitled "Advancement of women".

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/630) without vote, 1 December (meeting 46); draft by 14 nations and Latin American and Caribbean Group (A/C.3/50/L.22), orally revised; agenda item 107.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 24, 26-31, 40-42, 44, 46; plenary 99.

Also on 22 December, the General Assembly, in decision 50/459, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the activities of INSTRAW.

Proposed merger of INSTRAW and UNIFEM

In 1993, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a proposal for the merger of INSTRAW and UNIFEM (see below under "Women and development"), based on a recommendation made by the high-level panel of advisers on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the Organization.⁽³³⁾

The Beijing Platform for Action⁽¹⁴⁾ called for both INSTRAW and UNIFEM to review their work programmes but reaffirmed their individual mandates and set out separate roles. It called on INSTRAW to identify those types of education and training programmes that could be effectively supported by the Institute. It also stated that adequate resources should be made available to UNIFEM for it to carry out its functions, focusing on women's economic and political empowerment.

In November, pursuant to a 1994 request,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly and Economic and Social Council additional information on the administrative and financial implications of the proposed merger of INSTRAW and UNIFEM.⁽³⁵⁾ On 27 November, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions pointed out⁽³⁶⁾ that the Secretary-General's report had not specified the results of the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-ninth session and of the Fourth World Conference on Women concerning institutional arrangements in the UN system for the advancement of women, and that these deliberations were among the prerequisites set by the General Assembly for consideration of the issue by the Council and for the Assembly's final decision.

On 12 December the Council, by decision 1995/323, decided to refer the matter to the General Assembly for consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/162.

Proposed merger of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the United Nations Development Fund for Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/111 of 20 December 1993 regarding the proposal to merge the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the United Nations Development Fund for Women,

Recalling also its resolution 49/160 of 23 December 1994 regarding the proposed merger,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General of 7 July 1994, submitted pursuant to resolution 48/111,

Bearing in mind also the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions of 7 September 1994, prepared in compliance with resolution 48/111,

Taking into consideration its request to the Secretary-General, in resolution 49/160, that he submit, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, an updated report which would contain, inter alia, the information requested by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1993/235 of 27 July 1993 and by the General Assembly in paragraphs 2 and 3 of resolution 48/111, as well as the additional information requested by the Advisory Committee,

Also taking into consideration paragraph 5 of resolution 49/160, in which it requested the Economic and Social Council to re-examine the issue at a resumed session to take place after the Fourth World Conference on Women and before the Third Committee of the General Assembly considered the question of the advancement of women, taking into account the deliberations of the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-ninth session, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions concerning institutional arrangements in the United Nations system for the advancement of women,

Keeping in mind that the Commission on the Status of Women did not give an opinion on this matter, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 49/160, owing to the lack of the documents requested therein,

Keeping in mind also that the Fourth World Conference on Women did not discuss the proposed merger of the Institute and the Fund, but outlined their mandates separately and distinctly,

Taking note of the opinion expressed in the report of the Joint Inspection Unit, entitled "The advancement of women through and in the programmes of the United Nations system: what happens after the Fourth World Conference on Women?", that the vast majority of women, and the most pressing problems for women, are in the developing world and that therefore at least one of the specific United Nations women's units should also be based there,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretariat prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/160;

2. Takes note also of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Reaffirms the view expressed in paragraph 360 of the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women at Beijing on 15 September 1995 that, recognizing the roles of United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies, in particular the special roles of the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, in the promotion of the empowerment of women and, therefore, in the implementation of the Platform for Action within their respective mandates, inter alia, in research, training and information activities for the advancement of women, as well as technical and financial assistance to incorporate a gender perspective in development efforts, the resources provided by the international community need to be sufficient and should be maintained at an adequate level;

4. Concurs with the views expressed in paragraphs 334 and 335 of the Platform for Action concerning the mandates of the Institute and the Fund;

5. Regrets that, owing to the absence of sufficient information on the legal, technical and administrative implications of the proposed merger, it is currently unable to decide on the proposed merger;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to implement the mandates set out in its resolution 49/163 of 23 December 1994;

7. Recommends that the interaction between the Commission on the Status of Women, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Fund for Women should be reviewed and rationalized within the context of ongoing efforts to revitalize the Economic and Social Council in pursuance of a stronger, more unified programme for the advancement of women as requested in paragraph 2 of resolution 48/111;

8. Also recommends that any proposal dealing with the institutional structure and the mandates of the different United Nations bodies dealing with the advancement of women must be considered part of the general restructuring exercise of the United Nations.

Women and development

Integration of women in economic development

Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September his fourth biennial report⁽³⁸⁾ on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development. The report focused on gender issues in entrepreneurship, macroeconomic policy-making and development planning. Selection of this theme reflected the growing recognition in academic circles and among development practitioners of the need to consider gender as a variable in the design of economic policies if their implementation was to produce an efficient and socially desirable outcome. In his conclusions, the Secretary-General suggested that taking gender into account would require a modification of the underlying assumptions of development, and that all economic policy questions should be subject to examination in terms of their gender dimensions.

In decision 1995/234 of 19 July, the Economic and Social Council noted the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/104.

Women in development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/204 of 17 December 1985, 42/178 of 11 December 1987 and 44/171 of 19 December 1989, as well as all other relevant Assembly resolutions on the integration of women in development, and the resolutions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women on the integration of women in development,

Bearing in mind the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women and other recent major United Nations conferences and summits,

Recognizing the significant contribution that women make to economic activities and the major force that they represent for change and development in all sectors of the economy, especially in key areas, such as agriculture, industry and services,

Reaffirming that women are key contributors to the economy and to combating poverty through both remunerated and unremunerated work at home, in the community and in the workplace, and that the empowerment of women is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing that the difficult socio-economic conditions that exist in many developing countries have resulted in the rapid feminization of poverty, especially in rural areas and in female-headed households,

Aware that the continued discrimination against women, their continued lack of equal access to education and training, and their lack of control over land, capital, technology and other areas of production impede their full contribution to, and opportunity to benefit from, development,

Recognizing that the informal sector is a major source of entrepreneurship and employment for women in many developing countries,

Noting the importance of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in facilitating the advancement of women in development,

1. Welcomes the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action by the Fourth World Conference on Women;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development;

3. Calls for the urgent implementation of the Platform for Action adopted at Beijing as well as the relevant provisions contained in the outcome of all other major United Nations conferences and summits;

4. Stresses that a favourable and conducive international and national economic and financial environment and a positive investment climate are necessary for the effective integration of women in development;

5. Also stresses the importance of developing national strategies for promoting sustainable and productive entrepreneurial activities to generate income among disadvantaged women and women living in poverty;

6. Calls upon all Governments and all actors of society to implement the commitment made in Beijing to create an enabling environment through, inter alia, removing discriminatory barriers and ensuring the full and equal participation of women in economic activities through, inter alia, the adoption of gender-sensitive policies and legal measures and the provision of other necessary structures;

7. Urges all Governments to ensure women's equal rights and access to economic resources, and to increase women's access to credit by instituting innovative lending practices, including practices that integrate credit with services and training for women, and that provide flexible credit facilities to women, in particular rural women, women in the informal sector, young women and women who lack access to traditional sources of collateral;

8. Urges Governments to develop and promote methodologies for incorporating a gender perspective into all aspects of policy-making, including economic policy-making;

9. Calls upon the United Nations system, in particular its funds and programmes and specialized agencies, and all other relevant organizations to promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming gender perspective in the implementation, monitoring and evaluation of all policies and programmes;

10. Urges the international community, the United Nations system and other relevant organizations to give priority to assisting developing countries' efforts to ensure the full and effective participation of women in deciding and implementing development strategies, including through increased access to health care, capital, education, training and technology, as well as by women's wider participation in decision-making;

11. Urges multilateral donors, international financial institutions and regional development banks to review and implement policies in support of national efforts to ensure that a higher proportion of resources reach women, in particular in rural and remote areas;

12. Requests the United Nations development system to work towards establishing a more coherent approach to its support for women's income-generating activities, in particular credit schemes;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session a sub-item entitled "Effective mobilization and integration of women in development";

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on action taken to implement the present resolution.

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.6) without vote, 8 December (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.66), orally revised and based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.46); agenda item 95 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 35-37, 40, 42; plenary 96.

Women in rural areas

In March, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution appealing to Governments to pay special attention to the situation of rural women, with emphasis on those displaced from their place of origin owing to terrorist violence, drug trafficking or other causes related to situations of violence.⁽³⁹⁾ It also urged Governments, in their development programmes, to consider projects that had positive effects upon displaced rural women and were geared primarily to productive employment, in order to facilitate the integration of those women into their new social setting or their return to their place of origin or another place of their preference. The Commission decided to consider the question of the integration of displaced rural women into development processes at its fortieth session.

The Commission also urged Governments⁽⁴⁰⁾ to develop specific plans to support rural women's full participation in the economy and in the political system, and to set up monitoring and evaluation measures to appraise progress made. It urged them to integrate gender issues in mainstream research and policy initiatives; promote legislative initiatives that guarantee equity in the wage system and increase the status of women in agriculture, family enterprises, the professions and the informal sector; and to empower rural women to develop their potential and to actively engage, individually or in groups, in the fight for the enforcement of their rights.

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽⁴²⁾ on improvement in the situation of women in rural areas, and also examined the trends that would affect the status of women in the twenty-first century. Noting that by the beginning of the next century, half of the world's population would be living in urban areas and the proportion of women living in rural areas would continue to decline globally, the Secretary-General suggested that the importance of rural women in the next century would rest more on their impact on the economy and society than on their numbers. It would relate to their contribution to food security and to economic growth as well as to the maintenance of social cohesion.

In July, by decision 1995/314, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/165.

Improvement of the situation of women in rural areas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/14 of 9 November 1979, in which it endorsed the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action as adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, and its resolutions 44/78 of 8 December 1989 and 48/109 of 20 December 1993,

Recalling also the importance attached to the problems of rural women by the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and by the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995,

Recalling further its resolution 47/174 of 22 December 1992, in which it welcomed the adoption of the Geneva Declaration for Rural Women by the Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women, held at Geneva in February 1992, and urged all States to work for the achievement of the goals endorsed in the Declaration,

Welcoming the growing awareness of Governments of the need for strategies and programmes to improve the situation of women in rural areas,

Noting with deep concern that the economic and financial crises in many developing countries have severely affected the socio-economic status of women, especially in rural areas, and the continuing rise in the number of rural women living in poverty,

Recognizing the urgent need to take appropriate measures aimed at further improving the situation of women in rural areas,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Invites Member States, in their efforts to implement the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women, bearing in mind also the Geneva Declaration for Rural Women, to attach greater importance to the improvement of the situation of rural women in their national development strategies, paying special attention to both their practical and their strategic needs, by, inter alia:

- (a) Integrating the concerns of rural women into national development policies and programmes, in particular by placing a higher priority on budgetary allocation related to the interests of rural women;

- (b) Strengthening national machineries and establishing institutional linkages among governmental bodies in various sectors and non-governmental organizations that are concerned with rural development;

- (c) Increasing the participation of rural women in the decision-making process;

- (d) Undertaking necessary measures to give rural women full and equal access to productive resources, including the right to inheritance and to ownership of land and other property, credit/capital, natural resources, appropriate technologies, markets and information, and meeting their basic requirements in water and sanitation;

(e) Investing in the human resources of rural women, particularly through health and literacy programmes and social support measures;

3. Requests the international community and relevant United Nations organizations and bodies to promote the realization of the programmes and projects aimed at the improvement of the situation of rural women within the overall framework of integrated follow-up to recent global conferences;

4. Invites the World Food Summit to be convened by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in 1996 to give due consideration to the issue of improving the situation of rural women, taking into account their role in food production and food security, and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) to give due consideration to the gender aspects of rural-urban migration and its impact on the situation of rural women, in formulating relevant strategies and actions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with Member States and relevant United Nations organizations, a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, taking into account possible measures to improve the reporting procedure.

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Human rights of women

Violence against women

At its thirty-ninth session,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission on the Status of Women had before it a February report of the Secretary-General⁽⁴³⁾ on activities undertaken by UN bodies concerned with crime prevention with regard to the question of violence against women.

The preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women⁽⁴⁴⁾ included information on the dimensions of the problem of violence against women; the Commission on Human Rights, at its annual session, also considered the issue. (See PART THREE, Chapters I and II.)

Violence against women migrant workers

In March, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution concerning continuing reports of grave abuses committed against women migrant workers by some of their employers in host countries.⁽⁴⁵⁾ The Commission called upon Member States to adopt measures for the effective implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women,⁽⁴⁶⁾ including applying them to women migrant workers. It urged Member States to adopt and implement measures to eradicate all forms of racism and xenophobia and to promote education on human rights understanding and acceptance of cultural diversity. It called upon States to explore the possibility of adopting measures to prevent the victimization of women migrant workers by sexual traffickers and to penalize those traffickers, including ratifying the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others.⁽⁴⁷⁾

The Commission invited relevant UN bodies to monitor the situation of women migrant workers and repeated its request that the Secretary-General ensure development of concrete indicators as a basis for future action to determine the situation of women migrant workers in sending and receiving countries. The Secretary-General was also asked to consider establishing an expert group on the matter, which would submit recommendations for improving coordination of the various efforts of the United Nations on behalf of migrant workers.

In August, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁴⁸⁾ on steps taken to prevent violence against women migrant workers pursuant to a 1994 request of the General Assembly.⁽⁴⁹⁾ He noted that the short time between the Commission's 1995 session and the fiftieth session of the Assembly made it impossible to organize the requested expert group meeting on the topic of violence against women migrant workers, and that no information had been received from Governments on national measures taken to identify problem areas in protecting women migrant workers. He noted, however, that the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women intended to carry out a fact-finding mission to a receiving country in 1996 to permit an in-depth analysis of the problem.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/168.

Violence against women migrant workers

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/96 of 16 December 1992, 48/110 of 20 December 1993 and 49/165 of 23 December 1994, as well as Commission on the Status of Women resolution 38/7 of 18 March 1994, and taking note of Commission on the Status of Women resolution 39/7 of 31 March 1995 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/20 of 24 February 1995,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note with concern of the report of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Sub-commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on its twentieth session, in particular its observations with respect to the treatment of migrant workers,

Acknowledging the preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and its consequences,

Stressing that the promotion of the human rights of women constitutes an integral part of human rights activities of the United Nations, as reaffirmed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Affirming the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, which called upon all countries to take full measures to eliminate all forms of exploitation, abuse, harassment and violence against women,

Welcoming the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, adopted by the World Summit on 12 March 1995, which declared that countries should take concrete measures against the exploitation of migrants,

Welcoming also the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, which recognized the vulnerability to violence and other forms of abuse of women migrants, including women migrant workers, whose legal status in the host country depends on employers who may exploit their situations,

Noting the large numbers of women from developing countries and from some countries with economies in transition who continue to venture forth to more affluent countries in search of a living for themselves and their families, as a consequence of poverty, unemployment and other socio-economic conditions, while acknowledging the primary duty of States to work for conditions that provide employment and security to their citizens,

Concerned by the continuing reports of grave abuses and acts of violence committed against the persons of women migrant workers by some employers in some host countries,

Encouraged by some measures adopted by some receiving countries to alleviate the plight of women migrant workers residing within their areas of jurisdiction,

Reiterating that acts of violence directed against women impair or nullify their enjoyment of their human rights and fundamental freedoms,

1. Determines to prevent and eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls;

2. Calls upon States Members of the United Nations to adopt measures for the effective implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, including applying them to women migrant workers, as well as all relevant measures emanating from recent world conferences;

3. Encourages Member States to enact and/or reinforce penal, civil, labour and administrative sanctions in domestic legislation to punish and redress the wrongs done to women and girls who are subjected to any form of violence, whether in the home, the workplace, the community or society;

4. Also encourages Member States to adopt and/or implement and periodically to review and analyse legislation to ensure its effectiveness in eliminating violence against women, emphasizing the prevention of violence and the prosecution of offenders, and to take measures to ensure the protection of women subjected to violence and that they have access to just and effective remedies, including compensation and indemnification and healing of victims, and for the rehabilitation of perpetrators;

5. Reiterates the need for States concerned, specifically the sending and receiving States of women migrant workers, to conduct regular consultations for the purpose of identifying problem areas in promoting and protecting the rights of women migrant workers and ensuring health, legal and social services for them, adopting specific measures to address these problems, setting up, as necessary, linguistically and culturally accessible services and mechanisms to implement these measures and, in general, creating conditions that foster greater harmony and tolerance between women migrant workers and the rest of the society in which they reside;

6. Encourages Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, as well as the Slavery Convention of 1926;

7. Recommends that the issue of violence against women migrant workers be included in the agenda of the inter-agency meeting that precedes the regular session of the Commission on the Status of Women;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to convene a meeting of an expert group, with the participation of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women and under the regular programme of the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat, to submit recommendations for improving coordination of the various efforts of United Nations agencies on the issue of violence against women migrant workers and to develop concrete indicators as a basis for determining the situation of women migrant workers for submission, through normal channels, to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

9. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and the Special Rapporteur, as well as all relevant bodies and programmes in the United Nations system, when addressing the issue of violence against women, to give particular attention to the issue of violence perpetrated against women migrant workers and to submit reports thereon to the General Assembly;

10. Invites trade unions to support the realization of the rights of women migrant workers by assisting them in organizing themselves so as to enable them better to assert their rights;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution, including on reports received from all authorities and bodies in the United Nations system, Member States, intergovernmental organizations and other concerned bodies, with due regard for possible measures to improve the reporting procedure.

Women and children in armed conflicts

On 31 March, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution calling for the release of women and children taken hostage in armed conflicts before the opening of the Beijing Conference on 4 September.⁽⁵⁰⁾ The Commission asked the Secretary-General and international agencies to help facilitate their release. The Secretary-General was also asked to report to the Fourth World Conference on Women as to the situation concerning their release and also to report to the Commission at its fortieth session on implementation of the resolution. (For other information, see PART THREE, Chapter II.)

Rape and abuse in the former Yugoslavia

In March, the Commission on the Status of Women condemned the continuing abhorrent practice of rape and abuse of women and children in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, which constituted a war crime, and demanded that those involved immediately cease those outrageous acts.⁽⁵¹⁾ The Commission voted 35 in favour to 1 against (Russian Federation), with 5 abstentions (Angola, Belarus, India, Madagascar and Namibia), to retain a preambular paragraph in that text by which the Commission expressed its conviction that the heinous practice of rape and abuse of women constituted a deliberate weapon of war fulfilling the policy of "ethnic cleansing" carried out by Serb forces in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Commission also condemned the persistent denial of access by the Bosnian Serb forces to the Special Rapporteur, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees and the UN Protection Force (UNPROFOR), as well as other agencies, and demanded that immediate and unimpeded access be granted. The Commission urged all States and relevant organizations to consider the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur, in particular for the continuation of necessary medical and psychological care to victims of rape, within the framework of programmes to rehabilitate women and children traumatized by war. It asked the Secretary-General to help enable any future missions to have free and secure access to places of detention,

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/166.

The role of the United Nations Development Fund for Women in eliminating violence against women

The General Assembly,

Welcoming the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, which called for the prevention and elimination of all forms of violence against women and girls and the promotion and protection of all human rights of women and girls, stressing that acts or threats of violence, whether occurring within the home or in the community or perpetrated or condoned by the State, instilled fear and insecurity in women's lives and were obstacles to the achievement of equality, development and peace,

Recalling that the Platform for Action called for action to eradicate violence against the girl child, recognizing that girls were more vulnerable to all kinds of violence,

Recalling also that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action affirmed that gender-based violence and all forms of sexual harassment and exploitation, including those resulting from cultural prejudice and international trafficking, were incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person and must be eliminated,

Recalling further its resolution 48/104 of 20 December 1993, proclaiming the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, in which it recognized that violence against women violated and impaired or nullified the enjoyment by women of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing the importance of the effective implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Emphasizing the need for full implementation by Governments and community organizations, non-governmental organizations, educational institutions, and the public and private sectors, as appropriate, of the measures set out in the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action,

Urging that Governments allocate adequate resources within their budgets and mobilize community resources for activities related to the elimination of violence against women, including resources for the implementation of plans of action at all appropriate levels, as called for in paragraph 124 (p) of the Platform for Action,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/27 of 24 July 1995, in which the Council approved resolution 8 of the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders concerning the elimination of violence against women and urged the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to continue to consider the elimination of violence against women within its priority themes and within the training and technical assistance efforts of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme,

Recognizing the importance of cooperation with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women,

Reaffirming the importance of developing a holistic and multidisciplinary approach to the task of promoting families, communities and States that are free from violence against women, and affirming the need for coordinated and strengthened international support for this approach,

Recalling its resolution 48/107 of 20 December 1993, in which it reaffirmed the catalytic role that the United Nations Development Fund for Women has played in facilitating the efforts of Governments and non-governmental organizations at the national and community levels to support innovative activities that directly benefit and empower women and in increasing opportunities and options for women in developing countries to participate more effectively in the development of their countries, in line with national priorities,

1. Reiterates its appreciation for the advocacy initiatives of the United Nations Development Fund for Women, including its contribution to and participation in the follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, in particular with respect to efforts to combat violence against women, commends the Fund for its support of catalytic and innovative projects that strengthen the national capacity to improve the situation of women, and takes note with appreciation of the Platform for Action which affirmed that the Fund had the mandate to increase options and opportunities for women's economic and social development in developing countries by providing technical and financial assistance to incorporate the women's dimension into development at all levels and that it should review and strengthen, as appropriate, its work programme in the light of the Platform for Action, focusing on women's political and economic empowerment;

2. Requests the Fund, as one of the operational bodies of the United Nations, to take into account the need to strengthen its activities to eliminate violence against women as part of system-wide efforts of the United Nations towards this goal, in accordance with the measures set out in the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action and the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women and focusing on activities, particularly at the national and community levels, and calls upon Member States to promote cooperation with the Fund to these ends;

3. Also requests the Fund, in undertaking any relevant activities, to cooperate closely with the relevant United Nations organs and bodies, in particular the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat and the United Nations Children's Fund, in order to ensure that its activities form part of the system-wide efforts of the United Nations to eliminate violence against women;

4. Further requests the Fund to include in its regular reports information regarding its activities to eliminate violence against women and girls and to provide such information to the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Human Rights;

5. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in consultation with the Secretary-General, as well as with the relevant United Nations organs and bodies, in particular the Division for the Advancement of Women, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, the Centre for Human Rights and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, to consider the possibility of establishing a trust fund, within the existing mandate, structure and management of the United Nations Development Fund for Women, in support of national, regional and international actions, including those taken by Governments and non-governmental organizations, to eliminate violence against women;

6. Requests the Fund to include in its regular reports information on the implementation of the present resolution and also to provide such information to the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Human Rights.

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/630 & Corr.1) without vote, 5 December (meeting 50); 47-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.25/Rev.1); agenda item 107. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 24, 26-31, 40-42, 44, 46, 50; plenary 99.

Traffic in women and girls

In March, the Commission on the Status of Women invited Governments to combat trafficking in women and children through national and internationally coordinated measures, and at the same time to establish or strengthen institutions for the protection of the victims of such trafficking.⁽⁵²⁾ The Commission recommended that the problem be given consideration within the implementation of all relevant international legal instruments and that consideration be given to measures to strengthen them if necessary. The Commission requested that the International Day for the Abolition of Slavery (2 December 1996) focus on the problem of trafficking in human persons, especially women and children, and that one meeting of the fifty-first session of the General Assembly be devoted to the discussion of the problem.

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽⁵³⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽⁵⁴⁾ in August on steps taken to address the problem of traffic in women and girls. He concluded that concern for trafficking in women as an international problem was growing and had been considered in a variety of forums, which in most cases addressed separately aspects such as human rights dimensions, migration and its regulation, crime prevention and social services. The steps requested by the General Assembly in 1994, including the gathering and sharing of information about all aspects of traffic in women and girls, the adoption of prevention and sanctioning measures and the provision of support, legal advice and other services for victims, all implied the desirability of a comprehensive approach to the issue. The Secretary-General suggested undertaking a full appraisal of the most appropriate means to ensure such an approach, which could include the preparation by the Secretary-General of a comprehensive report on measures to address international trafficking, both at the intergovernmental and inter-secretariat levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/167.

Traffic in women and girls

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the principles set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women,

Recalling that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, affirmed the human rights of women and the girl child as an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights,

Welcoming the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development which, inter alia, called upon all Governments to prevent all international trafficking in migrants, especially for the purpose of prostitution, and for the adoption by Governments of both receiving countries and countries of origin of effective sanctions against those who organize undocumented migration, exploit undocumented migrants or engage in trafficking in undocumented migrants, especially those who engage in any form of international traffic of women and children,

Recalling the recognition by the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, of the danger to society of the trafficking in women and children,

Welcoming the initiatives taken by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995, towards criminalizing clandestine traffic in illegal migrants,

Concurring with the conclusion in the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women at Beijing on 15 September 1995, that the effective suppression of trafficking in women and girls for the sex trade is a matter of pressing international concern,

Recalling its resolution 49/166 of 23 December 1994, and taking note of Commission on the Status of Women resolution 39/6 of 29 March 1995,

Acknowledging the work done by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in compiling information on the scale and complexity of the problem of trafficking, in providing shelters for trafficked women and children and in effecting their voluntary repatriation to their countries of origin,

Noting with concern the increasing number of women and girl children from developing countries and from some countries with economies in transition who are being victimized by traffickers, and acknowledging that the problem of trafficking also victimizes young boys,

Convinced of the need to eliminate all forms of sexual violence and sexual trafficking, including for prostitution and other forms of commercial sex, which are violations of the human rights of women and girl children and are incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person,

Realizing the urgent need for the adoption of effective measures nationally, regionally and internationally to protect women and girl children from this nefarious traffic,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the traffic in women and girls;

2. Appeals to Governments to take appropriate measures to address the root factors, including external factors, that encourage trafficking in women and girls for prostitution and other forms of commercialized sex, forced marriages and forced labour, so as to eliminate trafficking in women, including by strengthening existing legislation with a view to providing better protection of the rights of women and girls and to punishing perpetrators, through both criminal and civil measures;

3. Invites Governments to combat trafficking in women and children through nationally and internationally coordinated measures, at the same time establishing or strengthening institutions for the protection of the victims of trafficking of women and children, and to ensure for victims the necessary assistance, including legal support services that are linguistically and culturally accessible, for their full protection, treatment and rehabilitation;

4. Also invites Governments to consider the development of standard minimum rules for the humanitarian treatment of trafficked persons, consistent with human rights standards;

5. Urges concerned Governments to support comprehensive, practical approaches by the international community to assist women and children victims of transnational trafficking to return home and be reintegrated into their home societies;

6. Encourages Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, international agreements on the suppression of slavery and other relevant international instruments;

7. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in addressing the obstacles to the realization of the human rights of women, in particular, through his contacts with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, to include the traffic in women and girls among his priority concerns;

8. Also encourages the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to include the traffic in women and girls in its programme of work under its advisory, training and information services, with a view to providing assistance to member Governments, upon their request, in instituting preventive measures against trafficking through education and appropriate information campaigns;

9. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to encourage the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to continue to address the issue of the traffic in women and girls under its draft programme of action on the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others;

10. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to consider appropriate follow-up to the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on measures to address the problem of trafficking in women and children and to submit a report thereon to the Secretary-General, through the usual channels, for inclusion in his report to the General Assembly;

11. Invites relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide advisory services to Governments, upon their request, in planning and setting up rehabilitation programmes for victims of trafficking and in training personnel who will be directly involved in the implementation of these programmes;

12. Decides to focus the International Day for the Abolition of Slavery, 2 December 1996, on the problem of trafficking in human persons, especially women and children, and to devote one meeting of the fifty-first session of the General Assembly to the discussion of this problem;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, under the item entitled "Advancement of women", a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution, with due regard for possible measures to improve the reporting procedure.

Women in the Middle East

In March, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution emphasizing that the achievement of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East was vital for the implementation of the human rights of women in the area.⁽⁵⁵⁾ It urged Governments and other bodies to ensure the political development and participation of Palestinian women and to expedite economic, financial and technical assistance to them.

Palestinian women

In March, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁵⁶⁾ on progress made in implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies with regard to Palestinian women, highlighting in particular the issues of concern within the present political context. The report discussed such aspects as violence, governance, health, education and employment, placing emphasis on development aspects and the participation of women in political decision-making.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/30 on Palestinian women (see PART TWO, Chapter VI).

Human rights mechanisms

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request, the Secretary-General in March outlined⁽⁵⁷⁾ steps to be taken by the UN Division for the Advancement of Women and the UN Centre for Human Rights to ensure that relevant UN human rights mechanisms regularly addressed violations of the rights of women. The report included the proposed joint work plan for the UN Centre for Human Rights and the Division for the Advancement of Women. The plan, which covered 1995, focused on three activities: training, advisory services and educational materials.

In March, the Commission on the Status of Women recommended⁽⁵⁸⁾ that the Division for the Advancement of Women provide input for the next meeting of chairmen of the human rights treaty bodies, in order to assist those bodies in addressing violations of women's rights, for example by amending their reporting guidelines. The Commission urged States to consider the gender composition of the treaty bodies when electing candidates and asked the Secretary-General, on an annual basis, to oversee preparation of a joint work plan on the human rights of women for the Centre for Human Rights and the Division for the Advancement of Women.

Chapter XI

Children, youth and ageing persons

In 1995, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) pursued two major priorities: continuing support for its country programmes to help women and children, with particular focus on achieving in as many countries as possible the mid-decade goals for children and development set by the World Summit for Children in 1990; and strengthening UNICEF's management, accountability, cost-effectiveness and transparency. The Fund provided assistance totalling $804 million to developing countries and countries in transition to market economies in the areas of child health, planning, advocacy and programme support, education, water supply and sanitation, and nutrition. One quarter of the Fund's allocations went to emergency operations. New strategies were developed and adopted during the year for UNICEF programmes in health, basic education, and water and environmental sanitation.

On 10 April, the Secretary-General appointed Carol Bellamy, former Director of the United States Peace Corps, as the new Executive Director of UNICEF.

In December, the General Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond. The Assembly also invited Member States to adopt the conceptual framework of a programme for the preparation of the International Year of Older Persons in 1999 and to formulate programmes for the Year.

Children

UN Children's Fund

In 1995, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) supported programmes in 161 countries, the greatest number of which were in Africa (46); followed by the Americas and the Caribbean (37); Asia (32); Central and Eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the Baltic States (28); and the Middle East and North Africa (18).

Major components of UNICEF programmes in 1995 included primary health care, nutrition, basic education, water supply and sanitation, child protection and priority for Africa. Emergency operations also figured prominently, and the Convention on the Rights of the Child continued to provide the framework for programme development and advocacy. Among other issues having a bearing on UNICEF's work were capacity-building and sustainable development; participation and social mobilization; poverty alleviation; evaluation and monitoring; and follow-up to major international conferences.

Total programme expenditure amounted to $804 million—slightly higher than the $801 million in 1994—of which $212 million (26 per cent) was spent on child health; $203 million (25 per cent) on emergencies, down from $216 million in 1994; $137 million (17 per cent) on planning, advocacy and programme support; $85 million (11 per cent) on education; $71 million (9 per cent) on water supply and sanitation; and $31 million (4 per cent) on nutrition. The remainder of $65 million (8 per cent) was spent on other programme areas. Some 38 per cent of emergency assistance expenditure was for health; 16 per cent each for water and for planning, advocacy and programme support; 13 per cent for nutrition; 7 per cent for education; 1 per cent for general programme areas; and the rest (9 per cent) for other programme areas. UNICEF operations in 1995 were described in the 1996 UNICEF Annual Report and the report of the Executive Director.⁽¹⁾

The UNICEF Executive Board held three regular sessions and an annual session in 1995, all in New York. The first regular session met from 1 to 3 and on 6 February, the second from 20 to 23 March and the third from 18 to 21 September, in accordance with General Assembly decision 50/403 A of 19 September; the annual session was from 22 to 26 May. During those sessions, the Board adopted 38 decisions which, with its deliberations, were reflected in its report to the Economic and Social Council.⁽²⁾

In February, the Board paid tribute to former UNICEF Executive Director James P. Grant, who had died on 28 January at the age of 72, for his 15 years of service to the organization.

Programme policies

During 1995, the Executive Board took a number of decisions pertaining to UNICEF programme policies.

In March, the Board requested⁽³⁾ the secretariat to develop a strategy for including human immuno-deficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) components in its programmes and activities within the framework of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIII). In May, it called for an active role of UNICEF in achieving the goals and objectives set by the 1990 World Summit for Children. Also in May, the Board endorsed frameworks for UNICEF education programmes and for the water supply and environmental sanitation programme (see below). In September, it endorsed⁽⁴⁾ a UNICEF health strategy (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIII), as well as a framework for UNICEF follow-up to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (see below).

Follow-up to 1990 World Summit for Children

In May 1995, the Executive Board had before it an April report⁽⁵⁾ on follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children, which summarized progress towards the decade and mid-decade goals enunciated in the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for implementing the Declaration,⁽⁶⁾ both adopted by the 1990 World Summit for Children. The report reviewed the status of national programmes of action and of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, major Summit follow-up activities globally and in each region, inter-agency collaboration, the role of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the private sector, and the resource situation.

The Board requested⁽⁷⁾ the Executive Director to play an active and supportive role in helping implement the 1990 General Assembly resolution⁽⁸⁾ on the achievement of the goals and objectives endorsed in the World Declaration and the Plan of Action, and to consult within the United Nations system and with members of the Board as to how UNICEF could best support that process. It proposed that the results of such a review be announced on 30 September 1996, the date of the sixth anniversary of the Summit, and urged Governments to assess, together with provincial and local authorities, NGOs, the private sector and civic groups, progress at mid-decade towards the Summit goals. International and national NGOs should provide input to the assessments and to steps needed for attaining the year 2000 goals. The Board requested the secretariat to support countries in gathering and analysing data, in a standardized and coordinated manner, on progress towards the mid-decade and decade goals and the overall assessment of their response to the World Summit Declaration and Plan of Action; such work should result in improved and sustainable national capacity in obtaining and analysing data on the situation of children. The results of national assessments should be systematized, in cooperation with other UN entities, with a view to presenting, by mid-1996, a comprehensive statement on the status of achievement of the mid-decade goals and of progress towards the goals for children and development by the year 2000.

Basic education strategies

In May, the Executive Board had before it an April report⁽⁹⁾ on UNICEF strategies in basic education, focusing on universal primary education, with special attention to girls and women, and early childhood development and adult basic education as supporting components. The strategic objectives were: to increase enrolment, retention and completion rates of primary school-age children, reduce gender and geographic disparities, improve parents' knowledge of and skills in early child care, and enhance linkages between basic education and other programmes for children and women. Those global goals were adapted to the circumstances of each country through the country programme.

The Board endorsed⁽¹⁰⁾ the framework for UNICEF education programmes and encouraged the secretariat, with other UN agencies, national partners and external providers of assistance, to continue to focus on universal access to basic education and support the improvement of the quality of basic education; to promote parents' knowledge and skills and community- and family-based approaches to early childhood development; and to increase allocations in country programmes for basic education, in line with the key role of basic education in promoting sustainable progress in the well-being and development of children.

The Board urged the secretariat to put greater emphasis on targeting the major systemic problems in basic education; building the capacity of countries to plan and implement education programmes by adopting a systemic and systematic approach to long-term education development, promoting cost-effective reforms, resource mobilization and sustainable strategies for universal opportunities; providing education services for children in emergencies; and expanding education opportunities for children in other difficult situations, including working children and children with disabilities. The Board requested the Executive Director to reorient and strengthen UNICEF's capacity to play its role effectively in assisting developing countries to reach the goals of Education for All.

Water and environmental sanitation strategies

The Executive Board considered at its May session an April report⁽¹¹⁾ detailing strategies to be followed by UNICEF in assisting Governments and communities to achieve their goals in water supply and environmental sanitation. The report provided an overall framework for country programming which could be adapted to each country's particular situation. Describing water as a basic right and central to sustainable development, the report set the strategy within the global context, reporting on the lessons learned and the challenges remaining. It detailed the UNICEF contribution in the sector and the implications for UNICEF in terms of staffing, organizational structure, the choice of partners and funding.

Recognizing universal access to clean drinking water as a fundamental human need and essential to the right of the child to enjoy the highest attainable standard of health, the Board endorsed⁽¹²⁾ the framework for the water supply and environmental sanitation programme and encouraged the secretariat to continue supporting countries in achieving universal access to water supply and environmental sanitation by implementing national programmes; promoting and advocating public commitment, national policy and accelerated actions for meeting the needs and rights of children and the poor; setting, defining, reviewing and monitoring national and local goals; strengthening partnerships with Governments, NGOs, the private sector, external support agencies and others; supporting the expansion of services through appropriate technologies; supporting emergency programmes in the sector; allocating appropriate resources for water supply, sanitation and hygiene education, and improving the capacity of national counterparts; and promoting the standardization of technologies for water supply and sanitation to minimize installation costs, operations and maintenance.

The Board urged UNICEF to put greater emphasis on and allocate resources to environmental sanitation, hygiene and behavioural change; community management of the "water environment" within the context of Agenda 21 of the 1992 Conference on Environment and Development⁽¹³⁾ and primary environmental care; capacity-building; community cost-sharing; gender-balanced and participatory approaches in planning, implementing, managing and monitoring services; research, development and transfer of technology; assistance to countries in standardizing the definition of coverage and improving monitoring systems; enhanced linkages with health, education, nutrition, environment and other development programmes; and support for the promotion of water supply and sanitation services in deprived, low-income urban areas.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/126, took note of the programme strategies in water and environmental sanitation adopted by the Board.

Follow-up to major conferences

In March, the Executive Board had before it a report⁽¹⁴⁾ on UNICEF follow-up to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD),⁽¹⁵⁾ which focused on strengthening UNICEF's own strategies, advocacy and programme interventions to promote the reproductive health of women and youth. Beyond the health sector, UNICEF would give added importance to a wide range of activities for the advancement of women and girls and would give increased priority to support for basic education, with particular emphasis on equitable access by girls, and a major effort to reduce illiteracy, especially among women.

The Board requested⁽¹⁶⁾ the secretariat to submit to its third regular session in 1995 a revised paper taking into account the comments of Board members.

A revised report,⁽¹⁷⁾ issued in July, identified priority areas for UNICEF in the follow-up to ICPD and implementation of its Programme of Action, reflecting the report of the Conference and consultation with UNICEF partners and responding, as requested, to guidance provided by the Board.

According to the report, UNICEF, in its follow-up to ICPD, would pursue close collaboration with partners in a variety of sectors, with particular focus on girls' education; women's empowerment; primary health care, including reproductive health; and tracking progress in reducing child and maternal mortality. In its commitment to contribute to the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, it would continue its strong advocacy in support of child protection, survival and development, and particularly reducing gender disparities. It would increase its support to country-level action in girls' education, adolescent health, and women's health and empowerment.

In addition to country-level collaboration, UNICEF participated actively in the five working groups of the Inter-Agency Task Force on the Implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII) and was the lead agency for the working group on "A Common Approach to Building National Capacity in Tracking Child and Maternal Mortality".

In September, the Board endorsed⁽¹⁸⁾ the framework for UNICEF follow-up to ICPD and stressed the need for its speedy implementation. It requested the Executive Director to report in 1996 on the process to integrate ICPD follow-up in UNICEF country programmes and in 1998 on UNICEF follow-up activities, including those in cooperation with other donor agencies, and on their results.

In May, the Board also considered a report⁽¹⁹⁾ on UNICEF follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development (WSSD) (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX), which it decided⁽²⁰⁾ to transmit to the Economic and Social Council's 1995 substantive session.

The report stated that the Executive Director was committed to ensuring that UNICEF played an active and supportive role in the overall UN system follow-up and that field-level action needed to be a special area of focus. As proposed by the Secretary-General, the WSSD implementation processes should be seen as part of a continuum related closely to those for the 1990 World Summit for Children, the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,⁽²¹⁾ ICPD, etc., which offered UNICEF opportunities to help strengthen and accelerate the implementation of the goals of the World Summit for Children; its work in that regard formed a direct part of the implementation of the commitments of WSSD. In addition, the broad agenda of WSSD follow-up could help mobilize a wide range of action on poverty reduction, within which progress for children could be placed. Through its inter-agency participation and advocacy, UNICEF could help link the previously approved goals for basic services to the new goals related to the income side of poverty. WSSD also offered a unique opportunity to create an overall "anti-poverty initiative".

In a November report,⁽²²⁾ UNICEF outlined its follow-up action in the implementation of the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women in September (see PART FOUR, Chapter X), focusing on three priority areas: girls' education; adolescent girls' and women's health; and children's and women's rights.

Follow-up to Economic and Social Council decisions

In August, the secretariat reported⁽²³⁾ on follow-up to decisions taken by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive 1995 session, focusing on operational activities for development and humanitarian affairs, two areas which the Council had dealt with at its operational and general segment, respectively (see PART FOUR, Chapters II and III).

The outcome of the Council's discussions were resolutions 1995/50 on operational activities for development segment, 1995/51 on overall guidance on operational activities for development to the UN funds and programmes and 1995/56 on strengthening coordination of UN emergency humanitarian assistance.

The report noted that the first two resolutions would have implications for UNICEF in several areas, including priorities, country programmes, reporting to the Council and scheduling of Board sessions. With regard to implementation of resolution 1995/56, which urged the governing bodies of the relevant UN organizations to review issues concerning their role and responsibilities, as well as their operational and financial capacities to respond to emergency situations and support preventive action, the report said that the Executive Board had already decided to discuss emergency operations, including strategic issues and inter-agency coordination, during the first half of 1996.

The Board took note⁽²⁴⁾ of the report in September.

The secretariat in November submitted a more complete report,⁽²⁵⁾ stating that since the Council's substantive session and the Board's September session, UNICEF had held consultations with its partners. With regard to resolution 1995/50, in which the Council had reiterated the importance of receiving timely reports from the Executive Boards in all official languages, the UNICEF Board had decided that the Executive Director's annual report would be considered at the Board's second regular session in April 1996, to allow for the relevant parts of the Board's report to be made available to the Council's substantive session. On the subject of holding joint or consecutive meetings, the Executive Director brought to the Board's attention that the 1996 schedules placed the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and the UNICEF Board sessions almost back to back. Also, he noted, 1996 would provide useful guidance concerning the new country programme approval process both for UNICEF and UNDP/UNFPA and how the Boards would like to organize their work in that respect. With regard to the Council's request to the Executive Boards to identify specific problems, opportunities and areas where the Council could provide useful coordination and guidance on a system-wide basis, the Executive Director suggested that the matter be placed before the Bureau of the UNICEF Board in January 1996.

In follow-up to resolution 1995/56 and in the light of the Board's decision to discuss emergency operations, the report noted that UNICEF had reviewed its role and responsibilities, as well as operational and financial capacities to respond to emergency situations and support preventive actions. It had concluded that strengthening country-specific and particularly local coping mechanisms of communities affected by disasters, conflicts or wars would continue to be the main thrust of its emergency and humanitarian efforts. It was consulting with the United Nations, bilateral agencies and NGOs on collaboration in emergencies and was in the final stages of signing a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. An MOU with the World Food Programme was close to completion and consultations with the World Health Organization on signing an MOU were progressing well. (For UNICEF assistance in emergency situations, see below.)

Maurice Pate Memorial Award

In February, the Executive Board decided,⁽²⁶⁾ on a recommendation of the Executive Director,⁽²⁷⁾ to present the annual Maurice Pate Award, established in 1966⁽²⁸⁾ in memory of UNICEF's first Executive Director, to Professor Ihsan Dogramaci of Turkey. The $25,000 award was given in recognition of Professor Dogramaci's more than 50 years of service to children in Turkey and around the world, through his outstanding contributions in the fields of public health and child survival and development.

Emergency operations

According to an overview report on UNICEF emergency operations in 1995,⁽²⁹⁾ UNICEF provided assistance to 21 major complex emergencies in Afghanistan, Angola, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Georgia, Haiti, Iraq, Liberia, Mozambique, the Russian Federation (Chechnya), Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Zaire. UNICEF aid targeted special needs of vulnerable groups, especially children and women. The Fund collaborated with its partners in assisting the reunification of over 26,000 unaccompanied children in Mozambique, Rwanda, the southern Sudan and eastern Zaire, and assisted 16 countries in counselling systems and the creation of family and community environment for recovery. It provided assistance in the health sector in Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Liberia, Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia. UNICEF with NGOs provided supplementary feeding in Burundi, distributed seeds and farm implements in Rwanda, provided therapy and rehabilitation to malnourished children in Sierra Leone and supported supplementary feeding centres in Afghanistan. In water and sanitation, UNICEF assisted Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, Sierra Leone and Rwanda. It supplied basic classroom materials in Afghanistan, Angola, and Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as materials and trained teachers for children in prison and for demobilized soldiers in Rwanda.

Programme expenditure for emergencies amounted to some $203 million, or 25 per cent of UNICEF's total programme expenditure. In addition, as of September 1995, $9 million had been disbursed to 17 countries for global activities under the Emergency Programme Fund.

During the year, UNICEF enhanced its programme and operational response capacity for emergency situations. It created a rapid response team (RRT) of 18 specially trained staff members on stand-by at regular duty stations for quick deployment to any emergency. That core group was to be augmented as necessary by national and international officers with special skills in administration, finance, personnel and setting up operations systems. An Operations Centre was set up in the Office of Emergency Programmes to provide contact between headquarters and field locations to support RRT and ongoing field operations. UNICEF reviewed and updated its emergency stockpiles of supplies and equipment for emergency situations and created a special RRT stockpile of essential supplies and equipment in Copenhagen, Denmark, valued at $3 million.

In November, UNICEF presented a strategy paper⁽³⁰⁾ on its emergency assistance, summarizing purpose, mandate, guiding principles and emergency response strategies and describing measures initiated in 1995 to reinforce its capacity as an effective humanitarian partner in emergency cooperation.

UNICEF programmes by region

Africa

In 1995, programme expenditure in Africa totalled $292 million, or 36 per cent of UNICEF's total programme expenditure.

For many of the countries in Eastern and Southern Africa, 1995 was a year of recovery and momentum-building. South Africa's Reconstruction and Development Programme spearheaded efforts to extend access to basic services. National goals for children were incorporated in the 1995 policy statement on the Programme. The Convention on the Rights of the Child was a symbol of recovery and growth for the whole region. With Botswana, South Africa and Swaziland ratifying the Convention, all countries of the region, except Somalia, had become parties. As a result, closer ties were facilitated between UNICEF and organizations concerned with children, including AIDS orphans and children affected by armed conflict. The devastating impact of the HIV/AIDS epidemic was increasingly felt in the region. Child mortality rates rose in Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Programmes aimed at changing sexual behaviour, controlling sexually transmitted diseases and providing clinical and psychological care were being implemented in many countries. Emphasis was given to improved monitoring of the condition of children as a basis for informed planning and advocacy. UNICEF supported surveys of progress towards mid-decade goals in 11 countries, in collaboration with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and UNFPA. ECA and UNICEF worked with national statistical agencies to incorporate social indicators in routine data-gathering and jointly published the Atlas of the African Child, a cartographical depiction of social development. The adolescent girl communication initiative, a multimedia project to help adolescents develop life skills and become more involved in community affairs, was started.

Although large disparities remained between countries, broad improvements were evident in the prospects for many of the region's children. Almost all countries had national programmes of action (NPAs) for children or had incorporated such programmes into their national development plans. However, many countries faced challenges in terms of their capacity to raise primary school enrolment rates, provide access to safe water and sanitation, and improve child protection and nutrition. Major constraints on countries' efforts included chronic underfinancing of public services, the impact of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, weak administrative and financial capacity of national and local governments, and the rising level of crime in urban areas. UNICEF was increasingly involved in those issues in individual countries as an advocate for the rights of children and women and as a supporter of data collection and analysis linked to policy development. It introduced a gender development index as a means of consolidating statistical data on social developments affecting women.

In West and Central Africa, political instability and armed conflicts had disastrous effects on women and children in a number of countries. UNICEF stepped up its emergency assistance in Sierra Leone and supported rehabilitation efforts in Liberia. Although the region was the first in which all countries had ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child, at the end of 1995, only four—Burkina Faso, the Niger, Nigeria and Senegal—had filed reports on their implementation of the Convention. With the increasing urbanization in the region, UNICEF intensified its advocacy for special protection of neglected and abused children, focusing on child workers, child prostitutes, street children, young girls working as domestic servants and boys forced into begging. Performance in terms of the mid-decade goals for children were mixed. The regional average of immunization coverage reached only 45 per cent, although a number of countries had achieved or were close to achieving the goal of immunizing 80 per cent of their children. Use of oral rehydration therapy (ORT) against diarrhoeal diseases was a low 35 per cent, but most countries had plans of action to increase its use. The incidence of dracunculiasis (guinea worm disease) had been dramatically reduced and was expected to be eradicated by the year 2000. Regional access to water and sanitation services remained low, with about 45 per cent of the people having access to safe drinking water and 25 per cent to sanitation. A large number of countries had laws or legislation requiring iodization of table salt and all countries increased access to vitamin A. By the end of 1995, some 4,000 health centres (about 80 per cent of the target) had embraced the Bamako Initiative concept, originally adopted by the African Ministers of Health in 1987⁽³¹⁾ to improve the concept of primary health care in sub-Saharan Africa through community participation in financing and managing local health services. The Initiative improved the quality of care and access to essential drugs and was a safety net for communities in situations of political instability. In 1995, policy makers turned a spotlight on education, with subregional meetings in Guinea and Mali, and an announcement by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) that 1996 would be the year of education for Africa. There were serious problems throughout the region in terms of education quality and the willingness of parents to put and keep their children in school. Policy reforms were also needed to support education for girls and involve communities in non-formal and adult education. UNICEF assisted innovative education projects aimed at achieving those goals in Benin, Burkina Faso, Ghana, Guinea, Mali and Senegal.

In May, the UNICEF Executive Board considered an April progress report⁽³²⁾ on ensuring child survival, protection and development in Africa, which discussed economic and political trends in sub-Saharan Africa as well as the main areas of UNICEF focus, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child, achievement of mid-decade and year 2000 goals, collaboration with different partners, response to emergencies and the HIV/AIDS pandemic.

The Board reaffirmed⁽³³⁾ its commitment to Africa as the region of greatest need and highest priority and requested the Executive Director to develop specific strategies for translating that priority into concrete actions, including increasing resource allocation for country programmes. It reaffirmed its commitment and support to the Special Initiative on Africa (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), and requested the Executive Director to ensure that UNICEF continued to play an active role in the inter-agency work on the implementation of the Initiative. Acknowledging the role of basic education in development, the Board urged African Governments to develop feasible and dynamic plans of action and allocate resources for reversing the falling rates of enrolment and moving towards the Education for All goals agreed to in 1990 at the World Conference on Education for All, co-sponsored by UNESCO, UNDP, UNICEF, the World Bank and others, and the World Summit for Children. It requested the Executive Director to support countries in formulating such plans and mobilizing external resources for their implementation. The Board called on African Governments to increase and strengthen the participation of communities in the planning, implementation and management of programmes for the delivery of social services, including the commitments of the World Summit for Children. It asked the Executive Director to coordinate UNICEF activities with those of other UN agencies, particularly the World Health Organization (WHO), and to participate in strengthening strategies and programmes in the implementation of the 1992 WHO Global Plan of Action on Malaria.⁽³⁴⁾ He should also develop partnerships with bilateral and multilateral donor agencies to support African countries' efforts to meet specific goals within their national programmes of action. The Board urged donor countries and international financial institutions to consider measures to reduce the official debt burden of African countries, including debt cancellation and conversions for social investment in health, education, water supply and sanitation, and encouraged the Executive Director to advocate at the highest possible levels the reduction of African bilateral and multilateral debt. The Board requested him to strengthen collaboration with regional and subregional organizations to improve the well-being of children and women in Africa; seek additional resources through, inter alia, strengthening cooperation with multilateral and bilateral funding institutions, including the World Bank and the African Development Bank; strengthen collaboration with African institutions and NGOs in developing and implementing UNICEF-supported country programmes; ensure that UNICEF operational capacity in Africa was further enhanced within the context of UNICEF's management reform (see below); and report on progress made in ensuring child survival, protection and development in Africa in 1997.

Asia and the Pacific

Programme expenditure in Asia totalled $220 million, or 27 per cent of UNICEF's total programme expenditure in 1995.

In East Asia and the Pacific, UNICEF supported a wide range of innovative media programmes capitalizing on the capacity of the communications revolution to educate and encourage behavioural change. In Thailand, it promoted AIDS awareness, focusing on high-risk groups including hill tribes, children in urban slums, street children, the rural poor and workers in the informal sector. Its activities facilitated the willingness of Governments to confront the AIDS epidemic. In Malaysia, UNICEF supported the development of AIDS messages that were sensitive to the cultural and religious environment. Most of the mid-decade goals for children were within reach of the region as a whole and some had already been achieved in a number of countries. Some of the region's most encouraging results during 1995 were recorded in its least developed countries. In Cambodia, UNICEF worked with the Government and NGOs on that country's first five-year programme of cooperation (1996-2000), with the focus shifting from emergency relief and rehabilitation to community action for the social development of children and women. The region achieved universal ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

In South Asia, UNICEF maintained its gender perspective in all regional and country programmes. Child labour, a major area of focus for UNICEF and almost every country in the region, remained a subject of close collaboration between UNICEF, the International Labour Organization (ILO), Governments and industry. UNICEF launched an initiative with the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association to eliminate gradually child labour in the garment industry and enrol released child workers in school. It supported a number of large-scale, cost-effective and culturally sensitive innovations in support of Education for All. One of UNICEF's concerns was the impact of war and conflict on children in Afghanistan and Sri Lanka. Its "education for peace" initiative reached more than 40,000 children in Sri Lanka. All countries gave greater attention to vaccination, although immunizations rates fell below 1990 levels. The nutrition initiative for South Asia, established in 1994, began to improve the understanding of malnutrition by Governments and development agencies. Activities included assessing nutrition projects, refocusing strategies and working with policy makers and donors, including the Asian Development Bank. Significant advances were also made against micronutrient deficiencies.

Americas and the Caribbean

In 1995, programme expenditure in the Americas and the Caribbean totalled $93 million, or 12 per cent of UNICEF's total programme expenditure.

All countries in the region had ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child and six (Bolivia, Brazil, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador and Peru) had integrated the Convention into legislation. UNICEF provided technical and financial support to Argentina, Mexico, Uruguay and Venezuela to bring national legislation into conformance with the Convention. It assisted Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Guatemala and Peru in studies of child labour, giving special attention to the link with basic education, and developed a framework for reform of juvenile justice systems to address the tendency to criminalize poverty, especially among street children. Recognizing the need for public embracement of reformed child policies, UNICEF encouraged the participation of civil society, not just Governments, in designing new policies for children. It cooperated with the World Bank in holding regional training workshops for teachers on the quality of schooling. With UNESCO, UNICEF supported regional authors and publishers in designing and producing materials for students and for training teachers in Chile, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Paraguay and Peru. At a global NGO symposium in Costa Rica on early childhood education in the context of poverty, UNICEF promoted strategies to improve knowledge of child development among parents and caregivers. UNICEF also collaborated on child labour with ILO, Save the Children, and the Inter-American Institute of the Child.

Middle East and North Africa

Programme expenditure in the Middle East and North Africa totalled $91 million in 1995, or 12 per cent of UNICEF's total programme expenditure.

Although economic belt-tightening continued in much of the region, most countries reported progress towards their goals for children. The Palestinian Authority held a symposium on Palestinian children and women to review progress in the development of an NPA whose goals, strategies, project outlines and funding requirements were elaborated in a five-year programme to be implemented from January 1996 on. In a March 1995 review paper,⁽³⁵⁾ UNICEF outlined its programme cooperation in support of Palestinian children and women. To encourage investment in the region, Jordan hosted a regional economic summit in October. Subsequently, UNICEF and the Arab Thought Forum, a Pan-Arab NGO, followed up with a regional consultation on social change in the Middle East, which recommended steps to ensure that vulnerable groups were protected and that social development was a priority for policy makers, donors and the media. Agreements with groups in southern Sudan enabled UNICEF to maintain child protection services, especially immunization and dracunculiasis programmes, in most of the country. In collaboration with OAU, the League of Arab States and individual Governments, UNICEF helped generate a greater commitment to children's needs in planning and policy-making. Many countries, including Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Oman and the Sudan established national commissions for children and Tunisia's Council of Ministers adopted a code for the protection of the child. All but two countries (Oman and the United Arab Emirates) had ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and Lebanon, Tunisia and Yemen reported on their implementation activities. UNICEF financed a study in Lebanon analysing legislation in relation to the Convention, and in Jordan, it worked closely with the office of Queen Noor to establish a task force for children to monitor implementation of the Convention. More than half the countries had met the mid-decade goals on immunization and almost half had met ORT and sanitation goals.

Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States

In 1995, programme expenditure in Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States totalled $72 million, or 9 per cent of UNICEF's total programme expenditure.

The region fell short of the mid-decade goals in safe water supply and sanitation, salt iodization and the baby-friendly initiative. Shortage of vaccines and other supplies resulted in a diphtheria epidemic in CIS. Large-scale emergency interventions were needed by mid-1995, funded through a $21 million appeal launched in July by WHO, UNICEF and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies. Measles remained a major threat throughout the region. An encouraging factor was the breakthrough in the campaign to eradicate polio through a concerted immunization effort in 1995. Complex emergencies continued in the Caucasus, while the fall of safe havens in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia led to the flight of thousands of civilians, mostly women and children. UNICEF's main role was to aid the rapid reinforcement of immunization and education services. It worked with Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, the World Bank and major NGOs to provide urgent support for the basic needs of children and women affected by health problems resulting from the pollution due to the over-exploitation of the Aral Sea for irrigation and the overuse of pesticides. UNICEF, the World Bank and other partners launched the Aral Sea Project for Environmental and Regional Assistance. Although all countries had ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child, an increasing number of States were having difficulty submitting timely reports on implementation. A UNICEF-financed analysis of the situation of children in the Russian Federation found that the abuse of alcohol, tobacco and drugs by mothers contributed to a doubling of diseases among newborns and that 15 to 30 per cent of preschool children suffered from chronic diseases.

UNICEF programmes by sector

Primary health care

The 1987 Bamako Initiative⁽³¹⁾ remained a benchmark for sustainable primary health care in 1995. Eight more countries (Azerbaijan, Ecuador, El Salvador, Georgia, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras and Mongolia) adopted its basic principles, bringing the total number of countries that had signed on to it to 41. With $8.5 million in supplementary funding for 1994-1995 from the Nippon (formerly Sasakawa) Foundation, UNICEF helped a number of countries revitalize community health systems by introducing the principles of the Bamako Initiative.

UNICEF assisted Zambia in the design and implementation of its comprehensive health policy reform and provided technical assistance to make health services more community-oriented, integrated and equitable in South Africa. In collaboration with the Harvard School of Public Health, it undertook a two-year study of China's rural health strategy. It developed a comprehensive training package for front-line health workers and community-elected health committee members and tested it in the Gambia and Uganda. Supplementary funding from the Australian and French National Committees enabled UNICEF to assist Benin, Burkina Faso, Guinea, Mali, the Senegal, Togo and Uganda in laying the groundwork to revitalize selected district hospitals. Results from that preliminary undertaking were expected to help in formulating a policy framework for strengthening district hospital services. UNICEF supported operations research into community participation, equitable access to basic health care, staff motivation, sustainable health structures and systems, drug management and quality assurance and improved health care. Partners like the European Union, WHO and the World Bank, provided undesignated assistance to respond to district health priorities rather than earmarking aid for specific programmes. Such strategies were helping Mali, Senegal and Zambia to use resources more efficiently.

Immunization

Global infant immunization levels advanced beyond the 80 per cent level during 1995. However, relatively low rates persisted in half the countries of West and Central Africa, and in countries undergoing or recovering from conflict in Eastern and Southern Africa. Cambodia and the Lao People's Democratic Republic had lower immunization rates than their neighbours in South-East Asia, but both countries improved substantially over the previous year. Average rates for diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus (DPT3) ranged from 89 per cent for Asia, to 87 per cent in the Middle East and North Africa, 82 per cent in the Americas, 71 per cent in Central and Eastern Europe and the newly independent States, and 58 per cent for Africa. Haiti was the high-water mark for measles control in the Americas and the Caribbean region. Chile, Cuba and the English-speaking Caribbean also reported successful campaigns against measles. Elsewhere, significant inroads were made on neonatal tetanus, particularly in Benin, Egypt and the United Republic of Tanzania. In Central Asia, Eastern Europe and the newly independent States, UNICEF, WHO and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) launched a global campaign for vaccines to contain an ongoing diphtheria epidemic. UNICEF continued collaborating with Rotary International and the United States Centres for Disease Control and Prevention in raising funds and procuring vaccines for the global eradication effort. Vaccination and monitoring continued in the polio-free zones to maintain their status. UNICEF and WHO produced promotional material to help stop the transmission of hepatitis B and HIV/AIDS through the use of sterilized syringes.

There was closer partnership with vaccine manufacturers under the Children's Vaccine Initiative to improve access to new and better vaccines and obtain price reductions. UNICEF continued to support field trials for a Haemophilus influenzae type B vaccine for bacterial meningitis in the Gambia. Under the Vaccine Independent Initiative, a revolving fund to bridge the time between payments, 12 countries were able to purchase vaccines at favourable bulk rates during 1995. Donors, including Australia, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States, contributed $47.5 million to the fund.

Control of diarrhoeal diseases

In 1995, ORT was used in 60 per cent of diarrhoeal episodes worldwide, up from 44 per cent in 1994. The UNICEF mid-decade goal for ORT use in 80 per cent of diarrhoeal cases was achieved by about 25 developing countries, the most successful being Bangladesh, China and Nigeria. Thirty countries held national health/ORT weeks and 33 took part in international ORT symposia in Brazil, Burkina Faso and Cameroon. The production of oral rehydration salts (ORS) reached about 800 million packets a year, with UNICEF having become one of the largest distributors and promoters, particularly in Africa. A number of pharmaceutical manufacturers collaborated with UNICEF in marketing ORS through their distributors. A lack of timely and reliable national ORT data continued to hamper monitoring of diarrhoeal disease control, although many countries took action to redress the situation. Thirty countries initiated surveys and more than 50 others planned to follow.

Acute respiratory infections

Acute respiratory infections (ARI) continued to be the major cause of death among children under five in developing countries, where in 1995 more than 3 million died of pneumonia and a further

1.1 million from ARI compounded by other ailments. Relatively few countries where children were at the greatest risk of infection gave sufficient priority to ARI, although 65 had active national programmes to combat ARI, but fewer than a quarter of them provided protection on a nationwide basis. UNICEF supported mass media campaigns in Egypt, Iran, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines and a number of other countries to ensure that parents knew precisely where to take their children for treatment. It also supported training of health care workers in ARI case management and efforts to make drugs more accessible in a number of countries, including Bangladesh, India and Pakistan.

HIV / AIDS control

In 1995, HIV/AIDS continued its debilitating sweep. According to estimates of UNAIDS (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIII), 6 million people globally had developed AIDS and over 5 million had died. Half of all infections affected people aged 15 to 24 and about 1.5 million children were infected. Worldwide, UNAIDS estimated by the end of the century, AIDS would have robbed almost 5 million children of one or both parents. HIV/AIDS raised a number of complex challenges for UNICEF and other organizations fighting the pandemic. While UNICEF and its partners continued to strengthen preventive programmes against HIV infection and the care of victims, attention also turned to means of strengthening the capacity of families and communities to protect the rights of children against AIDS. UNICEF continued to support public AIDS education, emphasizing the need for tolerance as well as changes in human behaviour. Programmes helped identify and monitor the situation of the most vulnerable children, strengthen family coping capacity and community support, enable children affected by AIDS to remain in school, and make reproductive health services, together with care and counselling, more accessible and welcoming. Regional consultations with UNAIDS were held in Santiago, Chile; Dakar, Senegal; Nairobi, Kenya; Venice, Italy; and New Delhi, India. UNICEF and UNAIDS jointly published a booklet entitled Children and Families Affected by AIDS: Guidelines for Action.

In March, UNICEF provided the Executive Board with an update⁽³⁶⁾ on its participation in UNAIDS. The Board urged⁽³⁷⁾ the secretariat to participate actively in UNAIDS and to support the director of the programme; and that steps be taken to implement the Declaration of the 1994 Paris Summit on HIV/AIDS⁽³⁸⁾ in the context of UNAIDS. It requested the UNICEF secretariat to develop a strategy for including HIV/AIDS components in its programmes and regular activities within the framework of UNAIDS.

Maternal health and family planning

In 1995, UNICEF policies and strategies in women's health were revised, taking into account current international knowledge regarding maternal health care and programme experiences of several UNICEF country offices. A new approach to estimating maternal mortality developed by WHO and UNICEF indicated that 585,000 women died each year from pregnancy-related causes, a significant increase over the past estimate of 500,000. UNICEF support focused on reducing maternal mortality, primarily through expanding access to quality prenatal, delivery and post-natal care. It refocused its efforts on strengthening the role of professional midwives in the light of the declining role of traditional birth attendants and worked with community-based women's groups to develop health promotion messages on issues such as family planning, breastfeeding, HIV/AIDS, violence against women and female genital mutilation. Examples of those approaches could be seen in Bangladesh, Benin, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Mali and Zambia. In Mexico, UNICEF supported the National Commission for Safe Motherhood and safe motherhood workshops were held in Amman, Jordan; Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire; and New Delhi, India.

Global networking and advocacy continued through participation in the Joint Programme on National Capacity-building to Reduce Maternal Deaths and Disabilities (WHO, UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF), the Inter-agency Working Group on Safe Motherhood, the Symposium on Reproductive Health in Refugee Situations, the International Maternal and Child Health Committee of the American Public Health Association, meetings with professional associations of midwives and obstetricians/gynaecologists, and the preparation with WHO of guidelines for monitoring progress in maternal mortality.

Nutrition

The reduction of child malnutrition remained a key effort in many UNICEF country programmes. The nutrition focal points from all UNICEF regions and the Nutrition Section at headquarters reviewed the application of the UNICEF nutrition strategy and reaffirmed its value as an intersectoral programme framework. The review called for a greater focus on women's and girls' nutrition. The Nutrition Section developed guidelines on the conceptualization and evaluation of household food security activities and an inventory of household food security components in UNICEF programmes. UNICEF also contributed to the preparation of a background paper for the World Food Summit to be organized by FAO in 1996 (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIII). Several country programmes supported innovative approaches to household food security, such as Cambodia's effort to transform the family food production programme into a more integrated approach that helped rural women meet basic household needs. Global progress was made towards salt iodization in 1995 and technical guidelines for monitoring salt iodization programmes were developed. UNICEF supported surveys of Vitamin A status that resulted in widespread deficiency being recognized for the first time in Botswana, Egypt, Kenya and South Africa. With support from the Micronutrient Initiative in Canada, UNICEF launched projects in 14 countries to bring about innovations in distribution systems for Vitamin A supplements and improvements in monitoring the impact of supplementation on mortality and morbidity. UNICEF and WHO developed a statement on strategies for reducing iron deficiency anaemia, which called for iron supplementation in any population of pregnant women or young children where the prevalence of anaemia exceeded 30 per cent. It joined with other agencies in exploring ways of increasing the micronutrient content of foods in the breeding of high-yielding varieties of cereals such as rice.

In 1995, the Baby-Friendly Hospital Initiative reached the milestone of 4,000 baby-friendly hospitals in 170 countries. After a slow start, countries of Central and Eastern Europe joined the Initiative and were making considerable progress. The number of countries that adopted a law or some provisions of the International Code of Marketing of Breast Milk Substitutes increased by 10 in 1995. Four more countries adopted actions to end the practice of distributing free and low-cost supplies at health facilities, bringing to 101 the total number of countries taking legal steps or a practical measures in that direction. UNICEF also participated in the development of a new multi-agency statement on HIV and breast-feeding, a process that was to continue with UNAIDS in 1996.

UNICEF and WHO commissioned a review on issues related to complementary feeding as a key component of "care for nutrition". The review made recommendations on complementing breast milk from the age of six months; guidelines were to be distributed widely and promoted through regional workshops.

Basic education

In May, the UNICEF Executive Board approved a new basic education strategy (see above) and urged UNICEF to promote universal participation in basic education, giving priority to ending the disadvantage of girls and with a focus on Africa, South Asia and countries in emergency situations. The new approach endorsed early childhood development and adult education as two major supportive strategies. To implement them, UNICEF was working with multilateral and bilateral organizations, NGOs, private voluntary organizations and foundations concerned with young child development. In 1995, over 90 countries addressed issues of young child development in their educational programmes in some form. Adult education activities included paraprofessional training in Malawi, school training in Benin and gender training of rural school committees in Zimbabwe. In Uganda and Zimbabwe, work was carried out on HIV/AIDS education, in line with UNICEF emphasis on intersectoral linkages between education and health.

The mid-decade goals for universal primary education and reducing the gender gap were met in most of Latin America, the Middle East and East Asia, with some positive signs in South Asia. On the other hand, progress was uneven in Africa and even in regression in some cases. No progress was made in countries with recurrent crises and poverty. UNICEF responded by developing its Focus on Education for All in Africa (EFA) through the Accelerated Programme of Collaboration; the main strategies of that initiative were adopted in the United Nations System-Wide Initiative on Africa (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

The year 1995 was the year of girls' education, which came to be recognized as the centre-piece for sustainable development, demographic balance and women's empowerment. A multi-country initiative for girls' education in Africa began with the support of the Canadian International Development Agency. Activities in 15 African countries helped to intensify national efforts to expand educational opportunities for girls. Discussions were under way for a broader partnership in girls' education with other partners, including Japan, Norway and the World Bank. UNICEF supported programmes in Bangladesh, Burkina Faso, Egypt, Morocco and Pakistan making girls the priority target group in programme design and delivery. In collaboration with UNESCO, UNICEF tackled obstacles to universal primary and basic education, addressing the monitoring of learning achievement in more than 15 countries and disseminating and promoting examples of educational change. It also assisted sub-Saharan countries in building capacity for education statistics and establishing educational management information systems.

UNICEF responded to complex emergencies around the world with the development of an intersectoral programme that included education. Education kits were used in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Rwanda, Somalia and a number of refugee camps.

In Namibia and Nicaragua, UNICEF supported studies on repetition to improve basic education planning. In Brazil, it collaborated on a project to improve student flow and reduce repetition. In Ecuador, it assisted programmes aimed at reducing repetitions in first and second grade where the problem was most severe. UNICEF also supported teacher training in a number of countries. "Joyful learning and teaching" activities, an important feature of a project in India, included monitoring of progress towards minimum levels of learning and other key indicators of effective learning. In Pakistan, UNICEF led an inter-agency mission to develop a programme for improving access to and the quality of primary schools and reaching millions of out-of-school children through non-formal programmes.

Water supply and sanitation

The water and environmental sanitation strategy endorsed by the Executive Board in May (see above) provided a conceptual framework and guide for UNICEF country programmes, emphasizing behavioural change regarding sanitation and hygiene, integrated community management of the water environment, enhancing community ownership, and improving cost-effectiveness and sustainability. Regional consultations led to the design of effective implementation strategies; the first one was held at Cotonou, Benin, for West and Central Africa, to be followed by similar events in other regions.

In 1995, UNICEF supported regular water and environmental sanitation programmes in more than 90 countries through grants and technical assistance totalling $71 million. Its programmes provided direct support to Governments in their pursuit of mid-decade goals for water and sanitation. UNICEF completed a comprehensive review of global sanitation programmes with the United States Agency for International Development/Environmental Health Project and hygiene case studies in six countries, published a sanitation newsletter in South Asia and conducted a sanitation workshop for Eastern and Southern Africa. UNICEF continued to build its partnership with other multilateral and bilateral agencies and NGOs, undertaking joint missions to support programmes in India, Malawi, Papua New Guinea and Turkmenistan. With WHO, it continued to play a leading role in sector monitoring at the global level through the Joint Monitoring Programme. It provided support to 15 countries in emergency situations, where water and sanitation interventions remained crucial and developed water, sanitation and hygiene emergency service kits.

In 1995, UNICEF continued to review its policies and strategies for addressing child protection issues, with the aim of integrating concerns of children in especially difficult circumstances into mainstream programmes, leading to a holistic response. Among the priority concerns were child labour, children affected by armed conflict, sexual exploitation, childhood disability, and children and families affected by AIDS. Progress was made in giving the issue of child labour a higher priority. A Memorandum of Understanding was signed between the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association, ILO and UNICEF, to work towards the progressive elimination of child labour. In India, UNICEF joined with more than 100 carpet manufacturers and national and international NGOs to establish a trademark, RUG-MARK, for carpets made without child labour; RUGMARK aimed at expanding child labour-free markets and assisting in the rehabilitation and education of those released from the carpet industry.

With sexual exploitation of children emerging as a major global concern, a growing number of NGOs became involved in programmes for prevention, protection and rehabilitation, training of personnel and advocacy. UNICEF supported the efforts of several such local organizations in Brazil, Costa Rica, Sri Lanka, Thailand and other countries. Preparations continued for the convening of the World Congress on Commercial Sexual Exploitation, to be held in Stockholm, Sweden, in August 1996.

UNICEF response to children affected by armed conflict included technical assistance, such as in Rwanda, where it supported a national programme for trauma recovery. It played a leading role in providing support to the study on the impact of armed conflict on children, (see PART THREE, Chapter I) as requested by the General Assembly in 1993.⁽³⁹⁾

Childhood disability and children and families affected by AIDS received increased attention. A seminar on the rights of children with disabilities was organized in collaboration with Rehabilitation International in connection with the World Summit on Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). The rights and needs of children affected by the AIDS epidemic were addressed through multisectoral approaches involving alternative care, education opportunities and life skills training for children orphaned by AIDS. Such efforts were supported in Uganda by a consortium of donors, NGOs and community groups. Within the framework of UNAIDS, a set of guidelines and programming approaches was developed and several regional consultations took place.

The Assembly, in section IV of resolution 50/153, requested the cooperation of ILO and UNICEF with the Secretary-General for a report on current initiatives and programmes addressing the exploitation of child labour and how to improve cooperation at the national and international levels.

UNICEF finances

In 1995, UNICEF income totalled $1,011 million, $5 million more than in 1994. Contributions from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and the United Nations accounted for 65 per cent of total income, with the remainder coming from non-governmental sources. Of the total, $537 million went to general resources and $474 million to supplementary funds, including $163 million to emergency supplementary funds.

Expenditures totalled $1,022 million, $23 million more than in 1994. Of the total, $912 million was for programme expenditures, $99 million for administrative expenditures and $11 million for write-offs and other charges.

Budget appropriations

In March,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Executive Board approved the following respective amounts for general resources and supplementary funding for programme cooperation: Africa, $108,709,249 and $248,383,450; Americas and the Caribbean, $9,108,352 and $44,100,000; Asia, $344,074,941 and $430,500,000; Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States, $39,500,000 and $48,500,000; and the Middle East and North Africa, $5,000,000 and $5,000,000. It also approved $1,019,433 to cover overexpenditure.

In May,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Board approved additional amounts of $49,870,615 and $48,281,000 for Africa; $36,697,002 and $84,800,000 for Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States; and $13,096,933 and $45,260,000 for the Middle East and North Africa.

Total amounts approved were $607,101,525 for general resources, including $25,000 for the Maurice Pate Award, and $954,824,450 for supplementary funding.

In February, the Board postponed⁽⁴²⁾ preparation of the administrative and programme support budget and the global funds budgets for 1996-1997 pending its decision on implementation of the management review of UNICEF (see below). It agreed that the budgets for 1994-1995 would serve as baseline budgets for 1996-1997 and that there would be no addition or upgrading of net additional core posts, except in connection with the new regional office for Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States, whose proposed budget would be considered later in 1995. The Board also agreed that the baseline budgets would be submitted to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and considered with the report of ACABQ at the Board's annual session. It decided to consider as necessary budget revisions submitted by the secretariat during the remainder of 1995 and in 1996 and 1997.

In September, the Board⁽⁴³⁾ approved an interim budget allocation of $126,852,592 for administrative and programme support in 1996 for headquarters and regional offices. It authorized the Executive Director to execute a thorough analysis of the administrative costs at headquarters and in the field, in line with the request of ACABQ in the context of the management review (see below). It noted the secretariat's intention to submit in 1996 an integrated budget for headquarters and regional offices for 1996-1997, incorporating the budgets of administrative and programme support and global funds into a unified budget, with the exception of the Emergency Programme Fund. The Board agreed that the interim budget allocation for headquarters and regional offices would cease when the integrated budget was approved.

Also in September, the Board approved⁽⁴⁴⁾ administrative and programme support for field offices totalling $174,820,301 for 1996-1997. It also approved⁽⁴⁵⁾ interim budgets for 1996 of $45 million for global funds and totalling $15 million for the Emergency Programme. It requested the Executive Director to inform it about plans for appropriations for global activities and the criteria for the allocation of funds, including to the programmes UNICEF was co-sponsoring. It noted the secretariat's intention to submit in 1996 an integrated budget for headquarters and regional offices for 1996-1997, and agreed that the global funds interim budget would cease upon approval of the integrated budget. It also approved⁽⁴⁶⁾ an interim supplementary-funded global funds programme budget of $76.7 million for 1996 and agreed that the interim budget would be replaced by final budgets in 1996.

The Board took note⁽⁴⁷⁾ of the interim financial report and statements for the biennium ended 31 December 1994⁽⁴⁸⁾ and the review of expenditures in excess of commitments and unspent commitments for completed projects financed by supplementary funds.⁽⁴⁹⁾ Also in September, it approved⁽⁵⁰⁾ the medium-term plan as a framework of projections for 1995-1998, including up to $582 million in programme expenditure from general resources, to be submitted to the Board in 1996.

Harmonization of budgets and financial statements

In September, the Executive Board had before it a June progress report⁽⁵¹⁾ on the harmonization of the presentation of financial statements and budgets of UNICEF, UNDP and UNFPA, prepared in response to a 1994 General Assembly request.⁽⁵²⁾

According to the report, the Working Party on Financial Statements, established by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), through its Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (CCAQ (FB)), was in the process of finalizing its work which was to be considered by CCAQ (FB) at its late August session. This would allow for finalization of statement formats and instructions, and any revisions to the Accounting Standards, in time for reporting to the General Assembly in 1996.

The report also stated that as a follow-up to a 1994 Executive Board decision,⁽⁵³⁾ the three organizations had initiated consultations on harmonizing their budgets with regard to presentation, common definitions, higher degree of financial transparency and comparability. A consultant, engaged to study existing presentations and identify differences, had provided a draft report as a basis for future discussions. The next step after a joint review of the report would be to identify common areas where harmonization was feasible. The recently completed management study of UNICEF (see below), which dealt extensively with budget matters, in particular recommendations to integrate programme and administrative budgets and develop a more analytical budgeting process, would also have a number of implications.

It was not expected that the final findings and conclusions on harmonization would have an impact on the 1996-1997 budgets, said the report. Nevertheless, the secretariat would continue to discuss the subject, particularly with regard to common terms and definitions, and would report to the Board through ACABQ.

The Board requested⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Executive Director to accelerate efforts towards harmonization and to provide in 1996 an oral progress report, including identification of common features in the budgets of UNICEF and UNFPA and an explanation of the areas that were not common; an oral progress report on steps needed for further harmonization which, together with an account of the debate on the issue, to the Economic and Social Council at its 1996 substantive session; and submission at the third regular 1996 session, through ACABQ, of initial proposals for action by the Board.

Organizational and administrative questions

Management review

In February, the Executive Board had before it the executive summary of the final report of the UNICEF management review.⁽⁵⁵⁾ The study contained more than 80 recommendations, which proposed some 150 specific actions covering the following areas: UNICEF's mission and emergency policy, relations with NGOs and other agencies, human resources, programming, global goals, supply operations, fund raising, information and communication, information systems, UNICEF structure, accountability, financial systems, cost effectiveness, governance and implementation.

The Board called⁽⁵⁶⁾ on the secretariat to establish an internal process of management reform, including the designation of a task force to deal with the report and develop a plan of action; and to involve UNICEF staff in the work of the task force. It looked forward to maintaining close contact with the secretariat in formulating the plan of action and called for regular briefings of all interested parties by the secretariat between Board meetings on progress with implementing change. The Board established an informal inter-sessional consultation of interested parties to facilitate its own discussion and decision-making and requested the secretariat to provide information for its second regular session on an initial response to the recommendations of the review, including reference to any disagreements over matters of fact; advice on recommended priorities for action; outline of broad priority areas for implementation and an estimated monthly timetable for their consideration and action; and advice on the implications of the review for UNICEF's mandate and mission. It encouraged the secretariat, in its follow-up to the review, to take into consideration the recommendations of the multi-donor evaluation⁽⁵⁷⁾ as well as reform measures, both planned and under implementation, elsewhere in the UN system. The secretariat should submit to the Board a draft overall mission statement for UNICEF and a draft mission statement for emergency operations, as well as draft terms of reference for any further study relating to the review and submissions on any additional funding requirements arising from the study.

In response to the Board's February request, the secretariat submitted a March report⁽⁵⁸⁾ on strengthening management in UNICEF, which constituted its initial response to the recommendations of the review and included advice on recommended priorities for action, the initial implementation process, broad priority areas for implementation and funding requirements, as well as an annex covering some issues of perception and fact contained in the study. The report also contained a draft recommendation on the establishment of a management task force, including operating budget, as well as a budget for consultancies proposed in the study.

In March, the Board agreed⁽⁵⁹⁾ with the secretariat's intention to reallocate funds already approved for implementation of the review and requested it to elaborate further, taking into account the views of the Board members and the work plan for implementation of the review follow-up, and to submit it for the information and guidance of the Board. It called on the secretariat to redraft the terms of reference for further consultancies and decided to consider the question of the UNICEF mission, including emergencies, at its annual session.

In May, the Board had before it a report⁽⁶⁰⁾ outlining issues concerning the UNICEF mission and a further elaboration of the work plan for management reform activities,⁽⁶¹⁾ as requested in March. In September, it was provided with an update⁽⁶²⁾ on the process and projects for promoting management excellence in UNICEF, including a strategic work plan outlining the time-frame for key activities and interrelationships among projects.

The Board welcomed⁽⁶³⁾ the Executive Director's plan to ensure its continued full involvement in the follow-up to the management review, in particular by sharing relevant documentation on progress; providing regular updates on resources spent and/or allocated implementation; sharing the mission statement document with Board members when available; scheduling inter-sessional meetings and establishing a time-table; keeping the management review on the agenda for upcoming Board meetings; and submitting, through ACABQ, recommendations for implementation that affected policy, structure, financial and/or staffing and required Board approval. The Board requested a summary at its first regular 1996 session explaining the link between management review recommendations and the strategic approach being taken and follow-up action proposed, including a time-frame for decision-making by the Board and that all future progress reports make that link; that each recommendation emerging from the management reform process presented to the Board for approval include an analysis of implications for other follow-up to the management review and explain how it contributed to UNICEF carrying out its mandate; that management review's recommendations on Greeting Card and related Operations be considered in the follow-up exercise; and that, following the deliberations of management excellence project 3 (concerning relations with National Committees), any implications for the agreement between UNICEF and its National Committees be brought to the Board's attention.

In a September report,⁽⁶⁴⁾ ACABQ made a number of recommendations in respect of the UNICEF management study and stated that further elaboration was needed of the terms of reference of the implementation structure, particularly with regard to the roles of the Executive Board, the Executive Director and the Steering Committee. Also needed was further clarification as to the role of the task force established to deal with the management study, vis-a-vis the Steering Committee, as well as the indication as to how the interests of the field would be represented in the task force; high priority should be given to the recommendations in the management study on human resources management, and UNICEF should report to the Board on a strategy for implementing those recommendations; a full cost estimate and analysis of all expenditures related to the management review should be prepared for submission through ACABQ to the Board at its next session; and an item on implementation of the management study should be part of the Board's agenda on a regular basis. There should be a work plan on a phased completion of the study; proposals to be discussed by the Board should be grouped in a comprehensive report and should focus on one area or aspect of UNICEF management and operations; and proposals of the Executive Director should indicate how they related to the management study, or should be explained if they differed or were in addition to what was contained in the study.

Approval process for country programme recommendations

The UNICEF management review also considered ways to make the relationship between programming, countries and regions more effective, recommending more intense dedication to conceptual "product design", more integrated focus on field service delivery and more negotiation on programme and goals.

In February, the Executive Board decided⁽⁶⁵⁾ that the secretariat, in consultation with recipient Governments, should inform the Board at an early stage, through a brief country note, of its preliminary ideas regarding the mix and weight given in UNICEF country programmes to programme strategies and priorities, including a description of other activities within each sector explaining how UNICEF's proposals fit in with those, to be used as a basis for further discussion in the recipient country. The Board called on the UNICEF country-representative, in consultation with the recipient country and the UN resident coordinator, to organize periodic meetings to exchange views with the relevant partners on the status of country programmes in order to avoid duplication and strengthen mutual support. It requested the secretariat to submit a summary of the final country programme document for approval, not exceeding 15 pages and with a systematic presentation of strategy, inputs and outputs. Board approval would be given on a no-objection basis. Board members had to inform the secretariat before the meeting of any country programme they wished to have discussed by the Board. The Board requested the secretariat to submit a summary of the outcome of mid-term reviews and major evaluation reports, specifying, inter alia, results achieved, lessons learned and the need for adjustment in the country note. Those arrangements would take effect in 1996 and be reviewed in 1998.

Strengthening accountability and oversight

In May, the Executive Director reported to the Executive Board on the major findings of an internal audit investigation of the Kenya country office, which revealed a number of irregularities, mismanagement and fraud amounting to some $9 million. The investigation confirmed gross violations of UNICEF rules and regulations, lack of financial and administrative controls, and excessively high overheads, including the opening of seven sub-offices without budget approval. Eight staff members had been dismissed, 15 charged with serious misconduct and placed on suspension without pay and another charged with mismanagement.

The Board noted⁽⁶⁶⁾ the findings and welcomed the measures taken by the Executive Director and her statement to the Board on 25 May on immediate steps to strengthen accountability and financial procedures within the organization. It requested her to ensure that those measures would prevent any recurrence of fraud or mismanagement throughout UNICEF and to provide a further progress report in September on the situation in Kenya and the steps being taken to strengthen financial management, accountability and oversight.

In August, UNICEF presented an update⁽⁶⁷⁾ on the results of the audit of the Kenya country office and measures taken to prevent the recurrence of fraud and/or mismanagement. A new representative to Kenya, with a strong background in financial management and personnel administration, had been appointed to provide strong leadership needed to strengthen financial management and accountability and restore order to programme delivery. Recruitment for existing staff vacancies would be carried out, but in the interim, the staff of the Eastern and Southern Africa Regional Office and other offices would provide short-term support.

The third phase of the audit was completed in June/July. The audit team issued a management letter to the Kenya country office leadership formalizing recommendations for specific improvements. Of the 67 issues raised, one half had been successfully addressed and progress on the remaining areas of concern was being monitored by the Office of Internal Audit and supervised by the Executive Director. With the consolidation of the regular and the emergency programmes, staff had been reduced to 137 and that number was to reach 100 by December. Six sub-offices were closed, and the remaining one at Garissa would support the emergency programme in the north-east. Action was taken regarding the delegation of authority, financial monitoring and reconciliations, streamlining programme delivery, and cash and supply assistance.

In terms of strengthening financial control and accountability throughout UNICEF, several reform projects were underway, including the redefinition of a UNICEF mission statement as well as initiatives to define the accountability structure, build capacity for effective field management, develop an integrated strategy for relations with National Committees and a set of professional standards for staff. Division directors and heads of offices were required to give specific attention to the follow-up of audit recommendations and were to be held accountable for their implementation. Training packages were developed to give managers the capacity to undertake regular participatory self-audits within their offices. Training was being oriented towards building staff capacity at all levels to implement regulations and procedures for protecting assets and managing people, programmes and money on an ongoing basis. The management of emergency operations was also strengthened. Special attention was given to agreements with NGOs to ensure their conformity with the principles of the standard project agreement. The Executive Director continued to discuss with regional directors and other senior staff steps to strengthen the oversight role of regional offices and clarify lines of reporting and accountability.

In September, the Board requested⁽⁶⁸⁾ the secretariat to report at each of its sessions on all future audit activity in the Kenya office until the matter was resolved, and UNICEF to organize an in-country briefing with interested partners on the implications of the Kenya office incident for its Kenya programme. It took note⁽⁶⁹⁾ of the measures to strengthen financial control and accountability and called on the Executive Director to report on how internal controls were being addressed through the follow-up to the management review; how UNICEF could use reports on overcommitment and overspending to examine the causes and take appropriate action; and to consider the eligibility criteria for classification as NGOs and review their role in implementing UNICEF programmes.

In response to the Board's request, UNICEF submitted a November progress report⁽⁷⁰⁾ on the audit of the Kenya country office. According to the report, eight additional cases of fraud identified during the third phase of the audit investigation were under review by the Division of Personnel and the UN Office of Legal Affairs. A total of 23 staff had been charged with fraud, one with mismanagement and one with misconduct, bringing the total number involved to 25. As of 15 November, 21 staff had separated from UNICEF—17, including one representative, had been summarily dismissed, 3 had resigned and one had opted for early retirement. The ongoing management reforms in the Kenya country office were on course. At the end of the exercise, the various instructions and guidelines would be constituted into two internal control manuals (operations and programmes), which would form the basis for the day-to-day operations in the office. The Office of Internal Audit was asked to review the various instructions and guidelines and to suggest improvements. With the closure of the six sub-offices, the total staffing level had been reduced to 90. An Internal Control Panel had been approved and certifying, authorizing, approving and paying officials had received relevant guidelines. In other related action, the recovery of longstanding cash assistance advances to government counterparts and NGOs was being pursued and overpayment to suppliers followed up.

Reports and sessions

At a meeting in November 1994, UNICEF, UNDP, UNFPA and the World Food Programme (WFP) agreed to proceed on a common understanding with regard to the format and content of their annual reports. Earlier in the year, the Economic and Social Council had requested⁽⁷¹⁾ UN development funds and programmes to develop a common structure for their reports, as had the General Assembly in 1993.⁽⁷²⁾

In February 1995, the Executive Board decided⁽⁷³⁾ that one part of the annual report of the executive head of UNICEF to the Board would also be the report to the Council; that part would carry both Board and Council document symbols and contain the sections requested by the Council, namely, a section outlining measures taken to implement the provisions of the triennial policy review of operational activities and another on the activities and measures undertaken within the designated theme(s) for the high-level meeting of the Council's operational activities segment. The format of those two sections would be discussed with the Bureau of the Board, which at its annual session would consider them as distinct agenda items. The Board's comments and recommendations would be presented to the Council as part of the report on its annual session. The reports on the Board's sessions since July 1994 would be submitted to the Council at its 1995 substantive session, following the same procedure in 1994. A section summarizing the relevant recommendations of the Board would be included in the Secretary-General's annual report to the operational activities segment of the Council, as well as a short analytical overview of reports on the work of the funds and programmes, highlighting common themes, trends and problems.

In May, the Board took note⁽⁷⁴⁾ of the Executive Director's annual report to the Council⁽⁷⁵⁾ and decided to transmit it to the 1995 substantive session of the Council. The Council, by decision 1995/233 of 13 July, took note of UNICEF's annual report⁽⁷⁶⁾, which dealt with measures taken to implement the triennial policy review of operational activities and UNICEF follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX), as well as of the Board's report on its first and second regular sessions and its annual session of 1995.⁽⁷⁷⁾

Also in May, the Board requested⁽⁷⁸⁾ the secretariat to consider the format of future Board decisions in order to facilitate an effective and businesslike conduct of work and to make recommendations to the September 1995 session of the Board. In September, it agreed⁽⁷⁹⁾ on the allocation of items for its 1996 sessions.

Greeting Card Operation

In a financial report for the year ended 30 April 1995,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Executive Director stated that in 1994 the contribution of the Greeting Card Operation to UNICEF general resources was $144 million and 158 million cards were sold, 4 million more than in 1993. Gross proceeds increased from $138.1 million to $153.6 million over the same period.

In May 1995, the Executive Board took note⁽⁸¹⁾ of the Greeting Card and related Operations (GCO) provisional report for the period 1 May 1994-30 April 1995⁽⁸²⁾ and the GCO financial report and accounts for the year ended 30 April 1994.⁽⁸³⁾

Also in May, the Board approved⁽⁸⁴⁾ budgeted GCO expenditures totalling $87.1 million for the fiscal year 1 May 1995 to 30 April 1996 and noted that for 1995-1996, GCO net proceeds were budgeted at $234 million. The Board also approved the changes in posts as presented in the proposed budget for 1995,⁽⁸⁵⁾ with the exception of the proposed transfer of the Personnel Unit and no reduction in the number of posts. It renewed the Fund-raising Development Programme and the Market Development Programme, with $7 million and $4 million, respectively, for 1995. It authorized the expansion of the Central and Eastern European National Committees Development Programme to include the National Committees of Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Slovenia, and approved for that purpose a budget of $1.5 million, of which $0.2 million was for one-time investments. It noted the three different income statement formats presented by GCO and requested the Executive Director, in the interest of greater transparency and consistency, to use the income statement format as presented in the GCO work plan and budget⁽⁸⁵⁾ for all future GCO documents. The Board further decided that GCO should present a regional analysis of profitability, with recommendations, in its next work plan and budget and that it should no longer submit a provisional report. It further decided that the questions of moving the GCO Personnel Unit to the UNICEF Division of Personnel and of changing GCO's fiscal year from 1 May-

30 April to 1 January-31 December should be considered further by the Executive Director in the context of the UNICEF management review; and that a study, with recommendations, should be presented in the next GCO work plan, of the optimum structure and location of GCO, so as to reflect its main markets, business partners and areas of potential growth, not excluding the possibility of consolidating its staff in a single headquarters location.

As requested by the Executive Board in 1994,⁽⁸⁶⁾ UNICEF submitted an initial feasibility study⁽⁸⁷⁾ on developing a conference facility at UNICEF headquarters. The cost of constructing, furnishing and equipping such a facility were estimated at around $1.2 million, in addition to recurrent operating costs of $279,000 per year. At the current time, there was no source of funding for those costs, the report said. The United Nations could provide conference service staff for Executive Board meetings held at UNICEF headquarters, but the size of Labouisse Hall would limit participation of observer delegations. If the conference facility was not constructed, UNICEF would be able to use the United Nations conference facilities; with UNICEF, UNDP and Buildings Management Services reaching agreement on a minimal readjustment of the Economic and Social Council chamber, it would suit better the requirements of UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF.

In February, the Executive Director informed the Board that Sweden, on behalf of the Nordic countries, had notified UNICEF that they would provide $1.2 million to cover the installation costs of conference facilities at UNICEF headquarters premises. The Board decided⁽⁸⁸⁾ to take a decision on the subject at a later date.

ACABQ, in a September report,⁽⁸⁵⁾ invited the Executive Board to request UNICEF to continue its negotiations with the UN Secretariat to obtain those conference-facilities within the UN premises identified by the Board to meet its specific requirements.

Joint committees

At its thirtieth session (Geneva, 30-31 January 1995), the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy (JCHP) reviewed⁽⁸⁹⁾ WHO policies and UNICEF decisions on the health of women and children, as well as the health goals established by the 1990 World Summit for Children. The Joint Committee made recommendations on immunization coverage, neonatal tetanus, measles, and poliomyelitis; oral rehydration therapy, and diarrhoeal case management; breast-feeding, iodine deficiency disorders, vitamin A deficiency and the reduction of malnutrition; dracunculiasis (guinea-worm transmission); water and sanitation; HIV/AIDS-related preventive practices; reduction of maternal and infant mortality rates and of iron deficiency anaemia; and acute respiratory infections. It also discussed health systems development in a decentralizing situation: options for improving district health systems, and complementarity of UNICEF and WHO in emergency situations, with particular reference to women and children.

In March, the Executive Board took note⁽⁹⁰⁾ of the report and its recommendations. It requested the UNICEF secretariat to consult on the draft UNICEF health strategy document (see above and PART FOUR, Chapter XIII) with concerned parties such as JCHP, WHO, the World Bank, UNFPA and others, for submission to the Board and in order to promote its implementation at the country level.

In February, the Board considered the mechanisms for the review and implementation of future recommendations of JCHP and the UNESCO/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education (JEC). The Board decided⁽⁹¹⁾ that in order to be more involved in the work of the joint committees, the draft agendas of the two bodies should be submitted to its representatives on the committees for their comments and approval; consultations should be institutionalized between the UNICEF secretariat and the Board representatives on the joint committees regarding agenda, issues and desired outcome; the President of the Board should present the report of the relevant joint committee to the Board, outlining the issues raised, the recommendations made and their context, and the future implications of those recommendations.

Also in February, the Board elected⁽⁹²⁾ the members and alternates to JEC from the African, Asian, Central and Eastern European, and the Western European and Others groups of States, and agreed that the Latin American and Caribbean group of States would advise the Board of its nominees at a later date. In May, it elected⁽⁹³⁾ the members and alternates from the latter group.

Fiftieth anniversary of UNICEF

In a November 1995 report,⁽⁹⁴⁾ UNICEF outlined activities planned to commemorate its fiftieth anniversary in 1996. Under the overall theme "Children First", its offices around the world worked in consultation with other UN agencies and offices, Governments and UNICEF partners to develop regional and country-level anniversary activities. No global-level anniversary activities were planned, but UNICEF regional offices planned for ministerial-level conferences to review progress on regional priorities, as well as for interregional meetings of experts and professionals on education, children in especially difficult circumstances and child rights. UNICEF country offices made the acceleration of mobilization and advocacy efforts to achieve country-specific goals a central priority for the anniversary year. In 14 countries around the world, where children were affected by civil strife and war, they developed plans to accelerate programmes, thus generating global media exposure in concert with the 1996 Olympic Games and bringing public attention and support to the plight of those children. Activities were being organized by the National Committees and at headquarters, including a global advertising campaign to give additional fund-raising support to country-level efforts. Four special greeting card sets and anniversary-related products had been produced and support was given to private sector fund-raising initiatives both globally and at the country-level.

Youth

In an April 1995 report,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General presented to the Commission on Social Development a draft world programme of action for youth to the year 2000 and beyond, pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly resolution.⁽²⁾ The draft was prepared on the basis of replies received from Governments, United Nations bodies and organizations, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental youth and youth-related organizations. The draft programme contained a statement of purpose, described the development setting, outlined strategies and policy specifics and identified priority areas and means of implementation at the national, regional and international levels.

The Commission at its April session adopted a resolution⁽³⁾ on the tenth anniversary of the International Youth Year, recommending that the Economic and Social Council establish an open-ended working group to complete formulation of the draft programme of action.

In May, the Chairman of the Commission, on behalf of the Bureau, submitted to the Council a revised version⁽⁴⁾ of the resolution and informed the Council that the Commission's Working Group on Youth had presented a revised text of the draft programme. The Commission recommended that the Council authorize the Working Group to formulate a final draft programme, for submission to the Council's 1995 resumed substantive session.

Following the Commission's recommendation, the Council, by decision 1995/251 of 24 July, established an open-ended working group during its resumed substantive session, building on the process achieved by the Commission's Working Group, to complete formulation of the draft programme.

By an October note,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretariat submitted to the Council the final draft of the world programme of action. The Council adopted it by resolution 1995/64. In November, the Secretary-General transmitted⁽⁶⁾ to the General Assembly a draft resolution on the programme, recommended by the Council for adoption by the Assembly. The Assembly acted on it by adopting resolution 50/81 (see below).

Preamble

1. The decade since the observance of International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace has been a period during which the world experienced fundamental political, economic and sociocultural changes. These changes will inevitably affect at least the first decade of the twenty-first century as well.

2. Young people represent agents, beneficiaries and victims of major societal changes and are generally confronted by a paradox: to seek to be integrated into an existing order or to serve as a force to transform that order. Young people in all parts of the world, living in countries at different stages of development and in different socio-economic settings, aspire to full participation in the life of society.

Statement of purpose

3. The World Programme of Action for Youth provides a policy framework and practical guidelines for national action and international support to improve the situation of young people. It contains proposals for action to the year 2000 and beyond, aiming at achieving the objectives of the International Youth Year and at fostering conditions and mechanisms to promote improved well-being and livelihood among young people.

4. The Programme of Action focuses in particular on measures to strengthen national capacities in the field of youth and to increase the quality and quantity of opportunities available to young people for full, effective and constructive participation in society.

I. United Nations Declaration of Intent on Youth: problems and potentials

5. The States Members of the United Nations have agreed to work towards achievement of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, inter alia, the promotion of higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development. Young people in all parts of the world, living in countries at different stages of development and in different socio-economic situations, aspire to full participation in the life of society, as provided in the Charter, including:

- (a) Attainment of an educational level commensurate with their aspirations;
- (b) Access to employment opportunities equal to their abilities;
- (c) Food and nutrition adequate for full participation in the life of society;
- (d) A physical and social environment that promotes good health, offers protection from disease and addiction and is free from all types of violence;
- (e) Human rights and fundamental freedoms without distinction as to race, sex, language, religion or any other forms of discrimination;
- (f) Participation in decision-making processes;
- (g) Places and facilities for cultural, recreational and sports activities to improve the living standards of young people in both rural and urban areas.

6. While the peoples of the United Nations, through their Governments, international organizations and voluntary associations, have done much to ensure that these aspirations may be achieved, including efforts to implement the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth endorsed by the General Assembly in 1985, it is apparent that the changing world social, economic and political situation has created the following conditions that have made this goal more difficult to achieve in many countries:

- (a) Claims on the physical and financial resources of States, which have reduced the resources available for youth programmes and activities, particularly in heavily indebted countries;
- (b) Inequities in social, economic and political conditions, including racism and xenophobia, which lead to increasing hunger, deterioration in living conditions and poverty among youth and to their marginalization as refugees, displaced persons and migrants;
- (c) Increasing difficulty for young people returning from armed conflict and confrontation in integrating into the community and gaining access to education and employment;
- (d) Continuing discrimination against young women and insufficient access for young women to equal opportunities in employment and education;
- (e) High levels of youth unemployment, including long-term unemployment;
- (f) Continuing deterioration of the global environment resulting from unsustainable patterns of consumption and production, particularly in industrialized countries, which is a matter of grave concern, aggravating poverty and imbalances;

(g) Increasing incidence of diseases, such as malaria, the human immunodeficiency virus and the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), and other threats to health, such as substance abuse and psychotropic substance addiction, smoking and alcoholism;

(h) Inadequate opportunities for vocational education and training, especially for persons with disabilities;

(i) Changes in the role of the family as a vehicle for shared responsibility and socialization of youth;

(j) Lack of opportunity for young people to participate in the life of society and contribute to its development and well-being;

(k) Prevalence of debilitating disease, hunger and malnutrition that engulfs the life of many young people;

(l) Increasing difficulty for young people to receive family life education as a basis for forming healthy families that foster sharing of responsibilities.

7. These phenomena, among others, contribute to the increased marginalization of young people from the larger society, which is dependent on youth for its continual renewal.

8. We, the peoples of the United Nations, believe that the following principles, aimed at ensuring the well-being of young women and men and their full and active participation in the society in which they live, are fundamental to the implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond:

(a) Every State should provide its young people with opportunities for obtaining education, for acquiring skills and for participating fully in all aspects of society, with a view to, inter alia, acquiring productive employment and leading self-sufficient lives;

(b) Every State should guarantee to all young people the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and other international instruments related to human rights;

(c) Every State should take all necessary measures to eliminate all forms of discrimination against young women and girls and remove all obstacles to gender equality and the advancement and empowerment of women and should ensure full and equal access to education and employment for girls and young women;

(d) Every State should foster mutual respect, tolerance and understanding among young people with different racial, cultural and religious backgrounds;

(e) Every State should endeavour to ensure that its policies relating to young people are informed by accurate data on their situation and needs, and that the public has access to such data to enable it to participate in a meaningful fashion in the decision-making process;

(f) Every State is encouraged to promote education and action aimed at fostering among youth a spirit of peace, cooperation and mutual respect and understanding between nations;

(g) Every State should meet the special needs of young people in the areas of responsible family-planning practice, family life, sexual and reproductive health, sexually transmitted diseases, HIV infection and AIDS prevention, consistent with the Programme of Action adopted by the International Conference on Population and Development in September 1994, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Summit for Social Development in March 1995, and the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women in September 1995;

(h) Environmental protection, promotion and enhancement are among the issues considered by young people to be of prime importance to the future welfare of society. States should therefore actively encourage young people and youth organizations to participate actively in programmes, including educational programmes, and actions designed to protect, promote and enhance the environment;

(i) Every State should take measures to develop the possibilities of education and employment of young people with disabilities;

(j) Every State should take measures to improve the situation of young people living in particularly difficult conditions, including by protecting their rights;

(k) Every State should promote the goal of full employment as a basic priority of its economic and social policies, giving special attention to youth employment. They should also take measures to eliminate the economic exploitation of children;

(l) Every State should provide young people with the health services necessary to ensure their physical and mental well-being, including measures to combat diseases such as malaria and HIV/AIDS, and to protect them from harmful drugs and the effects of addiction to drugs, tobacco and alcohol;

(m) Every State should place people at the centre of development and should direct their economies to meet human needs more effectively and to ensure that young people are active participants and beneficiaries in the process of development.

II. Development setting

9. In 1995, the world youth population—defined by the United Nations as the age cohort 15-24—is estimated to be 1.03 billion, or 18 per cent of the total world population. The majority of the world youth population (84 per cent in 1995) lives in developing countries. This figure is projected to increase to 89 per cent by 2025. The difficult circumstances that people experience in many developing countries are often even more difficult for young people because of limited opportunities for education and training, viable employment and health and social services, and because of a growing incidence of substance abuse and juvenile delinquency. Many developing countries are also experiencing unprecedented rates of rural-urban migration by young people.

10. Apart from the statistical definition of the term "youth" mentioned above, the meaning of the term "youth" varies in different societies around the world. Definitions of youth have changed continuously in response to fluctuating political, economic and sociocultural circumstances.

11. Young people in industrialized countries comprise a relatively smaller proportion of the total population because of generally lower birth rates and longer life expectancy. They comprise a social group that faces particular problems and uncertainties regarding its future, problems that relate in part to limited opportunities for appropriate employment.

12. Young people in all countries are both a major human resource for development and key agents for social change, economic development and technological innovation. Their imagination, ideals, considerable energies and vision are essential for the continuing development of the societies in which they live. Thus, there is special need for new impetus to be given to the design and implementation of youth policies and programmes at all levels. The ways in which the challenges and potentials of young people are addressed by policy will influence current social and economic conditions and the well-being and livelihood of future generations.

III. Strategies and policy specifics

13. In 1965, in resolution 2037(XX), the General Assembly endorsed the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples. From 1965 to 1975, both the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council emphasized three basic themes in the field of youth: participation, development and peace. The need for an international policy on youth was emphasized as well. In 1979, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/151, designated 1985 as International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace. In 1985, by resolution 40/14, the Assembly endorsed the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth. The guidelines are significant for their focus on young people as a broad category comprising various subgroups, rather than a single demographic entity. They provide proposals for specific measures to address the needs of subgroups such as young people with disabilities, rural and urban youth and young women.

14. The themes identified by the General Assembly for International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace reflect a predominant concern of the international community with distributive justice, popular participation and quality of life. These were reflected in the guidelines, and they represent overall themes of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond as well.

15. The Programme of Action also builds upon other, recent international instruments, including the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women.

16. The Programme of Action is drawn from these international instruments generally and specifically related to youth policies and programmes. The Programme of Action is significant because it provides a cross-sectoral standard relating to both policy-making and programme design and delivery. It will serve as a model for integrated actions, at all levels, to address more effectively problems experienced by young people in various conditions and to enhance their participation in society.

17. The Programme of Action is divided into three phases: the first phase focused on analysis and on drafting the Programme of Action and on its adoption by the General Assembly at its fiftieth session, in 1995; the second phase is concerned with worldwide implementation of the Programme of Action to the year 2000; the third phase, covering the period 2001 to 2010, will focus on further implementation and evaluation of progress made and obstacles encountered; it will suggest appropriate adjustments to long-term objectives and specific measures to improve the situation of young people in the societies in which they live.

IV. Priority areas

18. Each of the ten priority areas identified by the international community is presented in terms of principal issues, specific objectives and the actions proposed to be taken by various actors to achieve those objectives. Objectives and actions reflect the three themes of International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace; they are interlinked and mutually reinforcing.

19. The ten fields of action identified by the international community are education, employment, hunger and poverty, health, environment, drug abuse, juvenile delinquency, leisure-time activities, girls and young women and the full and effective participation of youth in the life of society and in decision-making. The Programme of Action does not exclude the possibility of new priorities which may be identified in the future.

20. Implementation of the Programme of Action requires the full enjoyment by young people of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and also requires that Governments take effective action against violations of these rights and freedoms and promote non-discrimination, tolerance, respect for diversity, with full respect for various religious and ethical values, cultural backgrounds and philosophical convictions of their young people, equality of opportunity, solidarity, security and participation of all young women and men.

A. Education

21. Although progress towards universal basic education, beginning with literacy, has been impressive in recent times, the number of illiterate people will continue to grow and many developing countries are likely to fall short of universal primary education by the year 2000. Three main concerns regarding current systems of education may be expressed. The first is the inability of many parents in developing countries to send their children to schools because of local economic and social conditions. The second concerns the paucity of educational opportunities for girls and young women, migrants, refugees, displaced persons, street children, indigenous youth minorities, young people in rural areas and young people with disabilities. The third concerns the quality of education, its relevance to employment and its usefulness in assisting young people in the transition to full adulthood, active citizenship and productive and gainful employment.

22. To encourage the development of educational and training systems more in line with the current and future needs of young people and their societies, it would be helpful to share experience and to investigate alternative arrangements, such as informal arrangements for the provision of basic literacy, job skills training and life-long education.

23. Opportunities for young people to pursue advanced or university education, engage in research or be trained for self-employment should be expanded in developing countries. Given the economic problems faced by such countries and the inadequacy of international assistance in this area, it is difficult to provide appropriate training for all young people, even though they are a country's chief economic asset.

24. Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations are called upon to assist young people from developing countries to obtain education and training at all levels in developed as well as in developing countries, as well as to participate in mutual academic exchanges among developing countries.

Proposals for action

1. Improving the level of basic education, skill training and literacy among youth

25. Priority should be given to achieving the goal of ensuring basic education for all (beginning with literacy), mobilizing for that purpose all channels, agents and forms of education and training, in line with the concept of lifelong education. Special emphasis should also be given to the reform of education content and curricula, especially curricula that reinforce traditional female roles which deny women opportunities for full and equal partnership in society, at all levels, focusing on scientific literacy, moral values and learning of skills, adapted to the changing environment and to life in multi-ethnic and multicultural societies. The importance of the development of information skills, that is, skills for researching, accessing and using information, and informatics should be emphasized, along with the importance of distance education. Non-governmental youth organizations and educational organizations should develop youth-to-youth programmes for basic education, skills training and literacy. Consideration should be given to developing programmes enabling retired and elderly people to teach literacy to young people. Particular attention should be given to specific groups of youth in distressed circumstances, including indigenous, migrant and refugee youth, displaced persons, street children and poor youth in urban and rural areas, as well as to special problems, including literacy problems, for blind youth and youth with other disabilities.

2. Cultural heritage and contemporary patterns of society

26. Governments should establish or strengthen programmes to educate young people in the cultural heritage of their own and other societies and the world. Governments should institute, in cooperation with non-governmental youth organizations, travel and exchange programmes and youth camps to help youth understand cultural diversity at both the national and international levels, develop intercultural learning skills and participate in the preservation of the cultural heritage of their own and other societies and the world around them. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in cooperation with interested Governments and non-governmental organizations, is requested to expand international programmes, such as youth camps, by which young people, particularly those from developing countries, with different cultures, may help restore major international cultural sites and engage in other cultural activities.

3. Promoting mutual respect and understanding and the ideals of peace, solidarity and tolerance among youth

27. Programmes aimed at learning peacemaking and conflict resolution should be encouraged and designed by Governments and educational institutions for introduction to schools at all levels. Children and youth should be informed of cultural differences in their own societies and given opportunities to learn about different cultures as well as tolerance and mutual respect for cultural and religious diversity. Governments and educational institutions should formulate and implement educational programmes which promote and strengthen respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms and enhance the values of peace, solidarity, tolerance, responsibility and respect for the diversity and rights of others.

4. Vocational and professional training

28. Governments and educational institutions, in cooperation with regional and international organizations, could establish or enhance vocational and technical training relevant to current and prospective employment conditions. Youth must be given the opportunity to access vocational and professional training and apprenticeship programmes that help them acquire entry-level jobs with growth opportunities and the ability to adjust to changes in labour demand.

5. Promoting human rights education

29. Governments should ensure that the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, which began in 1995, is adequately observed in schools and educational institutions. In order to make youth aware of their civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, as well as their societal responsibilities, and in order to develop harmonious intercommunity relations, mutual tolerance and respect, equality between women and men, and tolerance for diversity, Governments should develop human rights education strategies targeted at youth, taking particular account of the human rights of women.

6. Training for enterprise programmes

30. Governments, in cooperation with regional and international organizations, should formulate model training programmes for youth in individual and cooperative enterprises. They are encouraged to establish self-contained enterprise centres where young people may plan and test their enterprise venture concepts.

7. Infrastructure for training youth workers and youth leaders

31. Governments should assess the adequacy of facilities and programmes to train youth workers and youth leaders, including the adequacy of curricula and staff resources. On the basis of such assessments, Governments should plan and implement relevant training programmes. Non-governmental youth organizations should be encouraged and assisted in formulating and disseminating model training courses for use by member organizations.

32. Interested organizations should investigate possibilities of strengthening international youth worker and youth leadership training, with priority given to accepting participants from developing countries. In cooperation with concerned organizations that provide training opportunities for youth, including internships and volunteer programmes, establishment of an inventory of such programmes could also be explored.

B. Employment

33. Unemployment and underemployment among youth is a problem everywhere. It is, indeed, part of the larger struggle to create employment opportunities for all citizens. The problem has worsened in recent years because of the global recession which has affected developing countries the most seriously. The disturbing fact is that economic growth is not always accompanied by growth in employment. The difficulty of finding suitable employment is compounded by a host of other problems confronting young people, including illiteracy and insufficient training, and is worsened by periods of world economic slow-down and by overall changing economic trends. In some countries, the influx of young people into the employment market has brought with it acute problems. According to estimates of the International Labour Organization, more than one hundred million new jobs would have to be created within the next twenty years in order to provide suitable employment for the growing number of young people in the economically active populations of developing countries. The situation of girls and young women, as well as of young people with disabilities, refugee youth, displaced persons, street children, indigenous youth, migrant youth and minorities, warrants urgent attention, bearing in mind the prohibition of forced labour and child labour.

34. The crisis of youth unemployment deprives young people of the opportunity to secure independent housing or the accommodations necessary for the establishment of families and participation in the life of society. Advances in technology and communications, coupled with improved productivity, have imposed new challenges as well as new opportunities for employment. Young people are among the most severely affected by these developments. If effective solutions are not found, the cost to society will be much higher in the long run. Unemployment creates a wide range of social ills and young people are particularly susceptible to its damaging effects: the lack of skills, low self-esteem, marginalization, impoverishment and the wasting of an enormous human resource.

1. Opportunities for self-employment

35. Governments and organizations should create or promote grant schemes to provide seed money to encourage and support enterprise and employment programmes for young people. Businesses and enterprises could be encouraged to provide counterpart financial and technical support for such schemes. Cooperative schemes involving young people in production and marketing of goods and services could be considered. The formation of youth development banks could be considered. The Committee for the Promotion and Advancement of Cooperatives is encouraged to develop models for cooperatives run by youth in developed and developing countries. Such models could include guidelines for management training and training in entrepreneurial techniques and marketing.

2. Employment opportunities for specific groups of young people

36. Within funds designated to promote youth employment, Governments should, as appropriate, designate resources for programmes supporting the efforts of young women, young people with disabilities, youth returning from military service, migrant youth, refugee youth, displaced persons, street children and indigenous youth. Youth organizations and young people themselves should be directly involved in the planning and implementation of these programmes.

3. Voluntary community services involving youth

37. Where they do not already exist, Governments should consider the establishment of voluntary service programmes for youth. Such programmes could provide alternatives to military service, or might constitute a required element in educational curricula, depending on national policies and priorities. Youth camps, community service projects, environmental protection and inter-generational cooperation programmes should be included among the opportunities offered. Youth organizations should be directly involved in designing, planning, implementing and evaluating such voluntary service programmes. In addition, international cooperation programmes organized between youth organizations in developed and developing countries should be included to promote intercultural understanding and development training.

4. Needs created by technological changes

38. Governments, in particular those of developed countries, should encourage the creation of employment opportunities for young people in fields that are rapidly evolving as a result of technological innovation. A subset of the employment data compiled by Governments should track the employment of youth into those fields marked by newly emerging technologies. Measures should be taken to provide ongoing training for youth in this area.

39. Special attention should be paid to developing and disseminating approaches that promote flexibility in training systems and collaboration between training institutions and employers, especially for young people in high-technology industries.

C. Hunger and poverty

40. Over one billion people in the world today live in unacceptable conditions of poverty, mostly in developing countries, particularly in rural areas of low-income countries in Asia and the Pacific, Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean and the least developed countries. Poverty has various manifestations; hunger and malnutrition; ill health; limited or lack of access to education and other basic services; increased morbidity and mortality from illness; homelessness and inadequate housing; unsafe environments; and social discrimination and exclusion; it is also characterized by a lack of participation in decision-making and in civil and sociocultural life. Poverty is inseparably linked to lack of access to or loss of control over resources, including land, skills, knowledge, capital and social connections. Without those resources, people have limited access to institutions, markets, employment and public services. Young people are particularly affected by this situation. Therefore, specific measures are needed to address the juvenilization and feminization of poverty.

41. Hunger and malnutrition remain among the most serious and intractable threats to humanity, often preventing youth and children from taking part in society. Hunger is the result of many factors: mismanagement of food production and distribution; poor accessibility; maldistribution of financial resources; unwise exploitation of natural resources; unsustainable patterns of consumption; environmental pollution; natural and human-made disasters; conflicts between traditional and contemporary production systems; irrational population growth; and armed conflicts.

1. Making farming more rewarding and life in agricultural areas more attractive

42. Governments should enhance educational and cultural services and other incentives in rural areas to make them more attractive to young people. Experimental farming programmes directed towards young people should be initiated and extension services expanded to maintain improvements in agricultural production and marketing.

43. Local and national Governments, in cooperation with youth organizations, should organize cultural events that enhance exchanges between urban and rural youth. Youth organizations should be encouraged and assisted in organizing conventions and meetings in rural areas, with special efforts to enlist the cooperation of rural populations, including rural youth.

2. Skill-training for income-generation by young people

44. Governments, in cooperation with youth organizations, should develop training programmes for youth which improve methods of agricultural production and marketing. Training should be based on rural economic needs and the need to train young people in rural areas in techniques of food production and the achievement of food security. Attention should be given in such programmes to young women, youth retention in rural areas, youth returning to rural areas from the cities, young people with disabilities, refugee and migrant youth, displaced persons and street children, indigenous youth, youth returning from military service and youth living in areas of resolved conflicts.

3. Land grants for young people

45. Governments should provide grants of land to youth and youth organizations, supported by financial and technical assistance and training. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Labour Organization are invited to document and disseminate information about national experience with land-grant and settlement schemes for use by Governments.

46. Governments, consistent with their rural development schemes and with the assistance of international organizations, as appropriate, are encouraged to work with volunteer youth organizations on projects which enhance and maintain the rural and urban environments.

4. Cooperation between urban and rural youth in food production and distribution

47. Non-governmental organizations should organize direct-marketing groups, including production and distribution cooperatives, to improve current marketing systems and to ensure that young farmers have access to them. The aim of such groups should be to reduce food shortages and losses from defective systems of food storage and transport to markets.

D. Health

48. Young people in some parts of the world suffer from poor health as a result of societal conditions, including such factors as customary attitudes and harmful traditional practices, and, in some cases, as a result of their own actions. Poor health is often caused by an unhealthy environment, by missing support systems in everyday life for health-promoting patterns of behaviour, by lack of information and by inadequate or inappropriate health services. Problems include the lack of a safe and sanitary living environment, malnutrition, the risk of infectious, parasitic and water-borne diseases, the growing consumption of tobacco, alcohol and drugs, and unwarranted risk-taking and destructive activity, resulting in unintentional injuries.

49. The reproductive health needs of adolescents have been largely ignored. In many countries, there is a lack of information and services available to adolescents to help them understand their sexuality, including sexual and reproductive health, and to protect them from unwanted pregnancies and sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS.

Proposals for action

1. Provision of basic health services

50. All young people should have access to basic health services in the interest of all and of society as a whole. It is the indispensable responsibility of each Government to mobilize the necessary awareness, resources and channels. These measures should be supported by a favourable international economic environment and by cooperation.

51. Efforts should be expedited to achieve the goals of national health-for-all strategies, based on equality and social justice, in line with the Declaration of Alma Ata on primary health care adopted on 12 September 1978 by the International Conference on Primary Health Care, by developing or updating country action plans or programmes to ensure universal, non-discriminatory access to basic health services, including sanitation and drinking water, to protect health, and to promote nutrition education and preventive health programmes.

52. Support should be provided for stronger, better-coordinated global actions against major diseases which take a heavy toll of human lives, such as malaria, tuberculosis, cholera, typhoid fever and HIV/AIDS; in this context, support should be continued for the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS).

53. Poor health is often caused by lack of information and lack of health services for youth, mostly in developing countries. The resulting problems are, among others, sexually transmitted diseases, including infection with HIV; early pregnancies; lack of hygiene and sanitation, leading to infection, infestation and diarrhoea; genetic and congenital diseases; psychological and mental diseases; narcotic and psychotropic drug abuse; misuse of alcohol and tobacco; unwarranted risk-taking and destructive activity, resulting in unintentional injuries; malnutrition; and poor spacing of births.

2. Development of health education

54. Governments should include, in the curricula of educational institutions at the primary and secondary levels, programmes focusing on primary health knowledge and practices. Particular emphasis should be placed on the understanding of basic hygiene requirements and the need to develop and sustain a healthy environment. These programmes need to be developed in full awareness of the needs and priorities of young people and with their involvement.

55. Cooperation among Governments and educational and health institutions should be encouraged in order to promote personal responsibility for a healthy lifestyle and provide the knowledge and skills necessary to adopt a healthy lifestyle, including teaching the legal, social and health consequences of behaviour that poses health risks.

3. Promotion of health services, including sexual and reproductive health and development of relevant education programmes in those fields

56. Governments, with the involvement of youth and other relevant organizations, should ensure the implementation of the commitments made in the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, as established in the report of that Conference, in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and in the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, as well as in the relevant human rights instruments, to meet the health needs of youth. The United Nations Population Fund and other interested United Nations organizations should continue to take effective steps on these issues. The reproductive health needs of adolescents as a group have been largely ignored to date by existing reproductive health services. The response of societies to the reproductive health needs of adolescents should be based on information that helps them attain a level of maturity required to make responsible decisions. In particular, information and services should be made available to adolescents to help them understand their sexuality and protect them from unwanted pregnancies, sexually transmitted diseases and the subsequent risk of infertility. This should be combined with the education of young men to respect women's self-determination and to share responsibility with women in matters of sexuality and reproduction. This effort is uniquely important for the health of young women and their children, for women's self-determination and, in many countries, for efforts to slow the momentum of population growth. Motherhood at a very young age entails a risk of maternal death that is much greater than average, and the children of young mothers have higher levels of morbidity and mortality. Early child-bearing continues to be an impediment to improvements in the educational, economic and social status of women in all parts of the world. Overall for young women, early marriage and early motherhood can severely curtail educational and employment opportunities and are likely to have a long-term adverse impact on the quality of life of young women and their children.

57. Governments should develop comprehensive sexual and reproductive health-care services and provide young people with access to those services including, inter alia, education and services in family planning consistent with the results of the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women. The United Nations Population Fund and other interested United Nations organizations are to be encouraged to continue assigning high priority to promoting adolescent reproductive health.

4. HIV infection and AIDS among young people

58. Governments should develop accessible, available and affordable primary health care services of high quality, including sexual and reproductive health care, as well as education programmes, including those related to sexually transmitted disease, including HIV/AIDS, for youth. Continued international cooperation and collective global efforts are necessary for the containment of HIV/AIDS.

5. Promotion of good sanitation and hygiene practices

59. Governments, in cooperation with youth and volunteer organizations, should promote the establishment of youth health associations to promote good sanitation and hygiene programmes.

6. Prevention of disease and illness among youth resulting from poor health practices

60. Governments, in cooperation with youth organizations, should promote healthier lifestyles and, in this context, should investigate the possibility of adopting policies for discouraging drug, tobacco and alcohol abuse, including possibly banning the advertisement of tobacco and alcohol. They should also undertake programmes to inform young people about the adverse effects of drug and alcohol abuse and tobacco addiction.

61. Programmes should be instituted, with the appropriate assistance of the United Nations bodies and organizations concerned, to train medical, paramedical, educational and youth work personnel in health issues of particular concern to young people, including healthy lifestyles. Research into such issues should be promoted, particularly research into the effects and treatment of drug abuse and addiction. Youth organizations should be enlisted in these efforts.

7. Elimination of sexual abuse of young people

62. As recommended by the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women, and bearing in mind that young women are specially vulnerable, Governments should cooperate at the international level and take effective steps, including specific preventive measures to protect children, adolescents and youth from neglect, abandonment and all types of exploitation and abuse, such as abduction, rape and incest, pornography, trafficking and acts of paedophilia, as well as from commercial sexual exploitation resulting from pornography and prostitution. Governments should enact and enforce legislation prohibiting female genital mutilation wherever it exists and give vigorous support to efforts among non-governmental and community organizations and religious institutions to eliminate such practices.

8. Combating malnutrition among young people

63. Governments should promote post-primary-school and out-of-school health projects by individuals and youth organizations, emphasizing information on healthy eating practices. School lunch programmes, provision of food supplements and similar services should be available whenever possible to help ensure a proper diet for young people.

E. Environment

64. The deterioration of the natural environment is one of the principal concerns of young people worldwide as it has direct implications for their well-being both now and in the future. The natural environment must be maintained and preserved for both present and future generations. The causes of environmental degradation must be addressed. The environmentally friendly use of natural resources and environmentally sustainable economic growth will improve human life. Sustainable development has become a key element in the programmes of youth organizations throughout the world. While every segment of society is responsible for maintaining the environmental integrity of the community, young people have a special interest in maintaining a healthy environment because they will be the ones to inherit it.

Proposals for action

1. Integration of environmental education and training into education and training programmes

65. Emphasis should be given in school curricula to environmental education. Training programmes should be provided to inform teachers of the environmental aspects of their subject-matter and to enable them to educate youth concerning environmentally friendly habits.

66. The participation of youth groups in gathering environmental data and in understanding ecological systems and actual environmental action should be encouraged as a means of improving both their knowledge of the environment and their personal engagement in caring for the environment.

2. Facilitating the international dissemination of information on environmental issues to, and the use of environmentally sound technologies by, youth

67. The United Nations Environment Programme, in cooperation with Governments and non-governmental youth organizations, is invited to intensify production of information materials illustrating the global dimension, its origins and the interrelated effects of environmental degradation, describing the outcome of initiatives undertaken in developing and developed countries as well as countries with economies in transition. The United Nations Environment Programme is requested to continue its efforts to disseminate information to and exchange information with youth organizations. Governments should encourage and assist youth organizations to initiate and develop youth-to-youth contacts through town-twinning and similar programmes in order to share the experience gained in different countries.

68. Relevant United Nations organizations and institutions and Governments of technologically advanced countries are encouraged to help spread the use of environmentally sound technologies in developing countries and in countries with economies in transition and to train youth in making use of such technologies in protecting and conserving the environment.

3. Strengthening participation of youth in the protection, preservation and improvement of the environment

69. Governments and youth organizations should initiate programmes to promote participation in tree planting, forestry, combating desert creep, waste reduction, recycling and other sound environmental practices. The participation of young people and their organizations in such programmes can provide good training and encourage awareness and action. Waste management programmes may represent potential income-generating activities which provide opportunities for employment.

70. As recognized by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the involvement of youth in environment and development decision-making is critical to the implementation of policies of sustainable development. Young people should be involved in designing and implementing appropriate environmental policies.

4. Enhancing the role of the media as a tool for widespread dissemination of environmental issues to youth

71. Governments should, to the extent consistent with freedom of expression, encourage the media and advertising agencies to develop programmes to ensure widespread dissemination of information on environmental issues in order to continue to raise awareness thereof among youth.

72. Governments should establish procedures allowing for consultation and possible participation of youth of both genders in decision-making processes with regard to the environment, at the local, national and regional levels.

F. Drug abuse

73. The vulnerability of young people to drug abuse has in recent years become a major concern. The consequences of widespread drug abuse and trafficking, particularly for young men and women, are all too apparent. Violence, particularly street violence, often results from drug abuse and illicit drug networks.

74. As the number of psychotropic drugs increases steadily and their effects and appropriate prescriptive uses are often not fully known, some patients may not be adequately treated and others may become over-medicated. Abuse of prescription drugs and self-medication with tranquilizers, sleeping-pills and stimulants can also create serious problems, particularly in countries and regions where distribution controls are weak and habit-forming drugs are purchased abroad or diverted from licit channels of distribution. In this context, the vulnerability of young people raises a particular problem and specific measures are therefore needed.

75. The international community places particular emphasis on reducing the demand for and supply of illegal drugs and preventing abuse. Supply reduction includes combating international illicit drug trafficking. Drug abuse prevention initiatives range from discouraging people from taking drugs, thus preventing involuntary addiction, to helping those who are abusing drugs to stop doing so. Treatment programmes need to recognize that drug abuse is a chronic relapsing condition. It is essential for programmes to be adapted to the social and cultural context and for there to be effective cooperation between various approaches to treatment. To this end, national initiatives and measures to combat illicit drug trafficking should be fully supported and reinforced at the regional and international levels.

76. Drug control strategies at the national and international levels consistently emphasize initiatives aimed at reducing drug abuse among young people. This is reflected in the resolutions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and in the demand reduction programmes of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme.

1. Participation of youth organizations and youth in demand reduction programmes for young people

77. To be effective, demand reduction programmes should be targeted at all young people, particularly those at risk, and the content of the programmes should respond directly to the interests and concerns of those young people. Preventive education programmes showing the dangers of drug abuse are particularly important. Increasing opportunities for gainful employment and activities which provide recreation and opportunities to develop a variety of skills are important in helping young people to resist drugs. Youth organizations can play a key role in designing and implementing education programmes and individual counselling to encourage the integration of youth into the community, to develop healthy lifestyles and to raise awareness of the damaging impact of drugs. The programmes could include training of youth leaders in communication and counselling skills.

78. Government entities, in cooperation with relevant agencies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, particularly youth organizations, should cooperate in carrying out demand reduction programmes for illicit drugs, tobacco and alcohol.

2. Training medical and paramedical students in the rational use of pharmaceuticals containing narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances

79. The World Health Organization, associations of the medical, paramedical and pharmaceutical professions and pharmaceutical corporations and medical faculties and institutions could be asked to develop model training courses and disseminate information material for young medical and paramedical students on the proper handling of drugs and the early identification and diagnosis of substance abuse.

3. Treatment and rehabilitation of young people who are drug abusers or drug-dependent and young alcoholics and tobacco users

80. Research has been undertaken into the possibility of identifying medication to block cravings for specific drugs without creating secondary dependency, but much remains to be done in this area. The need for medical and social research in the prevention and treatment of substance abuse, as well as rehabilitation, has become more urgent, particularly with the worldwide increase in abuse and addiction among young people. In such research, emphasis should be given to the fact that intravenous substance abuse raises the risk of contracting communicable diseases, including HIV/AIDS and hepatitis, arising from the sharing of needles and other injection equipment. The fruits of all such research should be shared globally.

81. Research on issues such as the medical treatment and the rehabilitation of young drug abusers, including the combination of different types of treatment, the problem of recidivism and the administrative aspects of drug treatment, and the inclusion of students in the relevant faculties in such research, should be encouraged.

82. In cooperation with the institutions of civil society and the private sector, drug abuse prevention should be promoted, as should preventive education for children and youth and rehabilitation and education programmes for former drug and alcohol addicts, especially children and youth, in order to enable them to obtain productive employment and achieve the independence, dignity and responsibility for a drug-free, crime-free productive life. Of particular interest is the development of treatment techniques involving the family setting and peer groups. Young people can make significant contributions by participating in peer group therapy to facilitate the acceptance of young drug-dependent persons and abusers upon their re-entry into society. Direct participation in rehabilitation therapy entails close cooperation between youth groups and other community and health services. The World Health Organization and other worldwide medical and mental health organizations could be requested to set guidelines for continuing research and for carrying out comparable programmes in different settings, whose effectiveness could be evaluated over a given period of time.

4. Care for young drug abusers and drug-dependent suspects and offenders in the criminal justice and prison system

83. Authorities should consider strategies to prevent exposure to drug abuse and dependence among young people suspected or convicted of criminal offences. Such strategies could include alternative measures, such as daily reporting to police stations, regular visits to parole officers or the fulfilment of a specified number of hours of community service.

84. Prison authorities should cooperate closely with law enforcement agencies to keep drugs out of the prison system. Prison personnel should be discouraged from tolerating the presence of drugs in penal institutions.

85. Young prisoners who are already drug-dependent should be targeted as priority candidates for treatment and rehabilitation services and should be segregated as appropriate. Guidelines and standard minimum rules should be prepared to assist national authorities in law enforcement and prison systems in maintaining the necessary controls and initiating treatment and rehabilitation services. Action along these lines constitutes a long-term advantage to society, as the cycle of dependence, release, repeated offences and repeated incarcerations constitutes a heavy burden on the criminal justice system, quite apart from the wasted lives and personal tragedies which result from drug dependence and criminal behaviour.

G. Juvenile delinquency

86. Juvenile crime and delinquency are serious problems all over the world. Their intensity and gravity depend mostly on the social, economic and cultural conditions in each country. There is evidence, however, of an apparent worldwide increase in juvenile criminality combined with economic recession, especially in marginal sectors of urban centres. In many cases, youth offenders are "street children" who have been exposed to violence in their immediate social environment, either as observers or as victims. Their basic education, when they have it, is poor; their primary socialization from the family is too often inadequate; and their socio-economic environment is shaped by poverty and destitution. Rather than relying solely on the criminal justice system, approaches to the prevention of violence and crime should thus include measures to support equality and justice, to combat poverty and to reduce hopelessness among young people.

Proposals for action

1. Priority to preventive measures

87. Governments should give priority to issues and problems of juvenile delinquency and youth criminality, with particular attention to preventive policies and programmes. Rural areas should be provided with adequate socio-economic opportunities and administrative services which could discourage young people from migrating to urban areas. Youth from poor urban settings should have access to specific educational, employment and leisure programmes, particularly during long school holidays. Young people who drop out of school or come from broken families should benefit from specific social programmes that help them build self-esteem and confidence conducive to responsible adulthood.

2. Prevention of violence

88. Governments and other relevant organizations, particularly youth organizations, should consider organizing information campaigns and educational and training programmes in order to sensitize youth to the personally and socially detrimental effects of violence in the family, community and society, to teach them how to communicate without violence and to promote training so that they can protect themselves and others against violence. Governments should also develop programmes to promote tolerance and better understanding among youth, with a view to eradicating contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and thereby preventing violence.

89. To prevent violence and crime, the development of social organization, particularly through youth organizations and community involvement, should be fostered by a supportive social policy and within a legal framework. Government assistance should focus on facilitating the ability of community and youth organizations to express and evaluate their needs concerning the prevention of violence and crime, to formulate and implement actions for themselves and to cooperate with each other.

3. Rehabilitation services and programmes

90. Destitution, poor living conditions, inadequate education, malnutrition, illiteracy, unemployment and lack of leisure-time activities are factors that marginalize young people, which makes some of them vulnerable to exploitation as well as to involvement in criminal and other deviant behaviour. If preventive measures address the very causes of criminality, rehabilitation programmes and services should be made available to those who already have a criminal history. In general, youth delinquency begins with petty offences such as robbery or violent behaviour, which can be easily traced by and corrected through institutions and community and family environments. Indeed, law enforcement should be a part of rehabilitation measures. Finally, the human rights of young people who are imprisoned should be protected and principles of penal majority according to penal laws should be given great attention.

H. Leisure-time activities

91. The importance of leisure-time activities in the psychological, cognitive and physical development of young people is recognized in all societies. Leisure-time activities include games, sports, cultural events, entertainment and community service. Appropriate leisure programmes for youth are elements of any measure aimed at fighting social ills such as drug abuse, juvenile delinquency and other deviant behaviour. While leisure programmes can contribute greatly to the development of the physical, intellectual and emotional potential of young people, they should be designed with due care and concern so that they are not used as a means for excluding youth from participating in other aspects of social life or for indoctrinating them. Leisure-time activity programmes should be made freely available to young people.

1. Leisure-time activities as an integral part of youth policies and programmes

92. Governments, in planning, designing and implementing youth policies and programmes, with the active involvement of youth organizations, should recognize the importance of leisure-time activities. The importance given to such activities should be reflected in appropriate funding.

93. Governments are invited to establish public libraries, cultural centres and other cultural facilities in rural and urban areas, with the aid of international organizations, and to provide assistance to young people active in the fields of drama, the fine arts, music and other forms of cultural expression.

94. Governments are invited to encourage the participation of young people in tourism, international cultural events, sports and all other activities of special interest to youth.

2. Leisure-time activities as elements of educational programmes

95. Governments, by providing adequate funding to educational institutions for the establishment of leisure-time activities, may accord priority to such activities. In addition, leisure-time activities could be integrated into the regular school curriculum.

3. Leisure-time activities in urban planning and rural development

96. National Governments as well as local authorities and community development agencies should incorporate leisure-time activity programmes and facilities in urban planning, giving particular attention to areas with a high population density. Equally, rural development programmes should pay due attention to the leisure needs of rural youth.

4. Leisure-time activities and the media

97. The media should be encouraged to promote youth understanding and awareness of all aspects of social integration, including tolerance and non-violent behaviour.

I. Girls and young women

98. One of the most important tasks of youth policy is to improve the situation of girls and young women. Governments therefore should implement their obligations under international human rights instruments as well as implementing the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Conference on Human Rights and other programmes of relevant United Nations conferences. Girls are often treated as inferior and are socialized to put themselves last, thus undermining their self-esteem. Discrimination and neglect in childhood can initiate a lifelong downward spiral of deprivation and exclusion from the social mainstream. Negative cultural attitudes and practices as well as gender-biased educational processes, including curricula, educational materials and practices, teachers' attitudes and classroom interaction, reinforce existing gender inequalities.

1. Discrimination

99. Discrimination and neglect in childhood can initiate a lifelong exclusion from society. Action should be taken to eliminate discrimination against girls and young women and to ensure their full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms through comprehensive policies, plans of action and programmes on the basis of equality. Initiatives should be taken to prepare girls to participate actively, effectively and equally with boys at all levels of social, economic, political and cultural leadership.

2. Education

100. Universal and equal access to and completion of primary education for girls and young women as well as equal access to secondary and higher education should be ensured. A framework should be provided for the development of educational materials and practices that are gender-balanced and promote an educational setting that eliminates all barriers impeding the schooling of girls and young women, including married and/or pregnant girls and young women.

3. Health

101. Discrimination against girls and young women should be eliminated in health and nutrition. The removal of discriminatory laws and practices against girls and young women in food allocation and nutrition should be promoted, and their access to health services should be ensured in accordance with the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women.

4. Employment

102. Girls and young women should be protected from economic and related forms of exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous, to interfere with their education or to be harmful to their health or their physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development, in conformity with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. Equal access for young women to all employment opportunities should be promoted and their participation in the traditionally male-dominated sectors should be encouraged.

5. Violence

103. Governments should cooperate at the international level and enact and enforce legislation protecting girls and young women from all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, genital mutilation, incest, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, child prostitution and child pornography. Age appropriate, safe and confidential programmes and support services to assist girls and young women who are subjected to violence should be developed in cooperation with relevant non-governmental organizations, particularly youth organizations, as appropriate.

J. Full and effective participation of youth in the life of society and in decision-making

104. The capacity for progress of our societies is based, among other elements, on their capacity to incorporate the contribution and responsibility of youth in the building and designing of the future. In addition to their intellectual contribution and their ability to mobilize support, they bring unique perspectives that need to be taken into account.

105. Any efforts and proposed actions in the other priority areas considered in this programme are, in a certain way, conditioned by enabling the economic, social and political participation of youth, as a matter of critical importance.

106. Youth organizations are important forums for developing skills necessary for effective participation in society, promoting tolerance and increased cooperation and exchanges between youth organizations.

Proposals for action

107. The following actions are proposed:

(a) Improving access to information in order to enable young people to make better use of their opportunities to participate in decision-making;

(b) Developing and/or strengthening opportunities for young people to learn their rights and responsibilities, promoting their social, political, developmental and environmental participation, removing obstacles that affect their full contribution to society and respecting, inter alia, freedom of association;

(c) Encouraging and promoting youth associations through financial, educational and technical support and promotion of their activities;

(d) Taking into account the contribution of youth in designing, implementing and evaluating national policies and plans affecting their concerns;

(e) Encouraging increased national, regional and international cooperation and exchange between youth organizations;

(f) Inviting Governments to strengthen the involvement of young people in international forums, inter alia, by considering the inclusion of youth representatives in their national delegations to the General Assembly.

V. Means of implementation

108. Effective implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond will require a significant expression of commitment by organizations and institutions responsible for its adoption and implementation and the involvement of such organizations and especially of youth from all sectors of society. Without such commitment by governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental entities at the national, regional and international levels, the Programme of Action will remain little more than a global statement of intent and general standard for action.

109. Therefore the development of an overall system of enabling mechanisms is necessary in order for the Programme of Action to be implemented. Such mechanisms should engage, on a continuing basis, the human, political, economic, financial and sociocultural resources necessary to ensure that the Programme is implemented efficiently and effectively.

110. Implementation of the Programme of Action is ultimately the responsibility of Governments with the support of the international community and in cooperation, as appropriate, with the non-governmental and private sectors. Translation of the Programme's proposals for action into specific plans, targets and law will be influenced by national priorities, resources and historical experience. In this process, Governments can be assisted, at their request, by regional and international organizations.

111. In implementing the Programme of Action, Governments, youth organizations and other actors should promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective in all policies and programmes in accordance with the results of the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women.

A. National level

112. Governments which have not already done so are urged to formulate and adopt an integrated national youth policy as a means of addressing youth-related concerns. This should be done as part of a continuing process of review and assessment of the situation of youth, formulation of a cross-sectoral national youth programme of action in terms of specific, time-bound objectives and a systematic evaluation of progress achieved and obstacles encountered.

113. Reinforcing youth-related concerns in development activities can be facilitated through the existence of multilevel mechanisms for consultation, dissemination of information, coordination, monitoring and evaluation. These should be cross-sectoral in nature and multidisciplinary in approach and should include the participation of youth-related departments and ministries, national non-governmental youth organizations and the private sector.

114. Special and additional efforts may be required to develop and disseminate model frameworks for integrated policies and to identify and organize an appropriate division of responsibilities among both governmental and non-governmental entities concerned with youth-related issues. Special and additional efforts could also be directed towards strengthening national capacities for data collection and dissemination of information, research and policy studies, planning, implementation and coordination, and training and advisory services.

115. National coordinating mechanisms should be appropriately strengthened for integrated youth policies and programmes. Where such mechanisms do not exist, Governments are urged to promote their establishment on a multilevel and cross-sectoral basis.

B. Regional cooperation

116. The activities of the United Nations regional commissions, in cooperation with concerned regional intergovernmental and non-governmental youth and youth-related organizations, are essential complements to national and global action aimed at building national capacities.

117. Regional commissions, within their existing mandates, are urged to promote the implementation of the Programme of Action through incorporation of its goals in their plans, to undertake comprehensive reviews of the progress achieved and obstacles encountered and to identify options to further regional-level action.

118. Regional intergovernmental meetings of ministers responsible for youth, in cooperation with the concerned United Nations regional commissions, regional intergovernmental organizations and regional non-governmental youth organizations, can make particular contributions to the formulation, implementation, coordination and evaluation of action at the regional level, including periodic monitoring of regional youth programmes.

119. Data collection, dissemination of information, research and policy studies, inter-organizational coordination and technical cooperation, training seminars and advisory services are among the measures which can be provided on request at the regional level to promote, implement and evaluate youth programmes.

120. Regional non-governmental youth organizations, regional offices of bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and regional intergovernmental organizations concerned with youth are invited to consider meeting on a biennial basis to review and discuss issues and trends and to identify proposals for regional and subregional cooperation. United Nations regional commissions are also invited to play an essential role through the provision of a suitable venue and appropriate input regarding regional action.

C. International cooperation

121. An essential role for international cooperation is to promote conditions conducive to the implementation of the Programme of Action at all levels. Means available include debates at the policy level and decisions at the intergovernmental level, global monitoring of issues and trends, data collection and dissemination of information, research and studies, planning and coordination, technical cooperation and outreach and partnership among interested constituencies from both the non-governmental and private sectors.

122. In its capacity as the subsidiary body of the Economic and Social Council responsible for global social development issues, the Commission for Social Development has an important role to play as the focal point for the implementation of the Programme of Action. The Commission is called upon to continue the policy-level dialogue on youth for policy coordination and for periodic monitoring of issues and trends.

123. Current regional and interregional conferences of ministers responsible for youth affairs in Africa, Asia, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean and Western Asia are invited to intensify cooperation among each other and to consider meeting regularly at the international level under the aegis of the United Nations. Such meetings could provide an effective forum for a focused global dialogue on youth-related issues.

124. Youth-related bodies and organizations of the United Nations system are invited to cooperate with the above-mentioned conferences. In this connection, the existing ad hoc inter-agency working group on youth should meet annually and invite all concerned bodies and agencies of the United Nations system and related intergovernmental organizations to discuss ways and means by which they can promote the implementation of the Programme of Action on a coordinated basis.

125. Effective channels of communication between non-governmental youth organizations and the United Nations system are essential for dialogue and consultation on the situation of youth and implications for the implementation of the Programme of Action. The General Assembly has repeatedly stressed the importance of channels of communication in the field of youth. The Youth Forum of the United Nations system could contribute to the implementation of the Programme of Action through the identification and promotion of joint initiatives to further its objectives so that they better reflect the interests of youth.

1. Data collection and dissemination of information

126. Capacities to collect, analyse and present data in a timely and accurate fashion are essential for effective planning and target-setting, for monitoring issues and trends and for evaluating progress achieved in implementing the Programme of Action. Special attention should be directed towards building national capacities and institutions regularly to collect and compile socio-economic data series that are both cross-sectional and disaggregated by cohort. To this end, interested centres and institutions may wish to consider the possibility of jointly strengthening or establishing, in cooperation with the United Nations, networks concerned with collection of data and publication of statistics and to realize thereby greater economies of scale in the development and dissemination of statistics in the field of youth.

127. Major contributions related to data and statistics in the field of youth are currently being made by the United Nations. Such contributions include the socio-economic data collection and statistical development activities of the Statistics Division of the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis of the Secretariat; the youth policies and programmes information activities of the Division for Social Policy and Development of the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the Secretariat; the educational and literacy data collection activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; and the youth advisory networks of the United Nations Environment Programme. Concerned bodies and agencies of the United Nations system are urged to explore ways and means of achieving greater coherence in data collection and the publication of statistics. This could include programme planning and coordination on an inter-agency basis. For example, the data bank programme on adolescent health of the World Health Organization is coordinated with the work of the Statistics Division of the Secretariat. Other bodies and agencies of the United Nations system are invited to contribute data in their respective areas of expertise to an integrated socio-economic data bank on youth. For instance, the international drug abuse assessment system of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme is urged to consider including a component on youth and drugs. An inventory of innovative youth policies, programmes and projects could be coordinated and made available to interested users by the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development. Other topics that could be considered for joint action include juvenile delinquency, runaways and homeless youth.

128. Public information and communications are equally important in building awareness of youth issues, as well as a consensus on appropriate planning and action. The bodies and organizations of the United Nations system concerned are urged, as a matter of priority, to review publications currently produced and to identify ways in which these publications can better promote the Programme of Action and areas in which they may need to be complemented through the production of leaflets and posters in connection with special events.

129. To encourage widespread awareness of and support for the Programme of Action, Governments, non-governmental organizations and, as appropriate, the private sector are urged to consider the possibility of preparing both printed and audiovisual materials related to areas of concern in the Programme of Action. This could be carried out with the assistance of and in cooperation with the United Nations and materials could be disseminated through United Nations public information channels. In addition, young people and youth organizations are urged to identify and plan information activities that focus on priority issues, which they would undertake within the context of the Programme of Action.

2. Research and policy studies

130. Comparative studies on issues and trends concerning youth are essential to the continuous expansion and development of the global body of knowledge on relevant theories, concepts and methods. International, regional and national research centres and institutions concerned with youth-related issues are urged to consider the possibility of establishing cooperative relationships with the United Nations to ensure effective links between the implementation of the Programme of Action and relevant research and studies.

131. Cooperation in strengthening and improving national capacities for the research, design, conduct and dissemination of relevant studies on the situation of young people is a closely related concern.

132. A third concern is the improved planning and coordination of the scarce human and financial resources available so that appropriate attention is accorded to initiatives undertaken by young people at all levels, related to priority areas identified in the Programme of Action, to the identification and assessment of issues and trends and to the review and evaluation of policy initiatives.

3. Planning and coordination

133. Using the mechanisms currently available within the United Nations system for planning, programming and coordinating activities concerning youth, interested bodies and organizations of the United Nations system are urged to review their medium-term planning process to give appropriate consideration to reinforcing a youth perspective in their activities. They are also urged to identify current and projected programme activities that correspond to the priorities of the Programme of Action so that these activities can be reinforced throughout the system. Appropriate attention should be directed towards identifying opportunities for joint planning among interested members of the system so that joint action may be undertaken that reflects their respective areas of competence, that is of direct interest to young people or that responds to priority needs of young people in special circumstances.

134. A complementary mechanism for coordination is provided by the channels that have been developed between the United Nations and intergovernmental and non-governmental youth organizations. Such mechanisms require appropriate strengthening to enable them to respond better to priorities for action, as identified in the Programme of Action.

4. Technical cooperation, training and advisory services

135. Technical cooperation is an essential means for building national capacities and institutional capabilities. Bodies and organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so are urged to review and assess their range of programmatic and operational activities in the light of the priorities for action identified in the Programme of Action and to reinforce a youth dimension in technical cooperation activities. In this regard, special attention should be directed towards measures that will serve to promote expanded opportunities for international technical assistance and advisory services in the field of youth as a means of building expanded and strengthened networks of institutions and organizations.

136. There is a need to continue to improve the impact of technical cooperation activities carried out by the United Nations system, including those that relate to youth activities. The United Nations system must continue to assist Governments, at their request, to ensure implementation of national plans and strategies within the national priorities and programmes to support youth activities. As administrative overheads can reduce the resources available for technical cooperation, these should be reduced. National execution should be the preferred modality for the implementation of projects and programmes and, where required, developing countries should be assisted in improving their national capacities for project and programme formulation and execution.

137. Countries with economies in transition, when required, should also be assisted in improving their national capacities for project and programme formulation and execution.

138. The organization, on an inter-agency basis, of missions to review, assess and plan technical cooperation concerning youth, available on request to Governments, represents a specific contribution by the United Nations system to the implementation of the Programme of Action.

139. The United Nations Youth Fund represents a unique resource to support catalytic and innovative action concerning youth. Programme implementation can be furthered through the Fund's support, in both a technical and a financial sense, of pilot action, studies and technical exchanges on issues concerning youth that encourage the participation of youth in devising and carrying out projects and whose short time-frames often make it difficult to obtain needed support from conventional budgeting processes. The capacities of the Fund for innovative action are, however, limited in the light of Programme priorities, and interested Governments, non-governmental organizations and the private sector are invited to consider the possibility of supporting the activities of the Fund on a predictable and sustained basis. To this end, the parties concerned may wish to consider the possibility of constituting an advisory body at an appropriate level to review the application of the terms of reference of the Fund and priorities and means of strengthening its capacities.

5. Outreach and partnership among specialized constituencies

140. A crucial element in implementing the Programme of Action is the recognition that governmental action alone is not sufficient to ensure its success, that rather it should be further complemented by the support of the international community. This process will also require both systematic outreach and partnership among the Programme's many constituencies in both the non-governmental and private sectors.

141. A critical first step is phased expansion and regularization of channels of communication between the United Nations and non-governmental youth organizations to include representatives of interested private sector organizations. This would build upon the provisions set forth in General Assembly resolution 45/103 of 14 December 1990 concerning the involvement of youth and non-governmental youth organizations in the formulation of the Programme of Action. Youth, youth-related organizations and interested private sector organizations are urged to identify, in partnership with Governments, ways in which they could contribute to action at the local level to implement the Programme, and to the periodic review, appraisal and formulation of options to achieve its goals and objectives.

142. Implementation of the Programme of Action offers important opportunities to expand technical and cultural exchanges among young people through new partnerships in both the public and private sectors; to identify and test improved ways to leverage public resources, in partnership with the non-governmental and private sectors, to further Programme priorities; and to encourage and jointly plan innovative approaches to critical issues concerning youth.

143. Relevant voluntary organizations, particularly those concerned with education, employment, juvenile justice, youth development, health, hunger, ecology and the environment, and drug abuse, can further the implementation of the Programme of Action by encouraging the involvement of young people in programme planning and field activities. The Programme of Action can contribute to the work of such organizations because it provides a global policy framework for consultation and coordination.

Ageing persons

Responding to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, in March 1995, presented⁽²⁾ the conceptual framework of a programme for the preparation and observance of the International Year of Older Persons in 1999, declared by the Assembly in 1992.⁽³⁾ As the overall objective of the Year, the promotion of the 1991 UN Principles for Older Persons was proposed,⁽⁴⁾ as well as their translation into policy and practical programmes of action. The four dimensions of the framework, within which those Principles could be promoted, were: situation of older persons; life-long individual development; multi-generational relationships; and development and the ageing of populations. The proposed theme for the Year was "a society for all ages".

The Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the UN Secretariat was serving as focal point for the Year, to facilitate consultations on its objective, framework and theme and to devote its mandated activities on ageing to preparations for the Year. The report outlined also the global targets on ageing for the year 2000, adopted by the Assembly in 1992⁽⁵⁾ and a timetable (1995-2000) of activities of the United Nations programme on ageing, adjusted to the needs of the Year.

In April, the Commission for Social Development recommended to the Economic and Social Council that it recommend to the Assembly for adoption a draft resolution entitled "International Year of Older Persons: towards a society for all ages". The Council did so by resolution 1995/21.

Chapter XII

Refugees and displaced persons

In 1995, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) was concerned with the fate of some 24 million persons, of whom 14 million were refugees, 3.2 million internally displaced persons, 2.8 million returnees, and 3.5 million were others with humanitarian needs. Prospects for a large-scale repatriation to the former Yugoslavia emerged towards the end of the year, while in Central Africa plans for a comprehensive voluntary repatriation faltered. In general, UNHCR focused on programmes and mechanisms launched in response to previous large-scale emergencies, the implementation of solutions where possible, and the elaboration of preventive strategies. It also continued to implement its international protection mandate and reinforced operational links with agencies and other partners, including various non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and UN human rights mechanisms.

During the year, UNHCR was involved in the repatriation of some 800,000 persons, notably to Afghanistan, Myanmar and Rwanda.

Africa in 1995 hosted 5.5 million refugees, some 2 million of whom were in the Great Lakes region and challenged the resources of both countries of asylum and UNHCR. Refugee flows also continued in Liberia, Sierra Leone and Somalia; in East Africa, repatriation efforts picked up, and were successfully concluded in Mozambique.

As durable solutions had been found to the majority of refugee situations in Central America, UNHCR concentrated on strengthening the capacity of Governments in the Americas region to deal with refugee-related matters. Some 1,121 Haitian refugees were repatriated from the Dominican Republic. The arrival of extra-continental asylum-seekers in South America and the Caribbean increased significantly.

In Europe, following the signing of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, UNHCR was entrusted with developing and implementing a repatriation plan to allow the orderly return of refugees and displaced persons. In Asia and Oceania, the voluntary repatriation of some 62,000 Myanmar refugees from Bangladesh took place and the implementation of the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees was expected to be completed by the year's end. However, the impasse in finding a solution for Bhutanese asylum-seekers in Nepal and new displacements in Sri Lanka were causes for concern. In South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East, the UN continued efforts to assist some 3.6 million refugees.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee considered such topics as prevention and reduction of statelessness, refugee women, refugees and the environment, the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees, voluntary repatriation to Afghanistan, humanitarian issues in the former Yugoslavia, and the budget structure and governance of UNHCR, as well as its working methods.

In December, the General Assembly called on States to promote conditions conducive to the return of refugees and to support their sustainable integration by providing countries of origin with rehabilitation and development assistance in conjunction with UNHCR and other development agencies.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its forty-sixth session (Geneva, 16-20 October 1995),⁽¹⁾ the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme expressed its distress over the continued suffering of refugees for whom a solution had yet to be found, and urged the continued commitment of States to receive and host refugees and ensure their protection. It called on UNHCR to organize informal consultations on the development of guiding principles concerning measures to ensure international protection. The Committee called on the High Commissioner to support the development and implementation of criteria and guidelines on responses to persecution specifically aimed at women by sharing information on initiatives by States to develop such criteria and guidelines, and to ensure their fair and consistent application. It called on States to promote conditions conducive to the return of refugees and to support their reintegration by providing countries of origin with rehabilitation and development assistance in conjunction with UNHCR and relevant development agencies. The Committee encouraged UNHCR to cooperate with other international organizations on ways to facilitate the return of persons not in need of international protection and to inform the Standing Committee. It called on the High Commissioner to continue to expand and strengthen the Office's activities with regard to the promotion and dissemination of refugee law and protection principles and to explore ways to integrate its activities in the areas of documentation, research, publications and electronic dissemination. UNHCR was encouraged to strengthen its efforts in assisting host Governments to ensure the access of refugees to education. States were called on to manifest their international solidarity and burden-sharing with countries of asylum politically and in other tangible ways that reinforced their capacity to maintain generous asylum policies. The Committee welcomed the commissioning of an evaluation study and the UNHCR-sponsored consultations on resettlement, and encouraged UNHCR to strengthen its activities in that connection and provide regular reports to the Committee. It also called on States of refuge to ensure that the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements was maintained, and called on all other States to assist them; States of refuge should take measures to prevent the infiltration of armed elements, to provide effective physical protection to refugees and asylum-seekers, and to afford UNHCR and other organizations prompt and unhindered access to them.

Concerning the prevention and reduction of statelessness and the protection of stateless persons, the Committee called on States to adopt nationality legislation to reduce statelessness, to prevent the arbitrary deprivation of nationality, and to eliminate provisions permitting the renunciation of a nationality without prior possession or acquisition of another. It requested UNHCR to promote accession to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons⁽²⁾ and the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness,⁽³⁾ and to provide to interested States technical and advisory services pertaining to the preparation and implementation of nationality legislation; to promote the prevention and reduction of statelessness through the dissemination of information and the training of staff and government officials; to enhance cooperation with other interested organizations; to provide the Committee biennially, beginning at its forty-seventh (1996) session, with information on activities undertaken on behalf of stateless persons, particularly with regard to the implementation of international instruments and principles relating to stateless persons, and including the magnitude of the problems of statelessness.

In her opening statement to the Committee, the High Commissioner stated that UNHCR had to prepare for a reappraisal of how it worked. Four priorities would be set for the coming years: revitalization of protection policies and strategies to reflect the dimension of solutions and respond to the needs of a growing range of beneficiaries; a rethinking of the way UNHCR planned its activities; reinforcement of the implementation and monitoring of UNHCR policies, guidelines and programmes, including the ability to monitor and control implementing partners; and restructuring of UNHCR work methods, so as to improve delivery, accountability and performance and to build a capacity to contract and expand in response to operational demands. In the light of the environmental damage caused by large concentrations of refugee populations, UNHCR proposed reformulating its environmental policy to make the environmental dimension an integral part of its operations.

By decision 1995/314 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the High Commissioner's report for 1994/1995.⁽⁴⁾

UNHCR-NGO Partnership in Action

In 1995, UNHCR continued to follow up on the UNHCR/NGO Partnership in Action (PARINAC) process, launched in 1993⁽⁵⁾ to establish a common agenda for field activities, and to implement the recommendations of the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action, adopted at the 1994 PARINAC Global Conference.⁽⁶⁾ To respond more effectively to the needs of NGOs, UNHCR made the NGO coordinator the focal point for all policy issues concerning NGOs at Headquarters and appointed NGO focal points in the Regional Bureaux. It undertook studies on safety of third countries, safety zones or safe areas and on minimum standards that Governments could apply concerning temporary protection. UNHCR concentrated on country/region-specific planning in emergency preparedness and was incorporating a systematic approach to inter-agency coordination, developed during recent emergencies, into emergency management training programme workshops. Guidelines governing cooperation with implementing partners, their choice and administrative support costs were issued and a programme and project management handbook for UNHCR implementing partners was being prepared. At the regional level, PARINAC follow-up meetings took place for southern Africa (South Africa, January), West Africa (Cote d'Ivoire, March), Asia and Oceania (Sri Lanka, May), and Central America (Costa Rica, December).

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee adopted a conclusion⁽¹⁾ in which it reaffirmed the importance of the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action as a joint agenda for humanitarian action. It encouraged UNHCR and NGOs to pursue activities in the field and at headquarters to enhance their partnership in protection and assistance and, together with Governments, to identify areas in the Plan of Action in which they could cooperate further to implement particular recommendations. The High Commissioner was asked to report in 1996 on the follow-up to the PARINAC process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/152.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of her Office and the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its forty-sixth session,

Recalling its resolution 49/169 of 23 December 1994,

Reaffirming the importance of the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees as the cornerstone of the international system for the protection of refugees, and noting with satisfaction that one hundred and thirty States are now parties to one or both instruments,

Reaffirming also the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner, as well as the crucial importance of the High Commissioner's functions of providing international protection to refugees and seeking solutions to refugee problems,

Commending the High Commissioner and her staff for the competent, courageous and dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities, paying tribute to those staff members who have endangered or lost their lives in the course of their duties, and emphasizing the urgent need for effective measures to ensure the security of staff engaged in humanitarian operations,

Distressed at the continued suffering of refugees, for whom a solution has yet to be found, and noting with deep concern that refugee protection continues to be jeopardized in many situations as a result of denial of admission, unlawful expulsion, refoulement, unjustified detention, other threats to their physical security, dignity and well-being and failure to respect and ensure their fundamental freedoms and human rights,

Welcoming the continuing strong commitment of States to providing protection and assistance to refugees and the valuable support extended by Governments to the High Commissioner in carrying out her humanitarian tasks, and commending those States, particularly the least developed and those hosting millions of refugees over long periods of time, which, despite severe economic, development and environmental challenges of their own, continue to admit large numbers of refugees into their territories,

Recognizing that, in certain regions, misuse by individuals of asylum procedures jeopardizes the institution of asylum and adversely affects the prompt and effective protection of refugees,

Concerned that statelessness, including the inability to establish one's nationality, may result in displacement, and stressing, in this regard, that the prevention and reduction of statelessness and the protection of stateless persons are important also in the prevention of potential refugee situations,

1. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental importance and the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the function of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of providing international protection to refugees and seeking solutions to refugee problems, and the need for States to cooperate fully with the Office in order to facilitate the effective exercise of that function;

2. Calls upon all States which have not yet done so to accede to and implement fully the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and relevant regional refugee instruments, as applicable, for the protection of refugees;

3. Also calls upon all States to uphold asylum as an indispensable instrument for the protection of refugees, to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection, including the fundamental principle of non-refoulement, as well as the humane treatment of asylum-seekers and refugees in accordance with internationally recognized human rights and humanitarian norms;

4. Reaffirms that everyone, without distinction of any kind, is entitled to the right to seek and enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution;

5. Reiterates the importance of ensuring access, for all persons seeking international protection, to fair and efficient procedures for the determination of refugee status or, as appropriate, to other mechanisms to ensure that persons in need of international protection are identified and granted such protection, while not diminishing the protection afforded to refugees under the terms of the 1951 Convention, the 1967 Protocol and relevant regional instruments;

6. Reaffirms the continued importance of resettlement as an instrument of protection;

7. Reiterates its support for the role of the Office of the High Commissioner in exploring further measures to ensure international protection to all who need it, consistent with fundamental protection principles reflected in international instruments, and looks forward to the informal consultations of the Office of the High Commissioner on the subject;

8. Calls for a more concerted response by the international community to the needs of internally displaced persons and, in accordance with its resolution 49/169, reaffirms its support for the High Commissioner's efforts, on the basis of specific requests from the Secretary-General or the competent principal organs of the United Nations and with the consent of the State concerned, and taking into account the complementarities of the mandates and expertise of other relevant organizations, to provide humanitarian assistance and protection to such persons, emphasizing that activities on behalf of internally displaced persons must not undermine the institution of asylum, including the right to seek and enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution;

9. Reiterates the relationship between safeguarding human rights and preventing refugee situations, recognizes that the effective promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including through institutions that sustain the rule of law, justice and accountability, are essential for States to address some of the causes of refugee movements and for States to fulfil their humanitarian responsibilities in reintegrating returning refugees and, in this connection, calls upon the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, within its mandate and at the request of the Government concerned, to strengthen its support of national efforts at legal and judicial capacity-building, where necessary, in cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

10. Also reiterates that development and rehabilitation assistance is essential in addressing some of the causes of refugee situations, as well as in the context of the development of prevention strategies;

11. Condemns all forms of ethnic violence and intolerance, which are among the major causes of forced displacements, as well as an impediment to durable solutions to refugee problems, and appeals to States to combat intolerance, racism and xenophobia and to foster empathy and understanding through public statements, appropriate legislation and social policies, especially with regard to the special situation of refugees and asylum-seekers;

12. Welcomes the Platform for Action adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, particularly the strong commitment made by States in the Platform to refugee women and other displaced women in need of international protection, and calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to support and promote efforts by States towards the development and implementation of criteria and guidelines on responses to persecution, including persecution through sexual violence or other gender-related persecution, specifically aimed at women for reasons enumerated in the 1951 Convention and 1967 Protocol, by sharing information on States' initiatives to develop such criteria and guidelines and by monitoring to ensure their fair and consistent application by the States concerned;

13. Reiterates that, the grant of asylum or refuge being a peaceful and humanitarian act, refugee camps and settlements must maintain their exclusively civilian and humanitarian character and all parties are obliged to abstain from any activity likely to undermine this, condemns all acts which pose a threat to the personal security of refugees and asylum-seekers, and also those that may endanger the safety and stability of States, calls upon States of refuge to take all necessary measures to ensure that the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements is maintained, and further calls upon States of refuge to take effective measures to prevent the infiltration of armed elements, to provide effective physical protection to refugees and asylum-seekers and to afford the Office of the High Commissioner and other appropriate humanitarian organizations prompt and unhindered access to them;

14. Encourages the High Commissioner to continue her activities on behalf of stateless persons, as part of her statutory function of providing international protection and of seeking preventive action, as well as her responsibilities under General Assembly resolutions 3274(XXIV) of 10 December 1974 and 31/36 of 30 November 1976;

15. Requests the Office of the High Commissioner, in view of the limited number of States party to these instruments, actively to promote accession to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons and the 1961 Convention on the reduction of statelessness, as well as to provide relevant technical and advisory services pertaining to the preparation and implementation of nationality legislation to interested States;

16. Calls upon States to adopt nationality legislation with a view to reducing statelessness, consistent with the fundamental principles of international law, in particular by preventing arbitrary deprivation of nationality and by eliminating provisions that permit the renunciation of a nationality without the prior possession or acquisition of another nationality, while at the same time recognizing the right of States to establish laws governing the acquisition, renunciation or loss of nationality;

17. Reaffirms that voluntary repatriation, when it is feasible, is the ideal solution to refugee problems, and calls upon countries of origin, countries of asylum, the Office of the High Commissioner and the international community as a whole to do everything possible to enable refugees to exercise their right to return home in safety and dignity;

18. Reiterates the right of all persons to return to their country, and emphasizes in this regard the prime responsibility of countries of origin for establishing conditions that allow voluntary repatriation of refugees in safety and with dignity and, in recognition of the obligation of all States to accept the return of their nationals, calls upon all States to facilitate the return of their nationals who are not recognized as refugees;

19. Calls upon all States to promote conditions conducive to the return of refugees and to support their sustainable reintegration by providing countries of origin with necessary rehabilitation and development assistance in conjunction, as appropriate, with the Office of the High Commissioner and relevant development agencies;

20. Recalls Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/56 of 29 July 1995 on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, and welcomes the decision of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to review, in the course of 1996, aspects of that resolution relevant to the work of the Office of the High Commissioner;

21. Notes with appreciation the programme policies established by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner, and underscores the importance of their implementation by the Office of the High Commissioner, implementing partners and other relevant organizations in order to ensure the provision of effective protection and humanitarian assistance to refugees;

23. Recognizes the importance of the introduction of Russian as an official language of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner in facilitating the work of the High Commissioner and the implementation of the provisions of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, notably in the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States;

24. Calls upon all Governments and other donors to demonstrate their international solidarity and burden-sharing with countries of asylum through efforts aimed at continuing to alleviate the burden borne by States which have received large numbers of refugees, in particular those with limited resources, and to contribute to the programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner and, taking into account the effect on countries of asylum of the increasing requirements of large refugee populations and the need to widen the donor base and to achieve greater burden-sharing among donors, to assist the High Commissioner in securing additional and timely income from traditional governmental sources, other Governments and the private sector in order to ensure that the needs of refugees, returnees and other displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner are met.

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/632) without vote, 22 November (meeting 36); 97-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.20/Rev.1), orally corrected and revised; agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 19-23, 25, 32-34, 36; plenary 97.

Financial and administrative questions

In 1995,⁽⁷⁾ UNHCR's final budget was $1.17 billion, a decrease from the 1994 figure of $1.2 billion. Donors contributed some $1 billion in voluntary contributions in cash and kind towards General and Special Programmes, compared to $1.06 billion the previous year. Some $27.9 million from the UN regular budget went towards administrative support. The upward trend in the funding of General Programmes continued. Those programmes represented core activities for refugees and provided the High Commissioner with considerable flexibility to deal with emergencies and voluntary repatriations.

UNHCR expenditures in 1995 amounted to $1.14 billion: disbursements under General Programmes totalled $405.1 million and those under Special Programmes totalled $737.9 million. Some 31.7 per cent of Special Programme expenditures pertained to UNHCR's Programme of Humanitarian Assistance in the former Yugoslavia, and 31.8 per cent to the Burundi/Rwanda emergency operation. Other important expenditures related to the Mozambique repatriation programme and the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees.

Regional apportionments were as follows: Africa, $482.6 million; Europe, $201.6 million; South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East, $105 million; Asia and Oceania, $95.8 million; and the Americas, $34.8 million.

Special operations accounted for some two thirds of UNHCR operational activities in 1995. Appeals were launched with the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) for operations in the former Yugoslavia, the Afghan repatriation programme, the Burundi/Rwanda emergency, Liberia, and programmes in the Horn of Africa and in the Republics of the former Soviet Union (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). UNHCR issued its own appeals for Central America, the Angolan and Mozambican repatriations, the repatriation to Myanmar, the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees, and some other operations. The lack of funding for operations in the Great Lakes region of Africa was seen as the Office's greatest challenge during 1995, said the High Commissioner.⁽⁷⁾ The Office raised some $662 million for special operations, repatriations and emergencies, in addition to the amounts under General Programmes.

A General Programmes budget target of $445.3 million was set for 1996, with Special Programme requirements estimated at $930.6 million, of which $288.4 million pertained to the Burundi/Rwanda operation and $348.3 million to the former Yugoslavia. Special Programme requirements for repatriation efforts in Africa and Asia, as well as for programmes in the former Yugoslavia, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the Baltic States, remained urgent priorities.

At an extraordinary meeting held on 17 January,⁽⁸⁾ the Executive Committee approved an increase in the 1995 General Programmes target from $415.4 million to $428.7 million, and noted that the revised proposed estimate for 1995 under General and Special Programmes amounted to $1,272,487,300.

In an October decision,⁽¹⁾ the Committee approved the revised 1995 General Programmes budget amounting to $428,732,500 and noted that the estimate for 1995 General and Special Programmes was $1.3 billion. It also approved the country/area programmes, other programmes and the headquarters budgets amounting to $357,434,900, as well as $25 million for the Emergency Fund, $20 million for the Voluntary Repatriation Fund and a Programme Reserve of $42,892,100, constituting a 1996 total General Programmes budget of $445,327,000. The Committee requested the Commissioner to initiate informal consultations on the question of overhead costs for non-governmental implementing partners, particularly headquarters costs, for review at the first session of the Standing Committee in 1996, and authorized the Standing Committee to decide on the issue in the course of its deliberations during 1996. It also approved the creation of the post of Assistant High Commissioner (Policy, Planning and Operations) at the Assistant Secretary-General level and related staffing.

UNHCR budget structure

Informal consultations on UNHCR's budget structure, funding and governance were launched at the 16 January inter-sessional meeting of the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters. At the heart of the consultations was the distinction between General and Special Programmes and governance by the Executive Committee, particularly over Special Programmes. In the light of those discussions, a series of conclusions covering the budget structure, General and Special Programmes, funds and reserves, governance, oversight reports, documentation, and future work were submitted to the Executive Committee for consideration.

In October,⁽¹⁾ the Executive Committee decided that the objectives of the UNHCR budget should be transparency, accountability and managerial control; flexibility to address emergency situations and unexpected changes to programmes; and assured funding for statutory activities. Further streamlining of the budget structure should be undertaken so that in a single, coherent structure, there would be a clear indication of overall, country-level and headquarters needs, as well as those of other programmes. To be included under General Programmes, activities should qualify as statutory, relate to situations that had stabilized, and be a funding priority. If, for a given year, all stabilized, statutory activities could not be included under General Programmes, the first priority for inclusion should be refugee situations that had stabilized. The High Commissioner should bear in mind the relative chances of funding for different activities and report to the Executive Committee the consideration which had determined the action. The Executive Committee should keep under review the levels of and criteria governing the Emergency Fund, the Programme Reserve, and the Voluntary Repatriation Fund. The Programme Reserve could be used to complement Special Programme funding for refugee situations, provided that the total of all such allocations did not exceed one third of the Programme Reserve in a given year. To support voluntary repatriation activities not included under General Programmes, the Voluntary Repatriation Fund should be enhanced by its extension to voluntary repatriation operations for refugees included under Special Programmes; in a given year, an allocation of up to $10 million could be made for any such operation. It was proposed that, as of 1997, the Programme Reserve should be constituted between 10 and 15 per cent of programmed activities under the Annual Programme for a given year; the level of the Voluntary Repatriation Fund for a given year should be set between $20 million and 10 per cent of the budgetary estimates for voluntary repatriation for the previous year; the High Commissioner would propose the actual levels of the Programme Reserve and the Voluntary Repatriation Fund for approval by the Executive Committee. Any allocation from the Programme Reserve and the Voluntary Repatriation Fund could be cancelled if sufficient contributions were later received for relevant activities. The use of the Working Capital and Guarantee Fund could be extended to guarantee budget increases in the headquarters component of General Programmes, not exceeding 2 per cent of the approved General Programmes total target. The Executive Committee would thus allow the General Programmes approved budgetary target to rise by up to 2 per cent, with the adjustment of the General Programmes budget taking place at the end of a calendar year. If such use was made of the Working Capital and Guarantee Fund, it would be replenished in the subsequent year.

The inter-sessional meetings of the Executive Committee would review General and Special Programmes, consider updates on programme needs and funding, and review all country programmes in a particular region or regions and any Special Programmes covering a number of countries in a region. The Executive Committee would review the use made of the Emergency Fund, the Programme Reserve Fund and the Voluntary Repatriation Fund to ensure that their use was in accord with the governing criteria. Areas for further study and informal consultations to enhance UNHCR's budgetary structure and related matters were also proposed, including ways to ensure a better funding base for UNHCR activities.

The audited financial statements on funds administered by UNHCR for the year ending 31 December 1994 and the report of the Board of Auditors showed total expenditures of $1,167 million and total income of $1,192 million with a reserve balance of $363.9 million.⁽²⁾

The Board of Auditors noted that UNHCR's overall liquidity position was not fully satisfactory. It stated that UNHCR's control over its implementing partners was inadequate. Various aspects of programme management, including planning, programme formulation and appraisal, were deficient and the system adopted by field offices and implementing partners for budgeting, accounting and auditing of expenditures needed to be streamlined. The system of project reporting and monitoring was defective; the overhead costs of its implementing partners needed to be controlled. The Board suggested that the procurement system could be improved by streamlining the system of purchase planning and framework agreements and by giving adequate publicity to tenders and vendor performance analysis. In addition, weaknesses in property management procedures could be addressed through new asset management software. The Board also noted irregularities in the hiring of consultants, including the retrospective regularization of appointments, the engagement of consultants to perform the functions of regular staff, and the automatic extension of consultant contracts without the mandatory break in service and without a performance evaluation. The Board noted that while UNHCR had initiated action on many of its recommendations, implementation at the field level had not been satisfactory.

In its general decision on programme, administrative and financial matters,⁽¹⁾ the Executive Committee expressed serious concern about the observations of the Board of Auditors, especially those on management issues and, in particular, those relating to continuing problems regarding the lack of adequate managerial control by UNHCR of programmes implemented by its partners. It asked that the matters raised in the report be reviewed by the Standing Committee.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in its 13 October report,⁽¹⁰⁾ expressed concern that the Board's findings were not new and that it had had to reiterate previous recommendations because of non-compliance and lack of follow-up action by UNHCR in its field offices. ACABQ stated that significantly more budgetary and financial control over implementing partners needed to be exercised by field offices. It endorsed the view that UNHCR should establish norms to regulate and monitor the overhead costs of implementing partners and recommended that agreements with those partners should specify clearly UNHCR's responsibilities vis-à-vis those of the partners with respect to funding staff costs, including salary and allowances and separation payments. It did not believe that such payments should be chargeable to UNHCR and requested the High Commissioner to investigate the matter and include in her next report information on the findings and appropriate action taken on UNHCR activities. ACABQ believed that irregularities in consultancy services warranted immediate investigation and rectification and that existing rules and regulations should be enforced to prevent recurrences. If the current rules and regulations were, for the most part, not enforceable, proposals to amend them should be submitted rather than have programme managers circumvent or ignore the existing guidelines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/204 A of 23 December, accepted the audited financial statements for the year ending 31 December 1994 and the report of the Board of Auditors on UNHCR and the Board's conclusions and recommendations.

Also, on the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/204 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/216 A of 23 December 1993, especially paragraph 6 thereof, as well as paragraph 2 of its resolution 48/216 C of 23 December 1993,

Reaffirming that the rectification of deficiencies and irregularities identified by the Board of Auditors will enhance the effective exercise of the functions of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in providing international protection for refugees and will strengthen as well its crucial role in seeking solutions to refugee problems,

1. Expresses serious concern about the findings in the report of the Board of Auditors on the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, especially those concerning management issues, such as the continuing problems of the lack of adequate managerial control over the programmes carried out by implementing partners;

2. Expresses particular concern about the persistent nature of various problems and the non-implementation of the previous recommendations of the Board of Auditors;

3. Requests the High Commissioner to implement as a matter of urgency the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, taking into account the views expressed by the Member States and keeping the Board fully informed of the ongoing measures taken, and requests the Board to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

4. Also requests the High Commissioner to work out and put in place, as a matter of urgency, procedures enhancing the efficiency of implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors;

5. Further requests the High Commissioner to review with due diligence the content of the audit report, submitted to her before its issuance, in order to ensure the quality of the information issued for the use of the Member States;

6. Notes with appreciation that in the programme of work for 1996 recently adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for its Standing Committee, the follow-up by the High Commissioner to the observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors will be addressed in a systematic manner, in particular regarding issues related to implementing partners;

7. Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the United Nations organizations, funds and programmes comply with the common accounting standards approved by the General Assembly and that they address the specific recommendations made by the Board of Auditors in this regard;

8. Requests the High Commissioner to amend the term "funds available" in statement II of the audited financial statements of the voluntary funds administered by the High Commissioner, and in its annex, in order to correct the financial information disclosed and to reflect more accurately the financial resources available.

23 December 1995 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/839) without vote, 21 December (meeting 44); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.20, part B) following informal consultations; agenda item 113.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 21, 25, 27, 44; plenary 100.

Committee working methods

In 1995, the Executive Committee reviewed its working methods. In January, the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters established a working group to consider the issue, including the streamlining of documentation. At an extraordinary meeting on 20 June,⁽¹⁾ the Executive Committee adopted recommendations on documentation and the need for summary records.

By an October decision,⁽¹⁾ the Committee reconstituted its annual cycle of meetings to comprise one annual plenary session and a number of inter-sessional meetings of a Standing Committee of the Whole, which would replace the Subcommittee of the Whole on International Protection, the Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters, and the informal meetings of the Executive Committee. The Standing Committee would discuss protection, programme and financial issues and would meet about four times a year; the penultimate annual meeting would focus on international protection and its programme implications. The annual plenary session of the Executive Committee would be held in mid-October and the general debate would be replaced by a debate on a focused annual theme. The Committee also made recommendations relating to decisions and conclusions, the structure of the agenda and timeliness and limitation of documentation. These arrangements would be implemented on an experimental basis for one annual cycle of meetings and reviewed in 1996.

It was also decided to introduce Russian as an official language of the Committee and to forward the matter to the General Assembly for approval.

Subcommittee on

Administrative and Financial Matters

The Executive Committee's Subcommittee on Administrative and Financial Matters met in Geneva on 16 January, 4 April, 20 June and 12 October.⁽¹²⁾ It discussed a broad range of issues including an update of programmes and funding, UNHCR budget structure, the proposal to create a post of Assistant High Commissioner, policies and strategies for durable solutions, Executive Committee working methods, Rwanda "lessons learnt", UNHCR headquarters accommodation, human resources management, an update on voluntary repatriation movements, UNHCR telecommunications, an evaluation of the "women victims of violence" project in Kenya, the PARINAC progress report, refugee children, refugee health, refugees and the environment, and implementing partners.

Refugee protection and assistance

Proposed conference on refugees

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ submitted a September 1995 report⁽²⁾ on the comprehensive consideration and review of the problems of refugees, returnees, displaced persons and related migratory movements. In particular, the report discussed the preparatory process leading to the convening of a United Nations conference for the comprehensive consideration and review of the problems of refugees, returnees, displaced persons and migrants in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) countries and relevant neighbouring States.

In January, UNHCR, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights established a joint secretariat at UNHCR to prepare for such a conference. A joint UNHCR/IOM appeal for financial assistance for the secretariat was launched on 20 January. National consultations were held in February, March and April in Ukraine, Belarus and the Republic of Moldova, and the first regional consultation took place in March in Kyrgyzstan for the five Central Asian Republics. Consultations also took place in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, and the Baltic States. A first meeting of experts was held on 18 and 19 May in Geneva to identify issues of concern and to prepare a work plan for the conference. The experts identified the following types of movements to be addressed: refugees, displaced persons, resettlers, formerly deported peoples, irregular migration, trafficking in migrants, stranded migrants and ecological migration. The experts also raised the issues of the inadequacies of current terminology relating to refugees and displaced persons; national implementation of international instruments; emergency preparedness; a harmonized regional approach; root causes underlying displacement; strengthening the administrative systems of countries to deal with migration challenges; and cooperation among countries. A draft work plan envisaged a series of subregional meetings to be held between July and September 1995 to analyse issues of concern identified by the experts; a second meeting of experts was to be held in November to discuss possible solutions, in conjunction with the convening of a drafting committee to start work on a declaration of principles and a programme of action. A preparatory conference and the conference itself were planned for the first quarter of 1996.

The first two subregional meetings were held for the Transcaucasus region (Tbilisi, Georgia, 10-11 July) and for the Central Asian Republics (Ashkhabad, Turkmenistan, 27 July). The main objective of the conference process was to devise an integrated strategy for the region, through a declaration and plan of action and an accountability framework reflecting a shared commitment on roles and responsibilities. Consultations were held in July in Tbilisi and Moscow with local and international NGOs active in the region, and similar meetings were planned later in the year at Alma Ata (Almaty) (Kazakhstan), Kiev (Ukraine) and Novosibirsk (Russian Federation).

In October,^(c) the Executive Committee called on States concerned and relevant intergovernmental organizations to participate in the preparatory process leading to a CIS conference and urged Governments which had not yet done so to contribute to the common secretariat for the preparation of the conference. It requested the High Commissioner to report in 1996 on the outcome and follow-up of the conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/151.

The General Assembly,

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/632) without vote, 21 November (meeting 34); 27-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.19), orally corrected and revised; agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 19-23, 25, 32-34; plenary 97.

Protection issues

While the numbers of refugees worldwide continued to decline slightly, concerns remained over the real, potential and perceived burden of protecting and assisting them. Those concerns caused some Governments to deny entry to asylum-seekers, or to forcibly return thousands of refugees to their countries of origin. Other States constricted entitlement to basic rights for various groups of victims of internal conflict, and still others attempted to streamline procedures in ways that precluded fair appeals before deportation. These and other developments in 1995 presented UNHCR with serious difficulties in undertaking its protection and assistance activities. Nevertheless, many Governments continued to uphold asylum as an indispensable instrument for the international protection of refugees and demonstrated their commitment to receive and host refugees in cooperation with UNHCR.

In a 1 September note⁽⁴⁾ on international protection in mass influx, the High Commissioner examined current developments and explored protection strategies. She stated that, in 1995, a number of political and human rights factors highlighted the increased complexity and dimensions of refugee protection. The events of the year, whether in the former Yugoslavia, the Great Lakes region of Africa or the former Soviet Union, illustrated the value of the current international protection regime, while also revealing some of its shortcomings. The High Commissioner said that new and complementary strategies to ensure effective international protection should: first, reinforce the implementation of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees⁽⁵⁾ and its 1967 Protocol⁽⁶⁾ and existing regional instruments; strengthen the protection of persons falling outside the application of international legal instruments; and support protection measures taken by States not yet party to such instruments. While various possibilities for achieving that end could be kept under review, States did not appear prepared to undertake additional binding obligations towards refugees, the High Commissioner stated. She suggested that since the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol, as well as international and regional refugee and human rights instruments, provided a broadly accepted overall framework for effective international protection, the inadequacies identified within that framework could be addressed through the further development and consolidation of non-binding standards.

In an October conclusion,⁽⁷⁾ the UNHCR Executive Committee reiterated its support for UNHCR's role in exploring the development of guiding principles on measures to ensure international protection, consistent with fundamental protection principles reflected in international instruments. It called on UNHCR to organize informal consultations on the subject.

With regard to the protection of stateless persons, the Executive Committee encouraged UNHCR to continue its activities on their behalf as part of its statutory function of providing international protection and of seeking preventive action, as well as its responsibility to undertake the functions under article 11 of the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness.⁽⁷⁾

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/195 of 22 December, noted the efforts of the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons to develop a framework and to promote strategies for better protection, assistance and development for internally displaced persons (see PART THREE, Chapter II).

International instruments

As at 31 December 1995,⁽⁸⁾ the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees⁽⁵⁾ had 126

States parties. Antigua and Barbuda, Namibia and the Solomon Islands became parties in 1995. The 1967 Protocol⁽⁶⁾ to the Convention also had 126 States parties, with the accession in 1995 of Antigua and Barbuda and the Solomon Islands.

Other intergovernmental legal instruments of benefit to refugees included the 1969 OAU Convention governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, the 1957 Agreement relating to Refugee Seamen and its 1973 Protocol, the 1959 European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas to Refugees, the 1980 European Agreement on Transfer of Responsibility for Refugees, and the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights, Pact of San Jose, Costa Rica.

As at 31 December 1995,⁽⁸⁾ there were 41 States parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons⁽⁹⁾ and 17 States parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness.⁽⁷⁾

Promotional activities

The UNHCR Centre for Documentation and Research provided users with a broad collection of refugee literature and legal and country-of-origin information. Its 14 databases, known collectively as REF WORLD, included country reports, UN documentation, case law, instruments, legislation, media reports and an on-line thesaurus. REF WORLD was available on the Internet and on CD-ROM.

UNHCR promotional activities included the organization of refugee law and protection courses for government officials, implementing partners and NGOs. It was also involved in the work of human rights treaty bodies and other human rights mechanisms. A memorandum was signed in 1995 between the UNHCR Branch Office in Rwanda and the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda to enhance complementarity of action regarding monitoring and institution building.

Assistance measures

During 1995,⁽¹⁰⁾ UNHCR considered programmes and mechanisms launched in response to previous large-scale emergencies, implemented solutions, and elaborated preventive strategies. The prospect of large-scale repatriation to the former Yugoslavia emerged near the end of the year as a distinct possibility, while in the Great Lakes region of Africa, plans for comprehensive, voluntary repatriation faltered. In the States of the former Soviet Union, the High Commissioner consolidated a wide-ranging strategy to address existing and potential population displacements. UNHCR continued to implement its international protection mandate to promote, safeguard and develop principles of refugee protection, strengthen international commitments, and promote durable solutions.

Worldwide, UNHCR was working to assist 24 million persons, of whom 14.2 million (60 per cent) were refugees; 3.2 million, internally displaced; 3.5 million, others of humanitarian concern; and 2.8 million, returnees. Overall, the number fell by 3.5 million during 1995, mainly in the internally displaced and returnee categories.

UNHCR continued to consolidate its emergency preparedness and response arrangements. The major deployment in 1995 of those resources was to the Russian Federation, in response to the crisis in Chechnya. Special attention was paid to contingency planning, particularly in Albania, Egypt, Ethiopia, Jordan, the Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Zaire. Following a meeting with NGOs in October, UNHCR began work to establish a database to better gauge and use NGO response capacity in refugee emergencies.

Following the emergency phase of a refugee operation, the basic needs of refugees were covered by care and maintenance activities. Total expenditures on such assistance in 1995 amounted to $696.2 million, including $454.4 million under Special Programmes.

UNHCR continued to regard voluntary repatriation as the preferable durable solution to refugee situations. In 1995, of more than 800,000 persons repatriated, 450,000 were directly assisted by UNHCR, notably to return to Afghanistan (170,000), Rwanda (110,000) and Myanmar (61,000). Expenditures of $191.9 million went to such efforts and another $126.4 million went to agricultural and non-agricultural activities to promote economic self-reliance and local integration of refugees.

Global expenditures on resettlement in 1995 amounted to $7,201.6 million. During the year, UNHCR resettled 10,000 refugees from the former Yugoslavia; 21,000 resettlers elsewhere departed to third countries. The majority of persons still needing resettlement originated in the Middle East and Africa. UNHCR met with major resettlement Governments and agencies in October.

Refugee/returnee aid and development

UNHCR reinforced its operational linkages with agencies and partners to address the impact of refugee influxes on the development resources of asylum countries, as well as the multifaceted needs of countries into which refugees were least integrated. Jointly with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNHCR agreed on a Framework for Inter-agency Initiatives to promote a smooth transition from humanitarian assistance to sustainable human development. In a new Memorandum of Understanding with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and a revised Memorandum with the World Food Programme, the need was stressed to link operations involving the reintegration of refugees in situations of post-conflict recovery. The High Commissioner called for more flexible and predictable aid for post-conflict recovery to help bridge the gap between relief and development.

Refugees and the environment

In 1995, UNHCR reformulated its policy concerning environmental matters associated with refugee situations, based on past experience and an assessment of its 1994 Interim Guidelines for Environment-Sensitive Management of Refugee Programmes. New overall environmental guidelines were developed and the related sectoral guidelines were being revised. The basic principles involved were: to assure an integrated approach; to prevent rather than cure; to be cost-effective and ensure overall benefit maximization; and to involve the refugee and local populations. The reformulated policy and operational outcomes, to be introduced in a step-by-step manner over the next three to four years, would help UNHCR to resolve refugee-related environmental problems, such as deforestation, soil erosion, depletion and degradation of water resources and their socio-economic impacts on refugees and local communities.

In an October conclusion,⁽³⁾ the Executive Committee approved the UNHCR reformulated environmental policy, noting that proposed operational outcomes would enable UNHCR to make a more focused contribution to refugee-related environmental problems. The Committee requested the High Commissioner to revise the interim guidelines to give effect to the reformulated policy and to promote and enhance coordination and collaboration with host Governments, donors, relevant UN organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and other actors concerned to address refugee-related environmental problems in a more integrated and effective manner. The Committee called on the High Commissioner to keep it informed, through its Standing Committee, of the implementation of the policy, in particular financial implications and environmental actions in the field, and to report on results achieved in 1997.

Initiatives to promote the new policy included model projects on environmental education and training and participatory approaches to environmental problems, the development of an environmental database, and environmentally sound technologies. Efforts were also made to promote cooperation with other international organizations. One example was the UNDP/UNHCR Great Lakes Initiative to address degradation of infrastructure and the environment in refugee-affected areas within Burundi, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/152, reaffirmed the importance of incorporating environmental considerations into UNHCR programmes, especially in least developed and developing countries hosting refugees over long periods of time. It called on the High Commissioner to promote and enhance coordination and collaboration with host Governments, donors, relevant UN organizations, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and other actors concerned so that refugee-related environmental problems would be considered in a more integrated and effective manner.

Refugee women

During 1995, UNHCR strengthened field implementation of existing policies and guidelines regarding refugee women, creating three regional refugee women coordinator posts. It also reinforced field focal points established in connection with preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing, China, 4-15 September) (see PART FOUR, Chapter X), and established a reference group to support field implementation by UNHCR of the Beijing Platform for Action, adopted by the Conference. The immediate focus of the group's work was women's access to and partnership in food distribution. UNHCR's gender training—People-Oriented Planning (POP)—continued to expand its stand-alone courses, while integrating aspects of that training into other courses. Independent replication of the training by NGOs increased and a network of POP trainers was formalized to support implementation of gender policies. UNHCR also developed a human rights awareness training module targeted at refugee women.

In terms of the implementation of the recommendations of the Working Group on Refugee Women and Children, which in 1994 had examined obstacles to carrying out UNHCR's Policies and Guidelines on Refugee Women and Refugee Children,⁽¹⁾ the High Commissioner had instituted a policy of recruiting only women for the next year and POP training was used to address attitudinal change among staff members. Concerning the integration of women's concerns into UNHCR emergency activities, it was now standard practice to include in emergency teams community services officers who would be responsible for identifying constraints to protection and assistance to women. An action-oriented research project was developed to establish the conditions necessary to place food distribution into the hands of refugee women and to assess the impact of such distribution on family level food security. Regarding physical protection and human rights, the UNHCR Guidelines on Preventing and Responding to Sexual Violence against Refugees, issued in March, were cited as a model in the Beijing Platform for Action. The annual protection reporting exercise was modified to ensure that specific concerns of women were addressed. Compliance with the UNHCR policy on refugee women was encouraged through the UNHCR-NGO PARINAC process and POP training of local and international NGOs and through the efforts of government ministries.

In an October conclusion,⁽³⁾ the Executive Committee requested the High Commissioner to prepare a framework for implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action that would form the basis of future UNHCR planning on refugee women's issues, as well as reports to the Executive Committee and to the Commission on the Status of Women. It called on the High Commissioner to report in 1996 on the delivery of the implementation framework, with emphasis on field implementation of the policy and guidelines and on UNHCR implementation of the recommendations of the Working Group on Refugee Women and Refugee Children.

Refugee children

UNHCR in 1995 provided the Committee on the Rights of the Child with information concerning the situation of refugee children and actively participated in the UN study on the Impact of Armed Conflict on Children to ensure an emphasis on refugee and displaced children (see also PART THREE, Chapter I).

UNHCR included much of its field work on the psychosocial well-being of children in its community services and education programmes. Professional mental health programmes were provided in collaboration with specialized NGOs. Assistance was provided to traumatized unaccompanied children in Central Africa. UNHCR brought to the attention of concerned authorities incidents of sexual exploitation involving children, including unaccompanied girls, and camp officials, security or military personnel. The development of guidelines and procedures, training activities and close monitoring of the well-being of the child were among measures to be taken to prevent such abuse.

UNHCR also intervened where refugee children were threatened with being recruited into armed groups, advocating that those not yet 15 years old should not be allowed to volunteer. A module on rights awareness training was being developed to inform refugee women and others about the right of children not to be recruited. As to educating refugee children, the use of distance education and other innovative approaches were being explored to meet the needs of older children. The policy of rapid educational response in emergencies bore fruit in the Kagera region of the United Republic of Tanzania, where 60,000 Rwandan refugee children were receiving non-formal education. A regional education workshop was held in Nairobi, Kenya, to train UNHCR and implementing partner staff from 15 countries.

Together with NGOs, UNHCR established or promoted projects in countries of origin to prepare the return of the child and to facilitate and monitor reintegration. In January, it established the Regional Support Unit for Refugee Children in Kigali, Rwanda, to provide technical assistance and programme support to its field offices and implementing partners in Burundi, Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire. The importance of assessing children's needs from the earliest stages of emergencies to their integration into UNHCR protection and assistance activities was highlighted in the new UNHCR Handbook on Programme Management for UNHCR Implementing Partners.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October report on assistance to refugee children.⁽¹³⁾ The report reviewed inter-agency cooperation; identification, registration and tracing of unaccompanied children; psychosocial rehabilitation; persistent protection problems; repatriation and reintegration; and lessons learnt.

The Secretary-General stated that unaccompanied children could constitute 3 to 5 per cent of the refugee or forcibly displaced population. In Rwanda, they represented 3.5 per cent in July. Some 300 Vietnamese unaccompanied children still lived in camps in exile in South-East Asia, while 6,000 unaccompanied children from the Sudan were living in Kenya. Few unaccompanied children were identified among Myanmar refugees in Bangladesh, Bhutanese refugees in Nepal or refugees in Chechnya, Russian Federation. However, the Burundi/Rwanda emergency created by far the highest number of unaccompanied minors in recent years; some 117,000 in July 1995. UNHCR established a Regional Support Unit for Refugee Children, based in Kigali, and UNICEF deployed specialists to advise agency staff, government counterparts and implementing partners. In Rwanda and Zaire, national NGOs were involved in the care of unaccompanied children.

In September, a meeting on family tracing and reunification was organized by the Save the Children Fund—UK, with the participation of UNHCR, UNICEF, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and Governments responsible for large groups of unaccompanied children. Its purpose was to develop a framework for the management of unaccompanied children in future emergencies and to consolidate technical and professional practice in that area. In conjunction with NGOs, UNICEF developed a system for the registration, tracing and reunification of unaccompanied children, which was successfully implemented in Rwanda. Organizations working with unaccompanied children were exploring ways to support existing registration initiatives and share information so that implementing partners could begin active tracing as early as possible.

Among persistent problems confronting unaccompanied children, the Secretary-General said, were: allegations of recruitment of refugee children as combatants or assistants to the military or cases of children living with the military for alleged protection purposes; deprivation; neglect or abuse; sexual exploitation of unaccompanied girls; and evacuation and adoption of refugee children. UNHCR translated lessons learnt in providing protection and assistance to unaccompanied refugee children into handbooks and guidelines.

The Secretary-General concluded that progress had been made in the quality and timeliness of the international community's response to problems facing unaccompanied minors. Closer collaboration between UNHCR and UNICEF would further improve emergency response, ensuring compatibility with long-term solutions for the child, preferably in the country of origin.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/150.

Assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors

The General Assembly,
Reaffirming its resolution 49/172 of 23 December 1994,
Aware that the majority of refugees are children and women,

Bearing in mind that unaccompanied refugee minors are among the most vulnerable refugees and require special assistance and care,

Mindful of the fact that the ultimate solution to the plight of those unaccompanied minors is their return to and reunification with their families,

Noting that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has developed revised Guidelines on Refugee Children, issued in May 1994,

Noting also the efforts of the High Commissioner to ensure the protection of and assistance to refugees, including children and unaccompanied minors, and that further efforts need to be exerted to this effect,

Recalling the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its deep concern at the plight of unaccompanied refugee minors, and emphasizes the urgent need for their early identification and for timely, detailed and accurate information on their number and whereabouts;

3. Calls upon all Governments, the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to exert the maximum effort to assist and protect refugee minors and to expedite the return to and reunification with their families of unaccompanied refugee minors;

4. Urges the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to take appropriate steps to mobilize resources commensurate to the needs and interests of the unaccompanied refugee minors and for their reunification with their families;

5. Condemns all acts of exploitation of unaccompanied refugee minors, including their use as soldiers or human shields in armed conflict and their recruitment in military forces, and any other acts that endanger their safety and personal security;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations organizations and international organizations to mobilize adequate assistance to unaccompanied minors in the areas of relief, education, health and psychological rehabilitation;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Regional activities

Africa

In 1995, Africa hosted some 8.8 million persons of concern to UNHCR, of whom 5.5 million were refugees. The population displacements had been provoked mainly by political, ethnic and economic conflicts; in addition, widespread famine, insecurity, violence exacerbated by poverty and environmental degradation incited new population movements. Following the 1994 exodus of some 2 million people from Rwanda, the situation in the Great Lakes region remained fragile, and displacement continued. Refugee flows also continued in other parts of Africa, notably in Liberia, Sierra Leone, Somalia and the Sudan, with little hope of an early solution. In 1995, UNHCR expenditure in Africa totalled $482.6 million.

In February, UNHCR organized a regional conference on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in the Great Lakes region of Africa (Bujumbura, Burundi) (see below).

In a report⁽¹⁰⁾ covering UNHCR activities during the year, the High Commissioner stated that in the Great Lakes region, some 1.7 million Rwandan refugees were living in Burundi, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire, and 208,000 Burundian refugees were in the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire. In Rwanda, UNHCR efforts to facilitate voluntary repatriation and reintegration included the construction of shelters and implementation of quick-impact projects in the water, health, education and community services sectors in areas of return. However, major obstacles to large-scale repatriation remained, including continuing intimidation in camps in Burundi, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire, and the lack of a comprehensive political solution. On 10 February,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Security Council expressed concern at reports of continuing intimidation and security problems in the Rwandan refugee camps, particularly those in Zaire, and asked the Secretary-General to make recommendations for ensuring their security (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

On 22 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 50/58 L, urged States, UN organizations, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the international financial and development institutions, to continue to provide financial, technical and material assistance, bearing in mind that sound economic foundations were vital for achieving lasting stability in Rwanda and for the return and resettlement of Rwandan refugees.

In Burundi, continuing armed conflicts provoked new flows of refugees into the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire and within Burundi. Some 30,000 Rwandan refugees and Burundian asylum-seekers fled to the United Republic of Tanzania at the end of 1995, while 1,000 Burundians were arriving every month in Zaire.

Meanwhile, major asylum countries in the Great Lakes region expressed concern at the prolonged stay of the refugees. On 31 March, the Tanzanian Government closed its borders, and, in August, Zaire refouled some 16,000 refugees in one week, an action viewed with concern by the Security Council.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Council called on Zaire to stand by its humanitarian obligations regarding refugees and supported the Secretary-General's decision to send the High Commissioner to the region to engage in discussions with Zaire and neighbouring States to resolve the situation.

The Tripartite Commissions on repatriation—involving Rwanda and UNHCR and the United Republic of Tanzania or Burundi—met regularly. Meetings involving Zaire, Rwanda and UNHCR were held in Geneva in September and December. Discussions focused on ways to enhance repatriation through mass information campaigns, separation of intimidators from refugees and cross-border visits.

In Central Africa, there were 27,000 Sudanese refugees in the Central African Republic and 111,870 in north-eastern Zaire, 91,545 of whom received assistance from UNHCR. The Office was also assisting 41,950 of the estimated 160,950 Angolan refugees in Zaire.

In West Africa, some spontaneous returns to Liberia were noted following the signing in August of the Abuja Peace Agreement (see PART TWO, Chapter II), but about 750,000 Liberian refugees remained, mostly in Cote d'Ivoire and Guinea. The number of refugees from Sierra Leone in Guinea and Liberia increased significantly, reaching 360,000, due to the ongoing civil war. With an improved situation in Togo, the number of refugees from that country in Benin and Ghana declined significantly in 1995; a total of 20,983 persons repatriated from Benin during the year. Likewise, a sizeable number of Tuaregs spontaneously returned to Mali in 1995, due to the improved security situation; however, some 100,000 Malians still remained in Algeria, Burkina Faso, Mauritania and Niger. The number of Mauritanian refugees in Senegal remained at 66,000.

In East Africa and the Horn of Africa, UNHCR activities focused mainly on care and maintenance for refugees in Eritrea, Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan; in Uganda and northern Zaire, the Office gradually phased out those activities. In June, some 24,235 Eritreans were successfully repatriated, completing the pilot phase of the Programme for Refugee Reintegration and Rehabilitation of Resettlement Areas in Eritrea. Starting in December, more than 19,000 Ethiopian refugees were repatriated from the Sudan, with an estimated 52,000 still remaining. Another 32,000 Ethiopians were repatriated from Djibouti. The number of Somali refugees in Kenya in 1995 stood at 126,060, with another 275,190 in Ethiopia.

In southern Africa, more than 1.7 million Mozambican refugees returned home from countries of asylum, successfully concluding the UNHCR-assisted repatriation effort there. Assistance in Mozambique had focused on the reintegration of returnees and other targeted populations by improving food security, road access, water and sanitation, and primary health care through some 750 quick-impact programmes. Meanwhile, UNDP and UNHCR established a framework for inter-agency initiatives to promote the transition from humanitarian assistance to sustainable human development.

In Angola, UNHCR launched a repatriation and reintegration operation for some 311,000 Angolan refugees over a 30-month period, beginning in June 1995.

The Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) (Addis Ababa, 21-23 June),⁽¹⁶⁾ in a resolution on refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, appealed to the international community, and particularly UNHCR, to increase support to the countries involved in the programme of voluntary repatriation of refugees and to establish a link between emergency operations and those connected with rehabilitation and development.

On 28 July, by decision 1995/314, the Economic and Social Council took note of the oral report by UNHCR on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa.⁽¹⁷⁾

In an October conclusion,⁽³⁾ the Executive Committee called on UNHCR to intensify its protection activities by supporting African Governments in the training of officers and other capacity-building activities, disseminating information on refugee instruments and principles, and providing financial, technical and advisory services to accelerate the enactment/amendment and implementation of legislation relating to refugees. Also, in conjunction with OAU and concerned Governments, subregional groupings and other interested parties, UNHCR should continue to seek sustainable solutions to the refugee problems in Africa, in particular through facilitating voluntary return.

The Executive Committee appealed to Governments, UN agencies, NGOs and the international community to create conditions to facilitate the return and early rehabilitation and reintegration of refugees. UNHCR should assess the negative impacts of large refugee concentrations on hosting communities, with a view to initiating measures to prevent damage and to assist in repair, especially damage to the environment and ecosystems in host countries. It expressed concern over the long stay of refugees in certain African countries and called on the High Commissioner to keep under review programmes in those countries, taking into account the increasing requirements in the region.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September report⁽¹⁹⁾ on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa. Despite the sombre refugee picture, he said that the peaceful democratic changes that had occurred in several parts of Africa had created opportunities for large numbers of refugees to return to their homes, and prospects for voluntary repatriation of refugees and the reintegration of returnees had improved. However, more comprehensive, timely and sustained efforts were needed to rehabilitate war-torn societies. The international community had to press for new means to respond faster and to meet rehabilitation needs earlier. The persistence of population movements and refugee flows called for a comprehensive approach focusing on prevention, the adverse impact of refugees on asylum countries and the search for durable solutions.

Great Lakes regional conference

A regional conference on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in the Great Lakes region of Africa was held in Bujumbura, Burundi, from 15 to 17 February⁽²⁰⁾ (see also PART FOUR, Chapter III). In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽²¹⁾ OAU and UNHCR jointly coordinated preparations for the Conference, including the establishment of a preparatory committee under their co-chairmanship. The aim of the Conference was to highlight the problems of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in the region; consider measures for their repatriation and safety; sensitize the international community to adverse socio-economic and environmental consequences; address root causes of the refugee problem; examine the impact on the civilian population of the presence of military personnel and militia in refugee camps and settlements; mobilize resources in support of the affected countries; and appeal for international assistance.

The Conference adopted a Plan of Action outlining a strategy for the peaceful resolution of the problem of displacement in the Great Lakes region, including voluntary return and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons. The Plan of Action included measures to be taken in and/or by the countries of origin and the countries of asylum and by the international community. The Conference requested UNDP to hold a donor's round table on countries of the region, which would provide a framework for coordinated and integrated approaches. It also established a Follow-up Committee, which, at its first meeting (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 26 May), noted that very little progress had been made in implementing the Plan of Action and that, in some areas, the situation had deteriorated. It agreed that consultations and discussion should continue, that political consultations should be encouraged to promote political accommodation, and that the proposed international conference on peace, security and development in the region (see PART TWO, Chapter II) would provide an impetus to humanitarian action in the region. In preparation for the round table, UNHCR and UNDP, in April, agreed that the consultations with donors should be a joint UNHCR/UNDP undertaking, in consultation with OAU. UNDP dispatched a preliminary mission to the subregion, which identified priority needs and, in collaboration with UNHCR, agreed to dispatch a comprehensive needs assessment and programme project identification and formulation mission in September.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/149.

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/174 of 23 December 1994,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Bearing in mind the fact that most of the affected countries are least developed countries,

16. Notes with satisfaction the voluntary return of millions of refugees to their homelands following the successful repatriation and reintegration operations carried out by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, with the cooperation and collaboration of many countries hosting refugees, and looks forward to other programmes to assist the voluntary repatriation of all refugees in Africa;

17. Expresses its concern about the long stay of refugees in certain African countries, and calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to keep under review her programmes in those countries, taking into account the increasing requirements there;

18. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the specialized agencies, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their assistance in mitigating the plight of the large number of refugees, returnees and displaced persons;

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/632) without vote, 21 November (meeting 34); draft by South Africa, for African Group (A/C.3/50/L.17), orally revised; agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 19-23, 25, 32-34; plenary 97.

In resolution 50/58 K of 22 December, the Assembly invited all States, UN institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide Burundi with assistance for economic recovery and to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of refugees.

In resolution 50/58 L of the same date, the Assembly encouraged Rwanda to pursue efforts to create conditions conducive to the return of refugees to their country.

The Americas and the Caribbean

In a report on UNHCR's 1995 activities,⁽¹⁰⁾ the High Commissioner stated that three developments had a major impact on UNHCR's work in the Americas and the Caribbean during the year. Political developments in Guatemala enhanced the repatriation process for the 12,000 Guatemalan refugees in Mexico; Mexico decided that Guatemalan refugees might stay in Mexico on a permanent basis; and the arrival of extra-continental asylum-seekers to countries in Latin America continued.

As durable solutions had been found for the majority of Central American refugees, UNHCR's task was to strengthen the capacity of Governments to deal with refugee-related matters and, as a means of prevention, to strengthen regional human rights institutions and ensure that development-oriented projects also targeted areas with major concentrations of persons of concern to UNHCR. In Belize, the quick-impact project (QIP) programme to facilitate the socio-economic integration of 8,100 refugees and undocumented persons continued. The QIP programme in El Salvador, which facilitated the integration of some 31,500 Salvadoran returnees, was completed in April. UNHCR continued with voluntary repatriation of individual cases and with the legal integration of those refugees opting to remain in their country of asylum. Some 9,500 Guatemalan refugees were repatriated from Mexico despite continuing security problems, the scarcity of available land, and the absence of a peace agreement, bringing the total number of returnees assisted by UNHCR since January 1993 to more than 20,000. The assistance programme in the Mexican states of Campeche and Quintana Roo increased the productivity of refugee settlements through joint programmes of credit and on-the-job training, helping refugees to become self-supporting. The transfer of responsibilities for infrastructure and services in those settlements to the Mexican authorities was initiated. Mexico, at the end of 1995, announced its intention to allow the local integration of those refugees not wishing to repatriate; the majority of them were expected to relocate to Campeche and Quintana Roo.

More than 1,100 Haitian refugees were repatriated during the year, leaving 937 still in the Dominican Republic, which continued discussions with UNHCR on finding durable solutions for them. The arrival of extra-continental asylum-seekers in South America and the Caribbean increased, reaching 80 per cent of all asylum-seekers compared to 13 per cent in 1994. The United States Congress was considering two proposed immigration bills. A Memorandum of Agreement between Canada and the United States on "Cooperation in Examination of Refugee Claims from Nationals of Third Countries" was also under consideration. In February, Canada announced that every adult immigrant and refugee must pay both "right-to-landing" and per-cost recovery fees.

Total UNHCR expenditures in the Americas and the Caribbean amounted to $34.9 million and the refugee population stood at just under 1 million.

East and South Asia and Oceania

In a report covering 1995 UNHCR activities,⁽¹⁰⁾ the High Commissioner stated that 62,000 Myanmar Muslim refugees had voluntarily repatriated from Bangladesh to their country's Rakhine State. Some 50,000 persons remaining in five camps in Bangladesh were expected to repatriate in 1996. More than 1,000 small-scale projects in returnee communities were funded by UNHCR. UNHCR staff monitored the welfare of the 93,250 refugees from Myanmar residing in Thailand. The Afghan urban refugee population in Delhi, India, decreased from 23,000 to 21,000 during the year. About 50 per cent of those refugees were receiving UNHCR assistance. Following the cessation of hostilities between Sri Lanka and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam in January, some 10,000 Sri Lankan refugees voluntarily repatriated from the Indian State of Tamil Nadu under UNHCR auspices. Some 52,000 refugees remained in camps in India and another 40,000 reportedly resided outside camps. Further repatriation of Sri Lankan refugees from India was hampered by the resumption of hostilities later in the year, precipitating the internal displacement of over 350,000 persons from the Jaffa peninsula. In December, Sri Lanka requested UNHCR assistance for up to 150,000 displaced persons in the Vanni region.

In Cambodia, UNHCR, in addition to assisting 20,300 vulnerable returnees, joined other UN agencies in providing relief to some 113,000 internally displaced persons. A total of 145 Cambodian refugees voluntarily returned home with UNHCR assistance, while some 370 remained in Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) countries pending return approval. UNHCR also monitored the safe return of 1,859 Cambodians of ethnic Vietnamese origin. The refugee population in China, as reported by the Government, increased slightly from 287,086 to 288,411 during the year. UNHCR assistance in China focused mainly on local settlement through support for revolving fund rural credit schemes.

In 1995, UNHCR expenditure in Asia and Oceania amounted to $95.8 million. The total number of refugees in the region stood at some 0.8 million.

Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees

The Implementation of the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees (CPA) continued in 1995. Agreements between Viet Nam, the host country, and UNHCR on modalities for the return of remaining Vietnamese non-refugees in camps were concluded in early 1995 with both Malaysia and the Philippines. Arrangements were discussed to simplify procedures for the return of all Vietnamese who did not qualify for refugee status. As of 31 March, there were 8,610

Lao in UNHCR-assisted camps in Thailand for whom durable solutions within the framework of CPA were being pursued. Voluntary repatriation was promoted for some 7,400 of them, while resettlement for 1,200 was being finalized. The Steering Committee of the International Conference on Indo-Chinese refugees (Geneva, 16 March) agreed that by the end of 1995 all CPA activities in first-asylum countries should be completed. The target would be met soon thereafter in Hong Kong. The Committee noted that a large number of Vietnamese who did not qualify for refugee status had refused voluntary repatriation. It recognized the significance of simplified procedures and the monthly target of the return to Viet Nam of at least 3,600 of remaining non-refugees in camps. UNHCR supported implementation of 109 community-based micro-projects, valued at $2.5 million, for returned Vietnamese refugees.

In an October conclusion,⁽³⁾ the Executive Committee called on UNHCR to convene a meeting of the Steering Committee by the end of 1995 to assess the situation and to consider measures and durable solutions to ensure the successful conclusion of CPA. It appealed to the international community to support the repatriation of Indo-Chinese camp populations under voluntary repatriation and orderly return programmes, as well as developmental assistance to countries of origin for the reintegration of returnees. It called on countries of origin to continue to ensure reasonable access to returnees by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and requested all parties concerned to cooperate in implementing relevant memoranda of understanding and agreements relating to the repatriation of Indo-Chinese camp populations.

Europe

In a report covering 1995 UNHCR activities,⁽¹⁰⁾ the High Commissioner stated that the downward trend in requests from persons seeking asylum in Western Europe continued in 1995, due to restrictions by States on immigration. The number of applicants granted refugee status and those allowed to remain on special humanitarian grounds or under temporary protection also declined. The signing in December of the Peace Agreement for Bosnia and Herzegovina (see PART TWO, Chapter V) raised the question of the discontinuation of temporary protection for asylum-seekers from the former Yugoslavia in Europe and gave rise to the prospect of a large-scale return. UNHCR continued to engage in an informal dialogue with member States of the European Union (EU) on asylum and refugee matters.

In the former Yugoslavia, the worsening security situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, following the failure of the warring parties to extend the Cessation of Hostilities Agreement beyond March, adversely affected UNHCR's ability to provide assistance. The recapture of the Bihac pocket by the Bosnian Government from the Bosnian Serbs in August prompted the exodus of some 20,000 former inhabitants of Velaka Kladusa and Cazin who were loyal to the Bosnian rebel leader. When the situation improved, UNHCR launched a programme of voluntary repatriation to Bihac. In Banja Luka, continued pressure was placed on minority communities to leave the area, and the situation was further exacerbated by an influx of refugees from Western Slavonia. In May, 4,500 ethnic Serbs from Western Slavonia arrived in Sector East, while 2,500 fled to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The fall of the eastern Muslim enclaves of Srebrenica and Zepa in July to Bosnian Serb forces resulted in the forced exodus of 36,000 persons to the Tuzla and Zenica regions. The capture by Croat forces of Glamoc and Grahovo in late July also led to the flight of 14,000 Serbs to northern Bosnia, many of whom made their way to Banja Luka. In August, UNHCR aid supplies in Banja Luka were quickly exhausted, with a mass influx of some 200,000 refugees from Krajina. A major concern was the situation of the remaining Serb population in the Krajina. Human rights violations, including burning and looting of abandoned property, harassment and violence, were brought to the attention of Croatia, together with serious criticism from the international community. UNHCR supported the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) in efforts to cope with the influx of refugees from Krajina. It also requested the authorities to consider the estimated 800 Muslims from Zepa and Srebrenica detained in Mitrovo Polje and Slivovica in the Federal Republic as refugees.

In a 3 October statement,⁽²²⁾ the Security Council expressed concern at the withdrawal of refugee status from and the consequent ending of assistance to many refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina in Croatia, as well as at the situations of refugees from Croatia wishing to return and of ethnic Serbs who had chosen to remain in Croatia. It urged Croatia to continue to provide asylum to all refugees regardless of their origin, and to lift any time-limits placed on the return of refugees to Croatia to claim their property.

In a 22 December statement,⁽²³⁾ the Council said that the requirement that owners should reclaim their property by 27 December 1995 was an insurmountable obstacle for most Serb refugees, and it demanded that Croatia lift the time-limit immediately (for details, see PART TWO, Chapter V).

The coming into effect of a cease-fire agreement towards the end of 1995 resulted in an agreement between the Croat and Muslim sides on return of displaced persons to contested areas in Central Bosnia and Sector East of Croatia. In accordance with the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, signed in Dayton, United States, in November, UNHCR was entrusted with the development and implementation of a repatriation plan for the orderly return of refugees and displaced persons.

In Central Europe, UNHCR efforts continued to be centred on influencing legislation with a view to establishing fair and accessible refugee status determination procedures. Its activities were also focused on institution- and capacity-building, training, and a limited assistance programme. The region was affected by large migratory movements where the distinction between migrants and genuine asylum-seekers was often blurred. UNHCR assisted refugee authorities in Central Europe by creating conditions conducive to integration; lack of affordable housing for asylum-seekers and refugees continued to be an obstacle.

In Eastern Europe, UNHCR continued to advocate strategies to pre-empt refugee-producing situations in the CIS countries. It assisted in developing an institutional capacity to provide solutions for displaced persons and was engaged in the search for a comprehensive approach to the problems of refugees, returnees, displaced persons and other forms of involuntary displacements in the CIS countries and neighbouring States in preparation for a regional conference (see above). In Armenia, UNHCR limited its intervention to the most vulnerable of the 150,000 refugees there. In October, Armenia adopted a law giving refugees of Armenian ethnic origin access to citizenship. UNHCR planned to facilitate the integration of the most needy among some 900,000 internally displaced persons and refugees in Azerbaijan, to strengthen Georgia's capacity to service its 200,000 internally displaced persons, and to initiate confidence-building measures to benefit the 35,000 persons who had returned to the Gali district in the Abkhaz region. UNHCR envisaged phasing out, by the end of 1995, its emergency operation in the North Caucasus for displaced populations from Chechnya in the Russian Federation, but new developments generated an additional influx of displaced persons into neighbouring republics. During the year, total UNHCR expenditure in Europe amounted to $291.9 million.

In an October conclusion,⁽³⁾ the Executive Committee expressed concern for the fate of refugees and displaced and missing persons within and from the former Yugoslavia and called on countries of origin to create conditions for and to ensure the organized and phased return of refugees and displaced persons in safety and dignity, in cooperation with UNHCR, the host countries and the international community. The international community was asked to continue to contribute to ongoing humanitarian efforts, as well as to humanitarian and rehabilitation programmes to be undertaken within the framework of a possible peace settlement.

South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East

In South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East, UNHCR programmes focused on capacity- and institution-building, particularly in the Central Asian Republics, the High Commissioner reported.⁽¹⁰⁾ UNHCR bolstered its presence in Afghanistan in the hope of encouraging the repatriation of the 2.1 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan and Iran. In North Africa and the Middle East, incremental progress was made in planning and implementing durable solutions for relatively stable caseloads.

During 1995, 348,000 refugees returned to Afghanistan: 153,000 from Pakistan, of whom 77,000 were directly assisted by UNHCR, and 195,000 from Iran, with UNHCR assisting 92,000. Assistance activities to support repatriation shifted to communities inside Afghanistan. UNHCR implemented a total of 386 QIPs, mainly in the areas of education, irrigation and transport. The delivery of repatriation grants for returnees shifted from Quetta, Pakistan, to the southern Afghan city of Kandahar. A group-guaranteed lending programme for women in northern Afghanistan was initiated and additional credit programmes were under consideration. In Iran, host to the world's largest caseload of refugees—1,420,000 Afghans and 585,000 Iraqis (Kurds and Arabs)—the Government withdrew health and education subsidies, affecting both local and refugee populations. UNHCR initiated interim measures in those sectors to minimize any adverse impact on the welfare of the refugees.

The repatriation of refugees to Tajikistan from northern Afghanistan was lower in 1995 than projected, with 1,053 persons choosing to repatriate. The total number of returnees since 1993 was 43,000. Some 7,300 refugees remained in Sakhi Camp (Mazar), and an estimated 11,500 were scattered throughout the Kunduz province.

In North Africa, assistance continued for an estimated 50,000 refugees in southern Algeria, 28,000 from Mali and 22,000 from Niger. A pilot repatriation programme for Malians was initiated under a 1994 agreement signed by Algeria, Mali, IFAD and UNHCR,⁽²⁴⁾ but the situation in northern Mali delayed the implementation of mass organized repatriation. Still, some 8,000 Malians and 245 refugees from Niger were reported to have repatriated. The situation in northern Mali also impeded large-scale repatriation of refugees from Mauritania. In November, an UNHCR pilot project for organized repatriation was implemented, benefiting 2,247 refugees. In the context of the plan to identify and register potential voters for the referendum in Western Sahara (see PART ONE, Chapter III), a UNHCR technical team visited various sites and potential repatriation locations in the territory, as well as the Tindouf (Algeria) camps, to collect information to update the 1991 UNHCR repatriation plan.⁽²⁵⁾

In the Middle East, UNHCR helped 7,349 Iraqi Kurds to return home, notably from Iran. In Iraq, it assisted some 16,000 Turkish nationals of Kurdish origin; 38,500 Iranian refugees; and 556 refugees of other origins. No progress was reported in the exchange of refugees between Iran and Iraq. However, UNHCR continued to liaise with both parties to ensure an organized movement of those persons wanting to return. Saudi Arabia continued to assist Iraqi refugees in Rafha Camp. Some 4,430 persons were resettled in more than 10 countries, while 520 persons were repatriated. UNHCR also assisted Palestinians expelled from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and stranded at Salloum on the Egyptian border. A new camp location was identified at Shukrah in Yemen to host some 9,000 Somali refugees.

In the Central Asian Republics, the UNHCR objective was to assist Governments and operational partners to create conditions for the efficient management of population movements. In August/September, liaison offices were opened in Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Turkmenistan. Of over 500,000 Tajik internally displaced persons who had left their homes in 1992, 95 per cent had returned to their places of origin by the end of 1995. Some 14,000 internally displaced persons remained in the Gorno-Badakhshan region and 43,000 refugees from Tajikistan who had fled to northern Afghanistan were repatriated with UNHCR assistance, leaving 17,600 Tajiks in Afghanistan. With the return of the majority of Tajik refugees and internally displaced persons to their places of origin, UNHCR in late 1995 neared the end of a three-year operation providing materials to reconstruct 18,000 houses for Tajik returnees. UNHCR launched resettlement projects in Kazakhstan for refugees of Kazak ethnic origin and in Kyrgyzstan for those of Kyrgyz ethnic origin.

Total UNHCR expenditure for South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East amounted to some $106 million.

In an October conclusion,⁽³⁾ the Executive Committee called for continued international support for the Afghan refugees in Iran and Pakistan and their early repatriation. The international community should support a comprehensive approach to the return of Afghan refugees and rehabilitation of affected areas. The High Commissioner was asked to: maintain UNHCR activities in Afghanistan and its neighbouring countries still hosting large numbers of refugees and to collaborate with the Governments concerned, other international humanitarian agencies and NGOs to provide assistance to refugee areas; extend UNHCR activities to other areas of return, through collaborative ventures with UN agencies that would maximize benefits to communities receiving returnees; and continue to mobilize the involvement of international and multilateral organizations as part of the rehabilitation strategy to sustain repatriation.

Chapter XIII

Health, food and nutrition

In 1995, the United Nations continued to promote human health, deliver food aid and monitor trends in nutrition.

The Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund endorsed a strategy as a framework for UNICEF activities in the health sector. Further progress was made towards making the Joint and Co-sponsored UN Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome operational. In July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed arrangements for governing and managing the Joint Programme and for the participation of non-governmental organizations. The Council and the General Assembly also endorsed the strategies and workplans developed by the UN system to support countries in the prevention and control of malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular cholera. In other action, the Assembly urged Governments and organizations to continue strengthening efforts to implement the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities and the Long-term Strategy to Implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the Year 2000 and Beyond.

The World Food Programme (WFP)—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations—provided in 1995 over 2.8 million tons of food aid to some 50 million of the poorest people in the world, half of them victims of emergencies. The Assembly reconstituted the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of WFP into an Executive Board and approved revised General Regulations for the Programme. WFP also adopted on a trial basis, beginning in 1996, new policies designed to place its resources and long-term financing on a more sound and predictable basis. The Assembly invited Governments to participate at the level of heads of State or Government in the World Food Summit to be held in November 1996, and invited the international community to contribute to the fund established to facilitate the preparations for and holding of the Summit.

The United Nations University, an autonomous academic institution within the UN system, continued activities under its programme of food and nutrition for human and social development.

Health

Health policy

Health strategy for UNICEF

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) presented to its Executive Board in September a report on a health strategy for UNICEF,⁽¹⁾ proposing a framework for UNICEF activities in the context of community-focused health sector development. The report discussed how UNICEF strategies—which focused on reducing infant, child and maternal mortality and on improving children's health and nutrition through helping strengthen countries' capacities in health monitoring, promotion and essential health services within the primary health care approach—could be adapted and applied in diverse situations, including states of emergency. The report emphasized the complementarity between broader UNICEF advocacy, which addressed a range of child, adolescent and women's health issues, and programme support priorities within specific countries.

The implications for UNICEF of the proposed health strategy included the strengthening and rationalization of its core technical capacity, increased emphasis on strengthening technical partnerships and coordination with the World Health Organization (WHO) and other international and bilateral agencies, refinements in situation analyses, strengthened information and operations research capacities required to guide programming and partnership processes, and increased flexibility in supply and financial operations to better serve programme objectives.

The UNICEF Executive Board, in September, endorsed⁽²⁾ the strategy as a framework for UNICEF activities in the health sector and stressed the need for speedy operationalization through the country programmes. It requested the Executive Director to report in 1996 on implementation of the strategy and emphasized that resources allocated for health programmes at the country level should be based on the priorities contained in the strategy. The Board urged UNICEF to participate with WHO and other partners in reviewing and updating the Global Strategy for Health for All by the Year 2000, adopted by the World Health Assembly in 1981⁽⁵⁾ and endorsed by the General Assembly in the same year,⁽⁶⁾ and to review implementation of the UNICEF health strategy and programme towards the goals of the 1990 World Summit for Children in the light of the revised Health for All Strategy.

Human health and sustainable development

The UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy held its thirtieth session in Geneva, on 30 and 31 January,⁽⁷⁾ to review WHO policies and UNICEF action; consider preparations for the 1995 mid-decade review of progress in implementing the goals of the 1990 World Summit for Children in the area of health; and discuss options for improving district health systems development in a decentralizing situation, and the complementarity of UNICEF and WHO in emergency situations, with particular reference to women and children.

The Joint Committee recommended that a message be conveyed to the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX), calling on heads of State to give high priority to monitoring progress towards health for all and the World Summit for Children goals, with national mid-decade reviews that gave special attention to the mid-decade health goals as stepping stones towards those for the year 2000. WHO, UNICEF and other international agencies should collaborate in assisting countries to monitor progress, using multiple indicator surveys in health and health-related sectors. The two organizations should also assess progress on the health goals at mid-decade as a basis for the Secretary-General's review in 1996. The Joint Committee further made recommendations for action aimed at achieving the mid-decade goals relating to immunization coverage, neonatal tetanus, measles deaths and cases, and poliomyelitis, as well as on oral rehydration therapy/diarrhoea case management; empowerment of women to breast-feed their children; iodine deficiency disorders; vitamin A deficiency and reduction of malnutrition; guinea-worm transmission; water and sanitation; knowledge of HIV/AIDS-related preventive practices; reduction of maternal and infant mortality rates and of iron deficiency anaemia; and acute respiratory infections.

The UNICEF Executive Board, in March, took note⁽⁸⁾ of the Joint Committee's report and recommendations and requested the UNICEF secretariat to consult with concerned parties on the draft UNICEF health strategy in preparation for submission to the Board (see above), in order to promote its implementation at the country level.

In May, the WHO Executive Board endorsed⁽⁹⁾ the Joint Committee's recommendations, in particular those pertaining to the end-of-decade goals set by the 1990 World Summit for Children.

Action by the Commission on Sustainable Development. At its third session in April,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) considered an April report of the Secretary-General⁽¹¹⁾ on progress in implementing the decisions and recommendations taken by the Commission at its May 1994 session, including those⁽¹²⁾ relating to chapter 6 (protecting and promoting human health) of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development.⁽¹³⁾

The Commission noted that a joint WHO/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) inter-regional initiative had so far succeeded in incorporating health- and environment-related concerns in the preparation of national plans for sustainable development in 12 countries. Regional initiatives relating health more closely to environment within the context of sustainable development had led to the creation of an Environment Health Action Plan for Europe and preparatory work for a Pan-American Conference on Health and the Environment in Sustainable Development.

The Commission also considered a March report of the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁴⁾ which dealt with, among others, programme area B (improving human health) of chapter 16 (on the environmentally sound management of biotechnology) of Agenda 21.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Commission urged Governments to take specific action, within the framework of the 1993 Convention on Biological Diversity,⁽¹⁶⁾ aimed at enhancing the potential contribution of the private sector, financial, academic and research institutions, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other major groups to the implementation of the objectives of chapter 16.

AIDS prevention and control

At its resumed organizational session in May 1995, the Economic and Social Council considered the Joint and Co-sponsored UN Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UN-AIDS), which it had endorsed in 1994.⁽¹⁷⁾ The Council had before it a May report⁽¹⁸⁾ of the 1994 Council President, the Permanent Representative of Australia, on informal consultations on the question of the composition of the Programme Coordination Board (PCB) for UN-AIDS. He stated that agreement had been reached that the Board would comprise 22 members (5 each from African and Asian States, including Japan; 3 from Latin American and Caribbean States; 2 from Eastern European States and 7 from Western European and other States) elected for a three-year term. It was proposed that the first election be held by the Council on 1 June, at which time it was expected that the Council would meet to consider further the programme of work of UNAIDS, on the basis, inter alia, of the report of the Committee of Co-sponsoring Organizations (CCO).

The Council, by decision 1995/223 of 5 May, approved the composition of PCB as recommended and decided to continue informal consultations on the representation on the Board of the six co-sponsoring organizations (UNDP, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), UNICEF, WHO and the World Bank) and NGOs; and on which body or bodies would conduct elections subsequent to the first, which would be conducted by the Council.

At its substantive session (June/July), the Council considered the report of CCO on UNAIDS, transmitted by the Secretary-General in May,⁽¹⁶⁾ as requested by the Council in 1994.⁽¹⁴⁾ The report examined the HIV/AIDS epidemic; the background to the establishment of the Joint Programme, its mission, priorities and strategies, and its functions; the terms and conditions of co-sponsorship, governance and management of the Programme; resource mobilization; and an outline of a proposed budget for 1996-1997. UNAIDS was to address the major strategic and policy issues of HIV/AIDS, advocate and catalyse a strong global response to the epidemic, ensure coordinated support by the co-sponsoring organizations to national AIDS programmes, and promote and support research of relevance to the developing countries. It was to act in partnership with other UN agencies, bilateral organizations, community-based groups, NGOs, the private sector and academic institutions, and would involve people with HIV infection and AIDS in all areas of its work. At the global level, UNAIDS would consist of staff representing a "critical mass" of expertise, and of activities in the areas of advocacy, strategic and policy guidance, research, support to country-level coordination, technical support to national AIDS programmes, and monitoring of the epidemic and of national and international responses to it. At the country level, where the mandate was to strengthen national capacity to respond to HIV/AIDS, the Joint Programme would work primarily through the theme groups on HIV/AIDS established by the resident coordinator. The policies developed by UNAIDS would become part of each co-sponsor's mainstream activities at the country level, with HIV/AIDS-related activities being integrated into all relevant programme activities and the experience gained fed back into the Joint Programme.

The Programme's financial requirements in 1996-1997 were estimated at $180 million, excluding funds provided directly by the co-sponsoring agencies to the theme groups and national AIDS programmes. PCB would serve as the governance structure, taking responsibility for all policy and budgetary matters and representing the interests and responsibilities of Governments, co-sponsoring organizations and other interested parties. CCO—composed of one representative from each of the co-sponsors—would serve as a standing committee of PCB to consider matters of major importance to the Programme. The Programme director would report to PCB, after consultation with CCO, on all major programmes and budget and operational issues, while the Council would review the annual report on the work of the Programme. A legal instrument setting out the conditions of co-ownership and co-sponsorship of the Joint Programme, its collaborating parties and resources, the functions and composition of its governing bodies and its financial arrangements was to be drafted by the co-sponsoring organizations. A memorandum of understanding between UNAIDS and WHO, which would be responsible for the administration in support of the Programme, would also be drawn up.

The Council also had before it a report of the Director-General of WHO, transmitted in May by the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁷⁾ on progress in implementing the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS, which described activities carried out by the WHO Global Programme on AIDS and by UN organizations and specialized agencies in 1993-1994. The Council, by decision 1995/234 of 19 July, and the General Assembly, by decision 50/439 of 20 December, took note of the report.

UNDP/UNFPA action. In a February report,⁽¹⁸⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that the recruitment process for HIV and Development National Professional Officers (NPOs), who worked in collaboration with their colleagues in the other co-sponsoring agencies of UNAIDS, was nearing completion, with more than half of the posts filled. The activities carried out by the HIV and Development NPOs reflected UNDP's focus on national capacity-strengthening and broad-based programming that was both effective and sustainable. Developing partnerships with civil society groups and institutions was also a feature of their work. NPOs played a crucial part in supporting efforts to improve the coordination of UN agencies in their HIV-related work, particularly in Honduras and Swaziland, through the provision of secretariat services for inter-agency HIV task forces and theme groups.

On 7 April, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board urged⁽¹⁹⁾ that the UNDP Administrator and the Executive Director of UNFPA, in the framework of UNAIDS, implement the declaration of the 1994 Paris AIDS summit⁽²⁰⁾ and develop a strategy for including HIV/AIDS components in their regular activities. The Board urged the Administrator to ensure that the HIV and Development NPOs carried out their duties in close collaboration and in accordance with the objectives of UNAIDS.

The Administrator, in a November report,⁽²¹⁾ stated that UNDP had continued to support the development of UNAIDS. It had seconded a senior staff member to UNAIDS and was reviewing contributions in cash and in kind to global UNAIDS activities for 1996-1997. It continued to work closely with the Programme to develop an approach at the country level. The Administrator had requested all resident coordinators to begin in-country consultations on how best to support and/or strengthen UN theme groups on HIV/AIDS. In collaboration with UNAIDS, UNDP continued to undertake its HIV and development programme activities, including programme development, support and backstopping to integrate HIV activities more effectively into key UNDP programming areas. UNDP had given high priority to strengthening its country offices and to developing the capacity of resident representatives to mainstream HIV activities in a development context. The 22 NPOs were playing an important role in that regard. UNDP was also working with UNAIDS and its co-sponsoring partners to strengthen the implementation of UN HIV and AIDS personnel policy. Total UNDP HIV and development-related activities and staff support for 1994-1995 amounted to $71.8 million. Discussions were being held with UNAIDS and the other co-sponsors to fine-tune planned HIV activities for 1996-1997 and to ensure enhanced cooperation. Consultations were also going on regarding regional activities and to secure additional financing.

UNFPA, also in a November report,⁽²²⁾ outlined its support for and collaboration in UNAIDS, which included the secondment of a staff member to the Programme since December 1994 and a grant to the HIV/AIDS task force for the production of the biennial report on global activities. UNFPA, in agreement with WHO, considered that family planning, maternal care, prevention of abortion and prevention of reproductive-tract infections, including sexually transmitted diseases and HIV/AIDS, were the four most important components of reproductive health. By promoting and supporting effective intervention in those four areas, UNFPA said it would continue to work towards securing and safeguarding reproductive health for everyone.

UNICEF action. The UNICEF Executive Board, in March, urged⁽²³⁾ that the UNICEF secretariat participate actively in UNAIDS and support the Director of the Programme, and that steps be taken to implement the 1994 declaration of the Paris summit⁽²⁰⁾ in the context of UNAIDS. It requested the secretariat to develop a strategy for the inclusion of HIV/AIDS components in its programmes and regular activities within the framework of UNAIDS.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. In March, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution⁽²⁴⁾ on the protection of human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS (see PART THREE, Chapter II), by which it requested the co-sponsors of UNAIDS to integrate a strong human rights component throughout its strategies and work. It also requested the High Commissioner for Human Rights, in cooperation with UNAIDS, non-governmental agencies and other actors in the field, to elaborate guidelines on promoting and protecting respect for human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS and to consider convening a second international expert consultation on human rights and AIDS.

On 3 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/2.

Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1994/24 of 26 July 1994 concerning the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS) which was established to provide an internationally coordinated response to the HIV/AIDS pandemic, to provide global leadership in response to the epidemic and to achieve and promote global consensus on policy and programmatic approaches to the fight against HIV/AIDS.

Recalling also that the Programme is charged with promoting broad-based political and social mobilization to prevent and respond to HIV/AIDS within countries, ensuring that national responses involve a wide range of sectors and institutions and advocating greater political commitment in responding to the epidemic at the global and country levels, including the mobilization and allocation of adequate resources for HIV/AIDS-related activities.

Emphasizing the urgent need to make the Programme operational as soon as possible, but no later than January 1996,

1. Welcomes the report of the Committee of Co-sponsoring Organizations of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, which will be of assistance in the further consideration of the operations of the new Programme, while recognizing the modifications that have been made to the arrangements set out in the report, as outlined by the Chairperson of the Committee, and the need for the Programme to operate in accordance with the provisions of Council resolution 1994/24;

2. Endorses the arrangements outlined in section VI of the report of the Committee (Governance and management) and decides to add the following to the functions of the Programme Coordination Board listed in paragraph 101 of the report:

3. Requests the Programme Coordination Board to give detailed consideration to the report of the Committee and to agree on the modalities for implementation of the arrangements set out in that report, taking into account the changes referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 above;

4. Calls upon the co-sponsoring organizations, as soon as possible, to finalize and sign a legal document in the form of a memorandum of understanding outlining the responsibilities and functions of the co-sponsors, consistent with the provisions of Council resolution 1994/24, and to submit that document to the Council, through the Programme Coordination Board at its first substantive session, for consideration at a resumed session;

5. Requests the Executive Director of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS to report on the status of implementation of the new Programme, through the Board, to the Council early in 1996;

6. Decides that each of the six co-sponsors will participate in the work of the Programme Coordination Board and have full rights, except the right to vote;

7. Decides also that five non-governmental organizations will be invited to take part in the work of the Programme Coordination Board, in accordance with the report on the informal consultations on arrangements with regard to the participation of non-governmental organizations in the work of the Board, submitted to the Economic and Social Council by the Permanent Representative of Australia to the United Nations and annexed to the present resolution;

8. Calls upon each of the six co-sponsoring organizations to give their full support to the establishment of, transition to and smooth functioning of the Programme;

9. Appeals to all Governments, international institutions, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to support the Programme with adequate contributions to its resources;

10. Decides that the participation, as observers, of Member States and non-member States that are not members of the Board, in the work of the Board, should be consistent with the rules of procedure of the Council.

ANNEX

Arrangements for the participation of non-governmental organizations in the work of the Programme Coordination Board of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS): report on the informal consultation of the Economic and Social Council

1. The meeting on 9 June 1995 considered the question of the final arrangements for the Programme Coordination Board of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS), particularly the participation of non-governmental organizations, and the report of the Committee of Co-sponsoring Organizations of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS. The Board is a governance structure composed of Member States, with the participation of the six co-sponsors and eligible non-governmental organizations.

2. The deliberations of the meeting are summarized in the following terms:

(a) Non-governmental organizations would be invited to take part in the work of the Programme Coordination Board. Such invitations would need to be reviewed periodically. Non-governmental organizations invited should be those either in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council or in relationship with one of the six co-sponsoring organizations or on the roster of non-governmental organizations dealing with matters pertaining to HIV/AIDS, in accordance with the rules, procedures and well-established practice of the United Nations system;

(b) The process of identification of the non-governmental organizations that sought to participate in the work of the Programme Coordination Board would be determined by the non-governmental organizations themselves. The Board would formally approve the nomination of those organizations;

(c) There would be five such non-governmental participants, three from developing countries and two from developed countries and countries with economies in transition;

(d) In making the selection, non-governmental organizations would be encouraged to seek competent and relevant representatives, for example participation by groups concerned with economic and social development and groups representing people affected by HIV/AIDS;

(e) The need for rotation among non-governmental organizations was recognized; the appointment of an individual organization should not exceed three years;

(f) Non-governmental organizations would be advised of the terms and conditions of their participation. It would be made clear to them that such participation would include:

A seat at the table with six representatives of the Committee of Co-sponsoring Organizations and the twenty-two Member States;

Non-governmental organizations would be able to speak;

Non-governmental organizations would have no negotiating role;

Non-governmental organizations would not participate in any part of the formal decision-making process, including the right to vote, which is reserved for representatives of Governments;

(g) These arrangements for the participation of non-governmental organizations are not to be regarded as setting a precedent;

(h) Funding would be made available for the representatives of developing countries and for each of the three non-governmental organizations from developing countries to cover the costs of one representative each to attend meetings of the Programme Coordination Board. Such funds would cover the cost of daily subsistence allowance and travel only and would be based on existing eligibility criteria.

3. It was also recommended that the Economic and Social Council should review the Programme at its organizational session for 1996.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/2
 3 July 1995 Meeting 21 Adopted without vote
 Draft by Australia (E/1995/L.24/Rev.1); agenda item 6 (I).

Follow-up action. At its first meeting (Geneva, 13-14 July), PCB reviewed indicative budgetary proposals for 1996-1997 and requested that an overall budget be developed for the first biennium. It authorized the Executive Director of the Programme to proceed with the recruitment of staff and adopted the modus operandi for its operations. At its second meeting (Geneva, 13-15 November), PCB adopted the strategic plan for the Programme for 1996-2000 and approved the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997 in the amount of $120 million. The mode of operations for the Programme at the country level was endorsed, on the understanding that some of the operational issues would be further defined. The Board established informal working groups to discuss resource mobilization and indicators and evaluation.

The Memorandum of Understanding on the Programme was agreed on and signed by the six co-sponsoring organizations. A letter of agreement was signed between WHO and the Programme for the provision of administrative and financial services.

Malaria and diarrhoeal diseases

The Secretary-General presented in May a report⁽²⁵⁾ on preventive action and intensification of the struggle against malaria in developing countries, particularly in Africa, as requested by the Economic and Social Council⁽²⁶⁾ and the General Assembly⁽²⁷⁾ in 1994. The report outlined the action plans for preventing and controlling malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, including cholera, developed in collaboration with relevant UN organizations, with WHO acting as task manager. The action plans covered goals and objectives, work plans, time-frames and resources needed.

The Secretary-General stressed that urgent action was needed to prevent and control those diseases that especially affected developing countries, impeding social and economic development and contributing to a vicious disease-malnutrition-poverty-disease cycle. Increased resources were needed from individual countries, the UN system and other bodies to apply and improve existing knowledge and tools. Progress in preventing and controlling malaria and diarrhoeal diseases provided an index of the success of current development policies. With concerted efforts, the world could enter the next century having made significant advances in conquering those diseases and reaffirming the efficacy of coordinated UN action in support of Member States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/63.

Malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular cholera

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the agreed conclusions of the coordination segment of its substantive session of 1993, its resolution 1994/34 of 29 July 1994 and General Assembly resolution 49/135 of 19 December 1994,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on preventive action and intensification of the struggle against malaria in developing countries, particularly in Africa;

2. Endorses the strategies and workplans which have been developed as a collaborative process involving relevant organizations, agencies, organs and programmes of the United Nations system, with the World Health Organization as task manager, to provide optimal support to countries in order to achieve the national and internationally accepted goals and objectives for the prevention and control of malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular cholera;

3. Stresses the urgent need to prevent and control these diseases and, to that end, calls on the international community, especially industrialized countries, to expand, where possible, fund-raising channels and to provide adequate financial resources to countries where the diseases are endemic, especially the least developed countries, for the successful implementation of the workplans and the achievement of a significant impact in both the short and medium term, while recognizing that basic and applied research, including research on vaccines, is a priority component of such workplans;

4. Welcomes with satisfaction the agreement signed between Dr. Manuel Elkin Patarroyo of Colombia and the World Health Organization during the forty-eighth World Health Assembly, in May 1995, by which Dr. Patarroyo donated to the World Health Organization the licence of the patent rights and know-how related to the SPf66 anti-malarial vaccine developed by him, and stresses the importance of the World Health Organization urgently taking full advantage of this donation;

5. Notes that the actions relating to the development and donation of this vaccine constitute an example of effective South-South cooperation for development through the United Nations system;

6. Urges the Director-General of the World Health Organization, the lead agency in international health, to continue to provide, in collaboration with the concerned United Nations agencies and programmes and within the United Nations resident coordinator system, technical expertise and support for the agreed strategies and workplans in support of national health development plans and actions in countries where malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, particularly cholera, are rife;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 1998, the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the implementation of the strategies and workplans presented to the Council at its substantive session of 1995, to be prepared in collaboration with the other relevant organizations, organs, bodies and programmes of the United Nations system.

The General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted resolution 50/128.

Preventive action and intensification of the struggle against malaria in developing countries, particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 49/135 of 19 December 1994, Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1994/34 of 29 July 1994 and 1995/63 of 28 July 1995,

Gravely concerned by the fact that malaria causes the death of four million people annually, that hundreds of millions of cases of malaria are reported annually and that infants and children under age five are the major victims,

Alarmed by the loss of human life, the severe degradation in the quality of life and the fact that the social and economic development of developing countries is impeded as a result of malaria, and despite the development of new vaccines,

Recalling agreed conclusions 1993/2 of the coordination segment of the substantive session of 1993 of the Economic and Social Council on the coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system in the fields of preventive action and intensification of the struggle against malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular cholera,

Acknowledging the importance for countries where malaria is endemic of adopting national plans of action in conformity with the Global Malaria Control Strategy of the World Health Organization, endorsed by the Ministerial Conference on Malaria held at Amsterdam in 1992 and by the World Health Assembly in 1993,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on preventive action and intensification of the struggle against malaria in developing countries, particularly in Africa;

2. Reaffirms its endorsement of the Global Malaria Control Strategy of the World Health Organization, as adopted;

3. Expresses its appreciation of the efforts of the World Health Organization and the specialized agencies concerned in assisting the developing countries in their efforts to combat endemic diseases;

4. Notes with appreciation the continuing efforts of the affected countries to control the disease, in spite of their meagre resources, through national plans and projects, and urges the affected countries that have not yet done so to adopt national plans to control malaria in conformity with the Global Strategy of the World Health Organization;

5. Stresses the need for strengthening national capacity-building within the context of primary health care so as to enable developing countries to meet the objectives of the Global Strategy, with a view to contributing to the development of overall health;

6. Endorses the strategies and work plans that have been developed through a collaborative process involving relevant organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, with the World Health Organization as task coordinator, to provide optimal support to affected developing countries in order to achieve the goals and objectives pertaining to the prevention and control of malaria and diarrhoeal diseases;

7. Calls upon the international community, in particular the donor countries, to expand, where possible, fund-raising channels and to provide adequate financial resources and medical and technical assistance to the affected developing countries, in particular African countries and least developed countries, for the successful implementation of work plans and projects and the achievement of significant progress in both the short and the medium term in controlling malaria, and to intensify basic and applied research on anti-malarial vaccines as a priority;

8. Encourages the Director-General of the World Health Organization, through the World Health Organization's Division of Control of Tropical Diseases, to continue his efforts to mobilize international organizations, multilateral financial institutions, the specialized agencies, organs and programmes of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations as well as other groups to provide the affected developing countries, in particular African countries, with technical, medical and financial resources and assistance commensurate with the needs set forth in those countries' national plans to control malaria;

9. Welcomes the proposal of the Secretary-General related to the struggle against malaria in Africa contained in his initiatives for Africa;

10. Welcomes with satisfaction the agreement signed between Dr. Manual Elkin Patarroyo of Colombia and the World Health Organization, in May 1995, by which Dr. Patarroyo donated to the World Health Organization the licence of the patent rights and know-how related to the SPf66 anti-malarial vaccine developed by him, which constitutes an example of solidarity and effective South-South cooperation for development, and supports the request of the World Health Organization for the provision of additional resources for malaria research under the United Nations Development Programme/World Bank/World Health Organization Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases in order to accomplish its goal of developing an effective vaccine for the control of malaria;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session the progress report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the implementation of the strategies and work plans to be prepared in collaboration with the other relevant organs, organizations, bodies and programmes of the United Nations system.

Disabled persons

Implementation of the Programme of Action

Responding to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General in September 1995 reported⁽²⁹⁾ on the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,⁽³⁰⁾ and on the progress of efforts to ensure the equalization of opportunities and full inclusion of persons with disabilities in the various UN bodies. According to the report, a task force was established at UN Headquarters in January, at the initiative of the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, to review steps that might increase the Organization's responsiveness to the needs of delegates, staff and visitors with disabilities. The task force would develop a phased approach and implementation plan covering the years 1996-2000 to ensure full accessibility to UN facilities. The Secretariat was informing the specialized agencies and other organizations of the experience gained and requesting information on measures taken and problems encountered in making buildings, conferences, information and documents fully accessible.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/442 of 21 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities

The World Summit for Social Development, in its Programme of Action (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX), recommended that governmental responses to special social needs should include, among others, promoting the United Nations Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, adopted in 1993,⁽³¹⁾ and developing strategies for implementing those Rules. Governments, in collaboration with organizations of people with disabilities and the private sector, should work towards the equalization of opportunities so that people with disabilities could contribute to and benefit from full participation in society. An International NGO Conference for Disability (Copenhagen, 3 March), organized by the Danish Council of Organizations of Disabled People, was held in conjunction with the World Summit to create a human development index for disabled people, based on parameters corresponding to the 22 articles of the Rules.

In an April report⁽³²⁾ to the Commission for Social Development on major issues and UN programmes relating to social development and welfare and specific social groups, the Secretary-General summarized the substantive issues relating to disabled persons and outlined programme activities of the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development. He noted that the core issues of the World Summit were relevant to disability and offered the opportunity to interpret disability in the light of recent developments, placing it in the context of a broader political and social agenda. The issue of disability was linked to achieving a just and equitable society for all, and disability strategies must be considered in the framework of policies and practices to achieve social justice, equity and human rights.

The 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons⁽³⁰⁾ established a policy framework and guiding philosophy based on recognition of the human rights of disabled persons; the Standard Rules were an instrument for policy-making and action and provided a basis for technical cooperation among States, the United Nations and other international organizations; and the Long-term Strategy to Implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the Year 2000 and Beyond, put forward by the Secretary-General in 1994,⁽³³⁾ was based on the understanding that effective change in attitudes and policies could not be achieved overnight, but was a creative process that needed to be generated and nurtured. Those three major initiatives, said the Secretary-General, were closely interrelated; progress in reaching the goals set by them could be achieved more quickly and effectively through close cooperation and coordination at every level.

To help advance those goals, the Secretary-General in 1994⁽³⁴⁾ had appointed Bengt Lindqvist (Sweden) as Special Rapporteur to monitor implementation of the Standard Rules. In April, the Commission for Social Development,⁽³⁵⁾ having heard an oral report of the Special Rapporteur, encouraged him to focus his monitoring efforts in the forthcoming two years on an appropriate number of priority areas, bearing in mind that the overall goal was to implement the Rules in their entirety. It urged States to continue to implement the Rules and establish or strengthen national coordinating committees or similar bodies to serve as national focal points on disability matters. It invited them to communicate to the Secretariat and to the Special Rapporteur information on their national focal point, in order to facilitate the exchange of information on the implementation of the Rules. The Commission also urged States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to respond to the Special Rapporteur's questionnaire on the Rules' implementation, and called on the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, UNDP and other UN entities to cooperate with him in their implementation and monitoring. The Commission called on States to participate actively in international cooperation concerning policies for the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities and for the improvement of living conditions of persons with disabilities in developing countries.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the first report⁽³⁶⁾ of the Special Rapporteur, setting out activities undertaken to promote dissemination and understanding of the Rules worldwide and recommendations for future action, together with summaries of the submissions received in response to his questionnaire on their implementation. By the end of July, 42 replies had been received.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the Rules were being introduced in a large number of countries and already played an important role in influencing policy and thinking both internationally and at the national level. However, much remained to be done to implement them, especially in developing countries.

One interesting innovation in the mechanism for monitoring the Rules was the invitation by the United Nations to international organizations of persons with disabilities to establish among themselves a panel of experts to serve as an active part of the monitoring system. The 10-member panel was formed during the second half of 1994; it consisted of five men and five women, with various disabilities or experiences of disabilities, from all parts of the world. The first meeting of the panel (New York, 15-17 February) focused on the future activities of the monitoring exercise and adopted a number of recommendations.

In his report, the Special Rapporteur recommended, inter alia, that the major emphasis in the monitoring activity should be on assisting developing countries in their implementation efforts. Monitoring in the coming two years should focus on legislation, coordination of work, organization of persons with disabilities, accessibility, education and employment. The Rapporteur should consult with UNESCO and the International Labour Organization with regard to the survey in the areas of education and employment, and the offer by the panel of experts to evaluate the survey should be accepted. International disability organizations should be invited to participate in the survey. Other recommendations related to the involvement of the specialized agencies and the regional commissions in the implementation of the Rules; measures to stimulate the exchange of experience and information between countries; and promotion of awareness-raising. The Commission should suggest measures to secure resources and reopen the discussion on funding the monitoring mechanism through the UN regular budget.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 21 December, adopted resolution 50/144.

Towards full integration of persons with disabilities in society: implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities and of the Long-term Strategy to Implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the Year 2000 and Beyond

1. Recalls the recognition by the World Summit for Social Development of the need to promote the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities;

International Day of Disabled Persons

The Secretary-General described in a March report⁽³⁷⁾ measures taken by Member States to observe the International Day of Disabled Persons (3 December) in 1994. He reported that many important initiatives were undertaken during the first two years of its observation. From the information received, he concluded that both Governments and organizations of disabled persons benefited from the opportunity to mark the Day and promote the World Programme of Action and the Standard Rules.

The Secretary-General made a number of recommendations for observance of the Day, i.e., to use it to initiate dialogue on the needs, interests and aspirations of the disabled community; take stock of the progress made and obstacles encountered in implementing disability policies and programmes; promote increased solidarity between people with disabilities and society as a whole; and explore options to encourage international organizations and potential donors to contribute to improvements in the situation of disabled persons.

UN Voluntary Fund

The United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability directed special attention to supporting activities relating to the Standard Rules (see above) and the development objectives of the World Programme of Action, according to an April 1995 report of the Secretary-General.⁽³²⁾ The Fund co-financed 24 assistance projects totalling $343,620, of which 20 per cent, or $72,500, was provided by the Arab Gulf Programme for UN Development Organizations. The Fund received numerous requests for assistance, with an increasing number from the non-governmental community, reflecting NGOs' growing partnership with Governments in action of benefit to persons with disabilities. More than half of the activities supported involved training and technical exchanges, including disability legislation, building national-level institutions and pilot action in income generation. Equally important was the seed-money role of the Fund, whose grants on average served to mobilize about five times as many resources.

Tobacco or health

At its substantive session in June/July, the Economic and Social Council had before it a May report⁽³⁸⁾ of the Secretary-General on progress made in the implementation of multisectoral collaboration on tobacco or health, submitted in response to a 1994 Council request.⁽³⁹⁾ The report summarized replies from UN and other intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, Member States and government bodies to an invitation for comments and suggestions.

A United Nations focal point on the subject had been established in 1994⁽⁴⁰⁾ within the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), to coordinate multisectoral collaboration on the economic and social aspects of tobacco production and consumption, taking into particular account the serious health consequences of tobacco use, in accordance with a 1993 Council resolution.⁽⁴¹⁾ The report stated that the focal point had accomplished its task of making every organization and Government aware of the objectives and purposes of the Council's initiative on tobacco or health. A consultation was held in New York in March, with the participation of several donor Governments, to consider a project proposal submitted by the focal point. The project was also distributed to other potential donors and technical cooperation organizations, including UNDP, and to the Bellagio (Italy) consultation of donors in June, sponsored by Health Canada, the International Development Research Centre of Canada and the Rockefeller Foundation.

Several developed countries, notably Canada, Norway and the United Kingdom, had formulated five-year action plans for tobacco control and others were in the process of doing so. Similarly, WHO was developing its five-year plan of action on tobacco or health for 1996-2000, as a follow-up to its 1988-1995 plan. The focal point hoped to draw from the experience of selected developed countries, as well as WHO, UNESCO, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), UNCTAD and other organizations, to coordinate assistance by the UN system to developing countries and countries in economic transition for the development and implementation of national plans of action on tobacco control. Some of those countries had requested technical support for diversification possibilities and the development of economic alternatives to tobacco agriculture.

Suggestions for future action included the provision of assistance for implementation of national plans of action; information collection, exchange and dissemination; and support in preparation for the Tenth World Conference on Tobacco and Health (Beijing, China, 1997). It was also suggested that UNCTAD prepare a study on the role of transnational tobacco corporations in the world tobacco economy and their impact on current trends in demand for tobacco products in different parts of the world.

In a July addendum,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General, at the request of the World Health Assembly, transmitted to the Council a resolution adopted by that body requesting the Director-General of WHO to study the feasibility of developing guidelines, a declaration or international convention on tobacco control to be adopted by the United Nations, taking into account existing trade and other conventions and treaties.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on 28 July, adopted resolution 1995/62.

Tobacco or health

The Economic and Social Council,

Food and agriculture

Food aid

World Food Programme

The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁾ to the Economic and Social Council in January 1995 that consultations had been held between the secretariats of the United Nations and FAO, in accordance with a 1993 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ regarding transformation of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA) of the World Food Programme into an Executive Board and on how to fulfil the requirements set out in the Assembly resolution.

By an April note,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the draft General Regulations of WFP, drawn up by an open-ended working group of the Committee, and a revised draft resolution for adoption by the Assembly, both approved by CFA in December 1994.

The Council, by decision 1995/227 of 6 June, recommended to the Assembly for adoption a draft resolution on revision of the General Regulations and reconstitution of CFA as the Executive Board of WFP, based on the draft approved by CFA.

In October, the Secretary-General informed⁽⁴⁾ the Assembly of the Council's decision and of a parallel resolution adopted by the FAO Conference at its twenty-eighth session on 31 October, according to which CFA would be constituted as the Executive Board of WFP with 36 members. The Conference also approved the revised regulations of WFP as contained in the appendix to that resolution.

The Assembly, by decision 50/439 of 20 December, took note of the Secretary-General's October note.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 1 November, adopted resolution 50/8.

Revision of the General Regulations of the World Food Programme and reconstitution of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes as the Executive Board of the World Food Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1714(XVI) of 19 December 1961, 2095(XX) of 20 December 1965 and 3404(XXX) of 28 November 1975, concerning the establishment and continuation of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations World Food Programme, and its resolution 46/22 of 5 December 1991 on the revision of the General Regulations of the World Food Programme and enlargement of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme,

Recalling also its resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993, on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

Having considered Economic and Social Council decision 1995/227 of 6 June 1995 adopted on the recommendation of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme concerning the governance of the Programme, the revision of the General Regulations of the World Food Programme, and the reconstitution of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes as the Executive Board of the World Food Programme,

1. Decides, subject to the concurrence of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, that the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes shall be reconstituted as the Executive Board of the World Food Programme, with thirty-six members elected from among the States Members of the United Nations or the States members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and that the Economic and Social Council and the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations shall elect eighteen members each, as set forth in paragraph 2 below;

2. Decides also that the members of the Executive Board of the World Food Programme shall be elected on an interim basis for four years from among the States included in the lists^a set out in the Basic Texts of the World Food Programme, in accordance with the following distribution of seats, it being understood that this allocation of seats creates no precedent for the composition of other United Nations bodies of a limited membership:

(a) Nine members from the States included in list A, five members to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and four by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(b) Seven members from the States included in list B, four members to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and three by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(c) Five members from the States included in list C, two members to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and three by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(d) Twelve members from the States included in list D, six members to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and six by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(e) Two members from the States included in list E, one member to be elected by the Economic and Social Council and one by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

(f) One additional member alternating between the States included in lists B and C, starting with list C, to be elected by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

3. Decides further that the above-mentioned distribution of seats shall be reviewed within two years after the establishment of the Executive Board with a view to achieving its final outcome in accordance with paragraphs 25 and 30 and other relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 48/162; that the review shall be conducted in parallel by the Assembly and the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, taking into account the relevant inputs of the Economic and Social Council and the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; and that its results shall enter into force on 1 January 2000;

4. Requests the Economic and Social Council, at its resumed substantive session of 1995, to elect eighteen members of the Executive Board for a term beginning on 1 January 1996 in accordance with the following distribution and terms of office:

(a) Five members from the States included in list A, two for a term of three years, one for a term of two years and two for a term of one year;

(b) Four members from the States included in list B, one for a term of three years, two for a term of two years and one for a term of one year;

(c) Two members from the States included in list C, one for a term of three years and one for a term of one year;

(d) Six members from the States included in list D, two for a period of three years, two for a period of two years and two for a period of one year;

(e) One member from the States included in list E, for a period of two years;

5. Decides that thereafter all members of the Executive Board shall be elected for a term of three years and requests the Economic and Social Council to make such provisions as ensure that the terms of office of six members elected by the Economic and Social Council and the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations shall expire in each calendar year;

6. Decides to approve the revised General Regulations of the World Food Programme contained in annex I of the note by the Secretary-General on the transformation of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme into an executive board, as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1995/227 and by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its one hundred and eighth session, on 12 June 1995;

7. Decides, subject to the concurrence of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, that the revised General Regulations shall enter into force on 1 January 1996.

General Assembly resolution 50/8

1 November 1995 Meeting 46 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/615) without vote, 12 October (meeting 9); draft recommended by ESC in dec. 1995/227 (A/C.2/50/L.2); agenda item 12.

CFA activities

In 1995, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA), the governing body of WFP, held two sessions in Rome, Italy.

At its thirty-ninth session (22-26 May),⁽⁵⁾ CFA approved 12 new projects recommended by its Subcommittee on Projects (fourteenth session, Rome, 15-19 May), as well as budget increases for previously approved projects. These related to food assistance for refugees and returnees, integrated agricultural development, improvement of food security, rural community infrastructure upgrading and rehabilitation, fruit-tree planting and feeding of vulnerable groups: CFA endorsed the Executive Director's proposal to prepare a four-year Strategic and Financial Plan every two years on a rolling basis and provided advice and guidance to the Executive Director on policy and operational principles for the 1996-1997 budget, the future Strategic and Financial Plans and other related matters. It approved the interim recommendations of the Working Group on Options for WFP Resource Policies and Long-term Financing regarding bilateral services support costs.

At its fortieth session (13-16 November),⁽⁶⁾ CFA approved a further 10 new projects recommended by the Subcommittee (fifteenth session, 6-9 November), as well as budget increases.

The total cost to WFP of development projects approved in 1995 (including projects approved by the Executive Director under her delegated authority and budget increases) amounted to $279.8 million, with a total commitment of 999,500 tons of food for 8.7 million beneficiaries. Protracted relief operations (PROs) for refugees and internally displaced persons totalled $462.5 million (including those approved by the Executive Director and budget increases), with a total commitment of 1,054,000 tons of food for 9.5 million people. The total cost of emergency operations was $682.7 million (including budget increases), to provide 1,323,100 tons of food for 13.1 million beneficiaries.

The Committee endorsed the recommendations of the Working Group on Options for WFP Resource Policies and Long-term Financing, including a new model consisting of three elements: funding windows (multilateral, directed multilateral and bilateral), programme categories and costs. The principle of full-cost recovery would apply to all programme categories and the secretariat would be requested to prepare necessary changes in WFP General and Financial Regulations. The secretariat would implement the new model on a trial basis, commencing 1 January 1996, and develop by 31 March 1996 a concise paper on contributions made under the new model for the guidance of donors. The secretariat should also review the working of the new model and its associated policies at the end of the first biennium of operation and report on its effectiveness and efficiency.

The Committee also provided guidance to the newly constituted Executive Board of WFP on its rules of procedure, abolition of CFA's Subcommittee on Projects, official languages, venue of meetings and, on a provisional basis, the number and sequence of sessions (there should be three: a regular organizational session; an annual meeting, together with a regular session; and a third regular session), composition of the Bureau (which should consist of five members), reports and documentation, and the participation of non-members. Concerning implementation of the country programme approach, CFA agreed that the country programme cycle would involve Executive Board decision-making at four stages: strategy formulation, country programme approval, mid-term progress report and end-of-term evaluation.

On 13 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/233, took note of the twentieth annual report of CFA.⁽⁷⁾

WFP activities

In 1995, WFP helped some 50 million people in the world, half of them victims of emergencies, providing over 2.8 million tons of food at a cost of $1.2 billion, including 250,000 tons on behalf of bilateral donors. Some 25 million poor and hungry people were reached through development projects. Over 1.6 million tons of food went to victims of disasters.⁽⁸⁾

Total new commitments in 1995 amounted to 3.2 million tons; commitments totalled $248 million for development assistance and $1.1 billion for emergency operations.

At the end of the year, WFP's global portfolio of ongoing activities consisted of 204 development projects valued at $2.28 billion, and 89 relief operations valued at $1.77 billion. The biggest share was allocated to Africa (56 per cent), followed by Asia (28 per cent), the Americas (12 per cent), and Eastern Europe and the former USSR (4 per cent). The composition of the portfolio for the geographic regions differed greatly. The highest proportion of development assistance was reached in the Americas (99 per cent); in Asia it accounted for 80 per cent, while the portfolio for Africa consisted of 60 per cent of relief operations. In Eastern Europe and the former USSR, relief operations accounted for 100 per cent.

A number of steps were taken towards a more people-centred approach to food aid, involving the design of implementation strategies to better target development resources, and increasing people's participation in project design and implementation. WFP also strengthened its readiness to respond to emergencies, and several initiatives were introduced to improve WFP's food-procurement capability. New operational procedures were developed and specialist purchasing officers were stationed in countries that were strategically located for WFP operations.

The first WFP-NGO consultation was held in November. A Memorandum of Understanding with NGOs, clarifying respective responsibilities, was signed, and negotiations were initiated for others. WFP was working with more than 1,000 national and international NGOs.

Relief activities

In 1995, WFP provided over 1.6 million tons of food to victims of emergencies, including 7 million refugees, 14 million internally displaced and nearly 4 million victims of drought and other natural disasters. That assistance was almost one quarter less than in 1994, as for the first time in several years, there was no dramatic new emergency situation. New commitments for emergency operations and PROs amounted to $1.1 billion, involving 2.3 million tons of food commodities, almost the same as in 1994.

In Africa, some 21 million persons received help from WFP, with relief food reaching over 15 million victims of disasters in 28 countries. Support for victims of civil conflict continued in Rwanda/Burundi and Liberia/Sierra Leone, as well as in Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, southern Sudan and Uganda. In Angola, Ghana, Mozambique and Rwanda/Burundi, the political situation allowed a shift from relief to reconstruction and rehabilitation activities. Drought-related food aid needs emerged in southern Africa and continued in Ethiopia. Relief operations were phased out in the Central African Republic, Guinea-Bissau, Senegal and Togo.

In Asia, WFP helped over 19 million people. Total WFP food aid deliveries amounted to over 900,000 tons. Some 14 million people participated in 58 WFP-supported development projects in 16 countries. WFP relief food reached another 5 million people. Emergency food assistance was provided for the first time to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. Food assistance was also provided for rehabilitation in Cambodia, reintegration in Myanmar, relief and repatriation of refugees/returnees in Bangladesh, Nepal and Viet Nam, assistance for the displaced in Sri Lanka and flood victims in the Lao People's Democratic Republic. Support continued for vulnerable groups in Iraq, refugees in Yemen and relief, rehabilitation and reintegration in Afghanistan, Iraq and Pakistan.

WFP assisted almost 5 million people in Latin America and the Caribbean. Of the more than 200,000 tons of food delivered, some 95 per cent was for 55 development projects in 24 countries. The emphasis of WFP's work in the region was on community development through food-for-work programmes, primary education, and mother and child health and nutrition programmes. Food assistance continued for returnees and vulnerable groups in Haiti, while assistance was being phased out in Mexico, as refugees and returnees were repatriated or resettled.

In Eastern Europe and the Republics of the former USSR, relief at a total value of $168 million was provided to victims of ethnic strife and economic collapse, particularly in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, the Russian Federation (Chechnya), Tajikistan and the former Yugoslavia. In the Caucasus and Central Asia, WFP and NGOs used relief food aid to support the poorest groups after the collapse of the economies and the social security systems. Within the framework of emergency operations, WFP food aid also supported rehabilitation and infrastructure neglected or damaged by war. Almost 4 million people in the region received a total of 240,000 tons of food commodities in 1995.

Resources and financing

In 1995, the total level of resources available to WFP fell to $1.2 billion, from $1.5 billion in 1994. Due to a shortfall in cash contributions, the Programme was forced to operate at a funding level below the one approved. To manage the scarcity of resources, WFP de-earmarked resources for some operational projects, limited budget increases for approved projects and did not extend projects beyond their duration.

In May, CFA endorsed⁽⁵⁾ the Executive Director's proposal of a pledging target for 1997-1998 amounting to $1.3 billion and recommended it for endorsement by the FAO Council and the Economic and Social Council and subsequent approval by the General Assembly and the FAO Conference. The Committee noted that there were signs that additional resources might not become available and that some major donors were not expecting any significant improvement in their funding capacity in the next biennium. It noted with concern that prevailing resource constraints and possible future shortfalls would have serious implications for food-assisted development projects, affecting the pace of implementation of ongoing projects and the approval of new commitments.

WFP's new resource policies and financing were approved⁽⁶⁾ by CFA in November. The new structure, beginning in 1996, would consist of four programme categories (development, PROs, emergencies and special operations) and three funding windows (multilateral, directed multilateral and bilateral) under which WFP received its contributions. The new approach was based on full cost recovery for all direct and indirect operational and support costs.

The Secretary-General transmitted⁽⁷⁾ as requested, to the Economic and Social Council an 18 December letter⁽⁸⁾ from the Executive Director of WFP stating that the new model, to be applied on a trial basis, was designed to place the resource base and long-term financing of WFP on a more sound and predictable basis. The WFP secretariat was preparing a revised draft of the Financial Regulations for submission to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the FAO Finance Committee and the WFP Executive Board. The new financing procedures had been accommodated in the 1996-1997 programme support and administrative budget. Expeditious action by the Council would allow the trial period to coincide with the biennial budget period 1996-1997 and facilitate the review of the working of the new model. However, the new resourcing mechanisms would not be formally implemented until the Council and the FAO Council had reviewed the proposals.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/3.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted resolution 50/127.

Target for World Food Programme pledges for the period 1997-1998

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 2095(XX) of 20 December 1965 to the effect that the World Food Programme was to be reviewed before each pledging conference,

Noting that the Programme was reviewed by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme at its thirty-seventh session and by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1994,

Having considered Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/3 of 13 July 1995 and the comments of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Recognizing the value of multilateral food aid as implemented by the World Food Programme since its inception and the necessity for continuing its action both as a form of capital investment and for meeting emergency food needs,

1. Establishes a target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme of 1.3 billion United States dollars for the period 1997-1998;
2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and appropriate donor organizations to make every effort to ensure that the target is fully attained;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to convene a pledging conference for this purpose at Headquarters in 1996.

General Assembly resolution 50/127

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/615/Add.1) without vote, 30 November (meeting 40); draft recommended by ESC in res. 1995/3 (A/C.2/50/L.4); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 40; plenary 96.

Food and agricultural development

By a 20 October letter⁽¹⁰⁾ to the Secretary-General, the Philippines, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, requested that a sub-item entitled "Food and agricultural development", later changed to "Food and sustainable agricultural development", be included in the agenda of the General Assembly under item 95 on sustainable development and international economic cooperation. In an explanatory memorandum, the Philippines said that the urgency of the matter was due to the upcoming World Food Summit (Rome, November 1996). The Assembly included the sub-item in its agenda on 10 November and allocated it to the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

On 31 October 1995, the FAO Conference at its twenty-eighth session decided⁽¹¹⁾ to convene the Summit at the level of heads of State or Government, with the objectives, inter alia, of marshalling the global consensus and commitment needed to redress the problem of food security; establishing a policy framework; and adopting a plan of action to achieve sustained progress towards universal food security. The Conference welcomed the Director-General's decision to open a special trust fund to facilitate the preparations for and holding of the Summit.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted resolution 50/109.

World Food Summit

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the inalienable right to be free from hunger and malnutrition, as proclaimed in the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition,

Conscious that, despite the progress that has been made in ensuring global food availability, eight hundred million people remain chronically undernourished and about two hundred million children under age five suffer from protein and energy deficiencies,

Convinced of the urgent need, at the highest political level, to marshal the global consensus and commitment required for the eradication of hunger and malnutrition and the achievement of food security for all, through the adoption of concerted policies and a plan of action for implementation by Governments, international institutions and all sectors of civil society,

Recalling the contributions to international consensus achieved by the World Food Conference in 1974, the World Summit for Children in 1990, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and the International Conference on Nutrition in 1992, the International Conference on Population and Development in 1994, and the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995, as well as the agreements made at other international conferences and summits in recent years,

Recognizing that activities to ensure food security at all levels should be carried out within the framework of sustainable development, as defined in Agenda 21, and that the World Food Summit will give due attention to the multifaceted nature of food security,

Bearing in mind the proposal of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations that the Summit should not call for new funding mechanisms or institutions,

1. Welcomes the decision of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its twenty-eighth session to convene the World Food Summit at Rome from 13 to 17 November 1996 at the level of heads of State or Government;

2. Invites Governments to participate actively in Summit preparations and to be represented at the level of heads of State or Government;

3. Invites all relevant United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations, including international and regional financial institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to cooperate actively with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in preparing for the Summit;

4. Invites the international community to make contributions on a voluntary basis to the special trust fund established by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in order to facilitate the preparations for and the holding of the Summit as well as to facilitate the preparations for effective participation of representatives of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, both at the sessions of the Committee on World Food Security of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to be held in January and September 1996 as preparatory meetings and at the Summit itself;

5. Invites the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to submit to the General Assembly, at its fifty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the outcome of the Summit, including actions to be taken to follow up the outcome of the Summit at all appropriate levels.

World Food Council

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/207 C of 10 February, decided to undertake at its substantive session in 1995 an in-depth review of the report of the World Food Council (WFC) on the work of its nineteenth session, and to submit recommendations thereon to the General Assembly for consideration and action.

[WFC did not meet in 1995 and no report was issued. For WFC membership, see APPENDIX III.]

Nutrition

ACC activities

The twenty-second session of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Nutrition was held in New York from 12 to 16 June 1995,⁽¹⁾ following ad hoc group meetings on individual micronutrients (vitamin A, iron and iodine); nutrition, ethics and human rights; and breast-feeding and complementary feeding.

The Subcommittee considered matters for approval by the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ), including options for strengthening the functions of the Subcommittee, and discussed work in progress. Concerning follow-up to the 1992 International Conference on Nutrition,⁽²⁾ the Subcommittee agreed that its reporting obligations differed from those of FAO and WHO and should be approached by enlarging the scope of the Third Report on the World Nutrition Situation, planned for issuance in early 1996, to include additional outcome indicators and indicators on process (i.e., programme and policy development) and the status of national plans of action (NPAs); obtaining new information on countries to explore how process and activities might have been influenced by the 1992 Conference; and inviting government participation in a global seminar to discuss experiences and draw conclusions that might guide other countries in NPA preparation and be used by agencies to strengthen and coordinate their activities, notably at the country level.

Among other matters, the Subcommittee decided to continue to facilitate the new initiative addressing unmet needs in research on and training to improve nutrition programmes, which had grown out of a 1994 conference on the subject sponsored by the World Bank.

The Subcommittee proposed the establishment of an Ad Hoc Working Group on the Nutrition of School-Age Children to exchange information and facilitate better coordination of strategies for improving their nutritional health.

CCPOQ, at its fifth session (Geneva, 31 January-2 February), recommended⁽³⁾ that any plans to broaden the scope of participation in the Subcommittee involve consultation with Subcommittee members. The ad hoc meeting to be held in February should discuss technical issues, while issues related to the legal, procedural and/or administrative work should be referred to the formal session of the Subcommittee and could only be decided by CCPOQ on behalf of ACC.

At a meeting of the whole of the Subcommittee, held at the World Bank in February 1995, it was agreed that the Subcommittee should foster a global conscience and a high degree of awareness of problems of hunger and malnutrition, and should serve as a catalyst for sustained advocacy of relevant programmes and policies. It was suggested that perhaps a working group for that purpose be set up by the Subcommittee.

In 1995, the United Nations University (UNU) continued activities under its programme on food and nutrition for human and social development,⁽⁴⁾ within six global projects and with the active involvement of other United Nations organizations. The programme also attracted extra-budgetary resources in excess of $900,000. The work continued to be directed from its coordinating office in Boston, Massachusetts, United States, but plans were developed for the gradual transfer of activities to a new research-and-training coordinating centre on the campus of Cornell University in Ithaca, New York. Efforts to mobilize funding for the coordinating centre were undertaken during the year.

UNU efforts continued in identifying and promoting measures to control iron deficiency. Reports from a UNU-coordinated multi-centre study of the feasibility and effectiveness of weekly as opposed to daily supplementation were encouraging in China, Guatemala, Malaysia and the United States. The studies were continuing in Guatemala, Indonesia and Mali, showing that weekly administration was equally effective in raising haemoglobin levels and was virtually without side-effects. With support from UNICEF, UNU studied the prevalence of iron-deficiency anaemia in Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan, in collaboration with the Institute of Nutrition in Almaty. Based on the study, iron supplementation and fortification projects were designed for implementation in 1996.

In partnership with the International Union of Nutritional Sciences (IUNS), WHO and FAO, UNU

continued to promote the International Dietary Energy Consultative Group. It was joined by FAO in a global effort to improve the quantity and quality of food consumption data worldwide. UNU's role continued to be the establishment and linking of regional databases. The International Development Research Centre in Canada provided a grant for a high-capacity computer, and UNU awarded fellowships for training in food-composition database management at the Wageningen Agricultural University in the Netherlands and database programming in Palmerston North, New Zealand. Two task force meetings, organized under the auspices of UNU, FAO and IUNS, established quality tags for food-composition data to be incorporated into the UNU International Network of Food Data Systems and provided guidelines for a future meeting of the UNU-sponsored IUNS Committee on Terminology and Nomenclature for Food-composition Databases.

The International Food Intake Directory continued to provide important input to epidemiological studies and to summarize all food-intake data available over the last 40 years from developing countries. Some Asian and Latin American/Caribbean summaries had already been published and new data were received from 14 African countries.

UNU's quarterly Food and Nutrition Bulletin, one of the few publications that reached nutrition and health workers in developing countries, was published for the sixteenth year. UNU also continued to publish jointly with Academic Press the quarterly Journal of Food Composition and Analysis.

Chapter XIV

International drug control

In 1995, the United Nations continued to address the rising trend in drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking in narcotics and psychotropic substances, which the General Assembly warned has threatened the health and well-being of millions of persons, in particular youth, in all countries of the world.

Over the previous decade, a significant international infrastructure had been created to deal with drug control issues, centred within the United Nations system.

In 1987, the United Nations convened the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, which adopted a Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, containing both general and specific guidelines for Member States. An ongoing framework for UN activities to combat problems stemming from the abuse of drugs is provided by the UN International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, and the 1990 Global Programme of Action against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

The International Narcotics Control Board continues to oversee the implementation of three major drug-control conventions, and each year analyzes the drug abuse situation world wide to assist Governments in implementing treaty obligations.

In 1995, the UN Commission on Narcotic Drugs—the Organization's main policy-making body on drug control matters—addressed a number of issues, prime among them the questions of reducing both the demand for and supply of illegal drugs, and the increasingly disturbing phenomenon of money laundering.

International and regional cooperation

Conventions

Central to the international control system of narcotic drugs are three global conventions: the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs,⁽¹⁾ which, with some exceptions of detail, replaced earlier narcotics treaties and was amended in 1972 by a Protocol⁽²⁾ intended to strengthen the role of the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB); the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances;⁽³⁾ and the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances,⁽⁴⁾ which entered into force in 1990.

As at 31 December 1995, 134 States were parties to the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs as amended by the 1972 Protocol. During the year, five States—Guinea Bissau, Mali, the Republic of Moldova, Swaziland and Uzbekistan—became parties.

The Convention, as amended by the Protocol, established a dual drug-control obligation for Governments: to ensure adequate availability for narcotic drugs, including opiates, for medical and scientific purposes, while at the same time preventing the illicit production of, trafficking in and use of such drugs. To implement those responsibilities, Governments enact laws and take administrative and enforcement measures. Each Government estimates annually the amount of narcotic drugs needed to satisfy all medical and scientific requirements in the country for the coming year. INCB evaluates, confirms and publishes the amount of narcotic drugs for each Government. Each Government may then manufacture or import narcotic drugs within that amount and distribute them to medical facilities for the treatment of patients. In case of unforeseen increases in medical demand, Governments may submit supplementary estimates to the Board at any time; requests for supplementary estimates are acted on expeditiously.

Under the Convention, INCB is responsible for ensuring that the supply of narcotic drugs for licit purposes is limited to the amount acquired for medical and scientific needs. To prevent and detect diversion of drugs from licit to illicit channels, the Board monitors the cultivation, manufacture, import, export and consumption of such drugs throughout the world. If the treaty requirements for drug control are implemented consistently, the potential for diverting narcotic drugs to illicit channels is reduced to a minimum without interfering in their availability for treatment of patients who need them. Given the large number of national and international transactions, the number of incidents involving diversion of narcotic drugs is considered to be small.

The number of parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances stood at 140 as at 31 December 1995. Eight States became parties during the year: Belgium, Chad, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, Myanmar, the Republic of Moldova, Swaziland and Uzbekistan.

As at 31 December, 121 States and the European Union were parties to the 1988 Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. Seventeen States—Algeria, Belgium, Cape Verde, Chad, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Jamaica, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, the Republic of Moldova, Saints Kitts and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay and Uzbekistan ratified, accepted or acceded to the Convention during 1995.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs in March 1995 urged States that had not yet done so to become parties to and implement effectively the international drug control conventions, and recommended that they seek the Secretary-General's advice on matters relating to accession or succession to those conventions.⁽⁵⁾ It further recognized⁽⁶⁾ that the 1961 and 1971 Conventions had generally achieved their intended objectives, invited States to consider measures for further strengthening and streamlining their control mechanisms, and decided to examine specific aspects of the operation of the 1988 Convention.

To encourage ratification and the establishment of effective drug control structures, the United Nations Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) continued to provide States with legal assistance.

In an October report,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General noted progress in the adherence of States to international drug-control treaties, but expressed concern that effective functioning of the 1971 Convention was hampered because some States which manufactured and exported psychotropic substances had not yet become parties. He recommended that States that were signatories complete legislative and other enabling changes and ratify the treaties as a priority.

International Narcotics Control Board

The International Narcotics Control Board met twice in 1995, for its fifty-eighth (8-19 May) and fifty-ninth (30 October-16 November) sessions. Its activities, observations and recommendations were reflected in its report for 1995.⁽⁸⁾

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/245 of 24 July, took note of the summary report of the Board for 1994.⁽⁹⁾

In carrying out its responsibilities under the international conventions, the 13-member Board maintains a continuous dialogue with Governments. The information provided by Governments enables the Board to study the licit movement of narcotic drugs, thereby ensuring that the provisions of the drug conventions are strictly observed. That information, published annually by the Board, is used by Governments to verify whether or not they have adequately applied the conventions' provisions.

In its annual report, the Board draws attention to gaps and weaknesses in national control and in treaty compliance, and makes suggestions and recommendations for improvements at both the national and international levels.

The Board also collaborates with UNDCP, of which its secretariat forms a part, and with international bodies concerned with drug control, including the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, UN specialized agencies, particularly the World Health Organization (WHO), and other international bodies such as the International Criminal Police Organization and the Customs Co-operation Council (also called the World Customs Organization).

In 1995, the Board considered the subject of money laundering, suggesting that greater priority be given to combating that growing phenomenon as an effective means of addressing drug trafficking and organized crime. Noting that the international nature of money laundering made it essential to mobilize a global response to the problem, the Board recommended that harmonized policies be formulated and that countries be assisted, where necessary, in implementing such policies.

It expressed concern that while some progress had been made, to date no concrete steps had been taken by the international community to effectively coordinate the fight against money laundering world wide. Specifically, it recommended that information on the seizure and confiscation of proceeds derived from drug trafficking be systematically collected and disseminated.

In other areas, the Board emphasized the sharp and controversial increase in the use of methylphenidate, better known under its trade name of Ritalin, in the treatment of attention deficit disorder; and the abuse of synthetic drugs, in particular those known as "ecstasy" and "ice." Another concern was the international trade in seeds derived from illicitly cultivated cannabis plants and opium poppies.

The Board also recognized that the transportation and provision of controlled drugs needed for humanitarian aid in acute emergencies of natural or human origin constituted a genuine justification for non-application of the normal, regular control requirements.

United Nations action

In 1995, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly adopted resolutions aimed at strengthening international and regional cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. International cooperation was chosen as the theme for the high-level segment of the substantive session of the 1996 Economic and Social Council session, and all three bodies dealt with the proposal to convene an international conference to evaluate the international situation and status of international cooperation in those areas.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In February 1995, the Economic and Social Council recommended that, at its organizational session for 1996, the issue of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities be considered as a theme for the high-level segment of its substantive session of the coming year. In a July resolution (1995/40), the Council recommended that the General Assembly and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs give priority consideration to the proposal to convene an international conference to evaluate the international situation and the status of such cooperation.

On 10 February, the Council adopted resolution 1995/1.

International cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 45/264 of 13 May 1991, on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, by which the Assembly established guidelines for the high-level segment of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993, by which the Assembly decided upon further measures to strengthen the Council, in particular as regards the high-level segment of its substantive session,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions 48/12 of 28 October 1993 and 49/168 of 23 December 1994, in which the Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council to address at its high-level segment in 1995 the issue of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities,

Reiterating that it will continue to consider one or more major economic and/or social policy themes at its high-level segment,

Strongly recommends that, at its organizational session for 1996, the issue of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities be considered as a theme for the high-level segment of the Council's substantive session of 1996.

On 27 July, the Council adopted resolution 1995/40.

Strengthening of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned that illicit demand for, production of, and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances are taking on new dimensions that threaten public health and the social, economic and political conditions in affected countries,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 48/12 of 28 October 1993, in particular its paragraphs 9 and 10,

Reaffirming the determination of the international community to use every means to fight against drug abuse and the production of and illicit trafficking in drugs in accordance with international law and on the basis of the principle of shared responsibility,

1. Reiterates the special recommendation, contained in its resolution 1995/1 of 10 February 1995, that the issue of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances and related activities should be the theme for the high-level segment of the substantive session of 1996;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs give priority consideration to the proposal to convene an international conference for the purpose of evaluating the international situation and the status of international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/17.

Enhanced regional cooperation to reduce the risks of drug abuse

The Economic and Social Council,

Alarmed at the escalation of drug abuse problems and at the increase in the range of substances being abused in all regions,

Recognizing that the negative implications of drug abuse have global, regional and national dimensions,

Also recognizing the negative consequences caused by the abuse of licit drugs,

Alarmed at the increasing rate of infection by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), hepatitis C and other blood-borne viruses associated with injecting drug use,

Deeply concerned that illicit demand for, production of, and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances are taking on new dimensions that threaten public health and the social, economic and political conditions in affected countries and areas,

Reaffirming the determination of the international community to fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking in accordance with international law and, in particular, with respect for the principle of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States,

Recognizing that the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, on 23 February 1990, serve as useful guidelines for developing and implementing strategies to fight against the problems of drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Recalling its resolution 1993/35 of 27 July 1993 on demand reduction as part of balanced national strategic plans to combat drug abuse,

Commending the initiatives and collaborative efforts of many countries as well as the establishment of regional coordinating bodies,

Recognizing the progress achieved by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in the development and implementation of subregional strategies, and commending it for its efforts,

Noting the success of the Asia Pacific Conference on Drug Abuse: a Balanced Approach, held at Sydney, Australia, from 29 May to 2 June 1994, and the declaration adopted by that Conference, in which countries of the region reaffirmed their commitment to the following goals: coordinating and implementing comprehensive measures in both supply and demand reduction; a partnership between health, law enforcement and other relevant agencies, including non-governmental organizations; and effectively addressing the health and social consequences of substance abuse,

Aware of the need for a more comprehensive, integrated and collaborative approach to control the supply of, and demand for, all drugs of abuse, in close cooperation with relevant organizations of the United Nations system and other regional and international organizations,

Recognizing that the complexity of the drug problem requires all sections of the community and Government to work together,

Also recognizing the importance of developing and implementing comprehensive national strategic plans that incorporate a range of supply and demand reduction measures and take into account the social, economic and cultural conditions of individual countries, of establishing national coordinating mechanisms with the involvement of personnel responsible for both law enforcement and demand reduction, of identifying national priorities and coordinating the implementation of strategic plans, and of providing mechanisms for evaluation and, where necessary, redirection of strategies,

Further recognizing the need for countries to adopt a range of culturally appropriate prevention strategies, including treatment, education, information and rehabilitation, and addressing the social and family problems that may lead to drug abuse and the transmission of infectious diseases, such as acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) and hepatitis, through the use of shared injecting equipment,

1. Urges all States and relevant organizations to strengthen their efforts to cooperate with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in the development and implementation of subregional strategies and to give meaning and substance to the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, 1991-2000;

2. Also urges all States to ratify or accede to and effectively implement the international drug control conventions or, until ratification or accession thereto, and to the extent that they are able to do so, to apply provisionally the terms of those conventions;

3. Encourages the investigation, at the regional level, of the need for, and cost benefits of, mechanisms designed to support multi-agency approaches, such as regional conferences that periodically bring together health, law enforcement and other relevant agencies, including non-governmental organizations;

4. Also encourages initiatives and projects designed to establish effective regional networking to combat drug abuse;

5. Urges those States with expertise to share their knowledge and experience with other States in their region, having particular regard to priorities in the field of drug abuse control in the States concerned;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

24 July 1995 Meeting 49 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1995/29); agenda item 5 (h). Meeting numbers. ESC 47-49.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1995, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/148.

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/12 of 28 October 1993, 48/112 of 20 December 1993 and 49/168 of 23 December 1994,

Profoundly alarmed by the magnitude of the rising trend in drug abuse, illicit production and trafficking in narcotics and psychotropic substances, including synthetic and designer drugs, which threatens the health and well-being of millions of persons, in particular the youth, in all countries of the world,

Gravely concerned that, despite increased efforts by States and relevant international organizations, the illicit demand for, production of and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including synthetic and designer drugs, have expanded globally and, therefore, continue to threaten seriously the socio-economic and political systems and the stability, national security and sovereignty of an increasing number of States,

Deeply alarmed by the growing violence and economic power of criminal organizations and terrorist groups that engage in the production of, traffic in and distribution of drugs, arms and precursors and essential chemicals, which at times places them beyond the reach of the law, corrupting institutions, undermining the full exercise of human rights and threatening the stability of many societies in the world,

Deeply alarmed also by the growing links at the transnational level between criminal organizations and terrorist groups engaged in drug trafficking activities and other criminal activities, such as money laundering and illicit traffic of arms and precursors and essential chemicals,

Fully aware that States, the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and multilateral development banks need to accord a higher priority to dealing with this scourge, which undermines development, economic and political stability and democratic institutions, and the combat against which entails increasing economic costs for Governments and the irreparable loss of human lives,

Convinced of the desirability of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating drug-related crimes, such as terrorism, illicit arms trade and money laundering, and bearing in mind the role that could be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations in this respect,

Reaffirming that a comprehensive framework for international cooperation in drug control is provided by the existing drug control conventions, the Declaration and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, the Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session devoted to the question of international cooperation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic and psychotropic substances, the Declaration adopted by the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime and other relevant international standards, and stressing the need for increased efforts to implement them,

Recognizing the efforts of countries which produce narcotic drugs for scientific, medicinal and therapeutic uses to prevent the diversion of such substances to illicit markets and to maintain production at a level consistent with licit demand in line with the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961,

Acknowledging that there are links, under certain circumstances, between poverty and the increase in the illicit production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and that the promotion of the economic development of countries affected by the illicit drug trade requires appropriate measures, including strengthened international cooperation in support of alternative and sustainable development activities in the affected areas of those countries, which have as their objectives the reduction and elimination of illicit drug production,

Emphasizing the need for an analysis of transit routes used by drug traffickers, which are constantly changing and expanding to include a growing number of countries and regions in all parts of the world,

Underlining the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug control issues,

Reaffirming the leadership role of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as the main focus for concerted international action for drug abuse control, and commending the way in which it has carried out the functions entrusted to it,

Recognizing that the new forms of criminal activities of international drug trafficking organizations call for enhanced international cooperation, as well as a renewal of the international commitment to fight against these menaces, and require the formulation of new strategies, approaches and objectives which, respectful of the sovereignty of States, can deal more effectively with the international operations of those involved in the illegal traffic of drugs and arms, the diversion of precursors and essential chemicals, and money laundering through financial and non-financial operations,

I

Respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law in the fight against drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking

1. Reaffirms that the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking should not in any way justify violation of the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, particularly respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations;

2. Calls upon all States to intensify their actions to promote effective cooperation in the efforts to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking, so as to contribute to a climate conducive to achieving this end, on the basis of the principles of equal rights and mutual respect;

II

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking

1. Renews its commitment to further strengthening international cooperation and substantially increasing efforts against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances, based on the principle of shared responsibility and taking into account experience gained;

2. Urges all States to ratify or accede to and implement all the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

3. Calls upon all States to adopt adequate national laws and regulations, to strengthen national judicial systems and to carry out effective drug control activities in cooperation with other States in accordance with those international instruments;

4. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to continue to provide legal assistance to Member States which request it in adjusting their national laws, policies and infrastructures to implement the international drug control conventions, as well as assistance in training personnel responsible for applying the new laws;

5. Supports the focus on regional, subregional and national strategies for drug abuse control, particularly the master-plan approach, and urges the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to continue to complement those strategies with effective interregional strategies;

6. Reaffirms the danger and threat posed to civil society by drug trafficking and its links to terrorism, transnational crime, money laundering and the arms trade, and encourages Governments to deal with this threat and to cooperate to prevent the channelling of funds to and between those engaged in such activities;

7. Acknowledges that there are links between the illicit production of, demand for and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the economic and social conditions in the affected countries and that there are differences and diversity in the problems of each country;

8. Calls upon the international community to provide increased economic and technical support to Governments which request it for programmes of alternative and sustainable development that have as their objectives the reduction and elimination of illicit drug production and that take fully into account the cultural traditions of peoples;

9. Notes the strong support expressed by members of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs for the initiatives of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to establish a dialogue with multilateral development banks so that they might undertake lending and programming activities related to drug control in interested and affected countries, and requests the Executive Director of the Programme to inform the Commission of further progress made in this area;

10. Stresses the need for effective government action to prevent the diversion to illicit markets of precursors and essential chemicals, materials and equipment used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

11. Commends the International Narcotics Control Board for its valuable work in monitoring the production and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances so as to limit their use to medical and scientific purposes, and urges increased efforts to implement its mandate under article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances concerning the monitoring of the movement of precursors and essential chemicals;

12. Calls upon the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to continue providing assistance to Member States which request it in establishing or strengthening national drug detection laboratories;

World drug situation

The International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) in 1995 provided a regional analysis(¹) of drug abuse trends and control efforts currently under way, so that Governments would be kept aware of existing and potential situations that might endanger the objectives of international drug control treaties. A summary of the 1995 INCB report(²) was also made available, for consideration by the Economic and Social Council.

Africa

Taking into account the enormous problems created by the political and social conflicts experienced in many African States, the Board in 1995 drew the attention of Governments in Africa to the links between the drug problem and criminality and corruption, as well as their negative effects on economic stability and health.

Although cannabis continued to be illicitly cultivated in most African countries, the INCB noted, Western countries had reported seizures of large consignments of cannabis resin arriving from West Asia through ports in East and West Africa. African seaports and airports also continued to be used for the traffic of heroin from Asia to Europe and North America. The Board reported that Africans were increasingly being used as couriers for transporting cocaine from South America through northern and western Africa to Europe. African Governments were urged to speed the process of adopting adequate drug control legislation and establishing operational national drug control coordinating bodies.

Large-scale cannabis cultivation continued in the mountainous Rif area of Morocco. Large seizures of Nigerian cannabis arriving in Europe suggested that there was substantial cultivation in that country. Eradication of cannabis plantations was reported in Egypt and the Sudan; in South Africa and Swaziland, more than 6,000 tonnes of illicitly cultivated plants were eradicated, mainly through aerial spraying. In 1995, some 40 tonnes of West Asian cannabis resin were seized in Mozambique alone. A sharp increase in the abuse of cannabis was reported in several West African countries.

Illicit opium poppy cultivation continued in Egypt; however, more than 10 million poppy plants had been eradicated in the previous year in remote areas of the Sinai peninsula and along the Nile. Smaller-scale, sporadic opium poppy cultivation was discovered in Chad, Cote d'Ivoire and Nigeria.

The Board commented on the sharp increase in local abuse of heroin due to the availability of the drug at low prices in many African cities. Concern was expressed over the increased availability and abuse of cocaine, particularly in major cities. The abuse of crack was reported in Ghana, Nigeria, Senegal and South Africa. Also of growing concern was the abuse of psychotropic substances in the region, with evidence of diversion of legally imported shipments and inadequate supervision of the pharmaceutical system.

Americas

South and Central America and the Caribbean

Countries in Latin America, particularly in Central America and the Caribbean, were increasingly used by international drug traffickers as transit points for illicit drugs, particularly cocaine and heroin, the INCB reported. Drug-related violence increased in the Caribbean, where drug traffickers were gaining a foothold, allowing them to pose a real threat to the political stability of the subregion. Puerto Rico and the United States Virgin Islands appeared to have become preferred points of entry into North America, while Aruba, the British Virgin Islands, Martinique and the Netherlands Antilles were used as gateways to the drug markets in France, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.

Cannabis, commonly abused in the region, was illicitly cultivated in many countries, particularly in Brazil and Colombia, and in the Caribbean for local consumption. Colombia and Jamaica continued to produce and supply cannabis for Europe and North America.

Repeated seizures of high-purity heroin of Colombian origin in Europe and North America seemed to indicate that poppy cultivation, opium production and heroin and/or morphine manufacture continued in that country. Peru and Bolivia remained the largest coca leaf producers in the world. Coca paste continued to be produced mostly in those two countries and was smuggled into Colombia for final processing into cocaine hydrochloride. The latter was also increasingly manufactured in Bolivia and Peru, though on a smaller scale. Coca paste abuse posed serious social and health problems in those Andean countries.

The increasing use of psychotropic substances, particularly anxiolytics (minor tranquilizers) and amphetamine-type drugs, was reported mainly in the urban areas of some South American countries.

Central America and the Caribbean

The geographic location and limited interception capabilities of the countries of Central America and the Caribbean continue to be exploited by international drug traffickers for the large-scale transshipment of cocaine and, in the case of the Caribbean countries, cannabis bound for North American and European markets. The Board commented on the successful interdiction action taken in the Bahamas, southern Florida and the Turks and Caicos Islands, which had resulted in traffickers shifting the focus of their illegal activities to the eastern Caribbean, where controls were seen as less stringent. The Board noted with concern that large quantities of ephedrine from Asia and Europe were being channelled through Guatemala to Mexico and the United States.

Governments in Central America and the Caribbean needed a continued commitment to defining comprehensive drug control policies and to establishing the legislative basis and administrative structures necessary for implementation of such policies, the Board stated. It commented on the weak banking and financial structures of most countries in Central America, stating that such weakness made them prime targets for money laundering activities. However, the Board welcomed the creation of a regional legal centre in Costa Rica for the improvement of drug control legislation in Central American countries, as well as financial support provided by the Government of Honduras for the operation of the permanent Central American Commission for the Eradication of Drug Abuse, Production and Illicit Trafficking.

South America

The Board urged the Governments of South America to afford the highest priority to the fight against money laundering in order that the large flow of capital stemming from illicit drug production, manufacture and trafficking would not have a long-lasting negative social, economic and political impact. It also appreciated the efforts made by the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission to fill the gap left by the dissolution of the South American Agreement on Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, as well as efforts by the UN International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) to promote subregional strategies and programmes. The Board noted the successful eradication and interdiction efforts undertaken in Colombia, and expressed the hope that political difficulties there would not reduce the strong commitment of that Government to fighting against drug trafficking organizations and the illicit cultivation, production and manufacture of drugs.

Coca-bush cultivation and coca-leaf production patterns in South America remained unchanged during 1995. The Board continued to draw the attention of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to the fact that the practices of the Governments of Argentina, Bolivia and Peru with respect to licit and illicit coca-bush cultivation and coca-leaf production and consumption were not in conformity with the provisions of the 1961 Convention.

North America

In North America, the Board noted that the principal goal of the United States drug control strategy in 1995 was to reduce the number of drug abusers within the country, a strategy linked to efforts to empower communities, curb youth violence and preserve the family. The Board noted the multifaceted campaign undertaken by Mexico against illicit cultivation, production, manufacture, trafficking and abuse, and action taken by Mexico to eliminate the corruption of officials and to strengthen legal controls so as to prevent money laundering. The Board referred to the results achieved in Canada through the Government's comprehensive demand reduction strategy, although it noted with concern that the considerable volume of financial flows between Canada and the United States had contributed to the attraction of Canada for persons engaged in money laundering.

Despite some successful eradication campaigns, illicit cannabis cultivation persisted in Canada, Mexico and the United States. Mexico remained a supplier of cannabis to the United States, despite increasing amounts seized by its law enforcement authorities, although quantities also came from other countries, particularly Colombia, Thailand and, increasingly, Jamaica. At the same time, the market share of locally produced cannabis was on the increase in Canada and the United States (30 and 25 per cent, respectively).

Opium poppy was cultivated illicitly in Mexico, with the opium produced being used for the manufacture of heroin, usually smuggled into the United States. However, the proportion of heroin of Mexican origin on the illicit market in the United States was relatively small (about 5 per cent), compared with heroin from Asia and South America (57 and 32 per cent, respectively).

Heroin abuse was reportedly on the increase in Canada, particularly in urban areas, and in the United States, where injecting the drug remained the principal route of administration, used by an estimated 62 per cent of abusers.

Due to the large illicit supply of cocaine from South America (more than 100 tonnes were seized in 1994), the drug was freely available in most cities in the United States. There was a spectacular decrease in the number of occasional abusers from 1985 (an estimated 12 million) to 1993 (4 million). In 1994, however, increasing cocaine abuse and a growing number of cocaine-related emergency room admissions were reported. While cocaine abuse in Canada continued to decline, some increase was observed in Mexico, in the proximity of the northern borders.

In the United States, the clandestine manufacture of, illicit traffic in and abuse of methamphetamine grew. In Mexico and the United States, there was a direct link between clandestine methamphetamine manufacture and the diversion of ephedrine from licit sources. Illicit traffic in and abuse of hallucinogens also increased in the United States. Lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) was sold mostly in small tablets ("microdots") or in the form of small paper squares ("stamps"). Crystallized LSD, manufactured in clandestine laboratories in the United States, was often smuggled out of the country, mainly into Europe.

Asia

East and South-East Asia

Money laundering was recognized as a major problem by several Governments in the region, as the informal banking system offered plenty of opportunities for such activity and made it difficult for Governments to introduce countermeasures.

Cannabis was growing wild and was extensively cultivated in many countries in South-East Asia, the INCB reported. In Thailand, its cultivation had spread from the northern and north-eastern provinces to other parts of the country. Cannabis was the main drug of abuse in Indonesia and the Philippines, and was reportedly used in most countries of the region. Export of cannabis from parts of the region to Australia, Japan, the United States and other countries was substantial.

Illicit poppy cultivation and opium production also continued, with Myanmar the largest opium producer. Illicit poppy cultivation was considerably reduced in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam as a consequence of development projects and eradication programmes. There were reports of some illicit poppy cultivation and opium production in Cambodia and China, mainly in the remote areas of Yunnan Province.

Heroin manufacture reportedly increased in Myanmar. The operation of small heroin laboratories was also reported in northern border areas in Thailand. South-East Asia was a major supplier of illicit heroin to markets throughout the world, with many trafficking routes leading from Cambodia, Hong Kong and Thailand to Australia, the United States and Europe. In some cases, West African countries were used as transit points. Substantial quantities of heroin were consumed locally, with heroin addiction growing rapidly in various parts of the region. The shift from opium to heroin abuse continued among hill tribes, but heroin abuse was also reported in some urban centres in, for example, Myanmar, where it had been almost non-existent two years before.

Among psychotropic substances, the illicit manufacture, trafficking and abuse of methamphetamine (commonly called "ice" or "shabu") represented a major problem, particularly in East Asia. Its manufacture in parts of China, the Philippines and Thailand, its traffic in Hong Kong, Japan and the Republic of Korea, and its abuse in Japan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Thailand were connected with the activities of criminal organizations. Growing abuse of benzodiazepines was also reported in some countries.

South Asia

The Board noted that the countries of South Asia were improving and updating their national narcotics legislation, strengthening their control administration, and enhancing their activities in the field of demand reduction; such efforts, however, had not yet had an overall positive impact on abuse and trafficking. Cannabis continued to be widely cultivated in South Asia, although most of it was used within the region. The region continued to be the venue of growing transit activity in heroin from South-West and South-East Asia.

In India, licensed farmers licitly cultivated poppy plants and produced opium under governmental control. To prevent diversion, Indian authorities intensified the supervision of licit opium production areas and conducted eradication campaigns in other states where illicit poppy cultivation had been detected. The abuse of opium continued in some Indian states. The clandestine manufacture of heroin was reported in India. Cooperation between Indian and Pakistani law enforcement authorities improved, leading to some successes, but traffickers sought new routes for smuggling heroin into India from Afghanistan and Pakistan. Sri Lankan drug traffickers had apparently developed close links with traffickers in India and Pakistan, transporting heroin of South-West Asian origin through both countries. The spread of heroin abuse constituted a major problem in South Asia. In India, intravenous heroin abuse remained a major concern as it was spreading from northern India and large cities to other, more rural areas, and was associated with an alarming increase in the incidence of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) infection.

In Sri Lanka, the number of heroin abusers continued to increase, a pattern consistent with that of the previous three years. Bangladesh, used as transit country for heroin destined for Europe or North America, also witnessed growing abuse. The abuse of psychotropic substances was on the increase in almost all countries of the region, and illicit manufacture of methaqualone continued in India, with significant quantities being smuggled into African countries.

West Asia

In the region of West Asia, the Board noted with satisfaction the increasing cooperation between member States of the Economic Cooperation Organization, as well as the close cooperation in the field of drug control between Egypt, Israel, Jordan and the Palestinian authorities and UNDCP, and noted the initiatives and efforts being undertaken by the League of Arab States, the Gulf Cooperation Council and the Governments of the States that are members of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). The lack of demand reduction activities in many countries in West Asia was emphasized, and the Board urged the Governments of the States in the region to attach high priority to such prevention programmes.

According to INCB, heroin and opium were increasingly transported across the territories of the five central Asian members of CIS—Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan—mainly from Afghanistan and Pakistan to countries in Europe. Such transit traffic was expected to expand rapidly with the introduction of new international air and railway connections, the extension of the Karakorum highway and the restoration of the silk road which was in the planning stage. Some of the CIS members were also major manufacturers of chemicals that could be used for the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The Board was of the opinion that there was an urgent need to create appropriate legal frameworks and strengthen law enforcement structures in CIS member States, and was concerned at the absence of mechanisms to control new financial institutions and banking activities in CIS States.

In Afghanistan, illicit opium production was around 2,300 tonnes, about one third less than in crop year 1993/1994, due to large-scale eradication, lower prices and increased cultivation costs, and possibly to effective border control and the fight against drug trafficking by some neighbouring countries.

Heroin manufacture continued in the region, with large amounts of morphine and heroin base smuggled out of Afghanistan and Pakistan, particularly into Turkey. Clandestine laboratories for the manufacture of heroin hydrochloride were dismantled in Turkey's eastern provinces and, increasingly, in the Istanbul area. In Afghanistan, the number of clandestine heroin laboratories grew; many of them were located in the northern part, close to the border with Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, to facilitate the procurement of chemicals needed for heroin manufacture. In Kazakhstan, large amounts of acetic anhydride were manufactured and illicitly used, also in "kitchen laboratories", to manufacture heroin. Heroin abuse reportedly was on the rise in Afghanistan and Turkmenistan, and continued to be of grave concern in Pakistan.

Afghanistan and Pakistan remained important suppliers of cannabis to European drug markets. The large-scale traffic in cannabis and cannabis resin continued to create problems for the transit countries in West Asia, as well as in Europe. The illicit cultivation of cannabis was reported in all CIS member States. In the CIS members in central Asia and in the Caucasus (Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia), wild-growing cannabis covered large areas, i.e., 140,00 hectares in Kazakhstan and 6,000 hectares in Kyrgyzstan.

Europe

The Board expressed concern that while Western European countries were increasing their cooperation and implementing advanced levels of legislation to counter the drug problem, no comprehensive drug legislation had been enacted in any of the formerly socialist countries of Eastern Europe. Although it noted that the Netherlands had undertaken initiatives to bring its drug policy more in line with international drug-control treaties, the Board expressed continued concern at the persistence of certain practices that called into question the Government's fidelity to its treaty obligations, and also pointed out that the Netherlands had become a significant producer of cannabis cultivated indoors. The abolition of border controls within the European Union, the opening of borders between East and West, and the ongoing war in the former Yugoslavia, which had disrupted the traditional Balkan route and caused traffickers to diversify their routes, continued to be major challenges to drug control and law enforcement authorities in the fulfilment of their responsibilities. Cannabis continued to be the principal drug of abuse in Europe. Heroin continued to be abused more in western Europe, although there were signs that heroin abuse was emerging in some countries of central and eastern Europe. The Board reported that the Baltic States had witnessed increasing abuse of synthetic opioids.

Crimes connected with illicit drug trafficking increased in Europe, particularly in the central and eastern parts more and more used as transit routes. The adverse impact of the activities of criminal organizations on the political, economic and social stability was strongest in CIS member States where the interdiction capability of law enforcement services remained limited.

There were close links between drug trafficking and money laundering in the Russian Federation where the latter was not a criminal offence under current national legislation and was frequently conducted through private businesses, insurance companies, national institutions, exchange offices and real estate agencies, and through newly privatized factories, companies, hotels, etc.

Cocaine seizures increased significantly, including in France, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. The central and eastern European States were more and more used by South American cartels as transit points for cocaine destined for markets in western Europe, with Poland becoming particularly important in that regard. Despite the emergence of new trafficking routes, however, the Iberian peninsula remained the most important point of entry into Europe for cocaine from South America. Nationals of West African countries continued to be used as couriers to smuggle cocaine via West African airports into Europe.

Abuse of psychotropic substances increased, with amphetamine being widely available in most countries. Large quantities of amphetamine originating mainly in the Netherlands, as well as Poland, were seized in several western European countries and the Nordic States. There were signs that illicit amphetamine and methamphetamine manufacture took place, on a smaller scale, in several other European countries. The black market for metamphetamine in the Czech Republic was supplied by a large number of small, clandestine "home laboratories". Abuse of stimulants, such as ecstasy, was a new and rapidly increasing phenomenon.

Oceania

As for abuse and trafficking of drugs in Oceania, which had not yet become a focus of major international concern, the Board noted that the Pacific islands were increasingly being used by drug traffickers as transit points, and the capacity of police and customs services was not sufficient to control the increasing illicit drug trade. In addition, as the Pacific islands moved to modernize their economic and financial systems, they might become more attractive to criminal activities, such as money laundering. In the region as a whole, with the exception of Australia and New Zealand, the problem of drug abuse seems to be limited to the abuse of cannabis.

Illicit cultivation persisted in several countries in Oceania, including Australia, Fiji, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea and Samoa. Cannabis remained the most popular drug of abuse in Australia, as well as in New Zealand and Papua New Guinea. Cannabis originating in the latter was frequently seized in Australia. Heroin abuse continued in both Australia and New Zealand, where frequently codeine or morphine was being extracted from pharmaceutical preparations and converted into heroin by drug abusers.

The illicit manufacture and abuse of methamphetamine, as well as hallucinogenic amphetamines, remained major problems in Australia. Precursors for the manufacture of such substances were usually obtained from the United States and Europe. New hallucinogenic "designer drugs" were also seized. The abuse of stimulants (amphetamine and methamphetamine) was also reported in New Zealand where the increasing use of hallucinogens was considered by the Government to be a problem.

UN programmes to combat drug abuse

United Nations International Drug Control Programme

The General Assembly in 1990 asked the Secretary-General to create a single drug control programme to be called the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), based in Vienna, integrating within it the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the UN Secretariat, the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB), and the UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control.⁽¹⁾

UNDCP, considered the main focus for concerted international action for drug abuse control, was established in 1991, with four main substantive components: treaty implementation and legal services, operational activities, technical services, and inter-organizational cooperation.

During 1995, the Programme continued to support the efforts of Governments to combat the drug problem by promoting closer cooperation between Governments at the subregional level, particularly in order to counter cross-border illicit trafficking. Subregional cooperation was a successful strategic initiative of UNDCP in 1995.

During the year, the international community paid increased attention to the illicit traffic in and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, acknowledged to be a major threat to the fabric of society and the security of States. While the situation remained critical, according to the UNDCP Executive Director, several windows of opportunity had opened in 1995, and unprecedented strides were being made in combating the illicit supply of drugs and in countering drug abuse. Of particular significance were political developments in South-East Asia, where Governments had committed themselves to cooperating more closely in fighting the drug menace.

Activities of UNDCP

Activities of UNDCP in 1995 were under way at the national, regional and international levels. UNDCP had sought, through a balanced approach targeting both illicit traffic and demand, directly to support government efforts to combat drug problems at the national level, and had given prominence to the formulation and implementation of national drug-control master plans and to strengthening the national institutions mandated to implement them.

The regional approach had provided UNDCP with a viable means of promoting enhanced cooperation, in particular cross-border cooperation, between Governments fighting the drug menace in vulnerable regions. UNDCP channeled government resources into regionally focused operational activities, formalizing them under the framework of memoranda of understanding.

At the global level, UNDCP in 1995 promoted the adoption and effective implementation of drug control treaties and continued to act as a repository and clearing-house for research-based findings on the illicit drug phenomenon. The year 1995 was also characterized by intensified inter-agency coordination and cooperation with regional and international organizations, particularly the international financial institutions.

The Executive Director of UNDCP, in a report⁽²⁾ to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, outlined UNDCP activities in 1995 on a regional basis, summaries of which follow.

Africa

In 1995, as a follow-up to the memorandum of understanding adopted in 1994 by UNDCP and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), UNDCP assisted in the preparation of a draft plan of action and declaration for drug control at the continental level. A main feature of the plan was an appeal to regional institutions to support efforts to combat the drug problem. Subregional workshops and conferences were held on judicial cooperation against drugs (Saint Denis/Reunion) and cross-border trafficking (Mmabatho, South Africa). A draft protocol on combating illicit drugs in southern Africa was adopted at the latter.

At the country-level, a UNDCP priority in Africa was support for Governments in establishing or strengthening institutional capabilities to deal with drug problems. Assistance was provided to States in West, central, eastern and southern Africa to establish or support interministerial policy planning and coordination bodies.

Given the increasing scale of traffic in and through South Africa, UNDCP launched initiatives to support the Government in its efforts to combat the drug phenomenon, including drug interdiction training and the strengthening of drug detection capability of law enforcement agencies and investigative methods used in drug-related cases.

In 1995, both Niger and Zambia initiated preparations for national master plans. UNDCP contributed to the elaboration and adoption of a national drug-control strategy in Nigeria; a national drug-control master plan was completed in Namibia.

UNDCP completed a programme to assist Egypt, through its Anti-Narcotics General Administration, to interdict drug trafficking and illicit cultivation and to promote more effective anti-drug operations by delivering technical, communications and training equipment.

In order to obtain more comprehensive information about the nature and extent of drug abuse, UNDCP launched a series of drug abuse assessment surveys in selected African countries. In 1995, the results of a rapid assessment study undertaken in Kenya provided basic information enabling the Government to elaborate demand reduction programmes for young adults. Similarly, in Ethiopia, a rapid assessment study was completed, to assist in establishing national demand-reduction policies and strategies. In Egypt, UNDCP laid the groundwork for an assessment study in 1996.

Asia and the Pacific

A landmark development in subregional cooperation in South-East Asia was the adoption of a plan of action at a ministerial meeting in Beijing, China in May 1995 by signatories to the UNDCP memorandum of understanding concerning South-East Asia. The States involved were Cambodia, China, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand and Viet Nam.

A memorandum of understanding was signed in August 1995 with the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation, and in March 1995 with the Economic Cooperation Organization, providing a further framework for collaboration in drug-control activities between the States of South-West Asia and Common wealth of Independent States (CIS) member States in central Asia.

Activities to strengthen surveillance capabilities of law enforcement agencies in the border areas of Iran and Pakistan were undertaken during the first year of a joint project with UNDCP. There was increased collaboration between India and Pakistan on drug control matters, initiated by UNDCP. Agreement was reached by those two countries in 1995 to undertake controlled deliveries, to exchange names of officials serving as contacts at the field level in connection with anti-drug operations, and to establish joint telecommunication facilities.

During the year, illicit cultivation of opium poppy in Afghanistan continued to be monitored by UNDCP, which confirmed that country as the major producer of illicit opiates in the Golden Crescent of South-West Asia and as a principal source of heroin for the European market. The fragile and uncertain political situation in that country was not conducive to implementing drug control activities, a factor preventing Afghanistan from participating in subregional cooperation initiatives, UNDCP reported.

Myanmar was also a major producer in 1995 of illicit opiates, the principal producer in the Golden Triangle of South-East Asia and the major source of heroin in the illicit North American market in 1994/1995. UNDCP supported a rapid assessment study of mining areas, border towns, poppy cultivation areas and high-risk urban areas, which indicated that heroin was the dominant drug of abuse and confirmed a high rate of HIV-infection among hard-core abusers. Myanmar had become a major partner in subregional programmes aimed at supply reduction in border areas, demand reduction and law enforcement, UNDCP reported. However, the unstable political situation on the border between Myanmar and Thailand and in other opium-producing border areas had interrupted some UNDCP project activities.

Opium production dropped measurably in a UNDCP project area in the Lao People's Democratic Republic; during 1994 and 1995, about 2,000 villagers earned alternative income through labour-intensive road construction.

In Viet Nam, the Government completed development of a national drug-control master plan with UNDCP assistance. To address the problem of opium poppy cultivation, a demonstration alternative development project was launched in the major producing area.

Plans, strategies and projects were also developed, with UNDCP assistance, in Bangladesh, Nepal, Sri Lanka, and Malaysia, among other countries.

Europe and the Middle East

UNDCP supported activities in 34 countries in the region during the year. Some 30 new national and subregional projects were developed for the 1994-1995 biennium.

UNDCP served as the axis for providing technical assistance to central and eastern Europe, the Baltic States and members of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). A new subregional cooperation programme was started for the five CIS member States in central Asia, which were emerging as centres for production, processing, trafficking, redistribution and domestic abuse of illicit drugs. Other new programmes were launched for five central European nations and for Middle East countries.

Illicit trafficking in and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances continued to spread throughout central and eastern Europe, and UNDCP increased cooperation with the European Commission in a drug programme for 11 States in that area. In central Europe, the Governments of the Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland, Slovakia and Slovenia signed a memorandum of understanding with UNDCP on subregional cooperation.

The region of the Black Sea was becoming a new drug-trafficking route affecting several States of southern Europe and CIS countries. UNDCP was preparing a comprehensive action plan involving Albania, Bulgaria, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Turkey, with its extension to CIS nations bordering the Black Sea envisaged for a later stage.

A landmark development in cooperation in drug-related matters between States in the Middle East was the convening of a technical meeting in Cairo, Egypt in July 1995, involving Egypt, Israel, Jordan and the Palestinian Authority, to identify joint drug-control problems, particularly patterns in the trafficking in and abuse of drugs. The first phase of an integrated area-development project in the Bekaa Valley in Lebanon, sponsored by UNDCP and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), was completed with the presentation of a detailed development plan into the year 2000.

Latin America and the Caribbean

UNDCP continued to build and strengthen the capacities of Governments and civil society to carry out demand reduction and other programmes. An important objective was to strengthen international and regional cooperation in drug control matters. Information sharing, through regional meetings and other means, was planned, as was strengthened cooperation between recipient States, for example by increasing the number of subregional drug-control projects in vulnerable areas through cost-sharing or other co-funding arrangements within the framework of memoranda of understanding.

Some 500 drug control police and customs officials of several Caribbean and South American countries were trained under the ongoing UNDCP programmes with the Caribbean Customs Law Enforcement Agency and the World Customs Organization (WCO). In cooperation with the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL), telecommunications systems dealing with the exchange of drug-related information were strengthened in 28 countries and territories of the Caribbean region. UNDCP, in cooperation with WCO, supported information gathering and analysis capabilities of customs authorities of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Guyana, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela. Training courses were held in Martinique for more than 140 law enforcement officers from Caribbean customs, air and seaport security administrations, who were trained in precursors control, investigation techniques and intelligence gathering. The Caribbean training programme for prosecutors and magistrates contributed to improved legal systems and coordination in the Bahamas, Belize, Guyana and the English-speaking islands of the eastern Caribbean.

As a follow-up to the memorandum of understanding adopted in 1994 under the aegis of UNDCP between Argentina, Bolivia, Chile and Peru, a subregional training programme for drug law enforcement was approved. Agreement was reached in 1995 between UNDCP, the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission and the Organization of American States (OAS) on exchanging information, joint programming and coordination of activities. A regional symposium on customs drug enforcement in the Caribbean was held in Martinique in March. Training programmes were sponsored for prosecutors, magistrates, judges and police officials.

Efforts were made at the country level in the area of treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration, with programmes for health authorities of the Bahamas, Barbados, Dominican Republic, Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago. In Colombia, national and municipal authorities and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) established referral systems for such programmes. UNDCP investments in alternative development in the Andean region resulted in cumulative eradication of about 10,000 hectares of illicit coca-bush cultivation and provision of services and alternative income-generating activities for about 33,000 peasant families involved in illicit crop cultivation. Such programmes were continuing in Bolivia, Colombia and Peru; the process was most advanced in Colombia, where with UNDCP support, a national plan had been developed.

In 1995, UNDCP assisted 14 countries in the Caribbean and six countries in Latin America to update and complete their national drug-control plans. Preventive education and mass-media campaigns targeting specific groups were considered effective. In several States, particularly Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia and Jamaica, as well as other Caribbean States, demand reduction concerns were linked to wider national health and education programmes.

Drug abuse and trafficking analyses focusing on youth in especially difficult circumstances in Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, St. Martin, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines resulted in useful data for developing demand reduction programmes. Similarly, a drug abuse rapid assessment survey conducted in four major cities in Ecuador provided authorities with data to design well-targeted national demand-reduction programmes.

UNDCP cooperation with other bodies

Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs in a March resolution⁽³⁾ requested UNDCP, in cooperation with the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Secretariat, jointly to provide technical assistance to requesting States in the training of judicial and investigative personnel, in the elaboration of treaties of mutual assistance in criminal matters and extradition, and in the prevention and control of money laundering and the illicit transfer of assets. By the same resolution, the Commission requested Member States to implement the 1994 Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime,⁽⁴⁾ with reference to the prevention and control of drug abuse and trafficking.

Drug control matters were also dealt with at the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in May (see PART FOUR, Chapter V).

During the year, joint operational projects by UNDCP and the Criminal Justice Branch included training for police officers, regional workshops and advisory services on law enforcement cooperation, and development of measures against money laundering for States of eastern Europe and central Asia. A major joint project was planned on the prevention and control of organized crime in an Asian country.

ECO

Welcoming steps by member States of the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) to maximize their contribution to international drug-control efforts, and noting with appreciation that UNDCP and ECO had signed a memorandum of understanding on 15 March 1995, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs called on UNDCP to devote greater attention to the region of ECO, one of the areas most affected by the drug problem, and to assist it and its members (Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan) in drawing up projects and programmes. It requested UNDCP to draw up memoranda of understanding, in consultation with the organization's members, and promote both the implementation of the project under way to strengthen law enforcement capabilities in the border areas of the region and its extension to other ECO members. The Commission recommended exchange of information, technical cooperation, programmes to meet the needs of law enforcement agencies, and mutual consultations on matters relating to drug control in ECO member States.⁽⁵⁾

Strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and ECO in general was the subject of General Assembly resolution 50/1 (see PART IV, Chapter V).

System-wide Action Plan

In 1989, in adopting resolution 44/141, the General Assembly asked the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), to coordinate at the inter-agency level, the development of a United Nations system-wide action plan on drug abuse control, aimed at the full implementation of all existing mandates and subsequent decisions of intergovernmental bodies throughout the UN system, and using as a guide the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, and the recommendations contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, both adopted in 1987.⁽⁶⁾ The plan was to include a statement of purpose that defined the overall goal and specific objectives; an outline of concrete activities that each agency should undertake, within its mandate, ensuring that there was no duplication or overlap; a reasonable time-frame for implementation of each portion of the action plan; and a realistic cost estimate for implementing the plan. The ACC was to present the plan to all Member States no later than 31 March 1990.

Following consultations with UN bodies and agencies, the UN System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control was established in 1990.⁽⁷⁾ It consisted of two main parts. Part One dealt with operational activities, in particular those of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC). Part Two outlined the role of the substantive drug control units of the UN Secretariat, and of other UN entities and of the specialized agencies. It focused on five areas: strengthening the licit drug control system; prevention and reduction of illicit demand for drugs; treatment and rehabilitation; elimination of the supply of drugs from illicit sources; and suppression of illicit drug traffic.

In accordance with the conclusions agreed on by the Economic and Social Council at the coordination segment of its 1994 session,⁽⁸⁾ endorsed later in the year by the General Assembly,⁽⁹⁾ ACC, at its first regular session in February 1995, included international drug control as an agenda item for the first time. At that session, ACC made recommendations to its Subcommittee on Drug Control to prepare a more operational United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control based on multi-agency sectoral and/or subsectoral plans of action.⁽¹⁰⁾

At its 1995 annual meeting,⁽¹¹⁾ the Subcommittee identified 12 initial themes and established multi-agency task forces charged with preparing such plans which, in turn, were to form the basis for the new System-wide Action Plan. The Plan was to be revised continuously as new plans of action were incorporated into it. Currently, emphasis was on the importance of inter-agency cooperation at the field level, as well as cooperation with international financial institutions. ACC stated that, taken together, the plans of action should constitute a truly multisectoral and system-wide approach to the drug abuse problem, which would permit the UN system to do its part in implementing the 1990 Global Programme of Action, adopted by the General Assembly on 23 February 1990.⁽¹²⁾

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs in March⁽¹³⁾ welcomed ACC's conclusions and requested the Executive Director to pursue their rapid implementation by: initiating a review process to strengthen the Plan and render it operational; promoting consultations between relevant organizations at global, regional and subregional levels; elaborating joint multi-agency sectoral or subsectoral plans of action at those levels; and assisting Resident Coordinators in creating informal inter-agency groups to ensure that drug control needs were assigned the necessary priority and addressed in a coordinated manner. By the same resolution, the Commission called on States to support the efforts of the Executive Director. It took note of the conclusions and recommendations contained in a report of the Executive Director⁽¹⁴⁾ suggesting further ways and means of improving system-wide cooperation and coordination in drug control.

The Commission further recommended that the Economic and Social Council, at its 1995 regular session, request relevant UN entities to take steps to ensure that drug abuse issues were taken fully into account in the elaboration of programmes and projects; urge international financial institutions to cooperate fully with UNDCP and to strengthen their support to other organizations and countries; and invite UN regional commissions to give particular attention to drug control issues.

The Secretary-General, in a May report,⁽¹⁵⁾ summarized action taken to implement the Council's 1994 conclusions and recommendations. Summing up steps taken towards that end, he stated that the UN system had been responsive and that ACC's strong position, calling for integration of drug abuse control into the work programmes of organizations across the system and for ensuring follow-up at the country level, were of particular significance. It had been possible to set the stage for what could become a fully coordinated and systematic response to the complex issues of drug control. However, a response that involved all potential partners and was fully coordinated would take a certain time to bring to reality; ideally, it would not only involve the coordination of existing activities but would also require moving towards a proactive approach based on consultative or joint planning. That was precisely the approach envisaged by ACC and corresponded well to the original intention of the System-wide Action Plan.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/148, Section V, expressed its support for the Action Plan as a vital tool for coordination and enhancement of drug abuse control activities and requested that it be reviewed biennially.

Global Programme of Action

The General Assembly, at its seventeenth special session in 1990, adopted the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action on international cooperation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.⁽¹²⁾ The Programme set out a comprehensive list of measures and activities to be undertaken by States and United Nations entities collectively and simultaneously in the fight against all aspects of drug abuse and illicit traffic.

In the Political Declaration, the Assembly had declared the period from 1991 to the year 2000 as the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, to be devoted to effective and sustained national, regional and international actions to promote the implementation of the Global Programme.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1995, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁶⁾ on the implementation of the Global Programme of Action, evaluating the progress made with regard to the areas on which the 1990 Programme and the Political Declaration focused, such as prevention and reduction of drug abuse with a view to eliminating the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug addicts; control of supply of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; suppression of illicit drug trafficking; measures against the effects of money derived from, used in or intended for use in illicit trafficking; illegal financial flows and illegal use of the banking system; strengthening of judicial and legal systems, including law enforcement; measures against the diversion of arms and explosives and illicit traffic by vessels, aircraft and vehicles; UN resources and structure for drug abuse control; and the UN Decade against Drug Abuse.

With respect to reducing demand for drugs, the most common activities implemented by Governments were prevention campaigns seeking to increase awareness of the dangers of drug abuse. Not all campaigns, however, were targeted, the report noted, and only very few were long-term sustained efforts within a comprehensive national demand-reduction strategy. It was recommended that States draw up comprehensive and sustainable strategies and share experience with others, either through UNDCP or bilaterally. As the involvement of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in developing and implementing prevention policies had shown positive results, States should continue to cooperate with them and also mobilize other organizations of civil society. The report noted that the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1995/16 (see below), had requested that the UNDCP Executive Director define a global strategy for demand reduction and develop, in consultation with Governments and organizations, a draft declaration on the guiding principles for such reduction.

The Secretary-General saw a need to establish facilities providing specialized treatment for drug abusers, as in many cases treatment was confined to detoxification under medical supervision. It was also recommended that States develop programmes for rehabilitation and social reintegration for drug abusers, involving NGOs in providing counselling and long-term support.

In spite of successes achieved in some countries and in some aspects of dealing with illicit cultivation and production, the overall situation showed little improvement, the report stated. It was recommended that UNDCP continue to promote subregional cooperation which had emerged as an effective means of overcoming cross-border drug-related problems; that mechanisms and procedures to monitor the movement of precursors be strengthened; and that Governments, as a matter of urgency, identify the competent authorities and their role in implementing article 12 of the 1988 UN Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances.⁽¹⁷⁾

In respect of suppression of illicit trafficking, States reported having taken various initiatives to conclude both bilateral and regional agreements and arrangements to facilitate cooperation in law-enforcement matters. While acknowledging that those activities constituted important steps, the report stated that they needed to be supported by judicial processes such as extradition or mutual legal assistance, as set out in the 1988 Convention.

The active intelligence capacity of States had to be strengthened by establishing databases with intelligence information, and States should be encouraged to enhance cooperation between law-enforcement agencies, particularly with regard to information sharing and joint operations.

With international cooperation against money laundering often impaired by banking practices, the Secretary-General recommended that States with strict bank secrecy laws urgently consider enacting penal provisions on drug-related money laundering offences and comprehensive legislation to enable investigation of such offences and provide for confiscation of proceeds derived from illicit trafficking, in accordance with articles 3 and 5 of the 1988 Convention, as well as consider using forfeited proceeds for drug control activities. Governments should adhere to regional agreements against money laundering and should draw up bilateral agreements.

The General Assembly, on 21 December 1995, adopted resolution 50/148, Section III on the Global Programme of Action (see above).

Implementation of resolution 48/12

In 1993, the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session convened four high-level plenary meetings on international cooperation in drug control, culminating on 28 October with the adoption of resolution 48/12 setting out measures to strengthen international cooperation against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.⁽¹⁸⁾ The Assembly invited the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 1994 to consider the convening of an ad hoc expert group to contribute to the examination of the issues set out in the resolution, and report to the Assembly at its fiftieth session. The expert body met twice in 1994⁽¹⁹⁾ making recommendations regarding international drug conventions and other matters.

In 1995, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered a report⁽²⁰⁾ of the UNDCP Executive Director on implementation of resolution 48/12. The report, which also reflected the deliberations of the expert group, highlighted the following six major themes: evaluation of the drug control treaties and their effectiveness; monitoring the implementation of the 1988 Convention; approach to be adopted by UNDCP in alternative development; the need to create a global synergy to address demand reduction; the issue of demand reduction, particularly the question whether the commitment of Governments should be reinforced through a treaty or a formal declaration; and alternative funding mechanisms for UNDCP.

The Commission requested Member States to review their implementation of the Assembly resolution and inform the Executive Director of their findings before 1 December 1995. It requested him to elaborate further and refine the recommendations in his report and submit them in 1996.⁽²¹⁾

Those actions were summarized in a September 1995 report of the Secretary-General.⁽²²⁾

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its thirty-eighth annual session in Vienna from 14 to 23 March 1995. It adopted 14 resolutions on various drug control issues, as well as four decisions dealing with the inclusion of certain substances into Schedules I, II and IV of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances,⁽¹⁾ and the transfer of another substance from Schedule IV to III. In addition, the Commission recommended another five draft resolutions to the Economic and Social Council for adoption, on which the Council acted at its 1995 substantive session (see above).

The Council, by decision 1995/246 of 24 July, took note of the Commission's report on its thirty-eighth session.⁽²⁾ On the same date, the Council decided that the session be reconvened so that the Commission could approve the initial programme budget for 1996-1997, and the second and final revision of the programme budget for 1994-1995 for the Fund of UNDCP. In accordance with Council decision 1995/247, the Commission met for that purpose on 13 and 14 December 1995.⁽³⁾

Also on 24 July, by decision 1995/244, the Council approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's thirty-ninth session in 1996.

Major issues in 1995

Economic and social consequences of drug abuse

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 1995 considered an interim survey⁽⁴⁾ of the economic and social consequences of illicit drug abuse and trafficking, which reported that social integration and cohesion, at the family, community and even broader levels, were almost always compromised by an escalating drug problem. The nexus between drug abuse, acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) and prostitution made for a mushroom effect, the report stated, endangering the health of much larger sections of the population. Even more important was the nexus between drug abuse and crime, with, for instance, half of all theft in some countries being directly drug-related. The violence, corruption and fragmentation engendered by illicit drug abuse and trafficking weakened civil society and thereby struck at the very foundation of some nations.

The identifiable costs of drug abuse in consumer countries seemed to range from 0.5 to 1.3 per cent of gross domestic product, the largest part of which involved drug-related crime and law enforcement costs, the report went on. Health costs of a drug addict appeared to be some 80 per cent higher than those of an average citizen in the same age group. Drug abuse also had a negative impact upon productivity, and illicit drug money was mostly spent on conspicuous consumption, and not generally used for productive investment, the report stated.

Demand reduction

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its thirty-eighth session, considered reports concerned with the reduction of illicit demand for drugs. The Commission was informed, in a report⁽⁵⁾ on the world situation with respect to drug abuse, that the increase in production over the past 15 years had been matched by an increase in abuse, rather than by a fall in the price of drugs. The switch from oral abuse to injection had provided a major new vector for the spread of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). Another significant world trend had been the re-emergence of stimulants as drugs of widespread abuse.

In a second report before the Commission,⁽⁶⁾ dealing with basic principles of demand reduction, it was stated that greater emphasis had been placed upon demand reduction in recent years because of the principle that prevention was better than cure. Demand reduction had three aspects: a primary aspect, which was concerned with persuading people not to start using and abusing drugs; a secondary aspect, where the aim was to help drug abusers to abandon the habit; and a tertiary aspect, by which an attempt was made to reduce and minimize the risks and harm posed to society by illicit drug abuse. The report contained sections on strategies; techniques of assessment of the nature, extent and patterns of drug abuse; demand reduction activities (including education, information campaigns and services for drug abusers); methodologies and institutional linkages.

Commission Action. The Commission on Narcotic Drugs in March underlined the importance of developing demand reduction strategies, including guiding principles, and decided to keep under consideration the proposal of convening an international conference to review progress made in combating drug abuse and trafficking.⁽⁷⁾

Within the context of demand reduction, the Commission adopted four other resolutions: on reducing demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; on the use of heroin; on promoting programmes using involvement in sports as an effective measure to prevent drug abuse; and on women and drug abuse.

Aware that proposals to legalize the non-medical use of drugs and psychotropic substances contradicted the international drug-control treaties, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs emphasized the need to ensure the non-liberalization of the use of illicit drugs and psychotropic substances.⁽⁸⁾

In a second resolution, the Commission requested the Executive Director of the UN International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) to ask the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) and the World Health Organization (WHO) for an opinion on the question of the clanger of promoting advocacy of the non-medical use of heroin.⁽⁹⁾

In a third resolution,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission invited UNDCP to consider introducing in its demand reduction and other programmes a component on the use of sports to prevent drug abuse. UNDCP was invited to draw up, in collaboration with the International Olympic Committee, the national Olympic committees and sports federations, a programme of work on the use of sports to prevent drug abuse and to submit it to potential donors. The Commission invited Governments and NGOs to consider mobilizing national sport authorities and organizations for promoting pilot programmes to benefit deprived youth, and invited the Organizing Committee of the 1996 Olympic Games to disseminate messages related to the use of sports to prevent drug abuse.

By a fourth resolution,⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission, expressing deep concern over the growing problems in many countries related to drug abuse among women and children, urged States to assess and take into account in their national policies and programmes those problems and to develop activities to respond to them.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/16.

Integration of demand reduction initiatives into a cohesive strategy to combat drug abuse

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and its resolution 1991/46 of 21 June 1991,

Acknowledging the Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, on 23 February 1990,

Reaffirming the importance of its resolution 1993/35 of 27 July 1993, on demand reduction as part of balanced national strategic plans to combat drug abuse, and the need to ensure its implementation,

Recognizing that demand reduction encompasses prevention, treatment and rehabilitation as well as social reintegration,

Also recognizing the particularly important role of prevention within demand reduction,

Reminding Governments of article 22, paragraph 1 (b), of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, of article 36, paragraph 1 (b), of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (the Tokyo Rules) adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 45/110 of 14 December 1990, which offer the possibility of applying to drug abusers, in appropriate cases of a minor nature, alternatives to, or measures in addition to, conviction and punishment, such as treatment,

Stressing the importance of a long-term global commitment to alleviating the serious consequences of drug abuse for the health and the social, economic, political and cultural fabric of communities,

Believing that optimum effectiveness in drug abuse control would best be achieved through a balanced approach, applying the appropriate emphasis and resources to initiatives involving both demand and supply reduction, and integrating such initiatives into a cohesive and comprehensive strategy,

Also believing that effectiveness in combating drug abuse is enhanced by cooperation and the combined efforts of all sectors of society, including those of voluntary and non-governmental organizations, in the recognition of problems and the quest for solutions,

Stressing the importance of evaluating programmes for drug abuse control and sharing information on their effectiveness,

1. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, in consultation with Governments, appropriate United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations, to define clearly their global strategy for demand reduction, specifying their aims, priorities and responsibilities, and to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-ninth session;

2. Also requests the Executive Director of the Programme to develop, in consultation with Governments and organizations represented in the Commission by observers, a draft declaration on the guiding principles of demand reduction, for submission to the Commission at its thirty-ninth session and subsequently, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly for adoption;

3. Further requests the Executive Director of the Programme, in preparing such a draft declaration, to take into account the relevant recommendations contained in the Global Programme of Action and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, with due regard to flexibility in approach and cost-effectiveness;

4. Requests the Executive Director of the Programme to report to the Commission at its thirty-ninth session on the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1994/3 of 20 July 1994, with particular attention to progress made in the development of innovative methods of data collection and analysis, the identification of reliable and comparable data regarding the nature, extent and consequences of drug abuse, and the revision of the annual reports questionnaire;

5. Requests that demand reduction be a permanent item of the agenda at each session of the Commission;

6. Encourages Governments, regional organizations and multilateral agencies to work together in developing knowledge of the social and economic costs of drug abuse as a contribution towards the objective assessment of the cost benefits of policy and programme options, so as to achieve established goals or aims of strategies to reduce the supply of and demand for drugs;

7. Also encourages Governments to adopt comprehensive national strategies that reflect the reality and necessity of a balance between supply and demand reduction efforts, with operational linkages between those two areas, taking into account the social, economic and cultural conditions of individual countries;

8. Encourages the Executive Director of the Programme to continue to facilitate and promote the dissemination of information and the sharing of the benefits of experience gained in the development and implementation of balanced national strategies integrating comprehensive initiatives aimed at supply and demand reduction;

9. Invites the International Narcotics Control Board to continue to report on progress and deficiencies in demand reduction programmes at the national level, in a manner that will provide a more comprehensive understanding of the illicit drug problem;

10. Encourages intergovernmental cooperation regarding demand reduction at the regional and international levels through various means, including meetings for the exchange of information and experiences;

11. Stresses the need for cooperation among all Governments and the importance of involving and assisting voluntary and non-governmental organizations as well as mobilizing community participation in demand reduction;

12. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to update, in consultation with other United Nations agencies, the Resource Book on Measures to Reduce Illicit Demand for Drugs and to develop a glossary of terms to ensure a common understanding of terms;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/16

24 July 1995 Meeting 49 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1995/29); agenda item 5 (h). Meeting numbers. ESC 47-49.

Supply reduction

The Committee of the Whole of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs examined the supply reduction strategies outlined in a Secretariat note,⁽¹³⁾ with particular emphasis on alternative development.

The Commission urged Member States to recognize the need of the countries producing natural inputs for illicit production of drugs to continue to receive cooperation for alternative development programmes. It underlined the need for Governments to prepare and implement such programmes with the objective of reducing and eliminating the production of illicit drugs, taking into account economic, social, cultural, political and environmental aspects. It requested the UNDCP Executive Director to intensify efforts to obtain additional financial resources through voluntary contributions in implementing those programmes, and reiterated its determination to continue regarding the alternative development strategy as an important component of economic and social action appropriate for supply reduction.⁽¹³⁾

Availability of opiates for licit use

In 1995, as in previous years, INCB monitored the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs. In response to 1990⁽¹⁴⁾ and 1991⁽¹⁵⁾ Economic and Social Council resolutions, the Board in 1995 conducted a study to evaluate the extent to which the recommendations contained in its 1989 special report⁽¹⁶⁾ on the availability of narcotic drugs, including opiates, had been implemented. Publication of the study was to be approved by the Board at a March 1996 session. Based on responses from Governments, WHO and professional organizations to its requests for pertinent information, the Board concluded that its recommendations were far from being implemented and, while there had been efforts by some Governments to ensure the availability of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes, it appeared that many others had yet to focus on that obligation.

The Board believed that an efficient national drug-control regime must involve not only a programme to prevent illicit trafficking and diversion, but also ensure the adequate availability of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes. It made a number of recommendations which, if implemented, would ensure significant additional progress towards that end.

Recognizing that the provision of controlled drugs for humanitarian aid in acute emergencies justified non-application of regular control requirements, the Board proposed that exporting countries conclude agreements with a limited number of bona fide suppliers of humanitarian assistance, allowing for rapid import and export of such substances.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/19.

Demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, 1984/21 of 24 May 1984, 1985/16 of 28 May 1985, 1986/9 of 21 May 1986, 1987/31 of 26 May 1987, 1988/10 of 25 May 1988, 1989/15 of 22 May 1989, 1990/31 of 24 May 1990, 1991/43 of 21 June 1991, 1992/30 of 30 July 1992, 1993/37 of 27 July 1993 and 1994/5 of 20 July 1994,

Emphasizing that the need to balance the global licit supply of opiates against the legitimate demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes is central to the international strategy and policy of drug abuse control,

Noting the fundamental need for international cooperation and solidarity with the traditional supplier countries in drug abuse control in general and in the universal application of the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 in particular,

Having considered the Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1994, in which it is stated that in 1993 the consumption of opiates was higher than the production of opiate raw materials, and that in 1994 there was a shortage of supply,

Noting that the traditional supplier countries held very limited stocks of opiate raw materials at the end of 1994,

Also noting the importance of opiates in pain relief therapy as advocated by the World Health Organization,

1. Urges all Governments to continue contributing to the establishment and maintenance of a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiates for medical and scientific needs, the achievement of which would be facilitated by maintaining, in so far as their constitutional and legal systems permit, support to the traditional supplier countries, and to cooperate in preventing the proliferation of sources of production and manufacture for export;

2. Urges Governments of all producing countries to adhere strictly to the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and to take effective measures to prevent diversion to illicit channels or otherwise not engage in licit production of opiate raw materials;

3. Also urges all Governments to comply fully with the relevant recommendations contained in the Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1994 in this respect;

4. Commends the International Narcotics Control Board for its efforts in monitoring the implementation of the relevant Economic and Social Council resolutions and, in particular:

(a) In urging the Governments concerned to restrict global production of opiate raw materials to a level corresponding to the actual licit needs and to avoid any proliferation of production;

(b) In convening meetings for establishing a balance between licit demand for and supply of opiates, during sessions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, with the main States importing and producing opiate raw materials;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Diversion of psychotropic substances and precursors for illicit use

In its report for 1995,⁽¹⁷⁾ INCB called on Governments of exporting countries to exercise utmost vigilance in dealing with orders for the delivery of psychotropic substances to countries where internal security was unstable, as drug traffickers had frequently attempted to take advantage of administrative weaknesses in such States. The Board also noted that some exporting countries applying the system of export authorization for substances under international control had failed to verify all import orders against assessments of annual legitimate requirements of importing countries. As a result, traffickers had been able to divert psychotropic substances using falsified import authorizations. INCB noted with concern that, in addition to diversion from international trade, significant quantities of psychotropic substances were being diverted from domestic distribution channels.

While a number of countries had started to take action to strengthen controls, diversion of precursors from licit channels was still the major source of the chemicals required for illicit manufacture of stimulants and other psychotropic substances. Details of the sources and routes of diversion of many precursors remained largely unknown. The Board reiterated its appeal to Governments to establish and institutionalize working mechanisms and operating procedures with their trade partners for making inquiries and providing immediate feedback to each other in verifying the legitimacy of transactions in precursors.

During the year, UNDCP continued to support initiatives and programmes to implement article 12 of the 1988 Convention on Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances,⁽¹⁸⁾ and other provisions concerning the monitoring of precursors. It carried out various activities in the field of treaty implementation, including the communication of notifications under the provisions of the international drug-control treaties. UNDCP analyzed 102 annual reports from Governments on the working of the treaties, using such information in preparing country profiles and updating the following two annual publications—Competent National Authorities under the International Drug Control Treaties and Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances under International Control—the latter now including manufacturers of substances listed in Table I of the 1988 Convention, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/20 (see below). By the same resolution, the Council endorsed the recommendations made by INCB in its 1994 report on the implementation of article 12 of the Convention for specific actions to be taken by Governments to prevent diversion of precursors for the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/20.

Measures to strengthen international cooperation to prevent diversion of substances listed in table I of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 and used in the illicit manufacture of stimulants and other psychotropic substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Concerned about the recent discovery of worldwide diversion of vast quantities of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine from licit manufacture and trade to be used for the illicit manufacture of methamphetamine,

Recognizing the rapid increase in illicit trafficking and use of stimulants throughout the world, and the need for the international community to strengthen countermeasures against the illicit trafficking in stimulants and their precursors,

Noting the proliferation of the illicit manufacture of a variety of drugs, especially stimulants, which has occurred throughout the world, and the fact that such massive production depends upon an equally massive diversion of substances listed in table I of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

Realizing that brokers frequently serve as mediators in transactions involving substances listed in table I which are ultimately diverted,

Recognizing the need for the international community to renew its commitment to cooperation through the exchange of information and to strengthen countermeasures against the illicit traffic in and abuse of psychotropic substances, in particular stimulants, and their precursors,

Taking note with appreciation of the publication entitled Precursors and Chemicals Frequently Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances: Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1994 on the Implementation of Article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, and welcoming the initiative taken jointly by the International Narcotics Control Board and the Pompidou Group of the Council of Europe to hold a meeting of experts to review the issue of brokers dealing with precursors and psychotropic substances and to consider concrete measures effectively to control the operations of brokers,

Recalling its resolutions 1981/7 of 6 May 1981, 1992/29 of 30 July 1992 and 1993/40 of 27 July 1993,

1. Urges Governments, where appropriate, to invoke article 12, paragraph 10 (a), of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, in order to give importing countries advance notice of any shipment of substances listed in table I of that Convention;

2. Requests the Government of an exporting country, subject to its legal provisions, to provide the following information to the competent authorities of the importing country prior to any export, even when the importing country has not yet formally requested such notification under article 12, paragraph 10 (a), of the 1988 Convention:

(a) Name and address of the exporter and importer and, when available, of the consignee;

(b) Name of the substance listed in table I of the Convention;

(c) Quantity of the substance to be exported;

(d) Expected point of entry and expected date of dispatch;

(e) Such other information as the exporting Government may deem relevant;

3. Requests, for any substance listed in table I of the Convention, the Government of an importing country, upon receipt of any form of pre-export notification from the exporting country, to undertake, through its regulatory authorities and in cooperation with the law enforcement authorities, an investigation of the legitimacy of the transaction, and, with the possible assistance of the International Narcotics Control Board, to convey information thereon to the exporting country;

4. Urges Governments of exporting countries, at the same time, to conduct their own investigations in questionable cases and to seek information and views from the Board, international organizations and Governments, as appropriate, inasmuch as additional facts establishing suspicion may be available to them;

5. Requests Governments, where there is sufficient evidence that a substance may be diverted into illicit channels, to stop the shipments or, where circumstances warrant, to cooperate in controlled deliveries of suspicious shipments in special circumstances if the security of the shipment can be sufficiently ensured, if the quantity and nature of the chemical involved is such that it can be managed feasibly and safely by the competent authorities, and if all States whose cooperation is necessary, including transit States, agree to the controlled delivery;

6. Also urges Governments to exercise, as a matter of urgency, increased vigilance over the activities of brokers handling substances listed in table I of the Convention, in view of the special role that some of them play in the diversion of such substances, and to subject them to licensing or other effective control measures as necessary;

7. Further urges Governments to ensure, as far as possible, that shipments entering or leaving free ports, free zones and bonded warehouses be subject, where permitted, to the controls necessary to safeguard against diversion;

8. Urges Governments, subject to the provisions of national legislation on confidentiality and data protection, to inform the Board on a regular basis, upon request of the Board and in the form and manner provided for by it, of the quantities of substances listed in table I of the Convention that they have imported, exported or transhipped, and encourages them to estimate their annual licit needs;

9. Requests the Board, drawing upon the capabilities of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, to collect information pursuant to paragraph 8 above, and further to develop and strengthen its database in order to assist Governments in preventing diversion of substances listed in table I of the Convention and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in discussing the control of illicit manufacture of, trafficking in and use of psychotropic substances, especially of stimulants and their precursors, and in formulating policy recommendations in this field;

10. Requests all Governments to provide the Secretary-General, subject to the provisions of national legislation on confidentiality and data protection, with names and addresses of the manufacturers, within their countries, of substances listed in table I of the Convention, and requests the Secretary-General to include that information in the publication entitled Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances under International Control;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Executive Director of the Programme and in consultation with the Board, to convene, drawing upon voluntary contributions from Governments, expert meetings of regulatory and law enforcement authorities of interested Governments in 1995 and 1996 in order to discuss countermeasures against the illicit manufacture of and trafficking in psychotropic substances, particularly stimulants, and the illicit use of their precursors on the basis of the study to be prepared in accordance with paragraph 12 below;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Executive Director of the Programme and in consultation with the Board, to undertake, within existing resources, a thorough study on stimulants and the use of their precursors in the illicit manufacture of and trafficking in drugs, and to prepare a report thereon for submission to the Commission, taking into account any comments that may be made on the study at the expert meetings referred to in paragraph 11 above;

13. Encourages Governments to consider strengthening, where necessary, the working mechanisms established to prevent diversion of substances listed in table II of the Convention, as described in the present resolution;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation, and asks the Board, in cooperation with the Programme, to report on its implementation to the Commission at its thirty-ninth session.

Memoranda of understanding

The Declaration on the Further National Development of Memoranda of Understanding between Customs and the Trading Community aimed at Cooperation to prevent Drug Smuggling, adopted in 1992 by the Customs Cooperation Council at Brussels, Belgium, recognized and supported the principle of achieving cooperation between customs and other competent authorities, including commercial carriers, through memoranda of understanding. The Economic and Social Council in 1993 recognized the significance of the use of memoranda of understanding and expressed conviction that such an international initiative needed to be enhanced by agreements at a national level.⁽¹⁹⁾

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/18.

Promoting the use of memoranda of understanding to facilitate cooperation between customs authorities and other competent administrations and the international trading community, including commercial carriers

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned about the unlawful use of commercial carriers for the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and in precursors and essential chemicals,

Recalling its resolution 1993/41 of 27 July 1993,

Recalling also article 15 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, which provides for cooperation between appropriate authorities, including customs and commercial carriers,

Recognizing the importance of the use of memoranda of understanding concluded between the World Customs Organization, originally established as the Customs Cooperation Council, and international trade and transport organizations as a means to improving cooperation in combating illicit drug trafficking,

Noting that a review undertaken by the World Customs Organization of the effectiveness of the programme of memoranda of understanding has revealed that both customs operations and trade have benefited from the adoption of such a programme,

Noting also that an increasing number of States have implemented memoranda of understanding,

Noting further that the adoption of a programme of memoranda of understanding has enabled States to improve the capacity of their law enforcement agencies to target and intercept illicit drug trafficking without hindering the free movement of innocent persons and legitimate international trade,

1. Commends the World Customs Organization for its work in demonstrating the effectiveness of the programme of memoranda of understanding developed at both national and international levels to combat illicit drug trafficking;

2. Commends the cooperation of those Governments which shared their experiences with the World Customs Organization, and thereby demonstrated the wide support of the programme of memoranda of understanding;

3. Invites those Governments to further promote the effectiveness of the programme of memoranda of understanding, notably as reflected in the practical benefits of enhanced cooperation and understanding, and actively to support the efforts of the World Customs Organization by sharing their experiences with other Governments;

4. Invites more countries and trade organizations to take part in the programme of memoranda of understanding;

5. Urges all States that have not already done so to implement fully article 15 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, by taking appropriate measures to prevent the use of commercial means of transport for the trafficking of illicit drugs;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Illicit trafficking

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 1995 considered various aspects of illicit drug trafficking. It examined one report⁽²⁰⁾ concerning recent developments in the field of international illicit drug trafficking with details of production patterns, volumes of trafficking and seizures of drugs, and another⁽²¹⁾ which provided a synopsis of recent trends in illicit drug trafficking in the regions of Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and Latin America and the Caribbean, the latter region including Canada and the United States.

Underlining that the 1988 Convention⁽¹⁸⁾ required each party to make money laundering a criminal offence, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in March, urged States to encourage the reporting of suspicious or unusual transactions involving large currency volumes, in order to identify possible money laundering operations, including those by drug-trafficking organizations.⁽²²⁾

By another resolution,⁽²³⁾ the Commission requested the Executive Director to consider what expertise and resources were needed to improve and strengthen scientific and technological capabilities for combating illicit drug trafficking and abuse. It urged him to consult with relevant international organizations and national authorities with regard to strengthening measures in law enforcement and demand reduction.

Maritime cooperation

In March 1995, the Commission welcomed and endorsed⁽²⁴⁾ the report of meetings of the Working Group on Maritime Cooperation (Vienna, 19-23 September 1994 and 20-24 February 1995),⁽²⁵⁾ which included the Group's recommendations. The Group had met in response to a 1994 request of the Commission, with the mandate to develop a comprehensive set of principles and specific recommendations to enhance, on a global basis, the implementation of article 17 of the 1988 Convention on Illicit Trafficking.⁽¹⁸⁾ The Commission recommended, pursuant to a Group recommendation, that Governments encourage commercial carriers and professional groups active in maritime transport to become involved in the fight against illicit drug traffic, on the basis of voluntary cooperation and through memoranda of understanding. The Commission further requested UNDCP to convene a meeting of experts to develop training and technical assistance programmes in maritime drug law enforcement and encouraged Governments to inform UNDCP of their training and technical assistance requirements in the field of maritime drug law enforcement.

Chapter XV

Statistics

During 1995, the United Nations continued to broaden its work in the area of statistics, with special emphasis on strengthening international cooperation. At its February/March session, the Statistical Commission gave specific guidance on priorities for work to the inter-agency task forces it had established in 1993 in the following areas: national accounts, industrial and construction statistics, international trade statistics, finance statistics, price statistics, service statistics, environment statistics and the measurement of poverty. Other main issues considered in 1995 by the 24-member body, which normally meets biennially, included: demographic, social and migration statistics, including preparations for the World Population and Housing Census Programme for the year 2000; development of economic classifications; technical cooperation in statistics; and a new agenda item "Critical problems in economic statistics", which included matters related to production and dissemination of statistical information. The Commission also commemorated the fiftieth anniversary of international statistical work in the UN system.

On the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council urged Member States to carry out population and housing censuses between 1995 and 2004, having stressed that such censuses provided valuable statistics for assessing the situation of various special population groups.

Work of UN Statistical Commission

The Statistical Commission held its twenty-eighth session in New York from 27 February to 3 March.⁽¹⁾ Among other action, the Commission agreed that the UN Statistical Division (UNSTAT) should focus its work on implementation of the System of National Accounts (SNA); social statistics; and environment statistics.

It endorsed the work on the United Nations Economic and Social Information System (UNESIS), developed by UNSTAT, and stressed the importance of its completion. In particular, the Commission encouraged the development of UNESIS which would permit access to UNSTAT by the regional commissions as well as by countries.

By decision 1995/239 of 19 July, the Economic and Social Council noted the 1995 Commission report⁽¹⁾ and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its twenty-ninth session, to be convened in 1997.

Economic statistics

Critical problems in economic statistics

The Statistical Commission considered a new agenda item on critical problems in the production and dissemination of timely, relevant and accurate economic indicators, their interpretation and use, and the public perception of their adequacy. These included conceptual problems, operational difficulties in responding to changes in the economy and problems in dealing with the media and governmental officials. The Commission agreed that relevant reports should be prepared for its next session and requested that UNSTAT work with representatives from the United States, the Czech Republic, Australia, India and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to systematize the various elements of the discussion, to decide what reports needed to be produced and to commission those reports. It also requested UNSTAT to report on progress to the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination at its next session.

After written exchanges of views among Working Group members, UNSTAT convened the Expert Group on Critical Problems in Economic Statistics (New York, 24-25 October). The Expert Group identified three problems—absence of statistics, distrust of statistics by users, and mismatch between statistics and user demand—that affected the confidence of users in official economic statistics. It also identified 13 issues with regard to user confidence and proposed activities and mechanisms to address them. The Expert Group recommended the mediation of informal ad hoc groups along the lines of the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics (see below) in a number of cases, but noted that it would ultimately depend on the countries concerned as to whether they would be interested in participating and to what extent. In June, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities (see below) noted that the work being done was particularly timely and was of concern to both developed and developing countries.⁽²⁾

National accounts

A report⁽³⁾ of the Task Force on National Accounts, reviewing implementation of the 1993 SNA

and the role of the Inter-Secretariat Working Group on National Accounts (ISWGNA), was considered by the Statistical Commission in 1995. The Task Force stated that the scope and pace of the implementation of the 1993 SNA must be decided by each country according to its needs, resources, availability of staff and the current state of basic data. ISWGNA could be characterized as a support system for helping national administrations to develop and execute their own nationally determined implementation strategies.

The Task Force provided a summary of SNA-related activities by each ISWGNA member organization, both at the international level and at the level of the regional commissions, and proposed to monitor implementation of the 1993 SNA with assistance from the Statistical Office of the European Communities (Eurostat), the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development and the regional commissions. It identified the four elements of the support system to be provided by ISWGNA: manuals, handbooks, compilation manuals and software in support of national accounts compilation; meetings, training seminars, workshops, ad hoc and programmed courses in national accounts and related subjects and training materials for use in those courses; research activities designed to solve conceptual and practical problems in implementing the new system; and technical cooperation projects in individual countries. ISWGNA would also monitor the activities of its member organizations and review their activities to identify gaps, avoid duplication and develop common standards and recommendations. The Task Force also reported that the development of a revised international SNA questionnaire was almost complete.

The Statistical Commission confirmed that implementation of the 1993 SNA was essentially the responsibility of individual countries and would need to proceed in accordance with their own priorities; however, the regional commissions had a key role to play in promoting and monitoring implementation.⁽¹⁾ In 1994, it had asked ISWGNA for a set of strategy papers⁽⁴⁾ on implementation of the 1993 SNA, defining criteria against which progress could be judged. It also reiterated the urgent need to make the 1993 SNA available in all official UN languages and to complete the programme of handbooks as quickly as possible.

The Commission emphasized that implementation of the 1993 SNA required close attention to the development of basic economic statistics in a systematic manner, and endorsed the programme of further conceptual and practical research recommended by ISWGNA, asking that special attention be given to the needs of the developing countries, including an account of the informal sector.

The strengthening of the capabilities of the regional commissions was recommended; the need for mobilization of bilateral and multilateral resources, at both global and regional levels, was noted. Regional commissions were asked to produce a consolidated, country-by-country report on needs for assistance and financing. In that context, the Commission reiterated the need for training and for an expanded technical resource base for SNA implementation.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee welcomed⁽²⁾ the steps taken by ISWGNA and its member organizations to address the implementation of the 1993 SNA; emphasized the urgency of completing the language editions of the 1993 SNA and of the handbooks and manuals; and agreed with the ISWGNA proposal to prepare a paper outlining the strategy for SNA implementation in countries, including benchmarks that would aid in measuring progress. The Subcommittee also supported broader dissemination and accessibility of the SNA Newsletter.

Industrial and construction statistics

The Statistical Commission reviewed a report⁽⁵⁾ of the Task Force on Industrial and Construction Statistics, which it had requested in 1994.⁽⁶⁾ The Task Force reported on a 1994 survey on country practices and intentions with respect to the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities, Revision 3 (ISIC, Rev. 3).

Task Force findings confirmed that, so far, the institution of ISIC, Rev. 3, by Member States had resulted in polarization rather than harmonization with respect to industrial statistics worldwide. For many developing countries, the introduction of ISIC, Rev. 3, was contingent on taking an economic census or carrying out a large-scale survey of economic activity, for which they possessed neither the resources nor the expertise. While some developing countries planned to introduce ISIC, Rev. 3, in conjunction with a forthcoming economic census, they had not been given any guidance on ways to ensure international comparability.

The Task Force found that because the introduction of ISIC, Rev. 3, was a drawn-out process, during the transition period reporting of industry statistics to international organizations would be far less consistent than it had been. Countries had no clear-cut policy on measures to protect the continuity of their time-series during the transition, in particular no guidance on how to maintain the continuity of their short-term indicators of change in industrial activity. In the end, there would be less comparability between the developed and the developing world than there had been prior to the introduction of ISIC, Rev. 3. To promote greater harmony in the adoption and use of economic classifications, the Task Force wanted countries to be provided with assistance for surveys and censuses, experts and a data bank of common problems and solutions, and a hot line based in UNSTAT to reply to queries.

The Statistical Commission requested⁽¹⁾ UNSTAT, with the help of volunteer countries, to draft operational guidelines to link the time-series expressed in ISIC, Rev. 2, with the new short-term series expressed in ISIC, Rev. 3. It also requested UNSTAT to distribute to all countries concerned manuals, correspondence tables and other technical materials, and to proceed with training experts at the regional commissions and in UNSTAT to promote common approaches for the conversion from national and other classifications to ISIC, Rev. 3. In June, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities noted⁽²⁾ the work done by the Task Force and the call for an Expert Group on Construction Statistics.

That Expert Group subsequently met (New York, 11-13 September) to discuss a revision of the 1968 International Recommendations for Construction Statistics.⁽⁷⁾ Several new items of construction data were considered, such as own-account construction by household and indirect tax.

International trade statistics

In 1995, the Commission considered the 1994 report of the Task Force on International Trade Statistics⁽⁶⁾ and an addendum⁽⁸⁾ relevant to the proposed revision of the Standard International Trade Classification, Revision 3 (SITC, Rev. 3). The Commission also had before it information on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System (HS) and an analysis of national reporting practices in international merchandise trade statistics, the results of which were to be published early in 1996.

The addendum set out existing basic headings to be deleted from SITC, Rev. 3, new basic headings, and basic headings of SITC, Rev. 3, that would have a changed coverage due to changes in HS—which would come into force on 1 January 1996—but would retain the same codes in a revision of SITC, Rev. 3.

The Commission agreed with the conclusions of the Task Force that it should stop working on adjustments of national data to improve international comparability, but asked the Task Force to continue efforts to study free on board/cost, insurance, freight ratios and the impact on the direction of trade statistics of the general and the special system of trade. The Task Force was also asked to provide nations with information on country practices and to have countries assess the impact of all those cases where country practice differed from concepts and definitions and the reason for deviation. The Task Force was also requested to provide standardized trade data. Technical information on construction of index numbers of international trade should be provided to countries. The Commission agreed with the Task Force's conclusion that SITC, Rev. 3, should either not be revised or, if revised, only minimally.

The Commission endorsed the plan of action and outline for the revision of the UN International Trade Statistics: Concepts and Definitions,⁽⁹⁾ on which the Task Force had agreed in 1994; however, it considered that the planned time-frame might be too ambitious. It recommended extensive involvement of countries, including in the production of a first draft. Also considered were issues such as harmonization and the need for continuity of a long-term time-series of international trade. A compiler's manual for international trade statistics should be prepared in tandem with the technical guide on concepts and definitions, the Commission stated.

The Commission requested that UNSTAT assess the needs of users of the Commodity Trade Database (Comtrade) before rationalizing its contents. UNSTAT, the World Customs Organization and the World Trade Organization (WTO) were asked jointly to ensure concordance with UN conventions and recommendations, and to eliminate inconsistencies, impracticalities and ambiguities. The Commission noted that issues relating to HS, its updating and revision, as well as correlations between successive versions of HS, were the responsibility of the World Customs Organization.

At its 1995 meeting (Rome, Italy, 8-10 May), the Task Force reviewed Commission action in the area of international trade statistics and followed up on recommendations to the Task Force. In June, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities noted⁽²⁾ the actions taken by the Task Force in May and strongly supported efforts to increase the exchange of data among organizations. It stressed that user needs were a primary concern in any data-exchange arrangement.

Finance statistics

In March, the Statistical Commission considered the 1994 report of the Task Force on Financial Statistics.⁽¹⁰⁾ The Commission requested the preparation of a list of items identifying differences between the 1993 SNA and the specialized statistical systems on balance-of-payments, monetary and financial statistics and government finance statistics, including a description of the nature of the differences as a means of harmonizing the links between the systems. The Task Force was to consider how and under what modalities further work should be conducted and report thereon to the Commission in 1997.

Price statistics

The Statistical Commission reviewed a 1994 report⁽⁴⁾ on the progress of the Task Force on Price Statistics, including the International Comparison Programme (ICP), noting that the Task Force was in the stage of conducting initial studies and stressing that it should focus on activities determined in its terms of reference relating to the harmonization of consumer price indices (CPI)-related work. It welcomed the initiative—by the World Bank, with the active cooperation of UNSTAT, the regional commissions, various international agencies and national statistical offices—to expand ICP coverage.

The Commission asked the Task Force to focus on those aspects of the CPI harmonization issue that were manageable within the given time-frame and resources. It encouraged the improvement of alternative communication techniques and the involvement of the regional commissions in Task Force activities, and agreed that the expert evaluation called for in a 1994 Task Force report⁽¹¹⁾ was no longer needed. The Task Force was to submit a progress report to the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination in 1996.

After consultation with interested organizations and countries, the Convener of the Task Force, Eurostat, had proposed that the Task Force be discontinued and its work pursued in other forums, as it had completed its fact-finding and in view of limited resources.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee, noting that the Task Force had largely concluded its initial task, agreed that, while the field remained an important one, many of its concerns might be taken up by the Expert Group on Critical Problems in Economic Statistics. It therefore agreed that the Task Force should be discontinued.⁽²⁾

Service statistics

At its second meeting (Geneva, 19-20 January 1995), the Task Force on Service Statistics, after adopting its terms of reference, decided to draft a framework for the statistical requirements of the WTO General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS). A preliminary assessment was made of the establishment of a worldwide trade-in-services yearbook; a decision was taken to consider launching a trade-in-services manual.

The Statistical Commission, at its twenty-eighth session, endorsed plans for a workshop on the domestic (within country) service sector in developing countries,⁽¹²⁾ based on an UNSTAT proposal. Its purpose was to assist African countries to define components of the service sector, including collection, processing and dissemination of data related to the service sector, and to identify problems associated with those activities. Participants would evaluate issues associated with data collection and dissemination, outline a consensus strategy to solve the problems identified, and provide recommendations for continued work in this field.

Reviewing the work of the Task Force, the Commission affirmed the importance of trade in services as an emerging policy concern and of the need to establish a framework for statistics in this area. It also noted that the Task Force had conducted a training course on trade-in-services statistics in Beijing, China, in October 1994. The Commission endorsed a Task Force plan to obtain an inventory of available data on trade in services; sought clarification on the scope and content of a proposed manual on trade in services; and requested the Task Force to reconsider the need for publishing a yearbook on trade in services. The Task Force was to report back to the Commission in 1997.

At its third meeting (Paris, 30-31 May 1995), the Task Force reviewed a draft of its inventory of activities and requirements, and discussed ways to establish a framework on statistical requirements by GATS, as well as trade in services in the globalization context. It was premature, it concluded, to decide on creating an international trade-in-services yearbook; the issue should be taken up at the Task Force's next meeting.

The Commission also had before it a report⁽¹³⁾ of the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics, a cooperative effort by volunteer statistical agencies to address problems associated with data gaps and conceptual issues. The Group recommended changes to the services part of the provisional Central Product Classification (CPC), approved by the Commission in 1989. The changes concerned the structure of CPC, CPC explanatory notes and outstanding and unresolved issues.

The Commission agreed that revisions should be made to the latest CPC, to be labelled version 1.0, and that mechanisms similar to those used by the World Customs Organization for maintaining HS should be set up for CPC. Since work on HS and CPC for services was overseen by different bodies, the Commission recommended coordination of efforts in revisions. The structure of CPC should adequately reflect new technologies and there should be "upward compatibility" of future revisions, the Commission stated.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee noted the work being carried out by UNSTAT on the statistics of the domestic (within country) service sector in developing countries, noted the May report of the Task Force and endorsed its work programme for the coming year.⁽²⁾

Environment statistics

The Statistical Commission reviewed a report of the Task Force on Environment Statistics,⁽¹⁴⁾

in accordance with a 1994 Working Group request.⁽⁶⁾ Current and future work of the Task Force fell into three categories: basic environmental statistics (statistical variables collected through monitoring or primary statistical surveys); environmental indicators (typically targeted on key environmental concerns or policy objectives); and environmental and natural resource accounting (including environmental data in a statistical accounting system facilitating aggregation and cross-sectoral comparison). The Task Force noted a need for capacity-building and training in all fields of environmental statistics, through seminars, workshops and country projects, and for coordination and harmonization of concepts and methods in environmental statistics.

The Commission noted that the report of the Task Force did not provide strategic guidance on how to improve coordination and to develop targets and priorities in an integrated work programme. It recommended that the Task Force try to develop a framework for various activities, indicating relative priority and links to policy agendas of national and international environmental agencies and providing benchmarks against which progress could be measured. The Task Force was to report to the Working Group and to the Commission at forthcoming sessions.

The Commission recommended that national statistical offices and international organizations make every effort to influence the decisions of ministries and governing bodies to achieve greater compatibility on international strategies and programmes. It welcomed collaboration between UNSTAT and the UN Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development on indicators for sustainable development (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

The Commission also considered the report⁽¹⁵⁾ of the fourth meeting of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Advancement of Environment Statistics (Stockholm, Sweden, 6-10 February 1995). That Working Group proposed that UNSTAT compile a list of international environmental indicators, agreeing on an initial list. In March, the Commission approved that proposal and requested UNSTAT to allocate the necessary resources. It also welcomed the offer of the Government of Colombia to host the Group's fifth meeting.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee recognized the growing importance of environment statistics to all sectors of society and the resulting problems of coordination.⁽²⁾ The Task Force was asked to focus on the basic tasks of increasing the transparency of the objectives of organizations active in the field and reducing duplication. It was to report to the Working Group on improving coordination and developing targets and priorities.

International economic classifications

The Commission, after reviewing a 1994 report of the Expert Group on International Classifications,⁽¹¹⁾ endorsed its work programme, urging it to utilize existing groups such as the Voorburg Group in elaborating technical details of various classifications. The Expert Group's work should be expanded to include social classifications, it was agreed.

Social and demographic statistics

Demographic, social and migration statistics

The activities of the UN Secretariat on the demographic and social statistics programme during 1993-1994⁽¹⁰⁾ were considered by the Commission at its twenty-eighth session. The Commission endorsed the continued implementation of the International Programme for Accelerating the Improvement of Vital Statistics and Civil Registration Systems, particularly training workshops and efforts for economies in transition. It encouraged the further development of demographic, social and human settlement statistics databases and their speedier availability on the Internet and on CD-ROM. The Commission supported the work done by UNSTAT in 1994 on the revision of the 1979 UN Recommendations on Statistics of International Migration.⁽¹⁶⁾ It endorsed the joint work of UNSTAT and the UN Centre for Human Settlements leading to the publication of the Compendium of Human Settlement Statistics, to be presented at the Second (1996) United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.

In the area of gender statistics, the Commission welcomed the work of UNSTAT, including progress made in preparing The World's Women 1995: Trends and Statistics⁽¹⁷⁾ for the Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). It also encouraged the use of the approach found in The World's Women in other social fields. It requested that UNSTAT prepare a draft classification of time-use activities as a basis for further research and studies of time-use statistics. The Commission also supported the proposal for a list of gender-related topics of broad national and international interest that might be covered in national publications on a rotating annual basis.

The recommendations of the 1994 UN Expert Group Meeting on the Development of Impairment, Disability and Handicap (IDH) Statistics were also reviewed.⁽¹⁸⁾ The Commission requested UNSTAT to prepare a minimum set of IDH tabulation items and core tables, asking that the concept of functional limitations be further elaborated upon in the development of IDH statistics. It noted, however, that those projects were contingent upon continued availability of resources.

At the Expert Group Meeting on International Migration Statistics (New York, 10-14 July 1995),⁽¹⁹⁾ sponsored by UNSTAT and Eurostat, two proposals for a draft revision of recommendations on international migration statistics were discussed—one based on residence, the other on citizenship. The Group agreed on the definition of a migrant and an international migrant, but recognized that such definitions must be adaptable because internal migration one day might be international migration the next, and vice versa. It also considered draft recommendations for compilation of separate asylum and refugee statistics, outside the direct scope of international migration statistics. A draft set of recommendations was to be finalized for submission to the Commission in 1997.

Population and housing censuses

In 1995, the Commission had before it a report⁽²⁰⁾ of the Secretary-General setting out an overview of the 1990 and 2000 World Population and Housing Census Programmes. The 1990 Programme had been implemented by 202 countries or areas during 1985-1994. The Secretary-General proposed an expert group meeting to review and update existing principles and recommendations concerning housing censuses, household and family classifications and databases and tabulations. The Commission endorsed preparations for the 2000 Programme, approved preparation of handbooks on census methods and training materials, and endorsed the convening of an expert group.

The ACC Subcommittee in June welcomed⁽²⁾ the intentions of the International Labour Organization (ILO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization to contribute to the expert group on the subject.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/7.

2000 World Population and Housing Census Programme

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1985/8 of 28 May 1985, in which it requested the Secretary-General to proceed with the development of a 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme and recommended that States Members of the United Nations should undertake to carry out population and housing censuses during the period 1985-1994, as well as its earlier resolutions endorsing previous decennial programmes,

Noting with satisfaction the great efforts made by countries to carry out population and housing censuses as part of the 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme and also the activities of the United Nations and funding agencies in support of national efforts in that regard,

Recognizing the increasing importance of the 2000 round of population and housing censuses for meeting data needs for the follow-up activities to the International Conference on Population and Development, held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994, the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, the Fourth World Conference on Women, to be held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held at Istanbul from 3 to 14 June 1996, and to other regional and national meetings,

Stressing that periodic population and housing censuses for a country as a whole and for each administrative area therein are one of the primary sources of data needed for effective development planning and the monitoring of population issues and socio-economic and environmental trends, policies and programmes aimed at the improvement of living standards,

Stressing also that population and housing censuses provide valuable statistics and indicators for assessing the situation of various special population groups, such as those affected by gender issues, children, youth, the elderly, persons with an impairment/disability/handicap and the homeless and migrant population, and changes therein,

1. Urges Member States to carry out population and housing censuses during the period 1995-2004, taking into account international and regional recommendations relating to population and housing censuses and giving particular attention to advance planning and timely dissemination of census results to all users;

2. Calls upon Member States to continue to provide census results to the United Nations and other appropriate intergovernmental organizations to assist in studies on population, environment and socio-economic development issues and programmes;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to proceed with the development of the 2000 World Population and Housing Census Programme and to make the necessary preparations with a view to assisting countries in the successful implementation of the Programme.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/7

19 July 1995 Meeting 44 Adopted without vote

Draft by Statistical Commission (E/1995/28); agenda item 6 (o).
Meeting numbers. ESC 42-44.

Poverty measurement

In January, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²¹⁾ to the Statistical Commission on the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) on the profile of poverty in Latin America and the Caribbean. ECLAC and other international bodies, he said, had promoted studies which contributed to providing conceptual, methodological and empirical support for the analysis of poverty topics, concentrating on undertaking cooperative action to design policies in that area.

Studies of poverty in Latin American countries generally used two distinct approaches—the income method and the elaboration of maps of basic needs—whose common characteristic was the evaluation of each household's capacity to satisfy its basic needs and its effective access to specific sources of satisfaction. Principal information sources for the measurement and analysis of poverty were population and housing censuses and household surveys. Estimates of household income and expenditures contained in SNA, in particular, were used to compare and evaluate biases in the measurements generated in the censuses and surveys. The status of poverty indicators also revealed substantial progress in the availability and accessibility of information.

About 75 per cent of Latin American countries regularly produced information that could serve as a basis for the accurate measurement of poverty, it was reported. In addition, the geographic coverage of the data had expanded to the point that in many of those countries national coverage had been achieved, while most of them had reduced the lag between the production and dissemination of data to about two years, some to even less than a year.

In 1995, the Statistical Commission heard an oral report by the Task Force on the Measurement of Poverty on its 1995 meeting (Washington, D.C., 26-27 January). On the basis of questionnaires sent to all member agencies of the ACC Subcommittee, the Task Force concluded that it had largely fulfilled its task of reviewing current practices with regard to the measurement of poverty and had identified international agencies engaged in work on poverty. It decided that it was not equipped to take on the job of planning or establishing poverty measurement standards. Improved coordination in the areas of compilation parties, analytical methodologies and dissemination of data among international agencies could best be handled under the auspices of ACC. In the absence of a broader mandate, the Task Force requested the Commission to disband it.

The Commission decided that the Task Force report should be considered by the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination at its upcoming session, which would then recommend to the Commission in 1997 what further work, if any, should be undertaken. The Working Group was to take account of the regional experience and results of poverty measurement developed by ECLAC, reflecting a wide diversity of national and regional experiences and circumstances. In many instances, regional and/or geographical content was to be considered when measuring and comparing economic and social development, the Commission stressed.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee concluded⁽²⁾ that the measurement of poverty was a problem of continuing concern and that developments in the field should be monitored. An Expert Group on the Measurement of Poverty should be created as a suitable mechanism for follow-up to the Task Force. The Group should identify existing problems and potential solutions in individual countries.

World Summit statistics

In February,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission the report of the Central Statistical Office of the United Kingdom on the implications for statistics of the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). The report suggested areas for development and action and proposed the establishment of expert groups, commissioning of methodological research, introduction of new publications, and inclusion of some topics in UNSTAT work programmes to advance such actions.

The Commission subsequently established an Expert Group to draw up a work programme reflecting major action areas identified by the Summit, indicating where the international statistical work in the social field should be concentrated. That Group was to propose specific statistical activities for the period 1996-1998 and assign priorities.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee noted⁽²⁾ the initiatives taken by the Government of Denmark to promote the follow-up to the World Summit, including its statistical aspects. It also noted the establishment of the Expert Group.

The Expert Group on the Statistical Implications of Recent Major United Nations Conferences held two meetings in 1995 (Oslo, Norway, 10 June; Geneva, 13 June). It identified a number of indicators in five categories: population and development; eradicating poverty; expansion of productive employment and reduction of unemployment; social integration; and status of women and men. These indicators could be used to monitor or assess development and discuss potential sources of data. The Expert Group also suggested a timetable by which it would identify desirable action, coordinate assessment exercises, begin national capacity-building and prepare an international report. It estimated that a draft international report would be available for consideration by the Commission by 1999.

Technical cooperation

The Statistical Commission considered a report of the Secretary-General on technical cooperation in statistics during the period 1991-1994,⁽²³⁾ a Secretariat note⁽²⁴⁾ on the state of funding for technical cooperation activities in statistics, and a report of Statistics Canada on its management training development.⁽²⁵⁾ UNSTAT reported orally on the state of funding for technical cooperation activities.

The Commission expressed serious concern over the diminished resources available to the United Nations for technical support in statistics and informatics. It noted the primacy of national needs in determining the allocation and use of technical assistance resources and requested UNSTAT to expand on its oral report and submit an analytical written report to the Working Group. The Commission also noted the importance of bilateral technical cooperation and asked for improved coordination of multilateral and bilateral cooperation.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee noted⁽³⁾ the range of difficulties implicit in any approach to measuring the flows of technical cooperation from bilateral donors. It welcomed the experimental approach that UNSTAT was developing to try to obtain information from recipient and donor countries, welcomed the offers of supplementary information that had been made by the UN Population Fund, IMF, Eurostat and other bodies, and noted that UNSTAT would report to the Working Group on the results of its efforts.

Programme questions

The Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General containing an overall review of the statistical work of international organizations in statistics⁽²⁶⁾ and on plans of international organizations in statistics,⁽²⁷⁾ and a report⁽²⁸⁾ by the ACC Subcommittee on plans for methodological development of the inter-agency task forces and of the Intersecretariat Working Group on National Accounts. The Commission also had before it the proposed programme of work of UNSTAT for 1996-1997. The Secretariat proposed to give priority to the documentation of the 1993 SNA in all countries, in close collaboration with the regional commissions and other members of the Intersecretariat Working Group. It would also give attention to statistical requirements arising from the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development,⁽²⁹⁾ the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX) and the Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). The Commission welcomed the reports and endorsed the proposed programme of work.

Other statistical activities

Inter-agency coordination

The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, held its twenty-ninth session in Geneva on 15, 16 and 19 June.⁽¹⁾ It brought six matters to the attention of the ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ), including coordination of system-wide efforts to provide statistical data for monitoring follow-up to international conferences; the chairmanship of the Subcommittee and membership of the Bureau (UNSTAT, WTO, IMF, ILO, ECLAC); its agreement that the Inter-State Statistical Committee of the Commonwealth of Independent States should be invited to participate in future sessions as an observer; and the date, venue and provisional agenda of the Subcommittee's thirtieth (1996) session. In September, CCPOQ noted the report of the Subcommittee and endorsed the nomination of the Chairman as well as the dates, venue and provisional agenda of the Subcommittee's 1996 session.⁽²⁾

The Subcommittee discussed the work of the inter-agency task forces, improvement of coordination tools, the need for statistical data from international organizations, bilateral technical cooperation, coordination of statistical programmes, holding a World Statistics Day, the free exchange of statistics and related materials among international organizations, and the report of the ACC Subcommittee on Demographic Estimates and Projections. During debate, it was generally recognized that the work of some task forces might be discontinued or handled more appropriately by expert groups that included representatives of countries and organizations.

The Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, which did not meet in 1995 as scheduled, was to hold its eighteenth session in April 1996.

Coordination of statistical data collection

In January, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽³⁾ to the Commission on ongoing work on improved coordination of statistical data collection from countries, in accordance with a 1994 Commission request⁽⁴⁾ to prepare an updated version of the Inventory of Statistical Data-Collection Activities. The Inventory would be designed as a set of cross-referenced databases, comprising a master inventory, several sub-inventories and reference files. It would contain a substantial amount of cross-referenced information on various aspects of the data-collection activities carried out by international organizations and agencies and could be useful for tracing developments in statistical data-collection activities of international bodies. In March, the Commission requested UNSTAT to submit the updated version of the Inventory to the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, after review by the ACC Subcommittee.

In June, the Subcommittee welcomed⁽¹⁾ the completion of work on updating the Inventory, the list of classifications used in statistics (see above, under "International trade statistics") and the inventory of computerized statistical databases. The Subcommittee requested UNSTAT to re-examine the content and methods of updating its outputs, particularly with a view to maintaining them on an ongoing basis, and to develop the necessary arrangements with organizations to supply inputs on that basis; consider the modalities needed to consolidate the many tools into a unified presentation; consider the circulation of the outputs so that the full range of potential users might have access to them; and review the media used for the outputs with a view to making them easily accessible. UNSTAT was asked to consult with the Information Systems Coordinating Committee on relevant aspects of the distribution of outputs and to report on these matters to the Bureau of the Subcommittee at its next meeting.

PART FIVE

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 1995, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) delivered two Judgments and nine Orders. It had pending before it 12 contentious cases and one request for an examination of the situation in accordance with the Court's Judgment of 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v. France) case. During the year, two requests for an advisory opinion were referred to the Court and one case was removed from its list.

The General Assembly and the Security Council elected three new judges to the Court to fill vacancies resulting from two deaths and a resignation. A vacancy resulting from a third death was to be filled in 1996.

The President of the Court on 12 October told the General Assembly⁽¹⁾ that never before had ICJ been so much in demand, never before had it been so active. The States parties to the 10 contentious cases currently before the Court, he said, were located on every continent. The Court's jurisdiction was steadily expanding, both in terms of the number of declarations made and in terms of the compromissory clauses included in treaties, as well as in terms of the withdrawal of reservations to such clauses.

He said the Court's new vitality had been attributed, with a greater or lesser degree of relevance, to decisions reached by the Court in certain cases, to the end of communism, the greater trust placed in the Court by third world countries, and a more widespread psychological rallying to the applicable international law.

Fully aware of its responsibilities as an integral part of the system of peaceful settlement of international disputes established under the Charter, the Court had displayed judicial realism and had considered itself obligated to assist in bringing parties closer together, while not at any time departing from its primary task of applying the law. That in no way meant that the Court was handing down "judgements of Solomon", he added.

The success of the Court might well be due precisely to the fact that its role seemed ultimately to be fairly well adapted to the concerns and the system of values predominating in the States to which it was open.

As for the future of the Court, its President said that depended on many factors which to a large extent eluded the control of the Court itself. These included the emergence of certain categories of conflicts which were called internal but which had clear international repercussions; internal and external changes in States which affected their traditional role as key players in international relations; the emergence of international intergovernmental organizations on the world stage; the growing place of non-governmental organizations; and recognition of the essential role the Court must play in sanctioning a form of international law governing a world and a society of law.

Judicial work of the Court

During 1995, the Court delivered Judgments in the cases concerning Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain) and East Timor (Portugal v. Australia).

It made an Order in the case concerning Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v. France) (see above). It further made an Order recording the discontinuance of the proceedings and directing the removal from the Court's list in the case concerning Maritime Delimitation between Guinea-Bissau and Senegal (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal). The Court or its President also made several Orders on the conduct of the proceedings in the cases concerning Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain), Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) and (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States of America), Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)), Fisheries Jurisdiction (Spain v. Canada) and Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons.

The 1995 activities of ICJ were covered in two reports to the General Assembly, for the periods 1 August 1994 to 31 July 1995⁽²⁾ and 1 August 1995 to 31 July 1996.⁽³⁾ By decision 50/404 of 12 October 1995, the Assembly took note of the 1994/95 report.

Aerial incident of 3 July 1988 (Iran v. United States)

Iran in 1989 instituted proceedings against the United States, referring to the destruction of an Iranian aircraft on 3 July 1988 and the killing of its 290 passengers and crew by missiles launched in Iranian airspace from the United States guided-missile cruiser USS Vincennes. The time-limits for written proceedings, fixed in a December 1989 Court Order, were extended by an Order in June 1990. The Memorial of Iran was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

In March 1991, within the time-limit fixed for its Counter-Memorial, the United States filed certain preliminary objections to the Court's jurisdiction. By an April 1991 Order,⁽⁴⁾ the Court fixed 9 December of that year as the time-limit within which Iran might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on those objections. As requested by Iran, and after the views of the United States had been ascertained, the President of the Court, by Orders of 18 December 1991⁽⁴⁾ and 5 June 1992,⁽⁵⁾ extended that time-limit to 9 June and 9 September 1992, respectively. Iran's written statement was filed within the prescribed time-limit and was communicated to the Secretary-General of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), together with the written pleadings previously filed. Following the submission of written observations by the ICAO Council within the time-limit of 9 December 1992, fixed by the President of the Court, the Court announced that hearings in the case would open on 12 September 1994. At the joint request of the Parties, made in 1994, those hearings were postponed indefinitely.

East Timor (Portugal v. Australia)

In 1991,⁽⁶⁾ Portugal instituted proceedings against Australia in a dispute concerning certain activities of Australia with respect to East Timor. Portugal claimed that Australia, by negotiating with Indonesia an agreement, signed on 11 December 1989, relating to the exploration and exploitation of the continental shelf in the area of the Timor Gap, had caused legal and moral damage to the people of East Timor and Portugal, which would become material if the exploitation of hydrocarbon resources began there.

Within the time-limits fixed by a May 1991 Order,⁽⁶⁾ the Portuguese Memorial and the Australian Counter-Memorial were filed in 1991 and 1992, respectively. By an Order of 19 June 1992,⁽⁷⁾ the Court fixed 1 December 1992 and 1 June 1993 as the time-limits for the filing of a Reply by Portugal and a Rejoinder by Australia, respectively. The Reply of Portugal was filed within the prescribed time-limit. However, an Order of 19 May 1993⁽⁸⁾ extended to 1 July 1993 the time-limit for the Australian Rejoinder, which was filed accordingly. Portugal chose Antonio de Arruda Ferrer-Correia, and Australia chose Sir Ninian Stephen, to sit as Judges ad hoc in the case. After the resignation on 14 July 1994 of Mr. Ferrer-Correia, Portugal chose Krzysztof J. Skubiszewski to sit as Judge ad hoc.

Hearings having been held between 30 January and 16 February 1995, the Court, at a public sitting on 30 June, delivered its Judgment,⁽⁹⁾ the operative paragraph of which read as follows:

For these reasons,
The Court,
By 14 votes to 2,

Finds that it cannot in the present case exercise the jurisdiction conferred upon it by the declarations made by the Parties under Article 36, paragraph 2, of its Statute to adjudicate upon the dispute referred to it by the Application of the Portuguese Republic.

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Sir Robert Jennings, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Aguilar Mawdsley, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Koroma, Vereshchetin; Judge ad hoc Sir Ninian Stephen; Against: Judge Weeramantry; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski.

Judges Oda, Shahabuddeen, Ranjeva and Vereshchetin appended separate opinions to the Judgment; Judge Weeramantry and Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski appended dissenting opinions.

Maritime delimitation (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal)

In 1991, Guinea-Bissau instituted proceedings against Senegal in a dispute concerning the delimitation of all the maritime territories between them. At that time, previous proceedings instituted by Guinea-Bissau against Senegal in 1989 concerning the Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989 (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal)⁽⁴⁾ were still in progress.

Guinea-Bissau claimed that the result of that Arbitration did not make it possible to establish a definitive delimitation of all the maritime areas over which the Parties had rights, and asked the Court to adjudge and declare what should be the line delimiting all the maritime territories appertaining to Guinea-Bissau and Senegal.

Following the November 1991 Judgment⁽⁴⁾ in the case concerning the Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989, the President of the Court met with the two Parties in February and October 1992⁽⁷⁾ and agreed to their request that no time-limit be fixed for the initial pleadings of the case, pending the outcome of the continuing negotiations on the question of maritime delimitation.

After several exchanges of letters regarding extended time-limits, the President met with the Parties again on 10 March 1994, to receive the text of an Agreement between the two Governments, signed on 14 October 1993. The Agreement provided, inter alia, for the joint exploitation by the two Parties of a maritime zone situated between the 268° and 220° azimuths drawn from Cape Roxo as well as for the establishment of an international agency for the exploitation of the zone. It was to enter into force upon conclusion of the agreement on the establishment and functioning of the international agency and ratification of both agreements by both States.

In letters dated 16 March 1994, addressed to the Presidents of both States, the President of ICJ expressed his satisfaction and informed them that the case would be removed from the list, in accordance with the terms of the Rules of Court, as soon as the Parties had notified him of their decision to discontinue the proceedings.

At a meeting held by the President with the representatives of the Parties on 1 November 1995, the latter furnished him with an additional copy of the above-mentioned Agreement as well as the text of a "Protocol on the establishment and functioning of the Agency for Management and Cooperation between the Republic of Senegal and the Republic of Guinea-Bissau instituted by the agreement of 14 October 1993", signed in Bissau on 12 June 1995 by the two heads of State. The representatives at the same time notified him of the decisions of their Governments to discontinue the proceedings and the President asked them to confirm that decision in writing to the Court in whatever manner they deemed most appropriate.

By a letter of 2 November 1995, the Agent of Guinea-Bissau confirmed that his Government, by virtue of the Agreement reached by the two Parties on the disputed zone, had decided to discontinue the proceedings instituted by its Application dated 12 March 1991. After the Agent of Senegal, by a letter dated 6 November 1995, had confirmed that his Government "agreed to the discontinuance of proceedings", the Court, by an Order of 8 November 1995,⁽¹⁰⁾ placed on record the discontinuance and directed that the case be removed from the list.

Maritime delimitation and territorial questions (Qatar v. Bahrain)

Qatar instituted proceedings in 1991⁽¹¹⁾ against Bahrain in respect of disputes relating to sovereignty over the Hawar islands, sovereign rights over the shoals of Dibal and Qit'at Jaradah, and the delimitation of the maritime areas of the two States.

In August 1991, Bahrain contested the basis of jurisdiction invoked by Qatar. By an October 1991 Order,⁽¹¹⁾ the President of the Court decided that written proceedings should first be addressed to the questions of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute and of the admissibility of the Application, and fixed the time-limits for the filing of a Memorial by Qatar and a Counter-Memorial by Bahrain, which were filed accordingly in 1992. Also in 1992, Qatar and Bahrain filed their respective Reply and Rejoinder within the time-limits fixed by a June 1992 Order.⁽¹²⁾ Qatar chose Jose Maria Ruda and Bahrain chose Nicolas Valticos to sit as Judges ad hoc in the case.

Following hearings held in February/March 1994, the Court delivered on 1 July a Judgment,⁽¹³⁾ by which it found that the exchanges of letters between the King of Saudi Arabia and the Amir of Qatar, dated 19 and 21 December 1987, and between the King of Saudi Arabia and the Amir of Bahrain, dated 19 and 26 December 1987, and the document headed "Minutes", signed in Doha on 25 December 1990 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Bahrain, Qatar and Saudi Arabia, were international agreements creating rights and obligations for the Parties; and that, by the terms of those agreements, the Parties had undertaken to submit to the Court the whole of the dispute between them, as circumscribed by the Bahraini formula. Having noted that it had before it only an Application from Qatar setting out that State's specific claims in connection with that formula, the Court decided to afford the Parties the opportunity to submit to it the whole of the dispute. It fixed 30 November 1994 as the time-limit within which the Parties were jointly or separately to take action to that end and reserved any other matters for subsequent decision.

On 30 November 1994, the Court received a letter from Qatar transmitting an act to comply with the decisions to afford the Parties the opportunity to submit the whole dispute and to fix 30 November as the time-limit. On the same day, Bahrain communicated its report to the Court on the attempt by the Parties to implement the Court's Judgment.

In view of those communications, the Court resumed dealing with the case.

At a public sitting held on 15 February 1995, the Court delivered a Judgment on jurisdiction and admissibility,⁽¹⁴⁾ the operative paragraph of which read as follows:

For these reasons,
The Court,

(1) By 10 votes to 5,

Finds that it has jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute submitted to it between the State of Qatar and the State of Bahrain;

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Judges Sir Robert Jennings, Guillaume, Aguilar Mawdsley, Weeramantry, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer; Judge ad hoc Torres Bernárdez;

Against: Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Shahabuddeen, Koroma; Judge ad hoc Valticos.

(2) By 10 votes to 5,

Finds that the Application of the State of Qatar as formulated on 30 November 1994 is admissible.

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Judges Sir Robert Jennings, Guillaume, Aguilar Mawdsley, Weeramantry, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer; Judge ad hoc Torres Bernárdez;

Against: Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Shahabuddeen, Koroma; Judge ad hoc Valticos.

Vice-President Schwebel, Judges Oda, Shahabuddeen and Koroma, and Judge ad hoc Valticos appended dissenting opinions.

Judge ad hoc Valticos resigned as of the end of the jurisdiction and admissibility phase of the proceedings.

By an Order of 28 April 1995,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Court, having ascertained the views of Qatar and having given Bahrain an opportunity to state its views, fixed 29 February 1996 as the time-limit for the filing by each of the Parties of a Memorial on the merits of the case.

Questions of interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the aerial incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) and (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States)

In 1992,⁽¹²⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya instituted separate proceedings against the United Kingdom and the United States in respect of a dispute over the interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation,⁽¹⁶⁾ which arose from its alleged involvement in the crash of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, on 21 December 1988.

In the Applications, Libya referred to the charging and indictment of two of its nationals, by the Lord Advocate of Scotland and by a United States Grand Jury, with having caused a bomb to be placed aboard Pan Am flight 103. The bomb subsequently exploded, causing the aircraft to crash, killing all persons aboard. Libya requested the Court to adjudge and declare that it had complied fully with all of its obligations under the Montreal Convention, which it claimed to be the only appropriate Convention in force between the Parties, and which required it to establish its own jurisdiction over alleged offenders present in its territory, and submit the case to its authorities for prosecution, as there was no extradition treaty between it and the other Parties; that the United Kingdom and the United States were in breach of the Convention by rejecting Libya's efforts to resolve the matter within the framework of international law and placing pressure on it to surrender the two Libyan nationals for trial; and that the United Kingdom and the United States were under a legal obligation to cease and desist from such breaches and from the use of force or threats against Libya and from all violations of its sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence.

It also made two separate requests for an indication of provisional measures in each case. By two Orders of 14 April 1992,⁽¹²⁾ the Court found that the circumstances of the case were not such as to require the exercise of its power to indicate provisional measures. By Orders of 19 June 1992,⁽¹²⁾ the Court fixed 20 December 1993 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by Libya and 20 June 1995 for Counter-Memorials by the United Kingdom and the United States. The Memorial by Libya was filed within the prescribed time-limit and Libya chose Ahmed S. El-Koshery to sit as Judge ad hoc in the cases.

On 16 and on 20 June 1995, respectively, the United Kingdom and the United States filed preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the Applications of Libya. By virtue of article 79, paragraph 3, of the Rules of Court, the proceedings on the merits are suspended when preliminary objections are filed; proceedings have then to be organized for the consideration of those preliminary objections in accordance with the provision of that article.

After a meeting on 9 September 1995 between the President of the Court and the Agents of the Parties to ascertain the Parties' views, the Court, by Orders of 22 September 1995,⁽¹⁷⁾ fixed, in each case, 22 December 1995 as the time-limit within which Libya might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by the United Kingdom and the United States, respectively. Libya filed such statements within the prescribed time-limits.

Oil platforms (Iran v. United States)

Iran in 1992⁽¹⁸⁾ instituted proceedings against the United States regarding a dispute in which Iran alleged that the destruction by United States warships, on 19 October 1987 and 18 April 1988, of three offshore oil production complexes, owned and operated by the National Iranian Oil Company, constituted a breach of international law and the 1955 Iran/United States Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights. Iran requested the Court to rule on the matter.

By an Order of 4 December 1992,⁽¹⁸⁾ the time-limits were fixed at 31 May 1993 for the filing of a Memorial by Iran and 30 November 1993 for a Counter-Memorial by the United States. By an Order of 3 June 1993,⁽¹⁹⁾ those time-limits were extended to 8 June and 16 December 1993, respectively. Iran filed its Memorial within the prescribed time-limit, while the United States filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court. In accordance with the Rules of Court (see above, under section on Libya v. United Kingdom/United States), the proceedings on the merits were suspended. By an Order of 18 January 1994,⁽²⁰⁾ the Court fixed 1 July 1994 as the time-limit within which Iran could present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the United States objections. That written statement was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

The public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the Parties on the preliminary objections filed by the United States were to open on 16 September 1996.

Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia)

In 1993,⁽¹⁹⁾ Bosnia and Herzegovina instituted proceedings against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) for alleged violations of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.⁽²¹⁾

Bosnia and Herzegovina requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Yugoslavia had violated and was continuing to violate several provisions of the Genocide Convention as well as of the Charter of the United Nations, the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims and their 1977 Additional Protocol I,⁽²²⁾ the 1907 Hague Regulations on Land Warfare, and the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights;⁽²³⁾ that Yugoslavia was using force and the threat of force against Bosnia and Herzegovina, violating its sovereignty and intervening in its internal affairs, as well as encouraging and supporting military and paramilitary actions in and against Bosnia and Herzegovina; that Bosnia and Herzegovina had the sovereign right under the Charter and customary international law to defend itself and to request the assistance of any State in doing so, which was not to be impaired by Security Council resolution 713(1991)⁽²⁴⁾ and subsequent resolutions imposing and reaffirming an arms embargo on the former Yugoslavia; that those resolutions should not be construed as imposing an arms embargo on Bosnia and Herzegovina; that, pursuant to the right to collective self-defence, other States had the right to come to the immediate defence of Bosnia and Herzegovina at its request; that Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should cease and desist immediately from its breaches of the foregoing legal obligations; and that Yugoslavia should pay reparations for damages sustained by Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Bosnia and Herzegovina also requested the Court to indicate provisional measures to the effect that Yugoslavia should, inter alia, cease and desist immediately from all acts of genocide against the people and State of Bosnia and Herzegovina. By an Order of 8 April 1993,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Court indicated that Yugoslavia should immediately take all measures within its power to prevent commission of the crime of genocide; and should ensure in particular that any armed units under its control did not commit any acts of genocide or acts leading up to genocide. The Court also indicated that neither of the Parties should in any way aggravate or extend the dispute. The time-limits for the filing of the Memorial by Bosnia and Herzegovina and a Counter-Memorial by Yugoslavia were fixed at 15 October 1993 and 15 April 1994, respectively, by an Order of 16 April 1993,⁽¹⁹⁾ and were extended to 15 April 1994 and 15 April 1995, respectively, by an Order of 7 October 1993.⁽²⁵⁾

In July 1993, Bosnia and Herzegovina made a second request for indication of provisional measures, while Yugoslavia, in August, requested the Court to indicate provisional measures requiring Bosnia and Herzegovina to prevent acts of genocide against the Bosnian Serbs. Acting on those requests, the Court, by an Order of 13 September 1993,⁽²⁵⁾ held that the situation demanded the immediate implementation of provisional measures indicated in its April 1993 Order rather than an indication of additional measures. In declining Bosnia and Herzegovina's requests related to the partition and annexation of its territory and the means of preventing acts of genocide and partition, the Court pointed out that such claims were beyond the scope of its jurisdiction in that case, conferred on it by the Genocide Convention.

The Memorial of Bosnia and Herzegovina was filed within the prescribed time-limit. Bosnia and Herzegovina chose Elihu Lauterpacht and Yugoslavia chose Milenko Kreca to sit as Judges ad hoc in the case.

By an Order of 21 March 1995,⁽²⁶⁾ the President of the Court, upon a request of the Agent of Yugoslavia and after the views of Bosnia and Herzegovina had been ascertained, extended to 30 June 1995 the time-limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Yugoslavia. Within that extended time-limit Yugoslavia filed certain preliminary objections. The objections related, first, to the admissibility of the Application and, second, to the jurisdiction of the Court to deal with the case. By virtue of the Rules of Court (see above, under section on Libya v. United Kingdom/United States), the proceedings were suspended.

By an Order of 14 July 1995,⁽²⁷⁾ the President of the Court, taking into account the views expressed by the Parties, fixed 14 November 1995 as the time-limit within which Bosnia and Herzegovina might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Bosnia and Herzegovina filed such a statement within the prescribed time-limit.

The public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the Parties on the preliminary objections raised by Yugoslavia were to open on 29 April 1996.

Gabcíkovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia)

In 1992, Hungary applied to the Court in a dispute with the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic concerning the projected diversion of the Danube River, inviting the Republic to accept the Court's jurisdiction.

Following negotiations between Hungary and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic, which dissolved into two States on 1 January 1993, Hungary and Slovakia—the sole successor State of the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic with respect to the project dispute—on 2 July 1993.⁽²⁵⁾ requested the Court to decide whether Hungary had been entitled to suspend and subsequently abandon in 1989 work on the Nagymaros Project and on the part of the Gabčíkovo Project for which it was responsible under the 1977 Budapest Treaty on the Construction and Operation of the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Barrage System; and whether the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic had been entitled to execute, during 1991 and 1992, the "provisional solution"—a system damming up the Danube on Czechoslovak territory. The Court was also requested to determine the legal effects of the termination of the Treaty by Hungary in 1992 and the legal consequences of the Court's Judgment in that case.

Each Party filed a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial within the time-limits of 2 May and 5 December 1994, respectively, fixed by an Order of 14 July 1993.⁽²⁶⁾ By an Order of 20 December 1994,⁽²⁸⁾ the President of the Court fixed 20 June 1995 as the time-limit for the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties. Those Replies were filed within the prescribed time-limit. Slovakia chose Krzysztof J. Skubiszewski to sit as Judge ad hoc.

Land and maritime boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria

On 29 March 1994,⁽²⁸⁾ Cameroon instituted proceedings against Nigeria in a dispute concerning the question of sovereignty over the peninsula of Bakassi, and requested the Court to determine the course of the maritime frontier between the two States in so far as that frontier had not already been established in 1975.

In its Application, Cameroon referred to "an aggression" by Nigeria, whose troops it stated were "occupying" several Cameroonian localities on the Bakassi peninsula, resulting "in great prejudice to" Cameroon, and requested the Court to adjudge and declare that sovereignty over the Bakassi peninsula was Cameroonian; that Nigeria had violated and was violating the fundamental principle of respect for frontiers inherited from colonization and its obligations under international law by using force against Cameroon and by militarily occupying the Bakassi peninsula; and that Nigeria should withdraw its troops and pay reparation. Cameroon also asked the Court to prolong the course of its maritime boundary with Nigeria up to the limit of the maritime zones of the two States.

On 6 June 1994,⁽²⁸⁾ Cameroon filed an Additional Application for the purpose of extending the subject of the dispute to a further dispute described as relating essentially to the question of sovereignty over a part of the territory of Cameroon in the area of Lake Chad, while also asking the Court to specify definitively the frontier between Cameroon and Nigeria from Lake Chad to the sea. It further requested the Court to examine the two Applications as one case. On 14 June, Nigeria indicated that it had no objection to that request.

By an Order of 16 June 1994,⁽²⁹⁾ the Court fixed 16 March and 18 December 1995 as the time-limits for the filing of Cameroon's Memorial and Nigeria's Counter-Memorial, respectively (see also PART TWO, Chapter II). The Memorial was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

On 13 December 1995, within the time-limit for the filing of its Counter-Memorial, Nigeria filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court and to the admissibility of the claims of Cameroon. By virtue of the Rules of Court, the proceedings on the merits were suspended.

Fisheries jurisdiction (Spain v. Canada)

On 28 March 1995, Spain instituted proceedings against Canada in a dispute relating to the Canadian Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, as amended on 12 May 1994, and to the implementing regulations of that Act, as well as to certain measures taken on the basis of that legislation, particularly the boarding on the high seas on 9 March 1995 of a fishing boat, the Estai, sailing under the Spanish flag.

The Application indicated, inter alia, that by the amended Act "an attempt was made to impose on all persons on board foreign ships a broad prohibition on fishing in the Regulatory Area of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization (NAFO), that is, on the high seas, outside Canada's exclusive economic zone"; that the Act "expressly permits (article 8) the use of force against foreign fishing boats in the zones that article 2.1 unambiguously terms the 'high seas'"; that the implementing regulations of 25 May 1994 provided, in particular, for "the use of force by fishery protection vessels against the foreign fishing boats covered by those rules . . . which infringe their mandates in the zone of the high seas within the scope of those regulations"; and that the implementing regulations of 3 March 1995 "expressly permit [. . .] such conduct as regards Spanish and Portuguese ships on the high seas".

The Application alleged the violation of various principles and norms of international law and stated that there was a dispute between Spain and Canada which, going beyond the framework of fishing, seriously affected the very principle of the freedom of the high seas and, moreover, implied a very serious infringement of the sovereign rights of Spain.

Spain requested the Court to declare that the legislation of Canada, in so far as it claimed to exercise a jurisdiction over ships flying a foreign flag on the high seas, outside the exclusive economic zone of Canada, was not opposable to Spain; to adjudge and declare that Canada was bound to refrain from any repetition of the acts complained of and to offer reparation to Spain; and to declare that the boarding on the high seas on 9 March 1995 of the ship Estai flying the flag of Spain and the measures of coercion and the exercise of jurisdiction over that ship and over its captain constituted a concrete violation of the principles and norms of international law.

By a letter dated 21 April 1995, the Ambassador of Canada to the Netherlands informed the Court that, in the view of his Government, the Court manifestly lacked jurisdiction to deal with the Application filed by Spain by reason of paragraph 2 (d) of the Declaration, dated 10 May 1994, whereby Canada accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

Taking into account an agreement concerning the procedure reached between the Parties at a meeting with the President of the Court, held on 27 April 1995, the President, by an Order of 2 May 1995,⁽³⁰⁾ decided that the written proceedings should first be addressed to the question of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute and fixed 29 September 1995 as the time-limit for the filing of the Memorial of Spain and 29 February 1996 for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Canada. The Memorial was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

Spain chose Santiago Torres-Bernárdez and Canada Marc Lalonde to sit as Judges ad hoc.

Request for an examination of the situation in accordance with paragraph 63 of the Court's Judgment of 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v. France) case

On 21 August 1995, New Zealand submitted to the Court a request for an examination of the situation "arising out of a proposed action announced by France which will, if carried out, affect the basis of the Judgment⁽³¹⁾ rendered by the Court on 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v. France) case". The request referred to a media statement of 13 June 1995 by French President Jacques Chirac "which said that France would conduct a final series of eight nuclear-weapons tests in the South Pacific starting in September 1995". New Zealand stated that the request was made "under the right granted to New Zealand in paragraph 63 of the Judgment of 20 December 1974".

Paragraph 63 reads as follows:

"Once the Court has found that a State has entered into a commitment concerning its future conduct it is not the Court's function to contemplate that it will not comply with it. However, the Court observes that if the basis of this Judgment were to be affected, the Applicant could request an examination of the situation in accordance with the provisions of the Statute; the denunciation by France, by letter dated 2 January 1974, of the General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, which is relied on as a basis of jurisdiction in the present case, cannot constitute by itself an obstacle to the presentation of such a request."

New Zealand asserted that the rights for which it sought protection "all fall within the scope of the rights invoked by New Zealand in paragraph 28 of the 1973 Application" in the above-mentioned case, but that at the present time New Zealand sought "recognition only of those rights that would be adversely affected by entry into the marine environment of radioactive material in consequence of the further tests to be carried out at Mururoa or Fangataufa atolls, and of its entitlement to the protection and benefit of a properly conducted environmental impact assessment".

New Zealand asked the Court to adjudge and declare: "(i) that the conduct of the proposed nuclear tests will constitute a violation of the rights under international law of New Zealand, as well as of other States; further or in the alternative, (ii) that it is unlawful for France to conduct such nuclear tests before it has undertaken an environmental impact assessment according to accepted international standards. Unless such an assessment establishes that the tests will not give rise, directly or indirectly, to radioactive contamination of the marine environment the rights under international law of New Zealand, as well as the rights of other States, will be violated."

New Zealand, referring to the Court's Order⁽³²⁾ of 22 June 1973 indicating interim measures of protection and to the Court's Judgment of 20 December 1974 in the above-mentioned case, also requested the Court to indicate further provisional measures. New Zealand chose Sir Geoffrey Palmer to sit as Judge ad hoc.

Applications for permission to intervene were submitted by Australia, Samoa, Solomon Islands, the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia, while the last four States also made declarations on intervention.

At the invitation of the President of the Court, informal aides-mémoire were presented by New Zealand and France. Public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the two States were held on 11 and 12 September 1995.

At a public sitting held on 22 September 1995, the President of the Court read an Order,⁽³³⁾ the operative paragraph of which was as follows:

68. Accordingly,
The Court,

(1) By 12 votes to 3,

Finds that the "Request for an Examination of the Situation" in accordance with paragraph 63 of the Judgment of the Court of 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests Case (New Zealand v. France), submitted by New Zealand on 21 August 1995, does not fall within the provisions of the said paragraph 63 and must consequently be dismissed;

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Ferrari Bravo, Higgins;

Against: Judges Weeramantry, Koroma; Judge ad hoc Sir Geoffrey Palmer;

(2) By 12 votes to 3,

Finds that the "Further Request for the Indication of Provisional Measures" submitted by New Zealand on the same date must be dismissed;

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Ferrari Bravo, Higgins;

Against: Judges Weeramantry, Koroma; Judge ad hoc Sir Geoffrey Palmer;

(3) By 12 votes to 3,

Finds that the "Application for Permission to Intervene" submitted by Australia on 23 August 1995, and the "Applications for Permission to Intervene" and "Declarations of Intervention" submitted by Samoa and Solomon Islands on 24 August 1995, and by the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia on 25 August 1995, must likewise be dismissed.

In favour: President Bedjaoui; Vice-President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Guillaume, Shahabuddeen, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Ferrari Bravo, Higgins;

Against: Judges Weeramantry, Koroma; Judge ad hoc Sir Geoffrey Palmer.

Vice-President Schwebel and Judges Oda and Ranjeva appended declarations to the Order; Judge Shahabuddeen a separate opinion; Judges Weeramantry and Koroma and Judge ad hoc Sir Geoffrey Palmer appended dissenting opinions.

Legality of the use by a State of nuclear weapons in armed conflict

In 1993,⁽²⁵⁾ the World Health Organization (WHO) requested an advisory opinion from the Court on whether the use of nuclear weapons by a State in war or other armed conflict would be a breach of its obligations under international law, in view of the health and environmental effects.

By an Order of 13 September 1993,⁽²⁶⁾ the Court fixed 10 June 1994 as the time-limit within which WHO and its member States entitled to appear before the Court might submit written statements on the question. By an Order of 20 June 1994,⁽²⁷⁾ the President of the Court extended the time-limit to 20 September 1994. By the same Order, the President fixed 20 June 1995 as the time-limit within which States and organizations having presented written statements might submit written comments on the other written statements.

Written statements were filed by Australia, Azerbaijan, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Finland, France, Germany, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, Lithuania, Malaysia, Mexico, Nauru, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, the Republic of Moldova, the Russian Federation, Rwanda, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Uganda, Ukraine, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The request was transmitted to ICJ by the Secretary-General on 19 December.

By an Order of 1 February 1995,⁽³⁵⁾ the Court decided that States entitled to appear before it and the United Nations might furnish information on the question and fixed 20 June 1995 as the time-limit within which written statements might be submitted (Article 66, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court) and 20 September 1995 as the time-limit within which States and organizations having presented written statements might present written comments on the other written statements (Article 66, paragraph 4, of the Statute).

Chapter II

International tribunals

In 1995, two international criminal tribunals established to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law—one concerning acts committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the other for Rwanda and neighbouring States—began operations. The International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia issued indictments against 46 individuals and began trial proceedings in one case. Following the election of trial judges, the International Tribunal for Rwanda held an inaugural session at The Hague, Netherlands, and subsequently issued its first indictments. Justice Richard J. Goldstone of South Africa served as Prosecutor for both Tribunals. In February 1995, the Security Council determined that the seat of the Rwanda Tribunal should be in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania.

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

In 1995, the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia), established in 1993,⁽¹⁾ issued indictments, submitted by Prosecutor Richard Goldstone, against 46 individuals and began trial proceedings in one case.

The Security Council reiterated its demand that all States and all parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia cooperate fully with the Tribunal and called on them to create the conditions necessary for the performance of its task. In April, July and December, the General Assembly approved appropriations for the Tribunal's financing.

Work of the Tribunal

On 23 August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the second annual report⁽²⁾ of the International Tribunal, covering the period from August 1994 to July 1995. The Tribunal was substantially closer to realizing its principal objectives, and had started to meet the hopes and expectations of the victims of events in the former Yugoslavia, the Tribunal President, Antonio Cassese (Italy), stated. Some problems in the early stages of its existence had delayed the Tribunal in carrying out its mandate, and its work was still complicated by the fact that warfare continued unabated in the former Yugoslavia. That greatly aggravated the logistical difficulties involved in dealing with witnesses, conducting investigations and executing arrest warrants, he went on. Despite that, the Tribunal was well equipped to prosecute those alleged to have committed serious violations of international humanitarian law. Whatever the political consequences or the eventual outcome of the conflict, the Tribunal would not flinch from its task.

During the 12-month reporting period, the real judicial work of the Tribunal had begun. The report described the activities of its Chambers, Prosecutor's Office and Registry, aimed at establishing the legal framework of operations and the material infrastructure, recruiting necessary staff and encouraging States to enact legislation enabling full cooperation with the Tribunal. It also examined contributions by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and coverage of the Tribunal's work by the world media.

The International Tribunal had enjoyed the support of the United Nations and growing cooperation by a number of States in the past year, but it had had to navigate in troubled waters, the Tribunal President stated. Its momentum might have been lost altogether if it had proceeded only against the immediate perpetrators of crimes under international humanitarian law. It had chosen to break new ground with a clearly enunciated policy of prosecuting those in command who ordered or failed to punish the egregious crimes being committed. The strategy of prosecuting political and military leaders, adopted by the Tribunal, had given it the credibility essential to its appointed task, although disappointment could be felt at the fact that only one accused had so far been surrendered to stand trial. In that regard, it was noted that, as an international criminal court, albeit one of an ad hoc nature, the Tribunal faced unique problems resulting from the need to rely on the cooperation of States, in the absence of enforcement agencies at its disposal; limitations inherent in any international criminal jurisdiction trying offences committed in a distant country, such as the lack of centralized prosecuting and police services, the multitude of both perpetrators and victims, and the time lag between the commission of a crime and the apprehension of an alleged perpetrator; and the realities of operating in the midst of a continuing armed conflict, mostly against civilians.

All those working at the Tribunal realized the historic role which they had to play in setting precedents for future international criminal organs, notably a permanent criminal court—the "missing links of international law". The Tribunal might well prove to be a major stepping-stone to the establishment of a permanent international criminal court, under discussion by the UN International Law Commission (see PART FIVE, Chapter III), the President noted. If the Tribunal could prove to the world that it was possible to administer international criminal justice, that it was imperative for legal and moral reasons and practical to do so, it would have performed a great service for the development of international law. It would also, he declared, send a message to the victims of appalling crimes that humanity would not turn its back on them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 November, the General Assembly, by decision 50/408, noted the second annual report of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

In his statement to the Assembly, Tribunal President Cassese said that while the Tribunal was boldly travelling towards the accomplishment of its mission, it was experiencing problems, including a lack of cooperation of States and difficulties in obtaining the financial and other practical resources. He urged the Assembly to help the Tribunal fulfil its task by providing those badly needed resources. The President also emphasized that with the establishment of a lasting peace in the region, the Tribunal would become more efficient and better able to accomplish its mission, and expressed his hope that bringing to fruition the Tribunal's potential would show that international criminal justice could fulfil an indispensable role in the pacification of the world community.

Indictments

During the reporting period, eight indictments were confirmed, and arrest warrants issued for 46 individuals. Three hearings were held at the Prosecutor's request for deferral to the Tribunal's competence of proceedings or investigations pending in national jurisdictions.

Dragan Nikolic was the first person to be indicted by the Tribunal, in November 1994. Alleged to be a commander of the Susica prison camp in Vlasenica, in north-eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina, he was charged with grave breaches of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (fourth Geneva Convention), in particular direct participation in beatings, torture and murder at the camp.

Two other indictments, on 13 February 1995, involved charges against a group of 21 persons. Among them was Dusko Tadic, the subject of the Tribunal's first trial. Those indictments emanated largely from events between June and August 1992 in a Bosnian Serb camp at Omarska in the Opstina of Prijedor, in northwestern Bosnia. They covered a whole range of offences—from grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions to genocide—and represented the first occasion that a charge of genocide had been brought before the Tribunal.

On 21 July 1995, three indictments were confirmed in the cases of Sikirica and others (Keraterm camp investigation); Miljkovic and others (Bosanski Samac); and Jelusic and Cesic (Brcko).

On 26 June, the Prosecutor had submitted an indictment charging Dusko Sikirica, commander of the Keraterm camp, also in the Prijedor region, with genocide; 12 of his subordinates or others subject to his authority were also charged with crimes against humanity, violations of the laws or customs of war and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, specifically, killing, sexually assaulting and torturing detainees at the camp, a centre of the Bosnian Serb ethnic cleansing campaign in the summer of 1992.

Similar charges were brought in a 29 June indictment against Slobodan Miljkovic and five other persons accused of mass killings, forced deportation, sexual assault and torture during a campaign of terror against the non-Serb civilian population in Bosanski Samac.

On 30 June, the Prosecutor submitted an indictment against two individuals for their alleged crimes against Muslim and Croat detainees at the Luka camp of Brcko in northern Bosnia; Goran Jelusic was accused of 16 murders and numerous beatings, and Ranko Cesic was accused of 13 murders and one sexual assault.

On 25 July, two more indictments were confirmed: one in the case of Milan Martić, President of the Croatian Serb administration, and another concerning Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic, the President and the Commander of the Army, respectively, of the Bosnian Serb administration in Pale, Bosnia and Herzegovina. Mr. Martić was charged with violations of the laws or customs of war for ordering the cluster-bomb rocket attack against the civilian population of Zagreb in May 1995. Messrs. Karadzic and Mladic were charged with genocide, crimes against humanity, violations of the laws or customs of war, and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, on the basis of either superior authority or direct responsibility for: the internment of Bosnian Muslims and Croats in detention facilities where they were subject to torture, murder, sexual assault, robbery and other acts; the shelling and sniping campaigns against civilians in Sarajevo, Srebrenica and Tuzla; the deportation of Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat civilians from the areas of Vlasenica, Prijedor, Bosanski Samac, Brcko and Foca; the plundering and destruction of personal property of civilians; the systematic infliction of damage and destruction on both Muslim and Roman Catholic sacred sites; and the taking of UN hostages for use as "human shields".

In the case of every confirmed indictment, arrest warrants for the accused were issued and transmitted to the appropriate authorities. On 2 August 1995, an order was issued by the Trial Chamber asking States to assist the Tribunal in the arrests of Messrs. Karadzic, Mladic and Martić by providing information as to their movements and location. That order was sent on 3 August to all permanent missions to the United Nations in New York, including the observer missions of Switzerland, the Holy See and Palestine. On 16 November, the Tribunal issued further indictments against Karadzic and Mladic, as was reported by the Secretary-General on 27 November,⁽³⁾ for their direct and individual responsibilities for the atrocities committed against Bosnian Muslims in Srebrenica in July 1995, after the fall of that enclave to Bosnian Serb forces (see also PART TWO, Chapter V, and PART THREE, Chapter III).

Deferrals of investigations

On 21 April, the Prosecutor filed an application for deferral to the Tribunal's competence of an investigation conducted by a court of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, concerning alleged ethnic cleansing by members of Bosnian Croat forces in the Lasva River valley. In a separate action, the Prosecutor applied for deferral of an investigation by Bosnia and Herzegovina into the activities of Bosnian Serb leader Karadzic, Commander Mladic of the Bosnian Serb Army and Mr. Stanisić, former head of Bosnian Serb internal affairs. Both investigations were conducted parallel to those of the Prosecutor's Office.

On 11 and 16 May, respectively, the Trial Chamber granted each application and issued a formal request for deferral. The Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina formally concurred in the Prosecutor's applications. Following the indictments of Messrs. Karadzic and Mladic, the Prosecutor's Office continued investigations into the case of Mr. Stanisić and the Lasva River valley events.

Trial proceedings

namely, a request for the deferral by the Government of Germany of its investigation and prosecution of Dusko Tadic, who had been arrested by German authorities in February 1994 and was awaiting trial in Germany. The Prosecutor wanted the deferral because the German investigation involved legal and factual issues which had implications for other investigations being carried out concurrently by the Prosecutor.

The Prosecutor reported that the case against Mr. Tadic would reveal systematic and widespread persecution of the Muslim civilian population in the Prijedor region, a practice commonly referred to as ethnic cleansing. After the deferral application was granted, the German Government deferred its jurisdiction in the case of Mr. Tadic to the Tribunal, once the necessary implementing legislation had been passed.

Mr. Tadic was surrendered to the Tribunal on 24 April 1995. Preliminary motions in the trial, representing the Tribunal's first trial proceedings, were filed in June and July. On 10 August, the Trial Chamber, in a majority decision, granted the Prosecutor's requests concerning protection of the identity of six witnesses, and ordered that evidence be given in closed session. The Chamber also authorized the use of screening or other appropriate methods for alleged victims of sexual assault to prevent them from being re-traumatized by seeing the accused. Judge Sir Ninian Stephen (Australia), in a separate opinion, denied in principle any anonymity of witnesses as far as the accused and his counsel were concerned.

Also, on 10 August, the Trial Chamber denied a defence motion on jurisdiction, holding that the Tribunal lacked the competence to review the decision of the Security Council to establish the Tribunal, among other things. On 14 August, the defence appealed that decision. Defence motions challenging defects in the form of the indictment and exclusion of evidence obtained from the accused were to be heard after the issue of jurisdiction had been settled.

Application of rule 61

Rule 61 of the Tribunal's rules of procedure and evidence set out a procedure to be applied when a State was unable to execute an arrest warrant. In that event, the full Trial Chamber could confirm the indictment at a public hearing, at which witnesses would testify, and issue an international arrest warrant for the accused. Given the Tribunal's decision not to allow trials in absentia, the procedure did not provide for a finding of guilt but served only to determine whether reasonable grounds existed for believing that the accused had committed the crimes as charged in the indictment.

In October 1995, rule 61 was applied, for the first time, in the case of Dragan Nikolic. After the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina had indicated that it could not serve a warrant outside its territory, and the Bosnian Serb administration in Pale had failed to respond to the Tribunal's request to serve the indictment and an arrest warrant on Mr. Nikolic, the Prosecutor on 16 May filed an application pursuant to rule 61, which was granted by a judge on the same date. Following hearings held between 9 and 13 October, the Trial Chamber unanimously decided on 20 October that there were reasonable grounds for believing that Mr. Nikolic had committed the offences as charged, confirmed the entire 24-count indictment and issued an international arrest warrant against Mr. Nikolic. The Chamber also certified that the failure to effect service of the indictment was due wholly to the failure or refusal of the Bosnian Serb administration in Pale to cooperate, and invited the Tribunal President to notify the Security Council accordingly.

The President transmitted the decision and supporting documentation to the Council on 31 October.⁽⁵⁾

Cooperation of States

The Tribunal President, in his second annual report on the Tribunal,⁽²⁾ noted that 12 States had thus far enacted implementing legislation for cooperation with the Tribunal, and six others had indicated their intention to do so in the near future. In that regard, he issued in February guidelines for States which had not yet adopted such legislation. He also proposed a less taxing commitment to the States that had expressed a lack of willingness to carry out enforcement of prison sentences pursuant to the Tribunal's statute.

Also, he reported that six countries had contributed personnel for the Prosecutor's Office; 17 States had contributed funds totalling $6,319,795 as at 10 July. In addition, the European Union provided financial resources for several NGO projects to assist the Tribunal, and more than 100 NGOs had offered help in a wide range of areas.

The President stated that some States, in particular the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), as well as some de facto authorities in the self-styled Republics of Krajina and Srpska, had withheld any cooperation from the Tribunal, and that a number of countries, notably neighbouring States of the former Yugoslavia, had failed to pass legislation enabling them to assist the Tribunal.

In a statement to the General Assembly, the Tribunal President underscored that the lack of cooperation by States had proved particularly paralysing, as Tribunal decisions, orders and requests could be enforced only by national authorities. So far, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Bosnian Serb administration in Pale had failed to apprehend 41 of the accused who were in their territory.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, by resolution 1019(1995) of 9 November, demanded that all States, in particular those in the region of the former Yugoslavia, and all parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia comply fully with their obligations to cooperate with the International Tribunal, including through provision of access to individuals and sites the Tribunal deemed important for its investigations and through compliance with requests for assistance or orders issued by the Tribunal. The Council also called on States and parties to the conflict to allow the establishment of Tribunal offices, and demanded that all parties, in particular the Bosnian Serb party, refrain from any action intended to destroy, alter, conceal or damage any evidence of violations of international humanitarian law and that such evidence be preserved.

It reiterated those demands in resolution 1034(1995) of 21 December, and called on all States and all parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia to create the conditions necessary for the Tribunal to perform its tasks. The Council also noted the indictments against Messrs. Karadzic and Mladic in connection with the atrocities committed in Srebrenica in July 1995.

Other aspects

In January 1995, the Tribunal adopted amendments to 41 of the 125 rules of procedure and evidence approved in February 1994. The actions were taken to reflect a variety of concerns and were aimed at: addressing practical problems in the implementation of its statute or those rules, dealing with political entities in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, improving the working of the Tribunal, broadening the rights of suspects and accused persons, and protecting the rights of victims and witnesses. Further amendments were adopted in May and June. In March, the Tribunal also amended its rules of detention to clarify the respective roles of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the Tribunal in inspecting conditions of detention, and to provide detainees with greater freedom of communication with the inspecting authority.

The Tribunal, in the second annual report,⁽²⁾ described the work of the Prosecutor's Office, noting that 116 of its 126 staff positions had been filled by late May 1995 and that a legal adviser for gender-related crimes had been appointed. The strategy team of the investigations unit and the special advisory section of the Office were restructured in 1995. Liaison offices were to be established in Belgrade, Sarajevo and Zagreb. Other issues related to activities of the Registry's judicial department, detention unit and victims and witnesses unit, as well as the Tribunal's publications and its Press and Information Service.

Communication (May). The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), by a letter of 22 May,⁽⁶⁾ transmitted its fifth report submitted in accordance with Security Council resolutions 771(1992)⁽⁷⁾ and 780(1992),⁽⁸⁾ calling on States and international organizations to submit information on violations of humanitarian law in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. The report included information on deliberate killing and inhuman treatment of civilians, detainees, prisoners of war, the wounded and the sick; hostage-taking and detention camps; devastation of civilian facilities, unwarranted from the military point of view; devastation of places of worship, cemeteries and cultural and historical monuments; and ethnic cleansing. Annexed to the report were forensic, medical and psychiatric views regarding war crimes committed against Serbs in the area of Gorazde from 1992 to 1994.

Administrative and budgetary aspects

Conditions of service of Tribunal members

In 1995, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) continued to consider the Secretary-General's 1994 report⁽⁹⁾ on conditions of service and allowances of Tribunal members, in which he proposed that the terms and conditions of service of Tribunal judges should be the same as those of the International Court of Justice (ICJ).

The Committee recommended that the annual salary for Tribunal members be set at $145,000 and that the special allowance applicable to the President of ICJ or to the Vice-President when acting as President should apply to the President and Vice-President of the Tribunal, as should the "floor/ceiling measures" in The Hague applicable to ICJ members and the condition that "no member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature".

Noting its proposal that the General Assembly, at its fiftieth (1995) session, should undertake a comprehensive review of pension entitlements and survivor benefits of ICJ members, ACABQ was of the opinion that the issue of those entitlements for Tribunal members should be dealt with in the context of that review (see PART SIX, Chapter III).

Committee observations and recommendations were summarized in its 10 March report⁽¹⁰⁾ to the Assembly.

Financing of the Tribunal

In 1995, the General Assembly continued its consideration of issues relating to the financing of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

In April, the General Assembly adopted decision 49/471 B.

Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 6 April 1995, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decided to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in the additional amount of 1,080,000 United States dollars for the period from 1 to 14 April 1995 to allow the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 to continue its activities until 14 April 1995, without prejudice to any decision that the Assembly might take with regard to the mode of financing of the Tribunal.

General Assembly decision 49/471 B

On 13 April, the Assembly adopted resolution 49/242 A.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the need for a prompt decision on the mode of financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991,

1. Resolves to resume its consideration of the question of the financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 at its resumed forty-ninth session in June 1995 in order to decide no later than 14 July 1995 on all outstanding questions, in particular the mode of financing;

General Assembly resolution 49/242 A

13 April 1995 Meeting 101 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/810/Add.2) without vote, 7 April (meeting 54); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.50), based on informal consultations; agenda item 146.

ACABQ report. ACABQ continued to consider the Secretary-General's report on the financing of the Tribunal, submitted in 1994.⁽⁹⁾ It took into account the fact that the Prosecutor for the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia would also act as the Prosecutor for the International Tribunal for Rwanda (see below), and that members of the Appeals Chambers of both Tribunals would also be the same.

The Committee examined revised estimates relating to the financing of the Tribunal in 1994-1995 as well as the question of voluntary contributions by Member States in support of the Tribunal. It recommended that an appropriation of $38,652,900 be approved by the General Assembly for the Tribunal's operations in 1994-1995, along with an additional appropriation of $276,200, which had been provided in 1993 from the UN Working Capital Fund for Tribunal expenditures. It pointed out that it might be necessary to establish a mechanism to allow commitment of funds on an urgent basis, particularly for critical areas identified by the Prosecutor. The Secretary-General was requested to submit information and/or proposals on the Tribunal's long-term requirements for the execution of sentences and protection of witnesses, as well as to issue specific guidelines on the requirements for receipt of voluntary contributions and application of funds for the Tribunal.

The ACABQ recommendations were submitted to the Assembly in March.⁽¹⁰⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

On 20 July, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/242 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/235 of 14 September 1993 and 48/251 of 14 April 1994,

Recalling also its decision 49/471 A of 23 December 1994, by which it authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in the additional amount of 7 million United States dollars to allow the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 to continue its activities until 31 March 1995, without prejudice to any decisions that the Assembly might take with regard to budgetary and administrative matters and to the mode of financing,

Affirming that the International Tribunal must be assured of secure and stable financing so that it may fulfil its role in full and effectively,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Tribunal and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Decides, subject to the completion of the reclassification process, to approve the three posts of senior investigators to undertake substantive high-level investigations and to oversee the nine investigation teams in the Office of the Prosecutor, pending a further review of the question by the Advisory Committee in the context of estimates for the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 for the biennium 1996-1997;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to review the staffing requirements of the electronic support services and communications in the Registry to ensure that its organizational structure is commensurate with the tasks to be performed;

4. Reaffirms that questions related to the rules of procedure and evidence of the International Tribunal are matters to be decided by the International Tribunal;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, in the context of the next budget presentation for the International Tribunal, additional information on the costs of ensuring free legal assistance, as outlined in paragraph 30 of the report of the Advisory Committee;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in the context of the next budget presentation for the International Tribunal information and/or proposals for the long-term requirements for the carrying out of sentences and for the protection of witnesses;

7. Requests the International Tribunal and the International Court of Justice to continue negotiations on common administrative arrangements with the aim of obtaining economies of administrative services;

8. Requests the International Tribunal to establish guidelines to govern recourse to and use of expertise in the Chambers;

9. Notes that the estimated requirements for payment to the host Government for detention facilities for the accused reflect actual fixed and estimated variable costs in the biennium 1994-1995;

10. Emphasizes the importance of ensuring that recruitment for the International Tribunal is implemented strictly in accordance with the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, taking account of Articles 8, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, and that, in recruiting consultants and experts, the International Tribunal should avail itself of sources of expertise on as wide a geographical basis as possible;

11. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments and others that have provided voluntary contributions to the International Tribunal;

12. Invites Member States and others to make further voluntary contributions to the International Tribunal that are acceptable to the Secretary-General;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to issue specific guidelines on the requirements for receipt of contributions and application of funds for the International Tribunal;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in future budget presentations for the International Tribunal information on voluntary contributions in cash and in kind and to indicate where they are assigned;

15. Reaffirms that the acceptance of voluntary contributions in kind or in personnel, as well as voluntary financial contributions, must be consistent with the need to ensure the impartiality and independence of the International Tribunal at all times and that such contributions should be considered supplementary to the assessed contributions;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to include detailed information in his next report on the International Tribunal on the acceptance and use of voluntary contributions, particularly those in kind or in personnel, pursuant to paragraph 15 above;

17. Reaffirms the role of the General Assembly, as set out in Article 17 of the Charter, as the organ to consider and approve the budget of the Organization and the apportionment of its expenses among Member States;

18. Again expresses its concern that advice given to the Security Council by the Secretariat on the nature of the financing of the International Tribunal did not respect the role of the General Assembly as set out in Article 17 of the Charter;

19. Reaffirms that the expenses of the International Tribunal shall be met through additional resources on the basis of assessed contributions and that they shall be financed through a separate special account outside the regular budget;

20. Decides to appropriate to the special account for the International Tribunal referred to in General Assembly resolution 47/235 a total amount of 43,991,600 dollars gross (39,095,900 dollars net) for the period from 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1995, inclusive of the commitment authority of 26,175,000 dollars authorized under the provisions of Assembly resolutions 48/251 of 14 April 1994 and 49/242 A of 13 April 1995 and Assembly decisions 49/471 A and B of 23 December 1994 and 6 April 1995, respectively, and the amount of 276,200 dollars expended in 1993;

21. Decides also, as an ad hoc and exceptional arrangement, that Member States will waive their respective shares in the credits arising from previous budgets of the United Nations Protection Force in the total amount of 21,995,800 dollars gross (19,547,950 dollars net) and hence accept an equivalent increase in the assessments for a future budget period of the Force in the same amount, to be transferred to the special account for the International Tribunal from the special account established for the Force pursuant to General Assembly resolution 46/233 of 19 March 1992;

22. Decides further to apportion the amount of 21,995,800 dollars gross (19,547,950 dollars net) for the period from 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1995 among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments for the year 1994 to be applied against a portion thereof, that is, 6,130,350 dollars gross (5,528,100 dollars net), which is the amount pertaining to the period ending 31 December 1994, and the scale of assessments for the year 1995 to be applied against the balance, that is, 15,865,450 dollars gross (14,019,850 dollars net), for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1995;

23. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 22 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the es-

24. Requests the Secretary-General to administer these resources with a maximum of economy and efficiency;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a performance report at the end of each biennium but no later than May 1996 and May 1998 respectively;

27. Decides to review the mode of financing of the International Tribunal at its fifty-second session;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to submit estimates for the requirements of the International Tribunal for the biennium 1996-1997 by 30 November 1995;

29. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991".

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/810/Add.3) without vote, 14 July (meeting 66); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.66), based on informal consultations; agenda item 146.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 13 December, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁾ on requirements of the International Tribunal for 1996, estimated at $40,779,300. ACABQ recommendations. On 18 December, in an oral report before the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, ACABQ stated its intention to examine in 1996 the staffing proposals for the Tribunal. It recommended in the interim that the General Assembly approve an appropriation of $7.6 million for the period from 1 January to 31 March 1996 and that the authority to enter into contractual arrangements for staff for periods of up to one calendar year should be continued.

International Tribunal for Rwanda

In 1995, arrangements were completed for the commencement of the work of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (the International Tribunal for Rwanda). The Tribunal had been established by the Security Council on 8 November 1994(¹) on the recommendation of the Commission of Experts, which also had been established by the Council on 1 July 1994,⁽²⁾ following massacres in Rwanda, to provide the Secretary-General with conclusions on evidence of genocide and other violations of international law in that country.

In February 1995, the Council decided that the International Tribunal should have its seat in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania. In August, a headquarters agreement governing the Tribunal's seat was signed with the Tanzanian Government. In May, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Council, elected the six trial judges of the Tribunal. The Tribunal held an inaugural session at The Hague in June and issued its first indictments in December. The Assembly, in July and December, approved appropriations for the Tribunal's financing.

General aspects

Report of the Secretary-General (February).

The Secretary-General on 13 February reported(³) on arrangements for the functioning of the International Tribunal for Rwanda. The report analysed the legal basis for the Tribunal's establishment and its legal status; compared its statute with that of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (see above); reviewed steps taken for the Tribunal's functioning; and examined options for the location of its seat.

The Secretary-General noted that the plan for the Tribunal's establishment comprised two phases. During the first phase, an investigative/prosecutorial unit had been set up in Kigali, Rwanda, to organize the Prosecutor's Office, gather information, develop an investigative strategy and operational procedures, and initiate investigations and the preparation of indictments. A small administrative unit had also been established to support the start-up operations of the Prosecutor's Office and to handle all administrative, financial and personnel matters regarding the commencement of Tribunal operations. The Secretary-General appointed Honoré Rakotomanana (Madagascar) as Deputy Prosecutor. A trust fund to support Tribunal activities was set up and received contributions from several States, including a pledge of $1 million worth of equipment. Budgetary requirements for the initial funding of the first phase, from 1 January to 31 March, were estimated at $3,951,200.

In the second phase, judges were to be elected, practical arrangements for the Tribunal's seat put in place and staffing completed. With a common Appeals Chamber composed of five judges already in place, shared under the statute with the Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, only six trial judges, three for each Trial Chamber, had to be elected. The Secretary-General proposed that a special session of the judges be convened upon their election to adopt rules of procedure and evidence. He noted that with the conclusion of headquarters and lease agreements for the Tribunal's premises and the completed staffing of the Prosecutor's Office and the Registry, the Tribunal would be fully operational by the end of the second phase.

The report also summarized findings of a technical mission that had visited Kenya, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania at the end of 1994 to determine suitable premises for the seat of the International Tribunal. In determining the location of the seat, the Secretary-General said he had been guided by criteria set out by the Security Council,⁽¹⁾ including a preference for an "African seat". On the basis of mission findings and government views, he recommended that Arusha be selected as the seat of the Tribunal.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 February, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, adopted resolution 977(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 955(1994) of 8 November 1994,

Having regard to its decision contained in paragraph 6 of resolution 955(1994) that the seat of the International Tribunal for Rwanda shall be determined by the Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dated 13 February 1995 and noting the recommendation of the Secretary-General that, subject to appropriate arrangements between the United Nations and the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania acceptable to the Council, Arusha be determined as the seat of the International Tribunal for Rwanda,

Noting the willingness of the Government of Rwanda to cooperate with the Tribunal, Decides that, subject to the conclusion of appropriate arrangements between the United Nations and the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania, the International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have its seat at Arusha.

Security Council resolution 977(1995)

22 February 1995 Meeting 3502 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/1995/148).

On 27 February, the Council adopted resolution 978(1995).

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the situation in Rwanda, in particular its resolutions 935(1994) and 955(1994),

Expressing once again its grave concern at the reports indicating that genocide and other systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law have been committed in Rwanda,

Noting that these reports were confirmed in the final report of the Commission of Experts submitted pursuant to resolution 935(1994),

Recalling the obligations contained in resolution 955(1994), which created the International Tribunal for Rwanda,

Concerned by the conditions in the refugee camps outside Rwanda, including reports of violence directed against refugees who voluntarily wish to return to Rwanda,

Determined to put an end to violations of international humanitarian law and serious acts of violence directed against refugees, and that effective measures be taken to bring to justice the persons who are responsible for such crimes,

Noting the reports of the Secretary-General on security in the Rwandese refugee camps of 18 November 1994 and 25 January 1995,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General dated 13 February 1995 and stressing the importance of taking all measures for the early and effective functioning of the International Tribunal for Rwanda,

Stressing the need for States to take as soon as possible any measures necessary under their domestic law to implement the provisions of resolution 955(1994) and of the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda,

1. Urges States to arrest and detain, in accordance with their national law and relevant standards of international law, pending prosecution by the International Tribunal for Rwanda or by the appropriate national authorities, persons found within their territory against whom there is sufficient evidence that they were responsible for acts within the jurisdiction of the International Tribunal for Rwanda;

2. Urges States who detain persons referred to in paragraph 1 above to inform the Secretary-General and the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for Rwanda of the identity of the persons detained, the nature of the crimes believed to have been committed, the evidence providing probable cause for the detentions, the date when the persons were detained and the place of detention;

3. Urges States who detain such persons to cooperate with representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross, as well as investigators for the International Tribunal for Rwanda, in order to secure unimpeded access to those persons;

4. Condemns all attacks against persons in the refugee camps near the borders of Rwanda, demands that such attacks immediately cease, and calls upon States to take appropriate steps to prevent such attacks;

5. Urges States, on whose territory serious acts of violence in the refugee camps have taken place, to arrest and detain, in accordance with their national law and relevant standards of international law, and submit to the appropriate authorities for the purpose of prosecution persons against whom there is sufficient evidence that they have incited or participated in such acts and further urges the States concerned to keep the Secretary-General informed of the measures they have taken to this effect;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 978(1995)

27 February 1995 Meeting 3504 Adopted unanimously

Draft by United States (S/1995/153).

Report of the Secretary-General (June). On 30 June, the Secretary-General submitted a further report(4) on the establishment of the International Tribunal for Rwanda. Following the election of judges (see below), the Tribunal had held an inaugural session between 26 and 30 June at The Hague, pending the conclusion of arrangements for its seat in Arusha. The judges adopted rules of procedure and evidence. Judge Laity Kama (Senegal) was elected President and Judge Yakov A. Ostrovsky (Russian Federation), Vice-President. At the same time, the Deputy Prosecutor was actively directing investigations of some 400 identified suspects, both in and outside Rwanda, notably in other African countries, Europe and North America.

The Secretary-General pointed out that setting up the Prosecutor's Office in Kigali had been more difficult than anticipated, due to an uncertain budgetary situation which had affected recruitment of qualified personnel, as well as poor safety conditions and unavailability or inadequacy of premises. He nevertheless emphasized the importance of the presence of such an office in Kigali, noting that the possibility that the Office would become fully operational had improved in recent weeks. As for arrangements concerning the Tribunal's seat, two UN missions visited Arusha between 10 and 19 May to survey the premises and discuss draft headquarters and lease agreements. The Secretary-General hoped that the agreements would be finalized in the near future, but pointed out that arrangements also had to be made for renovation, construction and repair work on the premises.

The Secretary-General further noted that the Tribunal had been operating on a combination of a commitment authority of up to $2.9 million granted by ACABQ and voluntary contributions. Pledges and contributions to the trust fund for the Tribunal totalled slightly more than $1 million; an additional $6 million to $7 million in cash and in kind had been pledged at a special meeting of the Rwanda Operational Support Group, held in Kigali on 19 May.

Report of the Secretary-General (August). On 25 August, the Secretary-General submitted a third report(5) on progress made in establishing the Tribunal. A task force was established to oversee lease, contracting, reconstruction and procurement arrangements.

An agreement for the contribution of personnel to the Tribunal had been signed with the United Kingdom, and similar agreements were being negotiated with Canada, Denmark, the Netherlands, Norway, Switzerland and the United States, as well as with one NGO, the Secretary-General reported. Eighteen Professional staff were currently working for the Tribunal, including the Prosecutor and the Liaison Officer at The Hague and the Deputy Prosecutor and 10 legal officers in Kigali. Seven other candidates had accepted offers of appointment to Kigali. Seven investigators had been contributed by Member States, with an additional 40 staff expected over the next three months. Since the International Tribunals for Rwanda and for the Former Yugoslavia shared a common Appeals Chamber and a common Prosecutor, Justice Richard J. Goldstone (South Africa), the establishment of a small liaison office was envisaged to facilitate certain activities and proceedings of the Rwanda Tribunal that would be undertaken at The Hague.

A total of $6.3 million in cash had been contributed or pledged to the Voluntary Fund to Support the Activities of the Tribunal, in addition to funds budgeted and approved by the General Assembly in July (see below).

In the meantime, during continuing investigations, materials had been collected and analysed and witnesses in Africa, Europe and North America interviewed. Inquiries centred on a small number of individuals suspected of bearing the principal responsibility for the planning, incitement or commission of crimes. A list of judges was established to review indictments from October to December 1995.

Further developments. In a 7 October report(6) (see PART TWO, Chapter II), the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that on 31 August the United Nations had signed the headquarters agreement with the United Republic of Tanzania concerning the seat of the Tribunal, and was negotiating a memorandum of understanding with Rwanda regarding the Prosecutor's Office in Kigali. Adronico Adede of the UN Office of Legal Affairs had been appointed Tribunal Registrar on 8 September. In September, the Tribunal's President, Prosecutor and Registrar visited Arusha to inspect Tribunal premises, as well as accommodations for Tribunal staff and a proposed prison site.

On 1 December, the Secretary-General reported(7) that a lease agreement for Tribunal premises had been signed on 31 October and that arrangements for temporary offices and residential accommodations had been completed. The judge assigned to review the indictments had arrived in Arusha, and the Tribunal Registrar was in residence there. The Prosecutor's Office in Kigali had expanded, with investigators contributed by Member States numbering 30, in addition to UN staff. Some $6.4 million in cash contributions and pledges was available in the Voluntary Fund for the Tribunal.

The International Tribunal for Rwanda issued its first indictments on 12 December 1995, and the proceedings against suspects accused of genocide in Rwanda were expected to commence shortly, the Secretary-General stated.

Communication. On 11 October, Kenya transmitted a statement⁽⁸⁾ by its President, pointing out that while he was not against the Rwanda Tribunal, he was nevertheless convinced that its current mandate was limited. No lasting solution to the Rwanda-Burundi crisis would be found unless the Tribunal's terms of reference were widened to include investigations to determine those responsible for the April 1994 downing of the aircraft in which the Presidents of Rwanda and Burundi had been killed, which had triggered the massacres, and those responsible for the invasion of Rwanda prior to the assassination of the two Presidents. To concentrate only on the period after the deaths of the two Presidents would be superficial and not useful in bringing lasting peace to the region, he stated.

Administrative and budgetary aspects

On 28 February, the General Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General,⁽⁹⁾ included in the agenda of its forty-ninth session two additional items, on the financing of the International Tribunal for Rwanda and on the election of Tribunal judges (decision 49/402 B).

In notes dated 26 April, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly the list of candidates and described the procedure for the election of judges,⁽¹¹⁾ and provided their curricula vitae.⁽¹²⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 and 25 May, the Assembly, following its consideration of the nominees, adopted decision 49/324, by which it elected the six judges of the Tribunal for a four-year term of office, to begin, upon two months' notice, shortly before the commencement of the trial proceedings: Lennart Aspegren (Sweden); Laïty Kama (Senegal); T. H. Khan (Bangladesh); Yakov A. Ostrovsky (Russian Federation); Navanethem Pillay (South Africa); and William H. Sekule (United Republic of Tanzania).

Tribunal financing

For the immediate and urgent requirements of the International Tribunal for Rwanda and pending the determination of complete financial requirements, the Secretary-General on 27 February obtained the concurrence of ACABQ to enter into commitments not exceeding $2,914,900. In a 29 June report,⁽¹³⁾ he estimated requirements for 1994-1995 at $17,284,000, including the $2.9 million previously authorized.

On 12 July, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee, ACABQ recommended that detailed consideration of the Secretary-General's report be deferred until the Assembly's fiftieth session and that a commitment authority not exceeding $10 million be approved, in the meantime, for the period up to 31 October 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (July)

On 20 July, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/251.

Financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994
The General Assembly,

accept an equivalent increase in the assessments for a future budget period of the Assistance Mission in the same amount, to be transferred to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for Rwanda from the Special Account established for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda;

6. Decides to apportion the amount of 6,733,650 dollars gross (6,457,450 dollars net) for the period to 31 October 1995 among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments for the year 1995 as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994;

7. General Assembly resolution 49/251

20 July 1995 Meeting 106 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/945) without vote, 14 July (meeting 66); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.67), based on informal consultations; agenda item 163.

Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 65, 66; plenary 106.

On 6 November, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴⁾ that, owing to delays in making the Tribunal fully operational, the funding appropriated up to 31 October would be sufficient to meet the requirements up to 31 December, and that a budget performance report covering the period up to 31 December and estimates for 1996-1997 would be submitted at the current session. In a 14 December report,⁽¹⁵⁾ he stated that further delays experienced by the Tribunal had made it impossible to prepare detailed estimates for 1996; he proposed that a maintenance budget of $7,090,600 be approved for the period from 1 January to 31 March 1996, at the level authorized in 1995.

ACABQ, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee on 18 December, concurred with the Secretary-General's recommendation.

Chapter

Legal aspects of international political relations

In 1995, the United Nations continued work on issues dealing with the legal aspects of international political and State relations.

The International Law Commission continued work on the progressive codification of international law. As to the establishment of an international criminal court, the General Assembly established a preparatory committee to prepare a consolidated text of a convention as a next step towards consideration by a conference of plenipotentiaries. The Assembly also adopted a resolution on measures to eliminate international terrorism and a decision on the draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and of the draft optional protocols thereto.

International Law Commission

The International Law Commission (ILC), at its forty-seventh session (Geneva, 2 May-21 July 1995),⁽¹⁾ held 48 public meetings. It considered the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind; State succession and its impact on the nationality of natural and legal persons; draft articles on State responsibility for wrongful acts; draft articles on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law; and the law and practice relating to reservations to treaties. The Commission endorsed the recommendations of its Working Group on the long-term programme of work: to include in the Commission's future agenda the topic of diplomatic protection and to conduct a feasibility study on the rights and duties of States for the protection of the environment. ILC continued to cooperate with the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee and the Inter-American Juridical Committee.

In accordance with a General Assembly request (resolution 50/45), the Secretariat prepared for ILC's attention a topical summary⁽²⁾ of the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee discussion of ILC's 1995 report.

The thirty-first session of the International Law Seminar for postgraduate students and young professors or government officials dealing with international law was held (Geneva, 22 May-9 June) during the ILC session, with 23 participants of different nationalities, mostly from developing countries. The participants attended ILC meetings and lectures specifically organized for them. Austria, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, Norway, Switzerland and the United Kingdom made voluntary financial contributions, thus making it possible to award nine full and six partial fellowships. Since the first seminar in 1965, fellowships had been awarded to 374 of the 690 participants representing 156 nationalities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/45.

Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-seventh session

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-seventh session,

Emphasizing the importance of furthering the progressive development of international law and its codification as a means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Emphasizing also the role of the International Law Commission in the fulfilment of the objectives of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Recognizing the desirability of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics that might be submitted to the International Law Commission for closer examination, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contribution to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the international community, may be suitable for the progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

Stressing the usefulness of structuring the debate on the report of the International Law Commission in the Sixth Committee in such a manner that conditions are provided for concentrated attention on each of the main topics dealt with in the report,

Wishing to enhance further the interaction between the Sixth Committee as a body of government representatives and the International Law Commission as a body of independent legal experts, with a view to improving the dialogue between the two organs,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-seventh session and of the Commission's efforts to advance the work currently under consideration;

2. Notes the intentions of the International Law Commission for the programme of work for the last year of office of its members;

3. Urges the Commission at its forty-eighth session:

(a) To resume the work on the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind in such a manner that the second reading of the draft Code may be completed at that session;

(b) To resume the work on the draft articles on State responsibility in such a manner that the first reading of that draft may be completed at that session, taking into account the divergent views expressed during the Sixth Committee's debate on the topic, so that alternative approaches may be developed when necessary;

(c) To resume the work on the topic "International liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law" in order to complete the first reading of the draft articles relating to activities that risk causing transboundary harm;

4. Notes the beginning of the work on the topics "The law and practice relating to reservations to treaties" and "State succession and its impact on the nationality of natural and legal persons", and invites the Commission to continue its work on these topics along the lines indicated in the report;

5. Invites States and international organizations, particularly those which are depositaries, to answer promptly the questionnaire prepared by the Special Rapporteur on the topic concerning reservations to treaties;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to again invite Governments to submit as soon as possible relevant materials, including treaties, national legislation, decisions of national tribunals and diplomatic and official correspondence relevant to the topic "State succession and its impact on the nationality of natural and legal persons";

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the update of the survey of State practice relevant to international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, prepared by the Secretariat in 1984;

8. Notes the suggestions of the International Law Commission to include in its agenda the topic "Diplomatic protection" and initiate a feasibility study on a topic concerning the law of the environment, and decides to invite Governments to submit comments on these suggestions through the Secretary-General for consideration by the Sixth Committee during the fifty-first session of the General Assembly;

9. Requests the International Law Commission:

(a) To examine the procedures of its work for the purpose of further enhancing its contribution to the progressive development and codification of international law and to include its views in its report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

(b) To continue to pay special attention to indicating in its annual report, for each topic, those specific issues, if any, on which expressions of views by Governments, either in the Sixth Committee or in written form, would be of particular interest in providing effective guidance for the Commission in its further work;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments to comment on the present state of the codification process within the United Nations system and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

11. Takes note of the comments of the International Law Commission on the question of the duration of its session, as presented in its report, and expresses the view that the requirements of the work for the progressive development of international law and its codification and the magnitude and complexity of the subjects on the agenda of the Commission make it desirable that the usual duration of its sessions be maintained;

12. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the summary records and other documentation of the International Law Commission;

13. Once again expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with the sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars, appeals to States that can do so to make the voluntary contributions that are urgently needed for the holding of the seminars, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the seminars, from within existing resources, with adequate services, including interpretation, as required;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly, together with such written statements as delegations may circulate in conjunction with their oral statements, and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate, following established practice;

15. Recommends that the debate on the report of the International Law Commission at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly commence on 4 November 1996.

General Assembly resolution 50/45

11 December 1995 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/50/638) by consensus, 22 November (meeting 44); draft by Chairman (A/C.6/50/L.7); agenda item 141. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 6th Committee 12-25, 44; plenary 87.

Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind

ILC continued its second reading of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind. The draft Code, originally prepared in 1954⁽³⁾ and provisionally adopted by ILC on first reading in 1991,⁽⁴⁾ defined offences that were crimes under international law and for which the responsible individual was to be punished.

The Commission had before it the thirteenth report⁽⁵⁾ on the draft Code, submitted by Special Rapporteur Doudou Thiam (Senegal). The Special Rapporteur reproduced the draft articles adopted on first reading containing definitions of aggression (article 15), genocide (article 19), systematic or mass violations of human rights (article 21), exceptionally serious war crimes (article 22), international terrorism (article 24) and illicit traffic in narcotic drugs (article 25). Each article was followed by comments from Governments and the Special Rapporteur's views and recommendations.

The Commission decided to refer to its Drafting Committee the articles dealing with aggression, genocide, systematic or mass violations of human rights and exceptionally serious war crimes. It also decided that consultations would continue regarding illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and wilful and severe damage to the environment (article 26). Concerning the latter, the Commission established a working group to meet in 1996 to examine the possibility of covering the issue in the draft Code, while reaffirming its intention to complete the second reading of the draft Code at that session in any event. Subsequently, the Drafting Committee, having devoted 17 meetings to the consideration of the articles referred to it, adopted: for inclusion in Part One of the draft Code, articles dealing with scope and application of the Code (article 1), responsibility of States (article 5), establishment of jurisdiction (article 5 bis), obligation to extradite or prosecute (article 6), extradition of alleged offenders (article 6 bis), judicial guarantees (article 8), non bis in idem (article 9), non-retroactivity (article 10), order of a Government or a superior (article 11), responsibility of the superior (article 12) and official position and responsibility (article 13); and for inclusion in Part Two, articles dealing with aggression and genocide. Following consideration of the Drafting Committee Chairman's report, the Commission decided to defer the final adoption of the articles until after the completion of the remaining articles.

International criminal jurisdiction

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, established by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽⁶⁾ met (New York, 3-13 April and 14-25 August)⁽⁷⁾ to review the substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute for an international criminal court adopted in 1994 by ILC.⁽⁸⁾ It also considered the convening of an international conference of plenipotentiaries to conclude a convention on the establishment of an international criminal court and expressed appreciation to Italy for its offer to host the conference.

The Ad Hoc Committee examined comments⁽⁹⁾ on the draft statute received from 15 States, from the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (see preceding chapter), from the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the UN Office at Vienna and from the UN International Drug Control Programme (see PART FOUR, Chapters IX and XIV, respectively). It also considered a report⁽¹⁰⁾ of the Secretary-General on provisional estimates of staffing, structure and costs of the establishment and operation of the proposed court, and a number of informal papers and documents prepared by experts and non-governmental organizations. The issues considered by the Committee included the establishment and composition of the court, the principle of complementarity (the relationship between the proposed court and national criminal and investigative procedures), other issues pertaining to jurisdiction, methods of proceedings (due process), and the relationship between States parties, non-States parties and the court.

The Committee concluded that further work on the establishment of the international court remained to be done. It expressed the opinion that issues could be addressed most effectively by combining further discussions with the drafting of texts, with a view to preparing a consolidated text of a convention as a next step towards consideration by a conference of plenipotentiaries. The Committee proposed that its mandate for future work be changed to that effect. It recommended that the General Assembly take up the question of the organization of future work with a view to its early completion.

Annexed to the Committee's report were guidelines concerning the relationship between States parties, non-States parties and the international court and guidelines for consideration of general principles of criminal law.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/46.

Establishment of an international criminal court

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/33 of 25 November 1992, in which it requested the International Law Commission to undertake the elaboration of a draft statute for an international criminal court,

Recalling also its resolution 48/31 of 9 December 1993, in which it requested the International Law Commission to continue its work on the question of the draft statute for an international criminal court, with a view to elaborating a draft statute for such a court, if possible at the Commission's forty-sixth session in 1994,

Recalling further that the International Law Commission adopted a draft statute for an international criminal court at its forty-sixth session and decided to recommend that an international conference of plenipotentiaries be convened to study the draft statute and to conclude a convention on the establishment of an international criminal court,

Recalling its resolution 49/53 of 9 December 1994, in which it decided to establish an ad hoc committee, open to all States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies, to review the major substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute prepared by the International Law Commission and, in the light of that review, to consider arrangements for the convening of an international conference of plenipotentiaries,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court has made considerable progress during its sessions on the review of the major substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute prepared by the International Law Commission,

Noting also that the States participating in the Ad Hoc Committee still have different views on major substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute prepared by the International Law Commission and that, therefore, further discussions are needed for reaching consensus on the above issues in the future,

Noting further that the Ad Hoc Committee is of the opinion that issues can be addressed most effectively by combining further discussions with the drafting of texts, with a view to preparing a consolidated text of a convention for an international criminal court as a next step towards consideration by a conference of plenipotentiaries,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee recommends that the General Assembly take up the organization of future work with a view to its early completion, given the interest of the international community in the establishment of an international criminal court,

Noting also that the Ad Hoc Committee encourages participation by the largest number of States in its future work in order to promote universality,

Expressing deep appreciation for the renewed offer of the Government of Italy to host a conference on the establishment of an international criminal court,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, including the recommendations contained therein, and expresses its appreciation to the Ad Hoc Committee for the useful work done;

2. Decides to establish a preparatory committee open to all States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency, to discuss further the major substantive and administrative issues arising out of the draft statute prepared by the International Law Commission and, taking into account the different views expressed during the meetings, to draft texts, with a view to preparing a widely acceptable consolidated text of a convention for an international criminal court as a next step towards consideration by a conference of plenipotentiaries, and also decides that the work of the Preparatory Committee should be based on the draft statute prepared by the International Law Commission and should take into account the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and the written comments submitted by States to the Secretary-General on the draft statute for an international criminal court pursuant to paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 49/53 and, as appropriate, contributions of relevant organizations;

3. Also decides that the Preparatory Committee will meet from 25 March to 12 April and from 12 to 30 August 1996 and submit its report to the General Assembly at the beginning of its fifty-first session, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the Preparatory Committee with the necessary facilities for the performance of its work;

4. Urges participation in the Preparatory Committee by the largest number of States in order to promote universal support for an international criminal court;

5. Further decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session an item entitled "Establishment of an international criminal court", in order to study the report of the Preparatory Committee and, in the light of that report, to decide on the convening of an international conference of plenipotentiaries to finalize and adopt a convention on the establishment of an international criminal court, including on the timing and the duration of the conference.

11 December 1995 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/50/639 & Corr.1) by consensus, 29 November (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.6/50/L.14); agenda item 142. Financial implications. S-G, A/C.6/50/L.16.

International liability

Draft articles on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law were again considered by ILC in 1995 on the basis of the eleventh report⁽¹¹⁾ of its Special Rapporteur, Julio Barboza (Argentina), who proposed adding a new text concerning harm to the environment. The Commission decided to consider that report and his tenth report, submitted in 1994,⁽¹²⁾ at its next session. The Commission also had before it a study prepared by the Secretariat on the survey of liability regimes relevant to the topic of international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law.⁽¹³⁾

In July, the Commission considered and provisionally adopted articles which had been referred to its Drafting Committee in 1988⁽¹⁴⁾ and 1989⁽¹⁵⁾ on the freedom of action and the limits thereto (article A [6]); prevention (article B [8 and 9]); liability and compensation (article C [9 and 10]); and cooperation (article D [7]).

State responsibility for wrongful acts

The Commission continued in 1995 consideration of draft articles on State responsibility for wrongful acts, based on the seventh report dealing with the subject⁽¹⁶⁾ submitted by Special Rapporteur Gaetano Arangio-Ruiz (Italy). The Special Rapporteur dealt with the legal consequences of internationally wrongful acts characterized as crimes under article 19 of Part One of the draft articles and with the settlement of disputes relating to the legal consequences of an international crime. The first question was addressed in six new draft articles to be included in Part Two (articles 15 to 20) and the second in a new draft article 7 to be included in Part Three of the draft.

The Commission referred the articles contained in the Special Rapporteur's report to its Drafting Committee. The Commission received from the Committee a set of new articles and an annex thereto for inclusion in Part Three of the draft concerning the settlement of disputes, which it adopted on first reading. Concerning countermeasures, the Commission had before it draft commentaries to articles 11 (countermeasures by an injured State), 13 (proportionality) and 14 (prohibited countermeasures). It provisionally adopted articles 13 and 14 and the commentaries thereto but did not consider article 11 due to a lack of time.

Impact of State succession on nationality of natural and legal persons

In accordance with a decision taken in 1994,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission began work on State succession and its impact on the nationality of natural and legal persons, on the basis of the first report⁽¹⁸⁾ by its Special Rapporteur, Václav Mikulka (Czech Republic). The Special Rapporteur examined the relevance of the topic, the concept and function of nationality, roles of internal and international law, limitations on the freedom of States in the area of nationality, categories of succession, scope of the problem under consideration and the continuity of nationality.

On 1 June, the Commission established a working group to identify issues arising out of the topic, categorize those issues which were closely related thereto, give guidance to the Commission as to which issues could be most profitably pursued given contemporary concerns and present the Commission with a calendar of action. The Commission decided to reconvene the working group at its next session to complete the preliminary study on the subject, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽¹⁹⁾

In December, the Assembly, in resolution 50/45, requested the Secretary-General to again invite Governments to submit materials, including treaties, national legislation, decisions of national tribunals and diplomatic and official correspondence relevant to the topic "State succession and its impact on the nationality of natural and legal persons".

International State relations and international law

Safety and security of UN and associated personnel

Status of Convention

The 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel,⁽¹⁾ which was opened for signature at UN Headquarters on 15 December 1994 and remained open until 31 December 1995, was ratified by Denmark, Norway and Ukraine; Japan had accepted it.⁽²⁾ The Convention was to enter into force 30 days after 22 instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession had been deposited with the Secretary-General. Forty-three States signed the Convention.

Measures to eliminate terrorism

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General in an August report with later addendum⁽⁴⁾ presented information on the implementation of the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism⁽⁵⁾ received from eight Member States, two specialized agencies and one regional organization.

The Secretary-General reported on the application of paragraph 10 of the Declaration concerning: data collection on agreements relating to terrorism; a compendium of national laws and regulations; an analytical review of existing international legal instruments; and a review of existing possibilities within the UN for assisting States in organizing workshops and training courses on combating crimes connected with international terrorism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/53.

Measures to eliminate international terrorism

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism,

Recalling also that, in the statement issued on 31 January 1992 by the President of the Security Council on the occasion of the meeting of the Security Council at the level of heads of State and Government, the members of the Council expressed their deep concern over acts of international terrorism, and emphasized the need for the international community to deal effectively with all such acts,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Deeply disturbed by the persistence of terrorist acts, which have taken place worldwide,

Stressing the need further to strengthen international cooperation between States and between international organizations and agencies, regional organizations and arrangements and the United Nations in order to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 24 August 1995,

1. Strongly condemns all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable;

2. Reiterates that criminal acts intended or calculated to provoke a state of terror in the general public, a group of persons or particular persons for political purposes are in any circumstance unjustifiable, whatever the considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or any other nature that may be invoked to justify them;

3. Reaffirms the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism annexed to resolution 49/60;

4. Urges all States to promote and implement effectively and in good faith the provisions of the Declaration in all its aspects;

5. Also urges all States to strengthen cooperation with one another to ensure that those who participate in terrorist activities, whatever the nature of their participation, find no safe haven anywhere;

6. Calls upon all States to take the necessary steps to implement their obligations under existing international conventions, to observe fully the principles of international law and to contribute to the further development of international law on this matter;

7. Recalls the role of the Security Council in combating international terrorism whenever it poses a threat to international peace and security;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to follow up closely the implementation of the Declaration and to submit an annual report on the implementation of paragraph 10 of the Declaration, taking into account the modalities set out in his report and the views expressed by States in the debate of the Sixth Committee during the fiftieth session of the General Assembly;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Measures to eliminate international terrorism".

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomats

As at 31 December 1995,⁽¹⁾ the number of parties to the various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations was as follows: 174 States were parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations,⁽²⁾ 48 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality,⁽³⁾ and 61 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes.⁽³⁾

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations⁽⁴⁾ had 153 parties, with the Sudan acceding in 1995, 36 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality,⁽⁵⁾ and 44 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes.⁽⁵⁾

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents⁽⁶⁾ had 90 States parties, with Portugal acceding in 1995.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General invited States to communicate their views on measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as provided for in a 1987 Assembly resolution.⁽⁸⁾ In a September report,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General presented the texts and analytical summary of the information received. A total of 10 new reports of violations and additional information on previous cases were reported by States during the period 30 September 1994 to 18 August 1995. In connection with two reported cases in respect of which no information had been received within a reasonable period of time, the Secretary-General addressed reminders to those States. One follow-up report was received in response to those reminders. One State submitted views regarding the enhancement of diplomatic relations.

Status of diplomatic courier and bag

The General Assembly, by decision 50/416 of 11 December, decided to bring the draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and the draft optional protocols thereto, adopted by ILC on second reading in 1989,⁽¹⁰⁾ to the attention of Member States and to remind them of the possibility that that field of international law and any future developments within it might be subject to codification.

Treaties and agreements

Reservations to treaties

In 1995, ILC began consideration of the law and practice relating to reservations to treaties, on the basis of the first report by Special Rapporteur Alain Pellet (France).(¹) The Special Rapporteur reviewed the Commission's previous work on reservations, examined the problems related to the topic and discussed the Commission's future work. He concluded that it would be advantageous to fill the gaps in existing texts and do away with their ambiguities, through either draft articles additional to existing treaties, "consolidated" draft articles, a "guide to practice", model clauses or a combination of those approaches.

The Commission authorized the Special Rapporteur to prepare a questionnaire on reservations to treaties to ascertain the practice of, and problems encountered by, States and international organizations, particularly those which were depositaries of multilateral conventions.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/45, invited States and international organizations, particularly those which were depositaries, to answer the questionnaire promptly.

Treaties involving international organizations

The 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations,(²) which had not yet entered into force, had 23 States parties as at 31 December 1995.(³)

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 1995, some 1,250 international agreements and 612 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 542 registrations or formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded are published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1995, the following volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed in 1981, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1991 were issued:

1242, 1291, 1300, 1301, 1323, 1329, 1356, 1367, 1368, 1381, 1383, 1389, 1390, 1399, 1410, 1411, 1412, 1427, 1430, 1431, 1432, 1433, 1442, 1471, 1476, 1492, 1494, 1608, 1609, 1610/1611, 1612, 1613, 1614/1615, 1616/1617, 1618, 1619, 1620, 1621, 1622, 1623, 1624, 1625, 1626/1627, 1628, 1629, 1630/1631, 1632/1633, 1634/1635.

Chapter IV

Law of the sea

An important step in the ongoing global process to strengthen the international legal order for the world's oceans was taken in 1995 with the adoption of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks. The General Assembly called on States and other entities to sign and ratify or accede to the Agreement.

The implementation of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea continued to be a major area of international concern. The Assembly of the International Seabed Authority concluded its first session and States parties met twice during the year to consider issues relating to setting up the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea.

The Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention on the Law of the Sea, governing exploration for and exploitation of seabed resources beyond the area of national jurisdiction, was closed for signature on 28 July 1995. The General Assembly called on States that had not done so to become parties to the Convention and to the Agreement.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

The number of parties to the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea increased to 83 during 1995: Argentina, Austria, Bolivia, the Cook Islands, Greece, India, Italy, Lebanon and Samoa ratified the Convention, Croatia and Slovenia succeeded to it, and Jordan and Tonga acceded.⁽¹⁾ The Convention, adopted by the Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982,⁽²⁾ entered into force on 16 November 1994.

Meetings of States parties. The second (15-19 May)⁽³⁾ and third (27 November-1 December)⁽⁴⁾ meetings of States parties to the Convention, both held in New York, considered organizational matters relating to the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, a draft budget and a draft protocol on privileges and immunities (see below for details).

Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the Convention

On 28 July 1995, the Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the Convention, adopted by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽⁵⁾ had been signed by 79 States and was closed for signature. On that date, 16 States became bound by the Agreement under the simplified procedure set out in article 5. Eleven States, which had been parties to the Convention before the adoption of the Agreement, notified the depositary in writing that they were not availing themselves of the simplified procedure. Some others, which had also notified that they were not availing themselves of the procedure under article 5, proceeded with the ratification of the Agreement.

According to article 6, the Agreement would enter into force 30 days after the date on which 40 States had established their consent to be bound, provided that such States included at least seven of the States referred to in paragraph 1 (a) of resolution II of the Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea and that at least five of those States were developed States. Although 41 States had consented to be bound by the Agreement, the requirements of article 6 had not been met for the Agreement to enter into force. However, pending its entry into force, the Agreement was being applied provisionally by 125 States as at 31 December 1995.⁽¹⁾ Among the States entitled to apply the Agreement provisionally by virtue either of their consent to the adoption of the Agreement in the General Assembly or of their signature, 14 States had notified the Secretary-General that they did not wish to apply it provisionally. For those States, their consent to be bound by the Agreement was subject to ratification.

Agreement on the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks

Following consideration of a draft text at its fifth and sixth sessions (New York, 27 March-12 April and 24 July-4 August),⁽⁶⁾ the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, on 4 August, adopted the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks.⁽⁷⁾ The Agreement aimed at facilitating the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Convention relating to the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, as well as strengthening the cooperation of States for that purpose. Among other things, it established minimum international standards for the conservation and management of the two stocks; ensured that the conservation and management measures were adhered to and complied with, and were not undermined by those who fished for the stocks; and provided for peaceful settlement of disputes.

The Agreement, which was opened for signature in New York on 4 December 1995, had been signed by 29 States as at 31 December.⁽¹⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly requests of 1988⁽²⁾ and 1994,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October the final report on the work of the Conference.⁽⁴⁾ Annexed to his report were the text of the Agreement and guidelines for the application of precautionary reference points in conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/24.

Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/192 of 22 December 1992, 48/194 of 21 December 1993 and 49/121 of 19 December 1994, concerning the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks,

Taking note of resolutions I and II adopted by the Conference,

Recognizing the importance of the regular consideration and review of developments relating to the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 October 1995 on the work of the Conference,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks for discharging its mandate under resolution 47/192 with the adoption of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks;

2. Welcomes the opening for signature of the Agreement on 4 December 1995;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the early entry into force and effective implementation of the Agreement;

4. Calls upon all States and the other entities referred to in article 1, paragraph 2 (b), of the Agreement that have not done so to sign and ratify or accede to it and to consider applying it provisionally;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on developments relating to the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks at its fifty-first session and biennially thereafter, taking into account information provided by States, relevant specialized agencies, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and other appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and arrangements for the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, as well as other relevant intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that reporting on all major fisheries-related activities and instruments is effectively coordinated and duplication of activities and reporting minimized and that relevant scientific and technical studies are disseminated to the international community, and invites the relevant specialized agencies, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, as well as regional and subregional fisheries organizations and arrangements, to cooperate with the Secretary-General to that end;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session, under the item entitled "Law of the sea", a sub-item entitled "Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks".

Other developments related to the Convention

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, submitted in November a report⁽²⁾ covering developments relating to the law of the sea. The report consisted of two parts. The first part discussed developments relating to the implementation of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea, reported on actions taken by States, the Secretary-General and relevant international organizations, and examined preparations for the establishment of the institutions created by the Convention and legal developments under related treaties and instruments. The second part dealt with other issues relating to the law of the sea and ocean affairs, including maritime disputes and conflicts, peace and security, crimes at sea, conservation and management of living marine resources, major policy and programme initiatives in marine environmental protection and sustainable resource development, marine safety and pollution prevention, marine science and technology and capacity-building in the law of the sea and ocean affairs.

The Secretary-General noted that the 1994 Agreement relating to the implementation of Part

XI of the Convention had successfully facilitated a wider acceptance of the Convention and, with the adoption of the 1995 Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, there was new, concrete evidence of the international community's determination to strengthen the international legal order for the oceans. He described the activities of the UN Environment Programme, the relevant specialized agencies and the regional commissions under related instruments, involving in particular questions of conformity and consistency with the Convention. He also described action taken by States concerning maritime limits and legislation they had adopted or modified to comply with the Convention.

The Secretary-General stated that, in accordance with his obligation to draw up and maintain lists of conciliators and arbitrators for the conciliation and arbitration procedures, he had invited States to nominate conciliators and arbitrators. He had drawn to the attention of the relevant organizations their obligation to draw up lists of experts in the area of fisheries, protection and preservation of the marine environment, marine scientific research and navigation, including pollution from vessels and by dumping.

In anticipation of the establishment before 16 May 1996, under the Convention, of the 21-member Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, comprising experts in geology, geophysics or hydrography, the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea, as the secretariat of the Commission, identified some of the issues to be addressed by the Commission when examining the submissions of coastal States, while a group of experts (New York, 11-14 September) focused on the functions and the scientific and technical needs of the Commission. The Secretary-General noted that the Division continued to develop a computer-generated information system on national legislation related to the law of the sea.

Institutions created by the Convention

International Seabed Authority

The Assembly of the International Seabed Authority, the latter established by the Convention with its seat in Jamaica, held in 1995 the second (Kingston, 27 February-17 March)⁽¹³⁾ and third (Kingston, 7-18 August)⁽¹⁴⁾ parts of its first session, the first part having been held in 1994.⁽¹⁵⁾

One of the earliest tasks of the Assembly was to elect the 36-member Council—the executive organ of the Assembly—comprising four groups representing in essence four sets of interests:

consumers/importers of the minerals that could be supplied from the deep seabed sources; investors in deep seabed mining; producers/exporters of such minerals from land-based sources and developing States representing special interests; and a group of 18 members elected according to the principle of ensuring an equitable geographical distribution of seats in the Council as a whole. Although substantial progress was made within each group and among the various groups, including among the five regions, and in spite of efforts by the President of the Assembly, the bureau and individual delegations, the Council could not be composed by the end of the Assembly's first session. Informal inter-sessional consultations by the President on this subject were held in New York from 6 to 8 December.

Other matters considered by the Assembly included the priorities of the Authority during its initial phase of work; recommendations of the Preparatory Commission for the International Seabed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea; and follow-up of the Commission's decisions concerning registered pioneer investors. It was suggested that the Assembly consider the issue of transparency in the relationship between the Council and the wider membership of the Assembly, and the development of principles regarding environmental protection. The Assembly also discussed the training programme relating to seabed mining. The Secretariat informed the Assembly that it had received a number of reports from registered pioneer investors regarding the discharge of their obligations, including the provision of training. The Assembly set up an open-ended ad hoc working group to examine the draft Headquarters Agreement, which was to be used as a starting-point for negotiations with the Government of Jamaica. The Kingston Office for the Law of the Sea, which the Secretary-General had planned to abolish on 30 September, was continued as the interim secretariat of the Authority as from 1 October. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly in 1995, on behalf of the Authority, a draft budget concerning the Authority's administrative expenses for 1996. On the recommendation of its Credentials Committee, the Assembly decided that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should not participate at its first session.

The final report of the Preparatory Commission⁽¹⁶⁾ on its work from 1983 to 1994 was presented to the Assembly by the Commission Chairman.

Communication. In response to the Assembly's decision not to allow Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to participate in its first session, Yugoslavia, in a 25 August letter⁽¹⁷⁾ to the Secretary-

General, stated that the decision had no legal basis in the Convention on the Law of the Sea and contravened the opinion of the UN Legal Counsel that the status of Yugoslavia as a party to the treaties was not affected by a 1992 General Assembly resolution.⁽¹⁸⁾ Yugoslavia pointed out that it had fulfilled all the conditions for equitable participation in the work of the International Seabed Authority, its organs and, in particular, its Assembly.

Financing of the Authority

As requested by the Assembly of the International Seabed Authority, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the Authority's programme of work and draft budget for 1996.⁽¹⁹⁾ The total budget amounted to $2,656,800, consisting of $1,318,900 for conference servicing expenses and $1,337,900 for expenses of the secretariat (see PART SIX, Chapter II, for General Assembly action).

International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

The second⁽³⁾ and third⁽⁴⁾ meetings of States parties to the Convention continued to consider arrangements for the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea—the central institution for dispute settlement under the Convention.

The States parties, in May, decided that the members of the Tribunal would hold their first organizational session on 1 October 1996 and would meet for up to 12 weeks during the period of the budget to decide on the internal organization of the Tribunal. The President of the Tribunal would reside at the seat of the Tribunal; all other members would attend meetings as required. Members would be paid an annual allowance, a special allowance and a subsistence allowance, but overall remuneration would not exceed that of a judge of the International Court of Justice. As to the use of the official and working languages of the Tribunal and the use of other languages, the States parties decided, among other things, that the official languages were English and French. Conclusions were reached on the Registry and funding of the Tribunal and on the cost-effectiveness of its work. The States parties agreed that the judges should take up office in September 1996. They requested the Secretariat to submit a draft budget covering the initial period from 1 August 1996 to 31 December 1997, which the Secretariat did on 31 August.⁽²⁰⁾

Regarding progress in the preparations for the site of the permanent headquarters of the Tribunal, Germany stated that construction would begin by the start of 1996 and be completed by the end of 1998. In the meantime, the Government would provide temporary buildings and interim equipment. Germany had offered in 1987 to establish the Tribunal in Hamburg. The meeting had before it the record of the work of the Preparatory Commission containing recommendations on practical arrangements for the establishment of the Tribunal.⁽²¹⁾

Following consideration of the draft initial budget of the Tribunal at the third meeting, the States parties requested the Secretariat to revise the draft budget for adoption at their next meeting and to revise its own budget to cover the costs of preparatory work to be carried out by the Secretary-General after the budget was adopted in March 1996 and before the judges were elected on 1 August 1996. The States parties conducted an article-by-article review of the draft protocol on the privileges and immunities of the Tribunal. A revised text was to be distributed in advance of the next meeting. It was agreed that the form of the instrument would be an agreement subject to signature and ratification and opened to all States. The meeting decided to reconvene in March 1996 to adopt the revised draft budget of the Tribunal and discuss related matters, in May to consider organizational matters and in July/August to elect the members of the Tribunal.

Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf

With the entry into force of the Convention, another new institution, the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, was to be established. The functions of the Commission would be: to consider the data and other material submitted by coastal States concerning the outer limits of the continental shelf in areas where those limits extended beyond 200 miles, and to make recommendations in accordance with article 76 and the statement of understanding adopted by the Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea concerning a specific method to be used in establishing the outer edge of the continental margin; and to provide scientific and technical advice, if requested by the coastal State concerned, during the preparation of such data. The members of the Commission were to be elected at a meeting of States parties convened by the Secretary-General. The Commission would consist of 21 members who were experts in the areas of geology, geophysics or hydrography, elected by States parties from among their nationals.

The third meeting of States parties agreed that the election of the members of the Commission would be postponed until March 1997, with the proviso that should any State which was a party to the Convention by 16 May 1996 be affected adversely in respect of its obligations under the Convention as a consequence of the postponement, States parties, at the request of such a State, would review the situation with a view to ameliorating the difficulty in respect of that obligation.

In an effort to ensure that the Commission upon its establishment had sufficient material and information and to facilitate an efficient commencement of its work, and without prejudice to the decisions of the Commission in that regard, the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea, as the secretariat of the Commission, identified some of the issues that would have to be addressed by the Commission when it began its examination of the submissions of coastal States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/23.

Law of the sea

The General Assembly,

Emphasizing the universal character of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and its fundamental importance for the maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security, as well as for the sustainable use and development of the seas and oceans and their resources,

Considering that, in its resolution 2749(XXV) of 17 December 1970, it proclaimed that the seabed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction (hereinafter referred to as "the Area"), as well as the resources of the Area, are the common heritage of mankind, and considering also that the Convention, together with the Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982, provides the regime to be applied to the Area and its resources,

Recalling its resolution 49/28 of 6 December 1994 on the law of the sea, adopted consequent to the entry into force of the Convention on 16 November 1994,

Aware of the importance of the effective implementation of the Convention and its uniform and consistent application, as well as of the growing need to promote and facilitate international cooperation on the law of the sea and ocean affairs at the global, regional and subregional levels,

Conscious of the strategic importance of the Convention as a framework for national, regional and global action in the marine sector, as recognized also by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Recognizing the impact on States of the entry into force of the Convention and the increasing need, particularly of developing States, for advice and assistance in its implementation in order to benefit thereunder,

Noting the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and competent international organizations under the Convention, in particular pursuant to its entry into force and as required by resolution 49/28,

Reaffirming the importance of the annual consideration and review by the General Assembly of the overall developments pertaining to the implementation of the Convention, as well as of other developments relating to the law of the sea and ocean affairs,

Noting the decisions taken by States parties to the Convention to convene meetings of States parties to deal with the initial budget and organizational and other related matters of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea in preparation for its establishment and the election of its members, as well as to prepare for and organize the election of the members of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf,

Noting also that the Assembly of the International Seabed Authority has concluded its first session and has scheduled two meetings of the Authority for 1996, from 11 March for up to three weeks, if necessary, and from 5 August for up to two weeks, in Kingston,

Noting further that the Assembly of the Authority requested arrangements for the interim secretariat of the Authority, authorizing the Secretary-General to administer the interim secretariat until the Secretary-General of the Authority is able to assume effectively the responsibility of the Authority's secretariat,

Recalling that the Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 provides that the institutions established by the Convention shall be cost-effective, and recalling also that the meeting of States parties to the Convention decided that this principle would apply to all aspects of the work of the Tribunal,

Emphasizing the importance of making adequate provisions for the efficient functioning of the institutions established by the Convention,

1. Calls upon all States that have not done so to become parties to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and to ratify, confirm formally or accede to the Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 in order to achieve the goal of universal participation;

2. Calls upon States to harmonize their national legislation with the provisions of the Convention and to ensure the consistent application of those provisions;

3. Reaffirms the unified character of the Convention;

4. Recalls its decision to fund the budget for the administrative expenses of the International Seabed Authority initially from the regular budget of the United Nations, in accordance with the provisions of the Agreement;

5. Approves the provision by the Secretary-General of such services as may be required for the two meetings of the Authority to be held in 1996, from 11 to 22 March and from 5 to 16 August;

6. Approves also the request of the Assembly of the Authority to continue the staff and facilities previously available to the Kingston Office for the Law of the Sea as the interim secretariat of the Authority, and authorizes the Secretary-General to administer the interim secretariat until the Secretary-General of the Authority is able to assume effectively the responsibility of the Authority's secretariat;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to convene the meetings of States parties to the Convention from 4 to 8 March, from 6 to 10 May and from 29 July to 2 August 1996;

8. Notes with appreciation the progress made in practical arrangements for the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and in preparations for the establishment of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the annual comprehensive report on the law of the sea and the activities of the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and the mandate set forth in resolution 49/28;

10. Reaffirms the importance of ensuring the uniform and consistent application of the Convention and a coordinated approach to its effective implementation, and of strengthening technical cooperation and financial assistance for this purpose, stresses once again the continuing importance of the Secretary-General's efforts to these ends, and reiterates its invitation to the competent international organizations and other international bodies to support these objectives;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the institutional capacity of the Organization adequately responds to the needs of States and competent international organizations by providing advice and assistance, taking into account the special needs of developing countries;

12. Invites Member States and others in a position to do so to contribute to the further development of the fellowship programme on the law of the sea and training and educational activities on the law of the sea and ocean affairs established by the Assembly in its resolution 35/116 of 10 December 1980, and advisory services in support of effective implementation of the Convention;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution, in connection with his annual comprehensive report on the law of the sea;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Law of the sea".

Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea

In 1995, in order to carry out the functions entrusted to the Secretary-General under the Convention and pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs established facilities for the deposit of charts and lists of geographical coordinates, including geodetic data, and adopted a system for their recording and publicity. It devised an internal computerized "data record" and began to prepare a "Maritime Zone Notification" (MZN) to inform States parties of the deposit of charts and geographical coordinates. The first MZN, dated 8 March 1995, concerned the deposit by Germany of the charts and geographical coordinates of its territorial sea and exclusive economic zone.

The Division brought to the attention of States parties its willingness to assist them with their "due publicity" obligations under the Convention. Coastal States were to give "due publicity" to all laws and regulations they might adopt on innocent passage through the territorial sea; States bordering straits, to all laws and regulations they might adopt relating to transit passage through straits used for international navigation; and coastal States, States bordering straits and archipelagic States, to the charts indicating the designation, prescription or substitution of sea lanes and traffic separation schemes in the territorial sea and in straits used for international navigation as well as of air routes above archipelagic sea lanes used for international overflight. The Division continued to develop a computer-generated information system on national legislation relating to the law of the sea. It completed a review of national legislative acts of more than 140 States and established an inventory of those acts. The pilot version of the computerized system was operational. The Division established contacts with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) to develop a centralized system with integrated databases for providing coordinated information and advice on legislation and marine policy. Steps were taken to advance future cooperation, including electronic transmission of data between the Division and FAO, with a view to establishing similar links with other agencies and organizations. Through such links, a substantial increase in Division capabilities was expected in view of the implementation of the Convention and the adoption of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks. The Division established a list of focal points for law of the sea matters in a number of relevant international organizations.

A special contribution by the United Kingdom made it possible to award two fellowships under the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea—established in 1981⁽²²⁾ and presented annually in honour of the first President of the Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea. The ninth annual award was granted to Maurice Kengne Kamgue, a diplomatic officer from Cameroon; Frank Elizabeth, a State Counsel of Seychelles, received the special award under the United Kingdom contribution.

Chapter V

Other legal questions

In 1995, the United Nations continued its work on various aspects of international law and international economic law.

Meeting in February/March, the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization discussed proposals for the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes. It completed the final text of the UN Model Rules for the Conciliation of Disputes between States, which the General Assembly drew to the attention of States; they could be applied whenever a dispute could not be solved through direct negotiations. The Assembly, recognizing that substantial changes had taken place in the world and that therefore the "enemy State" clauses in Articles 53, 77 and 107 of the Charter had become obsolete, expressed its intention to amend the Charter by deleting those clauses.

The United Nations continued to deal with the increased use of sanctions by the Security Council, which sometimes had unintended effects on the target country's neighbours or major economic partners. The Secretary-General suggested the establishment of a mechanism to mitigate negative effects. The Assembly requested him to make certain arrangements in that regard and invited the UN system to address the special economic problems confronting those States.

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country addressed relations between the UN diplomatic community and the United States. Noting that the problem of diplomatic indebtedness was a matter of significant concern and that non-payment of undisputed debts tarnished the image of the Organization, the Assembly endorsed procedures proposed by the Committee for dealing with the issue.

Organized by the Secretary-General, the UN Congress on Public International Law was held in March 1995, focusing on the four main purposes of the UN Decade of International Law (1990-1999)—to promote acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law; to promote means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice; to encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification; and to encourage the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law—as well as on new challenges and expectations for the next century.

A step in the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law was the adoption by the Assembly of the UN Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit, prepared by the UN Commission on International Trade Law. The Working Group on International Contract Practices had devoted 11 sessions over five years to the drafting of the Convention.

International organizations and international law

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

Special Committee on the Charter

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization (New York, 27 February-10 March)⁽¹⁾ continued consideration of proposals for the maintenance of international peace and security and the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in that context, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽²⁾

The Committee also discussed the question of deleting the "enemy State" clauses in the Charter and completed its work on the draft UN Model Rules for the Conciliation of Disputes between States (see below).

In connection with the maintenance of international peace and security, the Special Committee had before it a revised working paper on implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter (see below) submitted by 21 States;⁽³⁾ a working paper by the Russian Federation proposing new issues for consideration by the Committee;⁽⁴⁾ a revised proposal by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for enhancing the effectiveness of the Security Council;⁽⁵⁾ and a second revised working paper by Cuba on strengthening the role of the Organization and enhancement of its efficiency.⁽⁶⁾

tee had before it the text of the draft UN Model Rules for the Conciliation of Disputes between States, as well as amendments by Guatemala to those Rules,⁽⁶⁾ and a proposal by Sierra Leone on the establishment of a dispute settlement service to address disputes at an early stage.⁽⁷⁾ The Special Committee completed its work on the draft Model Rules, which it submitted to the General Assembly for consideration (see below).

In accordance with the Assembly's 1994 request,⁽²⁾ the Special Committee continued to review its membership. It had before it working papers by New Zealand⁽⁷⁾ and by New Zealand and Uruguay⁽⁸⁾ proposing that it be transformed into an open-ended subsidiary organ of the Assembly to ensure the participation of all Member States in its work. The Special Committee recommended to the Assembly that its membership be opened to all Member States and that it continue to operate by consensus.

Deletion of the "enemy State" clauses

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Special Committee's Working Group of the Whole discussed, between 7 and 10 March, the deletion of the "enemy State" clauses in Articles 53, 77 and 107 of the Charter. Some delegations considered that the amendment procedure should be undertaken as an integral part of the broad process of reforms to the Charter being examined by the Assembly. The Special Committee recommended a draft resolution, by which the Assembly, recognizing that in view of the substantial changes that had taken place in the world the "enemy State" clauses of the Charter had become obsolete, would express its intention to initiate the procedure set out in Article 108 to amend the Charter to that effect at its earliest appropriate future session.

In a 29 November letter⁽⁹⁾ to the Secretary-General, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea stated that the deletion of the "enemy State" clauses should not be viewed from a time perspective and, as long as past crimes remained unsettled, the clauses could not be considered obsolete.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/52.

Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3499(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it established the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, and its relevant resolutions adopted at subsequent sessions,

Recalling also its resolution 47/233 of 17 August 1993 on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly,

Recalling further its resolution 47/62 of 11 December 1992 on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council,

Bearing in mind the provisions of its resolution 50/55 of 11 December 1995,

Conscious of the ongoing discussion in the open-ended working groups of the General Assembly dealing with the various aspects of the revitalization, strengthening and reform of the work of the United Nations,

Welcoming the report of the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council,

Bearing in mind the reports of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh, forty-eighth, forty-ninth and fiftieth sessions, as well as the views and comments expressed on them by Member States,

Recalling the elements relevant to the work of the Special Committee contained in its resolution 47/120 B of 20 September 1993,

Mindful of the desirability for the Special Committee to carry out further work in the fields of the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,

Recalling its resolution 49/58 of 9 December 1994,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the work of its session held in 1995,

Taking note of the recommendation of the Special Committee on the most appropriate legal action to be taken on the question of the deletion of the "enemy State" clauses from Articles 53, 77 and 107 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that, having regard to the substantial changes that have taken place in the world, the "enemy State" clauses in Articles 53, 77 and 107 of the Charter have become obsolete,

Noting that the States to which those clauses were directed are Members of the United Nations and represent a valuable asset in all the endeavours of the Organization,

Taking into account the complex process involved in amending the Charter,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization;

2. Decides that the Special Committee will hold its next session from 21 February to 5 March 1996;

3. Expresses its intention to initiate the procedure set out in Article 108 of the Charter of the United Nations to amend the Charter, with prospective effect, by the deletion of the "enemy State" clauses from Articles 53, 77 and 107 at its earliest appropriate future session;

4. Requests the Special Committee, at its session in 1996, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 below:

(a) To accord appropriate time for the consideration of all proposals concerning the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations and, in this context, to consider other proposals relating to the maintenance of international peace and security already submitted or which might be submitted to the Special Committee at its session in 1996, including the proposal on the strengthening of the role of the Organization and enhancing its effectiveness and the revised proposal submitted with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of the Security Council in regard to the maintenance of international peace and security, and to consider recommending to the General Assembly the desired priorities for its further consideration;

(b) To continue to consider on a priority basis the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, taking into consideration the report of the Secretary-General, the proposals presented on this subject, the debate on this question which took place in the Sixth Committee at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly and, in particular, the implementation of the provisions of its resolution 50/51 of 11 December 1995;

(c) To continue its work on the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, and in this context to continue its consideration of proposals relating to the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including the proposal on the establishment of a dispute settlement service offering or responding with its services early in disputes and those proposals relating to the enhancement of the role of the International Court of Justice;

(d) To continue its consideration of the question of the enhancement of cooperation between the United Nations and regional arrangements or agencies in the maintenance of international peace and security;

(e) To consider proposals concerning the Trusteeship Council;

(f) To consider the status of the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council;

5. Decides that the Special Committee shall henceforth be open to all States Members of the United Nations and that it will continue to operate on the basis of the practice of consensus;

6. Decides also that the Special Committee shall be authorized to accept the participation of observers of States other than States Members of the United Nations which are members of the specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency in its meetings, and further decides to invite intergovernmental organizations to participate in the debate in the plenary meetings of the Committee on specific items when it considers that such participation would assist in the work.

7. Invites the Special Committee at its session in 1996 to identify new subjects for consideration in its future work with a view to contributing to the revitalization of the work of the United Nations, and to discuss how to offer its assistance to the working groups of the General Assembly in this field;

8. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at the fifty-first session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Against: None.

Abstaining: Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea, which requested a recorded vote in the Sixth (Legal) Committee, stated that the text did not properly reflect the discussions and did not take into account its views or those of other delegations. Cuba said that its abstention was procedural, rather than a reservation to the text's substance; reflecting the views of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea would have reflected the negotiations more accurately. In the opinion of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the resolution should be part of a general revision of the Charter that would take into account the changes that had taken place in the world and abolish the privileges that a small number of States continued to enjoy at the United Nations.

Italy said it was particularly gratified by the paragraphs regarding the long-overdue deletion of the "enemy State" clauses, which would close a sad chapter in modern history, allow the United Nations to make a fresh start and mark the beginning of the true equality of all its Members, as proclaimed in the Preamble to the Charter. Welcoming the adoption of the text, Japan noted that its position, as previously expressed, remained unchanged.

France expressed full support for the resolution and for deleting the "enemy State" clauses but did not favour changing the Special Committee's composition. Nevertheless, it had voted for the text since it stipulated that consensus would be used within the Committee for decision-making, a practice that had been followed at recent sessions and that was in keeping with the technical nature of an open-ended body.

Model Rules for the Conciliation of Disputes

In considering the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, the Special Committee's Working Group continued its examination of the draft United Nations conciliation rules, proposed by Guatemala in 1993.⁽⁵⁾ The Group completed its second reading of the draft UN Model Rules for the Conciliation of Disputes between States and recommended that the General Assembly bring them to the attention of Member States by annexing them to a decision or resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/50.

United Nations Model Rules for the Conciliation of Disputes between States

The General Assembly,

Considering that conciliation is among the methods for the settlement of disputes between States enumerated by the Charter of the United Nations in Article 33, paragraph 1, that it has been provided for in numerous treaties, bilateral as well as multilateral, for the settlement of such disputes, and that it has proved its usefulness in practice,

Convinced that the establishment of model rules for the conciliation of disputes between States which incorporate the results of the most recent scholarly work and of experience in the field of international conciliation, as well as a number of innovations which can with advantage be made in the traditional practice in that area, can contribute to the development of harmonious relations between States,

1. Commends the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization for having completed the final text of the United Nations Model Rules for the Conciliation of Disputes between States;

2. Draws to the attention of States the possibility of applying the Model Rules, the text of which is annexed hereto, whenever a dispute has arisen between States which it has not been possible to solve through direct negotiations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, to the extent possible and in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Model Rules, to lend his assistance to the States resorting to conciliation on the basis of those Rules;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to distribute to Governments the text of the present resolution, including the annex.

Article 2

1. The conciliation proceedings shall begin as soon as the States concerned (henceforth: the parties) have agreed in writing to the application of the present rules, with or without amendments, as well as on a definition of the subject of the dispute, the number and emoluments of members of the conciliation commission, its seat and the maximum duration of the proceedings, as provided in article 24. If necessary, the agreement shall contain provisions concerning the language or languages in which the proceedings are to be conducted and the linguistic services required.

2. If the States cannot reach agreement on the definition of the subject of the dispute, they may by mutual agreement request the assistance of the Secretary-General of the United Nations to resolve the difficulty. They may also by mutual agreement request his assistance to resolve any other difficulty that they may encounter in reaching an agreement on the modalities of the conciliation proceedings.

Chapter III

Number and appointment of conciliators

Article 3

There may be three conciliators or five conciliators. In either case the conciliators shall form a commission.

Article 4

If the parties have agreed that three conciliators shall be appointed, each one of them shall appoint a conciliator, who may not be of its own nationality. The parties shall appoint by mutual agreement the third conciliator, who may not be of the nationality of any of the parties or of the other conciliators. The third conciliator shall act as president of the commission. If he is not appointed within two months of the appointment of the conciliators appointed individually by the parties, the third conciliator shall be appointed by the Government of a third State chosen by agreement between the parties or, if such agreement is not obtained within two months, by the President of the International Court of Justice. If the President is a national of one of the parties, the appointment shall be made by the Vice-President or the next member of the Court in order of seniority who is not a national of the parties. The third conciliator shall not reside habitually in the territory of the parties or be or have been in their service.

Article 5

1. If the parties have agreed that five conciliators should be appointed, each one of them shall appoint a conciliator who may be of its own nationality. The other three conciliators, one of whom shall be chosen with a view to his acting as president, shall be appointed by agreement between the parties from among nationals of third States and shall be of different nationalities. None of them shall reside habitually in the territory of the parties or be or have been in their service. None of them shall have the same nationality as that of the other two conciliators.

2. If the appointment of the conciliators whom the parties are to appoint jointly has not been effected within three months, they shall be appointed by the Government of a third State chosen by agreement between the parties or, if such an agreement is not reached within three months, by the President of the International Court of Justice. If the President is a national of one of the parties, the appointment shall be made by the Vice-President or the next judge in order of seniority who is not a national of the parties. The Government or member of the International Court of Justice making the appointment shall also decide which of the three conciliators shall act as president.

3. If, at the end of the three-month period referred to in the preceding paragraph, the parties have been able to appoint only one or two conciliators, the two conciliators or the conciliator still required shall be appointed in the manner described in the preceding paragraph. If the parties have not agreed that the conciliator or one of the two conciliators whom they have appointed shall act as president, the Government or member of the International Court of Justice appointing the two conciliators or the conciliator still required shall also decide which of the three conciliators shall act as president.

4. If, at the end of the three-month period referred to in paragraph 2 of this article, the parties have appointed three conciliators but have not been able to agree which of them shall act as president, the president shall be chosen in the manner described in that paragraph.

Article 6

Vacancies which may occur in the commission as a result of death, resignation or any other cause shall be filled as soon as possible by the method established for appointing the members to be replaced.

Chapter IV

Fundamental principles

Article 7

The commission, acting independently and impartially, shall endeavour to assist the parties in reaching an amicable settlement of the dispute. If no settlement is reached during the consideration of the dispute, the commission may draw up and submit appropriate recommendations to the parties for consideration.

Chapter V

Procedures and powers of the commission

Article 8

The commission shall adopt its own procedure.

Article 9

1. Before the commission begins its work, the parties shall designate their agents and shall communicate the names of such agents to the president of the commission. The president shall determine, in agreement with the parties, the date of the commission's first meeting, to which the members of the commission and the agents shall be invited.

2. The agents of the parties may be assisted before the commission by counsel and experts appointed by the parties.

3. Before the first meeting of the commission, its members may meet informally with the agents of the parties, if necessary, accompanied by the appointed counsel and experts to deal with administrative and procedural matters.

Article 10

1. At its first meeting, the commission shall appoint a secretary.

2. The secretary of the commission shall not have the nationality of any of the parties, shall not reside habitually in their territory and shall not be or have been in the service of any of them. He may be a United Nations official if the parties agree with the Secretary-General on the conditions under which the official will exercise these functions.

Article 11

1. As soon as the information provided by the parties so permits, the commission, having regard, in particular, to the time-limit laid down in article 24, shall decide in consultation with the parties whether the parties should be invited to submit written pleadings and, if so, in what order and within what time-limits, as well as the dates when, if necessary, the agents and counsel will be heard. The decisions taken by the commission in this regard may be amended at any later stage of the proceedings.

2. Subject to the provisions of article 20, paragraph 1, the commission shall not allow the agent or counsel of one party to attend a meeting without having also given the other party the opportunity to be represented at the same meeting.

Article 12

The parties, acting in good faith, shall facilitate the commission's work and, in particular, shall provide it to the greatest possible extent with whatever documents, information and explanations may be relevant.

Article 13

1. The commission may ask the parties for whatever relevant information or documents, as well as explanations, it deems necessary or useful. It may also make comments on the arguments advanced as well as the statements or proposals made by the parties.

2. The commission may accede to any request by a party that persons whose testimony it considers necessary or useful be heard, or that experts be consulted.

Article 14

In cases where the parties disagree on issues of fact, the commission may use all means at its disposal, such as the joint expert advisers mentioned in article 15, or consultation with experts, to ascertain the facts.

Article 15

The commission may propose to the parties that they jointly appoint expert advisers to assist it in the consideration of technical aspects of the dispute. If the proposal is accepted, its implementation shall be conditional upon the expert advisers being appointed by the parties by mutual agreement and accepted by the commission and upon the parties fixing their emoluments.

Article 16

Each party may at any time, at its own initiative or at the initiative of the commission, make proposals for the settlement of the dispute. Any proposal made in accordance with this article shall be communicated immediately to the other party by the president, who may, in so doing, transmit any comment the commission may wish to make thereon.

Article 17

At any stage of the proceedings, the commission may, at its own initiative or at the initiative of one of the parties, draw the attention of the parties to any measures which in its opinion might be advisable or facilitate a settlement.

Article 18

The commission shall endeavour to take its decisions unanimously but, if unanimity proves impossible, it may take them by a majority of votes of its members. Abstentions are not allowed. Except in matters of procedure, the presence of all members shall be required in order for a decision to be valid.

Article 19

The commission may, at any time, ask the Secretary-General of the United Nations for advice or assistance with regard to the administrative or procedural aspects of its work.

Chapter VI

Conclusion of the conciliation proceedings

Article 20

1. On concluding its consideration of the dispute, the commission may, if full settlement has not been reached, draw up and submit appropriate recommendations to the parties for consideration. To that end, it may hold an exchange of views with the agents of the parties, who may be heard jointly or separately.

2. The recommendations adopted by the commission shall be set forth in a report communicated by the president of the commission to the agents of the parties, with a request that the agents inform the commission, within a given period, whether the parties accept them. The president may include in the report the reasons which, in the commission's view, might prompt the parties to accept the recommendations submitted. The commission shall refrain from presenting in its report any final conclusions with regard to facts or from ruling formally on issues of law, unless the parties have jointly asked it to do so.

3. If the parties accept the recommendations submitted by the commission, a procès-verbal shall be drawn up setting forth the conditions of acceptance. The procès-verbal shall be signed by the president and the secretary. A copy thereof signed by the secretary shall be provided to each party. This shall conclude the proceedings.

4. Should the commission decide not to submit recommendations to the parties, its decision to that effect shall be recorded in a procès-verbal signed by the president and the secretary. A copy thereof signed by the secretary shall be provided to each party. This shall conclude the proceedings.

Article 21

1. The recommendations of the commission will be submitted to the parties for consideration in order to facilitate an amicable settlement of the dispute. The parties undertake to study them in good faith, carefully and objectively.

2. If one of the parties does not accept the recommendations and the other party does, it shall inform the latter, in writing, of the reasons why it could not accept them.

Article 22

1. If the recommendations are not accepted by both parties but the latter wish efforts to continue in order to reach agreement on different terms, the proceedings shall be resumed. Article 24 shall apply to the resumed proceedings, with the relevant time-limit, which the parties may, by mutual agreement, shorten or extend, running from the commission's first meeting after resumption of the proceedings.

2. If the recommendations are not accepted by both parties and the latter do not wish further efforts to be made to reach agreement on different terms, a procès-verbal signed by the president commission shall be drawn up, omitting the proposed terms and indicating that the parties were unable to accept them and do not wish further efforts to be made to reach agreement on different terms. The proceedings shall be concluded when each party has received a copy of the procès-verbal signed by the secretary.

Article 23

Upon conclusion of the proceedings, the president of the commission shall, with the prior agreement of the parties, deliver the documents in the possession of the secretariat of the commission either to the Secretary-General of the United Nations or to another person or entity agreed upon by the parties. Without prejudice to the possible application of article 26, paragraph 2, the confidentiality of the documents shall be preserved.

Article 24

The commission shall conclude its work within the period agreed upon by the parties. Any extension of this period shall be agreed upon by the parties.

Chapter VII

Confidentiality of the commission's work and documents

Article 25

1. The commission's meetings shall be closed. The parties and the members and expert advisers of the commission, the agents and counsel of the parties, and the secretary and the secretariat staff, shall maintain strictly the confidentiality of any documents or statements, or any communication concerning the progress of the proceedings unless their disclosure has been approved by both parties in advance.

2. Each party shall receive, through the secretary, certified copies of any minutes of the meetings at which it was represented.

3. Each party shall receive, through the secretary, certified copies of any documentary evidence received and of experts' reports, records of investigations and statements by witnesses.

Article 26

1. Except with regard to certified copies referred to in article 25, paragraph 3, the obligation to respect the confidentiality of the proceedings and of the deliberations shall remain in effect for the parties and for members of the commission, expert advisers and secretariat staff after the proceedings are concluded and shall extend to recommendations and proposals which have not been accepted.

2. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the parties may, upon conclusion of the proceedings and by mutual agreement, make available to the public all or some of the documents that in accordance with the preceding paragraph are to remain confidential, or authorize the publication of all or some of those documents.

Chapter VIII

Obligation not to act in a manner which might have an adverse effect on the conciliation

Article 27

The parties shall refrain during the conciliation proceedings from any measure which might aggravate or widen the dispute. They shall, in particular, refrain from any measures which might have an adverse effect on the recommendations submitted by the commission, so long as those recommendations have not been explicitly rejected by either of the parties.

Chapter IX

Preservation of the legal position of the parties

Article 28

1. Except as the parties may otherwise agree, neither party shall be entitled in any other proceedings, whether in a court of law or before arbitrators or before any other body, entity or person, to invoke any views expressed or statements, admissions or proposals made by the other party in the conciliation proceedings, but not accepted, or the report of the commission, the recommendations submitted by the commission or any proposal made by the commission, unless agreed to by both parties.

2. Acceptance by a party of recommendations submitted by the commission in no way implies any admission by it of the considerations of law or of fact which may have inspired the recommendations.

Chapter X

Costs

Article 29

The costs of the conciliation proceedings and the emoluments of expert advisers appointed in accordance with article 15 shall be borne by the parties in equal shares.

General Assembly resolution 50/50

11 December 1995 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/50/642 & Corr.1) by consensus, 29 November (meeting 46); 13-nation draft (A/C.6/50/L.11/Rev.1); agenda item 145. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 6th Committee 31-37, 44, 46; plenary 87.

Introducing the draft resolution in the Sixth Committee, Guatemala said that the most eminent specialists in international law had participated in the formulation of the Model Rules, which incorporated most of the new elements included in the conciliation rules adopted by the Institute of International Law in 1961. Referring to the second preambular paragraph, it stated that the concept of experience referred to the provisions traditionally applied at the bilateral level, particularly those of the 1957 European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes, and recalled that the very first treaty which had included provisions on conciliation had been concluded between France and Switzerland in 1925. The innovations referred to in the same paragraph were provisions proposed by Guatemala, on whose initiative the Model Rules had been drawn up, and by the Special Committee.

Application of sanctions

under Chapter VII of the Charter

According to the Secretary-General's January 1995 "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace",⁽¹⁰⁾ the Security Council's greatly increased use of sanctions under Article 41 of the Charter had brought to light a number of difficulties, including their unintended effects. There was also an urgent need to respond to the expectations raised by Article 50 of the Charter. The costs involved in the application of sanctions should be borne equitably by all Member States and not exclusively by the few who were neighbours or major economic partners of the target country. In "An Agenda for Peace",⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General had recommended that the Security Council devise measures involving the international financial institutions and other components of the UN system to address the problems of States suffering collateral damage from sanctions regimes. The Council in turn invited him in 1992⁽¹²⁾ to seek the views of the international financial institutions; in reply, they acknowledged the collateral effects of sanctions and expressed the desire to help countries in such situations, but proposed that that be done under existing mandates for the support of countries facing negative external shocks and consequent balance-of-payments difficulties.

Going beyond his 1992 recommendation, the Secretary-General suggested the establishment of a mechanism to address the problems related to sanctions, with the following functions: to assess the potential impact of sanctions on the target country and on third countries; to monitor the application of sanctions; to measure the effects of sanctions to enable the Council to fine-tune them with a view to maximizing their political impact and minimizing collateral damage; to ensure the delivery of humanitarian assistance to vulnerable groups; and to explore ways of assisting Member States suffering collateral damage and evaluate claims submitted by such States under Article 50. Such a mechanism would have to be located in the Secretariat and empowered to utilize the expertise of the United Nations system, in particular that of the Bretton Woods institutions (i.e., the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund).

The Secretary-General further explained that compensation to States affected by sanctions on their neighbours or economic partners would be possible only if the richer Member States recognized that such countries should not be expected to bear alone the costs resulting from action collectively decided on by the international community, and that such compensation was necessary to encourage them to cooperate in applying decisions taken by the Security Council. The sums involved would be large but had to be made available if the Council was to continue to rely on sanctions.

The Security Council, in a presidential statement of 22 February,⁽¹³⁾ declared that it remained concerned that appropriate consideration was given to submissions from neighbouring or other States affected by special economic problems as a result of the imposition of sanctions. It urged the Secretary-General to reinforce those sections of the Secretariat dealing directly with sanctions to ensure that those matters were addressed in as effective, consistent and timely a manner as possible.

The Working Group of the Special Committee on the Charter considered the issue in 1995. The Committee invited the General Assembly to establish an open-ended working group of the Sixth Committee to consider the issue of the implementation of the Charter provisions related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, on the basis of the Secretary-General's report on the subject.

In that report,⁽¹⁴⁾ submitted in August 1995 in response to a 1994 Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed proposals and suggestions aimed at minimizing the effect of sanctions on third States and on the provision of assistance to those States. He suggested consultations of the Security Council with potentially affected States and assessment of the potential impact of sanctions on them, as well as monitoring the effect of sanctions. He noted that at the 1995 session of the Special Committee, the proposal was made to establish a permanent mechanism for that purpose. Also discussed were the possibility of establishing a time-frame for the application of sanctions, based on their objectives, as well as measures to ensure transparency of the procedures of the Council and the sanctions committees, and possible exemptions from sanctions regimes. The Secretary-General examined the establishment of guidelines for the consideration of applications for assistance, including the assessment of special economic problems faced by third States as a result of sanctions; the establishment of a trust fund for those States; economic assistance provided by international financial institutions as well as bilateral and other forms of assistance; and Secretariat arrangements to assist States and evaluate claims under Article 50. He reported that he had taken steps to reinforce the unit dealing with sanctions in the Department of Political Affairs and had enhanced cooperation and coordination with inter-governmental organizations to provide the sanctions committees and the Secretariat with customs advice and other needed expertise. However, further steps were needed to strengthen the Secretariat's analytical and assessment capability to gauge the effectiveness of sanctions and their collateral effects.

A first step in that direction would be the development of guidelines, prepared in cooperation with the donor community, UN agencies and the affected countries, containing such elements as an inventory of assistance measures used in the past and recommended for the future; designation of a forum for consultations to mobilize and channel resources; and monitoring, coordination and assessment arrangements. The guidelines should also include methodology for impact assessment to ensure a link between the two processes in the practical implementation of Article 50.

In September, the Secretary-General reported,⁽¹⁵⁾ on economic assistance to States affected by sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The General Assembly, in resolution 50/58 E, reaffirmed the urgent need of a concerted response from the international community to deal in a more effective manner with the special economic problems of those States in view of their magnitude and the adverse impact of the sanctions on those States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/51.

Implementation of provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions

The General Assembly,

Concerned with the special economic problems confronting certain States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council against other States, and taking into account the obligation of Members of the United Nations under Article 49 of the Charter of the United Nations to join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council,

Recalling the right of third States confronted with special economic problems of that nature to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution to those problems, in accordance with Article 50 of the Charter,

Recalling also the 1994 and 1995 reports of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization containing sections on the consideration by the Committee of the proposals presented on the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Recalling further:

(a) The report of the Secretary-General, entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular paragraph 41 thereof;

(b) Its resolutions 47/120 A of 18 December 1992, entitled "An Agenda for Peace: preventive diplomacy and related matters", and 47/120 B of 20 September 1993, entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular section IV thereof, entitled "Special economic problems arising from the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures";

(c) The position paper of the Secretary-General, entitled "Supplement to An Agenda for Peace";

(d) The statement of the President of the Security Council of 22 February 1995;

(e) The report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to the note by the President of the Security Council regarding the question of special economic problems of States as a result of sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter;

(f) The reports of the Secretary-General on "Economic assistance to States affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Recalling that the question of assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions has been addressed recently in several forums, including the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs and the Security Council,

Recalling also the Security Council's intention expressed in the statement of the President of the Security Council of 16 December 1994 as part of the Council's effort to improve the flow of information and the exchange of ideas between members of the Council and other States Members of the United Nations that there should be increased recourse to open meetings, in particular at an early stage in its consideration of a subject,

Stressing that in the formulation of sanctions regimes, due account should be taken of the potential effects of sanctions on third States,

Stressing also in this context the powers of the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter and the Council's principal responsibility under Article 24 of the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security in order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations,

Recalling further that, under Article 31 of the Charter, any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected,

Recognizing that assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions would further contribute to an effective and comprehensive approach by the international community to mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council,

Recognizing also the importance of taking into account in international mechanisms of cooperation and of economic and financial assistance special economic problems of States arising from the implementation of sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Underlines the importance of consultations under Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations, as early as possible, with third States which may be confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter and of early and regular assessments, as appropriate, of their impact on such States, and, for this purpose, invites the Security Council to consider appropriate ways and means for increasing the effectiveness of its working methods and procedures applied in the consideration of the requests by the affected countries for assistance, in the context of Article 50;

2. Welcomes the measures taken by the Security Council aimed at increasing the effectiveness and transparency of the sanctions committees, and strongly recommends that the Council continue its efforts further to enhance the functioning of those committees, to streamline their working procedures and to facilitate access to them by representatives of States which find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of sanctions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to ensure that the Security Council and its sanctions committees are able to carry out their work expeditiously, and to make appropriate arrangements in the relevant parts of the Secretariat, in order to carry out, in a coordinated way, the following functions:

(a) To collate, assess and analyse information, at the request of the Security Council and its organs, on the effects of sanctions regimes in third States which are or may be specially affected by the implementations of sanctions and the resulting needs of such States, and keep the Security Council and its organs informed;

(b) To provide advice to the Security Council and its organs at their request on specific needs or problems of those third States and present possible options so that, while maintaining the effectiveness of the sanctions regimes, appropriate adjustments may be made to the administration of the regime or the regime itself with a view to mitigating the adverse effects on such States;

(c) To collate and coordinate information about international assistance available to third States affected by the implementations of sanctions and to make it officially available to the interested member States;

(d) To explore innovative and practical measures of assistance to the affected third States through cooperation with relevant institutions and organizations inside and outside the United Nations system;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, at its fifty-first session, on the implementation of paragraph 3 above and on possible guidelines which might be adopted on technical procedures to be used by the appropriate parts of the Secretariat:

(a) For providing better information and early assessments for the Security Council and its organs about the actual or potential effects of sanctions on third States which invoke Article 50 of the Charter;

(b) For developing a possible methodology for assessing the consequences actually incurred by third States as a result of the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures;

(c) For coordination of information about international economic or other assistance potentially available to those third States;

5. Stresses the important role of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in mobilizing and monitoring, as appropriate, the economic assistance efforts by the international community and the United Nations system to States confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Security Council;

6. Invites the organizations of the United Nations system, international financial institutions, other international organizations, regional organizations and Member States to continue to take into account and to address more specifically and directly, where appropriate, special economic problems of third States affected by sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter and, for this purpose, to consider ways and means for improving procedures for consultations in order to maintain a constructive dialogue with such States, including through regular and frequent meetings as well as, where appropriate, special meetings between the affected third States and the donor community, with the participation of United Nations agencies and other international organizations;

7. Requests the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its session in 1996, to continue to consider on a priority basis the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter taking into consideration the report of the Secretary-General, the proposals presented on this subject, the debate on this question which took place in the Sixth Committee at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly and, in particular, the implementation of the provisions of the present resolution.

11 December 1995 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/50/642 & Corr.1) by consensus, 29 November (meeting 46); draft by Chairman of Working Group on Implementation of Charter Provisions (A/C.6/50/L.13); agenda item 145.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 6th Committee 31-37, 44, 46; plenary 87.

Host country relations

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country continued to consider aspects of relations between the UN diplomatic community and the United States, its host country, in response to a 1994 General Assembly request.⁽¹⁶⁾ At five meetings between 16 March and 8 November 1995, it considered⁽¹⁷⁾ the security of missions and the safety of their personnel; issues arising from the implementation of the 1947 Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations;⁽¹⁸⁾ the responsibilities of permanent missions to the United Nations and their personnel, particularly in relation to financial indebtedness; matters related to the use of motor vehicles and parking; and membership, terms of reference and organization of the Committee's work.

Security of missions and safety of their personnel

With regard to security matters, the Committee considered allegations by Cuba of systematic demonstrations by terrorist organizations in the vicinity of its Mission, which, Cuba said, disrupted its work and threatened its personnel. Referring to an August 1994 incident in front of its Mission,⁽¹⁹⁾ Cuba stated that Mission personnel had rightly attempted to bar the entry of demonstrators trying to take over the Mission. Those identified Cuban Mission personnel, including one staff member of high rank, had been taken to the police station and the authorities attempted to charge them with violations, calling on them to renounce their diplomatic immunity. Cuba refused to accept such actions.

The United States noted that for many years it had responded to complaints by Cuba about protests in the vicinity of its Mission. When incidents occurred there in the presence of law-enforcement officers, arrests had been and would continue to be made. In other instances, the Cuban Mission had been requested to report incidents and file criminal complaints, but had failed to do so. As to the August 1994 incident, it would have been controlled if Cuban Mission personnel had not attacked the demonstrators and police officers alike. The demonstrators who had committed unlawful acts had been arrested, charged and prosecuted; three Cuban personnel had also been charged with assault, among other charges. Their actions had been unacceptable and therefore the United States had requested the Cuban Mission to waive their immunity or withdraw them. The United States was none the less prepared to entertain further discussions with the Cuban Mission on the matter. At meetings held in April and May 1995 at the respective missions, the United States stressed that it was prepared to cooperate fully with the Cuban Mission in finding additional ways to improve safety and security, as well as to consult on measures to prevent the recurrence of incidents such as the one of August 1994. To that end, it formulated various proposals for procedures to eliminate potential confrontations and conditions that could interfere with the conduct of Mission's functions. The proposals were set out in a note verbale to Cuba of 9 June.⁽²⁰⁾ At the same time, the United States reiterated that it would continue to uphold the constitutional rights of individuals to free speech and assembly, but when an individual took action which violated the law, it would take appropriate law-enforcement measures.

The Committee appreciated the efforts of the host country for the maintenance of conditions for the normal work of delegations accredited to the United Nations and anticipated that it would continue to take all measures to prevent any interference with the functioning of missions.

Travel regulations

The Committee was informed that Cuba had asked the Chairman to intercede with the host country Mission regarding travel restrictions imposed by the United States on the Cuban delegation for its attendance at the San Francisco commemorative meetings of the signing of the Charter. The United States replied that the event was sponsored by the City of San Francisco and not the United Nations. The host country was not obligated to permit travel to events not sponsored by the Organization.

The Committee expressed the hope that remaining travel restrictions would be removed by the host country as soon as possible and noted the positions of affected Member States, of the Secretary-General and of the host country. It noted the measures taken to accelerate immigration and customs procedures for arriving diplomatic personnel in New York and urged the host country to continue to ensure the application of those procedures.

Transportation

In the view of the Russian Federation, the situation regarding the issue of transportation was more difficult than ever. The host country was asked to explain what measures were being taken to solve the problem, particularly the question of parking and the problem of fines, which continued to be imposed because there were no inspection stickers on diplomatic automobiles. The United States responded that it had been informed that New York City was conducting a review of its traffic control policy. Latvia complained that two years after having bought a building for its Mission, no parking space had been allocated in front of the building. The Committee called on the host country to review measures and procedures relating to parking with a view to resolving the problem and responding to the growing needs of the diplomatic community in that regard.

Financial indebtedness

For its consideration of the question of financial indebtedness of permanent missions to the United Nations, the Committee had before it a March 1995 report of the Secretary-General,⁽²¹⁾ according to which the vast majority of the 184 missions of Member States in New York and their diplomats (over 1,800) honoured their obligations. However, total uncontested debts owed by missions, including their personnel, as at 31 January 1995 amounted to $7,013,735, of which $5,842,477, or 83 per cent, was attributable to 5 of the 32 missions with debts. In Geneva, of the 140 States represented, 28 owed debts ranging between 400 and 1.6 million Swiss francs (SwF). The total indebtedness amounted to more than SwF 5 million as at 1 February 1995.

The general conclusion was that the indebtedness resulted either from political and economic instability in the Member State concerned, or inadequate management of funds by a mission or its personnel. Remedies identified and discussed were the creation of an emergency fund, group health insurance programmes, short-term employment in the Secretariat and information programmes. However, the primary responsibility for mission debts lay solely with the Member States concerned. The United Nations had no legal liability in matters relating to the insolvency of missions or their personnel, but the Secretariat was prepared to help resolve individual cases of insolvency reported to the Organization through its good offices or mediation.

The Secretary-General made a number of recommendations for avoiding or reducing indebtedness, including the adoption of guidelines by the Committee. He suggested that, while work on the issue should continue within the Committee and its Working Group on Indebtedness, Member States might wish to consider discussing it in the Sixth Committee, in view of its importance to the diplomatic community as a whole.

On the basis of the Secretary-General's report, the open-ended Working Group on Indebtedness recommended procedures for dealing with the problem, which were endorsed by the Committee, as revised following consultations, and annexed to its report.⁽¹⁷⁾

The Committee stressed the importance of the efforts of its Working Group concerning financial indebtedness, an issue which tarnished the image of the United Nations and its Members. It noted that the issue had also arisen in other host cities to the United Nations and, therefore, required a system-wide approach. The Committee approved the proposals to address the issue and recommended that the General Assembly adopt them during its fiftieth session. It recommended that permanent missions, their personnel and Secretariat personnel adhere to the adopted recommendations, in particular that financial obligations be met promptly and in full. Its Working Group should continue to monitor progress and develop solutions to the problem.

The Committee recommended the following procedures to deal with the matter: a head of a mission who foresaw or was faced with the fact that funds would not suffice should notify the head of the mission of the host State and take appropriate action to avoid or minimize the risk of damage to third parties, including possible adjustments in the functioning of the mission; if information was provided that members of his/her staff did not fulfil their contractual obligations and incurred debts, he/she should ensure that the unpaid debts were settled promptly and in full; the mission of the host State should forward to the UN Office of Legal Affairs (OLA), on a regular basis, information about undisputed debts; and, in specific cases where debts of missions or individual diplomats had become egregious or had not been settled following bilateral contacts between the debtor and the representative of the host State, the mission of the host State might request that the Secretary-General take the necessary action to convey to the head of the mission concerned that there were legal and moral obligations to settle undisputed debts promptly and in full.

Based on information supplied by the host country mission, the Secretariat should keep the Committee informed of the numbers of missions with outstanding debts within specific ranges. The host countries might request the Secretariat to disseminate information which would be helpful to the diplomatic community in resolving the debt problems, including, inter alia, provision of relevant international legal instruments and UN documents, as well as information provided by the host countries on the cost of living at a location concerned, and the relevant provisions of national legislation. The Committee called to the attention of the Assembly the Secretary-General's intention to establish internal procedures requiring Secretariat staff members concerned to settle their undisputed debts in full and promptly.

Other matters

Among other matters, China brought to the attention of the Committee its application, twice turned down by the host country, for relocation of its Mission. The United States replied that it had requested answers to a number of technical questions at the time of the first application. Responses to those questions had been provided and a second application submitted. Since the transaction was very complicated, it had notified the Chinese Mission that it was unable to agree to the transaction by the required deadline. The application, however, was still under active consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/49.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, and the responsibilities of the host country,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Noting the spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding that has guided the deliberations of the Committee on issues affecting the United Nations community and the host country,

Welcoming the increased interest shown by Member States in participating in the work of the Committee,

1. Endorses the recommendations and conclusions of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 67 of its report;

2. Considers that the maintenance of appropriate conditions for the normal work of the delegations and the missions accredited to the United Nations is in the interests of the United Nations and all Member States, and expresses the hope that the host country will continue to take all measures necessary to prevent any interference with the functioning of missions;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by the host country, and hopes that problems raised at the meetings of the Committee will continue to be resolved in a spirit of cooperation and in accordance with international law;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the problem of diplomatic indebtedness, stresses that such indebtedness is a matter of significant concern to the United Nations and that non-payment of undisputed debts reflects badly on the entire diplomatic community and tarnishes the image of the Organization itself, reaffirms that non-compliance with contractual obligations cannot be condoned or justified, and endorses the proposals and procedures on the issue of financial indebtedness set out in annex II to the current report of the Committee;

5. Urges the host country to consider lifting travel controls with regard to certain missions and staff members of the Secretariat of certain nationalities, and in this regard notes the positions of the affected States, of the Secretary-General and of the host country;

6. Calls upon the host country to review measures and procedures relating to the parking of diplomatic vehicles, with a view to responding to the growing needs of the diplomatic community, and to consult with the Committee on these issues;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country;

8. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

UN Decade of International Law

In response to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an August 1995 report, with later addenda,⁽²³⁾ on the United Nations Decade of International Law (1990-1999), which the Assembly had declared in 1989.⁽²⁴⁾ The Decade's aims were: to promote acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law; to promote means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice (ICJ); to encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification; and to encourage the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law. The Assembly had adopted the programme of activities for the third term (1995-1996) in 1994.⁽²⁵⁾

In his report, the Secretary-General analysed information from States and international organizations on steps taken to implement the programme and views on possible activities for the next term. He described recent UN activities relevant to the progressive development of international law and its codification in such areas as human rights, disarmament, outer space, economic development, international trade, crime prevention and criminal justice, the environment and the law of the sea. The report also dealt with the work of the International Law Commission, the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, and the Sixth Committee.

Sixth Committee action. The Working Group on the UN Decade of International Law, re-established in 1994,⁽²⁵⁾ held five meetings between 6 and 21 November 1995. In an oral report to the Sixth Committee, the Chairman said that the Group had exchanged views on the implementation of the programme for the third term of the Decade and reviewed the draft resolution proposed, which contained traditional elements as well as new ones. A new element was paragraph 3, on the successful organization of the UN Congress on Public International Law (see below)—a unique event in UN history. Paragraph 11 had been the subject of some debate: some delegations had insisted that it was important to retain it, while others had doubts about its inclusion in a resolution on the Decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/44.

United Nations Decade of International Law
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/23 of 17 November 1989, by which it declared the period 1990-1999 the United Nations Decade of International Law,

(c) To encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification;

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report submitted pursuant to resolution 49/50,

Having considered the above-mentioned report,

Recalling that at the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly the Sixth Committee established the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law with a view to preparing generally acceptable recommendations on the programme of activities for the Decade,

4. Strongly welcomes the recent advances made by the Treaty Section of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat in its programme of computerization of the Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General and the United Nations Treaty Series and looks forward to the early effective availability of the former on the Internet and the latter on-line to Member States and other users;

5. Invites all States and international organizations and institutions referred to in the programme to provide, update or supplement information on activities they have undertaken in implementation of it, as appropriate, to the Secretary-General, as well as to submit their views on possible activities for the next term of the Decade;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, on the basis of such information as well as of new information on the activities of the United Nations relevant to the progressive development of international law and its codification, a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the programme;

7. Encourages States to disseminate at the national level, as appropriate, information contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Appeals to States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations working in the field of international law and to the private sector to make financial contributions or contributions in kind for the purpose of facilitating the implementation of the programme;

9. Encourages the Office of Legal Affairs to continue in its efforts to bring up to date the publication of the United Nations Treaty Series and the United Nations Juridical Yearbook;

10. Once again requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of States and international organizations and institutions working in the field of international law the programme annexed to resolution 49/50;

11. Invites the International Committee of the Red Cross to continue to report on activities undertaken by the Committee and other relevant bodies with regard to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, so that the information received may be included in the report to be prepared pursuant to paragraph 6 above;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law".

General Assembly resolution 50/44

11 December 1995 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/50/637) without vote, 24 November (meeting 45); draft by Chairman of Working Group on UN Decade of International Law (A/C.6/50/L.10); agenda item 140.

UN Congress on Public International Law

The United Nations Congress on Public International Law (New York, 13-17 March), held in accordance with 1993⁽²⁶⁾ and 1994⁽²⁷⁾ General Assembly resolutions, was organized around the general theme "Towards the twenty-first century: international law as a language for international relations". Specific topics discussed were theoretical and practical aspects of the promotion and implementation of the principles of international law; means of peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for ICJ; new developments and priorities of the conceptual and practical aspects of the codification and progressive development of international law; new approaches to research, education and training in the field of international law and its wider appreciation; and new challenges and expectations.

UN Programme for the teaching and study of international law

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a November 1995 report⁽²⁸⁾ on the implementation of the UN Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law during 1994-1995, within the framework of the UN Decade of International Law.

During that period, OLA carried out activities in the field of public international law, the law of the sea and ocean affairs, and international trade law. Two sessions of the Geneva International Law Seminar were held.

Activities of the UN Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) (see also below) included the Sixth UNCITRAL Symposium on International Trade Law (Vienna, 22-26 May 1995) and national seminars on international trade law in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Botswana, China, Colombia, the Czech Republic, Georgia, Kenya, Namibia, Panama, Turkey, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe.

The UN Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) provided training in environmental law and policy, in legal aspects of debt and financial management, in peacemaking and preventive diplomacy, in procedures for the settlement of trade disputes and in promotion of cooperation related to the environment. It also issued a number of publications, as did the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which also created a number of Chairs of human rights education in various countries.

Under the UN/UNITAR international law fellowship programme, 18 six-week fellowships financed by OLA were awarded for courses and seminars, partly organized by UNITAR, at the Hague Academy of International Law (Netherlands).

For 1996-1997, the Secretary-General recommended that the United Nations and other agencies continue their current activities under the Programme and expand them if new funds became available. New activities should be undertaken only if the overall level of appropriations or voluntary contributions made them possible. States should be encouraged to continue implementing the objectives related to the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law and report to the Secretary-General on any further developments in that area.

The Advisory Committee on the Programme held its twenty-ninth session on 13 December 1994 and its thirtieth on 26 October 1995. In 1994 it endorsed UNITAR's proposal to allow participation of observers in the international fellowship programme, on the understanding that the resources for candidates from developing States would remain unaffected.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/43.

United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 17 of its resolution 48/29 of 9 December 1993, paragraph 1 of section IV of the annex to its resolution 47/32 of 25 November 1992 and paragraph 1 of section IV of the annex to its resolution 49/50 of 9 December 1994,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law and the guidelines and recommendations on future implementation of the Programme within the framework of the United Nations Decade of International Law, which were adopted by the Advisory Committee on the Programme and are contained in section III of that report,

Bearing in mind that the encouragement of the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law is one of the main objectives of the United Nations Decade of International Law, as declared in its resolution 44/23 of 17 November 1989 and further reaffirmed and expanded in section IV of the programme for the activities for the first term (1990-1992), the second term (1993-1994) and the third term (1995-1996) annexed to resolutions 45/40 of 28 November 1990, 47/32 and 49/50,

Considering that international law should occupy an appropriate place in the teaching of legal disciplines at all universities,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by States at the bilateral level to provide assistance in the teaching and study of international law,

Convinced, nevertheless, that States and international organizations and institutions should be encouraged to give further support to the Programme and increase their activities to promote the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, in particular those activities which are of special benefit to persons from developing countries,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2464(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2550(XXIV) of 12 December 1969, 2838(XXVI) of 18 December 1971, 3106(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, 3502(XXX) of 15 December 1975, 32/146 of 16 December 1977, 36/108 of 10 December 1981 and 38/129 of 19 December 1983, in which it stated or recalled that in the conduct of the Programme it was desirable to use as far as possible the resources and facilities made available by Member States, international organizations and others, as well as its resolutions 34/144 of 17 December 1979, 40/66 of 11 December 1985, 42/148 of 7 December 1987, 44/28 of 4 December 1989, 46/50 of 9 December 1991 and 48/29, in which, in addition, it expressed or reaffirmed the hope that, in appointing lecturers for the seminars to be held within the framework of the fellowship programme in international law, account would be taken of the need to secure representation of major legal systems and balance among various geographical regions,

1. Approves the guidelines and recommendations contained in section III of the report of the Secretary-General and adopted by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, in particular those designed to achieve the best possible results in the administration of the Programme within a policy of maximum financial restraint;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to carry out in 1996 and 1997 the activities specified in his report, including the provision of:

(a) A number of international law fellowships in both 1996 and 1997, to be determined in the light of the overall resources for the Programme and to be awarded at the request of Governments of developing countries;

(b) A minimum of one scholarship in both 1996 and 1997 under the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, subject to the availability of new voluntary contributions made specifically to the fellowship fund;

(c) Subject to the overall resources for the Programme, assistance in the form of a travel grant for one participant from each developing country, who would be invited to possible regional courses to be organized in 1996 and 1997;

and to finance the above activities from provisions in the regular budget, when appropriate, as well as from voluntary financial contributions earmarked for each of the activities concerned, which would be received as a result of the requests set out in paragraphs 13, 14 and 15 below;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his constructive efforts to promote training and assistance in international law within the framework of the Programme in 1994 and 1995, in particular for the organization of the thirtieth and thirty-first sessions of the International Law Seminar, held at Geneva from 24 May to 10 June 1994 and from 22 May to 9 June 1995, respectively, and for the activities of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat related to the fellowship programme in international law and to the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, carried out, respectively, through its Codification Division and its Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of admitting, for participation in the various components of the Programme of Assistance, candidates from countries willing to bear the entire cost of such participation;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider the relative advantages of using available resources and voluntary contributions for regional, subregional or national courses, as against courses organized within the United Nations system;

6. Invites interested States to consider the option of financing the translation and publication of the Judgments of the International Court of Justice;

7. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Office of Legal Affairs to bring up to date the United Nations Treaty Series and the United Nations Juridical Yearbook;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for its participation in the Programme through the activities described in the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Also expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for its participation in the Programme through the activities described in the report of the Secretary-General;

10. Further expresses its appreciation to the Hague Academy of International Law for the valuable contribution it continues to make to the Programme which has enabled candidates under the international law fellowship programme to attend and participate in the Programme in conjunction with the Academy courses;

11. Notes with appreciation the contributions of the Hague Academy of International Law to the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, and calls on Member States and interested organizations to give favourable consideration to the appeal of the Academy for a continuation of support and a possible increase in their financial contributions, to enable the Academy to carry out its activities, particularly those relating to the summer courses, regional courses and programmes of the Centre for Studies and Research in International Law and International Relations;

12. Urges all States and relevant international organizations, whether regional or universal, to make all possible efforts to implement the goals and carry out the activities contemplated in section IV of the programme of activities for the third term (1995-1996) of the United Nations Decade of International Law, dealing with the encouragement of the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law and contained in the annex to its resolution 49/50;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme and periodically to invite Member States, universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, as well as individuals, to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme or otherwise to assist in its implementation and possible expansion;

14. Reiterates its request to Member States and to interested organizations and individuals to make voluntary contributions, inter alia, for the International Law Seminar, for the fellowship programme in international law and for the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, and expresses its appreciation to those Member States, institutions and individuals which have made voluntary contributions for this purpose;

15. Urges in particular all Governments to make voluntary contributions for the organization of regional refresher courses in international law by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, especially with a view to covering the amount needed for the financing of the daily subsistence allowance for up to twenty-five participants in each regional course, thus alleviating the burden on prospective host countries and making it possible for the Institute to continue to organize the regional courses;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the Programme during 1996 and 1997 and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, to submit recommendations regarding the execution of the Programme in subsequent years;

17. Decides to appoint twenty-five Member States, six from Africa, five from Asia, three from Eastern Europe, five from Latin America and the Caribbean and six from

Western Europe and other States, as members of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, for a period of four years beginning on 1 January 1996;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law".

General Assembly resolution 50/43

11 December 1995 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/50/636) without vote, 24 November (meeting 45); draft by Ghana (A/C.6/50/L.9); agenda item 139. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 6th Committee 41, 42, 45; plenary 87.

Introducing the text in the Sixth Committee, Ghana said that, given the Programme's usefulness, it was unfortunate that the Organization's financial difficulties prevented the Committee from recommending that the Assembly increase the budget appropriations and that the Programme had to depend on voluntary contributions. The Programme's various components had always been of importance to the developing countries, but a number of developed countries had also shown a growing interest in it.

Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in April 1995 to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, a report⁽³⁰⁾ on the procedures in place for the implementation of article VIII, section 29, of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.⁽³¹⁾ The report discussed provisions made by the United Nations for the settlement of disputes arising out of contracts or other disputes of a private law character, to which the United Nations was a party, and disputes involving any UN official who by reason of his position enjoyed immunity, if the immunity had not been waived by the Secretary-General. It examined, in particular, disputes arising out of commercial agreements (contracts and lease agreements); third-party claims for personal injury (outside the peace-keeping context); claims relating to UN peace-keeping operations; those related to operational activities for development; and other claims. The Secretary-General was of the view that the procedures and mechanisms described in the report provided an appropriate means of dispute resolution.

The report was presented under the agenda item on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations. By decision 49/489 of 20 July, the Assembly deferred until its fiftieth session consideration of the documents relating to that item. On 23

December, by decision 50/469, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at its resumed fiftieth session.

International economic law

In 1995, legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and by the General Assembly's Sixth Committee.

International trade law

UNCITRAL

At its twenty-eighth session (Vienna, 2-26 May), UNCITRAL adopted the draft Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit, which it annexed to its report.⁽¹⁾ It completed its review of the substance of the draft Notes on international commercial arbitration and requested the Secretariat to prepare a revised draft of the Notes for final approval by the Commission in 1996. The Commission also discussed the draft UNCITRAL Model Law on Legal Aspects of Electronic Data Interchange and Related Means of Communication; receivables financing; case law on UNCITRAL texts (CLOUT); status and promotion of UNCITRAL legal texts; training and technical assistance; possible future work; and General Assembly resolutions on its work. The Commission noted publication of the bibliography of recent writings related to its work⁽²⁾ and the publication of three additional sets of abstracts summarizing court decisions and arbitral awards in the context of CLOUT—the system for collecting and disseminating information on court decisions and arbitral awards relating to conventions and model laws emanating from UNCITRAL's work.

As in previous years, UNCITRAL's annual report was forwarded to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for comments or recommendations.

Travel assistance to UNCITRAL members from developing countries

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1995 report⁽⁴⁾ on granting travel assistance to enable Commission members from developing countries to attend meetings of UNCITRAL and its working groups. The Secretary-General said he was responsible for the use of the Trust Fund established in 1994 to grant such assistance. The Fund would be administered, in accordance with its terms of reference, by the Legal Counsel as its programme manager. As at 1 September 1995, no contributions to the Fund had been received.

On 11 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 50/47, appealed for contributions to the Trust Fund and decided, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the Commission and its working groups, to continue consideration of the question in the competent Main Committee during its fiftieth session.

Independent guarantees and stand-by letters of credit

In 1995, the Working Group on International Contract Practices held its twenty-third (New York, 9-20 January)⁽⁵⁾ and twenty-fourth (Vienna, 13-24 November)⁽⁶⁾ sessions. In January, it examined draft articles 7(2) to 16, 24, 25 and article 25 bis, Secretariat proposals on draft article 24 bis and new 25 bis, and draft articles 17 to 27 of a draft Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit. The Working Group approved the substance of those articles and referred them to its drafting group. The articles approved by the Working Group, following their review by the drafting group, were annexed to its report.⁽⁵⁾ In response to concerns raised by the International Chamber of Commerce regarding the Working Group's decision to make available the draft Convention to cover commercial letters of credit, at the option of the parties, it was pointed out that the Working Group had arrived at the decision to deal with the issue in article 1(2), in a way that allowed parties to commercial letters of credit to opt into the Convention, but, absent such an election by parties, did not as such extend the Convention to cover commercial letters of credit.

UNCITRAL, at its 1995 session, considered the draft articles as presented by the Working Group. It also had before it a Secretariat note⁽⁷⁾ on draft final clauses for the draft Convention. It submitted to the General Assembly the draft Convention as set forth in an annex to its report and recommended that the Assembly consider it with a view to concluding, at its fiftieth session, a UN Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/48.

United Nations Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Being aware of the uncertainty and lack of uniformity currently prevailing among the various legal systems in the field of independent guarantees and stand-by letters of credit,

Being convinced that the adoption of a convention on independent guarantees and stand-by letters of credit will usefully contribute to overcoming the current uncertainties and disparities in this field of considerable practical importance and thus facilitate the use of such instruments,

Being aware also that the Commission, at its twenty-second session in 1989, decided to prepare uniform legislation on independent guarantees and stand-by letters of credit and entrusted the Working Group on International Contract Practices with the preparation of a draft,

Noting that the Working Group devoted eleven sessions, from 1990 to 1995, to the preparation of the draft United Nations Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit, and that all States and interested international organizations were invited to participate in the preparation of the draft Convention at all the sessions of the Working Group and at the twenty-eighth session of the Commission, either as members or observers, with a full opportunity to speak and make proposals,

Taking note with satisfaction of the decision of the Commission at its twenty-eighth session to submit the draft Convention to the General Assembly for its consideration,

Taking note of the draft Convention adopted by the Commission,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for preparing the draft United Nations Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit;

2. Adopts and opens for signature or accession the United Nations Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit, contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Calls upon all Governments to consider becoming party to the Convention.

ANNEX

United Nations Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit

Chapter I. Scope of application

Article 1

Scope of application

1. This Convention applies to an international undertaking referred to in article 2:

(a) If the place of business of the guarantor/issuer at which the undertaking is issued is in a Contracting State; or

(b) If the rules of private international law lead to the application of the law of a Contracting State, unless the undertaking excludes the application of the Convention.

2. This Convention applies also to an international letter of credit not falling within article 2 if it expressly states that it is subject to this Convention.

3. The provisions of articles 21 and 22 apply to international undertakings referred to in article 2 independently of paragraph 1 of this article.

Article 2

Undertaking

1. For the purposes of this Convention, an undertaking is an independent commitment, known in international practice as an independent guarantee or as a stand-by letter of credit, given by a bank or other institution or persons ("guarantor/issuer") to pay to the beneficiary a certain or determinable amount upon simple demand or upon demand accompanied by other documents, in conformity with the terms and any documentary conditions of the undertaking, indicating, or from which it is to be inferred, that payment is due because of a default in the performance of an obligation, or because of another contingency, or for money borrowed or advanced, or on account of any mature indebtedness undertaken by the principal/applicant or another person.

2. The undertaking may be given:

(a) At the request or on the instruction of the customer ("principal/applicant") of the guarantor/issuer;

(b) On the instruction of another bank, institution or person ("instructing party") that acts at the request of the customer ("principal/ applicant") of that instructing party; or

(c) On behalf of the guarantor/issuer itself.

3. Payment may be stipulated in the undertaking to be made in any form, including:

(a) Payment in a specified currency or unit of account;

(b) Acceptance of a bill of exchange (draft);

(c) Payment on a deferred basis;

(d) Supply of a specified item of value.

4. The undertaking may stipulate that the guarantor/issuer itself is the beneficiary when acting in favour of another person.

Article 3

Independence of undertaking

For the purposes of this Convention, an undertaking is independent where the guarantor/issuer's obligation to the beneficiary is not:

(a) Dependent upon the existence or validity of any underlying transaction, or upon any other undertaking (including stand-by letters of credit or independent guarantees to which confirmations or counter-guarantees relate); or

(b) Subject to any term or condition not appearing in the undertaking, or to any future, uncertain act or event except presentation of documents or another such act or event within a guarantor/issuer's sphere of operations.

Article 4

Internationality of undertaking

1. An undertaking is international if the places of business, as specified in the undertaking, of any two of the following persons are in different States: guarantor/issuer, beneficiary, principal/applicant, instructing party, confirmer.

2. For the purposes of the preceding paragraph:

(a) If the undertaking lists more than one place of business for a given person, the relevant place of business is that which has the closest relationship to the undertaking;

(b) If the undertaking does not specify a place of business for a given person but specifies its habitual residence, that residence is relevant for determining the international character of the undertaking.

Chapter II. Interpretation

Article 5

Principles of interpretation

In the interpretation of this Convention, regard is to be had to its international character and to the need to promote uniformity in its application and the observance of good faith in the international practice of independent guarantees and stand-by letters of credit.

Article 6

Definitions

For the purposes of this Convention and unless otherwise indicated in a provision of this Convention or required by the context:

(a) "Undertaking" includes "counter-guarantee" and "confirmation of an undertaking";

(b) "Guarantor/issuer" includes "counter-guarantor" and "confirmer";

(c) "Counter-guarantee" means an undertaking given to the guarantor/issuer of another undertaking by its instructing party and providing for payment upon simple demand or upon demand accompanied by other documents, in conformity with the terms and any documentary conditions of the undertaking, indicating, or from which it is to be inferred, that payment under that other undertaking has been demanded from, or made by, the person issuing that other undertaking;

(d) "Counter-guarantor" means the person issuing a counter-guarantee;

(e) "Confirmation" of an undertaking means an undertaking added to that of the guarantor/issuer, and authorized by the guarantor/issuer, providing the beneficiary with the option of demanding payment from the confirmer instead of from the guarantor/issuer, upon simple demand or upon demand accompanied by other documents, in conformity with the terms and any documentary conditions of the confirmed undertaking, without prejudice to the beneficiary's right to demand payment from the guarantor/issuer;

(f) "Confirmer" means the person adding a confirmation to an undertaking;

(g) "Document" means a communication made in a form that provides a complete record thereof.

Chapter III. Form and content of undertaking

Article 7

Issuance, form and irrevocability of undertaking

1. Issuance of an undertaking occurs when and where the undertaking leaves the sphere of control of the guarantor/issuer concerned.

2. An undertaking may be issued in any form which preserves a complete record of the text of the undertaking and provides authentication of its source by generally accepted means or by a procedure agreed upon by the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary.

3. From the time of issuance of an undertaking, a demand for payment may be made in accordance with the terms and conditions of the undertaking, unless the undertaking stipulates a different time.

4. An undertaking is irrevocable upon issuance, unless it stipulates that it is revocable.

Article 8

Amendment

1. An undertaking may not be amended except in the form stipulated in the undertaking or, failing such stipulation, in a form referred to in paragraph 2 of article 7.

2. Unless otherwise stipulated in the undertaking or elsewhere agreed by the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary, an undertaking is amended upon issuance of the amendment if the amendment has previously been authorized by the beneficiary.

3. Unless otherwise stipulated in the undertaking or elsewhere agreed by the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary, where any amendment has not previously been authorized by the beneficiary, the undertaking is amended only when the guarantor/issuer receives a notice of acceptance of the amendment by the beneficiary in a form referred to in paragraph 2 of article 7.

4. An amendment of an undertaking has no effect on the rights and obligations of the principal/applicant (or an instructing party) or of a confirmer of the undertaking unless such person consents to the amendment.

Article 9

Transfer of beneficiary's right to demand payment

1. The beneficiary's right to demand payment may be transferred only if authorized in the undertaking, and only to the extent and in the manner authorized in the undertaking.

2. If an undertaking is designated as transferable without specifying whether or not the consent of the guarantor/issuer or another authorized person is required for the actual transfer, neither the guarantor/issuer nor any other authorized person is obliged to effect the transfer except to the extent and in the manner expressly consented to by it.

Article 10

Assignment of records

1. Unless otherwise stipulated in the undertaking or elsewhere agreed by the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary, the beneficiary may assign to another person any proceeds to which it may be, or may become, entitled under the undertaking.

2. If the guarantor/issuer or another person obliged to effect payment has received a notice originating from the beneficiary, in a form referred to in paragraph 2 of article 7, of the beneficiary's irrevocable assignment, payment to the assignee discharges the obligor, to the extent of its payment, from its liability under the undertaking.

Article 11

Cessation of right to demand payment

1. The right of the beneficiary to demand payment under the undertaking ceases when:

(a) The guarantor/issuer has received a statement by the beneficiary of release from liability in a form referred to in paragraph 2 of article 7;

(b) The beneficiary and the guarantor/issuer have agreed on the termination of the undertaking in the form stipulated in the undertaking or, failing such stipulation, in a form referred to in paragraph 2 of article 7;

(c) The amount available under the undertaking has been paid, unless the undertaking provides for the automatic renewal or for an automatic increase of the amount available or otherwise provides for continuation of the undertaking;

(d) The validity period of the undertaking expires in accordance with the provisions of article 12.

2. The undertaking may stipulate, or the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary may agree elsewhere, that return of the document embodying the undertaking to the guarantor/issuer, or a procedure functionally equivalent to the return of the document in the case of the issuance of the undertaking in non-paper form, is required for the cessation of the right to demand payment, either alone or in conjunction with one of the events referred to in subparagraphs (a) and (b) of paragraph 1 of this article. However, in no case shall retention of any such document by the beneficiary after the right to demand payment ceases in accordance with subparagraph (c) or (d) of paragraph 1 of this article preserve any rights of the beneficiary under the undertaking.

Article 12

Expiry

The validity period of the undertaking expires:

(a) At the expiry date, which may be a specified calendar date or the last day of a fixed period of time stipulated in the undertaking, provided that, if the expiry date is not a business day at the place of business of the guarantor/issuer at which the undertaking is issued, or of another person or at another place stipulated in the undertaking for presentation of the demand for payment, expiry occurs on the first business day which follows;

(b) If expiry depends according to the undertaking on the occurrence of an act or event not within the guarantor/issuer's sphere of operations, when the guarantor/issuer is advised that the act or event has occurred by presentation of the document specified for that purpose in the undertaking or, if no such document is specified, of a certification by the beneficiary of the occurrence of the act or event;

(c) If the undertaking does not state an expiry date, or if the act or event on which expiry is stated to depend has not yet been established by presentation of the required document and an expiry date has not been stated in addition, when six years have elapsed from the date of issuance of the undertaking.

Chapter IV. Rights, obligations and defences

Article 13

Determination of rights and obligations

1. The rights and obligations of the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary arising from the undertaking are determined by the terms and conditions set forth in the undertaking, including any rules, general conditions or usages specifically referred to therein, and by the provisions of this Convention.

2. In interpreting terms and conditions of the undertaking and in settling questions that are not addressed by the terms and conditions of the undertaking or by the provisions of this Convention, regard shall be had to generally accepted international rules and usages of independent guarantee or stand-by letter of credit practice.

Article 14

Standard of conduct and liability of guarantor/issuer

1. In discharging its obligations under the undertaking and this Convention, the guarantor/issuer shall act in good faith and exercise reasonable care having due regard to generally accepted standards of international practice of independent guarantees or stand-by letters of credit.

2. A guarantor/issuer may not be exempted from liability for its failure to act in good faith or for any grossly negligent conduct.

Article 15

Demand

1. Any demand for payment under the undertaking shall be made in a form referred to in paragraph 2 of article 7 and in conformity with the terms and conditions of the undertaking.

2. Unless otherwise stipulated in the undertaking, the demand and any certification or other document required by the undertaking shall be presented, within the time that a demand for payment may be made, to the guarantor/issuer at the place where the undertaking was issued.

3. The beneficiary, when demanding payment, is deemed to certify that the demand is not in bad faith and that none of the elements referred to in subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) of paragraph 1 of article 19 are present.

Article 16

Examination of demand and accompanying documents

1. The guarantor/issuer shall examine the demand and any accompanying documents in accordance with the standard of conduct referred to in paragraph 1 of article 14. In determining whether documents are in facial conformity with the terms and conditions of the undertaking, and are consistent with one another, the guarantor/issuer shall have due regard to the applicable international standard of independent guarantee or stand-by letter of credit.

2. Unless otherwise stipulated in the undertaking or elsewhere agreed by the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary, the guarantor/issuer shall have reasonable time, but not more than seven business days following the day of receipt of the demand and any accompanying documents, in which to:

(a) Examine the demand and any accompanying documents;

(b) Decide whether or not to pay;

(c) If the decision is not to pay, issue notice thereof to the beneficiary.

The notice referred to in subparagraph (c) above shall, unless otherwise stipulated in the undertaking or elsewhere agreed by the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary, be made by teletransmission or, if that is not possible, by other expeditious means and indicate the reason for the decision not to pay.

Article 17

Payment

1. Subject to article 19, the guarantor/issuer shall pay against a demand made in accordance with the provisions of article 15. Following a determination that a demand for payment so conforms, payment shall be made promptly, unless the undertaking stipulates payment on a deferred basis, in which case payment shall be made at the stipulated time.

2. Any payment against a demand that is not in accordance with the provisions of article 15 does not prejudice the rights of the principal/applicant.

Article 18

Set-off

Unless otherwise stipulated in the undertaking or elsewhere agreed by the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary, the guarantor/issuer may discharge the payment obligation under the undertaking by availing itself of a right of set-off, except with any claim assigned to it by the principal/applicant or the instructing party.

Article 19

Exception to payment obligation

1. If it is manifest and clear that:

(a) Any document is not genuine or has been falsified;

(b) No payment is due on the basis asserted in the demand and the supporting documents; or

(c) Judging by the type and purpose of the undertaking, the demand has no conceivable basis, the guarantor/issuer, acting in good faith, has a right, as against the beneficiary, to withhold payment.

2. For the purposes of subparagraph (c) of paragraph 1 of this article, the following are types of situations in which a demand has no conceivable basis:

(a) The contingency or risk against which the undertaking was designed to secure the beneficiary has undoubtedly not materialized;

(b) The underlying obligation of the principal/applicant has been declared invalid by a court or arbitral tribunal, unless the undertaking indicates that such contingency falls within the risk to be covered by the undertaking;

(c) The underlying obligation has undoubtedly been fulfilled to the satisfaction of the beneficiary;

(d) Fulfilment of the underlying obligation has clearly been prevented by wilful misconduct of the beneficiary;

(e) In the case of a demand under a counter-guarantee, the beneficiary of the counter-guarantee has made payment in bad faith as guarantor/issuer of the undertaking to which the counter-guarantee relates.

3. In the circumstances set out in subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) of paragraph 1 of this article, the principal/applicant is entitled to provisional court measures in accordance with article 20.

Chapter V. Provisional court measures

Article 20

Provisional court measures

1. Where, on an application by the principal/applicant or the instructing party, it is shown that there is a high probability that, with regard to a demand made, or expected to be made, by the beneficiary, one of the circumstances referred in subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) of paragraph 1 of article 19 is present, the court, on the basis of immediately available strong evidence, may:

(a) Issue a provisional order to the effect that the beneficiary does not receive payment, including an order that the guarantor/issuer hold the amount of the undertaking, or

(b) Issue a provisional order to the effect that the proceeds of the undertaking paid to the beneficiary are blocked, taking into account whether in the absence of such an order the principal/applicant would be likely to suffer serious harm.

2. The court, when issuing a provisional order referred to in paragraph 1 of this article, may require the person applying therefor to furnish such form of security as the court deems appropriate.

3. The court may not issue a provisional order of the kind referred to in paragraph 1 of this article based on any objection to payment other than those referred to in subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) of paragraph 1 of article 19, or use of the undertaking for a criminal purpose.

Chapter VI. Conflict of laws

Article 21

Choice of applicable law

The undertaking is governed by the law the choice of which is:

(a) Stipulated in the undertaking or demonstrated by the terms and conditions of the undertaking; or

(b) Agreed elsewhere by the guarantor/issuer and the beneficiary.

Article 22

Determination of applicable law

Failing a choice of law in accordance with article 21, the undertaking is governed by the law of the State where the guarantor/issuer has that place of business at which the undertaking was issued.

2. These declarations are to state expressly the territorial units to which the Convention extends.

3. If, by virtue of a declaration under this article, this Convention does not extend to all territorial units of a State and the place of business of the guarantor/issuer or of the beneficiary is located in a territorial unit to which the Convention does not extend, this place of business is considered not to be in a Contracting State.

4. If a State makes no declaration under paragraph 1 of this article, the Convention is to extend to all territorial units of that State.

However, a declaration of which the depositary receives formal notification after such entry into force takes effect on the first day of the month following the expiration of six months after the date of its receipt by the depositary.

4. Any State which makes a declaration under article 25 may withdraw it at any time by a formal notification in writing addressed to the depositary. Such withdrawal takes effect on the first day of the month following the expiration of six months after the date of the receipt of the notification of the depositary.

General Assembly resolution 50/48

11 December 1995 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/50/640 & Corr.1) without vote, 9 November (meeting 35); 23-nation draft (A/C.6/50/L.5); agenda item 143. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 6th Committee 3-5, 35; plenary 87.

Receivables financing

In response to a 1994 UNCITRAL request, the Secretary-General presented a report⁽⁸⁾ on assignment in receivables financing, in follow-up to a 1994 report.⁽⁹⁾ The report discussed the possible scope of future work on the subject and a number of assignment-related issues, including bulk assignment, future receivables, non-assignment clauses, transfer of security rights, form of assignment, relationship between the assignor and the assignee, and effects of assignment towards the debtor and towards third parties. It suggested some possible solutions to problems arising in the context of receivables financing and contained preliminary drafts of uniform rules to respond to the practical commercial need to utilize receivables to obtain financing. The report concluded that it would be both desirable and feasible to prepare uniform rules to remove obstacles to receivables financing arising from the uncertainty in various legal systems as to the validity of cross-border assignments—in which the assignor, the assignee and the debtor would not be in the same country—and the effects of such assignments on the debtor and other third parties. It suggested that the work of the Commission could take the form of a convention and that the topic and the draft uniform rules might be assigned to a working group for further work and development.

The Commission assigned the Secretary-General's report and the draft rules to a working group with a view to preparing a uniform draft law on assignment in receivables financing.

The Working Group on International Contract Practices, at its November session,⁽⁶⁾ considered the draft uniform rules. Issues that should receive particular attention during future deliberations of the Working Group were suggested, including the question of international assignment of domestic receivables, with a view to providing adequate assurance of the protection of the debtor; the extent to which emphasis could be placed on finding solutions by way of substantive law, rather than through private international law rules; examination of the feasibility of relying on a registry approach; coverage of "conditional" and "possible" receivables; and compatibility of the draft uniform rules with national laws. The Working Group requested the Secretariat to prepare a revised version of the draft uniform rules for its 1996 session.

International commercial arbitration

In 1995, UNCITRAL considered a March report⁽¹⁰⁾ of the Secretary-General containing draft Notes on Organizing Arbitral Proceedings, which was a revised text of the draft Guidelines for Preparatory Conferences in Arbitral Proceedings, presented to UNCITRAL in 1994.⁽¹¹⁾ The Notes were intended to assist arbitration practitioners by listing and briefly describing questions on which appropriately timed procedural decisions might be useful. They dealt with deposit for costs, a set of arbitration rules, language of proceedings, place of arbitration, administrative services, confidentiality of information, routing of writings among the parties and arbitrators, electronic means of sending writings, timing of written submissions, practical details concerning written submissions and evidence, defining points at issue, possible settlement negotiations and their effect on scheduling, documentary evidence, physical evidence other than documents, witnesses, hearings, multi-party arbitration and requirements concerning filing or delivering the award.

UNCITRAL reviewed the draft Notes and requested the Secretariat to prepare a revised draft for final approval by it in 1996. It considered that the Secretariat should continue to monitor the law and practice in the field of multi-party arbitration, and to present at a future session a document exploring the feasibility of work by the Commission in that field. Concerning the taking of evidence in arbitration, the Secretariat was requested to prepare a document to serve as a basis for consideration by the Commission.

Electronic data interchange

At its 1995 session,⁽¹⁾ UNCITRAL had before it the report of the Working Group on Electronic Data Interchange (EDI) on its twenty-ninth session (New York, 27 February-10 March),⁽¹²⁾ at which the Group considered the draft Guide to Enactment of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Legal Aspects of EDI and Related Means of Communication ("the draft Guide"). The Working Group requested the Secretariat to prepare a revised version of the draft Guide reflecting the decisions made by the Working Group and taking into account the issue of incorporation by reference. It also requested it to prepare a study on the issues of negotiability or transferability of rights in goods in an electronic environment, in the context of transport documents, with particular reference to maritime bills of lading.

Also before UNCITRAL was a compilation of comments by Governments and international organizations⁽¹³⁾ on the text of the draft Model Law as approved by the Working Group in 1994.⁽¹¹⁾

The Commission agreed that the title of the draft Model Law in general was too long and did not describe its content with sufficient clarity. However, it postponed its final decision as to the title and agreed to revert to the issue after it had completed its review of draft articles 1 and 2. The Commission adopted texts of articles 1 and 3 to 11 of the draft Model Law and agreed to continue discussing it together with the draft Guide at its 1996 session, with a view to finalizing and adopting them. It endorsed the recommendation of the Working Group that the Secretariat should prepare a background study on negotiability and transferability of EDI transport documents, with particular emphasis on EDI maritime transport documents. The Commission agreed that particular emphasis should be placed in the study on work undertaken by other international organizations, such as the Comité Maritime International (CMI) or the European Union, and on the BOLERO (bills of lading for Europe) project—a commercial venture on paperless bills of lading—and that the study should provide the basis for an informed decision as to the feasibility of undertaking work in the area.

As to the re-engineering process being carried out within the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) with respect to the Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures (WP.4) of the Committee on the Development of Trade, UNCITRAL reaffirmed its support of the work accomplished by WP.4 in the technical field. It agreed to establish closer cooperation with the community of EDI users represented in WP.4, with a view to furthering the development of legal rules adapted to the technical environment. The Commission concluded that, in view of UNCITRAL's mandate, the proposals contained in the final engineering report, which was not adopted at the March 1995 session of WP.4, were not acceptable and requested the Secretariat to bring that conclusion to the attention of ECE. It was agreed that the matter should be brought to the attention of the General Assembly, with a recommendation that it reaffirm the role of UNCITRAL as the core legal body in international trade law.

Carriage of goods by sea

UNCITRAL reiterated its concern about the problems resulting from the coexistence of different liability regimes relating to the carriage of goods by sea—the 1978 UN Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea (Hamburg Rules),⁽¹⁴⁾ which entered into force in 1992, and the regime based on the 1924 International Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to Bills of Lading (Hague Rules). The Commission noted that the Secretary-General had informed Member States of the Commission's consideration of the issue in 1994,⁽¹¹⁾ and of his conviction that the problems could best be overcome by wide adherence to the Hamburg Rules, recommending to them early adherence to those Rules.

The Commission was informed that CMI had received some 22 replies to a questionnaire it had sent to its member national organizations seeking views on how the problem could be solved; the replies suggested that no consensus view was emerging as to how the law of the carriage of goods by sea should be modernized and harmonized.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to promote wider adherence to the Hamburg Rules.

Future programme of work

UNCITRAL continued to consider proposals for its possible future work, made at the UNCITRAL Congress on International Trade Law in 1992.⁽¹⁵⁾ It had before it a March 1995 Secretariat note⁽¹⁶⁾ suggesting possible areas in which the Commission could take up work with regard to build-operate-transfer (BOT) projects for which guidelines were being prepared by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). It was suggested that the Commission take up work on BOT projects, in particular with regard to legal infrastructure and the means of procurement and contracting. Guidelines could be prepared to assist States in establishing a legal framework conducive to the implementation of BOT projects, with guidance for procurement and contracting. It was envisaged that UNCITRAL's work in those areas would not duplicate that already carried out by UNIDO. The Commission requested the Secretariat to prepare a report on the issues proposed for future work, with a view to facilitating discussion on the matter in 1996.

The Commission also considered a report⁽¹⁷⁾ on the UNCITRAL/International Association of Insolvency Practitioners (INSOL) Judicial Colloquium on Cross-Border Insolvency (Toronto, Canada, 22-23 March). The purpose of the Colloquium was to obtain for UNCITRAL the views of judges and government officials concerned with insolvency legislation on judicial cooperation in cross-border insolvency cases, and the related topics of court access for foreign insolvency administrators and recognition of foreign insolvency proceedings. The Colloquium was designed to assist the Commission as it embarked on work on those aspects of cross-border insolvency. The Colloquium concluded that the development by UNCITRAL of a legislative text of limited scope (in the form of model statutory provisions facilitating judicial cooperation and access and recognition) was desirable in view of the increasing incidence of cross-border insolvency. It suggested that the Commission assign a working group to consider the views and information presented at the Colloquium and proposals regarding the form and content of the Commission's work.

The Commission assigned the development of a legislative framework for judicial cooperation and for access and recognition in cross-border insolvencies to a working group.

The Working Group on Insolvency Law commenced work on a legislative framework at its eighteenth session (Vienna, 30 October-10 November)⁽¹⁸⁾ and made progress on a number of important issues, including the definitions of "foreign proceeding" and "foreign representative", the effects of recognition, judicial cooperation and proof of foreign proceedings. It identified several issues for future work and requested the Secretariat to prepare draft provisions on judicial cooperation and access and recognition.

The Commission noted that the Secretariat had agreed with Committee D of the International Bar Association to cooperate in monitoring the implementation in national laws of the 1958 Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards.⁽¹⁹⁾ The purpose of the project was to look into whether the Convention was incorporated into the national legal system of States so that its provisions had the force of law; whether States parties had added to the uniform regime of the Convention provisions modifying the conditions of recognition or enforcement of awards; and which requirements for obtaining recognition and enforcement not contemplated in the Convention were added in national laws. The Commission called on the States parties to the Convention to send to the Secretariat their laws dealing with the recognition and enforcement of foreign arbitral awards.

Training and technical assistance

The Commission had before it a May 1995 Secretariat note⁽²⁰⁾ outlining training and technical assistance activities that had taken place since its 1994 session and indicating the direction of future activities. Twelve national seminars and briefing missions were held to explain the salient features and utility of international trade law instruments of UNCITRAL, as well as relevant texts prepared by other organizations. The Secretariat provided technical assistance to States preparing legislation based on UNCITRAL model laws in the areas of international commercial arbitration, procurement and international credit transfers. Many of the requests for assistance related to reviews of preparatory drafts of legislation, assistance in the preparation of drafts, comments on reports of law reform commissions, and briefings for legislators, judges, arbitrators and other end-users of UNCITRAL texts embodied in national legislation. The Secretariat agreed to co-sponsor a three-month postgraduate course on international trade law. In order to facilitate the provision of technical assistance, the Commission authorized the Secretariat to request States to provide it with legislation in effect in the areas of activity of the Commission. The Commission renewed its call for increased cooperation and coordination among entities providing technical assistance. Noting that voluntary funds to the UNCITRAL Trust Fund for Symposia remained insufficient, the Commission requested that the subject be placed on the agenda of the pledging conference taking place within the framework of the General Assembly session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/47.

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-eighth session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic cooperation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and thereby to the well-being of all peoples,

Stressing the value of participation by States at all levels of economic development and with different legal systems in the process of harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-eighth session,

Mindful of the valuable contribution to be rendered by the Commission within the framework of the United Nations Decade of International Law, particularly as regards the dissemination of international trade law,

Concerned about the relatively low incidence of expert representation from developing countries at sessions of the Commission and particularly of its working groups during recent years, owing in part to inadequate resources to finance the travel of such experts,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Concerned also about the fact that the need for and interest in the training and assistance programme of the Commission can only partially be met, in view of the limited human and financial resources available, and that the work of the Secretariat in the context of the Case-Law on the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law Texts would substantially increase as the number of the court decisions and arbitral awards covered thereby grows,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-eighth session;

2. Notes with satisfaction the completion and adoption by the Commission of the draft Convention on Independent Guarantees and Stand-by Letters of Credit;

3. Commends the Commission for the progress made at its twenty-eighth session in the preparation of a draft Model Law on Legal Aspects of Electronic Data Interchange and Related Means of Communication, as well as in the preparation of draft Notes on Organizing Arbitral Proceedings, and in this connection welcomes the decision of the Commission to continue its consideration of the draft Model Law and the draft Notes with a view to completing its work during its twenty-ninth session;

4. Welcomes the decision of the Commission to commence work on the subjects of receivables financing and cross-border insolvency, and to consider the feasibility and desirability of undertaking work on negotiability and transferability of electronic data interchange transport documents, based on a background study to be prepared by the Secretariat and on the discussion of the topic by the Working Group on Electronic Data Interchange at its thirtieth session;

5. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to coordinate legal activities in this field in order to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law, and in this connection recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, continue to maintain close cooperation with the other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law;

6. Also reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and technical assistance in the field of international trade law, such as assistance in the preparation of national legislation based on legal texts of the Commission;

7. Expresses the desirability for increased efforts by the Commission in sponsoring seminars and symposia to provide such training and technical assistance, and in this connection:

(a) Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for organizing seminars and briefing missions in Armenia,

Azerbaijan, Botswana, China, Colombia, the Czech Republic, Georgia, Kenya, Namibia, Panama, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe;

(b) Expresses its appreciation to the Governments whose contributions made it possible for the seminars and briefing missions to take place, and appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations and institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law Trust Fund for Symposia and, where appropriate, to the financing of special projects, and otherwise to assist the secretariat of the Commission in financing and organizing seminars and symposia, in particular in developing countries, and in the award of fellowships to candidates from developing countries to enable them to participate in such seminars and symposia;

(c) Appeals to the United Nations Development Programme and other bodies responsible for development assistance, such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, as well as to Governments in their bilateral aid programmes, to support the training and technical assistance programme of the Commission and to cooperate and coordinate their activities with those of the Commission;

8. Appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations and institutions and individuals, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to make voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for travel assistance to developing countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

9. Decides, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to continue its consideration in the competent Main Committee during the fiftieth session of the General Assembly of granting travel assistance, within existing resources, to the least developed countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate resources are allocated for the effective implementation of the programmes of the Commission;

11. Stresses the importance of bringing into effect the conventions emanating from the work of the Commission for the global unification and harmonization of international trade law, and to this end urges States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to those conventions;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of paragraph 9 above to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

PART SIX

Institutional, administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

Strengthening and restructuring of the UN system

In 1995, efforts to restructure and strengthen the United Nations continued, in order to improve the Organization's ability to meet the demands of the post-cold-war era and the challenges of the future. The General Assembly on 14 September established an Open-ended High-level Working Group to consider a wide range, of subjects relating to the revitalization, strengthening and reform of the UN system.

Ongoing consultations on reform of inter-governmental machinery were held by the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council. In addition, the importance of revitalizing and strengthening the role of the General Assembly was repeatedly stressed during the 1995 Assembly session. A more dynamic relationship among the main inter-governmental organs—the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council—was, according to the Secretary-General, a crucial component of the larger reform process. Further restructuring measures were sought in the economic, social and related fields.

In 1995, steps were taken further to streamline Secretariat operations, strengthen accountability, tighten personnel and management standards, and eliminate waste and redundancy. While striving to improve the quality of service provided to Member States, the Secretary-General expressed his commitment to using the scarce financial resources available in the most efficient way and even reduce the budget further.

As activities and financial transactions of the Organization increased in number and complexity, the newly established UN Office of Internal Oversight Services assisted the Secretary-General in fulfilling responsibilities with regard to monitoring, internal audit, inspection, evaluation and investigation.

Establishment of High-level Working Group

Following intensive consultations by T. P. Sreenivasan (India) on behalf of the General Assembly President, consensus was reached on the establishment of an Open-ended High-level Working Group of the Assembly, under the chairmanship of the President, to review studies and reports on subjects relating to the revitalization, strengthening and reform of the UN system. During the consultations, it was agreed that, given the complexity and high volume of documentation to be considered, a systematic gathering of information would begin as soon as possible and that the Working Group or its Bureau should meet for organizational purposes between September and December. The studies and reports to be used in the exercise, it was noted, encompassed many aspects in the political, economic, social and other fields; therefore, synthesizing and classifying that information would be a significant undertaking. Although the Working Group would commence its work during the Assembly's fiftieth session, the bulk of its substantive work would begin in 1996.

A transparent mechanism would be devised to facilitate contacts with the bureaus of other working groups already in existence—such as the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter I), the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations (see PART SIX, Chapter II), the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council (see below), the Informal Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Peace (see PART ONE, Chapter I) and the Consultations on Prospective New Modalities for Financing Operational Activities for Development (see PART SIX, Chapter IV).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 September, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/252.

Strengthening of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations is an occasion for re-examination and strengthening of the United Nations system, as the United Nations prepares for the challenges of the twenty-first century,

Determined to strengthen the role, capacity, effectiveness and efficiency of the United Nations system and thus improve its performance in order to realize the full potential of the Organization, in accordance with the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, and to respond more effectively to the needs and aspirations of the Member States,

Conscious of the importance of a viable financial basis and adequate and predictable resources for the effective functioning of the United Nations system,

Encouraged by the ongoing efforts to improve the administration, management and performance of the United Nations system,

Noting that important work is already proceeding in the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Development, the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations, the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council, the Informal Open-ended Working Group on An Agenda for Peace and the Consultations on Prospective New Modalities for Financing Operational Activities for Development, all of which report to the General Assembly,

Noting also that the Secretary-General and a number of United Nations bodies, as well as independent commissions, institutions, scholars and other experts, have studied the United Nations system and recommended a variety of measures designed to revitalize, strengthen and reform the United Nations system,

1. Decides to establish an open-ended high-level working group of the General Assembly, under the chairmanship of the President of the General Assembly and with two vice-chairmen to be elected by the working group, and that the group may establish, as necessary, sub-groups open to the participation of all Member States;

2. Decides also that the working group will undertake a thorough review of the studies and reports of the relevant United Nations bodies and submissions of Member States and observers, as well as studies and reports of independent commissions, non-governmental organizations, institutions, scholars and other experts, on subjects relating to the revitalization, strengthening and reform of the United Nations system, to be selected by the working group with the assistance of the Secretariat, and, without in any way duplicating or impeding the work of the other working groups referred to above, specify by consensus those ideas and proposals drawn therefrom that it concludes are appropriate for the purpose of revitalization, strengthening and reform of the United Nations system in fulfilment of the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Requests the bureau of the working group to maintain regular contacts with the bureaux of the working groups mentioned above;

4. Requests the working group to commence its substantive work during the fiftieth session of the General Assembly and submit a report on its work before the end of that session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, within existing resources, to be supplemented by a trust fund to which voluntary contributions could be solicited, full assistance to the working group, including the facilities and support services necessary for it to conduct its work;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session an item entitled "Strengthening of the United Nations system".

In accordance with the Assembly resolution, a compendium was prepared of material pertaining to the two specific areas which the Working Group decided to discuss after the orientation debate—the General Assembly and the Secretariat.

Intergovernmental machinery

In his 1995 report on the work of the Organization,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General considered that the ongoing efforts to attain Secretariat reform had to be part of a larger restructuring effort that included the intergovernmental machinery. A more dynamic relationship among the main intergovernmental organs—the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council—was a crucial component of that larger reform process, he stated.

Revitalization of General Assembly

During the fiftieth (1995) General Assembly session and at its Special Commemorative Meeting on the occasion of the Organization's fiftieth anniversary, many Member States stressed the importance of strengthening the role of the Assembly. Revitalization of the Assembly was also on the agenda of the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System (see above).

The Secretary-General, in his 1995 report on the work of the Organization, underlined the need for improved Assembly procedures and working methods, citing both progress made and continuing challenges. He commended the increasing use of the informal, open-ended working group as an effective instrument in seeking solutions to major problems relating to the efficient working of the Organization, and the streamlining of the Assembly agenda through consolidation of related items and the decision to discuss some items every second or third year. In 1994, the Assembly had adopted⁽²⁾ guidelines for rationalizing its agenda, as well as arrangements concerning the pattern of election of the Chairmen of its Main Committees, while deciding to take up the entire topic of revitalizing the Assembly again in 1997 and to review those arrangements in 1998.

The Secretary-General pointed to the possibility of further rationalizing the agenda through broadly-worded agenda items that allowed flexibility to examine several topics or aspects of a question under a single item. Areas where such a possibility could be explored were disarmament, cooperation between the UN and intergovernmental organizations, decolonization, and financing of peace-keeping operations. He also noted 10 items on the agenda had not been considered at all for several years.

Also of concern was the issue of the number of reports requested by the Assembly. In the Secretary-General's view, streamlining and cost-cutting could ultimately not succeed unless that number—more than 200 by the Secretary-General, in addition to those of principal organs and their subsidiary bodies, special rapporteurs and the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS)—was significantly reduced. The difficulties and expense involved in producing so many reports in a timely manner were evident, the Secretary-General stated, given the frequency with which the Assembly and other principal and subsidiary organs were currently meeting.

Rationalization of the work of the Fifth Committee

Within the framework of the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations (see below), the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee in 1995 again considered rationalization of its work. Following informal consultations, the Committee Chairman submitted a draft resolution on the subject.⁽³⁾ On 11 September, on a proposal by the Philippines on behalf of the States Members which were members of the Group of 77 developing countries and China, the Committee recommended⁽⁴⁾ to the General Assembly that it defer consideration of the question to its fiftieth session. The Assembly did so on 14 September by decision 49/498.

In its October 1995 report⁽⁵⁾ on management in the United Nations (see below, under "Internal oversight"), the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) also dealt with the role of the Fifth Committee in helping to establish a new, stronger management culture in the Organization (see below). Aware of the intense work pressure faced by the Committee, as evidenced by a flood of documents and a formidable array of agenda items, JIU recommended that the Committee consider measures to help overcome the current weakness of UN management and performance reporting and make it more understandable, timely, action-oriented and focused (recommendation 3). Also, to fulfil more adequately its central role in the new accountability and responsibility system, the Committee might wish to consider reassessing systematically its workflows and annual calendar, and to establish subcommittees to divide tasks, enhance specialization, and focus more clearly on major management and oversight issues and processes (recommendation 4). Those subcommittees should not prejudice the functions of existing bodies and organs elsewhere in the intergovernmental structure.

Review of Security Council membership and related matters

In his annual report on the work of the Organization, the Secretary-General noted that the question of the enlargement of the Security Council had attracted intense interest, as a possible means of making UN work in the field of peace and security more efficient and democratic. The agenda item on an increase in Council membership was first considered by the General Assembly in 1979,⁽⁶⁾ when it was introduced on the grounds that UN membership had by then grown to 152, compared to 116 in 1963, when the Assembly had amended Articles 23 and 27 of the Charter, enlarging the membership from 11 to 15 and raising the number of affirmative votes for a decision—including the concurring votes of the five permanent members—from seven to nine.⁽⁷⁾ Both amendments came into force on 31 August 1965.

In 1995, the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council, established by the Assembly in 1993,⁽⁸⁾ held 11 formal meetings between 16 January and 15 September. The Group had before it a list of questions prepared by Finland and Thailand, as Vice-Chairmen, as well as a compilation of observations and views expressed during the 1994 Assembly session. The Group agreed to address two clusters of items⁽⁹⁾—equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Council (cluster I), and other matters related to the Council (cluster II).

Between January and March 1995, the Working Group discussed those topics at nine formal meetings; between March and September, it held 21 informal consultations on the two clusters, as well as on the structure and content of its report. Based on discussions held between January and March, and taking into account Member States' views during the 1994 Assembly session, the Vice-Chairmen prepared two "non-papers" on clusters I and II, which were later updated. Together with other documents containing assessments of the progress of work, observations and proposals made by Argentina, Australia, Belgium (on behalf of a number of countries), Belize, Cuba, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Singapore, Turkey, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Nordic countries they were reproduced in a compendium transmitted by the Vice-Chairmen to the Assembly President in September.⁽¹⁰⁾

While expressing appreciation for the work of the two Vice-Chairmen, the Working Group stressed that the compendium had no legal status, did not constitute the Group's position or prejudice the position of any delegation, and should not form the sole input for the continuation of the Group's work, as a wide range of other views had been expressed and various proposals had been made.

The "non-papers" served as rolling documents of the Working Group and were intended to facilitate a full exchange of views on topics in the suggested list of questions. The items discussed under cluster I included: guiding principles for expanding the Council membership; size and composition of the permanent and non-permanent membership; new categories or types of membership, and qualifications of and modalities for selecting members of each of those categories; overall size of the expanded Council; voting procedure, including the question of the veto; and the question of periodic review. The items discussed under cluster II included: measures and practices adopted by the Council to enhance its transparency and working methods and their streamlining, expansion or possible institutionalization; retention, modification or finalization of the Council's provisional rules of procedure; briefings by the Council presidency; enhancement of mechanisms for information-gathering and analysis; wider consultation with concerned or interested parties; increased consultations between the Council and troop-contributing States (see also PART TWO, Chapter I); and relationship of the Council with other UN organs, including its reports to the Assembly.

The Group did not conclude its discussion but continued its review, bearing in mind the substantial increase in UN membership, especially of developing countries, as well as the important changes in international relations. As the Group noted in its conclusions, there was agreement to expand the Council and review its working methods and other matters related to its functioning in a way that would further strengthen its capacity and effectiveness, enhance its representative character and improve its efficiency.

It was recognized, the Group said, that the principles of sovereign equality of all UN Members, equitable geographical distribution, and contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security, as well as to the other purposes of the Organization, should guide the work on reform of the Council. The concepts of transparency, legitimacy, effectiveness and efficiency should also be taken into account, as well as, in the view of a large number of delegations, the concept of democracy.

Support was expressed for the proposals that the final agreement on items in clusters I and II comprise a comprehensive package; that work in the two clusters be allowed to proceed concurrently; and that progress in one cluster should not be impeded by lack of progress in the other. Some delegations noted that during the Group's course of work a number of measures had been implemented and practices developed to improve the Council's transparency and working methods. Discussions also showed, the Group noted, that important differences continued to exist on key issues, which required further in-depth consideration.

The General Assembly, by decision 49/499 of 18 September, noted the Working Group's report⁽⁹⁾ and decided that the Group should continue its work, taking into account the progress achieved during the forty-eighth (1993) and forty-ninth (1994) Assembly sessions and the views expressed during the 1995 session, including at the Special Commemorative Meeting on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations. The Assembly decision had been recommended by the Working Group.

Restructuring of the UN economic, social and related fields

The process of restructuring and revitalization of the economic, social and related fields of the United Nations, which began in 1991,⁽¹¹⁾ continued in 1995. The Secretary-General, in an October report,⁽¹²⁾ provided information on measures being discussed and implemented, in response to a 1993 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹³⁾ as well as on other issues related to restructuring and revitalization raised in intergovernmental discussions.

Among the measures under discussion were: creation of a separate Executive Board for the UN Population Fund (UNFPA) (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII); arrangements relating to the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIII); and new modalities for funding operational activities for development (see PART SIX, Chapter IV). The report also provided an update on the experience of the Executive Boards of the UN Development Programme/UNFPA and of the United Nations Children's Fund.

The report identified a number of issues recently discussed in the Economic and Social Council: policy development and coordination; the Council's working methods and organization of work; subsidiary machinery; regional commissions; inter-agency coordination; cooperation between the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization (WTO); and documentation (see PART SIX, Chapter IV).

In its agreed conclusions of 1995,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Council put forth recommendations intended to address, within the framework of discussions on an agenda for development (see PART FOUR, Chapter I), the integrated consideration of themes common to major international conferences, with a view to promoting better coherence and providing integrated policy guidelines. At its 1995 substantive session, in the context of the coordination segment devoted to the follow-up to UN conferences, the Council also discussed streamlining the work and strengthening the role of its functional commissions. In its agreed conclusions, noting the current practice of assigning one commission or relevant intergovernmental body with responsibility for follow-up to each conference, the Council stated that the commissions, within their respective mandates, should develop multi-year programmes of work for conference follow-up and review of conference programmes of action. The Council, in cooperation with the functional commissions, should ensure a better division of labour and coordination among them, with a consolidation of activities if appropriate.

The Council, acknowledged that the regional commissions should play an important role in assisting countries of each region in implementing conference recommendations. The Council should enhance coordination with and among them, and ensure their more effective participation in conference follow-up.

The Secretary-General noted that both the Assembly and the Council viewed restructuring and revitalization in the economic, social and related fields as an ongoing process. He supported that approach, which, he said, should be aimed at enhancing the Organization's flexibility and adaptability in the performance of its functions and its ability to address the most urgent tasks and new demands, as well as to ensure its capability to deal with the growing number of global challenges. The Secretary-General pointed to his continuing efforts to simplify and enhance the coordination of the Organization's activities and to rationalize its structures, stating at the same time a need to go further and increase efficiency while continuing to eliminate duplication and overlapping. In that connection, he stressed that the United Nations should focus particularly on those sectors in which its contribution was irreplaceable.

The Secretary-General expressed great appreciation of the will shown by the seven major industrialized countries at their Summit (Halifax, Canada, 15-17 June)⁽¹⁵⁾ to develop a more internal policy coordination role for the Council. He similarly appreciated that the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77, in their Ministerial Declaration of 29 September,⁽¹⁶⁾ stressed that the Council's role, as reflected in the UN Charter and recent Assembly resolutions, must be fully exercised. He was also fully aware of the discussions of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on an Agenda for Development, which included the issue of institutional reform. According to the outline agreed on by the Working Group, institutional issues were to be covered in the third chapter of the agenda, together with follow-up aspects; it was expected that the agenda should refer, inter alia, to enhancing the role, capacity, effectiveness and efficiency of the UN system in development, and to the interaction between the UN and other multilateral development institutions, including the Bretton Woods institutions and WTO.

Concluding, the Secretary-General stated that the relevant portions of the agenda for development and the outcome of the Assembly's consideration of the restructuring and revitalization of the UN in the economic, social and related fields should contribute to defining, rationalizing and further strengthening the work of the Organization.

In his 1995 report,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General declared that, within the realm of activities covered by the Economic and Social Council, further steps to ensure more coherent management of operational activities carried out under the aegis of various UN programmes and funds, as well as improved coordination of humanitarian activities, were other essential reform elements requiring renewed attention at the intergovernmental level.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/475 of 23 December, retained the agenda item on restructuring and revitalizing the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields for consideration during its fiftieth session.

UN Secretariat and intergovernmental organizations

To improve programme delivery and respond more effectively to strategic objectives and priorities established by Member States, the restructuring of the Secretariat, which had begun in 1992,⁽¹⁾ continued in 1995. In his annual report on the work of the Organization,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General put forward five objectives designed to create what he called a mission-driven and result-oriented Organization: better management of human resources, together with improvement of staff members' capabilities and accomplishments; better programme management, from the identification of strategic priorities, to the budgetary process by which resources were allocated to achieve those priorities, to a performance measurement system; better and more timely information with which to manage; better management of technology and extension of its availability throughout the Organization; and better management of the Organization's cost structure and an enhanced programme for promoting efficiency and cost-effectiveness.

At the same time, the Secretary-General was convinced that no reform effort could succeed without addressing the basic issue of providing the Organization with a more adequate and reliable financial base.

The need to use UN human and financial resources more efficiently and to increase productivity was a recurrent theme during the 1995 General Assembly session. Independent commissions and experts also recognized that Secretariat reform was essential.

Review of UN administrative and financial functioning

In 1995, the General Assembly's Fifth Committee continued consideration of the agenda item on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations. The Committee had before it a June report⁽³⁾ of the Secretary-General on progress in implementing procurement reform in the Secretariat (see PART SIX, Chapter IV), two OIOS reports⁽⁴⁾ on the activities of the UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (see PART ONE, Chapter III) and a third⁽⁵⁾ on the audit of the UN Protection Force (UNPROFOR) personnel pilot project (see PART TWO, Chapter V). As consultations did not result in a draft resolution, the Committee recommended that the item be deferred.

Following the Committee's recommendation,⁽⁶⁾ the Assembly, by decision 49/489 of 20 July, deferred consideration of the documents relating to the item to its fiftieth session; it requested the Secretary-General to update his 1994 report on the restructuring of the UN Secretariat⁽⁷⁾ and to apprise the Assembly of the measures taken to implement his 1994 recommendations on the establishment of a transparent and effective system of accountability and responsibility.⁽⁸⁾

On 22 September, by decision 50/402A, the Assembly included the item in the agenda of its fiftieth session, allocating it to the Fifth Committee, which considered it on 22 December. On 23 December, the Assembly decided that the item should remain on its agenda for consideration during its fiftieth session (decision 50/475), with the Fifth Committee continuing to consider it, as well as relevant reports, at its resumed fiftieth session (decision 50/469). By decision 50/470 of the same date, the Assembly included the item in the Committee's work programme for 1996 and 1997.

Internal oversight

The General Assembly, deciding in July 1994 to establish the Office of Internal Oversight Services,⁽⁹⁾ clearly expressed its intention to enhance oversight functions within the United Nations, in view of the increased importance, cost and complexity of the Organization's activities. The Assembly also stressed the proactive and advisory role of the new office, which would give assistance and provide methodological support to programme managers and would monitor closely their compliance with its recommendations. OIOS would transmit, through the Secretary-General to the Assembly, reports on its work to provide insight into the effective utilization and management of UN resources.

In a report by the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services on OIOS activities⁽¹⁰⁾—covering the period between 15 November 1994, the date he took office, and 30 June 1995—it was stated that for almost 50 years internal oversight was, at best, underdeveloped in the United Nations, and internal auditing, programme evaluation and monitoring played a marginal role as part of administration and management, lacking independence and authority. Neither an inspection function nor an investigation unit had existed within the Secretariat. Some of the deficiencies and weaknesses the United Nations was being increasingly criticized for had, in his opinion, something to do with the traditionally weak oversight function, which allowed the bureaucracy to grow without pruning for many years and which had led to too rigid procedures and structures that frustrated creativity and individual initiative; also, overlapping and duplication of responsibilities had not been adequately addressed, let alone eliminated.

The Under-Secretary-General cited further reasons why the management reality of the United Nations was less than perfect. He said that rules and regulations were too complicated and too numerous to serve as clear guidance; a concerted effort had to be made to weed out or reformulate what had become obsolete or been superseded. OIOS would be involved in such an exercise, together with the Office of Legal Affairs (OLA) and the Department of Administration and Management (DAM). Second, the personnel system was cumbersome and the hiring of new talent as difficult as the termination of non-performers. The "buy-out programme" initiated by DAM and related measures would enhance staff rotation and mobility. Third, managerial and administrative skills were not well distributed in the Organization and there was a lack of experienced administrators in peace-keeping missions. OIOS strongly endorsed the launching by the Office of Human Resources Management of a major training programme to raise management awareness and recommended that it be extended to include all levels of management. Fourth, there was a lack of horizontal communication, with different departments not knowing enough about each other's work; this created the danger of unintentional overlapping and preoccupation with "turf. OIOS would continue to emphasize the need for more transparency and coordination. Fifth, vertical communication also needed improving; if staff at all levels were expected to participate in the management of the Organization, dialogue had to be intensified. OIOS joined others in attempting to bring about that important change in corporate culture. Sixth, efforts had to be made to do away with the widespread tendency of staff, even in key positions, to shun responsibility and accountability. OIOS backed measures by DAM to achieve that goal and would focus its own recommendations accordingly. Seventh, institutional memory needed improving and in some key areas to be created from scratch. There was no central approach to the recording of actions and the maintenance and indexing of files. OIOS intended to address that issue. And, finally, the geographic spread—New York, Geneva, Nairobi, Vienna, plus regional commissions—reflected the worldwide mandate of the United Nations, but was also the cause of fragmentation and communication problems. OIOS recommended a sound mixture of delegation of authority and necessary guidance.

Those shortcomings were not likely to be overcome by quick-fix remedies, the Under-Secretary-General pointed out, particularly in an Organization of such size and staffed by people from some 160 countries who brought with them quite diverse perceptions of public service. Also, the United Nations found itself in a difficult situation, simultaneously facing huge new challenges and shrinking resources and having to adjust to dramatic environmental change while at the same time expected to change itself. In addition, discussions about reforms tended to turn into political issues in the legislative bodies and divergent perceptions among Member States resulted frequently in guidance, mandates and requests to the Secretariat that were, from an administrative point of view, less than clear.

Bearing in mind this environment and that organizational and cultural change could not be achieved overnight, the Under-Secretary-General believed that, for the work of OIOS to be meaningful, it had to be systematic and thorough and should not aim at spectacular, short-lived actions, but should provide the United Nations with a steady, continuous oversight coverage that promoted effective and efficient programme management and prevented future problems; the Office also had to find and report on current problems regarding waste, fraud, abuse and mismanagement.

OIOS had begun to meet with success in its new set of tasks, the Under-Secretary-General continued, although many UN managers were not used to and seemed to be quite reluctant to accept criticism, particularly when it came to applying accountability criteria rather than settling for the promise that some specific problem would not recur. That feature of the UN culture had to be changed, he said, and managers should adopt a positive and supportive attitude towards internal control and had to enter into a critical dialogue with OIOS. They should be aware that an effective internal control system could not be left only to the Organization's oversight services; the adoption of a set of internal control standards would raise managers' support for adequate internal controls and would provide a benchmark to assess the systems in place. OIOS would play its role in identifying specific control objectives for different categories of operations.

Occasionally, OIOS findings and recommendations were challenged on the grounds that the Office might not have the technical expertise to appreciate fully a problem's complexity; such reaction was understandable, in the Under-Secretary-General's view, but in most instances not justified. OIOS recommendations were vehicles for promoting change and needed senior-management support to ensure compliance.

Concluding, the Under-Secretary-General stated that much remained to be done to make the Organization fit for its current and future challenges; OIOS would do its share towards achieving that goal.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/469 of 23 December, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the report on OIOS activities at the resumed fiftieth session.

JIU reports. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a JIU report,⁽¹⁾ giving an overview and analysis of accountability, management improvement and oversight in the UN system, with a November addendum⁽²⁾ containing comparative data on recent reforms, initiatives and actions undertaken by 28 UN organizations. The Inspectors offered a summary of conceptual and practical relationships, patterns, common trends, initiatives and possible actions to help strengthen and enhance accountability, management and oversight in what had to become a continuous process. In the view of JIU, each organization had to develop its own processes and perspectives to meet its specific needs and circumstances, although each was urged to take two pivotal steps: to establish a single focal point under its executive head dedicated to strategic planning, performance management, maximally effective accountability and management improvement (recommendation 1); and to report annually on those issues to its governing body (recommendation 9).

JIU deemed it increasingly urgent that the organizations demonstrated wise resource use and programme responsiveness, as the pressures for high-quality performance were expected only to intensify. To that effect, it further recommended that each organization carefully consider the balance and capacities of its internal audit, evaluation, management services, analysis, reform, inspection and/or investigation units; keep under review ways to better consolidate, strengthen or support them; and regularly assess and improve their effectiveness (recommendation 2). In other recommendations, JIU called on each organization: to ensure that it had integrated and dynamic internal control systems in place and to develop clear guidance and actions concerning personal accountability, financial liability and standards of staff conduct (recommendation 3); to establish a comprehensive information systems strategy to use effectively information technology for programming, management and decision-making, and to streamline work patterns and processes (recommendation 4); to strengthen its management development and training programmes and support management improvement and analysis units (recommendation 5); and to support the recent management, accountability and oversight improvement efforts of the inter-agency bodies (recommendation 6). JIU also recommended that external system-wide oversight bodies improve and, if necessary, institutionalize their sharing of information on work programmes, findings and recommendations, and more frequently propose mutually reinforcing areas for review and assessment to one another (recommendation 7). In its view, the organizations' oversight governing bodies needed much more firmly and consistently to assert their leadership role and to insist on improved accountability, performance, oversight and sound management; they needed to prove that commitment by providing clearer guidance to secretariats, sharpening their focus on performance and results, following up more systematically on past policy decisions, and employing external reviews and dialogues with clientele to enhance programme transparency, responsiveness and accountability (recommendation 8).

Introducing the report before the Fifth Committee, JIU said it was the first inventory and analysis of the subject and established a basis for future efforts to address those problems on a system-wide scale; its conclusions and recommendations could assist Member States in restructuring and streamlining the system. A strategic and integrated approach to accountability and oversight processes would lead to the elimination of existing gaps and overlaps, and would contribute to the creation of a new management culture in the UN system.

Another JIU report,⁽¹³⁾ also transmitted in October, dealt with management in the United Nations. Although acknowledging managerial progress in human resources strategy and planning, programme planning and budgeting (see PART SIX, Chapter II), management training, the new performance appraisal system (see PART SIX, Chapter III), internal oversight, and management information systems (see PART SIX, Chapter IV), JIU felt that progress had not been satisfactory in policy guidance and instructions, performance management, the administration of justice and management improvement. It therefore recommended that the Secretary-General establish a small but full-time unit for integrated strategic planning, systematic and transparent monitoring and enhancement of the new system of accountability and responsibility, and the "management of change" (recommendation 1); and that he ensure that specific objectives, together with dates for their completion, were included in all unit work plans in the Secretariat and in any reports to inter-governmental bodies on status and progress of individual programmes and major activities, as well as in reviews by internal and external oversight bodies (recommendation 2).

Activities of OIOS

The Office of Internal Oversight Services was formally established in September 1994. In addition to assisting the Secretary-General in fulfilling internal oversight responsibilities in the areas of audit and management, consulting, investigation, inspection and monitoring and evaluation, the Office was also responsible for administrative direction and management, as well as for programme planning, budget and finance under the medium-term plan for 1992-1997 (see PART SIX, Chapter II).

In 1995, OIOS was provided with eight more posts, raising its staff to 110, including extra-budgetary posts.

During the period from 15 November 1994 to 30 June 1995, OIOS concentrated its oversight efforts on peace-keeping operations (see PART TWO, Chapter I), humanitarian and related activities, and the general problem of procurement (see PART SIX, Chapter IV)—areas where, due to their visibility and the high level of expenditures involved, the uneconomical use of funds and management problems and abuses could have the most serious effect.

In carrying out his tasks, the Under-Secretary-General paid inspectorial visits to other major duty stations such as Geneva and Vienna, to UNPROFOR in Zagreb, Croatia (see PART TWO, Chapter V), and to the Economic Commission for Africa, in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

In the area of peace-keeping, emphasis was placed on the start-up phase of operations, procedures dealing with the end-of-mission phase, the safeguarding of assets, the reliability of financial and other information, and compliance with existing rules, regulations and instructions. Close attention was given to the division of labour between the Department of Peace-keeping Operations (DPKO) and DAM, and the functioning of the Field Administration and Logistics Division (FALD) of DPKO. OIOS also intensified the auditing of missions and assigned resident auditors to large and complex missions.

With regard to humanitarian and related activities, OIOS developed recommendations directed at better coordination of efforts by various UN agencies providing humanitarian assistance. A report on the implementation of recommendations regarding the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees was to be reviewed by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) in 1996, and another report on an in-depth evaluation of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) was scheduled for review by CPC in 1997. An OIOS report noted pertinent observations on coordination issues in a DHA report on Rwanda.

The Office had also begun reviewing all phases of the procurement process, as well as the general organization of that function, including the implementation of recommendations made by a high-level expert group in December 1994.

The comments of JIU on final reports produced by OIOS were transmitted to the General Assembly in October 1995.⁽¹⁴⁾ Those reports had been prepared for the forty-ninth Assembly session, but consideration was postponed to the fiftieth session. JIU remarked that for a number of OIOS reports, particularly those dealing with specific investigations and inspections, its comments were necessarily limited or nil because of lack of access to the original records. It hoped that that situation would be overcome and intended to undertake the necessary coordination with OIOS in that regard.

Audit and management consulting

The OIOS Audit and Management Consulting Division (AMCD) continued to conduct independent internal audits in conformity with generally accepted auditing standards of all UN activities worldwide—those financed from both the regular budget and from extrabudgetary funds—for which the Secretary-General had administrative responsibility. AMCD identified management problems and developed detailed recommendations for improvement. It undertook management surveys, reviewed organizational structures to suggest more effective ones, and looked into productivity issues. It also rendered advisory services to management and suggested improvements in streamlining management structures, planning, monitoring and budgeting, work processes and the use of human resources.

Investigation

The Investigations Section of OIOS received numerous reports of possible violations of rules or regulations, mismanagement, misconduct, waste of resources or abuse of authority from staff members and others outside the Organization. Establishing the meaning of those terms within the Organization's legal framework became a key priority of the Section in cooperation with the OLA General Legal Division.

Reports were also made through a 24-hour confidential hot line; in accordance with requirements set forth by the General Assembly,⁽⁹⁾ the confidentiality of all who made reports in good faith was protected, whether the investigation substantiated the report or not. The Section accepted suggestions from staff members for the improvement of working conditions and programme delivery and provided investigatory expertise and assistance to UN funds and programmes which generally did not have an investigations function.

The Central Monitoring and Inspection Unit completed two new inspections in 1995—related to FALD⁽¹⁵⁾ and to the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).⁽¹⁶⁾ It also followed up actively on an inspection relating to the Centre for Human Rights, conducted in 1994. The Under-Secretary-General reported that tangible steps were taken by the High Commissioner for Human Rights to reappraise and restructure the work of the Centre and reorganize its secretariat in line with OIOS recommendations. An inspection team's findings and recommendations, as well as follow-up action as at 31 March 1995, were presented in a report transmitted by the Secretary-General in April.⁽¹⁷⁾

The inspection of FALD found that the Division was not functioning in an environment that facilitated operational efficiency. It also found that its complement of staff was inappropriate in mix and, in some respects, insufficient in numbers. It was suggested that some functional responsibilities were not entirely clear and that certain organizational linkages had clouded accountability and impeded efficiency. From the financial point of view, the inspection found that the Organization faced potential risk of unrecorded liabilities and, in terms of third-party liability, including lack of adequate assets control. It concluded that FALD was not adequately fulfilling its mandate and that a more proactive management approach with coherent, workable policies and procedures was needed to alleviate the shortcomings found by the inspection. Recommendations were made to and accepted by FALD. The Secretary-General, in his transmittal note, expressed agreement with OIOS recommendations.

The OIOS inspection found that overall quality of UNCTAD's work was impressive. However, the inspection team observed that most of UNCTAD's activities could be found elsewhere in the UN system, making a case for duplication. It also suggested that the UNCTAD secretariat was overstaffed and top heavy, that the organizational structure needed streamlining and consolidating into fewer divisions, and there were shortfalls in administrative services and weaknesses in oversight mechanisms. Recommendations were accepted and endorsed by UNCTAD management.

Monitoring of programme performance

The function of monitoring programme performance was further strengthened in order to become a more useful management instrument. To that effect, a more transparent and effective system of information-gathering for oversight purposes was established, especially with respect to changes introduced during the process of implementation of the programme budget. The reasons for departures from programmed commitments, such as reformulations, postponements, terminations and additional outputs introduced by the Secretariat, were currently being identified and included in a database. At the same time, monitoring and self-evaluation would be viewed as an integral part of the managerial oversight responsibility, which required the generation, on a routine basis, of data and analytical information on implementation and results achieved, including the use of achievement indicators where appropriate. General guidelines for the establishment of such managerial monitoring functions, including the development of performance indicators, were nearing completion for the guidance of programme managers. Implementation of those guidelines was to be monitored regularly to review how programme managers throughout the Organization collected and assembled information on their respective programmes in order to keep appraised of progress, analyse performance, enhance the economy and efficiency of implementation and establish adequate management accountability systems. Such information was to become an integral part of the biennial programme performance reporting to Member States.

Evaluation

The OIOS Central Evaluation Unit completed two in-depth evaluations, one on the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations⁽¹⁸⁾ (see PART TWO, Chapter I) and the other on the UN Environment Programme (UNEP).⁽¹⁹⁾ It presented reports thereon to CPC in 1995.

The first report reviewed the status of implementation of recommendations made in a 1994 progress report⁽²⁰⁾ concerning the capacity of the United Nations to learn from its experience with peace-keeping operations, and its ready capacity to act, for six substantive components of complex missions: information, electoral, repatriation, human rights, civilian police and military. In addition, the report reviewed and made recommendations on overall direction and coordination and the humanitarian and civil administration aspects of peace-keeping operations, as well as six support functions: planning, financing, staffing, logistics, procurement and training. CPC, in May 1995, endorsed 13 recommendations unreservedly and two with qualifications, reformulated one recommendation and proposed that five others be further studied.⁽²¹⁾

The report on UNEP presented findings and recommendations on its catalytic and coordinating role, its activities and administration. The general thrust of the report's recommendations was to refocus UNEP activities by strengthening its partnership with other organizations within and outside the UN system, with due regard to its role as a global environment programme. CPC expressed its appreciation for the report's quality and comprehensive nature and endorsed its recommendations, subject to the different views expressed by delegations during the discussion and to the subsequent views of the UNEP Governing Council. The Council⁽²²⁾ in May requested appropriate action on OIOS recommendations (see PART FOUR, Chapter VII).

Chapter II

United Nations financing and programming

In 1995, the United Nations financial crisis continued to deepen, with unpaid assessed contributions totalling $2.3 billion at year's end. References to the critical financial situation were made by many Heads of State and Government who addressed the Special Commemorative Meeting of the General Assembly on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Organization. In its Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, the Assembly stated: "In order to carry out its work effectively, the United Nations must have adequate resources. Member States must meet, in full and on time, their obligation to bear the expenses of the Organization, as apportioned by the General Assembly. That apportionment should be established on the basis of criteria agreed to and considered to be fair by Member States."

The Secretary-General, in his annual report, said that unless the receipt of unpaid assessments dramatically improved, there would be no choice but to reduce spending further, focusing on those activities for which no assessments had been approved. Activities for which assessments had been approved, but had chronically not been paid by Member States, might have to be curtailed. Notwithstanding the financial problems facing the Organization, efforts were continuing to make the United Nations more efficient and more effective in carrying out the many tasks entrusted to it, he said.

Throughout the year, the Secretary-General and others warned that the UN financial situation remained extremely grave; debts were accumulating and the Organization was running out of cash. The High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations started work in January 1995 to find ways to bring about constructive and positive changes to provide the Organization with a long sought-after, solid financial base. In view of the tight financial situation, the importance of efficient resource management and planning was stressed on many occasions, as measures were sought to improve programme planning and strengthen internal as well as external auditing. The methodology used to determine the assessments levied on Member States was under scrutiny by the Committee on Contributions and its Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Implementation of the Principle of Capacity to Pay, but no conclusion was reached on how best to determine a country's capacity.

The General Assembly approved final appropriations of more than $2.6 billion for 1994-1995, some $24 million more than it had approved in 1994. Regular budget appropriations for 1996-1997 were at the same level, or slightly less, while extra-budgetary resources for the biennium were estimated at $4.4 billion.

Financial situation

The United Nations found itself in 1995 in a deepening financial crisis, with an unprecedentedly high cash shortfall. After utilizing all other available reserves, regular budget cash was completely depleted in mid-August, making borrowing from peace-keeping operations necessary in order to cover regular budget expenses.

Addressing the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee in July, the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management stated that prospects for the coming months were bleak and it was imperative to find a way of managing accumulated debts which, as at 30 June, totalled approximately $1.5 billion, including some $760 million owed to some 60 Member States for troops and equipment contributed to peace-keeping operations. The United Nations also owed Member States some $400 million for budgetary surpluses in prior years, and owed $375 million to vendors and suppliers. In short, amounts owed exceeded cash on hand by approximately $1 billion.

The causes for the precarious financial situation were plain and followed the same pattern as in previous years, the Under-Secretary-General said, namely: late or non-payment of assessed contributions for both the regular budget and peace-keeping operations; delay between the approval of such operations by the Security Council and the receipt of cash to pay for them; and an increasing number of unfunded mandates. Lateness and delays created a situation in which inflow of cash was far less than was needed to meet obligations. Difficulties were exacerbated by a lack of adequate cash reserves to bridge the gap. Without cash, the United Nations was obliged to delay payments to

Member States for troops and equipment which had been provided to various peace-keeping operations. If the United Nations continued to pay for troops and equipment, cash reserves would fall below $200 million by the end of the year, which was not enough to cover requirements for three weeks.

In view of the seriousness of the situation, he went on, a letter had again been sent to all UN Permanent Representatives, requesting them to indicate their Government's planned schedule of payments of outstanding assessments. The Secretary-General had made a number of proposals designed to alleviate the situation, including early assessments and redeemable peace-keeping certificates. The mutual exchange of debt obligations was another measure calculated to redress the debt owed to the United Nations. Unless cash projections improved drastically, the Secretary-General would have to propose curtailing activities for which assessments had been approved but which had not been paid by Member States.

On 20 July, the General Assembly, by decision 49/490, adopted on the Committee's recommendation,⁽¹⁾ deferred until its fiftieth session consideration of the item on improving the financial situation of the United Nations.

In September, the Under-Secretary-General informed the Committee that regular budget cash had run out in mid-August and that $98 million had to be borrowed from peace-keeping operations in order to maintain regular budget activities. Unless significant contributions were forthcoming from Member States, borrowing would increase alarmingly in the coming months. The situation was particularly bleak in view of the fact that unprecedented amounts were involved and there was no sign that the outstanding contributions would arrive by October or November. Moreover, total disbursements were likely to be much higher than expected due to expenditures for programmes whose financing had not been agreed on until very recently, such as the war crimes tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, and to the decline in the value of the dollar against other currencies of major duty stations. In addition, payment from one major contributor was expected to arrive very much later than usual during the current year.

In order to deal with the critical situation, the Secretary-General had proposed various measures, including discontinuing troop reimbursements and payment of letters of assistance to Governments. In addition, he had decided to freeze recruitment, strictly curtail overtime and travel of staff, defer representation allowances, suspend new consultancies and purchases of furniture and equipment, delay payments to vendors and pay Professional staff monthly rather than semi-monthly. A reduction in the number of meetings and conferences was also being considered. The Secretary-General intended to address specific appeals to those Member States that accounted for the bulk of the arrears.

High-level Working Group. The High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations, established by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽²⁾ began work on 20 January 1995; it held 39 meetings during the resumed forty-ninth Assembly session, and concluded its discussion on 28 July.

The Working Group considered a number of specific issues related to the assessment and payment of contributions to the regular as well as the peace-keeping budget, including full and on-time payment; stricter interpretation and implementation of Article 19 of the UN Charter and review of necessary procedures; incentives and disincentives, and payment in instalments; issues related to the capacity to pay; income measures (gross national product); length of base period; low per capita income relief methodology and debt adjustment formula; and the contribution floor and ceiling.

During discussions, a large number of Member States expressed the view that the fundamental cause of the serious financial situation was the failure of Member States, in particular some major contributors, to meet their financial obligations to the Organization in full and on time and without conditions. Some Members thought that, while such failure was indeed a major cause of the current financial crisis, a thorough examination of all issues on the Working Group's agenda was necessary for achieving a long-term solution that would place the Organization on a sound financial basis. In the view of others, the fundamental cause of the situation was the failure of the scales of assessment to apportion fairly the Organization's expenses among Member States.

Among the proposals for further improvements in the approval procedures for peace-keeping budgets and appropriations were the issuance of peace-keeping redeemable certificates; the early and/or partial assessment of contributions shortly after the approval of a new mandate; a standardized budget format for peace-keeping operations; and the possibility of establishing a consolidated peace-keeping budget (see also PART TWO, Chapter I).

There was no agreement in the Working Group that the current financial crisis of the United Nations was linked to the methodology of the scales of assessment and the need for their possible revision. A significant number of Member States, however, believed that a revision of the scales to bring them more into line with capacity to pay was a necessary element in any long-term solution to the crisis.

On 28 July, the Working Group recommended that the discussion of the issues covered by its mandate should continue during the fiftieth session of the Assembly, in order to enable the Assembly to take appropriate measures in time to provide the Organization with a viable financial base commensurate with the challenges it would have to face after its fiftieth anniversary. The Working Group was aware of the importance and urgency of the task and of the fact that the solution of the critical financial situation called for serious political efforts.

On 14 September, the General Assembly, by decision 49/495, noted the report of the Fifth Committee⁽³⁾ transmitting the report of the Working Group. By decision 49/496 of the same date, the Assembly noted the Working Group's report and decided that the Group should continue its work, taking into account the views expressed during the forty-ninth and fiftieth Assembly sessions, including its Special Commemorative Meeting. The Group should also submit to the Assembly at its fiftieth session, through the Fifth Committee, a report on its work, including possible recommendations.

On 15 December, the Working Group approved its programme of work for the Assembly's fiftieth session, which comprised the following issues: the cash-flow situation, including mounting debts of the Organization to Member States, as well as financial mechanisms capable of preventing recurrent cycles of financial crisis; payment of contributions in full and on time, increase in unpaid contributions, arrears, and incentives and disincentives; and the scale of assessments.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October report⁽⁴⁾ on improving the financial situation of the United Nations, the Secretary-General drew attention to the critical and uncertain financial situation of the Organization which, having no capital base and effectively no reserves, was therefore totally dependent on Member States assessing themselves on a timely basis for the mandates they wished to have carried out, and on the prompt payment of those assessments to assure cash inflows sufficient to fund them. Uncollected assessments, however, had risen to an unprecedented level; cash inflows had become unpredictable, even erratic; regular budget cash was depleted; and peace-keeping cash had been borrowed to pay regular budget bills. The Organization's debts were mounting, with no predictable assurance of when and to what degree they could be paid; emergency cash conservation measures would have a modest positive effect but provided no long-term solution. In recent weeks, significant payments had been received, but most of them had been anticipated and so the projected need to borrow about $240 million for the regular budget by year's end was unchanged. In light of the contributions paid, the Secretary-General decided on 12 October to pay $150 million to troop contributors, which still left unpaid troop and equipment costs at some $872 million. With unpaid contributions to the peace-keeping budget totalling nearly $2.3 billion, he projected that some $1 billion would still be owed to troop-contributing countries at the end of the year.

As at 20 October, outstanding contributions to the regular budget totalled $664,892,518, of which $394,689,749 were contributions for the current year. The combined total for the regular budget, as well as peace-keeping operations and international tribunals, was $2,884,374,208.

In a later addendum,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the financial crisis continued, notwithstanding the considerable efforts of a number of Member States to pay their prior and current assessed contributions. As at 15 November, unpaid contributions totalled $2.7 billion, of which $645.5 million were owed to the regular budget. Of that latter amount, $414.4 million, or 64 per cent, were due from the major contributor. Contributions outstanding for peace-keeping operations stood at $2,038.1 million, including $92.9 million in respect of assessments issued within the 30-day due period. Of the total past due amount, $817.3 million, or 42 per cent, related to contributions owed by the major contributor. An additional $10.2 million, or 38.4 per cent of the assessed amount, remained outstanding for the two international tribunals—the International Tribunal for Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994.

In an update of 20 December,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the financial situation remained extremely precarious. Despite special efforts by some Member States, the pattern of payments by most remained highly unsatisfactory. Unpaid assessed contributions totalled $2.5 billion as at 15 December, with $582.9 million outstanding for the regular budget and $1.9 billion due for peace-keeping. In addition, just under $10 million remained unpaid for the two international tribunals.

With the pattern of expenditures and contributions received essentially unchanged, the Secretary-General expected both the Working Capital Fund and the Special Account to remain completely depleted by the end of the year. To meet the Organization's obligations under the regular budget, it would again be necessary to borrow funds from peace-keeping accounts. The total of such borrowings at the end of the year might be marginally less than originally anticipated, owing to the combined effect of deferring certain expenditures until early 1996 and of cancelling other expenditures through emergency cash conservation measures.

The funds remaining in the various peace-keeping accounts at the end of 1995 would be needed, the Secretary-General said, to sustain peace-keeping activities into 1996. Although several States had made payments against their outstanding assessments in amounts greater than projected, peace-keeping payments expected in November and December from other Members had not yet been received. Therefore, debts to Member States for troops and equipment were still expected to total about $1 billion at the end of the year.

The Secretary-General concluded that the Organization continued to depend for its survival on those relatively few Members that met their obligations in full, on time and without conditions. But they clearly could not be expected to bear that burden indefinitely when so many others did not. He therefore urged the United Nations membership to address the issue with the urgency and importance it deserved.

According to a later report of the Secretary-General,⁽¹⁾ only 94 Member States had paid their regular budget contributions in full as at 31 December 1995. States making no contribution to the regular budget in 1995 numbered 22, down from 39, while the number owing more than the current year's assessment rose from 71 at the end of 1994 to 74 at the end of 1995.

Total amounts outstanding for the regular budget were $564 million, up from $480 million at December 1994. Amounts outstanding for peace-keeping operations totalled $1.7 billion, up from $1.3 billion at the end of 1994, and contributions outstanding for the international tribunals for Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia were $5.2 million. At the end of 1995, the Member State with the largest assessment owed 73.5 per cent of the amounts outstanding for the regular budget, and 47.4 per cent of the outstanding amounts for peace-keeping operations.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/469 of 23 December, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the agenda item and relevant reports on improving the UN financial situation at its resumed fiftieth session.

UN budget

Budget for 1994-1995

Final appropriations

Report of the Secretary-General. In December 1995, the Secretary-General, in his second performance report⁽¹⁾ on the 1994-1995 budget, provided estimates of the anticipated final levels of expenditure and income for the biennium, based on actual expenditures for the first 18 months and projected requirements for the last six, as well as changes in inflation and exchange rates and cost-of-living adjustments. The estimates represented a net increase of $21.9 million, compared with the revised appropriations and estimates of income approved in 1994.⁽²⁾ Proposed expenditures amounted to $2,635,035,300, while income was estimated at $436,866,600.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in an oral report before the Fifth Committee, recommended a reduction of expenditures by $2.6 million. The Fifth Committee therefore decided on 22 December to recommend to the Assembly that it approve $2,632,435,300 in expenditures for 1994-1995.

General Assembly resolutions 50/205 A and B

23 December 1995 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/841) without vote, 22 December (meeting 45); agenda item 115.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 44, 45; plenary 100.

Redeployment of resources for anti-apartheid activities

In December 1994, the Secretary-General presented⁽³⁾ revised estimates for the 1994-1995 programme budget, proposing for redeployment some of the resources previously allocated to activities related to the elimination of apartheid, which were winding down. ACABQ submitted comments and observations on the Secretary-General's proposals in December⁽⁴⁾ and February 1995.⁽⁵⁾

Explaining those proposals before the Fifth Committee, the Controller said that a total of $9,163,800 had been appropriated for apartheid-related activities under sections 3A, 3C and 24 of the programme budget, of which an estimated $3,435,100 had been spent in 1994. Projected savings therefore amounted to $5,728,700. The Secretary-General proposed that some of those savings be used for activities benefiting African countries, as well as for some of the urgent needs of the Department of Political Affairs (DPA). The $2,885,800 proposed for redeployment to that Department was to be used to provide continued support for Security Council sanctions committees, and additional resources as necessary for the Special Envoy to Afghanistan. Moreover, five Professional and five General Service posts in the former Centre against Apartheid were to be redeployed to strengthen various Africa-related functions. For peace-keeping operations under section 4, it was proposed that one D-1 post be permanently redeployed from DPA to the Africa Division of the Department of Peace-keeping Operations. The $1,005,100 indicated under section 8 (Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development) was to be used in part to strengthen the New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (NADAF; see PART FOUR, Chapter III) and in part to continue measures to combat desertification. An amount of $119,700 was to be redeployed from section 3 to section 15 (Economic Commission for Africa) in order to provide support for the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI; see PART FOUR, Chapter V). The $483,300 included under section 24 (Public information) would allow four Professional and two General Service posts to be retained in the Department of Public Information (DPI) to provide increased radio coverage of UN activities relating to Africa.

Earlier, the General Assembly had already approved continuation of temporary posts for the servicing of the Security Council sanctions committees and the provision of resources for activities relating to NADAF. Action had yet to be taken on the remainder of the Secretary-General's proposals, which the ACABQ had reviewed and endorsed.

Following informal consultations, the Fifth Committee Chairman submitted a draft resolution⁽⁶⁾ under which the Assembly would have stated that it regretted that its request to the Secretary-General to provide adequate posts for activities dealing with micro-economic issues, through redeployment, had not yet been fully implemented, and would have asked him to present by 30 June 1995 proposals for implementing that request. The draft resolution was withdrawn after the Controller, on 31 March, explained before the Committee that the Secretary-General had redeployed six Professional posts and four General Service posts in the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis (DESIPA) to activities dealing with micro-economic issues. Since in redeploying posts previously allocated to the apartheid programme it was important to take into account the skills and experience of the staff members involved, the Secretariat had proposed they be redeployed to programmes related to Africa. It was also intended, however, to continue to strengthen DESIPA, and the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997 would contain specific proposals to that effect.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 6 April, adopted decision 49/480.

Revised estimates under sections 3A, 3B, 3C, 4, 8, 15, 24 and 28 and income section 1 of the programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 6 April 1995, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the revised estimates under sections 3A, 3B, 3C, 4, 8, 15, 24 and 28 and income section 1;

(b) Endorsed the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in its report, subject to the provisions of the present decision;

(c) Decided to redeploy the amount of 119,700 United States dollars from section 3 (Political affairs) of the programme budget for the biennium 1994-1995 to section 15 (Economic Commission for Africa), as requested by the Secretary-General in paragraph 86 of his report;

(d) Requested the Secretary-General to review its recommendations in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997 in order to enhance and enrich programmes and activities for Africa;

(e) Decided that future requests for funding for regional institutes should be considered only on the basis of criteria proposed by the Secretary-General and approved by the General Assembly to determine if such institutes should be funded from the regular budget.

General Assembly decision 49/480

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/822/Add.2) without vote, 31 March (meeting 53); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.38), based on informal consultations and amended by Tunisia, for African Group (A/C.5/49/L.48), orally revised; agenda item 107.

Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 42, 51, 53; plenary 100.

In view of amendments introduced by Tunisia, the United States withdrew its amendments,⁽⁷⁾ which would have added two new paragraphs, calling on the Secretary-General to establish, by 31 May, criteria for the consideration of requests for regular budget support by the regional institutes, and would also have decided to defer consideration of his proposal to redeploy $119,700 to the Economic Commission for Africa.

Reformulation of activities under budget sections 9 and 10

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁹⁾ containing a revised programme narrative for budget section 9 (Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis), programme 1, sub-programme 5 of the 1994-1995 programme budget, and revisions to section 10 (Department for Development Support and Management Services), programme 2.

At its resumed forty-ninth session, the General Assembly, by resolution 49/237, section IV of 31 March 1995, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Budget for 1992-1993

On 6 April, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee,⁽¹⁰⁾ adopted resolution 49/479, thereby concluding its consideration of the agenda item on the programme budget for the 1992-1993 biennium and reaffirming its December 1994 resolution on the final appropriations for 1990-1991,⁽¹¹⁾ in particular the provision whereby it decided that the net increase in appropriations for 1990-1991 be set off against the budgetary surplus available to Member States for 1992-1993.

Budget for 1996-1997

The programme budget for the 1996-1997 biennium was presented by the Secretary-General in a new format and showed zero growth as compared to the previous biennium.

Introducing the proposed programme budget to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General said it represented a renewed effort by the Secretariat to minimize resource requirements and, at the same time, to ensure the provision of efficient services to Member States and the execution of all mandated activities as effectively as possible. His proposals, he said, placed particular emphasis on achieving effectiveness through improved management methods such as simplified administrative procedures, rationalized work programmes, improved productivity through advanced automation technologies, enhanced resource utilization in conference services, and reduced operating expenses in specific areas. Thanks to Secretariat restructuring, efficiency gains and investments in technology, the proposed budget represented a significant reduction compared both to the current one and to the budget outline approved in 1994 by the General Assembly.⁽¹²⁾ The proposed budget called for abolition of 201 posts and the creation of 66 posts for new activities mandated by Member States. Resource reductions under the expenditure sections amounted to $98.2 million; when estimates for general income and revenue-producing activities were taken into account, that was a net reduction of $117 million compared to the current budget.

According to the Secretary-General, the distribution of resources for 1996-1997 was guided by priority areas identified for the medium-term plan period and elaborated in the budget outline. Special attention had been paid to strengthening the Organization's capacity to deal with political and peace-keeping activities, reinforcing international and regional cooperation for development, enhancing support for human rights and humanitarian activities, and increasing internal oversight capacity.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), after considering the proposed programme budget at its 1995 session,⁽¹³⁾ expressed appreciation for the Secretary-General's efforts to present a budget on time and took note of the methodology used to prepare it, as well as new features in the budget format, which included a self-contained, comprehensive overview, summaries of each budget section, additional information on expenditures for 1992-1993, information on extra-budgetary expenditures and their linkage with the regular budget, and projections by object of expenditure.

CPC noted that the total resources requested by the Secretary-General were below the level determined in the budget outline for 1996-1997 adopted by the Assembly.⁽¹²⁾ It welcomed the fact that the savings achieved through improved productivity were higher than anticipated in the outline, and noted the Secretary-General's assurances that the reduction in resources would in no way affect the implementation or quality of all mandated programmes and activities. The Committee recommended that proposals for the provision of resources in the 1996-1997 budget be derived from the medium-term plan for 1992-1997, as revised, and legislative mandates adopted subsequent to the adoption of the plan or its latest revisions. The Committee had arrived at a consensus that the substantial decrease in the level of resources provided for under the proposed budget should be achieved as far as possible through greater efficiency and vastly improved productivity in all programmes. Efforts should also be made to achieve better coordination between various departments and to improve the management of human resources.

Finally, CPC recommended that the Assembly approve the narratives of the majority of the budget sections. In view of the differences of opinion expressed with regard to some sections, the Committee was unable to recommend approval of the narratives of section 8 (Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis), 9 (Department for Development Support and Management Services), 13 (Crime control) and 21 (Human rights). The Economic and Social Council had been unable to resolve those differences at its 1995 summer session; consequently, the Fifth Committee and the Assembly would have to continue to review those questions and make the final decisions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/214.

Questions relating to the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997

I

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Recalling its resolution 45/248 B of 21 December 1990, in which it reaffirmed that the Fifth Committee is the appropriate Main Committee of the General Assembly entrusted with responsibilities for administrative and budgetary matters,

Recalling also its resolutions 45/253 of 21 December 1990 and 47/214 of 23 December 1992,

Reaffirming the respective mandates of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in the consideration of the proposed programme budget,

Stressing that the normal procedures established for the formulation of the programme budget must be maintained and strictly followed,

Having considered the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997 and the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Committee for Programme and Coordination thereon,

1. Welcomes the timely preparation, and notes the improved format, of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997;

2. Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General present in future budget documents appropriate regular budget and extrabudgetary expenditure forecasts to the end of the current biennium to permit comparison with the request contained in the proposed programme budget;

3. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the programme narrative of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997 contained in the report of the Committee on the work of its thirty-fifth session, without prejudice to the priorities established by the General Assembly, and subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

4. Regrets that the Committee for Programme and Coordination was unable to make recommendations on the programme narratives of some sections during its deliberations at its thirty-fifth session;

5. Reiterates that the activities included in the proposed programme budget must be derived from the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and its revisions as adopted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 45/253 and 47/214 and other relevant inter-governmental decisions, and should be aimed at the full implementation of the mandates, policies and priorities as approved by the Assembly;

6. Stresses the role of the relevant intergovernmental bodies in the consideration of the narrative of the proposed programme budget as well as the necessity for a timely presentation of their recommendations on the budget;

7. Also reiterates the need for the Secretary-General to ensure that resources are strictly utilized for the purposes approved by the General Assembly;

8. Notes with concern that the proposed programme budget did not take into account its resolutions 48/218 A and B of 23 December 1993 and 29 July 1994, respectively, regarding the strengthening of the external oversight control mechanisms;

9. Regrets that, in the proposed programme budget, the Secretary-General failed to respect completely the priorities set forth in resolutions 45/253 and 47/214;

10. Further reiterates that, when formulating the proposed programme budget, the Secretary-General must respect fully the priorities established by the General Assembly;

11. Decides to make the following changes to the programme narrative in the final published version of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997:

(a) Amend, as appropriate, references to "island developing States" to read "small island developing States";

(b) In paragraph 71, third sentence, of the Introduction, replace "in Eastern Europe and the countries in transition" by "for countries with economies in transition";

Appropriations

In his first report on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General proposed expenditures amounting to $2,687,067,800 and income totalling $461,421,400, resulting in a net estimate of $2,225,646,400. The proposed budget, at revised 1994-1995 rates, represented a decrease of $38.2 million, or 1.5 per cent from the budget outline estimate (at revised 1994-1995 rates).

Extrabudgetary resources for 1996-1997 were estimated at $4,434,509,700, comprising $420,187,500 for support services, $248,727,000 for substantive activities and $3,765,595,200 for operational projects.

ACABQ, in its first report on the proposed budget,⁽¹⁵⁾ accepted the estimates with minor modifications. With regard to extrabudgetary resources, it welcomed the refinement in the presentation of estimates though further work was needed, and noted that the bulk of these funds (some $3,725.7 million of $4,434.5 million) pertained to programmes that had their own governing bodies to which the Advisory Committee reported.

In a November report,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General presented revised estimates to reflect new costing assumptions, which involved revised exchange and inflation rates, as well as the financial implications of recommendations by the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) which were to be considered by the Assembly; expenditures were $2,827,800,000, and income, $479,300,000, resulting in a net budget of $2,348,500,000.

The ACABQ Chairman, in an oral report before the Fifth Committee, said that the proposed recosting would result in a net increase of $140.7 million under the expenditure sections ($91 million with respect to exchange rates and $50.8 million resulting from ICSC recommendations, offset by reduced requirements of $1.1 million in respect of inflation) and a net increase of $17.8 million under the income sections. The recosting was based on information available up to November 1995 and, in accordance with a recommendation of the Board of Auditors, reflected the average exchange rates for 1995 instead of the latest exchange rates. The Advisory Committee had been informed that the Secretary-General had endeavoured to absorb, to the greatest extent possible, the additional requirements resulting from inflation and currency fluctuations without affecting programme delivery. In the proposed budget, a reduction of $98.1 million, including efficiency savings amounting to $35.5 million, had been proposed and further efforts to enhance efficiency were under way.

The Fifth Committee, in second reading, recommended approval of expenditures totalling $2,712,265,200, minus anticipated reductions of $103,991,200 to be confirmed by the Assembly, resulting in a gross appropriation of $2,608,274,000. With an estimated income (other than from staff assessment) of $87,095,700, net expenditures were estimated at $2,521,178,300.

Working Capital Fund

In December, the General Assembly established the Working Capital Fund for the 1996-1997 biennium at $100 million, the same level as during 1994-1995. As in the past, the Fund was to be used to finance appropriations pending the receipt of assessed contributions, to pay for unforeseen and extraordinary and expenses, as well as for miscellaneous and self-liquidating purchases and advance insurance premiums, and to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/218.

Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1996-1997

The General Assembly

Resolves that:

1. The Working Capital Fund shall be established for the biennium 1996-1997 in the amount of 100 million United States dollars;

2. Member States shall make advances to the Working Capital Fund in accordance with the scale adopted by the General Assembly for contributions of Member States to the budget for the year 1996;

3. There shall be set off against this allocation of advances:

(a) Credits to Member States resulting from transfers made in 1959 and 1960 from the surplus account to the Working Capital Fund in an adjusted amount of 1,025,092 dollars;

(b) Cash advances paid by Member States to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1994-1995 in accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/232 of 23 December 1993;

4. Should the credits and advances paid by any Member State to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1994-1995 exceed the amount of that Member State's advance under the provisions of paragraph 2 above, the excess shall be set off against the amount of the contributions payable by the Member State in respect of the biennium 1996-1997;

5. The Secretary-General is authorized to advance from the Working Capital Fund:

(a) Such sums as may be necessary to finance budgetary appropriations pending the receipt of contributions; sums so advanced shall be reimbursed as soon as receipts from contributions are available for the purpose;

(d) With the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, such sums as may be required to finance payments of advance insurance premiums where the period of insurance extends beyond the end of the biennium in which payment is made; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates of each biennium, during the life of the related policies, to cover the charges applicable to each biennium;

(e) Such sums as may be necessary to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits; such advances shall be repaid as soon as credits are available in the Tax Equalization Fund;

6. Should the provision in paragraph 1 above prove inadequate to meet the purposes normally related to the Working Capital Fund, the Secretary-General is authorized to utilize, in the biennium 1996-1997, cash from special funds and accounts in his custody, under the conditions approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 1341(XIII) of 13 December 1958, or the proceeds of loans authorized by the Assembly.

General Assembly resolution 50/218

23 December 1995 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/842) without vote, 22 December (meeting 45); agenda item 116.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 3-5, 7, 10, 11, 45; plenary 100.

Addressing the Fifth Committee, the United Kingdom said that, owing to lack of time, it had not been possible to reach a consensus on the amendments it had proposed to the text; it would therefore return to the matter at the resumed session.

Contingency fund

The contingency fund, created to accommodate additional expenditures relating to each biennium that were derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed programme budget, was established by the General Assembly in 1986.⁽¹⁷⁾

In December 1995, the Secretary-General presented a report⁽¹⁸⁾ containing a consolidated statement of programme budget implications and revised estimates for expenditures falling under fund guidelines, which were approved by the Assembly in 1987.⁽¹⁹⁾ The amounts charged to the fund were $1,173,000, leaving a balance of $19,427,000. The Secretary-General noted that the amounts in respect of each item corresponded to those previously recommended by the Fifth Committee upon its consideration of individual statements and proposals for revised estimates. The items were: $619,000 relating to revised estimates resulting from resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council at its 1995 sessions; $356,600 for a follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women in September and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action (see PART FOUR, Chapter X); and $197,400 for implementation of decisions and recommendations of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,⁽²⁰⁾ specifically for a special session to review and appraise the implementation of Agenda 21.⁽²¹⁾

The ACABQ Chairman, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee, drew attention to the Advisory Committee's request,⁽²²⁾ endorsed by the Assembly,⁽¹³⁾ that he submit, in the context of his proposed programme budget for 1996-1997, information on the nature of expenses charged to the contingency fund so far, in order to enable the Advisory Committee to review procedures for the use, operation and level of the fund. ACABQ requested that the information be submitted for its consideration in 1996.

The General Assembly, by resolution 50/216, section VIII, noted that a balance of $19,427,000 remained in the fund.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses

Report of the Secretary-General. In a November 1995 report,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed and clarified the use of the biennial General Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, which provided for him, under certain conditions, to enter into commitments for activities of an urgent nature, without reverting to the Assembly for approval of the required resources. He particularly noted the need to respond to increased financial commitments in relation to activities in preventive diplomacy, peace-making and post-conflict peace-building, and proposed modifications in the procedures for meeting expenses to implement unforeseen activities (see also PART TWO, Chapter I). Other categories for which the Secretary-General had been authorized to enter into commitments included those certified by the President of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) as relating to certain expenses from the activities of the Court.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/217.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the biennium 1996-1997

The General Assembly

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and subject to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations and the provisions of paragraph 3 below, to enter into commitments in the biennium 1996-1997 to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses arising either during or subsequent to the biennium, provided that the concurrence of the Advisory Committee shall not be necessary for:

- (a) Such commitments, not exceeding a total of 5 million United States dollars in any one year of the biennium 1996-1997, as the Secretary-General certifies relate to the maintenance of peace and security;
- (b) Such commitments as the President of the International Court of Justice certifies relate to expenses occasioned by:
 - (i) The designation of ad hoc judges (Statute of the International Court of Justice, Article 31), not exceeding a total of 300,000 dollars;
 - (ii) The calling of witnesses and the appointment of experts (Statute, Article 50) and the appointment of assessors (Statute, Article 30), not exceeding a total of 50,000 dollars;
 - (iii) The maintenance in office for the completion of cases of judges who have not been re-elected

(Statute, Article 13, paragraph 3), not exceeding a total of 40,000 dollars;

- (iv) The payment of pensions and travel and removal expenses of retiring judges and travel and removal expenses and installation grant of members of the Court (Statute, Article 32, paragraph 7), not exceeding a total of 180,000 dollars;
- (v) The work of the Court or its Chambers away from The Hague (Statute, Article 22), not exceeding a total of 50,000 dollars;

2. Resolves that the Secretary-General shall report to the Advisory Committee and to the General Assembly at its fifty-first and fifty-second sessions all commitments made under the provisions of the present resolution, together with the circumstances relating thereto, and shall submit supplementary estimates to the Assembly in respect of such commitments;

3. Decides that, for the biennium 1996-1997, if a decision of the Security Council results in the need for the Secretary-General to enter into commitments relating to the maintenance of peace and security in an amount exceeding 10 million dollars in respect of the decision, that matter shall be brought to the General Assembly, or, if the Assembly is suspended or not in session, a resumed or special session of the Assembly shall be convened by the Secretary-General to consider the matter.

Contributions

At the end of 1995, unpaid assessed contributions totalled $2.3 billion, aggravating the serious financial crisis of the Organization. The High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations discussed a number of specific contribution issues (see above). The Committee on Contributions, at its fifty-fifth annual session (New York, 12-13 June 1995),⁽¹⁾ reviewed all aspects of the methodology for determining the scale of assessments. Notings that the next scale, for the period 1998-2000, was not due to be considered until 1997, and in consideration of the comprehensive nature of the mandate given to it by the General Assembly, the Committee decided to undertake the current comprehensive review of the scale methodology over two sessions. In the context of its review, the Committee also considered the proposals, suggestions and recommendations contained in the report of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Implementation of the Principle of Capacity to Pay (see below).⁽²⁾

In 1995, the Committee had before it written representations from Iraq, Kyrgyzstan and Turkey. It received and granted requests for oral representations from the Dominican Republic, Guatemala and Iraq.

Assessments

Assessment of Palau

The former Trust Territory of Palau was admitted to membership in the United Nations in December 1994.⁽³⁾ According to rule 160 of the General Assembly's rules of procedure, the Committee on Contributions advises the Assembly on assessments to be fixed for new Members. On the basis of national income and population data available from the UN Statistical Division, the Committee set Palau's rate of assessment for 1995, 1996 and 1997 at 0.01 per cent. The Committee recommended that for 1995, Palau's contribution should be applied on the same basis of assessment as for other Member States, except in the case of appropriations approved for the financing of peace-keeping operations, for which its contributions, as determined by the group of contributors to which it might be assigned by the Assembly, should be calculated in proportion to the calendar year and its actual assessments taken into account as miscellaneous income under regulation 5.2(c) of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations. Palau's advance to the Working Capital Fund should be calculated by applying the rate of assessment in effect during its first full year of membership to the authorized level of the Fund, and should be added to the Fund pending incorporation of its rate of assessment in a 100 per cent scale.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted decision 50/471 A.

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

At its 100th plenary meeting, on 23 December 1995, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, decided that:

(a) The rate of assessment for Palau, admitted to membership in the United Nations on 15 December 1994, should be 0.01 per cent for 1995, 1996 and 1997;

(b) The contributions of Palau for 1995, 1996 and 1997 should be applied to the same basis of assessment as for other Member States, except that, in the case of appropriations or apportionments approved by the General Assembly for the financing of peace-keeping operations, the contributions of Palau, as determined by the group of contributors to which they might be assigned by the Assembly, should be calculated in proportion to the calendar year;

(c) The 1995 assessments of Palau should be taken into account as miscellaneous income in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

(d) For 1996 and 1997, the rate of assessment for Palau should be added to the scale of assessments established under General Assembly resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994;

(e) The advance of Palau to the Working Capital Fund should be calculated by the application of the rate of assessment of 0.01 per cent to the authorized level of the Fund and should be added to the Fund pending the incorporation of its rate in a 100 per cent scale.

General Assembly decision 50/471 A

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/843) without vote, 21 December (meeting 44); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/50/L.22) following informal consultations; agenda item 120. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 4-10, 43, 44; plenary 100.

By decision 50/451 B of 23 December, the Assembly, as an ad hoc arrangement, included Palau in group D of Member States for the apportionment of peace-keeping operations.

Assessment of Turkey

Turkey expressed its concern that it was not included by the Committee on Contributions in the list of developing countries within the context of the United Nations and therefore did not benefit from the 15 per cent limitation on the effect of the phase-out of the scheme of limits, thus resulting in an increase in its rate of assessment. The Committee pointed out that in the context of its work, it had considered Turkey a developing country, but in accordance with the 1993 General Assembly resolution on assessments for 1995-1997,⁽⁴⁾ only those developing countries that had benefited from the scheme of limits and whose rates were increasing in the new scale were subject to the 15 per cent provision. In view of those circumstances, and after examining Turkey's national income and other relevant data, the Committee could not find grounds for adjusting Turkey's assessment rate for 1995-1997.

The Assembly, by decision 50/471 B of 23 December, adopted on the Fifth Committee's recommendation,⁽⁵⁾ requested the Committee on Contributions to reconsider inclusion of Turkey in the list of countries falling under paragraph 2 of the 1993 resolution on assessments,⁽⁴⁾ in which the Assembly had stipulated that in phasing out the scheme of limits, the allocation of additional points resulting therefrom to developing countries benefiting from its application should be limited to 15 per cent of the effect of the phase-out.

Assessment of Guatemala

In its representation to the Committee on Contributions, Guatemala appealed for a change of its assessment rate, which it believed did not reflect its real capacity to pay and the serious economic difficulties it had suffered as a result of the state of war existing in the country in the 1980s. The Committee felt that it had insufficient information on Guatemala's current economic and financial situation, and requested the country to provide the necessary information to allow for a better assessment with regard to its inability to pay its contributions. The Committee also noted that only in exceptional circumstances, for example in cases where erroneous data had been used in calculating the scale of assessments, could the scale be subject to revision.

Application of Article 19

Kyrgyzstan informed the Committee of the possibility that, in spite of its best efforts, its arrears would exceed, by January 1996, the amount specified in Article 19 of the Charter as necessary to retain the right to vote in the General Assembly. In the absence of a request from the Assembly, the Committee did not advise the Assembly on action to be taken with regard to the application of Article 19.

The Dominican Republic, pending a decision by the Security Council on its request for compensation for the losses suffered as a result of the embargo against Haiti, requested the Assembly to invoke the provision of Article 19 under which the Assembly could permit a Member State to vote, despite the fact that its arrears equalled or exceeded the amount of contributions due from it for the preceding two years, if it was satisfied that the failure to pay was due to conditions beyond the Member State's control. The Committee concluded that more recent data on the financial and economic situation of the Dominican Republic would be necessary in order to determine whether an inability to pay still existed. The Committee decided to advise the Assembly accordingly with regard to Article 19 and stressed that the request for compensation under Article 50 was beyond its own mandate.

The Committee had before it a letter of 7 June from the General Assembly's President concerning an October 1994 request by Iraq for a waiver of Article 19, on the grounds that its failure to pay its assessed contributions was due to conditions beyond its control. Iraq stressed that its inability to pay resulted from the comprehensive embargo imposed by Security Council resolutions, which had deprived Iraq of its financial resources. It also cited its attempts to pay in local currency, which had been rejected on the grounds that the Iraqi dinar did not represent freely transferable funds. Its ability to pay in hard currency was also limited, Iraq stated, because its assets were frozen under Security Council resolutions and attempts to secure release of part of them to pay outstanding contributions had so far been unsuccessful. Iraq also considered that the increase of its assessment under the new scale for 1995-1997 did not take into account its actual economic situation since the imposition of the embargo.

The Committee had divergent views on Iraq's request for a waiver of Article 19 and decided to inform the Assembly President accordingly. With regard to Iraq's rate of assessment, the Committee noted that in the scale for 1995-1997, Iraq had benefited from the mitigation procedure and that the fluctuations in its domestic prices had been addressed by using the price-adjusted rates of exchange, instead of the market exchange rate; furthermore, any changes to its rate would have to be considered in the context of the next scale.

On 27 November, Iraq forwarded to the Fifth Committee Chairman a letter it had addressed on 22 September to the Assembly President,⁽⁶⁾ stating that in view of the lack of consensus in the Committee on Contributions and the importance Iraq attached to being given the right to vote during the Assembly's historic fiftieth session, it requested that a draft resolution annexed to the letter be submitted to the Assembly for a decision as soon as possible. Under the resolution, the Assembly would decide that Iraq's arrears were due to circumstances beyond its control and that, accordingly, it was inappropriate to apply Article 19 relating to the loss of the right to vote in the Assembly until the sanctions imposed on Iraq were fully or partially lifted.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/207 A.

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Noting the requests by Azerbaijan, Comoros, Georgia, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Liberia, Sao Tome and Principe, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan that, as an exceptional measure, any arrears in respect of assessed contributions for the regular budget of the United Nations, peace-keeping operations or international tribunals as at 1 January 1996 and for 1996 be treated as being attributable to conditions beyond their control and that, accordingly, the question of the application of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations should not arise,

1. Recognizes the importance of requests with respect to the application of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations being considered by the Committee on Contributions in accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Committee to hold a special session of one week's duration as early as possible in 1996 to consider representations from Member States with respect to the application of Article 19 of the Charter and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its resumed fiftieth session pursuant to rule 160 of the rules of procedure;

3. Invites Member States to submit detailed information to the Committee in explanation of their requests as soon as possible so as to facilitate the work of the Committee;

4. Decides to consider the report of the Committee on this matter as early as possible during its resumed fiftieth session.

General Assembly resolution 50/207

23 December 1995 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/843) without vote, 21 December (meeting 44); draft by Chairman following informal consultations (A/C.5/50/L.21), orally revised; agenda item 120.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 4-10, 43, 44; plenary 100.

On a motion by New Zealand, which the Fifth Committee supported by a recorded vote of 48 to 3, with 23 abstentions, the debate on Iraq's draft resolution⁽⁷⁾ was closed under rule 117 of the Assembly's rules of procedure. In proposing its motion, New Zealand stated that Iraq's case did not warrant sympathetic consideration, as it did have access to convertible currency; it was its own choice if it did not give priority to using such assets to pay its assessed contribution.

Contributions from South Africa

Following the eradication of apartheid and the establishment in South Africa of a non-racial and democratic society, the General Assembly in 1994 invited South Africa to resume its participation in the Assembly's work.⁽⁸⁾

The Assembly, by resolution 50/83 of 15 December, decided that, owing to the unique and exceptional circumstances arising from apartheid, South Africa should not pay the assessments for the period from 30 September 1974 to 23 June 1994, the time during which the apartheid regime refused to pay its contributions in retaliation against the political decision of the Assembly to reject the credentials of the representatives of that regime. The technical observations on the most appropriate accounting procedure to be followed to implement the resolution elaborated by the Fifth Committee in response to a request by the Assembly President, were incorporated verbatim in the draft resolution. The Assembly stated that its decision would not set a precedent, but was based on the unique and exceptional circumstances during the apartheid era. (See also PART TWO, Chapter II.)

Scale methodology

The General Assembly, on numerous occasions over the years, had reaffirmed the principle of capacity to pay as the fundamental criterion for determining the scale of assessments for contributions to the regular budget. In 1994, it decided⁽⁹⁾ to establish a working group of 25 experts to examine all aspects of the implementation of that principle.

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Implementation of the Principle of Capacity to Pay held two sessions in 1995:⁽¹⁰⁾ its organizational and preparatory session (21 to 24 March) and its substantive session (18 April to 5 May).

In discussing the fundamental question of what capacity to pay was, the Working Group noted that the Assembly had realized from the start that it was not a concept that could be defined with precision. But taking into account the work accomplished by the Committee on Contributions over the years to overcome those difficulties, the Working Group felt that it was possible to identify an objective and generally acceptable measure of capacity to pay. The starting point for the determination of capacity to pay was the share of each Member State's national income in world income; the Group held that other factors, such as the special circumstances of Member States with low per capita income, should also be taken into account.

There was general agreement that capacity to pay should be based on widely applicable measures; several members concluded that that factor alone pointed to the use of flow measures (i.e., income) rather than stock measures (i.e., wealth) as the best approximation, especially in the absence of reliable estimates of national wealth.

While all members accepted that either gross or net national income figures should be employed in calculating the scale of assessments, some felt that capacity to pay was best derived from national income alone, while others considered that it should also reflect the general level of development, measured through socio-economic indicators or through concepts such as sustainable development. Some members also attached importance to continuing to take into account the debt burden faced by a number of countries.

The Working Group agreed that national disposable income (NDI) was theoretically the most appropriate measure of capacity to pay; given its lower reliability and availability, however, its use in the scale of assessments would be impractical for the time being. It recommended that, for reasons of data availability, comparability and simplicity, gross national product (GNP) should be the basis of calculation.

The Group acknowledged the seriousness of the debt problem of developing countries and noted that, since 1969, various ad hoc adjustments had been made in the scale of assessments in recognition of the debt situation. In the 1995-1997 scale, 47 countries benefited in varying degrees from the debt-burden adjustment in the existing methodology, and the cash relief of that adjustment had amounted to about $10 million. The Group noted that national income figures accounted fully for interest payments on external debt on an accrual basis, i.e., whether or not those payments were actually made on time. The debt-burden adjustment was intended to take account of amortization payments. Several members stressed that the debt burden was the most important financial and budgetary constraint many Governments had to face; they considered that the current debt adjustment—the product of successive General Assembly decisions—should be maintained because the debt affected the capacity to pay of the countries concerned. Several members drew attention to a number of features of the adjustment, concluding that it was not sufficiently soundly based nor substantial enough to justify modifying the basic income measure and would best be subsumed under the low per capita income adjustment. They also suggested that a special adjustment could be made by the General Assembly if particular countries could demonstrate they had actually made substantial net repayments (that is, without refinancing); with that proviso, they considered that the debt-burden adjustment should be eliminated.

The Working Group recommended using a base period of three years in formulating the scale of assessments, as long as the assessment period remained three years, and avoiding any further change in the base period. Some members believed that there should be annual recalculation of the scale for informational purposes; the possibility of automatic annual adjustment of assessments could later be evaluated, with reviews every three or five years.

The Group also discussed employing a common currency in the scale calculation, such as Special Drawing Rights (the weighted average of five major currencies calculated and used by the International Monetary Fund), rather than the United States dollar. Members felt that the idea should be studied further.

While the Group endorsed the continued application of the low per capita income allowance—deducted from a Member State's national income to arrive at its assessable income—as a component of the measurement of capacity to pay, it could not agree on specific parameters for that purpose. For example, some members felt changes should be made to eliminate the jump that occurs when a country's per capita income goes above the limit for the allowance.

Among other issues discussed by the Working Group were that of rounding in the scale of assessments, the use of population data for calculating per capita income, and the variations of income and expenditure data in different national accounts.

The Committee on Contributions, in its report on its 1995 session,⁽¹⁾ noted that the Working Group had raised a number of issues, which would be included in the Committee's work in 1996. In evaluating the Working Group's recommendation to use GNP as a starting point for measuring capacity to pay, the Committee noted that the use of GNP rather than national income for calculating the scale of assessments would dispense with the deduction of allowances for depreciation of fixed assets from the income concept. The Committee also decided to keep under review other alternative measures, such as debt-adjusted income, and to follow up on the Working Group's recommendation to address the issue of the measurement of income for the former centrally planned economies.

The Committee reiterated its view that the base period should be a multiple of the scale period and should not be shorter than the scale period. It decided to study and report in 1996 on the possibility of changing the base period. Regarding the subject of conversion to a common currency, the Committee agreed with the Working Group's proposals for further work and expressed its intention to study appropriate new criteria for replacing International Monetary Fund (IMF) market exchange rates (MERs) when their use produced excessive fluctuations or distortions in the income of some Member States. In that context, reference was made to the World Bank Atlas exchange rates (a simple average of a current market rate and price-adjusted rates of exchange based on the two previous years).

Regarding the debt-burden adjustment, there was no consensus among Committee members either on the importance of maintaining the adjustment or on how to calculate it. Some members considered that debt-burden adjustment should continue to be applied in calculating the capacity to pay of Member States facing high levels of external debt. Others had doubts about the conceptual basis of the current debt-burden adjustment approach and preferred an approach based on actual debt repayment. The Committee agreed to study the issue of the debt-burden adjustment formula at its 1996 session, including possible alternatives, and asked the Secretariat to provide, from IMF or any other comparable source, data for all countries on actual debt repayments and debt stock, as well as the ratio of debt to national income and the ratio of debt-service to export earnings.

The Committee discussed extensively the low per capita income adjustment but did not have sufficient time to study two proposals, the first of which would have replaced the current adjustment with one directly linking the percentage relief a Member State would receive to its per capita income level. Under the second, the gradient would be set according to a criterion based on a maximum allowable deviation of the assessment rate from the global share of income for the Member State with the lowest per capita income. The Committee decided that a comprehensive study on the feasibility of the proposals, as well as other alternatives, would be undertaken in 1996 in conjunction with its overall review of the scale methodology.

Accounts and auditing

In 1995, the Board of Auditors presented two reports on audits it had conducted of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR)(¹) (see PART FOUR, Chapter XII) and of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR)(²) (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). A concise summary of their principal findings, conclusions and recommendations were transmitted to the General Assembly by an August note(³) of the Secretary-General. Also in August, the Secretary-General transmitted a report(⁴) of the Board on the liquidation audit of the UN Transition Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

Summing up Board activities in a statement before the Fifth Committee, the Board Chairman said the indicative budget of $8.2 million from all sources for the biennium 1996-1997 reflected amounts charged for conducting external audits, but excluded secretariat-related costs. The General Assembly's recent decision to amend the Financial Regulations and Rules in order to place the financial period for peace-keeping operations on an annual basis meant that the Board would present annual instead of biennial reports on such operations; the consequent increase in audit coverage would result in additional audit fees, given the expected increase in workload.

The Board was also taking steps to strengthen external oversight. For example, the Panel of External Auditors of the United Nations had recently decided to recognize the auditing standards of the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions (INTOSAI) as its core standards and to adopt the international standards on auditing issued by the International Federation of Accountants as the Panel's new auditing guidelines. The Board had also taken action to revise the audit manual and had made suggestions for improving the transparency of financial statements. It proposed to continue the practice of carrying out horizontal reviews on relevant topics in each biennium and of reviewing procurement practices in all units of the Organization.

With regard to the timely and effective implementation of its recommendations, the Board was of the view that the Administration should implement those which could be implemented without delay and work out a schedule for putting into practice those that required amendment of the rules and procedures. The Board was also considering methods to identify persistent irregularities in order to enable the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) to follow up on them and to ascertain from the Administration the reasons for their recurrence.

The Board had established a reasonable working relationship with the Office of Internal Oversight Services. It was important, however, the Chairman said, to have a clear appreciation of the respective roles of the two bodies. A strong and independent audit function should be at the core of UN accountability arrangements, and the roles of internal and external auditing should be kept separate. By its very definition, internal audit should form part of the overall internal control system established by the management, while external audit was a means of providing objective information, advice and assurance to the General Assembly through independent financial audits and management reviews. In that connection, the Board had noted the Advisory Committee's request that it should report on implementation of its recommendations for improving the work of the Internal Audit Division.

With regard to Board terms of office, the Board noted that its proposal in favour of the adoption of a six-year term, which would bring the term into line with biennial accounting and give each member sufficient time to have significant impact on the Board's work, was still before the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/204 A.

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered, for the year ended 31 December 1994, the financial report and audited financial statements and the report of the Board of Auditors on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the audited financial statements and the report of Board of Auditors on the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the report on measures taken or to be taken by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in response to the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, and the concise summary of the principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Board, as well as the report of the Board of Auditors on the liquidation audit of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting the measures taken by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to give appropriate consideration and attention to the recommendations in earlier audit reports, as commented upon by the Board of Auditors in the annex to its report,

Taking note with concern of the comments of the Board of Auditors regarding measures taken by the Administration of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on follow-up action to implement the recommendations of the Board, contained in the annex to its report,

Stressing the importance of efficient resource management in all United Nations organizations and programmes,

1. Recognizes that the Board of Auditors provides the General Assembly with objective information, advice and assurance by conducting its audits in a completely independent and comprehensive manner, as stipulated in regulations 12.5 and 12.6 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, and reiterates its appreciation to the Board for the action-oriented and concrete recommendations contained in its reports;

2. Accepts the financial reports and audited financial statements and the audit opinions and reports of the Board of Auditors regarding the aforementioned organizations and the liquidation of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia;

3. Also accepts the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations for remedial action of the Board of Auditors and the comments thereon contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

4. Deplores the delays encountered in the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors approved by the General Assembly;

5. Urges the Secretary-General to hold programme managers accountable for the implementation of recommendations and to take appropriate measures in cases of non-compliance;

6. Stresses the importance of prompt compliance with the recommendations of the Board of Auditors approved by the General Assembly, and reiterates its request to the executive heads of United Nations organizations and programmes to submit to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, before the beginning of formal discussions, reports on measures taken or to be taken in response to the recommendations of the Board, including timetables for their implementation;

7. Requests the Board of Auditors to follow up and report at the earliest opportunity on shortcomings in the internal audit coverage of the organizations which it identified in its earlier report, with a view to determining whether its recommendations have been implemented and the situation rectified, following the establishment of the Office of Internal Oversight Services;

8. Recalls that, in its resolution 49/216 C of 23 December 1994, it requested the Secretary-General to submit a report, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, containing proposals for the improvement of the procurement activities of the Secretariat, and urges the Advisory Committee to submit its report to the General Assembly as soon as possible to enable it to consider these reports and decide on further necessary action before the end of its fiftieth session;

9. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and all other entities for which the main source of income is voluntary contributions and which account for them on an accrual basis to provide annually, or upon request, more precise and transparent information on the cash situation of these entities in their reports to the General Assembly at its fifty-first and subsequent sessions;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to consider measures to ensure appropriate audit coverage of jointly financed administrative activities, to consider the most appropriate way to present to the General Assembly the financial, administrative and management information related to these activities, and to report thereon to the Assembly during its resumed fiftieth session.

Programme planning

In 1995, the Fifth Committee continued consideration of the item on programme planning during the General Assembly's resumed forty-ninth session. Speaking as coordinator of the informal consultations on that subject, Mexico said that no consensus had been reached to enable a draft resolution to be submitted for adoption without vote. Mexico therefore recommended that further consideration of the item be deferred to the fiftieth session. The Assembly did so by decision 49/464 B of 20 July.

The Fifth Committee resumed discussion of issues related to programme planning in October and decided to consider them together with the proposed programme budget for 1996-1997.

Medium-term plan

Prototype new format

The medium-term plan and a prototype new format were discussed by the Fifth Committee under the agenda item on programme planning. The prototype, proposed by the Secretary-General in 1994, took into account the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) that it contain a concise forward-looking policy document or perspectives containing an analysis of persistent problems and emerging trends that needed to be addressed within the next four to six years and the role of the Organization in that undertaking. The perspective would indicate broad priority areas for the work of the Organization and would be amended only if pressing needs of an unforeseeable nature arose. CPC also recommended the inclusion of a programme framework listing major programmes and sub-programmes and providing guidelines against which the preparation and implementation of the budget would be assessed. The narrative of each programme should consist of a one-page chapter detailing its objectives and mandates. The programme framework should be reviewed regularly every two years in the off-budget year to reflect new mandates.

Introducing an August 1994 report of the Secretary-General on the prototype,⁽¹⁾ consideration of which had been deferred,⁽²⁾ the UN Controller said the prototype had been developed in consultations with interested delegations and CPC, on the basis of recommendations made in previous years both by CPC and the General Assembly. The effectiveness of the current format of the plan had been called into question by the Secretariat, as well as by certain Member States, for a number of reasons, including the disproportionate emphasis it had placed on activities and output, rather than objectives, and its failure to state those objectives with sufficient precision. The current plan contained only a list of activities and gave no clear insight into their organization, nor did it provide a direct link between programme structure and the offices responsible for implementation. For that reason, the budget structures and programme structures lacked congruence.

The new prototype endeavoured to address those problems and represented a significant departure from the 1992-1997 model. It aimed to facilitate the intergovernmental review of the overall direction of the Organization's work and to link clearly organizational and programmatic structures, thus forming an integral part of the system of accountability that the Secretariat was endeavouring to establish.

In an August 1995 report,⁽³⁾ ACABQ recommended approval of the proposed new format, provided that its own observations were taken into account. It was the Advisory Committee's understanding that, should the Assembly approve the Secretary-General's proposal, he would submit for the Assembly's consideration the necessary revisions to the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation.

By decision 50/452 of 22 December 1995, the Assembly, on the Fifth Committee's recommendation,⁽⁴⁾ authorized the Secretary-General to begin preparing the proposed medium-term plan for the period after 1997, on the basis of CPC and ACABQ recommendations and taking into account views expressed by Member States. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to submit the plan for that period to it in 1996, through CPC.

Chapter III

United Nations staff

In 1995, a number of questions related to the conditions of service of United Nations staff members were considered by the General Assembly. The International Civil Service Commission made recommendations to the Assembly regarding salary levels and established a working group to review the operation of the post adjustment system. Amendments to the UN Staff Regulations were approved in line with the General Assembly decision that the repatriation grant and other expatriate benefits were limited to staff who worked and resided in a country other than their home country.

The General Assembly also approved recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit on the application of UN recruitment, placement and promotion policies, and requested that a comprehensive policy on the use of retirees in the Secretariat be developed. It called for the fulfilment of the target of having women occupy 50 per cent of managerial and decision-making positions by the year 2000. The Assembly also invited its Sixth Committee to examine, as a matter of priority, the Secretary-General's proposals for the reform of the internal justice system.

The principal of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund increased to $12.6 billion during the year. The Assembly decided to admit the World Tourism Organization to membership in the Fund as of 1 January 1996.

Maritime Organization; the World Meteorological Organization; the World Intellectual Property Organization; the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. Two other organizations—the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the World Trade Organization—have not formally accepted the statute of ICSC, but participate fully in the Commission's work. The Commission has the authority to make decisions on certain rates of allowances and benefits, on the post adjustment (cost-of-living) classification of duty stations, and on job classification. It also makes recommendations to the General Assembly on specified remuneration issues and to Executive Heads on salary scales of General Service staff and other locally recruited persons, personnel policies, and the development of common staff regulations.

In 1995, the Commission held its forty-first (Montreal, Canada, 1-19 May) and forty-second (New York, 24 July-14 August) sessions. It examined issues that derived from decisions and resolutions of the General Assembly, as well as from its own statute. A summary of the Commission's deliberations, recommendations and decisions was provided in its twenty-first annual report,⁽²⁾ on which the Assembly acted in December.

Conditions of serviceInternational Civil Service Commission

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) was established by the General Assembly in 1974⁽¹⁾ to regulate and coordinate the conditions of service of the United Nations common system. Thirteen organizations comprise ICSC: the United Nations; the International Labour Organization; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; the International Civil Aviation Organization; the World Health Organization; the Universal Postal Union; the International Telecommunication Union; the International

Noblemaire principle

In 1995, in response to a 1992 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ ICSC undertook an in-depth review of the Noblemaire principle and its application. The underlying premise of the principle, adopted during the existence of the League of Nations, is that salaries of Professional and higher-category staff should be sufficient to attract and retain staff from all countries, including those offering the highest pay. Following the review, the Commission reported to the General Assembly in 1995 that the current practice of using the highest-paid national civil service as a basis for comparison appeared to be sound, as long as the process of identifying the comparator civil service was handled on a timely basis and that the pay relationship with the comparator realistically reflected the latter's expatriation benefits.

Also in 1995, the Commission undertook an updated grade-equivalency study with the current comparator, the United States federal civil service. It endorsed the results of that study for remuneration comparison purposes, deciding that the relevant pay systems of the comparator should be reflected in the comparison process on an occupation-by-occupation basis. It also decided that bonuses and performance awards granted to United States staff (except for those granted to eligible staff of the Senior Executive Service as meritorious and distinguished awards) and all comparable UN awards should be included in the comparison process.

In 1991, the Commission had proposed to the General Assembly a two-phase methodological approach for carrying out periodic checks to determine which national civil service was the highest paid. That approach was endorsed by the Assembly in 1991.⁽⁴⁾ In 1994, the Commission reported to the General Assembly its decision to proceed to a Phase II study of the national civil services of Germany and Switzerland. Concluded in 1995, the study showed that the total compensation package of the Swiss civil service was 85.8 per cent of that of the United States federal civil service. The Swiss federal civil service could not, therefore, be considered as an alternative to the current comparator civil service. The comparison with the German civil service showed that its total remuneration package was 110.5 per cent of that of the United States. Despite a strong presumption in favour of the German civil service as a comparator, the conditions for changing the comparator were not currently in place. The superior conditions of the German civil service vis-a-vis those of the United States federal civil service could be considered as a reference point for managing United Nations/United States pay relativities. The Commission reported in 1995 that it would continue to monitor the total compensation of the German civil service and would update the data annually.

In 1995, the Commission collected information on the World Bank and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) and obtained comparisons showing that OECD and World Bank remuneration levels were 49.5 and 39 per cent, respectively, above those of the UN common system. The Commission noted that it thus appeared that the compensation package of the common system was not competitive with that offered by OECD and the World Bank for equivalent jobs requiring similar levels of competence. It considered that it would be appropriate to use OECD and the World Bank as reference indications for the competitiveness of UN system salaries, while reaffirming the long-standing practice of comparisons with the best-paid national civil service under the application of the Noblemaire principle.

Structure of salary scale

The Commission recalled that there were two main mandates from the General Assembly relevant to the structure of the salary scale: the request, in resolution 43/226,⁽⁵⁾ that consideration be given to enhancing rewards on promotion, while reducing financial rewards for longevity; and, in resolution 47/216,⁽⁶⁾ the Assembly's request that the Commission continue to keep under review the structure of the salary scale at all levels of the Professional and higher categories, taking into account, inter alia, the overall United Nations/United States pay relativities as established by the General Assembly and the imbalance in those relativities at different Professional grade levels.

The Commission noted that the discrepancies between United Nations/United States remuneration ratios at different grade levels had been partly corrected over recent years, but considerable progress remained to be made. Moreover, the salary scale over time had become quite compressed as an unintended side-effect of post adjustment consolidations, and consequently the rewards for promotion, vis-a-vis seniority, had progressively eroded. The Commission considered a range of options designed to redress these structural deficiencies and to restore the competitiveness of common system remuneration.

The Commission recommended restoration in 1996 of the 115 desirable mid-point of the United Nations/United States net remuneration, which should be brought about through the application of the proposed base/floor salary scale, without consolidation of post adjustment, and a scaling forward of all post adjustment indices by 5.1 per cent as of 1 July 1996. It offered alternatives for addressing the question of the post adjustment index for Geneva. The Commission also recommended salary scales and rates of dependency allowances for the General Service and other locally recruited categories in New York, the General Service staff of all organizations in Geneva, and for the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in Rome.

The Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Personnel and General Administrative Questions (CCAQ(PER))) of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), at its eighty-second⁽⁶⁾ (Montreal, Canada, 24-28 April) and eighty-third⁽⁷⁾ (New York, 20-24 July and 20-22 September) sessions, considered the application of the Noblemaire principle and recommended a draft statement to ACC for adoption.

The Secretary-General, in a 24 October note,⁽⁸⁾ transmitted the statement relating to the UN common system remuneration adopted by ACC at its second regular session (New York, 12-13 October) for submission to the Assembly. ACC requested the Assembly to adopt the Commission's recommendations to increase remuneration levels with immediate effect in order to bring the current margin to the mid-point of its range, and to restructure the salary scale to correct existing imbalances.

On 10 November, the Secretary-General stated⁽⁹⁾ that there would be an increase of $47.2 million in the regular budget for the 1995-1996 biennium, should the Assembly adopt the Commission's recommendations. Of that amount, $8.4 million related to staff assessment; as there would be a corresponding increase of $8.5 million under income section 1 (Income from staff assessment), partially reduced by $114,200 in the estimate under income section 3 (Revenue-producing activities), the net increase would be $38.8 million.

The Secretary-General, in a statement before the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 20 November, reiterated the views of ACC and called on the Assembly to adopt measures recommended by ICSC, together with action to revise the application of the Noblemaire principle and to reinforce the Commission's capacity and contribution.

On 6 December, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended⁽¹⁰⁾ that the Secretary-General include, in the next presentation of the administrative and financial implications of ICSC recommendations, a complete explanation and justification of the methodology used to calculate numbers of staff and percentages applicable to the United Nations. It also decided that, with effect from the next adjustment of the global scale of pensionable remuneration for staff in the Professional and higher categories, actual pension contributions in time-to-time adjustments of the post adjustment index should be used.

Functioning of ICSC

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹¹⁾ ICSC considered⁽²⁾ its working methods and, in particular, the consultative process with the executive heads of its interlocutors and staff. ICSC did not accept that it was beholden to the Assembly or that it had become politicized. The Commission concluded that for the consultative process to improve, ICSC must not stand alone in reassessing its procedures; participating UN bodies had to contribute to the discussion. The Commission had done its best to restore the dialogue, but its interlocutors should review their working methods. The Commission also called for a stronger climate of accountability, whereby all parties in the process faced their roles and responsibilities squarely. The Commission regretted that the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA) had not participated in its discussions, but hoped it would resume doing so.

The Commission decided to implement measures to improve its effectiveness, including a new formula for the timing and length of its sessions and for the production of its report. For 1996, it decided to hold a four-week session in the spring and a one- to two-week session in the summer, depending on need, as defined by the agenda; if that formula was found to be effective, it would be adopted in the future for even-numbered years. The report of its spring session would consist of draft decisions with their rationales; at the summer session, the Commission would have before it the full report for adoption. In odd-numbered years, the Commission would hold a single session of one month's duration. The new arrangement would be introduced on a trial basis and remain under review.

By a November note,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the comments of FICSA on ways of improving the consultative process in the Commission, as requested by the Assembly in 1994.⁽¹¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/208.

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the twenty-first annual report of the International Civil Service Commission and other related reports,

Reaffirming its commitment to a single unified United Nations common system as the cornerstone for the regulation and coordination of the conditions of service of the United Nations common system,

Reaffirming the central role of the Commission in the regulation and coordination of the conditions of service of the United Nations common system,

Recalling its resolutions related to the study of all aspects of the application of the Noblemaire principle,

Recalling also section I.B of its resolution 44/198 of 21 December 1989, by which it reaffirmed that the Noblemaire principle should continue to serve as the basis of comparison between United Nations emoluments and those of the highest-paying civil service,

Taking note of chapter III of the report of the International Civil Service Commission in respect of grade equivalencies with the comparator civil service, the evolution of the margin, the identification of the highest-paid national civil service and the collection of reference data from other international organizations, as well as the views expressed thereon by Member States in the Fifth Committee of the General Assembly,

Reconfirming the continued application of the Noblemaire principle,

Reaffirming the need to continue to ensure the competitiveness of the United Nations common system conditions of service,

1. Decides to defer its consideration of chapter III.A of the report of the International Civil Service Commission until its resumed fiftieth session, and requests the Commission to review its recommendations and conclusions, taking into account the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee of the General Assembly, in particular regarding the appropriateness of reduction of dominance and the treatment of bonuses in determining net remuneration comparisons, so as to assist in that consideration, and to adjust its programme of work accordingly;

2. Takes note of the results of the study to identify the highest-paid national civil service, as set out in paragraph 172 (b) of the report of the Commission, bearing in mind the views expressed thereon by the Member State concerned;

3. Requests the Commission and the national civil service authorities concerned to resolve the outstanding difficulties in comparing differently designed civil services and grading systems, within the approved methodology, and to clarify the conclusions set out in paragraph 172 (b) (ii) and (iii) of its report, in order to complete the study on the highest-paid national civil service, and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

4. Takes note also of the recruitment and retention problems faced by some organizations in respect of certain specialized occupations, recalls its endorsement in principle of the use of special occupational rates in organizations with problems of recruitment and retention, and, in this context, requests the organizations to collect data to substantiate those problems, and the Commission to make recommendations regarding the conditions for the application of such rates, as appropriate;

B. Post adjustment matters

Recalling its request in section II.G of its resolution 48/224 of 23 December 1993, regarding place-to-place surveys conducted at headquarters duty stations,

Taking note of the decisions reached by the International Civil Service Commission in paragraphs 280, 294, 296 and 297 of its report in respect of the operation of the post adjustment system,

1. Welcomes the establishment by the International Civil Service Commission of a working group to examine the post adjustment system;

2. Requests the Commission to establish in 1996, in respect of staff members whose duty station is Geneva, a single post adjustment index which is fully representative of the cost of living of all staff working in the duty station and which ensures equality of treatment with staff in other headquarters duty stations;

3. Also requests the Commission to address and refer to its working group on post adjustment, as appropriate, the concerns raised by Member States in the Fifth Committee regarding the operation of the post adjustment system, including, inter alia, the issue of the post adjustment at the base of the common system, management of the differential in net remuneration between the common system and its comparator, developments in the comparator civil service and the possible partial phasing out of the expatriate elements of the margin for staff with long service at one duty station, and requests the Commission to review all the issues relating to the post adjustment system based on the study by its working group and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

II

General Service and other locally recruited categories

Recalling section III, paragraph 1, of its resolution 47/216 of 23 December 1992, in which it endorsed the reaffirmation by the International Civil Service Commission of the Flemming principle as the basis for the determination of conditions of service of the General Service and related categories,

Recalling also section IV.A of its resolution 49/223 of 23 December 1994, by which it requested the Commission to proceed with the current round of surveys at headquarters duty stations,

1. Notes that the International Civil Service Commission will provide a further report on the methodology for surveys of best prevailing local conditions of employment at headquarters duty stations following the completion of the comprehensive review of the salary survey methodology in 1997;

2. Requests the Commission, as part of its review of the methodology for salary setting for staff in the General Service and other locally recruited categories, to resolve, to the extent possible, inconsistencies between this methodology and the one which is applied pursuant to the Noblemaire principle, inter alia, by examining the question of overlap in remuneration between the two categories;

3. Takes note of the results of the salary surveys in New York, Geneva and Rome as reported in chapter IV of the report of the Commission;

III

Work programme

Recalling section V, paragraph 2, of its resolution 48/224, in which it urged the International Civil Service Commission to devote further attention to personnel management issues,

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to examine means of reducing the costs of its studies;

2. Also requests the Commission and the executive heads of the organizations of the United Nations common system to ensure that adequate attention is given to all aspects of human resources management, including the improvement of non-monetary aspects of conditions of service, as set out, for example, in article 14 of the statute of the Commission;

3. Further requests the Commission to give priority to the matters addressed in section I of the present resolution in its programme of work;

IV

Functioning of the Commission

Recalling section II, paragraph 5, of its resolution 49/223, in which it requested the staff bodies, the organizations and the International Civil Service Commission to review with all urgency how the consultative process of the Commission could best be furthered and to report thereon to the General Assembly,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the statute of the International Civil Service Commission and in particular article 6 thereof, whereby its members shall perform their functions in full independence and with impartiality;

2. Welcomes the Commission's decision, as contained in paragraphs 54 to 56 of its report, to implement a number of measures to improve its effectiveness and to introduce, on a trial basis, revised arrangements for the timing and length of its sessions, and, in that context, requests the Commission to enhance further the transparency of its work, taking into account the relevant articles of the statute and its rules of procedure;

3. Calls upon Member States and the Secretary-General, in the context of articles 3 and 4 of the statute of the Commission, to ensure through the selection process of candidates for appointment that the Commission has the requisite technical skills and broad managerial experience among its membership;

4. Notes that the representatives of the Coordinating Committee for International Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations System and the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations have both suspended participation in the work of the Commission, and calls upon those bodies to resume participation in the work of the Commission in a spirit of cooperation and non-confrontation;

5. Requests the Commission to ensure that its reports contain clear and readily understandable explanations of its technical recommendations.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 28, 30, 31, 34, 36, 44; plenary 100.

By decision 50/469 of the same date, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item on the United Nations common system at its resumed session.

Emoluments of top echelon officials

ACABQ, in a 13 October report,⁽¹³⁾ requested the Secretary-General to issue an addendum to update the annex to his 1994 report⁽¹⁴⁾ concerning the designation of special representatives and envoys. It requested the Secretary-General to: refine the guidelines on the use of funds budgeted for general temporary assistance to ensure consistency of application of the relevant procedures; reconsider the practice of financing some high-level positions from funds appropriated for general temporary assistance; follow the normal procedure for the establishment of posts; and report to the Assembly at its fiftieth session on measures taken to address the concerns it had raised.

In response to the comments of ACABQ, the Secretary-General submitted on 6 December revised estimates for the 1996-1997 biennium.⁽¹⁵⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/216, section II.

Revised estimates under section 1 (Overall policy-making, direction and coordination), section 32 (Staff assessment) and income section 1 (Income from staff assessment)

[The General Assembly . . .]

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the revised estimates under section 1 (Overall policy-making, direction and coordination), section 32 (Staff assessment) and income section 1 (Income from staff assessment) of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997;

2. Endorses the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to approve a temporary post at the Under-Secretary-General level, as requested by the Secretary-General, and that such additional appropriation as might be required should be reflected in the performance report for the biennium 1996-1997;

General Assembly resolution 50/216, section II

23 December 1995 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/842) without vote, 17 December (meeting 41); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 116.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 5th Committee 3-5, 7, 10, 11, 41; plenary 100.

In 1995, the Secretary-General submitted reports on the conditions of service and compensation for the Chairman of ACABQ and the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of ICSC⁽¹⁶⁾ and for members of the International Court of Justice.⁽¹⁷⁾ ACABQ responded to the latter report in December⁽¹⁸⁾ and made recommendations on such issues as the ICJ pension scheme.

On 31 March, the Assembly, in resolution 49/237, section II, took note of the Secretary-General's 1994 report on the subject and endorsed the recommendations of ACABQ.

In a 10 March report,⁽¹⁹⁾ ACABQ submitted to the General Assembly its comments and recommendations on the Secretary-General's October 1994 report⁽²⁰⁾ on the conditions of service of the members of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991.

In resolution 49/242 B of 31 March, the Assembly endorsed the observations and recommendations contained in the report of ACABQ.

On 23 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 50/216, section VI, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on conditions of service for ICSC members and the ACABQ Chairman, and requested ACABQ to report thereon to the General Assembly at the first part of its resumed fiftieth session, in accordance with established procedures.

Also on 23 December, by resolution 50/216, section IV, the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General on conditions for ICJ members, approved the ACABQ recommendation thereon and requested the Secretary-General to address the issues raised by ACABQ concerning the conditions of service of ICJ members in the context of the next review in 1998.

Supplementary payments

Supplementary payments—the practice by some Member States of supplementing the salaries of some or all of their nationals in the service of the UN common system—have been discussed periodically by the Commission since its inception. In 1995, the Commission reported to the General Assembly that, although there was a strong presumption that supplementary payments were indicative of uncompetitive remuneration levels in the common system, the information received was too fragmentary to draw any definitive conclusions. It reiterated its earlier position that supplementary payments were inappropriate, inconsistent with the provisions of the staff regulations and at variance with the spirit of the UN Charter. Deductions from salaries were equally inappropriate.

Post adjustment

As part of its ongoing responsibilities under its statute, the Commission kept under review the operation of the post adjustment system. It decided on a number of methodological issues, including arrangements for the forthcoming round of cost-of-living surveys, and approved a number of measures designed to improve the transparency of the post adjustment system.

Following a detailed review of the treatment of pension contributions in post adjustment, the Commission decided that, starting with the next adjustment of the global scale of pensionable remuneration for staff in the Professional and higher categories on 1 November 1995, actual pension contributions should be used in time-to-time adjustments of the post adjustment index. It informed the General Assembly that it had determined that, in the light of the arrangements embodied in the Pension Fund regulations, there would be no shift in the burden of Pension Fund contributions from staff to Member States as a result of the implementation of this decision.

Post classification system

The Secretary-General, on 27 November, reported⁽²¹⁾ on the implementation of the Joint Inspection Unit's (JIU) 1992⁽²²⁾ recommendations relating to the advantages and disadvantages of the post classification system. He stated that to address the shortage of classification officers, a number of personnel officers had been trained in job classification at several duty stations, making it possible to delegate authority for classification of posts to the UN offices in Vienna and in Geneva. Training was also provided to Executive Office personnel, to members of classification appeals bodies at Headquarters and at duty stations, to programme staff in Vienna, and to a number of human resource specialists at Headquarters, following the reorganization of the Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM) in 1995.

Financial provision was made in the proposed 1996-1997 programme budget for an automated system for the classification of Professional posts, financed jointly by organizations participating in the Subcommittee on Job Classification of the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions.

Other remuneration matters

Repatriation grant

In a 10 March report,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General referred to a 1993 General Assembly request⁽²⁴⁾ that ICSC study the practices of organizations of the common system regarding expatriate entitlements to staff members living in their home country while stationed at duty stations located in another country, with a view to harmonizing those practices. The Secretary-General explained that the practice followed by the UN was not to pay expatriate benefits, including the repatriation grant, to that category of staff members. Payment of expatriate benefits was made only to those staff members who worked and resided outside of their home country. In 1987, the Administrative Tribunal held that the practice conformed to the language in the Staff Regulations, but on 6 October 1994 the Tribunal reversed itself and held that the language of annex IV to the Staff Regulations did not support the practice followed by the UN and ordered the Secretary-General to pay the repatriation grant. The Legal Counsel advised that no useful purpose would be served by seeking an advisory opinion from ICJ and that the judgement must be implemented and repatriation benefits paid to applicants.

The Secretary-General proposed two options to the Assembly: accept the Tribunal's 1994 interpretation of annex IV to the Staff Regulations, either explicitly or by taking no positive action in which case the repatriation grant must be paid to applicants residing in their home country; or amend annex IV to the Staff Regulations, as well as staff regulations 3.2 and 5.3, to state explicitly that expatriate benefits were not payable unless an otherwise eligible staff member both worked and resided outside his or her home country. Should the Assembly adopt the first option, it would be preferable to do so in the form of a resolution, as the matter involved fundamental legislative policy which should be clearly set out. There was, however, the strong possibility that the reasoning of the Tribunal could be extended to the interpretation of staff regulations governing eligibility for education grants and home leave. If the Assembly adopted the second option, it might wish to request the governing bodies of organizations of the common system to amend their Staff Regulations and Rules in accordance with the policy reaffirmed by the Assembly, and inform ICSC of their actions.

The Secretary-General noted, however, that unless the Assembly decided to amend the Staff Regulations, he was obliged to conform to the interpretation of the Tribunal and to pay the repatriation grant to eligible staff members who lived in France but worked in Geneva and had separated or would separate from service after the date of the judgement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/241.

Payment of repatriation grant to staff members living in their home country while stationed at duty stations located in another country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on payment of repatriation grant to staff members living in their home country while stationed at duty stations located in another country,

Recalling section II.D of its resolution 48/224 of 23 December 1993 on the United Nations common system, in which it requested the International Civil Service Commission to study further the practices of the organizations of the United Nations common system regarding the granting of expatriate entitlements to staff members living in their home country while stationed at duty stations located in another country, with a view to harmonizing the practices of the organizations with those of the United Nations, and to make recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session,

Noting the decision of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal in Judgement No. 656, Kremer, Gourdon,

1. Reiterates its decision that the repatriation grant and other expatriate benefits are limited to staff who both work and reside in a country other than their home country;

2. Approves the amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Decides to re-examine the issue of entitlement to repatriation and other expatriate benefits to staff members living in their home country while stationed at duty stations located in another country during its fifty-first session, in the light of the report by the International Civil Service Commission requested in section II.D of its resolution 48/224.

ANNEX

Amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations

Article III

Salaries and related allowances

Article V

Annual and special leave

Replace regulation 5.3 with the following text:

"Regulation 5.3: Eligible staff members shall be granted home leave once in every two years. However, in the case of designated duty stations having very difficult conditions of life and work, eligible staff members shall be granted home leave once in every twelve months. 6 April 1995 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/802/Add.2) without vote, 31 March (meeting 53); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.40/Rev.1), based on informal consultations and orally revised; agenda item 113 (d).

Payment of honoraria

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/302 A of 25 July, noted that no action had been taken by the General Assembly on the 1993 recommendation of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights that payment of an honorarium equivalent to that payable to members of other treaty bodies should be authorized for Committee members, and urged the Assembly to give speedy attention to the matter.

The Council, by decision 1995/302 B of the same date, urged the General Assembly to authorize payment to each member of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of an honorarium equivalent to that payable to the members of other relevant treaty bodies.

Other staff issues

Personnel policies

On 7 February,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the application of UN recruitment, placement and promotion policies. The inspectors recommended that the Secretary-General should review and improve all personnel policies and procedures to make them simpler, more transparent and relevant, and also that they be brought together in a Human Resource Management Manual. The authority and professional skills of the Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM) should be strengthened in order to implement the Secretary-General's strategy for the management of human resources. The Secretary-General should revise the OHRM section of the Organization Manual to clearly spell out its functions. He should also make clear the obligation of all programme managers to abide by human resource management policies, including the unacceptability of practices such as favouritism, circumvention of the principle of competitiveness, and interference with the authority of OHRM. The decentralization and delegation of recruitment, promotion and separation, the inspectors said, should be carried out only after human resources management policies as suggested by the Secretary-General were formulated, personnel procedures and methods reviewed and improved, responsibilities in human resources management demarcated between OHRM and other offices and departments, and appropriate reporting and accountability mechanisms put in place. The Secretary-General should be allowed to extend contracts of staff on board up to the age of 62, especially to meet the staff needs of peacekeeping and related missions and to replace staff sent on mission. He should ensure a certain geographical balance and national diversity of staff on mission as well as those replacing them. The Secretary-General should also provide a human resource report containing a full account of costs, benefits, problems and prospects related to all forms of recruitment activities, as part of his efforts to enhance transparency, accountability and follow-up in the personnel programme. The Secretariat should modernize its recruitment methods through diversification of recruitment resources and the use of electronic bulletin boards, professional journals and magazines to ensure recruitment of the best candidates, without jeopardizing the principle of equitable geographical distribution. Probationary contracts for staff recruited through competitive examinations should be abolished, and replaced by two-year fixed-term appointments, and the staff rules should be accordingly amended. The format of rosters of candidates should be improved, and job descriptions standardized to allow better and more expeditious selection of internal and external candidates.

In a 9 March addendum,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted his comments on the JIU report. He reported that the second edition of the Personnel Administrations Handbook had been published; personnel policies and practices were being reviewed; but that a human resources management manual was greatly needed. He said that the recommendations regarding OHRM and the decentralization and delegation of recruitment, promotion and separation would be put into effect as much as possible. The Staff-Management Coordination Committee was reviewing the desirability of proposing the extension of the retirement age of staff up to the age of 62. The Secretary-General said he would report to the Assembly on the conduct of recruitment activities as well as on national competitive examinations, including the P-3 level, in the context of normal reporting. The Secretariat had already taken measures to implement recommendations on probationary contracts for staff recruited through competitive examinations, and the suggestions regarding rosters would be used when addressing existing inadequacies.

The Assembly, in decision 49/476 of 31 March, took note of the JIU report as well as the related observations of the Secretary-General, and approved the report's recommendations.

In a 13 April note,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a statement adopted by ACC on the status of women in the secretariats of the UN system. ACC members, in an effort to facilitate the recruitment of women, intended to treat all women staff members of common-system organizations as internal candidates with respect to vacant posts in any organization of the system. They would request organizations to utilize their field presence to prospect for women candidates, and urge Governments to submit at least one or more female candidates for each position. Members would also develop a system of inter-agency mobility of women staff to increase their experience; facilitate spouse employment by amending staff rules and encourage the development of spouse employment opportunities, including also non-governmental and multinational sectors, and introduce relevant provisions in host country agreements; organize efforts at each UN location to promote spouse employment, led by the resident coordinators in the field and by the lead agency in each headquarters city. Organizations were to introduce measures that would lead to a climate conducive to the equal participation of men and women, and those organizations that had not already done so were encouraged to introduce policies and procedures to combat sexual harassment. ACC also said that particular attention had to be paid to increasing the number of women in senior managerial positions.

On 20 June, the Secretariat, in a conference room paper,⁽⁴⁾ provided information requested by the Assembly in 1994⁽⁵⁾ on the employment of retirees, including those recruited on a short-term basis or under special service agreements between 1 January 1993 and 31 December 1994. Some 60 per cent of recruited retirees were language staff. In view of the increase in the cost-of-living in New York from December 1982, it was proposed that the Assembly consider increasing the maximum that a retiree could receive from $12,000 to $20,000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 July, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/222 B.

Human resources management

The General Assembly,

Having considered the relevant reports on human resources management submitted by the Secretary-General during the resumed forty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Noting with concern the conference room paper on the practice of using retirees in the United Nations Secretariat,

1. Reiterates its support for the Secretary-General towards the development of a management environment and culture in the Organization that is supportive of having staff members perform to their maximum potential, effectiveness and efficiency;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the statement on the status of women in the secretariats of the United Nations system adopted by the Administrative Committee on Coordination at its first regular session of 1995, and requests members of the Committee to report on the implementation of the proposals contained therein;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to develop a comprehensive policy on the use of retirees that includes appropriate internal controls to ensure that the compensation received by those retirees does not exceed the existing cap on those payments and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the policy will be consistent with the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund;

5. Decides that, pending consideration of the policy on the use of retirees during the fifty-first session of the General Assembly, no former staff member who is in receipt of a pension benefit from the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund shall receive from any United Nations funds more than 12,000 United States dollars in total in any calendar year;

6. Authorizes on an exceptional basis during the fiftieth session a derogation from the decision in paragraph 5 above with a view to maintaining the maximum effectiveness of conference services.

General Assembly resolution 49/222 B

20 July 1995 Meeting 106 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/802/Add.3) without vote, 14 July (meeting 66); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.65), based on informal consultations and orally revised; agenda item 113.

Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 59, 61, 63, 66; plenary 106.

By decision 50/469 of 23 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item "Human resources management" at its 1996 resumed session.

Staff composition

On 11 October, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report⁽⁶⁾ on staff composition of the UN Secretariat by nationality, gender, grade and type of appointment. The total number of Secretariat staff as of 30 June 1995 was 14,380, of whom 9,611 were paid from the regular budget and 4,769 from extrabudgetary resources. There were 4,394 staff in the Professional category and above, 9,486 in the General Service and related categories and 500 project personnel.

Staff in posts subject to geographical distribution numbered 2,515. As of 30 June, there were 25 unrepresented Member States, compared to 28 at 30 June 1994, and 25 underrepresented Member States, the same as the year before. Changes in representation derived not only from staff appointments and separations from service, but also from such factors as adjustments in desirable ranges resulting from an increase or decrease in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution, changes in the number of Member States, variations in assessed contributions of individual Member States or in their population, and changes in the status of some staff members. The report also provided information on grouping of Member States, the representation of developing and other countries among staff at the senior levels, the representation of women, and recruitment activities.

Between 1 July 1994 and 30 June 1995, appointments were made to 135 posts subject to geographical distribution. Of those, 8 (5.9 per cent) were nationals of unrepresented Member States; 37 (27.4 per cent) of underrepresented Member States; 82 (60.7 per cent) of within-range Member States; 8 (5.9 per cent) of overrepresented Member States.

Status of women in the Secretariat

In 1996, the Secretary-General submitted two reports on improving the status of women in the UN Secretariat.

In a 21 February report⁽⁷⁾ to the Commission on the Status of Women, the Secretary-General provided statistical data and described events that had taken place since June 1994. He said that figures indicated that from 1989 to 1994, there had been an overall increase of 5.7 per cent (26.9 to 32.6 per cent) in the representation of women in posts subject to geographical distribution; the percentage of women at the D-1 level and above had risen to 15.1 per cent. Those figures, although showing steady progress, indicated that, both in the overall percentages and in the proportion of women at the D-1 level and above, the Secretariat fell short in its efforts to meet the target of 35 per cent overall in posts subject to geographical distribution and 25 per cent for levels D-1 and above.

The Steering Committee for the Advancement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat and JIU⁽⁸⁾ had indicated that the major obstacles to the advancement of women were commitment at the highest level and lack of a clearly articulated human resources management strategy. The main goal of the strategic action plan for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000), which the General Assembly urged⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General to implement, was to achieve gender equality by the beginning of the twenty-first century. The plan set out strategies and specific objectives and targets, and identified simultaneous and interrelated actions required to achieve them. Elements of the plan that so far had been initiated were: planning and database development; development of a specific roster of external candidates; a Secretariat-wide network of departmental focal points; broad advertising and communication; targeted recruitment missions; and review of the process of recruitment and promotion and the involvement of the departmental focal points in those processes. The Secretary-General said that changes would be made in management culture and in policies regarding career development, training, dual career and spousal employment, in tandem with his overall strategy for the management of the human resources of the Organization.⁽⁹⁾ Monitoring, appraisal and follow-up on issues specific to women would be an integral part of that process.

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-ninth session (15 March-7 April), recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see also PART IV, Chapter X).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/28.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Articles 1 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also Article 8 of the Charter, which provides that the United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs,

Recalling further the relevant paragraphs of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, especially paragraphs 79, 315, 356 and 358,

Recalling the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other bodies that have continued to focus on this area since the adoption of Assembly resolution 2715(XXV) of 15 December 1970, in which the question of the employment of women in the Professional category was first addressed, Concerned by the serious and continuing underrepresentation of women in the Secretariat, particularly at the higher decision-making levels,

Convinced that the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat could significantly enhance the effectiveness and credibility of the United Nations, including its leadership role in advancing the status of women worldwide and in promoting the full participation of women in all aspects of decision-making,

Recalling the goal, set in General Assembly resolutions 45/125 of 14 December 1990 and 45/239 C of 21 December 1990 and reaffirmed in Assembly resolutions 46/100 of 16 December 1991, 47/93 of 16 December 1992, 48/106 of 20 December 1993 and 49/167 of 23 December 1994, of a 35 per cent overall participation rate of women in posts subject to geographical distribution by 1995,

Noting with concern that the current rate of increase in the appointment of women may not be sufficient to achieve the objective of a 35 per cent participation rate of women in posts subject to geographical distribution by 1995,

Recalling the goal, set in General Assembly resolution 45/239 C and reaffirmed in Assembly resolutions 46/100, 47/93, 48/106 and 49/167, of a 25 per cent participation rate of women in posts at the D-1 level and above by 1995,

Noting with disappointment that the participation rate of women in posts at the D-1 level and above remains unacceptably low, and well below the 25 per cent goal,

Noting the efforts made in the past year by the Secretary-General and the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat to integrate the objectives set by the General Assembly for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat into the overall strategy for the management of the Organization's human resources, and noting also that such a comprehensive approach will be conducive to enhancing the status of women in the Secretariat,

Recognizing the importance of providing equal employment opportunities for all staff,

Aware that a comprehensive policy aimed at preventing sexual harassment should be an integral part of personnel policy,

Commending the Secretary-General for his administrative instruction on procedures for dealing with cases of sexual harassment,

Bearing in mind that a visible commitment by the Secretary-General is essential to the achievement of the targets set by the General Assembly,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General while regretting the lateness in the availability of the report;

2. Also takes note of the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000) contained in section IV of the report, and of the goals and objectives of the plan as proposed by the Secretary-General;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to implement fully the plan of action, noting that his visible commitment is essential to the achievement of the targets set by the General Assembly and the goals and objectives contained in the plan;

4. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to ensure implementation of the plan through, inter alia, the issuance of clear and specific instructions as to the authority and responsibility of all managers in implementing the plan and the criteria by which performance will be appraised;

5. Also urges the Secretary-General, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and in a manner consistent with the plan of action, to accord greater priority to the recruitment and promotion of women in posts subject to geographical distribution, particularly in senior policy-level and decision-making posts and within those parts of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies where representation of women is considerably below the average, in order to achieve the goals set in General Assembly resolutions 45/125 and 45/239 C of an overall participation rate of 35 per cent by 1995 and, in posts at the D-1 level and above, of 25 per cent by 1995;

6. Further urges the Secretary-General to examine existing work practices within the United Nations system with a view to increasing flexibility so as to remove direct or indirect discrimination against staff members with family responsibilities, including consideration of such issues as spouse employment, job-sharing, flexible working hours, child-care arrangements, career-break schemes and access to training;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to increase the number of women employed in the Secretariat from developing countries, particularly those countries which are unrepresented or underrepresented, and from other countries that have a low representation of women, including countries in transition;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that equal employment opportunities exist for all staff;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to enable, from within existing resources, the focal point for women within the Secretariat effectively to monitor and facilitate progress in the implementation of the plan from within existing resources;

10. Strongly encourages Member States to support the plan of action and the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to increase the percentage of women in the Professional category, especially in posts at the D-1 level and above, by identifying and sending forward more women candidates, encouraging women to apply for vacant posts and creating national rosters of women candidates to be shared with the Secretariat, the specialized agencies and the regional commissions;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to develop comprehensive policy measures aimed at the prevention of sexual harassment in the Secretariat;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that a progress report on the status of women in the Secretariat containing, inter alia, information on activities undertaken towards the achievement of the goals and objectives contained in the plan of action and policy measures aimed at the prevention of sexual harassment in the Secretariat is presented to the Commission on the Status of Women at its fortieth session, in accordance with the relevant rules concerning the timetable for delivery of documentation, and to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/28

24 July 1995 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on women (E/1995/26); agenda item 5 (e).
Meeting numbers. ESC 49, 50.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 27 October report⁽¹⁰⁾ on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, the Secretary-General provided statistics as of 30 June 1995, and described recent developments and the impact of the new management culture on the status of women. He also reviewed implementation of the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000). The Secretary-General stated that the percentage of women in posts subject to geographical distribution had increased 1.5 percentage points, from 32.6 per cent on 30 July 1994 to 34.1 per cent. The percentage of women at the D-1 level and above increased also by 2 percentage points, from 15.1 in 1994 to 17.1 as of 30 June 1995. The percentage of women at the Assistant Secretary-General and Under-Secretary-General levels remained the same.

By region of origin, the lowest representation of women as a percentage of all staff was registered by Eastern Europe (1.11), the Middle East (1.35) and Africa (3.02), and the highest by North America and the Caribbean (9.74), Western Europe (7.87) and Asia and the Pacific (7.63). Between 1 July 1994 and 30 June 1995, more women than men were promoted at the P-3 and P-5 levels, while more men than women were promoted at the D-1 and P-4 levels. A total of 175 staff members, 51.42 per cent of whom were women, were promoted during the period. Only at the P-1/P-2 level was the percentage of women recruited higher than that of men, 53.6 per cent. It was lowest in the P-4 category, 33.3 per cent, and ranged between 40 and 46 per cent for candidates in the other categories.

The Secretary-General concluded that it was important that the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing, China, 4-15 September) (see PART FOUR, Chapter X) regarding women in decision-making, in power structures and managerial positions, also be applied to women within the UN system. He intended to vigorously pursue the improvement of the status of women through implementation of the strategic plan of action and the Beijing Platform for Action. The Secretary-General proposed that the Assembly extend the target of equal numbers of women and men in posts subject to geographical distribution by the year 2000 to all categories of posts, regardless of the type or duration of appointment, or of the Staff Rules under which an appointment was made. He said that the percentage should apply both overall and within category. Member States that were host countries to UN organizations should consider, on an exceptional basis, permitting the spouses of staff members, male or female, the right to work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/164.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,
Recalling Articles 1 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also Article 8 of the Charter, which provides that the United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs,

Recalling further the relevant paragraphs of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995,

Concerned at the serious and continuing underrepresentation of women in the Secretariat, particularly at the higher decision-making levels,

Convinced that the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat could significantly enhance the effectiveness and credibility of the United Nations, including its leadership role in advancing the status of women worldwide and in promoting the full participation of women in all aspects of decision-making,

Disappointed that the objective set in its resolutions 45/125 of 14 December 1990 and 45/239 C of 21 December 1990 of a 35 per cent overall participation rate of women in posts subject to geographical distribution by 1995 has not been met,

Disappointed also that the goal set in its resolution 45/239 C of a 25 per cent participation rate of women in posts at the D-1 level and above by 1995 has not been met and that their level of representation remains unacceptably low,

Recalling its resolution 49/167 of 23 December 1994, in which it urged the Secretary-General to implement fully the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000),

Noting the efforts made by the Secretary-General and the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat to integrate the objectives set by the General Assembly for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat into the overall strategy for the management of the Organization's human resources, and noting also that such a comprehensive approach would be conducive to enhancing the status of women in the Secretariat,

Recognizing the importance of providing equal employment opportunities for all staff,

Aware that a comprehensive policy aimed at preventing and dealing with sexual harassment should be an integral part of personnel policy,

Welcoming the statement of the Administrative Committee on Coordination on the status of women in the secretariats of the United Nations system, in which the members of the Committee reaffirmed their strong commitment to ensuring that the advancement of women was a priority within the organizations of the common system and to taking measures to improve the status of women in their respective secretariats,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes the efforts to date of the Secretary-General to implement the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000), and reaffirms that his continued visible commitment is essential to the achievement of the goals and objectives of the strategic plan;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure full and urgent implementation of the strategic plan in order to achieve the goal contained in the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women for overall gender equality, particularly at the Professional level and above, by the year 2000;

4. Also calls upon the Secretary-General to fulfil his target, reaffirmed by the Fourth World Conference on Women, of having women hold 50 per cent of managerial and decision-making positions by the year 2000;

5. Welcomes the Secretary-General's initiatives to date to ensure implementation of the strategic plan, including the incorporation of measures into the performance appraisal system to hold managers responsible and accountable and the inclusion in training programmes of components designed to sensitize managers to gender issues;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to continue his work on improving the work practices and environment within the United Nations system with a view to increasing flexibility so as to remove direct or indirect discrimination, including against staff members with family responsibilities, through, inter alia, consideration of such issues as spouse employment, job-sharing, flexible working hours, child-care arrangements and career-break schemes, and to improve access for all staff to training and career development;

7. Notes the examination that has begun of the effectiveness of the Organization's policies and procedures, established in 1992, to deal with sexual harassment in the workplace, and urges the Secretary-General to ensure that the examination leads to a comprehensive and effective policy, including grievance mechanisms, for the prevention and redress of sexual harassment in the Secretariat;

8. Also urges the Secretary-General to increase the number of women employed in the Secretariat from developing countries, particularly those that are underrepresented or underrepresented, and from other countries that have a low representation of women, including countries in transition;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that equal employment opportunities exist for all staff;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to enable, from within existing resources, the Focal Point for Women within the Secretariat effectively to monitor and facilitate progress in the implementation of the strategic plan;

11. Strongly encourages Member States to support the strategic plan and the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to increase the percentage of women in Professional posts, especially at the D-1 level and above, by identifying and submitting more women candidates, encouraging women to apply for vacant posts and creating national rosters of women candidates to be shared with the Secretariat, specialized agencies and regional commissions;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the relevant rules on the delivery timetable for documentation, to ensure that a progress report on the status of women in the Secretariat is submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its fortieth session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, taking into account the promotion of integrated reporting.

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/630) without vote, 30 November (meeting 44); 96-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.23), orally revised; agenda item 107. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 24, 26-31, 40-42, 44; plenary 99.

Performance appraisal system

As requested in 1994 by the General Assembly,^(c) the Secretary-General took steps to implement the new performance appraisal system (PAS) developed by OHRM in 1994. Some 2,000 staff members had undergone training in the use of the system. In May, modifications were made to simplify the system, reduce the length of the reporting form, and reflect other suggestions made by staff members. The new date for the system's implementation worldwide was 1 July 1995. OHRM planned to begin a "people management training" programme for staff at D-1 and D-2 levels to develop management skills in communications, including listening and direction, as well as in other managerial competencies related to the management needs of the Organization, including implementation of the PAS. On 18 September, the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management issued an administrative instruction formally establishing the system.

Multilingualism

In a 20 July letter⁽¹⁾ addressed to the Secretary-General, 18 Member States, later joined by another 29 States, requested the inclusion of the item "Multilingualism" on the agenda of the General Assembly. In an explanatory memorandum, they complained that the principle of equality was not being respected in the treatment of the official and working languages of the UN. Among the justifications usually cited for not respecting the equality principle were financial reasons, the unavailability of interpretation and translation services, or the urgent nature of the work at hand. The letter said that the Secretariat should make it a rule to employ in its relations with Member States the official language of choice of those States. This requirement would have implications for the linguistic skills that should be expected from UN staff. The staffing of the interpretation and translation services had not expanded at the same rate as the increase in the other activities of various UN bodies. As a result, there were delays in making documents available in the official languages, and meetings were postponed because of the lack of teams of interpreters. The only way to avoid such a situation was for the interpretation and translation services to have adequate staff and resources, despite budgetary constraints, to deal with the increasing workload. The practice of holding "informal" meetings without interpretation or circulating "unofficial documents" in one language only was not an acceptable solution. Annexed to the letter was a draft resolution proposed for adoption by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/11.

Multilingualism

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2(I) of 1 February 1946, 2241 B (XXI) of 20 December 1966, 2292(XXII) of 8 December 1967, 2359 B (XXII) of 19 December 1967, 2479(XXIII) and 2480 B (XXIII) of 21 December 1968, 3189(XXVIII), 3190(XXVIII) and 3191(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973 and 43/224 D of 21 December 1988,

Recalling also, on the occasion of the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Charter of the United Nations, that the universality of the United Nations and its corollary, multilingualism, entail for each State Member of the Organization, irrespective of the official language in which it expresses itself, the right and the duty to make itself understood and to understand others,

Stressing the need for strict observance of the resolutions and rules establishing language arrangements for the different bodies and organs of the United Nations,

Recalling further that Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish are both official and working languages of the General Assembly and its committees and subcommittees, and of the Security Council, that Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish are the official languages and English, French and Spanish the working languages of the Economic and Social Council, and that English and French are the working languages of the Secretariat,

Regretting that unequal use is made in the United Nations of the different official languages and of the working languages of the Secretariat, and desiring that persons recruited by the Organization should have a command of and use at least one of the six official languages in addition to one working language of the Secretariat,

Considering that the translation and interpretation budgets of United Nations bodies should be commensurate with the needs and should not be subject to budgetary constraints, as noted in resolution 42/207 C of 11 December 1987,

Noting that the principle of equality of the official languages is being called into question with increasing frequency by the holding of so-called "low-cost" informal meetings,

Emphasizing the need for the Organization to continue to promote the learning of all the official languages and the working languages of the Secretariat by members of missions accredited to the Organization and by Secretariat staff,

Emphasizing also the importance of providing access for all Governments and all sectors of civil society to the Organization's documentation, archives and data banks in all the official languages,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the strict implementation of the resolutions establishing language arrangements for both the official languages and the working languages of the Secretariat, and invites Member States to do likewise;

2. Recalls that the Secretariat is required, in its relations with Member States, to use the official or working language requested by those States;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that appointment of the staff of the Organization is carried out strictly in accordance with the terms of Article 101 of the Charter and the regulations established by the General Assembly pursuant to that Article and that, upon recruitment, personnel recruited by the different bodies of the Organization have a command of and use at least one of the working languages of the Secretariat or one of the working languages of another body of the Organization, in the case of staff members who are to work for that body and whose tenure of appointment does not exceed two years, and requests him to ensure that the use of another of the six official languages is duly encouraged and taken into account, particularly when promotions and incremental steps are under consideration, in order to ensure linguistic balance within the Organization;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure, in particular in the recruitment and promotion of Secretariat staff, equality of the working languages of the Secretariat and of their use;

5. Stresses the need to ensure, in particular through the training and recruitment of specialists, that the necessary resources are available to guarantee the proper and timely translation of documents into the different official languages of the United Nations;

6. Recalls the need to ensure the simultaneous distribution of such documents in the official languages;

7. Also stresses the need to ensure adequate human and financial resources for maintaining the teaching, at all levels, of the official languages and the working languages of the Secretariat;

8. Further stresses the importance of ensuring the availability of publications and adequate data banks in the different official languages in the libraries and documentation centres of the various bodies;

9. Urges the delegations of Member States and the Secretariat to endeavour to avoid holding informal meetings without interpretation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and particularly on the use of the official languages of the United Nations and the working languages of the Secretariat.

Staff Rules and Regulations

In a 20 November report,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly amendments to the Staff Rules under the 100 series relating to the repatriation grant and other expatriate benefits for staff working and residing in a country other than their home country. The amendment reflected the different rates applicable to education grant claims received for children studying in the United States or from other parts of the world, except the currency areas specifically designated. Another amendment clarified the role of the Appointment and Promotion Board, which does not make recommendations respecting the appointment or promotion of candidates having successfully passed a competitive examination. A new rule made clear that those candidates were appointed at the P-1, P-2 and P-3 levels or promoted from the General Service and related categories to the Professional category on the recommendation of the Board of Examiners. A further amendment established that the new reporting system would apply to all staff, including at the Under-Secretary-General level (100 series). Other amendments concerned rules in the 200 series relating to home leave, education grants, insurance coverage and last-day-for-pay purposes.

By decision 50/453 of 22 December, the General Assembly noted the amendments to the 100 and 200 series of the Staff Rules contained in the Secretary-General's report.

Staff representation

In a 31 May report,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General, responding to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ submitted revised costs of staff representation activities for 1990-1991. He corrected his 1992 report regarding the number of staff members released full-time for service with the New York Staff Committee, as well as the Committees in Geneva and Santiago, Chile. In reviewing the revised figures for Headquarters, the Secretary-General referred to the exponential growth in the number of staff serving in field missions in recent years and the resulting impact on activities of the Field Service Staff Union, which represented more than 600 staff in the Field Service Category, and the New York Staff Council, which represented over 2,000 Secretariat staff assigned to field missions. Moreover, since 1983, the number of issues requiring staff-management consultation had increased in number and complexity. Total cost of staff representation activities amounted to $1,714,900, including staff costs of $1,191,000.

The Secretary-General also submitted,⁽¹⁴⁾ in response to an Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ costs of staff representation activities during 1992, 1993 and 1994, amounting to $1,138,800, $1,051,800 and $1,018,300, respectively.

On 30 June, the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Resources Management told the Fifth Committee that the reports represented actual costs of the full-time release of senior members of Staff Councils from their substantive duties, together with the cost of Secretariat support. He said that the Committee had expressed concern over the lack of a clear definition of "a reasonable amount of time" for the conduct of staff activities. Such clarity would permit staff representatives to make better use of time available to them for Staff Council activities, which should not be to the detriment of their own career objectives. He also indicated that the Staff-Management Coordinating Committee had reached agreement on what constituted "a reasonable time" for staff representatives at all levels to discharge their responsibilities effectively. He said that the reports were not being introduced formally because the Secretary-General had not had a chance to consider them. The Fifth Committee continued consideration of the reports in informal consultations.

Privileges and immunities

The Secretary-General submitted a 16 February note⁽¹⁵⁾ on stress management, in response to a 1993 Assembly request⁽¹⁶⁾ for further information on how best to assist and rehabilitate staff members dealing with the after-effects of traumatic and stressful incidents and experiences. He stated that occupational stress inherent in the activities of the UN system could no longer be ignored. Staff were increasingly being asked to confront situations without having developed the appropriate skills to cope with them. It was therefore essential that adequate planning, training and support for staff working in stressful situations should be put in place on a system-wide basis. The Security Coordinator, the focal point for developing a strategy for managing stress, had been working with other organizations to develop such a strategy based on preventive and critical-incident stress management. It would include training a small number of peer counsellors at high-risk duty stations to provide immediate, on-the-scene, critical-incident stress defusing; training key management personnel at high-risk missions to identify critical-incident stress; working with local counsellors and to determine when outside expertise was required; developing a core of in-house critical-incident stress counsellors for debriefing and in emergencies; and developing long-term and adequate support, counselling and treatment for staff suffering from critical-incident stress.

The Secretary-General observed that although developing a stress-management programme was a priority, it would require time and resources. The Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator had developed a roster of mental health professionals trained to conduct critical-incident stress debriefings. The support of Member States in implementing such a programme was essential.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 March, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/238.

Respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations

The General Assembly,
Reaffirming its previous resolutions on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations,

Acknowledging with satisfaction the adoption of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel,

1. Takes note of the report by the Secretary-General on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations;

2. Deplores the increasing risk confronting United Nations personnel, including those engaged in peace-keeping and humanitarian operations, as well as locally recruited staff, and in this regard welcomes the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security Matters convened in New York from 16 to 19 May 1994 by the United Nations Security Coordinator, and urges the Administrative Committee on Coordination to strengthen the cooperative inter-agency approach, which will ensure the safety and security of United Nations personnel system-wide;

3. Welcomes the note by the Secretary-General on stress management and the proposals made in paragraph 10 thereof, and requests the Secretary-General to submit funding proposals, if necessary, in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997.

General Assembly resolution 49/238

31 March 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/49/802/Add.1) without vote, 16 March (meeting 45); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/49/L.35), based on informal consultations; agenda item 113 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 49th session: 5th Committee 43, 45; plenary 99.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 9 October, the Secretary-General, on behalf of and with the approval of ACC, submitted a report,⁽¹⁷⁾ containing updated information on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the UN and the specialized agencies and related organizations, as well as on their safety and security. The report covered the period from 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995. The Secretary-General said that developments in the last year had again heightened concerns regarding the conditions under which staff members operated in certain areas and the level of risk that was deemed acceptable. Fourteen staff members belonging to different organizations had lost their lives during the period. In addition there had been numerous instances of harassment, kidnapping, vehicle hijackings and attacks on UN personnel. The decrease in the number of staff members arrested or detained over the previous two years was reversed by the situation in Rwanda, where numerous locally recruited UN staff members were detained. As at 30 June 1995, 12 staff members of the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East remained in detention. There was also a growing number of instances where locally recruited UN staff members were being drafted into military services. The report also discussed the taxation of UN officials by host countries and restrictions on their official and private travel.

In a 16 November note,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a statement adopted by ACC at its second regular session in 1995 (New York, 12-13 October). ACC expressed concern at the increase in attacks on staff of the UN, its programmes, funds and specialized agencies, causing the death of more than 100 staff members over the past three years. It called for effective and comprehensive measures to enhance the security of personnel, and asked Governments to take all possible measures to ensure the safety of UN staff. ACC also called on States that had not yet done so to ratify the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel,⁽¹⁹⁾ and asked the Office of Legal Affairs to propose measures to ensure the extension of its coverage automatically and equally to all UN and associated staff working in unsafe or potentially insecure conditions. ACC encouraged its members to prioritize the development of security training and stress management, and to share and combine resources and experience in these mechanisms, which could reduce the risk to which personnel were exposed. It insisted that projects relating to safety and security of staff be excluded from any budgetary restrictions resulting from the UN financial crisis. It decided to review progress on these recommendations in 1996.

UN Joint Staff Pension Fund

General aspects

During 1995, the number of participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF) increased from 63,813 to 68,708, or by 7.7 per cent; the number of periodic benefits in award increased from 37,156 to 38,914, or by 4.7 per cent. On 31 December, the breakdown of the periodic benefits in award was as follows: 12,792 retirement benefits, 7,291 early retirement benefits, 6,033 deferred retirement benefits, 5,547 widows' and widowers' benefits, 6,483 children's benefits, 717 disability benefits and 51 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, 4,068 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements were paid. During the same period, the principal of the Fund increased from $11,901 million to $12,601 million, or by 5.9 per cent. The Fund's investment income during the year amounted to $725,042,195, comprising $597,476,794 in interest and dividends and $127,565,401 in net profits on sales of investments. After deduction of investment management costs amounting to $10,624,818, net investment income was $714,417,377.

The Fund was administered by the 33-member United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, which did not meet in 1995 due to the biennialization of the work of the Fifth Committee. Instead, its Standing Committee met⁽²⁰⁾ on behalf of the Pension Board in New York, from 10 to 14 July. Major items considered were: actuarial matters, management of the Fund's investments, the Fund's financial statements, the pension adjustment system, the Transfer Agreements between the Fund and the former USSR, Ukrainian SSR and Byelorussian SSR, and the biennial budget for the administrative expenses of the Fund.

ACABQ, on 13 October, submitted its comments⁽²¹⁾ on the Fund's budget estimates, and the Assembly acted on the Standing Committee's recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/216, Section VII.

Administrative expenses of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

[The General Assembly . . .]

Having considered the report of the Standing Committee of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for 1995 to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Concurs with the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the administrative expenses of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund;

2. Approves expenses, chargeable directly to the Fund, totalling 40,208,300 dollars net for the biennium 1996-1997 and an increase in expenses of 835,500 dollars net for the biennium 1994-1995, for the administration of the Fund;

3. Authorizes the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to supplement the voluntary contributions to the Emergency Fund for the biennium 1996-1997 by an amount not exceeding 200,000 dollars;

General Assembly resolution 50/216, section VII
23 December 1995 Meeting 100 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/50/842) without vote, 3 November (meeting 20); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 116.

Fund investments

The market value of UNJSPF assets as at 31 March 1995 was $13,568 million, an increase of $1,034 million over the previous year. The total investment return for the year ended 31 March 1995 was 8.7 per cent, which, after adjusting for inflation, represented a "real" rate of 5.6 per cent. Investment income from interest and dividends amounted to $597 million in 1995. New funds which became available for investment (contributions plus investment income, less benefit payments and investment expenses) totalled $572 million, while realized capital gains amounted to $127 million.

The Fund remained one of the most diversified pension funds in the world, as the portion of its assets exposed to currencies other than the United States dollar, which was the Fund's unit of account, as well as the ratio of equities to total assets, continued to increase. Close contacts were maintained with international organizations, regional development institutions, Governments and private sources to ensure full awareness of investment opportunities in developing countries.

The implementation of new custodial arrangements for the Fund's assets aimed at achieving diversification through the introduction of parallel accounting and reporting systems and the establishment of regional custodians was completed in 1995. The arrangements ensured effective risk management and greater control and flexibility, and reduced custodial fees substantially.

In a 25 May report, the Secretary-General noted that, considering the worldwide improvement in economic activity, the volatility of the financial markets caused by increased interest rates in many places and fluctuations of exchange rates, the investment returns of 9.7 per cent for the year ended 31 March 1994 and 8.7 per cent for the year ended 31 March 1995, when measured in United States dollars, were satisfactory. The defensive strategy of taking profits where appropriate and increasing investments in those markets and instruments that performed better had contributed to the Fund's satisfactory performance. He considered the policy of diversification and careful selection of investment instruments, including consistent investigation of opportunities in developing countries, to be the best way to achieve the goal of preserving the principal and enhancing the investment return of the Fund over the medium and long terms.

Admission of World Tourism Organization

On 13 November,⁽²²⁾ Spain asked for inclusion of the item "Admission of the World Tourism Organization to membership of UNJSPF" on the agenda of the General Assembly, a request the Assembly agreed to on 1 December.

In an explanatory memorandum, Spain recalled that in 1987⁽²⁴⁾ the organization had submitted an application for UNJSPF membership, which was favourably considered by the Fifth Committee in 1988, although it took no action on the matter. Consequently, the organization suspended the application for membership. In 1994, an exhaustive study was conducted on the selection of the most suitable pension scheme. In May 1995, the organization's Executive Council recommended membership in UNJSPF as the best retirement option for the organization and invited the World Tourism Organization's Secretary-General to resume negotiations for admission with the Secretary of UNJSPF as soon as possible. The Standing Committee of UNJSPF at its 10-14 July meeting agreed that the Secretary would be justified in consulting the staff pension committees of member organizations to ascertain their readiness to approve renewal of the previous application of the organization for Fund membership. The eleventh session of the World Tourism Organization's General Assembly (Cairo, Egypt, 17-22 October) endorsed the Executive Committee's recommendation.

In a 4 December note,⁽²⁴⁾ the UN Secretary-General stated that, as requested by the World Tourism Organization's General Assembly, the organization's staff rules had been amended by its Executive Council on 22 October, effective from the date the World Tourism Organization had become a member organization of the Fund. The Secretary of UNJSPF and the Executive Secretary of ICSC had reviewed those amendments and agreed that they conformed with the common system of salaries, allowances and other conditions of service of the UN and its specialized agencies. All the staff pension committees of the Fund's member organizations also concurred with the decision of the organization's General Assembly regarding its membership in UNJSPF and supported its admission.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/455 of 22 December, decided to admit the World Tourism Organization to membership in UNJSPF, in accordance with article 3 of the Regulations of the Fund, with effect from 1 January 1996.

Travel-related matters

Review of entitlements

ACABQ action. ACABQ, in a 4 July report,⁽²⁵⁾ reviewed the issues of travel and related entitlements for members of organs and subsidiary organs and staff members of the UN and the standards of accommodation for air travel. ACABQ noted that staff members below the Assistant Secretary-General level had been provided with transportation at the least costly airfare regularly available; only for flights exceeding nine hours was accommodation provided in a class just below first class, for travel on official business. The Committee believed that the Secretary-General should review the nine-hour threshold and include the results and proposals in his 1995 report on standards for air travel. He should identify a more objective criteria for determining the standards of accommodation than the currently used "the class immediately below first class", which left too much room for interpretation. The Committee said that there was room for further improvement in the management of travel and trusted that the Secretary-General would apply various innovative techniques for dealing with air carriers, such as "pare-fare", in order to improve cost effectiveness.

ACABQ recommended that the practice of granting ex post facto exceptions to the standards of air travel be terminated. It noted the need to determine the level of "eminency" of travellers and believed that the required criteria should be applied to individuals rather than groups. The Committee recommended that efforts be made to reduce further the number of exceptions on the grounds of medical condition, advanced age or the unavailability of the regular standard of air travel, especially on well-established itineraries.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In September⁽²⁶⁾ and November,⁽²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General issued reports on exceptions to the standards of accommodation covering the previous two years. He noted that terminating ex post facto exceptions would limit flexibility in arranging urgent travel, but agreed that exceptions for medical cases should remain unusual. He said exceptions owing to the unavailability of regular travel were rare.

The Secretary-General submitted a 28 December 1995 report⁽²⁸⁾ reviewing the lump-sum option for air travel in lieu of the provision by the Organization of travel tickets and the related entitlements on home leave, education grant and family visit.

From mid-1990 to the end of 1995 the lump-sum option had resulted in an estimated savings of more than $6.7 million, excluding unaccompanied shipment. For the first 10 months of 1995, the total cash savings from lump-sum utilization was $1,125,030. In terms of administrative savings from the option, most administrative offices reported decreased workloads as a result of simplified and streamlined procedures for processing. The staff resources so released were directed to offset other administrative demands associated with the increase in peace-keeping and humanitarian operations. The 78 per cent overall utilization of the lump-sum option pointed to a large degree of consensus among staff that the current lump-sum rate (75 per cent of the full economy-class fare) was attractive.

The Secretary-General concluded that the scheme had achieved its dual purpose of simplification and rationalization of work procedures and cash savings. He said that continuation of the lump-sum option was worth while only if the level of the rate was sufficiently high to motivate staff to waive other entitlements. He proposed three future alternatives: put aside the option permanently; endorse the continuation of the present lump-sum arrangements without modifying its main parameters; or refer the matter to ICSC for examination of the appropriate level of the lump-sum option. Since the latest extension of the scheme was to expire on 31 December, the Secretary-General had extended its application until the General Assembly made a final decision.

Efficiency and cost savings

JIU report. In a 31 October note,⁽²⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted a JIU report on "Travel in the United Nations: issues of efficiency and cost savings". In it, JIU reviewed the management of travel and options for change and improvements.

JIU recommended that the Secretary-General should determine clearly the powers and responsibilities of relevant offices of the Secretariat dealing with travel, which would also ensure Secretariat-wide coordination of all travel facilities; reorient travel units to monitor the market and take advantage of opportunities; and reconsider the mandatory pre-auditing by the travel units of all travel authorizations. The search for least costly fares should be subject to verification and random checks by travel units. The Secretary-General should establish an Advisory Committee on Travel and develop a travel manual. He should also make programme managers directly accountable for the observance of travel regulations, and allow them flexibility in the use and transfer of resources for travel while introducing initiatives and motivations to promote efficiency and cost-consciousness. The Secretariat should study the use of credit cards for staff travel and introduce computer-assisted processing of travel documents, which could be a practical application of the Integrated Management Information System. It should prepare a standard contract with a travel agency which could later be tailored to the needs of various duty stations; review all existing contracts with travel agencies; review lists of preferred air-carriers and negotiate with selected major carriers to obtain discounts and upgrades. Teleconferencing should be developed. The General Assembly should review the nine-hour flight threshold, and abolish or modify the entitlement to official stopovers and substitute more rest-time at destination. The Secretary-General should encourage travellers to use means of transportation other than air, and the system of daily subsistence allowance should be maintained until the operation of the expense-based system proved cost-effective. The Assembly should call upon Member States to review travel standards and practices to achieve system-wide uniformity and consistency.

Administration of justice

In its annual note⁽³⁰⁾ to the General Assembly, the United Nations Administrative Tribunal reported that it had delivered 58 judgements during the year. They related to cases brought by staff members against the Secretary-General or the executive heads of other UN bodies to resolve disputes involving terms of appointment and related issues and regulations.

The Tribunal met in New York on 22 November 1995 and also held two panel sessions (Geneva, 26 June-28 July; New York, 23 October-22 November).

Review procedure

The General Assembly's Sixth Committee considered the 1994 report⁽³¹⁾ of the Secretary-General reviewing the procedure provided for under article 11 of the statute of the Administrative Tribunal of the United Nations, which governed the review of the Tribunal's judgements by the Committee on Applications for Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgements. It also considered the views of Member States concerning the Committee's terms of reference and composition and the role of ICJ.⁽³¹⁾ The Committee recommended that the Assembly amend the statute of the Tribunal with respect to judgements rendered by the Tribunal after 31 December 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/54.

Review of the procedure provided for under article 11 of the statute of the Administrative Tribunal of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting that the procedure provided for under article 11 of the statute of the Administrative Tribunal of the United Nations has not proved to be a constructive or useful element in the adjudication of staff disputes within the Organization, and noting also the views of the Secretary-General to that effect,

1. Decides to amend the statute of the Administrative Tribunal of the United Nations with respect to judgements rendered by the Tribunal after 31 December 1995 as follows:

(a) Delete article 11;

(b) Renumber former articles 12, 13 and 14 as articles 11, 12 and 13, respectively, and in paragraph 3 of article 9 substitute the words "article 13" for "article 14";

(c) Amend paragraph 2 of article 10 by substituting the words "article 11" for "articles 11 and 12";

2. Decides also that, with respect to judgements rendered by the Tribunal before 1 January 1996, the statute of the Tribunal shall continue to apply as if the amendments in paragraph 1 above had not been made;

3. Stresses the importance for the staff and the Organization alike of ensuring a fair, efficient and expeditious internal system of justice within the United Nations, including effective mechanisms for the resolution of disputes.

General Assembly resolution 50/54

11 December 1995 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote

Reform of the internal justice system

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an 18 March 1995 report⁽³³⁾ explaining the mechanisms by which the reform of the UN justice system, proposed in 1994,⁽³¹⁾ would be achieved. In terms of the proposal for early reconciliation and resolution of disputes, the Organization intended to provide training in the early resolution of conflicts, emphasize mediation, and increase its capacity to conduct effective review of administrative decisions at an early stage of the appeals process. New training programmes for improving communications skills and emphasizing client service had already begun and would be provided on a continuing basis. The proposed ombudsman panels would be appointed at all major duty stations by existing staff/management machinery and established under the guidance and direction of a coordinator, who would ensure the proper functioning of the system. As at 1 January 1996, review of administrative decisions would be conducted within the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management, independently of the Senior Legal Adviser. The review officers would examine all requests to determine whether a decision should be reversed or amended in a mutually acceptable manner or recommend corrective measures. The Staff Rules would be amended to extend the time-limits for the conduct of reviews, which were currently one month for staff members in New York and two months for those elsewhere.

Concerning the professionalization of the justice system, the Secretary-General recommended the introduction of an outside United Nations Arbitration Board to replace the in-house Joint Appeals Board. He would also begin to consider, on a case-by-case basis, requests from staff members to have their cases resolved by binding arbitration. If binding arbitration proved successful, it might be made compulsory for certain classes of appeals. Draft changes to the Staff Regulations and to the Staff Rules to permit the establishment of the Arbitration Board and a draft statute of the Board were annexed to the report. A Disciplinary Board, which would replace the Joint Disciplinary Committee, would be composed of qualified professionals. The New York section of the Disciplinary Board would be chaired by the Chairperson of the Arbitration Board, and the Geneva Section by the alternate Chairperson. The other members would be staff members selected on the basis of their technical ability. The members of the Disciplinary Board would be appointed by the Secretary-General after consultation with staff. A new Legal Officer would serve on the Panel of Counsel, and would advise staff on whether their terms and conditions of employment had been violated and how to proceed at the reconciliation and resolution stage or before the Arbitration Board. The Officer would also advise staff who were the object of disciplinary proceedings.

The Secretary-General reported that staff believed that outside counsel should be allowed in cases submitted for binding arbitration; and that specific performance and the determination of damages that could be awarded should not be applied in the functioning of the Arbitration Board. The Secretary-General, however, was of the opinion that it would not be appropriate or prudent to allow outside counsel before the Arbitration Board, and that the powers of the Board should be no greater than those of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal. He said that the system would be reviewed after a period of at least two years.

In a 9 June addendum,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General indicated that the financial requirements of the proposed reform would be $1,377,600 for the 1996-1997 biennium.

Comments of UN Administrative Tribunal.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly, in a 26 June addendum,⁽³⁵⁾ the comments of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal on his 18 March report on the reform of the internal justice system. The Tribunal questioned whether the three major objectives of the Secretary-General's report—reduction of the number of cases reaching formal litigation, expeditious processing of cases at that stage, and a cost-effective and simple justice system—were likely to be accomplished by the proposed reforms. In particular, the Tribunal considered that the proposal for optional arbitration to replace the Joint Appeals Board (JAB), as well as the future possibility of mandatory arbitration, should be carefully examined by all concerned, since the potential consequences of hasty action could adversely affect the relationship between the staff and the Organization. The Tribunal emphasized that its suggestions should be viewed in the context of its doubts as to the need for or the desirability of replacing the JAB system with the proposed arbitration system.

The Secretary-General said that he accepted the suggestions of the Tribunal relating to the proposed arbitration statute and changes to the statute of the Tribunal, and indicated that the two statutes would be amended accordingly. As to the rationale, he stated that the proposal before the Assembly had been made after a careful assessment of the system, which had revealed serious flaws and difficulties, and after requests from the Assembly, the staff and many administrations for a fair, just and transparent system. The staff fully supported the reform, and did not share the Tribunal's view that the JAB system should continue and that full implementation of the reform should be postponed. The proposed reform was elaborated in consultation with the Legal Counsel, and care had been taken to preserve the authority of the Secretary-General. The arbitrators serving on the Board would be UN "officials", not staff members, and binding arbitration would occur only when the Secretary-General agreed to submit a case for decision by the Arbitration Board at his discretion. Should mandatory arbitration later be introduced for certain categories of cases, they would be carefully defined.

The General Assembly, by decision 49/491 of 20 July, decided to defer to its fiftieth session consideration of the Secretary-General's report, in the light of the recommendations and observations of ACABQ.

Report of the Secretary-General (September).

On 27 September, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a consolidated report⁽³⁶⁾ on the internal justice system, taking into account the suggestions made by the United Nations Administrative Tribunal and new provisions agreed upon after consultation with the staff. Additional proposals included: that the two posts of Administrative Review Officers be established at the P-5 and P-4 levels; that the time-limits for administrative review would be three months; that the Secretary-General intended to accept the unanimous recommendations of the proposed arbitration board, unless there was a compelling reason not to do so; that both the New York and Geneva arbitration boards have a full-time Chairperson/Alternate Chairperson, two part-time members and two part-time alternate members; and that the revised estimates resulting from the proposals for the 1996-1997 biennium be $1,536,500. The report also contained the draft statute for the United Nations Disciplinary Board.

Comments of the Administrative Tribunal and Staff Union (November). In a 17 November note,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the additional comments of the Administrative Tribunal and those of the Staff Union of the Secretariat.

Concerning JAB, the Administrative Tribunal stated that such problems as securing volunteers to serve on the boards, and attitudes or reactions of JAB members regarding frequency of serving, or those of staff concerning perceptions of conflict of interests could be solved by adoption of appropriate rules concerning potential conflict or bias, and through reform of the system of selection of JAB members. Evaluating the quality of JAB work on the basis of a year-by-year average statistical count of unanimous JAB recommendations was open to question, the Tribunal said; it would be far more informative to examine all reports, and over longer periods. In the view of the Tribunal, JAB on the whole had been performing commendably and had made valuable contributions to the system of justice. The Tribunal doubted whether part-time members of the New York Arbitration Board would be able to deal with an estimated annual load of 90 cases in two five-week sessions. Time requirements indicated that the arbitration structure was likely to be more expensive than the suggested estimate.

The Staff Union, referring to statistics relating to JAB, stated that its own research had indicated that the majority of recommendations rejected by the Secretary-General had been upheld by the Tribunal, and over the past two years he had accepted the wisdom of the Board in 99.5 per cent of the cases when the Board supported the decision of the Administration. It pointed out that as long as arbitrators were recruited and paid by the United Nations, there was a need to ensure that they were truly independent, which was why the agreed-upon selection process had to be a joint one. The Staff Union stated that if the internal justice system was to be professionalized and all who reviewed and made representation were to be lawyers, it was essential that the appellants have similar representation.

ACABQ action. ACABQ, in an 8 December report,⁽³⁸⁾ concurred in the proposed appointment of ombudsmen and mediation panels at all major duty stations and the provision of a D-1 post for the appointment of a Coordinator. The Committee recognized the necessity of ensuring that the initial review of administrative decisions be carried out thoroughly and expeditiously. It recommended acceptance of the new P-4 and P-5 posts for the Administrative Review Officers and that the Administrative Review Unit be accorded operational independence to ensure objectivity and efficiency. It recommended that more work be done on the proposal for creation of an Arbitration Board before further consideration by the Assembly. ACABQ recommended that the establishment of a Disciplinary Board be reconsidered in conjunction with further consideration of the establishment of an Arbitration Board. With regard to the Panel of Counsel, ACABQ recommended acceptance of the additional posts and agreed that resources should be provided for the training of Panel of Counsel members.

ACABQ concluded that some progress had been made in the expeditious processing of cases, but the problem was the growing number of administrative grievances. Proposals related to the early reconciliation and resolution of disputes should go a long way towards minimizing the number of matters referred to formal proceedings. Not enough had been done to simplify rules and procedures so that misunderstandings could be avoided and to identify those aspects of staff administration that gave rise to appeals, with a view to reform in those areas. ACABQ believed that fostering conciliation and early resolution of disputes, strengthening the Administrative Review Unit and the Panel of Counsel, and simplification and rationalization of existing administrative and personnel practices should address positively relevant problems and shortcomings. After a reasonable period, the effect of those changes should be evaluated with a view to determining what further measures might be necessary.

The General Assembly, by decision 50/454 of 22 December, decided to defer consideration of the item entitled "Human resources management" until its resumed session in 1996, in particular the reports of the Secretary-General on the reform of the internal system of justice in the UN Secretariat, pending consideration of the legal implications of the Secretary-General's proposals.

Chapter IV

Institutional and administrative matters

In 1995, the General Assembly held its fiftieth session, during which it convened a special commemorative meeting from 22 to 24 October to observe the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations (see special section beginning on p. 141 and PART ONE, Chapter III). The Assembly granted to the Central American Integration System the status of observer, and requested the Secretary-General to conclude cooperation agreements with the Inter-Parliamentary Union and to promote cooperation with the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation.

During the year, the Security Council held 185 formal meetings to consider items related to the maintenance of international peace and security. The Council announced changes in its documentation and other procedural matters and streamlined procedures and working methods of its sanctions committees.

The Economic and Social Council held its 1995 organizational session in New York and its substantive session in Geneva. The Council changed the format of its provisional work programme and requested the Secretary-General to present proposals in 1996 to simplify reporting requirements.

The Administrative Committee on Coordination and the Committee for Programme and Coordination continued to harmonize system-wide work programmes and activities. At their twenty-ninth series of Joint Meetings, held in October, the coordination of activities of the UN system for the eradication of poverty was discussed. The Economic and Social Council also considered coordinated follow-up by the UN system and implementation of the results of major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields. The Council recommended arrangements and procedures for an integrated framework and a global partnership for development. It also reviewed the consultative status of non-governmental organizations.

The Committee on Conferences examined requests for changes to the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1995, which had been approved in 1994, and dealt with the calendar for 1996. It recommended measures to improve the utilization of conference-servicing resources and to control and limit documentation.

Institutional machinery

General Assembly

During 1995, the General Assembly met in two sessions, to resume and conclude its forty-ninth session and to hold the major part of its fiftieth session. The forty-ninth session was resumed in 1995 on 26 January, 28 February, 10 and 31 March, 6, 13 and 21 April, 24 and 25 May, 21 June, 12 and 20 July, and 14 and 18 September.

The fiftieth (1995) session opened on 19 September and continued until its suspension on 23 December.

In accordance with a 1994 decision,⁽¹⁾ the Assembly held a special commemorative meeting from 22 to 24 October on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations.

Organization of Assembly sessions

On 22 September, by decision 50/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, as set forth in its first report,⁽²⁾ adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the fiftieth session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned the rationalization of the Assembly's work; observance of the UN fiftieth anniversary; closing date of the session; schedule of meetings; general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply, points of order and length of statements; records of meetings; concluding statements; resolutions; documentation; questions related to the programme budget; observances and commemorative meetings; special conferences; and meetings of subsidiary organs.

The General Committee made observations and proposals regarding the organization of future Assembly sessions. At the suggestion of the Secretary-General, it recommended to the Assembly that it consider a possible rationalization of its meetings between January and August to allow advance planning for delegations and the UN Secretariat. The Assembly had met frequently during those months in the past few years and, during its forty-ninth session, it had met every month from January to September, with the exception of August. As those meetings were not envisaged in the calendar of meetings, ad hoc arrangements had to be made to provide adequate Secretariat services, at the expense of other requirements.

By decision 50/403 A of 19 September, the General Assembly authorized the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) to hold meetings during the fiftieth session.

On 22 September, by decision 50/403 B, the Assembly authorized the following subsidiary organs to hold meetings during the fiftieth session: the Advisory Committee on the UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa; the Committee on Relations with the Host Country; the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System; the Preparatory Committee for the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations; and the Working Group on the Financing of the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).

On 26 October, by decision 50/403 C, the Assembly authorized the following additional subsidiary organs to hold meetings during the fiftieth session: the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Development; the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations; and the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council.

During the fiftieth General Assembly session and the special commemorative meeting for the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, Member States discussed the importance of strengthening the role of the Assembly. Revitalization of the Assembly was also one of the scheduled discussion topics of the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System (see PART SIX, Chapter I).

Credentials

On 12 October,⁽³⁾ at its first plenary meeting of the fiftieth session, the Credentials Committee had before it a memorandum by the Secretary-General indicating that, as at 11 October, 115 Member States had submitted credentials of their representatives. The Deputy to the Under-Secretary-General for Legal Affairs informed the Committee that, subsequent to the memorandum, credentials in due form had been received in respect of the representatives of the Congo, Mauritania and Suriname.

At its second meeting,⁽⁴⁾ on 11 December, the Committee examined a memorandum by the Secretary-General which stated that 45 additional Member States had submitted formal credentials. In addition, information concerning the appointment of representatives to the fiftieth session had been communicated to the Secretary-General from 20 Member States.

The Committee Chairman proposed that the Committee accept the credentials of all those Member States, including those communicated by facsimile, letter or note verbale, on the understanding that the latter would submit formal credentials as soon as possible.

At each meeting, the Committee adopted a resolution accepting the credentials received. The Committee also recommended to the Assembly two draft resolutions. On 18 October and 14 December, the Assembly, by resolutions 50/4 A and B, respectively, approved the first and second reports of the Credentials Committee.

Agenda

At its resumed forty-ninth session, by decision 49/402 B of 28 February, the General Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, included an item on its agenda on "Financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994". Also on 28 February, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, the General Assembly included an item entitled "Election of judges of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994". On the proposal of the Secretary-General, it reopened consideration of the appointment of members of the Committee on Contributions.

On 31 March, by the same decision, the Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, reopened for consideration, in plenary, the election of a member of the International Court of Justice. Also on 31 March, the Assembly, on a request by Norway, reopened consideration, in plenary, of special economic assistance to individual countries or regions. Also by the same decision, on 21 April, the Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, reopened consideration, in plenary, of the item on the advancement of women.

On 12 July, by the same decision, the Assembly reopened consideration of the sub-item on appointment of members of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

On 14 September, by decision 49/402 C, the Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, included a sub-item on its agenda entitled "Confirmation of the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development".

On 18 September, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the following items and to include them in the provisional agenda of the fiftieth session: armed Israeli aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security (decision 49/500); the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security (decision 49/501); the question of Cyprus (decision 49/502); and consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait (decision 49/503).

By an 18 July letter,⁽⁵⁾ 20 Member States (Burkina Faso, Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Dominica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Gambia, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Malawi, Nicaragua, Niger, Panama, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Solomon Islands and Swaziland) requested that the Assembly include on the agenda of its fiftieth session an item entitled "Consideration of the exceptional situation of the Republic of China on Taiwan in the international context, based on the principle of universality and in accordance with the established model of parallel representation of divided countries at the United Nations". China, in a 20 July letter⁽⁶⁾ to the Secretary-General, expressed its opposition to the inclusion of the item. The General Committee, in its first report,⁽⁷⁾ on 20 September did not recommend inclusion of this item.

By decision 50/402 A, on the recommendation of the General Committee,⁽⁷⁾ the General Assembly, on 22 September, 26 October, 10 November and 1 December, adopted various parts of the agenda of its fiftieth session⁽⁸⁾ and allocated items to the plenary or appropriate Main Committee.⁽⁹⁾

On 26 October, by the same decision, it decided to include in the agenda the item on implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, and to consider it in plenary for the purpose of endorsing the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action. It also included a sub-item on the report of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights.

On 10 November, by the same decision, the Assembly approved sub-items on food and sustainable agricultural development and on the appointment of a member of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU).

By the same decision, on 1 December, it approved an item on admission of the World Tourism Organization to membership in the UN Joint Staff Pension Fund and a sub-item on election of a member of the International Court of Justice. The Assembly also decided to consider an item on the normalization of the situation concerning South Africa, given its political importance, directly in plenary, on the understanding that owing to the financial complexity of the matter, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee would be invited to provide technical observations by 12 December regarding the implementation of any draft resolutions to be submitted to the Assembly in plenary meeting.

In the same decision, the Assembly deferred consideration of the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India, and the question of East Timor. Other matters that were deferred were: the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) (decision 50/406 of 31 October); the question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations (decision 50/414 of 6 December); the declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986 (decision 50/422 of 18 December); armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security (decision 50/444 of 21 December); consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait (decision 50/445 of 21 December); implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations (decision 50/457 of 22 December); and launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development (decision 50/468 of 22 December). These items were included in the provisional agenda of the fifty-first session. On 23 December, by decision 50/475, the Assembly retained 42 items or sub-items for consideration during the resumed fiftieth session in 1996.

First Committee

Pursuant to a 1994 decision,⁽¹⁰⁾ the General Assembly took up the question of the rationalization of the work and reform of the agenda of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee.

On 12 December, by decision 50/421, the Assembly requested the Chairman of the First Committee to continue consultations on the further rationalization of the work of the Committee with a view to improving its effective functioning, and decided to defer consideration of the item entitled "Rationalization of the work and reform of the agenda of the First Committee" and to include it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second (1997) session.

Third Committee

The Secretariat, in a 12 December note,⁽¹¹⁾ presented measures on the organization of work and the draft programme of work of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee for the biennium 1996-1997. The organizational measures related to guidelines concerning time-limits of statements, draft resolutions on reports of treaty bodies and reports of the Secretary-General on the status of treaties, and draft proposals emanating from subsidiary organs of the Economic and Social Council.

On 22 December, by decision 50/465, the Assembly approved the organization of work of the Third Committee and the biennial programme of work of the Committee for 1996-1997.

Second and Fifth Committees

On 20 December, by decision 50/440, the General Assembly approved the biennial programme of work of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee for 1996-1997.

On 23 December, by decision 50/470, the Assembly approved the biennial programme of work of the Fifth Committee for 1996-1997.

Security Council

In 1995, the Security Council held 185 formal meetings, adopted 93 resolutions and issued 92 presidential statements.

The Security Council considered 34 agenda items in 1995 (see APPENDIX IV for agenda). On 18 September, the Secretary-General, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the UN Charter and with the consent of the Security Council, notified⁽¹²⁾ the General Assembly of 32 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since its previous annual notification.⁽¹³⁾ He listed 99 other matters not discussed during that period but of which the Council remained seized.

By decision 50/458 A of 22 December, the Assembly took note of the matter.

On 13 November,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Security Council adopted its draft report covering the period from 16 June 1994 to 16 June 1995.⁽¹⁵⁾ The General Assembly took note of the report by decision 50/409 of 29 November.

Documentation

On 29 March, the Security Council announced⁽¹⁶⁾ changes concerning its documentation and other procedural matters. It introduced improvements to make the procedures of the sanctions committees more transparent, including: issuing more press releases after meetings of the Committee; making available the Status of Communications lists to any delegation under the "No Objection" procedure prepared by the Secretariat; making regularly available a list of all decisions by each active Committee to any delegation requesting it; providing, in the annual report of the Security Council to the General Assembly, more information about each Committee; providing an annual report to the Security Council from each Committee on its activities; and expediting preparation of Committee summary records. The Council said meetings of the Sanctions Committee should remain closed and the summary records should continue to be distributed according to the existing pattern. The Council agreed to continue consideration of other suggestions concerning documentation and related matters.

In a 2 June letter⁽¹⁷⁾ addressed to the Secretary-General, Argentina referred to the United Kingdom proposal to retitle presidential statements made on behalf of the Security Council "Statements on behalf of the Security Council". Argentina noted that statements were a relatively new Security Council instrument, the use of which had increased considerably in recent years. The Council had never defined the scope, content or nature of the documents it issued, neither in its provisional rules of procedure nor in its interpretive documents. Since 1993, the trend was to regard statements read out during formal meetings as being "on behalf of the Council". It was argued that those statements which arose out of the work of the Council during informal meetings should be made, on the other hand, "on behalf of members of the Council". The letter stated that potential consequences of accepting this new distinction should be evaluated. In addition, the Council should address the issue of the nature of "informal" meetings and whether the provisions of Article 31 of the Charter applied to those meetings. Argentina proposed that the Working Group of the Council on documentation and procedure should examine those issues to enable the Council to harmonize criteria and adopt guidelines, notwithstanding any parallel efforts being made in the General Assembly.

Working methods and procedure

On 31 May, the Security Council announced⁽¹⁸⁾ that the practice of hearing comments by States and organizations concerned during closed meetings of sanctions committees on issues arising from implementation of sanctions regimes imposed by the Security Council should be continued, while respecting the existing procedures followed by such Committees.

In a letter⁽¹⁹⁾ of the same date by the Security Council President, addressed to the Secretary-General, Council members expressed concern over the staffing situation in the Security Council Affairs Division of the Department of Political Affairs, and called for adequate staffing to enable the Council and its committees to function effectively. The letter welcomed the increase in staff to support the sanctions committees, and said the Council members looked forward to a future report on whether the increase resulted in a decrease in the backlog in processing applications to those committees. The letter also stressed the need for Council members to be able to use the official language of their choice in all of their work.

Council members requested the Secretary-General to ensure fully adequate support services for the Council, taking into account the increase in the Council's workload over recent years.

The Secretary-General, in a 9 November letter⁽²⁰⁾ to the Council President, reported that the backlog in processing applications to the sanctions committees had been eliminated and that he had initiated a process of streamlining the working practices of the secretariat of those committees. Efforts were under way to ensure that humanitarian applications were processed at an even faster pace. He promised to keep the situation under review so that the Secretariat's ability to respond to the needs of Member States might be further enhanced.

On 16 November,⁽²¹⁾ the Council welcomed the information contained in the Secretary-General's letter.

Membership

In 1995, the General Assembly continued to consider the issue of expanding the membership of the Security Council, and received the report⁽²²⁾ of its Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council, established by the Assembly in 1993⁽²³⁾ (see PART SIX, Chapter I).

Economic and Social Council

In 1995, the Economic and Social Council held its organizational session in New York on 1 and from 7 to 10 February, and its resumed organizational session on 4 and 5 May and on 1 and 6 June; its substantive session was held at Geneva from 26 June to 28 July and its resumed substantive session on 25 October, 2 November and 12 December, in New York.

On 1 February, the Economic and Social Council elected two members of its Bureau—the President for 1995 and its Vice-President. Two other Vice-Presidents were elected on 7 February and one on 10 February (see APPENDIX III).

On 7 February, the Council adopted the agenda of its organizational session.⁽²⁴⁾ By decision 1995/205 of 10 February, it approved the provisional agenda of the 1995 substantive session.

On 4 May, the Council agreed to the inclusion of an additional item in the agenda of the resumed organizational session, entitled "Social, humanitarian and human rights questions: reports of subsidiary bodies, conferences and related questions".

On 26 June, by decision 1995/228, the Council adopted the agenda of its substantive session⁽²⁵⁾ and approved the organization of work of the session.⁽²⁶⁾ On 7 July, by the same decision, it approved requests by non-governmental organizations (NGOs)⁽²⁷⁾ to be heard by the Council.

On 27 July, by decision 1995/311, the Council decided to retain the item "Programme and related questions in the economic, social and related fields" on the agenda of its substantive session in order to consider the question of the biennialization of the meetings of its subsidiary bodies.

(For agenda lists, see APPENDIX IV.)

Sessions and segments

During its 1995 substantive session (26 June to 28 July), the Economic and Social Council adopted 62 resolutions and 88 decisions. At the resumed substantive session, it adopted one resolution and 10 decisions.

In accordance with General Assembly resolutions of 1991⁽²⁸⁾ and 1993,⁽²⁹⁾ the Council's substantive session was divided into a high-level segment (4 to 6 July), a coordination segment and a segment dealing with operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation.

The Council, by decision 1995/203 of 10 February, decided that the high-level segment of its substantive session should be devoted to consideration of the major theme "Development of Africa, including the implementation of the United Nations new agenda for development of Africa", which should also be considered in the policy dialogue of that segment (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

By decision 1995/204 of 10 February, the Council decided that its coordination segment should be devoted to the theme "Coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system and implementation of the results of the major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields" (see below).

The Council, by decision 1995/213 of 10 February, decided that its segment on operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation would last five days, the first day designated for a high-level meeting, the second for informal dialogue with heads of agencies, and the last three days for working-level meetings (see PART FOUR, Chapter II).

On 5 May, by decision 1995/224, the Council decided that the principal theme of the segment would be implementation by the UN system of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, with focus on, inter alia, action taken at the Conference to implement the integrated approach to population and development issues (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII). A second issue would be a preliminary exchange on the follow-up by the UN system to the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and consideration of the direction to be taken by the UN system in adopting an approach to social development issues in accordance with the framework developed by the Summit (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX).

The work of the Economic and Social Council at its organizational and substantive sessions was summarized in its report to the General Assembly.⁽³⁰⁾ On 22 December, by decisions 50/456, 50/466 and 50/467, the General Assembly took note of various chapters of the Council's report.

Work programme

On 10 February, the Economic and Social Council considered its proposed basic programme of work for 1995 and 1996, submitted by the Secretary-General in a 3 February note.⁽³¹⁾ By decision 1995/208 of the same date, the Council noted the list of questions for inclusion in the programme of work for 1996.

In a 22 June letter,⁽³²⁾ the Chairman of the Committee on Conferences informed the Economic and Social Council President that the Committee, in considering the provisional calendar of conferences and meetings for 1996 and 1997 in the economic, social and related fields,⁽³³⁾ had expressed concern regarding the increase in requests from intergovernmental bodies for exceptions to the biennialization of their sessions. The Committee recommended adoption of the provisional calendar and, in view of the difficult financial situation of the Organization, advised that the Council continue to consider the biennialization of meetings of subsidiary bodies, and that requests for an annual cycle of meetings should be based on substantive reasons (see below).

On 25 October, by decision 1995/319, the Economic and Social Council approved the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1996 and 1997 in the economic, social and related fields⁽³³⁾ as revised by decision 1995/318.

The Council decided to defer consideration of a draft resolution,⁽³⁴⁾ introduced by the United States, by which the Council would have noted the recommendations of the Committee on Conferences, decided to biennialize the meetings of a number of its subsidiary bodies and requested the Secretary-General to submit a draft biennial calendar for 1997-1998 accordingly.

1996 coordination segment

In response to the Council's agreed conclusions⁽³⁵⁾ in July regarding possible themes for follow-up to major international conferences at the coordination segment of the Council in 1996, the Secretary-General, in a 1 December note,⁽³⁶⁾ and following consultation with the relevant bodies of the UN system and specialized agencies, suggested as a possible theme "Gender equality, equity and empowerment of women". He also reported that Spain, on behalf of the European Union, had proposed the theme "Coordination of the United Nations system activities for poverty eradication". Canada also submitted a theme on poverty eradication.

On 12 December, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/321, decided that its 1996 coordination segment should be devoted to consideration of the theme "Coordination of the activities of the United Nations system for the eradication of poverty". It would decide, at its organizational session for 1996, on the allocation of a number of meetings, within the general segment of its substantive session of 1996, to determine how to ensure harmonization and coordination of the agendas and multi-year programmes of work of its functional commissions.

Documentation

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/222 of 5 May, decided to change the format of its provisional programme of work, adding new documents that would list, in addition to agenda items, the reports expected under each segment or item. Furthermore, the documents should be made available in all official languages at least four weeks before the organizational sessions and 14 weeks before the substantive sessions. A report on the status of documentation should be available to delegations three weeks before the resumed organizational session of the Council. Should a report for any session of the Council be issued shortly before or on the same day that an item or segment of an item was to be considered, the officer responsible for the introduction of the report should give reasons for the delay.

On 28 July, the Council, in its agreed conclusions⁽³⁵⁾ regarding a coordinated follow-up to international conferences (see below), requested the Secretary-General to present proposals in 1996 to the Council and the Assembly to simplify reporting requirements, taking into account the reports required for the follow-up to UN conferences. The Council also stressed that other methods for promoting integrated reporting by the Secretariat should be explored, and that requests for reports should be limited to the minimum necessary. The Secretary-General was also requested to prepare a standardized and simplified format, which could be used by Governments in preparing information on a single subject or clusters of subjects.

Restructuring issues

The General Assembly, on the basis of a 27 October report of the Secretary-General,⁽³⁷⁾ continued consideration of the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields (see PART SIX, Chapter I).

By decision 1995/227 of 6 June, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the General Assembly reconstitute the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes as the Executive Board of the World Food Programme. It also recommended that the Assembly approve the revised General Regulations of the World Food Programme. On 1 November, the Assembly approved those requests in resolution 50/8. By decision 50/439 of 20 December, it also took note of the Secretary-General's note⁽³⁸⁾ on the matter (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIII).

In resolution 1995/55 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the General Assembly at its fiftieth session consider further the establishment of a separate Executive Board for the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII).

On 20 December, by decision 50/438, the Assembly, taking note of the Council's recommendation in July (decision 1995/231), endorsed the agreement between the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and UNFPA to designate Fund resident country directors as Fund representatives.

Coordination, monitoring and cooperation

Institutional mechanisms

Activities of ACC

In 1995, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC)⁽¹⁾ reinforced its capacity to address the main policy issues facing the international community and to promote and organize joint initiatives towards common objectives. It devoted special attention to issues relating to African economic recovery and development, and decided to launch a System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). The Initiative, as set out in the report of its Steering Committee, was built around specific development actions to be undertaken jointly by the organizations of the UN system, within the context of their ongoing programmes and in close cooperation with other development actors. A year-long campaign was to be initiated in 1996 for political and resource mobilization. ACC stressed that the effective allocation and utilization of available resources would be critical to the success of the Special Initiative, which was an expression of a strong, renewed commitment by UN organizations and agencies to Africa's development. ACC extended the mandate of the Steering Committee for one year for follow-up and monitoring purposes, and invited it to work closely with the relevant parts of ACC, as well as with the inter-agency task forces set up for the coordinated follow-up to recent international conferences. The Committee was also invited to report to ACC at its first regular session in 1996. ACC emphasized the need to approach the follow-up to all recent UN conferences in an integrated manner.

ACC expressed strong support for UN action in the area of international drug abuse control, and agreed, inter alia, that its Subcommittee on Drug Control should review, strengthen and render operational the UN System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control through the elaboration of specific multi-agency sectoral and/or subsectoral plans of action for drug abuse control at the global, regional and subregional levels (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIV).

With regard to operational activities for development, ACC, through its Consultative Committee for Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ), collaborated in the preparation of the Secretary-General's report,⁽²⁾ which formed the basis of the triennial comprehensive review of operational activities for development of the UN system at the Assembly's fiftieth session (see PART FOUR, Chapter II).

ACC continued to discuss UN efforts to provide assistance to States that had been adversely affected by the imposition of sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Iraq.

Other issues discussed by ACC included the consultative process and the functioning of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), as well as other personnel and general administrative questions, such as application of the Noblemaire principle, the status of women in the secretariats of the UN system, work/family agenda policy, security of UN staff and associated personnel (see PART SIX, Chapter III); and financial issues, including the financial situation of the organizations of the UN system, the financial situation of the United Nations, and harmonization of financial statements (see PART SIX, Chapter II).

In May, ACC submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report⁽³⁾ on the programmes and resources of the UN system for the 1994-1995 biennium, relating the objectives of UN organizations to the corresponding allocations of financial resources.

The Council, by decision 1995/309 of 27 July, took note of the ACC report.

During the year, ACC held two regular sessions, in Vienna (27 and 28 February) and New York (12 and 13 October). Its principal subsidiary bodies met as follows:

Report for 1994

ACC's annual overview report⁽⁴⁾ for 1994 was considered on 17 May by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC),⁽⁵⁾ which stressed the need for ACC documentation to focus better on coordination issues of primary concern to CPC. While recognizing the merits of coordination based on a division of labour among the different organizations and agencies of the UN system, CPC emphasized that the General Assembly was the central policy-making forum within the system, and that enhanced coordination should lead to greater cost-effectiveness and improved programme delivery. The Committee agreed that the conclusions and declarations of recent major conferences and international events should be followed up in a coordinated manner within the context of an integrated approach.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/309 of 27 July, took note of the annual overview report of ACC for 1994.

Programme coordination

In 1995, the Committee for Programme and Coordination held its organizational session on 21 April and its thirty-fifth session from 15 May to 9 June in New York.⁽⁵⁾

The Committee reviewed the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations, discussed programme questions related to the proposed 1996-1997 programme budget and evaluated the programme on the environment and the start-up phase of peace-keeping operations. Coordination issues considered included the annual ACC report for 1994 (see above), preparation for the Joint Meetings of ACC and CPC (see below), and Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) reports on communications for development programmes in the UN system and efforts to restructure the regional dimension of UN economic and social activities (see below).

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council by decision 1995/309 took note of the CPC report on the work of its thirty-fifth session.

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC

The twenty-ninth in a series of Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC was held in New York on 16 October 1995,⁽⁶⁾ to discuss UN system coordination for the eradication of poverty (see also PART FOUR, Chapter I). The Meetings considered a background paper on the subject,⁽⁷⁾ which discussed the setting of political priorities for the UN system by intergovernmental bodies and assessed UN system coordination in the eradication of poverty. It also looked at programmes and coordination mechanisms at the country level and identified issues for discussion.

The Joint Meetings concluded that the eradication of poverty was a top priority of the United Nations and had to be pursued in the coordinated follow-up to global conferences, in particular the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). Efforts to eradicate poverty should be based on the goals and plans of individual countries, and the success of UN system coordination had to be measured at the country level. Practical measures needed to be identified for enhancing UN coordination, and the need for a supportive international environment to meet the challenge of eradicating poverty should be taken fully into account and adequate resources mobilized and used effectively and efficiently. The Meetings felt that efforts of the UN system needed to be integrated with those of Governments and NGOs at the community and national levels, and that the resident coordinator had a key role to play at the field level in the integrated follow-up to conferences by organizing thematic working groups and ensuring that task forces and specific programmes were field-driven. Close linkages should be established between multisectoral strategies being pursued by various organizations, and the mechanisms of coordination at the country level should be used to the fullest extent to enhance the effectiveness and impact of anti-poverty programmes.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/309 of 27 July, took note of the report of the 1994 Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC.⁽⁸⁾

Joint Inspection Unit

The Joint Inspection Unit, in its twenty-seventh annual report to the General Assembly, gave an overview of its activities from 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995.⁽⁹⁾ The Secretary-General also transmitted to the Assembly the JIU work programme for 1995 and the preliminary work programme for 1996,⁽¹⁰⁾ the work programme for the 1995-1996 biennium and the indicative list for 1996-1997,⁽¹¹⁾ and a 27 November report⁽¹²⁾ on implementation of JIU recommendations.

In its annual report, JIU examined measures to enhance its functioning; relations and cooperation with its participating organizations, external oversight bodies and other relevant bodies within the UN system; and results, follow-up and implementation of JIU recommendations. The Unit continued to strengthen its cooperation and coordination with the legislative bodies and the secretariats of the participating organizations. It increased its exchange of views and contacts with the secretariats of participating organizations (especially with internal oversight units) and, as requested by the Assembly,⁽¹³⁾ the Chairman and the Executive Secretary held discussions with a number of heads of agencies and programmes on improving working relations with the respective secretariats. JIU relations with ACC and its subsidiary bodies continued to be constructive and pragmatic; ACC was attentive to JIU reports and was making efforts to produce joint comments on time. JIU continued its working relations with other external oversight bodies, especially the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), CPC and ICSC, and with the Panel of External Auditors and the UN Board of Auditors. It intended to improve and strengthen its relations with the Office of Internal Oversight Services. JIU, which had developed relations over the years with organizations and institutions outside the UN system, including governmental institutions, regional organizations, NGOs and research institutions, was also taking steps to increase and further develop relations with specialized institutions such as the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions.

By decision 50/469 of 23 December, the General Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the JIU report at its 1996 resumed session.

Other coordination matters

Follow-up to international conferences

Economic and Social Council consideration.

The Economic and Social Council held its coordination segment from 28 to 30 June and on 28 July. In accordance with decision 1995/204 of 10 February, the theme of the segment was: "Coordinated follow-up by the UN system and implementation of the results of major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields".

The Secretary-General, in a 9 June report⁽¹⁴⁾ on the subject, gave a brief review of the 1990 World Summit for Children;⁽¹⁵⁾ the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD VIII), held in 1992;⁽¹⁶⁾ the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development;⁽¹⁷⁾ the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights;⁽¹⁸⁾ the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development;⁽¹⁹⁾ and the 1995 World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). He identified common themes and cross-cutting issues, examined existing mechanisms for follow-up arising from those conferences and issues of coordination, and recommended elements of a coordinated follow-up approach. The coordinated approach was an attempt to devise links between existing mechanisms at all levels to ensure that approaches were harmonized, duplication and overlap avoided and complementarities fully exploited. Such an approach would require, at the inter-governmental level, arrangements and modalities for bringing greater focus to the work of the functional bodies dealing with conference follow-up, and enhancing linkages among them and avoiding duplication of debates. The report suggested that the Council play a more proactive role in defining issues for their consideration. The Council should also carry out a biennial thematic review of cross-cutting and system-wide coordination issues and identify policy issues for consideration by the General Assembly. The principles for system-wide division of labour developed under a reformed and strengthened ACC, combined with its streamlined subsidiary machinery, provided a strong basis for inter-agency cooperation. At the country level, country teams or groups could be formed around common themes and charged with developing common approaches and actions, under the leadership of the resident coordinator system and taking into account country strategy notes. Suggestions were also made to streamline and rationalize the working methods of the Second and Third Committees of the General Assembly to promote more focused thematic debates leading to more harmonized policy guidance. The report called for renewed efforts to mobilize resources at the national and international levels as an essential component of not only a well-coordinated but a full and effective response to conference results.

The Economic and Social Council, in its agreed conclusions⁽²⁰⁾ of 28 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report. The Council recognized that coordinated follow-up implied that the major conferences should be viewed as interlinked and contributing to an integrated framework and a global partnership for development. Governments had the primary responsibility for implementing declarations and programmes of action adopted by international conferences, while the UN system had an important role in contributing to, facilitating and reviewing the progress of implementation and in further promoting their goals and objectives.

The General Assembly had the overall responsibility for ensuring the implementation of conference results and facilitating and reviewing progress. The Economic and Social Council should assist in this task by making recommendations on policies for an effective, efficient and coordinated follow-up. The Assembly should address, within the framework of the agenda for development, the integrated consideration of the themes common to major international conferences with a view to promoting better coherence and providing harmonized and integrated policy guidance. To that end, it should improve the coherence of its committees to follow up effectively the integrated approach. The Council, in its coordination segment, should review cross-cutting themes common to major international conferences and/or contribute to an overall review of the implementation of the programme of action of a UN conference. The theme related to the follow-up of conferences, to be considered at the coordination segment, should be chosen at the Council's previous substantive session; the Secretary-General should suggest possible common themes.

The Secretariat should prepare a single consolidated report outlining the activities of the UN system to achieve the goals and objectives related to the chosen theme and identifying coordination and policy issues to be addressed by the Council and the Assembly. The report should analyse progress and problems and make specific recommendations. In its consideration of the theme, the Council could benefit from the participation of funds and programmes, the regional commissions and the relevant specialized agencies, including the Bretton Woods institutions (the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank) and the World Trade Organization (WTO). The operational activities segment of the Council should also consider themes related to follow-up to major international conferences. The Council stressed the need to review further its work programme and working methods with a view to fulfilling better its responsibilities for coordination, guidance and conference follow-up. It should periodically organize meetings on specific issues to allow for more dialogue with chairmen and secretariats of the functional commissions, other subsidiary and related bodies, and relevant executive boards. The activities of the subsidiary bodies might be consolidated and the quality and impact of their output must be assured.

The regional commissions should assist countries in each region in implementing the recommendations of conferences, and the Council and the Assembly should ensure that they carry out that task effectively. The Council should enhance the coordination of the regional commissions, for example in its substantive work relating to conference follow-up. Interaction between the Council and CPC should be improved, and the General Assembly should consider a stronger link between substantive, programming, coordination and budgeting processes.

The functional commissions should develop multi-year programmes of work for the follow-up and review of conference programmes of action, with the cooperation of the Council. Each commission or body should focus on the core issues relating to the conference for which it was responsible and obtain inputs from other relevant bodies on related issues. The mandates, composition and working methods of the functional commissions should be reviewed and adjusted to achieve greater coherence and mutual reinforcement, and to better assist the Council in the coordinated follow-up and review process.

Concerning inter-agency coordination, measures should be taken to further strengthen the role of ACC and its standing committees and to ensure the systematic exchange of information and a rational division of labour between them, as well as between established ACC machinery and ad hoc follow-up mechanisms for individual conferences. The Council said that the example of the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD) (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) could be useful for the follow-up to other conferences but should not be seen as an automatic precedent. ACC was invited to bring system-wide coordination issues to the attention of the Council and to make recommendations. Wider distribution of ACC's report and further information for Member States on ACC work would be desirable. The relevant intergovernmental bodies should be kept fully informed of the establishment and work of any inter-agency task force for the follow-up to conferences.

At the country level, national Governments had the primary responsibility for coordinating, on the basis of national strategies, follow-up activities of conferences. Those follow-up activities relevant to the mandates of UN operational activities for development should, through the resident coordinator system, take into account common themes and goals and should reflect national plans and strategies as well as the country strategy note. The resident coordinator, in consultation with the Government, could use thematic groups composed of the agencies concerned (with a designated lead agency or task manager under his or her overall leadership) to serve as a coordinating mechanism to develop integrated approaches for the realization of common goals, which might include the development of a common data system at the national level to facilitate reviewing and reporting on the progress achieved.

In preparing reports for the Assembly and the Council and subsidiary bodies, the Secretariat could make greater use of task managers, so that a particular agency would be responsible for coordinating the response of the entire United Nations system on a given subject, including recommendations. Reports should be timely and concise, clearly identifying issues and options and their implications. The Secretary-General should present proposals in 1996 to the Council and the Assembly to simplify reporting requirements, taking into account the reports required for the follow-up to UN conferences. Other methods for the promotion of integrated reporting by the Secretariat should be explored. Requests for reports should be limited to the minimum necessary and the Secretary-General should use information and data already provided by Governments to the maximum extent possible to avoid duplication. He should also prepare a standardized and simplified format for Governments to use to present information.

The Council emphasized the need to enhance further the interaction and cooperation between the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and WTO in conference follow-up. It noted that cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions would be addressed within the framework of discussions on an agenda for development.

Effective conference follow-up also required the urgent mobilization of resources, both human and financial. It was important to enhance the effectiveness of official development assistance (ODA) and to increase it, with the objective of achieving the UN target for ODA of 0.7 per cent of gross national product. The mobilization of substantial new resources from all sources would be instrumental in achieving that goal.

ACC consideration. In a February statement⁽²¹⁾ on the follow-up to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development,⁽¹⁹⁾ ACC recognized the need for a common framework for conference follow-up in the economic and social sectors in order to assist countries in the coordinated implementation and monitoring of programmes of action adopted by conferences. The framework should promote a coordinated response by the UN system to inter-related recommendations, while also reducing the burden of reporting with regard to implementation.

In October,⁽²²⁾ the executive heads of specialized agencies agreed that monitoring the follow-up by the UN system to recent global conferences would continue to be a main concern of ACC. To promote an integrated approach, ACC would undertake reviews bringing together related results of recent global conferences and drawing on relevant inter-agency mechanisms supporting ACC in different sectoral and cross-sectoral areas. The selection of themes for such reviews should take into account the need to monitor progress in the implementation of conference results and to provide the Economic and Social Council, particularly the coordination segment, with consolidated information, analyses and assessment of system-wide activities in support of the Council's own thematic reviews. Coordinated support or country-level action should be organized around three interrelated themes: the enabling environment for social and economic development; employment and sustainable livelihoods; and basic social services for all. Those themes were especially relevant to a concerted attack on poverty, which constituted a main over-arching priority objective emanating from recent global conferences. The Inter-Agency Task Force on the International Conference on Population and Development, under the chairmanship of the Executive Director of UNFPA, should be expanded to focus more on social services for all; task forces should be set up to address the other two themes. The World Bank agreed to serve as lead agency for the enabling environment issue, and the International Labour Organization (ILO) for the sustainable livelihoods. The lead agencies would consult with ACC on the definition of the task forces and the contributions that different organizations could make to their work. ACC also identified certain assumptions or methods of work for the task forces. The gender dimension should be taken fully into account in the work of each of the thematic task forces, and consideration given to the best means of promoting coordinated follow-up to the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women to ensure that the improvement of the status of women was incorporated in the mainstream of the work of the system. At the regional level, the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, in consultation with the UNDP Administrator, would work with concerned agencies and programmes to develop concerted action programmes in support of conference objectives. At the country level, resident coordinators should take the lead in establishing thematic groups which would draw on, but not necessarily be identical with, the proposed inter-agency task forces, reflecting particular country priorities and needs. The groups would fully involve national and local authorities and NGOs, and work with all concerned agencies and programmes. ACC adopted a note by IACSD on the review of its functioning (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/161 of 22 December, noted the establishment of task forces for the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development and other related UN conferences and invited ACC to bring system-wide coordination issues to the attention of the Economic and Social Council, in particular its coordination segment, and to make recommendations thereon.

Communication for UN development programmes

The Secretary-General, in a 29 March note,⁽²³⁾ transmitted a JIU report on communication for development programmes in the UN system. The report concluded that the situation regarding communication activities in the UN system was not satisfactory, nor was the level of inter-agency coordination in keeping up with the evolution of the communication discipline. The mass media had not been sufficiently brought to bear on the extensive activities of the UN system in the field of development, implementation of projects and their impact on the quality of lives of recipients. Moreover, communications for development did not feature as a priority theme for most agencies, with the exception of UNESCO, UNICEF and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). Most agencies attached insufficient importance to communication in operational activities, and it was rarely integrated into the entire cycle of development assistance. In particular, the UNDP mode of project execution did not provide for a communication dimension. Some initiatives had been taken, however, to put more emphasis on communication as a prerequisite for development, including the organization of a round-table conference to discuss how to make communication programmes more effective and how to coordinate the efforts of the different agencies. Consideration should be given to expanding the inter-agency round-table process to include communications for humanitarian assistance and peace-keeping operations.

To improve the status of communication, JIU recommended that communication policy should be integrated within each department of an agency dealing with development and humanitarian assistance, and budgets of all projects and programmes should contain a specific provision for communication activities. Communications units should be autonomous and have direct functional relations with the various organizational offices dealing with field activities. Donor agencies should provide adequate resources to support and expand communications activities, in particular for participatory development initiatives. To improve coordination in communication at the headquarters level by organizations of the UN system (particularly those involved with development), focal points should be established, so that departments would inform each other about the work done on communication in their respective units. There should also be a unit within the policy-making division of agencies that would be responsible for coordinating communication activities and would be the link at the inter-agency level. Coordination at the country level should use fully the team of agency representatives within the resident coordinator system. A communications coordinating committee, including representatives from Governments, bilateral donors and NGOs, could be established to formulate communications policies and follow up on their implementation. The committee would also prepare a joint report on the contribution of communication to the success of the project.

The UN system should work more closely with development-oriented NGOs that had sound communications channels with beneficiaries. The existing informal round-table process should be regularized and should include all UN agencies and the regional economic commissions, and should also take into account the UNESCO communication mandate. To avoid duplication and promote better use of resources, the Intergovernmental Council of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC) should consider changes in the mandate of IPDC to enable it to respond more effectively to the needs of developing countries in the field of infrastructure-building and mass-media training. The UN system should develop a systematic approach to training communications experts globally, particularly in developing countries. Academic institutions in both developed and developing countries should be encouraged to include curricula for development communication. To reduce costs, the use of existing UN infrastructure and facilities at the ILO Training Centre in Turin, Italy, should be considered by the appropriate ACC subsidiary body. Funds for financing the training programmes should fall within the communications component budget and be allocated at the inception of projects. The ACC programme classification on communication for UNDP use should be redefined to respond to the needs of Member States. In addition to the class entries proposed by UNESCO, FAO and UNFPA should also be consulted to ensure an integrated and harmonized set of categories. With respect to peace-keeping operations, a stand-by unit should be established, within the existing resources of the Department of Peace-keeping Operations and working closely with the Department of Public Information. The unit would be equipped with a group of communication experts to operate in the field from the beginning to the end of the operation to cover the entire spectrum of communication and information requirements. Specialized agencies (particularly UNESCO) and NGOs should also be on call to provide their expertise.

In a 29 March addendum,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council the comments of ACC on the JIU report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/615/Add.1) without vote, 8 December (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.64), orally revised and based on informal consultations on draft by Kyrgyzstan and Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.14); agenda item 12. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 32, 42; plenary 96.

Cooperation with organizations

In 1995, the General Assembly adopted resolutions regarding cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Southern African Development Community, the Inter-Parliamentary Union and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation. It granted observer status to the Central American Integration System.

Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe

The Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽²⁵⁾ submitted a 16 October report⁽²⁶⁾ on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), formerly the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. He noted that good contacts had been established and maintained between the two organizations. Informal tripartite consultations between the Geneva-based UN offices and programmes, OSCE and the Council of Europe continued. The most recent meeting in Budapest, Hungary, in February, gave an important impetus to the dialogue between OSCE and humanitarian organizations. It was agreed that the tripartite process should be strengthened by target-oriented meetings on major humanitarian operations.

The General Assembly, by resolution 50/87 of 18 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report. It decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session an item on cooperation between the United Nations and OSCE and requested the Secretary-General to report to it on the implementation of the resolution. On the same date, the Assembly, on the proposal of Hungary,⁽²⁷⁾ by decision 50/423 authorized Switzerland, a non-UN member and as the State holding the chairmanship of OSCE for 1996, to submit communications on behalf of the organization for circulation as UN documents and to participate in discussions in the Assembly that were of direct concern to OSCE during that period.

League of Arab States

On 3 October, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²⁸⁾ on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽²⁹⁾ He stated that the secretariats of the two organizations continued to maintain close contact on matters of mutual concern. At a meeting between the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia and the Secretary-General of the League, it was agreed to review the cooperation protocol between the Commission and the League and to hold periodic meetings to review matters of mutual interest. A joint meeting (Vienna, 19-21 July) on cooperation between the secretariats of the United Nations and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations marked the fiftieth anniversaries of both organizations. The meeting suggested ways to further strengthen and expand collaboration towards the maintenance of peace and security and the promotion of social and economic development. The Secretary-General's report also summarized the action taken by UN bodies and organizations in follow-up to previous joint meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/16.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 3 October 1995 on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Recalling also the decision of the Council of the League of Arab States that it considers the League a regional organization within the meaning of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the desire of both organizations to consolidate, develop and enhance further the ties existing between them in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural and administrative fields,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular section VII, concerning cooperation with regional arrangements and organizations, and the "Supplement to An Agenda for Peace",

Convinced that the maintenance and further strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Convinced also of the need for more efficient and coordinated utilization of available economic and financial resources to promote common objectives of the two organizations,

Recognizing the need for closer cooperation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the goals and objectives of both organizations,

Welcoming the results of the general meeting on cooperation between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, held at Vienna from 19 to 21 July 1995, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of both the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Welcoming also the meeting on peace held at United Nations Headquarters on 1 August 1994 between the Secretary-General and heads of regional organizations,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the continued efforts of the League of Arab States to promote multilateral cooperation among Arab States, and requests the United Nations system to continue to lend its support;

3. Takes note of the conclusions and recommendations adopted at the general meeting on cooperation between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, held at Vienna, contained in the final document which has been transmitted by the United Nations Secretariat to all participating United Nations organizations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the follow-up action taken by him to implement the proposals adopted at the meetings between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, including most recently the meeting held at Vienna in 1995;

5. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, to intensify further their cooperation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, economic development, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his initiative in meeting with heads of regional organizations on 1 August 1994, and looks forward to seeing such meetings organized again;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and other organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural and administrative fields;

8. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system:

(a) To continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General and among themselves, as well as with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in the follow-up of multilateral proposals aimed at strengthening and expanding cooperation in all fields between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

(b) To maintain and increase contacts and improve the mechanism of consultation with the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned regarding projects and programmes, in order to facilitate their implementation;

Organization of the Islamic Conference

Responding to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a 17 October report⁽³¹⁾ on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC). He reported that regular consultations were held and information exchanged between the UN Secretariat and the General Secretariat of OIC, as well as with the Office of the Permanent Observer of OIC to the United Nations. The meeting recommended measures to further strengthen cooperation, such as that joint activities and projects should be partially financed by the focal points or agencies concerned, and that guidelines for funding jointly agreed projects should be developed at the next general meeting to operationalize project funding mechanisms.

Draft by Morocco (A/50/L.22); agenda item 32.

Organization of African Unity

The Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽³²⁾ submitted a 17 October report⁽³³⁾ on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU). He discussed consultations and exchange of information and reported on action by UN bodies, agencies and programmes in the economic and social fields. He also reported on the results of the tenth annual meeting on cooperation between the two organizations (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 6-10 November), which adopted conclusions and recommendations in the areas of peace and security and economic and social questions (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/158 of 21 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to report on the development of cooperation between OAU and the United Nations.

Southern African Development Community

The Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1993,⁽³⁴⁾ submitted a 23 October report⁽³⁵⁾ on cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community (SADC), which described action taken by Member States and by the UN system.

In resolution 50/118 of 20 December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of SADC, to continue to intensify contacts aimed at promoting and harmonizing cooperation between the two organizations.

Inter-Parliamentary Union

In a 25 April letter⁽³⁶⁾ addressed to the Secretary-General, Senegal, later joined by 21 other States,⁽³⁷⁾ requested that the General Assembly include in the provisional agenda of its fiftieth session an item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union".

In an explanatory memorandum, Senegal said that the Inter-Parliamentary Union was an international organization of national parliaments, with 135 countries as members. It shared the ideals and objectives of the United Nations and was concerned with all the issues of international interest dealt with by the United Nations. It was important to strengthen cooperation between the two organizations, since their activities were mutually complementary and reinforcing. The United Nations should conclude an agreement with the Union defining the context for cooperation to enable the Union to contribute to the work of the main political organs of the United Nations and its international conferences.

Senegal also submitted⁽³⁸⁾ on 12 October a declaration entitled "The Parliamentary Vision for International Cooperation into the 21st Century", adopted at a special session of the Council of the Union (New York, 30 August-1 September) to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/15.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union

The General Assembly,

Noting that national parliaments work together at the international level through the Inter-Parliamentary Union, their world organization, which shares the principles and objectives of the United Nations,

Considering that the activities of the Inter-Parliamentary Union complement and support the work of the United Nations,

Desirous of strengthening existing cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union and of giving it a new and adequate framework,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to conclude an agreement on cooperation between the two organizations which should make provision for consultations, appropriate representation and cooperation, in general as well as in specific fields, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on this matter;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union".

Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation

By a letter⁽³⁹⁾ dated 20 July addressed to the Secretary-General, 24 countries requested the inclusion in the agenda of the fiftieth session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation".

An explanatory memorandum said that the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation (ACTC), which had been granted observer status with the Assembly,⁽⁴⁰⁾ united 44 countries and Governments of Africa, America and Asia that used the French language and was the sole inter-governmental organization representing the French-speaking world. Its members cooperated in the areas of law in the service of development and democracy; education and training; culture and communication; and technical cooperation and economic development. ACTC had concluded cooperative agreements with a number of UN agencies and, through its political organs, including the Francophone Conference of Heads of State and Government, promoted and supported the participation of its members in meetings and conferences organized under UN auspices. In October 1993, the heads of State and Government that use French as a common language, meeting in Grande-Baie, Mauritius, affirmed their commitment to finding solutions to the major political and economic problems of the world within the framework of a new partnership with the United Nations. Towards that end, ACTC had opened offices at the UN Office at Geneva and in New York. The United Nations and ACTC were carrying out complementary activities in areas of common interest, which needed to be strengthened and better coordinated. Close working relations between the two organizations were advisable.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/3.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/18 of 10 November 1978, by which it granted observer status to the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems, in particular those of an economic, social and cultural character,

Further recalling that the Charter of the United Nations provides for the existence of regional arrangements or agencies whose objectives and activities are consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the desire expressed by the heads of State and Government of the countries that use French as a common language at their Fifth Summit, held at Grand-Baie, Mauritius, from 16 to 18 October 1993, to contribute actively to the solution of the major political and economic problems of today's world and to begin a new partnership with all the institutions that make up the United Nations family,

Considering that the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation brings together a considerable number of States Members of the United Nations that use French as a common language, among which it promotes multilateral cooperation in areas of interest to the United Nations,

Convinced of the need to coordinate the use of available resources to serve the common objectives of the two organizations,

Affirming the need to establish cooperation, or strengthen such cooperation where it already exists, between the two organizations in areas of common interest,

1. Notes with satisfaction the support expressed by the heads of State and Government of countries that use French as a common language for United Nations activities and their desire to begin a new partnership with the institutions of the United Nations system;

2. Welcomes the involvement of the countries that use French as a common language, through the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation, in United Nations activities, in particular the preparation for, conduct of and follow-up to world conferences organized under United Nations auspices;

3. Notes the complementarity of the activities of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation and the United Nations, as well as the programmes and other institutions of the United Nations system;

4. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation, to promote cooperation between the two secretariats, particularly by encouraging meetings that enable their representatives to consult one another on projects, measures and procedures that will facilitate and expand cooperation and coordination between the two organizations;

5. Urgently requests the specialized agencies and other bodies and programmes of the United Nations to cooperate to this end with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation".

Central American Integration System

On 18 July, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua and Panama requested⁽⁴¹⁾ the inclusion in the agenda of the fiftieth session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Observer status for the Central American Integration System in the General Assembly". The Central American Integration System (SICA), established by the Tegucigalpa Protocol to the Charter of the Organization of Central American States of 13 December 1991, began operations on 1 February 1993. SICA comprised four sub-systems: economic, social, cultural and political. Environmental conservation and the building of a new ecological order in the region were other major concerns. The relationship between the United Nations and SICA was one of complementarity based on the principles and norms of the UN Charter. Its participation as an observer in the Assembly would help it to reaffirm and consolidate Central American self-determination in external affairs, through a common strategy that would help strengthen the participation of the region in the international field.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/2.

Observer status for the Central American Integration System in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Considering that the Tegucigalpa Protocol, registered with the Secretariat of the United Nations, modifies the institutional structure in Central America formerly known as the Organization of Central American States, and the purposes and principles thereof, and has instituted the Central American Integration System,

Noting that respect for the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations is one of the basic principles of the Central American Integration System,

1. Decides to invite the Central American Integration System to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement the present resolution.

World Trade Organization

In a 30 October letter⁽⁴²⁾ addressed to the the Economic and Social Council President, the Secretary-General drew attention to an exchange of letters with the Director-General of the World Trade Organization (WTO), setting out a framework for cooperation between the United Nations and WTO. The heads of the two organizations agreed that the arrangements and practices set out in a 1976 General Assembly document, which was annexed to the Secretary-General's letter, on relations between the United Nations and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), provided a suitable basis to continue to guide relations between the United Nations and WTO. Arrangements between WTO and UNCTAD would be pursued by the two secretariats within that framework and in the light of relevant decisions of the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD, as well as a 1994 Assembly resolution.⁽⁴³⁾ In addition, they recommended that the current arrangements governing the status of the International Trade Centre (ITC) as a joint body be confirmed and renewed with WTO, subject to revised budgetary arrangements as called for by the General Council of WTO.

By decision 1995/322 of 12 December, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's letter and the recommendations that current arrangements governing the status of ITC as a joint body should be confirmed and renewed with WTO, and also noted that the name of the Centre would accordingly become the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO (see PART FOUR, Chapter IV).

Non-governmental organizations

Review of consultation arrangements

On 10 February, by decision 1995/218, the Economic and Social Council postponed the second session of the Open-ended Working Group on the Review of Arrangements for Consultation with Non-Governmental Organizations, which was due to be held from 21 to 24 February, to the months of May/June, on the understanding that the Bureau of the Council would consult with the Chairman of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations to find appropriate dates.

On 4 May, the Council decided (decision 1995/220) that the second session of the Working Group would take place from 8 to 12 May.

The second session of the Working Group (New York, 8-12 and 26-31 May) continued its review of arrangements for consultation with NGOs. It had before it statements submitted by the International Service for Human Rights,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Conference of Non-Governmental Organizations,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the World Federation of United Nations Associations,⁽⁴⁶⁾ the International Chamber of Commerce,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the American Association of Retired Persons,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the International Federation of Settlements and Neighbourhood Centres,⁽⁵⁰⁾ and Rotary International.⁽⁵¹⁾

The Working Group decided to annex to its report⁽⁵²⁾ proposals submitted during its discussion of the review of arrangements for consultation with NGOs. It also recommended a draft decision to the Economic and Social Council.

A further addendum⁽⁵³⁾ provided a statement by the Secretary-General setting out the financial implications of the draft decision.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/304.

General review of arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations

At its 54th plenary meeting, on 26 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, having taken note of the report of the Open-ended Working Group on the Review of Arrangements for Consultation with Non-Governmental Organizations on its second session, decided:

(a) To extend the mandate of the Working Group for a period of one year, with a meeting time of not less than two weeks, and requested the Working Group to submit its final report to the Council at its substantive session of 1996;

(b) To increase, on the basis of equitable geographical representation, the current membership of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations and to implement this decision after the completion of the current review;

(c) That, starting in 1996, the Committee should meet annually and, should this be necessary for the prompt discharge of its duties, on an ad hoc basis;

(d) To request the Committee to undertake a thorough review of its methods of work with a view to improving and streamlining its procedures;

(e) To prolong the consultative status, on the Roster, of those non-governmental organizations so accredited by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1993/329 of 30 July 1993, subject to a final resolution of the issue by the Council at its substantive session of 1996, following the outcome of the review of arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations currently under way.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/304

Adopted without vote

Draft by Open-ended Working Group (E/1995/83); agenda item 10.

Committee on NGOs

On 3 February, the Chairman of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations requested⁽⁵⁴⁾ the President of the Economic and Social Council to reschedule the 1995 session of the Committee from 20 to 31 March to the second quarter of 1995 to avoid conflict with the thirty-ninth session of the Commission on the Status of Women, which was scheduled from 15 March to 4 April.

On 10 February, by decision 1995/218, the Council agreed to the request, on the understanding that the Bureau of the Council would consult with the Chairman of the Committee to find appropriate dates.

In accordance with the 4 May decision of the Council (decision 1995/220), the Committee on NGOs met from 12 to 23 June. It considered applications for consultative status and requests for reclassification from NGOs and reviewed the quadrennial reports⁽⁵⁵⁾ submitted by 183 NGOs in consultative status with the Council on their activities during 1988-1991 and 1990-1993. It also reviewed future activities, as contained in the report of the Open-ended Working Group on the Review of Arrangements for Consultation with NGOs,⁽⁵²⁾ and approved the provisional agenda for its 1997 session. The Committee recommended three draft decisions for adoption by the Council.

The Committee recommended that 86 NGOs be granted categories I and II consultative status and that five NGOs be listed under the Roster, and that nine NGOs be reclassified from category II to category I and five NGOs from the Roster to category II.

Before the Council took action on the report as a whole, the United States submitted a draft decision⁽⁵⁶⁾ by which it requested that the Council grant category II consultative status to Freedom House. Cuba said that the draft decision would alter the substance of the report of the Committee and asked the Council to decide whether the report of the Committee should be amended. The President of the Council noted that the Committee had not recommended Freedom House for accreditation and said that the Council had to decide whether it intended to depart from established procedures and consider the draft decision on its merits.

The Council, on 27 July, by a roll-call vote of 29 to 12, with 11 abstentions, decided (decision 1995/308) to depart from its established practice and procedure and to consider an amendment to the proposals of the Committee on NGOs contained in its report. On the same date, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 11, with 10 abstentions, the Council decided to grant Freedom House category II consultative status (see below).

Conferences and meetings

Decisions regarding calendars

In 1995, the Committee on Conferences examined requests for additions and changes to the approved calendar of conferences and meetings for 1995⁽¹⁾ and adopted the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings for 1996. The Committee considered issues related to the improved utilization of conference-servicing resources, including consultations with UN bodies that underutilized the conference services available to them; existing conference resources, facilities and services within the United Nations; improved coordination of conferences within the UN system; and requests for exceptions to the rule that General Assembly subsidiary bodies should not meet during the Assembly's regular session.

Other matters reported on by the Committee in August⁽²⁾ were the need to control and limit documentation, including provision of written meeting records to subsidiary organs of the Assembly, and a review of the 1996-1997 proposed programme budget for conference services.

The Committee held an organizational session on 23 March and its substantive session on 21, 22 and 24 August.

In March, the Committee on Conferences agreed that proposed changes to the calendar that did not have programme budget implications could be dealt with by the UN Secretariat in consultation with the Bureau of the Committee. The Committee was advised of a number of such changes in 1995.

The Committee on Conferences reviewed the draft calendar of conferences and meetings for the 1996-1997 biennium and a 29 June report of Secretary-General⁽³⁾ containing a consolidated statement of scheduled conferences for 1996. In June, the Committee considered the draft calendar of conferences and meetings of the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with a 1988 Council decision.⁽⁴⁾ The Committee also reviewed the section of the proposed programme budget⁽⁵⁾ for 1996-1997 relating to conference servicing.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly adopt the draft calendar of conferences and meetings as amended and authorize the Committee to make adjustments to the calendar for 1996 that might become necessary as a result of action by the General Assembly at its fiftieth session. The Committee invited bodies not to hold meetings on 20 February and 29 April 1996, in accordance with a 1994 Assembly decision⁽⁶⁾ to avoid holding meetings on the two most sacred days observed by Muslims, and requested the Secretariat to make similar arrangements when drafting the revised calendar for 1997. It also requested that the Secretary-General submit to the Assembly at its fiftieth session a consolidated statement relating to the number and cost of special conferences scheduled for 1997.

The Committee recommended the adoption of the 1996-1997 provisional calendar of conferences and meetings of the subsidiary organs of the Economics and Social Council as amended, and, in view of the difficult financial situation of the Organization, that the Council continue to consider the biennialization of meetings of subsidiary bodies. Requests for an annual cycle of meetings should be based on substantive reasons. The Committee noted the possible adverse effect of open-ended, ad hoc meetings on the efficient utilization of conference-servicing resources.

Intergovernmental meetings

At the request of the host Governments of several intergovernmental conferences in 1995, the main documents of those meetings were transmitted to the Secretary-General for circulation as documents of the General Assembly, the Security Council or both, as follows:

Twenty-eighth meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (Brunei Darussalam, 29-30 July);⁽⁷⁾

Conference and meeting services

As requested by the Assembly in 1993,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General on 14 July reported⁽²⁶⁾ on existing conference facilities within the United Nations. The report provided information on conference facilities at UN offices, including the number and level of permanent conference staff by category. It also examined the nature of the meetings convened, capacity utilization and facilities provided free of charge, as well as system-wide coordination of conference facilities.

In terms of coordination, the Inter-Agency Meeting on Language Arrangements, Documentation and Publications stated that it would establish and update a system-wide calendar of conferences using electronic communications facilities that would supplement the existing conventional systems. Once operational, the new system-wide calendar would be available to Member States. The exchanges of workload in all areas of documentation processing already occurring among duty stations should be undertaken system-wide as a means of promoting optimum use of services and resources. An inter-agency working group was considering methods to improve practices in translation processes, and recommendations had been made on the promotion and advertising of publications produced in the system. Common guidelines and criteria were being developed for the selection of material for dissemination on electronic media, including questions of pricing and copyright. The use of new technologies for the assignment of interpreters to meetings, as well as in translation, desktop publishing, reproduction and distribution was promoted.

The Committee on Conferences requested the Secretariat to provide capacity utilization figures for translation and interpretation at other UN offices and to share translation workload among various duty stations to reduce costs. It encouraged the Secretariat to keep such costs down and to report on its efforts. It requested the Secretariat to report on the costs of underutilizing conference facilities at UN offices, and to provide an analysis of the comparative costs of meetings held in New York, Geneva and Vienna. The Committee decided to consider biennially the means to ensure an improved coordination of conferences within the UN system.

On 1 August, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁷⁾ on the improved utilization of conference servicing and provided statistics for 1994 on the planned and actual use of UN conference resources allocated to a sample of bodies, as well as an analysis of the statistics, including the overall and average utilization factors, and a breakdown in terms of percentages of the meeting ratio and planning accuracy factor of the bodies in the sample. The average utilization factor for 1994 was 82 per cent, down 1 per cent from 1993.⁽²⁸⁾

The Committee on Conferences requested the Secretariat to expand the core sample in the statistical analysis to include the Economic and Social Council and the Committee on Conferences, and to refine the methodology for calculating the utilization factors. Also, it requested its Chairman to consult with the chairmen of bodies that had consistently utilized less than the applicable benchmark figure of their allocated resources for the past three sessions, with a view to making recommendations for the optimum use of conference-servicing resources, and to invite the chairmen of subsidiary bodies that had utilized less than 80 per cent of their conference resources in 1994 to provide information on measures taken for improvement and a realistic assessment of their needs, with a view to reducing the resources required. The Committee asked the Office of Conference and Support Services (OCSS) to maintain a dialogue with the substantive secretariats of intergovernmental bodies and to provide statistics and information on previous performance, as well as guidelines on ways to enhance utilization of conference-servicing resources, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session. The Committee also requested the Secretariat to develop a cost-accounting system for OCSS and to report on cost estimates of conferences, including estimates of losses incurred as a result of underuse of conference-servicing resources.

The General Assembly,

Stressing the need to provide Member States and United Nations bodies, upon request, with more comprehensive and accurate information on the costs of meetings and documentation,

Noting that the introduction of new technologies enhances the quality, cost-effectiveness and efficiency of conference services,

Programme budget for 1996-1997

In August, the Committee on Conferences⁽²⁾ considered the proposed programme budget for the 1996-1997 biennium for conference services.⁽⁵⁾ The Committee felt that the introduction of technology-intensive methods of work in translation services had much to recommend it as a means of ensuring provision to Member States of a high-quality translation service in the most timely and cost-effective manner, and was in favour of more rapid introduction of new technology. Technological innovations should be introduced in consultation with Member States and in coordination with relevant intergovernmental bodies, including the working group on informatics of the Economic and Social Council. The Committee emphasized the need for strict compliance with the resolutions and rules establishing language arrangements for UN bodies and organs. It welcomed actions taken to improve the quality of translation into all official languages, in particular the efforts of the Arabic Translation Service to implement the proposal of Egypt⁽²⁹⁾ to "arabize" UN documentation, and encouraged the Secretariat to implement phase II of that proposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/206 E.

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the use of languages in the United Nations, including resolutions 2(I) of 1 February 1946, 2247(XXI) of 20 December 1966, 2292(XXII) of 8 December 1967, 3189(XXVIII), 3190(XXVIII) and 3191(XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 36/117 B of 10 December 1981, 47/202 D of 22 December 1992, 49/221 B of 23 December 1994 and 50/11 of 2 November 1995,

Recalling also its request to the Secretariat, contained in resolution 49/221 C of 23 December 1994, to continue exploring ways and means of providing conference services in a manner that fully responds to the needs of intergovernmental and expert bodies, while ensuring the criteria of quality and timeliness and due respect for the principle of equal treatment of the official languages of the United Nations as laid down in General Assembly resolution 42/207 C of 11 December 1987,

1. Emphasizes the need for strict compliance with the resolutions and rules establishing language arrangements for the different bodies and organs of the United Nations;

2. Stresses the need to continue to ensure the availability of the necessary resources to guarantee the timely translation of documents into the different official and working languages of the Organization and their simultaneous distribution in those languages;

3. Appreciates the fact that, through advanced technology as well as improved management and increased productivity, the Secretariat has largely been enabled to cope with the growth in demand for translation and documentation services;

4. Notes the actions taken to improve the quality of translation into all official languages, in particular the efforts of the Arabic Translation Service to implement the proposal contained in annex II to the report of the Committee on Conferences to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session, requests the Secretary-General to undertake a thorough review of the terminology and technical methods used in translation into Arabic, and urges the Secretariat to speed up its efforts towards the implementation of phase II of that proposal and to report thereon to the Committee on Conferences at its substantive session of 1996.

Unified conference services at Vienna

In 1995, ACABQ considered a 1994 report on a reorganization of conference-servicing staff at the Vienna International Centre into a single conference-servicing operation.⁽²⁹⁾ In a 17 February report,⁽³⁰⁾ ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly approve the establishment, within existing resources under budget sections 25E (Conference service, Vienna) and 25I (United Nations Office at Vienna), of a unified conference service at the Vienna International Centre under the management of the United Nations, effective 1 April 1995. Additional requirements that could not be accommodated within existing resources should be reflected in the Secretary-General's final budget performance report for 1994-1995.

ACABQ also recommended that the Secretary-General examine the cause for the high vacancy rate in the Professional category before making any proposal in respect of the staffing table of conference services at Vienna, and that he utilize to the fullest extent the advantages that could accrue from technological innovations, especially in labour-intensive areas of conference servicing. It further recommended that he review, in the context of the proposed 1996-1997 programme budget, the requirements for conference-servicing staff and the organizational chart of the united conference services at the UN Office at Vienna on the basis of the most updated actual workload statistics and the related UN workload standards in conference servicing, taking into account the current and future demands for such services and the capabilities of technological innovations. The proposed staffing structure should be based on the results of classification of posts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 March, the General Assembly adopted section III of resolution 49/237.

Unified conference services at Vienna

[The General Assembly . . .]

Recalling its resolution 44/201 A of 21 December 1989, in which it endorsed the view of the Secretary-General that a single conference-servicing facility at the Vienna International Centre would represent the ideal solution from the standpoint of cost efficiency,

Recalling also its resolutions 48/218 A and 48/222 A of 23 December 1993, in which it stressed the need for the establishment of unified conference services at Vienna as soon as possible,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on revised estimates for conference services at Vienna and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Notes with appreciation the estimated net savings resulting from the proposed single conference-servicing facility at Vienna for the budgets of the United Nations and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization taken together;

2. Notes the estimated net additional costs of 324,100 United States dollars resulting from the proposed single conference-servicing facility at Vienna for the United Nations budget for the biennium 1994-1995;

3. Concurs with the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to proceed to establish the unified conference-servicing facility at the Vienna International Centre under the management of the United Nations on the basis of the following elements and criteria:

(a) The transfer of the conference-servicing posts of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to the United Nations on the basis of the existing staffing table of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, effective from 1 April 1995;

(b) The establishment of the unified conference-servicing facility under budget sections 25E.C (Conference and library services, Vienna) and 25I (United Nations Office at Vienna), within existing resources, taking into account increased income in respect of reimbursements from the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for services provided by the United Nations;

(c) An examination of the cause for the high vacancy rate in the Professional category before making any proposal in respect of the staffing table for conference services at Vienna;

(d) A review, in the context of his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, of the requirements for conference-servicing staff for and the organigramme of the unified conference services at the United Nations Office at Vienna on the basis of the most updated actual workload statistics and the related United Nations workload standards in conference servicing, taking into account the current and future requirements for conference servicing at Vienna;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to implement cost-effective technological innovations for the unified conference services at Vienna;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to examine the feasibility of contracting out elements of conference services at Headquarters and all duty stations with a view to achieving further cost efficiency in the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997 and subsequent budgets;

Facilities for bilateral meetings

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/206 F.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 49/221 D of 23 December 1994,

Noting with satisfaction the significant improvements in the meeting arrangements and facilities within the United Nations premises for the holding of bilateral meetings and contacts among Member States during the fiftieth session of the General Assembly and during the special commemorative meeting of the Assembly on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Secretariat for their prompt and effective actions to implement resolution 49/221 D;

Documents and publications

Control and limitation

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a 29 June report⁽³²⁾ on the control and limitation of documentation, containing replies from six UN bodies concerning justification for the continuance of their entitlement to meeting records. The United Nations Administrative Tribunal, the First Committee and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People sent replies containing justifications for the continuance of their current entitlement. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples had decided⁽³³⁾ to replace its verbatim records by summary records. The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space agreed⁽³⁴⁾ that, beginning with its thirty-eighth session in 1996, it would be provided with unedited transcripts of its sessions in lieu of verbatim records.

The Committee on Conferences recommended to the Assembly that the current entitlement of meeting records be continued for: the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, the First Committee, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, and the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

It recommended that the Assembly endorse the decision of the Special Committee on decolonization and request the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to keep it informed of its experience regarding unedited transcripts, so that the Assembly could draw on that experience for the future. It further requested the Committee's Chairman to draw the attention of the chairmen of other bodies to the potential economies of making more general use of unedited transcripts in place of labour-intensive summary or verbatim records, and to review their own requirements pending further information from the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on its experience with unedited transcripts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/206 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the control and limitation of documentation, including resolutions 33/56 of 14 December 1978, 36/117 B of 10 December 1981, 37/14 C of 16 November 1982, 45/238 B of 21 December 1990, 47/202 B of 22 December 1992, 48/222 B of 23 December 1993 and 49/221 B of 23 December 1994,

Encouraging all bodies entitled to written meeting records to keep under review their need for such records,

1. Decides, pursuant to paragraph 3 of resolution 49/221 B, that the current entitlement to meeting records of the following bodies shall be continued:

(a) United Nations Administrative Tribunal (when holding oral hearings);

(b) First Committee;

(c) Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (when holding meetings in observance of international days of solidarity proclaimed by the General Assembly);

(d) Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Approves the recommendation of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to replace its verbatim records by summary records;

3. Notes the intention of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to replace its verbatim records by unedited transcripts, and requests the Committee to keep the General Assembly informed, through the Committee on Conferences, of its experience regarding unedited transcripts;

4. Takes note of the decision of the Committee on Conferences contained in paragraph 75 of its report, and requests the Committee to report on the implementation of that decision to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 50/206 B

Reduction of documentation

Speaking before the Fifth Committee on 10 October, the Assistant Secretary-General for Conference and Support Services said that the cost of producing documentation in New York and Geneva was expected to increase by $5 million in the 1994-1995 biennium from its 1992-1993 figure of $290 million. To alleviate the problem of the enormous amount of waste paper recycled at the United Nations, which currently averaged 1,000 tons a year, distribution in the UN Secretariat had been cut back by two thirds and stocks by one half, and the distribution of publications in-house had been discontinued. Similar action was being planned at other duty stations. In addition, print runs had been adjusted to reflect actual demand; however, the demand at the delegations' counter and at document booths in conference rooms was harder to predict, and deferral of agenda items from one season to another usually involved reprinting the same document or producing updated versions. Sets of documents and publications placed in mission boxes were frequently opened and immediately dumped, or never picked up at all. He said that boxes would no longer be filled after three days with no pick-up. The Inter-Agency Meeting on Language Arrangements, Documentation and Publications had agreed that very little could be done unless users were willing to scale down their requirements by ceasing to ask for recurrent reports, accepting oral reports instead of documents, combining two or more reports into one document, and limiting their agendas. He cited a number of examples to improve efficiency, including the decision of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to make unedited transcripts of its proceedings instead of verbatim records, which had cut the cost of its record production by two thirds, and the saving of some $1.8 million by having the records of the First Committee drafted after an Assembly session, on the basis of sound recordings. Member States had to take action and not request additional reports without also deciding to forgo other reports, some of which were based on mandates given 10, 20 or even 50 years earlier. The challenge of efficiency and cost-effectiveness was not only for the Secretariat but equally, and in fact more so, for Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/206 C.

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the statement made by the representative of the Secretary-General to the Fifth Committee on 10 October 1995 on, inter alia, the costs of documentation,

Recognizing the right of Member States, through inter-governmental bodies, to request reports,

Recognizing that Member States can contribute directly to the reduction of documentation, which contributes to savings, through restraint in making such requests,

Recognizing also that the reduction in the demand for, and volume of, documentation could improve the quality and timeliness of reports,

Noting that Economic and Social Council decision 1995/222 of 5 May 1995, entitled "Documentation", requires Secretariat accountability regarding seriously tardy reports,

Noting also that some actions taken by the Committee on Conferences and the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space can result in lower documentation costs, while noting further that the political and financial impact of such actions has to be assessed by the General Assembly,

Recognizing the right of Member States to request circulation of communications as official documents,

1. Notes with concern that the existing limits of 32 pages and 24 pages for documents prepared for intergovernmental meetings, confirmed by its resolution 36/117 A of 10 December 1981 and endorsed by its resolution 38/32 E of 25 November 1983, respectively, are not routinely enforced;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to enforce, where appropriate, the existing page limits referred to in paragraph 1 above in respect of all documents originating in the Secretariat, to review these limits, where appropriate, with a view to achieving an overall reduction of documentation without affecting its quality and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session through the Committee on Conferences;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to include only where necessary brief descriptions of the history of the subjects contained in the reports together with a reference to relevant documents, bearing in mind the need to restrict the number of pages to the limits referred to in paragraph 1 above;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that documentation is available in accordance with the six-week rule for the distribution of documents, simultaneously in each of the six official languages of the United Nations;

5. Decides that, should a report be issued late, the reasons for the delay should be indicated when the report is introduced;

6. Requests members of all bodies to exercise restraint in making proposals containing requests for new reports;

7. Invites all bodies to consider the possibility of biennializing or triennializing the presentation of reports, to review the necessity of all recurrent documents with a view to streamlining documentation and contributing to savings and to make appropriate recommendations;

8. Encourages members of intergovernmental bodies:

(a) To consider the possibility of requesting oral reports, without prejudice to the provision of information to delegations in all the official languages;

(b) To request consolidated reports on related topics under a single item or sub-item where appropriate and cost-effective;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To provide an oral estimate of the cost of documents or reports requested by Member States, without prejudice to the right of intergovernmental bodies to request such documents or reports;

(b) To seek a more reader-friendly and uniform format of reports, taking into account new publishing technologies that would include sections containing the objective of the report, an executive summary, the conclusions drawn and, as appropriate, the action proposed to be taken by the body, and to submit proposals thereon to the General Assembly through the Committee on Conferences;

10. Endorses the recommendation made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the Joint Inspection Unit be requested to conduct a comprehensive survey of the role publications play in implementing mandates of intergovernmental bodies and the extent to which recurrent publications could be made more cost-effective in this regard;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to present to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, through the Committee on Conferences and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, a report on the implementation of these measures, including information on possible savings.

Other administrative matters

UN information systems

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1994,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General, in a July report⁽²⁾ on UN and inter-agency activities in the field of information systems, said that considerable progress had been made system-wide in providing direct, on-line access to information relating to UN programmes and activities through the use of Internet services, especially the World Wide Web. There was now almost universal use in organizations of the UN system of the Internet to address the information needs identified by the Council and by their own governing bodies, and to disseminate information to other interested parties and to the public. Many organizations had mounted or were in the process of mounting substantive information and operational data, such as press releases, appointment and vacancy announcements, meeting schedules and directories, on internal and external Internet servers. The Secretary-General stated that there should continue to be a shared sense of the enhanced level of information technology that was appropriate to the system as a whole.

Inter-agency cooperation. The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Information Systems Coordination Committee (ISCC),⁽³⁾ as the successor to the Advisory Committee for the Coordination of Information Systems (ACCIS), held its third session in Geneva from 19 to 21 April. ISCC decided that UNDP would be the lead agency for the Task Force on Document Management Technology and the Task Force on Information Management Standards. The Task Force on Information Access and Dissemination in the UN system was to meet to consider refocusing its work programme. Organizations would be encouraged to supply data on developmental activities directly to the International Network for Development Information Exchange, without ISCC funding. ISCC decided that five former ACCIS products should not be continued in their current form: the Register of Development Activities of the UN system; Directory of UN Databases and Information Services; UNS/SABIR, the bibliographic CD-ROM; Books in Print of the UN system; and the UN-EARTH microcomputer package.

ACABQ⁽⁴⁾ pointed out that the International Computing Centre (ICC) could play an active role in implementing activities proposed for ISCC, thus avoiding duplication and enhancing the use of resources. It recommended that the Secretary-General and organizations participating in ICC should review the matter, taking into account the rapid pace of technological change throughout the UN system.

At its eighty-second session (London, 13-17 February), the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ)⁽⁵⁾ commented on ISCC's 1996-1997 programme budget, and requested ISCC to present budget proposals at a level representing zero growth. At its eighty-third session (New York, 28 August-1 September), CCAQ approved⁽⁶⁾ a revised programme budget for 1996-1997, totalling $1,233,100.

Telecommunications

The Secretary-General, on 27 October, submitted the report⁽⁷⁾ of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "A review of telecommunications and related information technologies in the United Nations system". The report examined the status of telecommunications in the United Nations, its legislative basis, trends and perspectives in world communications, opportunities and perspectives for the United Nations and the response of the system, and proposed ideas for a future telecommunications strategy.

JIU concluded that telecommunications was an important tool of development and, as a UN telecom system would potentially be a major force in the field and in developing countries, there would be a basis for linking UN telecommunications initiatives with the broader mandate of development. It suggested the corporate network approach, which would provide the framework, policies and strategy for a unified approach.

JIU recommended that a Senior-level Task Force on Telecommunications within the auspices of ACC be established to investigate the most appropriate framework for a common UN system telecommunications strategy. Member States should promote the notion of a common, cost-effective telecommunications strategy and request the Secretary-General to consider new possibilities in strategic perspective. The Secretary-General should answer questions and remove doubts raised by Member States about the project before any further decision was taken; investigate the possibility of common negotiation on behalf of the UN system in relevant areas, especially with INMARSAT, to obtain the status of a duly authorized telecommunications entity, which the United Nations currently had with Intelsat. ITU should be involved as an advisory entity to the Senior-level Task Force and the corporate network and as a partner in the exploration of the existing non-UN system telecommunications services and facilities, and in subsequent negotiations with them. UN agencies should make available strategic and management support and understanding at all levels for the appropriate use of telecommunications, and the work of the Task Force, in particular. Further execution of any telecommunications project in the UN system should be global in conception and implementation. UN organizations should implement as soon as possible a management control system for providing accurate traffic data to facilitate system-wide analysis of traffic requirements.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/61.

The need to harmonize and improve United Nations information systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1991/70 of 26 July 1991, 1992/60 of 31 July 1992, 1993/56 of 29 July 1993 and 1994/46 of 29 July 1994 on the need to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States,

Conscious of the deep interest of Member States in harnessing the benefits of new information technologies for the objectives of economic and social development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the follow-up action taken,

Deeply concerned at the limited progress achieved so far in the implementation of the above-mentioned resolutions,

1. Reiterates once again the high priority that it attaches to easy, economical, uncomplicated and unhindered access for Member States and for observers through, inter alia, their permanent missions, to the growing number of computerized databases and information systems and services of the United Nations;

2. Calls once again for the urgent implementation of the measures required to achieve these objectives;

3. Stresses once again the urgent need for representatives of States to be closely consulted and actively associated with the respective executive and governing bodies of the United Nations institutions dealing with informatics within the United Nations system, so that the specific needs of States as internal end-users can be given due priority;

4. Requests once again that the initial phases of the action programme to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States be implemented from within existing resources and in full consultation with the representatives of States;

5. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to convene, initially for one year, an ad hoc open-ended working group, from within existing resources, to make appropriate recommendations for the due fulfilment of the provisions of previous resolutions on this question, including ways to ensure that Member States benefit fully from the informatics revolution in meeting the challenges of development, and the specific measures that the agencies, funds, programmes and various bodies of the United Nations system need to take to help the Member States in this regard;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the follow-up action taken on the present resolution, including the findings of the working group, to the Council at its substantive session of 1996.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/61

Integrated management information system

The Secretary-General submitted on 21 November his seventh report⁽⁸⁾ on the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) to the Fifth Committee. The purpose of IMIS, which was launched in 1990, was to develop an integrated system to process and report on administrative actions at all major duty stations. The work on the establishment of the system was proceeding steadily, substantially on target and within the budget. The Secretary-General said that because of this major undertaking, the Organization would soon be more responsive to requests of Member States for increased efficiency, accountability and responsibility. The project was the first step towards a more continuous and steady effort to improve efficiency in the Secretariat through advanced technological innovations. Human resources applications had made it possible to improve staff management at Headquarters. Implementation of IMIS at offices away from Headquarters would provide management tools never before available. The Secretary-General had decided that the system should be used by the United Nations as a whole, and UNHCR and UNICEF were requested to implement it.

ACABQ noted⁽⁴⁾ that IMIS activities in 1996-1997 would focus on the installation of the system away from Headquarters, on the establishment of a long-term maintenance infrastructure and on training worldwide in the use of the system. It recommended approval of the proposed estimates for the IMIS project budget for 1996-1997 totalling $11,967,600, and $7,618,400 for the maintenance budget.

On 23 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 50/216, section III, took note of the Secretary-General's report and the recommendations of ACABQ.

UN premises and property

Addis Ababa and Bangkok conference facilities

In a 2 November report⁽⁹⁾ to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General stated that the pace of work at the UN conference centre in Addis Ababa had improved in 1995. Major civil works were completed at the end of September. The projected completion date for the project was January 1996. As of 31 July, disbursements amounted to $67,447,828. The estimated total project cost of $107,576,900 was not expected to change.

The conference centre in Bangkok, inaugurated in April 1993, was the site of 186 major meetings in the first six months of 1995. Its estimated construction cost was $48,540,000.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/214 of 23 December, noted the assurance given by the Secretariat with regard to the status of implementation of the UN construction project in Addis Ababa and asked that all necessary measures be taken to ensure that the project was completed as approved.

Buildings management

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly on 13 November his comments⁽¹⁰⁾ on the 1994 Joint Inspection Unit report on management of buildings in the United Nations,⁽¹¹⁾ with which he concurred. He observed that insufficient funding over the past four bienniums had resulted in the need to defer the frequency and scope of regular and preventive maintenance and the postponement of much-needed upgrading and retrofitting of obsolete systems and equipment. The JIU recommendation of creating a building fund could be an interim solution to the problem of lack of adequate funding to cover costs related to emergency and unforeseen repair and replacement projects. While there was a need to establish long-range planning to ensure effective maintenance and operation of the facilities by implementing a comprehensive master plan, the building fund would ensure a bridge for adequate funding of maintenance until the implementation of such a master plan. It was estimated that at Headquarters a replenishable fund of $1 million annually would be required to fund emergency maintenance and repair projects.

The Secretary-General reported⁽¹²⁾ on 25 October on properties and buildings owned or occupied by the United Nations at principal duty stations, including historical background and building descriptions.

ACABQ⁽⁴⁾ requested the Secretary-General to review the total proposed requirements for alterations and improvements of projects deferred from 1994-1995 to ensure that there was a reasonable balance in the implementation of projects approved for the various duty stations, and to include in his next budget information on the share of new projects in the total estimated requirements for alterations or improvements.

The General Assembly, in resolution 50/214, decided that for the biennium 1996-1997 only essential repairs and construction, the deferral of which would endanger occupational health and safety, leave the Organization in breach of local building regulations or in the longer term not be cost-effective, should be carried out, and that the proposed estimates for alterations, improvements and major maintenance would be reduced by $12 million.

UN art works

Responding to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary General submitted a 10 November note⁽¹⁴⁾ on the management of art works, stating that he had reviewed the in-house capabilities of the Secretariat to improve their management and care. He had determined that responsibility for art management should remain within the Office of Conference and Support Services, and should be shared by the Archives Unit and the Buildings Management Services within the Commercial and Building Services Division. A complete computerized inventory was being compiled of all gifts presented to the Organization, and the Archives Unit had assembled and consolidated available inventories of UN works of art. Major art and educational institutions provided expert advice on the most up-to-date methods for managing works of art. A review was undertaken of the oversight mechanism under which the Philatelic Museum in Geneva operated.

It was decided that the Museum should be jointly administered by the Archives Unit and the UN Postal Administration to ensure that archival standards were maintained.

Procurement reform

The Secretary-General, responding to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁵⁾ presented a progress report⁽¹⁶⁾ on the implementation of procurement reform in the UN Secretariat. That process had been reviewed by a high-level group of experts, which had examined the financial regulations and rules governing procurement procedures and practices; requisitioning; bid evaluation and vendor registration processes; the use of letters of assist; the levels and scope of delegated procurement authority to field missions; distribution of workload between Headquarters and the field in terms of value and number of transactions; and the existing related control mechanisms. He had accepted most recommendations of the high-level group and was implementing those within current resources and capacity.

The General Assembly, by decision 49/486 of 20 July, welcomed the progress made in the implementation of procurement reform in the Secretariat.

On 10 November, the Secretary-General presented a full report on the implementation of procurement reform in the Secretariat⁽¹⁷⁾ which provided information on actions taken or planned. New procedures were introduced in January to facilitate requests for use of the Controller's authority regarding commitments against the appropriations of current and future financial periods in certain key areas of procurement for peace-keeping operations. Progress had been made in identifying and instituting system contracts and efforts were continuing to define more clearly the parameters and scope of the concept of system contracts. A comprehensive review of the relevant financial regulations and rules had begun, with the initial phase concentrating on the preparation of a set of policy guidelines for use in procurement.

The Secretary-General concluded that in order to ensure that the reform of procurement policy and procedures was fully implemented, the necessary funds should be made available to ensure an appropriate level of highly qualified staff with procurement expertise.

The Secretary-General, in a note to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁸⁾ submitted a report of the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services on the 1995 audit of procurement handled by the Contracts and Procurement Service of the Department for Development Support and Management Services (DDSMS), indicating the need for strengthened planning, monitoring and control of the procurement process.

In August, ACABQ noted⁽⁴⁾ that procurement services were being undertaken in both DDSMS and the Department of Administration and Management. It recommended that the Secretary-General review the situation with a view to merging the services in the two Departments and ensuring appropriate coordination with other UN procurement services.

UN access control system project

The Secretary-General, in a 30 November note to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁹⁾ transmitted the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the audit of the UN access control system project. The audit found that project planning had been inadequate and that no feasibility study was undertaken to determine its viability and cost-effectiveness. OIOS had referred the matter to its Investigations Section to determine whether any staff members had violated UN rules and regulations in the areas of project planning, vendor selection or project monitoring and acceptance in connection with the project.

The Secretary-General included remarks of the Department of Administration and Management, which, in its comments on the audit report, acknowledged weaknesses in the management process for the project's formulation and execution. The Department, however, believed that UN regulations and rules, particularly those regarding procurement, were respected throughout the process.

UN Postal Administration

In 1995, the gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA) from its sale of philatelic items both at Headquarters and at overseas offices totalled more than $15 million. Revenue from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes was retained by the United Nations. Under the terms of an agreement between the Organization and the United States, revenue from the sale of United States dollar-denominated stamps used for postage from Headquarters was reimbursed to the United States

Postal Service. Similarly, postal agreements between the United Nations and the Governments of Austria and Switzerland required that revenue derived from the sale of Austrian schilling-denominated stamps and Swiss franc-denominated stamps for postage be reimbursed to the Austrian and Swiss postal authorities, respectively.

During the year, UNPA released seven commemorative stamp issues, one definitive stamp, two souvenir cards, 10 maximum cards, two pre-stamped envelopes and three prestige booklets. The first set of three commemorative stamps entitled "50th Anniversary of the United Nations", was released on 1 January; one maximum card accompanied the issue. On 3 February, UNPA issued three stamps on "Social Summit", to commemorate the World Summit for Social Development; a souvenir card accompanied this issue; two pre-stamped envelopes were issued on the same day. On 24 March, UNPA released the third of its multi-year series on "Endangered Species". Each year, 12 endangered species were to be featured on stamps to highlight the need for the protection of endangered species throughout the world; three maximum cards accompanied the issue. The United Nations issued six stamps on 26 May on "Youth: Our Future" to commemorate the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year; a souvenir card accompanied the issue.

The fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations was commemorated further with a set of six United Nations stamps and three souvenir sheets on 26 June. On 5 September, the United Nations issued six "Fourth World Conference on Women" stamps to commemorate the Conference which was held in September; six maximum cards accompanied the issue; one definitive stamp was issued on the same day. Three "50th Anniversary of the United Nations" stamps, together with three prestige booklets, were issued by UNPA on 24 October to complete the year's programme.

PART SEVEN

Intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), established in 1957 to promote the peaceful uses of atomic energy, continued its efforts in 1995 to improve the impact and efficiency of its activities, which encompassed nuclear power and its fuel cycle, waste management, the safety of nuclear installations and radiation safety, international safeguards and the use of nuclear techniques to improve human health, food supply and environmental protection.

The thirty-ninth session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 18-22 September) adopted resolutions relating to measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear safety, radiological protection and waste management; improving the safeguards system; and strengthening the Agency's technical cooperation system. It also took action on a plan for producing potable water economically, on the extensive use of isotope hydrology for water resources management and on measures against trafficking in nuclear material. In addition, it adopted resolutions on the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa; participation of South Africa in IAEA activities; implementation of IAEA standards in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and in Iraq; and application of IAEA safeguards in the Middle East.

In 1995, Bosnia and Herzegovina became a member of IAEA, bringing the Agency's total membership to 123.

Nuclear safety

IAEA continued to foster a global nuclear safety culture in 1995 by supporting intergovernmental collaborative efforts. It provided a forum for extensive information exchange; promoted the drafting of international legal agreements and the development of safety standards; and organized a wide variety of expert services.

By the end of 1995, 62 countries had signed and 14 had ratified, accepted or approved the 1994 Convention on Nuclear Safety, which bound countries to basic principles covering the regulation, management and operation of land-based civil nuclear power plants. The Convention was to enter into force on the nineteenth day after deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, including the instruments of 17 States each having at least one nuclear installation that had achieved criticality in a reactor core.

Agency work on the assessment of the safety of nuclear power plants in eastern Europe and countries of the former USSR made steady progress, with emphasis on a review of the status of the implementation of proposed improvements.

Seven Operational Safety Review Team missions (France (2), Japan, Lithuania, Switzerland, Ukraine, United Kingdom) and six Safety Review Missions (Bulgaria (2), Czech Republic, Russian Federation, Ukraine (2)) were made to nuclear power plants. Additionally, 13 Assessment of Safety Significant Events Team review missions were carried out at nuclear plants in Bulgaria, China, the Czech Republic, Hungary, Sweden (2), the Russian Federation, Ukraine (5) and the United States.

Armenia, Croatia, Iceland and Kazakhstan joined the International Nuclear Event Scale information system, bringing to 58 the number of States committed to the prompt communication of nuclear events significant for safety or the public interest. In 1995, 61 events were reported to the system.

Nuclear power

The activities of IAEA in 1995 in the area of nuclear power focused on developing improved versions of software for energy, electricity and nuclear power planning; on-line services and systematic monitoring of power reactor information; technology issues on nuclear power plant life management and the human-machine interface; revision of quality assurance standards; improving technology for advanced nuclear reactors; sea-water desalinization using nuclear energy; and the transmutation of actinides.

In 1995, Belarus, Brazil and Poland were added to the list of countries receiving technical cooperation assistance in applying the Energy and Power Evaluation Package, used to assess nuclear power options. In addition, Albania, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Moldova, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Viet Nam received assistance in defining a framework for technical cooperation projects on energy, electricity and nuclear power planning.

Interest in small and medium-size reactors for use in non-electrical applications as well as power generation steadily increased among member States. The reactors would most likely find use in areas such as sea-water desalination, district heating, oil recovery enhancement, coal gasification and methanol production.

The Power Reactor Information System (PRIS) database continued to be maintained and updated, with information on the status and operating experience of 437 reactors in 30 countries and Taiwan. A subset of the PRIS database for PC users, MicroPRIS, was being accessed by 225 users in 54 member States and 8 international organizations.

Nuclear fuel cycle

In 1995, six countries—Australia, Canada, Kazakhstan, the Niger, the Russian Federation, Uzbekistan—produced over 70 per cent of the world's total uranium. The 1995 worldwide reactor-related requirements were estimated to be some 61,400 tonnes of uranium per year, which was about 29,000 tonnes greater than worldwide production. The balance of demand was filled by inventory drawdown.

A new map of the world's uranium deposits, the most comprehensive to date, was published in cooperation with the Geological Survey of Canada. It depicted information on 582 uranium deposits, including previously unavailable information on deposits in eastern Europe, the former USSR and China.

Technical meetings convened in 1995 reviewed recent changes in the uranium industry, reactor fuel technology and core performance, and spent-fuel management, technology and safety.

Radioactive waste management

The Agency's 1995 programme on radioactive waste management focused on strengthening waste management infrastructures in developing member States; establishing international principles and standards for the safe management of wastes; and preparing for the convention on waste safety. New initiatives were introduced in the areas of decommissioning/dismantling nuclear installations and the restoration of radioactively contaminated sites, reflecting the increased importance placed by member States on those issues.

The preamble of the 1994 Convention on Nuclear Safety^a urged preparation of a convention on the safe management of radioactive waste. Progress was made on a draft convention at two meetings of an open-ended group of legal and technical experts convened by the IAEA Board of Governors.

IAEA completed and released in 1995 the Sealed Radiation Sources Registry package for member States. As one of the primary components of Agency programmes aimed at improving the control of in-use and spent radiation sources, the Registry would assist countries in their efforts to keep track of all sealed radiation sources.

As part of its work to resolve international waste management issues, the Agency, at the request of the Nordic Council of Ministers and with the cooperation of the Russian Federation, organized a seminar on international cooperation on nuclear waste management in the Russian Federation and established a Contact Expert Group.

Environment

With the threat of global climate change due to emissions a matter of increasing concern to the international community, IAEA continued to address the issue of sustainable energy sources. In October, the Agency, in cooperation with other international organizations, convened an international symposium on electricity, health and the environment. The symposium aimed to draw up methodologies and databases for the comparative assessment of different options for the production of electric power.

IAEA organized a re-examination of the radiological situation at the Bikini Atoll in the Marshall Islands. It also undertook a review of an area in Kazakhstan where nuclear weapons had been tested for many years. The results confirmed overall that there was no need for concern among those living in the settlements around the test site.

In 1995, France requested IAEA to perform a study to assess the full radiological situation in the South Pacific atolls of Mururoa and Fangataufa, taking into account all past events of radiological significance. The study, to be funded by extra-budgetary contributions from France, would consist of an assessment of the current radiological situation and an evaluation of the potential long-term radiological impact. Following consultations, the Director General informed France that the Agency agreed to conduct the study after the cessation of nuclear testing in the area.

Food and agriculture

The Agency's food and agriculture programme, operated jointly with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), continued to assist member States in the use of nuclear techniques to improve the quantity and quality of food and fibre produced.

A feature of the work of 1995 was the increased involvement of modern biotechnologies such as nuclear-based molecular methods, in vitro culture techniques and monoclonal antibodies for pest management, mutation plant-breeding programmes and diagnostic tests for animal diseases.

In Peru, a new barley mutant created with radiation mutation techniques was officially released for large-scale production. In China, with the support of IAEA/FAO projects, nearly 600,000 hectares of early-season rice were cultivated with mutant varieties, increasing rice production by about 263,000 tonnes. Other projects were helping farmers to raise new mutants of rice, sorghum and cassava in Africa, and cattle farmers in Latin America. Substantial progress was made using sterile-insect techniques to eradicate the tsetse fly from the island of Zanzibar and the Mediterranean fruit fly from Chile.

The Agency also continued to provide assistance in monitoring radionuclide contamination and producing uncontaminated food to regions where agriculture was affected by radionuclide contamination from the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear power station accident, including Belarus and Ukraine.

Physical and chemical sciences

The Agency's activities in the physical and chemical sciences covered the applications of nuclear and atomic data, nuclear instrumentation, theoretical physics, the utilization of research reactors and particle accelerators and chemistry. Specific services to member States included the provision of databases, as well as coordination and technical support of efforts to develop selected nuclear technologies.

In 1995, an extensive fusion evaluated nuclear data library (FENDL-1) was validated and tested in order to support engineering design activities for the International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor. The curricula of interregional training courses dealing with interfacing in nuclear experiments and radiation measurements for applications were revised to include information on new instruments and general trends in nuclear technology.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics in Trieste, Italy, organized 57 courses, 12 research activities, 1 training scheme and 1 lecture series, totalling some 5,900 visits, of which 64 per cent were from developing countries.

Human health

Agency activities in the area of human health focused on the common concerns of developing member States that could be most effectively addressed using nuclear technologies. The programme promoted the diagnosis and treatment of cancer, the accurate evaluation of nutritional deficiencies in women and children, the timely detection of infections and communicable diseases, and radiation dosimetry. Advances in molecular biology facilitated the introduction in 1995 of a new area of work centred on genetic disorders which, together with other programme components, such as nutritional studies, was placing increased emphasis on aspects of preventive medicine.

In 1995, the network of IAEA/World Health Organization Secondary Dosimetry Laboratories increased to 73 laboratories and 6 national organizations in 58 member States, as well as 14 affiliated members. A new service was introduced at the Agency's dosimetry laboratory at Seibersdorf, Austria, aimed at developing international standards for the calibration of radiation sources used in brachytherapy.

An intercomparison of gamma ray irradiation beams between nine calibration laboratories, organized in collaboration with the Bureau International des Poids et Mesures, was completed. A new Agency Code of Practice for the calibration and use of plan parallel ionization chambers in therapeutic electron and photon beams was submitted for publication.

IAEA initiated a new, coordinated research programme on the use of irradiated sewage sludge to increase soil fertility and crop fields and help preserve the environment. Its aim was to find ways by which solid and liquid wastes from households could be utilized as a source of organic matter and nutrients for increasing crop production.

Technical cooperation

Important steps were taken in 1995 to ensure that the Technical Cooperation Programme, approved by the Board of Governors in 1994, was results-oriented and efficient. At the centre of the new approach was the Model Project concept, which had 23 projects under way with encouraging initial results. In the area of radiation protection and waste safety infrastructure, some 50 countries were expected to be in compliance with the requirements of the Agency's Basic Safety Standards as a result of new integrated management arrangements between IAEA and member States.

A total of 307 operational projects were completed during the year. Some 119 training courses were held, of which 86 took place in developing countries. New resources for the Programme totalled $63.5 million in 1995, representing a 20 per cent increase over 1994.

There were 3,857 expert and lecturer assignments in 1995, making it another record year and representing a 20 per cent increase over 1994. Over half were carried out by experts (including IAEA staff members) from developing countries. The Agency placed and trained 1,355 fellows and scientific visitors during 1995, 18 per cent more than in 1994.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

During 1995, 2,285 safeguards inspections were performed. IAEA maintained a continuous presence of inspectors in Iraq, where the Agency carried out activities related to the destruction, removal and rendering harmless of items requiring such action pursuant to a 1991 Security Council resolution (see PART TWO, Chapter IV). As at 31 December 1995, 207 safeguards agreements were in force with 125 States (and with Taiwan), compared with 200 agreements with 119 States (and with Taiwan) at the end of 1994. Safeguards agreements pursuant to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT)^b entered into force with Croatia in January, Myanmar in April, Zimbabwe in June and Belarus and Kazakhstan in August. In 1995, there were 884 nuclear facilities, other locations and non-nuclear installations subject to IAEA safeguards in 68 countries.

Safeguards were applied in 53 States under agreements pursuant to NPT or to NPT and the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco),^c in two States under the Treaty of Tlatelolco, and in three States pursuant to a comprehensive safeguards agreement. Safeguards pursuant to NPT in Iraq continued to be submitted under activities pursuant to a 1991 Security Council resolution (see PART TWO, Chapter IV). IAEA also applied safeguards to nuclear installations in Taiwan. Although the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) withdrew from IAEA on 13 June 1994, the validity of the safeguards agreement remained in force. In 1995, IAEA maintained a continuous presence of inspectors in the DPRK to verify the freeze of its graphite moderated reactors and related facilities (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

NPT safeguards were in force with all 11 signatories of the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Rarotonga Treaty); safeguards were applied in one of those States. Twenty-two of the 30 States party to the Treaty of Tlatelolco concluded safeguards agreements with IAEA. As at 31 December, safeguards agreements pursuant to the Treaty were in force with 19 States. Safeguards agreements pursuant to Additional Protocol I of the Treaty of Tlatelolco were in force with two States with territories in the zone of application of the Treaty. A safeguards agreement pursuant to NPT and the Treaty of Tlatelolco entered into force with Bolivia in February. A safeguards agreement with Chile pursuant to the Treaty of Tlatelolco entered into force in April. A sui generis comprehensive safeguards agreement with Ukraine entered into force in January.

As requested in 1994 by the IAEA General Conference, the Agency continued to assist African States in their effort to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone and, in particular, to help develop its verification regime. A proposed text, which entrusted IAEA with the task of verification, was adopted by the African heads of State at Addis Ababa in June (see PART ONE, Chapter II).

The General Conference in 1995 requested all parties directly concerned in the Middle East to consider taking steps to establish a mutually and effectively verifiable nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region. The Director General continued consultations with the States of the Middle East to facilitate the early application of full-scope Agency safeguards to all nuclear activities in the region and the preparation of model verification agreements.

Nuclear information

In 1995, Internet access to the Agency's nuclear and atomic databases was improved in response to the rapid developments in computer networks. The databases provided accurate and up-to-date files for a variety of nuclear technology applications, such as reactor dosimetry and radiation safety, fusion reactor development, waste management, radiotherapy, and safeguards and material analysis. The use of on-line data retrievals increased by about 50 per cent, benefiting several hundred end-users in 41 member States.

The International Nuclear Information System, with 94 States and 17 international organizations, had a bibliographic database of 1,856,206 records. In addition, IAEA published over 200 books, reports, journal issues or booklets in English.

Secretariat

At the end of 1995, the IAEA secretariat had 2,295 staff members, including 890 in the Professional and higher categories and 1,405 in the General Service category; 90 nationalities were represented in posts subject to geographical distribution.

Budget

The regular budget for 1995 amounted to $258,500,000 of which $248,000,000 was to be financed from contributions by member States on the basis of the 1995 scale of assessment, $7,500,000 from income from reimbursable work for others and $3,000,000 from other miscellaneous income. The actual expenditures of the Agency's regular budget amounted to $253,000,000, of which $245,000,000 was related to the Agency's programmes. The unused budget from Agency programmes amounted to $5,800,000.

The target for voluntary contributions to the Technical Assistance and Cooperation Fund in 1995 was established at $61.5 million, of which $47.7 million was pledged by member States.

Chapter II

International Labour Organization (ILO)

In 1995, the International Labour Organization (ILO), which is based in Geneva, continued to promote social justice and economic stability and to improve labour conditions. Established in 1919 as an autonomous institution associated with the League of Nations, ILO had three primary objectives, namely promoting democracy and human rights, fighting unemployment and poverty, and ensuring equality and adequate protection for workers.

ILO membership in 1995 increased to 173, with the admission of the Gambia and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines.

Meetings

The eighty-second session of the International Labour Conference (Geneva, 6-23 June) considered the annual report of the ILO Governing Body and the report of the Director-General calling for increased emphasis on employment issues in the work of the organization.

The Conference adopted new standards on safety and health in mines and prepared the groundwork for adoption in 1996 of an international agreement to protect homeworkers.

An informal meeting of labour ministers at the Conference reviewed the role of ILO in follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development (Copenhagen, 6-12 March). ILO had been closely involved with preparations for the Summit (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX).

The following industrial and regional meetings were convened during 1995: the Coal Mines Committee (11-19 January), the fourth Tripartite Technical Meeting for the Clothing Industry (1-9 February), the Joint Meeting on the Impact of Structural Adjustment in the Public Services (Efficiency, Quality Improvement and Working Conditions) (24-30 May), the Chemical Industries Committee (10-18 May), the Fifth European Regional Conference (20-27 September), the Tripartite Meeting on Social and Labour Issues concerning Migrant Workers in the Construction Industry (20-27 September), and the Meeting of Experts on Labour Statistics on the Measurement of Unemployment (30 October-3 November).

International standards

ILO activities concerning Conventions and Recommendations during 1995 included standard-setting and the supervision and promotion of the application of standards. Supervisory bodies engaged in a review of existing procedures and standard-setting policy, coinciding with the implementation of simplified reporting on ratified Conventions.

Standard-setting

In 1995, the International Labour Conference adopted the Safety and Health in Mines Convention (No. 176) and Recommendation (No. 183) and the optional Protocol of 1995 to the 1947 Labour Inspection Convention, which extended the scope of that Convention to non-commercial services. The 1990 Night Work Convention (No. 171) came into force on 4 January 1995, and the 1992 Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Convention (No. 173) came into force on 8 June 1995, both having received two ratifications.

During the year, 93 ratifications of ILO Conventions by 32 member States were registered, resulting in the further increase of total ratifications of many important instruments, including those on basic human rights (freedom of association, discrimination, forced labour and child labour) and other issues such as labour inspection, tripartite consultation and employment policy.

Supervision of standards

The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations held two sessions in 1995 (16 February-3 March and 23 November-8 December) at which it dealt with a record total of 464 observations from employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee noted during its first meeting 36 instances in which Governments changed their law and practice to come into conformity with ratified Conventions, following the Committee's earlier comments. At its second session, the Committee noted 37 such instances.

The Committee carried out a general survey and a special survey of the application by all member States of selected international labour standards. The general survey, prepared for the first session, dealt with the 1982 Termination of Employment Convention (No. 158) and Recommendation (No. 166).^a The special survey, prepared during the second session, examined reports from States which had not ratified the 1958 Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention (No. 111).^b

^a YUN 1982, p. 1518.

The Governing Body Committee on Freedom of Association met three times in 1995 to examine the complaints of violations of freedom of association received from employers' and workers' organizations.

Promotion

Specialists on international labour standards were included on multidisciplinary teams set up in various developing regions to help both Governments and employers' and workers' organizations with standard-setting and supervisory procedures and to assist in the integration of standards into ILO operational activities.

Employment and development

ILO published in 1995 a new report, World Employment 1995, which analysed trends in the employment situation worldwide. The report, which examined the pattern of, and factors behind, the current global employment crisis, helped ILO to design policy measures at the national and international levels to combat growing unemployment in an increasingly global environment. The ILO analytical and technical advisory work in the field of employment concentrated on policies towards employment-intensive growth, workers' protection (including migrant workers) and active labour market policies.

Working environment

The International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment continued to assist countries in promoting occupational safety and health and improving working conditions. In June 1995, the International Labour Conference adopted the Safety and Health in Mines Convention (No. 176) and its accompanying Recommendation (No. 183).

The twelfth session of the Joint ILO/WHO Committee on Occupational Health was convened in April 1995. ILO also played a leading role in preparations for the XIVth World Congress on Occupational Safety and Health, to be convened in Madrid in April 1996. In March 1995, ILO, FAO, OECD, UNEP, UNIDO and WHO signed a Memorandum of Understanding defining their co-operation in an Inter-Organization Programme for the Sound Management of Chemicals (IOMC). IOMC was linked through a mutual consultation process with the Intergovernmental Forum on Chemical Safety (IFCS), formed in 1994, and the International Programme on Chemical Safety (IPCS) to create a practical and flexible three-level framework to help member States improve safety in the production, handling, use and disposal of chemicals.

In 1995, technical cooperation activities, such as national training workshops and preparation of training materials, focused on improving conditions of work and productivity in the garment industry in Africa, Asia and Latin America. Also in those regions, national projects, training workshops and seminars continued to enhance national action on prevention of major industrial and other accidents during hazardous activities such as construction and the use of chemicals.

ILO published six issues of the bulletin Safety and Health at Work in English and French, distributed compact discs containing safety and health databases, and prepared World Wide Web pages on occupational safety and health. Among 1995 publications were Conditions of Work, a digest focusing on working time around the world, and manuals on work organizations and ergonomics, stress, sexual harassment and elder care. A chapter in the World Labour Report addressed problems and prospects of older workers with the ageing of societies. In addition, the bulk of the fourth edition of the ILO Encyclopedia of Occupational Health and Safety was compiled, to be published in four volumes and on CD-ROM in 1997.

The Interdepartmental Project on Environment and the World of Work supported action to enhance the capacity of ILO constituents to implement relevant decisions, recommendations and requests emanating from the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development^c and its Agenda 21. A series of more than 20 National Desk Reviews were prepared to highlight the role of Governments and employers' and workers' organizations in implementing Agenda 21 activities at the national, local and enterprise levels.

Field activities

In 1995, expenditure on operational activities, under all sources of funding, totalled $112.9 million, a level similar to 1994. The three leading programmes were in enterprise and cooperative development ($22.5 million), development and technical cooperation ($25 million) and training (more than $13 million). Other programmes dealt with working conditions and environment ($12 million), including an International Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour, and employment ($6 million). Interregional and global activities accounted for some $18 million. In terms of regional distribution, Africa accounted for over 37 per cent of total expenditure (more than $42 million), Asia and the Pacific for 25 per cent (nearly $29 million), and Latin America and the Caribbean for 12 per cent (more than $12 million). Expenditure in Europe increased from $6 million in 1994 to $9 million in 1995, due to ILO assistance to a growing number of countries in Central and Eastern Europe. Arab States' programmes increased by 91 per cent over 1994, to $2.7 million.

Educational activities

ILO continued to undertake research, provide advice and organize activities aimed at enhancing the capacity of policymakers to review and reform training systems and the effectiveness of training delivery. Special programmes concentrated on facilitating the adoption by member States of policies and measures to counteract social exclusion and promote social integration, particularly of persons with disabilities and, in countries emerging from armed conflict, of large numbers of ex-combatants and displaced persons.

ILO's International Institute for Labour Studies continued its work on the changing relationship between labour institutions, the organization of production and economic development through its research networks, social policy forums and publications. Its work on social exclusion focused on the relationship between poverty, employment and social integration and elaborated a new policy paradigm which emphasized the value of participation and social dialogue in ensuring the cohesion of civil society. Research was also completed on the role of labour institutions in Asian economic success. A new project on the impact of economic interdependence was launched to map global commodity chains with a view to identifying social and industrial policies which facilitated access to global markets and capital. An Asian network embarked on a research project to identify national policies that maintained competitiveness in world markets while avoiding both social exclusion and protectionist measures.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1995, the total number of full-time staff under permanent, fixed- and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and elsewhere was 2,634. Of those, 1,020 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,614 were in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the Professional staff, 295 were assigned to technical cooperation projects.

Budget

The International Labour Conference in June 1995 adopted a budget of $579.5 million for the 1996-1997 biennium.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

In 1995, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) continued to assist farmers, fishermen and foresters to improve their standards of living and produce more foods using techniques that did not degrade the environment. Established in 1945 to raise levels of nutrition, improve agricultural productivity and better the condition of the rural poor, FAO's main objective remained the achievement of global food security, where everyone would have access at all times to the food needed for an active and healthy life.

During the year, Azerbaijan, Georgia, the Republic of Moldova, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan joined the organization, bringing its membership to 174 nations, in addition to the European Community as a member organization and Puerto Rico as an associate member.

The FAO Conference, the organization's governing body, held its twenty-eighth biennial session in Rome from 20 October to 2 November. Highlights of the Conference included adoption of a Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries, the first international code to address all facets involved in the sustainable development of an entire natural resource sector. The Code covered world fisheries and aquaculture issues, including fisheries resource conservation and development, fish catches, seafood and fish processing, commercialization, trade and research. It was non-binding except for the Agreement on measures to ensure compliance with resources management schemes in the high seas, which was approved by the FAO Conference in 1993.^a

The Conference also gave its approval to the Quebec Declaration, which reaffirmed the international community's dedication to the principles on which FAO was founded and pledged political support for its mission to help build a world where all people could live, confident of food security. The Declaration was initially adopted during fiftieth anniversary commemorations in Quebec City, Canada, in October.

In addition, the Conference unanimously decided to hold a World Food Summit in Rome in November 1996 (see also PART FOUR, Chapter XIII). Summit objectives would include raising global awareness of and commitment to redressing the food security problem and adopting a plan of action to achieve sustained progress towards universal food security. The Conference decided that the plan of action would outline concrete activities aimed at constantly improving global food security, in particular at the household level, from both a quantitative and nutritional perspective, within the framework of sustainable development.

World food situation

In 1995, global agriculture production stagnated, reflecting below-average performance in most developed and developing country regions, and virtually unchanged aggregate production levels in the countries in transition. Total crop and livestock production rose at an estimated rate of only 0.2 per cent, compared to a 2.9 per cent increase in 1994.

One of the most significant features in 1995 was the 8 per cent drop in crop and livestock output in the United States, where cereal crops alone, affected by adverse weather, fell by over 20 per cent. In the European Union, overall agriculture output continued its declining trend of the previous few years. On the other hand, Australian production expanded by 12.8 per cent, more than offsetting a sharp shortfall in 1994.

In the countries in transition, 1995 saw the halt of the steady decrease in overall agriculture production since the beginning of their economic reforms, with total production remaining virtually unchanged from 1994. Developing countries, however, reported deteriorating overall agricultural performance in 1995 compared to 1994, with the exception of sub-Saharan Africa, which saw a 2.4 per cent increase. Agricultural growth also slowed in the regions of the Far East and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean, both reporting rates of 1.8 per cent in 1995. In the Near East and North Africa, production growth slowed to 1.7 per cent, remaining well short of population growth for the third consecutive year.

FAO's Global Information and Early Warning System (GIEWS), which monitored crop and food outlook at global and national levels to detect emerging food shortages and disasters, issued warnings of developing drought in southern Africa in 1994-1995, as it had in 1991-1992, several months in advance of the harvest. Since its inception in 1975, the System had issued 338 special alerts to the international community on the deteriorating food supply prospects in various parts of the world. GIEWS also analysed emergency food aid requests from Governments, which resulted in the approval of 40 emergency operations in 1994-1995, for a total value of $1.4 billion.

Activities

Emergency assistance

At least 26 countries worldwide faced acute food shortages in 1995, requiring exceptional and/or emergency food assistance. More than half of those were in Africa, which remained the continent most seriously affected by food shortages. Global food shipments in 1995-1996 fell to the lowest levels in 20 years.

In spite of some good harvests in eastern Africa, large-scale emergency assistance was needed in the region throughout 1995. Projects focused on the provision of agricultural inputs, coordination of emergency assistance, and support for urgent rehabilitation of the agricultural sector in Rwanda, paving the way for reconstruction of its economy. Overall, the food supply situation was satisfactory in western and central Africa, reflecting above-average to record harvests in most countries.

Elsewhere, food supply situations remained grave in Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Georgia, Iraq, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, Nepal and Tajikistan. The situations in Armenia, Haiti and the Republic of Moldova were improving, though some assistance was still needed.

The FAO Office for Special Relief Operations (OSRO) concentrated operational activities on Bosnia and Herzegovina, where it supplied basic agricultural inputs; Iraq, where it provided plant protection, seeds, veterinary vaccines, goats and feed; and Rwanda, where it supported the urgent rehabilitation of the agricultural sector. Altogether, there were 27 newly approved OSRO projects in 1995, amounting to $21 million. During the year, OSRO participated in inter-agency missions to Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, the Caribbean islands, Iraq, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia and the Sudan; and issued additional appeals for Afghanistan, Haiti, Malawi/Mozambique/Zambia, the former Yugoslavia and Zaire. It appointed coordinators for agricultural intervention in Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Iraq, Liberia, Rwanda and Sierra Leone.

In order to continue meeting emergency food needs, the FAO Conference in October 1995 established pledging targets for 1997 and 1998 at $1.3 billion. A pledging conference for that purpose was to be convened at UN Headquarters in 1996.

Field programmes

In 1995, 1,850 field projects, totalling $264.1 million, were under way, providing technical advice and support in all areas of food and agriculture, fisheries, forestry and rural development. They were funded through trust funds provided by donor countries and other international sources ($165.1 million), the United Nations Development Programme ($58.3 million) and the Technical Cooperation Programme from FAO's regular budget ($40.8 million).

During the year, international financing institutions approved some $2 billion in funding for 31 agricultural and rural development projects, prepared with the assistance of FAO's Investment Centre. Total investments in those projects, including contributions from recipient Governments, amounted to $3.3 billion.

Crops

Seeking to ensure that agricultural production met expanding human needs, FAO undertook a range of activities, including conservation and use of plant biological diversity; crop management and diversification; seed production and improvement; crop protection; agricultural engineering and prevention of food losses; and food and agricultural industries.

Discussions were under way in 1995 to make legally binding the Prior Informed Consent Clause of the 1985 International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides. The clause, which was amended to the Code in 1989, maintained that pesticides restricted or banned for health or environmental reasons should not be exported without the consent of the importing country.

FAO continued its Integrated Pest Management programmes, conducted in close collaboration with non-governmental organizations, which emphasized biological control methods and training of farmers to diagnose and treat pest damage. Drawing attention to desert locust invasions in Africa and Asia, including Pakistan and India, in October the FAO Conference urged the establishment of a relief fund to cope with emergency situations arising from such invasions.

The organization continued to provide support for the global coordination of the Special Programme for Food Security, launched in 1994 to assist target countries to increase food production and productivity as rapidly as possible, primarily through the widespread adoption by farmers of available improved production technologies.

Livestock

In 1995, FAO responded to a major outbreak of a cattle disease in southern Tanzania, which threatened Zambia, Malawi and the rest of southern Africa, with a $334,000 control campaign. The project was initiated by FAO's newly established Emergency Prevention System for Transboundary Plant Pests and Animal Diseases.

FAO's ongoing livestock activities included improving feed resources and feeding systems, animal health, genetic resources and production systems, including both the meat and dairy sectors. Sustainable feeding systems were given high priority. In semi-arid and arid zones, FAO concentrated on improving fodder conservation, fodder trees and grazing systems. In humid and sub-humid regions, it focused on providing high-quality feed from nitrogen-fixing legumes adapted to local means of production.

Fisheries

In March, the FAO Committee on Fisheries agreed on the Rome Consensus on World Fisheries, which called for additional urgent action to eliminate overfishing and rebuild and enhance depleting fish stocks. The Committee urged member countries to minimize wasteful fisheries practices, develop further sustainable aquaculture, rehabilitate fish habitats and develop fisheries for new and alternate species based on scientific principles of sustainability and responsible management. Without such action, further declines would occur in the 70 per cent of the world's fish stocks which were regarded as fully exploited, overexploited, depleted or recovering.

The State of World Fisheries and Aquaculture, released in 1995, warned that unless the international community coped with the twin problems of overfishing and overcapacity, world per capita fish consumption would fall over the next 15 years. The report emphasized that in order to keep per capita consumption at current levels, aquaculture would have to double its production.

In October, the FAO Conference adopted a Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries. It also urged acceptance of the 1993 Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas, so as to bring it into force as soon as possible. As at 31 October 1995, only 7 countries had accepted the Agreement, which needed 18 acceptances to bring it into force.

Forestry

The twelfth session of the FAO Committee on Forestry met in March 1995 and agreed on the Rome Statement on Forestry, which asked for full and urgent implementation of decisions taken at the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 1992. The Summit had called for the protection, sustainable management and conservation of the world's forests. The first State of the World's Forests report was released by FAO during the session, which was attended by 121 countries. It was the first major study on the role of forests in sustainable development and the state of forest resources. It brought together information from the Forest Resources Assessment and other important FAO studies, including two regional reviews in Europe and Latin America and the Caribbean.

Food standards and nutrition

In 1995, the Codex Alimentarius Commission—the joint FAO/WHO body responsible for international food standards—adopted recommendations on the Maximum Residue Limits for growth-promoting hormones used in food production, despite a European Union ban on the use of these substances in its member countries. Veterinary drugs promoting animal growth were used in major meat-producing countries such as the United States and Australia. The Codex Commission approved the maximum residue levels after extensive review of scientific information indicated their safety to the consumer.

FAO continued to promote better nutrition by providing member countries with advice, information and technical assistance in three broad areas: formulation and implementation of national food policies and nutrition programmes; provision of technical and legislative advice on measures to ensure the quality and safety of food supplied; and assessment and monitoring of nutrition situations, including monitoring the effects of food and agricultural policies and development activities on nutrition.

Plant and animal genetic resources

In 1995, FAO established the World Information and Early Warning System on Plant Genetic Resources, in order to obtain information on such resources and halt the loss and further erosion of valuable plant germplasm of food crops. The System, featuring a database with information on about 4.8 million germplasm accessions held in some 1,220 genebanks or botanical gardens, also aimed to assess plant genetic resources erosion in seed collections as well as in natural stands.

In October, the FAO Conference decided to broaden the mandate of the Commission on Plant Genetic Resources to cover all components of biodiversity of relevance to food and agriculture and to rename it Commission on Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture. The broadened mandate of the Commission was to be carried out through a step-by-step approach, beginning with animal genetic resources.

According to the 1995 edition of the World Watch List for Domestic Animal Diversity, published jointly by FAO and the United Nations Environment Programme, many of the world's 4,000 to 5,000 farm animal breeds were disappearing at an alarming rate, possibly as high as three breeds every two weeks. A global database, maintained by FAO as part of a comprehensive five-year programme begun in 1992 to conserve and promote the sustainable use of animal genetic resources, listed 3,882 breeds of 38 species, of which 873, or 30 per cent, were at risk.

Information

FAO continued to function as an information centre, collecting, analysing, interpreting and disseminating information through various media, including print, radio, television, video, film and photo displays and exhibitions. Materials produced included information booklets, technical documents, reference papers and reports of meetings, training manuals and audiovisuals.

Major FAO periodicals published on a regular basis included the annual Food and Agricultural Legislation, the FAO Quarterly Bulletin of Statistics, a forestry quarterly called Unasylva, the World Animal Review and Plant Protection Bulletin, both quarterlies, and the annual Rural Development. FAO yearbooks were issued on rural development, trade, fertilizers, forest products, field projects, fishery statistics and animal health.

AGROSTAT PC, an electronic version of FAO's Statistical Yearbooks, designed to be used on a simple personal computer, provided updated figures on all agriculture-related topics in six files: population, land use, production, trade, food balance sheets and forest products. FAO compiled and coordinated an extensive range of international databases on agriculture, fisheries, forestry, food and statistics. The two most important were AGRIS (the International Information System for the Agricultural Sciences and Technology) and CARIS (the Current Agricultural Research Information System). Other important statistical information produced by FAO included the Fisheries Statistical Database, Globefish Databank and Electronic Library, Forest Resources Information System, and the Geographic Information System. FAO operated the World Agricultural Information Centre (WAICENT) designed to meet the increasing supply and demand for and improve access to agricultural data, particularly to external users, via the Internet, floppy disks and CD-Roms. WAICENT can be reached on the World Wide Web at <http://www.fao.org> and on Gopher at gopher.fao.org.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1995, the number of staff employed at FAO headquarters was 2,682, of whom 960 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,656 in the General Service category. Field project personnel and those in regional and country offices numbered 1,991. There were also 232 Associate Professional Officers working at headquarters, regional offices and in the field.

Budget

The FAO Conference in 1995 approved a working budget for the 1996-1997 biennium of $650 million. The largest appropriation in that budget was $299 million for technical and economic programmes, followed by $113 million for development

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued in 1995 to promote cooperation among nations in education, science, culture and communication.

The General Conference convened its twenty-eighth session in 1995 (25 October-16 November) at the organization's headquarters in Paris. It adopted the medium-term strategy for 1996-2001 and the programme and budget for 1996-1997, which focused, in particular, on the needs of four priority groups: women, youth, the least developed countries and Africa. The Executive Board, consisting of members elected by the General Conference, held three sessions during the year.

The membership of UNESCO increased in 1995 to 184 with the admission of the Marshall Islands.

Education

UNESCO activities towards the goal of education for all (EFA) in 1995 emphasized the development of flexible and diversified forms of education and training at all levels. Through its basic EFA programme, the organization sought to increase the provision and improve the quality and relevance of basic education, especially for girls and women and other particularly disadvantaged groups, such as street children. The 1995 World Education Report, published in December, focused on progress towards education for all women and girls and on gender issues in basic education.

Efforts continued to promote EFA in the nine high-population developing countries. Following a special meeting at the World Summit for Social Development in March, the nine countries organized a ministerial meeting in Indonesia (12-16 September) to review progress towards the goals agreed at their 1993 New Delhi summit meeting.^a UNESCO continued to provide the secretariat for the International EFA Forum, which launched a mid-decade review by member States of progress towards EFA, in accordance with the Jomtien Framework for Action to Meet Basic Learning Needs, which was adopted at the 1990 World Conference on Education for All, held in Thailand.

Special attention was paid to the educational needs of the least developed countries. Among 1995 initiatives towards basic EFA were new programmes and cooperative projects in Bangladesh and several African States. In addition, the organization provided technical support to rebuild the education systems of the emerging States of Eastern Europe and Central Asia and increased assistance to the education of refugees in all regions.

The Learning without Frontiers Coordination Unit was established and became operational in 1995. It undertook pilot projects in support of networking government, non-governmental organization and community initiatives in basic education in Costa Rica and Mauritius. Preparations were under way for a similar project in India.

In addition to EFA, UNESCO placed a high priority on the renewal and advancement of higher levels of education and the reform of education systems as a whole from the perspective of lifelong education—secondary education, technical and vocational education, teacher education and higher education. The organization continued its Project 2000+ on scientific and technological literacy for all and expanded the International Project on Technical and Vocational Education.

Under the 1991 initiative to foster inter-university cooperation (UNITWIN) the UNITWIN/UNESCO Chairs Programme expanded in 1995 to a total of 133 established Chairs and 29 inter-university networks, linking higher education institutions and research centres in more than 90 member States. Another UNESCO partnership, the Associated Schools Project network, increased to 3,562 schools in 126 countries by the end of the year.

In the area of preventive education against drug abuse and AIDS, activities focused on awareness-building, technical assistance and preparation of teaching and information materials in support of national initiatives. UNESCO also participated in the UN co-sponsored programme on HIV/AIDS.

Natural sciences

Under the programme on science for progress and the environment, UNESCO activities in 1995

focused on science and technology for development and on environment and natural resources management, including follow-up to the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED), earth sciences, terrestrial ecosystems, marine science-related issues and hydrology and water resources management. As task manager within the UN system for two chapters of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED, UNESCO continued to give priority attention to science and to education and public awareness-raising for sustainable development.

The preparatory process for the 1996 World Solar Summit continued, promoting collaboration on renewable energy technology, development and deployment and the provision of energy services, particularly for rural and remote areas in developing countries. Nine regional high-level expert meetings were held and assistance was given to member States in establishing national and regional solar councils and programmes.

In 1995, UNESCO organized eight conferences in developing countries through its University-Industry-Science Partnership (UNISPAR) programme. Among other cooperative efforts in 1995, the International Centre for Theoretical Physics, in cooperation with UNESCO and the International Atomic Energy Agency, provided advanced training for some 2,000 physicists; UNESCO and Iowa State University (United States) supported the International Institute for Theoretical and Applied Physics in Ames, Iowa; the second phase of the UNESCO/Third World Academy of Sciences project on South-South cooperation in research training was launched in August; and the international programme Chemistry for Life was carried out in partnership with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), the International Centre of Pure and Applied Chemistry, and the International Organization for Chemical Sciences in Development.

Through its Biotechnology Action Council, UNESCO provided support and training for young researchers in the fields of microbial, plant, industrial and environmental biotechnologies. In May, an agreement was signed between UNESCO and the Government of Poland on the establishment and running of the International Institute of Molecular and Cell Biology in Warsaw. The Institute opened in October, when the Conference on New Frontiers in Cell and Molecular Biology was convened. UNESCO and the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology organized the third South-North Human Genome Conference (4-7 December) in New Delhi, India. Together with the International Cell Research Organization, UNESCO organized 14 training courses in 1995 for young researchers in such fields as molecular genetics, biotechnology of cell cultures, and monoclonal antibodies.

UNESCO's Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission held its eighteenth session from 13 to 27 June in Paris, adopting its 1996-1997 programme of work. It also considered preparations for the 1998 International Year of the Ocean; the launching of the UNESCO interdisciplinary project on environment and development in coastal regions and small islands; creation of the Global Coral Reef Monitoring Network; and implementation of the Harmful Algal Blooms programme.

The World Network of Biosphere Reserves under the Man and the Biosphere (MAB) programme, whose aim was to improve the relationship between humankind and the environment, consisted of 337 sites in 85 countries. MAB convened the International Conference on Biosphere Reserves in Seville, Spain (20-25 March), which resulted in the Seville Strategy for Biosphere Reserves and the Statutory Framework for the World Network of Biosphere Reserves. The documents were reviewed by the MAB International Council (Paris, 12-16 June) and subsequently endorsed by the UNESCO General Conference.

The International Hydrological Programme, which supported 44 projects, met in Paris from 30 January to 4 February. The International Geological Correlation Programme, which had 52 earth sciences projects worldwide, held regional meetings in Austria and Kenya.

Social and human sciences

UNESCO activities in the social sciences during 1995 continued to promote knowledge of and adherence to the values of human rights, democracy, peace and tolerance. The organization's work against all forms of discrimination, xenophobia and racism gave special priority to minorities and indigenous people. In October 1995, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the UNESCO Director-General signed a Memorandum of Understanding.

UNESCO served as lead agency for the 1995 UN Year for Tolerance, which brought a campaign for tolerance to every region of the world through seven high-level regional conferences. There was also a diverse year-long programme of meetings, concerts, film and theatre festivals, poster contests, broadcasts, exhibitions and publications. A Declaration of Principles on Tolerance and a Follow-up Plan of Action were adopted by the General Conference on UNESCO's fiftieth anniversary—16 November—and that day was proclaimed the International Day of Tolerance (see also PART FOUR Chapter IX). Two new prizes were established by the UNESCO Executive Board: the UNESCO-Madanjeet Singh Prize for the Promotion of Tolerance and Non-Violence and the UNESCO Prize for Children's and Young People's Literature in the Service of Tolerance.

UNESCO contributed to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development and its follow-up (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX) by mobilizing the intellectual community and helping to formulate strategies against poverty, unemployment and social exclusion. The organization published a booklet, Perspectives on Social Development, and a series of papers on development issues and the integration of disabled people.

In 1995, UNESCO intensified its efforts to encourage member States to develop appropriate policies and programmes to stimulate the active participation of youth in their societies. Consolidation of the INFOYOUTH networks helped improve young people's access to information on training opportunities, international exchanges and other relevant subjects. The World Collective Consultation on Youth NGOs was convened in Japan in September.

Culture

UNESCO's cultural activities in 1995 highlighted the cultural dimension of development, protecting cultural heritage and promoting culture identities and intercultural dialogue. Under the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997), efforts were made to strengthen cultural information exchange networks and integrate a cultural dimension into development policies and projects. Culturally sensitive development strategies were discussed by the General Conference and the UN General Assembly in the context of a report entitled "Our Creative Diversity", which was submitted in November by the World Commission on Culture and Development.

To highlight intercultural dialogue, a series of projects focused on the routes that linked cultures and civilizations through history, and the consequent interactions and impact on world culture. The series took the form of expeditions, films, studies and publications on the Silk Road in Central Asia; the Slave Route between Africa and the Americas; the Routes of al-Andalus, the meeting point between Europe, the Maghreb and Black Africa; and the Roads of Faith leading to Jerusalem. In October, an international conference on Slav Cultures and modern civilizations was held in Sofia, Bulgaria.

By the end of the year, the number of sites of outstanding value which should be preserved as the heritage of all humankind that were included on UNESCO's list of protected cultural and natural sites had risen to 469. The sites were selected by the World Heritage Committee from candidates proposed by the 144 States parties to the 1972 Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage. International youth groups were organized in Mali, Romania and the Russian Federation for the protection of cultural heritage sites, and the first World Heritage Youth Forum was held in Norway in June.

The UNESCO Prize for the Promotion of the Arts was awarded to artists Kcho (Cuba), Marja Kanervo (Finland) and Matej Kren (Slovakia); and the Crafts Prize was awarded to E. Contreras Aquise, a painter from Peru. The Intergovernmental Committee of the Universal Copyright Convention, in June, examined legal problems relating to the production, dissemination and exploitation of multimedia works, protecting the findings of research in genetics, and piracy of intellectual works and other productions. In 1995, UNESCO published 135 titles and produced 9 CD-ROMs, including a multimedia CD-ROM on the organization's history to mark UNESCO's fiftieth anniversary.

Communication

To encourage the free flow of ideas and help reinforce communication, information and informatics in developing countries, UNESCO in 1995 continued its efforts to ensure press freedom and the independence of the media. Support was provided to independent media in conflict zones. An international symposium on women and the media (Toronto, Canada) contributed to the Fourth World Conference on Women.

The main operational tool of UNESCO's communications strategy, the International Programme for the Development of Communication, celebrated its fifteenth anniversary in 1995. Since its creation, the Programme had provided some $65 million to fund 600 projects worldwide. In November, a network of UNESCO Chairs in Communication was officially inaugurated with nine chairs in Canada, Europe and Latin America.

Through its Memory of the World Programme, which aimed at safeguarding the recorded memory of humanity, UNESCO continued international campaigns, such as the programme for the restoration of the National and University Library of Bosnia and Herzegovina. In 1995, the Programme's mandate was enlarged to cover trends in information technologies, as well as legal aspects of electronic information.

The General Information Programme continued to promote cooperation in the field of information and access to knowledge (libraries, archives and documentation), with emphasis on tools for information management. In September, the Intergovernmental Informatics Programme launched 19 projects aimed at training informatics specialists. An African Regional Symposium on Telematics for Development (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, April) addressed the interdisciplinary issue of new information and communication technologies.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, UNESCO had a full-time staff of 2,438, of whom 1,012 were in the Professional or higher categories, drawn from 153 nationalities, and 1,426 were in the General Service category.

1994-1995 biennium. In 1995, the General Conference approved a budget of $518,445,000 for the 1996-1997 biennium. The level of the Working Capital Fund was fixed at $25,000,000 and the total assessment on member States after deducting miscellaneous income was $516,445,000.

The General Conference of UNESCO, at its 1993 session, approved a budget of $455,490,000 for the

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

In 1995, the World Health Organization (WHO) continued its work in areas such as disease prevention and control; encouraging primary health care and ending malnutrition; promoting the health of specific population groups; addressing health issues related to environment, development and lifestyle; and supporting health care, organization and management worldwide.

The World Health Assembly, which is the governing body of WHO, in its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 1-12 May), adopted a series of resolutions calling for further action by the organization on the following public health issues: emergency and humanitarian action; cooperation with countries in greatest need; reproductive health; new, emerging and re-emerging infectious diseases; prevention of hearing impairment; control of diarrhoeal diseases and acute respiratory infections; an international strategy for tobacco control; and assistance for health needs of the Arab population in the occupied Arab territories. As an outcome of the 1995 Assembly, WHO published, for the first time, an annual report on world health, which outlined poverty as the main cause of disease in the world. The Assembly adopted a regular budget for 1996-1997 representing a growth of 2.5 per cent from the 1994-1995 figure.

As at 31 December 1995, WHO membership stood at 190, with the addition of one new member (Palau) during the year. In addition, two countries were associate members.

Health system infrastructure

During 1995, WHO provided technical support in the area of health infrastructure to several low-income countries to ensure the inclusion of health considerations in economic development projects. Research was also initiated with the goal of improving urban health services. A health system research network was set up linking countries of North, Central and South America. Regional task forces for this type of research were set up in the Eastern Mediterranean and South-East Asia. In Europe, the focus was on the countries of eastern Europe, where health systems research was especially weak.

Health policy

WHO continued to direct action and resources towards countries rather than specific programmes, emphasizing the links between poverty and ill-health through its focus on intensified cooperation with countries and people most in need. This initiative had 28 participating countries in 1995, which WHO assisted in developing health policy, strengthening health systems and putting sustainable-health financing systems into place. In addition, WHO worked with other agencies and with donors to encourage a more focused and increased flow of funds and their more effective use by countries. It also supported countries in ensuring regular access to drugs.

With a view to improving coordination, WHO sought collaboration with other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations active in the health field. Within the framework of the United Nations, an initiative for African economic recovery and development was launched, with health-sector reform and disease control as one of its components. During 1995, WHO strengthened its collaboration with the World Bank and several regional development banks, the Organization for African Unity and the European Union.

At the World Summit for Social Development (Copenhagen, March 1995) (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX), WHO advocated strengthening partnerships for health development and mobilizing the political commitment to view it in the context of economic and social development.

Public information and education for health

WHO continued in 1995 to disseminate health information widely, particularly in the form of epidemiological and statistical data, reports, guidelines, training modules and periodicals. For that purpose, increasing use was made of informatics and telematics, including the Internet.

During the year, the organization was developing an action plan, covering the period to the beginning of the twenty-first century, in the areas of health promotion and health education, building infrastructures around existing economic and other arrangements and WHO's regional structure. South Africa was taking the lead in southern Africa, and Hungary in Europe. A health promotion alliance was being developed among the more populated countries, including China, India, Indonesia, the Russian Federation and the United States.

WHO also launched in 1995 an initiative for re-orienting medical education and public health training towards the twenty-first century. The organization, along with the Kellogg Foundation, supported Bolivia, Mexico and Zimbabwe in taking practical measures to establish an optimally balanced and productive workforce of health care personnel. WHO also supported training in health care financing and health insurance and in quality assurance. Through its fellowships programme, the organization continued to provide opportunities for carefully selected health professionals to obtain the necessary skills to direct, guide and support health development in their countries, within the framework of human resources planning and clearly defined priorities.

Health protection and promotion

WHO promoted community-based prevention of noncommunicable diseases as the strategy to reduce risk factors and morbidity and increase life expectancy. In 1995, the organization coordinated four major cardiovascular disease research projects and supported epidemiological surveys (for instance, on diabetes) in several countries. It also supported the development of national programmes for the control of major hereditary diseases and congenital malformations, and monitored international human genome research.

WHO's INTERHEALTH project revealed unfavourable nutrition trends globally: in most countries the availability of dietary fat was increasing, whereas the availability of vegetable protein and total carbohydrates, particularly starch, was decreasing. WHO encouraged countries to reduce malnutrition and promote good nutrition and provided information on the prevention, management and monitoring of malnutrition. Forty-seven member States had adopted education programmes aimed at preventing non-communicable diseases related to lifestyle and diet.

WHO also provided normative information on monitoring, prevention and management of major crippling forms of malnutrition, with emphasis on protein-energy malnutrition and micronutrient malnutrition, such as iodine deficiency disorders, vitamin A deficiency, and nutritional anaemia. The organization also gave support to countries in dealing with infant and young child nutrition in emergency situations.

As part of its efforts to prevent food-borne illnesses, WHO was studying the microbiological contamination of foods and patterns of human behaviour that might lead to the growth or survival of Vibrio cholerae and other food-borne pathogens. The organization issued a report recommending measures to control newly emerging food-borne pathogens such as trematodes.

The Joint FAO/WHO Codex Alimentarius Commission continued to ensure that internationally agreed food standards, guidelines and other recommendations were consistent with health protection. With the creation of the World Trade Organization in 1995 (see PART SEVEN, Chapter XVIII), the Codex was used as the international reference for national requirements.

Health of specific populations

WHO statistics demonstrated that since 1960 infant mortality had fallen from 130 to 60 per 1,000 live births and child mortality had fallen from 180 to 80 per 1,000 live births, largely as a result of immunization campaigns against six vaccine-preventable diseases (diphtheria, pertussis, tetanus, measles, tuberculosis and poliomyelitis), which had been undertaken with intensive support from WHO, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the international community. By 1995, the goal of 80 per cent coverage for those vaccines (except tetanus toxoid) had been achieved globally, but 25 countries (19 in Africa) still reported coverage below 50 per cent for all six vaccines. Comprehensive plans of action were developed in six African countries, but major efforts were still urgently needed to cover the remaining 19 countries.

Since the goal of global eradication of poliomyelitis was set in 1988, reported cases of the disease had declined by about 85 per cent by 1995. Between 1991 and 1995, global measles immunization coverage had remained at about 80 per cent; since immunization began, the number of cases had declined by 70 per cent and the number of deaths by 83 per cent. The disease was targeted for elimination in the Americas by the year 2000, and many other countries were pursuing innovative immunization strategies.

Substantial progress was made globally in the elimination of neonatal tetanus, particularly in the Americas and South-East Asia. By 1995, more than 700,000 deaths were being prevented annually through routine immunization of women with tetanus toxoid, and through improved hygienic birth practices. In 1980, 76 countries reported fewer than one neonatal tetanus death per 1,000 live births annually; by 1995, the number of countries had increased to 122.

WHO, along with UNICEF, jointly developed an approach for the integrated management of the sick child, which gave attention to both prevention and treatment of childhood disease. The WHO/UNICEF course on management of childhood illness enabled health workers in outpatient clinics and health centres to manage effectively infant and childhood illnesses such as diarrhoea, pneumonia, measles, malaria and malnutrition in an integrated fashion. The course was based on treatment guidelines developed by WHO and covering the most common potentially fatal conditions.

Recent WHO research had confirmed strong links between health, school attendance and education attainment. The organization's global school health initiative was concerned with the various hazards to which the world's school-age children and adolescents—more than 1 billion, almost 700 million of whom were primary school age (6-11 years)—were exposed, such as injuries, sexually transmitted diseases and substance abuse.

Recognizing that the key to controlling cervical cancer in women was health education, early detection and screening, WHO pioneered pragmatic, realistic approaches for its early detection by visual inspection, for affordable radiotherapy and for the relief of pain and symptoms of incurable cases. The International Agency for Research on Cancer, which coordinated and conducted epidemiological laboratory research aimed at developing strategies for cancer prevention, in 1995 published conclusive evidence of the role of human papilloma virus as a cause of cervical cancer. The Agency assessed potential vaccines against the virus and investigated methods of screening for precancerous and cancerous lesions of the cervix.

Also recognizing that reproductive health was central to health in general, WHO set up a new programme on that subject, bringing together various related activities and ensuring better coordination of research and technical support. The programme was designed to draw up a comprehensive strategy, define norms and standards, and develop technical tools for addressing reproductive health concerns in countries.

A major issue for WHO in the field of ageing and health was healthy ageing in women. In 1995, the third meeting of the Global Commission on Women's Health focused on the health conditions that women faced later in life and strategies that would help older women enjoy good health and improved quality of life.

Environment, health and development

In 1995, WHO cooperated with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the World Bank and UNICEF to develop community participation approaches in the area of water supply and sanitation, which could also be effective in changing hygiene behaviour. As coordinator of the Water Supply and Sanitation Collaborative Council's working group on the promotion of sanitation, WHO supported several initiatives to raise awareness of the need for improved sanitation and promoted the partnership roles of international agencies, donors, ministries, nongovernmental organizations and academic institutions in that respect.

Among other WHO projects, the Healthy Cities network was expanded during 1995 and achieved specific environmental improvements, such as in reducing urban air pollution. The Global Environmental Monitoring System was tackling the problem of identification and control of emission sources. Capacity for management of air quality was assessed in 20 cities to identify immediate needs for technical cooperation.

WHO also collaborated with UNDP, the World Bank and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in establishing a comprehensive strategy on the increasingly serious problem of disposal of health care wastes, particularly in urban areas.

Disease prevention and control

WHO strengthened its capacity to combat new and re-emerging infectious diseases, as certain diseases had become increasingly resistant to antibiotic drugs. That was demonstrated with the outbreak of Ebola haemorrhagic fever in Zaire in 1995, when staff were mobilized and teams placed on site within 24 hours of notification of the outbreak, together with the supplies and equipment required to implement epidemic control measures. To prepare for such emergencies, WHO used innovative field technology and public health training programmes to support country surveillance and disease control, and was developing a network of public health laboratories to strengthen regional and international collaboration in the detection and control of outbreaks.

As part of its work in detecting and monitoring resistance to antimicrobials, WHO established an information system (WHONET) to support the global surveillance of bacterial resistance to antimicrobial agents, with the participation by the end of 1995 of 177 laboratories in 31 countries or areas.

During the year, WHO was active with partners, including UNICEF, in controlling diphtheria epidemics in the Russian Federation, some newly independent States and Mongolia. National immunization days were organized in late 1995, targeting the vulnerable population aged between 16 and 40.

In 1995, when the incidence of tuberculosis was on the rise, WHO issued training materials and a handbook on the subject of the disease and supported workshops in 15 countries. In February, WHO announced the composition of the influenza vaccine for the 1995-96 season, replacing two of the three components that had been included in the vaccine for the previous season.

WHO studies were carried out on various aspects of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), such as the protective effect of the female condom, the efficacy of a long-acting vaginal microbicide; preparation of field-testing sites for vaccines; preventing mother-to-child transmission; and a number of sociological investigations. Training in condom promotion continued in most regions. WHO was involved during 1995 in the setting up of a joint United Nations programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), which was to become operational on 1 January 1996.

WHO concluded an agreement with Swiss Disaster Relief to provide technical assistance in epidemic diarrhoea control and preparedness, and established links with other agencies and organizations working in the same field. For instance, collaboration began with the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies in the newly independent States of Eastern Europe and Central Asia.

Under the southern African initiative for control of epidemic diarrhoea, a team in Harare, Zimbabwe, continued in 1995 to coordinate activities aimed at improved preparedness and response to outbreaks of cholera and epidemic dysentery. Five African countries received support in the areas of policy formulation, developing surveillance systems and strengthening laboratory services. Surveillance and control strategies were set up in refugee camps in the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire. Six African countries faced with outbreaks of cholera or dysentery received technical assistance and emergency supplies.

WHO helped to fight malaria on many fronts in 1995. It established an interregional system for monitoring drug resistance in South-East Asia and the western Pacific; supported research on such subjects as drug regimens and new diagnostic techniques; provided training for programme managers, specialists, district medical officers and community health workers; issued training materials; and assisted in control measures in refugee camps in Burundi, Rwanda, Tanzania and Zaire. WHO-led research enabled scientists to modify the genes of Plasmodium falciparum, the deadliest malaria parasite, opening up the possibility of developing new techniques for diagnosis and drug and vaccine development. The organization also supported national control programmes in Indonesia, Myanmar and Thailand designed to eliminate the mosquito vectors of dengue fever and dengue haemorrhagic fever.

WHO also participated in implementing the vaccination campaign that controlled the epidemic of jungle yellow fever in Peru in 1995, the largest outbreak recorded since 1950. It provided technical support and diagnostic reagents and assisted in vaccine procurement for the immunization strategy used to control Japanese encephalitis in endemic areas of India, Sri Lanka and Thailand. In regard to another insect-borne disease, the organization set up a leishmaniasis surveillance network of 14 institutions worldwide and cooperated with the Sudan and Bangladesh in combating this disease, mainly through the use of insecticide-impregnated bednets. It prepared guidelines for the control of African trypanosomiasis (sleeping sickness) on behalf of Angola and Zaire, developed plans of action for other countries and established a revolving fund for the supply of drugs to national programmes. Campaigns to combat onchocerciasis in African countries and to eliminate Chagas disease from countries in South America also made good progress during 1995.

During the year, WHO reassessed the distribution and prevalence of Schistosomiasis in the world and its social and economic impact. Trials demonstrated the safety and efficacy of a combination of albendazole against common intestinal helminths and praziquantel against Schistosomiasis.

With dracunculiasis (guinea-worm disease) on the verge of eradication, WHO's priorities were to facilitate the work of the independent International Commission for the Certification of Eradication, created in 1995, and to achieve the interruption of transmission as quickly as technically feasible. The objectives were to search for remaining, unknown foci of the disease; to verify whether low-risk countries were dracunculiasis-free; and to secure the necessary funding to complete the eradication process.

Budget

At its 1995 session, the World Health Assembly adopted a budget of $842,654,000 for the 1996-1997 biennium, which represents a 2.5 per cent increase over the 1994-1995 figure of $822,101,000.

Chapter VI

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

Established in 1945, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) continued in 1995 to help promote economic and social progress in developing nations by raising productivity. Together with its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), the World Bank provided loans to the developing world as well as assistance in designing and implementing policies to expand markets and strengthen economies of developing countries. The use of its guarantee powers, which became a standard operational tool of the World Bank during fiscal 1995, was part of the Bank's role in managing the rapid changes in the new global economy across a continuum of different country needs with a flexible array of interventions.

During the year, the Bank demonstrated its flexibility and responsiveness to diverse client needs in a number of ways: through approval of $1 billion in finance to support financial sector reform in Mexico; emergency assistance to the Russian Federation to contain and clean up a massive oil spill 1,000 miles north-east of Moscow near the Arctic circle; financing of emergency recovery programmes in Burundi and Rwanda; and provision of emergency assistance to Haiti to halt that country's economic and social deterioration.

The Debt-reduction Facility continued to provide low-income countries with grant funds to reduce commercial debt that was public, external, non-collateralized and unguaranteed. The facility was financed through contributions from the Bank's net income and from donors. Eight operations were completed in 1995 (for Bolivia, Guyana, Mozambique, Niger, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Uganda, Zambia), utilizing about $79.6 million Bank resources from the facility and $74.3 million in co-financing to extinguish about $1 billion in principal. Eight additional operations (Albania, Ethiopia, Guinea, Mauritania, Nicaragua, Senegal, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam) were in preparation.

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), another bank affiliate, approved financing of $2.9 million for 213 projects. The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency, the youngest member of the World Bank Group, continued to encourage direct foreign investment by guaranteeing (or insuring) private investments against specific non-commercial notes.

While 25 countries had "graduated" or phased out their reliance on World Bank lending, in 1995 the Republic of Korea became the first country ever to progress from being a purely concessional borrower from IDA, to being an IDA donor and a World Bank graduate. The Republic of Korea reached the milestone with the signing on 3 March 1995 of its two final loan agreements with the Bank.

At the end of fiscal 1995 (1 July 1994-30 June 1995), World Bank membership totalled 178, with admission pending for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brunei Darussalam and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

In March, World Bank executive directors unanimously appointed James D. Wolfensohn as the Bank's ninth president, for a term of five years beginning 1 June 1995.

Lending operations

Gross distributions by the Bank to countries in fiscal 1995 totalled $12,672 million, an increase of 21 per cent over fiscal 1994. Disbursement performance was higher than originally expected in Europe and Central Asia, mostly due to adjustment operations, and in the Latin America and Caribbean and the East Asia and Pacific regions, where, although the adjustment portfolio was declining, disbursements for investment projects were accelerating.

The largest borrower of Bank funds was Mexico ($2,387 million for six projects), followed by China ($2,370 million for 13 projects) and Russia ($1,741 million for nine projects). One $20 million project in the West Bank and Gaza was approved. The project, financed by the $50 million Trust Fund for Gaza, was financing the immediate needs of the education and health sectors and addressed institutional development objectives in the two sectors. Bank commitments amounted to $16.9 billion, up $2.6 billion over the fiscal 1994 total. A major increase was posted in the Europe and Central Asia region, which saw commitments rise from $3.7 billion for 42 projects to $4.5 billion for 58 projects.

To meet a growing demand for support of private sector investment, the Bank continued in fiscal 1995 to deliver innovative operations to support local financial institutions and markets. Financial sector adjustment loans totalled $1.2 billion, and financial intermediation loans amounted to $1.8 billion. The adjustment loans helped create a competitive financial sector, while the intermediation loans fed it. A $1 billion Financial Sector Restructuring Programme, approved in June 1995, involved the definition of comprehensive bank-failure resolution mechanisms and was detailed in specifying how accounting, auditing and supervision functions were to be upgraded.

At the World Summit for Social Development (Copenhagen, Denmark, March 1995) (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX), the Bank announced plans to increase social spending by 50 per cent over the next three years. It committed itself to providing $15 billion for basic social needs and a further $5 billion for water supply and sanitation programmes. Lending for basic social needs during fiscal 1995 alone amounted to $3,907 million: $2,097 for education-sector projects, $1,162 million for projects and components in the population, health and nutrition sector, and $648 million for projects in the social sector. In fiscal 1995, cumulative lending for education amounted to $21,579 million through more than 500 projects in over 100 countries. Lending for human resource development increased sharply from an average of about 5 per cent of the total in the 1980s to 15 per cent in the period fiscal 1993-1995. Since 1986, the Bank had loaned more than $800 million to 51 HIV/AIDS projects in nearly 40 countries, and, between fiscal 1993 and fiscal 1995, the Bank loaned almost $1 billion in support of population and reproductive health objectives.

Bank assistance to the poorest countries—those with a per capita gross national product of $695 or less (in terms of 1993 United States dollars)—totalled $3,770 million. Lending during fiscal 1995 for projects in the Bank's programme of targeted interventions (PTI) was 32 per cent of total investment lending. Projects were included in the PTI if they included a specific mechanism for targeting the poor or if the proportion of the poor among project beneficiaries significantly exceeded their proportion in the overall population. Of the 27 adjustment operations approved during fiscal 1995 (not including three debt reduction loans), 14, or 52 per cent, were poverty focused.

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency

The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA), established in 1988 as the newest member of the World Bank Group, continued to help promote investment for economic development in member countries through guarantees to foreign investors against losses caused by non-commercial risks and through advisory and consultative services. MIGA had its own operating and legal staff but drew on the Bank for administrative and other services.

During fiscal 1995, seven additional countries became members of MIGA, bringing its total membership to 128. An additional 24 developing countries and economies in transition were in the process of fulfilling membership requirements.

MIGA guarantee-programme results in fiscal 1995 exceeded fiscal 1994 records for the number of guarantee contracts executed (54 versus 38), the total amount of coverage issued ($672 million versus $372.6 million), the number of developing countries benefitted (21 versus 14) and the amount of income earned from premiums and commitment fees ($14.4 million versus $9.9 million). The contracts issued in fiscal 1995 facilitated total direct investment of about $2.5 billion and created an estimated 8,800 jobs in developing countries. MIGA issued for the first time significant amounts of coverage ($142 million) for infrastructure investments, including its first power and toll-road projects.

Economic Development Institute

While much of the work of the World Bank Group was involved in the transfer of capital to developing countries, the Economic Development Institute (EDI) focused on the transfer of knowledge. During fiscal 1995, it held 167 conferences, seminars and workshops in all regions of the world, with particular focus on sub-Saharan Africa and the former Soviet Union. During the year, EDI published 47 titles in support of its programmes and made use of new information technologies, including videos, teleconferencing, the Internet and CD-ROMs.

Following elections in South Africa, EDI mounted a number of programmes there, including an interactive workshop on sustainable fiscal policies. Its Grass-roots Management Training Programme was extended to Burkina Faso, India, Nigeria and Senegal. Under that programme, EDI trained local trainers to pass on grass-roots management practices to poor, often illiterate women operating tiny enterprises.

Co-financing

During the year, the Bank's Co-financing and Financial Advisory Services (CFS) continued to facilitate the flow of financial resources to developing countries by carrying out various activities related to co-financing, project finance and guarantees, private sector development and technical assistance financing. The volume of co-financing anticipated in support of World Bank-assisted operations in fiscal 1995 declined marginally to $8.2 billion. Official co-financing flows increased to $6.6 billion, while the volume of export credits and private co-financing fell from fiscal 1994 levels. In terms of lending instruments, investment loans attracted the largest volume of co-financing support, followed by structural adjustment and financial intermediation loans.

Japan continued to be the major source of bilateral co-financing, reaching a total of $1.2 billion for 17 projects approved during the year. Other large bilateral co-financing support came from Germany ($289 million equivalent), France ($264 million equivalent), the United Kingdom ($184 million equivalent) and the United States ($148 million equivalent). Total co-financing expected from multilateral financial institutions amounted to an additional $3.9 billion.

Financing activities

During fiscal 1995, the Bank raised $9 billion through medium- and long-term borrowings in seven currencies. After $1 billion of currency swaps and a notional par volume of $782 million of interest-rate swaps, all of the year's borrowings (except for $216 million raised in United States dollars to fund single-currency loans and minor residuals in vehicle currencies) were fixed-rate liabilities denominated in United States dollars, Japanese yen, Deutsche mark and Swiss francs.

As at 30 June 1995, short-term borrowings outstanding were $3.9 billion before and after swaps. Those comprised $2.6 billion from official sources through the Bank's central facility, $1.2 billion from market funding in United States dollar notes, and $0.1 billion from global multicurrency notes. The cost of those borrowings in fiscal 1995 was 5.85 per cent compared with 4.94 per cent at the end of fiscal 1994.

Scholarships

In fiscal 1995, the World Bank Graduate Scholarship Programme awarded 106 scholarships to support graduate studies for mid-career officials of member countries.

Capitalization

As at 30 June 1995, the total subscribed capital of the Bank was $176.4 billion, or 94 per cent of authorized capital of $184 billion. The permissible increase of net disbursements was $75.3 billion, or 38 per cent of the Bank's lending limit.

Income, expenditures and reserves

The Bank's gross revenues totalled $9,372 million in fiscal 1995. Net income was $1,354 million, an increase of $303 million over the fiscal 1994 net income of $1,051 million. Expenses increased by some $460 million to $7,899 million. Administrative costs amounted to $842 million, i.e. $111 million more than in fiscal 1994. As at 30 June 1995, the Bank's reserves amounted to $17.2 billion. The reserves-to-loan ratio stood at 14.3 per cent.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1995, World Bank regular and fixed-term staff numbered 7,155, of whom 4,655 were higher-level staff representing 157 nations.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC) was established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to promote economic development in developing countries by encouraging the growth of private enterprise and efficient capital markets. During fiscal year 1995 (1 July 1994-30 June 1995), IFC continued to encourage private-sector activity in the developing world by financing private-sector projects, mobilizing capital for companies, and providing technical assistance and advisory services to private businesses and Governments. IFC also continued to strengthen its environmental monitoring of projects and increase the provision of risk management services.

During the 1995 fiscal year, IFC membership increased to 165 with the admission of Armenia, Georgia, the Republic of Moldova and Tajikistan.

Financial and advisory services

During fiscal 1995, IFC's Board of Directors approved $2.9 billion in financing for 213 projects covering a broad range of sectors, compared with $2.6 billion for 231 projects during fiscal 1994. The total cost of IFC-financed projects was $19.5 billion and their primary focus was on infrastructure and the financial sector (including capital markets). Financing approved for IFC's own account included loans totalling $2 billion, equity and quasi-equity investments of $821.6 million, and guarantees, swaps and stand-by arrangements of $82.2 million.

Successful resource mobilization resulted in other investors and lenders providing $5.73 for every $1 in finance approved by IFC for its own account during fiscal 1995. Some of that financing was in the form of syndicated loans, in which IFC shared the commercial risks of projects with co-financing partners and provided its lender-of-record umbrella. In addition, IFC was involved in structuring and arranging the mobilization of $306 million through the launching of pooled investment vehicles for emerging markets. The total value of securities issued by IFC client companies on a private placement basis during fiscal 1995 amounted to $389.2 million.

Strong demand for IFC technical assistance and advisory services continued in 1995, resulting in a diversity of projects in over 100 countries or regions around the world. Projects in member countries included assistance in privatizing State-owned enterprises; supporting small and medium-sized enterprises by using project facilities, venture capital funds, credit lines and leasing companies; developing capital markets; drafting securities markets laws and regulations; shaping the regulatory environment for new types of financial institutions; establishing supervisory and enforcement entities and mechanisms for securities markets; and creating or developing stock exchanges.

The scope of IFC's Technical Assistance Trust Funds activities expanded in 1995, with 65 new projects in 32 countries. There was a continued emphasis on privatization and corporate restructuring, technical assistance in capital markets, development of project facilities, and advisory services in infrastructure and foreign investment.

Risk management services offered by IFC helped to provide private companies in developing countries with the tools to manage financial risks associated with movements in exchange rates, interest rates and commodity prices. In 1995, IFC approved seven risk management projects for companies and banks located primarily in Central Asia and Latin America.

IFC continued to help companies in several countries to phase out their use of ozone-depleting substances and increase their attention to eco-efficiency. It further strengthened its environmental monitoring and supervision of projects, reviewing more than 290 project proposals for potential environmental risks. It also sponsored global training programmes on environmental risk management, which attracted representatives of 102 private-sector institutions from 14 countries across Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America.

IFC continued innovative work in promoting index funds as an alternate method for investors to access emerging markets. The first emerging market index fund for Latin America was developed in 1995 with an initial size of $60 million, succeeding a global index fund that IFC launched in 1994 with State Street Global Advisors, which had grown from $50 million to more than $1 billion. By June 1995, more than 1,450 companies were listed on the 26 emerging stock market indexes compiled and tracked by IFC's Emerging Markets Data Base, an increase of 10 per cent over 1994. South Africa—the world's largest emerging stock market—was added to IFC index coverage in April 1995.

Regional projects

IFC approved investments in 67 countries during fiscal 1995, up from 65 in 1994, with Latin America and the Caribbean receiving the greatest dollar share (37 per cent); followed by Asia (24 per cent); Europe (14 per cent); Central Asia, the Middle East and North Africa (13 per cent); and sub-Saharan Africa (11 per cent). Fifty-seven of the 213 projects approved—representing $688.7 million in financing—were in countries with annual per capita incomes of $695 or less.

In sub-Saharan Africa, the IFC Board approved $431 million in financing for 51 projects in 21 countries during 1995. IFC's focus in the region was on developing small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), with 60 per cent of projects financed through the Africa Enterprise Fund (AEF), which furnished direct assistance to SMEs by providing financing of $100,000 to $1.5 million for small enterprise projects that cost between $250,000 and $5 million. IFC also established a new facility, the Enterprise Support Service for Africa (ESSA), to provide technical assistance to businesses after they secured financing.

In Asia, the IFC Board approved $1.44 billion in financing for 43 projects in 10 countries, plus two projects with a regional scope. IFC expanded its investment activities across a range of infrastructure projects during 1995, as rapid growth of the region's productive sectors created pressure on infrastructure which demanded large amounts of risk finance. IFC also helped to establish the first institution in the region (and in the developing world) to help securitize assets and issue new debt securities.

In Central Asia, the Middle East and North Africa (known as CAMENA), IFC approved $614 million in financing for 34 projects in nine countries, plus three projects with a regional scope. IFC made it a priority to open the region's infrastructure to private capital and develop its capital markets, as well as to support the development of natural resources and provide financing and advice for privatizing industrial complexes. A major achievement of IFC during the year was placement of $327 million in syndications covering 13 of the region's 34 projects.

In Europe, IFC approved $636 million in financing for 26 projects in 10 countries, plus two projects with a regional scope. Its broad strategy was to assist with the transition to successful market economies through a range of instruments, of which technical assistance and advisory services were the most important. IFC gave high priority to creating effective, well-regulated capital markets and investing in a number of equity funds to provide seed capital to promising ventures in the region.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, IFC approved $2.3 billion in financing for 53 projects in 17 countries, plus two projects with a regional scope. It actively supported the efforts of regional governments to strengthen local capital markets through investments, institution-building, and technical assistance and advisory work. Following the virtual closure of international capital markets to certain firms in Argentina and Mexico in 1994, IFC responded by helping to finance their capital expenditure programmes as well as to develop new instruments for regional investment. In Haiti, IFC was appointed as special adviser to the Government on the privatization of seven public enterprises encompassing key economic sectors.

Foreign Investment Advisory Service

The Foreign Investment Advisory Service (FIAS), operated jointly with the World Bank, completed 26 assignments in 1995, including advisory projects in 25 countries and the implementation of projects in two others. FIAS also conducted a number of seminars on foreign investment policy, including a conference on new developments in foreign investment for policy makers and promotion agencies in Latin America and a round table on policy aspects of developing linkages between foreign and domestic firms in Asia. A multi-year programme of institutional development for the Board of Investment of Bangladesh was brought to a close during the year. FIAS also initiated a new research activity to review methods of privatization and assess their likely impact on the participation of foreign investors in the process.

Financial performance

In fiscal year 1995, IFC's net income was $188 million, reflecting a 27 per cent drop from a record high in 1994 due mainly to the decline in the value of global stock markets. The equity portfolio generated $131 million in income. Capital gains totalled $82 million, while dividends increased markedly relative to 1994, reaching a record level of $50 million. As in previous years, a substantial share of dividend income came from companies paying dividends for the first time.

IFC's total committed portfolio increased by 20 per cent to $9.5 billion, up from $7.9 billion in fiscal 1994. The portfolio included loans and equity investments in 938 companies in 94 countries. IFC issued 19 AAA-rated bonds during 1995, totalling $2.08 billion in 10 currencies.

Capital and retained earnings

At the end of fiscal year 1995, IFC's net worth reached $3.6 billion, compared with $3.2 billion at the end of fiscal 1994.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1995, there were 832 regular staff at IFC, representing 97 countries.

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA) was established in 1960 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to provide concessionary assistance to low-income countries in keeping with the Bank's goals of poverty reduction and economic development.

Efforts continued in 1995 to reduce the debt burden of severely indebted poor countries through support for policy reform, provision of IDA credits and extraordinary IDA allocation for countries engaged in debt workouts, "Fifth Dimension" allocations, funding from the Debt-reduction Facility for IDA-only countries to reduce commercial debt and technical assistance for debt management. Through the "Fifth Dimension" programme, financed out of IDA refolds, additional IDA allocations were provided to IDA-only countries that had outstanding World Bank debt, were current in their debt service to the Bank and IDA, and had an IDA-supported adjustment programme. Those allocations were in proportion to the Bank interest due in that year. In fiscal 1995 (1 July 1994-30 June 1995), the programme provided supplemental IDA allocations totalling $185.8 million to 14 countries.

The funds used by IDA—called credits to distinguish them from World Bank loans—were derived from several sources: subscriptions in convertible currencies from members; general replenishments from its more developed members; and transfers from the Bank's net earnings. Credits had 35- to 40-year maturities, including a 10-year grace period, and were interest free.

Fiscal year 1995 was the second year of the tenth replenishment of IDA (IDA-10), the agreed size of which was 13 billion special drawing rights (SDR). As at 30 June 1995, the donor funds made available for the IDA-10 period (fiscal 1994-1996) totalled SDR 7,642 million. During fiscal 1995, formal notifications to contribute to IDA-10 were received from Belgium, Portugal and Spain, which increased commitment authority to SDR 208 million. Part of the second tranche of IDA-10 contributions was not yet available, as the United States payment was about 8 per cent less than the agreed schedule and two other donors (Germany and Canada) exercised their right to withhold their contributions proportionately to the shortfall of the United States payment.

Other resources made available during the year included the transfer of SDR 207 million from the World Bank's fiscal 1994 net income and SDR 931 million of commitment authority against current and future repayments from past credits. Therefore, during 1995, total available resources for the IDA-10 period increased to SDR 10,303 million.

Against those resources, IDA made IDA-10 commitments of SDR 3,829 million during fiscal 1995. Of that amount, 39 per cent went to Africa, 25 per cent to South Asia, 19 per cent to East Asia and the Pacific, 10 per cent to Europe and Central Asia, 6 per cent to Latin America and the Caribbean, and 1 per cent to the Middle East and North Africa.

In 1995, the three largest borrowers of IDA credits were India ($945 million for six projects, plus one "blend" project), China ($630 million for three projects, plus five "blend" projects) and Viet Nam ($415 million for three projects). IDA-financed projects in those countries focused on agriculture; education; population, health and nutrition; power; and public sector management.

IDA membership in 1995 increased to 158, with the admission of Azerbaijan. At the end of fiscal 1995, action was pending on IDA membership for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brunei Darussalam, Ukraine and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Secretariat

Though legally and financially distinct from the World Bank, the staffing and headquarters of IDA were the same as those of the Bank.

Chapter IX

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

In 1995, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) continued to increase its operations in almost every aspect of its work and made far-reaching changes in policies and practices governing its relations with member countries. In the light of the changed world economic environment of increased globalization and integration of markets for goods, services and capital, IMF worked to strengthen surveillance over members' exchange-rate policies and to adapt its financial instruments and procedures. It also reviewed the adequacy of its financial resources in carrying out its responsibilities.

The Fund's 1995 fiscal year covered the period from 1 May 1994 to 30 April 1995.

During 1995, IMF membership rose to 181, with the admission of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Brunei Darussalam.

IMF facilities and policies

IMF provided financial assistance to its members through several facilities and policies to help them achieve sustainable economic growth and balance-of-payments viability and establish normal relations with their creditors. Stand-by arrangements, which focused on macroeconomic policies and aimed at overcoming balance-of-payments difficulties, generally covered periods of one to two years. The Fund made credit available for longer periods under extended fund facility (EFF) arrangements.

IMF'S role in assisting its low-income members to confront particularly pressing economic problems was a major focus of the deliberations of the IMF Executive Board during 1995. Progress was made on a joint initiative with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) to help resolve the debt problems of the most heavily-indebted poor countries.

The Fund also focused on financing arrangements to ensure the continued functioning of the enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF), which provided low-income member states with loans on concessional terms to support medium-term macroeconomic adjustment policies and structural reforms. All available resources under the structural adjustment facility (SAF) were fully utilized in 1995, and no further commitments were expected. There was broad consensus at the April 1995 meeting of the IMF Executive Board that an ESAF-type facility should continue to be available, provided that the revolving nature of the Fund's resources and the monetary character of the Fund were respected. The rate of interest on SAF and ESAF loans was 0.5 per cent and loans were repayable over 5 1/2 to 10 years.

The compensatory and contingency financing facility (CCFF) provided members with resources to cover shortfalls in export earnings and services receipts and excesses in cereal import costs that were temporary and arising from events beyond their control. It also helped members with Fund arrangements to maintain the momentum of reforms when faced with adverse external shocks. During fiscal 1995, purchases under the CCFF, made by Algeria and the Republic of Moldova, totalled 300 million special drawing rights (SDR).

The systemic transformation facility (STF), created in April 1993 to meet the needs of economies in transition from centrally planned to market economies, provided financial assistance to twelve countries (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Croatia, Estonia, Georgia, Latvia, Romania, Slovak Republic, Ukraine, Uzbekistan, Vietnam) in fiscal 1995, with purchases totalling SDR 1.1 billion. STF ceased to be in effect as at 31 December 1995.

Financial assistance

During fiscal 1995, IMF disbursed a record SDR 11.2 billion to member States. It approved 17 stand-by, three EFF and 11 ESAF arrangements amounting to SDR 16.6 billion. As at 30 April 1995, there were 56 arrangements in effect for a total commitment of about SDR 23.4 billion, compared with commitments of SDR 8.4 billion a year earlier. They comprised 19 stand-by arrangements (Algeria, Cameroon, Congo, Croatia, Ecuador, Estonia, Haiti, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Malawi, Mexico, Republic of Moldova, Poland, Romania, Russia, Slovak Republic, Turkey and Ukraine), 9 EFF arrangements (Argentina, Egypt, Jamaica, Jordan, Lithuania, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, and Zimbabwe), 1 SAF arrangement (Sierra Leone), and 27 ESAF arrangements (Albania, Benin, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cote d'Ivoire, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Kyrgyz Republic, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Togo, Uganda, Vietnam, and Zimbabwe).

Liquidity

The Fund's liquidity position remained adequate during fiscal 1995, despite significant weakening in the last quarter due to large stand-by arrangements for Mexico, Russia and Ukraine, and the extension of Argentina's extended arrangement. As at 30 April 1995, the Fund's liquid resources totalled SDR 61.6 billion, compared with SDR 68.7 billion at the end of fiscal 1994. Uncommitted and adjusted usable liquid resources amounted to SDR 42.5 billion, compared with SDR 54.3 billion a year earlier.

Between April 1994 and April 1995, the Fund's liquid liabilities increased by SDR 1.3 billion to SDR 33.7 billion, representing an increase of SDR 2.4 billion in the reserve tranche positions of members and a decrease of SDR 1.1 billion in outstanding Fund obligations under borrowing arrangements. The ratio of the Fund's uncommitted and adjusted usable liquid resources to its liquid liabilities—the liquidity ratio—declined from 167.6 per cent to 126.1 per cent during the same period.

SDR activity

In fiscal 1995, the total amount of transfers nearly doubled to SDR 20.3 billion, from SDR 10.9 billion during the previous fiscal year, due to a sharp increase in transfers from the General Resources Account (GRA) and transfers among participants and prescribed holders. Total transfers from GRA rose substantially from SDR 4.4 billion in fiscal 1994 to SDR 7.9 billion in fiscal 1995, while transfers among participants and prescribed holders more than doubled to SDR 9.6 billion in fiscal 1995. These increases reflected a record volume of transactions by agreement, which increased to SDR 9 billion in fiscal 1995 from SDR 3.1 billion in fiscal 1994. These transactions continued to be facilitated by the "two-way" arrangement in effect between members and the Fund, under which members stood ready to buy or sell SDR for one or more freely usable currencies at any time, provided that their SDR holdings remained within certain limits. Twelve such arrangements were in effect as at 30 April 1995. Such arrangements facilitated the sale of SDR 3.5 billion by Mexico from its stand-by purchase in February 1995, the largest such transaction in the history of the SDR Department. Meanwhile, the level of prescribed operations declined to SDR 0.1 billion in fiscal 1995 from SDR 0.4 billion in fiscal 1994. Receipts of SDR by GRA rose from SDR 2.5 billion to SDR 2.9 billion during fiscal 1995, as the use of SDR in repurchases doubled from SDR 0.6 billion to SDR 1.2 billion.

The substantial transfers of SDR in fiscal 1995 resulted in a significant redistribution of holdings of SDR among major groups of holders. The heavy use of IMF resources by members in the latter half of the year helped to reduce the Fund's holdings of SDR from SDR 5 billion to SDR 1 billion by 30 April 1995. Debtor members sold a large proportion of SDR to members with two-way arrangements, most of which were industrial countries. As a result, SDR holdings of industrial countries increased by SDR 4 billion to SDR 15.3 billion during fiscal 1995; the holdings of developing countries grew marginally to SDR 4.1 billion during the fiscal year because debtor members received slightly more SDR from the Fund and other participants than they transferred. The holdings of prescribed holders increased from SDR 227 million to SDR 1 billion during fiscal 1995, largely due to the Fund's investments of SAF and ESAF resources in official SDR maintained with the Bank for International Settlements.

Policy on arrears

The level of outstanding overdue obligations rose slightly during fiscal 1995 to SDR 3 billion, reversing the decline seen in fiscal 1994. The unpaid maturing obligations of some existing overdue members more than offset the clearance of the arrears of other countries.

As at 30 April 1995, five countries remained ineligible to use the Fund's general resources, accounting for 96 per cent of total overdue obligations. Declarations of non-cooperation, a step further under the Fund's arrears strategy, remained in effect with respect to three countries.

Technical assistance and training

The Fund's provision of technical assistance continued to increase during fiscal 1995. The momentum of this trend was sustained by the problems and requirements of countries undergoing structural adjustment and systemic transformation. Approximately half the technical assistance was provided to African, European and Asian countries in transition.

During fiscal 1995, the IMF Institute provided training to some 1,248 people through residential courses and seminars at its headquarters in Washington, D.C., and at the Joint Vienna Institute. That training was complemented by 30 short overseas training courses on financial analysis and programming and 10 overseas seminars for senior officials, as well as by lecturing assistance for three regional training institutions, covering some 1,100 participants. The emphasis on training officials from economies in transition was continued with the organization of 14 courses and six seminars for central and eastern Europe, the Baltic countries, Russia, and other countries of the former Soviet Union.

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) continued during 1995 to promote the safety and efficiency of civil air transport by prescribing standards and recommending procedures for facilitating civil aviation operations. Its objectives were set forth in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, adopted in Chicago, United States, in 1944.

In 1995, domestic and international scheduled traffic of the world's airlines increased to some 292 billion tonne-kilometres. The airlines carried a total of about 1.29 billion passengers and some 21 million tonnes of freight. The passenger load factor on total scheduled services in 1995 increased by one percentage point over 1994, to 67 per cent, while the overall weight load factor remained at 60 per cent. Air freight rose by 9 per cent to 83.9 billion tonne-kilometres, and airmail traffic increased by about 4 per cent to 5.6 billion tonne-kilometres. Overall passenger/freight/mail tonne-kilometres increased by 7 per cent and international tonne-kilometres by 9 per cent.

The thirty-first session of the ICAO Assembly was held in Montreal, Canada, from 19 September to 4 October. Attended by 936 participants from 150 member States and 27 observer delegations, the Assembly elected a new ICAO Council, reviewed the organization's activities during the previous three years and adopted 29 resolutions guiding its future work. In addition to deciding the organization's programme budget and assessments for the next three years, the Assembly addressed such issues as increasing ICAO's effectiveness, implementation of the ICAO communications, navigation and surveillance/air traffic management (CNS/ATM) systems; controlled flight into terrain; improving accident prevention; smoking restrictions on international flights; and transition to a new policy on technical cooperation. In the light of the new political situation in South Africa, the Assembly declared that all previous resolutions restricting the participation of South Africa in ICAO activities were no longer in force. The Assembly also adopted a consolidated statement of continuing ICAO policies and practices related to environmental protection. The statement brought together all existing ICAO resolutions dealing with environmental protection and reiterated the need for the Council to maintain the initiative in developing policy guidance on aviation matters related to the environment.

The ICAO Council held three regular sessions in 1995, in accordance with its normal practice. The closing dates for two of its sessions were extended from 24 to 27 March and from 30 June to 7 July in order to complete certain items on its work programme. On 15 November, the Council re-elected Assad Kotaite as its President for a three-year term. Among actions taken by the Council in 1995 was the establishment of the CNS/ATM Implementation Committee. The Council also reviewed proposals regarding implementation of the ICAO safety oversight programme and agreed to establish a mechanism for financial and technical contributions to that programme.

In 1995, ICAO membership increased to 184 with the admission of Palau.

Activities in 1995

Air navigation

In 1995, ICAO continued to focus on updating and implementing international specifications and regional plans. The specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 18 technical Annexes to the 1944 Chicago Convention and Procedures for Air Navigation Services (PANS). Regional plans covered air navigation facilities and services required for international air navigation in ICAO regions.

Six air navigation meetings in 1995 made recommendations to amend ICAO specifications. Among them, the Special Communications/Operations Divisional Meeting in Montreal (27 March-7 April) developed a new strategy for the introduction and application of non-visual aids to precision approach and landing. The third meeting of the Committee on Aviation Environmental Protection, also in Montreal (5-15 December), discussed the potential effects of engine emissions in the upper atmosphere and made recommendations concerning emission limits.

In addition, the Council adopted amendments to five technical annexes to the Chicago Convention and three PANS documents. Other project areas that were given special attention during the year included accident investigation, prevention and data reporting; aerodrome rescue and fire fighting; airport and airspace congestion; audiovisual aids; aviation medicine; bird strikes to aircraft; a common geodetic reference system; CNS/ATM; controlled flight into terrain; flight safety and human factors; future larger aeroplanes; ground icing; meteorology; personnel licensing and training; safety oversight; and units of measurement.

Air transport

In 1995, ICAO continued its work in regulatory studies, economic research, analysis and forecasting, air transport statistics, airport and route facility management and promoting air transport.

The eleventh session of the Facilitation Division, held in Montreal in April, adopted more than 100 recommendations, including proposals for a number of new and revised Standards and Recommended Practices in Annex 9—Facilitation, to reflect modern concepts in the clearance of aircraft, cargo and passengers. A second meeting of the Air Navigation Services Economics Panel (Montreal, May) continued its work to revise and expand the Manual on Air Navigation Services Economics, and to develop guidance in funding, charging and managerial aspects pertaining to the global navigation satellite systems (GNSS). The Asia/Pacific Area Traffic Forecasting Group, which met in Sydney, Australia, in May, continued to expand the databases used to develop traffic forecasts for the Asia/Pacific region to assist in the development of air navigation systems planning. Four workshops were held in the areas of forecasting and economic planning, statistics and forecasting for systems planning, air transport regulatory policy and airport and route facility management.

ICAO continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies—the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

The organization maintained its responsibilities for the administration of the Danish and Icelandic Joint Financing Agreements, to which 23 Governments were contracting parties in 1995. The two agreements, which were signed in 1956 and amended in 1982, concerned the provision in Greenland and Iceland of air traffic control, communications and other facilities and services to North Atlantic flights.

Legal matters

A diplomatic conference was convened in Montreal from 25 to 29 September 1995. The Conference adopted the text of the Chicago Convention in Arabic and a Protocol relating to the resulting change to the final clause of the Convention.

The following ratifications, adherences or successions were registered in 1995 to the 1944 Convention on International Civil Aviation, ICAO's constituent instrument, and to conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices:

Technical cooperation

ICAO undertook technical cooperation projects in 76 countries in 1995. The Organization's technical cooperation programmes, financed by the UN Development Programme (UNDP), trust funds, Management Service Agreements and the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service, had total expenditures in 1995 of $55.8 million. Some 94 per cent of that amount was provided by Governments to fund their own projects on the basis of cost-sharing with UNDP.

ICAO had resident missions in 38 countries, and 67 others received assistance through fellowships and visits from experts assigned to inter-country and subcontractual arrangements. A total of 514 fellowships were awarded in 1995, of which 501 were implemented. At the end of 1995, ICAO had 73 experts in the field. In all, the organization engaged 354 experts from 41 countries during all or part of 1995, of which 217 were on assignment under UNDP and 137 worked on trust fund projects.

In addition, there were 77 Governments and organizations registered with ICAO in 1995 under its Civil Aviation Purchasing Services. Equipment purchases during 1995 totalled $27.3 million.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1995, the total number of staff members employed in the ICAO secretariat was 737, including 294 in the Professional and higher categories and 443 in the General Service and related categories. Of the total, 194 were employed in regional offices.

Budget

Appropriations for the ICAO budget in 1995 totalled $52,204,000. Appropriations for 1996 were set at $50,340,000.

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

Established in 1874 in Berne, Switzerland, to exchange postal services among nations, the Universal Postal Union (UPU) in 1995 continued its promotion of international collaboration to provide a rapid, economic and reliable universal postal service. UPU also undertook activities and projects to promote postal development throughout the world and to foster closer ties to postal customers. In 1995, UPU membership remained at 189, with no new countries having requested admission.

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

Following the twenty-first Universal Postal Congress in Seoul, Republic of Korea, in 1994, preparatory work began in 1995 for the twenty-second Congress, to be held in Beijing, China, in 1999. The task of organizing the twenty-second Congress, which was tentatively scheduled for 23 August to 15 September 1999, was assigned to the postal administration of China.

Council of Administration

The Council of Administration, which had replaced the Executive Council by a 1994 decision of the Seoul Congress, held its first annual meeting from 17 to 25 October 1995. Among its resolutions and decisions, the Council decided to continue the study on improving management of the Union and to initiate a study on the UPU linguistic system; addressed the issue of the employment of women at the UPU International Bureau; decided to continue the process of budgeting by programme, first introduced following the Seoul Congress; and adopted an action programme to promote postal development for the least developed countries (LDCs).

Postal Operations Council

Created by the 1994 Seoul Congress, the Postal Operations Council held its first annual session in Berne from 30 January to 17 February 1995. During that session, the Council revised the Detailed Regulations of the UPU Convention, which contained common rules applicable to the Union's member countries for the operation of the international postal service. The Regulations were reoriented so that the postal services would be better positioned to work in the very competitive international environment. Among other main results of the session, contact committee meetings were organized with the publishing industry and several philatelic associations to foster cooperation with major users of international postal services, and a "Customers' Day" was held to allow UPU members to hear customer concerns regarding improvement of the international postal services.

International Bureau

The International Bureau, which is under the general supervision of the Council of Administration, is the UPU secretariat, serving the postal administrations of member countries as an organ of execution, support, liaison, information and consultation. During 1995, the Bureau acted as a clearing-house for the settlement of accounts between postal administrations for various inter-administration charges related to the exchange of postal items and international reply coupons. A number of studies were conducted at the request of the Council of Administration and the Postal Operations Council. In addition to its ongoing activities in monitoring the quality of postal service on a global scale, the Bureau published information and statistics on international postal services and continued a global project concerning the postal application of electronic data interchange.

The Bureau introduced in 1995 a number of modern management techniques, including total quality management, a strategic planning process and a performance evaluation system based on the setting of individual objectives. As at 31 December 1995, the number of permanent and temporary staff members employed by the Bureau was 144, of whom 57 were in the Professional or higher categories (drawn from 38 countries) and 87 were in the General Services category. French remained the sole official language of UPU; however, English was introduced as the Union's second working language, besides French, beginning on 1 January 1996. The Bureau employed 14 officials in the Arabic, English, Portuguese, Russian and Spanish translation services.

Technical cooperation

UPU technical cooperation, which was financed by the UN Development Programme, amounted to $352,297 in 1995. The UPU Special Fund, including voluntary contributions in cash and in kind from member countries, and the regular budget also provided assistance for a total of $1.8 million in funding.

With a view to helping postal administrations obtain funding for postal projects, UPU regional advisers visited 20 countries in 1995. In addition, postal projects on behalf of Haiti and Yemen were approved. UPU also continued its participation in special international programmes such as the Second UN Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1991-2000), phase II of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1992-1996), technical cooperation among developing countries, and the action programme for LDCs.

Budget

At its 1994 session, the former Executive Council approved the 1995 UPU budget of 32,165,490 Swiss francs. At its 1995 session, the new Council of Administration approved the 1996 budget of 33,376,400 Swiss francs, to be financed by contributions from member States. Under the Union's self-financing system, contributions were payable in advance based on the following year's budget.

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

The International Telecommunication Union (ITU), which was founded in 1865 as the International Telegraph Union, became a specialized agency of the United Nations in 1947. In 1995, ITU continued to promote the development and efficient operation of telecommunication facilities, to offer technical assistance in telecommunications and to encourage adoption of a broader approach to telecommunications in the global information economy and society.

The 1995 annual session of the ITU Council was held in Geneva from 21 to 30 June. The Council decided to convene two conferences in Geneva in 1996—the World Telecommunication Standardization Conference (WTSC-96) from 9 to 18 October and the First World Telecommunication Policy Forum from 21 to 23 October—to discuss the "global mobile personal communications by satellite". The Council also adopted frameworks for draft agendas for Regional Telecommunication Development Conferences to be held in the African and Arab regions in 1996. ITU membership remained at 184 in 1995, with no new admissions since 1994.

Conferences

The World Radiocommunication Conference (WRC-95) (Geneva, 23 October-17 November) adopted a simplified partial revision of the Radio Regulations and associated Appendices, contained in its Final Acts. Also adopted were 47 revised or new resolutions and recommendations related to international radio communications as contained in the Final Acts. At the conclusion of the Conference, 130 members signed the Final Acts.

Radiocommunication sector

In 1995, the ITU Radiocommunications Bureau was involved in the preparation and holding of the Radiocommunication Assembly and the World Radiocommunication Conference 1995, as well as in the ongoing implementation of decisions of the Plenipotentiary Conference (Kyoto, 1994). The second (January) and third (September) meetings of the Radiocommunication Advisory Group (RAG) completed the transition to the new Radiocommunication Sector structure.

The Radiocommunication Bureau provided technical and administrative support in 1995 for a number of meetings, including 11 Radiocommu-nication Study Groups addressing the following topics: spectrum management; inter-service sharing and compatibility; radio wave propagation; fixed satellite service; science services; mobile radio determination; amateur and related satellite services; fixed service; broadcasting service (sound); and broadcasting service (television). In this respect, the Bureau carried out international regulatory processes for registration of frequency assignments and satellite orbits, and assisted in resolving cases of harmful interferences.

The Second Radio Communication Assembly (RA-95) (Geneva, 16-20 October) reviewed the work programme and structure of the Radiocommunication Study Groups. The Assembly approved one new resolution (ITU-R 38), modified eight others and cancelled five existing ones.

Three Regional Radiocommunication Seminars were held in 1995: in Bangkok, Thailand, in February; Margarita, Venezuela, in March; and Pretoria, South Africa, in September.

By the end of 1995, the Master International Frequency Register contained particulars of 1,189,324 assignments to terrestrial stations representing 5,464,469 line entries which were published in the International Frequency List at periodic intervals not exceeding six months.

Telecommunications standardization sector

In 1995, the ITU Telecommunications Bureau, facing the proliferation of systems and networks of different nature and different kinds of telecommunication services, made progress in producing and revising recommendations on standardization. During the year, 175 new and 113 revised recommendations were approved.

The Sector's study group activities continued focusing on: service definition; network operation; tariff and accounting principles; network maintenance; protection against electromagnetic environment; outside plant; data networks and open systems communications; terminals for telematic services; television and sound transmission; language for telecommunication applications; switching and signalling; end-to-end transmission performance of networks and terminals; general network aspects; modems and transmission techniques for data, telegraph and telematic services; and transmission systems and equipment.

In 1995, the Telecommunication Standardization Advisory Group held two meetings, focusing on how to address the Global Information Infrastructure, internetworking, and audiovisual and multimedia subjects within the conventional structure of the Bureau.

Telecommunication development sector

The year 1995 was the first complete year of implementation by the ITU Telecommunication Development Bureau of the Buenos Aires Action Plan adopted at the World Telecommunication Development Conference in 1994. It was also the first year that the Bureau Study Groups met to help find solutions to many telecommunication development problems facing developing countries.

The Bureau undertook a total of 349 technical assistance missions during 1995, as well as organized 89 seminars, workshops and meetings on a variety of subjects. It also granted 1,453 fellowships, with special attention to the least developed countries.

In Africa, the Bureau continued activities for consolidating and improving telecommunication networks, including technical network management, the finalization of studies for establishment of the Lome maintenance centre and the modernization of networks in West Africa. A consultative meeting of African countries (Tunis, Tunisia, 20-21 November) discussed a major regional submarine fibre-optic cable project entitled "Africa One". In November, the WORLDTEL organization, which involved several countries in eastern and southern Africa, met to set up a financing and partnership mechanism to increase total telephone capacity of the countries concerned by approximately 1 million lines. During 1995, ITU implemented 21 projects and field staff identified five new projects in Africa. In addition, 24 seminars, workshops and symposia were held in the region.

The number of projects related to strengthening technical and administrative telecommunication services in Africa continued to fall significantly in 1995, mainly due to the new priorities of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which excluded the telecommunication sub-sector. Projects implemented in 1995 included: sectoral telecommunication studies in South Africa, Angola, Eritrea and Uganda; assistance for the establishment of a management information system in Benin; implementation of a telecommunication master plan in Mali; a pilot project for rural telecommunications in Uganda; radio frequency management and organization of local network maintenance in Chad; and assistance for the implementation of cellular radiocommunication systems, among other projects, in Zaire. Related to the development of human resources for telecommunications in Africa, ITU undertook regional workshops and seminars in South Africa, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Ghana, Kenya, the Niger and Italy.

Activities in 1995 concerning the Americas included a revision of the Blue Book on Telecommunication Policies, and pilot projects on the development of rural telecommunications. A regional meeting was organized to discuss the importance of telecommunication development indicators in analysing policy changes. ITU carried out 99 missions, prepared 11 new projects and supervised 26 projects in the region in 1995. Projects included modernization of the Brazilian telecommunication system, establishment of a Caribbean News Agency (CANA) Satellite Regional News Network; occupational analysis, restructuring of Telecom and other activities in Colombia; a telecommunication master plan in El Salvador; creation of a regulatory body in Guatemala; and modernization of networks in Costa Rica, as well as other projects in the Andean countries, the Bahamas, Belize, Chile, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname and Uruguay. There were nine regional seminars/meetings organized in 1995 in Argentina (2), Chile, Costa Rica (2), Mexico, Suriname and Uruguay (2).

In the Arab States, ITU undertook 34 missions and supervised seven projects in 1995. Projects undertaken in association with UNDP included telecommunication staff training in Djibouti; master plans for telecommunication development in Libya and Sudan; assistance in the development of a master plan in Morocco; preparation of a study and workshop, among other activities, in Palestine, as well as other projects in Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia and Yemen. Some 120 Arab experts attended seminars and workshops in Egypt, Jordan, Palestine, Syria, Tunisia and Yemen.

In Asia and the Pacific, ITU staff carried out 82 missions, supervised 21 projects, identified five new projects and had two project proposals approved in 1995. Projects for the development of regional telecommunication networks included telecommunication computer software training and development, a programme for economic reform through enhanced transport and communication services; and telecommunication development and training in the South Pacific. Projects were undertaken in Bangladesh, Bhutan, Cambodia, China, India, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Solomon Islands, Tokelau and Viet Nam. Nine regional or sub-regional seminars and meetings were organized and a total of 37 missions of consultants were carried out, addressing such subjects as investment analysis, restructuring regulatory support, type approval, network planning and customer service.

In Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) countries, ITU had an important role in regulatory matters and frequency management, as well as in human resources management and planning. The whole region was undergoing a massive reconstruction of the networks, as well as commercializing organizations and liberalizing the market. As ITU had no regional offices in that area, all issues were dealt with by ITU headquarters. ITU staff carried out six missions and supervised 11 projects in the region in 1995. Projects were undertaken in the Czech Republic, Greece, Malta, the Republic of Moldova, the Russian Federation, Slovakia, Sweden, Ukraine and Uzbekistan. In addition, 169 fellowships were granted and 12 missions undertaken by consultants. In the region, a seminar on human resources management and development for East European countries and CIS was held in Bulgaria and a workshop on modern organizational development techniques was held in the Russian Federation.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1995, there were a total of 702 permanent and fixed-term staff employed by ITU, either at headquarters or in the field. Of that number, 269 were at the Professional and higher categories and 433 in the General Services category. This excluded staff on short-term contracts and project personnel.

Budget

The adjusted final budget for ITU in 1995 totalled 153,516,711 Swiss francs (SwF). Actual income in 1995 amounted to SwF 158,671,469, while actual expenditure totalled SwF 143,210,974.

In 1995, the Council approved the 1996-1997 biennial budget, with the ordinary budget amounting to SwF 294,862,000 and the publications budget of SwF 28,035,000.

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

The World Meteorological Organization (WMO) was founded in 1950 to facilitate worldwide cooperation in the establishment and maintenance of systems for making, exchanging and standardizing meteorological information, and to further application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, water problems, agriculture and other human activities. Since its founding, the organization has also developed an important role in addressing the world's environmental concerns. In 1995, WMO continued activities in support of sustainable development in areas such as climate change, natural disaster mitigation, water resources management and environmental monitoring.

The World Meteorological Congress, the WMO governing body which meets once every four years, held its twelfth session in 1995 (Geneva, 30 May–21 June). It approved the WMO programme and budget for 1996–1999 and the Fourth Long-term Plan (1996–2005). The 36-member WMO Executive Council, at its forty-seventh session (Geneva, 22–23 July), continued to coordinate and supervise the implementation of WMO programmes and allocate its budgetary resources.

WMO membership increased to 176 States and five territories during 1995, with the admission of three new members: the Cook Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia and Samoa.

World Weather Watch Programme

As the core programme of WMO, the World Weather Watch (WWW) Programme continued in 1995 to collect, analyse and disseminate meteorological data, and process products for national meteorological services. WWW consisted of the Global Observing System (GOS), the Global Telecommunication System (GTS), the Global Data-processing System (GDPS) and Data Management, collectively known as the basic systems. The WWW Programme also included the WMO Satellite Activities, Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme and the Tropical Cyclone Programme.

World Weather Watch implementation

As the main source of observational data for WWW, GOS comprised some 9,950 land stations, 7,300 voluntary observing ships, 1,000 drifting or moored buoys at sea and 3,000 aircraft. During 1995, new specialized observing systems were introduced for collecting data, while the GOS space-based subsystem—a nominal constellation of five geostationary and two polar-orbiting satellites—continued to provide imagery, soundings, data collection and data distribution. The satellite operators of this subsystem included China, the European Community, Japan, the Russian Federation and the United States.

Much progress was made in 1995 in reviewing and redesigning the regional basic synoptic networks, which were critical components of GOS. Problems remained in implementing upper-air stations in certain parts of the world, exacerbated by the likely cessation of the operation of the Omega radio navigation system for upper-air wind finding, on which some 20 per cent of the worldwide network depended.

Multi-point telecommunication services via satellite continued to be essential to the further development of GTS, while data-collection and data-dissemination services via meteorological satellite continued in areas where commercial telecommunications did not provide cost-effective services. Satellite transmit/receive stations were in operation at national meteorological centres in Central America and the Caribbean area, and similar systems were planned or implemented in several countries for their national meteorological telecommunication networks.

GDPS activities focused in 1995 on enhancing the services of GDPS centres, in response to new requirements and improved capabilities. Those services included extended-range and long-range weather forecasts; updating observational data and requirements of international exchange; procedures for provision of services to UN humanitarian missions; designation of new Regional Specialized Meteorological Centres; and global regional arrangements for environmental emergency response. GDPS Centres and emerging centres such as the African Centre for Meteorological Application for Development, the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) Specialized Meteorological Centre and the Drought Monitoring Centres in Africa continued to improve their forecasting systems and computer facilities. The Centres' programmes and activities had been adjusted to address requirements for preparation of specialized climate-related products, long-range forecasts and tailored products for environmental safety quality monitoring.

Instruments and methods of observation

WMO continued to work through its Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme to standardize data, evaluate new techniques and review the cost-effectiveness of observing systems. During the year, the Eighth International Pyrheliometer Comparison, held at the World Radiation Centre in Davos, Switzerland, calibrated regional and national standard instruments against the instruments in the World Standard Group. In October, participants from 19 African countries attended lectures given by Egyptian and Chinese experts at a Regional Training Workshop for Instrument Specialists, held at the Regional Instrument Centre in Cairo, Egypt.

Tropical Cyclone Programme

During 1995 under the Tropical Cyclone Programme (TCP), the operational plan or manual of each of the five regional tropical cyclone bodies around the world was revised or updated. All Regional Specialized Meteorological Centres (Miami, Nadi, New Delhi, Reunion and Tokyo) improved their facilities and services to their respective regions, which included provision of scientific guidance and advice on tropical cyclones. Progress was made in implementing coordinated plans for future development of services by the national meteorological and hydrological services and the national agencies involved in disaster prevention and preparedness. Special attention was given to the establishment of satellite ground-reception stations at national meteorological centres, in view of their great importance in detecting and tracking tropical cyclones.

World Climate Programme

The WMO Commission for Climatology, in collaboration with the WMO Commission for Basic Systems and the Global Climate Observing System (GCOS), initiated the development of a GCOS Surface Network (GSN) by specifying an initial list of 800 land-based stations to provide data that would help monitor surface temperature on the global to large-regional scales. GSN was intended to serve as a catalyst for the further development of national reference climatological station networks.

The fifth global Climate System Review, covering the period June 1991–November 1993, was published in 1995. In June, the Twelfth WMO Congress endorsed the initiation of a WMO project to publish a document on the climate of the twentieth century.

Regional climate computing development training seminars were held in Bratislava, Slovakia, for European countries (May 1995) and in Santiago, Chile, for South American countries (November). One week of basic climate computing training was included in computer applications workshops held in Niamey, Niger, in March and October for English- and French-speaking countries of Africa.

At the end of 1995, the Data Rescue project in Africa was considered complete in 15 countries. The International Data Rescue Coordination Centre in Brussels had over 85,000 microfiches of rescued climate data from 40 participating countries. In July, a training seminar in Barbados launched a Data Rescue project for the Caribbean countries.

World Climate Research Programme

Undertaken jointly by WMO, the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (IOC/UNESCO) and the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU), the World Climate Research Programme continued in 1995 to organize research into the basic physical processes that determine the Earth's climate. The Global Energy and Water Cycle Experiment (GEWEX) continued to organize major field experiments to study hydrological and atmospheric processes over basin drainage areas. The first year of the Enhanced Observing Period (1995–1999) for the GEWEX Continental-scale International Project, which embraced the whole Mississippi River basin, was completed. Four additional experiments were either started or in the planning stages, centred around the Baltic Sea, the MacKenzie River basin in Canada, the Amazonian rain forest in Brazil and the eastern regions of Asia. High priority continued to be given to producing a series of research global climatological data sets. As a result, during 1995 for the first time, an observed global total precipitable water data set was produced.

The new research programme study of Stratospheric Processes and their Role in Climate began a specific initiative to examine the global effects of stratospheric/tropospheric exchange, which was particularly important in the context of concerns about the impact of aircraft emissions on the ozone layer.

The initial scientific plan for a study of climate variability and predictability on time-scales of a month up to a century was completed and published in 1995. The plan called for particular study of understanding and developing predictive capabilities for monsoonal circulations, and discussed how advances could be made in determining the magnitude of anthropogenic climate change by exploiting full coupled global climate models.

Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme

As the main component of the Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme, the WMO Global Atmosphere Watch (GAW) continued during 1995 to provide measurements and assessments of the chemical state and behaviour of the atmosphere, such as assessments on stratospheric ozone. During the year, GAW worked to improve data archives, set standards for quality assurance and control of its data, promote academic capacity-building in atmospheric chemistry in developing countries and coordinate research activities in atmospheric composition.

A regional WMO workshop in New Delhi, India, focused on the latest developments in Asian/African monsoon research. A workshop in Beijing, China, in October reviewed limited area numerical models, while a meeting of experts was held in South Africa in November to review the current state of hail suppression technology.

During the year, the WMO Technical Library, a source of meteorological and hydrological information, acquired some 2,070 publications and handled more than 2,000 inquiries.

Applications of meteorology

Agricultural meteorology

The Commission of Agricultural Meteorology, at its eleventh session (Havana, Cuba, February), decided to prepare guidelines on improving management practices in agriculture, animal husbandry and forestry; considered ways to help member countries cope with climate variability and change; and approved land- and crop-management strategies for sustainable agricultural development. The Commission gave priority to education and training, the efficient use of water and energy in agriculture, the control of pests and diseases, and the establishment of operational agrometeorological services.

Aeronautical meteorology

In 1995, operational satellite broadcasts of the World Area Forecast System (WAFS) data and products began from both the London and Washington World Area Forecast Centres, marking a milestone in WAFS implementation. In addition, satellite broadcast receivers and user terminals began to be installed in a number of countries around the world. At the same time, emphasis was put on training users of WAFS data and products to familiarize themselves with the new technology and the products generated. Six training events with a WAFS component were held around the world. Continued progress was made in automated production of significant weather forecasts, one of the major requirements for reaching the final stage of WAFS implementation.

The new aeronautical meteorological codes introduced in 1993 were slightly amended in 1995 and approved for implementation in January 1996. With the implementation of these amended codes, for the first time all WMO members would be using a single global standard for the aeronautical meteorological codes.

Marine meteorology

The Data Buoy Cooperation Panel, which was established by WMO and IOC in 1985 to facilitate the global coordination of individual buoy deployment programmes, was instrumental during 1995 in successfully establishing a new International Buoy Programme for the Indian Ocean, with the initial participation of institutions from five countries with interests in the region.

Increased interest by climatologists in observations by the WMO Voluntary Observing Ships (VOS) led to heightened interest in metadata associated with the observations, such as the profile, size and loading of the ships, location of instruments and observing practices used. Precise documentation of these metadata were proposed as part of an expanded International List of Selected, Supplementary and Auxiliary Ships (WMO-No.47), due out in 1997.

Public weather services

The second Expert Meeting on Public Weather Services (Geneva, April) carried out a detailed revision of the draft "Guide on public weather services practices" and addressed such issues as the need to improve public weather services in both developing and developed countries and the future of the programme itself.

Also in April, a Training Workshop on Public Weather Services with particular Emphasis on Television Weather Presentation and Communication Skills was held in Singapore, featuring lectures and discussion on trends, policies and the impact on national practices of private sector involvement in the domain of public weather services. An Expert Meeting on Public Weather Services and Hurricane Disaster Preparedness (Trinidad and Tobago, December) addressed issues related to the use of seasonal forecasts in disaster mitigation and the provision of early warnings.

Hydrology and water resources

The World Hydrological Cycle Observing System, a programme launched in 1993, had by 1995 progressively moved from a technological concept, based on a global network of key stations transmitting their data through satellites, towards a comprehensive, integrated series of projects designed to create water data information systems at national, regional and global levels.

WMO, in collaboration with the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa, convened an African Conference on Water Resources: Policy and Assessment (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, March) with the participation of 41 African countries and 16 international organizations. It was the first WMO regional conference designed to address the water issues facing African nations and to explore strategies which would ensure that national water resources agencies played a full part in national and regional development.

By the end of 1995, 122 WMO members were participating in the Hydrological Operational Multi-purpose System (HOMS), the WMO system for technology transfer in operational hydrology. Many of the new participants were from the newly independent States and planning to use the HOMS technology to build their new national hydrological services. A parallel System for Technology Exchange for Natural Disasters (STEND) was launched during the year to provide technology for monitoring, risk assessment, forecasting and engineering design to combat natural disasters. Launched as a contribution to the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, the initial fields for STEND study were seismology and volcanology, with extension to other fields foreseen for the future.

More than 140 countries by the end of 1995 had contributed data to the Global Runoff Data Centre, which was established under WMO auspices in 1988 to support studies of regional and global water problems and assist the development of more accurate models of the world's climate.

Education and training

During 1995, a total of 564 people participated in 24 training events in 19 countries, organized as part of the WMO education and training programme. The organization also co-sponsored or supported 30 training events organized by national institutions in member countries. Particular attention was given to training instructors and creating closer links among national training institutions. In addition, WMO awarded 46 long-term and 163 short-term fellowships in 1995.

As in previous years, the WMO Training Library continued to strengthen and expand its holdings of audiovisual training aids and computer-aided learning modules to meet the increasing needs of members. In 1995, the Library made available 132 copies of video films, one set of 100 slides, and 66 software packages in response to requests from members, training institutions and other users.

Technical cooperation

In 1995, 130 countries received technical assistance valued at $15.68 million, financed by trust funds (43.9 per cent), the WMO Voluntary Cooperation Programme (37.7 per cent), UNDP (10 per cent) and the WMO regular budget (8.4 per cent).

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1995, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding six professionals on technical assistance projects) was 269. Of those, 119 from 45 countries were in the Professional or higher categories and 150 were in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1995 was the fourth and final year of the eleventh financial period (1992-1995), for which the 1991 WMO Congress had established a maximum expenditure of 236,100,000 Swiss francs. Total unpaid contributions due from members stood at 28,391,613 Swiss francs. The Executive Council approved a regular budget for the 1994-1995 biennium of 122,400,000 Swiss francs.

Chapter XIV

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

In 1995, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) held the nineteenth biennial session of its Assembly (London, 13-24 November), at which it considered and approved the work programme prepared during the previous two years by its subsidiary bodies. Those bodies include the IMO Council, which serves as the IMO governing body between sessions of the Assembly, as well as committees addressing technical aspects of maritime safety, marine environmental protection, and legal, technical cooperation and facilitation issues.

Among actions taken during the session, the Assembly addressed such issues as bulk carrier safety, performance standards for equipment, electric and electronic requirements, ships' routing, radio communications, radio-navigation systems, the role of ports in promoting maritime safety, and guidelines on implementing the International Safety Management code. In addition, the Assembly adopted five resolutions concerning the safety of roll-on/roll-off passenger ships.

As at 31 December 1995, IMO membership numbered 153 States, with the addition during the year of Azerbaijan, Lithuania and South Africa.

Activities in 1995

In June, the IMO Council awarded the International Maritime Prize for 1994 to John Perrakis of Greece, who died a month later. Mr. Perrakis had participated in the 1973-1982 sessions of the Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea, and for nearly 25 years had been involved with legal aspects of maritime safety and pollution prevention. The Prize is awarded annually to the person judged to have done the most towards advancing the objectives of IMO.

World Maritime Day was celebrated on 28 September at IMO headquarters in London, paying tribute to the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations and IMO achievements.

Prevention of pollution

The twenty-seventh set of amendments to the International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code, adopted in 1994, entered into force on 1 January 1995, and the entire 2,500-page Code was reprinted later in the year. Although not mandatory, the Code was widely used and had been included, in whole or in part, in national legislation by most of the world's shipping nations.

On 13 May, the International Convention on Oil Pollution Preparedness, Response and Cooperation (OPRC) entered into force. Intended to provide an international system for preparing for and responding to emergencies involving oil pollution (including all forms of petroleum products), the treaty was adopted at an IMO conference in 1990.

Two sets of amendments to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the Protocol of 1978 relating thereto (MARPOL 73/78), took effect during the year. On 4 April, amendments adopted in 1991 took effect, requiring oil tankers of a certain weight to carry a shipboard oil pollution emergency plan. On 6 July, further amendments, adopted in 1992, came into operation, including an enhanced programme of inspections for all oil tankers aged five years or more, and required changes to the construction of tankers aged 25 or more, as well as the mandatory fitting of double hulls or an equivalent design.

Work on a new draft convention for liability and compensation in connection with the carriage of hazardous and noxious substances by sea was completed by the IMO Legal Committee at its seventy-second session (London, 3-7 April). The draft was broader in scope than the existing pollution compensation regime in that it covered not only pollution but also the risks of fire and explosion. The Committee recommended that the draft be forwarded to a diplomatic conference for consideration and adoption in 1996.

Ship security and safety at sea

The Maritime Safety Committee, IMO's senior technical body, at its sixty-fifth session (London, 9-17 May), adopted amendments to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS), 1974, calling for the introduction of mandatory ships' routing systems. The amendments were expected to enter into force under the Convention's "tacit acceptance" provisions on 1 January 1997. Among its other work, the Committee decided that trials held in several countries, with the officer of the navigational watch acting as sole look-out in periods of darkness, should be discontinued since no consensus could be reached as to the safety of the practice.

In November, the Conference of Contracting Governments to the SOLAS Convention adopted major changes aimed at improving the safety of roll-on/roll-off (ro-ro) passenger ships. The amendments were based on proposals put forward by a panel of experts set up by IMO in December 1994 following the Estonia disaster two months earlier, in which more than 900 people were killed. The most important of the changes dealt with requirements for bow doors and the stability of ro-ro passenger ships, including a new regulation intended to phase out ships built to a one-compartment standard and to ensure that ro-ro ships could survive without capsizing if two main compartments flooded following damage.

During 1995, IMO amended the International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers, 1978. One of the major features of the revision was the adoption of a new code containing two parts, one of mandatory and another of recommended provisions, to which many technical regulations of the Convention were transferred. In addition, IMO adopted a new International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Fishing Vessel Personnel, which was intended to apply to crews of fishing vessels of 24 metres or more in length.

On 4 November, amendments to the Convention on the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1972, entered into force. The amendments were mostly concerned with the positioning of lights.

World Maritime University

On 20 March, the World Maritime University's Class of 1996 was formally inaugurated, bringing together 81 students from 48 nations, 2 of which (Estonia and Saint Kitts and Nevis) were represented for the first time. The new class brought the total number of students enrolled at the University to 1,152, representing 128 countries. The University, which is located in Malmö, Sweden, was established by IMO in 1983 to provide advanced postgraduate training in maritime administration, environmental protection, port and shipping management, maritime education and training, and maritime safety administration.

The United States Coast Guard presented its Meritorious Public Service Award in 1995 to the University, in recognition of its 12 years as a centre of excellence in education, training and technology transfer. The Coast Guard also announced the donation of a fellowship for a student joining the University's one-year Master's degree programme in 1996.

Budget

In November 1995, the IMO Assembly approved budgetary appropriations of 36,612,200 pounds sterling for the 1996-1997 biennium.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

In 1995, the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) continued development cooperation, norm-setting and registration activities to promote respect for the protection and use of intellectual property. The organization's main areas of work aimed to strengthen the intellectual property systems of developing countries; promote new or revised norms for the protection of intellectual property at the national, regional and multilateral levels; and facilitate the acquisition of intellectual property protection through international registration systems.

The Governing Bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by the organization held their twenty-sixth series of meetings from 25 September to 3 October and twenty-seventh series from 19 to 21 December, both in Geneva. The WIPO General Assembly, one of the Governing Bodies, unanimously reappointed Arpad Bogsch as Director-General of WIPO for an additional two-year term, expiring on 1 December 1997. At the December session, the Governing Bodies approved a cooperation agreement between WIPO and the World Trade Organization (WTO). The agreement was signed on 22 December 1995, to enter into force on 1 January 1996.

During 1995, WIPO membership increased to 157 States, with the accession of Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Cambodia, Nigeria, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Turkmenistan to the 1967 Convention Establishing WIPO, amended in 1979. During the same period, the number of States adhering to treaties administered by WIPO also increased. States parties to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property increased to 136 as at the end of 1995; to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works, to 117; and to the Patent Cooperation Treaty, to 83.

Activities in 1995

Development cooperation

WIPO's development cooperation programme in the fields of industrial property, copyright and neighbouring rights quickened its pace in 1995, with the number of beneficiary countries totalling 118, while the number of advisory missions reached 200, a 19 per cent increase over 1994.

In October 1995, the WIPO International Bureau began an intensive programme of assistance to developing countries to ensure their compatibility with the 1994 WTO Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS Agreement). In December, a three-day regional symposium for the Arab countries on the implications of the TRIPS Agreement was held in Cairo, Egypt.

A total of 120 courses, seminars and other meetings were organized by WIPO in 1995 at the global, regional and national levels, with some 9,500 participants. The WIPO Academy conducted two sessions on intellectual property issues for middle- and senior-level government officials, one in English and one in French.

Assistance to countries in transition

On 12 August 1995, the Eurasian Patent Convention entered into force. The Convention, drafted with the assistance of the WIPO International Bureau, was finalized and adopted in Geneva in February 1994. By 31 December 1995, nine States (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Kazakstan, Kyrgyzstan, Republic of Moldova, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan) had ratified or acceded to the Convention. In November, the Administrative Council of the Eurasian Patent Organization adopted the patent, administrative and financial instructions under the Convention and fixed 1 January 1996 as the starting date for the Eurasian Patent Office (established under the Convention and located in Moscow) to begin receiving Eurasian patent applications.

In 1995, nine national and regional seminars and other meetings were organized by WIPO in countries in transition for some 700 participants. WIPO officials and consultants undertook 29 missions to 17 of those countries to give advice, in particular, on the preparation of laws and national infrastructures related to intellectual property rights, the advantages of adherence to WIPO-administered treaties, and training in various specialized fields of intellectual property.

Setting of norms and standards

Significant advances were made in 1995 towards the possible adoption, through a diplomatic conference, of new international instruments in the fields of patents, industrial designs, copyright and neighbouring rights and the settlement of intellectual property disputes among States.

Regarding the harmonization of patent laws, the WIPO Governing Bodies agreed that future treaty work should focus on the formalities of national and regional patent applications, such as signatures, changes in names and addresses, correction of mistakes and standardized forms. Those issues were incorporated into proposals reviewed by a Committee of Experts on the Patent Law Treaty, which held its first session in December 1995. The Committee was scheduled to hold two more sessions in 1996 to examine the next draft of the proposed treaty, which, in addition to the provisions already reviewed, would contain provisions related to the filing date of an application and unity of intervention.

Regarding the protection of industrial designs, the Governing Bodies decided in October that a session of the Committee of Experts on preparation of a new treaty would meet in 1996. Following that meeting, the competent WIPO Governing Bodies would decide whether a diplomatic conference for adoption of a new treaty would take place in 1997. Such a new treaty, it was decided, might take the form of a revision of the Hague Agreement Concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs.

In November 1995, a new Committee of Experts was convened by WIPO to examine prospects for improving the protection of well-known marks. The Committee agreed that the question should be further studied and the results examined by a second session of the Committee during the second half of 1996.

Regarding copyright and neighbouring rights, a joint meeting was convened in September 1995 of the Committee of Experts on a Possible Protocol to the Berne Convention and the Committee of Experts on a Possible Instrument for the Protection of the Rights of Performers and Producers of Phonograms. Work advanced on issues particular to each Committee as well as those issues considered common to both, including distribution rights, importation and rental issues, digital issues, enforcement of rights and national treatment. The Committees decided that proposals in treaty language would be examined at the next joint meeting in February 1996, and that, if work did not advance sufficiently following that meeting, the competent Governing Bodies of WIPO should be convened to decide on the organization and date for one or more diplomatic conferences for the conclusion of the new instruments.

WIPO convened two international symposiums (Mexico City, May; Naples, Italy, October) to provide international forums for exchange of ideas on the impact of digital technology on copyright issues. A consultative forum for non-governmental organizations was also organized in Geneva in June to encourage an exchange of views on the protection and management of copyright and neighbouring rights in digital systems.

WIPO Arbitration Centre

In November 1995, the second meeting of the WIPO Arbitration Council reviewed activities of the WIPO Arbitration Centre since its first meeting in September 1994 and examined a draft proposal to introduce an emergency interim arbitral procedure by a stand-by panel of arbitrators. Throughout 1995, the Arbitration Centre undertook a number of promotional activities, including jointly organizing with the Swiss Arbitration Association an international conference on the WIPO Mediation, Arbitration and Expedited Arbitration Rules, as well as organizing two training programmes for mediators.

International registration activities

Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT). In 1995, there were 38,906 international applications filed, of which 1,151 were filed directly with the WIPO International Bureau in its capacity, since 1 January 1994, as a receiving office. With an average of 46.4 countries designated per application, the total number of international applications filed with PCT had the effect of 1,807,220 national applications.

In October, the PCT Assembly adopted a revised schedule of fees, increasing the maximum number of designations for which fees were payable from 10 to 11. The Assembly also approved a 75 per cent reduction in fees for any applicant who was a national and resident in a country whose per capita national income was below $3,000.

Madrid Agreement. In the trademark system under the Madrid Agreement Concerning the International Registration of Marks and its 1989 Protocol, there was a total of 18,890 international registrations in 1995. With an average of 10.44 countries designated per registration, those applications had the effect of some 197,210 national registrations.

The Madrid Protocol entered into force on 1 December 1995, having obtained the required number of notifications. As at 31 December 1995, five States (China, Cuba, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom) had acceded to or ratified the Protocol. Draft Common Regulations under the Madrid Agreement and Protocol were finalized by the International Bureau in 1995, to be submitted to the Madrid Assembly in 1996.

Hague Agreement. Under the Hague Agreement Concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs, there was a combined total of 5,585 industrial design deposits, renewals and prolongations in 1995. In September/October, the Assembly of the Hague Union adopted a revised fee schedule, increasing fees by 3 per cent.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1995, WIPO employed 517 staff members representing 64 countries. Of those, 183 were in the Professional and higher categories and 334 in the General Service category.

Budget

WIPO's principal income was derived from ordinary and special contributions from member States and from international registration services, mainly under PCT and the Madrid Agreement. In 1995, the organization's budgeted income amounted to 119 million Swiss francs and budgeted expenditures totalled 115 million Swiss francs, of which 70 million Swiss francs were staff costs. In October 1995, the Governing Bodies of WIPO decided to double the development cooperation budget in the organization's 1996-1997 regular budget over the 1994-1995 budget. The increase was to allow WIPO to provide increased legal and technical assistance to developing countries to help them meet their new obligations under the TRIPS Agreement.

Chapter XVI

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

In 1995, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) provided intensified efforts to help the rural poor achieve food security and improved nutrition through increased agricultural production and income. Established in 1977, IFAD provides concessional assistance for financing agricultural projects in developing countries.

The IFAD Executive Board held three regular sessions in 1995 (April, September and December), approving loans for 33 projects, including three jointly financed under the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification (SPA) and regular resources. Twelve technical assistance grants were also approved. The Board adopted a recommendation that SPA be terminated on 31 December 1995 and its operations integrated into Regular Programme operations.

The Board also approved a programme of work for 1996 at 304.3 million special drawing rights (SDR) for loans and grants under the Regular Programme and endorsed a budget of $49.9 million, including a contingency of $300,000.

IFAD membership increased to 158 during 1995, with the admission of the Republic of Georgia. Of its member countries, 22 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries), and 124 in Category III (other developing countries).

Resources

Progress was made during 1995 on negotiations on the Fourth Replenishment of IFAD's Resources ($600 million targeted) covering the period 1995-1997. The Fund's developing member States announced pledges exceeding the 85 per cent target level for Categories II and III agreed by the Governing Council in 1994. While most Category I countries had reaffirmed their adherence to the target set for them in 1994, one major donor still had to complete its budgetary processes before announcing its contribution.

Activities in 1995

Loans and grants approved in 1995 under IFAD's Regular Programme and SPA totalled SDR 276 million ($413.8 million equivalent), which financed 33 projects worth SDR 261.4 million ($391.7 million) and 58 technical assistance grants worth SDR 14.6 million ($22.1 million). The Fund's regular resources financed 33 loans totalling SDR 253.9 million ($380.5 million) and 50 technical assistance grants amounting to SDR 13.8 million ($20.9 million). The balance of four loans for SDR 7.5 million ($11.2 million) and eight technical assistance grants for SDR 0.8 million ($1.2 million) was financed from the Special Resources for Sub-Saharan Africa (SRS).

In terms of SDR, total commitment for 1995 was 34 per cent above the yearly average for 1978-1994. The average size of IFAD lending per project was SDR 7.9 million ($11.9 million), as compared to the 1978-1994 average of SDR 8.3 million ($10.5 million).

Some 29.7 per cent of the Fund's Regular Programme resources in 1995 were used for loans to the Africa region, which amounted to SDR 75.3 million ($113.2 million). Over the period 1978-1995, the region received SDR 983 million ($1,252.5 million), or 30.1 per cent of total lending under the Regular Programme. With the inclusion of allocations under the Special Programme for Africa, the cumulative percentage of resources received by the Africa region amounted to 35 per cent from 1978 to 1995. In 1995, the countries of sub-Saharan Africa received 31.7 per cent of IFAD's Regular and Special Programme allocations as compared to 38.6 per cent over the period 1978-1994.

The Near East and North Africa region (which also covered Djibouti, Somalia, the Sudan and new member countries of Central Europe) received SDR 46.7 million ($72.5 million), or 19 per cent of Regular Programme lending in 1995. The region had received a total of SDR 574.1 million ($731.7 million) or 17.5 per cent of total Regular Programme lending since 1978.

With the highest concentration of absolute poor, the Asia and Pacific region continued to receive the largest share of the Fund's Regular Programme lending. In 1995, the region received SDR 80.9 million ($121.9 million), accounting for 32 per cent of Regular Programme lending during the year. Total loans to the Asia and Pacific region during the period 1978-1995 amounted to SDR 1,191 million ($1,506.5 million), or 36.1 per cent of IFAD lending under the Regular Programme.

In 1995, the Latin America and Caribbean region received SDR 49 million ($73 million), or 19.2 per cent of the Fund's Regular Programme lending. Since 1978, the region had been allocated SDR 524.6 million ($682.1 million), amounting to 16.3 per cent of total Regular Programme loans.

The Fund continued to place high priority on lending in least developed and low-income, food-deficit countries and allocations were mainly to countries where the problems of hunger and poverty were most acute. During 1995, the least developed countries (as defined by the United Nations) received 31.6 per cent of IFAD lending, while their average share between 1978 and 1994 was 38.6 per cent. Low-income and food-deficit countries received 72.5 per cent of total IFAD lending, as compared to 85.4 per cent over 1978-1994.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1995, the IFAD secretariat had a total of 264 staff, of whom 111 were in the Professional or higher categories and 153 in the General Service category.

Income and expenditure

Total revenue under the Regular Programme in 1995 was $309.1 million, consisting of $268.4 million of investment income and $40.7 million from interest and service charges on loans. Investment income excluded foreign currency hedging gains or losses. Total operational and administrative expenses for the year amounted to $45.7 million, compared with a budget, before contingency, of $46.4 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year, including the effects of foreign exchange rate movements of $52.5 million, was $317 million.

Total revenue under SPA was $15.1 million, consisting of $13.8 million of investment income and $1.3 million from interest and services charges on loans. Total expenses for the year amounted to $4 million, compared with a budget, before contingency, of $3.8 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year, including the effects of foreign exchange rate movements, was $16.9 million.

Chapter XVII

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

In 1995, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued to promote sustainable industrial development in countries with developing and transition economies. At the end of the year, UNIDO reached the final stage of a two-year reform process which concentrated on reorientation of its activities to adjust to the new economic environment of the 1990s. It included a refocusing of UNIDO services and improvement of management processes to increase efficiency, as well as budgetary reductions and structural modification. It also adopted a new mission statement, which emphasized UNIDO's role as a catalyst seeking to harness the joint forces of Government and the private sector, with the overall aims to foster competitive industrial production, develop international industrial partnerships and promote socially equitable and environmentally sustainable industrial development.

In spite of budgetary cutbacks, UNIDO reversed the trend of declining technical cooperation delivery since 1990, with delivery increasing by 7 per cent over the previous year to $108.5 million. At the same time, the sources of project funding were further diversified, an essential step following the drastic decline in United Nations Development Programme funding.

The General Conference, the main governing body of UNIDO, met for its sixth session in December, while the Industrial Development Board held its fourteenth session in June, resuming it in October.

Policy issues

In 1995, UNIDO identified seven thematic priorities for cross-organizational focus during the 1996-1997 biennium, in a response to identified demand for integrated and multidisciplinary services and drawing on the core of UNIDO expertise. Those priorities were: strategies, policies and institution-building for global economic integration; environment and energy; policies, networking and basic technical support for small and medium enterprises; innovation, productivity and quality for international competitiveness; industrial information, investment and technology promotion; rural industrial development; and linking industry with agriculture in Africa and the least developed countries (LDCs). While the first six priorities were global in coverage, the last one reinforced UNIDO's geographical focus.

The following industrial subsectors were marked for priority attention: food processing, leather, textiles and wood processing within agro-based industries; metalworking and machine tools (with emphasis on agricultural machinery) within engineering industries; biotechnology, water management, medicinal plants, building materials and organic chemicals within chemical industries.

Strategies, policies and institution-building

UNIDO worked during 1995 on helping provide institutional structure to make policies work, enable the private sector to get involved in policy formulation, and interface between private enterprises and the public sector. It made a special effort to strengthen and streamline industrial institutions in a number of developing countries, including Guinea, Maldives, Nepal, Sierra Leone and Zimbabwe. During 1995, UNIDO advised the Ministry of Industry of Ghana and the Minister of Commerce and Industry of Swaziland on ways to restructure their institutions to meet the demands of sustainable development and create a stimulating environment for industry.

The organization helped overcome the lack of industrial data in developing countries by strengthening its information network capability to provide a self-sufficient, self-sustainable way of meeting the need for information for industry, business and government. The UNIDO network made wide use of Internet and other networks, such as IndustryNet, International Business Network, Electronic Trade Point System, Unisphere and others, to promote networking, increase efficiency and reduce communication costs.

Environment and energy

UNIDO addressed environmental issues stemming from industrial development, with particular emphasis on preventive rather than corrective action. Services focused on capacity-building in support of national strategies for environmentally sound industrial development; implementation of international agreements, conventions and protocols for protection of the environment; and establishment of national cleaner production centres and the promotion and transfer of clean technologies in various industrial subsectors, as well as enhancing the efficiency of energy use in industrial processes.

In cooperation with the United Nations Environment Programme, UNIDO established eight national cleaner production centres in 1995 in Brazil, China, the Czech Republic, India, Mexico, Slovakia, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe. It continued to introduce pollution prevention and control activities in the chemical, food processing, leather, textiles, pulp and paper and metallurgical industries, and supported cleaner technology in order to reduce the use of chemicals, water, energy and raw materials. In cooperation with Governments and industry, UNIDO also provided assistance in limiting the use of ozone-depleting substances, in accordance with the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer.^a Small and medium industries

With small and medium industries (SMIs) the main target group for its services, UNIDO focused on supporting developing countries in creating an overall policy and institutional environment conducive to the further development of SMIs. In 1995, UNIDO provided policy advice and institutional support for promoting SMIs with overall private sector development and increased market orientation. It also helped stimulate networking of SMIs with larger enterprises and among themselves through national and regional subcontracting schemes and sectoral clusters.

UNIDO assistance aimed at improving the access of SMIs to information, technology, managerial experience and financial resources, particularly in rural areas where support for the development of even the most basic levels of skills could contribute to the socio-economic development of an entire community. In Burkina Faso and Mali, for example, UNIDO installed more than 20 food-processing machines in 1995, enabling rural women to escape the arduous task of grinding millet every day.

Through its Support Programme for Innovation and Networking, developed and implemented in cooperation with private sector organizations, policy makers and support institutions from both industrialized and developing countries, UNIDO provided information, advisory and training services, and facilitated joint learning between clusters of SMIs.

Innovation, productivity and competitiveness

UNIDO was increasingly called upon in 1995 to provide specialized services to industrial institutions working with the private sector on industry-specific research and development, continuous quality improvements and meeting certification requirements for international standards. Support at the institutional level was complemented by assistance to groups of enterprises, mostly channelled through industrial associations, in rehabilitating and restructuring their operations. UNIDO also monitored worldwide trends and new generic technologies, and evaluated them according to the needs of developing countries. In December 1995, it published a Manual on Technology Transfer Negotiation comprising a set of instructional materials for teaching technology transfer and contract negotiation.

UNIDO's Quality, Standardization and Metrology Programme provided a comprehensive range of services required at the policy, institutional and enterprise levels. In addition, a high-impact programme was developed to apply the principles of the UNIDO Quality Approach to the food processing sectors of seven African countries (Ethiopia, Kenya, Malawi, Mozambique, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe). The programme aimed to establish the conditions for effective mobilization of resources to strengthen food quality and safety support institutions and to implement pilot improvement programmes in selected enterprises.

Industrial information, investment and technology promotion

In 1995, the UNIDO Industrial and Technological Information Bank developed a programme to expand more than 80 national and regional focal points into self-sufficient and self-sustainable information networks. The organization also operated an Investment Promotion Service Network in commercial centres throughout the world, including Athens (Greece), Beijing (China), Istanbul (Turkey), Milan (Italy), Moscow, Paris, Seoul (Republic of Korea), Warsaw (Poland) and Zurich (Switzerland). During 1995, negotiations were finalized to open services in Bahrain and Vienna. Investment promotion initiatives were established to serve investors in Belgium, India and the United Kingdom, and investment forums were held in China, Ghana, India, Jordan, the Russian Federation, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Rural industrial development

During the year, UNIDO concentrated efforts on redressing industrial development disparities within developing countries, considered crucial to equitable development, poverty alleviation and food security. Its main activities involved the leather, wood products, textile and medicinal plants industries, but by far the largest was its commitment to the food industry where the development of dairy, fish and meat products and the reinforcement of competitiveness of the food-processing sector were its leading concerns. This was complemented by support to building materials industries, in particular those relevant for low-cost housing in rural areas.

UNIDO also placed great emphasis on ecologically sound development as part of its campaign to eradicate poverty by providing employment opportunities. In a number of African countries, including Ethiopia, Kenya, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe, community organizers in the leather industry were helped to deal with waste management, while new and renewable sources of energy such as solar energy were promoted along with clean technology in manufacturing activities such as wet processing and dyeing methods in the textile and clothing industries.

UNIDO projects in the construction industry aimed at encouraging cheaper and simpler technologies suitable for local needs and available resources. Projects in Cameroon, Chad, Ethiopia, Madagascar, Mozambique and Zambia emphasized stabilized soil blocks, fibro-cement roofs and processing of dimension stone, and were successful in integrating technology transfer and investment promotion and in ensuring self-reliance and self-sustainability.

Africa and LDCs

In 1994-1995, Africa was the leading recipient region of UNIDO services, benefiting from 40 per cent of the Organization's technical cooperation approvals. During 1995, UNIDO experts worked to expand the regional leather programme in Ethiopia, Kenya, Malawi, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. UNIDO established a leather goods manufacturing unit and a tannery in Kenya, and shoe manufacturing projects in other East African countries. It provided assistance in manufactured wood products in Angola, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Cote d'Ivoire, Kenya, Madagascar and Senegal. UNIDO's expertise helped identify technical assistance projects in design and maintenance of agricultural machinery, tools and implements. The organization also helped create prototypes and offered training in Ethiopia and Kenya, and established a regional network for the Asia and Pacific region. UNIDO technical cooperation delivery in Africa amounted to $32.9 million in 1995. At the same time, UNIDO approved 100 new projects for a total of $24.5 million and project revisions amounting to an additional $7.2 million. It offered a wide range of services within the framework of the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA II), 1993-2002 (see PART FOUR, Chapter V), focusing on strengthening industrial institutions; developing strategies and policies for accelerated industrial development; private sector development with emphasis on strengthening private sector institutions;

SMI development; rehabilitation of key industries; developing human resources; assisting women to meet the challenges of industrial and technological change in a competitive, global economy; and promotion of technology and investment. Total budgetary appropriation for IDDA in 1995 was $7.8 million. In December 1995, at the sixth session of the General Conference of UNIDO, the Director-General announced a proposal for an Alliance for Africa's Industrialization as a complementary effort to the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see PART FOUR, Chapter III); that Alliance was to be further developed in 1996 in close consultation with African Governments and regional and subregional organizations.

UNIDO technical cooperation delivery to LDCs amounted to $8.6 million in 1995, of which 76 per cent went to African LDCs. UNIDO continued to support programmes in LDCs aimed at creating an enabling environment for investment promotion and mobilizing financial resources for industrial development. A total of 10 LDCs benefited from support which covered assistance to ministries of industry in formulating national investment policies, identifying international investment and strengthening investment and export promotion institutions. As a further element in its support to LDCs in mobilizing local and foreign investments, UNIDO organized institutional investment forums for a number of LDCs. In conjunction with the sixth session of the General Conference, UNIDO hosted the Third Ministerial Symposium on the Industrialization of Least Developed Countries (30 November-8 December) at which Ministers and delegates from 38 LDCs and six international organizations discussed common industrial development issues.

Human resources development

In 1995, UNIDO continued to promote the application of industrial knowledge and improve industrial skills in developing countries, with particular emphasis on developing entrepreneurship, creating capacities for technological management and innovation, and assessing the impact of technological change on socio-economic development. Particular attention was directed to creating a comprehensive framework and integrated approach to human resources development (HRD), linking supply elements (training, education and skills planning) with demand elements (demographic patterns, employment and labour market trends, and changes in the workplace). UNIDO developed tools, including databases, to allow for an effective response to countries requesting support in human resources development. Its HRD programme was refocused to assist countries with developing and transitional economies in building up a broad spectrum of human resources with required skills and capabilities and in developing a critical base of entrepreneurs, managers, technicians and technology-support professionals. The programme provided support in three primary areas: upstream services, including policy advice based on analysis and assessment of requirements; institutional capacity-building and catalytic learning systems, including training, at subsector levels and in specialized fields; and communication networks to simplify coordination and synergy of efforts.

UNIDO technical cooperation in human resources development emphasized local capacity-building relevant to mainstreaming women in industrial development, technology transfer, project appraisal and preparation, restructuring and privatization, investment promotion, environmental protection, energy and SMIs.

UNIDO provided advisory services and preparatory assistance to five African countries, the Caribbean region and Jordan for developing national and regional programmes; to Indonesia for a distance learning network for industry; and to Iran on mainstreaming women in industrial development. In the Philippines, a World Bank-funded feasibility study was conducted to determine demand-supply and sustainability strategies for private training centres, and for the transfer of responsibility for the National Manpower Youth Commission to the private sector.

Five awareness-building seminars for policy makers, senior government officials, entrepreneurs and managers were held in 1995 for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean, on project preparation and evaluation, project management, environmental management, technology management and industrial quality. Related HRD programmes took advantage of and strengthened indigenous capacities of local intermediaries such as professional associations, chambers of commerce and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), as a means of delivering programmes in line with specific local needs.

A new set of criteria was developed for implementing group training programmes, giving priority to those meeting the requirements for sustainability, impact, national relevance, and the use of in-house expertise and capabilities. At the same time, the total number of trainees in in-plant and other group training programmes of UNIDO increased by 11 per cent over the previous year.

The revision of the training programme on industrial planning in Japan led to a new seminar on technology management and industrial development. Participants from five developing countries benefited from practical sessions and study visits, which contributed Japanese know-how and experience in technology transfer and production processes. In China, the training programme to promote the participation of women in the country's modernization process focused on the training of trainers for women entrepreneurs and managers. Project managers from the Russian Federation participated in a study tour conducted jointly by UNIDO and the World Bank. In Brazil, UNIDO introduced modern technology and gave support to the main textile school and research centre for training managers in new management and processing techniques. In the food-processing and related industries, UNIDO expanded projects, conducted workshops and trained trainers in areas such as technology, maintenance, quality, packaging and marketing.

At the enterprise level, a wide range of sector- and industry-specific HRD programmes were implemented. Examples of such programmes included training of trainers to conduct project appraisal and preparation of investment projects in developing countries, outreach and capacity-building exercises for women in small-scale agro-based enterprise workshops, and pilot training programmes to improve energy efficiency.

In June, a regional workshop for Arab LDCs was held for engineers and technicians on critical industrial maintenance issues. A two-month technical study was conducted for an HRD programme for Iranian women professionals from the sugar manufacturing industry. Examples of enhancing local capacity to manage industry-specific technology transfer included an Africa-wide training course on footwear technology and training in leather manufacturing technology, tannery machinery maintenance and pollution control in the leather industry.

Women in industrial development

UNIDO's programme on the integration of women in industrial development focused on substantive preparation for and participation in the Fourth World Conference on Women and its accompanying NGO Forum (Beijing, China, September) (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). In addition, UNIDO pursued the promotion, preparation and implementation of projects for women. At the same time, continued emphasis was placed on mainstreaming gender issues into programmes and projects. In line with programmes adopted in previous years, in particular the training programme for women entrepreneurs in the food-processing industries and the thematic programme "Women entrepreneurs for industrial growth", several new projects were approved in 1995 through contributions from the Industrial Development Fund (IDF), such as in Botswana, Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania. Several other projects were developed, e.g. in Ghana, Namibia and Uganda, for which the sources of financing were being explored.

A programme for women's entrepreneurship development was developed for country-level implementation. Funds were obtained for projects mainly in the food-processing industries in Cote d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Mali and Senegal. Work was under way to develop a training module for women entrepreneurs, focusing on spice production in the United Republic of Tanzania. As a result of a regional study in Latin America and the Caribbean, a Colombian pilot project was designed to elaborate a national programme to increase women's participation in manufacturing.

In order to help increase gender awareness of decision makers in developing countries, UNIDO developed a database on women in industry that provided statistical data on over 100 indicators for addressing gender issues.

The UNIDO Women and Industry Recognition Award was launched in 1995 to provide incentives to Governments for their efforts in implementing gender-sensitive policies and to women industrialists to acknowledge the best performances achieved in industry in terms of contributions to the advancement of women.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1995, UNIDO employed 924 staff members in the Professional and General Services categories stationed at its headquarters in Vienna and in 115 field offices abroad. In addition, UNIDO utilized the services of some 850 experts from more than 100 countries, 40 per cent of whom were from developing countries.

Budget

At its sixth session in December 1995, the UNIDO General Conference approved a regular budget for 1996-1997 of $181 million, funded from assessed contributions from member States, and an operational budget of $29 million funded from technical cooperation support cost reimbursement.

Chapter XVIII

World Trade Organization (WTO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

With the conclusion, after more than seven years of discussions, of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations and the signing of the Marrakesh (Morocco) Declaration in April 1994,^a the World Trade Organization (WTO) came into being on 1 January 1995 as the successor to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). WTO and GATT co-existed throughout 1995 in order to allow sufficient time for all Governments to join the new Organization. The rules of the original GATT became an integral part of WTO and, along with their various amendments, were known as GATT 1994.

WTO's five principal functions were: to facilitate the implementation of the results of the Uruguay Round; to provide a forum for multilateral trade negotiations and a framework for the implementation of their results; to administer the dispute settlement procedures; to administer the Trade Policy Review Mechanism; and to cooperate with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank with a view to achieving greater coherence in global economic policy-making.

WTO membership reached 112 by the end of 1995. Another 28 Governments, including China and the Russian Federation, were at various stages of the accession process. GATT had 128 members.

General activities

WTO's highest authority, the Ministerial Conference, was scheduled to meet every two years. It was administered by the General Council, which was set up to handle the day-to-day operation of the Organization between Conferences. The Council convened in two forms: as the Dispute Settlement Body, to oversee dispute settlement procedures, and as the Trade Policy Review Body, to conduct regular reviews of the trade policies of individual WTO members. The General Council had three subsidiary Councils—for Trade in Goods, Trade in Services, and Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights.

In 1995, General Council activities focused on procedural, organizational and institutional matters. At its first meeting in January, the Council adopted the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee for WTO, including establishment of various WTO bodies. In May, it approved the Headquarters Agreement with Swiss authorities. The Council decided in April that the International Trade Centre (ITC) should be operated jointly by WTO and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the latter acting on behalf of the United Nations. Also during the year, the WTO Secretariat pursued preparations for cooperation agreements with IMF and the World Bank.

The Trade Policy Review Mechanism, which was established provisionally in 1989 under GATT, was given a permanent role within WTO and its coverage extended to services, intellectual property and other policies covered by the Uruguay Round agreements. Fifteen trade policy reviews were undertaken between December 1994 and December 1995, including third reviews of the European Community (EC) and Japan; second reviews of Morocco, Sweden and Thailand; and first reviews of Cameroon, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Israel, Mauritius, Pakistan, the Slovak Republic, Sri Lanka, Uganda and Zimbabwe.

The WTO dispute-settlement framework was completed in November 1995 with the appointment of a seven-member Appellate Body. As at 27 November, the Dispute Settlement Body had been notified of 21 requests for consultations. As some of the requests concerned the same issue, the number of distinct measures subject to dispute was 14. Of those, four were withdrawn and panels were established on another four.

In 1995, eleven members held consultations, under Articles XII or XVII:B of GATT, with WTO and/or GATT Committees with regard to balance-of-payments restrictions. The Committees requested Poland and Slovakia to eliminate import surcharges and asked Hungary to present a concrete timetable for the reduction and elimination of an import surcharge notified in March. They requested Sri Lanka not to have recourse to the provisions of Article XVII:B. Consultations were held with Bangladesh, India and the Philippines. Egypt, Israel and South Africa disinvoked the balance-of-payments provisions in July, September and November, respectively. Following consultations in October, Brazil withdrew a quota on imports of motor vehicles notified under Article XVIII:B.

(^a)YUN 1994, pp. 1474-75.

The new WTO Committee on Trade and Environment discussed its work programme during 1995, taking advantage of work done by the GATT Group on Environmental Measures and International Trade related to three issues: the relationship between WTO provisions and trade measures taken pursuant to multilateral environmental agreements; eco-labelling and packaging requirements; and the transparency of trade-related environmental measures and environment-related trade measures.

The expanded scope of WTO increased substantially the demand for technical assistance during 1995. The WTO Secretariat arranged more than 60 national or regional seminars, workshops and technical missions during the year. In addition, a total of 99 officials from developing countries and from economies in transition participated in WTO policy trade courses, and WTO technical missions assisted officials in the capitals of least developed countries in preparing schedules of concessions on goods and commitments on services. Also, a new WTO initiative was launched to help African countries expand and diversify their trade, to be pursued in cooperation with other organizations, including UNCTAD.

At the request of the Committee on Trade and Development, the Secretariat organized a workshop in May to assist members in meeting their notification obligations. Other issues addressed by the Committee in 1995 included the impact of the Uruguay Round agreements on developing country members; the question of credit; recognition for autonomous trade liberalization measures; recent developments in the generalized system of preferences (GSP) (see PART FOUR, Chapter IV); and regional trade agreements between developing countries.

Trade in goods

Regarding implementation of tariff concessions contained in the Uruguay Round schedules, the Committee on Market Access agreed to follow the same approach used after the Tokyo Round (1973-1979), which was to rely on cross or reverse notification of any problem. No such notifications were made during 1995.

The entry into force of the Agreement on Textiles and Clothing set in motion the ten-year transition period from the 1974 Multifibre Arrangement's complex network of bilateral and discriminatory quotas to a multilateral set of rules and disciplines for textiles and clothing trade. The Textiles Monitoring Body oversaw the start of the first phase of integration into the GATT 1994 rules of at least 16 per cent of textiles and clothing products. It also reviewed measures taken under the transitional safeguard mechanism of the Agreement.

During 1995, the Committee on Agriculture focused on the establishment of efficient and effective working procedures, including notification requirements. An initial work programme was established for 1996 with respect to the Committee's role in monitoring follow-up to the Decision on Measures Concerning the Possible Negative Effects of the Reform Programme on Least Developed and Net Food-Importing Developing Countries.

The Committee on Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures agreed on the format and recommendations of proposed new regulations or changes in regulations, which were similar to those used in notifying technical regulations under the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade. To facilitate members in meeting their obligations, the Committee in 1995 identified existing international standards developed by the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO)/World Health Organization (WHO) Codex Alimentarius Commission, the Office International des Epizooties, and the FAO International Plant Protection Convention.

The Committee on Anti-Dumping Practices, the Committee on Safeguards, and the Committee on Countervailing Measures began during 1995 to review relevant legislation and regulations of members. Between 1 July 1994 and 30 June 1995, the most active members in terms of initiations of anti-dumping investigations were EC (37), the United States (30), Mexico (18) and Brazil (12). During the same period, the most active members in terms of initiations of countervailing duty actions were the United States (5), Peru (4), Argentina (2) and Canada (2). As at 30 June 1995, there were 805 anti-dumping measures in force, of which 60 per cent were maintained by the United States and EC. The number of countervailing measures was 128, of which 80 per cent were maintained by the United States.

Trade in services

The extended financial services negotiations were concluded at the end of July 1995 with 29 participants (Australia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Czech Republic, Dominican Republic, Egypt, EC, Hong Kong, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Japan, Korea, Kuwait, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Singapore, Slovak Republic, South Africa, Switzerland, Thailand, Turkey and Venezuela) offering improved access in this sector. Twenty participants made improved commitments in insurance; 24 in banking; 17 in securities; and 25 in other financial services. Negotiations continued during the year on trade in basic telecommunications and on maritime transport services.

In July 1995, the Negotiating Group on the Movement of Natural Persons concluded its work, producing six sets of commitments which were annexed to the Third Protocol to the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS). Six participants (Australia, Canada, EC, India, Norway and Switzerland) made higher levels of commitments that would guarantee new opportunities in their markets for individual service suppliers—qualified professionals, computer specialists, experts of various kinds—to work abroad in an individual capacity on temporary assignments, without the requirement that they be linked with a commercial presence in the host country.

The Council for Trade in Services established a Working Party on Professional Services, with the task of formulating recommendations on multilateral disciplines that might be needed to ensure that measures related to qualification requirements and procedures, technical standards and licensing requirements did not constitute unnecessary trade barriers. The Council also established the Working Party on GATS Rules and the Committee on Specific Commitments.

Intellectual property

The WTO Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) provided for a one-year period for developed countries to bring their legislation and practices into conformity with its mandates; developing countries and most economies in transition had five years, and least developed countries 11 years. Given those transition periods, the Council for TRIPS activities was concerned in 1995 with setting up procedural mechanisms for future work. It agreed on procedures for notification of laws and regulations pertaining to the Agreement, as well as for the review of such notifications by the Council.

Plurilateral agreements

For the most part, all WTO members subscribed to all WTO Agreements. There remained in 1995 four agreements, originally negotiated in the Tokyo Round, which had a narrower group of signatories and were therefore known as "plurilateral agreements". Activities with regard to plurilateral agreements during 1995 included the following: the Interim Committee on Government Procurement, established to oversee the entry into force of the new Agreement on Government Procurement on 1 January 1996, focused on modifications to the Appendices containing market opening concessions; the Committee on Trade in Civil Aircraft continued discussions on the legal status of the Agreement under WTO; the International Dairy Council decided, in October, to suspend until December 1997 the implementation of minimum export price provisions; and the new International Meat Council agreed that it should take into account the priority nature of work in the WTO Committees on Agriculture and on Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures.

International Trade Centre

In 1995, ITC, established in 1964 and operated jointly by GATT and UNCTAD, became the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO (see also PART FOUR, Chapter IV).

Both the United Nations and WTO contributed equally to the ITC regular budget, which in 1995 totalled $23.1 million. During the year, 58 national, 26 regional and 50 interregional ITC projects were under implementation. As part of its work, ITC was involved in export development and the promotion of a variety of commodities of interest to developing countries, including cocoa, coffee, tea, sugar, spices, vegetable oilseeds, fats and oils, fish, citrus fruit, edible nuts, rice, cotton, hard fibres, jute, silk, coconut products, natural rubber products, tropical timber, and hides, skins and leather.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1995, the WTO Secretariat employed 510 staff members, of whom 250 were in the Professional or higher categories and 260 in the General Service category.

Budget

Member countries of WTO contributed to the budget in accordance with a scale assessed on the basis of each country's share in the total trade of WTO members. The total budget for 1995 was 105,389,500 Swiss francs. Beginning in 1996, WTO members' contributions would be determined according to their share in total trade in goods, services and intellectual property rights.

On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations; it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

^(k)Through accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October 1990, the two German States (both of which became United Nations Members on 18 September 1973) united to form one sovereign State. Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971, and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and
4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.
2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco, or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the Member.

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions.

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

The conditions under which a state which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.
