13. Encourages intergovernmental as well as non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 50/180

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 53); 60-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.48), orally revised; agenda item 112 (b).

Preventing minority discrimination

In a June report with later addenda,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General provided comments on recommendations in the final report of Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway), submitted in 1993,⁽⁴⁾ concerning possible ways of facilitating the peaceful and constructive solution of problems involving minorities. Seven Governments, one UN body, one intergovernmental body and two NGOs had reported.

On 18 August,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Subcommission, taking into account a working paper prepared by Special Rapporteur Eide in 1994,⁽¹¹⁾ asked him to prepare, for submission in 1996, a second working paper containing further suggestions for a comprehensive programme for the prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities. It asked him to take into account the discussion and proposals of the joint meeting of the Subcommission and CERD (see above, under "Contemporary forms of racism").

Enclaved groups

As requested by the Subcommission in 1994,⁽¹²⁾ Special Rapporteur Eide, in a July working paper⁽¹³⁾ on the concept and issues relating to enclaved groups, stated that the notion of enclaved groups had not been formally defined under international law. Following a comparison of enclaved groups to inhabitants of international enclaves and to autonomies, and a discussion of situations where enclaved groups existed, he defined an enclaved group as persons belonging to a national or ethnic, religious or linguistic group who had traditionally lived in the area; who differed from the general population surrounding them; who were subject to special hardships due to restrictions imposed on them which were more severe than restrictions affecting members of the majority group in the area concerned; or who experienced fear of attack and maltreatment from members of the majority group, without being able to rely on effective and impartial protection by the local police and other agents of law. He also discussed various indicators of the existence of an enclaved group.

Religious intolerance

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1994,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁵⁾ on activities carried out by the Centre for Human Rights and NGOs to implement the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief.⁽¹⁶⁾

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report⁽¹⁷⁾ of Abdelfattah Amor (Tunisia), the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance. Allegations of intolerance or discrimination based on belief that he had transmitted in 1994 to 49 Governments were reproduced in his report, as were responses received from Governments. The majority of allegations concerned violations of the right to have the religion or belief of one's choice, the right to change one's religion or belief, the right to manifest and practise one's religion in public and in private, and the right not to be subjected to discrimination on those grounds by any State, institution or group of persons. The Special Rapporteur also described his visit to China (21-30 November 1994) where he noted developments in the human rights situation.

The Special Rapporteur deplored the serious infringement of the rights of persons belonging to religious minorities in countries with an official or clearly predominant majority religion. In certain cases, he had difficulty in distinguishing between religious conflicts and ethnic conflicts and between religious intolerance and political persecution. He noted the continuing extremism and religious fanaticism in certain countries, and expressed concern over: the abuse of legislation against blasphemy and groundless accusations; many cases of harm caused to places of worship, special religious sites and religious property of all denominations; and the role played by the media in some countries in developing a climate of religious intolerance. He emphasized education as the essential means of opposing intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, and stressed the importance of establishing a continuing interfaith dialogue to combat all forms of religious extremism. He recommended the use of advisory services for specific purposes; seminars to publicize or ensure better understanding of existing principles, norms and remedies regarding freedom of religion and belief; training courses for teachers; workshops for representatives of specific religions and ideologies and of non-governmental human rights organizations; and workshops for members of the media.

The report contained a questionnaire addressed to States on issues relating to freedom of religion and belief in primary and secondary schools.

Commission action. In 1995, the Commission continued to consider measures to implement the Declaration, as requested by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽¹⁸⁾ On 24 February, it urged⁽¹⁹⁾ States to: provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief; ensure that no one, on account of their religion or belief, was deprived of the right to life or the right to liberty and security of person, or was subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention; combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, including those motivated by religious extremism; and ensure that members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respected different religions and beliefs. The Commission called on States to recognize, as provided in the Declaration, the right of all persons to worship or assemble for religious purposes, establish and maintain places to do so, and ensure that such places were fully respected and protected. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years and called on Governments to cooperate with him. It asked the Secretary-General to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1995 and to report in 1996. Those requests and the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate were approved on 25 July by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1995/260.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General in September transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report⁽²⁰⁾ on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance. The Special Rapporteur discussed legislation to restrict religious intolerance and discrimination, based on replies to a 1990 questionnaire received from Governments in 1991⁽²¹⁾ and 1992,⁽²²⁾ and additional responses⁽²³⁾ received in view of the Commission's 1994 request⁽¹⁴⁾ to Governments to communicate all new information falling within the Special Rapporteur's mandate, as well as any other observations they wished to make. He stressed the importance of country visits, noting his visit to Pakistan (12-22 June 1995) where he paid particular attention to studying legislation and its application. The Special Rapporteur carried out consultations and projects regarding the role of education in combating intolerance and discrimination, and stated that he had received replies from 64 Governments to his questionnaire on issues relating to freedom of religion and belief in primary and secondary schools.⁽¹⁷⁾ The report contained tables giving the status of communications sent to Governments from 1988, the year in which the mandate was established, to 1995.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/183.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling that all States have pledged themselves, under the Charter of the United Nations, to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recognizing that these rights derive from the inherent dignity of the human person,

Emphasizing that the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is far-reaching and profound and that it encompasses freedom of thought on all matters, personal conviction and the commitment to religion or belief, whether manifested individually or in community with others,

Recalling article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Reaffirming that discrimination against human beings on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter,

Reaffirming also its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Reaffirming further the call of the World Conference on Human Rights for all Governments to take all appropriate measures in compliance with their international obligations and with due regard to their respective legal systems to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including practices of discrimination against women and the desecration of religious sites, recognizing that every individual has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, expression and religion,

Recalling that the World Conference on Human Rights recognized that the process of promoting and protecting human rights should be conducted in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law,

Calling upon all Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance to enable him to carry out his mandate fully,

Recognizing that it is desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and that both Governments and non-governmental organizations have an important role to play in this domain,

Emphasizing that non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups at every level have an important role to play in the promotion of tolerance and the protection of freedom of religion or belief,

Conscious of the importance of education in ensuring tolerance of religion and belief,

Welcoming the inclusion of events relating to tolerance and religious diversity among the activities undertaken during the United Nations Year for Tolerance,

Alarmed that serious instances of intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, including acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious extremism, occur in many parts of the world and threaten the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply concerned that, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, the rights violated on religious grounds include the right to life, the right to physical integrity and to liberty and security of person, the right to freedom of expression, the right not to be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and the right not to be arbitrarily arrested or detained,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of hatred, intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a human right derived from the inherent dignity of the human person and guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States to ensure that their constitutional and legal systems provide adequate and effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief to all without discrimination, including the provision of effective remedies in cases where the right to freedom of religion or belief is violated;

3. Also urges States to ensure, in particular, that no one within their jurisdiction is, because of their religion or belief, deprived of the right to life or the right to liberty and security of person, or is subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention;

4. Condemns all instances of hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious extremism and intolerance of religion or belief;

5. Further urges States, in conformity with international standards of human rights, to take all necessary action to prevent such instances, to take all appropriate measures to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious extremism and to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

6. Recognizes that legislation alone is not enough to prevent violations of human rights, including the right to freedom of religion or belief;

7. Emphasizes that, as underlined by the Human Rights Committee, restrictions on the freedom to manifest religion or belief are permitted only if limitations are prescribed by law; are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others; and are applied in a manner that does not vitiate the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

8. Urges States to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

9. Calls upon all States to recognize, as provided in the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief, and to establish and maintain places for those purposes;

10. Expresses its grave concern at any attack upon religious places, sites and shrines, and calls upon all States, in accordance with their national legislation and in conformity with international human rights standards, to exert utmost efforts to ensure that such places, sites and shrines are fully respected and protected;

11. Recognizes that the exercise of tolerance and non-discrimination by persons and groups is necessary for the full realization of the aims of the Declaration;

12. Considers it desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and to ensure that appropriate measures are taken to this end, including the dissemination, as a matter of high priority, of the text of the Declaration by United Nations information centres, as well as by other interested bodies;

13. Encourages the continued efforts on the part of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate;

14. Invites the Special Rapporteur, within the terms of his mandate and in the context of recommending remedial measures, to take into account the experiences of various States as to which measures are most effective in promoting freedom of religion and belief and countering all forms of intolerance;

15. Encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate even more effectively;

16. Recommends that the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief be given appropriate priority in the work of the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, including with regard to the drafting of legal texts in conformity with international instruments on human rights and taking into account the provisions of the Declaration;

17. Welcomes and encourages the efforts of non-governmental organizations to promote the implementation of the Declaration, and invites them to consider what further contribution they could make to its implementation and dissemination in all parts of the world;

18. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration;

19. Requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Rapporteur receives the necessary staffing and financial and material resources to enable him to discharge his mandate;

21. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its fifty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 50/183

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 13 December (meeting 55); 69-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.55), orally revised; agenda item 112 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 53, 55; plenary 99.

HIV- and AIDS-related discrimination

Report of the Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights had before it a report⁽²⁴⁾ of the Secretary-General describing international and domestic measures taken to protect human rights and prevent discrimination in the context of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), based on information received from 19 Governments, six UN bodies, two regional commissions, four UN specialized agencies, four intergovernmental bodies and nine NGOs.

The Secretary-General concluded that the protection of human rights and prevention of discrimination had been accepted in principle in many national AIDS programmes, yet a dramatic gap seemed to exist between national policies and legislation and their implementation. Furthermore, many national policies actively interfered with the human rights of the individual and were generally carried out without legal justification. He recommended that national AIDS programmes include measures to combat social stigmatization, discrimination and violence directed against persons with HIV or AIDS and develop a supportive legal and social environment necessary for AIDS prevention and care. The Secretary-General advocated education, outreach and the dissemination of information as effective means to prevent and control HIV/AIDS. Governments were urged to take special measures to reach disadvantaged groups with prevention information and education and with care programmes and to increase support to action-oriented social and behavioural research.

The Secretary-General welcomed the establishment of the Joint and Co-sponsored UN Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIII). He recommended that the Commission on Human Rights consider the elaboration of a set of guidelines or principles to assist Governments in shaping their national policies regarding the human rights dimension of HIV/AIDS. The guidelines, he stated, could provide an international framework for discussion of human rights considerations at the national, regional and international levels.

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission called⁽²⁵⁾ on States to ensure that their laws, policies and practices, including those concerning HIV/AIDS, respected human rights standards and did not inhibit programmes dealing with HIV/AIDS prevention and care. It also called on them to take steps to ensure the full enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights by people living with HIV or AIDS, their families, those associated with them, and people presumed to be at risk of infection, paying particular attention to women, children and other vulnerable groups, and to address such concerns within their activities in the context of the UN Year for Tolerance in 1995 (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). The Commission further called on States to strengthen their efforts to advance the legal, economic and social status of women, children and vulnerable groups in order to render them less vulnerable to the risk of HIV infection and to the adverse socio-economic consequences of the AIDS pandemic, and to take steps to facilitate informed and responsible behaviour.

The Commission called on the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery to pay attention to the risk that the exploitation of children posed for HIV transmission. It asked the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and similar bodies to monitor States parties' compliance with their commitments under the relevant human rights instruments regarding the rights of people infected with HIV or AIDS, their families and associates, or people presumed to be at risk. It called on the Subcommission to keep the issue of AIDS-related discrimination under review under all relevant agenda items, as well as within the work of its relevant working groups and special rapporteurs. The Commission called on relevant professional bodies to re-examine their codes of professional practice to strengthen respect for human rights and dignity in the context of HIV/AIDS and to develop training in that regard. It asked the agencies co-sponsoring UNAIDS to integrate a strong human rights component throughout the programme. The Commission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to consider methods to keep under review the protection of human rights in the context of the pandemic and to undertake with the Centre, in cooperation with UNAIDS, non-governmental agencies and others, the elaboration of guidelines on promoting and protecting respect for human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS, and to reflect on organizing a second international expert consultation on human rights and AIDS, the first such consultation having been held in 1989.⁽²⁶⁾ The Secretary-General was asked to consult with Governments, relevant UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs with a view to keeping under review the protection of human rights in the context of the pandemic, and to submit in 1996 a progress report on the development of a human rights component in UNAIDS and on the status of future guidelines.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission called⁽²⁷⁾ on States to review their laws, policies and practices to ensure that they respected human rights standards and the full enjoyment of human rights and freedoms by people with HIV/AIDS, their families and those associated with them. It also called for strengthened efforts to advance the legal, economic and social status of women, children, minorities, migrants and other groups in order to render them less vulnerable to HIV infection and to the adverse socio-economic consequences of the pandemic. The Subcommission asked the Commission to request the Centre for Human Rights to maximize its efforts in combating HIV/AIDS-related discrimination and to build close links with UNAIDS for ongoing collaboration. It stressed the importance of organizing a second international expert consultation to consider developments on the matter, including the production of guidelines for preventing HIV/AIDS-related discrimination. The Subcommission urged the Commission to keep under review the issue of HIV/AIDS-related human rights violations and discrimination and asked UNAIDS to ensure the integration of a strong human rights component in all its activities.

Civil and political rights

The right to self-determination

In 1995, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the right to self-determination of the people of Palestine⁽¹⁾ and of Western Sahara.⁽²⁾ Two other resolutions adopted under the item pertained to the Middle East peace process⁽³⁾ and the use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination.⁽⁴⁾

In September, the Secretary-General summarized action taken by the Commission on the right of peoples to self-determination.⁽⁵⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1995, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/139.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh, forty-eighth, forty-ninth, fiftieth and fifty-first sessions,

Reaffirming its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986, 42/94 of 7 December 1987, 43/105 of 8 December 1988, 44/80 of 8 December 1989, 45/131 of 14 December 1990, 46/88 of 16 December 1991, 47/83 of 16 December 1992, 48/93 of 20 December 1993 and 49/148 of 23 December 1994, Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of those acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this question to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

General Assembly resolution 50/139

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/627) without vote, 2 November (meeting 18); 24-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.7); agenda item 104.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 3-8, 15, 18; plenary 97.

The rights of Palestinians

On 17 February, the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 27 to 1, with 22 abstentions, reaffirmed⁽¹⁾ the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and called on Israel to withdraw from the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in accordance with UN resolutions. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to Israel and all other Governments, to distribute it as widely as possible and to make available to the Commission, prior to its 1996 session, all information pertaining to its implementation by Israel.

As requested by the Commission in 1994,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽⁷⁾ that he had received no reply to his request to Israel for information on implementation of the Commission's 1994 resolution on the situation in occupied Palestine.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/140.

The right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Aware that the development of friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, is among the purposes and principles of the United Nations, as defined in its Charter,

Recalling the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Noting the progress made in the Middle East peace process, in particular the mutual recognition and the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements in Washington on 13 September 1993 by the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Government of Israel, as well as the ensuing implementation agreements, the last of which was the interim agreement of 28 September 1995,

Affirming the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

1. Reaffirms the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination;
2. Expresses the hope that the Palestinian people could soon be exercising their right to self-determination in the current peace process;
3. Urges all States, specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to continue to support the Palestinian people in their quest for self-determination.

Middle East peace process

On 17 February, by a roll-call vote of 50 to none,⁽³⁾ the Commission welcomed the establishment in 1994⁽⁸⁾ of the Palestinian Authority and its positive efforts to develop sound governance based on the will of the Palestinian people and democratic procedures, and called on the Centre for Human Rights to make available, on request, its programme of advisory services and technical assistance to that Authority. The Commission expressed its support for the achievements of the peace process, in particular the 1993 Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, signed by Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO),⁽⁹⁾ the subsequent 1994 Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area signed by Israel and PLO,⁽⁸⁾ the 1994 Agreement on Preparatory Transfer of Powers and Responsibilities,⁽⁸⁾ the 1993 Agreement between Israel and Jordan on the Common Agenda,⁽¹⁰⁾ the 1994 Washington Declaration signed by Jordan and Israel⁽¹¹⁾ and the 1994 Jordan-Israel Treaty of Peace.⁽¹¹⁾ The Commission urged all parties to implement the agreements reached (see also PART TWO, Chapter VI).

On 18 August, the Subcommission endorsed⁽¹²⁾ the achievements of the Middle East peace process and urged all parties to implement the agreements reached. It expressed full support for the active role of the United Nations in the peace process.

Western Sahara

On 17 February, the Human Rights Commission endorsed⁽²⁾ the content of a 1994 statement made by the President of the Security Council on behalf of the Council,⁽¹³⁾ in which the Council welcomed progress made on the situation in Western Sahara and invited the two parties concerned, Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro, to continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General and the UN Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara. It paid tribute to: the Secretary-General and his Deputy Special Representative for their action to settle the question of Western Sahara; the Identification Commission, the body responsible for establishing the final list of Saharans qualified to participate in the voting, for the work it had accomplished; and the Deputy Special Representative for the efforts he had made under a 1994 Security Council resolution.⁽¹⁴⁾ The Commission noted a 1994 report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Western Sahara⁽¹⁵⁾ and decided to follow developments there and to consider the matter in 1996.

Mercenaries

Commission action. In a 17 February resolution,⁽⁴⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 34 to 1, with 15 abstentions, the Commission, reaffirming that the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries should be considered as offences of grave concern, called on all States to consider ratifying the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries.⁽¹⁶⁾ It also urged them to prevent mercenaries from using any part of their territory to destabilize any sovereign State. It extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for three years and asked him to report in 1996.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/254.

Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/5 of 17 February 1995, approved the Commission's decision to extend for three years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the question of the use of mercenaries, and requested the Secretary-General to provide him with all necessary assistance.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/254

31-1-16 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 51, 52.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Bhutan, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Russian Federation, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Uganda, Ukraine, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, United Kingdom.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General, in August 1995, transmitted a report describing mercenary activities prepared by Special Rapporteur Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru).⁽¹⁸⁾ The Special Rapporteur discussed armed conflicts and mercenary activities and cooperation among States in preventing those activities. He described mercenary activities in Africa and the influx and conduct of foreigners in the armed conflicts in the former Yugoslavia. He evaluated his visits made in 1994⁽¹⁹⁾ to Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). He recommended that the Assembly reaffirm its condemnation of mercenary activities and of States or third parties involved in them; stress the condemnation of the use of mercenaries in itself and their use for unlawful activities; recommend that Member States adopt domestic legislation prohibiting organizations linked to mercenaries from operating in their territory; and call on States that had not ratified or acceded to the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries to speed up the process of doing so. The Special Rapporteur recommended that Member States, among other things, establish policies to prevent mercenary activities, involving the exchange of information and the provision of care for career military personnel who had a tendency towards aggressive behaviour and had lost their jobs and might become mercenaries. An addendum to his report⁽²⁰⁾ contained letters on the use of mercenaries from Armenia dated 21 December 1994, Croatia (30 June 1995) and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (14 July).

The Special Rapporteur updated⁽²¹⁾ the information in his August report. He concluded that a number of events in 1995, notably the attempted coup d'etat in the Comoros and the armed conflict in Sierra Leone (see PART TWO, Chapter II), proved that mercenary activities still existed and caused serious harm. He recommended that the Commission on Human Rights, among other things, stress the condemnation of the use of mercenaries in itself; reiterate its commitment to defending the sovereignty, independence and equality of small and island States and the full exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination; and extend its support for the sovereignty and independence of the Comoros and for the observance of the right of its people to self-determination. He asked the Commission to support the investigation of the presence and activities of mercenaries in Sierra Leone.

As to the status of the 1989 Convention, the Special Rapporteur stated that only nine States had become parties to it—Barbados, Cyprus, Georgia, Italy, Maldives, Seychelles, Suriname, Togo and Ukraine; an additional 12 States had signed it—Angola, Belarus, Cameroon, Congo, Germany, Morocco, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, Uruguay, Yugoslavia and Zaire. The Convention was to enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/138.

Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

Recalling its resolution 49/150 of 23 December 1994,

Recalling also all of its relevant resolutions, in which, inter alia, it condemned any State which permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of fighting against national liberation movements, and recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Organization of African Unity,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples,

Alarmed and concerned about the danger that the activities of mercenaries constitute to peace and security in developing countries, particularly in Africa and in small States, where democratically elected Governments have been overthrown by mercenaries or through mercenary international criminal activities,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the negative effects on the polity and economies of affected countries resulting from mercenary aggression and criminal activities,

Convinced that it is necessary for Member States to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the General Assembly in 1989, and to develop and maintain international cooperation among States for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of mercenary activities,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the use of mercenaries and mercenary-related activities to topple sovereign Governments and to undermine the rights of peoples to self-determination despite resolution 49/150;

2. Reaffirms that the use of mercenaries and their recruitment, financing and training are causes for grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to take necessary legislative measures to ensure that their territories and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State or threaten the territorial integrity and political unity of sovereign States, or to promote secession or fight the national liberation movements struggling against colonial or other forms of alien domination or occupation;

4. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to consider taking necessary action to sign or to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

5. Urges all States to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate;

6. Requests the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, as a matter of priority, to publicize the adverse effects of mercenary activities on the right to self-determination and, when requested where necessary, to render advisory services to States that are affected by the activities of mercenaries;

7. Requests the Special Rapporteur to report, with specific recommendations, his findings on the new elements identified in the use of mercenaries to undermine the rights of peoples to self-determination to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

Democratic processes

Periodic and genuine elections

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General in November reported on enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections.⁽²³⁾ He noted new trends in requests for electoral assistance, such as fewer large-scale verification missions, increased demand for smaller and more economical forms of electoral assistance, and a shift in international efforts from short-term preoccupation with the events of a particular election day to longer-term considerations related to developing and strengthening electoral institutions and processes. Between 18 October 1994 and 17 October 1995, electoral assistance was provided to 29 Member States, of which 19 received technical assistance or advisory services. The Secretary-General discussed the UN electoral mission in Haiti (see PART TWO, Chapter III) and the international observer mission, with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, for elections in Armenia (see PART TWO, Chapter V). Annexed to the report was a status report on 33 Member State requests, including their nature and action taken.

The UN Trust Fund for Electoral Observation—established in 1991⁽²⁴⁾ for cases in which requesting Member States were unable to finance in whole or in part the process of electoral verification—as at 23 October 1995 had a balance of $1,479,509.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/185.

Strengthening the role of the United Nations in enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections and the promotion of democratization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, especially resolutions 48/131 of 20 December 1993 and 49/190 of 23 December 1994,

Recalling also the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, especially the recognition therein that assistance provided upon the request of Governments for the conduct of free and fair elections, including assistance in the human rights aspects of elections and public information about elections, is of particular importance in the strengthening and building of institutions relating to human rights and the strengthening of a pluralistic civil society, and that special emphasis should be given to measures that assist in achieving those goals,

Reaffirming that electoral assistance and support for the promotion of democratization are provided only at the specific request of the Member State concerned,

Recognizing the usefulness of a comprehensive and balanced approach in the activities carried out by the United Nations in this field in order to contribute to the strengthening of both democracy and human rights within the country concerned,

Welcoming the support provided by States to the electoral assistance activities of the United Nations, inter alia, through the provision of experts and electoral observers, as well as through contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections,

Noting the continuing high level and evolving nature of requests for electoral assistance by Member States,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on United Nations activities aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections;

2. Commends the electoral assistance provided to Member States at their request by the United Nations, requests that such assistance continue on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the guidelines on electoral assistance, recognizing that the fundamental responsibility of organizing free and fair elections lies with Governments, and also requests the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat to continue to inform Member States on a regular basis about the requests received, responses given to those requests and the nature of the assistance provided;

3. Requests that the United Nations continue its efforts to ensure, before undertaking to provide electoral assistance to a requesting State, that there is adequate time to organize and carry out an effective mission for providing such assistance, that conditions exist to allow a free and fair election and that provisions can be made for adequate and comprehensive reporting of the results of the mission;

4. Commends the steps taken by the United Nations to ensure the continuation and consolidation of the democratization process in certain Member States requesting assistance, including the provision of assistance before and after elections have taken place and needs-assessment missions aimed at recommending programmes which might contribute to the consolidating of the democratization process, and requests that such efforts be strengthened;

5. Recommends that the Electoral Assistance Division provide post-election assistance, as appropriate, to requesting States and electoral institutions, in order to contribute to the stability and continuity of their electoral processes, as provided for in the report of the Secretary-General, and that it study, in cooperation with relevant United Nations offices, ways of defining more clearly the activities related to democratic consolidation which the United Nations might usefully undertake in assisting the efforts of interested States in this regard;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take further steps to support States which request assistance by, inter alia, enabling the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in accordance with his mandate and through the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, to support democratization activities related to human rights concerns, including human rights training and education, assistance for human rights-related legislative reform, strengthening and reform of the judiciary, assistance to national human rights institutions and advisory services on treaty accession, reporting and international obligations as related to human rights;

7. Commends the programmes of assistance carried out by the United Nations Development Programme for civil service reform and for governance, especially those for strengthening participation and linkages between concerned sectors of society and Governments;

8. Recalls the establishment by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation, and calls upon Member States to consider contributing to the Fund;

9. Stresses the importance of coordination within the United Nations system, including cooperation with the Centre for Human Rights, the Department for Development Support and Management Services of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme, which provide advisory services and technical assistance to requesting Member States, and encourages the Electoral Assistance Division to strengthen its collaboration with the Centre, including through an exchange of personnel when appropriate, and with the Department and the Programme and to continue to inform them of requests submitted in the area of electoral assistance;

10. Notes with appreciation additional efforts being made to enhance cooperation with other international, governmental and non-governmental organizations in order to facilitate more comprehensive and need-specific responses to requests for electoral assistance;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Electoral Assistance Division with adequate human and financial resources, under the regular budget of the Organization and within existing resources, to allow it to carry out its mandate, and to continue to ensure that the Centre for Human Rights is able to respond, within its mandate and in close coordination with the Electoral

Assistance Division, to the increasing number of requests from Member States for advisory services;

12. Notes the evolution in the nature of requests for assistance and the growing need for specific types of expert assistance aimed at supporting and strengthening the existing capability of the requesting Government, in particular through enhancing the capacity of electoral institutions;

13. Recommends that the Secretary-General consider ways to continue to improve coordination and to strengthen further the efforts of the Electoral Assistance Division, the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations system in general to respond to its increased and evolving responsibilities and enlarged mandate in the field of electoral assistance and democratization as reflected in the present resolution, and to include his recommendations in this regard in his report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of resolution 49/190 and the present resolution, in particular on the status of requests from Member States for electoral assistance and verification, and on his efforts to enhance the Organization's support of the democratization process in Member States.

National sovereignty and non-interference

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁶⁾ in October on action taken by the Commission on Human Rights concerning respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes. While no specific action had been taken by the Commission to review the fundamental factors negatively affecting the observance of those principles, he stated, a number of resolutions referred to the issue of elections in the context of guaranteeing the free expression of the will of peoples. These addressed situations in Afghanistan,⁽²⁷⁾ Haiti,⁽²⁸⁾ Myanmar,⁽²⁹⁾ South Africa,⁽³⁰⁾ Togo,⁽³¹⁾ Western Sahara⁽³²⁾ and Zaire,⁽³³⁾ as well as the issue of the establishment of a democratic society.⁽³⁴⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/172.

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purpose of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, by which it approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further the principle enshrined in Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter of the United Nations, which establishes that nothing contained in the Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the Charter,

Reaffirming the obligation of Member States to comply with the principles of the Charter and the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the right to self-determination, by virtue of which all peoples can freely determine, without external interference, their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Reaffirming also, in this context, the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Recognizing that the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of any State should be respected in the holding of elections,

Recognizing also that there is no single political system or single universal model for electoral processes equally suited to all nations and their peoples, and that political systems and electoral processes are subject to historical, political, cultural and religious factors,

Convinced that the establishment of the necessary mechanisms and means to guarantee full and effective popular participation in electoral processes corresponds to States,

Recalling all its resolutions in this regard,

Welcoming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed that the processes of promoting and protecting human rights should be conducted in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right, freely and without external interference, to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

2. Reaffirms that it is the concern solely of peoples to determine methods and to establish institutions regarding the electoral process, as well as to determine the ways for its implementation according to their constitution and national legislation, and that, consequently, States should establish the necessary mechanisms and means to guarantee full and effective popular participation in those processes;

3. Reaffirms also that any activities that attempt, directly or indirectly, to interfere in the free development of national electoral processes, in particular in the developing countries, or that are intended to sway the results of such processes, violate the spirit and letter of the principles established in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Reaffirms further that electoral assistance to Member States should be provided by the United Nations only at the request and with the consent of specific sovereign States, by virtue of resolutions adopted by the Security Council or the General Assembly in each case, in strict conformity with the principles of sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, or in special circumstances such as cases of decolonization, or in the context of regional or international peace processes;

5. Strongly appeals to all States to refrain from financing or providing, directly or indirectly, any other form of overt or covert support for political parties or groups and from taking actions to undermine the electoral processes in any country;

6. Condemns any act of armed aggression or threat or use of force against peoples, their elected Governments or their legitimate leaders;

7. Reaffirms that all countries have the obligation under the Charter to respect the right of others to self-determination and to determine freely their political status and pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

8. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Establishment of a democratic society

Commission action. On 7 March, the Human Rights Commission asked⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General to circulate materials prepared in response to a 1994 General Assembly resolution.⁽³⁵⁾ It recommended that the Subcommission discuss ways of overcoming obstacles to the consolidation of democratic societies, taking into account the relation between democracy, development and human rights. The Commission decided to examine the matter in 1996.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission, having considered a statement by Osman El-Hajjé (Lebanon) on democracy and the establishment of a democratic society,⁽³⁶⁾ asked⁽³⁷⁾ him to submit a working paper on the subject in 1996.

Freedom of speech

The Commission on Human Rights considered in 1995 a report of the Special Rapporteur on the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Abid Hussain (India).⁽³⁸⁾ He discussed the terms of reference that constituted the legal framework within which he would carry out his mandate and his methods of work. He described his activities during 1994, including a visit to Malawi (3-6 October), where he concluded that the population was enjoying the right to freedom of opinion and expression, as set out in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽³⁹⁾ and the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁽⁴⁰⁾ His report contained the text of communications sent to nine countries concerning allegations of violations of the right to freedom of opinion and expression and replies of those Governments thereon.

The Special Rapporteur expressed concern over the continued intimidation and harassment of writers and journalists. He urged Governments to bring their national legal systems into line with international standards governing the right to freedom of opinion and expression and recommended to the Commission that it consider the provision of adequate financial and human resources for his work.

Commission action. On 3 March,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Commission, expressing concern at the inadequate resources provided to the Special Rapporteur, reiterated its 1994 request⁽⁴²⁾ to the Secretary-General to provide all the assistance necessary to the Special Rapporteur to fulfil his mandate effectively. The Secretary-General was asked to consider ways to publicize the Special Rapporteur's work, and Governments were urged to cooperate with and assist him. The Special Rapporteur was to report in 1996, to develop further his commentary on the right to seek and receive information and to expand on his observations arising from communications.

Conscientious objectors

The Commission on Human Rights in 1995 considered a report of the Secretary-General⁽⁴³⁾ summarizing replies from 23 Governments to a 1993 Commission request⁽⁴⁴⁾ for comments or information on conscientious objection to military service.

On 8 March, the Commission appealed⁽⁴⁵⁾ to States to enact legislation and to take measures aimed at exemption from military service on the basis of a genuinely held conscientious objection to armed service. It urged them not to differentiate between conscientious objectors on the basis of the nature of their beliefs nor to discriminate against recognized conscientious objectors for failing to perform military service. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to all Member States and to include the right of conscientious objection to military service in UN public information activities, including the UN Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2005) (see preceding chapter). The Commission also asked for an update in 1997 of information provided in the annexes to a 1983 report on the subject.

On 3 March, the Commission called on⁽⁴⁶⁾ Member States to provide effective legislation and other mechanisms to ensure implementation of UN standards on human rights in the administration of justice. It urged the High Commissioner for Human Rights to consider favourably requests by States for assistance in the administration of justice and to strengthen coordination of activities.

As requested by the Commission in 1994,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Secretary-General, in a February note,⁽⁴⁸⁾ drew the attention of the Commission to a report containing information on the provision to Governments of technical assistance and advisory services in the field of the administration of justice.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Working group activities. The five-member sessional working group on the administration of justice and the question of compensation met in Geneva on 2, 9 and 10 August.⁽⁵⁰⁾ The group considered draft articles 8 to 11, concerning forms of reparation, of the principles and guidelines proposed by the Special Rapporteur in 1993. It recommended that the Subcommission request the Special Rapporteur to prepare a revised version of the proposed basic principles and guidelines before the Subcommission met in 1996. On 24 August,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Subcommission requested the working group to continue consideration of the subject and asked the Special Rapporteur to submit a revised set of proposed basic principles and guidelines on remedies in time for its 1996 session.

Regarding follow-up measures to the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance,⁽⁵²⁾ the Chairman/Rapporteur proposed that the group in 1996 keep him informed of the status report prepared by the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances concerning measures taken by Governments to give effect to the Declaration and of the action taken by NGOs to encourage the implementation of the Declaration, facilitate its dissemination and contribute to the work of the Subcommission in that area. He also proposed that the group submit in 1996 a preliminary draft international convention on the prevention and punishment of enforced disappearances and that a meeting of experts be organized to prepare a working paper on the subject.

The group decided to request the Special Rapporteur on human rights and states of emergency to prepare a working paper on rights not subject to derogation during states of emergency and exceptional circumstances so that the group could examine the subject in depth at its next session.

Following discussion of the death penalty, the group recommended that the subject remain on its agenda and that special attention be given to the imposition of the death penalty on minors and on persons with mental and physical disabilities.

In order to decide whether the Subcommission had amply fulfilled its mandate on the question of juvenile justice and if the item could consequently be removed from the agenda to make way for a new item, the Chairman/Rapporteur requested the Secretariat to prepare an information note for 1996, recapitulating the reports, studies and other documents submitted by UN bodies since the issuance of the final report prepared in 1992 by the Special Rapporteur responsible for the matter.⁽⁵³⁾

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/181.

Human rights in the administration of justice

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/137 of 20 December 1993, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/41 of 3 March 1995 on human rights in the administration of justice, in particular of children and juveniles in detention,

Bearing in mind the principles embodied in articles 3, 5, 9, 10 and 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols thereto, in particular article 6 of the Covenant, which explicitly states that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life and prohibits the imposition of the death penalty for crimes committed by persons below eighteen years of age,

Bearing in mind also the relevant principles embodied in the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Mindful of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in particular of the obligation of States to treat men and women equally in all stages of procedures in courts and tribunals,

Calling attention to the numerous international standards in the field of the administration of justice,

Recognizing that the rule of law and the proper administration of justice are important elements for sustainable economic and social development and play a central role in the promotion and protection of human rights,

Welcoming the important work of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in the field of human rights in the administration of justice, in particular regarding the independence of the judiciary, the independence of judges and lawyers, the right to a fair trial, habeas corpus, human rights and states of emergency, the question of arbitrary detention, the human rights of juveniles in detention, the privatization of prisons and the question of the impunity of perpetrators of violations of human rights,

Welcoming also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/36 of 3 March 1995 on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers,

Welcoming further the important work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the field of human rights in the administration of justice, as reflected, inter alia, in Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/13 on United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice and resolution 1995/15 on technical cooperation and interregional advisory services in crime prevention and criminal justice, of 24 July 1995,

Emphasizing the importance of coordinating the activities in this field carried out under the responsibility of the Commission on Human Rights with those under the responsibility of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice,

Noting that many human rights violations in the administration of justice are specifically or primarily directed against women and that the identification and reporting of those violations demand special vigilance,

Aware of the specific situation of children and juveniles in detention and their special needs while deprived of their liberty, in particular their vulnerability to various forms of abuse, injustice and humiliation,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the full and effective implementation of all United Nations standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

2. Acknowledges that the administration of justice, including law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies, and, especially, an independent judiciary and legal profession in full conformity with applicable standards contained in international human rights instruments are essential to the full and non-discriminatory realization of human rights and indispensable to democratization processes and sustainable development;

3. Once again reiterates its call to all Member States to spare no effort in providing for effective legislative and other mechanisms and procedures, as well as adequate resources, to ensure full implementation of those standards;

4. Appeals to Governments to include in their national development plans the administration of justice as an integral part of the development process and to allocate adequate resources for the provision of legal-aid services with a view to the promotion and protection of human rights;

5. Invites Governments to provide training in human rights in the administration of justice, including juvenile justice, to all judges, lawyers, prosecutors, social workers and other professionals concerned, including police and immigration officers;

6. Encourages States to make use of technical assistance offered by the United Nations programmes of advisory services and technical assistance, in order to strengthen national capacities and infrastructures in the field of the administration of justice;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to consider favourably requests by States for assistance in the field of the administration of justice and to strengthen system-wide coordination in this field, in particular between the United Nations programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights and the technical cooperation and advisory services of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme;

8. Invites the international community to respond favourably to requests for financial and technical assistance for the enhancement and strengthening of the administration of justice, with a view to ensuring the promotion and protection of human rights in the administration of justice;

9. Calls upon special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to questions relating to the effective protection of human rights in the administration of justice and to provide, wherever appropriate, specific recommendations in this regard, including proposals for concrete measures of advisory services and technical assistance;

10. Acknowledges the important role of the regional commissions, specialized agencies and United Nations institutes in the area of human rights and crime prevention and criminal justice, and of other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including national professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards in this field;

11. Invites the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to coordinate closely their activities relating to the administration of justice;

12. Decides to consider the question of human rights in the administration of justice at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

General Assembly resolution 50/181

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 53); 53-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.49), orally revised; agenda item 112 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-53; plenary 99.

Compensation for victims

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission encouraged⁽⁵⁴⁾ its Subcommittee to continue to consider at its 1995 session the proposed basic principles and guidelines contained in the 1993 report of the Special Rapporteur on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms.⁽⁵⁵⁾ It requested States to provide the Secretary-General with information about legislation they had adopted, or were in the process of adopting, relating to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for such victims. The Secretary-General was requested to submit in 1996 a report based on the information received.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a May report with later addenda,⁽⁵⁶⁾ the Secretary-General summarized comments on the Special Rapporteur's proposed principles and guidelines⁽⁵⁵⁾ received from nine Governments, two specialized agencies, two intergovernmental organizations and one NGO. Annexed to the report were the proposed basic principles and guidelines.

Subcommission action. On 1 August, the Subcommission, recalling its 1994 decision,⁽⁴⁷⁾ decided⁽⁵⁷⁾ to establish a sessional working group on the right to compensation.

Rule of law

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission, noting that the programme of advisory services and technical assistance did not have funds to assist projects with a direct impact on the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law, asked⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Secretary-General to explore the possibilities of obtaining from all relevant institutions of the UN system technical and financial means to strengthen the capacity of the Centre for Human Rights to provide such assistance and to report to the General Assembly in 1995.

By decision 1995/270 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October report,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Secretary-General described efforts to strengthen the rule of law.

He called attention to the continuing lack of funds to assist States committed to strengthening the rule of law but also facing economic hardship. Efforts were initiated to encourage the international community to support the advisory services programme. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights had sought to explore possibilities for obtaining from all relevant UN agencies and financial institutions technical and financial assistance. In addition, the High Commissioner initiated consultations with other UN entities; met with executive heads of UN agencies and programmes; had meetings and working-level contacts with agencies and programmes on thematic issues; held field-level meetings in connection with human rights field missions and projects; and concluded memoranda of understanding with various agencies and programmes. Support for capital and technical assistance funds, the Secretary-General stated, might be facilitated by supplementing the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights; establishing a separate, complementary fund for capital assistance in the area of human rights; or encouraging increased support from development agencies and funds and financial institutions. To strengthen the rule of law, he advocated additional and dedicated resources to support programme development activities within the Centre for Human Rights.

The success of UN efforts to strengthen the rule of law, he went on, relied on the response of the international community to the urgencies he had described.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/179.

Strengthening of the rule of law

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, by adopting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in cooperation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Firmly convinced that, as stressed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the rule of law is an essential factor in the protection of human rights,

Convinced that through their own national legal and judicial systems States must provide appropriate civil, criminal and administrative remedies for violations of human rights,

Recognizing the importance of the role that can be played by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat in supporting national efforts to strengthen the institutions of the rule of law,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, the General Assembly entrusted the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with, inter alia, providing through the Centre and other appropriate institutions advisory services and technical and financial assistance in the field of human rights, enhancing international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights and coordinating human rights activities throughout the United Nations system,

Recalling the recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights that a comprehensive programme be established within the United Nations and under the coordination of the Centre with a view to helping States in the task of building and strengthening adequate national structures that have a direct impact on the overall observance of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law,

Recalling also its resolution 49/194 of 23 December 1994, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/54 of 3 March 1995,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Takes note with interest of the proposals contained in the report of the Secretary-General for strengthening the programme of advisory services and technical assistance of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat in order to comply fully with the recommendations of the World Conference on Human Rights concerning assistance to States in strengthening their institutions in the rule of law;

3. Praises the efforts made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Centre to accomplish their ever-increasing tasks with the limited financial and personnel resources at their disposal;

4. Expresses its deep concern at the scarcity of means at the disposal of the Centre for the fulfilment of its tasks;

5. Notes that the programme of advisory services and technical assistance does not have assistance funds sufficient to provide any substantial financial assistance to national projects that have a direct impact on the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law in countries that are committed to those ends, but which face economic hardship;

6. Affirms that the High Commissioner, with the assistance of the Centre, remains the focal point for coordinating system-wide attention for human rights, democracy and the rule of law;

7. Welcomes the consultations and contacts initiated by the High Commissioner with other relevant bodies and programmes of the United Nations system aiming at the enhancement of inter-agency coordination and cooperation in providing assistance for the strengthening of the rule of law;

8. Encourages the High Commissioner to pursue these consultations, taking into account the need to explore new synergies with other organs and agencies of the United Nations system with a view to obtaining increased financial assistance for human rights and the rule of law;

9. Requests the High Commissioner to continue to explore the possibilities of obtaining from all relevant institutions of the United Nations system, including financial institutions, acting within their mandates, technical and financial means to strengthen the capacity of the Centre to provide assistance to national projects aiming at the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the results of the contacts established in accordance with paragraph 9 above, as well as on any other developments pertaining to the implementation of the above-mentioned recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights.

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 53); 41-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.42); agenda item 112 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 53; plenary 99.

Impunity

The Special Rapporteur on the question of the impunity of perpetrators of violations of human rights (civil and political rights), Louis Joinet (France), in June provided a progress report on the subject,⁽⁶⁰⁾ following submission of a preliminary report in 1994.⁽⁴²⁾ He outlined certain points under discussion concerning the scope of impunity and its definition and the role of society in combating impunity, including the capacity of victims to organize themselves and secure reparation and the need to improve the effectiveness of UN mechanisms for the protection of human rights. The Special Rapporteur also discussed States' responsibility in combating impunity.

On 24 August, the Subcommission asked⁽⁶¹⁾ the Special Rapporteur to submit his final report in 1996.

In June, the Special Rapporteur on opposition to the impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations (economic, social and cultural rights), El Hadji Guissé (Senegal), submitted an interim report⁽⁶²⁾ in which he discussed practices that might give rise to the violation of those rights, such as slavery, colonization, apartheid and cultural looting. He also discussed certain practices which were sources of violations of economic, social and cultural rights, including debt, structural adjustment programmes, corruption, and fiscal and customs fraud and other economic offences. Violations of economic, social and cultural rights affected a variety of specific rights: to development, to a healthy environment, to work, to health, to adequate food, to adequate housing and to education. The Special Rapporteur presented preventive measures and repressive or remedial action aimed at penalizing violations that had already been committed. He recommended broadening the scope of the study and holding an international meeting to gather information from various sources to prepare his final report.

On 24 August, the Subcommission asked⁽⁶³⁾ the Special Rapporteur to submit his final report in 1996.

Independence of the judicial system

In February, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Dato' Param

Cumaraswamy (Malaysia), submitted his first report,⁽⁶⁴⁾ in which he discussed his activities and examined his mandate and the legal framework of the issue. Issues of special importance concerned the principle of the separation of powers; judicial review of the constitutionality or legality of executive decisions, administrative orders and legislative acts; the criterion of independence; states of emergency; anti-terrorism measures; and the relationship between the media and the judiciary. The Special Rapporteur wanted to be apprised of requests for advisory services and technical assistance from the Centre for Human Rights with regard to the independence and impartiality of the judiciary; he recommended that the Centre publish a fact sheet on the subject.

On 3 March, the Commission, welcoming the Special Rapporteur's report, endorsed⁽⁶⁵⁾ his wish to be kept informed of the programme of advisory services and technical assistance, and requested him to report in 1996.

Right to a fair trial

On 3 March, the Commission on Human Rights endorsed⁽⁶⁶⁾ a Subcommission proposal that the 1994 study on the right to a fair trial⁽⁶⁷⁾—prepared by Special Rapporteurs Stanislav Cherichenko (Russian Federation) and William Treat (United States)—be published in all official UN languages, taking into account comments received from Governments and Subcommission members, as well as recent developments. It decided to consider in 1996 the establishment of an open-ended working group to draft a third optional protocol to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,⁽⁴⁰⁾ aiming at guaranteeing the right to a fair trial and a remedy.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/299, approved the Commission's endorsement of the Subcommission's proposal and asked that the Secretary-General provide all the assistance needed to compile and publish the report.

Detention of juveniles

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission called on⁽⁴⁶⁾ States to give high priority to promoting and protecting all rights of the child and juveniles, and to take into account in their national legislation and practices and to disseminate widely the 1985 UN Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules),⁽⁶⁸⁾ the 1990 UN Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines)⁽⁶⁹⁾ and the UN Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty.⁽⁷⁰⁾ States were urged to ensure compliance with the principle that depriving children and juveniles of their liberty should be used only as a measure of last resort. The Commission also noted the recommendations of an expert meeting on children and juveniles in detention, held in 1994 (see below).

The Commission recommended that States use technical assistance offered by UN programmes of advisory services and technical assistance to strengthen national capacities and infrastructures in juvenile justice. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to pay special attention to the subject and, in cooperation with the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the UN Children's Fund, to develop strategies to ensure effective coordination of relevant technical cooperation programmes. The Secretary-General was to report in 1996.

Notes by the Secretary-General. In June, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Subcommission his report⁽⁷¹⁾ on the 1994 expert meeting on children and juveniles in detention.⁽⁷²⁾

As requested by the Subcommission in 1994,⁽⁷²⁾ the Secretary-General, in a July note with a later addendum,⁽⁷³⁾ provided information received from seven Governments, one specialized agency, one UN body and one intergovernmental organization describing the situation of children deprived of their liberty and the implementation of provisions and standards designed to ensure their protection.

Detained UN staff members

Report of the Secretary-General. In January, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report updating developments pertaining to the detention of international civil servants and their families.⁽⁷⁴⁾ Annexed to the report was a consolidated list of staff members under arrest and detention or missing and the text of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel.⁽⁷⁵⁾

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission appealed⁽⁷⁶⁾ to Member States to respect and ensure respect for the rights of staff members and others acting under UN authority and their families, and urged them to provide adequate and prompt information concerning their arrest or detention; grant immediate access to the detained by representatives of international organizations; allow independent medical teams to investigate the health of detained staff members, experts and their families and afford them medical assistance; allow representatives of international organizations to attend hearings; and ensure the release of detained UN staff members, experts and members of their families. Member States were urged to consider promptly signing the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1996 on the status of the Convention, on the situation of UN staff members, experts and their families detained, imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, and on cases which had been successfully settled since his last report. It also asked him to take steps to ensure the application of the recommendations contained in the 1992 final report of the Special Rapporteur on the protection of the human rights of UN staff members, experts and their families.⁽⁷⁷⁾

Capital punishment

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1990,⁽⁷⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in June 1995 the fifth quinquennial report on capital punishment,⁽⁷⁹⁾ which also covered the implementation of safeguards guaranteeing the protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty. The report was drawn from all available data, including current criminological research, and included comments from specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The Secretary-General provided information received from 60 Governments and three NGOs about the implementation of the safeguards and death penalty from 1989 to 1993.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/57.

Capital punishment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2857(XXVI) of 20 December 1971, 32/61 of 8 December 1977, 39/118 of 14 December 1984 and 44/128 of 15 December 1989,

Recalling also its resolutions 1745(LIV) of 16 May 1973, 1930(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and 1990/51 of 24 July 1990,

Having considered the fifth quinquennial report of the Secretary-General on capital punishment and the implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing the protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, submitted to it in pursuance of its resolution 1990/51 and its decision 1994/206 of 3 February 1994,

Conscious of the fact that only sixty-three Governments replied to the questionnaire which the Secretary-General sent to them asking them to provide the information required for the preparation of the fifth quinquennial report,

1. Invites Member States to reply to the questionnaire which the Secretary-General will send them with a view to the preparation of the sixth quinquennial report in the year 2000, providing him with the information requested;

2. Notes that, during the period covered by the report of the Secretary-General, an increasing number of countries abolished the death penalty and others followed a policy of reducing the number of capital offences and declared that they had not sentenced any offender to that penalty, while others retained it;

3. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to examine the report of the Secretary-General at its fifth session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the sixth quinquennial report, to draw on all available data, including current criminological research, and to invite the comments of specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council on this question;

5. Recommends that the quinquennial reports of the Secretary-General, like the one submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1995, should continue to cover also the implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty.

Other issues

Terrorism

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission condemned⁽⁸⁰⁾ all acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations. Expressing its solidarity with victims of terrorism, the Commission encouraged States to respond to the Secretary-General's request, made pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁸¹⁾ to submit views on the establishment of a UN voluntary fund for victims. It called on States to take effective measures, in accordance with international human rights standards, to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism, and urged the international community to enhance cooperation in the fight against terrorism. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to collect information on terrorism from relevant sources and make it available to the special rapporteurs and working groups concerned and to the Commission. It welcomed the Subcommission's 1994 decision⁽⁸²⁾ to entrust one of its members with preparing a working paper on terrorism and human rights, and invited States that so wished to forward relevant information to him.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽⁸¹⁾ the Secretary-General in October reported⁽⁸³⁾ the views of eight Governments on the establishment of a voluntary fund for victims of terrorism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/186.

Human rights and terrorism

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the International Covenants on Human Rights, Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that acts of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations aimed at the destruction of human rights have continued despite national and international efforts,

Bearing in mind that the most essential and basic human right is the right to life,

Bearing in mind also that terrorism creates an environment that destroys the freedom from fear of the people,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also its resolutions 48/122 of 20 December 1993 and 49/185 of 23 December 1994,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/43 of 3 March 1995,

Reiterating that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, and also that every individual should strive to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance,

Seriously concerned at the gross violations of human rights perpetrated by terrorist groups,

Profoundly deploring the increasing number of innocent persons, including women, children and the elderly, killed, massacred and maimed by terrorists in indiscriminate and random acts of violence and terror, which cannot be justified under any circumstances,

Noting with great concern the growing connection between the terrorist groups and other criminal organizations engaged in the illegal traffic in arms and drugs at the national and international levels, as well as the consequent commission of serious crimes such as murder, extortion, kidnapping, assault, taking of hostages and robbery,

Mindful of the need to protect human rights of and guarantees for the individual in accordance with the relevant international human rights principles and instruments, particularly the right to life,

Reaffirming that all measures to counter terrorism must be in strict conformity with international human rights standards,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the victims of terrorism;
2. Reiterates its unequivocal condemnation of the acts, methods and practices of terrorism as activities aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy, threatening the territorial integrity and security of States, destabilizing legitimately constituted Governments, undermining pluralistic civil society and having adverse consequences on the economic and social development of States;
3. Calls upon States to take all necessary and effective measures in accordance with international standards of human rights to prevent, combat and eliminate all acts of terrorism wherever and by whomever committed;
4. Urges the international community to enhance cooperation at regional and international levels in the fight against terrorism in accordance with relevant international instruments, including those relating to human rights, with the aim of its eradication;
5. Condemns incitement of ethnic hatred, violence and terrorism;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to seek the views of Member States on the possible establishment of a United Nations voluntary fund for victims of terrorism, as well as ways and means to rehabilitate the victims of terrorism and to reintegrate them into society, and to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, for its consideration, a report containing comments made by Member States on the subject;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Member States and to competent specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations for their consideration;

8. Encourages special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights, as well as treaty bodies, to pay appropriate attention, within their mandates, to the consequences of the acts, methods and practices of terrorist groups;

9. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

State of siege or emergency

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission endorsed⁽⁸⁴⁾ a 1994 resolution⁽⁸⁵⁾ of its Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and recommended to the Economic and Social Council a draft resolution (see below).

On 24 February,⁽⁸⁶⁾ the Commission underlined the necessity for strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedure for derogation under article 4 of the Covenant and the need for States parties to provide full and timely information during states of emergency, so that the justification and appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances could be assessed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/34.

Question of human rights and states of emergency

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/42 of 3 March 1995 and Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities resolution 1994/36 of 26 August 1994,

1. Approves the request of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to the Special Rapporteur on human rights and states of emergency, Mr. Leandro Despouy, to fulfil his mandate, notably relating to the holding of an expert meeting to study non-derogable rights in states or situations of emergency and the international principles to be taken into account in drafting national legal rules, and to establish a database on states of emergency and related human rights questions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary assistance for the fulfilment of his mandate.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/34
25 July 1995 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote
Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23), orally amended by Japan; agenda item 5 (d).
Meeting numbers. ESC 51-53.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), submitted his eighth annual report,⁽⁸⁷⁾ containing information on 87 States or territories which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency. He discussed progress made on establishing a database on states of emergency. Annexed to his report was a report of a meeting of experts (Geneva, 17-19 May) on rights not subject to derogation during states of emergency and exceptional circumstances. Previous reports were issued by the Special Rapporteur in 1987,⁽⁸⁸⁾ 1988,⁽⁸⁹⁾ 1989,⁽⁹⁰⁾ 1991,⁽⁹¹⁾ 1992,⁽⁹²⁾ 1993⁽⁹³⁾ and 1994.⁽⁸⁵⁾

In November,⁽⁹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission additional information on two countries in which measures had been taken that constituted the proclamation, introduction, extension, maintenance or termination of emergency regimes in various forms.⁽⁹⁵⁾

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission encouraged⁽⁹⁶⁾ the Special Rapporteur to submit in his ninth report conclusions and recommendations on non-derogable rights in states or situations of emergency, and asked him to pursue and broaden consultations on the subject of receiving, storing and retrieving information, through a database, on states of emergency and related human rights issues and to report in 1996 on the results.

Humanitarian standards

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission, recognizing the need to address principles applicable to situations of internal and related violence, disturbance, tension and public emergency in a manner consistent with international law and the UN Charter, invited⁽⁹⁷⁾ States to consider reviewing their national legislation relevant to situations of public emergency with a view to ensuring that it met the requirements of the rule of law and that it did not involve discrimination. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by a group of experts (Turku, Finland, December 1990),⁽⁹⁸⁾ to Governments, inter-governmental organizations and NGOs for their comments and to submit a report in 1996.

Also, noting a 1994 Subcommission resolution,⁽⁹⁹⁾ the Commission decided⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ not to forward to the Economic and Social Council the Subcommission's draft decision to authorize a study on the question of the implications for human rights of UN action, including humanitarian assistance, in addressing international humanitarian problems and in the promotion of human rights.

Arbitrary detention

Commission action. On 7 March, the Commission, taking note of the report of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention on its 1994 sessions,⁽⁷²⁾ expressed concern⁽¹⁰¹⁾ that, according to the Group, most cases of arbitrary deprivation of liberty were motivated by denial of the exercise of the right to freedom of opinion and expression. It requested Governments concerned to give the necessary attention to urgent appeals addressed to them on a strictly humanitarian basis and without prejudging the character of the detention. The Commission asked the Group to continue to seek and gather information from Governments, inter-governmental organizations and NGOs, as well as from individuals concerned, their families or their legal representatives; to submit a report in 1996; and to make suggestions which would enable it to discharge its mandate in the best possible way.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held its twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth sessions in Geneva in 1995 (29 May-2 June, 11-19 September, 29 November-8 December).⁽¹⁰²⁾ The activities of the five independent experts included transmitting letters to Governments of countries where cases of alleged arbitrary detention were reported to have occurred and asking them to make inquiries and inform the Group of the results within 90 days. During the year, the Group sent communications to 28 countries concerning 829 new cases of arbitrary detention, to which 14 countries replied. The Group received three replies to letters transmitted prior to 1995. It also addressed 62 urgent-action appeals to 38 countries concerning 215 individuals. In addition, the Group addressed urgent appeals jointly with other thematic and country special rapporteurs to three Governments. In cases where the alleged arbitrary detention had endangered the health or life of the detainees, or in view of other particular circumstances, the Group appealed to the Governments concerned to consider releasing those persons without delay.

The Group proposed that the Commission recommend that Governments maintaining declared states of emergency strictly apply the principle of proportionality and limitation in time, considering the frequency with which arbitrary detentions occurred in those conditions. It suggested that the Commission request Governments to eliminate from their legislation precepts which sanctioned modes of conduct without describing them with sufficient clarity; ask States to incorporate habeas corpus in their legislation as an individual right; and renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the question of states of emergency. The Group asked the Commission to recommend that the Subcommission transmit the draft declaration on habeas corpus, as soon as it was approved. It proposed the provision of advisory services related to individual freedom.

Annexed to the Group's report were its revised methods of work and statistical data regarding cases of detention in which the Group adopted a decision as to whether they were arbitrary or not.

In 1995, the Group adopted 49 decisions concerning 847 persons in 22 countries, as well as in the territory controlled by the Palestinian Authority. Decisions adopted in December 1994 and in June and September 1995 were contained in a separate addendum.⁽¹⁰³⁾

Extra-legal executions

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report submitted by its Special Rapporteur on summary or arbitrary executions, Bacre Waly Ndiaye (Senegal),⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ updating activities undertaken by him since the submission of his 1994 report.⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ He discussed issues related to his mandate and described situations where urgent appeals and other communications had been transmitted to Governments, together with any replies or observations received from them. He stated that, as in the past, impunity was the key to the perpetuation of violations of the right to life.

The Special Rapporteur recommended action concerning capital punishment, death threats, deaths in custody, deaths due to use of force by law enforcement officials, violations of the right to life during armed conflicts, extradition of persons to a country where their life was in danger, and impunity.

He made further recommendations concerning violations of the right to life directed against certain groups, including minors, particularly street children; women; persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities; UN and specialized agency staff members; and persons exercising their right to freedom of opinion and expression and to the right to life and the administration of justice. Other recommendations concerned terrorism, civil defence forces, mass exoduses, forensic experts, the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights,⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ and prevention of violations of the right to life.

The Special Rapporteur in 1995 visited Burundi (19-29 April)⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ to gather additional information about violations of the right to life which had occurred following the October 1993 coup and which had continued, although to a lesser extent. He concluded that the serious human rights situation in Burundi resulted from abuses against the right to life which had taken root among the Hutu and Tutsi populations, the violence into which Burundi had been plunged and impunity. The Special Rapporteur expressed concern over the massacres and extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions among civilians, especially women and children, and the situation of refugees and the displacement and dispersion of people throughout the country. He called for action at the national level to provide security and protection and, at the international level, to improve the human rights situation. (See also next chapter.)

The Special Rapporteur in 1995 also visited the island of Bougainville in Papua New Guinea (23-28 October),⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ where he noted that violence, against the background of an armed conflict between the Papua New Guinea Defence Force and the Bougainville Revolutionary Army, had decreased considerably since a 1994 cease-fire (see next chapter). Noting that human rights violations continued, he gathered information regarding alleged extrajudicial executions, torture, harassment and ill-treatment by those in charge of care centres, and violations of the right to freedom of movement, and noted deficiencies in the right to education and the right to health and in the administration of justice. He made recommendations concerning peace and reconciliation, education and training for youth and the administration of justice.

Commission action. On 8 March, the Human Rights Commission strongly condemned⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and demanded that Governments ensure that those practices were ended and that they took effective action to combat and eliminate them. It asked the Special Rapporteur to: continue examining extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and report annually; respond to information he received; enhance further his dialogue with Governments, as well as follow up on recommendations made in his reports; continue to pay special attention to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions of children and women and to allegations concerning violations of the right to life; and continue monitoring the implementation of international standards on safeguards and restrictions relating to the imposition of capital punishment. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years and asked the Secretary-General to assist him in his work. The Economic and Social Council approved those actions on 25 July by decision 1995/284. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights⁽⁴⁰⁾ appeared not to be respected, and to continue to ensure that personnel specializing in human rights and humanitarian law formed part of UN missions in order to deal with serious human rights violations.

Population movements

Mass exoduses

Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission, strongly deploring ethnic and other forms of intolerance as one of the major causes of forced migratory movements, urged⁽¹¹⁾ States to take steps to ensure respect for human rights, especially the rights of persons belonging to minorities. It again invited Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations to intensify their cooperation in addressing problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons and the causes of such exoduses. The Commission invited special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups studying human rights violations to seek information on problems resulting in mass exoduses and to include such information in their reports. It asked all UN bodies, the specialized agencies, governmental and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to cooperate with it and to provide information on the human rights situations creating or affecting refugees and displaced persons. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to pay attention to situations causing or threatening to cause mass exoduses. The Commission urged the Secretary-General to allocate resources to consolidate the system for early-warning activities in the humanitarian area in order to ensure that effective action was taken to identify human rights abuses contributing to mass exoduses, and to invite comments thereon. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to ask Governments, intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and NGOs for information and to submit in 1996 an update of his report (see below).

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to its 1994 decision,⁽¹¹²⁾ the Commission considered in 1995 a report of the Secretary-General⁽¹¹³⁾ containing information and views on solutions found to be effective in the area of mass exoduses provided by seven Governments, five UN bodies, two UN specialized agencies, four intergovernmental bodies and two NGOs. The report also contained a compilation of information and recommendations from human rights mechanisms on problems resulting in mass exoduses or impeding voluntary return home submitted by the special rapporteurs on the human rights situations in Afghanistan, Iraq, Myanmar, Rwanda, the Sudan, the territory of the former Yugoslavia and Zaire;

the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons; the Special Rapporteur on violence against women; the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions; and the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Human Rights Committee and the Working Group on the Right to Development.

Expressing his views on the matters referred to in the report, the Secretary-General stated that the problems of mass exoduses and their possible solutions transcended the human rights mechanisms of the UN system. He noted that the work of the Commission and the Subcommission needed a sharper focus. There was no single information-gathering system on the question and there was no single mechanism on the issue reporting to the Commission or Subcommission. The mandates of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons could be amplified, but that called for commensurate resources. Activities of the human rights mechanisms should be encouraged and further developed and coordinated, with priority accorded to the systematization of early-warning information collected in the Centre for Human Rights. Again, he noted that increased resources would be necessary.

In accordance with a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General, in an October report,⁽¹¹⁵⁾ described action taken by the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) as focal point and facilitator of the early-warning network of new mass flows of refugees and displaced persons, noting that the project was fully operational and able to generate data on more than 100 countries. Early-warning activities were also being taken by the High Commissioner and the Centre for Human Rights. Preventive action was taken by the High Commissioner, a number of special rapporteurs and working groups and human rights treaty bodies. The Secretary-General also discussed the recommendations contained in a 1986 report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees⁽¹¹⁶⁾ and the recommendations made by the Joint Inspection Unit in 1990.⁽¹¹⁷⁾

(For other information on refugees, see PART FOUR, Chapter XII.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/182.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed by the escalating scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, as well as those of the Commission on Human Rights, in particular Commission resolution 1995/88 of 8 March 1995, and the conclusions of the World Conference on Human Rights, which recognized that gross violations of human rights, including in armed conflicts, are among the multiple and complex factors leading to displacement of people, and the need for a comprehensive approach by the international community to address root causes and effects of movements of refugees and other displaced persons and the strengthening of emergency preparedness and response mechanisms,

Conscious of the fact that mass exoduses of populations are caused by multiple and complex factors, such as human rights violations, political, ethnic and economic conflicts, famine, insecurity, violence, poverty and environmental degradation, which indicate that any approach to early warning requires an intersectoral and multidisciplinary approach,

Noting that the Secretary-General, in his report entitled "An Agenda for Peace", identifies the protection of human rights and the promotion of economic well-being as important elements of peace, security and development,

Noting the continuation of the inter-agency consultations on early warning regarding new mass flows of refugees and displaced persons,

Recognizing the important aspects of complementarity between the system for the protection of human rights and humanitarian action, and that humanitarian agencies make an important contribution to the achievement of human rights,

Stressing the need for strengthening international cooperation aimed at averting new massive flows of refugees while providing durable solutions to actual refugee situations,

Recognizing that the human rights machinery of the United Nations, including the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the human rights treaty bodies, has important capabilities to address human rights violations that cause movements of refugees and displaced persons or prevent durable solutions to their plight,

Recognizing also that women and children constitute approximately 80 per cent of most refugee populations and that, in addition to the problems and needs they share with all refugees, women and girls in such circumstances are vulnerable to gender-based discrimination and gender-specific violence and exploitation,

Reiterating that development and rehabilitation assistance is essential in addressing some of the causes of mass exoduses and also in the context of the development of prevention strategies,

Welcoming the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to meet the protection and assistance needs of refugees and other persons of concern to her Office worldwide,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Recalls with satisfaction its endorsement, in its resolution 41/70 of 3 December 1986, of the call upon all States to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms and to refrain from denying these to individuals in their population because of nationality, ethnicity, race, religion or language;

3. Strongly deplores ethnic and other forms of intolerance as one of the major causes of forced migratory movements, and urges States to take all necessary steps to ensure respect for human rights, especially the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

4. Invites again all Governments and intergovernmental, humanitarian and non-governmental organizations concerned to intensify their cooperation and assistance in worldwide efforts to address the serious problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons and the causes of such exoduses;

5. Encourages States that have not already done so to consider acceding to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and to other relevant regional refugee instruments, as applicable, and relevant international human rights instruments;

6. Notes with appreciation the contribution made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to the development of the humanitarian early-warning system of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, and takes note of ongoing consultations in this regard;

7. Invites the special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights and the United Nations human rights treaty bodies, acting within their mandates, to continue seeking information, where appropriate, on problems resulting in mass exoduses of populations or impeding their voluntary return home and, where appropriate, to include such information, together with recommendations thereon, in their reports and to bring such information to the attention of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, for appropriate action within his mandate, in consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

8. Requests all United Nations bodies, including the human rights treaty bodies, the specialized agencies and governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to cooperate fully with all mechanisms of the Commission and, in particular, to provide them with all relevant information in their possession on the human rights situations creating or affecting refugees and displaced persons;

9. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in accordance with his mandate, as set out in General Assembly resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, and in cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to pay attention to situations that cause or threaten to cause mass exoduses and to address effectively such situations through emergency preparedness and response mechanisms, including information-sharing with United Nations early-warning mechanisms, and the provision of technical advice, expertise and cooperation;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to attach high priority and to make available the necessary resources within the regular budget of the United Nations for the consolidation and strengthening of emergency preparedness and response mechanisms, including early-warning activities in the humanitarian area, for the purpose of ensuring, inter alia, that effective action is taken to identify all multiple and complex factors, including human rights violations, that contribute to mass outflows of persons;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report containing detailed information on the programmatic, institutional, administrative, financial and managerial efforts instituted to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to avert new flows of refugees and to tackle the root causes of such outflows;

12. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 50/182

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 13 December (meeting 56); 30-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.51/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 112 (b).

Population displacement

On 18 August, the Subcommission urged⁽¹¹⁸⁾ Governments and others involved to do everything possible to cease all practices of forced displacement, population transfer and ethnic cleansing. It urged States parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees⁽¹¹⁹⁾ to safeguard and give effect to the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution. It asked its inter-sessional Working Group on Minorities to examine possible solutions to problems involving minorities, issues relating to forcible displacement of populations, including threats of removal, and the return of displaced persons (see above, under "Other aspects of intolerance").

Internally displaced persons

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission extended⁽¹²⁰⁾ the mandate of the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons and asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance in order for him to fulfil his mandate. It asked the representative to continue to submit reports annually to the General Assembly and the Commission. On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/273, approved all the above actions.

Calling on the High Commissioner for Human Rights, DHA, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, the UN Development Programme, the UN Children's Fund, the UN Development Fund for Women, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Organization for Migration and all other humanitarian agencies to continue to cooperate with the representative, to provide him with relevant information and to assist him, the Commission encouraged the representative to continue to cooperate and coordinate with them. It also called on relevant rapporteurs, working groups, experts and the High Commissioner for Human Rights to seek information on situations that could lead to internal displacement and to include that information and recommendations thereon in their reports.

Reports of the representative of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1994 Commission resolution⁽¹²¹⁾ encouraging the Secretary-General's representative on internally displaced persons, Francis Deng (Sudan), to continue his compilation and analysis of existing rules and norms relating to internal displacement, the representative, in a January report,⁽¹²²⁾ drew the attention of the Commission to a document containing two papers undertaken at his request by three institutions—the Ludwig Boltzmann Institute for Human Rights (Austria), the American Society of International Law (United States) and the International Human Rights Law Group (United States)—which were reviewed at a meeting of legal experts (Vienna, October 1994). The representative planned to present a complete version of the work in 1996.

In a February report,⁽¹²³⁾ the representative summarized his main findings since his appointment in 1992,⁽¹²⁴⁾ as well as the activities undertaken, the progress made, the difficulties encountered and the conclusions reached on the issue of protection and assistance for the internally displaced. He reviewed his missions to nine countries and follow-up activities to those missions, discussed the issue of legal standards, analysed relevant institutional mechanisms and capacities, and examined strategies being developed to provide better assistance and protection. He also outlined the fundamentals for a plan of action to address the protection and assistance needs of the internally displaced. He concluded that in spite of new and increased approaches to meet the needs of internally displaced persons, the challenge far exceeded the international community's response, which still remained largely ad hoc and grossly inadequate. He made a series of recommendations to address the crises of internal displacement.

In October,⁽¹²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an update of the representative's February report, describing his activities since then to improve the situation of internally displaced persons.

In a later report,⁽¹²⁶⁾ the representative described his visit to Peru (12-25 August) where the forced displacement of almost 1 million people had been the result of a 15-year armed conflict between various armed groups and the armed forces of the Government. The vast majority of the displaced were from the indigenous and native communities. The report cited the lack of personal documentation which increased the risk of arbitrary detention, false charges and forced recruitment by the armed forces, and the need to register land, provide property titles and enhance the system of adjudication of land disputes. The representative's recommendations focused on economic and social reform and pacification, enhanced cooperation between the Government and

NGOs, human rights promotion and protection at the local level, preventive strategies, increased material support from the Government, voluntary return and alternative areas of settlement, and international assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/195.

Protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons

The General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed by the growing number of internally displaced persons throughout the world who receive inadequate protection and assistance, and conscious of the serious problems this is creating for the international community,

Recalling the relevant norms of international human rights instruments and of international humanitarian law,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which calls for a comprehensive approach by the international community with regard to refugees and displaced persons,

Reiterating its call for a more concerted response by the international community to the needs of internally displaced persons while emphasizing that activities on their behalf must not undermine the institution of asylum,

Conscious of the continuing need for the United Nations system to gather information comprehensively on the issue of the protection of human rights of and assistance to internally displaced persons,

Welcoming the decision of the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1995/57 of 3 March 1995, in which it extended the mandate of the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons for another three years to continue his review of the need for protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, including his compilation and analysis of legal norms, the root causes of internal displacement, prevention and long-term solutions,

Noting the progress made thus far by the representative of the Secretary-General in developing a legal framework, studying the causes and manifestations of internal displacement and analysing institutional arrangements, undertaking dialogue with Governments, issuing a series of reports on particular country situations together with proposals for remedial measures, and raising the level of awareness, at both the national and international levels, concerning the problem of internal displacement,

Welcoming the cooperation already established between the representative of the Secretary-General and the United Nations humanitarian assistance and development organizations engaged in protecting and assisting internally displaced persons, as well as the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and other relevant organizations,

Welcoming in particular the decision by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to promote further consultations with the representative of the Secretary-

General, as well as the decision by the Inter-Agency Standing Committee and its working group to invite the representative to participate in relevant meetings and in its Task Force on Internally Displaced Persons,

Recalling the report of the representative of the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-first session, and the conclusions and recommendations contained therein with regard to improving protection of, assistance to and development for internally displaced persons,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons;

2. Commends the representative for the catalytic role he is playing in raising the level of consciousness about the plight of internally displaced persons;

3. Notes the efforts of the representative to develop a framework and to promote strategies for better protection, assistance and development for internally displaced persons;

4. Encourages the representative to continue his analysis of the causes of internal displacement, the needs of those displaced, measures of prevention and ways to increase protection, assistance and solutions for internally displaced persons;

5. Also encourages the representative to continue to pay specific attention in his review to the protection and assistance needs of women and children, bearing in mind the relevant strategic objective in the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995;

6. Calls upon the representative to continue to study the problem of internally displaced persons and to invite, with the approval of Governments, specialists and consultants to contribute expert assistance during missions and to make use of research facilities;

7. Invites the representative to finalize his compilation and analysis of existing legal norms for inclusion in his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session;

8. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to consider the question of establishing a framework in this regard on the basis of the report of the representative and the recommendations contained therein;

9. Calls upon all Governments to continue to facilitate the activities of the representative, encourages them to give serious consideration to inviting the representative to visit their countries so as to enable him to study and analyse more fully the issues involved, and thanks those Governments which have already done so;

10. Invites Governments to give due consideration, in dialogue with the representative, to the recommendations and suggestions made to them by him, in accordance with his mandate, and to inform him of measures taken thereon;

11. Urges all relevant United Nations humanitarian assistance and development organizations concerned to establish frameworks of cooperation with the representative so as to provide all possible assistance and support to him in the implementation of his programme of activities, and invites the representative to report thereon;

12. Calls upon the representative and regional inter-governmental organizations, such as the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of American States and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to intensify their cooperation with a view to encouraging their undertaking initiatives to facilitate assistance to and protection of internally displaced persons;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the representative to carry out his mandate effectively;

14. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 50/195

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.3) without vote, 13 December (meeting 56); 56-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.54), orally revised; agenda item 112 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 54, 56; plenary 99.

Population transfer

In a June note,⁽¹²⁷⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the Special Rapporteur on the human rights dimensions of population transfer, including the implantation of settlers and settlements, Awn Shawkat Al-Khasawneh (Jordan), was unable to submit in 1995 a final report as the Subcommittee had requested in 1994.⁽¹²⁸⁾

On 24 August,⁽¹²⁹⁾ the Subcommittee, recalling its request for a final report in 1995 and bearing in mind that the Special Rapporteur had not been in a position to provide that report, asked him to report in 1996.

Disappearance of persons

Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances

On 3 March, the Commission extended⁽¹²⁹⁾ for a three-year period the mandate of the five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,⁽¹³⁰⁾ to enable it to consider information concerning such disappearances. It asked the Group to pay particular attention to cases of children subjected to enforced disappearance and children of disappeared persons and to cooperate closely with the Governments concerned to search for and identify those children. It urged Governments to take action concerning communications of alleged enforced disappearances transmitted to them by the Group, and to assist the Group, in particular by replying to its requests for information. It also urged them to intensify cooperation with the Group on any action taken pursuant to recommendations addressed to them; to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against any instances of intimidation or ill-treatment to which they might be subjected; and to take steps to ensure that, when a state of emergency was introduced, the protection of human rights was guaranteed, particularly regarding the prevention of enforced disappearances. The Commission invited States to implement the principles of the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance.⁽¹³¹⁾ It asked the Group to report in 1996. The Secretary-General was requested to ensure that the Group received all the assistance it needed and to keep the Group and the Commission informed of the steps he had taken to promote the Declaration.

The Economic and Social Council on 25 July, by decision 1995/266, approved the extension of the Working Group's mandate and the request to the Secretary-General for assistance.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions in 1995: its forty-fifth in New York (5-9 June) and its forty-sixth and forty-seventh in Geneva (21-25 August, 13-17 November).⁽¹³²⁾ The Group examined information on enforced or involuntary disappearances received from Governments and NGOs and decided on the transmission of the reports or observations received thereon to the Governments concerned. It also requested Governments to provide complementary information whenever necessary to clarify cases.

In 1995, the total number of cases worldwide under active consideration stood at 43,508. Of the 824 newly reported cases transmitted to the Governments concerned, some 359 were reported to have occurred in 1995. The Group also transmitted to Governments 163 cases under its urgent-action procedure, of which 39 were clarified during the year.

The Group concluded that acts of enforced disappearance had spread to all regions and must be considered a worldwide phenomenon, occurring mainly in situations of internal armed conflict and ethnic strife. It noted that more and more Governments were cooperating with it in its efforts to deal with the problem. However, progress in the domestic implementation of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance seemed to be extremely slow, with only a few countries enacting special legislation to make acts of enforced disappearance a specific offence under criminal law and to implement other provisions. The Group urgently called on the Commission to allocate more resources for its work.

Missing persons in the former Yugoslavia

As proposed by a Working Group member in 1993⁽¹³³⁾ and requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1994,⁽¹³⁴⁾ a special process was established on missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia as a joint mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in that territory and a member of the Working Group. The process dealt with all cases of missing persons, regardless of whether the victim was a civilian or a combatant or whether the perpetrators were connected to the Government or not.

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission commended and thanked⁽¹³⁵⁾ the Group's expert member for his first report, submitted in 1994, on the special process on missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia.⁽¹³⁶⁾ It asked the Governments of Bosnia and Herzegovina and of Croatia to continue and extend cooperation with the special process and invited them, as well as other parties in a position to help, to continue searching for those missing on their territory. It urged the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to allow the expert member to visit Belgrade to discuss cooperation, and to cooperate by disclosing all relevant available information and documentation.

The Commission requested: the expert member to report in 1996; UN bodies, including the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees and the UN Protection Force, the International Committee of the Red Cross and national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies to continue their cooperation with the special process; and the Secretary-General to continue to provide the resources needed to the special process. The Commission's requests were approved by Economic and Social Council decision 1995/264 of 25 July. (For further details, see next chapter.)

Torture and cruel treatment

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January, Special Rapporteur Nigel S. Rodley (United Kingdom) reported to the Commission on questions relevant to torture.⁽¹³⁷⁾ He made urgent appeals on behalf of persons who were allegedly being tortured or about whom fears were expressed that they might be. He transmitted 144 urgent appeals to 45 Governments concerning some 716 individuals. Details on the contents of those appeals and of government replies were given in the report. The Special Rapporteur recommended that countries not party to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment⁽¹³⁸⁾ sign and ratify or accede to it (for details, see preceding chapter).

He further recommended: abolishing secret places of detention; regular inspection of places of detention; making illegal incommunicado detention and releasing without delay persons held incommunicado; granting persons under administrative detention the same degree of protection as those under criminal detention; permitting all detainees the ability to challenge the lawfulness of detention through habeas corpus or amparo; compensation to victims of torture or to their relatives; providing training courses and manuals to police and security personnel and assistance, on request, by the UN programme of advisory services and technical assistance; enforcing strict measures against medical personnel that played a role in torture; and prohibiting the return, expulsion or extradition of a person to another State where there were grounds for believing that the individual would be in danger of being subjected to torture.

The Special Rapporteur visited Chile (21-26 August) to collect first-hand information to enable him to evaluate better the situation regarding the practice of torture.⁽¹³⁹⁾

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission, commending the Special Rapporteur for his report, stressed⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ the recommendations made by him. It asked him to examine questions concerning torture directed against women and children and conditions conducive to such torture and to make recommendations to prevent those acts. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years, while maintaining the annual reporting cycle; it requested him to report in 1996. By decision 1995/265 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the mandate and requested the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur.

Voluntary Fund for torture victims

On 3 March, the Commission on Human Rights appealed⁽¹⁴¹⁾ to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the UN Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, which had been established in 1981.⁽¹⁴²⁾ It asked the Secretary-General to: transmit to Governments its appeals for contributions; assist the Fund's Board of Trustees to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known and in its appeal for contributions; continue to include the Fund among the programmes for which funds were pledged at the UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities; ensure the provision of adequate staff and technical equipment to operate the Fund; and inform the Commission annually of the Fund's operations. The Commission called on the Board of Trustees to report in 1996 on the increasing need for overall rehabilitation services for torture victims.

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Fund,⁽¹⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the total amount available to the Board of Trustees in May 1995 for grants to projects to assist victims of torture came to $2.7 million, some $1 million less than in 1994. Following the fourteenth session of the Board of Trustees (Geneva, 15-24 May), the Secretary-General approved its recommendations regarding grants totalling $2.7 million to 104 projects submitted by 93 humanitarian organizations. Projects focused on supporting programmes providing direct medical, psychological, social and other assistance to torture victims and their families. Requests for assistance totalling $5.7 million had been received.

By November, 16 States had contributed or pledged $1,289,565 to the Fund for the year.⁽¹⁴⁴⁾

Anti-personnel land-mines

On 24 August, by 16 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, the Subcommission requested⁽¹⁴⁵⁾ Governments and the international community to pursue a policy of information, prevention, rehabilitation and reintegration for victims of anti-personnel mines and to take economic and social measures necessary for that purpose. It called on States to participate actively in the conference to review the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and the Protocols thereto⁽¹⁴⁶⁾ with a view to strengthening the instrument and giving it universal scope. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments its appeal for voluntary contributions to the mine-clearance programme and to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance, established in 1994,⁽¹⁴⁷⁾ and to transmit its resolution to the 1995 Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention (see PART ONE, Chapter II).

Economic, social and cultural rights

Right to development

Commission action. On 24 February, by a roll-call vote of 36 to 15, with 1 abstention, the Human Rights Commission welcomed⁽¹⁾ the efforts made by the Working Group on the Right to Development at its 1994 sessions,⁽²⁾ which were oriented towards establishing a permanent evaluation mechanism to follow up the implementation of the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development.⁽³⁾ It asked the Secretary-General to take steps to implement the Group's recommendations, particularly by providing the Centre for Human Rights with a focal unit to follow up on the Declaration and its implementation. The Commission urged him to take measures to disseminate the Declaration's provisions and the Group's work. It decided that the Group would hold two 2-week sessions, in April and September 1995, and urged the Group to continue to identify ways and to suggest further measures to promote an economic environment more responsive to the needs of developing countries, particularly the least developed.

The Commission decided that the Group's reports, along with other documentation relating to development, should be made available to the General Assembly in the context of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to continue to promote the implementation of the right to development and the 1986 Declaration by working closely with the Group and making recommendations for enhancing the support of relevant bodies of the UN system.

The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council dedicate the high-level segment of one of its substantive sessions to evaluating the implementation of the Declaration within the United Nations. It asked that the Council continue to consider the implementation of the Declaration's provisions at its 1995 substantive session, and recommended that the realization of the right to development be reflected adequately in the work and the final outcome of the 1995 World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). Consideration should be given to including the topic on the agenda of other UN conferences. The Centre for Human Rights was called on to make the right to development a sub-programme of its 1992-1997 programme of activities and of its future activities. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1996 on the implementation of the Commission's resolution.

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/258.

The right to development

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/17 of 24 February 1995:

(a) Approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to take steps to implement the recommendations made by the Working Group on the Right to Development at its second and third sessions, particularly by providing the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat with a focal unit with the specific task of following up on the Declaration on the Right to Development and its implementation;

(b) Approved the Commission's decision that the Working Group would hold two sessions, each for a two-week period, in April and September 1995 respectively, to formulate its recommendations for submission to the Commission at its fifty-second session;

(c) Approved the Commission's request to the Council to continue to consider the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration on the Right to Development under the item entitled "Human rights questions";

(d) Reiterated the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to ensure that the Working Group would be granted all the necessary assistance, in particular human and financial resources, to carry out its mandate.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/258

30-8-11 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23); agenda item 5 ld.

Meeting numbers. ESC 51, 52.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Bhutan, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: Canada, Germany, Japan, Poland, Russian Federation, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Bulgaria, Denmark, France, Greece, Ireland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Romania.

Working Group activities. In 1995, the Working Group on the Right to Development held its fourth (15-26 May)⁽⁴⁾ and fifth (27 September-6 October)⁽⁵⁾ sessions, both in Geneva.

In May, the 15-member Working Group discussed the implementation of the 1986 Declaration by Governments, and contributions to its implementation by treaty-monitoring bodies, regional commissions, and world conferences and summits. It exchanged views on: obstacles to the realization of the right to development and ways to eliminate them; the need to encourage Member States, UN bodies and organs and NGOs to incorporate the right to development in their programmes; the need to establish a follow-up mechanism for the realization of the right to development; and the need for recommendations for the realization of that right at the local level. The Group had before it two April reports of the Secretary-General, presenting the views of five Governments⁽⁶⁾ and one NGO⁽⁷⁾ on obstacles to the implementation and realization of the Declaration.

At its September/October session, the Group considered the scope and implications of the Declaration and obstacles to its implementation. Recommendations to eliminate those obstacles included, among others: disseminating the Declaration and establishing a programme for that purpose within the Centre for Human Rights; encouraging Governments to send voluntarily periodic reports on the Declaration's application and to appoint existing administrative units or to create such units to serve as focal points for collecting, receiving and disseminating information on the application of the Declaration; and activities by NGOs. It made recommendations for action by human rights treaty-monitoring bodies, the UN system, intergovernmental organizations, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Centre for Human Rights and the High Commissioner for Human Rights. As to the realization of the right to development, the Group proposed that the Commission set up a group of experts to make recommendations on a long-term strategy. It recommended according priority to the adoption of national and international measures that would include the creation of domestic and international conditions conducive to the realization of the right to development.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission drew the attention⁽¹⁴⁾ of Member States to the importance of organizing a world summit on humanitarian assistance, in order to strengthen their development and to coordinate better their action in that area. The Subcommission recommended that the Commission authorize it to appoint a special rapporteur on the question of the implications for human rights of UN action under the Charter, including humanitarian assistance, in addressing international humanitarian problems and in the promotion and protection of human rights.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In January, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁸⁾ on the implementation of a 1994 Commission resolution⁽²⁾ concerning the right to development. He also drew to the attention of Commission members⁽⁹⁾ a 1994 document⁽¹⁰⁾ on the implementation of the Declaration, as requested by the General Assembly.⁽¹¹⁾

By a note of 7 November,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General drew to the attention of the General Assembly the reports of the Working Group on the Right to Development on its first (1993),⁽¹³⁾ second and third (1994),⁽⁷⁾ and fourth and fifth (1995) sessions (see above). He also drew to the Assembly's attention his report covering the right to an adequate standard of living (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/184.

Right to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on the Right to Development, which it proclaimed at its forty-first session,

Recalling its resolutions 45/97 of 14 December 1990, 46/123 of 17 December 1991, 47/123 of 18 December 1992, 48/130 of 20 December 1993 and 49/183 of 23 December 1994 and those of the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development, and taking note of Commission resolution 1995/17 of 24 February 1995,

Recalling also the report on the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right,

Recalling further the principles proclaimed in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development of 14 June 1992,

Mindful that the Commission on Human Rights continues to consider this matter, which is directed towards the implementation and further enhancement of the right to development,

Noting the need for coordination and cooperation throughout the United Nations system for a more effective promotion of the right to development,

Recognizing that the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat have important roles to play in the promotion and protection of the right to development,

Reaffirming the need for action at the national and international levels by all States to realize all human rights, and the need for relevant evaluation mechanisms to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles contained in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Welcoming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which reaffirms the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of all fundamental human rights and reaffirms that the human person is the central subject of development,

Recalling that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action examined the relationship between democracy, development and human rights, and recognizing the importance of creating a favourable environment in which everyone may enjoy their human rights as set out in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Recalling also that lasting progress towards the implementation of the right to development requires effective development policies at the national level, as well as equitable economic relations and a favourable economic environment at the international level,

Recalling further that, in order to promote development, equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the universality, objectivity, impartiality and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues must be ensured,

Noting that aspects of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, adopted by the World Summit on 12 March 1995, and the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, are relevant to the universal realization of the right to development,

Welcoming the convening of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) in 1996, and affirming that this Conference constitutes another important international step towards the realization of the right to development, within the context of promoting and protecting all human rights,

Taking note of the work of the Working Group on the Right to Development during its fourth and fifth sessions, held at Geneva from 15 to 26 May and from 27 September to 6 October 1995,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/183,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the right to development for every human person and all peoples in all countries, in particular the developing countries, as an integral part of fundamental human rights;

2. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of Commission resolution 1995/17;

4. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to consider carefully the reports of the Working Group on the Right to Development, to assess whether the Working Group has been able to complete its mandate and to consider thoroughly the necessity to reconvene the Working Group;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue coordination of the various activities with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to ask the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to provide a programmatic follow-up on the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, as part of the efforts to implement the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

7. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within his mandate, to continue to take steps for the promotion and protection of the right to development by, inter alia, working in conjunction with the Centre for Human Rights and drawing on the expertise of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system related to the field of development;

8. Supports the current initiatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within his mandate, to consult with all relevant bodies, funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system on how they may promote the right to development;

9. Invites the regional commissions and regional intergovernmental organizations to consider how they may contribute to the realization of the right to development, including through convening meetings of governmental experts and representative non-governmental and grassroots organizations for the purpose of seeking arrangements or agreements for the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development through international cooperation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session and the General Assembly at its fifty-first session of the activities of the organizations, funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system for the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development;

11. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to make proposals to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the future course of action on the question, in particular on practical measures for the implementation and enhancement of the Declaration on the Right to Development, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right and the reports of the Working Group on the Right to Development;

12. Reiterates its commitment to implementing the results of the World Conference on Human Rights, which reaffirm that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing;

13. Calls upon all States to address, within the declarations and programmes of action adopted by the relevant international conferences convened by the United Nations, the elements for the promotion and protection of the principles of the right to development, as set out in the Declaration on the Right to Development;

14. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-first session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

General Assembly resolution 50/184

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) without vote, 13 December (meeting 55); draft by 26 nations and Non-Aligned Movement (A/C.3/50/L.57); agenda item 112 (b).

Effects of debt on living standards

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a January report,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General summarized comments and proposals on measures to be implemented to find a durable solution to the debt crisis of developing countries so that they might fully enjoy all human rights. These had been provided by 16 Governments, five UN specialized agencies, one intergovernmental organization and 16 NGOs.

In July, the Secretary-General presented a preliminary set of basic policy guidelines to be applied to structural adjustment programmes.⁽¹⁶⁾ Policy guidelines at the national level dealt with popular participation and equality of opportunity and access to productive resources and to social services. At the international level, they concerned external pressure or intervention in the internal or external affairs of a State, the availability of external resources, foreign debt, external trade, transnational corporations, development assistance, adjustment in developed countries, military expenditure and international institutions.

Commission action. On 24 February, the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 33 to 15, with 4 abstentions, asked⁽¹⁷⁾ the Working Group on the Right to Development to continue to pay attention to the social repercussions of the policies adopted to face situations of external debt on the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and to make recommendations thereon. Recognizing that there was a need for more transparency in the activities of international financial institutions, it asked those institutions to report periodically to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on the social repercussions of their policies on the full enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights in developing countries. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to pay particular attention to the problem of the debt burden of developing countries.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to recommend ways to carry out a political dialogue between creditor and debtor countries in the UN system, based on the principle of shared responsibility, and to report in 1996. It also asked him to establish a programme unit in the Centre for Human Rights for the promotion of economic, social and cultural rights, particularly those related to the debt burden of developing countries and the implementation of the right to development.

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/256.

Effects on the full enjoyment of human rights of the economic adjustment policies arising from foreign debt and, in particular, of the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/13 of 24 February 1995, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to establish a programme unit in the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat for the promotion of economic, social and cultural rights, in particular those related to the debt burden of developing countries and the implementation of the right to development.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/256

31-18-1 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 51, 52.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Bhutan, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Bulgaria.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission asked⁽¹⁸⁾ the Commission to authorize an open-ended working group to meet for one week prior to its 1997 session to elaborate policy guidelines, in close cooperation with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, based on the preliminary set of policy guidelines on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Secretary-General's report. It requested the Commission to ask the Secretary-General to invite Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, as well as the Committee, to contribute to the draft policy guidelines by providing their comments thereon for consideration by the working group. The Subcommission recommended that the Commission consider the matter in 1996.

Income distribution

Commission action. On 24 February, the Commission, endorsing a 1994 Subcommission resolution,⁽¹⁹⁾ approved⁽²⁰⁾ the decision to appoint José Bengoa (Chile) as Special Rapporteur on the relationship between the enjoyment of human rights, in particular economic, social and cultural rights, and income distribution, at national and international levels, and approved the request that he submit a preliminary report in 1995, a progress report in 1996 and a final report in 1997.

On 25 July, by decision 1995/295, the Economic and Social Council endorsed those approvals.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In a preliminary report,⁽²¹⁾ submitted in July, the Special Rapporteur stated that the right to life, to the development of the human body and to individual dignity was the foundation of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights. He noted that economic, social and cultural rights constituted the necessary minimum to guarantee the effective exercise of civil and political rights. The Special Rapporteur pointed to the growing globalization of the economy and world society as giving rise to increasing integration which tended to give universal bearing to minimum requirements in respect of both economic, social and cultural rights and civil and political rights. Income distribution, he stated, was the principal indicator of social integration and of the fulfilment of minimum requirements in respect of economic, social and cultural rights, enabling human beings to live in society. The Special Rapporteur also discussed the relationship between the enjoyment of human rights and income distribution at the international level, and presented a work plan.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission endorsed⁽²²⁾ the conclusion established by Asbjorn Eide (Norway), in a preparatory document he had prepared in 1994 at the request of the Commission on Human Rights,⁽¹⁹⁾ and repeated by Special Rapporteur Bengoa that the concentration of wealth constituted a serious obstacle to the realization of human rights and that equality of opportunity was essential for participating effectively in the development process and for obtaining a share of the benefits deriving from it. It expressed its agreement with the work plan presented in the preliminary report and asked the Special Rapporteur to pay particular attention to the impact of the enjoyment of human rights, and that of the right to education in particular, on income distribution. It also asked him to take special care to analyse the indicators needed for the gradual full satisfaction of economic, social and cultural rights and to submit a progress report in 1996 and a final one in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to invite Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide the Special Rapporteur with information for the preparation of his report.

Transnational corporations

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Subcommission in 1994,⁽²³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in July a report⁽²⁴⁾ examining the relationship between the enjoyment of human rights, in particular international labour and trade union rights, and the working methods and activities of transnational corporations (TNCs). He described the working methods and activities of TNCs and the human rights that might be affected by those practices, which included the rights: of peoples to self-determination and to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources; to development; of everyone to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and his family and to the continuous improvement of living conditions; of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health; to full and productive employment; of everyone to the enjoyment of just and favourable conditions of work; to form and join trade unions, to strike and to bargain collectively; of everyone to social security; of everyone to enjoy the benefits of scientific progress and its applications; and of everyone to a social and international order.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission asked⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General to prepare for its 1996 session a report on the impact of the activities and working methods of TNCs on the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development, bearing in mind existing international guidelines, rules and standards relating to the subject. It also asked him to invite Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to submit information on the topic for consideration in the preparation of his report.

Unilateral coercive measures

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1994,⁽²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General in January reported⁽²⁷⁾ on coercive measures unilaterally implemented against developing countries, on the basis of the views of eight Governments, one UN body and three NGOs.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 24 to 17, with 12 abstentions, the Human Rights Commission, on 3 March, expressing grave concern that the use of unilateral coercive measures adversely affected the socio-humanitarian activities of developing countries, called on⁽²⁸⁾ the international community to reject the use by certain countries of such measures. It asked States to refrain from adopting unilateral coercive measures in contradiction with international law and the UN Charter that created obstacles to trade relations among States. The Secretary-General was asked, in consultation with Governments and specialized agencies, as well as with intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, to report in 1996 on the coercive measures unilaterally implemented against developing countries.

Scientific and technological concerns

Human rights and the environment

On 24 February, the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of the final report⁽²⁹⁾ of the Special Rapporteur on human rights and the environment, Fatma Zohra Ksentini (Algeria), asked⁽³⁰⁾ that it be published in all UN official languages. It asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1996 a report containing the opinions of Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on the issues raised in the Special Rapporteur's report.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission urged⁽³¹⁾ the Commission to request again that the Special Rapporteur's final report be published in all the UN official languages and that it be widely disseminated. It also asked the Commission to extend the time in which it asked the Secretary-General to report on opinions based on the Special Rapporteur's report until at least one session following its publication.

Rapporteur on toxic wastes

On 8 March, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 15, with 6 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights decided⁽³²⁾ to appoint a special rapporteur for a three-year period to investigate and examine the effects of the illicit dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes in African and other developing countries on the enjoyment of human rights; to investigate, monitor, examine and receive communications and gather information on illicit dumping; to make recommendations and proposals on measures to control, reduce and eradicate illicit traffic in, transfer to and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes in African and other developing countries; and to produce annually a list of the countries and TNCs engaged in the illicit dumping and a census of persons killed, maimed or otherwise injured in developing countries through that act.

The Special Rapporteur was to report in 1996. The Secretary-General was requested to establish a focal unit in the Centre for Human Rights to follow up on the Rapporteur's findings and other issues related to the effects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights.

Subsequently, the Commission appointed Fatma Zohra Ksentini (Algeria) as Special Rapporteur.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/288.

Adverse effects on the enjoyment of human rights of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/81 of 8 March 1995, approved the Commission's decision to appoint, for a three-year period, a special rapporteur on the adverse effects on the enjoyment of human rights of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes, and requested the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary assistance for the fulfilment of his or her mandate.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/288

29-17-5 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 51, 52.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Belarus, Bhutan, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Ireland, Malaysia, Mexico, Republic of Korea, Ukraine.

Bioethics

Report of the Secretary-General. In 1995, the Commission on Human Rights considered a report of the Secretary-General on human rights and bioethics,⁽³³⁾ based on information received from Governments, UN specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations. The Secretary-General provided background information on measures taken by the United Nations since 1968 and reviewed national and regional legislation and other measures taken to ensure that the life sciences developed in a manner respectful of human rights. He stated that legislation reinforcing certain ethical principles had been introduced in a number of States, but that the rapid development of science and its technological applications had not been accompanied by a consideration of their implications for human rights.

The Secretary-General concluded that there was a pressing need for the elucidation and universal adoption of basic bioethical principles in a manner that acknowledged the world's diverse moral and cultural perspectives, priorities and values.

Commission action. On 8 March, the Human Rights Commission invited⁽³⁴⁾ Governments, the specialized agencies and other UN organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to inform the Secretary-General of activities being carried out to ensure that the life sciences developed in a manner respectful of human rights and beneficial to humanity. States were invited to inform the Secretary-General of legislative and other measures taken. The Commission asked the Subcommittee to consider, under the agenda item on human rights and scientific and technological developments, ways of ensuring that the life sciences developed in a manner respectful of human rights and beneficial to humanity and to make recommendations thereon. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1997.

Subcommission action. On 31 July, the Subcommittee postponed⁽³⁵⁾ consideration of the item on human rights and scientific and technological developments until its 1996 session.

Computerized personal files

Report of the Secretary-General. In 1995, the Commission considered a report of the Secretary-General,⁽³⁶⁾ in which he discussed the application within the UN system of the guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files,⁽³⁷⁾ adopted by the General Assembly in 1990.⁽³⁸⁾ He presented information received from 13 States and three intergovernmental organizations concerning the follow-up to the guidelines at the regional and national levels. The guidelines were annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission, referring to the guidelines and noting the Secretary-General's report, asked⁽³⁹⁾ States and intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with him in the application of the guidelines; and asked the Secretary-General to continue to ensure implementation of the guidelines in the UN system and to report in 1997.

Commission action. On 24 February, the Commission endorsed⁽⁴⁰⁾ a 1994 Subcommittee resolution,⁽⁴¹⁾ noted a Subcommittee draft decision adopted by the Commission in 1995⁽²⁰⁾ and recommended that it be considered in the light of the conclusions of the current study on human rights and extreme poverty. It welcomed the holding in 1994 of a seminar on extreme poverty and denial of human rights⁽⁴²⁾ and noted the seminar's conclusions and recommendations. The Special Rapporteur was asked to continue to give attention to: the effects of extreme poverty on the enjoyment and exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms of those affected by it; efforts by the poorest to exercise their rights and participate in the development of the society in which they lived; conditions in which the poorest could convey their experiences and ideas and become partners in the enjoyment of human rights; and means to promote a better understanding of the experiences and ideas of the poorest and those committed to working alongside them. It also asked him to give attention to the declaration and programme of action to be adopted by the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX).

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina), in his second interim report on human rights and extreme poverty,⁽⁴²⁾ discussed the elements of extreme poverty, the human rights dimension of extreme poverty and the seriousness and scale of the phenomenon. He also described the work plan for his final report. Reports on the subject had been submitted in 1993⁽⁴³⁾ and 1994.⁽⁴⁹⁾

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission asked⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Special Rapporteur to submit a final report in 1996, focusing on his consultations with persons living in extreme poverty and persons working alongside them.

Right to adequate housing

Commission action. On 24 February, the Commission, welcoming the 1994 progress report⁽⁴⁵⁾ of the Special Rapporteur on promoting the realization of the right to adequate housing, asked⁽⁴⁶⁾ him to submit a final report in 1995. It requested the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the assistance he needed.

The Economic and Social Council approved that request on 25 July by decision 1995/259.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, Special Rapporteur Rajindar Sachar (India) submitted his final report on the right to adequate housing,⁽⁴⁷⁾ in which he stated that, despite some meaningful steps forward, he regretted that housing rights had unjustifiably remained an empty promise for far too many people. Forced evictions continued to displace millions of persons yearly and national budgets devoted to housing those most in need continued to decline. In addition, armed conflicts had led to the massive destruction of homes and properties and to millions of internally displaced persons or refugees. Blatant discrimination denied certain groups the right to dwell in peace and security.

The Special Rapporteur presented indicators to assess State compliance with provisions in human rights instruments concerning the right to adequate housing. The indicators included: the state of the right to information; the state of living conditions and of natural resources; the state of local government; security of land tenure, the state of evictions and the state of landlessness; economic parity and the state of economic well-being and resource accessibility; the state of cultural identity and skills; and the state of housing as a human right, the state of policy formulation and the question of illegality. He noted that it was crucial that all core indicators take into account the adverse impact that violations of the right to housing had on women and the contribution that women made in gaining and retaining that right.

The Special Rapporteur made recommendations for action by States, States parties to the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the UN human rights programme, human rights treaty bodies, regional human rights organs, UN specialized agencies, other UN bodies, regional organizations, world conferences, and NGOs and community-based organizations.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission asked⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General to compile in one document all reports of the Special Rapporteur⁽⁴⁹⁾ and to publish them as part of the Human Rights Study Series. It also asked him to solicit from States, UN bodies, specialized agencies and relevant NGOs and community-based organizations their comments on the draft international convention on housing rights presented by the Special Rapporteur in 1994⁽⁴⁵⁾ and the indicators contained in his final report. The Subcommission further asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1996 a compilation of and an analytical commentary on the views received on all aspects of the right to adequate housing and to develop further the analysis contained in the Special Rapporteur's final report regarding the use of indicators in monitoring compliance. The Secretary-General was asked to distribute the final report to all entities concerned, with a view to informing them of the recommendations contained therein and to receiving their views on any plans or programmes they might have or would develop to implement the recommendations.

Forced evictions

Report of the Secretary-General. In a July report,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted preliminary observations about the drafting of guidelines on international events and forced evictions. Examples of such acts included mass evictions prior to the visit of a foreign dignitary, the Olympic Games and the convening of international conferences. He stated that UN guidelines should be based on human rights considerations, such as the principle of non-discrimination, the need for participation, the need for taking decisions with the informed and free consent of the people concerned, the unlawfulness of force and coercion, access to courts, the right to appeal, and the right to compensation and to seek remedial action. He presented elements to be considered in drafting guidelines, which included: discouraging external donors if evictions were likely to result from the planned event; conducting public hearings prior to the adoption of plans for international events; permitting persons threatened with forced evictions to have the right to bring the matter before a court of law and the right to appeal before a higher court; and, in situations where no alternative to eviction existed, guaranteeing minimum periods of warning, possibilities for relocation and adequate financial compensation and participation.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission recommended⁽⁵¹⁾ that Governments provide immediate restitution, compensation and/or sufficient alternative accommodation or land to persons and communities that had been forcibly evicted. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to give attention to the practice of forced evictions, and the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII) to include in its final declaration and plan of action references to the non-acceptability of the practice and concrete measures to prevent it. The Subcommission asked the UN Centre for Human Settlements to do everything possible to prevent forced evictions by using the good offices of the Secretary-General to persuade Governments to refrain from carrying out forced evictions and by compiling annual lists of all eviction cases brought to its attention. Taking note of the Secretary-General's report, the Subcommission asked him to submit an updated report in 1996. It also asked him to convene an expert seminar on the practice of forced evictions and its relationship to internationally recognized human rights, with a view to developing comprehensive human rights guidelines on development-based displacement.

Slavery and related issues

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission asked⁽⁵²⁾ its Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to continue to strengthen its involvement in the activities of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery. It endorsed the Subcommission's 1989 recommendations⁽⁵³⁾ regarding the review of the implementation of the three slavery conventions—the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery,⁽⁵⁴⁾ and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others⁽⁵⁵⁾—with the proviso that the proposed three-year term of office of Group members should not be extended beyond their four-year Subcommission term. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to ask those States that had not ratified or acceded to the conventions to do so, or to explain in writing why they felt unable to do so, and to consider providing information concerning national legislation and practices in that regard. It asked the Secretary-General to reassign to the Working Group a Professional staff member of the Centre for Human Rights to ensure continuity and close coordination on issues relating to contemporary forms of slavery. The Commission recalled its request to designate the Centre as the focal point for coordinating UN activities to suppress contemporary forms of slavery. It asked the newly appointed Special Rapporteur on the sale of children to examine ways of cooperating with the Working Group, and asked Governments to pursue a policy of information, prevention and rehabilitation of women victims of prostitution and to take appropriate economic and social measures to that effect. The Subcommission was asked to review the draft programme of action for the prevention of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others in the light of comments received and to submit in 1996 a final text for Commission approval (see below).

Working Group activities. The Subcommission's five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its twentieth session (Geneva, 19-28 April),⁽⁵⁶⁾ reviewed the status and implementation of the three conventions on slavery and the UN Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see below). It reviewed developments in this area, including the suppression of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, organ transplants, bonded and child labour, forced labour, migrant workers, incest, early marriages and slavery during wartime. In addition, it considered the activities of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

A July note⁽⁵⁷⁾ by the Secretariat contained information provided by the Netherlands to the Chairman of the Subcommission clarifying that country's policies on prostitution, which, it said, were not presented accurately and completely in the Working Group's report.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In March, the Secretary-General provided information from 10 Governments on implementation of the slavery conventions in their respective countries.⁽⁵⁸⁾

In another March report,⁽⁵⁹⁾ he presented information received from three Governments, a specialized agency, a UN body and an intergovernmental organization on developments in contemporary forms of slavery and measures to prevent and eradicate all such forms.

Also in March, the Secretary-General provided replies received from one Government, a UN office, a specialized agency and an intergovernmental organization regarding allegations of child victimization or killing for the removal of organs for commercial transplants.⁽⁶⁰⁾

Subcommission action. On 18 August, the Subcommission adopted⁽⁶¹⁾ a resolution on issues under consideration by the Working Group.

Fund on slavery

On 3 March, the Commission on Human Rights expressed regret⁽⁵²⁾ that, owing to a lack of contributions, the Board of Trustees of the UN Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery had been able to meet only once since it was appointed by the Secretary-General in 1993.⁽⁶²⁾ It appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to respond favourably to requests for contributions to the Fund, established by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽⁶³⁾ and asked the Secretary-General to transmit its appeal to all Governments.

On 18 August, the Subcommission appealed⁽⁶⁴⁾ to Governments, governmental organizations and NGOs to respond favourably to requests for contributions to the Fund. It urged them and the Secretary-General to publicize the Fund and the latter to facilitate the holding of the meeting of the Board of Trustees so that a fund-raising campaign could be effectively carried out. He was also asked to study ways to draw the attention of potential donors to the Fund's role, and to cite both public and private donors on any list of such donors. The Subcommission recommended that the Board of Trustees consider renaming the Fund to reflect its aims better.

Fund activities. Following the first session in 1993 of the Fund's Board of Trustees,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Fund received a number of contributions, but not enough to enable the Board to meet for a second session, which was therefore postponed.

At its second session (Geneva, 28 August-1 September 1995), the Board examined applications for assistance to NGO representatives to enable them to participate in the Working Group, and considered requests for financial assistance for NGO projects to benefit victims of contemporary forms of slavery. Guidelines and criteria for application and selection were annexed to the Board's report.⁽⁶⁶⁾ Two NGOs from each of four regions—Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe and Latin America—were selected for assistance to participate in the Working Group. Assistance to benefit victims was provisionally earmarked for a two-week fact-finding mission of the International League for Human Rights to document and report on trafficking in women and girls for the purpose of forced labour and prostitution in South-East Asia.

Since the Board's establishment, Governments, NGOs and individuals had contributed $60,750 to the Fund. The Board expressed grave concern at the Fund's situation and its management, and asked for an accurate and updated official statement on its financial status.

The Board recalled that the current members' term of office would end on 31 December 1995 and expressed the hope that the Secretary-General would take timely action to appoint members for the next term.

Draft programme of action

On 18 August, the Subcommission decided⁽⁶⁷⁾ to transmit to the Commission the draft programme of action on the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, as reformulated by the Working Group.⁽⁶⁸⁾

The Secretariat transmitted in December the final draft programme of action for approval by the Commission in 1996.⁽⁶⁹⁾

Sexual exploitation of women during wartime

In July, Linda Chavez (United States) submitted to the Subcommission a working paper on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during wartime,⁽⁷⁰⁾ in which she outlined issues that might be the subject of a further in-depth study.

On 18 August, the Subcommission decided⁽⁷¹⁾ to appoint Ms. Chavez as Special Rapporteur with the task of undertaking an in-depth study of the situation of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during periods of armed conflict. She was requested to submit a preliminary report in 1996 and a final one in 1997.

Vulnerable groups

Women

The advancement of the status of women and the protection of their rights have been central concerns of the United Nations since the Organization's inception. On 11 December 1946, the General Assembly adopted a resolution urging that women be granted the same political rights as men. The Commission on the Status of Women began work in February 1947. Over two decades, four world conferences on women's rights were convened by the UN, in 1975 in Mexico City, in 1980 in Copenhagen, in 1985 in Nairobi and in 1995 in Beijing (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). Strategies and programmes of action to expand women's rights, as well as international human rights instruments, including the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (see preceding chapter), have contributed to securing equality for women in all areas of life

Commission action. On 8 March, the Human Rights Commission called⁽⁷²⁾ for intensified effort to integrate the equal status of women and the human rights of women into UN system-wide activity and to address those issues throughout relevant UN bodies and mechanisms. It encouraged the strengthening of cooperation and coordination among human rights treaty bodies, special rapporteurs, representatives, experts, working groups and other mechanisms of the Commission and its Subcommission concerned with the human rights of women, and requested that they report on violations of those rights. It also encouraged close monitoring by human rights treaty bodies of the enjoyment of the human rights of women; welcomed an initiative of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) to enhance cooperation with other human rights treaty bodies; endorsed a recommendation that each treaty body consider obtaining gender-specific information from States parties; requested that special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and chairmen of the working groups of the Commission address violations of the human rights of women; and called on those mechanisms to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur on violence against women.

The Commission also called on the High Commissioner for Human Rights, in convening a meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies and working groups, as well as special rapporteurs, representatives and experts, to consider ways in which the human rights of women could be integrated into the work of the UN system and to report on progress made at the Fourth World Conference on Women and to the Commission in 1996. That request was approved by the Economic and Social Council on 25 July by decision 1995/289. Governments and the UN were asked to include in their human rights education activities information on the human rights of women.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a June report,⁽⁷³⁾ the Secretary-General described action taken by special rapporteurs, experts, working groups, treaty bodies and other mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights to integrate women's human rights into the UN system. He also reviewed the status of implementation of recommendations of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights⁽⁷⁴⁾ and presented violations of women's rights as documented in the reports of special rapporteurs and working groups, including the right to life, participation in politics and decision-making, the right to full legal status and legal protection, freedom of opinion and expression, the right to liberty and security, freedom of movement, prohibition of sexual exploitation, gender-based torture and degrading treatment, the right to education, the right to work, freedom of religion and the right to health care.

The Secretary-General concluded that some progress had been made in promoting and protecting the human rights of women, as well as in integrating women's rights into existing mechanisms and procedures. However, information available from the special rapporteurs indicated that gender equality in the full enjoyment of human rights had not been achieved, and an analysis of the current situation showed that public awareness of the importance of respecting the human rights of women remained low. He noted that the Centre for Human Rights would strengthen gender-sensitive training within the programme of technical assistance in human rights issues. The Centre was in the process of establishing a data-collection system, and a cooperative network was to be developed by the Focal Point for the Human Rights of Women with UN agencies, Member States and NGOs.

Expert group meeting. In November, the High Commissioner for Human Rights transmitted the report of an expert group meeting on the development of guidelines for the integration of gender perspectives into UN human rights activities and programmes (Geneva, 3-7 July 1995),⁽⁷⁵⁾ organized by the Centre for Human Rights and the UN Development Fund for Women. The group recommended using gender-inclusive language in formulating new human rights instruments and in existing standards and proposed that the Centre for Human Rights establish a guideline on gender inclusivity in all UN official languages. It also advocated the identification, collection and use of gender-disaggregated data; the revision of working methods by all UN bodies to incorporate a creative and comprehensive gender analysis of information, as well as a gender-sensitive interpretation of all human rights mechanisms; an evaluation of information and training materials published by the Centre; ensuring that activities related to the UN Decade for Human Rights Education (see preceding chapter) were gender sensitive; provision by the Centre of more accessible information on current activities and more aggressive steps to disseminate it; training for Centre management and staff and other personnel involved in UN human rights activities; more Centre-wide coordination of work on women's human rights; promotion by the High Commissioner of system-wide coordination and collaboration on the human rights of women within the UN; cooperation and collaboration by the Centre in efforts to mainstream women's human rights with women-specific bodies of the UN system; equal representation of women and men, as well as gender-trained individuals, on expert committees that monitored implementation of treaties, as well as among the independent experts and working groups of the Commission and Subcommission; consideration by the Centre of long-term, ongoing ways to produce and review information on women and action to protect women's human rights; and convening a meeting within 18 months to evaluate how work was progressing.

Violence against women

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In response to a 1994 action,⁽⁷⁶⁾ the Commission considered a preliminary report submitted by Radhika Coomaraswamy (Sri Lanka), the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences.⁽⁷⁷⁾ She discussed the nature of the problem of violence against women, existing international legal standards and general issues arising from violence in the family, in the community and perpetrated or condoned by the State. Her recommendations included that States be called upon to: condemn violence against women; ratify the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;⁽⁷⁸⁾ formulate national plans of action to combat violence against women; initiate strategies to develop legal and administrative mechanisms to ensure effective justice for victims; train and sensitize judicial and police officials; reform educational curricula; promote research in the field; and ensure proper reporting of the problem of violence against women to international human rights mechanisms.

Commission action. On 8 March, the Human Rights Commission commended⁽⁷⁹⁾ the Special Rapporteur for her analysis of the problem and specific causes and consequences of violence against women and encouraged her to make recommendations concerning situations in which advisory services and technical assistance might assist Governments concerned. Condemning all acts of gender-based violence against women, the Commission called for its elimination in the family, within the general community and where perpetrated or condoned by the State. It also condemned all human rights violations against women in situations of armed conflict and called for an effective response to those actions. The Commission stressed the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur and asked that her report⁽⁷⁷⁾ be made available to the Fourth World Conference on Women and brought to the attention of the Commission on the Status of Women and CEDAW (see PART FOUR, Chapter X).

Violence against women migrant workers

Commission action. On 24 February, the Human Rights Commission, expressing grave concern at the plight of women migrant workers who were victims of physical, mental and sexual harassment and abuse, called on⁽⁸⁰⁾ the sending and receiving countries to ensure that law enforcement officials assisted in guaranteeing the full protection of the rights of women migrant workers, consistent with international obligations of Member States. It urged sending and host countries to ensure that women migrant workers were protected from unscrupulous recruitment practices and encouraged Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families.⁽⁸¹⁾ The Commission called on UN bodies and specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to inform the Secretary-General of the extent of the problem and to recommend further measures in that area. It also called for seminars and training programmes on human rights instruments, particularly those pertaining to migrant workers. Treaty-monitoring bodies and NGOs concerned with violence against women were to include the situation of women migrant workers in their deliberations and to supply relevant information to UN bodies and Governments. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur on violence against women to continue to include among the issues pertaining to her mandate the violence perpetrated against women migrant workers and to consider including her findings in her 1996 report.

(See PART FOUR, Chapter X, for General Assembly action.)

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and children

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission, noting a 1994 Subcommission resolution,⁽⁷⁹⁾ endorsed⁽⁸²⁾ the Subcommission's recommendations regarding a two-year extension of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on traditional practices affecting the health of women and children, Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco); the submission of her preliminary report in 1995 and her final report in 1996; and the request to the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur.

By decision 1995/300 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's action.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In a July report,⁽⁸³⁾ the Special Rapporteur discussed the similarities and differences between traditional practices affecting the health of women and children in various parts of the world, based on regional seminars held in Africa in 1991⁽⁸⁴⁾ and in Asia in 1994.⁽²⁹⁾ She called on States, UN bodies and organs, relevant specialized agencies, NGOs and grass-roots movements to implement the Plan of Action for the Elimination of Harmful Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children⁽²⁹⁾ and to report on progress achieved and the obstacles encountered in doing so.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission called on⁽⁸⁵⁾ States, UN bodies and organs, relevant specialized agencies, NGOs and grass-roots movements to implement the Plan of Action and to inform the Special Rapporteur of progress achieved and obstacles encountered. It welcomed the Special Rapporteur's report and looked forward to her final report in 1996.

Traffic in women and girls

On 3 March, the Commission, expressing grave concern at the worsening problem of trafficking, particularly the increasing syndication of the sex trade and the internationalization of the traffic in women and girl children, encouraged⁽⁸⁶⁾ Governments, relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to share information in order to develop anti-trafficking measures. It urged Governments to address the problem and to ensure that victims were provided with the necessary assistance, support, legal advice, protection, treatment and rehabilitation. The Commission called on them to prevent the misuse and exploitation by traffickers of economic activities, such as the development of tourism and the export of labour. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide it with his preliminary report⁽⁸⁷⁾ in 1996. (See PART FOUR, Chapter X, for details of the Secretary-General's report and General Assembly action.)

Children

In 1959, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration of the Rights of the Child, setting out 10 principles aimed at ensuring special protection against abuse and guarantees of fundamental freedoms and human rights. Twenty years later, the Assembly declared 1979 as the International Year of the Child. In 1989, the world body adopted the Convention on the Rights of the Child. In 1995, consideration continued of two draft optional protocols to that Convention—one concerning the involvement of children in armed conflict, and a second related to the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. The Assembly also acted with regard to the girl child (see below), child labour and the plight of street children, and traffic in women and children (see preceding chapter and PART FOUR, Chapter X).

Sale of children

As requested by the General Assembly in 1993,⁽⁸⁸⁾ Special Rapporteur Vitit Muntarbhorn

(Thailand) submitted a preliminary report in 1994 on the sale of children and related issues.⁽⁸⁹⁾ The Human Rights Commission in 1994⁽⁹⁰⁾ had asked him to report in 1995. A note by the secretariat⁽⁹¹⁾ stated that, owing to the resignation of the Special Rapporteur in October 1994, only the preliminary report would be available to the Commission in 1995.

Ofelia Calcetas-Santos (Philippines) was appointed as Special Rapporteur in January 1995.

Commission action. On 8 March, the Human Rights Commission renewed⁽⁹²⁾ the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a three-year period and asked the Secretary-General to enable her to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1995 and a report to the Commission in 1996. It appealed to Governments to assist the Special Rapporteur, including by inviting her to make country visits. The Commission invited the Special Rapporteur to cooperate with the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Subcommission and its Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, as well as with other UN bodies dealing with questions covered by her mandate, and invited her to participate in the next sessions of those bodies.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/36.

Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/79 of 8 March 1995,

1. Approves the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography for three years, while maintaining the annual reporting cycle;
2. Also approves the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary human and financial assistance, from within existing resources, so as to make possible the full discharge of the mandate.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/36

25 July 1995 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23), orally amended by Japan; agenda item 5 (d).

Provisional report. In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁹³⁾ the Special Rapporteur in September submitted a report on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography.⁽⁹⁴⁾ She discussed her mandate, setting out more precise definitions to avoid confusion and overlapping among the issues of sale, prostitution and pornography, and reviewed the causes giving rise to those concerns. The Special Rapporteur identified three catalysts in instituting reforms to benefit children: the education system, the justice system and the media. She presented preventive, interventive and rehabilitative strategies for the three catalysts. Recommendations were made for international action, including conducting an inventory and making a systematic analysis of recommendations, initiatives and programmes of the UN, its agencies and NGOs, and of bilateral, regional or international agreements addressing the concerns of her mandate. She also recommended organizing regional or international conferences for the persons and organizations representing the three catalysts.

Programme on child labour

By a January note,⁽⁹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General drew attention to his 1994 report⁽⁹⁶⁾ describing action taken by States to implement the Programme of Action for the Elimination of the Exploitation of Child Labour, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights in 1993.⁽⁹⁷⁾

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission asked⁽⁹⁸⁾ the Subcommission to consider further its proposed appointment of Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco) as Special Rapporteur on the exploitation of child labour and debt bondage and to make the appointment subject to the submission of a preparatory document. It also asked the Subcommission to determine the need for a Special Rapporteur and, if it considered the appointment appropriate, to identify specific activities in order to avoid duplication with others within the UN system. The Commission encouraged Governments, within the context of the Programme of Action for the Elimination of the Exploitation of Child Labour, to consider adopting measures to protect child labourers and to ensure that their labour was not exploited.

The girl child

The General Assembly in 1995 urged all States to eliminate all forms of discrimination against the girl child, noting that the advancement and development of women throughout their life cycle must begin with the girl child.

On 24 August, the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities decided⁽⁹⁹⁾ to consider the human rights of women and the girl child under every item of its agenda, as well as in relevant studies, and asked that all reports submitted in 1996 contain a gender perspective in their analyses and recommendations. It asked the Secretary-General to obtain the views of CEDAW and the Commission on the Status of Women on the desirability of having an advisory opinion on the value and legal effect of reservations concerning the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,⁽⁷⁸⁾ and to invite those bodies to formulate any other observations on the question. It also asked him to ensure that UN human rights and humanitarian relief personnel recognized and dealt with the human rights violations particular to women and to establish and reinforce mechanisms in the Centre for Human Rights in order to implement the recommendations and decisions adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/154.

The girl child

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Conference on Human Rights, Agenda 21 adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s of the World Summit for Children, the World Declaration on Education for All and the Framework for Action to Meet Basic Learning Needs adopted at the World Conference on Education for All: Meeting Basic Learning Needs,

Recalling also that discrimination against the girl child and the violation of the rights of the girl child was identified as a critical area of concern in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women in the achievement of equality, development and peace for women, and that the advancement and empowerment of women throughout their life-cycle must begin with the girl child,

Noting with appreciation that the World Summit for Children sensitized the entire world to the plight of children,

Reaffirming the equal rights of women and men as enshrined in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations, and recalling the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

1. Urges all States to eliminate all forms of discrimination against the girl child and to eliminate the violation of the human rights of all children, paying particular attention to the obstacles faced by the girl child;

2. Also urges all States, international organizations as well as non-governmental organizations individually and collectively to set goals and to develop and implement gender-sensitive strategies to address the needs of children, in particular those of girls, in accordance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the goals, strategic objectives and actions contained in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

3. Requests all States, international organizations as well as non-governmental organizations to increase awareness of the potential of the girl child and to promote the participation of girls and young women, on an equal basis and as partners with boys and young men, in social, economic and political life and in the development of strategies and in the implementation of actions aimed at achieving gender equality, development and peace;

4. Calls upon Member States and organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Health Organization, to take into account the rights and the particular needs of the girl child, especially in education, health and nutrition, and to eliminate negative cultural attitudes and practices against the girl child;

5. Further urges all States to eliminate all forms of violence against children, in particular the girl child;

6. Calls upon States, international organizations as well as non-governmental organizations to help mobilize the necessary financial resources and political support to achieve goals, strategies and actions relating to the survival, development and protection of the girl child in all programmes for children;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the goals and actions relating to the girl child receive full attention in the implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women through the work of all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to urge all the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system focusing on the advancement of women to make commitments to goals and actions relating to the girl child in the revision and implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001, as well as in the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2002.

General Assembly resolution 50/154

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/633) without vote, 5 December (meeting 50); 81-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.31/Rev.1); agenda item 110.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 32-37, 45, 48, 50; plenary 97.

Indigenous populations

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission expressed appreciation and satisfaction⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations for its work, particularly for the completed draft of the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples,⁽¹⁰¹⁾ and asked the Group to consider ways to enhance the contribution to its work of expertise from indigenous people. The Commission urged the Group to continue its review of developments and of the situation of indigenous people, asking it to take into account the work of all thematic special rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups as it pertained to indigenous people. It recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the Group be authorized to meet for five days prior to the 1995 session of the Subcom-mission. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Group, to transmit its reports to Governments, indigenous and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for comments and suggestions, and to ensure that the Group's meetings were provided with interpretation and documentation. The Commission appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to consider favourably requests for contributions to the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see below).

On 25 July, by decision 1995/263, the Economic and Social Council authorized the Working Group to meet for five days prior to the Subcommission's 1995 session. It approved the Commission's request that the Secretary-General assist the Group, transmit its reports and ensure servicing for the Group's meetings.

Working Group activities. At its thirteenth session (Geneva, 24-28 July),⁽¹⁰²⁾ the Working Group on Indigenous Populations recommended to the Subcommission that: the Group's Chairman/Rapporteur prepare a note on criteria for a definition of indigenous peoples; the Special Rapporteur on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations be given adequate resources so that he could submit his final report to the Group and to the Subcommission in 1996; a workshop be held prior to the Group's 1996 session to discuss the establishment of a permanent forum, in the United Nations, for indigenous people; and the Secretary-General review existing arrangements and programmes within the UN system which might be used by indigenous people. The Group also decided to highlight in 1996 the issue of indigenous peoples and health.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission asked⁽¹⁰³⁾ the Secretary-General to transmit the Working Group's report on its 1995 session to indigenous people's organizations, Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, as well as to all thematic rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups, and to prepare an annotated agenda for the Group's 1996 session. Endorsing the Group's recommendation to focus on specific topics at future sessions and on indigenous health in 1996, the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to invite Governments, intergovernmental and indigenous people's organizations and NGOs to provide information, particularly on matters relating to indigenous health. It asked the Group's Chairman/Rapporteur to inform the Board of Trustees of the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations that the Group would highlight health issues in 1996, so that the Board could bear that in mind when it met in April 1996. The Subcommission recommended that the Chairman/Rapporteur prepare a working paper on the concept of indigenous people, to be transmitted to Governments and intergovernmental and indigenous people's organizations for their comments. It also recommended that the Commission ask the Economic and Social Council to authorize the Group to meet for eight days prior to the Subcommission's 1996 session.

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission welcomed⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ the General Assembly's 1994 decision⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ to adopt the 1995 short-term programme of activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1994-2004), as contained in a report of the Secretary-General.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ The Decade was proclaimed by the Assembly in 1993.⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ The Commission asked Governments to consider the final comprehensive programme of action to be considered by the Assembly in 1995. It took note of the Assembly's request for the establishment of a unit within the Centre for Human Rights to support Centre activities related to indigenous people, and the Assembly recommendation that a second technical meeting on the planning of the Decade be convened prior to the 1995 session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations. It also noted the decision to consider at a later session the convening of meetings for planning and review purposes at intervals during the Decade. Annexed to the Commission's resolution was the Decade's 1995 programme of activities.

Technical meeting. As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ a second technical meeting on the planning of the International Decade was held (Geneva, 20-21 July).⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ Activities were proposed for implementation by the Coordinator of the Decade and the Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations, regional organizations, Governments, NGOs and indigenous peoples. The first technical meeting was held in 1994.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾

Working Group activities. In July, the Working Group on Indigenous Populations endorsed⁽¹⁰²⁾ the programme of activities proposed at the technical meeting, and recommended including in the final programme of activities the holding of a world conference on indigenous peoples and an expert meeting on problems arising from nuclear testing and dumping on indigenous lands. It recommended that the members of the Board of Trustees of the Voluntary Fund for the Decade be appointed as soon as possible to consider projects submitted during the Decade.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission welcomed⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ the General Assembly's 1994 decision to observe annually on 9 August the International Day of Indigenous People.⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ It recommended that a Board of Trustees for the Voluntary Trust Fund for the International Decade be established as soon as possible to consider projects submitted by indigenous and other organizations during the Decade and that the Board's members include representatives of indigenous people. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to include in his report to the Assembly suggestions made in the debate on the Decade at the Working Group's 1995 session.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ the Secretary-General in October submitted a final report on a comprehensive programme of action for the Decade,⁽¹¹⁰⁾ summarizing the views of two Governments on his preliminary report.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ The report contained the proposals adopted by the technical meeting and recommendations made by the Working Group on Indigenous Populations regarding the Decade (see above), as well as a proposed calendar of activities for the Coordinator of the Decade and the Centre for Human Rights during the period 1996-1999.

Also in October, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹¹¹⁾ on progress made at the national, regional and international levels in accomplishing the objectives set out in a 1994 Assembly resolution.⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ The Secretary-General summarized information about Decade activities by three Governments, four UN bodies, five UN specialized agencies, one regional organization and 17 indigenous organizations and other NGOs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/157.

Programme of activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as set forth in the Charter, is the achievement of international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling its resolutions 48/163 of 21 December 1993 and 49/214 of 23 December 1994 on the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/28 of 3 March 1995,

Recalling also that the goal of the Decade is to strengthen international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous people in such areas as human rights, the environment, development, education and health, and that the theme of the Decade is "Indigenous people: partnership in action",

Recognizing further the importance of consultation and cooperation with indigenous people in planning and implementing the programme of activities for the Decade, the need for adequate financial support from the international community, including support from within the United Nations and the specialized agencies, and the need for adequate coordination and communication channels,

Recalling further its invitation to organizations of indigenous people and other non-governmental organizations concerned to consider the contributions they can make to the success of the Decade, with a view to presenting them to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1992/255 of 20 July 1992, in which the Council requested United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to ensure that all technical assistance financed or provided by them was compatible with international instruments and standards applicable to indigenous people, and encouraged efforts to promote coordination in this field and greater participation of indigenous people in the planning and implementation of projects affecting them,

Mindful of the relevant recommendations of the World Conference on Human Rights, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the International Conference on Population and Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the World Summit for Social Development, and of the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Recognizing the value and diversity of the cultures and forms of social organization of indigenous people, and convinced that the development of indigenous people within their countries will contribute to the socioeconomic, cultural and environmental advancement of all the countries of the world,

1. Takes note of the final report of the Secretary-General on a comprehensive programme of action for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People and the annexes to that report;

2. Decides to adopt the programme of activities for the Decade contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Also decides that the programme of activities for the Decade may be reviewed and updated throughout the Decade and that at the mid-point of the Decade the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly should review the results of the activities to identify obstacles to the achievement of the goals of the Decade and to recommend solutions for overcoming those obstacles;

4. Affirms as a major objective of the Decade the adoption by the General Assembly of a declaration on the rights of indigenous people;

5. Welcomes the establishment of an open-ended inter-sessional Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights with the sole purpose of elaborating a draft declaration, considering the draft contained in the annex to resolution 1994/45 of 26 August 1994 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, entitled "Draft United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples", for consideration and adoption by the General Assembly within the Decade;

6. Also welcomes the decisions of the Economic and Social Council to approve the participation of some organizations of indigenous people in the Working Group, and encourages the continuing cooperation of the Council, the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat in processing further applications as a matter of priority in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Council;

7. Recognizes among the important objectives of the Decade the consideration of the possible establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people within the United Nations, as recommended in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held from 14 to 25 June 1993, and welcomes the report of the workshop on the possible establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people held at Copenhagen from 26 to 28 June 1995 and the ongoing dialogue on this subject;

8. Recommends that the Secretary-General, drawing on the expertise of the Commission on Human Rights as well as the Commission for Sustainable Development and other relevant bodies, undertake a review, in close consultation with Governments and taking into account the views of indigenous people and of the existing mechanisms, procedures and programmes within the United Nations concerning indigenous people, and report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

9. Also recommends that the Commission on Human Rights, drawing on the results of the review and the Copenhagen workshop, consider the convening of a second workshop on the possible establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people with the participation of independent experts as well as representatives of Governments, organizations of indigenous people and other non-governmental organizations concerned and United Nations bodies and specialized agencies;

10. Recognizes the importance of strengthening the human and institutional capacity of indigenous people to develop their own solutions to their problems, and, for these purposes, recommends that the United Nations University consider the possibility of sponsoring, in each region, one or more institutions of higher education as centres of excellence and the diffusion of expertise, and invites the Commission on Human Rights to recommend appropriate means of implementation;

11. Further recommends that special attention be given to improving the extent and effectiveness of the participation of indigenous people in planning and implementing the activities for the Decade, including through the recruitment, where appropriate, by relevant United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, of staff from among indigenous nationals of Member States, consistent with Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations and within existing resources and staff levels;

12. Recommends that the Secretary-General:

(a) Request United Nations representatives in countries where there are indigenous people to promote, through the appropriate channels, greater participation of indigenous people in the planning and implementation of projects affecting them;

(b) Ensure coordinated follow-up to the recommendations concerning indigenous people of relevant world conferences, namely the World Conference on Human Rights, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the International Conference on

Population and Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the World Summit for Social Development;

(c) Urge relevant United Nations conferences to promote and facilitate, to the extent possible and as appropriate, the effective input of the views of indigenous people;

(d) Ensure that information about the programme of activities for the Decade and opportunities for indigenous people to participate in those activities is disseminated in all countries and to the greatest possible extent in indigenous languages, to be financed from within existing budgetary resources;

(e) Report on progress made at the national, regional and international levels in accomplishing these objectives to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

13. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote the objectives of the Decade, taking into account the special concerns of indigenous people, in the fulfilment of his functions;

14. Requests the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights, in his capacity as Coordinator of the Decade, bearing in mind the contribution that indigenous people have the capacity to make, to establish, within existing resources, a unit within the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, including indigenous persons, to support its activities related to indigenous people, in particular to plan, coordinate and implement activities for the Decade;

15. Invites the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights to consider the appointment of a fundraiser who could develop new sources of funding for the Decade;

16. Requests the Administrative Committee on Coordination, through its inter-agency process, to consult and coordinate on the Decade, with a view to assisting the Coordinator of the Decade to fulfil his function, and to report on activities of the United Nations system in relation to the Decade to the General Assembly in each year of the Decade;

17. Invites the United Nations financial and development institutions, operational programmes and specialized agencies, in accordance with the existing procedures of their governing bodies:

(a) To give increased priority and resources to improving the conditions of indigenous people, with particular emphasis on the needs of those people in developing countries, including by the preparation of specific programmes of action for the implementation of the goals of the Decade, within their areas of competence;

(b) To launch special projects, through appropriate channels and in collaboration with indigenous people, for strengthening their community-level initiatives and to facilitate the exchange of information and expertise among indigenous people and other relevant experts;

(c) To designate focal points for coordination with the Centre for Human Rights of activities related to the Decade;

18. Emphasizes the important role of international cooperation in promoting the goals and activities of the Decade and the rights, well-being and sustainable development of indigenous people;

19. Also emphasizes the importance of action at the national level to the implementation of the goals and activities of the Decade;

20. Encourages Governments to support the Decade by:

(a) Contributing to the United Nations Trust Fund for the Decade;

(b) Preparing relevant programmes, plans and reports in relation to the Decade, in consultation with indigenous people;

(c) Seeking means, in consultation with indigenous people, of giving indigenous people greater responsibility for their own affairs and an effective voice in decisions on matters which affect them;

(d) Establishing national committees or other mechanisms involving indigenous people to ensure that the objectives and activities of the Decade are planned and implemented on the basis of full partnership with indigenous people;

21. Also encourages Governments to consider contributing, as appropriate, to the Fund for the Development of Indigenous Peoples of Latin America and the Caribbean, in support of the achievement of the goals of the Decade;

22. Appeals to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the Decade by identifying resources for activities designed to implement the goals of the Decade, in cooperation with indigenous people;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Programme of activities of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People".

ANNEX

Programme of activities for the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

A. Objectives

1. Taking into account General Assembly resolution 48/163 of 21 December 1993, the main objective of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People is the strengthening of international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous people in such areas as human rights, the environment, development, health, culture and education.

2. The specialized agencies of the United Nations system and other international and national agencies, as well as communities and private enterprises, should devote special attention to development activities of benefit to indigenous communities.

3. A major objective of the Decade is the education of indigenous and non-indigenous societies concerning the situation, cultures, languages, rights and aspirations of indigenous people. In particular, efforts should be made to cooperate with the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education.

4. An objective of the Decade is the promotion and protection of the rights of indigenous people and their empowerment to make choices which enable them to retain their cultural identity while participating in political, economic and social life, with full respect for their cultural values, languages, traditions and forms of social organization.

5. An objective of the Decade is to further the implementation of the recommendations pertaining to indigenous people of all high-level international conferences, including the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the World Conference on Human Rights, in particular its recommendation that consideration be given to the establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people in the United Nations system, the United Nations Conference on Population and Development and the World Summit for Social Development as well as all future high-level meetings.

6. An objective of the Decade is the adoption of the draft United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and the further development of international standards as well as national legislation for the protection and promotion of the human rights of indigenous people, including effective means of monitoring and guaranteeing those rights.

7. The objectives of the Decade should be assessed by quantifiable outcomes that will improve the lives of indigenous people and that can be evaluated halfway through the Decade and at its end.

B. Activities to be undertaken by the major actors

1. United Nations observances

8. A formal observance each year on the International Day of the World's Indigenous People, in New York, Geneva and at other offices of the United Nations.

9. Official observance of the Decade as part of the Fourth World Conference on Women, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and other international conferences related to the aims and themes of the Decade.

10. Issuance of a special series of stamps by the United Nations Postal Administration highlighting the goals and themes of the Decade.

2. Activities of the Coordinator and the Centre for Human Rights

11. Establish, as a matter of urgency, an adequately staffed and resourced indigenous people's unit.

12. Request Governments to second qualified indigenous people, in consultation with interested national indigenous organizations, to assist in the administration of the Decade.

13. Create a fellowship programme, in collaboration with the Advisory Services of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and Governments, to assist indigenous people wishing to gain experience in the different branches of the Centre and in other parts of the United Nations system. Such fellowships might be available for indigenous research and other similar activities.

14. Open a roster of indigenous experts in various fields who might be available to assist United Nations agencies, in collaboration with Governments, as appropriate, as partners or consultants.

15. Create an advisory group of persons with relevant knowledge of indigenous issues, acting in their personal capacity, to advise the Coordinator for the Decade and United Nations organizations, at their request. The members of this advisory group could include eminent indigenous persons, governmental representatives, independent experts and officials of the specialized agencies.

16. Consider the need to hold coordination meetings of Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and indigenous and non-governmental organizations, as necessary, to consider, examine and evaluate Decade activities and to develop an integrated, action-oriented strategy to advance the interests of indigenous people. The Economic and Social Council should hold mid-term and end-term reviews of the Decade in accordance with its resolution 1988/63 of 27 July 1988. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities should review international activities undertaken during the Decade and receive information from Governments on the implementation of the goals of the Decade in their respective countries.

17. Compile, on the basis of communications of the focal points in the United Nations system, a regular news-sheet containing information about meetings of interest, major or innovative projects, new sources of funding, policy developments and other news to be widely distributed.

18. Encourage the development of partnership projects in association with Governments to address specific regional or thematic issues bringing together Governments, indigenous people and appropriate United Nations agencies.

19. Establish an information programme linking the Coordinator of the Decade to focal points of the United Nations system, national committees for the Decade and, through appropriate channels, indigenous networks; also develop a database of indigenous organizations and other relevant information, in cooperation with indigenous people, Governments, academic institutions and other relevant bodies.

20. Organize meetings on relevant themes of concern to indigenous people with indigenous participation.

21. Launch a series of publications on indigenous issues to inform policy makers, opinion-formers, students and other interested people.

22. Develop, in collaboration with Governments, training programmes on human rights for indigenous people, including the preparation of relevant training materials, when possible in indigenous languages.

23. Establish a board of trustees or advisory group, including indigenous people, to assist the Coordinator of the Voluntary Fund for the International Decade.

24. Encourage the development of projects and programmes, in collaboration with Governments and taking into account the views of indigenous people and the appropriate United Nations agencies, for support by the Voluntary Fund for the Decade.

25. Ensure, in coordination with Governments and indigenous organizations, the necessary measures to guarantee financing of the objectives of the Decade.

3. United Nations public information activities

26. Produce and disseminate a series of posters on the Decade using designs by indigenous artists.

27. Organize a lecture series at United Nations information centres and campuses linked to the United Nations University, using indigenous speakers.

28. Publish in indigenous languages the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, international human rights conventions and, upon its adoption, the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous people, considering the use of audiovisual material for this purpose. Consider also the involvement of indigenous experts and their own information networks in disseminating information about the Decade.

29. Prepare, in collaboration with the Centre for Human Rights, information about indigenous people for distribution to the general public.

4. Operational activities of the United Nations system

30. Establish focal points for indigenous issues in all appropriate organizations of the United Nations system.

31. Encourage the governing bodies of specialized agencies of the United Nations system to adopt programmes of action for the Decade in their own fields of competence, in close cooperation with indigenous people.

32. Urge Governments to ensure that the programmes and budgets of relevant intergovernmental organizations give priority and devote sufficient resources to furthering the aims of the Decade, and request that regular reports on the action taken be submitted to the governing body or executive council of each organization.

33. Prepare, publish and disseminate a manual containing practical information for indigenous people on the operations and procedures of United Nations agencies.

34. Develop research on the socio-economic conditions of indigenous people, in collaboration with indigenous organizations and other appropriate partners, with a view to publishing regular reports in order to contribute to the solution of problems faced by indigenous people, taking into account paragraph 6.26 of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, held at Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994.

35. Encourage Governments to establish appropriate mechanisms and practices to ensure the participation of indigenous people in the design and implementation of national and regional programmes of concern to them.

36. Hold regular inter-agency consultations, in collaboration with Governments and indigenous people, to exchange views and develop strategies on the programme of action for the Decade.

37. Hold consultations with Governments to examine, with national committees and development agencies, possibilities of cooperation in the activities of the Decade.

38. Develop training materials for indigenous people on human rights, including the translation of the main international instruments into different indigenous languages, and give them wide distribution. Consider the possibility of using radio programmes to gain access to indigenous communities not having written languages.

39. Prepare a database on national legislation on matters of particular relevance to indigenous people.

40. Hold consultations of all interested parties on the themes of human rights, the environment, development, health, culture and education, with a view to elaborating programmes in these areas.

5. Activities of regional organizations

41. Implement existing and develop new regional programmes of action to promote and support the objectives of the Decade.

42. Hold regional meetings on indigenous issues with existing regional organizations with a view to strengthening coordination, taking advantage of the machinery of the United Nations system and promoting the direct and active participation of indigenous people of different regions in collaboration with Governments.

The Working Group on Indigenous Populations could consider the possibility of holding its sessions in conjunction with these meetings.

43. Develop training courses and technical assistance programmes for indigenous people in areas such as project design and management, environment, health and education, and promote the exchange of skills and experiences of indigenous people from different regions.

44. Make funds available at the regional level to activities benefiting indigenous people.

45. Encourage regional organizations to draw up regional instruments for the promotion and protection of indigenous people in the framework of their own structures and promote existing regional instruments.

6. Activities of Member States

46. Establish national committees for the Decade or similar mechanisms, including indigenous people, all relevant departments and other interested parties duly convened by Governments, to mobilize public support for the various activities connected with the Decade.

47. Intensify coordination and communication at the national level between relevant ministries, agencies and regional and local authorities by establishing focal points or other mechanisms for coordination and dissemination of information.

48. Use part of the resources of existing programmes and of international assistance for activities of direct benefit to indigenous people and, where possible, provide additional funds for specific activities.

49. Develop, in collaboration with indigenous communities, national plans for the Decade, including main objectives and targets, fixing quantitative outcomes and taking into account the need for resources and possible sources of financing.

50. Provide appropriate resources for indigenous institutions, organizations and communities to develop their own plans and actions according to their own priorities.

51. Adopt measures, in cooperation with indigenous people, to increase knowledge, starting at the elementary-school level and in accordance with the age and development of schoolchildren, concerning the history, traditions, culture and rights of indigenous people, with special emphasis on the education of teachers at all levels, and adopt measures to restore indigenous place names.

52. Consider ratification and implementation of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention of the International Labour Organization (No. 169) and other international and regional instruments, in close consultation with the indigenous organizations of each country.

53. Recognize the existence, identity and rights of indigenous people through constitutional reforms or the adoption of new laws, when appropriate, to improve their legal status and guarantee their economic, social, cultural, political and civil rights.

54. Implement chapter 26 of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and the relevant provisions of the Convention on Biological Diversity, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, as well as the relevant provisions of future high-level conferences.

7. Activities of organizations of indigenous people

55. Establish an information network which can be linked to the Coordinator of the Decade and facilitate communications between the United Nations system, relevant governmental departments and indigenous communities.

56. Indigenous organizations and international indigenous networks should develop information for local communities concerning the goals of the Decade and the activities of the United Nations.

57. Establish and support indigenous schools and university-level institutions and collaborate with the relevant United Nations agencies; participate in the revision of school texts and the contents of programmes of study in order to eliminate discriminatory content and promote the development of indigenous cultures and, where appropriate, in indigenous languages and scripts; develop indigenous curricula for schools and research institutions.

58. Create documentation centres, archives and in situ museums concerning indigenous people, their cultures, laws, beliefs and values, with material that could be used to inform and educate non-indigenous people on these matters. Indigenous people should participate on a preferential basis in the administration of these centres.

59. Establish and promote networks of indigenous journalists and launch indigenous periodicals at the regional and international levels.

60. Indigenous people may transmit their views on the programmes concerning their priority rights to Governments, the United Nations and the specialized agencies and regional organizations.

8. Activities of non-governmental organizations and other interested parties, including education establishments, the media and business

61. Cooperate with indigenous organizations, communities and people in the planning of activities for the Decade.

62. Non-governmental organizations working with indigenous people should involve indigenous people in their activities.

63. Create radio and television centres in indigenous regions, when appropriate and in accordance with national legislation, to provide information on the problems and proposals of indigenous people and to improve communications between indigenous communities.

64. Promote indigenous cultures, with due respect for intellectual property rights, through the publication of books, the production of compact discs and the organization of various artistic and cultural events which enhance knowledge of and serve to develop indigenous cultures and establish indigenous cultural and documentation centres.

65. Involve different social and cultural groups in the activities planned for the Decade.

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/634) without vote, 5 December (meeting 50); 26-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.30), orally revised; agenda item 111. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 32-37, 45, 50; plenary 97.

Draft declaration

Human Rights Commission action. By a 3 March resolution,⁽¹¹²⁾ the Commission established an open-ended inter-sessional working group to elaborate a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, considering the draft annexed to a 1994 Subcommission resolution.⁽¹⁰¹⁾ It asked the Group to meet for 10 days in 1995, to recommend to the Commission the time and duration of its meetings in subsequent years, and to submit a progress report in 1996. The Commission asked relevant UN bodies, programmes and specialized agencies and NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council which were interested in contributing to the activities of the Group to participate in its work. The Commission decided that participation of other relevant indigenous people's organizations, in addition to NGOs in consultative status with the Council, should be in accordance with the relevant provisions of a 1968 Council resolution⁽¹¹³⁾ and procedures it annexed to its resolution; the Commission invited those organizations to submit applications as soon as possible. It requested the Secretary-General to ask Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs in consultative status with the Council and indigenous people's organizations authorized to participate to submit, for the Group's consideration, comments on the draft declaration submitted by the Subcommission. The Commission recommended that the Council take steps to expedite its resolution.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/32.

Establishment of a working group of the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate a draft declaration in accordance with paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 49/214

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/32 of 3 March 1995,

Reaffirming its resolution 1296(XLIV) of 23 May 1968, on arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations, in particular its paragraphs 9, 19 and 33,

Recalling the mandate of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, especially as contained in paragraph 40 (e) of resolution 1296(XLIV),

1. Endorses Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/32;

2. Authorizes the establishment, as a matter of priority and from within existing overall resources, of an open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights, operating in accordance with the procedures established by the Commission in the annex to its resolution 1995/32, with the sole purpose of elaborating a draft declaration, considering the draft United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples annexed to resolution

1994/45 of 26 August 1994 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, for consideration and adoption by the General Assembly within the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People;

3. Also authorizes the open-ended working group to meet for ten working days at the earliest possible date in 1995;

4. Invites applications from organizations of indigenous people not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council that are interested in participating in the working group;

5. Requests the Coordinator of the Decade, in accordance with the procedures established by the Commission in its resolution 1995/32 and following consultations with the States concerned, and in accordance with Article 71 of the Charter of the United Nations, to forward all applications and information received to the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations;

6. Requests the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations to meet as necessary to examine the applications and, having considered all relevant information, including any views received from the States concerned, to recommend to the Economic and Social Council those organizations of indigenous people which should be authorized to participate in the working group, including at its first session in 1995;

7. Decides, on the basis of the recommendations of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, to authorize the participation in the work of the working group of interested organizations of indigenous people, in accordance with rules 75 and 76 of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Council;

8. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its fifty-second session, to review the progress of the working group and to transmit its comments to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1996;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and facilities for the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/32
25 July 1995 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23); agenda item 5 (d).
Meeting numbers. ESC 51-53.

On 25 October, by decision 1995/317 A, the Council approved the participation in the Working Group of 44 indigenous people's organizations, not in consultative status with the Council, and requested the Committee on NGOs to meet urgently to continue its consideration of the remaining applications. Governments were invited to submit their views on the applications.

In decision 1995/317 B of 2 November, the Council approved the participation of an additional 34 organizations not in consultative status.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission recommended⁽¹⁴⁾ that the Commission recommend, through the Economic and Social Council, that the General Assembly update a 1985 resolution⁽¹⁵⁾ by adding in its subpara-graph (b) the words "and the working group established by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1995/32 of 3 March 1995" after the words "Working Group on Indigenous Populations".

Working Group activities. The Working Group established to consider a UN draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples met in Geneva from 20 November to 1 December.⁽¹⁶⁾ As requested by the Commission (see above), the Group had before it comments on the draft declaration submitted by 11 Governments,⁽¹⁷⁾ two UN bodies and three specialized agencies,⁽¹⁸⁾ and four non-governmental and indigenous organizations.⁽¹⁹⁾

The Group discussed the scope of application of the draft, its title and preambular paragraphs, and reviewed the draft declaration part by part.

Voluntary Fund

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/156.

United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/131 of 13 December 1985 establishing the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/32 of 3 March 1995, as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1995/32 of 25 July 1995, which authorized the establishment of an open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights with the sole purpose of elaborating a draft declaration, considering the draft United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples annexed to resolution 1994/45 of 26 August 1994 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, for consideration and adoption by the General Assembly within the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People,

Taking note also of the provisions in Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/32 regarding the participation of organizations of indigenous people in the Working Group,

Emphasizing the importance and special nature of the draft declaration as a standard-setting exercise specifically for indigenous people,

Recognizing the desirability of assisting organizations of indigenous people to participate in the Working Group,

1. Decides that the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations should also be used to assist representatives of indigenous communities and organizations to participate in the deliberations of the open-ended inter-sessional Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights established by the Commission in its resolution 1995/32, as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 25 July 1995, as well as in the deliberations of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States and to invite them to consider contributing to the Fund.

21 December 1995 Meeting 97 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/634) without vote, 5 December (meeting 50); 19-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.29); agenda item 111.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 32-37, 45, 50; plenary 97.

Permanent forum for indigenous people

Commission action. On 3 March, the Commission endorsed⁽¹²⁰⁾ a 1994 Subcommission recommendation⁽¹²¹⁾ that the Centre for Human Rights organize a workshop on establishing within the UN system a permanent forum for indigenous people. It recommended that the workshop be held for a three-day period prior to the 1995 session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and that its outcome be transmitted to the Group at that session. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit to the Group comments and suggestions on the possible establishment of a permanent forum received from Governments and indigenous people's organizations. The Group was to submit its views and suggestions, through the Subcommission, to the Commission in 1996.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/262, endorsed the recommendation for a workshop, that it be for a three-day period and that its outcome be transmitted to the Group in 1995.

Workshop. The workshop on the possible establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people within the UN (Copenhagen, Denmark, 26-28 June) considered the scope of a permanent forum; the UN body to which it would report and its relationship with the UN; its mandate and terms of reference and activities that might be undertaken; membership and participation of indigenous people; the forum's relationship with the Working Group on Indigenous Populations; financial and secretariat implications; and the forum's location.⁽¹²²⁾

The report of the workshop was transmitted to the Working Group, as were separate addenda containing the views of five Governments on the establishment of a permanent forum (as at 1 June 1995),⁽¹²³⁾ the views of three indigenous people's organizations,⁽¹²⁴⁾ and background papers on the subject prepared by independent experts.⁽¹²⁵⁾

Working Group activities. In July,⁽¹⁰²⁾ the Working Group on Indigenous Populations expressed appreciation to the Government of Denmark and the Homerule Government of Greenland for organizing the workshop. It supported the idea that such a permanent forum should be established during the Decade; report to the Economic and Social Council; include in its mandate issues relating to human rights, development, environment, health, education and culture; and consist of a membership of representatives of Governments and indigenous peoples, as well as independent experts. The Group stated that if the permanent forum was open to non-members, it should be attended by representatives of all indigenous people's organizations regardless of their consultative status.

The Group recommended that another workshop be held, prior to its 1996 session, for continued discussions on the forum, with invitations sent to relevant UN departments and organizations, requesting that they consider how a new forum might cooperate with them. The Secretary-General was to review existing arrangements and programmes within the UN system which might be used by indigenous people.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission asked⁽¹²⁶⁾ the Secretary-General to invite Governments and indigenous organizations to express their views on establishing a permanent forum and to report to the Working Group in 1996 on comments and suggestions received. It also wanted a review of existing mechanisms, procedures and programmes within the UN for promotion and coordination of the rights of indigenous people. The Subcommission recommended that the forum be established early in the Decade and that its mandate include issues relating to human rights, development, environment, health, education and culture. Regarding membership, the Subcommission recommended that it consist of independent experts and representatives of Governments and indigenous peoples' organizations and, subject to its being open to non-members, that it also be open to representatives of all indigenous people's organizations without regard to consultative status. It also recommended that the Centre for Human Rights organize a second workshop on the subject.

Study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission endorsed⁽¹²⁷⁾ a 1994 Subcommission recommendation⁽¹²¹⁾ to Special Rapporteur Miguel Alfonso Martinez (Cuba) to submit in 1995 a second progress report on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and the Subcommission and a final report to them in 1996. The Commission also endorsed the recommendation to the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and provide the resources needed for a research mission to the Vatican archives in Rome. On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed those recommendations by decision 1995/298.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In July, the Special Rapporteur submitted his second progress report,⁽¹²⁸⁾ describing research and other activities carried out between the last quarter of 1992 and the first quarter of 1995. He discussed the distinction between minorities and indigenous populations and analysed ways in which there had been a gradual erosion of the sovereign status of indigenous nations in Africa and Asia/Oceania. He recommended that advisory assistance from the Centre for Human Rights be guaranteed to him and that he be authorized to submit a third progress report in 1996 and a final report in 1997.

Subcommission action. On 24 August, the Subcommission requested⁽¹²⁹⁾ the Special Rapporteur to submit a third progress report to it and the Group in 1996 and a final report in 1997. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and provide the resources needed for specialized research assistance, for visits to Geneva for consultation with the Centre for Human Rights and for a field mission to examine the contemporary significance of a historic treaty in one country, to be determined in consultation with the Government concerned, as a practical example for inclusion in the final report. It recommended that the Commission ask the Economic and Social Council to endorse its decision.

Protection of indigenous heritage

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission endorsed⁽¹³⁰⁾ a 1994 Subcommission request⁽¹³¹⁾ to the Secretary-General to submit the principles and guidelines for the protection of the heritage of indigenous people to indigenous people's organizations, nations and communities, Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments. It requested the Special Rapporteur, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), to submit in 1995 her final report based on comments and information received, and the Secretary-General to assist her.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/297, welcomed the Special Rapporteur's preliminary report submitted in 1994,⁽¹³¹⁾ authorizing her to prepare a final report for submission in 1995 and approving the Commission requests to the Secretary-General.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur submitted her final report⁽¹³²⁾ containing comments on the principles and guidelines for the protection of the heritage of indigenous people received from two Governments, two UN bodies, three UN specialized agencies and five indigenous people's organizations. She recommended that the Subcommission consider the revised principles and guidelines, as annexed to her report, in order to transmit them to the Commission in 1996. She further recommended the convening of a UN technical meeting to propose practical ways for the cooperation of relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies in protecting the heritage of indigenous people.

Subcommission action. On 25 August, the Subcommission expressed its appreciation⁽¹³³⁾ to the Special Rapporteur for her report, noting the limited number of replies received from Governments, indigenous communities and organizations and other parties concerned. It asked the Secretary-General to submit her report to Governments, specialized agencies, indigenous people's communities and organizations, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs concerned for their comments, and the Special Rapporteur to prepare in 1996 a supplementary report, based on those comments. The Subcommission also asked the Special Rapporteur to include in the supplementary report a chapter on activities taken in other forums, such as UNDP, UNESCO, FAO, WIPO and WTO, and to take into consideration the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity,⁽¹³⁴⁾ the 1994 UN Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,⁽¹³⁵⁾ and other relevant international instruments. The Subcommission recommended that the basic and comprehensive study on the protection of the cultural and intellectual property of indigenous peoples, prepared in 1993,⁽¹³⁶⁾ be published in all official UN languages and disseminated widely.

Relocation of Navajo and Hopi families

In July, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹³⁷⁾ that, pursuant to a 1994 Subcommission request,⁽¹⁰¹⁾ he had sought information regarding the human rights aspects of the case of the relocation of Navajo and Hopi families from northern Arizona (United States) from the Permanent Mission of the United States to the United Nations Office at Geneva, the Hopi Tribal Council, the Navajo Nation and the Indian Law Resource Center. No replies were received.

Migrant workers

The situation of migrant workers has been a UN concern for many years, initially through the work of the International Labour Organization. This concern culminated in the adoption by the General Assembly in 1990 of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (see preceding chapter).

In 1995, the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly adopted resolutions of particular concern to migrant workers, including those on family reunification and universal freedom of travel (see below) and violence against women migrant workers (see above and PART FOUR, Chapter X).

Family reunification

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 27 to 9, with 17 abstentions, the Human Rights Commission on 7 March called on⁽¹³⁸⁾ States to allow, in conformity with international legislation, the free flow of financial remittances by foreign nationals residing in their territory to relatives in the country of origin, and to discourage or repeal legislation that adversely affected the family reunification of documented migrants and the transfer of such remittances. It also called on them to ensure the universally recognized freedom of travel to all foreign nationals legally residing in their territory. It recommended that the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, consider the matter in 1995.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/276.

Respect for the universal freedom of travel and the vital importance of family reunification

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/62 of 7 March 1995, approved the Commission's recommendation to the General Assembly, through the Council, that the Assembly consider at its fiftieth session the question of respect for the universal freedom of travel and the vital importance of family reunification.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/276

20-7-23 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23/Corr.2); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 51, 52.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela.

Against: Australia, Canada, Germany, Japan, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belarus, Bhutan, Bulgaria, Denmark, France, Gabon, Greece, Ireland, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Norway, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Senegal, South Africa, Thailand, Ukraine, Zimbabwe.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/175.

Respect for the right to universal freedom of travel and the vital importance of family reunification

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Stressing that, as stated in the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, family reunification of documented migrants is an important factor in international migration, and that remittances by documented migrants to their countries of origin often constitute a very important source of foreign exchange and are instrumental in improving the well-being of relatives left behind,

Recalling also its resolution 49/182 of 23 December 1994,

1. Once again calls upon all States to guarantee the universally recognized freedom of travel to all foreign nationals legally residing in their territory;

2. Reaffirms that all Governments, particularly those of receiving countries, must recognize the vital importance of family reunification and promote its incorporation into national legislation in order to ensure protection of the unity of families of documented migrants;

3. Calls upon all States to allow, in conformity with international legislation, the free flow of financial remittances by foreign nationals residing in their territory to their relatives in the country of origin;

4. Also calls upon all States to refrain from enacting, and to repeal if it already exists, legislation intended as a coercive measure that discriminates against individuals or groups of legal migrants by adversely affecting family reunification and the right to send financial remittances to relatives in the country of origin;

5. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 86-4-80 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.2) by recorded vote (75-4-74), 13 December (meeting 55); draft by Cuba (A/C.3/50/L.36), orally revised; agenda item 112 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 55; plenary 99.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Disabled

Commission action. On 3 March, the Human Rights Commission called on⁽¹³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General to maintain the integrity of programmes within the UN relating to disabled persons and asked him to report biennially to the General Assembly on progress made to ensure the full recognition and enjoyment of their human rights. The Commission's request was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1995/274 of 25 July.

Subcommission action. On 18 August, the Subcommission asked⁽¹⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General to report in 1996 and to help ensure a wider distribution of the 1991 report⁽¹⁴¹⁾ on disabled persons made by its Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina).

Chapter III

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights in specific countries in 1995 were again the subject of United Nations scrutiny in a number of forums, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine the charges.

General aspects

In addition to review in UN bodies of reported human rights violations in countries and other areas in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and the Mediterranean, Latin America and the Caribbean and the Middle East (see below), the United Nations also considered allegations in closed meetings and by secret ballot. Under a procedure established by the Economic and Social Council in 1970 to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights,⁽¹⁾ the Commission on Human Rights held closed meetings to study confidential documents and a confidential report by a working group set up in 1990.⁽²⁾ The documents dealt with human rights situations in Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Chad, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, the Republic of Moldova, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Slovenia, Thailand and Uganda. The Commission decided to discontinue consideration of the human rights situations in Albania, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, the Republic of Moldova, Rwanda, Slovenia, Thailand and Uganda.

On 18 August,⁽³⁾ the Subcommittee decided, pursuant to a 1991 Council resolution,⁽⁴⁾ to vote by secret ballot on proposals pertaining to allegations of human rights violations in countries, whenever such a vote was requested, including proposals of a procedural nature relating to proposals of a substantive nature.

On 24 August,⁽⁵⁾ the Subcommittee decided to consider in 1996 how best to carry out its mandate in examining item 6 of its agenda concerning violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, while taking into account all reliable sources. The Subcommittee asked the Secretariat to make the reports of Special Rapporteurs and Chairmen/Rapporteurs of working groups of the Commission available to the experts who requested them in 1996 and to undertake consultations with the Special Rapporteurs and Chairmen/Rapporteurs during their annual joint meeting. The Subcommittee asked the Secretary-General to report in 1996.

With regard to recognition of gross and large-scale human rights violations, the Commission on 3 March,⁽⁶⁾ noting a 1994 Subcommittee resolution,⁽⁷⁾ asked the Subcommittee, bearing in mind the work of the other UN bodies on the issue, to reconsider its recommendation to appoint a special rapporteur to prepare a report on the recognition as an international crime of gross and large-scale violations of human rights, perpetrated on the orders of Governments or sanctioned by them.

On 24 August,⁽⁸⁾ the Subcommittee, reaffirming its recommendation that the Commission appoint Stanislav Chernichenko (Russian Federation) as the Special Rapporteur to prepare the report, decided to consider that report in 1996. It recommended that the Special Rapporteur take into account the comments made on his working papers submitted in 1992⁽⁹⁾ and 1993,⁽¹⁰⁾ as well as the work of the International Law Commission (see PART FIVE, Chapter III) and include in his report a draft declaration on the question.

Africa

Burundi

Report of the Secretary-General. In February, the Secretary-General discussed his good offices mission during the period from November 1993 to January 1995 to search for a peaceful solution in Burundi.⁽¹⁾ He described the activities of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights who had conducted two missions to the country in 1994 and who had signed an agreement with the Government to execute a programme of advisory services. The programme emphasized human rights training, assistance to institutions and activities for young people.

The Secretary-General also described the activities of his Special Representative on internally displaced persons (see preceding chapter), special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission and treaty bodies. He presented information received from the UN High Commissioner for Refugees and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

Commission action. On 8 March,⁽²⁾ the Commission strongly condemned the break in the democratic process initiated in Burundi, demanded an immediate end to violent acts and called on civilians and the military to respect the country's Constitution and Convention. It appealed to political groups, the army, the media and civilians to show moderation and a spirit of conciliation, and to restore full respect for and the promotion of human rights. It applauded the decision of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions to undertake a mission to Burundi, which he did from 19 to 29 April (see PART THREE, Chapter I). The Commission called on its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to report in 1996 on the human rights situation in Burundi.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to its Chairman by decision 1995/291.

Subsequently, Paulo Sergio Pinheiro (Brazil) was appointed Special Rapporteur.⁽³⁾

Subcommission action. On 18 August,⁽⁴⁾ the Subcommission appealed to the Commission to reinforce the activities of the Special Rapporteur.

On the same date,⁽⁵⁾ the Subcommission condemned the existence of a radio station calling itself "Radio Démocratie-La Voix du Peuple", transmitting from the Uvira region of Zaire and broadcasting with complete impunity, under cover of anonymity, information inciting racial hatred among Burundi citizens and stirring up genocidal hatred. It urged the authorities of Zaire to take steps to close down the radio station, prosecute its sponsors and reporters, order an investigation and place under seal all materials and recordings which might serve as evidence, and to bring the reporters and their sponsors before the competent courts. The Subcommission suggested that the Special Rapporteur on Zaire, in conjunction with the Special Rapporteur on Burundi, accord priority in his observations on the role of such media in the propagation of genocidal behaviour. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit its resolution to the authorities of Zaire; the High Commissioner for Human Rights was to use his good offices to facilitate its implementation by them.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In November, the Special Rapporteur submitted his report,⁽⁶⁾ covering the period from 1 March to 31 October, reviewing his mandate, summarizing his activities and discussing the human rights situation in Burundi based on his visit from 21 June to 2 July.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the situation in Burundi was deteriorating, with the ethnic tension between the Hutus and Tutsis giving rise to systematic racist practices on both sides. A steady increase in serious human rights violations and criminal attacks on the security and lives of the population was due to widespread impunity. He discussed violations of the right to life and physical integrity, including: attacks on military positions, acts of violence against individuals, violence in primary and secondary schools and attacks against expatriates, NGOs and UN agencies; disturbances and killings at the Collège du Saint-Esprit in Kamenge and the University of Bujumbura in June and July; abuses by the army and forces of order; violations of the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose one's residence within a State; arbitrary detentions; and violations of freedom of expression and freedom of the press.

The Special Rapporteur remained convinced that the best approach was to establish an international commission of inquiry, which had been called for by the Security Council (resolution 1012(1995)) and was subsequently established by the Secretary-General (see PART TWO, Chapter II). He recommended the consolidation of democratic institutions to eradicate impunity; measures to put an end to insecurity; the strengthening of civil society; and the promotion of the enjoyment of human rights.

Equatorial Guinea

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January,⁽⁷⁾ Special Rapporteur Alejandro Artucio (Uruguay) described his visit to Equatorial Guinea in May and the human rights situation there, notably the situation of prisoners and detainees; the administration of justice; the unlimited encroachment of military jurisdiction into criminal matters; the legal structure of the State; failure to publicize laws and governmental acts; arrests, detentions and torture of political activists and others; freedom of expression; religious freedom; freedom of movement and freedom to travel; the situation of women; ethnic discrimination; and political rights. He concluded that progress had been made in the situation and enjoyment of human rights but that there were still serious human rights violations as well as disparities between the different parts of the country. He proposed technical assistance consisting of training courses and seminars.

Commission action. On 8 March,⁽⁸⁾ the Commission called on the Government of Equatorial Guinea to promote the harmonious coexistence of all ethnic groups, to continue improving the conditions of prisoners and detainees, to continue taking measures to stop the practice of arbitrary arrest and detention, torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment and to ensure that those responsible were investigated and punished. It appealed to the Government to improve the legal and social situation of women. The Commission decided to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to report in 1996. The Secretary-General was asked to provide the Government with the technical assistance suggested by the Special Rapporteur and to assist him.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/282, approved the renewal of the Special Rapporteur's mandate, the Commission's request to him to report in 1996 and its request to the Secretary-General to assist him.

Nigeria

On 8 March, the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 21 against to 17 in favour, with 15 abstentions, rejected a draft concerning the human rights situation in Nigeria.⁽⁹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/199.

Situation of human rights in Nigeria

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and other human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have the duty to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that Nigeria is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Expressing concern that the absence of representative government in Nigeria has led to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and recalling in this regard the popular support for democratic rule as evidenced in the 1993 elections,

Noting with interest that the Government of Nigeria, on 1 October 1995, affirmed the principle of multi-party democracy, announcing its intent to accept the principle of power-sharing, lift the ban on political activity and the press, devolve power to local levels of government and subordinate the military to civilian authority, but disappointed that only limited action in this regard has followed,

Noting with alarm the recent arbitrary executions of nine persons, namely Ken Saro-Wiwa, Barinem Kiobel, Saturday Dobe, Paul Levura, Nordu Eawo, Felix Nwate, Daniel Gbokoo, John Kpuimen and Baribor Bera, Noting the decision of the heads of Government of the Commonwealth countries to suspend Nigeria from membership in the Commonwealth,

Noting also the decisions of the European Union, as well as those of other States or groups of States with regard to Nigeria,

Deeply concerned about the human rights situation in Nigeria and the suffering caused thereby to the people of Nigeria,

1. Condemns the arbitrary execution, after a flawed judicial process, of Ken Saro-Wiwa and his eight co-defendants, and emphasizes that everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial with all the guarantees necessary for defence;

2. Expresses its deep concern about other violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Nigeria, and calls upon the Government of Nigeria urgently to ensure their observance, in particular by restoring habeas corpus, releasing all political prisoners, guaranteeing freedom of the press and ensuring full respect for the rights of all individuals, including trade unionists and persons belonging to minorities;

3. Calls upon the Government of Nigeria to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other international instruments on human rights;

4. Urges the Government of Nigeria to take immediate and concrete steps to restore democratic rule;

5. Welcomes the decisions by the Commonwealth and other States individually or collectively to take various actions designed to underline to the Government of Nigeria the importance of return to democratic rule and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and expresses the hope that these actions and other possible actions by other States, consistent with international law, will encourage the Government of Nigeria to achieve that specific purpose;

6. Invites the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session to give urgent attention to the situation of human rights in Nigeria, and recommends, in this regard, that its relevant mechanisms, in particular the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, report to the Commission prior to its fifty-third session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in the discharge of his good offices mandate and in cooperation with the Commonwealth, to undertake discussions with the Government of Nigeria and to report on progress in the implementation of the present resolution and on the possibilities for the international community to offer practical assistance to Nigeria in achieving the restoration of democratic rule.

Rwanda

Commission action. On 8 March,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Commission condemned genocide, violations of international humanitarian law and all human rights violations and abuses in Rwanda, as well as the kidnapping and killing of military peace-keeping personnel attached to the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR), the killing of personnel attached to humanitarian organizations, the killing of innocent civilians and the destruction of property. It urged all States concerned to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for Rwanda, taking into account the obligations contained in a 1994 Security Council resolution⁽¹¹⁾ and another adopted in 1995 (resolution 978(1995)), and to take all measures for the early and effective functioning of the Tribunal. Welcoming the efforts of the Government of Rwanda to reconstruct the civil administration and the social, legal, economic and human rights infrastructure of the country, the Commission noted that efforts were hampered by a lack of resources. It commended the efforts of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to ensure that UN efforts aimed at conflict resolution and peace-building were accompanied by a strong human rights component and effectively supported by a comprehensive human rights programme.

Condemning attacks against persons in refugee camps near the Rwanda borders and demanding that such attacks cease immediately, the Commission called on States to prevent them and welcomed the efforts of UNAMIR, the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the human rights field operation in Rwanda. It also condemned those who obstructed the access of humanitarian relief. It welcomed the commitments of Governments to help resolve the problems of refugees and called on them to ensure the safety of refugees and the personnel providing humanitarian assistance. The Commission urged Governments in the region to prevent their territory from being used to pursue a strategy of destabilization of Rwanda.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to make recommendations concerning situations in which technical assistance might be appropriate. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Centre for Human Rights to provide continuing and further technical assistance, upon request, particularly in the area of the administration of justice. It asked the Secretary-General to ensure adequate resources for the delivery of programmes of technical assistance and advisory services, especially in the area of the administration of justice as requested by the Government of Rwanda.

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/292, approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request to him to make recommendations regarding technical assistance. It also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and to ensure resources for programmes of technical assistance and advisory services.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. In June, Special Rapporteur René Degni-Ségui (Cote d'Ivoire) presented his findings resulting from his visits to Rwanda (27 March-3 April and 25-28 May).⁽¹²⁾ He also travelled to Belgium, Canada, France and the United States.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the human rights situation in Rwanda had barely changed and was still characterized by serious violations of property rights, personal security and the right to life. In addition, there had been no obvious progress towards a solution to the problem of displaced persons or refugees.

Concerning the inquiry into genocide, the Special Rapporteur stated that substantial progress had been made in the deployment of observers, but that the human rights operation suffered from a shortage of financial resources and political difficulties which focused on relations between the operation and the Rwandan authorities and between the operation and the Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur presented eyewitness accounts of incidents of genocide. The special investigation unit succeeded in identifying several hundred mass graves throughout the country and obtained and examined documents related to the planning of massacres.

The Special Rapporteur made recommendations for UN action regarding the repression of genocide, the cessation of human rights violations, the fate of the victims of human rights violations, the fate of refugees and displaced persons, and reconstruction and social harmony.

In a later report,⁽¹³⁾ the Special Rapporteur described two further visits to Rwanda (24-28 August and 4-9 December). In August, he investigated the situation created by the expulsion of Rwandan refugees from the camps in Zaire and in December he familiarized himself with recent developments in the human rights situation. He stated that the human rights situation, notably violations of property rights, personal security and the right to life, seemed to be deteriorating owing to the addition of violations of the right to freedom of expression. The human rights observers were continuing to collect information on genocide and other human rights violations, and the inquiry had been extended to special situations concerning vulnerable groups, including women, children and the Twas, an ethnic group which accounted for some 1 per cent of the population. The problem of returnees arose only in relation to refugees since the closure of camps and the forced repatriation of displaced persons to their communes of origin. No substantial progress had been made in that respect, and the problem had been further complicated by the forced repatriations of refugees from Zaire and by the threat of new expulsions.

The Special Rapporteur presented recommendations for UN action concerning assistance for victims of genocide and other crimes belonging to vulnerable groups; the rehabilitation of the Rwandan judicial and prison system; the opening of trials at the International Tribunal for Rwanda and the cooperation of States; the punishment of human rights violations; and the strengthening of reception, resettlement and security facilities for returnees.

Subcommission action. On 18 August,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Subcommission condemned the genocide committed in Rwanda and demanded an end to all action aimed at arming and training the militias and extremist elements in the refugee camps for the resumption of the war. It called for measures to reorganize the Rwandan judicial system; punishment of individuals implicated in the war crimes, and the adoption of measures by States which had granted asylum or other refuge to the individuals implicated in the genocide and massacres so that they did not escape justice. The Subcommission called on the international community to provide the necessary assistance so that the International Tribunal for Rwanda could function and begin the trials of those accused of genocide and appealed to it to make a financial contribution to the human rights development and education programmes. It demanded that the Government and the international community use all means possible to contain the epidemics of dysentery, pneumonia and gangrene, which were decimating detainees in Rwandan prisons. The Subcommission paid tribute to the work of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights in Rwanda, especially the programmes he had established to reorganize the judicial system, promote education, human rights and technical cooperation and investigate genocide, and to the work accomplished by the Special Rapporteur.

Also on 18 August,⁽⁵⁾ the Subcommission condemned the role played by some printed or audio-visual media in inciting genocidal hatred, as revealed by the Special Rapporteur.

Notes of the Secretary-General. On 2 November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the reports of the Special Rapporteur prepared since the forty-ninth (1994) session of the Assembly.⁽¹⁵⁾ On 30 November, he transmitted⁽¹⁶⁾ to the Assembly the report of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights on the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/200.

Situation of human rights in Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and the Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and other applicable human rights and humanitarian law standards,

Recalling its resolution 49/206 of 23 December 1994, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/91 of 8 March 1995, in which the Commission renewed the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to investigate the human rights situation in Rwanda,

Welcoming the commitments of the Government of Rwanda to protect and promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to eliminate impunity, recalling the efforts to restore the rule of law and reconstruct the civil administration and the social, legal and human rights infrastructure, and noting that these efforts are hampered by a lack of resources,

Noting the concerns of the Special Rapporteur, as set out in his report of 28 June 1995, that the human rights situation is exacerbated by the inadequate system for the administration of justice, characterized by a shortage of both human and material resources, and that there are threats and violence against the physical integrity of individuals, arrest, detention and treatment and conditions of detention, which do not conform to international standards,

Expressing its grave concern at the tragedy of Kibeho in April 1995, and bearing in mind the conclusions of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry in its report of 18 May 1995,

Recalling the obligations of all States to punish all persons who commit or authorize genocide or other grave violations of international humanitarian law or those who are responsible for grave violations of human rights and, pursuant to Security Council resolution 978(1995) of 27 February 1995, to exert every effort, without delay, to bring those responsible to justice in accordance with international principles of due process, and to honour their obligations under international law in this regard, particularly under the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,

Welcoming the measures taken by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to put in place the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda and to coordinate its activities with those of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, and other United Nations agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and the International Committee of the Red Cross,

Recognizing the valuable contribution that the human rights officers deployed by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to Rwanda have made towards the improvement of the overall situation,

Deeply concerned by the reports of the Special Rapporteur and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, according to which genocide and systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law, including crimes against humanity and grave violations and abuses of human rights, were committed in Rwanda,

Welcoming the policy of the Government of Rwanda to facilitate the process of voluntary and safe return, resettlement and reintegration of refugees, as reaffirmed in the Cairo Declaration on the Great Lakes Region of 29 November 1995,

Noting the United Nations support for all efforts to reduce tension and restore stability in the Great Lakes region, and supporting initiatives of the Secretary-General in this regard, particularly in implementing the Cairo Declaration on the Great Lakes Region and continuing consultations with the aim of convening a conference on security, stability and development in the Great Lakes region, as appropriate,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1029(1995) of 12 December 1995, in which the Council renewed the mandate of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda to exercise its good offices to assist in achieving the voluntary and safe repatriation of Rwandan refugees within the frame of reference of the recommendations of the Bujumbura Conference and the Cairo Summit of the heads of State of the Great Lakes region, and in promoting genuine national reconciliation, to assist the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international agencies in the provision of logistical support for the repatriation of refugees, to contribute, with the agreement of the Government of Rwanda, to the protection of the International Tribunal for Rwanda as an interim measure until alternative arrangements agreed with the Government of Rwanda can be put in place,

Acknowledging the responsibility of the Government of Rwanda for the safety and security of all personnel attached to the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, United Nations agencies and humanitarian organizations and other international staff operating in the country,

Recognizing the important role played by non-governmental organizations in providing humanitarian assistance and contributing to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Rwanda,

Recognizing also that effective action must be taken to ensure that the perpetrators of genocide and crimes against humanity are promptly brought to justice,

Recognizing further that effective action to prevent further violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms must be a central and integral element of the overall Rwandan and United Nations responses to the situation in Rwanda and that a strong human rights component is indispensable to the political peace process and the post-conflict reconstruction of Rwanda,

1. Welcomes the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda, and takes note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violations committed during the tragedy in Rwanda and on the current situation of human rights in Rwanda;

2. Condemns in the strongest terms the acts of genocide, violations of international humanitarian law and all violations and abuses of human rights that occurred during the tragedy in Rwanda, especially following the events of 6 April 1994, which resulted in a massive loss of human life, up to one million people;

3. Expresses its deep concern at the intense suffering of the victims of genocide and crimes against humanity, recognizes the ongoing suffering of their survivors, particularly the extremely high number of traumatized children and women victims of rape and sexual violence, and urges the international community to provide adequate assistance to them;

4. Condemns the killing of personnel attached to the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, United Nations agencies and humanitarian organizations operating in the country, including Rwandan personnel working with them;

5. Calls upon the Government of Rwanda to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of all personnel attached to the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, United Nations agencies and humanitarian organizations and other international staff operating in the country;

6. Reaffirms that all persons who commit or authorize genocide or other grave violations of international humanitarian law or those who are responsible for grave violations of human rights are individually responsible and accountable for those violations;

7. Urges all States, pursuant to Security Council resolution 978(1995), to exert, without delay, every effort, including arrest and detention, in order to bring those responsible to justice in accordance with international principles of due process, and also urges States to honour their obligations under international law in this regard, particularly under the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide;

8. Recognizes that effective action must be taken by all States concerned to ensure that the perpetrators of genocide and crimes against humanity are promptly brought to justice, and urges all States concerned to cooperate fully with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994, taking into account the obligations contained in Security Council resolutions 955(1994) of 8 November 1994 and 978(1995), and to intensify efforts for the effective functioning of the Tribunal without delay;

9. Commends the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, working in cooperation with and assisting the Government of Rwanda, to ensure that human rights monitoring, a comprehensive programme of human rights assistance and confidence-building measures form integral parts of Rwandan and United Nations efforts aimed at conflict prevention and peace-building in Rwanda, drawing as appropriate on the expertise and capacities of all parts of the United Nations system, thus contributing to the promotion and protection of human rights in Rwanda;

10. Encourages the Government of Rwanda, in a spirit of national reconciliation, to intensify efforts to protect and promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to create an environment conducive to the realization of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights and the voluntary and safe return of refugees to their homes;

11. Takes note with concern of the findings of the Special Rapporteur as set out in his report of 28 June 1995, and of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda, that the human rights situation is exacerbated by the inadequate system for the administration of justice, characterized by a shortage of both human and material resources;

12. Notes with concern the arrest, detention and treatment and conditions of detention that do not conform to international standards, as set out in the report of the Special Rapporteur;

13. Also notes with concern that a situation still exists, evidenced by reports of threats and violence against the physical integrity of individuals, which is sometimes exacerbated by incursions;

14. Urges Governments in the region to take measures to prevent their territory from being used to pursue a strategy of destabilization of Rwanda, and, in this regard, urges all States concerned to cooperate fully with the International Commission of Inquiry on arms flows in the Great Lakes region, established in pursuance of Security Council resolution 1013(1995) of 7 September 1995;

15. Condemns the mass killings of civilians at Kibeho in April 1995, takes note of the conclusions of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry in its report, and expresses its grave concern at the events in Kanama in September 1995;

16. Welcomes the efforts of the Government of Rwanda to reconstruct the civil administration and the social, legal, economic and human rights infrastructure of Rwanda, encourages the Government to intensify its efforts, with the assistance of the international community, the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda and other United Nations bodies, to expedite the processing of cases, to ensure conditions and treatment in detention in conformity with international standards, and to train civilian police in the legal procedures governing arrest and detention, and notes that efforts in this regard are hampered by a lack of human and financial resources;

17. Invites Member States, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue and intensify their efforts to contribute financial and technical support to the efforts of the Government of Rwanda to reconstruct the civil administration and the social, legal, economic and human rights infrastructure of Rwanda, particularly in the areas of the administration of justice, and welcomes the contributions made, including those at the Round Table Conference at Geneva and its mid-term review, and urges States and donor agencies to fulfil their earlier commitments;

18. Condemns all violence and intimidation against persons in the refugee camps in neighbouring countries, calls upon the appropriate authorities to ensure security in such camps, and welcomes the commitments undertaken by the Governments in the region in the Cairo Declaration on the Great Lakes Region;

19. Welcomes the joint efforts of the Government of Rwanda, neighbouring countries and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to assist the voluntary and safe return of refugees through, inter alia, the work of the Tripartite Commission and the agreements reached at Nairobi in January 1995, Bujumbura in February 1995 and Cairo in November 1995, and welcomes also the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda and the United Nations Development Programme to coordinate their efforts to ensure protection of the human rights of refugees during their return, resettlement and reintegration;

20. Also welcomes the measures taken by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, working in cooperation with and assisting the Government of Rwanda, to put in place the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda, which has as its objective:

(a) The investigation of violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including acts of genocide and crimes against humanity;

(b) The monitoring of the human rights situation and the prevention of future violations;

(c) Cooperation with other international agencies in re-establishing confidence and thus facilitating the voluntary return and resettlement of refugees and displaced persons;

(d) The rebuilding of civil society, through programmes of human rights education and technical cooperation, particularly in the areas of the administration of justice and conditions of arrest, detention and treatment in detention, and through programmes of cooperation with Rwandan human rights organizations; and requests the High Commissioner to report regularly on all of these activities of the Field Operation and to cooperate and share information with the Special Rapporteur in order to assist him in fulfilling his mandate;

21. Further welcomes the cooperation the Government of Rwanda has extended to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda and the Special Rapporteur.

teur and the acceptance by the Government of Rwanda of the deployment of human rights field officers throughout the country;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps to ensure adequate financial and human resources and logistical support for the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda, taking into account the need to deploy a sufficient number of human rights field officers and the need for programmes of technical assistance and advisory services for the Government of Rwanda and Rwandan human rights organizations, especially in the field of the administration of justice;

23. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to report on the activities of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 50/200

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.3) without vote, 14 December (meeting 58); 42-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.67), orally revised; agenda item 112 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 55, 58; plenary 99.

South Africa

On 3 February,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission decided not to hold a general debate on the final report⁽¹⁸⁾ of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa.

On 17 February,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission took note with appreciation of the final report of the Ad Hoc Working Group, which was established by the Commission in 1967,⁽²⁰⁾ and expressed its appreciation to the Group for the important role it had played in support of the efforts to eliminate apartheid in South Africa and to establish a non-racial and democratic society. The Commission considered that the Group's mandate had been successfully concluded and decided to terminate it as of 17 February. It decided to remove from its agenda, as from its 1996 session, the item "Violations of human rights in southern Africa: report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts".

Transition to democracy

Commission action. On 3 February,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission decided not to hold a general debate on the final report⁽²¹⁾ of the Special Rapporteur to monitor the transition to democracy in South Africa, Judith Sefi Attah (Nigeria).

On 17 February,⁽²²⁾ the Commission, taking note of the Special Rapporteur's final report, expressed its appreciation to her for monitoring the transition to democracy in South Africa and for the important role she had played in support of the efforts to eliminate apartheid and to establish a non-racial society. It considered that the Special Rapporteur's mandate had been successfully concluded and terminated it as at 17 February. The Commission removed from its agenda, as from its 1996 session, the item "Monitoring and assisting the transition to democracy in South Africa".

Subcommission action. On 4 August,⁽²³⁾ the Subcommission took note of the Special Rapporteur's final report and decided not to hold a general debate on the item.

On 18 August,⁽²⁴⁾ the Subcommission expressed its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for the important role she had played in support of the efforts to eliminate apartheid and to establish a non-racial society. It considered that her mandate had been successfully concluded and decided to remove the item from its agenda as from its 1996 session.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1995,⁽²⁵⁾ there were 99 parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973⁽²⁶⁾ and entered into force in 1976.⁽²⁷⁾ In 1995, there were no new parties to the Convention. In his annual report to the General Assembly on its status,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General provided a list of States that had signed, ratified, acceded or succeeded to it as at 31 August.

The Assembly, by decision 50/441 of 21 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three—established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions and in 1995 composed of Ecuador, the Philippines and Romania—held its sixteenth session in Geneva from 23 to 27 January.⁽²⁹⁾

The Group noted with satisfaction that, with the entry into force in 1994⁽³⁰⁾ of South Africa's first non-racial and democratic Constitution and the holding of free elections, the system of apartheid had ended. As at 30 June 1994, it noted, 213 reports were overdue. Since its last session held in 1993,⁽³¹⁾ no reports had been submitted under article VII of the Convention. In view of these and other developments, the Group recommended that the Commission suspend for the time being further meetings of the Group.

Commission action. On 3 February,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission decided not to hold a general debate on the report of the Group of Three.

On 17 February,⁽³²⁾ the Commission, taking note of the Group's report, decided to suspend its meetings as at 17 February and to remove from its own 1997 agenda the item "Implementation of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid".

Sudan

ported⁽³³⁾ on human rights violations in northern Sudan, including violations of freedom of conscience, freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly, the rights of the child, the rights of women, and freedom of movement and residence. He discussed cases of slavery, servitude, slave trade, forced labour and similar practices and incidents relating to the distribution of relief in which all parties to the conflict bore responsibility and which constituted grave violations of international humanitarian law. He drew attention to specific cases of human rights violations occurring in central and eastern Sudan.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the human rights situation in the Sudan had deteriorated owing to intensified and regular bombardment of civilians by the Government. Human rights violations by government agents, as well as by members of factions of the Sudan People's Liberation Army, continued to take place, including extrajudicial killings, systematic torture and widespread arbitrary arrest of suspected opponents. The Special Rapporteur considered the situation of women and children to be alarming.

He suggested to the Commission on Human Rights that he be authorized to consult with the Secretary-General on the placement of monitors in locations which would facilitate information flow and assessment and help the independent verification of reports on the human rights situation. He recommended that the Commission urge all parties to the conflict to begin negotiations on enlarging the tranquillity corridors so as to decrease the flow of Sudanese refugees to neighbouring countries. The Special Rapporteur also recommended that the Government abide by its human rights obligations under international law; cease immediately the aerial bombardment of civilians; ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;⁽³⁴⁾ accede to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;⁽³⁵⁾ sign the first Optional Protocol to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,⁽³⁶⁾ and Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims, adopted in 1977;⁽³⁷⁾ ensure proper training for its security and police forces, army, paramilitary and civil defence groups; revise its policy concerning children living or working in the street; grant free access to regional and international humanitarian and human rights organizations; carry out investigations into human rights violations in the Nuba Mountains and towns of southern Sudan; and address the problem of displaced persons. The Special Rapporteur proposed that the parties to the conflict be urged to agree on a cease-fire and called on them to prevent violence by their agents against civilians and to apply strictly the agreements reached with Operation Lifeline Sudan (see PART FOUR, Chapter III) regarding unimpeded delivery of relief.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 33 to 7, with 10 abstentions, the Commission on 8 March,⁽³⁸⁾ expressing its deep concern at the serious human rights violations in the Sudan, urged the Government to respect human rights and called on all parties to the hostilities to cooperate to ensure such respect. It expressed outrage at the use of military force to disrupt or attack relief efforts and called for an end to such practices and for those responsible to be brought to justice. The Commission also called on the Government to allow the judiciary and other legal institutions to exercise their functions free from government restrictions and interference; to comply with applicable international human rights instruments and to bring its national legislation into accordance with the instruments to which the Sudan was a party; to work actively for the eradication of practices that were directed against and violated the human rights of women and girls; to cease immediately the aerial bombardment of civilian targets; and to ensure a thorough investigation by the independent judicial inquiry commission of the killings of Sudanese employees of foreign relief organizations, to bring to justice those responsible and to provide just compensation to the victims' families. The Commission called on the Government and all parties to permit international agencies, humanitarian organizations and donor Governments to deliver humanitarian assistance and to cooperate with the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs and Operation Lifeline Sudan. It also called on the parties to respect the provisions of international humanitarian law, including the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims and the Additional Protocols thereto,⁽³⁷⁾ to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population and to protect civilians from violations.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1995 and to the Commission in 1996. It called on the Sudan to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur and to ensure that he had free and unlimited access to any person with whom he wished to meet, with no threats or reprisals. The Commission recommended that the Special Rapporteur begin consultations with the Secretary-General on modalities leading to the placement of monitors.

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/287.

Situation of human rights in the Sudan

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/77 of 8 March 1995, approved the Commission's decision to extend for an additional year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, also approved its request to him to report his findings and recommendations to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session and to the Commission at its fifty-second session, and further approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all necessary assistance in the discharge of his mandate.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/287

33-8-10 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 51, 52.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bahamas, Belarus, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Denmark, France, Gabon, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, South Africa, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

Against: China, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Sudan.

Abstaining: Bhutan, Egypt, Ghana, Malaysia, Nigeria, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Senegal, Thailand, United Republic of Tanzania.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report⁽³⁹⁾ of the Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur carried out a fact-finding mission to Kenya, Uganda and Eritrea between 30 July and 15 August. He reported no response from the Government of the Sudan to his request of 28 July to visit the country.

The Special Rapporteur received information regarding extrajudicial killings and summary executions, enforced or involuntary disappearances, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, arbitrary arrest and detention, slavery, servitude, slave trade, forced labour and similar practices. Also reported were violations of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly and freedom of movement and residence. Concerning violations and abuses against children and women, the Special Rapporteur stated that no improvement had taken place. He described abuses by parties to the conflict in southern Sudan, other than the Government.

The Special Rapporteur noted with regret that he could not report any improvement of the human rights situation in the Sudan between January and October. To the contrary, he stated, information from the Nuba Mountains indicated that atrocities on the indigenous population there had intensified. He recommended that the Government abide by its human rights obligations under international law; cease aerial bombardments of civilians; release detainees and prisoners, cease acts of torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment and close secret detention centres; ensure training for its security and police forces, army, paramilitary or civil defence groups; stop rounding up children from the streets in major towns under its control, release all children being held against their will, make efforts to reunite them with their families and ensure decent living conditions for orphans; grant free access to regional and international humanitarian and human rights organizations; carry out investigations into human rights violations in the Nuba Mountains and towns in the south; agree on a cease-fire with other parties to the conflict; and address the problem of displaced persons. The Special Rapporteur recommended providing human rights monitors at the earliest possible date.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/197.

Situation of human rights in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to comply with the obligations laid down in the various instruments in this field,

Recalling the obligation by all parties to respect international humanitarian law,

Recalling also its resolution 49/198 of 23 December 1994, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/77 of 8 March 1995,

Noting with deep concern reports of grave human rights violations in the Sudan, particularly summary executions, detentions without trial, forced displacement of persons and torture, as described in reports submitted to the Commission on Human Rights by the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and the Special Rapporteur on the question of religious intolerance,

Welcoming the third and latest interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, and noting with concern the continuing violations of human rights in the Sudan,

Concerned about continuing indiscriminate and deliberate aerial bombardments by the Government of the Sudan of civilian targets in southern Sudan, in clear violation of international humanitarian law, which have added to the suffering of the civilian population and resulted in casualties to civilians, including relief workers,

Deeply concerned that access by the civilian population to humanitarian assistance continues to be impeded, which represents a threat to human life and constitutes an offence to human dignity,

Expressing the hope that the continuing dialogue between the Government of the Sudan and other parties and donor Governments, Operation Lifeline Sudan and international private voluntary agencies will result in improved cooperation for the delivery of humanitarian assistance to all persons in need,

Alarmed by the large number of internally displaced persons and victims of discrimination in the Sudan, including members of ethnic minorities who have been forcibly displaced in violation of their human rights and who are in need of relief assistance and protection,

Alarmed also by the mass exodus of refugees into neighbouring countries and conscious of the burden that this places on those countries, but expressing its appreciation for the efforts of host countries and of the international community to assist the refugees,

Deeply concerned by the conclusion of the Special Rapporteur, also stated in his previous reports, that grave and widespread violations of human rights by government agents, as well as abuses by members of parties to the conflict in southern Sudan other than the Government of the Sudan, continue to take place, including extrajudicial killings, enforced or involuntary disappearances, abductions, slavery, systematic torture and widespread arbitrary arrests of suspected political opponents,

Alarmed further by the continuing failure of the Sudanese authorities to investigate human rights violations and abuses brought to their attention over the past years,

Gravely alarmed that since February 1994 there have been increasing reports from a wide variety of sources indicating that atrocities by the Government of the Sudan against the local population in the area of the Nuba Mountains have intensified,

Concerned by reports of religious persecution in areas of the conflict zone controlled by the Government of the Sudan and of discrimination based upon religion in the provision of shelter and relief,

Deeply concerned by the Special Rapporteur's conclusion that the abduction of persons, mainly women and children, belonging to ethnic and religious minorities from southern Sudan, the Nuba Mountains and the Ingessana Hills area, and their subjection to the slave trade, servitude and forced labour are taking place with the knowledge of the Government of the Sudan,

Also deeply concerned about the problem of unaccompanied minors and the use of children as soldiers by all parties despite repeated calls from the international community to put an end to this practice, as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur,

Recognizing the fact that the Sudan has been hosting large numbers of refugees from several neighbouring countries over the past three decades,

Welcoming the release of some of the political prisoners by the Government of the Sudan in August 1995, and noting its recent announcement of open, free and fair elections in 1996,

Also welcoming the efforts of the United Nations and other humanitarian organizations to provide humanitarian relief to those Sudanese in need,

Further welcoming the dialogues and contacts between non-governmental organizations and the religious minorities in the Sudan, aimed at developing a more balanced relationship between the Government of the Sudan and the religious minority groups,

1. Expresses deep concern at the serious, widespread and continuing human rights violations in the Sudan, including extrajudicial killings and summary executions; detentions without due process; forced displacement of persons; enforced or involuntary disappearances; torture and other forms of cruel and unusual punishment; slavery, practices similar to slavery and forced labour; and denial of the freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly;

2. Urges the Government of the Sudan to investigate without delay the cases of slavery, servitude, slave trade, forced labour and similar practices brought to its attention and to take all appropriate measures to put an immediate end to these practices;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur;

4. Welcomes the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur that human rights monitors be placed at the earliest possible date in such locations as will facilitate improved information flow and assessment and independent verification of reports on the situation of human rights in the Sudan;

5. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to comply with applicable international human rights instruments to which the Sudan is a party, in particular the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Slavery Convention, as amended, and the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, to implement those instruments to which it is a party and to ensure that all individuals in its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including members of all religious and ethnic groups, enjoy fully the rights recognized in those instruments;

6. Urges the Government of the Sudan to cease immediately all aerial attacks on civilian targets and other attacks that are in violation of international humanitarian law;

7. Calls upon parties to the hostilities to respect fully the applicable provisions of international humanitarian law, including article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population and to protect all civilians, including women, children and members of ethnic and religious minorities, from violations, including forcible displacement, arbitrary detention, ill-treatment, torture and summary executions, and deplores the consequences for innocent civilians of the use of land-mines by government and rebel forces alike;

8. Again calls upon the Government of the Sudan and all parties to permit international agencies, humanitarian organizations and donor Governments to deliver humanitarian assistance to the civilian population and to cooperate with the initiatives of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and United Nations agencies working in the field, in particular Operation Lifeline Sudan, to deliver humanitarian assistance to all persons in need;

9. Reiterates its call upon the Government of the Sudan to ensure a full, thorough and prompt investigation by an independent judicial inquiry commission of the killings of Sudanese nationals employed by foreign relief organizations and foreign Governments;

10. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for an additional year;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance in the discharge of his mandate;

12. Deplores the continuing refusal of the Government of the Sudan to cooperate in any manner with the Special Rapporteur and the unacceptable threats against his person;

13. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to extend its full and unreserved cooperation to the Special Rapporteur and to assist him in the ongoing discharge of his mandate and, to this end, to take all necessary steps to ensure that the Special Rapporteur has free and unlimited access to any person in the Sudan with whom he wishes to meet, with no threats or reprisals;

14. Invites the Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights on the questions of religious intolerance and freedom of expression to consult with the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Sudan and to consider and report on the situation in the Sudan, and calls upon the Government of the Sudan to extend to them its full cooperation, including inviting them to visit the Sudan;

15. Recommends the continued monitoring of the serious human rights situation in the Sudan and of the regional efforts to end the hostilities and human suffering in the south, and invites the Commission on Human Rights, at its fifty-second session, to give urgent attention to the situation of human rights in the Sudan;

16. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-first session.

Togo

Report of the Secretary-General. In February, the Secretary-General described action taken by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and reviewed action taken by special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission and treaty mechanisms in respect of Togo.⁽⁴⁰⁾ Information received from the Government of Togo was reproduced concerning national reconciliation, its obligation to submit periodic reports under the international human rights instruments to which Togo was a party and the use of technical assistance through the programme of advisory services of the Centre for Human Rights. NGOs brought information to the Secretary-General's attention regarding the overall situation in Togo in 1994, human rights violations by the armed forces, violations of the right to life and to physical integrity, and violations of freedom of expression and press freedom.

Commission action. On 3 March,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Commission, urging the authorities in Togo to continue to improve the human rights situation, called on them to comply with their obligations under the international human rights instruments to which Togo was a party.

(See PART THREE, Chapter I, for Commission action on advisory services in Togo.)

Zaire

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In his first report,⁽⁴²⁾ Special Rapporteur Roberto Garretón (Chile), appointed in 1994,⁽⁴³⁾ discussed his mandate, described his activities, which included a visit to Zaire in 1994, and presented general background information on Zaire. He reviewed the political regime in the country, the Government's legislative, judiciary and executive branches, the armed forces, security forces and police, and the impunity enjoyed by the security services. The Special Rapporteur described ethnic conflicts in Northern Kivu, the situation of Rwandese refugees in Kivu and regional conflicts in the Shaba (Katanga) region. Allegations of human rights violations involved the rights to life, to security, to physical and mental integrity and not to be subjected to torture, to liberty of person, to freedom of movement, to a fair trial, to freedom of assembly, to freedom of association, and to freedom of opinion and expression. Violations of economic, social and cultural rights dealt with the rights to work, to housing, to public health and sanitation and to education.

social and economic disintegration and that the role of women was circumscribed by a number of ancient traditions that relegated them to a domestic role. He recommended that the High Commissioner for Human Rights send two human rights specialists to monitor the human rights situation in Zaire and to gather information on allegations of violations, follow up on complaints and visit places of detention. The specialists would also advise governmental authorities and NGOs on measures to strengthen institutions for the protection and advancement of human rights. He recommended that the authorities of Zaire: establish control over the State security apparatus; adopt a language of pacification; prevent the armed forces from conducting repressive or public order function; enact laws to regulate the electoral process; ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;⁽³⁴⁾ strengthen the judiciary through training; cooperate with UN mechanisms for human rights protection; and offer to host a subregional meeting of the Committee on the Rights of the Child which could consider the situation of children. He made further recommendations for action by NGOs and the international community.

Commission action. On 8 March,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Commission deplored the continuing serious violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Zaire, noted with concern that the army and security forces continued to use force against civilians and enjoyed impunity, and condemned discriminatory measures affecting persons belonging to minority groups. It called on the Government to reinforce the judiciary and its independence and also called for continued and broadened efforts to assure full respect for the right to freedom of opinion and expression, in particular for all mass media, as well as freedom of association, assembly and peaceful demonstration. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to consider the Special Rapporteur's recommendation to send, in consultation with the Government, two human rights experts to monitor the human rights situation and to give advice to governmental authorities and NGOs.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to report in 1996. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The Economic and Social Council approved these actions by decision 1995/280 of 25 July.

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In a January report,⁽¹⁾ Special Rapporteur Felix Ermacora (Austria) outlined events that had taken place in Afghanistan since his report to the General Assembly in 1994⁽²⁾ and examined the human rights situation there, based on his 1994 visit to Pakistan (16-17 December) and Afghanistan (18-22 December).

The Special Rapporteur noted that the human rights situation continued to be conditioned by the absence of an effective central government and depended on the intensity of the power struggle between the rival groups which was conducted without due respect for international law and humanitarian law. Hundreds of secret places of detention continued to operate and the judicial system was not unified. The enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights was maintained at a minimum level. The conflict between the armed groups had deprived Afghans of the full exercise of their right to self-determination; no progress had been made on the creation of a national army or the drafting of an Islamic constitution.

The Special Rapporteur recommended visits to prisons by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC); efforts by the international community to collect illegally held weapons; drafting an Islamic constitution; establishing a constitutional council to guarantee the respect of human rights; after a cease-fire in Kabul, requesting the international community to plan the reconstruction of the parts of Kabul which had been destroyed; requesting the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to contribute to reconstructing the Kabul Museum and to establishing the education system in the provinces; requesting the World Health Organization (WHO) to provide assistance to Bamyan and Badakhshan provinces; requesting international agencies to assist with the problem of malnourished children; treating Afghan refugees living in other countries in conformity with the 1988 Geneva Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation relating to Afghanistan;⁽³⁾ respecting the amnesty decree proclaimed in 1992;⁽⁴⁾ and translating his report into the Dari and Pashtu languages.

Commission action. On 8 March,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission urged the Afghan parties to intensify efforts to achieve a comprehensive political solution, establish a democratic government and respect the humanitarian rules set out in the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols of 1977.⁽⁶⁾ It called on them to work with the UN Special Mission to Afghanistan, established in 1993,⁽⁷⁾ and invited the mission and the Special Rapporteur to exchange information and to consult and cooperate with each other. The Commission further called on the Afghan parties to ensure respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of women. It called for the unconditional and simultaneous release of all prisoners of war, including former Soviet prisoners, for tracing the many Afghans still missing and for the abolition of prisons run by political parties and armed groups. The Commission called on the authorities in Afghanistan to investigate the fate of disappeared persons, apply amnesty decrees equally to all detainees, reduce the period during which prisoners awaited trial, treat all prisoners in accordance with the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners⁽⁸⁾ and apply to all suspected or convicted persons the relevant articles of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁽⁹⁾ It urged them to provide effective remedies to victims of grave human rights violations and to continue to extend to the Special Rapporteur and the Commission their full cooperation.

The Commission asked Member States and the international community to respond positively to the Secretary-General's appeal for financial support for the rehabilitation of Afghanistan, including support for activities such as mine detection and clearance and repatriation projects undertaken by UNHCR (see PART FOUR, Chapter XII), the UN Coordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes (see PART FOUR, Chapter III) and other UN agencies or humanitarian NGOs. It urged all parties to ensure the safety of personnel of humanitarian organizations and media representatives.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 1995 and to the Commission in 1996. The Secretary-General was asked to give him all necessary assistance. By decision 1995/285 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council approved those actions.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report⁽¹⁰⁾ on the human rights situation in Afghanistan, submitted by Special Rapporteur Choong-Hyun Paik (Republic of Korea), who was appointed following the death of Mr. Ermacora in February.

The Special Rapporteur visited Afghanistan and Pakistan in August. He stated that despite sporadic disturbances, peace was gradually gaining ground in Kabul and other areas controlled by local authorities. However, murders, disappearances and violations of the right to life and the right to be free from torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment persisted, as did a lack of resources needed to provide safe water, food and sanitation, and the disruption of general health services country-wide. The lack of a central government posed extreme difficulty in redressing human rights violations and the collapse of an impartial judicial system prevented the administration of justice. The cultural heritage of Afghan society was exposed to wanton destruction. The Special Rapporteur made recommendations for peace-building, the provision of humanitarian assistance, rebuilding the Afghan society and the protection of vulnerable populations and of cultural property.

(For details on the political situation in Afghanistan, see PART TWO, Chapter IV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/189.

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, as well as the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the decisions of the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note in particular of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/74 of 8 March 1995, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of its Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan for one year and requested him to consider submitting a report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session, and of Economic and Social Council decision 1995/285 of 25 July 1995, in which the Council approved the Commission's decision,

Noting that armed confrontation persists in certain parts of the territory of Afghanistan,

Aware that peace and security in Afghanistan are conducive to the full restoration of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, the voluntary return of refugees to their homeland in safety and dignity, the clearance of minefields in many parts of the country and the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Afghanistan,

Deeply concerned at reports of human rights abuses and violations of humanitarian law and human rights, including the rights to life, liberty and security of person and to freedom of opinion, expression and association,

Concerned in particular at reports of abuses and violations of the human rights of women, including acts of violence and denial of access to primary and basic education, training and employment, affecting their effective participation in political and cultural life throughout the country,

Concerned that a unified judicial system cannot be established throughout the country under the prevailing circumstances,

Commending the activities carried out for the welfare of the Afghan people by various agencies and programmes of the United Nations and by the International Committee of the Red Cross and other humanitarian organizations,

Noting with satisfaction that the voluntary repatriation of the Afghan refugees has resumed,

Taking note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein and of the translation of previous reports into the Dari and Pashtu languages,

1. Welcomes the cooperation that the Government and local authorities in Afghanistan have extended to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and to humanitarian agencies;

2. Urges all the Afghan parties to work with the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan with a view to achieving a comprehensive political solution leading to the cessation of armed confrontation and the eventual establishment of a democratic Government elected through free and fair elections based on the right to self-determination of the people of Afghanistan;

3. Recognizes that the promotion and protection of human rights should be an essential element in the achievement of a comprehensive solution to the crisis in Afghanistan, and therefore invites the Special Mission and the Special Rapporteur to exchange relevant information and to consult and cooperate with each other;

4. Also urges all the Afghan parties to respect accepted humanitarian rules and all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the rights of women and children, and calls upon the Afghan authorities to take measures to ensure the effective participation of women in social, political and cultural life throughout the country;

5. Calls for the unconditional and simultaneous release of all prisoners of war, wherever they may be held, including former Soviet prisoners of war, and for the tracing of the many Afghans still missing as a result of the war;

6. Calls upon the Afghan authorities to investigate thoroughly the fate of those persons who have disappeared during the conflict, to apply the amnesty decree issued in 1992 by the Transitional Islamic State of Afghanistan in a strictly non-discriminatory manner, to reduce the period during which prisoners await trial and to treat all suspected, convicted or detained persons according to relevant international instruments;

7. Urges the Afghan authorities to provide sufficient and effective remedies to the victims of grave violations of human rights and accepted humanitarian rules and to bring their perpetrators to trial in accordance with internationally accepted standards;

8. Appeals to Member States and to the international community to continue to provide adequate humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan and to the Afghan refugees in the neighbouring countries, pending their voluntary repatriation according to relevant international instruments, in particular through the support of activities such as mine detection and clearance and repatriation projects undertaken by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Coordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan as well as by United Nations agencies or non-governmental humanitarian organizations;

9. Strongly urges all parties to the conflict to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of all personnel of humanitarian organizations and representatives of the media in Afghanistan;

10. Invites the United Nations to offer, upon the request of the Afghan authorities and with due regard for Afghan tradition, advisory services and technical assistance concerning the drafting of a constitution, which should embody internationally accepted human rights principles, and the holding of direct elections;

11. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to study, with the contribution of its competent committees, appropriate ways and means to restore the Afghan system of education and the Afghan cultural heritage, in particular the restoration of the Kabul Museum;

12. Urges the Afghan authorities to continue to extend their full cooperation to the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

14. Decides to keep the situation of human rights in Afghanistan under consideration at its fifty-first session, in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 50/189

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.3) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Chairman (A/C.3/50/L.41), orally revised; agenda item 112 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-52, 54; plenary 99.

Cambodia

The Commission on Human Rights expressed concern about the protection of human rights in Cambodia (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

China

On 7 March, the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 21 against to 20 in favour, with 12 abstentions, rejected a draft concerning the human rights situation in China.⁽¹¹⁾

East Timor

Report of the Secretary-General. In a January report,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General updated his good-offices activities aimed at achieving a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement of the question of East Timor. He also described action taken by the Special Rapporteurs on the question of torture,⁽¹³⁾ and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions,⁽¹⁴⁾ and the Working Groups on Arbitrary Detention and on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances in 1994.⁽¹⁵⁾ Annexed to the report was information received from the Government of Indonesia regarding the trials surrounding the November 1991 incidents of violence at Dili, which resulted in loss of life, injuries and disappearances among civilians,⁽¹⁶⁾ and a further incident that occurred in 1994 in East Dili involving demonstrations and arrests (see also PART ONE, Chapter III).

Commission action. On 1 March, the Commission adopted by consensus a statement concerning the human rights situation in East Timor, by which, among other things, it asked the Secretary-General to keep it informed of the situation.⁽¹⁷⁾

Iran

Report of the Special Representative. In January, Special Representative Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report⁽¹⁸⁾ on the human rights situation in Iran. He had received information on alleged incidents and cases concerning the right to life; enforced or involuntary disappearances; the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the administration of justice; the excessive use of force by security forces; freedom of expression and opinion and the press; freedom of religion and the Baha'i community; the situation of women; freedom of association; political rights; the situation of refugees; and two incidents of alleged military aggression by Iran against Iraq in November 1994.⁽¹⁹⁾ He discussed the murders of three Protestant ministers and an attack in Mashhad where 5 kilograms of explosives were set off in the prayer halls of the tomb of Imam Reza, one of the holiest sanctuaries and pilgrimage sites, leaving 26 people dead and 170 wounded.

The Special Representative concluded that the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Iran should remain under international scrutiny. He recommended, among other things, that Iran abide by the terms of a 1991 agreement concluded with ICRC concerning visits to prisons and prisoners;⁽²⁰⁾ ensure due process of law; end discrimination against the Baha'is and Protestants; ensure freedom of opinion and expression and the rights of assembly and association; and solicit the cooperation of UN organs and humanitarian organizations in sending observers to politically sensitive trials involving police investigation and criminal prosecution.

Commission action. On 8 March,⁽²¹⁾ by a roll-call vote of 28 to 8, with 17 abstentions, the Commission, expressing concern at continuing reports of human rights violations in Iran, urged Iran to refrain from activities such as those cited in the report of the Special Representative and to intensify its efforts to investigate and rectify the human rights issues raised by him. It also urged Iran to abide by international human rights instruments to which it was a party and to investigate the assassination of the three Christian ministers mentioned in the Special Representative's report. The Commission called on Iran to implement existing agreements with international humanitarian organizations and to cooperate with the Special Representative and allow him to revisit the country. The Commission extended the Special Representative's mandate for another year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1995 and to the Commission in 1996.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/279 in July.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/68 of 8 March 1995, approved the Commission's decision to extend for a further year the mandate of the Special Representative on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, as contained in Commission resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, also approved the Commission's request to the Special Representative to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, and to report to the Commission at its fifty-second session, and further approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/279

28-8-15 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 51, 52.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bahamas, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: China, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Pakistan, Sudan.

Abstaining: Belarus, Bhutan, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, Nigeria, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Uganda, Ukraine, United Republic of Tanzania, Zimbabwe.

Subcommission action. On 24 August,⁽²²⁾ the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 13 votes to 7, with 2 abstentions, condemned the human rights violations in Iran and asked the Government to cease any involvement in or toleration of murder and State-sponsored terrorism against Iranians living abroad and nationals of other States. It also asked the Government to withdraw its support for and cease condoning repeated threats to the lives of persons of whose opinions, writings or publications it disapproved. The Subcommission called on Iran to cooperate with the judicial authorities in countries which were investigating incidents of international terrorism. It asked the Secretary-General to inform it of relevant reports and UN measures to prevent human rights violations in Iran, particularly those concerning the Kurds, the Arab minority and the Baha'i and Christian communities.

Interim report of the Special Representative. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the interim report⁽²³⁾ on the human rights situation in Iran, prepared by Special Representative Maurice Danby Copithorne (Canada), who replaced Mr. Galindo Pohl following his resignation in March. Mr. Copithorne stated that in September he had requested a visit to Iran, but had not received a reply. He noted that he was not in a position to discuss questions of substance but expected to report to the Commission in 1996 and hoped that report would include information obtained from a visit to the country.

The report contained letters of 8 and 23 May and 10 June from Iran to the Special Representative presenting Iran's replies to his allegations of human rights violations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/188.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/121 of 20 December 1993, in particular section I, paragraph 1, in which the World Conference on Human Rights reaffirmed, inter alia, that human rights and fundamental freedoms were the birthright of all human beings and that their protection and promotion was the first responsibility of Governments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have a duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, in which the Commission requested its Chairman to appoint a special representative to make a thorough study of the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, based on such information as the special representative might deem relevant, including comments and material provided by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Noting the appointment by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights of Mr. Maurice Danby Copithorne as Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, and paying tribute to his predecessor Mr. Reynaldo Galindo Pohl,

Recalling its previous resolutions expressing concern at the violations of human rights by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the most recent, resolution 49/202 of 23 December 1994, and the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, including the most recent, resolution 1995/68 of 8 March 1995, and those of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, including the most recent, resolution 1995/18 of 24 August 1995,

Reaffirming that Governments are accountable for assassinations and attacks by their agents against persons in the territory of another State, as well as for the incitement, approval or wilful condoning of such acts,

Noting that in the view of the Special Representative the significant number of communications received by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat for the attention of the Special Representative and the important concerns reflected therein will need careful scrutiny,

Welcoming the announcement by the Special Representative that he has been invited to visit the Islamic Republic of Iran and the high priority given by the Special Representative to visiting the country,

Noting the stated readiness of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to invite the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on freedom of expression to visit the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Noting also the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Noting further that the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in its resolution 1995/18, condemned the flagrant violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Taking note of the interim report of the Special Representative of 20 October 1995, and his intention to present a substantive report to the Commission on Human Rights,

Taking into account the reports of the former Special Representative, including his report of 16 January 1995,

Considering that continued international scrutiny of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Islamic Republic of Iran is warranted and that the subject should remain on the agenda of the General Assembly.

1. Expresses its concern at violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, in particular the high number of executions, cases of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the failure to meet international standards with regard to the administration of justice, the absence of guarantees of due process of law, the discriminatory treatment of minorities by reason of their religious beliefs, notably the Baha'is, whose existence as a viable religious community in the Islamic Republic of Iran is threatened, lack of adequate protection for the Christian minorities, some members of which have been the target of intimidation and assassinations, excessive force in suppressing demonstrations, restrictions on the freedom of expression, thought, opinion and the press and widespread discrimination against women;

2. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, as a State party to the International Covenants on Human Rights, to abide by its obligations freely undertaken under the Covenants and under other international instruments on human rights and to ensure that all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including religious groups, enjoy the rights recognized in those instruments;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to implement existing agreements with international humanitarian organizations;

4. Also calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to take the necessary steps so that the visit of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran can take place as soon as possible and without conditions;

5. Expresses its grave concern that there are continuing threats to the life of Mr. Salman Rushdie, as well as to individuals associated with his work, which appear to have the support of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran;

6. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to refrain from activities against members of the Iranian opposition living abroad and to cooperate wholeheartedly with the authorities of other countries in investigating and punishing offences reported by them;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative to enable him to discharge his mandate fully;

8. Decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, during its fifty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions", on the basis of the report of the Special Representative and in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Iraq

Report of the Special Rapporteur (February).

In a February report,⁽²⁴⁾ Special Rapporteur Max van der Stoep (Netherlands) described his activities and reported on the human rights situation in Iraq. He stated that the politico-legal structures of Iraq, in which power was concentrated in extremely few hands, was the essential cause of human rights violations. He concluded that human rights violations were inevitable, since guarantees for protection were absent and the scope for abuse of power was enormous. He referred to allegations of violations he had received regarding summary or arbitrary execution; arbitrary arrest and detention; enforced or involuntary disappearances; freedom of opinion, expression and association; freedom of movement; and the right to food and health care. He pointed out that minority protection in the form of cultural and educational rights was generally not accorded. He presented examples of repressive decrees issued by the Revolution Command Council, which had the power to override the Provisional Constitution at any time and without judicial review. He also described the situation of refugees.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that Iraq: bring the activities of its security services into conformity with the standards of international law; abrogate laws granting impunity to specified forces or persons killing or injuring individuals for any purpose beyond the administration of justice; set up a commission on disappearances and cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances; stop the practices of torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment; release detainees; abrogate laws and abolish policies implementing punishments imposed on persons for the alleged crimes of family members; restore the independence of the judiciary; facilitate the enjoyment of the freedoms of opinion, expression and association; remove restrictions relating to the entry and exit of citizens to and from the country; review its citizenship law; abrogate discriminatory laws regarding the enjoyment of property; end its internal economic embargoes; take advantage of the food-for-oil formula to purchase food and medical supplies; abrogate discriminatory laws against women; eliminate the death penalty for minors; ensure the recognition and enjoyment of minority rights; cease periodic shelling of Kurdish agricultural lands; cease its military activities against the Marsh Arab population; end its interference in the religious activities of the Shiah community and compensate it for damages; and agree to the stationing of human rights monitors throughout the country.

The report also contained selected decrees issued by Saddam Hussein, Chairman of the Revolution Command Council.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 21 abstentions, the Commission on 8 March⁽²⁵⁾ expressed strong condemnation of massive human rights violations by Iraq, in particular: summary and arbitrary executions; systematic torture; decrees prescribing cruel and unusual punishment; enforced or involuntary disappearances; suppression of freedom of thought, expression and association; and lack of responsibility concerning economic and social rights. It called on Iraq to resolve cases of disappearances of Kuwaitis and nationals of other States by providing detailed information on persons deported from or arrested in Kuwait between 2 August 1990 and 26 February 1991 and on those who were executed or died in detention during or after that period, as well as on the location of their graves. It also called on Iraq to release detained Kuwaitis and nationals of other States, improve cooperation with humanitarian organizations and compensate families of persons who died while in the custody of Iraqi authorities. It again called on Iraq, as a State party to the International Covenants on Human Rights,⁽²⁶⁾ to abide by its obligations under them. Demanding that the Government restore the independence of the judiciary and abrogate all laws granting impunity to specified forces or persons killing or injuring individuals for any purpose beyond the administration of justice, the Commission urged Iraq bring the action of its security apparatus into line with the standards of international law. It further urged the Government to release all persons arbitrarily arrested and detained and to set up an independent commission of inquiry to look into the fate of tens of thousands of disappeared persons.

The Commission demanded that Iraq ensure the recognition and enjoyment of human rights of persons belonging to minorities; abrogate decrees prescribing cruel and unusual punishments, and cease repressive practices aimed at the Iraqi Kurds. Regretting Iraq's failure to provide satisfactory replies concerning human rights violations brought to the attention of the Special Rapporteur, the Commission called on Iraq to reply without delay to enable him to formulate recommendations to improve the human rights situation. It urged Iraq to cooperate with him, notably during his next visit.

The Commission extended for one year the Special Rapporteur's mandate. It asked him to report to the Commission periodically, to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1995 and to report to the Commission in 1996. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to take measures to send monitors to verify reports on the human rights situation, to provide funding to do so and to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance he needed. On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/286, approved those actions.

Subcommission action. By a secret ballot of 15 votes to 5, with 4 abstentions, the Subcommission on 18 August⁽²⁷⁾ strongly condemned the human rights violations by the Government of Iraq and requested it to abide by various Security Council resolutions, particularly resolution 986(1995), which would permit it to sell some of its oil to meet the health and food needs of its people (see PART TWO, Chapter IV). It asked the Special Rapporteur to visit the border and the marshlands and to report on the situation in those areas to the General Assembly. It asked the Secretary-General to call on the Government to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur.

Also on 18 August,⁽²⁸⁾ the Subcommission, expressing deep concern at the serious consequences that the embargo imposed on Iraq for the past five years was having on civilians, appealed to the international community to facilitate the supply of food and medicines.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur (September and November). In his first periodic report,⁽²⁹⁾ submitted in September, the Special Rapporteur stated that he had received comments on the significance of decrees of the Revolution Command Council and felt obliged to study them and submit the texts to the Commission together with an analysis of their importance. The decrees in question, Nos. 61 and 64, granted amnesty to specified categories of persons and were promulgated during the latter part of July 1995. Decree No. 61 remitted the remainder of the sentences of Iraqi prisoners and detainees, commuted death sentences to life imprisonment and pardoned persons liable to the penalty of amputation of the hand or the ear. Decree No. 64 granted a general amnesty to Iraqis living in or outside the country in respect of the penalties imposed on them following their conviction for political reasons. The texts of the decrees were annexed to the report. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the conditions set out in the decrees greatly reduced their value. Moreover, he stated, in the absence of great change in the legal and political order of Iraq, the decrees warranted no confidence.

In November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report⁽³⁰⁾ by the Special Rapporteur, in which he described two missions: to Kuwait (22-30 June), by two staff members of the UN Centre for Human Rights, to follow up on the situation of Kuwaitis and third-country nationals who had disappeared during the 1990/91 Iraqi occupation of Kuwait;⁽³¹⁾ and to Lebanon (24-30 July), also taken by two Centre staff members, to interview Iraqis who had recently arrived there.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that Iraq: abrogate decrees prescribing cruel and unusual punishment or treatment and abolish that practice; cooperate to discover the whereabouts or resolve the fate of the several hundred Kuwaitis and third-country nationals who disappeared under the 1990/91 Kuwaiti occupation; cooperate with the United Nations to organize a sale of oil to purchase humanitarian goods; and abrogate laws penalizing the free expression of competing views and ideas.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/191.

Situation of human rights in Iraq

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that Iraq is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights and to other international human rights instruments,

Recalling its resolution 49/203 of 23 December 1994, in which it expressed its strong condemnation of the massive violations of human rights of the gravest nature in Iraq,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1991/74 of 6 March 1991, by which the Commission requested its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to make a thorough study of the violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, based on all information the special rapporteur might deem relevant, including information provided by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and any comments and material provided by the Government of Iraq,

Recalling further the pertinent resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights condemning the flagrant violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, including its most recent, resolution 1995/76 of 8 March 1995, by which the Commission extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iraq for a further year and requested him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session and a final report to the Commission at its fifty-second session,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, in which the Council demanded an end to the repression of the Iraqi civilian population and insisted that Iraq cooperate with humanitarian organizations and ensure that the human and political rights of all Iraqi citizens were respected,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 706(1991) of 15 August 1991, 712(1991) of 19 September 1991 and 778(1992) of 2 October 1992,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, by which the Council authorized States to permit imports of Iraqi oil up to the amount of one billion United States dollars every ninety days, on a renewable basis, to be used to purchase essential food and medical supplies for humanitarian purposes,

Deeply concerned by the persisting massive and grave violations of human rights by the Government of Iraq, regarding which there are no signs of improvement, such as summary and arbitrary executions, the enactment and implementation of decrees prescribing cruel and inhuman punishments, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, arbitrary arrests and detentions, lack of due process, non-respect for the rule of law and the suppression of freedom of thought, expression and association, as well as the persistence of specific discrimination within the country as regards access to food and health care, which amounts to a violation of the economic and social rights of Iraqis,

Deeply disturbed by the observation by the Special Rapporteur that Iraqi armed forces have continued their attacks on the farming communities throughout the region adjoining northern Iraq and in the south of the country, resulting in the destruction of their crops and livestock,

Deeply disturbed also by reports about the climate of oppression and the dire economic and social situation in the south of Iraq,

Noting the responsibility of the Iraqi authorities with regard to persons missing and detained as a result of the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, and also noting that Iraq has recently renewed its participation in the Tripartite Commission established pursuant to the cease-fire agreement of 1991,

Deploping the refusal of the Government of Iraq to cooperate with the United Nations human rights mechanisms, in particular by receiving a return visit of the Special Rapporteur to Iraq and allowing the stationing of human rights monitors throughout Iraq pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report on the situation of human rights in Iraq submitted by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq and the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Expresses its strong condemnation of the massive and extremely grave violations of human rights for which the Government of Iraq is responsible, resulting in an all-pervasive order of repression and oppression which is sustained by broad-based discrimination and widespread terror;

3. Expresses its condemnation with regard to the violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular of:

(a) Summary and arbitrary executions, including political killings;

(b) The widespread routine practice of systematic torture in its most cruel forms;

(c) The enactment and implementation of decrees prescribing cruel and unusual punishment, namely mutilation, as a penalty for certain offences and the abuse and diversion of medical-care services for the purpose of such mutilations;

(d) Enforced or involuntary disappearances, routinely practised arbitrary arrests and detention and consistent and routine failure to respect due process and the rule of law;

(e) Suppression of freedom of thought, information, expression, association and assembly, through fear of arrest, imprisonment and other sanctions, including the death penalty, as well as harsh limitations to freedom of movement;

4. Urges the Government of Iraq to cooperate with the United Nations with a view to arranging for the export of oil in order to purchase essential food and medical supplies for humanitarian purposes, as authorized by the Security Council in its resolution 986(1995);

5. Strongly condemns the continued refusal of the Government of Iraq to take advantage of resources available to alleviate the suffering of the people, which includes long-term disabilities of millions of people and the death of many thousands more;

6. Again expresses its special alarm at the policies of the Government of Iraq, which discriminate between regions and prevent the equitable enjoyment of basic foodstuffs and medical supplies, and calls upon Iraq, which has sole responsibility in this regard, to take steps to cooperate with international humanitarian agencies in the provision of relief to those in need throughout Iraq;

7. Calls once again upon Iraq, as a State party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to abide by its obligations freely undertaken under the Covenants and under other international instruments on human rights, and particularly to respect and ensure the rights of all individuals, irrespective of their origin, within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction;

8. Demands that the Government of Iraq restore the independence of the judiciary and abrogate all laws granting impunity to specified forces or persons killing or injuring individuals for any purpose beyond the administration of justice under the rule of law as prescribed by international standards;

9. Also demands that the Government of Iraq abrogate any and all decrees that prescribe cruel and inhuman punishment or treatment and take every step necessary to ensure that the practice of torture and cruel and unusual punishments and treatment no longer occur;

10. Urges the Government of Iraq to abrogate all laws and procedures, including Revolution Command Council decree No. 840 of 4 November 1986, that penalize the free expression of competing views and ideas and to ensure that the genuine will of the people shall be the basis of authority in the State;

11. Also urges the Government of Iraq to improve its cooperation with the Tripartite Commission with a view to establishing the whereabouts or resolving the fate of the remaining several hundred missing persons and prisoners of war, Kuwaitis and third-country nationals victims of the illegal Iraqi occupation of Kuwait;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance in carrying out his mandate and to approve the allocation of sufficient human and material resources for the sending of human rights monitors to such locations as would facilitate improved information flow and assessment and help in the independent verification of reports on the situation of human rights in Iraq;

13. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in Iraq during its fifty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Myanmar

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In a January report,⁽³²⁾ Special Rapporteur Yozo Yokota (Japan) reported on the human rights situation in Myanmar and described his 1994 visit (7-16 November) to the country. He met with high-level government officials and leaders of political parties and visited governmental institutions and facilities. He also met with representatives of national organizations and institutions. He was disappointed that he was not allowed to meet with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, the 1991 Nobel Peace Prize Laureate detained without trial for the last six years.

The Special Rapporteur received information of alleged human rights violations relating to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions; arbitrary arrest and detention; torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; freedom of movement; freedom of expression; labour rights; and the rights of the child. He discussed the repatriation from Bangladesh of Muslims of Rakhine State and the 1993 National Convention, which was held to lay down the basic principles for elaborating a new constitution.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the people did not generally enjoy freedom of thought, opinion, expression, publication and peaceful assembly and association. He was pleased to note the continued release of political detainees, but regretted the long prison terms of five persons arrested in 1994 for engaging in political activities. He welcomed progress in the repatriation of refugees and training programmes for military officers and soldiers.

He recommended that the Government of Myanmar fulfil its obligations under Articles 55 and 56 of the UN Charter; consider acceding to the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights,⁽²⁶⁾ the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment⁽³³⁾ and the 1977 Protocols to the Geneva Conventions of 1949;⁽⁶⁾ bring Myanmar law concerning the protection of physical-integrity rights into line with accepted international standards; guarantee the freedoms of opinion, expression and association; try, by an independent civilian court in an accessible judicial process, those arrested or detained following demonstrations in 1988 and 1990 or as a result of the National Convention; bring the conduct of the military into line with accepted international standards; refrain from recruiting into the armed forces persons under the age of 15 years; train military and law enforcement personnel as to their responsibilities; condemn human rights violations committed by government authorities; revise its Citizenship Law; cooperate with UNHCR in ensuring the voluntary and safe return of Rakhine Muslims; and continue its cooperation with NGOs.

Commission action. On 8 March,⁽³⁴⁾ the Commission, deploring the continued seriousness of the human rights situation in Myanmar and the fact that political leaders, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and other leaders of the National League for Democracy, remained deprived of their liberty, urged the Government to release her, other detained political leaders and all political prisoners. The Commission further urged the Government to: take measures to guarantee democracy; take measures to allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process and accelerate the process of transition to democracy by transferring power to democratically elected representatives, lifting restraining orders on political leaders, releasing detainees, and ensuring the normal function of political parties; guarantee the freedom of expression and opinion and the rights of association and assembly; and cooperate with the Special Rapporteur. It asked the Government to ensure that all persons were afforded the minimum guarantees for a fair trial, that laws were given due publicity and that the principle of non-retroactivity was respected.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1995 and to the Commission in 1996. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The Economic and Social Council approved those actions by decision 1995/283 of 25 July.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's interim report⁽³⁵⁾ on the human rights situation in Myanmar. He stated that in early September he had transmitted to the Government a summary of allegations of human rights violations concerning summary or arbitrary execution; arbitrary arrest and detention; torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment; forced labour; and the situation of women. He also transmitted allegations of human rights abuses along the Thai/Myanmar border areas, notably in Manerplaw and Kawmoora, both strongholds of the Karen National Union. The report contained Myanmar's response to those allegations.

Following the lifting of restrictions against Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, the Special Rapporteur asked the Government in July for permission to visit Myanmar, which he did from 8 to 17 October.⁽³⁶⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽³⁸⁾ in November, describing the good-offices activities he had undertaken to assist Myanmar to respond to concerns with respect to the human rights situation and to achieve national reconciliation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/194.

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter, the Organization promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government,

Recalling its resolution 49/197 of 23 December 1994,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/58 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, decided to nominate a special rapporteur to establish direct contacts with the Government and with the people of Myanmar, including political leaders deprived of their liberty, their families and their lawyers, with a view to examining the situation of human rights in Myanmar and following any progress made towards the transfer of power to a civilian Government and the drafting of a new constitution, the lifting of restrictions on personal freedoms and the restoration of human rights in Myanmar,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/72 of 8 March 1995, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar,

Gravely concerned that the Government of Myanmar still has not implemented its commitment to take all necessary steps towards democracy in the light of the results of the elections held in 1990,

Noting the recent developments regarding the composition of the National Convention,

Welcoming the release without conditions, on 10 July 1995, of Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Aung San Suu Kyi and a number of other political prisoners, as called for by the General Assembly,

Also gravely concerned, however, at the continued violations of human rights in Myanmar, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, including killings of civilians, arbitrary arrest and detention, restrictions on freedom of expression and association, torture, forced labour, forced portering, human rights abuses in border areas in the course of military operations, forced relocations and development projects, abuse of women and the imposition of oppressive measures directed in particular at ethnic and religious minorities,

Welcoming the continuing cooperation between the Government of Myanmar and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the voluntary repatriation of refugees from Bangladesh to Myanmar,

Noting, however, that the human rights situation in Myanmar has resulted in flows of refugees to neighbouring countries, thus creating problems for the countries concerned,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar for his interim report;

2. Also expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report;

3. Deplores the continued violations of human rights in Myanmar;

4. Welcomes the release without conditions of Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Aung San Suu Kyi and other prominent political leaders;

5. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to release immediately and unconditionally detained political leaders and all political prisoners, to ensure their physical integrity and to permit them to participate in the process of national reconciliation;

6. Urges the Government of Myanmar to engage, at the earliest possible date, in a substantive political dialogue with Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders, including representatives of ethnic groups, as the best means of promoting national reconciliation and the full and early restoration of democracy;

7. Welcomes the discussions between the Government of Myanmar and the Secretary-General, and further encourages the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully with the Secretary-General;

8. Again urges the Government of Myanmar, in conformity with its assurances given at various times, to take all necessary steps towards the restoration of democracy in accordance with the will of the people as expressed in the democratic elections held in 1990 and to ensure that political parties can function freely;

9. Expresses its concern that most of the representatives duly elected in 1990 are still excluded from participating in the meetings of the National Convention, created to prepare basic elements for the drafting of a new constitution, and that one of its objectives is to maintain the participation of the armed forces in a leading role in the future political life of the State, and notes with concern that the working procedures of the National Convention do not permit the elected representatives of the people freely to express their views;

10. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to take all appropriate measures to allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process, in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and to accelerate the process of transition to democracy, in particular through the transfer of power to democratically elected representatives;

11. Also strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and assembly, and the protection of the rights of persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, and to put an end to violations of the right to life and integrity of the human being, to the practices of torture, abuse of women, forced labour and forced relocations, and to enforced disappearances and summary executions;

12. Appeals to the Government of Myanmar to consider becoming a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

13. Urges the Government of Myanmar to fulfil its obligations as a State party to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and to the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87), of the International Labour Organization;

14. Stresses the importance for the Government of Myanmar to give particular attention to conditions in the country's jails and to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to communicate freely and confidentially with prisoners;

15. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to respect fully the obligations of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and to make use of such services as may be offered by impartial humanitarian bodies;

16. Expresses its grave concern at the attacks by Myanmar army soldiers on the Karens and the Karennis during the past year, resulting in further refugee flows to a neighbouring country;

17. Welcomes the cessation of hostilities following the conclusion of cease-fire agreements between the Government of Myanmar and several ethnic groups;

18. Encourages the Government of Myanmar to create the necessary conditions to ensure an end to the movements of refugees to neighbouring countries and to create conditions conducive to their voluntary return and their full reintegration, in conditions of safety and dignity;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his discussions with the Government of Myanmar in order to assist in its efforts for national reconciliation and in the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session;

20. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-first session.

Papua New Guinea

Report of the Secretary-General. In February, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights information on activities undertaken by UN human rights treaty-monitoring bodies regarding the human rights situation on the island of Bougainville, Papua New Guinea,⁽³⁹⁾ where violence had erupted against the background of an armed conflict between the Papua New Guinea Defence Forces and the Bougainville Revolutionary Army (for action by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination in 1995, see PART THREE, Chapter I). He described the evolution of the situation since March 1994. The report contained a copy of a cease-fire agreement signed on 8 September 1994 by the Bougainville Revolutionary Army and a representative of an organization known as the Bougainville Interim Government (BIG). It also contained the Government's response to the Human Rights Commission on alleged human rights violations, which indicated that all the peace processes embarked upon by all parties in Bougainville and the member States of the South Pacific Forum had culminated in the Mirigini Charter, signed on 25 November 1994. The Charter was to lead to the establishment of the Bougainville Transitional Government (BTG).

In an addendum to his report,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General described a visit in 1995 by his Representative, Francesc Vendrell, to Papua New Guinea (23-28 January) and Solomon Islands (29-31 January). The Secretary-General concluded that important steps had been taken by the Government of Papua New Guinea towards a peaceful settlement of the conflict. Although specific allegations of human rights violations were brought to the Representative's attention, the Secretary-General was of the impression that the number of violations had substantially decreased since September 1994.

(For details of a visit to Bougainville by the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions, see PART THREE, Chapter I.)

Commission action. On 7 March,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Commission asked all parties in Bougainville to implement the instrument of cease-fire and called on all parties to the conflict to adhere strictly to the paragraph calling for the immediate lifting of the restrictions on the provision of medical and other humanitarian services. It asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of the Government of Papua New Guinea and all parties to the peace process and to continue to lend his good offices. The Commission asked the Government of Papua New Guinea to invite the relevant thematic rapporteurs and working groups to visit Bougainville to monitor the peace process and to report on the human rights situation. It urged the Government to cooperate with the Secretary-General's Representative and the relevant thematic rapporteurs and working groups so that they could report in 1996.

Further report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported⁽⁴²⁾ that a 27-member Transitional Government was installed in April in Bougainville. In June, the Parliament passed the Organic Law on Provincial Governments and Local-Level Governments, which was to come into effect in 1997. The Law, which recognized provincial and local governments by doing away with elected provincial assemblies and strengthening local-level governments, exempted BTG from its provisions until 1997, in recognition of the special circumstances of the province. Representatives of BTG and BIG held preliminary talks (Cairns, Australia, 9-12 September) to identify problems and lay the groundwork for a meeting of the leaders of Bougainville, with the participation, subject to the concurrence of the Government of Papua New Guinea, of UN and Commonwealth representatives. Annexed to the report was a joint communique issued by the All-Bougainville Leaders' Talks (Cairns, 14-18 December).

Europe and the Mediterranean

Cyprus

In February, the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1994 Commission decision,⁽¹⁾ reported on human rights in Cyprus.⁽²⁾ He described action taken by him in response to Security Council requests and by the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus (see PART TWO, Chapter V).

On 8 March,⁽³⁾ the Commission postponed debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus until 1996, on the understanding that action required by previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including its request to the Secretary-General to provide a report on their implementation.

The former Yugoslavia

Human rights situation

Tenth periodic report of the Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Commission, Special Rapporteur Tadeusz Mazowiecki (Poland) submitted a series of periodic reports on the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia. Previous reports were submitted in 1993⁽⁴⁾ and 1994.⁽⁵⁾

In his tenth periodic report,⁽⁶⁾ submitted on 16 January, the Special Rapporteur updated his ninth (November 1994) report⁽⁵⁾ based on information received from the field staff assigned to him in Sarajevo and Zagreb. He discussed the situations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, as well as disappearances and field operations.

Concerning Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Special Rapporteur reiterated the conclusions and recommendations made in his ninth periodic report and added that the Bosnian Serb forces had escalated the military targeting of civilians, resulting in daily loss of life and injury. He condemned those practices and called for their immediate cessation.

He called on the Bosnian Croat local authorities in the Mostar region who were hampering the re-establishment of civil society to abide by the spirit of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina—established in 1994⁽⁷⁾—its Constitution and associated agreements. In view of severe difficulties in the delivery of humanitarian aid, the Special Rapporteur reminded those who interfered that they were violating the human rights of those who relied on such aid for survival.

In his update of the situation in Croatia, the Special Rapporteur repeated the conclusions and recommendations made in his ninth periodic report. He emphasized that the obstruction of the delivery of humanitarian aid in the enclave of Bihac and the refugee camps in Batnoga and Turanj constituted a flagrant violation of fundamental humanitarian principles and called for the cessation of all interference.

The Special Rapporteur reported increased ethnic discrimination in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Human rights violations in Kosovo continued, as did tensions between the local Muslim community and authorities in the region of Sandjak (also known as Raska). In addition, the Bulgarian minority in Serbia was subject to harassment. Trade union freedoms and rights were restricted by labour and social legislation and the freedom of the media was threatened. The Special Rapporteur repeated the recommendations made in his ninth periodic report and additionally called on the Government to: remove obstacles preventing the development of a free trade union movement; take measures to respect the rights of ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities; and cooperate with the expert on missing persons designated by the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (see PART THREE, Chapter I). He also recommended full respect for freedom of the media.

As for the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, the Special Rapporteur discussed, among other things, the situation of ethnic Albanians, difficulties faced by the Serbian population in registering its religious community, and the peaceful atmosphere of the first round of presidential and parliamentary elections.

As to the problem of disappearances, the Special Rapporteur stated that in Croatia the situation of many missing persons had been clarified. However, in Bosnia and Herzegovina, disappearances continued with varied degrees of intensity and it was impossible to ascertain the total number.

The current human rights field operation, set up by the Centre for Human Rights, had functioned since March 1993. With offices in Zagreb, Sarajevo and Skopje, much of its work centred on on-site investigations and field missions to gather first-hand information.

On 26 January, the Secretary-General transmitted⁽⁸⁾ the Special Rapporteur's report to the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY), which began work in 1992⁽⁹⁾ to achieve a final settlement of the problems in the former Yugoslavia.

Report of the Secretary-General. In February, the Secretary-General reported on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina,⁽¹⁰⁾ as requested by the Commission in 1994. He described the activities of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur and action taken by the Commission of Experts, which was established in 1992⁽¹¹⁾ and concluded its work in April 1994;⁽¹²⁾ the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, established by the Security Council in 1993⁽¹³⁾ (see PART FIVE, Chapter II); ICFY; and the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR). He also discussed the situation concerning the voluntary return of displaced persons and the problem of disappearances (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

On 9 November, the Security Council, in resolution 1019(1995), condemned all violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 44 to none, with 7 abstentions, the Commission on 8 March⁽¹⁴⁾ condemned all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and specific violations identified by the Special Rapporteur—including mass killing, torture, disappearances, rape and other sexual abuses against women and children, the use of civilians as human shields, arbitrary executions, the destruction of houses, religious objects and cultural and historical heritage, forced and illegal evictions, detentions, arbitrary searches and other acts of violence. It demanded immediate, firm and resolute action by all concerned parties and the international community to stop those violations and breaches of international law, to secure a just and lasting peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and to bring war criminals to trial. It also demanded the immediate internationally supervised release of all persons arbitrarily or illegally detained and the immediate closure of all detention facilities not authorized by or in compliance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocols thereto.⁽¹⁵⁾ The Commission further demanded that all parties ensure that all persons under their control cease the deliberate impeding of the delivery of food and medical and other supplies essential for civilians.

Denouncing once again the deliberate and unlawful attacks and use of military force against civilians and other protected persons by all sides, the Commission condemned the besieging of cities and other civilian areas; the terrorization and murder of non-combatants; the destruction of vital services; the use of military force against relief operations; the obstruction of relief convoys; violations of the Agreement on Complete Cessation of Hostilities concluded on 31 December 1994;⁽¹⁶⁾ and ethnic cleansing, particularly in the areas of Banja Luka, Prijedor and Bijeljina.

Strongly condemning discriminatory practices against and human rights violations of ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, the Commission demanded that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) respect their human rights and fundamental freedoms; cease all human rights violations, discriminatory measures and practices; release political prisoners and cease the persecution of political leaders and members of local human rights organizations; respect the will of the inhabitants of Kosovo; guarantee freedom of the media and cease the obstruction of the Albanian-language media in Kosovo; abrogate the Government's official settlement policy; allow the Special Rapporteur to visit Kosovo; and cooperate with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) to enable the mission to resume its activities immediately by permitting its return to Kosovo. The Secretary-General was urged to explore ways to establish an international monitoring presence in Kosovo.

The Commission deplored and condemned the continual refusal of the Bosnian Serb authorities to permit the Special Rapporteur to conduct investigations in territory under their control. It demanded that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) permit entry into Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina of UN observer missions and field officers of the Special Rapporteur and resumption of the missions of long duration of OSCE. The Commission also demanded that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), as well as the Governments of Serbia and of Montenegro, end the violence and harassment directed against the Muslim community in Sandjak. It expressed grave concern at renewed reports of human rights violations in Vojvodina concerning the Bulgarian and Croatian minorities. It noted with concern that many of the Special Rapporteur's past recommendations had not been fully implemented. It recommended the inclusion of a human rights component in any internationally negotiated arrangements for Bosnia and Herzegovina and that implementation of such a component be conducted in close cooperation with the Special Rapporteur and the Centre for Human Rights.

Welcoming the expanding activities of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, the Commission asked States to make available to the Tribunal resources, services and expert personnel. It commended the expert member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for his first report,⁽¹⁷⁾ in 1994, on the special process on missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia (see also PART THREE, Chapter I).

The Commission, extending the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year, asked him to continue to submit periodic reports. The Secretary-General was requested to make those reports available to the Security Council and to ICFY. It asked the Secretary-General to assist in obtaining the cooperation of all UN bodies in implementing its resolution and, pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁸⁾ to provide the Special Rapporteur with the necessary assistance to enable him to fulfil his mandate and, in particular, to appoint field staff in the former Yugoslavia to provide first-hand, timely reports on the human rights situation there. The Commission's requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 25 July by decision 1995/290.

Further periodic reports of the Special Rapporteur. In response to the Commission's request (see above), the Special Rapporteur on the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia prepared a series of periodic reports in 1995.

In April, he described the situation of the non-Serb population in the Banja Luka region of northern Bosnia and Herzegovina, which had reached a critical point in February when certain towns suffered sustained campaigns of violence directed against Muslims and Bosnian Croats.⁽¹⁹⁾ He stated that non-Serbs had been subjected to unrelenting discrimination and terrorization, and it appeared that virtually none wished to remain in the area. Local authorities in Banja Luka reaped revenue from fees imposed on persons applying to leave, but authorities in Pale—the capital of the so-called "Serbian Republic"—seemed to have moved to slow down the exodus, possibly to retain some non-Serbs for forced labour and to have people available for inclusion in negotiated population exchanges. The de facto authorities continued to compel non-Serbs to serve in forced-labour brigades. So-called criminal gangs increased their operations, with one purpose appearing to be to carry out ethnic cleansing without directly implicating the authorities. The Special Rapporteur stated that the de facto authorities had violated their obligations under the cease-fire agreements of December 1994⁽¹⁶⁾ to allow access of human rights monitors into territories they controlled. He called on the de facto authorities to stop the ethnic cleansing, to provide adequate protection to groups subjected to discrimination and to facilitate the restitution of property. He urged that those responsible for crimes be brought to justice and that conditions be created for the return in safety and dignity of displaced persons and refugees. He called on the international community to exercise pressure to obtain access of UN civilian police officers and human rights monitors to territories controlled by the Bosnian Serb authorities.

In July, the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's April report to the General Assembly, the Security Council and ICFY.⁽²⁰⁾

Also in July, the Special Rapporteur described his visit to Croatia and central and south Bosnia and Herzegovina (22 May–3 June).⁽²¹⁾ In addition, he provided information on human rights developments in areas he was unable to visit—such as Sarajevo, other UN-designated safe areas and Banja Luka—owing to the security situation or denial of access.

In May, the Republic of Croatia, in violation of the cease-fire agreement of 29 March 1994,⁽²²⁾ launched a major military operation in Western Slavonia (Sector West)—an area defined as a UN Protected Area and subject to UN protection and monitoring, which constituted the so-called "Republic of Serb Krajina" ("RSK"). Croatian Army troops, supported by some 30 tanks, moved into Sector West on 1 May and took most Serb-controlled territory within 36 hours and the entire Sector by 4 May. On 4 May, the Croatian Minister of Defence stated that between 350 and 450 "RSK" soldiers had been killed and 1,200 wounded; the Croatian forces were reported to have suffered 37 fatalities, with some 150 wounded. On 22 May, the Croatian Government set the number of Serb dead at 188; of those, it was claimed that some 54 might be civilians. The Special Rapporteur's field staff on 16 May observed burial sites in Vrbovljani and Okucani which bore the appearance of possible mass graves. By the end of May, these sites had been altered, with individual mounds created and marked with crosses. The Croatian Government refused to release data on the identities of most of the war dead. It claimed that only 10 wounded from "RSK" had been treated in Croatian hospitals, but the UN estimated that about 500 wounded from "RSK" had fled into the Serb-held territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina. More than 100 houses were destroyed and, according to a reliable report, some houses in Vrbovljani, Covac and Okucani were intentionally blown up because, in the past, those villages had been well known for terrorist activities. There were also numerous incidents of looting by the advancing Croatian forces and, to a lesser extent, by retreating "RSK" forces. Also, "RSK" authorities had ordered a series of artillery and rocket attacks against several Croatian cities, carried out on 2 and 3 May. After recovering control over Western Slavonia, Croatian authorities detained virtually all males, particularly from the area around Pakrac (Gavrinica). A total of 1,494 men were taken into custody in three community centres in the towns of Bjelovar, Pozega and Varazdin.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the Croatian authorities were responsible for violations of human rights and humanitarian law, many of which were of a serious nature but had not occurred on a massive scale. "RSK" authorities were responsible for shelling civilians, the Rapporteur said. Serious doubts existed as to the credibility of data provided by Croatian authorities concerning the number of persons killed; credible data, the Rapporteur stated, indicated that the number of civilian dead exceeded that reported by the Government. While it appeared that the majority of detainees had been treated correctly, there had been some alleged cases of physical and verbal abuse and other forms of degrading treatment.

Croatian authorities and international organizations had failed to prevent an exodus of the Serbian population from Western Slavonia, the Rapporteur continued. The exodus was due to fear of possible repercussions. The authorities had taken steps to restore confidence and to facilitate coexistence among the population, but those measures did not appear to have met existing needs. An important confidence-building role had been played by the Coordination of Organizations for Human Rights, composed of NGOs from all over Croatia. The Special Rapporteur recommended that Croatian authorities identify those killed and provide information to the families about cause of death and place of burial, pursue criminal proceedings against persons suspected of having committed war crimes, and accelerate the process of integrating representatives of the Serbian population into local administrative structures. He also recommended: clarifying doubts about the events during the military operation; taking into account the cultural identity of the Serb population in the Western Slavonia school system; monitoring by international and local organizations of the human rights situation in the region; and organizing the process of the return of displaced persons so as to guarantee the human rights of all of the population, including the right to property.

The Special Rapporteur reported that in Sarajevo targeting of civilian areas by Bosnian Serb forces continued, resulting in deaths and injuries. Since the beginning of 1995, there had been an ongoing pattern of humiliation of and attacks against UN personnel and representatives of other organizations, including targeting resulting in death and injury, detention, hostage-taking and restrictions on freedom of movement. The humanitarian aid situation in Sarajevo had reached a desperate stage, owing to the blockade by Bosnian Serb forces.

UN-designated safe areas—including Bihac, Gorazde, Srebrenica, Tuzla and Sarajevo—were shelled on 25 May by Bosnian Serb forces in retaliation for airstrikes by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (see PART TWO, Chapter V).

Following the Croatian offensive in Western Slavonia, there were further reports in Banja Luka of human rights abuses against the non-Serbian population, particularly Croats; there was also a proliferation of attacks on Catholic clergy and buildings. In Mostar, human rights violations, particularly against the Muslim population in Croat-controlled West Mostar, continued to be a cause for concern. In addition, the human rights of the Serb community in East and West Mostar were not adequately safeguarded. Freedom of movement between the two parts of the city was restricted, and limited progress was made in terms of joint institutional developments.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur stated that snipers should be among those tried and sentenced for grave breaches of humanitarian law. He called on those responsible for civilian attacks to cease them immediately. Calling on the Bosnian Serb de facto authorities to ensure that human rights violations against minorities in Banja Luka were stopped, the Special Rapporteur asked that he and his field staff be granted access to the area to assess first-hand the human rights situation there. As for Mostar, he urged a speedy reunification of the city as that would greatly assist the human rights situation. He recommended that immediate steps be taken to facilitate decisions at the federal level concerning the return of refugees and displaced persons in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

In July, the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's July report to the General Assembly, the Security Council and ICFY.⁽²³⁾

In an August report,⁽²⁴⁾ the Special Rapporteur discussed violations of human rights and humanitarian law following the fall of Srebrenica on 11 July 1995, which saw the expulsion of the entire Muslim population, estimated at between 38,000 and 42,000. The Special Rapporteur's report was based on his mission to Tuzla from 22 to 24 July, as well as on an investigation by staff of the Centre for Human Rights in conjunction with the civil affairs component of the UN Peace Forces. About 25,000 people fled from Srebrenica and began to arrive in Potocari on 11 July. There were accounts of physical violence by Bosnian Serb soldiers, executions and abductions of young women. The Special Rapporteur described the journey by bus and truck from Potocari to the edge of Bosnian Serb-held territory near Tisca; the evacuation of 65 wounded persons from Potocari by medical convoy; and the journey on foot of some 15,000 draft-age men from Srebrenica to Bosnian Government territory. He discussed the situation in Tuzla, where, from about 13 July, displaced persons had begun to arrive.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that there was evidence of summary executions and possibly of mass executions. There were credible accounts that women had been raped, as well as evidence of physical assaults and inhuman and degrading treatment against the entire population. Civilians had been targeted by shelling and other forms of military activity, and prisoners of war were badly mistreated. The Special Rapporteur said that there had been complete disregard for the mental suffering caused by the expulsion of the population from Srebrenica and credible reports of looting and destruction of Muslim property following the fall of that enclave. Thousands of people were still missing. Finally, there was an indication that reprisal attacks had taken place against Serbians living in Tuzla by Muslim displaced persons from Srebrenica.

The Special Rapporteur recommended continuing investigations and making available to competent UN bodies information derived from military intelligence sources relevant to uncovering violations of international humanitarian law. He also recommended that: the Bosnian Serb de facto authorities account for the thousands of persons reportedly still missing; ICRC be granted access to detention facilities; the international community make efforts to ensure that displaced persons returned in safety and dignity and provide assistance and financial support to them; and local authorities in Tuzla continue to safeguard the rights of the Serbian minority. He called for an investigation under international supervision of accusations against UNPROFOR in Srebrenica.

The Special Rapporteur discussed the concept of safe areas and a meeting he organized in Szeged, Hungary, on 8 and 9 July to collect information on the human rights situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). With 32 representatives of NGOs participating, the meeting elaborated and substantiated allegations concerning irregularities in the judicial system; irregularities in citizenship law; discrimination based on ethnicity and nationality; impediments surrounding the activities of independent trade unions; restrictions on the freedom of the media and the dominance of the State-sponsored media; systematic suppression of cultural heritage; and deportation of citizens and individuals seeking refuge in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).

The Special Rapporteur stated that the human rights situation in Montenegro had improved; there was no indication of significant or systematic discrimination. During the Szeged meeting, his attention was drawn to the existence of a Bosnian Government-operated detention facility in Tarcin, where a few hundred individuals had been detained for three years. He urged the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina to release all detainees at the facility.

The Special Rapporteur's report contained a 27 July letter, by which he informed the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights of his resignation. On 3 August, the Subcommission expressed its solidarity and support for the Special Rapporteur for his moral and courageous stand, and for his resignation in protest at the perpetuation of gross violations in Bosnia and Herzegovina.⁽²⁵⁾

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's August report to the General Assembly, the Security Council and ICFY.⁽²⁶⁾

On 27 September, the Commission Chairman appointed Elisabeth Rehn (Finland) as Special Rapporteur, whose periodic report the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly, the Security Council and ICFY on 7 November.⁽²⁷⁾ She visited Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) from 9 to 15 October. Her report dealt mainly with the human rights problems arising from operation "Storm", launched by the Croatian army on 4 August in former sectors North and South (see PART TWO, Chapter V). Evidence gathered indicated that violations of human rights and humanitarian law committed during and after operation "Storm" included the killing of fleeing civilians; targeting of heavy weapons against militarily insignificant sites in towns, including the residential areas of Glina and Knin; lack of protection of the remaining members of the minority population; threats against and ill-treatment of the Serb minority by Croatian soldiers, policemen and civilians; and looting, burning and occupation of Serb houses. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government of Croatia fulfil its responsibilities to secure the human rights of the remaining Serb population in the retaken territories and remove all legal and administrative obstacles preventing the return of refugees and displaced persons.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, military activities in recent months and accompanying territorial changes had yielded new evidence of human rights violations, past and present. Allegations of human rights violations committed by all sides to the conflict required further investigation. Of immediate concern was the fate of some 8,000 Bosnian Muslims, mainly males, from Srebrenica who were still unaccounted for. Noting that there was ongoing persecution and harassment of the remaining Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat minorities in Banja Luka and other areas controlled by Bosnian Serb forces, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the de facto Bosnian Serb authorities provide prompt access for human rights monitors to territories controlled by them, in particular to Banja Luka and Srebrenica. She stated that proper conditions for the return of some 25,000 Bosnian Muslim refugees from the Velika Kladusa region had not been created by the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina and recommended that the Government take steps to do so.

The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the Special Rapporteur stated, was facing serious humanitarian problems owing to the influx of over 100,000 refugees from Croatia. She had received allegations regarding the ethnic Albanian community in Kosovo, which she intended to investigate on a subsequent mission. A monitoring presence must be established, such as an office of the Centre for Human Rights, to obtain first-hand information concerning the human rights situation there.

In a later report,⁽²⁸⁾ the Special Rapporteur described another mission (26 November-2 December), during which she visited: the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, with stops in Belgrade and Pristina, the capital of Kosovo; Bosnia and Herzegovina, with visits to Bjeljina and Banja Luka in the Republika Srpska; and the towns of Jajce and Bogojno and the region of Eastern Slavonia in Croatia.

By a 12 December letter,⁽²⁹⁾ the Special Rapporteur informed the Commission Chairman of observations she made during her visit. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, the humanitarian situation of several thousands of Serbs displaced from other areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina and from the Republic of Croatia was very serious. The human rights situation of the remaining Muslim and Croat population, despite improvements, was still difficult. Insignificant progress had been achieved regarding the return of displaced persons within the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, but substantial progress had been made concerning freedom of movement in Mostar. In central Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Special Rapporteur witnessed the burning and looting of houses by Bosnian Croat soldiers. She noted that the Centre for Human Rights had taken preliminary steps to open a human rights monitoring office in Banja Luka.

During her visit to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the Special Rapporteur focused on the problem of the human rights situation of Albanians in Kosovo, where children were deprived of a regular school system and adequate health protection and there were still cases of police brutality, harassment of the local population and restrictions on freedom of movement. During meetings in Belgrade, she raised the question of opening an office of the Centre for Human Rights in the country.

The main concern in the Republic of Croatia was the situation of the Serbian population, the majority of whom belonged to vulnerable groups and required immediate assistance.

The Special Rapporteur stated that one of the most serious problems was the question of missing persons. Without progress in that area, she noted that it would be impossible to create conditions for peaceful coexistence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/193.

Situation of human rights in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and other instruments of international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as the principles and commitments undertaken by States members of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have under the human rights instruments to which they are party, and reaffirming also the obligation of all to respect international humanitarian law,

Welcoming the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina initialled by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), representing also the Bosnian Serb party, at Dayton, Ohio, on 21 November 1995 which commits the parties to the conflict to ending the war and starting to build peace with justice; enables Bosnia and Herzegovina to continue its legal existence as a single State within its internationally recognized borders with full respect for its sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence by its neighbours; and commits the parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina to respect fully human rights,

Welcoming also the basic agreement on the region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium, signed on 12 November 1995 by the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the local Serb representatives,

None the less gravely concerned at the human tragedy that has occurred in the territories of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and at the massive and systematic violations of human rights and international humanitarian law,

Recalling its resolution 49/196 of 23 December 1994, Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/89 of 8 March 1995 and all relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recalling specifically the Security Council resolutions in which the Council demanded, inter alia, that all parties and others concerned in the former Yugoslavia immediately cease and desist from all breaches of international humanitarian law, requested the Secretary-General to establish a commission of experts to examine and analyse information relating to serious violations of such law being committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, established an international tribunal for the prosecution of persons responsible for such violations and condemned in particular the unacceptable practice of ethnic cleansing perpetrated in areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces,

Recalling also additional Security Council resolutions, in particular resolutions 824(1993) of 6 May 1993 and 836(1993) of 4 June 1993, in which the Council declared that Sarajevo, Tuzla, Zepa, Gorazde, Bihac, Srebrenica and their surroundings should be treated as safe areas, that international humanitarian agencies should be given free and unimpeded access to those areas and that there should be freedom of movement for the civilian population and humanitarian goods to, from and within the areas,

Recalling further Security Council resolution 1019(1995) of 9 November 1995, in which the Council demanded that the Bosnian Serb party give immediate and unimpeded access to representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross and other international agencies to persons displaced and to persons detained or reported missing from Srebrenica, Zepa and the regions of Banja Luka and Sanski Most,

Gravely concerned at attacks and capture by the Bosnian Serbs and Croatian Serb forces of safe areas, in violation of the relevant Security Council resolutions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1009(1995) of 10 August 1995, in which the Council demanded that the Government of the Republic of Croatia respect fully the rights of the local Serb population, including their rights to remain, leave or return in safety, allow access to this population by international humanitarian organizations and create conditions conducive to the return of those persons who have left their homes,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the United Nations Peace Forces to help to create the conditions for the peaceful settlement of the conflicts in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republic of Croatia and to provide protection for the delivery of humanitarian aid and the protection of human rights, and also noting the obstacles faced by those forces in the performance of their mandates,

Acknowledging the progress made by the Bosnian Federation as a model for ethnic reconciliation in the region,

Encouraging the international community, acting through the United Nations and other international organizations as well as bilaterally, to enhance significantly humanitarian support for the people of the region and to promote human rights, economic reconstruction, the repatriation of refugees and the holding of free elections in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Welcoming the efforts of the European Union to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and endorsing the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia that economic and other aid must be made conditional upon meaningful progress in human rights,

Gravely concerned at the human rights violations in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular at those committed in the context of the odious practice of ethnic cleansing, which has been the direct cause of the vast majority of human rights violations there and whose principal victims have been the Muslim population, as well as the Croats and others,

Also gravely concerned at reports, including by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, of grave violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in and around Srebrenica, and in the areas of Banja Luka and Sanski Most, including reports of mass murder, unlawful detention and forced labour, rape and deportation of civilians,

Dismayed by the huge number of missing persons still unaccounted for, particularly in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia,

Deeply concerned by the situations reflected in the report of the Secretary-General on rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, and stressing the need for detailed reporting on this subject,

Alarmed that the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the Republic of Croatia has also been characterized by the systematic destruction and profanation of mosques, churches and other places of worship, religious buildings and sites of cultural heritage,

Expressing its particular concern for the situation of the children and the elderly as well as other vulnerable groups in the area,

Calling attention to the reports and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the territories of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), including the most recent report by the newly appointed Special Rapporteur, Mrs. Elisabeth Rehn, Expressing its deep appreciation for the activity and efforts of the previous Special Rapporteur, Mr. Tadeusz Mazowiecki, in the discharge of his mandate,

Noting the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur that respect for human rights should be given priority during and after the peace negotiations and that, without genuine improvements in the human rights situation in the area, any peace agreement will not have a solid foundation,

1. Commends both the former and the current Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia for their efforts, and notes that the presence of the Special Rapporteur can be a positive factor towards reducing the instances of all human rights violations in the region;

2. Expresses its outrage at the instances of massive and systematic violations of human rights and humanitarian law as described in the reports of the Special Rapporteur, including ethnic cleansing, killings, disappearances, torture, rape, detentions, beatings, arbitrary searches, destruction of houses, illegal evictions and other acts of violence aimed at forcing individuals from their homes;

3. Condemns in the strongest terms all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by the parties to the conflict, recognizing that the leadership in territories under the control of Serbs in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and formerly Serb-held areas of the Republic of Croatia, the commanders of Serb paramilitary forces and political and military leaders in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) bear primary responsibility for most of those violations and that persons who commit such acts will be held personally responsible and accountable;

4. Condemns the attacks on the safe areas of Srebrenica and Zepa by Bosnian Serb forces, which led to gross abuses of human rights and grave breaches of international humanitarian law and the disappearance of thousands of persons, as detailed in the reports of the former and the current Special Rapporteurs;

5. Also condemns the indiscriminate shelling of civilians in the safe areas of Sarajevo, Tuzla, Bihac and Gorazde and the use of cluster bombs on civilian targets by Bosnian Serb and Croatian Serb forces;

6. Further condemns violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, including killings, the burning and looting of houses, the shelling of residential areas, harassment of and attacks on refugees, the elderly and the infirm perpetrated by members of the Croatian armed forces and civilians in the formerly Serb-controlled regions of Croatia during and subsequent to the military operations there in August 1995;

7. Welcomes the withdrawal of the heavy weapons surrounding Sarajevo following the decision to implement Security Council resolution 836(1993), reinforced by the London conference of 21 July 1995, to respond to attacks on safe areas, and notes that this opened Sarajevo to badly needed humanitarian relief;

8. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, established pursuant to Security Council resolutions 806(1993) of 5 February 1993 and 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, notes the issuance of indictments against individuals, and urges that the Tribunal be given the resources it needs;

9. Requests States, as a matter of urgency, to continue to make available to the International Tribunal expert personnel, adequate resources and services to aid in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of having committed serious violations of international humanitarian law;

10. Reminds all States of their obligation under Security Council resolution 827(1993) to cooperate with the International Tribunal, including through compliance with requests for assistance and orders issued by a trial chamber of the Tribunal, and, in this regard, urges the parties to allow the establishment of offices of the Tribunal in their territories and draws the attention of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to their obligation to cooperate with the Tribunal, in particular to arrest, detain and facilitate the transfer to the custody of the Tribunal any and all indicted war criminals who reside in or transit through or are otherwise present in their respective territories;

11. Demands that all parties refrain from any action intended to destroy, alter, conceal or damage any evidence of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law and that they preserve such evidence;

12. Expresses its complete support for the victims of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, recognizes the right of refugees and displaced persons freely to return to their homes of origin in safety and dignity, to have restored to them property of which they were deprived in the course of hostilities since 1991 and to be compensated for any such property that cannot be restored to them, considers null any commitments made under duress, and urges all parties to fulfil their agreements to this end;

13. Condemns all deliberate obstruction of the delivery of food and medical and other supplies essential for the civilian population, which constitutes a serious violation of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, and of medical evacuations, and demands that all parties ensure that all persons under their control cease such acts;

14. Also condemns all attacks on the United Nations Peace Forces and on personnel working with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian organizations by parties to the conflict;

15. Expresses its outrage that the systematic practice of rape has been used as a weapon of war against women and children and as an instrument of ethnic cleansing, and recognizes that rape in this context constitutes a war crime;

16. Condemns police violence against the non-Serb populations in Kosovo, the Sandjak, Vojvodina and other areas of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), particularly the systematic acts of harassment, beatings, torture, warrantless searches, arbitrary detention and unfair trials, including those directed mainly against members of the Muslim population;

17. Strongly urges the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to take appropriate measures to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms and to take urgent action to ensure the rule of law in order to prevent arbitrary evictions and dismissals and discrimination against any ethnic or national, religious and linguistic group, including in the fields of education and information;

18. Cautions against any attempts to use Serb refugees to alter the population balance in Kosovo, the Sandjak, Vojvodina and any other part of the country, thus further suppressing the enjoyment of human rights in those areas;

19. Strongly encourages all parties to fulfil the commitments made at Dayton, Ohio, to release without delay all civilians and combatants held in prison or detention in relation to the conflict, in conformity with international humanitarian law and the provisions of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and demands that the parties cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross, the Special Rapporteur and her staff, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the monitoring and other missions of the European Union and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

20. Urges Member States to consider positively the Special Rapporteur's recommendation that economic and other aid must be made conditional upon meaningful progress in human rights;

21. Recognizes that the Bosnian Federation should be further developed to serve as a model for ethnic reconciliation in the region;

22. Urges all parties, in particular the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), to cooperate with the "special process" dealing with the problem of missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia established pursuant to paragraph 24 of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1994/72 of 9 March 1994, and reiterated in its resolution 1995/35 of 3 March 1995, by disclosing information and documentation on inmates in prisons, camps and other places of detention;

23. Also urges all parties to provide full access for monitoring the human rights situation, including by allowing access to the missions of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, including in Kosovo, as called for by the General Assembly in resolution 49/196 and by the Security Council in resolution 855(1993) of 9 August 1993, and in the Sandjak, Vojvodina and other affected areas, and requests that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) permit the opening of a field office of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat as called for by the General Assembly in resolution 49/196;

24. Urges the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to ensure the full and effective coordination of the activities of all United Nations bodies in implementing the present resolution, and urges those bodies concerned with the situation in the territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to coordinate closely with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur and the International Tribunal, and to provide to the Special Rapporteur on a continuing basis all relevant and accurate information in their possession on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

25. Draws attention to the need for an immediate and urgent investigation by qualified experts of several mass grave sites near Srebrenica and Vukovar and other mass grave sites and places where mass killings are reported to have taken place, and requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to make available the necessary means for this undertaking;

26. Also urges the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to make all necessary resources available for the Special Rapporteur to carry out her mandate and in particular to provide her with adequate staff based in the territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to ensure effective continuous monitoring of the human rights situation there and coordination with other United Nations bodies involved, including the United Nations Peace Forces;

27. Welcomes the effort by the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina to uphold human rights in its territory, and urges it to fulfil the human rights commitments it has made;

28. Notes with concern that many of the past recommendations of the Special Rapporteur have not been fully implemented, in some cases because of resistance by the parties on the ground, and urges the parties, all States and relevant organizations to give immediate consideration to them, in particular the calls of the former and the current Special Rapporteurs:

(a) For the de facto Bosnian Serb authorities to provide prompt access for humanitarian monitors to territories controlled by them, in particular to the Banja Luka region and to Srebrenica, emphasizing that the fate of thousands of missing persons from Srebrenica requires immediate clarification;

(b) For the Government of Croatia to fulfil its responsibilities to secure the human rights of the remaining ethnic Serb population in all recently retaken territories and to remove all legal and administrative hurdles which are preventing the return of refugees and displaced persons;

(c) For greater cooperation between Governments and non-governmental organizations, recognizing that the work and role of non-governmental organizations is vital to the promotion and protection of the rights of the individual and respect and protection of human rights in the region;

(d) For the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to undertake measures to respect fully the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

29. Invites the Commission on Human Rights, at its fifty-second session, to request the Special Rapporteur to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

30. Decides to continue its examination of this question at its fifty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Ethnic Albanians in Kosovo

Subcommission action. On 18 August,⁽³⁰⁾ by a secret ballot of 17 votes to 3, with 4 abstentions, the Subcommission, strongly condemning the discriminatory practices and human rights violations committed by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) against ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, requested that these authorities cease all such violations and practices; revoke all discriminatory legislation; release all political prisoners; establish democratic institutions in Kosovo; reopen all cultural and scientific institutions of ethnic Albanians; and pursue a dialogue with the representatives of ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, under ICFY auspices. It demanded that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) cooperate with the Special Rapporteur and urged them to allow the return of the OSCE mission to Kosovo. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to seek ways to establish an international monitoring presence in Kosovo and called on the Special Rapporteur to continue to monitor the human rights situation there.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a November report,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General described action taken by the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission, regarding the situation of human rights in Kosovo. He reviewed efforts to establish a monitoring presence in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the reinstatement of the OSCE mission, which had ceased in July 1993.⁽³²⁾

The Secretary-General concluded that with the renewed willingness of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to cooperate with the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur, the establishment of an international monitoring presence appeared to be more attainable.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/190.

Situation of human rights in Kosovo

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Welcoming the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina reached on 21 November 1995 at Dayton, Ohio, and hoping that it will have a positive impact also on the human rights situation in Kosovo,

Recalling its resolution 49/204 of 23 December 1994 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/89 of 8 March 1995 and recalling previous Commission resolutions 1992/S-1/1 of 14 August 1992, 1992/S-2/1 of 1 December 1992, 1993/7 of 23 February 1993 and 1994/76 of 9 March 1994,

Taking note also of the reports of the Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, in which they describe the situation in Kosovo, the various discriminatory measures taken in the legislative, administrative and judicial areas, acts of violence and arbitrary arrests perpetrated against ethnic Albanians in Kosovo and the continuing deterioration of the human rights situation in Kosovo, including:

(a) Police brutality against ethnic Albanians, the killing of ethnic Albanians resulting from such violence, arbitrary searches, seizures and arrests, forced evictions, torture and ill-treatment of detainees and discrimination in the administration of justice, including the recent trials of ethnic Albanian former policemen;

(b) Discriminatory and arbitrary dismissals of ethnic Albanian civil servants, notably from the ranks of the police and the judiciary, mass dismissals of ethnic Albanians, confiscation and expropriation of their properties, discrimination against ethnic Albanian pupils and teachers, the closing of Albanian-language secondary schools and the university, as well as the closing of all Albanian cultural and scientific institutions;

(c) The harassment and persecution of political parties and associations of ethnic Albanians and their leaders and activities, their maltreatment and imprisonment;

(d) The intimidation and imprisonment of ethnic Albanian journalists and the systematic harassment and disruption of the news media in the Albanian language;

(e) The dismissals from clinics and hospitals of doctors and members of other categories of the medical profession of Albanian origin;

(f) The elimination in practice of the Albanian language, particularly in public administration and services;

(g) The serious and massive occurrence of discriminatory and repressive practices aimed at ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, as a whole, resulting in widespread involuntary migration;

and noting that the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in its resolutions 1993/9 of 20 August 1993 and 1995/10 of 18 August 1995, considered that those measures and practices constituted a form of ethnic cleansing,

Concerned at any attempt to use Serb refugees and other means to alter the ethnic balance in Kosovo, thus further suppressing the enjoyment of human rights there, and, in this context, noting with concern the new citizenship law awaiting approval by the Parliament of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Reaffirming that the long-term mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to Kosovo played a positive role in monitoring the human rights situation and in preventing an escalation of conflict there, and recalling in this context Security Council resolution 855(1993) of 9 August 1993,

Considering that the re-establishment of the international presence in Kosovo to monitor and investigate the situation of human rights is of great importance in preventing the situation in Kosovo from deteriorating into violent conflict, and, in this context, taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/204,

1. Strongly condemns the measures and practices of discrimination and the violations of the human rights of ethnic Albanians in Kosovo committed by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

2. Condemns the large-scale repression by the police and military of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) against the defenceless ethnic Albanian population and the discrimination against the ethnic Albanians in the administrative and judiciary branches of government, education, health care and employment, aimed at forcing ethnic Albanians to leave;

3. Urgently demands that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro):

(a) Take all necessary measures to bring to an immediate end all human rights violations against ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, including, in particular, the discriminatory measures and practices, arbitrary searches and detention, the violation of the right to a fair trial and the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and to revoke all discriminatory legislation, in particular that which has entered into force since 1989;

(b) Release all political prisoners and cease the persecution of political leaders and members of local human rights organizations;

(c) Allow the establishment of genuine democratic institutions in Kosovo, including the parliament and the judiciary, and respect the will of its inhabitants as the best means of preventing the escalation of the conflict there;

(d) Abrogate the official settlement policy as far as it is conducive to the heightening of ethnic tensions in Kosovo;

(e) Reopen the cultural and scientific institutions of the ethnic Albanians;

(f) Pursue dialogue with the representatives of ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, including under the auspices of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia;

4. Demands once again that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) cooperate fully and immediately with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia in the discharge of her functions, as requested by the Commission in its resolution 1994/76 and in other relevant resolutions;

5. Encourages the Secretary-General to pursue his humanitarian efforts in the former Yugoslavia, in liaison with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund and other appropriate humanitarian organizations, with a view to taking urgent practical steps to tackle the critical needs of the people in Kosovo, especially of the most vulnerable groups affected by the conflict, and to assist in the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes;

6. Urges the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to allow the immediate unconditional return of the long-term mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to Kosovo, called for in Security Council resolution 855(1993);

7. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/204;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to seek ways and means, including through consultations with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and relevant regional organizations, to establish an adequate international monitoring presence in Kosovo and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session;

9. Emphasizes the importance of laws and regulations concerning citizenship applied by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) being in accordance with the standards and principles of non-discrimination, equal protection before the law and the reduction and avoidance of statelessness, as set out in the relevant international human rights instruments;

10. Calls upon the Special Rapporteur to continue to monitor closely the situation of human rights in Kosovo and to continue to pay due attention to this matter in her reporting;

11. Decides to continue examination of the human rights situation in Kosovo at its fifty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 115-2-43 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.3) by recorded vote (107-2-35), 11 December (meeting 54); 38-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.43); agenda item 112 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 54; plenary 99.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Rape and abuse of women

As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽³³⁾ the Secretary-General in August 1995 submitted a report on rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia.⁽³⁴⁾ He gave an overview of efforts to end those practices taken by Governments and a wide range of UN bodies and other organizations, including the Commission of Experts, the Commission on Human Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, the United Nations Children's Fund, UNHCR, UNESCO, WHO, the European Community Task Force (an implementing arm of the European Community Humanitarian Office), ICRC, and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and other NGOs.

The Secretary-General stated that reports of rape and sexual violence continued to be received, although to a lesser extent than earlier in the conflict. He noted that activities being undertaken by the international community were welcomed, but that caution should be exercised in assuming that the needs of the victims were being adequately met. (See also PART FOUR, Chapter X.)

On 22 December, the General Assembly, by decision 50/461, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/192.

Rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other instruments of human rights and international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Recalling its resolution 3074(XXVIII) of 3 December 1973, entitled "Principles of international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity", as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 1994/77 of 9 March 1994, entitled "Rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia", General Assembly resolutions 48/143 of 20 December 1993 and 49/205 of 23 December 1994, both entitled "Rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia", and relevant resolutions of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Reaffirming the relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolution 798(1992) of 18 December 1992, in which, inter alia, the Council strongly condemned those acts of unspeakable brutality,

Welcoming the initialling of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and other parties thereto at Dayton, Ohio, on 21 November 1995,

Noting with deep concern all reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, regarding rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, particularly in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Convinced that this heinous practice constitutes a deliberate weapon of war in fulfilling the policy of ethnic cleansing carried out by Serbian forces in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and recalling General Assembly resolution 47/121 of 18 December 1992, in which the Assembly stated, inter alia, that the abhorrent policy of ethnic cleansing was a form of genocide,

Desirous of ensuring that persons accused of authorizing, aiding and perpetrating rape and sexual violence as a weapon of war in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia will be brought to justice without further delay by the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, where appropriate,

Underlining, in this context, the need for the protection of the rape victims and the provision of effective guarantees of privacy and confidentiality of the rape victims, and desirous of facilitating their participation in the proceedings of the International Tribunal and ensuring that further traumatization will be prevented,

Deeply alarmed at the situation facing victims of rape in armed conflicts in different parts of the world and any use of rape as a weapon of war, in particular in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of Governments and the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, humanitarian organizations, and non-governmental organizations aimed at supporting the victims of rape and abuse and alleviating their suffering,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 4 August 1995, submitted pursuant to resolution 49/205,

1. Strongly condemns the abhorrent practice of rape and abuse of women and children in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, which constitutes a war crime;

2. Expresses its outrage that the systematic practice of rape has been used as a weapon of war and an instrument of ethnic cleansing against women and children in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

3. Reaffirms that rape in the conduct of armed conflict constitutes a war crime and that under certain circumstances it constitutes a crime against humanity and an act of genocide as defined in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, and calls upon States to take all measures required for the protection of women and children from such acts and to strengthen mechanisms to investigate and punish all those responsible and bring the perpetrators to justice;

4. Also reaffirms that all persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity or other violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations and that those in positions of authority who have failed to ensure that persons under their control comply with the relevant international instruments are accountable, together with the perpetrators;

5. Reminds all States of their obligation to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and also with the Office of the Prosecutor in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of using rape as a weapon of war;

6. Calls upon States to put experts, including experts in the prosecution of crimes of sexual violence, as well as adequate resources and services, at the disposal of the Chief Prosecutor and the International Tribunal;

7. Urges all States and relevant organizations to continue to give serious consideration to the recommendations in the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, in particular the recommendation concerning provision for the continuation of necessary medical and psychological care to victims of rape within the framework of programmes to rehabilitate women and children traumatized by war, as well as the provision of protection, counselling and support to victims and witnesses;

8. Recognizes the extraordinary suffering of the victims of rape and sexual violence and the necessity for an appropriate response to provide assistance to those victims, and expresses its concern, in particular, for the welfare of those victims who are currently among the internally displaced or otherwise affected by the war and who have experienced severe trauma and require psychosocial and other assistance;

9. Also urges all States and all relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, to continue to provide to the victims of such rape and abuse appropriate assistance for their physical and mental rehabilitation and to extend their support to the community-based assistance programmes;

10. Demands that the parties cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights and her staff, as well as other mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the monitoring and other missions of the European Union and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, including by providing full access;

11. Encourages the new Special Rapporteur to continue to pay particular attention to the use of rape as a weapon of war, particularly in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, as appropriate, to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 50/192

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/50/635/Add.3) without vote, 13 December (meeting 56); 72-nation draft (A/C.3/50/L.45), orally revised; agenda item 112 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 3rd Committee 35, 38-51, 53, 56; plenary 99.

The Committee adopted the sixth preambular paragraph by a recorded vote of 133 to 1, with 11 abstentions. The General Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 146 to 1, with 10 abstentions.

The media

In a special report on the media,⁽³⁵⁾ Special Rapporteur Tadeusz Mazowiecki stated that most of the media in the former Yugoslavia were controlled, directly or indirectly, by Governments and ruling parties. Nationalistic rhetoric and attacks against other peoples had been the dominant feature of the news since the start of the conflicts. Some journalists had willingly accepted the restrictions placed on their profession, either because of their support for the nationalist cause or merely for reasons of self-advancement. The Special Rapporteur noted that the situation of the media was not entirely bad, and each republic offered examples of courageous journalists, media enterprises and NGOs.

The Special Rapporteur recommended eliminating expressions of hatred from the media and improving legislation concerning the media. He also advocated government responsibility for human rights violations perpetrated in accordance with editorial policy and contributions published or broadcast in the State-owned media. He encouraged projects which provided assistance from democratic countries to the media in the former Yugoslavia.

In January,⁽³⁶⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the report to the General Assembly, the Security Council and ICFY.

Russian Federation

Republic of Chechnya

On 27 February,⁽³⁷⁾ the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights read out a statement indicating the Commission's consensus agreement in connection with the situation of human rights in Chechnya. By it, the Commission, among other things, expressed deep concern over the disproportionate use of force by the Russian armed forces and deplored grave violations of human rights and humanitarian law. It called for an immediate cessation of the fighting and of human rights violations and for the holding of a dialogue with the aim of achieving a peaceful solution to the crisis, with respect for the territorial integrity and the constitution of the Russian Federation, as well as a guarantee of human rights. The Commission supported OSCE efforts to seek a durable solution and urged the Russian Federation to cooperate to further efforts within the framework of OSCE. Noting that it would continue to follow the situation in Chechnya, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1996 on the human rights situation there.

Turkey

On 18 August,⁽³⁸⁾ by a secret ballot of 11 votes to 9, with 2 abstentions, the Subcommission, taking note of the positive initiatives taken by Turkey regarding freedom of expression, decided to postpone consideration of the question until 1996 in expectation of the implementation of those measures.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Colombia

On 6 March, the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights made a statement acknowledging receipt of a written communication from Colombia, pledging the cooperation of the Government with the thematic special procedures of the Commission, and with the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights.⁽¹⁾

On 18 August,⁽²⁾ the Subcommission called on the Government to implement the recommendations made by the thematic rapporteurs and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, and to report to the Commission in 1996 on measures taken. It recommended that the Commission consider in 1996 the developments in Colombia by examining the measures taken by the Government.

Cuba

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January, Special Rapporteur Carl-Johan Groth (Sweden) reported⁽³⁾ on the human rights situation in Cuba. As he had received no reply from the Government of Cuba to his request to visit the country, he based his report on information received from Cubans living outside the country, mainly in the United States, and from representatives of groups and organizations concerned with human rights in Cuba. He discussed allegations of human rights abuses dealing with prison conditions and with the rights to freedom of expression and association, trade union freedom, press freedom and the right to enter and leave the country. Concerning economic, social and cultural rights, the Special Rapporteur stated that the Cuban economy had suffered a breakdown over the past four years, but that the Government had taken tentative steps to remedy the situation. He discussed the issue of "dangerousness", defined in Cuba's Penal Code as a state of habitual inebriation and dipsomania, drug addiction or antisocial behaviour, which might warrant security measures involving therapy, re-education or surveillance by the National Revolutionary Police.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that Cuba end persecution for reasons related to the freedom of peaceful expression and association; release those serving sentences for offences against State security and for trying to leave the country unlawfully; permit legalization of independent groups; ratify the principal human rights instruments to which it was not a party; review legal provisions relating to the concept of a "dangerous state"; repeal legal provisions which entailed discrimination between citizens on political grounds and those concerning the right freely to enter or leave the country; respect the guarantees of due process; ensure greater transparency and guarantees in prisons; and allow NGOs concerned with human rights to enter the country.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 22 to 8, with 23 abstentions, the Commission on 7 March⁽⁴⁾ called on Cuba to permit the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate in full, particularly by allowing him to visit the country. It expressed concern that Cuba had failed to cooperate with it, and regretted the numerous unanswered reports of human rights violations described by the Special Rapporteur, particularly intolerance for freedom of speech and assembly. It called on Cuba to bring the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms up to universally recognized standards and to end all human rights violations as recommended by the Special Rapporteur. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year, and asked him to maintain direct contact with the Government and citizens of Cuba, to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1995 and to report to the Commission in 1996.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/277.

Situation of human rights in Cuba

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/66 of 7 March 1995, approved:

(a) The Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Cuba;

(b) The Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to maintain direct contacts with the Government and citizens of Cuba as specified in previous resolutions of the Commission;

(c) The Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate, bearing in mind, inter alia, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session and to report to the Commission at its fifty-second session on the results of his endeavours pursuant to Commission resolution 1995/66;

(d) The Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/277
23-10-18 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23); agenda item 5 (d).
Meeting numbers. ESC 51, 52.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: China, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria, South Africa, Sudan, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belarus, Bhutan, Brazil, Colombia, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, Jamaica, Malaysia, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Ukraine, Zimbabwe.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the Special Rapporteur's interim report⁽³⁾ on the situation of human rights in Cuba. The Special Rapporteur's request to visit Cuba remained unanswered, thus once again his report was based on meetings with individuals and representatives of organizations and groups concerned with human rights in Cuba. He had travelled to New York and Washington, D.C. (28 August-1 September), where he met with Cuban citizens in exile and representatives of human rights organizations.

The Special Rapporteur received information on alleged violations of freedom of expression and association, press freedom, the administration of justice, the right to leave and return to the country and prison conditions. He discussed the serious economic crisis in Cuba and its impact on the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights.

The Special Rapporteur proposed that Cuba end persecution for reasons related to the freedom of peaceful expression and association; release those serving sentences imposed for offences against State security and for trying to leave the country unlawfully; permit legalization of independent groups; ratify the human rights instruments to which it was not a party; review the legal provisions relating to "dangerousness" and the relevant security measures with a view to eliminating those aspects liable to infringe individual rights and freedoms; repeal legal provisions which implied discrimination between citizens on political grounds; repeal legal provisions which barred Cuban citizens from entering and leaving the country freely without requiring prior administrative authorization; respect the guarantees of due process; investigate events surrounding the sinking of the tugboat 13 de Marzo in the Straits of Florida on 13 July 1994, resulting in fatalities, with a view to punishing those responsible and providing compensation to victims' relatives; ensure greater transparency and guarantees in prisons; and allow NGOs concerned with human rights to enter the country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/198.

Situation of human rights in Cuba

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Reaffirming also that all States have an obligation to fulfil the commitments they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Taking particular note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/66 of 7 March 1995, in which the Commission recognized with deep appreciation the efforts of the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate concerning the situation of human rights in Cuba,

Expressing concern about continuing serious violations of human rights in Cuba, of which the majority are violations of civil and political rights, as outlined in the interim report on the situation of human rights in Cuba submitted to the General Assembly by the Special Rapporteur,

Welcoming the authorization granted to a delegation comprising representatives of four international human rights organizations to visit Cuba, and encouraging the Government of Cuba to grant further access to such organizations,

Also welcoming the release of a number of political prisoners,

Recalling the continued failure of the Government of Cuba to cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights with regard to its resolution 1995/66, including its refusal to permit the Special Rapporteur to visit Cuba,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights for his interim report on the situation of human rights in Cuba;

2. Expresses its full support for the work of the Special Rapporteur;

3. Calls once more upon the Government of Cuba to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur by permitting him full and free access to establish contact with the Government and the citizens of Cuba so that he may fulfil the mandate entrusted to him;

4. Regrets profoundly the numerous violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cuba, as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur to the Commission on Human Rights and in his interim report;

5. Urges the Government of Cuba to ensure freedom of expression and assembly and the freedom to demonstrate peacefully, including by allowing political parties and non-governmental organizations to function freely in the country and by reforming legislation in this area;

6. Welcomes the ratification by the Government of Cuba of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

7. Calls especially upon the Government of Cuba to release the numerous persons detained for activities of a political nature, including those specifically mentioned in the report of the Special Rapporteur who suffer from inadequate medical care while imprisoned or whose rights as journalists or jurists are impeded or denied;

8. Calls upon the Government of Cuba to adopt the other measures proposed in the interim report of the Special Rapporteur to bring the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Cuba into conformity with international law and international human rights instruments and to end all violations of human rights by, inter alia, ratifying and effectively implementing those international human rights instruments to which it is not yet party, ceasing the persecution and punishment of citizens for reasons related to freedom of expression and peaceful association, respecting due process, and granting permission for access to the prisons by non-governmental humanitarian organizations and international humanitarian agencies;

9. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-first session.

Haiti

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In a February report,⁽⁶⁾ Special Rapporteur Mario Tulio Bruni Celli (Venezuela) updated the human rights situation in Haiti based on his visit to the country (9-14 January). He discussed events leading to the return of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide on 15 October 1994 and the subsequent enactment of various legal instruments and military appointments by him upon his return. A main concern expressed to the Special Rapporteur during his visit related to disarming the paramilitary groups and civilians; another related to the slowness of international development cooperation programmes.

Since the return of President Aristide and the appointment and approval of a new Prime Minister, the situation in Haiti had begun to return to normal, with a real decrease in the number of abuses and violations of human rights, the Special Rapporteur stated. The normalization was due to a combination of factors, including the presence of the multinational force, authorized by the Security Council in 1994,⁽⁷⁾ police monitors, reduction of the Haitian Armed Forces, the dismantling and partial disarming of the paramilitary groups, the return of the members of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH), and, presumably, the restoration of the legitimate Government and the appeals by the President to his party members to respect human rights and contribute to reconciliation.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission on Human Rights: once again condemn human rights violations in Haiti; express satisfaction at the effort of the international community to resolve the question concerning Haiti; express its satisfaction at the cooperation established between various bodies of the UN and of the inter-American system and between the latter and democratic Governments in Latin America; express gratitude to the Special Envoy of the Secretaries-General of the UN and the Organization of American States (OAS), to MICIVIH, to international development organizations, to other

UN and OAS bodies and to others whose efforts had led to the restoration of the legitimate authorities; reaffirm previous Commission statements to the effect that the political changes and the return of the legitimate authorities constituted only the beginning of changes necessary to promote human rights; and request the High Commissioner for Human Rights to ensure that the situation was evaluated and studied, priorities were established, programmes were formulated, guidance was provided, responsibilities were defined and coordinated activities were initiated.

Commission action. On 8 March,⁽⁸⁾ the Commission expressed satisfaction at the return of President Aristide, at the re-establishment of constitutional order and at the support given by the President to national reconciliation and efforts to end violence. Condemning the human rights violations that took place during the de facto regime, the Commission called on the Government of Haiti to take measures to improve the administration of justice and the prison system. It urged the Haitian authorities to implement the Special Rapporteur's recommendations, particularly updating civil and criminal legislation, complete separation of the police from the armed forces, establishment of a civilian police force, and separation of and mutual respect for the various powers of the State. It also urged the Government to create favourable conditions for reconstruction and development programmes and called on the international community to cooperate fully towards that end.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to appoint an independent expert to assist the Government in the area of human rights, to examine the development of human rights in Haiti and to monitor the fulfilment by Haiti of its obligations in that area. The independent expert was to submit a report on the implementation of the Commission's resolution to the General Assembly in 1995 and to the Commission in 1996. The Secretary-General was requested to provide, at the Government's request, advisory services in the area of human rights. The requests to the Secretary-General and the independent expert were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1995/281 of 25 July. The Commission decided to consider the question of Haiti in 1996 under the item "Advisory services in the field of human rights".

On 31 July, the Secretary-General appointed Adama Dieng (Senegal) as the independent expert.

Report of the independent expert. Independent expert Dieng presented to the General Assembly a preliminary overview and recommendations⁽⁹⁾ on the human rights situation in Haiti following his first visit to the country (23 September-6 October) and discussions held in neighbouring countries.

He noted that the human rights situation in Haiti had improved considerably since the return of the President. However, common crime had skyrocketed, although the situation had improved somewhat due to the presence of the UN Mission in Haiti (UNMIH). Pre-trial detention was the rule rather than the exception, contributing to overcrowding in prisons. The judicial system was outdated and needed reform. The preamble of the presidential decree of 28 March 1995 setting up the National Commission of Truth and Justice constituted a key to understanding the commitment to end the culture of impunity and to respect the Haitian people's desire to make Haiti a State subject to the rule of law. However, the expert noted that the National Commission could be undermined by a lack of funds. Efforts were under way to rehabilitate Haitian women who still suffered from domestic violence. Children who worked as servants were a major concern.

He recommended investigating political killings; reducing overcrowded conditions in prisons; providing funds to the National Commission; prioritizing support for judicial reform; evaluating the aptitude and independence of the government commissioners appointed by the illegal Governments; organizing retraining sessions for judges and government commissioners; adding instruction in international human rights law to the curricula of the Ecole de la Magistrature and the Police Academy; developing, in cooperation with Haitian human rights organizations, a programme of rural legal services to train paralegals; revising the Code of Criminal Investigation; establishing an institution and a national committee on the rights of the child; keeping the UNMIH civil police in Haiti with a maximum of 300 police officers for a minimum period of five years; extending the MICIVIH mandate; coordinating the technical assistance activities of MICIVIH and the Centre for Human Rights; and providing greater support for programmes to reintegrate former soldiers into civilian life.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/196.

Human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/201 of 23 December 1994,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/70 of 8 March 1995, in which the Commission requested the Secretary-General to appoint an independent expert with the mandate to furnish assistance to the Government of Haiti in the area of human rights, to examine the development of the situation of human rights in that country, to monitor the fulfilment by Haiti of its obligations in this field and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session,

Recognizing the work carried out by the International Civilian Mission to Haiti for the defence of human rights, and recalling General Assembly resolution 49/27 B of 12 July 1995, in which it decided to authorize the extension of the mandate of the Mission,

1. Expresses its thanks for the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for Haiti in favour of the consolidation of democratic institutions in Haiti and the respect for human rights in that country;

2. Welcomes the satisfactory evolution of the political process in Haiti and the holding of legislative and municipal elections and the forthcoming presidential elections, in accordance with the Constitution, as indispensable elements in the strengthening of democratic institutions;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the independent expert of the Commission on Human Rights, Mr. Adama Dieng, on the situation of human rights in Haiti and the recommendations contained therein;

4. Expresses its concern about the recent incidents of violence, in particular the assassination of a member of the Haitian Parliament, and hopes that such acts and other incidents of violence will not impede continued progress in the field of human rights and the consolidation of constitutional democracy;

5. Welcomes the establishment of the programme of technical cooperation prepared by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat aimed at strengthening the institutional capacity in the field of human rights, particularly in the areas of legislative reform, training for justice administration personnel and human rights education;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, through the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Centre for Human Rights, to take appropriate steps to ensure financial and technical resources for the implementation of such a programme;

7. Expresses its support for the work currently undertaken by the National Commission of Truth and Justice, with the cooperation of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, in its investigation of past human rights abuses, and looks forward to its report at the end of 1995;

8. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Haiti at its fifty-first session, on the basis of information provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 50/196

22 December 1995 Meeting 99 Adopted without vote

Middle East

Lebanon

Commission action. On 7 March,⁽¹⁾ the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 48 to 1, with 4 abstentions, deplored the ongoing Israeli violations of human rights in southern Lebanon and the western Bekaa, demonstrated by the kidnapping and arbitrary detention of civilians, destruction of their homes, confiscation of their property, expulsion from their land and the bombardment of their villages. It called on Israel to end such practices immediately and to implement relevant Security Council resolutions requiring its immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal from all Lebanese territory and respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity. It also called on Israel to comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention), to release Lebanese and other prisoners detained in Israeli prisons and detention centres contrary to the Geneva Convention and other provisions of international law, and to facilitate the humanitarian mission of ICRC and similar organizations, allowing them to visit the detention centres of Khiam and Marjayoun. It asked the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to Israel's attention and to invite Israel to provide information on its implementation. He was to report to the General Assembly in 1995 and to the Commission in 1996 on the results of his efforts.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/278.

Human rights situation in southern Lebanon and the western Bekaa

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1995, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/67 of 7 March 1995, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to the attention of the Government of Israel and to invite it to provide information concerning the extent of its implementation thereof, and to report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-second session on the results of his efforts in this regard.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/278

47-1-1 (roll-call vote)

Draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1995/23/Corr.2); agenda item 5 (d). Meeting numbers. ESC 51, 52.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Australia, Bahamas, Belarus, Bhutan, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Denmark, Egypt, France, Gabon, Germany, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Senegal, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe Against: United States.

 Abstaining: Philippines.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 Commission request,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽³⁾ that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's 1994 resolution on the human rights situation in southern Lebanon and had received no reply.

Similarly, the Secretary-General in October reported⁽⁴⁾ that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's 1995 resolution and had received no reply. On 22 December, the General Assembly, by decision 50/461, noted the Secretary-General's report.

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1995, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices) and other bodies (see PART TWO, Chapter VI).

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In 1995, the Commission on Human Rights had before it a report of René Felber (Switzerland), the Special Rapporteur on the question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories.⁽⁵⁾ He described his activities in 1994, including his visit to the Middle East in October (Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Ramallah, Gaza, Hebron and the Negev desert).

He received information from NGOs and the Committee on Israeli practices concerning torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian detainees, prison conditions, violations of freedom of movement, the issue of land and the sealing of houses.

The Special Rapporteur stated that neither the General Assembly nor the Commission on Human Rights had had any particular success in enforcing human rights in the occupied territories. No specific measures had been taken and political condemnation was not proving effective. The solution lay in the establishment of normal peaceful relations between States to guarantee the existence and security of each of them. That did not mean that human rights violations should not be denounced or that interventions should not be made in countries where human rights were under threat. He suggested changing the method by possibly doing away with the services of a Special Rapporteur altogether. A report might soothe con-sciences, he said, but its effectiveness should be measured by the impact of the points it made and by how seriously they were taken by those to whom they were addressed.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported⁽⁶⁾ that he had brought the Commission's 1994 resolutions on human rights violations in the Israeli-occupied territories to the attention of Israel and other Governments, the Committee on Israeli practices and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. They had also been transmitted to the specialized agencies, the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, international humanitarian organizations and NGOs. Information had also been disseminated through UN press releases, documents and UN information centres and services.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a list of all General Assembly and other reports issued since 11 March 1994 on the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories.⁽⁷⁾

Commission action. On 17 February,⁽⁸⁾ by a roll-call vote of 26 to 2, with 21 abstentions, the Commission, deeply regretting the continued human rights violations in the occupied Palestinian territory since the 1993 signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization,⁽⁹⁾ called on Israel to desist from all human rights violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, to respect the principles of international law and its commitments to the UN Charter, and to withdraw from the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other occupied Arab territories in accordance with UN and Commission resolutions. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of the Government of Israel and to all other Governments, concerned UN organs, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it as widely as possible and to report in 1996 on its implementation by Israel. The Commission also asked him to provide it with all UN reports issued between its sessions that dealt with conditions in which the Palestinians were living under Israeli occupation.

In another 17 February resolution,⁽¹⁰⁾ adopted by a roll-call vote of 25 to 1, with 23 abstentions, the Commission called on Israel to comply with UN resolutions on the Syrian Golan and demanded that Israel rescind its decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that occupied territory. Calling on Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the Syrian Golan, the Commission emphasized that displaced persons must be allowed to return to their homes and to recover their properties. The Commission further called on Israel to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and identity cards on Syrians in the Golan and to desist from its repressive measures against them. It determined that all Israeli measures that altered the character and legal status of the Syrian Golan were null and void, violated international law and the fourth Geneva Convention and had no legal effect. It again called on Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures or actions mentioned in its resolution. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of all Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to give the resolution wide publicity and to report in 1996.

In a third text,⁽¹¹⁾ adopted on 17 February by a roll-call vote of 46 to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed that the installation of Israeli civilians in the occupied territories was illegal and constituted a violation of the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention. It regretted that Israel had not complied with its resolutions adopted in 1990,⁽¹²⁾ 1991,⁽¹³⁾ 1992,⁽¹⁴⁾ 1993⁽¹⁵⁾ and 1994.⁽¹⁶⁾ It urged Israel to abstain from and prevent any installation of settlers in the occupied territories.

Subcommission action. On 18 August,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 17 votes to

2, with 4 abstentions, called on Israel: to comply with its international obligations, respect the rules of international law and apply the fourth Geneva Convention to the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories; to desist from establishing Israeli settlements; to comply with relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions; and to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and from imposing Israeli citizenship and identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan, and to desist from its repressive measures against them. It called on Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures referred to in its resolution. The Subcommission called on the Palestinian Authority to comply with all international human rights norms, to provide greater access to its prisons and interrogators through international organizations, to avail itself of the advisory services offered by the Centre for Human Rights, and to hold free elections.

PART FOUR

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic cooperation

The beginning of 1995 saw the global economy in strong condition. Although the growth of output rate—around 3 per cent—was not very rapid, it was unusually widespread and appeared to be sustainable. The developed market economies had emerged from the recession of the early 1990s, the situation in the transition economies was encouraging, and the developing countries were in their fourth year of relatively strong economic growth. Latin America, however, was experiencing a contractionary phase following the exchange-rate crisis in Mexico in late 1994, which spread financial shock over the region. Although growth was expected to strengthen in Africa in 1995, economic activity was affected by civil strife in a number of countries, and inadequate or irregular rainfall curtailed agricultural production in others.

Work continued on an agenda for development, initially proposed by the Secretary-General in 1992 as an integrated approach towards the wide range of economic and social issues confronting the United Nations. An Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group was established and held three sessions in 1995 to advance efforts towards an international consensus on cooperation for development.

The need for strategies to eradicate poverty was discussed by the Commission on Sustainable Development and by the Standing Committee on Poverty Alleviation of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. The Assembly, in December, adopted a resolution on the observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (1996). It also proclaimed the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006).

The implementation of Agenda 21, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, continued to be monitored by the Commission on Sustainable Development. During the Commission's April session, a high-level meeting with ministerial participation discussed, among other things, the concept of sustainable development. In December, the General Assembly decided to hold a special session in 1997 to carry out a review and appraisal of Agenda 21.

In July, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the report of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, which held its second session in May, recommended that Governments adopt the Declaration of Intent on Gender, Science and Technology for Sustainable Development. In other action, the Council invited the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to continue to contribute to the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development on the science and technology components of Agenda 21. The Assembly, in December, called on those two bodies to interact more effectively, through the Council, in carrying out their mandates.

The problems of the 48 officially designated least developed countries (LDCs) were discussed at the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s, held in September/October. The Assembly endorsed the Meeting's recommendations, which it annexed to its December resolution on the subject, and stressed the critical importance of providing multilateral assistance for LDCs.

The special challenges facing small island developing States were also considered by the Assembly as it reviewed action being taken to implement the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island States. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure that the Secretariat's Small Island Developing States Unit include in its work programme provision for the development and compilation of a vulnerability index for that group of countries.

In the public administration area, the Twelfth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance, which took place in July/August, acted as the preparatory meeting for the resumed fiftieth session of the Assembly (1996) to be devoted to the question of public administration and development.

International economic relations

Development and international economic cooperation

During 1995, several United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, considered development and international economic cooperation issues.

The Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee discussed matters relating to macroeconomic policy questions and sustainable development and international economic cooperation and made recommendations on a number of topics. By decision 50/425 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of part one of the Committee's report on sustainable development and international economic cooperation.⁽¹⁾

By decision 50/468 of 22 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development and decided to include it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first (1996) session.

Agenda for development

An agenda for development—an integrated approach to the many and varied economic and social issues dealt with by the United Nations—was first proposed by the Secretary-General in his report on the work of the Organization in 1992.⁽²⁾ Later that year, the General Assembly asked⁽³⁾ that a report on that proposal be prepared by the Secretary-General. In May 1994, he presented a wide-ranging document, "An agenda for development",⁽⁴⁾ presenting initial approaches and broad themes to be pursued. It was subsequently discussed at World Hearings on Development held in June 1994 in New York.⁽⁵⁾

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁶⁾ the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on an Agenda for Development was established in early 1995 under the chairmanship of the Assembly President. The Working Group held three sessions during the year (21-24 February; 8-19 May; and 28 August-8 September)⁽⁷⁾ to elaborate further an agenda for development.

At its first session, the Working Group exchanged views on a tentative outline for an agenda for development and asked the Secretariat to provide a compendium containing the goals, targets and commitments of major UN conferences, agreements and meetings that had been held during the preceding five years and an assessment of their status of implementation. At its second session, the Working Group had before it an outline proposed by its two Vice-Chairmen, the compendium and contributions from a number of groups and States. Based on the outline, the Working Group agreed that the proposed agenda for development should comprise three chapters: setting and objectives; policy framework, including means of implementation; and institutional issues and follow-up. Subsequently, the Working Group discussed the first two chapters and asked for preparation of a synthesis text to take into account both debate and written contributions. Interested groups and/or States were invited to make contributions on all three chapters. At its third session, the Working Group reviewed the synthesis text and exchanged views on the third chapter. A revised synthesis text, including the third chapter, was requested.

At a meeting on 8 September, the Working Group recommended that work on the agenda for development continue during the Assembly's fiftieth session.

By decision 49/497 of 14 September, the Assembly noted the progress report of the Ad Hoc Working Group⁽⁷⁾ and decided that the Group should continue its work during the Assembly's fiftieth session, with a view to finalizing an agenda for development.

The Assembly's Second Committee discussed an agenda for development on 19 October⁽⁸⁾ but took no action. By decision 50/437 of 20 December, the Assembly noted the report of the Second Committee on that same subject.

Economic and Social Council consideration. In accordance with a 10 February decision (1995/216), the Economic and Social Council extended an invitation to the General Assembly President to make a statement at the Council's substantive session on the work of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on an Agenda for Development. In a 3 July address,⁽⁹⁾ he informed the Council of progress achieved by the Working Group at its first and second sessions and described the proposed outline for the agenda for development (see above).

Development through partnership

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October 1995 report on renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership.⁽¹¹⁾ He observed that progress on several fronts had confirmed the validity of the approach to development through partnership suggested in his 1994 note on the subject.⁽¹²⁾ On 28 July,⁽¹³⁾ the Economic and Social Council had agreed on elements of a coordinated approach to the follow-up to major UN conferences (see PART SIX, Chapter IV). Also, the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Development (see above) had embraced the emergence of globalization and interdependence as the key elements of the agenda's setting and objectives, and the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations was providing impetus to the effort to renew the Organization's role in harmonizing the interests of nations. In particular, the policy framework being developed in the agenda and the issues identified for priority attention should set the stage for the renewal and pursuit of a constructive dialogue based on partnership.

The report listed the elements of the policy framework identified in the proposed agenda for development. It also suggested some themes that could be drawn on by the partners in the dialogue on the management of global change: globalization and the rules of the game; competition; regional integration and the global economy; new information technologies and the global economy; international migration; prevention and management of emergencies and post-conflict peace-building; and crime, drugs, violence and global stability. Modalities were proposed for conducting a dialogue on broad intersectoral themes in the context of a high-level plenary session of the General Assembly, as suggested by the Secretary-General in 1994.⁽¹²⁾

The October 1995 report concluded that a high-level dialogue conducted in a constructive spirit in the Assembly would help to reinvigorate the Assembly's policy-making role in the economic, social and related fields and enable the United Nations to contribute to improving the management and governance of the world economy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/122.

Renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/165 of 21 December 1993 and 49/95 of 19 December 1994 on renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Secretary-General to encourage a constructive dialogue for enhancing development and to facilitate actions in that regard,

Noting also the ongoing work of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly on an Agenda for Development,

Recognizing that the continued trend towards deepening interdependence among countries and the increasing globalization of economic issues and problems present risks and uncertainties as well as opportunities and challenges for dialogue on international economic cooperation,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership;

2. Reaffirms that such a dialogue should be conducted in response to the imperatives of mutual interests and benefits, genuine interdependence, shared responsibility and the partnership for achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development as well as improving the international economic environment that is conducive to such development, and that the United Nations should reinforce its activities in order to facilitate such a dialogue;

3. Stresses the need to put development at the centre of United Nations activities and that the United Nations has a central role to play in promoting international economic cooperation for development and in bringing development issues to the attention of the international community;

4. Recognizes that the ongoing discussions in the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Development and its outcome aim at strengthening constructive dialogue with a view to enhancing and revitalizing international economic cooperation through increased partnership among and between countries;

5. Agrees to hold a high-level dialogue for a period of two days at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly—the date, modalities and focus of the discussion to be decided on in the context of the outcome of the work of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Development and the decision taken on the adoption of the agenda—on the theme of the social and economic impact of globalization and interdependence and their policy implications, and requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with Governments, relevant organizations and other development actors, to make initial preparations for such a dialogue;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit further recommendations for enhancing the dialogue, taking into consideration the agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council on coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system and implementation of the results of the major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, the outcome of the ongoing discussions in the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on an Agenda for Development, and on restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, for its consideration, recommendations on possible future themes for dialogue, including the issues of regional integration and of new information technology and the global economy;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to elaborate his proposals to convene special sessions of the General Assembly, on major issues relevant to the dialogue on international economic cooperation for development, including those identified in an Agenda for Development;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session a sub-item entitled "Renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership" under the item entitled "Agenda for development".

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/622) without vote, 8 December (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.67), orally revised, based on informal consultations on draft introduced by Philippines for Group of 77 and China, Colombia for Non-Aligned Movement, and Kyrgyzstan (A/C.2/50/L.11); agenda item 100.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 17, 29, 42; plenary 96.

UN initiative on opportunity and participation

In accordance with a 1993 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General appointed the members of the UN Panel on Opportunity and Participation, which met in New York from 15 to 19 May 1995. By an October note,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the Panel's report to the Assembly. The Panel stated that although concepts of opportunity and participation encompassed a wide range of economic, social and political issues, it had concentrated on aspects related to economic opportunity within the framework of sustainable development. The Panel discussed the concepts of opportunity and participation and factors shaping the policy environment at both the international and national levels. It also highlighted the complementary roles of the overall economic environment and the importance of appropriate economy-wide policies at the national level. As a way to increase opportunity and participation in developing countries, with special reference to poverty eradication and the situation of disadvantaged groups, the Panel also considered the relevance of, and scope for, the promotion of micro-enterprises and small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), including the need for targeted approaches. It further discussed the positive impact of environmentally sustainable agriculture on rural development and the relevance of the participatory approach in its promotion.

The Panel concluded that the continuous creation and exploitation of opportunity and the widening of participation were required for sustainable development. The participatory approach was found to be particularly effective in programmes aimed at poverty alleviation and in promoting sustainable agriculture and fisheries. The promotion of micro-enterprises and SMEs was found to be an important way to enhance opportunity and broaden participation, primarily through creating employment. That required sound macroeconomic policies and other economy-wide policies at the national level supported by a favourable international environment. The Panel further concluded that targeted policies for promoting SMEs were also necessary owing to the vulnerability of the sector. Finally, it considered that the United Nations could play an important role in disseminating the concepts of opportunity and participation and the development strategies embodying them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/108.

United Nations initiative on opportunity and participation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/60 of 14 December 1993 and its decision 49/434 of 19 December 1994 on a United Nations initiative on opportunity and participation,

Reaffirming that one of the fundamental prerequisites of the achievement of sustainable development is broad-based public participation in decision-making,

Acknowledging the relevance of opportunity and participation in the economic and social development agenda of the United Nations, as reflected in the various international conferences and agreements related to the follow-up of the Rio process,

Commending the South Pacific Forum Vision Statement, adopted by the Twenty-sixth South Pacific Forum, held at Madang, Papua New Guinea, from 13 to 15 September 1995, which promotes opportunities for international and regional cooperation leading to growth with equity, broad-based participation and capacity-building for self-reliance,

Noting that the United Nations Panel on Opportunity and Participation met at United Nations Headquarters from 15 to 19 May 1995,

1. Welcomes the report of the United Nations Panel on Opportunity and Participation;

2. Takes note of the Panel's contribution to the completion of an agenda for development and the follow-up arrangements to the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995;

3. Invites Member States and relevant organizations and agencies of the United Nations system to consider the insights and the recommendations of the Panel, particularly the sections of its report related to the efforts to be made for the development of small and medium-sized enterprises in developing countries as an effective measure for promoting opportunity and participation in the context of national development and the economic and social development of all peoples;

4. Invites the Commission for Sustainable Development, in the overall framework of trade, environment and sustainable development, alleviating poverty and promoting sustainable agriculture and rural development and small-scale fisheries development, to draw upon the work of the Panel;

5. Invites the Committee for Development Planning, in accordance with its mandate, to take into account the recommendations of the Panel in its work in 1996 in the context of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade;

6. Encourages the relevant agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the regional commissions, to increase their efforts to promote opportunity and participation, and to develop those concepts and incorporate them into their strategies and programmes, including regional and national workshops and seminars;

7. Invites Member States and international organizations to make voluntary contributions to these efforts;

8. Encourages support for the widest possible dissemination of the report of the Panel to the international community.

General Assembly resolution 50/108

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.10) without vote, 8 December (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.60), based on informal consultations on 17-nation draft (A/C.2/50/L.36); agenda item 95 (j).

Rural development and management of land resources

Commission on Sustainable Development.
The Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on Sustainable Development (New York, 11-28 April) a report on promoting sustainable agriculture and rural development (SARD),⁽¹⁶⁾ prepared by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). The report discussed progress made in implementing chapter 14 ("Promoting sustainable agriculture and rural development") of Agenda 21, adopted in 1992⁽¹⁷⁾ by the UN Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED), and was the result of consultations among designated focal points in various UN organizations and international and national non-governmental organizations (NGOs). It described the current situation with regard to agricultural production, nutrition and food security and assessed progress in different SARD programme areas. The report noted that major SARD issues varied in each group of countries and identified gaps in implementing SARD, such as lack of an overall SARD policy, the failure to address both poverty-environment links and environmental problems associated with uncontrolled agricultural commercialization, and slow progress in promoting off-farm employment and attracting financial resources.

The report reviewed the experience and progress achieved at the country level and by major groups, such as NGOs and farmers' and women's organizations, and discussed recent developments in international cooperation between Governments, within the UN system and between organizations outside the United Nations. Addressing matters related to finance and technology, the report noted that financing efforts to promote SARD was a key issue, especially in developing countries. In Agenda 21, it was estimated that the average annual cost (1993-2000) of implementing SARD would be about $31.8 billion, of which some $5.075 billion was to come from the international community as grants or concessional loans. As for technology, case-studies had demonstrated that sustainable production techniques existed and that farmers in both developed and developing countries were showing an interest in adopting them.

The report concluded that productive agriculture was an essential prerequisite of SARD, with its multiple objectives of reducing poverty and improving livelihoods, while conserving and protecting the natural resource base. However, achieving SARD was a complex and slow-moving process. Within the majority of developing countries and economies in transition, an incentive environment was needed to promote private-sector investment in agriculture and to reward environmental protection. In all countries, policies oriented towards promoting food and agricultural production and rural development and raising or maintaining farm incomes, while protecting the natural resource base, needed to be coherent, consistent and mutually supportive. In addition, there was a need for a deeper understanding of socio-gender-cultural-economic relationships between the farmer and his or her environment, for better sharing of information on both sustainable indigenous and modern technologies and for reorientation of data-collecting and information management systems at the national level in parallel with the development of sustainability indicators.

The report set forth general strategy and specific proposals for action for implementing SARD.

In April, the Commission on Sustainable Development noted⁽¹⁸⁾ that disappointment had been widely expressed at the slow progress in moving towards SARD in many countries. It recommended that FAO, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), together with government agencies, NGOs and people's representative organizations, promote an exchange of experiences with participatory mechanisms, with a view to enhancing their effectiveness. FAO, in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the World Trade Organization (WTO), UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and other organizations, was asked to analyse the implications for SARD of the 1994 Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations⁽¹⁹⁾ at national, regional and international levels. In that context, the Commission noted the importance of a comprehensive examination of the environmental consequences of agricultural practices and policies, including agricultural subsidies, and their impact on SARD. The Commission stressed the importance of developing internationally agreed agri-environmental criteria and indicators; urged Governments to work out their own comprehensive agricultural policies and programmes to take full account of environmental concerns and capacity-building, encouraged them to integrate action on energy into their SARD efforts and urged them to support the efforts of developing countries in their transition towards the sustainable use of a mix of fossil and renewable sources of energy for rural communities; urged support for research and technology development, for strengthened national and international action to bring international cooperation for the conservation and sustainable use of animal genetic resources to a level similar to that for plant genetic resources and for strengthened coordination and cooperation efforts related to SARD; and recommended steps by all countries to reduce the environmental impact of pesticide use and that there should be a synthesis and exchange of information and practical experience among Governments, intergovernmental agencies and agricultural research institutions, and non-governmental and farmers' organizations, with a view to identifying models that could be applied in other situations.

In another report⁽²⁰⁾ to the Commission, the Secretary-General detailed progress in implementing chapter 10 ("Integrated approach to the planning and management of land resources") of Agenda 21.⁽¹⁷⁾ He presented a number of proposals for action at the international and national levels for Commission consideration.

In April, the Commission noted⁽¹⁸⁾ with concern the convergence of poverty, hunger and the degradation of terrestrial resources in environmentally more fragile marginal lands, and called on Governments, bilateral donors, multilateral financial institutions, technical specialized agencies and NGOs to give high priority to rural development in such lower-potential areas. Governments were urged to develop national and/or local land-use planning systems containing a statement of objectives and a detailed timetable for implementation spread over a period of years. They were also urged to pay particular attention to: establishing stable land-use systems in areas where important ecosystems or ecoregions were endangered by human activities; applying integrated planning and development approaches in regions subject to intensified settlement and agricultural production; and bringing about integrated approaches to capacity-building. The Secretary-General was asked to strengthen coordination and cooperation within the UN system through joint approaches and collaborative programmes. FAO, in partnership with UNEP, UNDP, other international bodies and Governments, and with contributions from NGOs, should develop tools and recommend actions for integrated land management. Such action should involve the Commission in its capacity as a forum for exchanging knowledge and experience, with the full participation of developing countries.

The Commission noted with appreciation the outcome of an international workshop dealing with integrated planning and management of land resources (Wageningen, the Netherlands, 20-22 February 1995)⁽²¹⁾ and invited the Government of the Netherlands and FAO to disseminate the workshop's report and recommendations.

ACC Subcommittee. The Subcommittee on Rural Development of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) met in Paris from 31 May to 2 June.⁽²²⁾ It adopted revised terms of reference, which it submitted to the ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ), and examined reports of agencies on experiences in rural areas in promoting income-generating activities and on the rehabilitation of returnees. It also considered the reports of the Panel on Monitoring and Evaluation (Paris, 23 and 24 March) and the Working Group on Industrial Contribution to Rural Development (Paris, 30 May).

Papers were presented on environment and rural development, rural/urban linkages and their importance for rural development, and development, public action and rural poverty alleviation.

CCPOQ (New York, 19-22 September)⁽²³⁾ recommended to ACC the adoption of the Subcommittee's revised terms of reference.

Business and development

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1995 report on entrepreneurship and privatization for economic growth and sustainable development.⁽²⁵⁾ The report described the private sector's contributions towards economic growth and sustainable development and summarized responses from 37 UN entities that had been asked to provide information on: activities in promoting entrepreneurship and privatization programmes and implementing demonopolization and administrative deregulation; technical assistance programmes on development of national capacities to promote entrepreneurship, design and implementation of privatization policies and creation of enabling environments; and partnerships between private and public entities.

The report concluded that, with regard to privatization, Governments were encouraged to use the sectoral and cross-sectoral agencies of the UN to evaluate and assess their privatization policies and programmes. Concerning the commercialization of State-owned enterprises, Governments should pay greater attention to possible performance improvement in parastatals not scheduled for sale or liquidation and seek technical assistance from the international community. Regulatory policies should be stable as frequent changes added to investment risks and deterred new investment. With regard to private-sector development, the UN system should assist Governments to create an enabling environment for small and medium-size enterprise start-ups and expansion by special programmes targeted at that sector. As to military conversion to civilian goods and services, the UN should continue and expand assistance to Member States by collecting and analysing data, managing an information clearing house, developing enterprise conversion models from case-studies of successes and failures, and providing technical assistance support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/106.

Business and development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 48/180 of 21 December 1993,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning policies and activities related to entrepreneurship, privatization, demonopolization and administrative deregulation,

Also taking note of chapter VI of the World Economic and Social Survey, 1995,

Further taking note of the report of the Committee on an International Agreement on Illicit Payments on its first and second sessions, the report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on efforts by the United Nations to address the issue of corrupt practices and work undertaken in other international forums on the issue of corrupt practices,

Looking forward to the review by the Economic and Social Council of the report of the Twelfth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Development,

Aware of the need to increase private-sector involvement in the provision of infrastructure services, inter alia, through joint ventures between public and private entities, particularly in countries with economies in transition, while protecting essential services and safeguarding the environment,

Recognizing the important role of Governments in creating, through transparent and participatory processes, an enabling environment supportive of entrepreneurship and facilitative of privatization, in particular in establishing the judicial, executive and legislative frameworks necessary for a market-based exchange of goods and services and for good management,

Taking note of the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime (Naples, 21-23 November 1994 and Buenos Aires, November 1995), and of the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Cairo, 29 April-8 May 1995), in particular the consideration by those conferences of the issue of illicit payments in international business transactions,

Acknowledging the need for international cooperation to deal with the problem of illicit payments in international business transactions, such as in the ongoing work on its draft international agreement on illicit payments, so as to promote accountability and a stable and predictable international business environment, and acknowledging further that international efforts in that field require the cooperation of all countries concerned,

1. Values the promotion of entrepreneurship in the development of small and medium-sized enterprises and industries by various actors throughout civil society, and of privatization, demonopolization and the simplification of administrative procedures;

2. Invites Member States, requests the Secretary-General and calls upon and encourages the relevant organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to continue to foster active participation in support of entrepreneurship, privatization, demonopolization and the simplification of administrative procedures, as described in General Assembly resolution 48/180;

3. Also invites Member States, requests the Secretary-General and calls upon and encourages the relevant organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, in their respective activities for the provision of infrastructure services, to encourage private-sector cost-effective involvement in the efficient construction, use and maintenance of infrastructure;

4. Looks forward to its resumed session in March and April 1996, during which it will examine public administration and development, and address the issues contained in its agenda, including the role of public administration in promoting partnership for development;

5. Welcomes the continuation of work on illicit payments in relevant international forums, including the United Nations, taking account of progress already achieved on that issue;

6. Recommends that the Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session of 1996, consider the appropriate time-frame and procedure for the continuation of the work with a view to completing the draft international agreement on illicit payments, including consideration of the draft at the substantive session of 1996 of the Council, and recommends that the Council report to the Assembly at its fifty-first session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item "Sustainable development and international economic cooperation: business and development".

Role of enterprises in development

The Ad Hoc Working Group on the Role of Enterprises in Development, established by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board in 1994,⁽²⁶⁾ held two sessions in 1995, both in Geneva. At its first session (3-7 April),⁽²⁷⁾ the Working Group analysed the State's role in creating an enabling environment for promoting entrepreneurship and enterprises, especially small and medium-size enterprises, with reference to the regulatory framework and incentive structure, human resources development, institution building and institutional support, and the integration of the informal sector into the formal economy. It also examined the role of SMEs in export development, giving due consideration to possible advantages arising from the globalization process. The Working Group had before it UNCTAD reports on creating an enabling environment for the development of enterprises, particularly SMEs,⁽²⁸⁾ and on the role of SMEs in export development.⁽²⁹⁾

At its second session (3-7 July), the Working Group focused on interactions between the development of SMEs and of capital markets and banking systems, with particular reference to the generation of domestic savings and access to capital markets and other sources of financing. It also sought to identify areas where technical cooperation in support of policy development to enhance the role of SMEs could be strengthened. The Working Group had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on issues concerning SMEs' access to finance⁽³⁰⁾ and on strengthening technical cooperation for policy development to enhance the role of SMEs.⁽³¹⁾ In 1995, the Working Group reviewed studies or presentations on the role of enterprise in development submitted by 22 countries.

In conclusions and recommendations in its final report,⁽³²⁾ which also covered the work of its second session, the Working Group welcomed the consensus reached on the important role of SMEs in the development process and the need to provide a supportive infrastructure for SME development, including: establishment of favourable macroeconomic conditions and a sound policy and commercial framework for business development, resource mobilization, financial institutional development and the promotion of long-term lending for enterprise development; policy and support measures to enhance the availability and efficient utilization of essential inputs of SMEs, including finance, market information and training, as well as to strengthen enterprise capabilities and linkages in order to facilitate the development of enterprises and their expansion into export markets; the promotion of various types of financial institutions, including community-based banks, taking into account the importance of personal contact in mobilizing domestic savings, as well as of a dialogue among policy makers, development banks and other financial institutions and SMEs; and technical cooperation in support of policy development, institution building and inter-firm cooperation for enhancing the role of SMEs in the development process.

The Working Group recommended that technical cooperation be continued and strengthened by both multilateral and bilateral support for SME development and for their role in trade development, including in the following areas: policy and commercial framework for enterprise development; institutional support for SME development; promotion of inter-firm linkages and modernization of SMEs, including the improvement of marketing capabilities; and regional cooperation on SME development, including networking of SME development support agencies. The Working Group noted that the provisional agenda for the ninth session (1996) of UNCTAD (UNCTAD IX) contained an item on promoting enterprise development and competitiveness in developing countries and countries in transition and considered that the following topics were worthy of further study: nature and causes of market imperfections that inhibit the viable development of SMEs; cost and benefit analysis of incentive structure and programmes, such as policy-based lending and credit guarantees, for SME development; effectiveness of different types of technical cooperation activities for SME development; improvement and diversification of the financial sector in order to promote enterprise development; and facilitation of interfirm linkages, including through networking and promotion of standards for information exchange. The Working Group considered that the results of its work would provide useful inputs for the UNCTAD IX preparatory process.

At its eighteenth special session (Geneva, 11-15 December), the Trade and Development Board decided⁽³³⁾ to transmit the Ad Hoc Working Group's final report to the Board's executive session in February/March 1996 so it could be taken into account in relation to the substantive content of the document to be prepared for UNCTAD IX.

Coercive economic measures

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September report on economic measures as means of political and economic coercion against developing countries.⁽³⁵⁾ The report contained a summary of responses received from seven States (Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Estonia, Iraq, Japan, Madagascar) on the issue of coercive economic measures and a review of actions taken by UN bodies and other international instruments. The report also summarized the main findings of an expert group meeting on coercive economic measures, convened by the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis (New York, 22 and 23 June).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/96.

Economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing the international trading system and trade policies for development contained in relevant resolutions, rules and provisions of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the World Trade Organization,

Reaffirming its resolutions 44/215 of 22 December 1989, 46/210 of 20 December 1991 and 48/168 of 21 December 1993,

Gravely concerned that the use of coercive economic measures adversely affects the economy and development efforts of developing countries and has a general negative impact on international economic cooperation and on worldwide efforts to move towards a non-discriminatory and open trading system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, which contains a summary of the deliberations of the group of experts on coercive economic measures;

2. Urges the international community to adopt urgent and effective measures to eliminate the use by some developed countries of unilateral coercive economic measures against developing countries which are not authorized by relevant organs of the United Nations or are inconsistent with the principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations, as a means of forcibly imposing the will of one State on another;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to assign to the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis of the Secretariat, in cooperation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the task of continuing to monitor the imposition of measures of this nature and to prepare possible methodologies or criteria for evaluating the impact of such measures on the affected countries, including the impact on trade and development, for the consideration of Member States;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 100-30-22 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.1) by recorded vote (79-27-19), 5 December (meeting 41); draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.18), agenda item 95 (a).

Sustainable development

Commission on Sustainable Development

The Commission on Sustainable Development held its third session in New York from 11 to 28 April.⁽¹⁸⁾ In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly recommendation,⁽³⁶⁾ a high-level meeting with ministerial participation was held on 26, 27 and 28 April to review the implementation of Agenda 21,⁽¹⁷⁾ adopted by UNCED in 1992,⁽³⁷⁾ to consider emergency policy issues and to provide political impetus to the implementation of UNCED decisions and commitments.

In a March report,⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General presented a number of issues that he felt the high-level meeting might wish to address: the concept of sustainable development; national-level experience in achieving sustainable development; the cluster of finance, changing production and consumption patterns and trade; technology; integrated land management; and forests. The high-level meeting also considered the report of the third (1994) session of the High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development.⁽³⁹⁾

Reports before the Commission dealt with a variety of subjects: an integrated approach to the planning and management of land resources and promoting sustainable agriculture and rural development (see above); combating deforestation, managing fragile ecosystems, conservation of biological diversity and information for decision-making and Earthwatch (see PART FOUR, Chapter VII); financial resources and mechanisms for sustainable development and trade, environment and sustainable development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IV); poverty eradication and sustainable development (see below); demographic dynamics and sustainability (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII); and science for sustainable development, transfer of environmentally sound technologies and environmentally sound management of biotechnology (see below).

By decision 1995/235 of 17 July, the Economic and Social Council noted the Commission's report on its 1995 session and endorsed the recommendations pertaining to cross-sectoral issues, the programme of work for the ad hoc open-ended inter-sessional working groups and the provisional agenda for the Commission's 1996 session.

Full EC participation. As agreed in 1994,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session, considered the question of the full participation by the European Community (EC) in the Commission on Sustainable Development. The Council had before it a note by the Secretariat⁽⁴¹⁾ that addressed various legal and procedural questions pertaining to EC participation.

By decision 1995/201 of 8 February, the Council adopted modalities for EC's full participation in the Commission. While not a member of the Commission, EC's participation would include the rights to speak and reply and to introduce proposals and amendments. It would also include the right to raise as a point of order the fact that consultations were under way among Community member States on a matter on which a decision was to be made and for which EC was the representative on the Commission; that right would not include the right to challenge the Chairman's decision in response to the point of order. EC would not have the right to vote but could submit proposals to be put to the vote if requested by a Commission member. Subject to Council approval, similar arrangements would apply to other regional or subregional economic integration organizations to which their member States had transferred competence over a range of matters within the Commission's purview.

Cross-sectoral issues

In a March report,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General summarized an analysis of submissions from 41 major group organizations, 20 Governments and 17 UN and non-UN intergovernmental organizations, on the role and contribution of major groups in the follow-up to Agenda 21,⁽⁴³⁾ particularly during 1994-1995. Country information indicated some positive steps regarding major group participation in such areas as the national Agenda 21 coordination mechanisms. The intergovernmental sphere showed significant support for participation of major groups in various regular and conference-related meetings; continued support for training, information dissemination and research collaboration activities; and some support for participation in policy-making and project design.

The report concluded that overall interest and participation of major groups in Agenda 21 follow-up had increased in the period 1994-1995 compared with previous years. There was also a trend among Governments and international organizations to include multiple sectors of major groups in efforts to identify problems. It could be argued, the report stated, that the political and practical significance of the major groups concept had influenced the way individuals, organizations and institutions at all levels were looking at economic and social challenges. However, the existence of numerous activities, programmes and projects did not necessarily mean that problems were solved. Positive examples reflected the experiences of relatively few major groups compared with the full spectrum of organizations around the world. Also, national information was limited, with only 20 of 183 UN Member States providing information.

Based on proposals for action contained in the Secretary-General's report, the Commission⁽⁴⁸⁾ brought a number of matters to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. It reiterated the importance of enabling and empowering partnerships between the governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental sectors in achieving Agenda 21 goals, emphasized national-level participation of major groups in implementing and monitoring Agenda 21 through national coordination mechanisms, including national councils on sustainable development or national networks of major groups, and recommended that such participation be encouraged, strengthened and expanded. The Commission recommended that existing and future national coordination mechanisms should strive to achieve representation of all major group sectors and that, in establishing those mechanisms, national and local major group organizations should choose their own representatives. It also recommended that major groups should continue to be involved in inter-sessional events and encouraged partnerships among Governments, intergovernmental organizations and major groups in organizing inter-sessional activities and other meetings. The Commission recognized the desirability of additional funding to increase major-group participation in its sessions, inter-sessional activities and other meetings concerning Agenda 21 follow-up and urged interested institutions to explore the possibility of creating suitable arrangements. It requested Governments and international organizations, together with major groups such as business and industry and academic communities, to explore ways to increase the availability of and access to electronic information systems and urged all countries to seek and enable public-private partnerships. Noting the need to ensure that information submitted by major-group organizations was fully utilized, the Commission asked the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development to consider that issue and to report to the Commission in 1996. The Secretary-General was asked to include information on recognizing and strengthening the role of major groups at the national and local levels in his 1996 report.

Other reports dealing with cross-sectoral issues included notes on activities of FAO and the World Food Programme in sustainable development⁽⁴⁵⁾ and on integrating environment and development in decision-making,⁽⁴⁴⁾ reports on changing consumption and production patterns (see below),⁽⁴⁵⁾ on national information,⁽⁴⁶⁾ and on progress in implementing the decisions and recommendations of the Commission's second (1994) session,⁽⁴⁷⁾ a March ACC statement to the Commission⁽⁴⁸⁾ and the report of the Workshop on Indicators of Sustainable Development for Decision-making (Ghent, Belgium, 9-11 January 1995).⁽⁴⁹⁾

Changing consumption and production patterns

In a March report,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Secretary-General described progress made in implementing chapter 4 of Agenda 21 ("Changing consumption patterns"), with special reference to recommendations made by the Commission in 1994.⁽⁵⁰⁾ In a general overview, the report identified the environmental, social and economic impact of existing production and consumption patterns with a view to assisting Governments to establish national priorities. It also summarized the results of recent projections and perspective studies, addressed the relevance of data and information collection for monitoring, evaluating and reviewing performance, and analysed policy measures aimed at promoting sustainable production and consumption patterns, with a focus on the use of economic instruments. Progress by Governments, major groups and international organizations in implementing the Commission's 1994 decisions was reviewed.

The report concluded that considerable progress had been made, especially in developed countries, in reducing the intensity of energy use and of metals and minerals per unit of gross domestic product (GDP). However, problems relating to excessive fertilizer and pesticide and to soil quality had only just begun to be addressed, and deforestation continued to be unsustainably high. Environmental monitoring data and other information, including consumer information—currently lacking in many developing countries—needed to be developed to provide a sound base for policy formulation and decision-making on changing unsustainable production and consumption patterns. The analysis underscored the need to continue the traditional emphasis on the supply side, while strengthening efforts on the demand side. The emphasis on consumers also reflected the conviction that changing consumption habits and lifestyle would eventually persuade manufacturers to develop new products and production processes. A number of problems called for further discussion, including agreement on a conceptual and methodological framework for a more systematic and standardized study of consumption and production issues; the need to build or improve infrastructure to facilitate a shift to more sustainable consumption and production patterns by household and other end-users; and how Governments and major groups could most effectively contribute to progress in changing consumption patterns, in addition to participating in "green" consumer movements. Those and other questions were included in a proposed work programme on sustainable consumption and production patterns.

The Commission⁽¹⁸⁾ noted with concern the significant gaps in per capita income between developing and developed countries and the continuing current imbalances in the global patterns of consumption and production. It further noted that the growing recognition that patterns of production and consumption should be addressed had not been matched by a full understanding of the implications of such patterns on economic, social and environmental conditions at the local, national and global levels. Governments, business and industry and consumers were urged to intensify efforts to reduce the energy and material intensities of production and consumption through improving energy efficiency, energy-saving measures, technological innovations and transfer, increased waste recovery and reuse and recycling of materials. Developed countries were urged to intensify efforts to encourage the transfer of appropriate technologies to developing countries. The Commission adopted a work programme, for its future consideration of changing production and consumption patterns, that covered the following: identification of the policy implications of projected trends in consumption and production patterns; assessment of the impact on developing countries, especially the least developed countries (LDCs) and small island developing States, of changes in consumption and production in developed countries; evaluation of the effectiveness of policy measures intended to change consumption and production patterns, such as command-and-control, economic and social instruments, and government procurement policies and guidelines; eliciting a time-bound, voluntary commitment from countries to make measurable progress on sustainable development goals having an especially high priority at the national level; and revision of the guidelines for consumer protection.

Sectoral issues

The Ad Hoc Inter-sessional Working Group on Sectoral Issues of the Commission on Sustainable Development met in New York from 27 February to 3 March.⁽⁵¹⁾ It noted proposals for action included in the Secretary-General's reports on the following chapters of Agenda 21: chapters 10 (integrated approach to the planning and management of land resources) and 14 (promoting sustainable agriculture and rural development) (see above); and chapters 11 (forests), 12 (combating desertification and drought), 13 (sustainable mountain development) and 15 (conservation of biological diversity) (see PART FOUR, Chapter VII). The Working Group also addressed issues common to all topics under consideration (approaches, tools, finance, technology transfer, cooperation and capacity-building, and the relationship between existing conventions and other related processes) and put forward a number of proposals for the Commission's consideration.

Inter-Agency Committee

The ACC Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD) held its fifth (New York 1-3 February) and sixth (Geneva, 12-14 July) sessions in 1995. In February,⁽⁵²⁾ IACSD considered preparations for the April session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, progress in coordination within the UN system and preparation of joint initiatives to implement Agenda 21, and support for Agenda 21 coordination and planning activities at the national level. It also reviewed its own functioning.

In July,⁽⁵³⁾ IACSD considered the outcome of the Commission's April session and follow-up action, preparations for the Commission's 1996 session, system-wide coordination in implementing the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,⁽⁵⁴⁾ support for Agenda 21 coordination and planning activities at the national level, and a review of its own functioning, a note on which it submitted to ACC.

At its October session,⁽⁵⁵⁾ ACC adopted the note on IACSD functioning and annexed it to its report.

High-level Advisory Board

The High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development held its fourth session in New York from 30 May to 1 June,⁽⁵⁶⁾ at which it examined three topics: mobilizing finance for sustainable development; enhancing cooperation and coordination in the UN system; and building alliances between the UN and non-governmental partners.

With regard to mobilizing finance, the Board noted that a three-pronged attack was needed: to review official development assistance (ODA) strategy in donor countries; to examine national policies in developing countries; and to explore new and innovative funding. Debt remission and the use of the World Bank/UNDP/UNEP Global Environment Facility were both considered important, but secondary by comparison. Although the World Bank and other Bretton Woods institutions (the International Monetary Fund, the International Development Association and the International Finance Corporation) were changing their approach and entering into partnerships with the UN system and NGOs, changes were needed in the governance of those institutions to provide UN Member States with greater influence on their policy agenda and greater equality among States. The impact on those institutions of the growing strength of the private sector as a source of investment in developing countries also needed appraisal.

The cooperative relationship among UN bodies and between the United Nations and major groups of NGOs should also be strengthened. UN agencies and the secretariats of major international environmental conventions should review their machinery for cooperation with the non-governmental world, while major non-governmental groups should develop their arrangements for dialogue and partnership with the UN system.

Implementation of Agenda 21

In a September report,⁽⁵⁷⁾ prepared in response to a 1992 request,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly proposals on the format, scope and organizational aspects of the 1997 special Assembly session on the overall review and appraisal of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992.⁽¹⁷⁾ In addition to outlining priority issues for and the institutional framework of the special session, the report covered questions of documentation, the possible outcome of the review exercise, organizational aspects, the level of representation, participation of major groups, and the preparatory process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/113.

Special session for the purpose of an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/190 of 22 December 1992, in which it decided to convene, not later than 1997, a special session for the purpose of an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing proposals on the format, scope and organizational aspects of such a special session,

1. Decides to convene the special session envisaged in resolution 47/190 for a duration of one week during the month of June 1997 at the highest possible level of participation;

2. Encourages participants at the high-level meeting of the Commission on Sustainable Development to be held during its fourth session, in 1996, to address, inter alia, matters related to the special session of the General Assembly decided on above;

3. Invites the Commission to devote its Ad Hoc Open-ended Inter-Sessional Working Group meeting, to be held in February 1997, to assisting the Commission in undertaking the review for the special session;

4. Welcomes the decision of the Commission to devote its fifth session, in 1997, to preparations for the special session, and decides that that session of the Commission will be open-ended in its deliberations, allowing for the full participation of all States;

5. Invites the Commission to make available to the General Assembly at the special session all relevant reports prepared under the aegis of the Commission, along with the recommendations of the Commission thereon;

6. Welcomes the decisions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, in which the Council emphasized the need for the Programme, in accordance with its mandate in the implementation of Agenda 21, to continue to provide effective support to the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development, and in which the Council decided to hold its nineteenth session early in 1997 with a view to making a contribution to the special session;

7. Invites Governments as well as relevant regional and subregional organizations to consider undertaking reviews of progress achieved since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development at the national, subregional, regional and interregional levels with a view to contributing to the preparations for the special session;

8. Welcomes the preparation of hemispheric, regional and subregional conferences on sustainable development, and in that context invites the Governments concerned to contribute to the special session the outcomes of such conferences;

9. Also invites all other relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the specialized agencies and other multilateral organizations, including the multilateral financial institutions and the World Trade Organization, to contribute to the special session, and requests the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development, in close coordination with the Commission on Sustainable Development, to ensure an effective and coordinated system-wide response to the preparation of the special session;

10. Further invites the conferences of parties or other regulatory bodies of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, as well as the regulatory bodies of other relevant instruments, as appropriate, and the Global Environment Facility, to provide their inputs to the special session;

11. Recognizes the important role played by major groups, including non-governmental organizations, at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and in the implementation of its recommendations, and recognizes the need for their active involvement in preparations for the special session, as well as the need to ensure appropriate arrangements for their contribution during the special session;

12. Invites Governments to assist the developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, in participating fully and effectively in the special session and its preparatory process, and in that regard invites them to make appropriate contributions to the Trust Fund to Support the Work of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for the consideration of the Commission on Sustainable Development at its fifth session, a comprehensive report containing an overall assessment of the progress achieved since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in the implementation of Agenda 21 at all levels, and in the implementation of related outcomes, as well as recommendations for future actions and priorities, and requests that the report include:

(a) Concise reports containing an assessment of the progress achieved in specific sectoral and cross-sectoral areas;

(b) Country profiles providing a concise presentation of progress made and constraints encountered in implementing Agenda 21 at the national level, compiled on the basis of national information received and in close cooperation with the Governments concerned;

(c) Major and emerging trends and issues within the framework of Agenda 21 and related outcomes of the Conference in the area of sustainable development, including the environmental impact of activities that are gravely hazardous to the environment, taking into account the views of States;

(d) Recommendations on the future role of the Commission in the follow-up to the outcome of the Conference and related outcomes, building on experience gained since 1992;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to mount a public information programme to raise global awareness of both the special session to review the implementation of Agenda 21 and the work undertaken by the United Nations in the follow-up to the Conference;

15. Decides that the preparations for the special session and the special session itself shall be kept within the agreed appropriation level for the 1996-1997 biennium;

16. Decides to include a sub-item entitled "Special session for the purpose of an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21" in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at that session a progress report on the state of preparations for the 1997 special session.

General Assembly resolution 50/113

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/618/Add.1) without vote, 12 December (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.78), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.23); agenda item 96 (a).

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/50/831; S-G, A/C.2/50/L.82, A/C.5/50/43.

Eradication of poverty

Commission on Sustainable Development. In a report on poverty eradication and sustainable development⁽³⁹⁾ considered in April by the Commission on Sustainable Development (see above), the Secretary-General described progress in implementing the provisions of chapter 3 of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992,⁽¹⁷⁾ and presented proposals for future action for poverty eradication.

The report concluded that systematic action was needed to implement the recommendations of UN organizations and agencies within a reasonable time-frame, taking into account the targets set at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). While economic growth would continue to be important, there was an urgent need to implement an explicit, poverty-reducing growth strategy incorporating measures to ensure environmental sustainability. Just as measures to combat poverty needed to be environmentally sound, the eradication of poverty was a necessary condition for sustainable development and for long-term socio-political stability—itsself a precondition for sustained socio-economic development. Efforts to eliminate poverty should not be viewed as acts of charity but as an economic necessity to mobilize the productive potential of the poor for their own benefit and for that of society generally. To eradicate poverty and achieve environmental sustainability, it would be necessary to shift from traditional top-down approaches to development to bottom-up approaches that included the participation of all citizens in socio-political processes and in planning and implementing development programmes. In developing countries, the success of strategies to eradicate poverty and safeguard environmental integrity would depend on the extent of international cooperation, especially in terms of international trade, transfer of environmentally sound technologies and financial and technical support. The report suggested a number of themes to which the Commission on Sustainable Development could restrict itself when considering linkages between poverty and the natural environment.

In April,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Commission on Sustainable Development adopted a decision on combating poverty, which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. It stressed that the promotion of full employment and the sustainable use of resources was an essential requirement for combating poverty and promoting social integration, noting that this was the primary responsibility of States themselves. Governments should create an enabling economic environment to promote more equitable access for all to income, resources and social services. The Commission recognized that women, who constituted the majority of those living in abject poverty, should be a central focus of poverty eradication efforts and urged the introduction of programmes focusing on the specific needs of children and youth. It recognized the need to promote access to food, water, employment, shelter, education, health, information, transportation and other essential public services. People living in poverty should have access to productive resources and sustainable livelihoods, including credit, land, education and training, and technology, and should be empowered to participate in formulating and implementing policies and decisions affecting them.

The Commission reaffirmed that a favourable international economic environment and the provision of financial and technical assistance were essential catalysts towards poverty eradication. Better terms of trade and better access to markets including on concessional and preferential terms—particularly for labour-intensive products, agricultural and agri-based products, and for those of medium- and small-scale enterprises, access to and transfer of environmentally sound technology on favourable terms—were also important conditions for sustainability. A durable solution to the external debt problems of heavily indebted LDCs and other low-income countries, particularly sub-Saharan countries, would help to free resources for poverty eradication programmes. Transfer of environmentally sound technologies was also indispensable for adopting sustainable production patterns, both in industry and agriculture. The Commission stressed that activities geared towards poverty eradication should be accompanied by programmes to reduce environmentally and socially unsustainable patterns of production and consumption.

The Commission reiterated the need for the full implementation of commitments, agreements and targets agreed upon by the international community to eradicate poverty and called on Governments, the international community, international financial institutions and NGOs to implement the poverty eradication commitments adopted at the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX) and at UNCED in Agenda 21. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council, when considering a common framework for implementing the outcome of UN conferences in the economic and social fields, examine how to ensure synergy and cooperation between the Commission and other functional commissions with responsibilities in the area of poverty eradication, including the proper division of labour among them.

UNCTAD action. The UNCTAD Standing Committee on Poverty Alleviation held its third session in Geneva from 12 to 16 June.⁽⁶⁰⁾ The Committee considered reports by the UNCTAD secretariat on international trade and poverty alleviation⁽⁶¹⁾ and on aid effectiveness in international development cooperation for poverty alleviation.⁽⁶²⁾ Also before the Committee was an UNCTAD secretariat review of the implementation of the Standing Committee's work programme and proposed future orientation of its work⁽⁶³⁾ and a report on the workshop on poverty alleviation through international trade (Santiago, Chile, 10-13 January).⁽⁶⁴⁾

In a series of agreed conclusions, the Standing Committee addressed the issues of the effects on the livelihood of the poor of elimination of trade barriers, increased competitiveness, trade flows, external shocks, diversification of exports, particularly of labour-intensive goods, and market access for such goods. It expressed concern over losses that could be incurred by LDCs and net food-importing developing countries due to possible price increases of imported food resulting from the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, the Final Act of which was signed in 1994.⁽⁶⁵⁾ There would be a need for adequate food aid and for technical and financial assistance. The Standing Committee expressed concern over the decline in the quantity of ODA directed to developing countries and emphasized the need to meet internationally agreed aid targets. Consideration should be given to institutional methods such as targeting, decentralization, appraisal, monitoring and evaluation and an enabling environment and sustainability, so that ODA could reach and benefit the poor. Focusing on women was especially important if aid was to benefit the poor more effectively since women comprised the poorest of the poor and also used their incomes to feed, clothe and educate their children. It was agreed that food aid could play a major short-term role in relieving poverty, particularly for women and children; it could help eliminate present hunger among the poor and catalyze their self-reliant growth. However, access to income and other forms of purchasing power would be a more appropriate long-term strategy. Debt relief could be a principal element in helping poverty reduction if the freed resources were properly mobilized and channelled for developmental and poverty-alleviation purposes.

With regard to its work programme, the Standing Committee agreed that it had done valuable work on various issues since its establishment following UNCTAD VIII in 1992⁽⁶⁶⁾ and decided to transmit its recommendations and conclusions to UNCTAD IX, to be held in 1996. There was consensus that UNCTAD should continue its work on poverty issues, and agreement that the question of whether the existing form of intergovernmental machinery for addressing poverty alleviation was the appropriate one should be deferred to UNCTAD IX for consideration.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽⁶⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1995 report⁽⁶⁸⁾ on international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries. Based on information provided by UN organizations and bodies, the report discussed poverty eradication as a common theme of major international conferences: UNCED, the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development⁽⁶⁹⁾ and the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). It also took up the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX) as the framework for inter-agency cooperation for the eradication of poverty and gave an overview of policies, multisectoral strategies and programmes relating to poverty, providing examples of poverty eradication programmes and coordination mechanisms at the country level—Indonesia, Jamaica, Malawi, Pakistan, Philippines, Sri Lanka and Zimbabwe.

In concluding observations and recommendations, the report stated that although the primary responsibility for coordination belonged to Governments, the UN system could assist in strengthening the capacity of Governments for such coordination. Governments had to demonstrate a firm commitment to the goal of poverty eradication and be willing to mobilize and allocate the required domestic financial and human resources for that purpose. UN agencies could play an advocacy role, provide financial and technical assistance and help develop coherent and complementary poverty-eradication programmes. UN agencies must work together to help build the capacity of Governments to carry out their leadership and coordinating responsibilities, it was stated. A key question was the relationship between the United Nations, its funds and programmes and the specialized agencies on the one hand, and the Bretton Woods institutions on the other. An integrated poverty agenda could move forward if the Bretton Woods institutions and the rest of the system could develop common approaches, definitions, poverty-assessment indicators and data collection and also work towards greater complementarity and integration between economic and social policies.

However, even the best formulated strategies and well-coordinated programmes required resources in order to be implemented effectively. Determined efforts had to be made at the national and international levels to mobilize and reallocate resources towards the goal of poverty eradication. In that regard, the commitments and goals of major international conferences, particularly the World Summit for Social Development, should be fully adhered to and implemented by all countries.

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC. Participants in the twenty-ninth Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) and ACC (New York, 16 October)⁽⁷⁰⁾ discussed coordination of activities of the UN system for the eradication of poverty. They reviewed a background paper on the subject,⁽⁷¹⁾ prepared by the Secretariat.

It was concluded that the eradication of poverty was a top priority for UN system work and should be pursued in the coordinated follow-up to global conferences, particularly the World Summit for Social Development. Since efforts to eradicate poverty should be based on individual country goals and plans, the success of UN coordination efforts had to be measured at the country level. There was a need to identify and assess practical measures to enhance coordination within the UN system and to mobilize adequate resources and use them effectively and efficiently. The Meetings noted that ACC (New York, 12 and 13 October)⁽⁷²⁾ had established three inter-agency task forces on three topics, closely related to the eradication of poverty, to follow up on recent global conferences: basic social services for all; employment and sustainable livelihoods; and an enabling environment for social and economic development. They noted that consideration was being given to establishing an inter-agency task force to follow up on the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women. The efforts of the UN system had to be integrated with those of Governments and NGOs at community and national levels and the resident coordinator had a key role to play at the field level, the Meetings stated.

By decision 1995/321 of 12 December, the Economic and Social Council decided that the coordination segment of its 1996 substantive session should be devoted to coordination of the activities of the UN system for the eradication of poverty.

International Year and UN Decade for the Eradication of Poverty

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁷³⁾ the Secretariat submitted to the Economic and Social Council a June note⁽⁷⁴⁾ containing elements of a draft programme for the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty, to be observed in 1996. In outlining the principles, objectives and themes for the Year, the report took into account the commitments contained in the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). The report described activities envisaged for observing the Year at the international level and provided some examples of possible activities at the national level.

In decision 1995/234 of 17 and 19 July, the Council took note of the Secretariat's note.

In an October report⁽⁷⁵⁾ to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General elaborated on the proposals contained in the Secretariat note to the Council, taking into account observations and suggestions received from Member States, as well as additional information provided from within the UN system and by non-governmental and other intergovernmental organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/107.

Observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty and proclamation of the First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 43/195 of 20 December 1988, 44/212 of 22 December 1989, 45/213 of 21 December 1990, 46/141 of 17 December 1991, 47/197 of 22 December 1992, 48/184 of 21 December 1993 and 49/110 of 19 December 1994, all related to international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries,

Recalling its resolution 48/183 of 21 December 1993, in which it proclaimed 1996 International Year for the Eradication of Poverty,

Recalling also its resolution 49/110, in which it requested that a draft programme on the preparations for and observance of the Year be elaborated at an early date,

Emphasizing the necessity for Governments to focus their efforts and policies on addressing the root causes of poverty and providing for the basic needs of all,

Recognizing that the eradication of poverty requires ensuring universal access to economic opportunities that will promote sustainable livelihood and making basic efforts to facilitate access to opportunities and services for the disadvantaged, and that people living in poverty and vulnerable groups must be empowered through organization and social life, in particular in the planning and implementation of policies that affect them, thus enabling them to become genuine partners in development,

Also recognizing that economic development, social development and environmental protection are interdependent and mutually reinforcing components of sustainable development, which is the framework for efforts to achieve a higher quality of life for all people, and that equitable social development, which empowers people living in poverty to utilize environmental resources sustainably, is a necessary foundation for sustainable development,

Stressing the necessity to promote and implement policies to create a supportive external economic environment, through, inter alia, cooperation in the formulation and implementation of macroeconomic policies, trade liberalization, mobilization and/or the provision of new and additional financial resources that are both adequate and predictable and mobilized in a way that maximizes the availability of such resources for sustainable development, using all available funding sources and mechanisms, enhanced financial stability and ensuring increased access of developing countries to global markets, productive investments and technologies, and appropriate knowledge,

Also stressing that the United Nations system should play a central role in enhancing support and assistance for developing countries, in particular African countries and least developed countries, in their efforts to achieve the objectives set forth in the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, as well as in the major United Nations conferences organized since 1990 towards the eradication of poverty,

Emphasizing that empowering women will be a critical factor in the eradication of poverty, since women constitute a majority of people living in poverty and since they contribute to the economy and to combating poverty through both their remunerated and their unremunerated work at home, in the community and in the workplace,

Considering that the international community at the highest political level has already reached a consensus and committed itself to the eradication of poverty in recent major United Nations conferences, including the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the International Conference on Population and Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and in particular the World Summit for Social Development, which addressed the eradication of poverty as one of its three major themes, as well as the expected contributions from the forthcoming United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the World Food Summit,

Noting the importance attached at the summit meeting of seven major industrialized countries, held at Halifax, Canada, from 15 to 17 June 1995, in considering measures towards the eradication of poverty,

Bearing in mind that Governments decided to adopt the appropriate measures and mechanisms for implementing and monitoring the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development, with the assistance, upon request, of the specialized agencies, programmes, funds and regional commissions of the United Nations system, with broad participation of all sectors of civil society,

Recalling the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, in particular paragraph 95(c) of the Programme of Action, in which it is recommended that the General Assembly, at its fiftieth session, declare the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, following the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (1996), with a view to considering further initiatives on the eradication of poverty,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the draft programme for the observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty and on international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries,

Taking note of the Secretary-General's proposal in response to resolution 49/110 of 19 December 1994, that the theme of the international year for the eradication of poverty be "Poverty can be and must be eradicated throughout the World",

I. Observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (1996)

1. Urges all Governments, the international community, including the United Nations system, and all other actors in society to pursue seriously the objective of the eradication of poverty within the context of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (1996);

2. Reaffirms that the activities for the observance of the Year shall be undertaken at all levels, and that assistance should be provided by the United Nations system with a view to creating among States, policy makers and international public opinion a greater awareness of the fact that the eradication of poverty is both a complex and multidimensional problem, and is fundamental to reinforcing peace and achieving sustainable development;

3. Decides that the aim of the activities during the Year shall be to support a longer-term, sustained effort to implement fully and effectively the commitments, recommendations and measures undertaken, and the basic provisions already agreed upon at major United Nations conferences since 1990, in particular the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women;

4. Also decides that, in order to achieve the goal of eradicating poverty, activities during the Year, at all levels, shall be guided, inter alia, by the following principles:

(a) A sustained, collective commitment and effort shall be mounted by Governments, local administrations, all relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, business and corporations, supported by the international community, including the United Nations system and relevant subregional, regional and other international organizations, and anti-poverty strategies and programmes shall be designed, implemented and monitored with the full and effective participation of people living in poverty;

(b) Measures shall be adopted to ensure that people living in poverty have access to the resources and opportunities necessary to escape from poverty, and policies shall be adopted to ensure that all people have adequate economic and social protection during unemployment, ill health, maternity, child-rearing, widowhood, disability and old age;

(c) Access of all people living in poverty to basic social services shall be ensured, as well as their participation in the economic, social, cultural and political life of society;

(d) Women shall be given the economic and social opportunities to contribute to development, and anti-poverty strategies and programmes shall be designed with a gender dimension;

(e) Targeted programmes shall be developed to meet the special needs of particular social and demographic groups, including young people, disadvantaged older persons, persons with disabilities and other vulnerable and disadvantaged groups of persons;

(f) The international community shall provide continued and effective support to broad-based development in developing countries, in particular in Africa and the least developed countries;

(g) The efforts of the United Nations system to achieve the overall goal of eradicating poverty should be well coordinated in order to ensure that activities of relevant organizations are complementary and cost-effective;

5. Recommends that all States, as set out in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, undertake the following, preferably by 1996:

(a) Develop a precise definition and assessment of absolute poverty;

(b) Elaborate the measurements, criteria and indicators for determining the extent and distribution of absolute poverty;

(c) Formulate or strengthen, as a matter of urgency, national policies and strategies geared to substantially reducing overall poverty in the shortest possible time, reducing inequalities and eradicating absolute poverty by a target date to be specified by each country in its national context;

(d) Increase public efforts to eradicate absolute poverty and to reduce overall poverty substantially by, inter alia, formulating or strengthening and implementing national poverty eradication plans to address the structural causes of poverty, encompassing action on the local, national, subregional, regional and international levels;

(e) Attach particular attention, in the context of national plans, to employment creation as a means of eradicating poverty, while also giving appropriate consideration to health and education, assigning a higher priority to basic social services, generating household income and promoting access to productive assets and economic opportunities;

6. Urges Governments to review, adopt and maintain macroeconomic policies and development strategies that address the needs and efforts of women living in poverty, in particular in rural areas, as set out in paragraph 58 of the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women;

7. Reaffirms the agreement to a mutual commitment between interested developed and developing country partners to allocate, on average, 20 per cent of official development assistance and 20 per cent of the national budget, respectively, to basic social programmes;

8. Stresses that, during the Year and beyond, people living in poverty and their organizations should be empowered by being fully involved in the setting of targets and in the design, implementation, monitoring and assessment of national strategies and programmes for the eradication of poverty and the development of community bases, ensuring that such programmes reflect their priorities;

9. Notes the activities for the observance of the Year planned by the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as contained in the report of the Secretary-General, and invites them to take further initiatives;

10. Urges multilateral financial and development institutions to intensify and accelerate their investments in social sectors and poverty eradication programmes;

11. Takes note of decision 95/22 of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme, in which the Board decided to give poverty elimination the overriding priority in Programme activities and to concentrate its programmes on the most needy regions and countries, in particular the least developed countries, especially in Africa;

12. Invites all relevant specialized agencies, funds, programmes and related organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen and adjust their activities, programmes and strategies, as appropriate, in order to achieve the overall goal of eradicating poverty and meeting the basic human needs of all;

13. Welcomes the recent decision taken by the Administrative Committee on Coordination to establish task forces on different aspects of the follow-up to United Nations major conferences with a view to considering issues related to the eradication of poverty;

14. Takes note of the decision taken by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to establish an eradication of poverty fund for the duration of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty in order to help developing countries, in particular African countries and the least developed countries, in the elaboration of national plans during 1996 to combat poverty;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to take all relevant measures to arrange for the wide and effective dissemination of the present resolution and the programme for the observance of the Year, and in this regard invites all States, organizations of the United Nations system, relevant international organizations, concerned national organizations, non-governmental organizations and other interested groups of civil society to give the necessary attention to the observance of the Year;

II. First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)

16. Proclaims the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006);

17. Urges all Governments and the international community, including the United Nations system, and all other actors in society to pursue effectively the implementation of the outcomes of major United Nations conferences related to the eradication of poverty, in particular the World Summit for Social Development;

18. Welcomes the arrangements, within the agreed appropriation level for the biennium 1996-1997 made by the Secretary-General regarding the entity within the Secretariat required to undertake the functions needed in support of the system-wide implementation of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty, including activities of the Decade;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to invite those organs, organizations, programmes, funds and bodies of the United Nations system that have not already done so to consider the establishment of focal points and other similar mechanisms so that they may effectively implement the provisions, agreements and outcomes of major United Nations conferences relevant to the eradication of poverty;

20. Recalls the coordinating role of the Economic and Social Council in the activities of the United Nations system towards eradication of poverty in the context of the coordinated follow-up of the outcome of the major United Nations conferences and summits organized since 1990 in the economic, social and related fields;

21. Stresses the importance of ensuring, at the inter-governmental and inter-agency levels, coherent, comprehensive and integrated activities for the Year and Decade, according to the outcome of the major United Nations conferences and summits organized since 1990 in the economic, social and related fields;

22. Invites the Administrative Committee on Coordination to ensure, in particular through the inter-agency task forces, the involvement and coordination of all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system for a full and effective implementation of the present resolution and to submit to the General Assembly, at its fifty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council, reports on activities envisaged in support of the Decade, taking into account the outcome of the major United Nations conferences and summits organized since 1990 in the economic, social and related fields;

23. Calls upon States, the United Nations system, relevant international organizations and all other actors concerned with the Decade to participate actively in the financial and technical support of the Decade, in particular with a view to translating all measures and recommendations into operational and concrete poverty eradication programmes and activities;

24. Decides that the trust fund of the World Summit for Social Development established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/92 of 16 December 1992 to finance preparatory activities be continued and renamed the Trust Fund for the Follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development, under the authority of the Secretary-General, with the aim of supporting programmes, seminars and activities for the promotion of social development in the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, which include activities of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, and invites all States to contribute to the Fund;

25. Requests, therefore, that the Secretary-General ensure that the outcomes of major United Nations conferences are disseminated as widely as possible and also to ensure that the documents related to the Year and the United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, once adopted, are transmitted to all States, relevant international and regional organizations, multilateral financial institutions and regional development banks in order to secure their active and substantial contributions;

26. Recommends that donor countries give greater priority to the eradication of poverty in their assistance programmes and budgets, on either a bilateral or multi-lateral basis;

27. Encourages developing countries to mobilize domestic and external resources for poverty eradication programmes and activities, and to facilitate their full and effective implementation;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, in one document, a progress report on action taken by the United Nations system to implement the programme for the observance of the Year and action envisaged to be taken in preparation for the Decade;

29. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session an item entitled "First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)".

General Assembly resolution 50/107

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.9) without vote, 12 December (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.80), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.39) and orally revised; agenda item 95 (i).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 35-37, 40, 43; plenary 96.

Economic cooperation among developing countries

UNCTAD action. The UNCTAD Standing Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries (ECDC) held its third session in Geneva from 19 to 23 June.⁽⁷⁶⁾ It had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on enlarging and deepening monetary, financial and investment cooperation among developing countries and promoting cooperation of the enterprise sectors of developing countries;⁽⁷⁷⁾ evaluation of major developments in the area of ECDC, including implications of the Uruguay Round results on ECDC arrangements and regular consultations, technical support, assistance and skill development;⁽⁷⁸⁾ and review of the work programme of the Standing Committee with special emphasis on the preparations for UNCTAD IX.⁽⁷⁹⁾

In a series of agreed conclusions, the Committee stated that: trade financing was an essential facet of ECDC, which, in addition to trade, underpinned business, investment and technological cooperation; capital market cooperation was of major importance for mobilizing financial resources; among regional partners, predictable monetary policies were prerequisites for stable and realistic foreign exchange rates; the attainment of currency convertibility by some developing countries did not diminish the importance of their clearing and payments arrangements, which continued to play an important role in credit extension and monetary-policy coordination; direct investment among developing countries should be encouraged, as should cross-border business activities and export-processing, industrial and special economic zones in developing countries; it was important to expand contacts and linkages among business enterprises of developing countries, and participation of the enterprise sector in meetings of ECDC arrangements and other international forums, such as UNCTAD and the International Trade Centre (ITC), should be encouraged, as should joint multi-enterprise and multi-country technological cooperation efforts encompassing research institutes, universities and venture capital financing associations; emphasis should be placed on exchanges of experiences among the various regions; special attention needed to be given to Africa, particularly to LDCs; and UNCTAD coordination with other UN agencies, including UNDP, the regional commissions and ITC was important.

The Standing Committee felt that it had carried out a valuable work programme during its three sessions. As for future work on ECDC, UNCTAD had a role to play and should continue its work on issues where it had expertise and competence. It was agreed that the question of institutional reform should be deferred to UNCTAD IX for consideration.

South-South cooperation

Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts. Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on South-South Cooperation was convened in New York from 31 July to 4 August 1995.⁽⁸¹⁾ The Meeting considered reports on the status of South-South cooperation and the emerging issues⁽⁸²⁾ and on expanding South-South cooperation: some suggested issues and modalities.⁽⁸³⁾ It also considered reports of the UNCTAD Standing Committee on ECDC (see above) and the report of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries on the work of its ninth (1995) session (see next chapter).

In a summary of the Meeting's discussions, the Chairman stated that South-South cooperation was a viable mode of international economic and technical cooperation. The resurgence of interest shown by developing countries in South-South cooperation through ECDC and technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) had been characterized by an increase in an open and flexible framework for such cooperation. It was emphasized that South-South cooperation was a dynamic process which needed to be examined in the light of a new and emerging international environment; such cooperation could facilitate the integration of developing countries into the world economy. Areas addressed during the Meeting's deliberations included: regional economic cooperation and integration; globalization and liberalization; trade among developing countries; the impact of the Uruguay Round; information, communication and technology; the special needs of Africa, LDCs and land-locked developing countries; the special needs of small island States; follow-up to UN conferences; and donor and UN system support to South-South cooperation. The Meeting also listed a number of elements of successful South-South cooperation strategies.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly requests of 1993⁽⁸⁴⁾ and 1994,⁽⁸⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1995 report on the state of South-South cooperation.⁽⁸⁵⁾ The report assessed the state of institutional arrangements for South-South cooperation at the subregional, regional and global levels, the state of cooperation in trade and monetary and financial cooperation, and the state of other priority functional areas (industry and enterprises; agriculture and food security; transport and communications; natural resources, including commodities, energy and the environment; education, science and technology; and social development).

The addendum contained information received from UN organizations and agencies on action taken to promote and strengthen South-South cooperation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/119.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries and a United Nations conference on South-South cooperation

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and 46/159 of 19 December 1991 on technical cooperation among developing countries, as well as other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly on economic and technical cooperation among developing countries,

Reaffirming also its resolution 49/96 of 19 December 1994 on a United Nations conference on South-South cooperation,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/41 of 30 July 1992, in which the Council called upon all parties in the development effort to make concerted, planned and vigorous endeavours to benefit from utilization of the capacities of developing countries by giving their full support and first consideration to the use of the modality of technical cooperation among developing countries,

Taking note of the decisions and recommendations contained in the Final Document of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995,

Bearing in mind the Ministerial Declaration of the Group of 77, adopted at the nineteenth annual meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77, held in New York on 29 September 1995, which emphasized the importance of South-South cooperation, particularly the convening of a United Nations conference on South-South cooperation no later than 1997,

Reaffirming that South-South cooperation constitutes an important element of international cooperation for development as well as an essential basis for national and collective self-reliance and a means of promoting the integration of developing countries into the world economy,

Reaffirming also that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for, but is complementary to, North-South cooperation,

Noting with satisfaction the increase in economic and technical cooperation among developing countries reported by both developing countries and the United Nations development system,

Recognizing the need for the international community to support the developing countries in optimizing opportunities for expanding South-South cooperation,

Welcoming the report on new directions for technical cooperation among developing countries, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 49/96 of 19 December 1994, whose recommendations were endorsed by the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries at its ninth session, and subsequently endorsed by the Economic and Social Council,

Noting with satisfaction the launching of the South Centre as an intergovernmental organization, and its important contribution to the promotion and strengthening of South-South cooperation,

Recognizing that recent advances in communications technology have created new opportunities for South-South cooperation,

Taking note of the report of the Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on South-South Cooperation, convened by the Secretary-General in New York from 31 July to 4 August 1995, and of the reports of the Standing Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries on the work of its ninth session, at which substantive issues were presented and practical modalities for strengthening South-South economic and technical cooperation at the global level were recommended,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the state of South-South cooperation and its supplement entitled State of South-South Cooperation: Statistical Pocket Book and Index of Cooperation Organizations,^a which provide a comprehensive and systematic overview and analysis of South-South cooperation worldwide and of United Nations system support for such cooperation;

2. Endorses the recommendations contained in the report on new directions for technical cooperation among developing countries, which among other things call for the adoption of a more strategic orientation for technical cooperation among developing countries focusing on priority issues, such as trade and investment, debt, the environment, poverty alleviation, production and employment, and macroeconomic policy coordination, as well as education, health, the transfer of technology and rural development, which are likely to have a major development impact on a large number of developing countries;

3. Welcomes the decision of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme to increase the allocation of resources for technical cooperation among developing countries during the next programming cycle;

4. Calls upon all Governments and relevant United Nations organizations, including the multilateral financial institutions, to consider increasing allocations for economic and technical cooperation among developing countries and to identify new funding modalities to promote South-South cooperation such as triangular cooperation and private-sector funding;

5. Invites the United Nations Development Programme to establish a voluntary trust fund for the promotion of South-South cooperation and invites all countries to contribute to the fund;

6. Calls upon the developing countries and their institutions to increase joint efforts in technology cooperation, broader technological development such as encompasses scientific and technological management capabilities and information networks that are demand-oriented and involve participation by users of technology or by those involved in the process of technological development, infrastructure and human resources development;

7. Welcomes the decision of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to address at its ninth session the issue of new approaches to South-South economic cooperation, as well as the role and potential impact on development of regional economic groupings in the globalizing and liberalizing world economy;

8. Invites, in this context, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its ninth session, to be held in South Africa, to consider strengthening economic and technical cooperation among developing countries as a strategy for promoting growth and development and for ensuring the effective integration of the developing countries into the world economy, and to formulate concrete policy recommendations in this regard;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to present to the General Assembly, on a biennial basis, a report entitled "State of South-South cooperation" containing a comprehensive overview and analysis of South-South economic and technical cooperation worldwide and international support in this regard, including quantitative data and indicators on all aspects of South-South cooperation as well as recommendations for strengthening such cooperation, keeping in view the importance of the proposal to convene a United Nations conference on South-South cooperation;

10. Invites all other organs, organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions, to provide analytical and empirical material for the preparation of the above-mentioned report;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the sub-item entitled "Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries".

General Assembly resolution 50/119

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/619) without vote, 5 December (meeting 41); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.48), based on informal consultations on draft by Colombia (for Non-Aligned Movement) and Philippines (for Group of 77 and China) (A/C.2/50/L.24); agenda item 97. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 24-29, 37, 41; plenary 96.

Science and technology for development

Commission on Science and Technology for Development. The Commission on Science and Technology for Development, at its second session (Geneva, 15-24 May),⁽⁸⁶⁾ had before it an overview⁽⁸⁷⁾ of the reports of panels of experts that had met in 1994 and 1995 to discuss the following subjects: technology for small-scale economic activities to address the basic needs of low-income populations, which met twice in 1994⁽⁸⁸⁾ and again from 18 to 20 January 1995;⁽⁸⁹⁾ gender implications of science and technology for developing countries;⁽⁹⁰⁾ the science and technology aspects of the sectoral issue to be discussed by the Commission on Sustainable Development in 1995 (science and technology for integrated land management);⁽⁹¹⁾ and the contribution of technologies, including new and emerging technologies, to industrialization in developing countries.⁽⁹²⁾ Other substantive reports considered by the Commission dealt with: coordination mechanisms in science and technology within the UN system;⁽⁹³⁾ activities of the UN system in the field of science and technology for development, including cooperation in technology assessment;⁽⁹⁴⁾ information technologies for development;⁽⁹⁵⁾ progress achieved and problems encountered in the application of science and technology for sustainable development;⁽⁹⁶⁾ and scientific and technological aspects of the conversion of military capacities for civilian use and sustainable development.⁽⁹⁷⁾ By a March note,⁽⁹⁸⁾ the UNCTAD secretariat transmitted the final report (1994) of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Interrelationship between Investment and Technology Transfer⁽⁹⁹⁾ and, by a February note,⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ it transmitted the report of the 1994 Consultative Meeting on a Coalition of Resources for Science and Technology for Development.⁽¹⁰¹⁾ Following consideration of those reports, the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption an omnibus draft resolution on science and technology for development (resolution 1995/4). The Commission also recommended to the Council for adoption a draft decision on the report of its second session and a provisional agenda and documentation for the third (1997) session.

In other action, the Commission adopted two resolutions and two decisions, which it brought to the Council's attention. By the first resolution,⁽¹⁰²⁾ it decided to set up, for a duration of four years and on the basis of extrabudgetary resources, an Advisory Board on Gender Issues as an expert group to facilitate the Commission's future deliberations on the gender implications of science and technology for developing countries. By the second resolution,⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ the Commission decided to promote and authorize the broadest dissemination of the reports and documentation of its panels and working groups. Such dissemination should follow the principles and guidelines of UN publications, acknowledging that the contents represented the views of experts and that their work had been conducted under the auspices of the Commission. In its first decision,⁽¹⁰¹⁾ the Commission set out working methods to be used in implementing its work programme and requested the secretariat to report to it on the use of all resources made available for the work programme. The secretariat was also asked to provide a spending plan on an annual basis, indicating proposed expenditure and allocation of resources for the work programme and a six-month progress report on the work programme and its financial aspects. By its second decision,⁽¹⁰²⁾ the Commission called the Council's attention to the problem of lack of synchronization of the terms of Commission members with the timing of the Commission's third (1997) session. It recommended that the Council take steps to resolve this problem to ensure the Commission's efficient functioning.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/4.

Science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the unique role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development as a global forum for the examination of science and technology questions, for improving understanding of science and technology policies for development and for the formulation of recommendations and guidelines on science and technology matters within the United Nations system, all in relation to development,

Recognizing further that the Commission, in carrying out its work, should pay special attention to the needs and requirements of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and that it should also take into consideration the relevant problems of countries with economies in transition,

Noting the efforts of the Commission to adopt a new working style consisting of panels and working groups that take advantage of the available expertise of representatives of States Members of the Commission and have responsibility for preparing draft reports for consideration by the Commission,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports prepared by the panels and working groups of the Commission, pursuant to decisions taken at its first session, entitled "Science and technology for basic needs: a bridge", "Science and technology for sustainable human development: the gender dimension", "Science and technology for integrated land management" and "Strengthening of linkages between the national research and development systems and industrial sectors", and the recommendations contained therein,

Noting also the other relevant documents submitted to the Commission for consideration at its second session,

Recognizing the need to focus the future inter-sessional activities of the Commission on a limited number of substantive themes,

Recognizing further that information and communication are important requisites for planning, development and decision-making in science and technology, and also recognizing the far-reaching implications of information technologies for society,

Basic needs, gender, land management, research and development, industrialization, coordination, financing and other matters arising from the first session of the Commission and work programme for the inter-sessional period 1995-1997

1. Invites Governments to undertake systematic reviews of each major component of their macroeconomic policy frameworks and to take measures to address any unwarranted disincentives for healthy and progressive informal and small and medium-sized productive sectors, and to create an enabling environment for the scientific and technological community to take initiatives to link technologies, in a participatory manner, with entrepreneurs from those sectors;

2. Decides to draw the attention of Member States to the importance of targeted research and development and the application of science and technology in helping to satisfy basic needs, requests the relevant United Nations bodies and donor organizations to assist interested countries in formulating policies and action plans to implement, evaluate and improve efforts for that purpose, and requests Member States and relevant organizations to report on the outcome of those endeavours to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its third session;

3. Decides that the Commission should assist the United Nations system in identifying and promoting replicable demonstration activities and programmes, involving different countries from diverse regions, that apply science and technology to the satisfaction of basic needs, and recommends that the operational mechanisms of the United Nations system, including the Department for Development Support and Management Services of the United Nations Secretariat, the regional commissions and other relevant organizations, such as the United Nations Development Programme, disseminate information and facilitate the application of science and technology in meeting basic needs;

4. Recognizes that the role of the United Nations in promoting better awareness of relationships between gender and science and technology is crucial, and requests the Secretary-General and United Nations organs and bodies to consider and take the necessary action to implement the recommendations addressed to the United Nations system contained in the report of the Panel on the Gender Implications of Science and Technology for Developing Countries, and to report thereon to the Commission at its subsequent sessions;

5. Recommends that all Governments adopt the Declaration of Intent on Gender, Science and Technology for Sustainable Human Development set out in the annex to the present resolution, conduct reviews of the national situation regarding gender and science and technology through special committees within or outside existing suitable mechanisms, formulate action plans, and report publicly and to the Commission on progress in achieving the goals of the declaration of intent by the end of 1996 and 1998, and calls upon donor countries and agencies to assist the follow-up activities of the committees;

6. Recommends that the principles set out in the report of the Panel on the Science and Technology Aspects of the Sectoral Issue on science and technology for integrated land management be further elaborated to provide guidelines for the application of technologies that support integrated land management under site- and region-specific conditions, and, for that purpose, invites the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, in cooperation with the regional commissions, where appropriate, to elaborate such guidelines and work together with a view to designing programmes to address specific land-management problems and assisting developing countries and economies in transition in implementing such programmes and sharing the information thus obtained;

7. Notes that the research and development systems in most developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and in some countries with economies in transition, do not provide sufficient support to the improvement of sustainable industrial development in those countries, and recommends that the international community, through multilateral and bilateral aid and, generally, through the enhancement of linkages with enterprises, universities, foundations, research institutes, scientific laboratories, trade and professional associations, and other channels and mechanisms for international scientific and technological cooperation, should strengthen its support for countries undertaking reforms in their research and development systems and their efforts in building innovative capacities;

8. Requests Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to give priority to effective access to networks, such as the Internet, by scientific and technical institutions in developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and countries with economies in transition, through the provision of technical and other support for related investments, and to facilitate appropriate electronic communication among institutions engaged in science and technology for development;

9. Requests the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to liaise in establishing a programme of country reviews on science, technology and innovation policy for interested countries, also requests the Commission to consider providing advisory inputs, analytical support and evaluation, as need be, in the carrying out of such country reviews, and requests the United Nations Development Programme to explore the possibilities of contributing to the funding of such activities from its centrally controlled resources;

10. Recognizes that technological capacity-building is a major factor in the process of effective technology transfer and long-term growth, and invites the United Nations system and the international community to support the implementation of projects specially designed to foster technological capacity-building in interested countries, including least developed countries;

11. Recalls the agreed conclusions on coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system related to science and technology for development adopted at its substantive session of 1994, and, in that context, decides that the Commission, in its substantive work, should maximize coordination in undertaking its inter-sessional studies on specific issues by relating actively to competent United Nations organs and agencies, as well as other multilateral organizations;

12. Decides that the Commission, in reviewing the activities of the United Nations system in science and technology, should highlight innovative programme concepts and designs of common interest and bring them to the attention of the science and technology community, with an indication of their resource implications, and should use them as a basis for building ad hoc resource coalitions;

13. Decides also that the main substantive theme that will constitute the focus of the work of the Commission during the inter-sessional period 1995-1997 will be information technologies and their implications for development;

14. Decides further to set up panels and/or working groups to analyse, elaborate and make recommendations on issues related to information technologies, possibly including:

(a) Analysis of the application of information technologies in different groups of countries with a view to making recommendations to enhance the diffusion of information technologies in key sectors of their economies;

(b) The implications of the revolutionary improvements in the cost effectiveness of information technologies for the development of a global information infrastructure;

(c) Implications for the promotion of sustainable development, including the sustainable use of natural resources and the reduction of environmental degradation;

(d) The implications of such improvements for more effectively meeting basic human needs, such as education, health, water and food;

(e) The effects of information technology on social cohesion, economic growth and cultural values, including such issues as gender, employment, small-scale economic activities, production capability, improved governance and increased participation in the decision-making process;

(f) Public policy, legal, regulatory, institutional, financial, market, human resource and infrastructural requirements for the diffusion and application of information technology;

(g) Examination of the programmes of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that relate to the global information infrastructure and their impacts, and the ways in which improved coordination and new avenues to be opened up for the coalition of resources could better assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition in gaining more effective access to information technology and participating to a greater extent in the development and application of information technology;

(h) Assessment of experiences and progress made with regard to access to networks, as referred to in paragraph 8 of the present resolution;

15. Notes the recommendations adopted at the Consultative Meeting on a Coalition of Resources for Science and Technology for Development; recommends that, at the international level, a coalition of resources should focus on specific themes and common goals among recipients, donors and international financing institutions, including the World Bank and the regional development banks; that such themes and common goals should be based on voluntary and informal mechanisms that promote the full interaction of both donors and recipients; and that the feasibility of building science and technology into existing and broader coordination schemes should be considered; and also recommends that the Commission should provide a forum for exchanging views and interaction among partners of different networks and coordination schemes in the area of science and technology for development, drawing lessons from past experience in that area, a forum that could be held either as a segment of its biennial sessions or as an inter-sessional activity, as required and defined by the Commission in consultation with relevant United Nations bodies and international organizations;

16. Welcomes the important contribution to the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development made by the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in the area of integrated land management, and invites the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to continue contributing substantively and constructively to the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development on the science and technology components of Agenda 21;

17. Invites the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to give consideration to ways and means of taking advantage of the twentieth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held at Vienna from 20 to 31 August 1979, for the formulation of a common vision for the future contribution of science and technology for development;

18. Recognizes the importance of clean and safe energy technologies in the pursuit of sustainable development, and recommends that the Commission secretariat, in consultation with the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development and other relevant international bodies, submit to the Commission at its third session an issues note that should identify scientific and technological aspects of sustainable energy systems that might be considered by the Commission in defining its future work programme;

19. Takes note of the report by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development entitled "Scientific and technological aspects of the conversion of military capacities for civilian use and sustainable development: an overview of the main issues", and recommends the continuation of the work of the Commission on scientific and technological aspects of the conversion of military capacities in close cooperation with other relevant bodies of the United Nations system and with other organizations;

20. Expresses its appreciation to the Commission secretariat for its work in preparing timely and substantive documentation for the second session, reiterates its earlier decision that responsibility for implementation of the Commission's programme rests with members of the Commission, and that the secretariat is responsible for servicing the Commission, and emphasizes, furthermore, that the Commission should implement its future work programme and its priorities in a transparent manner;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources for convening at least four inter-sessional ad hoc panels/workshops on specific issues in the field of science and technology, which will provide crucial input into the work of the Commission in terms of independent, specialized and expert advice;

22. Recognizes with appreciation the financial contributions made by Governments, foundations, institutions and individual donors to the work of the panels, as well as the important support received to that end from individuals, experts and non-governmental groups and United Nations bodies, and encourages them and all appropriate institutions to continue and enhance their support of the activities of the Commission in the inter-sessional period 1995-1997.

ANNEX

Declaration of intent on gender, science and technology for sustainable human development

All Governments agree to work actively towards the following goals:

1. To ensure basic education for all, with particular emphasis on scientific and technological literacy, so that all women and men can effectively use science and technology to meet basic needs.

2. To ensure that women and men have equal opportunities to acquire advanced training in science and technology and to pursue careers as technologists, scientists and engineers.

3. To achieve gender equity within science and technology institutions, including policy and decision-making bodies.

4. To ensure that the needs and aspirations of women and men are equally taken into account in the setting of research priorities and in the design, transfer and application of new technologies.

5. To ensure that all women and men have equal access to the information and knowledge, particularly scientific and technological knowledge, that they need to improve their standard of living and quality of life.

6. To recognize local knowledge systems, where they exist, and their gender-specific nature as a source of knowledge that is complementary to modern science and technology and is also valuable for sustainable human development.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/4

19 July 1995 Meeting 44 Adopted without vote

Draft by Commission on Science and Technology for Development (E/1995/31); agenda item 6 (d).

Meeting numbers. ESC 42-44.

On 28 July, the Council adopted resolution 1995/54.

Science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering the critical and catalytic role of science and technology for development,

Recognizing the specific needs and requirements of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, especially those in Africa, and countries with economies in transition,

Recognizing the unique role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development as a global forum for the examination of science and technology questions, for improving understanding of science and technology policies for development and for the formulation of recommendations and guidelines on science and technology matters within the United Nations system, all in relation to development,

Recognizing further that the Commission, in carrying out its work, should pay special attention to the needs and requirements of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and that it should also take into consideration the relevant problems of countries with economies in transition,

Taking note of the report of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on its second session,

Recognizing the need to support activities of the United Nations system in the field of science and technology for development and considering that the level of funding for science and technology as a generic field is limited, being only a small percentage of total United Nations system resources for development,

1. Urges all countries to increase their support for science and technology for development and for the activities of relevant organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations in this sphere;

2. Urges the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to ensure greater transparency in its working methods and decision-making processes, including the allocation and utilization of resources, in accordance with Commission decision 2/101 of 24 May 1995;

3. Requests the relevant organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations, in the spirit of coordination which should prevail in the actions of the United Nations system in the field of science and technology for development:

(a) To sensitize the international community regarding the critical and catalytic role of science and technology for development;

(b) To consider strengthening their capability to contribute to strengthening capacities in developing countries to generate applied research and development activities and results, and the application of those results to the industry and the actual user, including through pilot-scale projects;

(c) To consider facilitating and financing, including by catalysing other forms of financial support, South-South technology transfer and cooperation as an effective ingredient of self-sustaining development; in this context, possibilities of cooperation between developing countries and countries with economies in transition should also be explored;

(d) To work in a coordinated manner to develop a catalogue of proved technologies to enable effective choice by developing countries of state-of-the-art technologies;

(e) To continue to promote more effective technology cooperation between developed countries, developing countries and countries with economies in transition, in particular by providing better access to technology and transfer of technology through, inter alia, fostering foreign direct investment from developed to developing countries, as well as to countries with economies in transition, including in the areas of new and emerging technologies;

(f) To consider enhancing research and development institutions of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in order to encourage and implement activities that reduce technological dependence on developed countries and promote South-South cooperation;

4. Invites the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to continue contributing substantively and constructively to the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development on the science and technology components of Agenda 21.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/54

28 July 1995 Meeting 57 Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1995/L.59), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (E/1995/L.32); agenda item 6 (d).

Meeting numbers. ESC 39-44, 47, 57.

In other action, the Council, by decision 1995/237 of 19 July, noted the report on the second session of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, endorsing its resolutions and decisions. It also approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's third (1997) session. By decision 1995/312 of 27 July, the Council extended the terms of office of the members of the Commission to 31 December 1997.

Commission on Sustainable Development. At its April session,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Commission on Sustainable Development had before it the Secretary-General's report on science for sustainable development,⁽¹⁹⁾ which focused on the experiences of national Governments, the UN system, other international organizations and the scientific community in implementing science-related policies and programmes at the national, regional and international levels. The report, prepared for the Commission's review of chapter 35 of Agenda 21,⁽¹⁷⁾ covered four of the chapter's programme areas: strengthening the scientific basis for sustainable management; enhancing scientific understanding; improving long-term scientific assessment; and building scientific capacity and capability. It identified priority issues within those areas for specific action by national Governments, with the support of international organizations and major groups, in particular the scientific community. Several policy recommendations to encourage and promote those actions were presented for Commission consideration.

The Commission urged countries and international organizations to accord high priority to measures aimed at capacity-building and sharing of know-how in science, with particular emphasis on the needs of developing countries. Governments, UN organizations and other intergovernmental organizations should share information on scientific capacities and know-how and its impact on achieving sustainable development objectives in developing countries, particularly LDCs, and make that information available to the Commission. They should implement activities that would enhance the scientific capacities and capabilities of developing countries in the following priority areas: promoting scientific education and training, particularly for women; enhancing the status of science; enhancing the capabilities of decision makers to use existing scientific information in developing sustainable development policies; improving the integration of science into national development policies and plans; promoting interdisciplinary approaches and use of new technologies; and increasing training in specialized scientific areas.

The Commission encouraged Governments to enhance international scientific cooperation, including North-South and South-South cooperation, for example through networking of national and international centres of excellence that would build on existing national and regional research, education and development institutions, organizations and programmes; and enhancing participation of developing countries in international research programmes on global environmental issues.

The donor community was invited to consider targeted financial support for activities related to scientific capacity-building in identified priority areas.

In a report on the environmentally sound management of biotechnology,⁽¹⁰⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed the implementation of chapter 16 of Agenda 21,⁽¹⁷⁾ which focused on the need to increase the availability of food, feed and renewable raw materials; improve human health; enhance environmental protection; enhance safety and develop international mechanisms for cooperation; and establish enabling mechanisms for the development and environmentally sound application of biotechnology. Based on analyses received from Governments, the UN system and other inter-governmental organizations, NGOs, the scientific and academic communities, the business community, donors and others, the report presented several proposals for action by the Commission to support and initiate activities at the national level and promote international cooperation.

Following consideration of the report, the Commission urged Governments to: increase the involvement of business and industry, and financial, academic and research institutions, NGOs and other major groups in national, regional and international consultations on biotechnology development trends and on impact assessments; encourage case-studies on "best practice" in the environmentally sound and safe development, application and management of biotechnology, and make their results available, especially to developing countries; support the establishment of biotechnology associations, particularly in developing countries, with a view to facilitating the safe commercialization and application of biotechnology products and processes; and mobilize financial resources for biotechnology research, development and work on safety and for its sustainable use and management, especially in developing countries.

Countries and international organizations were urged to accord high priority to measures aimed at integrating biotechnology, including biosafety concerns, into national and regional sustainable development policies and programmes and to make the experiences gained in the environmentally sound application and management of biotechnology available in order to facilitate the Commission's work.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October 1995 report on science and technology for development.⁽¹⁰⁶⁾ He described measures taken to ensure implementation of the programme on science and technology for development in the UN medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, and coordination efforts among the UN organizations and entities in science and technology.

With regard to financing, the report noted that the focus of the UN Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) in 1994 and 1995 had continued to be endogenous capacity-building, including technology assessment, technology innovation and entrepreneurship, quality control, and technology information and information technologies. The Endogenous Capacity-building Programme, carried out in Cape Verde, Jamaica, Pakistan, Uganda and Viet Nam, concluded in 1995 with the third round of policy dialogues among stakeholders, based on which technology portfolios for each country were being prepared; funding would be provided through a coalition of domestic and international resources. Based on experience gained by UNFSTD from the Technology Incubator Programme, which had concluded in 1994, a manual on technology business incubator centres was being prepared. Within the interregional programme on the maintenance and repair of scientific instruments, 60 Bangladesh nationals were trained as technicians and users and formed a national network. Similar training was carried out in Cameroon. Core contributions to UNFSTD for the period 1993-1995 came exclusively from developing countries, while project-related funding was provided by several European countries and Japan.

The follow-up to the 1994 Consultative Meeting on a Coalition of Resources for Science and Technology for Development⁽⁹⁸⁾ was described, including the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1995/4) that a coalition of resources should focus on specific themes and common goals among recipients, donors and international financing institutions, including the World Bank and the regional development banks.

The report stated that activities for 1996-1997 under the science and technology programme of the medium-term plan would focus on areas that could provide fresh insights into the consideration of science, technology and innovation policies. They would also include work on monitoring developments in science and technology, particularly those with implications for society at large, on production, employment and competitiveness, including assessment and diffusion of scientific and technological knowledge.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/101.

Science and technology for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the continuing validity of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, and recalling the relevant paragraphs of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the Cartagena Commitment, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its eighth session, the relevant recommendations and decisions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, particularly those contained in Agenda 21, and the relevant resolutions and decisions adopted by organizations and bodies of the United Nations system concerning science and technology for development,

Bearing in mind the vital contribution of science and technology, including new and emerging technologies, to the promotion of economic growth and development, particularly in developing countries, and stressing the importance of monitoring new developments in science and technology and their implications for society, on production, employment and international competitiveness, especially for developing countries,

Recognizing the importance for developing countries of having access to science and technology so as to enhance their productivity and competitiveness in the world market, and stressing the need to promote, facilitate and finance, as appropriate, access to and transfer of environmentally sound technologies and the corresponding know-how, in particular to the developing countries, on favourable terms, including on concessional and preferential terms as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights as well as the special needs of developing countries,

Stressing the primary responsibility of all countries for their own science and technology policies, and the need to further promote endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in developing countries so as to enable them to participate in, benefit from and contribute to the rapid advances in science and technology,

Recognizing that information technologies are important requisites for planning, development and decision-making in science and technology, and recognizing also their far-reaching implications for society,

Recognizing the importance of developing countries' own efforts in the field of science and technology for development,

Reaffirming that the United Nations should play an important role in the promotion of cooperation in science and technology, and in the enhancement of support and assistance to developing countries in their efforts to achieve the objectives set forth by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in this regard,

Recognizing the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in promoting the developing countries' endogenous capacity in science and technology, and recognizing its unique function as a global forum for the examination of science and technology questions, for the improvement of the understanding of science and technology policies for development and for the formulation of recommendations and guidelines on science and technology matters within the United Nations system, all in relation to development,

Recognizing the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in science and technology for development, as reaffirmed in General Assembly resolution 48/179 of 21 December 1993,

Recognizing the need for adequate resources to be devoted to fostering science and technology for development,

Recognizing the special needs and requirements of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, especially those in Africa,

Also recognizing the relevant problems of countries with economies in transition in the sphere of the transformation and development of their scientific and technological potentials,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of programme 17, Science and technology for development, of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997,

1. Reaffirms the relevant resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1995 on the basis of the report of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on its second session;

2. Reaffirms that capacity-building in science and technology in developing countries should remain a priority issue in the United Nations agenda, and urges that international cooperation efforts be intensified and strengthened towards developing countries' endogenous capacity-building in science and technology, including their capacity to utilize scientific and technological developments from abroad and to adapt them to suit local conditions;

3. Calls upon the international community to meet all the objectives as reaffirmed in chapter 34 of Agenda 21, in particular those dealing with effective access to and transfer of environmentally sound technologies, including new and emerging technologies and publicly owned technologies, to developing countries on favourable terms, including on concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights as well as the special needs of developing countries, so as to contribute to enabling those developing countries to meet their development-related challenges;

4. Stresses that it is important for developing countries to adopt and implement their own science and technology policies that support the national effort to achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development in the light of their respective national conditions, needs, priorities and objectives;

5. Stresses the need to strengthen the important role of the United Nations in the field of science and technology, particularly through effective policy guidance and better coordination, including in international cooperation in technology assessment, monitoring and forecasting;

6. Recognizes the role of the private sector in science and technology for development, in particular in the transfer and development of science and technology capabilities;

7. Also recognizes the role of Governments in science and technology for development, in particular in providing appropriate regulatory frameworks and incentives for the development of science and technology capabilities;

8. Requests the relevant organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations, in the spirit of coordination that should prevail in the activities of the United Nations system in the field of science and technology for development, to work in a coordinated manner to develop a catalogue of proved technologies that will enable developing countries to make effective choices from among state-of-the-art technologies;

9. Calls upon the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the Commission on Sustainable Development to interact more effectively, through the Economic and Social Council, in carrying out their respective mandates;

10. Calls upon the supporting secretariats of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the Commission on Sustainable Development to improve their interaction;

11. Takes note of the developments at the Consultative Meeting on a Coalition of Resources for Science and Technology for Development and the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council that the Commission on Science and Technology for Development provide a forum for exchanging views and interaction among partners of different networks and coordination schemes;

12. Reaffirms the need for adequate financial resources on a continuous and assured basis to foster science and technology for development, in particular to promote endogenous capacity-building in developing countries in accordance with their priorities;

13. Notes with appreciation the measures taken by the Secretary-General in response to paragraph 6 of General Assembly resolution 48/179 and invites him to continue to take all necessary measures, including to explore the possibility of organizing a more effective coalition of resources within the United Nations development system, multilateral financial institutions, regional development banks and bilateral funding agencies to ensure the full implementation of programme 17, Science and technology for development, of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and the activities planned for 1996-1997 in the field of science and technology for development, in accordance with specific mandates provided for in the relevant Assembly resolutions;

14. Takes note that enhanced cooperation could help focus the activities of the United Nations system in the field of science and technology for development for greater impact;

15. Recognizes the importance of cooperation among developing countries in the field of science and technology, building on their complementarities, and the need for further advancing such cooperation through the establishment and/or the strengthening of national technology and information centres in developing countries and their networking on regional, subregional, inter-regional and global levels to promote technology research, training and dissemination as well as joint projects in developing countries, and urges the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant international, regional and subregional organizations and programmes to provide continued and enhanced support, through technical assistance and financing for such efforts;

16. Requests the relevant organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to continue to promote the development of effective and mutually beneficial technological cooperation between countries with economies in transition and all other countries, including in the area of new and emerging technologies;

17. Notes the endorsement by the Economic and Social Council of the decision of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to select information technologies as the main substantive theme of its work during the inter-sessional period 1995-1997 and to set up panels and/or working groups to analyse, and elaborate and make recommendations on issues pertaining to information technologies and their implications for development;

18. Takes note of the decision of the Economic and Social Council to invite the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to consider ways and means for the formulation of a common vision regarding the future contribution of science and technology for development, taking advantage of the twentieth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held at Vienna in 1979;

19. Stresses the potentially important role that the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development should play in enhancing endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in developing countries, and calls on all countries in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Fund;

20. Reaffirms the need for Governments and regional and international bodies to take measures to ensure that women have equal access to and equal opportunity to participate in scientific and technological areas, especially in areas where they are not represented or are under-represented;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on progress in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/101

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.4) without vote, 8 December (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.68), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.25) and orally revised; agenda item 95 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 30-32, 37, 42; plenary 96.

Technology transfer

Commission on Sustainable Development. In a report on the transfer of environmentally sound technologies (ESTs), cooperation and capacity-building,⁽¹⁰⁷⁾ the Secretary-General covered three priority areas which the Commission on Sustainable Development had identified as requiring specific action: access to and dissemination of information on environmentally sound technologies; institutional development and capacity-building for managing technological changes; and financial and partnership arrangements. The report presented elements of a work programme for the promotion of EST transfer, cooperation and capacity-building.

In April,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Commission welcomed the elements of a work programme in that report and highlighted the need to develop a programme of work on the transfer of ESTs, cooperation and capacity-building, with the objective of reporting on its implementation by 1997. Organizations of the UN system, other intergovernmental organizations, the secretariats of various international conventions, and major groups, particularly business and industry, were urged to make clear commitments to undertake specific elements of the work programme, which the Commission included in its report.⁽¹⁸⁾

Draft code of conduct

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, in a 6 October note,⁽¹⁰⁹⁾ transmitted the report of the UNCTAD Secretary-General on negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology. The UNCTAD Secretary-General reviewed recent developments in the discussion on the draft code, including the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Interrelationship between Investment and Technology Transfer, the mandate of which ended in 1994,⁽⁶⁾ and the Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights, which was included in the Final Act of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations.⁽¹⁹⁾

The report noted that the international milieu had changed drastically since the negotiations on an international code of conduct began in the 1970s. It was important to assess the implications of conceptual and policy shifts for the international transfer of technology, particularly for developing countries, and assess their possible effects on enterprise and intergovernmental cooperation in technology transfer, including the identification of possible rules and principles that could enhance the stability and predictability required for such cooperation.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General suggested, therefore, that negotiations on the existing draft code should be formally suspended. Alternatively, the Assembly could close discussions on the code by disseminating to interested groups the outcome of the work so far achieved. He further suggested that Governments consider convening a round-table meeting of eminent persons to examine recent developments, so as to reconcile past differences and achieve a better understanding of the principles that should govern international cooperation in the area of technology.

By decision 50/427 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Coordination in science and technology

In response to a 1994 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in May a report on inter-agency coordination in science and technology for development.⁽¹¹¹⁾ He noted that focal points for science and technology had been designated in 26 major UN organizations and agencies and that inter-agency coordination bodies had discussed how best to deal with science and technology issues. At regional and national levels, the role of the UNDP Resident Coordinator was being given increased attention. It was recommended that the Council review progress in science and technology coordination within five years.

Economic and social trends and policy

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic and Social Survey 1995,⁽¹⁾ prepared by the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis (DESIPA) and issued in mid-1995, stated that the world economy appeared to have attained a "cruising speed" in growth of output of about 3 per cent a year—a rate that seemed to be sustainable. Although the rate of growth was not very rapid—about at the average of the 1980s—it was unusually widespread. The industrialized economies had emerged from recent recessions and were in expansionary phases, while inflation remained relatively under control. However, there was concern about the strength of the recovery in some countries and the limited impact it was having in reducing unemployment. An increasing number of economies that were in transition to the market system showed clear signs of having turned the corner from economic contraction to recovery. Nevertheless, economic and social conditions continued to be difficult and unemployment was inordinately high, as was inflation. In the developing countries, average economic growth had been maintained at a relatively high rate since 1992 and efforts to tame inflation had borne fruit. Even in Africa, where economic growth had been painfully slow, the pace of output growth had increased and per capita output was expected not to fall in 1995 for the first time in the decade. Latin America was experiencing the contractionary side to the inflows of volatile international portfolio investment that it had been enjoying in recent years.

The economic recovery in the developed market economies was well established and their pace of expansion was likely to show little change in 1995 from the 3 per cent recorded in 1994. In addition, the difference in growth rates among countries was becoming smaller. The growth of the economies of Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States was forecast to slow down in 1995, to a more sustainable rate, while in continental Europe economic growth was expected to proceed at or marginally above the 1994 rate. Japan was projected to continue its recovery, although it could be unusually weak by the standards of previous up-swings. In most of the industrialized economies, the unemployment problem remained intractable; it was expected to average 7.5 per cent of the labour force of the industrialized economies as a whole in 1995.

In 1994, for the first time since 1989, the overall economic situation in the transition economies of central and eastern Europe brightened. In all countries of the region and in the Baltic States, GDP grew and a similar result was forecast for 1995. Unemployment, however, was in double digits in all countries of the region except the Czech Republic. The strong performance of industry and the dynamism of newly established private firms were common sources of growth in most transition economies. However, among the higher-income economies, the two countries with the fastest rates of growth showed different experiences. Supply-side adjustment, most notably in industry, appeared to be the leading domestic source of economic growth in Poland, where industrial output grew by 12 per cent in 1994 and by 23 per cent in the industrial private sector, while in Slovakia, domestic factors played a negligible role in the strong GDP growth in 1994, which was mostly attributable to the growth of exports and the improving balance of trade.

For the Russian Federation and the other countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), the situation was one of continued and unremitting economic decline, according to reports from their statistical authorities. The cumulative fall in production between 1990 and 1994 totalled 47 per cent of the level of output in 1989 and the reported rate of decline actually accelerated in 1994 in two thirds of the countries. However, the Survey noted, the level of reliability of the statistical data received from the CIS countries was very low and analysis of the economic situation was thus difficult. It was clear, though, that macroeconomic stabilization had largely eluded CIS since the breakup of the Soviet Union, although significant progress in certain countries was within reach in 1995. The Russian Federation had reduced the annual increase in consumer prices to below 300 per cent in 1994 from the almost 1,000 per cent rate of 1993. In Ukraine, prices rose more than 10,000 per cent in 1993 but the rate of increase fell to 500 per cent in 1994.

The developing countries entered their fourth year of 5 per cent growth of GDP in 1995—an important trend when set against the average annual growth of 3 per cent in the 1980s. However, behind that steady average increase were strong contrasts. In Africa, economic growth picked up in 1994, stimulated by agricultural production and an increase in demand for Africa's exports from the recovering developed market economies. Improved export prices of non-oil commodities contributed to growth, but depressed oil prices dampened it in the oil-exporting countries. The GDP of the sub-Saharan Africa grouping grew in 1994 for the first time in two years, but the population grew faster. There were cases in Africa, however, where adjustment programmes had begun to pay off in economic expansion. Ghana, Mauritius, Tunisia and Uganda had had a string of years of substantial growth of GDP and the economy of Cote d'Ivoire began to grow following the CFA franc devaluation in 1994. Nevertheless, sustained high rates of growth were exceptions.

As in years past, the rapidly growing developing economies were concentrated in Asia. The 15 countries with the highest expected growth rates in 1995 were all in Asia, with forecast growth ranging from 5.8 per cent (the Philippines) to 10 per cent (China).

Latin America's growth rate, which had finally been gathering steam after the "lost decade" of the 1980s, was expected to drop precipitously in 1995 to less than half the 1994 rate. Creditor Governments and the financial community, including investors who lost considerable sums in the wake of the exchange-rate crisis in Mexico in late 1994, were asking whether better international surveillance of domestic policy might avert future crises.

By decision 1995/234 of 17 and 19 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Survey.

In a note giving an update of the world economy based on information available as at 15 December,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that the world economy had grown by some 2.6 per cent during 1995, a slightly slower rate than the 3 per cent forecast in the Survey. In part because of the effort to hold inflation at bay, the growth rate in the developed economies dropped by about half a percentage point in 1995, with the slow-down most pronounced in Australia, Canada, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States, which had been the first countries to emerge from the previous recession. In continental Europe, the recovery of 1994 and early 1995 slowed or paused later in the year, but growth was expected to be in the 2.5 to 3 per cent range during 1996. After four years of almost no growth of output, the Japanese economy was expected to begin modest growth in 1996.

The 5 per cent growth of GDP of the developing countries in 1995 and the 5.5 per cent forecast for 1996 reflected the capacity of many of those countries to capture and effectively utilize growth impulses, many of which arose in the international economy in 1995. In many developing countries, the translation into economic growth was enhanced by progress in domestic economic adjustment and, in some cases, by the quieting of political instability and civil disorder. Of 94 developing countries monitored regularly, only 7 were estimated to have had outright reduction of output in 1995 compared with 17 in 1994.

By the close of 1995, the deep economic decline of the early stages of the economic transition process in central and eastern Europe and the countries that had constituted the former USSR finally seemed to be ending. The countries of central and eastern Europe and the Baltic States, joined by Armenia, continued the growth that began in 1994. Although output was reported to have dropped again in almost all CIS nations, the rate of decline fell in 1995; the Russian Federation's economy was forecast to grow in 1996.

The Trade and Development Report, 1995(3) noted that world output growth had accelerated sharply in 1994, to reach 3.1 per cent, compared to 1.7 per cent in 1993. The increase was due to the recovery in the developed market-economy countries and continued high rates of expansion in developing countries and in China. In keeping with recent trends, production continued to be outpaced by trade, which rose in volume by close to 9 per cent in 1994, thanks to expansion of trade in manufactures (see also PART FOUR, Chapter IV).

Human Development Report 1995

The real wealth of a nation is its people and the purpose of development is to create an enabling environment for people to enjoy long, healthy and creative lives. So stated the Human Development Report 1995, prepared by UNDP. It noted that the human development concept had gone beyond its basic premises to emphasize the sustainability of the development process. Having considered the process of human development over the preceding three decades, the Report drew four major conclusions: the developing world had witnessed unprecedented improvements in human development in those 30 years; despite progress, considerable human deprivation remained in both the developing and the industrial world; rapid human progress was possible, development cooperation worked, and much more could be done by focusing national and international energy on essential targets; and the key human development challenges for the next century would require global compacts. The Report ranked 174 countries in its human development index.

In light of the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X), the theme selected for the 1995 report was gender and human development.

UNDP action. In accordance with a 1994 UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board decision,⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted a report⁽⁵⁾ on steps taken to improve the process of consultation with Member States and international bodies to refine methodologies used in the Human Development Report with a view to improving its quality and accuracy without compromising its editorial independence. He noted that consultations on the 1995 Report began with meetings in November 1994, followed by consultations and informal meetings in 1995. In addition, two expert advisory groups were established, consisting of experts from all parts of the world on gender and development, the theme of the 1995 report. Regarding international bodies, a policy of strengthening professional collaboration was pursued, particularly on statistics. As to assuring accuracy, attention was paid to improving data by reviewing data series and providing more detailed recording of sources and definitions.

By a 16 June decision,⁽⁶⁾ the Executive Board noted the report on the Human Development Report.

Long-term trends in social and economic development

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1995 a report on long-term trends in social and economic development.⁽⁸⁾ The document, which had been requested in time for the midpoint of the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000) on the basis of the updated Overall Socio-economic Perspective of the World Economy to the year 2000,⁽⁹⁾ addressed selected aspects of long-term changes in the world economy to assist the Assembly in its deliberations on long-term sustainable development.

The report discussed demographic changes and some social implications of those changes, noting that the world's population, which had been 2.52 billion in 1950, was estimated to be 5.72 billion by mid-1995. The total population was expected to exceed 6 billion by the year 2000, with almost all of the increase occurring in less developed regions. It went on to consider the determinants of and prospects for long-term economic growth and sectoral changes in the world economy.

The report concluded that although the rate of world population growth was slowing, prolonged large increments in its size would require policy efforts to facilitate the supply of adequate education, employment, health care and financial support appropriate to various age groups and in countries at different stages of development. To deal effectively with economic, social, political and environmental pressures for rapid international migration, especially from developing to developed countries, the international community should increase its efforts to promote rapid, equitable, sustained and sustainable development of the developing countries.

Technical innovations would continue to set in motion new cycles of product development that would spread across countries and change their competitiveness. The commitment of countries to free trade and international cooperation was critical to that process and the conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations was a hopeful portent that the international community could keep abreast of the rapid evolution of global production and trade systems with appropriate international accords. With regard to food production, policies were required to ease environmental constraints in certain regions and to generate a green revolution in Africa, which would soon be the region with the largest number of undernourished people. Since the atmospheric concentration of carbon dioxide due to growing energy consumption was expected to rise considerably by 2010, adherence to international agreements on the environment was of crucial importance.

By decision 50/424 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Development planning and public administration

Development planning

The Committee for Development Planning (CDP)—a 24-member expert group appointed by the Economic and Social Council to advise it on development issues—did not meet in 1995. However, the Council considered the body's methods of work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In February, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1995/215.

Committee for Development Planning

At its 5th plenary meeting, on 10 February 1995, the Council, recalling General Assembly resolutions 2084(XX) and 2096(XX) of 20 December 1965, 2564(XXIV) of 13 December 1969, 44/212 of 22 December 1989 and 46/206 of 20 December 1991 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1035(XXXVII) of 15 August 1964, 1079(XXXIX) of 28 July 1965, 1089(XXXIX) of 31 July 1965 and 1625(LI) of 30 July 1971, by which the Committee for Development Planning was established and entrusted with, inter alia, a broad mandate to assess world development trends and prospects, decided:

(a) To request the Secretary-General to submit nominations to the Council at its resumed organizational session in May 1995 or, at the latest, at its substantive session of 1995, for reconstitution of the membership of the Committee for Development Planning and to reconvene the reconstituted Committee before the end of 1995. In making the nominations, after consultations with interested Governments, the Secretary-General is requested to take into account the need for balanced representation and the diversity of issues dealt with by the Council and the General Assembly in the economic, social, environment and related fields;

(b) To request the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report to the Council at its substantive session of 1995 to enable it to review the working methods of the Committee, in line with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993;

(c) That the Committee should examine its working procedures with a view to improving them, in particular to reflect the ongoing work of the Council and the General Assembly and their subsidiary bodies;

(d) That the Committee should continue its work, in particular with regard to issues relating to the least developed countries;

(e) That the Chairperson of the Committee should address the Council on the major findings and conclusions of the Committee, starting in 1996.

Economic and Social Council decision 1995/215

Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1995/L.3), based on informal consultations; agenda item 4.

Meeting numbers. ESC 2, 5.

In response to the Council's request, the Secretary-General submitted a June report⁽¹⁾ on the methods of work of CDP. The report discussed the Committee's terms of reference and the evolution of its mandate and described the thematic content of CDP reports and its role within the UN system. The report's quality and dissemination were also addressed, as was the Committee's organization of work as regards selection of themes and pattern of meetings.

By decision 1995/234 of 17 and 19 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Public administration

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1995/212 of 10 February, the Twelfth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance was held in New York from 31 July to 11 August.⁽²⁾ The session was a preparatory meeting for the General Assembly's resumed fiftieth session (April 1996), which, in accordance with a 1994 Assembly resolution,⁽³⁾ was to be devoted to the question of public administration and development. The Meeting was preceded, on 28 July, by an informal inter-agency working group that reviewed the activities of UN departments, regional commissions, funds and agencies under their public administration and finance programmes.

The Meeting concluded that there were three central ideas that guided public administration in developed, developing and transition economies: (1) rapidly changing domestic and international conditions and demands for services would require innovative policies at the strategic level and improved service delivery systems at the operational level; (2) public administration would continue to fulfil critical functions in development, moving from supporting measures for economic growth to protecting the environment, to determining the relationship between the public and private sector, to reducing poverty and illiteracy and other social development activities, thereby achieving the goals of sustainable development; and (3) to fulfil critical future-shaping functions, public administration should bring about dynamic people-oriented systems through strategic restructuring and outstanding professionalism by attracting top-quality people into administration.

The Meeting's report contained 103 recommendations for action for national Governments and 96 for the United Nations under the following topics: strengthening government capacity for policy development, administrative restructuring, civil service reform, human resources development and public administration training; improving performance in the public sector; financial management; public-private interaction; social development; developing infrastructure and protecting the environment; government legal capacity; post-conflict rehabilitation and reconstruction of government machinery; and management of development programmes.

By decision 1995/325 of 12 December, the Council postponed consideration of the question of public administration and development until 1996.

Developing countries

Least developed countries

During 1995, the General Assembly, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board and the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board reviewed the problems of the officially designated LDCs. The Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries was held in September/October.

The number of countries on the UN list of officially designated LDCs remained at 48, namely: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zaire, Zambia.

UNDP action. In response to a 1993 request,⁽¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted to the April session of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board a report on matters relating to LDCs.⁽²⁾ With regard to aid coordination and economic management, the Administrator noted that assistance had been provided to LDCs through the use of Special Programme Resources (SPR) that were used to finance technical support and logistics for national aid coordination processes, such as the round-table process, consultative groups or thematic or sectoral meetings, and to help build national capacities for improved coordination and management of aid. Two major umbrella projects supported aid coordination in the Africa and Asia/Pacific regions. Nearly all country programmes in Africa stressed capacity-building and public sector reform; in 1994, UNDP had supported such programmes in Angola, Burkina Faso, Malawi, Mozambique, Namibia and Zambia, among others. Activities had also been carried out under the African Capacity-Building Initiative, the National Long-term Perspective Studies Programme and the NATCAP (national technical cooperation assessment and programmes) exercises.

UNDP efforts sought to deal with the priority areas of environment, poverty alleviation and human development in LDCs in an integrated and mutually reinforcing manner in country and regional programmes, as well as in other special initiatives, so as to promote sustainable human development. Many country programmes in LDCs included environmental management, and focal points for the environment had been designated in each of the country offices in LDCs. Poverty reduction was the key objective in most country programmes in LDCs. In several of them, UNDP collaborated with key partners in formulating participatory and innovative approaches to reducing poverty.

The Administrator stated that UNDP, over time, had allocated the majority share of its core resources to LDCs. For the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996), the percentage of total country indicative planning figures (IPFs) allocated to LDCs reached 58.2 per cent. The Special Measures Trust Fund for LDCs, however, had not received any contributions since 1993.

Other initiatives included the establishment of an operational link between UNDP and UNCTAD—the UN focal point for LDC matters—for coordination and exchange of information. Also, UNDP would participate in the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action to be held in September/October and would assist Governments to mobilize resources to permit their participation in the review. UNDP was decentralizing programme responsibilities to the country level, which would increase its responsiveness to changing national priorities and make support to aid coordination the central concern of country offices in LDCs.

On 7 April,⁽³⁾ the Executive Board asked UNDP to assist in the preparations for the mid-term review of the Programme of Action for LDCs and in mobilizing funding for the participation of LDCs. It urged the Administrator to ensure that poverty eradication was further strengthened in UNDP activities and that priority was given to LDCs, bearing in mind the commitments made at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). The Administrator was asked to keep under review the outcomes of relevant UN conferences and of the mid-term review of the Programme of Action and the implications for interventions by UNDP in LDCs, and to report to the Board as necessary.

Programme of Action for the 1990s

UNCTAD action. At its March session, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) conducted its fifth annual review of progress in implementing the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted in 1990 at the Second UN Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Paris Conference)⁽⁴⁾ and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.⁽⁵⁾

TDB had before it The Least Developed Countries—1995 Report,⁽⁶⁾ prepared in the context of the forthcoming High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Programme of Action for LDCs (see below). It noted that the overall economic conditions of LDCs in the early 1990s continued to be bleak. Instead of reversing the economic deterioration in LDCs, those years had actually marked a period of decline following two decades of stagnation. The combined annual average growth rate of LDCs during 1990-1993 was 1.6 per cent and was estimated to be even lower for 1994—at around 1.4 per cent. Although LDC economies faced almost identical structural problems and similar difficulties of access to product markets and external finance, their development experience had become more heterogeneous. As many as 12 LDCs (Bangladesh, Benin, Cambodia, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Mozambique, Myanmar, Sao Tome and Principe, Solomon Islands, Sudan) had improved their performance, with strong expansion of agricultural production, internal stability, strong government commitments, and a sound political and regulatory framework for development, complemented by significant external support, contributing to raising economic growth rates. At the other end of the spectrum were several countries whose development experiences were dominated by a range of non-economic factors such as civil conflicts, political instability, increased flows of refugees and internally displaced persons, recurrent droughts, floods and devastating cyclones.

In agreed conclusions of 31 March,⁽⁷⁾ TDB asked the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare an update of the Least Developed Countries Report 1995 in time for the High-level Meeting in September. In an exchange of views on LDC issues, attention was drawn to the progressive deterioration of economic and social conditions in LDCs despite vigorous efforts by them to implement the economic reforms envisaged in the Programme of Action. Inadequacy of external finance, impediments to market access and persistence of debt-servicing difficulties were cited by many participants as major contributory factors to the deterioration in economic performance. Attention was drawn to possible lessons that could be learned from the experience of LDCs that had performed relatively well and TDB urged the secretariat to identify gaps in implementing reforms and additional measures and to analyse more fully the question of whether such experience could be replicated in other LDCs.

The Board noted that the proceedings of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting could be enhanced if an assessment of progress in implementing the Programme of Action by Governments was available to it. It outlined various issues that such an assessment should include. TDB recommended that UNCTAD IX, to be held in 1996, take the outcome of the Mid-term Global Review fully into account and recommended for adoption by the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting a draft provisional agenda and proposals for organization of its work, which it annexed to the agreed conclusions.

The Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries—the main preparatory exercise for the Mid-term Global Review—took place in Geneva from 29 May to 2 June.⁽⁸⁾ As requested by TDB, the Meeting prepared a draft assessment of progress in implementing the Programme of Action at the national level and progress in international support measures, which it annexed to its report as a contribution to the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting (see below). The draft assessment covered: the main economic developments during the early 1990s as they affected the performance of LDCs; the policy reform process; civil strife and political instability; developments in the productive sectors; human resources development; external trade and the implications of the Final Act of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations; external finance; external debt and relief measures; and arrangements for implementation, follow-up and monitoring of the Programme of Action. The Meeting also presented possible recommendations covering a number of key areas of concern for LDCs: reforms; external trade and investment; external finance; and external debt.

Also in preparation for the Mid-term Global Review, the UNCTAD secretariat organized a series of expert group meetings: on women in development in LDCs (Niamey, Niger, 24-26 January);⁽⁹⁾ on fiscal policy reforms in LDCs (Geneva, 16 and 17 March);⁽¹⁰⁾ and on trade diversification in LDCs (Geneva, 10 and 11 April).⁽¹¹⁾ The issues of external finance, debt and trade were the subject of a special high-level panel organized during the Donor-Recipient Meeting in May.

Mid-term Global Review

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹²⁾ the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s was held in New York from 26 September to 6 October 1995.⁽¹³⁾ It was preceded, on 25 September, by a one-day Meeting of Senior Officials, which addressed outstanding issues related to the Meeting's organization of work. Among documents before the Meeting was, as requested by TDB (see above), an addendum⁽¹⁴⁾ to The Least Developed Countries 1995 Report, which examined why some LDCs had performed better than others and provided more recent data and analysis concerning trends in providing development finance to LDCs and in the evolution of their external debt and debt service.

The Meeting adopted: an assessment of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action at the national level, and progress in international support measures; and recommendations covering a number of key areas of concern for LDCs. It also adopted a Declaration on the Mid-term Global Review of the Programme of Action.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to requests contained in General Assembly resolutions of 1993⁽¹⁵⁾ and 1994,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a November 1995 report⁽¹⁶⁾ on the outcome of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review. The report summarized the Meeting's recommendations (see annex to resolution 50/103 below) and described the preparatory process for the review.

By decision 50/429 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Mid-term Global Review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted resolution 50/103.

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/206 of 21 December 1990, in which it endorsed the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, and 49/98 of 19 December 1994, in which it decided to convene the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s,

Reaffirming the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action, the prime objective of which is to arrest the further deterioration in the socio-economic situation of the least developed countries, to reactivate and accelerate growth and development in those countries and, in the process, to set them on the path of sustained economic growth and sustainable development,

Expressing serious concern that the least developed countries as a group have not been able to achieve many of the objectives of the Programme of Action and that their overall socio-economic situation has continued to deteriorate,

Noting with concern the reduced flow of development resources to the least developed countries, the resulting need to accord them priority in the allocation of concessional resources and their continued marginalization in world trade, as well as the fact that many least developed countries face serious debt problems and more than half are considered debt-distressed,

Taking note of agreed conclusions 423(XLI) of 31 March 1995 of the Trade and Development Board on the annual review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, which was underpinned by The Least Developed Countries 1995 Report,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s,

1. Reaffirms the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s as the basis for continuing cooperation between the least developed countries, which have the responsibility for their own development, and their development partners, based on shared responsibility and strengthened partnership, as well as its commitment to the full and effective implementation of the Programme of Action;

2. Endorses the measures and recommendations contained in the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, as annexed hereto, which are designed to ensure the full implementation of the Programme of Action over the second half of the decade;

3. Calls upon all Governments, international and multilateral organizations, financial institutions and development funds, the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, and all other organizations concerned to take immediate, concrete and adequate steps to implement the Programme of Action, taking full account of the measures and recommendations of the mid-term global review so as to ensure sustained economic growth and sustainable development in the least developed countries and to enable them to participate in and benefit from the process of globalization and liberalization;

4. Notes that many least developed countries, for their part, have been implementing courageous and far-reaching policy reforms and adjustment measures in line with the Programme of Action, and in that regard emphasizes the need for national policies and measures aimed at establishing macroeconomic stability by rationalizing public expenditure and adopting sound monetary and fiscal policies so as to ensure a dynamic private sector by such means as providing a sound legal framework and improving human resources development, living standards, health and the status of women, and calls upon the international community to provide adequate support thereto;

5. Strongly urges all donor countries to implement fully and expeditiously their commitments in all relevant areas, including the agreed menu of aid targets and commitments as set out in the Programme of Action and support to reinforce structural adjustment reform, as well as the measures agreed upon at the mid-term global review so as to provide a significant and substantial increase in the aggregate level of external support for the least developed countries, keeping in mind the increased needs of those countries as well as the requirements of the countries added to the list of the least developed countries following the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

6. Stresses the critical importance of providing multilateral assistance for the least developed countries, in the form of grant-based multilateral programmes, and in that regard calls attention to the need to ensure adequate replenishment of the International Development Association and the soft-term windows of the regional development banks;

7. Emphasizes the serious debt problems of the least developed countries, which necessitate strengthened efforts to formulate an international debt strategy that should include concrete measures to alleviate the debt burden and increased concessional financing in support of appropriate economic policy measures, which will be critical to the revitalization of the growth and development of the least developed countries, and encourages the Bretton Woods institutions to expedite the ongoing consideration of ways to address the issue of multilateral debt, including those concerning the least developed countries;

8. Reiterates that increased opportunities for trade can help reactivate economic growth in the least developed countries, calls for significantly improved market access for their products and emphasizes the importance of applying effectively the provisions of the Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, and further emphasizes in that context the importance of taking concrete action, as appropriate, to fully and expeditiously implement the Marrakesh Declaration as it relates to the least developed countries and the ministerial decision on measures in favour of the least developed countries, as well as the measures agreed to at the mid-term global review, with a view to enabling the least developed countries to maximize their benefit from the Final Act and to cope with any adverse effects arising therefrom;

9. Also reiterates the importance attached to the implementation of the ministerial decision on measures concerning possible negative effects of reform programmes on the least developed countries and net food-importing developing countries;

10. Reaffirms the importance of the follow-up and monitoring mechanisms for implementation of the Programme of Action at the national, regional and global levels as crucial to the implementation of the Programme of Action;

11. Recalls that in its resolution 49/98, it invited the Secretary-General to make recommendations to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session, with a view to ensuring that the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development had sufficient capacity to undertake an effective follow-up of the outcome of the mid-term global review and to follow up the conclusions and recommendations relating to the least developed countries adopted by major United Nations conferences, and in this regard takes note of the relevant proposals of the Secretary-General related to the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997;

12. Emphasizes the importance of the annual reviews by the Trade and Development Board of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action and the pressing need for enabling representatives of the least developed countries to participate in such annual reviews, and to that end requests the Secretary-General to defray the cost of participation of representatives of least developed countries by mobilizing extrabudgetary resources for that purpose and by reallocating existing resources of the regular budget, if required;

13. Recalls that at the end of the decade, a global review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action will be carried out, in accordance with paragraph 140 of the Programme of Action and operative paragraph 7 (c) of General Assembly resolution 45/206 regarding the consideration by the Assembly at its fifty-second session of the holding of a third United Nations conference on the least developed countries;

14. Calls upon the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its ninth session to take into account the outcome of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Mid-term global review of progress towards the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s

Part One

Declaration of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s

The Meeting

Declares, in particular, the following:

(a) The participants in the Meeting have undertaken an assessment of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action and agreed on concrete recommendations to ensure that the Programme is more effectively implemented throughout the remaining part of the decade.

(b) They reaffirmed their commitment to work cooperatively towards achieving the prime objective of the Programme of Action which is to arrest the further deterioration in the socio-economic situation of the least developed countries, to reactivate and accelerate growth and development in these countries and, in the process, to set them on the path of economic growth and sustainable development based on shared responsibility and strengthened partnership.

(c) The least developed countries as a group have not been able to meet many of the objectives of the Programme of Action and their overall socio-economic situation has continued to deteriorate. This deeply concerned the participants at the Meeting. At the domestic level, civil strife and recurrent natural disasters in some of the least developed countries and the resulting social economic burdens, macroeconomic imbalances and poor performance of the productive sectors, inter alia the lack of adequate physical and institutional infrastructures, have contributed to this deterioration. Persistent and serious debt and debt-servicing problems, very low levels of exports, and a declining share in world trade and the insufficiency of external finance have had unfavourable consequences on their growth and development.

(d) However, the least developed countries have continued to implement, under many difficulties, wide-ranging and far-reaching reforms. In some countries these efforts, complemented by a favourable external climate, have shown encouraging results. Many development partners have provided increased support to least developed countries, although the commitment to provide them with a significant and substantial increase in the aggregate level of external support has not happened.

(e) The participants are determined to pursue their efforts to implement the measures and recommendations agreed at the present Meeting. They are confident that the success of these efforts would lead to a reactivation and acceleration of growth and development in the least developed countries, and enable them to participate in and benefit from the processes of globalization and liberalization.

(f) They call upon all Governments, the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and the competent non-governmental organizations to combine their efforts in implementing the measures and recommendations agreed upon by the present Meeting so as to ensure the success of the Programme of Action.

(g) They firmly believe that, given political will on the part of the least developed countries, which have the primary responsibility for their development, and the support of the international community, the least developed countries will be able to enter the next century with better prospects for their peoples.

Part Two

Assessment of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s at the national level, and progress in international support measures

Introduction

1. The Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris in 1990, adopted the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s. The basic principles and aims of the Programme of Action are as valid today as when they were drawn up. The prime objective of the Programme of Action is to arrest the further deterioration in the socio-economic situation of least developed countries (LDCs), to reactivate and accelerate growth and development in these countries and, in the process, to set them on the path of sustained growth and development. The policies and measures in support of these objectives set out in the Programme of Action revolve around the following major areas: establishment of a macroeconomic policy framework conducive to sustained economic growth and long-term development; development and mobilization of human resources; development, expansion and modernization of the productive base; reversing the trend towards environmental degradation; promotion of an integrated policy of rural development aimed at increasing food production, enhancing rural income and enhancing non-agricultural sector activities; and the provision of adequate external support.

2. It was noted with great concern that only one country, i.e., Botswana, has graduated from the group of LDCs since the early 1970s. At the same time the number of LDCs has increased from 41 at the time of the Paris Conference in September 1990 to 48 countries at present, without a proportionate increase in support measures despite national and international efforts.

I. Main developments during the early 1990s

3. Despite vigorous efforts by LDCs to implement economic reforms as envisaged by the Programme of Action, the LDCs as a group have not been able to meet many of the objectives of the Programme of Action and their overall socio-economic situation has continued to deteriorate. Several factors, both domestic and external, have contributed to the overall socio-economic deterioration in the LDCs. The domestic factors include: civil strife and recurrent natural disasters in some LDCs and the resulting social and economic burdens, political instability, macroeconomic imbalances, manifested in large fiscal and balance-of-payments deficits, in many cases the unfavourable short-term impact of macroeconomic policy adjustments on specific areas, in particular the most disadvantaged and vulnerable sections of the population, and poor performance of the productive sectors including lack of adequate physical infrastructure. The external factors include: persistent debt and debt-servicing problems; the decline in the share of LDCs in world trade and their continued marginalization; the inadequacy of external finance; and the emergence of new claimants for aid.

4. According to United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) statistics, the real GDP growth rate of the LDCs averaged only 1.7 per cent per annum during the first four years of the 1990s, having declined from the growth rate of 2.3 per cent achieved during the 1980s. Despite the recovery in the world economy, the situation in the LDCs continues to be precarious, although a few of them made limited progress. With population growing at an average annual rate of 2.9 per cent, GDP per capita suffered an annual 1.1 per cent decline, thus threatening to worsen the already precarious income and consumption levels, as well as to widen the savings-investment gap in these countries.

5. While the slow-down in economic growth rates was common to both Asian and African LDCs, the former, which benefited, inter alia, from a relatively favourable regional environment, attained an average per capita output growth of 1.4 per cent in the 1990s, as compared with a 2.1 per cent per annum fall suffered by the latter. There have also been significant inter-country variations in growth performance. Thus, it is encouraging to note that, despite the poor performance for the group as a whole, nearly one quarter of LDCs were able to attain positive per capita income gains in the early 1990s. A strong expansion of agricultural production, internal stability, strong government commitments, a sound political and regulatory framework for development, complemented by significant external support, among other factors, have contributed to raising economic growth rates.

6. The worsening of socio-economic conditions in many LDCs in the 1990s has increasingly been translated into a marked deterioration in human welfare as reflected in reduced caloric intakes, increased mortality and morbidity, the re-emergence and spread of diseases, lower school enrolment, further marginalization of the weakest members of society, and other signals of acute social distress, as further reviewed below in section V.

7. Overall, the external environment facing LDCs has remained difficult. As these countries moved into the 1990s, despite an increase in exports of manufactured goods, their share in world exports and imports fell by more than three eighths and one third from the already low levels of 0.7 per cent and 1.0 per cent respectively in 1980. Despite vigorous efforts to diversify the largely commodity-based composition of their exports, the LDCs' economies continued to be vulnerable to vicissitudes and instability in commodity markets. Official development assistance (ODA), on which LDCs depend principally for their external financing, registered a decline over the early 1990s, and the aid outlook remains uncertain. Although a large number of LDCs have adopted national regulatory frameworks conducive to foreign investment, they have not yet attracted significant foreign direct investment (FDI). Despite measures adopted to alleviate their external debt burden, this burden continued to be unsustainably high for many LDCs and seriously compromises their adjustment and development efforts.

8. Some developing countries are also important development partners of LDCs. They have technical assistance and training programmes from which the latter have benefited. The potential for expanded economic and technical cooperation between LDCs and other developing countries merits further exploration and support by the international community, especially in view of the new opportunities emerging with the dynamic growth experience of a number of those other developing countries. As a means of maximizing the potential for such South-South cooperation, triangular funding arrangements which include the active contribution of developed countries and relevant international organizations can be initiated.

9. Several LDCs have been taking a number of measures to promote trade with neighbouring countries. For example, a number of African LDCs, especially land-locked ones, have sought to establish some form of free trade area or customs union at the subregional level. However, the establishment of such subregional arrangements has encountered a number of obstacles which have limited their effectiveness.

10. In sum, therefore, the requisite progress has not been made in most LDCs during the first half of the 1990s in realizing the overall objective of the Programme of Action, although some progress has been recorded in a number of LDCs as a result of the implementation of appropriate policies. Furthermore, the ongoing processes of economic globalization and liberalization are likely to have profound consequences for the future development of the LDCs. These processes, which offer great opportunities for growth and development, also entail risks of instability and marginalization. LDCs as a whole have made limited progress in overcoming structural constraints, infrastructural insufficiencies, debt overhang, promoting and diversifying the enterprise and export sectors, attracting foreign investment and creating a sufficient technological base. In this context, most of the LDCs will face globalization and liberalization from the situation of a constrained environment.

II. The policy reform process

11. In recent years, most LDCs have embarked on a process of structural adjustment and wide-ranging reforms, often under internationally agreed frameworks for structural and sectoral adjustment. Important areas of policy focus have been towards coping with fiscal and balance-of-payments deficits, improved mobilization and use of domestic resources, through tax reforms, improving the effectiveness of the public sector and providing greater opportunities for the private sector. LDCs have also initiated reforms in critical areas such as population, education, health, food security and trade policy.

12. There are, however, some cases where the pace and scope of these reforms contrast with the limited progress achieved. In particular, despite success in securing short-term macroeconomic stability, certain situations sometimes existed where the reforms appear neither to have helped in lifting structural constraints facing the economies of LDCs nor to have improved supply capacity and export diversification. Thus, while it was recognized that the reform process sometimes could not guarantee immediate results, it was emphasized that the efforts of LDCs provided a context in which, over the longer term, growth and structural transformation could reinforce each other under more favourable circumstances.

13. The experience of LDCs points towards a number of factors which determined the success or otherwise of reform measures. Prime among them has been government commitment to reforms, the appropriateness of national policy contents, sequencing of reforms and the level of external financial support to underpin reform efforts. Problems inherent in policy design, particularly the neglect of structural conditions and endowment-related considerations, retarded and even reversed the momentum of reforms. Inadequate domestic and external resource mobilization has been a particularly critical constraint for development in the LDCs.

14. The socio-economic difficulties of most LDCs have been further exacerbated by a specific set of environmental problems, such as land degradation and erosion, drought and desertification, which impair prospects for their development. These environmental problems have been aggravated in LDCs by a number of complex and interrelated factors, which include poverty and poverty-linked population pressures and cross-border refugee movements resulting from man-made and natural disasters. A noteworthy development has been that LDCs have demonstrated growing awareness of environmental issues and problems and many have implemented policies, strategies and institutional mechanisms to deal with them. The special situation and needs of the LDCs should be given special priority. International cooperation for sustainable development should be strengthened in order to support and complement the efforts of the LDCs. In particular, new and additional financial resources from all sources, both public and private, that are both adequate and predictable are necessary for environmentally sound development programmes and projects. However, adequate international support is needed to facilitate the transition from emergency relief to rehabilitation and development, and in particular in the context of activities under the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction and the promotion of national capacity-building to help prevent and mitigate future emergencies.

15. In many LDCs, it is encouraging to note that far-reaching changes in the system of governance, ranging from free elections to democratic constitutional reforms, have ushered in new possibilities for establishing more participatory and transparent systems of government. Generally, LDCs which achieved a revival of economic growth were those where greater progress has been made in securing popular participation and respect of human rights. In a number of LDCs, the consequences of man-made and other disasters have continued to drain resources, hampering overall long-term development. In some of these LDCs, armed conflict has often resulted in large-scale displacement of population, food emergencies and the unleashing of other destabilizing forces. The developmental task of Governments in meeting the socio-economic challenges posed became highly constrained under these circumstances. Besides destabilization caused by the presence of a large number of refugees, some LDCs have been obliged to provide asylum, with far-reaching implications for the budget, the environment impacts, other resource needs and related security problems which require urgent concrete international support for those countries hosting the refugees. The LDCs undergoing fundamental political, economic and social transformation, in the process of consolidating peace and democracy, require the support of the international community.

III. Developments in the productive sectors

16. During the early 1990s, agriculture in most LDCs has been characterized by lags in production growth relative to that of the population, continued declines in terms of trade and loss of market shares for traditional agricultural commodities. Agricultural production in LDCs fell by 1.1 per cent per annum in per capita terms during the period 1990-1993. Several LDCs responded to the continued poor performance of the sector by introducing reform measures, particularly reforming producer price incentives and marketing systems and the provision of essential agricultural inputs. While the overall thrust of these measures has been the removal of barriers to the private sector in agriculture, they have been unable to provide support services. A particularly disquieting trend in many LDCs is the growing incidence of man-made and recurrent natural disasters such as drought, flood, and devastating cyclones, which are the most important causes of food insecurity in many African LDCs. The situation has been further exacerbated by declines in food output and limited capacity to offset shortfalls through imports.

17. Notwithstanding the wide variations in manufacturing growth rates among LDCs, the performance of the manufacturing sector on the whole has weakened in recent years, manufacturing activities have remained relatively undiversified, and the utilization of capacity and resources has been low. The sector growth rate decelerated to 1.4 per cent per annum during the early 1990s, from 2.1 per cent per annum in the 1980s. While some one third of LDCs maintained a positive growth of manufacturing value added (MVA) in the 1980s and early 1990s, most LDCs experienced stagnation and even declines in manufacturing output. The response of the LDCs to deteriorating manufacturing performance has been through adjustments of macroeconomic policies and instruments, and sectoral measures to augment manufacturing output and efficiency. At the sectoral level, the LDCs have reoriented their incentive structure and introduced changes in institutional policies and regulatory arrangements in order to improve the macroeconomic environment for manufacturing production.

18. The LDCs have made major efforts to improve their transport and transit infrastructure systems during the last decade. The budgetary constraints faced by LDCs have, however, gradually undermined the financial capabilities of Governments to maintain the momentum of these efforts. These constraints are particularly felt in land-locked and island LDCs, where inadequate physical infrastructure poses major obstacles to structural transformation and economic development.

IV. Land-locked and island least developed countries

19. Sixteen of the 48 least developed countries are also land-locked. The high transport costs which result from their particular geographical handicaps continue to have a significant adverse impact on their international trade performance and overall economic development. In order to alleviate the particular problems which these countries face, the land-locked and transit developing countries, as well as the donor community, adopted a Global Framework for Transport Cooperation, which contains a comprehensive set of recommendations for concrete action at the national and subregional levels designed to improve the efficiency of transit transport systems. The Framework underscores the need for extensive financial and technical support by the donor community. The donor community recognizes this. Furthermore, the Framework calls upon

UNCTAD and the regional economic commissions to play a leading role in promoting the implementation of the agreed actions.

20. Island least developed countries continue to face particular problems resulting from their smallness, insularity and remoteness from the major economic centres. They are vulnerable to a number of adverse factors, including environmental degradation. Poor internal and external transport links to world markets negatively compound their ability to participate effectively in world trade. The Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted in Barbados in May 1994, outlines a range of measures that need to be undertaken in order to alleviate the particular problems which these countries face. The Programme calls for increased support by the international community to ensure effective implementation of these measures in conjunction with national measures in support of sustainable development.

V. Human resources development

21. LDCs have adopted and are implementing policies, measures and programmes to tackle key problems in human resources development. However, the expansion of national population programmes within the overall framework of human resources development has been difficult for a number of reasons, such as funding constraints, among others. These programmes have been complemented by strong efforts to change attitudes, including persuasion and campaigns relying on traditional and modern information techniques.

22. Despite major difficulties, there have been some encouraging results achieved by some LDCs, particularly in the areas of health and education. However, in many LDCs, mortality rates continue to be high. The situation is exacerbated by poor sanitation and hygienic conditions and the lack of safe drinking-water supplies. Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) and tropical epidemic and endemic diseases have become a major cause of death in recent years in some LDCs, as these countries have limited resources to deal effectively with such endemics and epidemics. The economic crisis faced by LDCs has further undermined health conditions in many countries as living standards have fallen, health services have been cut owing to budgetary pressures, and the availability of imported medicines and other medical supplies has dwindled. Education services continue to be affected by deteriorating economic conditions, in particular by budgetary constraints. There is need for investment in the development of human capacities, particularly in programmes of health, nutrition, education and training and population activities.

23. Although women constitute half of human resources in the LDCs, they have continued to be hampered by their marginal position from playing their full role in socio-economic development. Despite measures being taken to enhance their role in development, women in the LDCs still lag behind their male counterparts as well as women from other developing countries in all areas of social and economic development. They face particular problems related to gender discrimination, such as limited access to productive resources, restricted education and training opportunities, poor health status, low representation in strategic decision-making positions, as well as having to bear a high dependency burden: the more so, as deepening poverty is felt more acutely by women-headed households. In addition, prevalent attitudes regarding women's abilities and their proper socio-economic role, and women's own lack of knowledge about their rights, have kept them away from mainstream development. The lack of follow-up of decisions and internationally agreed recommendations aiming at the advancement of the status of women has also been a major cause of the poor prevailing situation.

VI. External trade and the implications of the Final Act of the Uruguay Round

24. The Programme of Action underlined that it is essential that all countries contribute to developing a more open, credible and durable multilateral trading system, recognizing that the results of this process could be a reflection, inter alia, of their respective weight in world trade. It is encouraging to note that the LDCs have contributed to this process by implementing important trade liberalization measures. The Programme of Action also called for important support measures in favour of LDCs in such areas as duty-free treatment of their exports, exemptions from quotas and ceilings and the use of simplified and flexible rules of origin. Progress made in the provision of such support has been important in the case of a number of countries. While a number of LDCs have been able to increase their exports, the overall trade situation of the LDCs has deteriorated, in that their share in global trade has continued to decline. Although globalization and liberalization offer opportunities to LDCs, these processes also pose major challenges, particularly in the form of increased global competition. Despite recent improvements, world commodity markets have remained volatile and depressed. As a result the LDCs have become further marginalized and this trend needs to be reversed.

25. The extremely low export capacity of most LDCs has continued to be one of the major obstacles to growth and a source of the high dependence on ODA for financing the necessary investment, imports and technical support for development. Difficulties have persisted in expanding the external trading opportunities of LDCs, as commodity and market diversification measures have been rendered difficult principally by lack of investment, technology and skills to augment levels of production and efficiency.

26. LDCs have been granted special tariff preferences under various Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) schemes and other preferential arrangements. Following the conclusion of the Uruguay Round, a number of countries have taken steps to improve their GSP schemes in favour of LDCs. However, some schemes still exclude a number of products of export interest to LDCs (e.g., textiles, clothing, carpets, footwear, leather goods, etc.) and have rigid rules of origin. As the ability of many LDCs to utilize such facilities remains constrained, only a part of GSP-covered imports from LDCs has received preferential treatment. Thus the use of GSP schemes, in particular by African LDCs, has remained limited.

27. The adoption of the Final Act of the Uruguay Round will have significant consequences for the trading prospects of LDCs, in particular as regards preferences and the competitiveness of LDC exports. Increased transparency of trade regimes and the reduction of trade barriers, particularly tariff-binding on agricultural products and reduction in tariff escalation, as foreseen in the Marrakesh arrangements, provide LDCs with increased opportunities in the long run. On the other hand, concerns have been expressed that LDCs may suffer erosion of preferential margins in relation to many of their exports to major markets and a possible consequential loss in export market shares and export earnings. In addition, the net food-importing LDCs may face higher import bills, at least in the short run, resulting from the agreement on agriculture. In the long run, the Final Act poses to LDCs the twin challenges of, first, developing and strengthening institutional and human capacities to formulate and manage legislation implementing the complex set of agreements of the Round, and secondly, building capacities for maximizing opportunities arising from these agreements. In this regard, the provisions of the Marrakesh Declaration and the ministerial decisions in favour of LDCs should be fully implemented.

28. A number of developed countries have set up in their own countries import promotion agencies in order to promote more trade with LDCs. Such agencies have played a helpful role in providing support services and in acting as contact points for business/trade missions from LDCs, undertaking market research and giving publicity to LDC products.

29. Trade among the LDCs, on the one hand, and that between LDCs and other developing countries within the same subregional or regional economic groupings, on the other hand, remains insignificant as a share of international trade. Only a few LDCs at present receive preferential treatment for their exports under the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries (GSTP) on a non-reciprocal basis. Additionally, subregional and regional trade is constrained by a number of obstacles, such as the fact that most countries produce similar export products, that subregional transport infrastructure is geared to trade with developed countries, that progress in tariff reduction is limited due to fiscal revenue implications for preference-giving countries, and that international support remains limited.

VII. External finance

30. It was noted with concern that ODA remains the single most important source of external financing for LDCs. While welcoming improved aid performance by some donors, at the same time it was noted that overall aid performance by donors fell short of the commitments undertaken in the Programme of Action. ODA flows (actual disbursements) from Development Assistance Committee (DAC) countries, and multilateral agencies mainly financed by them, to the LDCs declined sharply in 1993. In absolute terms, ODA flows fell by $1.5 billion. Almost $1 billion of this was due to a drop in multilateral aid flows to LDCs. In view of the important role of multilateral funding in meeting the financial needs of LDCs and the uncertain resource outlook for some of the major multilateral financial institutions and grant-based programmes, this is a particularly worrying development. The ODA/GNP ratio for DAC donors as a whole declined to 0.08 per cent in 1993 as compared with 0.09 per cent in 1990. Moreover, this shortfall has to be seen against the agreed menu of aid targets and/or commitments as set out in paragraph 23 of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s which call for a significant and substantial increase in resources to LDCs and include, inter alia, the targets of 0.15 per cent and 0.20 per cent of donor GNP as ODA.

31. Donors have modified and improved their policies in the area of aid modalities. Most DAC donors have now shifted to a grant basis in their aid programmes for LDCs, resulting in a further increase in the grant element of bilateral ODA (which averaged 97 per cent in 1993). Most multilateral funding to LDCs is also on highly concessional terms. Multilateral funding constitutes an important complement to bilateral ODA for the LDCs and it is crucial that the base of this multilateral funding be sufficiently broadened. International efforts should continue to mobilize resources to LDCs implementing structural adjustment programmes, such as the World Bank-led Special Programme of Assistance (SPA) process, which in some cases have resulted in limited progress.

VIII. External debt and relief measures

32. The external debt and its servicing burden remains a crucial issue for the majority of LDCs. According to Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development/Development Assistance Committee (OECD/DAC) information, LDC total debt stock amounted to $127 billion in 1993, corresponding to 76 per cent of their combined GDP. It appears that for half of these countries, their external debt is equal to or exceeds their respective GDP. The difficulties many LDCs have in meeting their external obligations, in the context of the critical current economic situation and their poor export performance, are reflected in the relatively low levels of debt service paid in relation to scheduled payments. The share of multilateral debt in total long-term debt, as well as debt service, has increased considerably in recent years. Thus, in 1993 the multilateral debt constituted around 36 per cent of total debt of LDCs as compared with 27 per cent in 1984. The corresponding share in total debt service during this period increased even more, from less than 30 per cent to almost 50 per cent. This increase partly reflects the "lender of last resort function" of the international financial institutions and the fact that an increasing number of bilateral creditors are relinquishing many of their ODA claims to LDCs and have shifted from credit lending to grants. Debt-relief measures taken so far have not yet fully provided an effective and durable solution to the outstanding debt and debt-servicing burden of LDCs, although important relief measures have been taken to reduce their debt stock and debt-service obligations. In particular, following the adoption of the Toronto terms in 1988 (and enhanced Toronto terms in 1991), from which 19 LDCs benefited, the Paris Club in 1994 improved the debt treatment of the poorest countries by adopting the "Naples terms". These may constitute a step forward for the LDCs but might not be sufficient by themselves to resolve their external debt problem. Eight LDCs have already benefited from these provisions, which notably offer the possibilities to reduce the eligible debt of the poorest and most indebted countries by 50 to 67 per cent.

IX. Arrangements for implementation, follow-up and monitoring of the Programme of Action

A. The national level

33. At the national level, review arrangements, including United Nations Development Programme

(UNDP)-sponsored round tables and the World Bank consultative and aid groups, have been further consolidated during the early 1990s, with additional countries joining or rejoining the process and meetings taking place more frequently and on a more regular basis. A strengthened country review process was considered the principal means of policy dialogue, and for coordinating the aid efforts of development partners with the development programmes of LDCs as well as mobilizing the required resources for their implementation. In all, over 60 full-scale consultative aid groups and round table or similar meetings were organized from the adoption of the Programme of Action until early 1995. While results in terms of resource mobilization have varied between countries, these meetings no doubt have an important role to play in improving aid flows to LDCs and in aid coordination. An important aspect of the country review process in recent years has been the attempt to link these arrangements more closely to national policy-making and programming.

B. The regional level

34. At the regional level, the Programme of Action called for monitoring progress in economic cooperation between LDCs and other developing countries, particularly those in the same region. It also called for organizing cluster meetings to improve and strengthen existing cooperation arrangements at the regional and subregional levels. The United Nations regional commissions have, as part of their ongoing work, continued to follow up and monitor the implementation of the Programme of Action in LDCs in their respective regions. The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) has established a Special Body on Least Developed and Land-locked Developing Countries. The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) has continued to consider progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action in African LDCs during the annual meetings of the Commission. However, owing to resource constraints in the United Nations the cluster meeting process has not been initiated.

C. The global level

35. At the global level, UNCTAD has responsibility as the focal point for the monitoring, follow-up and review of the implementation of the Programme of Action. In addition to the regular follow-up, monitoring and review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action at the global level by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, efforts have also been made to promote the full mobilization and coordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system for the purpose of the implementation and follow-up of the Programme of Action, but more remains to be done. Individual agencies have continued to develop and implement assistance programmes for the LDCs and pursued their advocacy and policy advisory missions with regard to these countries. There is need for regular reporting of progress made by various agencies.

Part Three

Recommendations

36. The present recommendations are based on the assessment of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s presented above, as well as on information contained in The Least Developed Countries 1995 Report, and recommendations made by the expert groups convened by the UNCTAD secretariat as part of the preparations for the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s. These recommendations cover a number of key areas of concern for the LDCs.

I. Major challenges

37. The challenges facing LDCs in the second half of the 1990s are to reverse the decline in economic and social conditions, to promote sustainable economic growth, development and structural transformation and to avoid becoming further marginalized in the international economy. An intensified policy commitment by both LDC Governments and the international community will be required to meet these challenges. In implementing domestic policies, LDCs should endeavour to focus on measures to restore and maintain macroeconomic stability; to promote the growth and diversification of exports; to strengthen an enabling environment for private-sector investment and entrepreneurship; to enhance human resources development; to continue to implement population and development programmes with full respect for the various religious and ethical values and cultural background of each country's people; to adhere to basic human rights recognized by the international community which strike an optimal balance in the interrelationship between their population, their natural resource base and the environment, taking into account economic imperatives; to strengthen the infrastructure; to promote good governance as mentioned in the Programme of Action; to broaden popular participation in the development process; and to ensure the full utilization of human resources along with democratization, promotion of good governance, observance of the rule of law and peaceful resolution of any civil conflicts where such conditions exist. The broad outlines of a domestic economic policy framework conducive to meeting the challenges facing the LDCs are delineated below.

II. The economic policy framework

38. (a) Macroeconomic stability would require rationalization and sound management of public expenditure, properly planned monetary growth and maintenance of appropriate exchange rates commensurate with ensuring a sustainable external balance;

(b) Policies to increase export earnings, including appropriate exchange rate and trade policy reforms to reverse the decline in the share of world trade of the LDCs, diversify the composition of their export structure and to facilitate their ability to exploit opportunities arising from the Final Act of the Uruguay Round, are essential;

(c) This will entail strengthening of existing policies and measures for the promotion and support of the private sector complemented with public investment, including policy-based incentives or the adoption of new policies and measures where necessary;

(d) The potential for economic and technical cooperation between LDCs and other developing countries merits further exploration. The international community should help LDCs promote trade links and should take appropriate measures to support such trade links, particularly subregional and regional trade. Such trade could be promoted by identifying complementarities in production structures among countries, strengthening the institutional and human capacities for the operation of subregional trading arrangements, establishing subregional trade information networks, and associating the private sector more closely with the integration process. There are potential gains for the LDCs in participating in the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries (GSTP). LDCs should be encouraged to accede to GSTP and be provided with appropriate technical assistance to enable them to benefit fully from the system. Least developed countries should strengthen subregional, regional and interregional cooperation in order to benefit from economies of scale and to attract foreign direct investment more easily from developed and other developing countries. More attention should be given to promoting triangular cooperation and technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) as well as South-South joint ventures and economic cooperation among developing countries (ECDC) investment in these countries;

(e) The growth of a dynamic private enterprise sector requires an appropriate economic, fiscal and legal framework. Essential features of this framework are stable and predictable policies, tax, monetary and trade policies which ensure adequate incentives for investment, and a legal system which protects property rights and commercial contracts. These features are also needed to tap into international capital flows in the form of direct and portfolio investments;

(f) Enhancing human resources development is imperative if LDCs are to raise productivity, output and living standards. With the support of the international community, LDC Governments should intensify their efforts to raise education and training standards, promote life-long learning, improve the health status of their populations, and strengthen the status of women, by implementing appropriate policies in accordance with the provisions of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women;

(g) To enable women in LDCs to play their full role in development, efforts should focus on legislative and administrative reforms to give women full and equal access to economic resources, including the right to inheritance and to ownership of land and other property, credit, natural resources and appropriate technologies, and to involve women directly in planning, decision-making, implementation and development of macroeconomic and social policies, programmes and projects. Special initiatives and innovative schemes which can give women increased access to credit, training, information on marketing channels, as well as other support services, to alleviate the burden of their role as mothers and housewives, should be adopted;

(h) The economic policy strategies adopted by the LDCs should be consistent with the need to eradicate the chronic levels of poverty afflicting these countries, in particular by promoting the development of the private sector and entrepreneurship, by ensuring that all people have access to productive resources, and benefit from a policy and regulatory environment that enhances their overall capacities and empowers them to benefit from expanding employment and economic opportunities;

(i) LDC Governments are attempting to implement comprehensive structural adjustment reforms in very difficult circumstances, often in the face of severe administrative and financial constraints. Many of the constraints that they face are structural, deep-seated and not amenable to short-term solutions. Consequently, successful structural adjustment reforms require a government commitment to reform, and a medium-term to long-term perspective for implementation;

(j) In order to ensure that structural adjustment programmes include social development goals, in particular the eradication of poverty, the generation of productive employment and the enhancement of social integration, LDC Governments, in cooperation with the international financial institutions and other international organizations, should:

- (i) Protect basic social programmes and expenditure, in particular those affecting the poor and vulnerable segments of society, from budget reductions;
- (ii) Review the impact of structural adjustment programmes on social development by means of gender-sensitive social-impact assessments and other relevant methods, and develop policies to reduce their negative effects and improve their positive impact;
- (iii) Further promote policies enabling small enterprises, cooperatives and other forms of micro-enterprises to develop their capacities for income generation and employment creation;
- (k) Agreeing on a mutual commitment between interested developed and developing country partners to allocate, on average, 20 per cent of ODA and 20 per cent of the national budget, respectively, to basic social programmes, and in this context, the proposal of the Government of Norway to host a meeting in 1996 among interested countries and representatives of relevant international institutions, with a view to considering how the 20/20 initiative can be applied operationally, is welcomed;

(7) Commitment of the LDCs and the assistance of the international community are essential components for the success of structural adjustment programmes. Without such support, the long-term objectives and the sustainability of the programmes will be jeopardized. In this regard, therefore, renewed commitments by the international community as defined by the Programme of Action adopted in Paris and other relevant instruments to support the efforts of the LDCs with adequate resources are vital.

III. External trade and investment

39. The extremely low export capacity of LDCs, their very low level of export receipts, and the fluctuation and the resulting sharp limitation on their capacity to import, are the major structural constraints to developing LDC trade. This situation is more acute in the case of land-locked and island least developed countries, as their external trade is further impeded by high transportation costs.

40. Action by the international community, including increased technical assistance as foreseen in the Marrakesh Ministerial Decision on Measures in Favour of LDCs, complemented by adequate financial support, can help LDC efforts to increase export earnings through increased production in both the traditional and the modern sectors of the economy, through diversification of the commodity structure and export markets, and thereby help to obtain better prices for their export commodities. It can also help LDCs to mitigate any adverse effects of the implementation of the Uruguay Round agreements and to integrate themselves better into the international trading system. The interest of LDCs regarding the idea of considering the setting up of a "safety net" to help them cope with any such effects in the immediate and short term was noted. The Final Act of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, including the special clauses providing differential and more favourable treatment, and the decision on measures in favour of least developed countries provide the institutional framework for these matters.

41. All provisions of the Final Act of the Uruguay Round should be effectively applied. In this regard, concrete action, as appropriate, should be taken, consistent with the Final Act, to fully and expeditiously implement the Marrakesh Declaration as it relates to LDCs, and the Ministerial Decision on Measures in Favour of LDCs, and to give effect to the Ministerial Decision on Measures Concerning the Possible Negative Effects of the Reform Programme on Least Developed and Net Food-importing Countries, with a view to enhancing LDC participation in the multilateral trading system, taking into account the impact of trade liberalization, and the relatively weak capacities of LDCs to participate in an increasingly competitive global market in goods and services.

42. Consideration shall be given to further improving GSP schemes and other schemes for products of particular export interest to LDCs, e.g., agricultural products, fish and fish products, leather and footwear, and textiles and clothing, through, where possible, the widening of product coverage; the reduction of procedural complexities, and the avoidance of frequent changes in the schemes. Consideration should also be given to a significant reduction in tariff escalation.

43. The rules set out in the various agreements and instruments and the transitional provisions of the Uruguay Round, including those relating to anti-dumping, countervailing duties, safeguards, and rules of origin, should be applied in a flexible and supportive manner for the least developed countries.

44. As for textiles and clothing, consideration should be given, to the extent possible, to permitting meaningful increases in the possibilities of access for exports from LDCs.

45. In the area of services, efforts should be directed at building and strengthening the efficiency and competitiveness of the weak domestic service sectors of the LDCs. Their participation in trade in services could be enhanced by effective application of article IV of the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS) with special priority given to LDCs. Furthermore, ways should be explored to facilitate LDC access to information technology and networks and distribution channels, and to give easy access to information to LDC service suppliers through contact points to be established, in accordance with GATS. It was noted that the movement of labour for the provision of services to other countries is an area of interest to LDCs.

46. Care should be taken so that domestic laws and regulations of importing countries in areas such as labour and the environment do not constrain the export opportunities of LDCs in a manner inconsistent with the Final Act of the Uruguay Round.

47. The home countries of foreign investment are urged to encourage investment in LDCs by taking appropriate supportive action.

48. South-South cooperation at the subregional and regional levels should be promoted to enhance regional and subregional trade by providing market access for LDCs by neighbouring countries. Appropriate measures should be taken to promote, support and strengthen trade initiatives of LDCs in subregional and regional groupings. Efforts of the LDCs to diversify their exports need to be supported so that their trading prospects become more viable. Such cooperation can be critical in complementing actions by LDCs and their development partners to attract foreign investment to LDCs. Measures should be taken to grant preferential access to the exports of LDCs on a non-reciprocal basis by developing countries under the GSTP, and also to augment resources, where appropriate, for promoting economic cooperation among developing countries (ECDC) and technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) through multilateral and bilateral institutions. Developing countries should, inter alia, introduce preferential schemes for LDCs under the GSTP.

49. Technical assistance should be refocused and wherever necessary intensified to help LDCs adapt to and take advantage of the new trading environment created by the conclusion of the Uruguay Round. Common efforts of donors, international organizations as well as the LDCs themselves are needed in the implementation of the commitments undertaken and for maximizing the opportunities arising from the Uruguay Round agreements. Main areas of technical assistance in this regard should include:

(a) Enhancing institutional and human capacities to comply with the new obligations arising from membership of the World Trade Organization (WTO) or to assist LDCs to accede to WTO, as well as to formulate and implement future trade policy;

(b) Developing and strengthening supply capabilities in relation to tradeable goods and services, and the competitiveness of enterprises;

(c) Improving the microeconomic trading environment and expanding the use of new communications technologies in the service of trade through the UNCTAD Trade Efficiency Programme;

(d) Enhancing the capability to make full use of GSP schemes;

(e) Supporting commodity diversification and marketing efforts;

(f) Expanding the trading and investment opportunities of LDCs, in particular, by identifying new trading opportunities which could be carried out, inter alia, through import promotion agencies by developed and other countries, developing an environment conducive to attracting foreign investment, and through advice and technical support.

50. With a view to achieving these aims, it is essential to eliminate duplication and strengthen cooperation between relevant international organizations, in particular UNCTAD, WTO and the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT, in order to conserve scarce resources and make full use of the existing and potential synergies among these organizations. Among the measures that should be considered is the establishment of a technical assistance fund administered by WTO in order to help LDCs participate actively in WTO.

IV. External finance

51. The overwhelming dependence of LDCs on official development assistance (ODA) is likely to continue during the rest of the present decade and beyond. The basic policy issues that the international community faces in this respect in the current climate of budgetary stringency and ODA scarcity, are: (a) how to improve aid allocations to the LDCs; and (b) how to enhance the quality and effectiveness of assistance to these countries. Donors need to expeditiously implement the agreed menu of aid targets and/or commitments as set out in paragraph 23 of the Programme of Action and fulfil their commitments to provide a significant and substantial increase in the aggregate level of external support to LDCs, keeping in mind the increased needs of these countries, as well as the requirements of the new countries included in the list of LDCs following the Paris Conference. The various provisions of the relevant resolutions adopted in the General Assembly in recent years, as well as the various relevant provisions adopted by recent major United Nations conferences, in particular the World Summit for Social Development, should also be taken into account, as adopted.

52. In view of the enhanced assistance capacities of a number of developing countries over the last few years, they should be invited to join the traditional donor countries in providing assistance to the LDCs.

53. The following measures and actions by donors can be highlighted:

(a) Specific measures to incorporate the agreed menu of aid targets and/or commitments as set out in paragraph 23 of the Programme of Action more explicitly into the national aid strategies and budgetary planning mechanisms of donors;

(b) Ensure adequate funding of the multilateral institutions and programmes which are major sources of financing for LDCs. Particular attention will have to be paid to replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA) and the soft-term windows of the regional development banks, and other grant-based multilateral programmes. The relevant multilateral financial institutions are also invited to explore the possibility of tapping new sources of funds to help support LDC development efforts;

(c) Support United Nations development efforts by substantially increasing the resources for operational activities on a predictable, continuous and assured basis commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries as stated in General Assembly resolutions 47/199 of 22 December 1992 and 48/162 of 20 December 1993, while giving particular consideration to the special needs of LDCs as underlined in the programmes of action of major United Nations conferences organized since 1990;

(d) Continue to give high priority to LDCs in the operational activities of all parts of the United Nations system for development, bearing in mind decision 95/23 of 16 June 1995 of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and of the United Nations Population Fund, in which it is stated that 60 per cent of UNDP programme resources in its future programming arrangement should be allocated to LDCs;

(e) Continue to provide financial support to adjustment programmes in LDCs on a timely basis and on terms adapted to the special needs and circumstances of LDCs, adequate external financing for the development and diversification of the productive sector, as well as additional support for poverty eradication, environmental conservation and social programmes;

(f) An increased level of technical assistance should be provided to LDCs and priority should be given to skill transfer, with a view to developing national capacity;

(g) Ensure the maintenance of mutual transparency and accountability in the management of aid resources by the aid officials of donor countries/organizations and managers in recipient countries, as well as ensure the active support of the donor countries/organizations towards the promotion of ownership of development programmes by the recipient countries;

(h) The international community should support the measures being taken in the LDCs towards the eradication of poverty. Increased resources should be made available from all possible sources, public and private, in this regard.

V. External debt

54. Many LDCs face serious debt problems and more than half are considered debt-distressed. The serious debt problem of the LDCs necessitates strengthened efforts on the international debt strategy. This strategy should include concrete measures to alleviate the debt burden and increased concessional financing, in support of appropriate economic policy measures, which will be critical to the revitalization of growth and development. Debt-distressed LDCs should benefit from substantial debt-relief schemes.

A. Official bilateral debt

55. (a) All donors that have not already done so are urged to implement Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978 by cancelling or providing equivalent relief for ODA debt as a matter of priority in such a way that the net flows of ODA are improved for the recipient. Those creditors still holding such claims, including non-OECD creditors, are urged to take similar measures;

(b) Adopt measures to substantially reduce the bilateral debt of the LDCs, in particular the countries of Africa, as soon as possible;

(c) Paris Club creditors are invited to continue to implement expeditiously and in a flexible manner the very concessional treatment under the Naples terms;

(d) Other non-Paris Club creditors are also invited to take similar measures in order to alleviate the debt burden of debt-distressed LDCs, including by setting up special debt-reduction programmes and debt-relief mechanisms.

B. Multilateral debt

56. In order to address the multilateral debt problems of LDCs, the Bretton Woods institutions are encouraged to develop a comprehensive approach to assist countries with multilateral debt problems, through the flexible implementation of existing instruments and new mechanisms where necessary. In this respect the Bretton Woods institutions are encouraged to expedite the ongoing consideration of ways to address the issue of multilateral debt. Other international financial institutions are invited to consider, within the scope of their mandates, appropriate efforts with a view to assisting LDCs with multilateral debt problems.

C. Commercial debt

57. (a) Invites creditor countries, private banks and multilateral financial institutions, within their prerogatives, to consider continuing the initiatives and efforts to address the commercial debt problems of the LDCs;

(b) Mobilize the resources of the Debt Reduction Facility of the International Development Association in order to help eligible least developed countries to reduce their commercial debt, considering alternative mechanisms to complement that Facility.

58. In accordance with the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, techniques of debt conversion applied to social development programmes and projects should be developed and implemented.

VI. Arrangements for implementation, follow-up and monitoring of the Programme of Action

59. It is important that UNCTAD, which is the focal point at the global level for the monitoring, follow-up and review of the implementation of the Programme of Action, has sufficient capacity and resources to follow up the outcome of the mid-term global review. In this regard, it is recalled that the General Assembly, in resolution 49/98, invited the Secretary-General to make recommendations to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session with a view to ensuring that the UNCTAD secretariat has sufficient capacity to undertake an effective follow-up of the outcome of the mid-term review as well as the follow-up of the conclusions and recommendations relating to LDCs adopted by major global conferences, as appropriate.

Island developing countries

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1995 report⁽¹⁸⁾ on action taken by UN organs, organizations and bodies to implement the 1994 Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (SIDS).⁽¹⁹⁾ In addition to providing details of the plans and programmes adopted within the UN system to implement the Programme of Action, the report reviewed the institutional arrangements either already in place or envisaged to support such implementation.

In concluding observations, the report stated that organizations and bodies of the UN system had incorporated elements of the Programme of Action that fell within their mandates into their work programmes and had begun to implement projects to meet the Programme of Action's priorities.

In an addendum to the report,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General provided, in tabular form, project-related information supplied by UN organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted resolution 50/116.

Implementation of the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/122 of 19 December 1994 on the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling also its resolution 49/100 of 19 December 1994 on specific measures in favour of island developing countries,

Reaffirming that, because the development options of small island developing States are limited, there are special challenges to devising and implementing sustainable development plans, and that small island developing States will be constrained in meeting such challenges without the cooperation of the international community,

1. Notes with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on action taken by the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to implement the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and welcomes in particular the action that has been taken by the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the United Nations Secretariat to support the system-wide implementation of the Programme of Action;

2. Takes note of the establishment of the Small Island Developing States Unit within the Department, and requests the Secretary-General to maintain the level of staffing and the structure and organization of the Unit in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/122;

3. Welcomes the action that has been taken to enable the regional commissions to support activities to coordinate the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

4. Takes note of the interim measures that have been instituted to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to enable it to complement the functions of the Department with respect to the implementation of the Programme of Action, and requests the Secretary-General to implement fully the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 49/122;

5. Calls upon Governments, as well as the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, to continue to implement fully all the commitments and recommendations that were made at the Conference, and to continue to take the action necessary for effective follow-up to the Programme of Action, including action to ensure the provision of the means of implementation under chapter XV thereof;

6. Welcomes, in particular, the progress made by the United Nations Development Programme in implementing General Assembly resolution 49/122, and invites the Programme to continue to implement all the provisions of both the technical assistance programme and the information network for small island developing States, as appropriate;

7. Takes note of the support that has been provided by the Commission on Sustainable Development to following up the implementation of the Programme of Action in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/122 and the Programme of Action itself, and invites the Commission at its fourth session to consider giving due attention to small island developing States in the national presentations on coastal zone management;

8. Notes the initial action that has been taken by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and by the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development in preparation for the high-level panel that is being convened to discuss the challenges faced by island developing countries, particularly in the area of external trade, and invites the Conference and the Department to complete their arrangements in time for the fourth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, and to make the report of the panel available to the Conference at its ninth session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Small Island Developing States Unit of the Department include in its work programme, along with an indication of the resources of its activities and programmes, provision for the development and compilation of a vulnerability index for small island developing States, to be prepared in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other relevant organizations;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the plans, programmes and projects for the sustainable development of small island developing States that have been implemented in response to the Programme of Action, as well as those that are under implementation and those that are envisaged for implementation within five years of the date of the report;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States";

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on action taken to implement the present resolution.

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/618/Add.4) without vote, 30 November (meeting 40); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.47), based on informal consultations on draft by Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Philippines (for Group of 77 and China), Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom and United States (A/C.2/50/L.32); agenda item 96 (e).

Land-locked developing countries

UNCTAD action. In accordance with a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽²¹⁾ the Second Meeting of Governmental Experts from Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions was held in New York from 19 to 22 June 1995,⁽²²⁾ the first having been held in 1993.⁽²³⁾ The Meeting was preceded by a Symposium for Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries which addressed specific regional problems faced by those countries in their efforts to improve their transit transport systems (New York, 14-16 June).⁽²⁴⁾ The Symposium, which was also convened in response to a 1993 Assembly request,⁽²¹⁾ made proposals for the development of a global framework for transit transport cooperation between land-locked and transit developing countries and the donor community and submitted them to the Second Meeting for consideration.

On 22 June, the Meeting adopted the Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation between Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community and annexed it to its report.⁽²⁵⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General, by a September note,⁽²⁵⁾ submitted the UNCTAD Secretary-General's report on progress in implementing specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries. The report described UNCTAD's activities, including the Second Meeting of Governmental Experts, the Symposium for Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries and its technical cooperation projects on behalf of those countries. It also summarized replies received from individual countries and from international and intergovernmental organizations in response to a request for information on action taken related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries.

The report concluded that the replies received underlined the fact that rail and road services were particularly relevant for transit transport operations. Although physical infrastructure development remained a priority concern, the removal of non-physical barriers to the smooth movement of transit cargoes was assuming significant importance. That related largely to the simplification and harmonization of customs and administrative procedures in ports and along the transit transport corridors, as well as to the simplification of other controls for the movement of cargo. Inter-State cooperation was considered essential for efficient transit transport operations, and bilateral agreements were the most common instruments for such cooperation. In Africa, regional agreements within the context of regional integration schemes were a major vehicle for promoting cooperative arrangements. Technical assistance from UNCTAD and other international agencies was generally viewed as a critical support measure to improve the efficiency of transit transport operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 20 December, adopted resolution 50/97.

Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 44/214 of 22 December 1989, 46/212 of 20 December 1991 and 48/169 of 21 December 1993,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and prohibitive transit costs and risks impose serious constraints on the overall socioeconomic development efforts of the land-locked developing countries,

Recognizing also that 16 of the land-locked developing countries are also classified by the United Nations as least developed countries and that their geographical situation is an added constraint on their overall ability to cope with the challenges of development,

Recognizing further that most transit countries are themselves developing countries facing serious economic problems, including the lack of adequate infrastructure in the transport sector,

Recalling that measures to deal with the transit problems of land-locked developing countries require closer and even more effective cooperation and collaboration between those countries and their transit neighbours,

Welcoming the entry into force on 16 November 1994 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

Recognizing the important role played by bilateral cooperative arrangements and regional and subregional cooperation and integration in alleviating the transit problems of the land-locked developing countries and improving the transit transport systems in land-locked and transit developing countries,

Recognizing also the importance of continuing the activities of the regional commissions to improve the transit transport infrastructure in the land-locked and transit developing countries,

Noting the importance of strengthening the existing international support measures with a view to addressing further the problems of land-locked developing countries,

1. Reaffirms the right of access of land-locked developing countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit States by all means of transport, in accordance with international law;

2. Also reaffirms that transit developing countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for land-locked developing countries should in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests;

3. Calls upon both the land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours, in the spirit of South-South cooperation, including bilateral cooperation, to implement measures to strengthen further their cooperative and collaborative efforts in dealing with their transit problems;

4. Appeals once again to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries envisaged in the previous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade and the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, adopted at the eighteenth special session of the General Assembly and contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, as well as the relevant provisions of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s and the outcomes of recent major United Nations conferences relevant to land-locked developing countries;

5. Invites the land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours to intensify further their cooperative arrangements for the development of transit infrastructures, institutions and services to facilitate the faster movement of goods in transit, with financial and technical assistance from donors and financial institutions;

6. Emphasizes that assistance for the improvement of transit transport facilities and services should be integrated into the overall economic development strategies of the land-locked and transit developing countries and that donor assistance should consequently take into account the requirements for the long-term restructuring of the economies of the land-locked developing countries;

7. Invites donor countries and multilateral financial and development institutions to provide land-locked and transit developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes and improved communications;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme further to promote, as appropriate, sub-regional, regional and interregional projects and programmes and to expand its support in the transport and communications sectors to the land-locked and transit developing countries and its technical cooperation for development geared towards promoting national and collective self-reliance among them;

9. Takes note of the report of the Second Meeting of Governmental Experts from Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries and Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions, held in New York from 19 to 22 June 1995, and endorses the Global Framework for Transit Transport

Cooperation between Land-locked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community contained therein;

10. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in collaboration with the donor countries and institutions, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the regional commissions and relevant subregional institutions, to organize, within existing resources, specific consultative groups, when requested by the land-locked and transit developing countries concerned, to identify priority areas for action at the national and subregional level and draw up action programmes for the period 1996-1997;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to convene in 1997, within the overall level of resources for the biennium 1996-1997, another meeting of governmental experts from land-locked and transit developing countries and representatives of donor countries and financial and development institutions, including relevant regional and subregional economic organizations and commissions, to review progress in the development of transit systems in the land-locked and transit developing countries, taking into account, inter alia, the results of the consultative group meetings referred to in paragraph 10 of the present resolution, with a view to exploring the possibility of formulating specific action-oriented measures and the ongoing study undertaken by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the implications of the globalization and liberalization of the world economy for the development prospects of land-locked developing countries;

12. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to seek voluntary contributions to ensure participation of representatives from land-locked and transit developing countries in the meeting of governmental experts from land-locked and transit developing countries and representatives of donor countries and financial and development institutions referred to in paragraph 11 of the present resolution;

13. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in formulating international measures to deal with the special problems of the land-locked developing countries, and urges the Conference, inter alia, to keep under constant review the evolution of transit transport infrastructure facilities, institutions and services, monitor the implementation of agreed measures, collaborate in all relevant initiatives, including those of the private sector and non-governmental organizations, and serve as a focal point on cross-regional issues of interest to land-locked developing countries;

14. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to take appropriate measures for the effective implementation of the activities called for in the present resolution and of existing measures in support of land-locked developing countries, within the context of the ninth session of the Conference;

15. Welcomes the note by the Secretary-General and the progress report of the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, together with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution and submit it to the Trade and Development Board and to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1995, the estimated income of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—the central funding body of the UN system for providing technical assistance to developing countries—fell to $1,624 million from $1,818 million in 1994. Voluntary contributions to the Programme declined to $903 million, from $932 million in 1994.

The UNDP/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) Executive Board instituted a major change in UNDP's programming arrangements in 1995 when it replaced the five-year programming cycle with a three-year rolling planning scheme for activities, to begin in 1997. The year also saw the introduction of UNDP's first corporate plan—the 1995 UNDP Plan—which was a means to enhance UNDP's management and make operational the initiatives for change adopted by the Board in 1994.

A comprehensive policy review of UN operational activities for development took place in 1995. The Economic and Social Council considered a preliminary report in July, while the triennial policy review itself was carried out by the General Assembly later in the year. In December, the Assembly stressed the need for a substantial increase in resources for operational activities for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries.

The United Nations, mainly through its Department for Development Support and Management Services, delivered a technical cooperation programme amounting to some $80.1 million in 1995, compared to $100.6 million in 1994. Expenditures by the UN Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), a multilateral agency providing small-scale capital assistance to least developed countries, totalled $40.6 million.

The UN Office for Project Services (UNOPS), formerly part of UNDP, became a separate, identifiable entity within the United Nations in January 1995. During the year, UNOPS concluded cooperation agreements with a number of UN partners other than UNDP and, by year's end, had incurred project expenditures totalling some $383 million.

A total of 3,263 United Nations Volunteers (UNV)—specialists and field workers from 134 nations—served in 139 countries during the year. In January, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board endorsed the Secretary-General's proposal to relocate UNV headquarters from Geneva to Bonn, Germany, from mid-1996.

At its ninth session, the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC) endorsed recommendations for new directions for TCDC. The new directions were also endorsed by the Executive Board, which reaffirmed the important role that they could play in increasing the use of both TCDC and economic cooperation among developing countries as dynamic instruments for South-South cooperation.

In 1995, UNCDF continued to support small-scale credit and rural infrastructure, stressing direct partnership with local government and community groups, especially those of the rural poor.

General aspects

Operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council

At its 1995 substantive session (Geneva, 26 June-28 July),⁽¹⁾ the Economic and Social Council considered the question of operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation. Among the documents before it was a Secretariat note⁽²⁾ transmitting an interim report on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system. The final report was submitted to the General Assembly later in the year (see below). The interim report covered changing trends in operational activities for development, programme development and implementation, UN system coordination mechanisms at the global level in support of country action, the resident coordinator system and programme support.

Other documents considered during the operational activities segment included: the annual report of UNDP to the Council,⁽³⁾ which detailed information on measures taken to implement the provisions of the triennial policy review of operational activities (General Assembly resolutions 44/211 of 1989⁽⁴⁾ and 47/199 of 1992⁽⁵⁾), and the report of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on the work of its first and second regular sessions of 1995 and its annual session.⁽⁶⁾ UNDP's annual report was transmitted to the Council by an Executive Board decision of 8 June.⁽⁷⁾ Also in that decision, the Board requested UNDP and UNFPA to ensure that future reports on implementation of the triennial policy review addressed more thoroughly problems and opportunities that had been identified, particularly at the field level, and contained recommendations and requests for guidance from the Board. It also requested the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director, together with the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), to consider producing a common report on the implementation of the triennial policy review for both the UNDP/UNFPA and UNICEF Executive Boards.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/50.

Operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation segment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 44/211 of 22 December 1989, 46/219 of 20 December 1991 and, in particular, resolution 47/199 of 22 December 1992, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit to it, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive analysis of the implementation of the resolution,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1994/33 of 28 July 1994,

Recalling that, in accordance with resolution 48/162, the role of the Council in the operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation segment includes the provision to the United Nations system of cross-sectoral coordination and overall guidance on a system-wide basis,

Recognizing that appropriate recommendations regarding the need to increase substantially resources for operational activities for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries, should be further considered in the open-ended working group of the General Assembly on a new funding system for operational activities for development, established pursuant to Assembly resolution 48/162, annex I, section III.B,

Having considered the note by the Secretariat on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development within the United Nations system and the report on the annual sessions of the United Nations funds and programmes,

Deeply concerned about the decrease in resources allocated to the operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretariat;
2. Reaffirms that the strengthening of the efficiency and effectiveness of the operational activities of the United Nations system in the delivery of its assistance for development requires a real commitment to implementing General Assembly resolutions 47/199 and 48/162, including the need to increase substantially the availability of resources on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the needs of developing countries;

3. Considers that there is a need for additional measures to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, including, inter alia, programmes focused on meeting the specific needs of developing countries; giving priority in resource allocation to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and Africa; appropriate cooperation among United Nations programmes and between them and those of other donors; and keeping administrative costs to a level that allows effective programme delivery;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to finalize the report requested in paragraph 55 of General Assembly resolution 47/199 and to submit to the Assembly at its fiftieth session, in consultation with Member States, a comprehensive analysis of the implementation of resolution 47/199, with appropriate recommendations, also taking into account the work and outcome of the open-ended working group of the General Assembly on a new funding system for operational activities for development and the need to implement paragraph 3 of resolution 47/199;

5. Reiterates that the United Nations funds and programmes should submit their reports to the Council in all the official languages of the United Nations in good time, to enable the Council to carry out its policy guidance functions, and should schedule their Executive Board meetings so as to ensure this;

6. Decides that in 1996 the high-level meeting of the operational activities segment should focus on strengthening collaboration between the United Nations development system and the Bretton Woods institutions in the areas of social and economic development, at all levels, including the field level;

7. Also decides that the themes for the working-level meetings of the operational activities segment should include:

- (a) Field-level coordination issues relating to the follow-up of the theme of the high-level segment of the previous substantive session of the Council;

- (b) Issues relating to the budgets of the United Nations funds and programmes, with the aim of:

- (i) Promoting greater budgetary transparency with respect to resources, including administrative costs of different funds and programmes;
- (ii) Addressing the linkages between administrative expenditure and programme expenditure;
- (iii) Ensuring the most efficient use of resources;
- (iv) Promoting budgetary transparency with respect to resources mobilized by developing countries for operational activities for development of the United Nations, including resources from the private sector;

- (c) Issues relating to:

- (i) Strengthening national capacity for management and coordination of international assistance;
- (ii) Improving national participation in the process of evaluation of the efficiency and effectiveness of assistance provided by United Nations funds and programmes;
- (iii) Promoting greater collaboration among United Nations funds and programmes in the evaluation of their activities;
- (d) Issues relating to procurement, in particular from developing countries;

(e) Issues relating to the use of national experts and local technologies;

(f) Issues relating to the priorities to be given in particular to the least developed countries and Africa;

8. Further decides to review these themes at its organizational session for 1996, in the light of the discussion on the triennial policy review at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly.

Also on 28 July, the Council adopted resolution 1995/51.

Overall guidance on operational activities for development to the United Nations funds and programmes

The Economic and Social Council

1. Decides, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993, to provide to the United Nations funds and programmes the following policy guidance on operational activities for development, so as to ensure that the policies formulated by the General Assembly, particularly during the triennial policy review of operational activities, are appropriately implemented on a system-wide basis;

2. Requests the United Nations funds and programmes, in their response to the increasing needs of developing countries, to take into account General Assembly resolutions 45/206 of 21 December 1990 on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s and 46/151 of 18 December 1991, to which is annexed the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, and to continue to give high priority in their budget allocations to the least developed countries, low income countries and Africa;

3. Also requests the United Nations funds and programmes to take into account the specific needs and requirements of the countries with economies in transition;

4. Further requests the United Nations funds and programmes to take into account the specific needs and requirements of different regions;

5. Requests the Executive Boards of the United Nations funds and programmes, in establishing their priorities, to take fully into account the relevant conclusions and recommendations of United Nations conferences in the economic, social and related fields, in accordance with their respective mandates, also bearing in mind national plans and priorities and relevant General Assembly resolutions;

6. Requests the United Nations funds and programmes to improve coherence in their country programmes, inter alia, by considering the possibility of joint or consecutive meetings of the Executive Boards, where practicable, on country programmes, and by improving the link between their country programmes and the country strategy notes, where in place, bearing in mind the need for cooperation between external donors and the United Nations funds and programmes in this field;

7. Requests the heads of the United Nations funds and programmes to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1996, through their Executive Boards, on the steps taken to further refine and effectively apply procedures for:

(a) The overall impact and performance of United Nations funds and programmes and measures to ensure that higher priority is given to monitoring and evaluation activities and to the implementation of findings, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/199 of 22 December 1992;

(b) Strengthening national capacity for the management and coordination of international assistance;

(c) Improving national participation in the process of evaluation of the efficiency and effectiveness of assistance provided by the United Nations funds and programmes;

(d) Promoting greater collaboration among United Nations funds and programmes in the evaluation of their activities;

8. Requests the Executive Boards of the United Nations Funds and Programmes, in their reports to the Council, to identify specific problems, opportunities and areas in which the Council could provide cross-sectoral coordination and overall guidance on a system-wide basis, and to make appropriate proposals, which should be further analysed as a basis for recommendations to the Council, to ensure that the policies formulated by the General Assembly, particularly during the triennial policy review of operational activities, are appropriately implemented on a system-wide basis;

9. Invites the specialized agencies, where appropriate, to identify specific problem areas for consideration by the Council in line with paragraph 8 above;

10. Requests the United Nations funds and programmes, in the context of the Joint Consultative Group on Policy, to report jointly to the Council through the Secretary-General on questions relating to coordination, cooperation and the division of labour, and on other issues they consider appropriate;

11. Also requests the United Nations funds and programmes, and invites specialized agencies, to explore the scope for improving the cost-effectiveness of administrative services, including the possible use of common administrative services at the field level, with the aim of strengthening programme delivery, and to report thereon to the Council at its substantive session of 1996;

12. Urges the United Nations funds and programmes to improve the personnel management system for resident coordinators and other senior managers.

In other action, the Council, by decision 1995/233 of 13 July, noted the report of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on the work of its first and second regular sessions of 1995 and its annual session⁽⁶⁾ and the annual report of UNDP to the Council.⁽³⁾

Triennial policy review

In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General in 1995 reported on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system.⁽⁸⁾ The report was based on completed questionnaires received from Governments, UN organizations and resident coordinators, and on case-studies drawn up on the basis of country missions. Policy recommendations in the report benefited from the 1995 deliberations and resolutions of the Economic and Social Council (see above).

The report described changing trends in operational activities and discussed the broad themes of programme development and implementation, UN system coordination mechanisms at the global level in support of country actions, the resident coordinator system and programme support. The report noted the shift from individual projects to support of and inputs to national goals and strategies, the broadened reach and range of UN operational activities, the growing importance of humanitarian aid, and the imperative of enhanced cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund). Also addressed were the growing upstream role of the UN system in some countries; the increasing specificity of country contexts; the differing perceptions as to how and where UN system assistance could make a development difference; evaluation, monitoring and review; and the cross-cutting nature of capacity-building. There was broad consensus that developing countries' capacities required selective strengthening in order to achieve greater self-reliance. That needed to be done in new and more effective ways to promote a coordinated response that was effectively integrated into national priority programmes.

A number of coordination mechanisms and operational modalities were reviewed, such as the country strategy note (CSN), harmonization of programming cycles, programme approach and national execution. CSN had been generally welcomed as a promising basis for better and more coordinated UN system operational activities in support of national plans, strategies and priorities. Six States had completed CSNs and 85 States were in the process of preparing them. Six other States had formally decided that they did not wish to implement this measure.

Increasingly, developing countries were shifting from project technical cooperation towards modalities that emphasized support for national programmes, around which UN system inputs were mobilized in a flexible manner and often linked to other sources of external financing. There were more requests for upstream policy advice and technical support, resulting in policy-making, normative analysis and technical assistance being brought together. National execution had been widely welcomed by recipient countries as a major means to promote the national management of

UN development assistance and was increasingly the preferred modality of the UN system. While traditional agency-executed activities had diminished with regard to their involvement in nationally executed activities, their technical services were being obtained more selectively, particularly through short-term expertise. The resident coordinator system had undergone considerable strengthening and enhancement over the preceding three years, including widening the pool for recruiting resident coordinators; developing a new statement on the role and functioning of the resident coordinator system; providing substantial financial support; and intensifying the number and frequency of training workshops.

Many UN system organizations had introduced changes in their organizational and management structures and practices as an ongoing process of streamlining, simplifying and enhancing the impact and effectiveness of their activities. Decentralization and empowerment of field offices were key elements in those efforts.

The report also contained recommendations regarding the role of the Economic and Social Council; improved substantive dialogue at the country level; resources; the resident coordinator system; CSN; the programme approach; national execution; harmonization and simplification of rules and procedures; staffing at the country level; regional coordination; capacity-building; evaluation, monitoring and review; cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions; strengthened national coordination; and common premises and shared services.

The report's addenda provided comprehensive statistical data on operational activities for development for 1993 and 1994 and summarized action taken by the executive boards of UN development funds and programmes and UN bodies in implementing a 1994 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽⁹⁾ requesting them to contribute to the triennial policy review and to standardize their annual reports to the Council.

ACC consideration. The Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ) of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) discussed the implementation of General Assembly resolution 47/199 at its fifth session (Geneva, 31 January-2 February).⁽¹⁰⁾ It approved "Guiding principles for a monitoring and evaluation methodology in the context of the programme approach", which it annexed to its report. It also approved revised terms of reference for its Advisory Panel on Operational Activities Training in order to enhance its advisory role for the International Training Centre in Turin, Italy, and to facilitate harmonized approaches between and within agencies on training and operational activities. CCPOQ further adopted a statement on the role and functioning of the resident coordinator system, agreeing that all system organizations would circulate it to field representatives.

The triennial policy review was discussed by CCPOQ at its fifth,⁽¹⁰⁾ inter-sessional sixth (New York, 30 May-1 June)⁽¹¹⁾ and resumed sixth (Geneva, 25-26 July)⁽¹²⁾ and seventh (New York, 19-22 September)⁽¹³⁾ sessions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/120.

Triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/211 of 22 December 1989 and 47/199 of 22 December 1992, as well as other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that operational activities for development within the United Nations system have a critical and unique role to play in enabling developing countries to continue to take a lead role in the management of their own development process,

Bearing in mind that the effectiveness of operational activities should be measured by their impact on the sustained economic growth and sustainable development of developing countries,

Stressing that national plans and priorities constitute the only viable frame of reference for the national programming of operational activities for development within the United Nations system, and that programmes should be based on such development plans and priorities, and should therefore be country-driven,

Also stressing in that context the need to take into account the outcomes and commitments of relevant United Nations conferences, as well as the individual mandates and complementarities of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations development system, bearing in mind the need to avoid duplication,

Further stressing that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism, as well as their ability to respond to the needs of developing countries in a flexible manner, and that the operational activities of the United Nations system are carried out for the benefit of the developing countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development,

Recognizing the urgent and specific needs of the low-income countries, in particular the least developed countries,

Noting the progress that has been achieved in a number of areas in the implementation of its resolution 47/199, while stressing the need for individual organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as coordination mechanisms of the United Nations system, to continue to work towards the full and coordinated implementation of that resolution,

Also recognizing that the United Nations development system should take into account the specific needs and requirements of the countries with economies in transition and other recipient countries,

Recalling that the General Assembly is the highest intergovernmental mechanism for the formulation and appraisal of policy matters relating to the economic, social and related fields, in accordance with Chapter IX of the Charter of the United Nations, and that the functions and powers of the Economic and Social Council are provided for in Chapters IX and X of the Charter and are elaborated in relevant Assembly resolutions, including resolutions 45/264 of 13 May 1991 and 48/162 of 20 December 1993, in which the Assembly defined the relationship between the Assembly, the Council and the executive boards of the funds and programmes, in particular the Council function of overall guidance and coordination of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and welcomes its user-friendly format;

2. Reaffirms its resolution 47/199 and stresses the need to implement fully all the elements of that resolution in a coherent manner, keeping in mind their inter-linkages;

3. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/51 of 28 July 1995 on overall guidance on operational activities for development to the United Nations funds and programmes;

4. Notes with regret that, although significant progress has already been made on the restructuring and rationalization of the governance and functioning of the United Nations development funds and programmes, there has not been, as part of the overall reform process, any substantial increase in resources for operational activities for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, nor have the consultations on prospective new modalities for financing reached a conclusion;

5. Strongly reaffirms that the efficiency, effectiveness and impact of the operational activities of the United Nations system must be enhanced by, inter alia, a substantial increase in their funding on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries, as well as through the full implementation of resolutions 47/199 and 48/162;

6. Urges developed countries, in particular those countries whose overall performance is not commensurate with their capacity, taking into account established official development assistance targets, including targets established at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and their current levels of contribution, to increase substantially their official development assistance, including contributions to the operational activities of the United Nations system;

7. Notes with appreciation the sustained contributions of many donors and recipient countries to the operational activities for development in a spirit of partnership;

8. Expresses serious concern at the persistent insufficiency of resources for the operational development activities of the United Nations, in particular the decline in contributions to core resources;

9. Stresses the need for a substantial increase in resources for operational activities for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries;

10. Decides that intensified consultations and negotiations on prospective new specific modalities for financing operational activities for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, in accordance with paragraphs 31 to 34 of annex I to resolution 48/162 on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic and social fields, should lead to an agreed outcome in the framework of the review process of that resolution;

11. Reaffirms the need for priority allocation of scarce grant resources to programmes and projects in low-income countries, particularly the least developed countries;

12. Emphasizes that recipient Governments have the primary responsibility for coordinating, on the basis of national strategies and priorities, all types of external assistance, including that provided by multilateral organizations, in order to integrate effectively such assistance into their development process;

13. Urges the members of the United Nations development system to continue to develop an agreed division of responsibility, in accordance with their respective mandates, under the coordination of Governments as well as greater complementarity in their respective roles at the field level in response to the needs and priorities of recipient countries;

14. Stresses the need for the United Nations system to take full account of the interests and concerns of all recipient countries, and, in that context, stresses the need for it to give serious consideration to ways of ensuring a more coherent response by the system to the national plans and priorities of recipient Governments;

15. Also stresses the need for all organizations of the United Nations development system to focus their efforts at the field level on priority areas, in accordance with the priorities identified by recipient countries and the mandates, mission statements and relevant decisions of their governing bodies, in order to avoid duplication and enhance the complementarity and impact of their work;

16. Further stresses that, in the context of the reform of the United Nations Secretariat and the restructuring and revitalization of the intergovernmental process, the mandates of the separate sectoral and specialized entities, funds, programmes and specialized agencies should be respected and enhanced, taking into account their complementarities;

17. Reaffirms that the country strategy note remains a voluntary initiative of recipient countries that should be formulated by interested recipient countries in accordance with their development plans and priorities, with the assistance of and in cooperation with the United Nations system under the leadership of the resident coordinator, in all recipient countries where the Government so decides;

18. Decides that, where in place, the country strategy note should be the common framework for country programmes of United Nations system organizations and for programming, monitoring and evaluating United Nations system activities in such countries, and that the country strategy note should outline the United Nations system contribution, including, where appropriate, an indication of the level of resources needed to meet the requirements therein;

19. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with interested Member States and in order to be able to respond more effectively to the needs of recipient countries, to undertake further work on:

(a) Broad common guidelines, with the aim of promoting greater consistency and clarity in the United Nations system contribution to country strategy notes;

(b) Enhancing its operational relevance by ensuring that the development of individual country programmes takes fully into account the framework provided by the country strategy note, where it exists, so as to promote an agreed division of responsibility within the United Nations system in accordance with paragraph 13 of the present resolution;

(c) Promoting the exchange of experiences gained in producing country strategy notes among recipient countries;

20. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States and United Nations organizations, to consider ways of enhancing the coordination of United Nations development activities at the regional and subregional levels, including ways of enhancing the role of the regional commissions and of promoting the national ownership of regional programmes;

21. Stresses that the United Nations system, where requested by interested Governments, should support the establishment of the forums and mechanisms that facilitate and guide policy dialogue among the partners in the development process, primarily in order to ensure that their programmes are integrated with national plans and strategies;

22. Decides that the objective of capacity-building and its sustainability should continue to be an essential part of the operational activities of the United Nations system at the country level, with the aim of integrating their activities and providing support to efforts to strengthen national capacities in the fields of, inter alia, policy and programme formulation, development management, planning, implementation, coordination, monitoring and review;

23. Recalls the importance of accountability as well as of simplifying reporting requirements, which should be in line with national systems;

24. Decides that, where Governments so desire, the United Nations system should be ready to engage in providing an enabling environment to strengthen the capacity of civil societies and national non-governmental organizations that are involved in development activities, in accordance with national priorities;

25. Also decides that the United Nations system should use, to the fullest extent possible, available national expertise and indigenous technologies;

26. Calls for further work on the development of common guidelines at the field level for the recruitment, training and remuneration of national project personnel, including national consultants in the formulation and implementation of development projects and programmes supported by the United Nations development system in order to enhance the coherence of the system;

27. Decides that the United Nations development system should continue to work on promoting a common understanding and the operationalization of capacity-building concepts, as well as on ways of enhancing the sustainability of capacity-building;

28. Also decides that the United Nations development system should continue to work on improving the definition and guidelines for national execution and the programme approach;

29. Requests the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to undertake efforts in the context of national execution and capacity-building to enhance the absorptive capacity in developing countries, in particular in the least developed countries and Africa, and to assist similar efforts undertaken by those countries;

30. Stresses the important role of the specialized agencies of the United Nations system in transferring and facilitating the necessary technical and substantive expertise to support the national execution of United Nations-funded programmes and projects, and invites the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the heads of specialized agencies, to inform the Economic and Social Council of the measures taken by those specialized agencies in response to General Assembly resolution 47/199, in particular as regards national execution;

31. Also stresses that the governing bodies of all funds, programmes and specialized agencies should make further progress in order to ensure that the prescribed limits on field-level authority for cancelling, modifying and adding activities within approved programmes and shifting resources within approved budget lines of individual components of a programme and among components of a programme, with the approval of national authorities, should be expanded to become equal and uniform, to the maximum extent possible, in the context of enhanced accountability;

32. Recognizes that monitoring and evaluation processes, including joint evaluations, should continue to be nationally led, and that the United Nations system should therefore support, where requested by Governments, the strengthening of national evaluation capacities;

33. Also recognizes in that context the need to strengthen capacities to perform both effective programme, project and financial monitoring and impact evaluations of operational activities funded by the United Nations;

34. Requests the United Nations system to strengthen its efforts, in consultation with recipient countries, to ensure that:

(a) Monitoring is carried out in a way that ensures the timely identification of problems and effective remedial action;

(b) Organizations of the United Nations system, operating at the country level, coordinate their periodic programme reviews and evaluations;

(c) The lessons learned from both monitoring and evaluation exercises are systematically applied into programming processes at the operational level, and that responsibility for such application is clearly assigned;

(d) Evaluation criteria are built into all projects and programmes at their design stage, bearing in mind the need for adequate training;

35. Underlines the importance of promoting, under the leadership of Governments, greater collaboration on issues relating to evaluation among recipient Governments, the United Nations development system and relevant development partners at the country level;

36. Requests the Secretary-General to make the resident coordinator system more participatory in its functioning at the field level by, inter alia, making greater use of thematic groups and adopting a more consultative approach;

37. Also requests the Secretary-General to:

(a) Identify ways of encouraging wider participation in the pool of candidates for resident coordinator positions;

(b) Promote greater governmental involvement in the selection process for resident coordinators, in particular by ensuring that national Governments are consulted before the post profile for resident coordinators is passed to the Joint Consultative Group on Policies, and keeping up to date the selection criteria for resident coordinators and, through the respective executive heads, for senior representatives of United Nations agencies in the field, bearing in mind the specific circumstances of individual countries;

(c) Develop common guidelines for staff performance appraisal for the funds and programmes, including ways of assessing the contribution of staff members to United Nations system coordination;

(d) Urge all members of the United Nations development system to give clear guidance and direction to their country representatives to promote the effective functioning of the resident coordinator system;

(e) Promote training in the areas of team-building and interpersonal skills;

38. Invites the United Nations system, including the funds and programmes, specialized agencies and the Secretariat, to provide, as appropriate, support to the resident coordinator system;

39. Reaffirms that resident coordinators, in full consultation with national Governments, should facilitate a coherent and coordinated United Nations follow-up to major international conferences at the field level;

40. Decides that in order to promote coordination and a better division of labour resident coordinators should, at an early stage of formulation, be informed of planned programme activities of the United Nations agencies, funds, programmes and bodies;

41. Also decides that the field-level committees organized by the United Nations system country team, which were established in accordance with paragraph 40 of General Assembly resolution 47/199, should review substantive activities—including draft country programmes, sectoral programmes and projects—prior to their approval by individual organizations, and should exchange experience acquired, on the understanding that the result of the work of the review committee should be submitted to national Governments for final approval through the national focal points;

42. Reaffirms the need to enhance the responsibility and authority of resident coordinators for the planning and coordination of programmes, as well as to allow them to propose, in full consultation with Governments, to the heads of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies, the amendment of country programmes and major projects and programmes, where required, in order to bring them into line with country strategy notes;

43. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations development system to take the need for gender balance fully into account when making appointments, including at the senior level and in the field, in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions;

44. Requests the Joint Consultative Group on Policies and, to the maximum extent possible, the specialized agencies, to raise substantially the target for achieving common premises on the basis of cost-benefit analysis and avoiding an increased burden on host countries;

45. Calls for further simplification and harmonization of rules of procedure used by the United Nations development system in its operational activities, in particular by the promotion of greater consistency in the presentation of budgets at the headquarters level, as well as in sharing administrative systems and services in the field, where possible, and in developing common databases, in consultation with national Governments;

46. Urges the members of the United Nations development system to adopt a more collaborative approach in preparing reports at all levels;

47. Requests the Secretary-General to promote the creation or further development of common guidelines on procedures relating to, inter alia, programme components and project formulation, appraisal, implementation, monitoring, evaluation and administration, in fulfilment of paragraph 33 of General Assembly resolution 47/199;

48. Takes note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/50 of 28 July 1995, in which the Council decided that the high-level meeting of the operational activities segment of its substantive session of 1996 should focus on strengthening collaboration between the United Nations development system and the Bretton Woods institutions in the area of social and economic development at all levels, including the field level;

49. Also takes note of the mission statement of the World Food Programme and the decision of the executive boards of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund and of the United Nations Children's Fund to establish mission statements for their respective organizations;

50. Emphasizes the importance of disseminating the experience of effective and efficient cooperation with the United Nations development system, inter alia, through interregional projects of technical cooperation, and urges the United Nations system to give support to such activities;

51. Calls upon the United Nations system, in implementing the present resolution, to bear in mind the specific requirements of the continuum from humanitarian assistance through rehabilitation to development;

52. Requests the Secretary-General, after consultations with the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, to present to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1996 an appropriate management process containing clear guidelines, targets, benchmarks and time-frames for the full implementation of the present resolution;

53. Invites the Economic and Social Council, during the operational activities segment of its substantive sessions of 1996 and 1997, to examine the operational activities of the United Nations system with a view to ensuring the full implementation of the present resolution;

54. Also invites the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 1996, to consider, inter alia, the issues of harmonization and administrative services, common premises and monitoring and evaluation, and, at its substantive session of 1997, to consider, inter alia, capacity-building, field and regional-level coordination, and resources, on the basis of progress reports by the Secretary-General, including appropriate recommendations;

55. Reaffirms that the governing bodies of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system should take appropriate action for the full implementation of the present resolution, and requests the executive heads of those funds, programmes and specialized agencies, bearing in mind paragraph 46 of the present resolution, to submit a yearly progress report to their governing bodies on measures taken and envisaged for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as appropriate recommendations;

56. Decides that, as an integral part of the next comprehensive triennial policy review, there should be, in consultation with Member States, an evaluation of the impact of operational activities for development, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive sessions of 1996 and 1997 information on progress in that regard;

57. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive analysis of the implementation of the present resolution in the context of the triennial policy review, and to make appropriate recommendations.

General Assembly resolution 50/120

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/619) without vote, 12 December (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.79), orally corrected and based on informal consultations; agenda item 97 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 24-29, 43; plenary 96.

Financing of operational activities

Expenditures

During 1994,⁽¹⁴⁾ the most recent year for which complete figures were available, expenditures by the UN system on operational activities totalled $18.7 billion. Of that, $4.6 billion was distributed in development grants through UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF, the World Food Programme (WFP) and specialized agencies and other organizations. Another $4.9 billion was disbursed in concessional loans by the International Development Association (IDA) ($4.7 billion) and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) ($188.5 million), and $9.2 billion was disbursed in non-concessional loans through the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) ($7 billion) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC) ($2.2 billion). In addition, $1.2 billion was spent on refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities, and $143.8 million was channelled through UNOPS management service agreements.

Of total expenditures on grant-financed development activities, $1.4 billion was channelled through WFP (extrabudgetary expenditures and project expenditures for development activities and emergency operations), $1.2 billion through UNDP (central resources and administered funds), $800.6 million through UNICEF and $201.4 million through UNFPA. A total of $688.4 million was financed by specialized agencies and other organizations from extrabudgetary sources and $280.3 million was financed by regular budgets (mostly the World Health Organization).

Contributions

Contributions from Governments and other sources for operational activities of the UN system, including IFAD and the World Bank Group (IBRD, IDA, IFC), totalled $11.1 billion in 1994.⁽¹⁴⁾

In addition, contributions for refugees, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities totalled $896.7 million.

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The 1995 UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 1-2 November)⁽¹⁵⁾ received government pledges for 1996 to UN funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance. More than $2.1 billion was pledged in real or anticipated contributions, some $950 million of which was for UNDP.

The Secretary-General listed⁽¹⁶⁾ contributions pledged or paid, as at 30 June 1995, to 27 UN funds and programmes at the 1994 Pledging Conference, totalling approximately $1.2 billion, with an estimated $638 million designated for UNDP.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

In his annual report covering 1995,⁽¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator assessed achievements and areas for improvement in implementing the five operational objectives of the UNDP Plan, launched in June 1995: strengthening country offices for the operationalization of sustainable human development; resource mobilization and constituency-building; the 1996-1997 biennial budget strategy and the successor programming arrangements; improving support to the UN system; and improving management accountability and information systems.

The Administrator stated that 1995 had seen bold and imaginative steps by UNDP to maintain its position as a leader in institutional reform within the UN system. Changes were introduced to: focus UNDP on high-priority development objectives; build a leaner, more accountable organization; strengthen the quality, responsiveness and impact of the UNDP programme; support the UN system and resident coordinators; enhance UNDP services to people in crisis; and create new partnerships for development cooperation.

With its first organization-wide plan (the 1995 UNDP Plan), the Administrator stated, UNDP had developed a useful framework for aligning its human, financial and technical resources with its overall vision, objectives and strategies. In the process, UNDP had developed a human resources strategy for investing in core competencies to manage change and accomplish its new mission successfully. Results achieved and those yet to be achieved would influence the choice of goals to be set in the next plan period and the pace to be set for their attainment.

Total UNDP resources for the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) were estimated at $8.2 billion, significantly above both the original and revised earmarking of $7.5 billion, reflecting a significant increase in cost-sharing and trust funds to a level of about $3.2 billion. Contributions to UNDP core resources were estimated at $4.7 billion, considerably lower than the $6.3 billion projected by the Governing Council in 1990⁽²⁾ when it had called for an 8 per cent annual increase during the fifth cycle.

In 1995, estimated UNDP income was almost $1.7 billion, a decrease from $1.8 billion in 1994. Of the 1995 total, some $900 million came from voluntary pledges, compared to $928 million in 1994. Other major sources included cost-sharing contributions by recipient Governments ($601 million), trust funds established by the Administrator, excluding the Global Environment Facility ($158 million), contributions to local office costs ($19 million), government cash counterpart contributions ($8 million), extrabudgetary activities ($9 million) and contributions to the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries ($8,631). An additional $128 million was received through management service agreements.

UNDP also administered eight funds that provided an additional $72.6 million. Those funds were the UN Capital Development Fund, the UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought, UN Volunteers (UNV), the UN Fund for Science and Technology for Development, the UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), the UNDP Energy Account and the UNDP Study Programme.

Of donor countries that were members of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, Japan and the Netherlands announced increases in their contributions for 1996; Australia, Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom maintained their 1996 contributions at the previous year's levels. Among smaller countries, New Zealand and Portugal provided substantial increases, while contributions from France and the United States were estimated to be lower than those for 1995. Increasing their contributions substantially were Andorra, Benin, Costa Rica, the Czech Republic, Honduras, India, Mauritania, Namibia, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Turkey and Viet Nam. Countries resuming support for UNDP included Djibouti, Kenya, Nicaragua, the Niger, the Sudan, Ukraine, Yemen and Zambia. Slovenia made a pledge to UNDP for the first time.

Field programme expenditures from central resources (voluntary contributions and cost-sharing) totalled $1,014 million in 1995. Of total field programme expenditures, 46.5 per cent went for project personnel, 19.5 per cent for subcontracts, 15.9 per cent for equipment, 9.7 per cent for training, and the remainder for technical support services and miscellaneous expenses, including maintenance and operational costs.

By region, Latin America and the Caribbean used 45.4 per cent of field programme expenditures; Asia and the Pacific, 21.2 per cent; Africa, 19.4 per cent; the Arab States, 6.4 per cent; and Europe, 2.6 per cent. Global and interregional projects used 5 per cent.

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board

In 1995, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board held four sessions, all in New York: three regular sessions (10-13 January, 3-7 April and 11-15 September) and its annual session (5-16 June).⁽³⁾

In January, the Board adopted seven decisions (the text on the UN Sudano-Sahelian Office is dealt with in the next chapter). On 13 January, the Board decided⁽⁴⁾ that its segment on UNFPA should take place at the beginning or end of regular and annual sessions, bearing in mind the need for a more coordinated approach to the discussion of country programmes. The UNDP Administrator and UNFPA Executive Director were asked to enhance collaboration between their organizations in the Board's secretariat and to consider appointing a UNFPA staff member to it. They were also asked to consider ways to strengthen their cooperation in matters relating to the Board's functioning. By another 13 January decision,⁽⁵⁾ which included an overview of decisions adopted at the session, the Board elected its Bureau for 1995 and agreed to a schedule for its 1995 sessions and to subjects to be discussed. It also noted a number of reports.

In April, the Board adopted six decisions, one including an overview of session decisions.⁽⁶⁾ It also noted a number of reports. Other April decisions dealt with: assistance to the Palestinian people (see PART TWO, Chapter VI); UNCDF (see below); UNIFEM (see PART FOUR, Chapter X); the Joint and Co-sponsored UN Programme on HIV/AIDS (see PART FOUR, Chapter XIII); and matters relating to the least developed countries (LDCs) (see preceding chapter).

At its annual session in June, the Board adopted 11 decisions, one dealing with the follow-up to General Assembly resolution 47/199 (see above). Those covered in other chapters dealt with UNFPA matters (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII) and UNIFEM (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). By a 16 June decision,⁽⁷⁾ which included an overview of decisions adopted at the session, the Board noted a number of reports, including the Administrator's report for 1994.⁽⁸⁾

By decision 1995/233 of 13 July, the Economic and Social Council noted the report of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on the work of its first and second regular sessions and its annual session of 1995.

In September, the Board adopted 13 decisions, including an overview of decisions adopted at that session,⁽⁹⁾ in which it took note of a number of reports and established a schedule for its 1996 sessions. Decisions covered in other chapters dealt with UNFPA matters (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII), UNIFEM (see PART FOUR, Chapter X) and UN efforts following a series of hurricanes in the Caribbean (see next chapter).

UNDP operational activities

Country and intercountry programmes

On 13 January, the Executive Board approved⁽⁵⁾ the first country programme for the Czech Republic. On 7 April, it approved⁽⁶⁾ the cooperation framework with Indonesia; the first country programmes for Belarus, Estonia, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, the Republic of Moldova, Ukraine and Uzbekistan; the third country programme for the British Virgin Islands; and the fifth country programmes for Barbados and Turkey. On 15 September, the Board approved⁽⁷⁾ the first country programmes for Azerbaijan and the Russian Federation and the fifth country programme for Haiti. It also endorsed the reorientation of fifth country programmes for Burundi and Rwanda.

Mid-term reviews. On 7 April, the Board noted⁽⁶⁾ the mid-term reviews of the fifth country programmes for Bangladesh,⁽¹⁰⁾ Chad,⁽¹¹⁾ Malawi⁽¹²⁾ and Tunisia,⁽¹³⁾ and the sixth country programme for Guatemala.⁽¹⁴⁾ All reviews were carried out in 1994.

In 1995, mid-term reviews were executed for some 75 country programmes, including those of Brazil, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mozambique, Romania and Yemen.⁽¹⁵⁾

The Board, in September, had before it the Administrator's report on mid-term reviews.⁽¹⁶⁾ The report—the fourth submitted in response to a 1992 request⁽¹⁷⁾—covered mid-term reviews of regional programmes undertaken between January and June 1995. Addenda contained reviews of: the global and interregional programme; the regional programme for Africa; the regional programme for Asia and the Pacific; the regional programme for the Arab States; the regional programme for Latin America and the Caribbean; and the regional programme for Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). Collectively, those programmes accounted for approximately $380 million (or 12 per cent) of fifth cycle indicative planning figure (IPF) entitlements.

The Administrator concluded that regional programmes remained the most viable mechanism through which UNDP could effectively address development challenges that transcended national boundaries, such as economic integration, health concerns, especially HIV/AIDS, environmental and resource management issues, transfer of technology and development-related research.

On 13 September, the Board encouraged⁽¹⁸⁾ the Administrator to continue the trend towards the programme approach by promoting fewer and larger interventions in support of clearly defined regional, interregional and global objectives. It stressed the need to enhance UNDP capability to ensure improved design and implementation of intercountry programmes and strengthen linkages between national programmes and global, interregional and regional ones. The Administrator was also encouraged to identify and enhance the subregional, regional and national ownership of the elements of regional programmes in a more systematic manner through the decentralized management of activities and increased use of regional and national entities in implementing and establishing linkages. He was asked to: ensure that future UNDP-supported regional, interregional and global programmes were based on a results-oriented approach in order to improve their impact and incorporate clear performance criteria for effective evaluation; and enhance resource mobilization efforts in all areas, including intercountry programmes.

On 15 September,⁽⁹⁾ the Board took note of the Administrator's report on mid-term reviews.⁽¹⁶⁾

Field visits. In accordance with a 1994 Board decision,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Executive Board secretariat submitted to the January 1995 session a note containing draft revised terms of reference for UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board field visits.⁽²⁰⁾ On 13 January,⁽⁵⁾ the Board noted them and the comments made thereon.

Based on further discussion in January and February, the terms of reference were again revised and renamed as guidelines for the field visits of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board. On 7 April,⁽⁶⁾ the Board adopted those guidelines.⁽²¹⁾

In 1995, field visits took place to Colombia, Ghana, Nicaragua, the Niger and Turkey.

Country programmes by region

Africa

Through its Regional Bureau for Africa, UNDP support for African development focused on indigenous capacity-building and utilization to enable countries to manage their own development. In Lesotho, the Grass-roots Initiative Support project, launched in 1991, helped to train 948 village district council members in project planning, management and implementation. In Ethiopia and the Gambia, UNDP helped to train several staff of line ministries in policy formulation and implementation.

UNDP also supported specific initiatives on capacity-building. The aim of the African Capacity-Building Initiative (ACBI), launched jointly in 1990 by UNDP, the World Bank and the African Development Bank, was to assist Governments to build and use national capacities, mainly for economic management. Donors had pledged $86.9 million to ACBI (based in Harare, Zimbabwe, and managed by the African Capacity-Building Foundation), of which $35.5 million had been received by late 1994. By late 1995, 26 projects had been initiated in 18 countries for a total commitment of some $60 million.

The aim of National Long-Term Perspective Studies was to help African countries to define national priorities and enhance strategic thinking and planning in order to guide their development over a 25-year period. The exercise, under way in several countries, had been completed in Cote d'Ivoire and Mauritius; significant advances had been made in Cape Verde, Gabon, Guinea-Bissau, Madagascar and Zambia. More than 30 countries participated in the national technical cooperation assessment and programmes (NATCAP) exercise. Many had completed the first phase and had formulated a comprehensive database and a policy framework paper. Some had finished the second phase, which required the preparation of a technical cooperation programme, making possible the incorporation of technical cooperation resources into overall budget planning. To strengthen capacity-building further, UNDP had reduced the availability of long-term international experts and had enhanced the application of national expertise. A policy to reduce long-term overseas training was also being implemented, while in-country and in-region training was being promoted.

UNDP supported African efforts to establish systems of government that were transparent and accountable and that met all the other criteria of good governance. In Mozambique, a special elections team was assembled to train registration and civic education agents, as well as polling station and electoral officers. UNDP also assisted Benin in the reform of its judiciary system and in conducting parliamentary elections.

Poverty eradication was the key element in most African country programmes, going beyond income poverty to access to basic services and power structures. In 1995, numerous sub-Saharan African countries, with UNDP assistance and the collaboration of other development partners, launched comprehensive cross-sectoral poverty eradication programmes. UNDP provided assistance to Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana, Malawi, Togo and Zimbabwe in preparing or implementing poverty alleviation programmes.

With regard to women's participation in development, there was a shift from the concept of women in development to that of gender in development, the latter taking into account the interdependence of women and men as defined by their relationships, roles and responsibilities. Workshops were organized in 18 countries to sensitize planners, policy makers and other groups to the gender-in-development concept, as well as to concentrate greater national focus on gender issues. In collaboration with UNIFEM, UNDP launched a programme, "Strengthening Gender and Development Capacity in Africa", to develop an integrated strategy for mainstreaming gender issues into African development planning and programming.

There was renewed emphasis on generating private-sector initiatives in Africa, focusing on small and medium enterprise development. Several sensitization meetings were organized with African entrepreneurs and, in collaboration with other agencies, UNDP held two regional forums, in Botswana and Cameroon, which led to two subregional initiatives in East and West Africa.

During 1995, UNDP organized round-table meetings—the key mechanism for policy dialogue and resource mobilization—for Angola, Burkina Faso, the Gambia, Lesotho, Namibia, Rwanda and Seychelles. Sectoral round-table meetings were convened in Benin, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Mali and the Niger. In the case of Angola, total pledges made at the round-table meeting and follow-up consultations amounted to more than $1 billion, while $630 million was pledged for Rwanda at the round-table meeting, an amount that rose to $1.2 billion during follow-up activities.

Of 184 new projects approved in 1995, valued at $120.7 million, a total of 135, valued at $69.9 million, were nationally executed, increasing the proportion of nationally executed projects to 70 per cent from 50 per cent in 1994.

Arab States

The UNDP Regional Bureau for Arab States conducted a strategic planning workshop in March 1995, which identified the five top developmental targets in the region: governance; high population growth rate; scarcity of water; sustainable livelihood (with special emphasis on poverty eradication, employment creation and environmental protection); and diversified economic growth. Special situations, including security, sanctions and emergencies facing a number of Arab countries, created especially challenging circumstances for programme development and delivery, UNDP reported. Nevertheless, 80 per cent of all country and regional funds were committed as of the end of November 1995.

Although sustainable human development (SHD) as the focus of UNDP programming had been introduced to the region when the majority of resources had already been allocated, many countries introduced the concept through highlighting SHD elements in approved projects and refocusing others, as well as by using remaining IPF resources and Special Programme Resources (SPR). In collaboration with the Government of Egypt, UNDP continued to consolidate and elaborate its SHD programme through a second national human development report and a platform for monitoring and evaluating all the Governorates of Egypt. UNDP also assisted SHD activities in Tunisia and Lebanon. SHD programming was boosted by an SPR allocation to the Regional Bureau of $1 million. Ten country initiatives were launched, the majority aimed at preparing national human development reports, situation analyses and/or country profiles. In addition, the Bureau decided to use the full 1995-1996 TSS-1 (technical support services-1) allocation to enhance SHD operationalization, with the focus on poverty elimination.

With regard to community-based activities, UNDP continued support for programmes in Somalia despite uncertain political conditions. Assistance ranged from small-credit agricultural-extension activities, education and health to labour-intensive rehabilitation of basic community infrastructure where security conditions permitted. Area development schemes remained a key effort in the Sudan. In the Syrian Arab Republic, UNDP continued to support an agricultural investment programme aimed at raising standards of living of rural populations through increasing agricultural production and creating other income-generating activities, with a strong component for improving the status of women.

Although support to macroeconomic reform was a major area of concentration of the country programme for the Sudan, it was only in 1995 that the first significant UNDP project in that field was approved. Technical support was provided to economic reform programmes in Yemen, which included assistance to the five-year economic plan, privatization, support to Yemen Free Trade Zones and assistance for economic and financial management. Efforts to support the programme of economic revitalization of Lebanon continued to gain momentum in 1995 and UNDP's ongoing programme of support to administrative rehabilitation there continued to show positive results.

With regard to resource mobilization, UNDP, based on the recommendations of a 1994 inter-agency mission to Djibouti, committed $200,000 to foster consensus on key policy reforms and long-term development strategies for that country. That led to the formulation of a comprehensive national economic reform programme. In Morocco, a sectoral round-table meeting on drinking-water was successfully organized under the auspices of UNDP and the Government.

Of newly approved projects and programmes in 1995, almost 50 per cent were nationally executed.

Asia and the Pacific

Although the Asia and Pacific region continued to experience dynamic rates of economic growth, poverty was the dominant issue in many countries and the region as a whole was home to the majority of the world's poor. Greater programme focus was achieved through the closing of old projects and a systematic clustering of ongoing initiatives within the framework of SHD. Inter-agency working groups identified focus themes in several countries. In India, discussions identified four gender-related areas as follow-up to the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women, held in Beijing, China (see PART FOUR, Chapter X): advocacy for the ninth development plan; influencing the 2001 census exercise; supporting government and non-governmental organization (NGO) efforts to implement the Beijing Platform for Action; and showcasing UN system best practices. Inter-agency task forces were also set up in Indonesia, Iran, Pakistan and the Philippines to follow up on a UN system response to poverty eradication and gender concerns. In Thailand, inter-agency groups were established on gender, decentralization for poverty eradication, children, environment, HIV/AIDS and disaster management.

In the field of poverty eradication, UNDP conducted three studies as a contribution to Thailand's eighth national plan (1997-2001). They provided guidelines for a holistic approach to human development, suggested ways to strengthen development capacity and described steps to be taken to emphasize participation. National poverty alleviation programme coordination mechanisms were improved in Mongolia, where local staff were trained in social development methodologies and in computer and electronic communications. UNDP was to finance projects to assist poor women to overcome structural and other barriers to full participation in the development process. The reformulation of UNDP support to the Cambodian resettlement and reintegration programme culminated in the approval in November of a $40 million four-year experimental project in decentralized planning and financing of participatory rural development. It aimed at eradicating poverty, strengthening civil society and promoting dialogue between the constituents of Cambodian society.

Environmental projects in the region included UNDP assistance to a Bhutan biodiversity conservation plan and a grant to India to phase out chlorofluorocarbons in the foams sector.

In the area of advancement of women and gender equality, UNDP supported a review of the institutional capability of Bangladesh to mainstream gender issues in development. A UNDP-sponsored study on women leaders recommended measures for advancement of the role and socio-economic position of women in Maldives. A programme exercise for the further integration of gender concerns into UNDP activities in India was undertaken in 1995; proposals included support to a projected Indian Centre for Women in Politics, responding to the Constitutional amendment according local governance institutions statutory status, and reserving a third of seats in elected bodies for women. Grass-roots initiatives in Myanmar were supported under the Human Development Initiative, which focused on deprived rural communities participating in income-generation activities and training, and the expansion of opportunities for women and girls to participate actively in the economy.

In the area of public institutions, UNDP supported several large donor-funded projects under the national Public Administration Reform Programme in Viet Nam. Three new projects were formulated to strengthen key governance institutions in the country: the National Assembly, the court system and the procuracy system. UNDP-World Bank policy studies included a major research endeavour on corporate governance issues and structures necessary for China's rapidly changing State-owned enterprise sector.

A total of 104 nationally executed programmes/projects were approved during 1995 for approximately $51 million, representing 73 per cent of the total value of new UNDP projects approved during the year.

Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States

During 1995, UNDP strengthened its role in the Eastern Europe and CIS region, approving 12 country programmes and, under the theme of SHD, focusing on six priority themes: environment; democracy, governance and participation; small and medium enterprises; aid coordination; and gender in development. UNDP supported preparation of national human development reports in 21 countries of the region. Published in May 1995, these documents introduced the concept of SHD to countries in transition, providing much useful data and statistics disaggregated by region, gender, age and ethnic groups.

UNDP organized an eight-day train trip—the "Beijing Express"—bringing more than 200 women (from Governments and NGOs of the region) from Warsaw, Poland, to Beijing for the Fourth World Conference on Women. Its goal was to increase the participation of gender-related NGOs in the region in follow-up activities to the Conference.

With UNDP support, the Interstate Council for the Aral Sea organized in September 1995 the Nukus (Uzbekistan) Conference on the sustainable development of the Aral Sea Basin States. There, Central Asian heads of State signed the Nukus Declaration to renew efforts to combat the Aral Sea environmental crisis. UNDP led the capacity-development efforts within the framework of the jointly managed UNDP/World Bank/UNEP $200 million multi-year rehabilitation programme.

The first Central Asian conference on regional cooperation took place in June 1995 at Lake Issyk-Kul, Kyrgyzstan. Assisted by UNDP, the five Central Asian republics (Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan) addressed three principal issues of mutual concern: economic and social development and regional cooperation; demographic issues, including migration and displaced persons; and environmental problems and natural disasters.

With regard to aid coordination, a major three-year UNDP regional training programme on building national capacities for aid management was launched in 1995 in 15 countries of Eastern Europe and CIS. Austria and Japan provided financial support.

Another regional programme to strengthen democracy, governance and participation covered both regional and country-specific activities and included issues such as: democratization; sound governance; strengthening government agencies; human rights; support to the electoral process; and the promotion of civil society, grass-roots organizations and NGOs.

During 1995, cost-sharing budgets for national projects in the region totalled $19 million, including new cost-sharing contributions of $10 million, a 300 per cent increase over 1994. Major donors included Austria, Japan, the Netherlands, Switzerland and the Nordic countries. In addition, management services agreements were approved to support the health reform process in Turkey (with funding from the World Bank) and for gender in development in Albania (with funding from Italy).

Latin America and the Caribbean

UNDP-supported programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean in 1995 fell largely within the areas of: governance; support for peace processes; social reform and development/follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX); and environment and management of natural resources.

The Regional Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean continued to cooperate with the UNDP Management Development and Governance Division to promote national and regional governance initiatives. These included a conference on governance and development (Santiago, Chile, September) and the preparation of two books: Democracy, Markets and Equity and Governance in Latin America and the Caribbean on the Threshold of the Year 2000.

UNDP consolidated its presence in Guatemala as facilitator and source of technical support for peace efforts. The UN Human Rights Verification Mission in Guatemala/UNDP Joint Unit was created to oversee the institutional strengthening requirements of the Peace Accords on Human Rights and Indigenous Rights. UNDP was also responsible for administering all technical cooperation programmes in support of the Peace Accord Concerning Displaced Persons. (See PART TWO, Chapter III.)

The SHD programme at the local level was created to combat poverty in areas most affected by war. In El Salvador, UNDP supported commitments emanating from the Peace Accords by mobilizing technical and financial resources. Efforts were directed to projects to strengthen nascent democratic institutions, such as the Human Rights Ombudsman Office, the National Civilian Police and its training facility, and the Academy for Public Security. In Nicaragua, UNDP was commended by leading donor Governments for coordinating a support group of major donor countries to assist Nicaragua in consolidating peace with development. UNDP coordinated all activities in the area of governance in Haiti. A programme for reforming and strengthening the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government was considered particularly notable.

In the area of poverty eradication, UNDP assisted Jamaica in preparing a poverty reduction strategy, convening a poverty workshop and formulating a programme support document for poverty reduction. In Trinidad and Tobago, it supported a highly participatory and bottom-up approach for restructuring the delivery system of social services. An agreement was signed between UNDP and Guyana in December, aimed at preparing and implementing a national SHD initiative. Direct UNDP technical cooperation in Guyana concentrated on improving the delivery and quality of social services.

In the environment sector, a project was approved in Mexico to increase the participation of civil society organizations in formulating environmental policies and their follow-up. In line with the SHD concept, which encompassed both social and ecological aspects, ongoing projects in Brazil included: assistance for a national environmental plan; institutional and policy support to the new Ministry of the Environment and Inter-Ministerial Commission for Sustainable Development; projects emphasizing participatory approaches with large environmental components in vulnerable areas such as the Amazon Basin; control of industrial pollution through a large cost-sharing project with the National Environmental Management Institute and support for implementing environmental accords; and innovative technological developments, such as a gas turbine using biomass resources. During 1995, the first year of the Global Environment Facility Operational Phase, 11 UNDP projects were approved for funding in the region for a total of $15.35 million.

The Regional Bureau's resource mobilization strategy continued its upward trend in 1995. Total fifth cycle non-core and approved resources were $2.8 billion, comprising $2.6 billion non-core resources and $198 million in approved IPF resources. Approved cost-sharing resources, closely linked to the national execution modality, accounted for approximately 64.2 per cent of entire programme resources in the region; IPFs for 9.6 per cent; management services agreements for 11.4 per cent; and miscellaneous trust funds for 14.8 per cent.

Global and interregional programmes

Following reorganization in mid-1994, the Division for Global and Interregional Programmes was dissolved and most of its activities transferred to the Science, Technology and the Private Sector Division. The mandate of the HIV and development programme included increasing awareness of the HIV epidemic and strengthening the capacity of countries to respond to the multiple consequences of the increasing infection worldwide. The UN Joint and Co-sponsored Programme on HIV/AIDS, of which UNDP was a co-sponsor, was established in 1995 to coordinate assistance to countries in developing multisectoral HIV strategies.

Following a UNDP-sponsored feasibility study, the International Vaccine Institute was being created within the framework of the Children's Vaccine Initiative. The Institute, which would focus on Asia, would assist countries to produce quality vaccines, ensure effective regulation of their production and use, conduct clinical trials and epidemiological surveillance, and engage in and coordinate research and development for new and improved vaccines against diseases of particular concern to the region.

The UNDP-World Bank Water and Sanitation Programme, a collaborative initiative emerging from the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), served to strengthen national and local efforts to improve poor people's access to safe water and sanitation. Investment projects in 17 countries totalled close to $1 billion, primarily funded by the World Bank.

Demand for UNDP's capacity-building for sustainable water development programme, established in 1993, had surged, with 18 countries participating or expressing interest in its concept and approach. By November 1995, water-sector assessments had been completed in Bolivia, China and Peru, and fact-finding missions had taken place in another 15 countries.

Research was under way to improve the productivity of staple food crops in developing countries and to reduce the need for commercial synthetic pesticides. UNDP supported projects to improve sustainable tropical maize production by resource-poor farmers; progress was achieved in the breeding and testing of locally consumed bananas and plantains.

Under the aegis of the Global Technology Group, some 40 projects were concluded with the support of international teams and active NGO interest. UNDP continued to seek appropriate new technologies for poor countries and their poorest sectors, with the Group uncovering 1,150 such technologies, mainly in construction, medical equipment, waste management and food products. Technology transfer to at least nine LDCs had demonstrated the pivotal role it could play in generating employment, enabling market-competitive, unique product development and eradicating poverty.

The International Network on Genetics in Aquaculture showed some results, with over 10 intercountry fish exchanges during 1994/95. Using the Network, Ghana was able to characterize genetically DNA from fish and had offered its expertise to other Network members. The Philippine national tilapia-breeding programme had also offered to share its experiences through the Network.

Under the Private Sector Development Programme, a framework was designed to create industrial parks in the occupied Palestinian territories through an initiative by the private sector, thus alleviating severe unemployment in the Gaza border area. In Mongolia, a programme was designed to restructure and support enterprises undertaken by newly privatized companies, while in Poland and Slovakia, a project was launched to develop new enterprises, using the assets of large State-owned organizations that had been difficult to privatize.

Programme planning and management

In response to a 1994 Executive Board request,⁽²²⁾ the Administrator reported⁽²³⁾ on initiatives for change he had proposed that year. He described efforts to focus UNDP resources on key dimensions of SHD, noting that UNDP had addressed the need to: develop focused programme strategies; establish a framework for resource programming that reflected that focus; and develop pilot and demonstration programmes in the four main areas of poverty elimination, employment, environmental regeneration and advancement of women. Linkages between those areas had been built into all activities, he noted.

The Administrator also outlined efforts to strengthen both UN and international cooperation for SHD and to strengthen UNDP capacity to perform its new mission. Constraints to reform included: declining official development assistance; the fact that the call for reform had come towards the end of the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) when uncommitted resources were scarce; and staff cuts caused by reductions in core contributions.

The Administrator said that five key goals had been drawn up for UNDP in 1995/96: strengthening country offices for implementation of SHD; resource mobilization and constituency-building; preparation of the 1996-1997 biennial budget strategy and fifth cycle successor arrangements; improving management accountability and information systems; and improving support to the UN system and fulfilling the role of the UNDP continuum.

He told the Board on 13 June that he would launch consultations in New York and at the regional level so he could present to the Board in 1996 a more definitive outline of the longer-term programme focus for UNDP.

On 16 June, the Board welcomed⁽²⁴⁾ the consultations mentioned by the Administrator and asked for a report on their outcome. It urged UNDP through the initiatives for change process—in the framework of the goals and priority areas supported by the Board in its 1994 decision⁽²⁵⁾ and given poverty elimination as the overriding priority in UNDP programmes—to concentrate on areas where it had demonstrable comparative advantage, particularly capacity-building in the most needed regions and countries, in particular LDCs, especially in Africa. It noted the elaboration of a strategic plan as a means to enhance UNDP management and make operational the initiatives for change, and looked forward to receiving in 1996 a further elaborated concise version, including the following elements: a concise mission statement, a clear hierarchy of operational objectives and a comprehensive action plan.

Fifth programming cycle

Independence bonus

In the context of discussions on the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996), the Executive Board in September had before it a note by the Administrator on eligibility for an independence bonus for new programme countries.⁽²⁵⁾ In it, he stated that the UN Office of Legal Affairs had been asked to furnish a legal interpretation of the eligibility for an independence bonus of 23 countries that had been granted recipient status during the fifth programming cycle (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Czech Republic, Estonia, Eritrea, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Republic of Moldova, Russian Federation, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, Uzbekistan).

The Legal Office noted that the UNDP Governing Council had established the independence bonus in 1976 and had decided that each recipient country that had gained independence since the start of 1973 should have its IPF increased by $500,000, plus 15 per cent of its approved IPF. However, the history of the application of the provision revealed that it was the Council's intention to grant the bonus only to newly independent States that could be classified as LDCs. The Legal Office was therefore of the opinion that, of the countries listed, only Eritrea would qualify for the bonus, as it was the only one that was both an LDC and had gained independence since 1973. Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania had already been granted the bonus.

On 14 September, the Executive Board decided⁽²⁶⁾ that 15 countries (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Eritrea, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Palau, Republic of Moldova, Slovenia, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan) were eligible for an independence bonus, which should be financed immediately from fifth cycle resources, provided that existing allocations for country and intercountry programmes were fully honoured. The Administrator was asked to report on the implementation of the decision in 1996.

Haiti

In response to a 1994 Executive Board request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator reported on Haiti's development needs and activities⁽²⁷⁾ so the Board could consider a revision of the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) IPF. The political crisis that originated in Haiti in 1991 had limited the use of the IPF of $26.375 million, plus the carry-over of $6.31 million from the fourth cycle, to some $11.2 million over the three-year period 1992-1994. The Administrator described Haiti's technical cooperation needs for 1995-1996, noting that UNDP could play a strategic role as a major contributor and catalytic agent for mobilizing other donors. For UNDP to perform its functions, the undisbursed amount of the fifth cycle IPF was insufficient. The Executive Board was asked to consider an exceptional and one-time restoration of Haiti's fifth cycle IPF, either to the original level established in 1990,⁽²⁾ resulting in an increase of $11.3 million, or on a pro-rated level for the remaining two years of the fifth cycle, resulting in an increase of $4.5 million.

On 13 January, the Board decided⁽²⁸⁾ to restore Haiti's IPF to the level established in 1990, an increase of $11.3 million, and to release 50 per cent of that funding immediately and the remainder following further discussion in September on the basis of a report by the Administrator on the use of all available UNDP resources. The Administrator was asked to make proposals on how to enhance UNDP capacity to respond financially to exceptional and emergency situations.

In response to the Board's January request, the Administrator submitted a note⁽²⁹⁾ to the September session describing UNDP activities in Haiti during the transition period following the re-establishment of the constitutional Government in 1994. He also submitted the fifth country programme for Haiti for the remainder of the fifth cycle,⁽³⁰⁾ which proposed that UNDP assistance target promotion of national consensus and preparation of reform policies and laws; formulation of national programmes and mobilization of resources for their implementation; and coordination of the various actors involved in implementing integrated packages for SHD at the local level.

On 15 September, the Executive Board approved⁽³⁾ the fifth country programme for Haiti, took note of the Administrator's note on Haiti's development needs and activities, and authorized the release of the remaining 50 per cent of the restored IPF for programming.

Successor programming arrangements

At its January session, the Executive Board had before it the Administrator's report on a framework for UNDP's next programming period,⁽³¹⁾ which followed from the Board's 1994 discussions on the subject.⁽³²⁾ The report focused on the broad assignment of resources and on the elaboration of the three-year planning cycle and its relationship to the programming process. The Administrator described the advantages of a rolling three-year resource planning scheme compared with the five-year IPF programming cycle currently in place. He also discussed the assignment of resources at the aggregate level, showing the relative shares of resources earmarked for three major components (programmes/projects; programme development and technical services; and support to the UN system and aid coordination) and applying them to two possible resource scenarios for the next programming period.

On 13 January,⁽³⁾ the Board noted the Administrator's report.

The Administrator reported to the Board's April session on a further elaboration of the framework for the next programming period.⁽³³⁾ The document, which discussed resource earmarkings for the next programming period and resource distribution alternatives, was considered in informal consultations.

In June, the Board considered the Administrator's report on successor programming arrangements,⁽³⁴⁾ in which he stated that pivotal among his recommendations for change was the structure for financial allocations in the next programming period, including the allocation of country-level resources under a three-tier target for resource assignment from the core (TRAC). The report examined the three-tier TRAC scheme, successor programming arrangements, resource allocation structure and resource distribution.

On 16 June, the Board adopted a wide-ranging decision⁽³⁵⁾ on successor programming arrangements that covered principles for the programming cycle, mobilization of resources, programming arrangements, the financing mechanism, distribution of resources and Executive Board review.

With regard to mobilization of resources, the Board adopted for planning purposes the initial figure of $3.3 billion for core resources for the three-year period starting in 1997 and asked the Administrator to take measures to secure those resources. It stressed that increasing voluntary contributions to core resources should remain the central effort of all donors and of the Administrator's mobilization efforts. It also recognized the importance of non-core resources, including cost-sharing and non-traditional sources of financing as a means to enhance the capacity and supplement the means of UNDP to achieve the Board's 1994 goals and priorities.⁽³²⁾ The Administrator was urged to explore further non-traditional sources of financing, such as multilateral and regional banks and NGOs, in order to mobilize additional resources.

As to programming arrangements, the Board accepted in principle the three-year rolling planning scheme proposed by the Administrator.⁽³⁴⁾ New country cooperation frameworks (country programmes) should be developed by recipient Governments, in consultation with UNDP, and submitted to the Board for endorsement. It also decided to consider further, in 1996, its involvement in programming processes and procedures.

In connection with the financing mechanism, the Board decided to introduce a new, more flexible three-tier target for resource assignment from the core scheme for allocating resources to the country level and endorsed earmarkings for UNDP core resources, which it included in its decision. The Board allocated an additional 0.5 per cent of total resources for the Europe and CIS region, given the special needs of the countries with economies in transition. It authorized the Administrator to allocate $3 million for 1997, on a one-time basis, to facilitate the smooth phase-out of UNDP funding for the UN Industrial Development Organization Country Director Programme.

The Board approved the methodology for distribution of resources for country programmes as described by the Administrator,⁽³⁴⁾ including gross national product per capita and total population, using existing weights and 1994 data (or latest estimates thereof); elimination of supplementary points; increased graduation thresholds; adjusted floors; and an appropriate bonus rate for LDCs. Countries exceeding graduation thresholds during any year of the next cycle would continue to be recipients for three years and their target for resource assignment from the core would be phased out progressively during those years. The Board decided that the Administrator should ensure that 88 per cent of all targets for resource assignments from the core would be allocated to the low-income countries and 60 per cent to LDCs, and urged him to take account of those goals in all UNDP programme activities. He was to report annually on the management of the programming arrangements and on the actual resource assignments made to each country.

The Board decided to apply its decision during the period July 1995 to June 1997 for the programming of activities for the years 1997 onwards to enable the Administrator to implement the initiatives for change and support national endeavours towards poverty elimination and achievement of SHD. It asked the Administrator to submit an interim report in 1996 on the implementation of the programming arrangements, and decided to carry out a full-scale review of the July 1995 to June 1997 introductory period for the purpose of assessing experience and determining necessary changes.

Programme evaluation

In a report to the Executive Board's April session,⁽³⁶⁾ the Administrator summarized the findings and recommendations of major evaluations carried out in 1994, including those on NATCAPs, the resident coordinator function and national execution. He also discussed evaluation methodology, building national capacity for monitoring and evaluation and outreach and support activities, and provided information on evaluations undertaken by UNDP-administered funds and programmes (UNCDF, UNIFEM and UNSO). Annexed to the report were the conclusions of an examination of the UNDP evaluation system, "Rethinking evaluation for feedback, learning and strategy formulation", which included proposals for priority actions to be carried out during 1995.

On 7 April, the Board noted⁽³⁷⁾ the Administrator's report.

National execution

In 1995, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on national execution of projects,⁽³⁷⁾ discussing the theory underlying national execution by Governments and the role of partners in such project execution. It also gave some examples of dysfunction in national execution.

JIU concluded that national execution of programmes and projects had become the norm for multilateral projects financed by UN organizations and that the number of projects so executed was growing in all regions. Although all partners—Governments, UNDP and specialized agencies—had adopted the principle of national execution, noteworthy cases of dysfunction in its application called for adjustments, particularly regarding the roles and relationships of the various partners. At the country level, the new procedures and rules of UNDP and the specialized agencies had to be explained and decision makers and senior staff trained, so as to enable Governments to discharge their responsibilities as executing agents and steadily develop their national capacities. Within UNDP, coordination between all partners and their involvement at all levels of the process should be promoted, and the degree of transparency should be raised in the choice of implementing agencies. New financial arrangements for technical support services should be simplified and explained, so they would not reduce the use of technical support from the specialized agencies. The agencies themselves should make an effort to transfer constantly developing know-how and advanced technologies to developing countries at affordable prices.

The Secretary-General also transmitted to the Assembly the comments of ACC on the JIU report.⁽³⁸⁾

By decision 50/436 of 20 December, the Assembly noted the JIU report and the ACC comments.

Financing

In his annual review of the financial situation,⁽³⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator reported that total income in 1995 was $1.62 billion, a decrease of $18 million compared to 1994, with income exceeding expenditures by $223 million. The balance of general resources increased from $311 million at the end of 1994 to $462 million at the end of 1995. Income from voluntary contributions amounted to $903 million, a decrease from $932 million in 1994. Miscellaneous income increased to $76 million ($58 million in 1994), mostly due to improved interest earnings. After several years of rapid growth, cost-sharing income remained stable, growing by less than 1 per cent to $601 million ($596 million in 1994). Extrabudgetary income fell to $40 million ($49 million in 1994), solely because of the separation of UNOPS income from that of UNDP.

Total expenditure (inclusive of cost-sharing) decreased by $11 million, to $1,379 million in 1995. Programme expenditure declined to $994 million from $1,020 million. Within that amount, IPF expenditure declined to $438 million from $489 million, a 10 per cent reduction. SPR expenditure also declined, from $43 million to $41 million. Cost-sharing expenditure increased by 6 per cent, from $475 million in 1994 to $504 million, representing slightly less than 51 per cent of total programme delivery.

On 15 September, the Executive Board, following its review of the financial situation in 1994,⁽⁴⁰⁾ noted⁽⁴¹⁾ with concern the projected decline in the balance of UNDP general resources in 1996 and called on Governments to increase their voluntary contributions on a predictable, continuous and assured basis. It also noted with concern the continued overcommitment and overexpenditure in the Reserve for Field Accommodation and asked for an update in 1996 on the progress of the three-year plan on use of the Reserve. The Administrator was also asked to submit in 1996 an up-to-date analysis of the risk situation of the operational reserve.

The Board noted the summary of observations and audit reports⁽⁴²⁾ of external auditors of the executing agencies on their 1993 accounts relating to UNDP-funded expenditures, and decided that in future only significant observations of those auditors on UNDP-funded expenditures should be included as part of the annual review of the financial situation.

Budgets

Revised 1994-1995 budget

In September, the Executive Board had before it revised budget estimates for 1994-1995,⁽⁴³⁾ along with observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).⁽⁴⁴⁾ Estimates for UNDP core activities totalled $472 million gross ($435.3 million net), $14.1 million (3 per cent) less than original estimates approved in 1993.⁽⁴⁵⁾ Revised estimates for programme support and development activities included a volume increase of $0.2 million pertaining to UNV due to the application of its staffing formula. The net effect of the volume, various cost, inflation, and currency adjustments on the programme support and development activities budget, excluding support to UN operational activities, was an upward adjustment of $2.8 million, to $77.5 million. Total revised estimates against UNDP resources thus amounted to $549.6 million—$12 million (2.1 per cent) less than the original approved estimates.

Combined revised estimates for the UNDP-administered funds (UNCDF, UNSO, UNIFEM, UN Fund for Science and Technology for Development/UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNFSTD/UNRFNRE) were also adjusted downwards to $24.8 million, representing a reduction of $5.9 million (19.3 per cent) compared to original estimates.

On 15 September, the Executive Board took note⁽⁴⁶⁾ of the realignments and adjustments incorporated into the revised 1994-1995 budget estimates, including the fact that UNOPS estimates were no longer included in the UNDP budget presentation. It endorsed the proposal, in respect of CIS and the Baltic States, to cover from savings the anticipated shortfall in extrabudgetary income generated from co-financing and cash contributions towards local office costs.

The Board approved revised appropriations in the amount of $574.4 million gross to finance the 1994-1995 budget, and resolved that income estimates in the amount of $36.7 million should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $537.7 million.

In budget estimates for 1996-1997,⁽⁴⁷⁾ presented in September, the Administrator stated that, in addition to new successor programming arrangements (see above), his proposals represented a second important component of UNDP's strategic response to a changing environment. The 1996-1997 estimates for core activities, including support to UN operational activities, amounted to $470.5 million gross ($432.5 million net). Major volume features were: the overall volume reduction of $52 million comprised a headquarters reduction of $14.8 million and a country offices reduction of $37.2 million; the reduction in headquarters included the elimination of 20 Professional and 30 General Service posts—a 10.4 per cent reduction. The post reduction in country offices was 8.4 per cent and included the phasing out of 85 international Professional and 229 General Service posts. The reduction in international Professional posts was partly offset by an increase of 20 national Professional posts.

The proposed programme support and development activities budget totalled $83.6 million. One increase related to the Office of UN System Support and Services, established by the Administrator in response to the Secretary-General's request to ensure policy coherence and enhanced coordination of operational activities for development. In the case of UNV, savings resulting from the move to Bonn, Germany (see below), were fully incorporated into the 1996-1997 proposals.

With regard to UNDP-administered funds, the Administrator proposed volume reductions for UNCDF, UNFSTD/UNRPNRE and UNIFEM.

On 15 September, the Board noted⁽⁴⁶⁾ with concern the decline in UNDP core resources and called on Governments to increase their voluntary contributions on a predictable, continuous and assured basis. It approved appropriations in the amount of $576.8 million gross to finance the 1996-1997 biennial budget and resolved that income estimates of $38 million should be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $538.8 million.

With regard to core activities, the Board appreciated the Administrator's proposal to continue a restrictive budget policy and to implement volume reductions with the aim of maximizing resources available for programme and programme support activities and, in that connection, emphasized the importance of: safeguarding accountability and ensuring that programme delivery was not negatively affected; the policy to reduce a larger percentage of headquarters than field posts and using functional analyses and consistent and transparent criteria to contribute to an effective process of rationalization; placing capacities and functions in optimal locations through decentralization and outsourcing; and maximizing benefits through improved management of communications and information. The Administrator was asked to assess the impact of the Board's budget decision on UNDP's organizational capacity, particularly the adequacy of human resources both at headquarters and country level. The Board was to be kept informed on progress made in clustering and networking, as well as on steps to promote common services with other UN agencies at the country level.

As to programme support and development activities, the Administrator was to report in 1996 on the specific functions of envisaged new posts in the Office of UN System Support and Services, and to report on assistance to the Secretary-General to ensure system-wide coordination and policy coherence. He was also to review, in the context of future biennial budget presentations, the estimated workload related to support to UN operational activities.

The Board approved the Administrator's budget and staffing proposals relating to UNCDF, UNIFEM, UNFSTD/UNRPNRE and UNSO and asked him to report on steps taken to integrate UNSO's work into the UNDP core programme and on steps taken to reflect that integration in 1998-1999 budget proposals.

Harmonization of budget presentations

In response to a 1994 Executive Board request,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director reported⁽⁴⁸⁾ on harmonization of presentation of budgets and accounts. A working party on financial statements had been established, with full participation of senior financial officials of UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF; it would report to the General Assembly in 1996.

As for biennial budgets, a consultant engaged by the three agencies was identifying differences between existing budget presentations, and a first report was being reviewed. Also, a recent study of UNICEF budgetary matters would affect the manner in which the joint UNDP/UNFPA/UNICEF study could progress.

On 15 September, the Board requested⁽⁴⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to provide it with draft appropriation decisions on the budgets prior to its discussions. They were also asked to accelerate efforts to contribute to the harmonization of budget presentations and to provide the Board in 1996 with: an oral progress report, including identification of common features in the budgets of UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF, and an explanation of areas not common in the budgets; an oral progress report on steps for further harmonization, which, together with Board views on the issue, would be presented to the Economic and Social Council's 1996 substantive session; and initial action proposals by the Executive Board, through ACABQ. The Administrator and Executive Director were also to ensure that the proposals for harmonization and budget presentation further promoted the provision of user-friendly and transparent budget documents and preparation procedures.

Audit reports

In January, the Executive Board reviewed the Administrator's report⁽⁵⁰⁾ on follow-up to recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the biennium 1992-1993.⁽⁵¹⁾ An addendum to the Administrator's report⁽⁵²⁾ provided a framework and estimated targets to help develop an implementation plan for the Reserve for Field Accommodation covering 1994-1996.

On 11 January, the Board noted⁽⁵³⁾ the Administrator's actions to address all recommendations made by the Board of Auditors. It noted the three-year plan on the use of the Reserve for Field Accommodation and asked the Administrator to report annually on the status of the Reserve as part of the annual review of the financial situation.

Procurement

In response to a 1993 UNDP Governing Council decision,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Administrator reported to the Executive Board in September on procurement from developing countries.⁽⁵⁵⁾ UN system-wide procurement from developing countries had reached $1.3 billion in 1994, or 35 per cent of total procurement volume, compared to 30 per cent in 1991, he stated. The report described measures already taken by the UN system to increase geographical distribution of procurement. Although important progress had been made in increasing procurement from developing countries, many external constraints remained, varying from export, currency and other regulatory barriers to commercial constraints limiting competitiveness, such as lack of quality control, limited production and servicing capacity and packing.

Progress had been made in upgrading and maintaining supplier rosters in the common vendor database (CVD), used extensively in the UN system. Distribution of CVD to country offices for decentralized use would be pursued, and country offices would be aided in establishing local vendor rosters. The Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office (IAPSO) would promote further use of advertising by UN agencies through its publication "Procurement update", which contained information on business opportunities and contract awards, and would seek means to facilitate global distribution of that information.

In April, meeting in Harare, Zimbabwe, the Inter-Agency Procurement Working Group (IAPWG) had stressed that measures to increase procurement from developing and underutilized major donor countries should be subordinate to considerations of competitiveness.

On 14 September, the Executive Board encouraged⁽⁵⁶⁾ IAPSO to continue to coordinate, through the IAPWG mechanism, efforts within the UN system to increase procurement from developing and underutilized major donor countries. The Economic and Social Council should encourage UN organizations and agencies to cooperate with IAPSO in improving the accuracy and timeliness of data for annual reporting on procurement to the Board and the Council. The Administrator was asked to streamline reporting on procurement to ensure a clear distinction between activities aimed at promoting procurement from developing countries and those from underutilized major donors, and to organize statistical data accordingly.

Other technical cooperation

UN programmes

DDSMS activities

During 1995, the UN Department for Development Support and Management Services (DDSMS) was executing more than 1,400 technical cooperation projects, with a total project expenditure of some $80.1 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $34.6 million; those by trust funds, $36.2 million; by UNFPA, $4.8 million; and by the UN regular programme of technical cooperation, $4.5 million. These included expenditures of $19.1 million for interregional and global programmes, $31.3 million in Africa, $12.2 million in Asia and the Pacific, $4.1 million in the Americas, $11.1 million in the Arab States and $2.3 million in Europe. Africa had the largest share—39.1 per cent of total delivery.

Distribution of expenditures by substantive sectors was as follows: natural resources and environment planning, $17.4 million; national execution and capacity-building, $12.7 million; development policies and planning, $12.2 million; governance and public administration, $7.4 million; statistics, $5.2 million; energy, $4.4 million; public finance and enterprise management, $3.9 million; social development management, $3.3 million; the UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, $2.7 million; and population, $1.9 million.

On a component basis, DDSMS delivery in 1995 included $53.8 million for project personnel, $3.9 million for subcontracted services, $9.9 million for training, $9.5 million for equipment and $3 million for miscellaneous expenses.

UN Office for Project Services

On 1 January 1995, in accordance with a 1994 General Assembly decision,⁽¹⁾ the UN Office for Project Services, formerly part of UNDP, became a separate and identifiable entity within the United Nations.

In response to a 1994 Executive Board request,⁽²⁾ the UNDP Administrator and the UNOPS Executive Director reported on the proposed scope and objectives of UNOPS.⁽³⁾ The proposed objective was to provide high-quality, timely and cost-effective development services to help UN Member States successfully implement projects. Services would include: comprehensive project management, including contracting for technical expertise and backstopping; implementation of project components being executed by other UN organizations or by national institutions; project supervision and loan administration on behalf of international financial institutions; and management services for multilateral, bilateral and beneficiary-financed projects.

The report described the role and functions of the Management Coordination Committee (MCC)—providing operational guidance and management direction to UNOPS—vis-à-vis the Executive Board—the governing body for UNOPS—and the role and functions of the Users Advisory Group, which would provide feedback on the quality, effectiveness and responsiveness of UNOPS services and promote the dissemination of lessons learned and new approaches developed.

The Administrator and the Executive Director also presented proposed financial regulations governing the operations of UNOPS.⁽⁴⁾ An ACABQ report on the financial regulations was also before the Board.⁽⁵⁾

On 10 January, the Board approved⁽⁶⁾ financial regulations for UNOPS as an annex to the UNDP Financial Rules and Regulations and endorsed the definition of the roles of MCC and the Users Advisory Group. It decided that the UNOPS operational reserve should be initially established at a level equal to 20 per cent of the annual administrative budget of UNOPS, rounded to the nearest $100,000.

The UNOPS Executive Director and MCC were asked to keep the Financial Regulations and Rules under review, taking into account the experience of their operation and ACABQ observations. The Board asked the Executive Director to report in June on the review's outcome.

The UNOPS Executive Director provided an update⁽⁷⁾ on the ongoing review of the status and application of the Financial Regulations and the development of new financial rules. Pending finalization of the new rules, UNDP Rules would apply to UNOPS operations. In January, a UNOPS contracts committee was established, consisting of staff from UNDP and UNOPS, to review proposed contracts exceeding $100,000. UNOPS had launched a study of the risks and liabilities inherent in the business process of a self-financing entity providing development services.

Budget estimates

In September, the Executive Director presented revised budget estimates for the biennium 1994-1995 and budget estimates for the biennium 1996-1997 for UNOPS.⁽⁸⁾ Revised income projections for 1994-1995 amounted to some $59 million, about $9 million less than originally anticipated.

With regard to the 1996-1997 biennium, UNOPS anticipated a total delivery of some $810 million, $20 million more than for 1994-1995. It was estimated that delivery would generate income totalling some $61.5 million. Administrative expenditures were anticipated at $61.4 million.

The Executive Board also reviewed an ACABQ report⁽⁹⁾ on revised budget estimates for 1994-1995 and estimates for 1996-1997.

On 15 September, the Board approved⁽¹⁰⁾ three additional General Service posts, bringing the total to 244 established posts. The Executive Director was to review existing posts to determine which ones were to be maintained or reallocated, and to report in 1996.

The Board approved revised budget estimates for 1994-1995 in the amount of $58.4 million and budget estimates for 1996-1997 of $61.4 million. It noted that UNDP and UNOPS were reviewing the nature of and conditions under which central administrative services were made available to UNOPS by UNDP, and instructed the Executive Director to report in 1996 on arrangements for such services during the 1996-1997 biennium. The Board noted the financial management model developed by UNOPS to establish and monitor its administrative budget. The Executive Director was to report, through MCC, any significant changes in income projections. The future direction of UNOPS was to be considered in 1996.

During 1995, UNOPS concluded cooperation agreements with UN partners other than UNDP, including the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, the UN Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, the UN International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the International Labour Organization.

At year's end, UNOPS had incurred project expenditures totalling $382,924,263. Income from all sources totalled $30,425,868; administrative expenditures were $27,688,064. Some 48 per cent of income was from UNDP-funded projects; 5 per cent from services provided by UNOPS as either cooperating or associated agency; 5 per cent from UNDCP-funded projects; 20 per cent from projects financed by UNDP-administered trust funds; and 22 per cent from management fees for projects funded under the Management Service Agreement modality.

UN Volunteers

In his annual report on the work of UNDP,⁽¹¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that during 1995 a total of 3,263 UNV specialists and field workers from 134 nations served in 139 countries. New major programme areas included poverty eradication, support to the peace-building and democratization processes, assistance to countries in transition and strengthening civil society.

In the fight against poverty, one of the largest UNV programmes was in the United Republic of Tanzania, where 60 UNV specialists and field workers focused on health, agriculture and strengthening local community groups. In Burkina Faso, 51 volunteers worked in the areas of rural development, education and skills training, health and food security, while in the Niger, 31 volunteers were assigned to programmes linked to employment and income-generating activities, preservation of natural resources, women in development and economic management. A multi-sectoral project in Togo, based on promoting people's participation at the village level, served as a model for UNDP and the Government for a larger participatory approach to poverty eradication.

In the areas of peace-building and democratization, 74 UNV specialists supported the UN Assistance Mission in Rwanda, and an additional 65 volunteers participated as human rights monitors in the field. Logistical support was provided to the UN Mission in Haiti by 29 UNV specialists; another 30 specialists served as human rights observers there. In addition, 12 electoral assistance and logistical support officers worked in Haiti in 1995. In Guatemala, UNV provided the UN Human Rights Verification Mission with 105 human rights monitors, indigenous rights monitors, and human rights promotion and education officers.

UNV assistance to countries in transition included supporting innovative poverty eradication efforts, working with communities in environmentally degraded areas, strengthening human resources and mobilizing external financial resources. A continuing UNV presence in Cambodia played a significant role in the transition from emergency and rehabilitation to development. In the Aral Sea region, 10 UNV specialists assisted communities to develop self-help initiatives through programmes addressing issues of environment and biodiversity, nutrition, soil and water management, and small business and agro-business development. In Kyrgyzstan, indigenous UNV specialists were building self-management capacities of indigenous NGOs to support local initiatives.

With regard to strengthening civil society, UNV worked with NGOs and community-based organizations (CBOs) in Latin America to facilitate sharing experiences and knowledge of indigenous crafts, technologies and medicine. In Africa, UNV collaborated extensively with NGOs and CBOs, using mixed teams of international and national UNV specialists to advocate community support in HIV/AIDS care. In Lebanon, UNV promoted the return of some 450,000 displaced persons.

Relocation of UNV headquarters

In January, the Administrator outlined⁽¹²⁾ to the Executive Board the Secretary-General's proposal to relocate UNV headquarters from Geneva to Bonn, a proposal already discussed in 1994.⁽¹³⁾ A working group established to consider the relocation's technical, financial and legal aspects had identified human resource, administrative, legal and financial implications. Its report was annexed to the Administrator's report to the Board. ACABQ also reported on the proposal.⁽¹⁴⁾

On 10 January, the Board endorsed⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General's proposal to accept Germany's offer to relocate UNV headquarters to Bonn from mid-1996 onwards. The Administrator was authorized to continue discussions on the terms and provisions of the offer to resolve outstanding issues and complete arrangements to enable the transfer by July 1996.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

In his annual report covering 1995,⁽¹¹⁾ the Administrator stated that activities funded from the SPR allocation for technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) fell into four sub-programmes: sensitization and information on the TCDC modality; capacities and needs-matching exercises and subject-specific workshops; studies and evaluation; and enhancement of capacities for the application of TCDC. Activities within those subprogrammes focused on priority areas to promote SHD: TCDC and poverty eradication; jobs and sustainable livelihood; environment; gender in development; and the TCDC Information Referral Service.

TCDC Committee action

At the ninth session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (New York, 30 May-2 June),⁽¹⁶⁾ experts reviewed progress made in implementing the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC⁽¹⁷⁾ and decisions of the High-level Committee and implementation of the recommendations of the South Commission.⁽¹⁸⁾ Also considered were a report on new directions for TCDC, with an addendum containing the Bandung (Indonesia) Framework for Asia-Africa Cooperation, adopted at the Asia-Africa Forum in December 1994;⁽¹⁹⁾ and a document dealing with organizational matters.⁽²⁰⁾

On 2 June, the Committee adopted six decisions. Regarding progress made in implementing the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,⁽²¹⁾ the Committee called on all parties in the development effort to give the highest priority to implementing the 1992 Economic and Social Council resolution on TCDC,⁽²²⁾ giving first consideration to the use of the TCDC modality in their technical cooperation programmes. It urged those parties to continue to accord high priority to key elements in the South Commission report,⁽²³⁾ including strengthening national commitment to South-South cooperation, the use of developing country training and education facilities, promotion of South-South trade, cooperation between enterprises in the South and strengthening food security. The Committee called on Governments, the UN development system and relevant intergovernmental organizations to continue to improve the quality and timeliness of reporting on the promotion and application of TCDC activities at subregional, regional, interregional and international levels. The UNDP Administrator was asked to report in 1997 on the implementation of its decision.

In a decision on new directions for TCDC,⁽²⁴⁾ the Committee welcomed the report on the subject,⁽¹⁹⁾ prepared in response to a 1994 General Assembly request.⁽²⁵⁾ It also expressed its belief that the report was an important contribution to the Secretary-General's report on the state of South-South cooperation (see preceding chapter). It endorsed the report's recommendations on new directions, particularly those on adopting a more strategic focus for TCDC and on selecting priority issues, such as trade and investment, debt, the environment, poverty alleviation, production and employment and macroeconomic policy coordination, as well as education, health, transfer of technology and rural development. The Committee urged Governments and UN organizations, as well as other institutions and entities in both public and private sectors, particularly in developed countries, to incorporate new directions for TCDC into their programmes for technical cooperation. Governments and UN organizations were called on to consider increasing budget allocations for TCDC and to identify new funding arrangements such as triangular funding and private-sector funding, as well as mobilizing contributions to ensure that adequate resources were available to implement the recommendations on new directions. The UNDP Administrator was asked to ensure that the Special Unit for TCDC played a proactive role within the UN system to expand the application of TCDC and effectively implement the strategy for new directions, while endeavouring to reduce the delivery cost of future TCDC programmes. The Committee called on the Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on South-South Cooperation (see preceding chapter) to take fully into account the report of the High-level Committee, with special emphasis on the decision on new directions, and to propose practical application recommendations for TCDC. The UNDP Administrator was to report in 1997 on progress in implementing the Committee's decision.

With regard to an overall framework for promoting and applying TCDC, the Committee endorsed⁽²⁶⁾ the recommendation of its Bureau⁽²⁰⁾ that existing arrangements for the Committee be maintained. UN agencies should consider how to refine and improve the guidelines for the review of TCDC policies and procedures, and report on the subject for ACC consideration. The Committee supported the Administrator's decision to maintain the separate identity of the Special Unit for TCDC, for which the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board was to provide adequate staff and support.

In a decision on strengthening TCDC,⁽²⁷⁾ the Committee welcomed the Administrator's efforts to increase TCDC resources and the commitment to the South Centre—an intergovernmental organization in Geneva—and his commitment to help expand the core capital of the Perez-Guerrero Trust Fund (formerly the Trust Fund for Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries (ECDC)/TCDC).

By another decision,⁽²⁸⁾ the Committee welcomed the establishment of the Group of 77/UNDP Award for ECDC/TCDC, on the occasion of the commemoration in June 1994 of the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the Group of 77 developing countries, to promote greater awareness of the importance of South-South cooperation and to support ECDC/TCDC activities. The Committee also approved the agenda for its tenth (1997) session.⁽²⁹⁾

By decision 1995/233 of 13 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Committee's report.

Executive Board action. On 14 June, the Executive Board endorsed⁽³⁰⁾ the new directions for TCDC as recommended by the High-level Committee. It reaffirmed the important role they could play in increasing the use of both TCDC and ECDC as dynamic instruments for expanded South-South cooperation. UNDP efforts to promote a more strategic orientation for TCDC by focusing on high-impact activities were welcomed. The Administrator was to take action regarding the promotion and implementation of TCDC, pursuant to a 1992 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽²²⁾ which called on parties in the development effort to give the TCDC option first consideration in technical cooperation activities. He was also asked to ensure that the Special Unit for TCDC played a proactive role within the UN system to expand the application of TCDC and effectively implement the strategy for new directions for TCDC, while endeavouring to reduce the delivery cost of future programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 50/436 of 20 December, the General Assembly noted the Secretary-General's report on ECDC/TCDC,⁽³¹⁾ which drew attention to the report of the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC on its ninth session and to the report on the state of South-South cooperation (see preceding chapter).

In resolution 50/119 of 20 December, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations in the report⁽¹⁹⁾ on new directions for TCDC and welcomed the Executive Board decision to increase the allocation of resources for TCDC during the next programming cycle. UNDP was invited to establish a voluntary trust fund for the promotion of South-South cooperation, to which all countries were invited to contribute (see preceding chapter).

UN Capital Development Fund

The UN Capital Development Fund, in a policy paper published in 1995 entitled "Poverty Reduction, Participation and Local Government: The Role for UNCDF",⁽¹⁾ outlined the Fund's future direction and tied its core mandate—poverty reduction in LDCs—to experience accumulated over the years. While continuing to emphasize its traditional role in providing small-scale credit and rural infrastructure in LDCs, UNCDF was placing increased importance on developing direct partnerships with newly empowered local governments and the community groups they served, particularly the rural poor.

The policy paper stated that many new and planned UNCDF programmes aimed at building capacity and responded to needs at the local level. These included projects in Cambodia, Malawi, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania and the West Bank.

UNCDF continued to collaborate with UNDP, members of the International Union of Local Authorities, the French NGO Cites Unies Développement, the Association of Dutch Municipalities and the Local Government International Bureau (United Kingdom) to help strengthen the development work of local authorities.

The implementation of UNCDF credit activities improved significantly in 1995 and a guarantee facility was launched in Madagascar. A regional unit was established in West Africa.

During 1995, UNCDF received $30.6 million in voluntary pledges, $3.8 million for sub-trust funds and $20,279 in cost-sharing. Expenditures during the year totalled $40.6 million.

On 6 April, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board appealed⁽²⁾ to all interested donor countries, organizations and other parties to make voluntary contributions to UNCDF. It encouraged the Administrator to continue to refine the Fund's community development focus, which would include a strong emphasis on projects involving local authorities, the private sector and civil society in the context of its assigned mandate.

Chapter III

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

During 1995, with a growing number of major emergencies of all varieties requiring international assistance, the United Nations, through the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, continued to strengthen its coordination support capacity and to act as a focal point for the development of new initiatives to be undertaken by the international emergency response community for the improved effectiveness of international relief operations. Consolidated inter-agency appeals were launched for Afghanistan, Angola, the Caucasus, Chechnya in the Russian Federation, Iraq, Liberia, Rwanda and countries receiving refugees from Rwanda, the Sudan and the former Yugoslavia, but the international response often fell short of the set targets.

Regarding special economic assistance, the Economic and Social Council devoted the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1995 to the consideration of the development of Africa, including the implementation of the UN New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s. The General Assembly established an ad hoc committee during its fiftieth session to prepare a mid-term review in 1996 of the implementation of the New Agenda and the Administrative Committee on Coordination decided to launch the System-wide Special Initiative on Africa in 1996.

Having entered the second half of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-2000), the international community accelerated efforts towards integrating disaster reduction into national development planning. The Assembly called for international assistance for the Caribbean region, which was hard hit by Hurricane Luis, and for Madagascar, which was struggling to recover from the cyclones and floods of 1994.

Humanitarian assistance

Increasingly, humanitarian organizations were compelled to operate in war-torn societies where conflicting parties were often openly contemptuous of fundamental humanitarian norms. In such circumstances, a major challenge was the need to safeguard the well-being of civilians while providing assistance in a manner consistent with humanitarian principles.

At the World Summit on Humanitarian Assistance (Madrid, Spain, 14 December), convened by the European Commissioner for Humanitarian Aid, heads of the world's 10 major humanitarian agencies called for decisive international action to resolve and prevent the crises. The Summit's Madrid Declaration appealed to the international community at large for, among other things, the development of a global system of proactive crisis prevention; urgent steps to address the deliberate targeting of civilians in conflicts; and urgent attention to the needs and protection of all victims, with priority to women, children and the elderly. The agencies also appealed to all concerned to respect the humanitarian and non-political nature of their work, to ensure the safety of humanitarian personnel and to provide them with a more secure basis for funding.

Humanitarian activities

Africa

Angola

In January, a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Angola for the period January to December 1995 was launched. It sought $213 million, of which $145 million was for resettlement and repatriation of the internally displaced and refugees; $56 million for the demobilization of former combatants and their reintegration into civilian society; and $12 million for a mine action programme. Approximately 3.2 million Angolans were in need of humanitarian assistance, including 1.1 million internally displaced persons, 100,000 potential returnees, and 1.9 million conflict-affected persons. In July, the Appeal's programme for demobilization and reintegration was revised, reflecting the demobilization exercise agreed upon between the Government of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) (see below). The revised requirements for the programme covering the period January 1995 to December 1996 amounted to $102.3 million.

The round-table conference for Angola (Brussels, Belgium, 25-26 September) reviewed the community rehabilitation programme, which involved measures to facilitate national reconciliation, rehabilitation, reconstruction and economic revitalization. The donor community responded with pledges of over $993 million. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) collaborated with Angola in the implementation of a new economic and social programme, while the World Bank helped to prepare an emergency reconstruction programme.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁾ in September 1995 on international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola. The report described emergency assistance during the civil conflict and developments following the signing of the Lusaka Protocol in 1994,⁽³⁾ and outlined future humanitarian assistance.

Opening of the roads, which had been closed for more than two years, facilitated humanitarian assistance to previously inaccessible areas. Easier access to land, markets and food supply contributed to a dramatic decline in the number of people served by the World Food Programme (WFP) to 1.1 million in July. While the main coordination responsibility for humanitarian assistance remained with the Unit for Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance (UCHA) of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA), a Humanitarian Coordination Group was established as a step to transfer the responsibility to the Government of Angola.

Under the Lusaka Protocol, as many as 100,000 combatants, including 30,000 disabled and under-age soldiers, were to be demobilized and reintegrated into civilian life. UCHA created a Demobilization and Reintegration Office to conduct feasibility studies on reintegration projects for under-age and disabled soldiers, quick-impact projects for the resettlement of demobilized soldiers in rural areas, and a survey of 600 soldiers concerning their social profile and social and economic expectations of reintegration into civilian life. The Government of Angola and UNITA agreed to demobilize troops in stages over a period of approximately 27 months. The section of the Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal covering demobilization and reintegration was accordingly re-adjusted in July to take account of the agreement, seeking $102.3 million for the revised programme, of which $52.3 million was for the crucial first quartering phase. As at 22 August, $4.2 million had been pledged for the revised programme. The selection of 15 quartering areas for UNITA troops was completed and the quartering launched in November.

A draft mine action plan was prepared by UCHA's Central Mine Action Office to conduct extensive surveys of mined areas; public education and awareness about mines; training of Angolans in mine action; and mine clearance in priority areas. Demining activities were carried out in the quartering areas along access roads and around bridges designated for reconstruction. A Demining School, established by the Central Mine Action Office and the Angolan National Institute for the Removal of Explosive Devices, had begun a course to train Angolans. The Secretary-General observed that massive destruction of physical infrastructure, severe disruption of socio-economic activities and pollution of land-mines and unexploded ordnance would affect the activities and lives of thousands of Angolans for decades.

In December, the security situation deteriorated, especially in UNITA-controlled areas; none the less, humanitarian assistance continued wherever possible, including deliveries of food, seeds and medical supplies, as well as nutritional assessments and the repair of medical equipment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 D.

International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions appealing to the international community to continue to render material, technical and financial assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola,

Recalling also that the Security Council, in its resolutions 922(1994) of 31 May 1994, 932(1994) of 30 June 1994, 945(1994) of 29 September 1994, 952(1994) of 27 October 1994, 966(1994) of 8 December 1994, 976(1995) of 8 February 1995 and 1008(1995) of 7 August 1995, in the presidential statements on Angola of 11 May 1995 and 12 October 1995, and in other resolutions on international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola, had, inter alia, requested the international community to render assistance to Angola,

Deeply concerned about the critical economic and social situation prevailing in Angola, aggravated by the tremendous consequences of war which have destroyed the economic and social infrastructure,

Stressing the fact that the ongoing implementation of the peace agreements, including the Lusaka Protocol, will foster peace and stability, thus creating favourable conditions for the economic and social rehabilitation of the country,

Welcoming the results of the first Round-Table Conference of Donors, held at Brussels from 25 to 27 September 1995, conducted in a spirit of reconciliation and intended to mobilize funds for the Community Rehabilitation and National Reconciliation Programme, and aware of the important role to be played by the international community in assisting Angola in rehabilitating its economy and its basic and social infrastructures, as well as the development of human resources,

Recognizing that the social and economic reintegration of demobilized combatants is essential for the establishment of lasting peace and sustainable development in Angola,

Stressing the need to strengthen the process of demining of all roads, as well as areas of productive activities, by means of appropriate international assistance and the continued commitment of all parties in Angola,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 September 1995;

2. Calls upon all parties to do their utmost to achieve the full and effective implementation of the Peace Accords for Angola in order to bring peace and stability to Angola, thus creating conditions conducive to its economic rehabilitation;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all States, United Nations organizations and other donors for the substantial humanitarian assistance rendered to Angola during the last two years, and appeals for continued and generous contributions in support of humanitarian activities facilitating the current transition to peace;

4. Appeals to all Governments and international and private institutions that announced their contributions at the Round-Table Conference of Donors to honour their commitments, and encourages the Government of Angola to proceed with its programme of economic rehabilitation, including through the implementation of the Community Rehabilitation and National Reconciliation Programme, and to overcome its social, economic and financial crisis;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the international community, to continue to mobilize organizations and organs of the United Nations system in order to ensure an appropriate level of economic assistance for Angola;

6. Commends all Governments, non-governmental organizations and United Nations specialized agencies involved in the mine-action programme in Angola, and requests the international community to consider increasing its support in this domain;

7. Urges Member States and other donors to provide support for the programme of demobilization and reintegration of excess combatants, as outlined in the appeal issued by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in July 1995;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to review at its fifty-second session the question of international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola.

Burundi

In January, DHA launched the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Persons Affected by the Crisis in Rwanda, seeking a total of $805 million to assist Burundi, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire. Assistance to Burundi targeted 110,000 returnees and 100,000 internally displaced persons, as well as 294,000 Burundese refugees in Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire. The Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator, established in November, had primary responsibility for the coordination of emergency relief activities of the UN system in Burundi. During 1995, the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) provided assistance to returnees, displaced persons and 5,000 urban poor in the country. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) provided basic drugs for health centres and integrated supplementary feeding into health centre activities. Its activities also included basic and hygiene education, as well as identification of and assistance to unaccompanied children. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) helped the Government to plan reconstruction and development projects and initiated technical assistance with the World Health Organization (WHO) in the rehabilitation of the health system, and with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in agricultural production.

The issue of assistance to countries receiving refugees from Rwanda, such as Burundi, was discussed at the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region (see below, under "Rwanda").

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to requests made by the General Assembly in October⁽⁴⁾ and December⁽⁵⁾ 1994, the Secretary-General submitted an October 1995 report⁽⁶⁾ on special emergency assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of Burundi. He found it encouraging that none of the 12 political parties that had signed the 1994 Convention on Governance⁽⁷⁾ had withdrawn from the agreement aimed at promoting peace, security and power-sharing between the Hutu and Tutsi communities. Despite increasing attempts by extremists to disrupt life throughout the country, Burundi's governmental institutions, agricultural sector, schools, banks, telephone communications and public transport continued to function. The general consensus of the relief community in Burundi was that the humanitarian crisis was over. However, health and educational services remained impaired by continuous ethnic turmoil, forcing the international community to set up parallel administrative structures. Dwindling international emergency resources and the absence of follow-up development assistance raised concerns about the Government's capacity to provide basic services. The Secretary-General concluded that the international community should continue to coordinate its efforts so that the message to the political leaders of Burundi was consistent and unanimous.

By December, the humanitarian situation had deteriorated as political violence resumed in the country. A series of attacks targeted representatives of UN agencies, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 K.

Special emergency assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of Burundi

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/17 of 3 November 1993, 49/7 of 25 October 1994 and 49/21 C of 2 December 1994,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 11 October 1995,

Considering that Burundi continues to face a social, human rights and political crisis that has existed since October 1993, the adverse effects of which are endangering the national economy, as evidenced by the destruction of economic and social infrastructures, declining production and trade and, as a result, shrinking public revenue,

Concerned about the instability of the situation in a number of areas, and acknowledging the need to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian and other international personnel,

Concerned also about the acts of violence that have the negative effect of stifling the national economy, in particular by disturbing the movement of persons, goods and services,

Recognizing that the coalition Government that emerged from the Convention on Governance is making efforts to redress the economic and social situation through its plan of action of March 1995,

Convinced that the country has the capacity to achieve appreciable economic results, particularly through its structural adjustment programme, and that an improved economic situation would contribute to the consolidation of peace,

Bearing in mind, however, that, in view of Burundi's inadequate economic and financial resources, the continued and increased assistance of the international community is still essential for the implementation of the plans and programmes of the Government,

1. Expresses its gratitude to all States, United Nations institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that responded favourably to the appeal made at the forty-ninth session;

2. Invites once again all States, United Nations institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide Burundi with economic, financial, material and technical assistance for economic recovery and for the reconstruction of the various infrastructures destroyed or damaged during the crisis and to facilitate the voluntary repatriation of refugees;

3. Calls upon all parties not to hinder in any way efforts by international, intergovernmental and non-governmental aid organizations to transport and distribute humanitarian assistance to the people of Burundi and to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of all humanitarian personnel operating in the country;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in close cooperation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, to coordinate the activities being implemented by the United Nations system to meet the needs of the people of Burundi adequately and to mobilize the assistance of the international community;

5. Requests the Government of Burundi to continue its efforts geared towards the achievement of national reconciliation and the maintenance of lasting peace, inter alia, through adherence to the principles of the Convention on Governance, provisions that are essential for the successful and sustainable implementation of humanitarian aid and economic, financial, material and technical assistance to the people of Burundi;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to consider at its fifty-first session the question of special emergency assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of Burundi.

Liberia

In January, a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Liberia was issued, seeking $65.3 million for the period until June 1995. It was later extended to the end of August. The largest sum of $45 million was requested for assistance in food aid and nutrition, followed by $7 million in health. As at 30 August, $53 million had been contributed. Another Inter-Agency Appeal for $110 million was issued in October, covering the period from September 1995 to August 1996. Priority areas for assistance included food security ($44.6 million); displacement, repatriation and resettlement/reintegration ($43 million); and health ($12 million). It was estimated that 1.8 million Liberians required humanitarian assistance, of whom 1.5 million had access to relief organizations.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1995 a report⁽⁹⁾ on assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia. He described support provided for the Liberian peace process (see PART TWO, Chapter II), reviewed sectoral assistance in areas of food and nutrition, agriculture, health and medical care, water and sanitation, education and training, and aid to specific target groups, and outlined contributions from Member States. He stated that contributions to the Trust Fund established to enable the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) to fulfil its mandate had been minimal.

Continued fighting during 1995, notably between the Liberia Peace Council and the National Patriotic Front of Liberia and between rival branches of the United Liberation Movement for Democracy, resulted in further large-scale population displacements and prevented humanitarian assistance agencies from helping those civilians unable to flee the affected areas. However, as ECOMOG secured the roads north-east as well as north and west of Monrovia in June, UN agencies and NGOs started to expand operations into those areas where credible security was guaranteed. In addition to 1.5 million Liberians in the country, more than 700,000 Liberian refugees (367,300 in Cote d'Ivoire, 395,000 in Guinea, 14,000 in Ghana, 4,600 in Sierra Leone and 4,000 in Nigeria) required humanitarian assistance.

Following the signing of the Abuja Agreement in August, a Humanitarian Assistance Coordinator was appointed to support the efforts of UN operational agencies and non-governmental, international and multilateral organizations. Towards the end of the year, steps were taken to link emergency relief activities to rehabilitation; a joint UNDP/World Bank mission to Liberia examined short-term grant assistance and possible long-term stabilization measures, WFP began preparations for feeding 60,000 ex-combatants during the demobilization period, and FAO distributed seeds and tools to increase household food security.

The Secretary-General concluded that any plan for sustainable progress in rehabilitating Liberia would have to include the demobilization and integration of combatants into civil society, including under-aged fighters.

On 27 October, the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the President of Ghana as Chairman of ECOWAS and the Chairman of the Liberian Council of State, convened in New York a conference on assistance to Liberia. Attended by more than 100 participants, the objectives of the conference were to consolidate the peace process through renewed support for humanitarian assistance and the demobilization process, recovery and rehabilitation needs and assistance to ECO-MOG. A total of $145.7 million was pledged.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 A.

Assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 1020 (1995) of 10 November 1995, in which, inter alia, the Council called upon all of the Liberian parties to respect and implement fully and expeditiously all the agreements and commitments they had entered into, in particular with regard to the maintenance of the cease-fire, disarmament and demobilization of combatants, and national reconciliation, as the restoration of peace and democracy in Liberia was primarily the responsibility of those parties which signed the Abuja Agreement on 19 August 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 9 October 1995,

Deeply concerned about the adverse effects of the protracted conflict on the socio-economic development of Liberia, and noting the urgent need to restore peace and stability so as to make possible the rehabilitation and reconstruction of basic sectors of the country,

Recognizing the recent progress made by the Liberian parties towards the peaceful resolution of the conflict, including the re-establishment of a cease-fire, the installation of a new Council of State on 1 September 1995 and the agreement reached on a timetable for the implementation of the peace process from the cease-fire to the holding of executive and legislative elections in August 1996,

Noting with concern that the lack of logistics and security guarantees continues to impair the delivery of relief assistance, particularly in the areas not yet under the control of the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group, thereby hampering the transition from emergency to development activities,

Commending the concerted and determined efforts of the Economic Community of West African States to restore peace, security and stability in Liberia,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have rendered assistance to the Liberian National Transitional Government in its relief and rehabilitation efforts, and urges that such assistance be continued;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continuing efforts to mobilize relief and rehabilitation assistance for Liberia, expresses its gratitude to him for convening a pledging conference on assistance to Liberia in New York on 27 October 1995, and in this regard encourages States that pledged assistance to fulfil their commitments;

3. Calls upon all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide Liberia with technical, financial and other assistance for the repatriation and resettlement of Liberian refugees, returnees and displaced persons and the rehabilitation of combatants so as to facilitate the restoration of peace and normalcy in Liberia;

4. Reiterates its appeal to all States to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for Liberia established by the Secretary-General, inter alia, to assist the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group to fulfil its mandate and to provide assistance for the reconstruction of Liberia;

5. Emphasizes the urgent need for all parties and factions in Liberia to respect fully the security and safety of all personnel of the United Nations, its specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group by ensuring their complete freedom of movement throughout Liberia and to take all measures necessary to create an atmosphere conducive to the successful resolution of the conflict;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help the Government of Liberia in its reconstruction and development efforts;

(b) To undertake, when conditions permit, in close collaboration with the authorities of Liberia, an overall assessment of needs, with the objective of holding a round-table conference of donors for the reconstruction and development of Liberia;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to consider at its fifty-first session the question of international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia.

Rwanda

During 1995, a climate of relative security and stability prevailed within Rwanda, despite the absence of any discernible effort towards national reconciliation. The humanitarian situation improved, with steady progress in the transition from emergency relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development.

At a round-table conference (Geneva, 18-19 January) organized by UNDP in cooperation with the Government of Rwanda, a Programme for National Reconciliation and Socio-Economic Rehabilitation and Recovery was presented to the donor community. In response to the Government's request for $764.1 million for the implementation of the Programme, donor countries pledged $587 million. At the round-table mid-term review (Kigali, 6-7 July), the donors announced that they would make available an additional $128 million. The implementation of the Programme was supported by UNDP.

In January, the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Persons Affected by the Crisis in Rwanda was issued, seeking $805 million, of which $229 million was for Rwanda ($576 million was for the subregion—Burundi, Rwanda, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire), for the period ending December 1995. Projects in the Consolidated Appeal reflected the Government's framework for the Programme set forth at the round-table conference. Of the $229 million for Rwanda, the largest request was for food aid and nutrition ($73.4 million), followed by assistance to repatriates and internally displaced persons ($55.5 million).

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽¹¹⁾ in October 1995 on emergency assistance for a solution to the problem of refugees, the restoration of total peace, reconstruction and socio-economic development in Rwanda. The Joint Commission for the Repatriation of Rwandan Refugees was officially launched in May to propose repatriation plans, assist the Government in mobilizing resources and facilitate cooperation among the various partners in the area—measures that should result in stability and harmony in Rwanda and the region as a whole.

The United Nations Rwanda Emergency Office (UNREO) issued frequent reports and analysis for the humanitarian and donor communities so as to ensure a more effective humanitarian response. As emergency relief gave way to rehabilitation, UNREO was closed in October and its functions were integrated into the Resident Coordinator's Office. During the first half of 1995, WFP distributed 28,726 million tons of food aid to a monthly average of 520,000 beneficiaries, including returnees, hospital patients and orphans. Since January, WFP had also been feeding 3,300 refugees from Burundi and 1,700 internally displaced persons. Several World Bank missions visited Rwanda in 1995 with a view to restructuring the project portfolio in place before the 1994 crisis. Eleven development projects were restarted in the areas of education, communications, transport, energy and agricultural services. The total value of the World Bank's project portfolio was $233 million as at 31 July 1995. Of the 95,000 unaccompanied children in Rwanda, more than 7,000 had been reunited with their families since February 1995. More than 1 million children were attending school as a result of efforts by the Government, UNICEF and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in re-establishing primary education. The problem of mines continued to be a concern as people returned and began to till their land. Following a bilateral agreement between Rwanda and the United States, a national demining programme was established in July. The Secretary-General concluded that repatriation, reconciliation and reconstruction were under way at the grass-roots level, and sustained donor support was required to accelerate the process and build needed government capacity. He expressed concern about the tensions between some government ministries and their international partners, including NGOs.

In a December report⁽¹²⁾ to the Security Council, the Secretary-General stated that the humanitarian situation in Rwanda continued to improve, with steady progress in the transition from emergency to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development. During September and October, a total of 32,190 refugees returned to Rwanda. The main deterrents to the return of greater numbers of refugees were the continuing campaign of intimidation and misinformation in the camps, fear of reprisal or imprisonment upon return and the shortage of adequate housing.

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 L.

Situation in Rwanda: international assistance for a solution to the problem of refugees, the restoration of total peace, reconstruction and socio-economic development in Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/211 of 21 December 1993, entitled "Emergency assistance for the socio-economic rehabilitation of Rwanda", and 49/23 of 2 December 1994, entitled "Emergency international assistance for a solution to the problem of refugees, the restoration of total peace, reconstruction and socio-economic development in war-stricken Rwanda",

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1029(1995) of 12 December 1995 concerning the final extension of the mandate of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda and calling upon States and donor agencies to fulfil their earlier commitments to give assistance for Rwanda's rehabilitation efforts, to increase such assistance and in particular to support the early and effective functioning of the International Tribunal for Rwanda and the rehabilitation of the Rwandan judicial system,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 1 December 1995 and of the statement by the President of the Security Council of 17 October 1995 in connection with the consideration by the Council of the item entitled "The situation concerning Rwanda",

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 19 October 1995 on emergency international assistance for a solution to the problem of refugees, the restoration of total peace, reconstruction and socio-economic development in war-stricken Rwanda,

Taking into consideration the serious consequences of genocide and other mass killings and of the destruction of the economic, social, educational and administrative infrastructure,

Expressing its grave concern over the disastrous humanitarian situation of the Rwandan population, including 1.6 million refugees who need to be reintegrated into society and employment, and noting that several categories of refugees are also involved,

Welcoming the summit of Heads of State of the Great Lakes region, held at Cairo on 28 and 29 November 1995, and their declaration of 29 November 1995,^a and noting the United Nations support for all efforts to reduce tension and restore stability in the Great Lakes region, in particular implementation of the Cairo Declaration on the Great Lakes Region and other previously adopted commitments, and for continuing consultations with the aim of convening a conference on security, stability and development in the Great Lakes region, as appropriate,

Emphasizing the need to consider the crisis in Rwanda in a regional context, in view of its implications for the countries of the region, through the implementation of the plan of action recommended by the Government of Rwanda, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Organization of African Unity within the framework of the Peace Agreement between the Government of the Rwandese Republic and the Rwandese Patriotic Front, signed at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 4 August 1993,

Conscious that technical assistance and advisory services will assist the Government of Rwanda in reconstructing the social, legal and economic infrastructure, and that extensive assistance is required for this,

Recognizing that the Arusha Peace Agreement provides an appropriate framework for national reconciliation,

Expressing its gratitude to those States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations which have responded positively and continue to respond positively to the humanitarian and development needs of Rwanda, and to the Secretary-General, who has mobilized and coordinated the distribution of humanitarian assistance,

1. Encourages the Government of Rwanda to pursue its efforts with a view to creating conditions that would be conducive to the return of the refugees to their country and their resettlement and to the recovery by displaced persons of their property in peace, security and dignity;

2. Congratulates the Secretary-General on the efforts he has made to draw the attention of the international community to the humanitarian situation in Rwanda, requests him to provide all possible assistance and encourages him and his Special Representative to continue to coordinate the activities of the United Nations in Rwanda, including those of the organizations and agencies active in the humanitarian and developmental field and of the human rights officers;

3. Welcomes the increased commitments and funds pledged for the Government's Programme of National Reconciliation and Socio-Economic Rehabilitation and Recovery, and calls on the international community to continue to support Rwanda's rehabilitation process and to translate these pledges into urgent concrete assistance;

4. Also welcomes the commitment of the Government of Rwanda to cooperate with and to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of all humanitarian personnel, including personnel of non-governmental organizations, operating in the country;

5. Urges all States, United Nations organizations, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial and development institutions to continue to provide all possible financial, technical and material assistance, bearing in mind that sound economic foundations are vital for achieving lasting stability in Rwanda and for the return and resettlement of Rwandan refugees;

6. Calls upon the international community to continue its assistance with a view to alleviating the intolerable conditions in Rwandan prisons and to expediting the processing of cases, and encourages the Government of Rwanda to continue its efforts to improve the situation in the prisons and to expedite the processing of cases;

7. Welcomes the indictments recently issued by the International Tribunal for Rwanda, calls upon all States to cooperate with the Tribunal, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 955(1994) of 8 November 1994 and 978(1995) of 27 February 1995, by arresting and detaining persons suspected of genocide and other serious violations of international humanitarian law, and encourages the Government of Rwanda to work cooperatively with the Secretary-General and the Tribunal to establish an effective protective force for the Tribunal;

8. Urges all States, in particular donor countries, to contribute generously to the trust fund established by the Secretary-General on 14 July 1994 to finance humanitarian relief and rehabilitation programmes to be implemented in Rwanda;

9. Calls upon all States to act in accordance with the recommendations adopted by the Nairobi Summit of January 1995 and the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, held at Bujumbura in February 1995, and with those contained in the Cairo Declaration, and to continue efforts with regard to the search for peace in the Great Lakes region;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with the Government of Rwanda and with the relevant United Nations agencies on the nature of a continued United Nations presence in Rwanda after 8 March 1996 and on the role such a United Nations presence might play in furthering the search for peace and stability through justice, reconciliation and refugee return and in assisting the Government of Rwanda in its pressing task of rehabilitation and reconstruction, and to report to the General Assembly by 1 February 1996 on the results of those consultations in addition to submitting to the Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to consider at its fifty-first session the question of the situation in Rwanda: international assistance for a solution to the problem of refugees, the restoration of total peace, reconstruction and socio-economic development in Rwanda.

Countries receiving refugees from Rwanda

In 1995, there were some 1.8 million Rwandese refugees still outside the country. By late 1995, their prolonged presence, together with 354,000 Burundese refugees, continued to affect stability and security in the neighbouring countries of the Great Lakes region. The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Persons Affected by the Crisis in Rwanda (see above) requested $576 million to assist Burundi, Rwanda, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zaire through December 1995. The largest sum, $324 million, was requested by WFP, followed by $235 million by UNHCR. The issue of assistance to countries receiving refugees from Rwanda was also discussed at the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region (Bujumbura, Burundi, 15-17 February) (see also PART THREE, Chapter XII). In response to a request made by the Conference for UNDP to hold a round-table donor's meeting for the countries of the region, UNDP and UNHCR jointly undertook the preparations for consultations with donors. UNDP dispatched a preliminary mission to the region, which identified priority needs and gauged the response of the donor community to a call for financial assistance. The mission confirmed the likelihood of an environmental catastrophe in the region, should the current trends continue unabated.

Substantial amounts of food, including targeted food assistance and food-for-work programmes, were provided by WFP to the internally displaced, returnees, orphans, hospital patients and other vulnerable groups. WHO and UNICEF continued to focus on re-establishing the health-care system.

Water programmes were continued, benefiting more than 2.5 million people. In addition to supplying seeds and tools, FAO undertook a seeds multiplication programme and launched actions to enhance disease control and livestock management. As part of efforts to help build a regional capacity to manage the crisis, DHA established in November its Integrated Regional Information Network in Nairobi, Kenya. The Network was to enhance effective coordination of humanitarian assistance, as well as early warning.

Sierra Leone

In 1995, the humanitarian situation in Sierra Leone remained critical. Estimates indicated that the conflict, which began in 1991, had forced nearly 50 per cent of Sierra Leone's population of 4.4 million to flee their homes, 1.6 million being internally displaced and nearly 370,000 seeking refuge in neighbouring countries. Local communities, which had been absorbing some 1.4 million of the internally displaced, were supported by UN agencies and NGOs. However, the relief effort was hindered by the lack of access to affected communities and the lack of security assistance to humanitarian road convoys.

Following a 24 January attack on the town of Kambia and the ensuing abduction of approximately 100 residents, 45,000 refugees from the area sought asylum in Guinea. With this new influx, the total number of Sierra Leonean refugees in Guinea rose to more than 200,000. The security situation led to a withdrawal of UN organizations and their partners to Freetown, although humanitarian activities continued on a limited scale. In March, the United Nations issued an Inter-Agency Appeal to deal with new refugee outflows and populations affected by the humanitarian situation in the country, requesting $14.7 million for the period ending December 1995. Among new and unmet needs identified within Sierra Leone were food aid and nutrition ($5.7 million), health ($2.2 million), and water and sanitation ($562,000). A total of $4.6 million was requested to provide the newly arrived refugees in Guinea with food, shelter, domestic items, water and sanitation as well as emergency health care. In late 1995, DHA established a Humanitarian Assistance Coordination Unit in Freetown. The Unit became active in five areas: establishment of coordination mechanisms and agreements; assessment of humanitarian needs; engaging in humanitarian advocacy; carrying out emergency information dissemination; and supporting the Government's National Relief and Rehabilitation Committee.

Somalia

The Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, in an oral report⁽¹³⁾ to the Economic and Social Council in July, stated that there was a great need to assist in the reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts in Somalia since the humanitarian situation was still fragile and unpredictable. The Council, by decision 1995/314 of 28 July, took note of the report.

During 1995, the target amount requested in the 1994 Appeal⁽¹⁴⁾ for emergency relief and short-term rehabilitation activities for Somalia was increased by $22.8 million, to reflect the full UNHCR and UNICEF requirements for the period January to December 1995.

Security Council consideration. In a 28 March report⁽¹⁵⁾ to the Security Council, the Secretary-General assessed, among other things, what had been achieved by UN humanitarian activities in Somalia since 1991. He stated that the experience of the United Nations Operation in Somalia (UNOSOM II) had demonstrated the vital link between humanitarian assistance and efforts to achieve national reconciliation, and that UN agencies and NGOs would continue humanitarian operations in Somalia after the withdrawal of UNOSOM II at the end of March. In a 6 April statement made on behalf of the Council,⁽¹⁶⁾ the President said that it was important to sustain UN humanitarian activities in Somalia, but their success would depend on the degree of cooperation and security offered by the Somali parties.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1995 report⁽¹⁸⁾ on assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia. The report described relief and rehabilitation programmes provided by the UN system, and the impact of security problems on the ability of the UN and NGOs to deliver humanitarian relief; it also summarized information received from Member States on assistance to Somalia.

Food aid requirements for 1995/96 were estimated at 129,500 tons, of which 77,500 tons had previously been pledged. In 1994/95, WFP helped Somalia generate over $5 million through the sale of high-value food commodities not produced in the country. These funds were used to provide non-food inputs to 240 rehabilitation projects, creating about 4,000 jobs. In January, a Food Security Assessment Unit was established to monitor weather conditions, food production, market prices, consumption and food availability trends, as well as the nutritional and health status of populations throughout Somalia. Cholera, which resurfaced in February, was rapidly contained by WHO, UNICEF, WFP and UNESCO. WHO provided more than 54 tons of treatment drugs and other supplies. Between September 1994 and July 1995, more than 95,000 children were immunized against measles, 125,000 against tuberculosis and another 143,000 against four other preventable diseases. More than 106,000 women of child-bearing age were vaccinated against tetanus.

There were still some 457,000 Somalis living as refugees in neighbouring countries and 300,000 to 400,000 internally displaced persons country-wide. UNESCO and UNHCR continued to implement a mine-awareness programme in 36 towns and villages.

As a result of a review of the criteria for continuing their rehabilitation and development assistance, the Somalia Aid Coordination Body—composed of donors, UN agencies and international organizations—adopted a Code of Conduct for International Rehabilitation and Development Assistance to Somalia. Coordination of relief and rehabilitation activities by UN agencies and their partners was carried out by the UN Coordination Team, which had been established in October 1994 in anticipation of UNOSOM II's withdrawal in March 1995. While the political and security situation in Mogadishu had not stabilized sufficiently to allow the return of UN staff on a permanent basis, most parts of the country remained stable enough for relief and rehabilitation activities to continue.

Finally, the Secretary-General said that, following the departure of UNOSOM II, eight organizations of the UN system had maintained, and in some cases expanded, their activities and, in addition, some 40 international NGOs maintained a presence in the country. He asked donors to support generously efforts to assist the Somali people.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 G.

Assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/206 of 20 December 1988, 44/178 of 19 December 1989, 45/229 of 21 December 1990, 46/176 of 19 December 1991, 47/160 of 18 December 1992, 48/201 of 21 December 1993 and 49/21 L of 20 December 1994 and the resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council on emergency assistance to Somalia,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in which the Council, inter alia, urged all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia and reiterated the call for the full respect of the security and safety of the personnel of those organizations and the guarantee of their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia,

Recalling in particular Security Council resolution 954(1994) of 4 November 1994, in which the Council, inter alia, decided to withdraw all the forces of the United Nations Operation in Somalia II before 31 March 1995 and expressed its confidence in the willingness of the United Nations to remain ready to provide, through its various agencies, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance,

Taking note of the presidential statement of 6 April 1995, in which the Security Council, inter alia, noted the successful conclusion of the withdrawal from Somalia of the forces of the United Nations Operation in Somalia II and welcomed the willingness expressed by the international humanitarian agencies and the non-governmental organizations to continue to provide rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance in areas where security is guaranteed by the Somalis,

Noting the cooperation between the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries of the Horn of Africa and the States members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries in their efforts to resolve the humanitarian, security and political crisis in Somalia,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts made by the Secretary-General to assist the Somali people in their efforts to promote peace, stability and national reconciliation,

Noting with concern that the political instability and the absence of central authority that continue to characterize Somalia provide a breeding ground for new emergencies,

Reaffirming the importance it attaches to the need for effective coordination and cooperation among the United Nations agencies and their partners since the withdrawal of the United Nations Operation in Somalia in March 1995,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 19 September 1995 on assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation support rendered by a number of States to alleviate the hardship and suffering of the affected Somali population,

Noting with appreciation that, following the departure of the United Nations Operation in Somalia and despite the ongoing difficulties, the country is slowly moving towards recovery and reconstruction,

Recognizing that, while the humanitarian situation remains fragile, there is a need to undertake efforts to begin the process of rehabilitation and reconstruction alongside the process of national reconciliation, without prejudice to the provision of emergency relief assistance wherever and whenever required, as the security situation allows,

Re-emphasizing the importance of the further implementation of its resolution 47/160 to rehabilitate basic social and economic services at local and regional levels throughout the country,

1. Expresses its gratitude to all States and the inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded to the appeals of the Secretary-General and others by extending assistance to Somalia;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued and tireless efforts to mobilize assistance to the Somali people;

3. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries of the Horn of Africa and the States members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to resolve the situation in Somalia;

4. Also welcomes the current strategy of the United Nations focusing on the implementation of community-based interventions aimed at rebuilding local infrastructures and increasing the self-reliance of the local population, as well as the ongoing efforts by the United Nations agencies and their partner organizations to establish and maintain close coordination and cooperation mechanisms for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction in the period following the departure of the United Nations Operation in Somalia;

5. Urges all States and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue the further implementation of resolution 47/160 in order to assist the Somali people in embarking on the rehabilitation of basic social and economic services as well as institution-building aimed at the restoration of civil administration at the local level in all those parts of the country where peace, security and stability prevail;

6. Appeals to all the Somali parties concerned to terminate hostilities and to engage in a national reconciliation process that will allow for the transition from relief to reconstruction and development;

7. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations and its specialized agencies and of non-governmental organizations and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement throughout Somalia;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation in Somalia, to take all measures necessary for the implementation of the present resolution, to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1996 of the progress made and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

Sudan

In 1995, armed conflict between the Government of the Sudan and the rebel factions continued. The delivery of humanitarian assistance was hindered by hostage-taking of relief workers, misappropriation of relief supplies, frequent evacuation of relief workers due to security reasons, and restrictions imposed on flight operations.

In January, the United Nations launched the Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Sudan, seeking $101.1 million for the remainder of the year. The Appeal was for activities in the areas of emergency food aid ($26.4 million); nutrition, health and water ($35.4 million); refugees and returnees ($15.6 million); agriculture, livestock and fishing ($11 million); other relief activities ($9.1 million); and inter-agency coordination and support ($3.5 million). The emergency food aid targeted an estimated 1.2 million war-affected and displaced persons in the south, the transitional zone and Khartoum, while the non-food programmes targeted 4.25 million accessible war-affected persons.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September report⁽¹⁹⁾ on emergency assistance to the Sudan, submitted in response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General provided an update on the humanitarian situation in the Sudan and on the emergency response provided through the UN system, notably Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS). Despite interruptions caused by widespread insecurity, loss of flight access to some key locations and a complex working relationship with parties to the conflict, OLS continued to maintain basic access to the majority of the populations in need, and the number of locations served by OLS increased from eight in 1989 to more than 100.

As a result of the record harvest year of 1994, only 109,409 tonnes of emergency food aid was required for 1995, compared with 487,000 tonnes for 1994. Carry-over relief food stocks of 149,134 tonnes were sufficient to cover 1995 emergency food aid needs except supplies of supplementary foods. From January to mid-June, WFP distributed about 8,500 tonnes of food.

UNICEF, the main provider of non-food assistance for the Sudan, targeted 4.25 million people, 2.5 million from its operations in Khartoum and 1.7 million from Nairobi. Together with ICRC and NGOs, UNICEF distributed more than 3,600 tonnes of seeds and more than 1 million hand tools to an estimated 300,000 households in time for the 1995 growing season; however, low rainfall levels led to crop failure in the eastern and western parts of the country. Under the livestock programme, 242,000 cattle had been vaccinated against rinderpest as at mid-1995 and training of vaccinators was being expanded. In the health sector, Guinea-worm disease eradication, an expanded programme of immunization and barge-based health activities received priority attention.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that OLS, which had begun in 1989 as a short-term programme to deliver life-saving provisions, had evolved to undertake a much broader range of activities, such as household food security, water and sanitation, basic shelter, food-for-work in support of agricultural production, and capacity-building. While cooperation among national, UN and non-governmental organizations remained excellent, the rash of kidnapping and the misappropriation of relief supplies had negatively affected humanitarian operations in the Sudan. The Secretary-General said that concerned parties should desist from actions that would prevent humanitarian aid from reaching people in need.

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 J.

Emergency assistance to the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/8 of 18 October 1988, 43/52 of 6 December 1988, 44/12 of 24 October 1989, 45/226 of 21 December 1990, 46/178 of 19 December 1991, 47/162 of 18 December 1992, 48/200 of 21 December 1993 and 49/21 K of 20 December 1994 on assistance to the Sudan,

Noting that, despite the progress made in Operation Lifeline Sudan, considerable relief needs still remain to be addressed, particularly in the areas of non-food assistance, including assistance to combat malaria and for logistics, emergency recovery, rehabilitation and development,

Taking note of the ongoing review of Operation Lifeline Sudan, intended to assess the effectiveness and efficiency of the operation since its launching in 1989,

Recognizing the need in emergency situations to address the continuum of relief, rehabilitation and development so as to reduce dependence on external food aid and other relief services,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 September 1995 on emergency assistance to the Sudan and of the statement made by the representative of the Sudan before the General Assembly on 27 November 1995,

1. Acknowledges the cooperation by the Government of the Sudan with the United Nations, including the agreements and arrangements achieved to facilitate relief operations through improvement of United Nations assistance to affected areas, and encourages the Government of the Sudan to continue its cooperation in this regard;

2. Stresses the need for the ongoing review of Operation Lifeline Sudan to assess the effectiveness and the efficiency of the operation, as well as its transparency, and for the involvement of the Government of the Sudan in its operation;

3. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to the emergency needs, recovery and development of the country;

4. Calls upon the donor community and the United Nations system to provide financial, technical and medical assistance, guided by the actions called for by the General Assembly, in its relevant resolutions, to combat malaria in the Sudan;

5. Appeals to all parties concerned to continue to pursue dialogue and negotiations and to terminate hostilities so as to allow for the re-establishment of peace, order and stability, and also to facilitate relief efforts;

6. Stresses the importance of assuring safe access for personnel providing relief assistance to all in need;

7. Urges all parties involved to continue to offer all feasible assistance, including facilitating the movement of relief supplies and personnel, so as to guarantee maximum success of Operation Lifeline Sudan in all parts of the country;

8. Stresses also that Operation Lifeline Sudan should operate within the principle of national sovereignty and the framework of international cooperation in accordance with relevant international law;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize and coordinate resources and support for Operation Lifeline Sudan, to assess the emergency situation in the country and to report thereon, as well as on the recovery and rehabilitation of the country, to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

Afghanistan

In response to the October 1994 UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan for the period up to September 1995,⁽²¹⁾ which had sought $106.4 million, the international community contributed or pledged $79.3 million as at 1 October 1995. A new Appeal was launched in October, seeking $124 million for the period October 1995 to September 1996. The largest sum was requested by UNHCR ($35 million), followed by the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Assistance to Afghanistan (UNOCHA) ($23.5 million). The components of the Appeal included assistance to internally displaced persons, mine clearance, voluntary repatriation, food aid, agriculture, health, water and sanitation, emergency rehabilitation of physical infrastructure, social programmes and coordination.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽²³⁾ in November 1995 on emergency assistance to Afghanistan. He provided an update on the political situation, including the work undertaken by the UN special mission to Afghanistan (see PART TWO, Chapter IV), and described rehabilitation and development activities carried out and emergency humanitarian assistance provided.

During 1995, UNOCHA continued to coordinate humanitarian programmes under the direction of the UN Coordinator for the Emergency Humanitarian Programme for Afghanistan. Since April, 150,000 internally displaced persons and refugees had returned to Kabul. With the complete lifting of the economic blockade in March, humanitarian activities were substantially expanded. From January to June 1995, WFP distributed 53,200 tons of food aid: 35 per cent was for rehabilitation activities, 35 per cent for the internally displaced and refugees, and 29 per cent for food-for-work-based rehabilitation programming. During an immunization campaign, nearly 2.4 million children under five years old were immunized against polio, and more than 800,000 under two against measles. More than 700,000 women of child-bearing age were immunized against tetanus. UNICEF established 46 mini-health centres and supported the repair of wells.

The UNOCHA mine-clearance programme had identified 490 square kilometres of mined areas in Afghanistan. Of the 128 square kilometres categorized as high-priority areas, it had cleared 89 square kilometres. Of $18 million requested for the programme in the October 1994 Consolidated Appeal, $17.4 million had been made available as at 30 September 1995.

In 1995, UN operational activities for rehabilitation and development focused on rural infrastructure, food production, health improvement, animal health services, rehabilitation of disabled people and human settlements. Rural economic production was being rehabilitated through projects in irrigation systems and flood protection. In the urban areas, with funding from UNDP, the UN Centre for Human Settlements assisted 10,000 families in rebuilding their houses and supplied 280 shallow-well pumps to bring safer water to 13,800 urban families. The UN Office for Project Services, also with UNDP funding, trained 65,000 disabled Afghans, leading to their reintegration into community life. WFP supported the rehabilitation of schools, vocational training and income-generating projects, reaching more than 3,000 youth, women and orphans.

A briefing of donors (Stockholm, Sweden, 1-2 June), attended by 20 organizations of the UN system and 24 NGOs, updated the donor community on the work of the UN system in Afghanistan and its potential to serve as a vehicle for intensified donor assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/88 A.

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/119 of 18 December 1992, 48/208 of 21 December 1993 and 49/140 of 20 December 1994 concerning emergency international assistance for the reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 8 November 1995,

Concerned about the renewal of armed conflict and the attendant displacement of families and interruptions in the process of repatriating refugees,

Deeply concerned about the massive loss of human life, the aggravated suffering of the most vulnerable groups, the destruction of property and the serious damage to the economic and social infrastructure of Afghanistan caused by sixteen years of war, and stressing the importance of a return to peace and stability for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Afghanistan, bearing in mind that the country continues to suffer from an extremely critical economic situation as a land-locked, least developed and war-stricken country,

Welcoming the efforts of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan headed by Mahmoud Mestiri to bring about the restoration of peace, normalcy and national reconciliation and the reconstruction and rehabilitation of war-stricken Afghanistan,

Deeply concerned also about the problem of millions of anti-personnel land-mines and unexploded ordnance in Afghanistan which continue to prevent many Afghan refugees from returning to their villages and working in their fields, and disturbed by reports of new mines being laid,

Concerned for the well-being of the unarmed civilian population of Afghanistan, in particular of Kabul, who face a long winter possibly deprived of basic foods, fuel and medicine owing to a renewal of hostilities around the capital,

Bearing in mind the close interrelationship between ensuring peace and normalcy in Afghanistan and the ability of the country to take effective steps towards revitalizing the economy, and stressing that a cessation of armed hostilities between the warring parties in Afghanistan is indispensable if reconstruction measures are to have a lasting effect,

Affirming the urgent need to continue international action to assist Afghanistan in restoring basic services and the infrastructure of the country, and welcoming the efforts of the United Nations Development Programme and other United Nations agencies in this respect,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in its continuing support for the repatriation of Afghan refugees from neighbouring countries,

Reaffirming the principle of non-refoulement as contained in article 33 of the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees,

Expressing its gratitude to all Governments that have rendered assistance to Afghan refugees, in particular the Governments of Pakistan and the Islamic Republic of Iran, and recognizing the need for continuing international assistance for the maintenance abroad and the voluntary repatriation and resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Expressing its appreciation to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded positively and continue to respond to the humanitarian needs of Afghanistan, as well as to the Secretary-General for his efforts to draw the attention of the international community to the acute problems of reconstruction in Afghanistan and for mobilizing and coordinating the delivery of appropriate humanitarian assistance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and endorses the observations and recommendations set out therein;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to authorize the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan, established under resolution 48/208, to continue its efforts to facilitate national reconciliation and reconstruction in Afghanistan;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue efforts to develop plans for national reconstruction and rehabilitation beginning in areas of peace and security, on the basis of the recommendations set out in his report;

4. Calls upon all Afghan parties not to hinder in any way efforts by the United Nations and associated organizations to transport and distribute emergency humanitarian assistance to the Afghan population, particularly to the city of Kabul, and urges them to ensure full freedom of movement for the United Nations Special Mission;

5. Urgently appeals to all States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide, on a priority basis and as far as conditions on the ground permit, all possible financial, technical and material assistance for the restoration of the basic services and the reconstruction of Afghanistan and the voluntary, safe and secure return of refugees and internally displaced persons, and appeals to the international financial and development institutions to assist in the planning of the reconstruction of Afghanistan;

6. Calls upon the international community to respond to the inter-agency consolidated appeal for emergency humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance for Afghanistan launched by the Secretary-General for the period from 1 October 1995 to 30 September 1996, bearing in mind the availability also of the Afghanistan Emergency Trust Fund;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the actions taken pursuant to the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session, under the cluster of items on coordination of humanitarian assistance, the item entitled "Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan".

Iraq

Since the Gulf crisis in 1990, the humanitarian situation in Iraq had been steadily deteriorating, more so in 1995. In addition to 2 million people in dire need of humanitarian aid, there were over half a million internally displaced persons and some 116,000 refugees in Iraq. Despite the increased need for humanitarian assistance, response to the April 1994 Appeal for the Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme in Iraq⁽²⁴⁾ had been inadequate, with approximately 50 per cent of overall programme requirements met.

In March 1995, a new Consolidated Appeal for Iraq, covering the period April 1995 to March 1996, was launched. Seeking $183.3 million, the Appeal addressed only the most essential needs to sustain relief and rehabilitation activities as well as to prevent a further deterioration of the conditions affecting the most vulnerable population groups throughout the country. The largest sum of $60.1 million was requested for food assistance and nutrition, followed by $25 million each for agricultural assistance and rehabilitation, and basic health and water and sanitation. The total budget requirement was later revised to $169 million.

With regard to food aid, in addition to a case-load of 1 million beneficiaries identified in the 1995/96 Appeal, WFP added some 30,000 destitute persons and 1.1 million people in families with malnourished children under five years old, as well as pregnant women and nursing mothers. Approximately 23 per cent of children under five suffered from malnutrition and constituted 39 per cent of the monthly deaths of about 11,000.

Security Council action. On 14 April, by resolution 986(1995), the Security Council, concerned by the serious nutritional and health situation of the Iraqi population and by the risk of a further deterioration in that situation, authorized States, under certain conditions, to import petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq, up to a total of $1 billion, to meet humanitarian needs and to cover various Iraq-related programmes mandated by the Council.

Lebanon

In response to a 1994 Economic and Social Council request,⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General, in May 1995, reported⁽²⁶⁾ on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon. The report summarized developments with regard to the Government, the economy and reconstruction efforts. It also described the role and activities of UN organizations active in Lebanon.

Economic performance continued to be strong, and financial indicators, such as the exchange rate of the Lebanese pound to the United States dollar and interest rates, were generally positive in 1995. Annual inflation was between 11 and 13 per cent, and gross domestic product (GDP) increased by 7 per cent. At the end of the year, more than 20,000 families had regained their villages of origin and, with $27 million disbursed, 13,800 housing units had been repaired and 3,160 units reconstructed. Under the framework of the 10-year National Emergency Recovery Programme (1993-2002),⁽²⁷⁾ the rehabilitation work accelerated in many sectors during 1995. By the end of August, construction and supply contracts, amounting to $2.6 billion, had been approved; of that amount, $440 million had been disbursed. The sectoral distribution of contracts authorized by the Council for Development and Reconstruction, a national coordination agency, went to basic infrastructure (64.3 per cent); airport and ports (16 per cent); social infrastructure (8.1 per cent); public services (6.6 per cent); and public buildings and institutions (5 per cent). Total secured foreign financing for the recovery amounted to $2.5 billion at the end of August.

On 31 March, the Office of the Coordinator of UN Assistance for Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon was closed and its role and functions were transferred to the UNDP Resident Coordinator. In May, the Resident Coordinator organized a workshop for the UN system, the Government and other development partners to discuss their respective roles and to identify priority support by the UN system. Under the programme of operational activities for development of UN system organizations, a total of $17 million was disbursed in 1995. Technical assistance grants and loan disbursements by the World Bank were not included in that figure. UNDP disbursed $4.7 million, which was distributed among social reconstruction ($1.9 million), balanced economic development ($1.2 million), and public administration ($0.9 million). In addition, WFP provided $3.3 million worth of food assistance; UNICEF, $2.3 million for primary health care, basic education and water quality; and the UN International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), $1.8 million for demand reduction and integrated development of areas that had been involved with illicit crop production. The World Bank committed $55 million for solid waste/environmental management and $20 million for administrative rehabilitation. The first phase of the Baalbeck-Hermel Integrated Rural Development Programme established an operational mechanism to provide urgent support to farmers and began work on crop replacement. UNDP, in close collaboration with UNDCP, formulated the second phase, and a donor meeting on the Programme (Paris, 20 June) was convened by the Government of France.

The Secretary-General noted in his conclusions that the UN system was called upon increasingly to focus its activities on core areas; to adopt a programme approach for operational activities for development; to collaborate planning and implementation of activities; and to undertake high-profile support of priority themes. He stated that more resources were required for capacity-building, urgent rehabilitation of south Lebanon, the Baalbeck-Hermel Programme and social reconstruction programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/42.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly decision 48/450 of 21 December 1993,

Also recalling its resolutions in which it called upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to expand and intensify their programmes of assistance in response to the urgent needs of Lebanon,

Reaffirming its resolution 1994/35 of 29 July 1994,

Aware of the magnitude of the requirements of Lebanon resulting from the extensive destruction of its infrastructure, which is impeding national rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts and adversely affecting economic and social conditions,

Reaffirming the pressing need to continue to assist the Government of Lebanon in the reconstruction of the country and the recovery of its human and economic potential,

Expressing its appreciation of the efforts of the Secretary-General in mobilizing assistance for Lebanon,

1. Appeals to all Member States and all organizations of the United Nations system to intensify their efforts to mobilize all possible assistance for the Government of Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts;

2. Calls upon all organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to intensify their assistance in response to the urgent needs of Lebanon, especially in the technical and training fields;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council at its substantive session of 1996 of the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Americas

Central America

In response to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October 1995 report⁽²⁹⁾ on international assistance to and cooperation with the 1994 Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America,⁽³⁰⁾ a comprehensive regional initiative in the political, moral, economic, social and ecological fields. The report described economic developments in the countries of the region, including Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama, and discussed the cooperation activities undertaken by UNDP.

Based on priorities and undertakings established by the Presidents of Central America at their recent summit meetings and commitments made at the 1989 International Conference on Central American Refugees, UNDP prepared a new programme in support of the Alliance, focusing on peace and governability; economic and social development; and sustainable development of the environment. Under the peace and governability programme, UNDP's support included a consensus-building forum, strengthening NGOs, restructuring of democratic institutions, and economic and social reintegration of former combatants. In the area of sustainable human development, national coordination and support groups were established in Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador and Nicaragua to focus on populations affected by uprootedness, conflicts and extreme poverty. The Programme for Displaced Persons, Refugees and Returnees in Central America wound up its operations on 31 July; it consisted of six national and two regional projects, with total funding of $148 million. At the request of the Governments of Central America, UNDP was taking steps to launch a new initiative on social development. The agricultural development project, under the leadership of the World Bank, assisted countries in their policies and programmes of agricultural modernization and institutional and rural-sectoral reform, while the poverty alleviation project dealt with the social sector, especially basic education, health, nutrition and increased funding for social investment. With regard to the environment and sustainable development of natural resources, UNDP support was provided in the areas of forestry development, conservation of biodiversity and the protection of wilderness areas.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 B.

International assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions on the importance of international economic, financial and technical cooperation and assistance during the transition period, a process of peace-keeping and post-conflict peace-building, in particular its resolutions 49/137 and 49/21 I of 19 and 20 December 1994, respectively, which emphasize the compelling need to design a new programme for international economic, financial and technical cooperation and assistance for Central America geared to the new circumstances in the region and based on the priorities established by the Governments of the region,

Recalling its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993 and 49/215 A of 23 December 1994 on assistance in mine clearance, and recognizing with concern that the presence of mines and other unexploded devices on Central American territory has social, economic and humanitarian consequences that constitute an obstacle to the restoration of normal conditions for development throughout the region,

Recalling also the efforts and aspirations of the peoples and Governments of the isthmus to make Central America a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development,

Recognizing the valuable and effective contribution made by the United Nations, and by the various governmental and non-governmental mechanisms, towards enabling the Central American peoples fully to achieve their objectives of peace, freedom, democracy and development, and the importance of the political dialogue and economic cooperation taking place within the ministerial conference between the European Union and the Central American countries and the joint initiative of the industrialized countries of the Group of Twenty-four and the countries of the Group of Three as cooperating countries, through the Association for Democracy and Development in Central America and other institutions,

Taking note with satisfaction of the very important results achieved by the Programme for Displaced Persons, Refugees and Returnees in Central America (PRODERE) for sustainable social and economic development in Central America, and stressing the relevance of the contribution made by the Programme to the peace process in the region,

Also taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, which describes the international cooperation activities implemented since January 1995 in support of the new regional development programme, following the conclusion of the Special Plan of Economic Cooperation for Central America,

Recognizing the validity of the Declaration of Commitments in favour of populations affected both by uprootedness and by conflicts and extreme poverty, adopted at Mexico City on 29 June 1994, as well as the functions of lead agency assumed by the United Nations Development Programme, in replacement of the mandate previously carried out by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which are concentrated in priority social spheres,

Recognizing also that, notwithstanding the progress made, it is necessary to continue monitoring the situation in Central America until the underlying structural causes that gave rise to the deep crisis into which the region was plunged have been overcome, and to avoid set-backs in the process and consolidate a firm and lasting peace in Central America,

Recognizing further the importance and validity of the commitments assumed by the Central American Presidents from the Esquipulas II summit meeting of 7 August 1987 to the present, in particular at the fifteenth summit meeting held at Guácimo, Costa Rica, from 18 to 20 August 1994, the Central American Environment Summit for Sustainable Development held at Managua on 12 and 13 October 1994, the International Conference on Peace and Development in Central America held at Tegucigalpa on 24 and 25 October 1994 and the sixteenth summit meeting of Central American Presidents held in El Salvador in March 1995, at which the priorities of the subregion were set which constitute the framework for the new programme of international assistance and cooperation for Central America,

Underlining the establishment of the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, which constitutes the new comprehensive strategy for national and regional development and defines political, economic, social and environmental priorities, and the signing, at the El Salvador summit meeting on 30 March 1995, of the Treaty on Central American Social Integration,^a one of the main objectives of which is to increase investment in human capital, and taking into account that the Central American Integration System is the institutional framework that makes it possible to promote integral development in an effective, orderly and coherent manner,

Taking into consideration the will of the Central American Presidents to adopt a national and regional strategy entitled "Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America" as a comprehensive initiative in the political, moral, economic, social and ecological fields, which includes a redefining of the relations of Central America with the international community and is aimed at improving the well-being of the peoples of the subregion,

1. Emphasizes the importance of supporting and strengthening the new programme for international economic, financial and technical cooperation and assistance for Central America geared to the new circumstances in the region and based on the priorities laid down in the Declaration of Commitments adopted by the Follow-up Committee of the International Conference on Central American Refugees and in the new subregional development strategy, the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America;

2. Notes with satisfaction the efforts and achievements relating to mine clearance in Central America, and appeals to the organs of the United Nations system and to the international community, and in particular to the Secretary-General, to provide the material, technical and financial support needed by the Central American Governments to complete mine-clearance activities in the region, including those activities among the priorities of the new programme of international assistance to and cooperation with Central America, so as to create improved conditions for promoting the process of reconstruction and sustainable development and, hence, lasting and permanent peace in the region;

3. Supports the efforts of the Central American countries in their commitments to the alleviation of extreme poverty and the fostering of sustainable human development, and urges their Governments to continue their efforts to formulate and implement policies and programmes, especially those of a social and environmental character and those relating to investment in human capital;

4. Stresses the importance of international economic, financial and technical cooperation and assistance, both bilateral and multilateral, in supporting the efforts of the Central American Governments to implement the new programme for the sustainable development of Central America;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, the United Nations system and, in particular, the United Nations Development Programme, to continue their efforts to mobilize resources in order to put into effect the new strategy for integral development in Central America contained in the Alliance for Sustainable Development and in the Declaration of Commitments, through arrangements that the Central American countries are to determine jointly with the cooperating community;

6. Urges all States, intergovernmental organizations, international financial institutions, the organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system and regional and subregional organizations to continue the necessary support for the implementation of the goals and objectives of the new strategy for integral development in Central America;

^a A/49/901-S/1995/396.

7. Again stresses the urgent need for the international community to maintain its cooperation with the Central American countries and to provide them with the necessary financial resources, in a sustained manner and on soft terms, where appropriate, with a view to promoting effectively the economic growth and development of the region;

8. Supports the decision of the Central American Governments to concentrate their efforts on the implementation of updated programmes with strategies for sustainable human development in previously determined priority areas, which help to consolidate peace and remedy social inequalities, extreme poverty and the social explosion;

9. Reiterates that only by solving the political, economic, social and environmental problems that are the cause of tensions and conflicts in society will it be possible to avoid a reversal of the achievements and guarantee a firm and lasting peace in Central America;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to consider at its fifty-second session the question of international assistance to and cooperation with the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America.

El Salvador

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽³²⁾ in October 1995 on assistance for the reconstruction and development of El Salvador. The report outlined the economic situation in 1994, the economic outlook for 1995-1996, and the Government's economic and social development plan for 1995-1999. It examined the obstacles to, prospects for, and advances made in reconstruction and the strengthening of democratic institutions. Annexed to the report was a progress report on the implementation, in 1994-1995, of the principal programmes and projects related to national reconstruction.

The economic and social reintegration of former combatants in rural areas continued to be among the more complex items on the agenda of the peace agreements because of difficulties in resolving some of the underlying issues, such as poverty alleviation, expansion of employment and social integration. The land transfer programme, considered the cornerstone of rural integration efforts, was plagued with delays, with only 71.7 per cent of the total transfer process completed by mid-September. Agricultural training, housing and latrine facilities were provided by UNDP to support former combatants who were beneficiaries of the land transfer process. The support provided to those former combatants who opted for urban reintegration had been channelled largely through training programmes in the industrial and services sector, in the form of administrative/entrepreneurial and technical/vocational training, and through a scholarship programme. The wounded and disabled had been receiving pensions and the relevant compensation from the Fund for the Protection of the Wounded and War-Disabled as a Consequence of the Armed Conflict, established by the Government of El Salvador in 1992.

Under the Government's National Reconstruction Plan, over 2,500 infrastructure projects were implemented from January 1992 to July 1995 at a cost of $68 million, generating over 16,000 jobs. The projects were in the areas of access roads, schools, health, water-supply and sewerage systems, municipal buildings, electrification, and community housing. In 1995, $40.3 million had been budgeted to finance projects for former combatants, the basic infrastructure programme, and support for NGOs, micro-enterprises and agriculture. Through an agricultural development project, financed by the International Fund for Agricultural Development, UNDP and the Central American Bank for Economic Integration, technical assistance and credit were provided to small farmers. Thirty "model farms" had been set up and were being run by lead families, who, in 1995, trained farmers in environmental protection, women's equal participation, agricultural diversification and management capacity-building for the marketing of agricultural products. WFP supported the project through the modality of food-for-work in the areas of soil conservation and upgrading housing and roads.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 C.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Security Council resolutions relating to the peace process in El Salvador, and reaffirming its resolutions 47/158 of 18 December 1992, 48/203 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 J of 20 December 1994 and 50/7 of 31 October 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 23 October 1995 on assistance for the reconstruction and development of El Salvador and of 6 October 1995 on the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador,^a

Noting with satisfaction the renewed expression by the Government of El Salvador and all the political forces involved in the peace process of their political will to implement the remaining commitments under the Chapultepec Agreement, and the efforts to develop programmes and projects of social benefit aimed at the maintenance and consolidation of peace, democratization and sustainable development,

^a A/50/517.

Noting that, in spite of national efforts and the support given by the international community to the implementation of the priority programmes in fulfilment of the Peace Agreement, including the strengthening of democratic institutions, the national reconstruction plan and the economic and social development plan, the implementation of certain programmes and projects basic to the process has continued to be affected by, inter alia, the limited availability and the reduction of financial resources in support of the consolidation of peace,

Recognizing that El Salvador is at a complex stage in the process of consolidating peace, which calls not only for the implementation of the remaining commitments under the Peace Agreement but also for a new approach involving the implementation and consolidation of medium-term and long-term national development programmes and strategies aimed at resolving the structural problems that are the cause of tension and social instability, and emphasizing the importance and necessity of international technical and financial assistance, both bilateral and multilateral, for the development of those programmes in support of national efforts to achieve the objective of a firm and lasting peace,

Taking into account the need to ensure the continuity of the process of democratization and national reconciliation, to complete national reconstruction and to promote sustainable development, as well as the need to strengthen the national machinery which will monitor the consolidation of the peace process before the completion of the mandate of the Mission of the United Nations in El Salvador,

1. Again expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and his representatives for their effective and timely participation, to the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General, Colombia, Mexico, Spain and Venezuela, and to the United States of America and other interested States for their contribution to the consolidation of the peace process, democratization and the promotion of economic and social development in El Salvador;

2. Again expresses its gratitude to the international community, especially the cooperating community, to the specialized agencies of the United Nations system and to international development and financing institutions, both governmental and non-governmental, for the technical and financial assistance they have provided to El Salvador to complement the effort to consolidate peace and to bring about democracy, reconstruction and national development;

3. Reaffirms that the implementation of the remaining commitments of the Peace Agreement, the continuation of programmes of national reconstruction, the strengthening of democratic institutions and the promotion of sustainable development constitute the collective goals, aspirations and needs of the country in overcoming the root causes of the crisis and consolidating peace, democracy and human development;

4. Urges the Government of El Salvador and all the political forces involved in the peace process to make every effort to finish complying with the remaining commitments of the Peace Agreement and to continue to develop medium-term and long-term national programmes and strategies, particularly social welfare projects, designed to improve the lives of the most vulnerable segments of the population;

5. Encourages the international community, in particular the donor community and international institutions of the United Nations system active in the field of development, cooperation and financing, to continue to contribute to the consolidation of peace in El Salvador by responding flexibly and generously with sufficient resources in support of the efforts of the Government of El Salvador effectively to promote and achieve the aspirations and objectives of the people of El Salvador, in accordance with the spirit of the Peace Agreement;

6. Again invites the international financial organizations to work with the Government of El Salvador in considering measures to harmonize the economic adjustment and stabilization programmes with the priority programmes of the national reconstruction plan and the economic and social development plan targeting the population affected by the conflict and the most vulnerable segments of Salvadoran society;

7. Again requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures and make every possible effort to mobilize the material and financial resources needed to meet the requirements of the priority programmes in El Salvador that are critical to the successful outcome and consolidation of the peace process;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution, and decides to consider at that session the question of assistance for the reconstruction and development of El Salvador.

Nicaragua

Since the internationally monitored presidential election in 1990, Nicaragua had made substantial achievements in reconciliation, macroeconomic stabilization, the consolidation of democracy and the organization of civil society, but deterioration of the social situation was becoming the main obstacle to the Nicaraguan transition, the Secretary-General stated in an October report⁽³³⁾ on international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua in the aftermath of war and natural disasters. The report, submitted in response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁴⁾ described the activities of the UN system in Nicaragua during 1994-1995.

In 1995, Nicaragua, for the first time, had no politically motivated armed groups and constitutional reform was promulgated in July. The complex issue of property was dealt with at the Conference on Property in Nicaragua (4-5 July) and agreements were reached on, among others, security for occupants of small rural and urban properties; speedy and fair compensation for victims of confiscation; and the need for occupants of large urban properties to pay to receive titles. Subsequently, a joint committee, bringing together members of the Government, the legislative Assembly, victims of confiscation, beneficiaries and agricultural associations, was established to follow up on the agreements. UNDP served as the secretariat of the joint committee.

Various UN agencies, in particular UNDP, continued to provide support to Nicaragua. UNDP assisted in the organization and transformation of the Government, the rule of law and State reform, education and culture, economic reactivation, community participation and improvement of living conditions, and sustainable development and environmental conservation. The Development Programme for Disabled Persons, Refugees and Returnees in Central America, implemented by UNDP in the former conflict zone, completed its operations in June.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/85.

International assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua: aftermath of the war and natural disasters

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/15 of 20 November 1990, 46/109 A and B of 17 December 1991, 47/118 of 18 December 1992, 48/161 of 20 December 1993 and 49/137 of 19 December 1994 concerning the situation in Central America,

Recalling also its resolutions 47/169 of 22 December 1992, 48/8 of 22 October 1993 and 49/16 of 17 November 1994 concerning the item entitled "International assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua: aftermath of the war and natural disasters", in which it requested the international community to continue providing support to Nicaragua, taking into account the exceptional circumstances faced by that country, and requested the Secretary-General, in coordination with the Nicaraguan authorities, to provide the assistance necessary in the process of consolidation of peace,

Deeply concerned at the fact that the recent natural disasters that have occurred in Nicaragua, the burden of the foreign debt, despite its reduction and renegotiation achieved with the collaboration of the international community, and the harmful effects on its economy of the prolonged periods of drought followed by excessive rain and floods that have afflicted the Central American region impede the efforts being made by Nicaragua to overcome the consequences of war within the framework of a democracy and under the macroeconomic conditions already achieved,

Deeply concerned also at the serious effects of the volcanic eruption of Cerro Negro in Nicaragua, which has created a social and ecological emergency in the affected areas, as well as the urgent requirement for humanitarian assistance and the need to restore the normal conditions of the population,

Taking into account the central role of all parties in Nicaragua, in particular the Government and the Nicaraguan people, in seeking lasting solutions to consolidate the achievements of their transition,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the Support Group for Nicaragua, which, under the coordination of the Secretary-General, is playing an active role in supporting that country's efforts towards economic recovery and social development,

Recognizing the efforts of the international community and the Government of Nicaragua to provide relief to the persons affected by the aftermath of the war and natural disasters,

Recognizing also the intensive efforts by the Government of Nicaragua to promote a sustained economic recovery and the considerable progress made in securing a broad social consensus by means of a process of national dialogue for the adoption of measures to lay the foundations for reconstruction and economic and social development through a comprehensive transition process that will be further consolidated with the holding of free and democratic elections at the end of 1996,

Taking into account the commitments adopted by the Central American Presidents at the Central American Environment Summit for Sustainable Development, through the Alliance for the Sustainable Development of Central America, and, in this context, the special attention required by Nicaragua because of its exceptional situation in order that those important commitments may begin to be implemented,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General of 10 October 1995 on the measures adopted pursuant to resolution 49/16,

1. Commends the efforts made by the international community, including the organs and organizations of the United Nations system, to supplement the action undertaken by the Government of Nicaragua and by other parties concerned in the task of rehabilitation and national reconstruction as well as in providing emergency assistance;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to support the efforts of the Government of Nicaragua in the affected areas, and invites Member States, organizations, specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations to continue to provide assistance and to respond generously while the emergency situation persists;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his report on the measures adopted pursuant to resolution 49/16;

4. Encourages the Government of Nicaragua to continue its efforts for reconstruction and national reconciliation, in particular those related to poverty alleviation, economic and social development and the solution of property problems, with a view to the consolidation of a stable democracy;

5. Requests all Member States, the international funding agencies and regional, intraregional and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide, in a broad and flexible form, support to Nicaragua at the required levels, giving particular attention to the exceptional circumstances of Nicaragua, and to stimulate a greater effort in the process of reconstruction, social investment, stabilization and development;

6. Calls upon all Member States, the international funding agencies, regional and intraregional organizations and, in particular, the Secretary-General, taking into account the explicit request of the Government of Nicaragua, to provide the technical cooperation and assistance needed in support of the electoral process which will take place in Nicaragua in 1996;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system and in close cooperation with the Nicaraguan authorities, to continue to provide all necessary assistance to activities for the reconstruction, stabilization and development of Nicaragua and to continue to ensure the timely, comprehensive, flexible and effective formulation and coordination of programmes of the United Nations system in Nicaragua, given the importance of those activities for the consolidation of peace, democracy and sustainable development;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide Nicaragua, at the request of its Government, with all possible assistance to support the consolidation of peace, democracy and sustainable development in such areas as caring for displaced persons, land ownership and land tenure in rural areas, appropriate care for war-disabled persons, mine clearance and the overcoming of difficulties in the restoration of the productive areas of the country, and, in general, a process of sustained economic and social recovery and development so that the peace and democracy already achieved become irreversible;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the action taken to implement the present resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "International assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua: aftermath of the war and natural disasters", and thereafter to consider this issue on a biennial basis, under the item entitled "Special economic assistance to individual countries or regions".

Europe

Croatia

In June, the United Nations launched a Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for $261.5 million to meet a funding shortfall for humanitarian assistance for the former Yugoslavia in 1995. The Appeal updated a November 1994 Appeal,⁽³⁵⁾ which had covered requirements for the first half of 1995. The updated total funding requirements for humanitarian assistance to be provided were $470 million. The Appeal was further revised in September to reflect the dramatic escalation of the humanitarian needs in the region. Of the revised total target of $514.8 million, the funding requirement for Croatia was $97.9 million. The largest sum was requested by WFP ($47.1 million), followed by UNHCR ($36.3 million). In November, the United Nations announced requirements of $208 million to fund humanitarian assistance in the former Yugoslavia from January to April 1996.

In a December report⁽³⁶⁾ to the Security Council, the Secretary-General described the humanitarian situation of approximately 9,000 Serbs who remained in former Sectors North and South following the May and August 1995 Croatian military offensive (see PART TWO, Chapter V). He said that many of them were elderly and disabled people and received inadequate attention, at times with fatal consequences. He warned that many more might die during the winter if adequate assistance was not provided in a timely manner.

Technical Fact-finding Mission. Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General dispatched a Technical Fact-finding Mission to Croatia from 22 October to 5 November 1995, and submitted a report⁽³⁸⁾ on the Mission to the Assembly in December. The outbreak of war in 1991 had necessitated the restructuring of the Croatian economy into a war economy. An immediate effect was a decline in GDP from $14 billion to $10 billion in 1993. Due to a lack of investments, main economic indicators had declined during the period 1990 to 1995: GDP by 31 per cent; industrial production by 44 per cent; construction by 56 per cent; agriculture by 31 per cent; tourism by 62 per cent; employment by 33 per cent. Unemployment had increased by 51 per cent. According to the Government, the estimated damage amounted to $22 billion since 1991. Military events in May and August 1995 added further damage costs of $5 billion to $8 billion. The Government's investments in support of rehabilitation and reconstruction amounted to approximately $1 billion, of which the largest expenditures were for housing (24 per cent), roads (21 per cent) and industry (13 per cent). During the first quarter of 1995, the Croatian economy showed signs of improvement, with an increase of GDP to $14 billion per annum and a stabilized inflation rate of 2 per cent per annum.

The Mission assessed war damages by region and by sector, including social infrastructure and health, housing, agriculture, land-mines, environment, cultural heritage and tourism. The war had caused severe structural damage to 1,500 civil buildings and 16,000 deaths, and for 24,000 individuals had resulted in long-term disabilities. There were more than 400,000 displaced persons and refugees. The assessment of war damage to housing, carried out by the State Commission for War Damage Inventory and Assessment, was limited due to the inaccessibility of some areas for security reasons and recurring and sustained damage. Of a $205.1 million loan from the World Bank for an emergency reconstruction project, $54.7 million had been allocated for housing. The war and hostilities had taken place mostly in agricultural areas, driving an estimated 105,000 farmers from their land. There were 2 million to 4 million land-mines laid in Croatia, causing deaths, casualties and a loss of production from contaminated agricultural land and industrial plants, and preventing displaced persons from returning to mined areas. The environment had been affected by chemicals released during shelling of industrial facilities, and there was serious oil spillage, uncontrolled disposal of industrial and household waste, destroyed ionic detectors and other radioactive sources. Damage to Croatia's cultural heritage encompassing Roman, medieval, Renaissance and baroque architecture was assessed at $300 million. Tourism, which had represented 25 per cent of Croatia's GDP prior to 1991, suffered a serious loss of 300 million tourist/nights between 1991 and 1995.

The Mission concluded that the future reconstruction of Croatia would require action to deal with needs of individuals and society as a whole, investment in human resource development, restoration of major infrastructure systems, re-establishment of productive farms, problems of land-mines and improvement of production technology.

Other territories of former Yugoslavia

Since the first UN Inter-Agency Appeal in 1991⁽³⁹⁾ for humanitarian assistance for the countries of the former Yugoslavia, up to 4 million people had been assisted. During 1995, the United Nations launched Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeals for the former Yugoslavia in June, September and November (see above). Of $514.8 million requested in the revised Appeal of September, $261.9 million was for Bosnia and Herzegovina, $85 million for the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), $8 million for the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and $3.1 million for Slovenia.

In February, the consideration of applications concerning legitimate humanitarian assistance to the former Yugoslavia was expedited by the measures implemented by the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) concerning Yugoslavia.⁽⁴⁰⁾

In the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the arrival of 170,000 Croatian refugees in August had a far-reaching impact on the assistance programme in the country where the case-load more than doubled. A UNHCR emergency relief team in Serbia assessed the needs of the refugees and coordinated the distribution of food and non-food items and fuel, together with emergency assistance. In the supplement to the revised Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal of September, UNHCR requested an additional $24 million to meet the new requirements in the sectors of transport and logistics, domestic needs and household support, health and nutrition, shelter and community services.

In the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, the refugee situation remained relatively stable. While government statistics recorded nearly 15,000 refugees, the planning figure for beneficiaries of international assistance was 6,500 in September.

During 1995, the assisted population in Slovenia decreased from 27,500 to 24,000, including 20,800 registered and 3,200 unregistered refugees who also received support. The decrease was due to departure to third countries and a limited number of returnees to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, since the 1994 cessation of hostility agreement⁽⁴¹⁾ between the Government and the Bosnian Serb authorities, overall deliveries of aid supplies were successful at the beginning of 1995. UNHCR was consistently able to exceed its monthly target in Sarajevo and elsewhere in central Bosnia. However, a series of offensives since May by Croat forces against Serbs in Croatia had resulted in an influx of refugees to Bosnia and Herzegovina and onwards to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). The airstrike by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in late May, the ensuing escalation of the conflict and the hostage crisis deeply affected UNHCR's ability to continue to provide assistance in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The fall of the eastern enclaves of Srebrenica and Zepa in July to the Bosnian Serb force resulted in the exodus of 36,000 displaced persons to the Tuzla and Zenica regions. Access to Sarajevo was very irregular during the summer months, with only 15 per cent of the target for assistance delivery met in June, 30 per cent in July and 45 per cent in August. The humanitarian airlift operation which had been resumed in September was temporarily suspended in November to allow for a build-up of stock in Ancona (Italy) by 10 December, before discontinuation of the operation in early 1996.

At the Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina (London, 8-9 December) (see PART TWO, Chapter V), the main tasks of humanitarian assistance were identified as the continued provision of food, shelter and medicines, and a repatriation operation to allow for the early, phased, safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons. Other tasks included the release of prisoners and detainees, and the provision of information on the fate of persons unaccounted for. Reconstruction of the country was also discussed at the Conference.

The Caucasus

Continuing conflicts in the countries in the Caucasus—Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia—resulted in more than a million refugees and internally displaced persons in the region, including approximately 380,000 in Armenia, 890,000 in Azerbaijan and more than 280,000 in Georgia. Contributions to the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Caucasus, launched in April 1994⁽⁴²⁾ for the period through March 1995, amounted to $77.3 million by the end of February 1995. The funding received covered 71 per cent of requirements for activities in Armenia, 76 per cent in Azerbaijan, 50 per cent in Georgia and 50 per cent for regional projects. In March, the second Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for $118 million was launched to fund humanitarian programmes in the region from April 1995 to March 1996. Of that total, $13.6 million was required for regional logistics activities, $5.3 million for control of vaccine-preventive diseases in the region, as well as $28 million for Armenia, $34.5 million for Azerbaijan and $36.5 million for Georgia. The Appeal was based on an assessment by a UN inter-agency mission to the three countries in January/February 1995.

In Georgia, organized repatriation of refugees remained at a standstill, owing to the unwillingness of the authorities of the region of Abkhazia to accept returnees and the deteriorating security situation. However, minor improvements in security conditions later resulted in increased daily movements back and forth across the Inguri River by displaced persons to work in the fields, trade or repair houses. After a government offer to repatriate 200 persons a week was rejected by other parties including UNHCR as inflexible, Abkhazia started its own repatriation programme with strict conditions for returning inhabitants of the Gali district. Between March and July, UNHCR distributed children's clothes, high-protein biscuits and WFP provisions to more than 7,000 highly vulnerable cases. Many primary-health-care units and hospitals were unable to function owing to shortages of medicine and equipment. Large numbers of orphans, abandoned children and people in need of special education lived in extremely poor circumstances, lacking adequate food, bedding, warm clothes and learning materials. In order to meet the food needs during the winter months, WFP assisted some 2,500 persons in the Kodori valley. UNICEF initiated an emergency diphtheria control campaign in Abkhazia. As at 1 September, approximately $20 million had been received from the international community, in response to the second Appeal.

With regard to the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan over the status of Nagorny Karabakh, the cease-fire agreement of May 1994(43) had been observed during 1995. In Armenia, in addition to refugees from Azerbaijan and internally displaced persons from the areas bordering Azerbaijan, there were over half a million victims of the 1988 earthquake and some 1.5 million economically vulnerable persons. They were critically dependent on humanitarian assistance for food, as they were unable to afford to buy necessary quantities even at subsidized prices and with the compensation programme initiated by the Government. In Azerbaijan, many of the refugees and internally displaced persons continued to live under extremely difficult conditions and had little or no access to cash resources, leaving them entirely dependent on external sources of help. The identification of target beneficiaries, the monitoring of aid, mobilization of basic foodstuffs, and provision of medical assistance were some of the problems faced in meeting the humanitarian needs of Azerbaijan.

Chechnya, Russian Federation

The outbreak of fighting at the end of 1994 between Russian federal forces and Chechen separatists displaced approximately 220,000 persons from Chechnya into the neighbouring republics of Daghestan, Ingushetia and North Ossetia. Food and other resource reserves of local families, which hosted more than 90 per cent of the displaced, were reported to be nearing exhaustion. UN agencies began assistance efforts in January 1995 in response to a request from the Government of the Russian Federation for aid to those displaced. A emergency appeal was issued in February, followed by a Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal in March. The latter Appeal sought a total of $25.1 million for the period January to June; the largest sum was requested by UNHCR ($10.4 million), followed by WFP ($6.8 million).

UNHCR provided assistance to the displaced from Chechnya and the Prigorodny District of North Ossetia, as well as to refugees from Georgia. Its food assistance met immediate needs pending the larger programmes of WFP and ICRC. In April, DHA issued an urgent alert regarding the situation of internally displaced persons fleeing Chechnya. It was reported that an estimated 30,000 to 50,000 Chechens were moving towards the Daghestani border. In July, some operations initiated under the Consolidated Appeal were extended until the end of 1995 and the targeted populations were reduced to 152,000. As at 30 June, 77 per cent of the required funds was covered by $17.4 million in pledges and contributions.

Tajikistan

In Tajikistan, UN agencies, including UNDP, UNHCR, UNICEF, WFP and WHO, had worked to meet the needs of conflict-affected populations and to repatriate refugees and internally displaced persons since 1992. Assistance activities were supported by contributions received through the Inter-Agency Consolidated Appeals for 1993, 1994 and 1995, which amounted to $64 million. By the end of 1995, the refugees remaining in northern Afghanistan numbered 20,000, compared to 60,000 in 1993, and fewer than 10,000 displaced remained within Tajikistan. With the country's emergency needs largely met, UNHCR's field office and DHA's

Field Coordination Unit were closed in December 1995. Although WFP would continue emergency food aid programmes mainly in the south, targeting a total of 500,000 persons, UNDP would coordinate future assistance, placing emphasis on rehabilitation and development projects.

Humanitarian coordination

The growth in the frequency and brutality of conflicts in recent years had led to increasing numbers of civilian casualties and a commensurate rise in humanitarian assistance needs. However, disregard for humanitarian norms, the scourge of land-mines and the diminishing amount of resources available had undermined effective implementation of humanitarian action, the Secretary-General said in a June report⁽⁴⁴⁾ on strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations. The report examined issues arising from coordination efforts, focusing on DHA, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, the Central Emergency Revolving Fund (see below), support for in-country coordination, the consolidated appeals process and information-sharing. Also discussed were operational and financial capacities of the UN humanitarian system, issues of recovery and transition, and disaster prevention and preparedness (see below under "Disaster relief").

The Secretary-General stated that the limited regular budget funding available to DHA had posed limitations on its capacity in the face of accelerated incidence of humanitarian emergencies. UN organizations had adapted their operational capacity to the growing demands either through reorganization to give more focus to emergency response or through the development of new structures within, but in an ad hoc manner. The Secretary-General recommended that Member States ensure greater coherence in the direction given to the governing bodies of UN agencies and programmes. Among other recommendations were the use of influence by Member States with parties to an armed conflict to strengthen compliance with international humanitarian law; adequate security arrangements for humanitarian workers; additional unearmarked contributions for a particular crisis; greater use of local NGOs; and earmarking a percentage of donors' contributions to consolidated appeals for DHA's coordination activities.

Central Emergency Revolving Fund. As at 31 May 1995, operational organizations of the United Nations had utilized the Central Emergency Revolving Fund (CERF)—a cash-flow mechanism to ensure rapid and coordinated response by UN organizations to humanitarian emergencies—on 38 occasions since its establishment in 1992,⁽⁴⁵⁾ drawing some $115.8 million, of which $100 million had been reimbursed. During the first five months of 1995, three advances totalling $6.41 million were made. The Fund's balance stood at $35.8 million as at 31 May 1995. Maintaining the level of resources of the Fund at the minimum level of $50 million had been difficult, owing to delayed reimbursements caused by weak responses to certain consolidated appeals.

In his June report,⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General said that CERF had proved its value in facilitating a rapid and joint response by UN organizations to fast-breaking emergencies. In order to maintain the Fund at the minimum level, he recommended that Member States respond favourably to the proposal to replenish the Fund to cover advances that had been outstanding for more than a year in the amount of $6.12 million. Emphasizing the need for quick access to funds for rehabilitation activities, he also recommended that a separate window with an additional $30 million be opened within the Fund to act as a catalyst for such activities. Other recommendations included expansion of the Fund's scope to facilitate the provision of emergency assistance in the case of protracted emergencies, and the use of interest accrued in the Fund to support security arrangements for humanitarian workers.

Post-conflict situations. The International Colloquium on Post-Conflict Reconstruction Strategies (Schlaining, Austria, 23-24 June),⁽⁴⁶⁾ organized by the Department for Development Support and Management Services (DDSMS) of the UN Secretariat, explored the capacity of the UN system to help countries recover and reconstruct in the aftermath of armed conflict. The Colloquium's recommendations covered strategic issues, needs and capabilities, an integrated post-conflict reconstruction framework and mobilization of resources.

The recommendations of the Colloquium were considered at the seventh session⁽⁴⁷⁾ of the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions of the Administrative Committee on Coordination in September. UNDP, DDSMS and DHA agreed to initiate the articulation of a comprehensive integrated post-conflict framework and strategy; the development of criteria and operational guidelines for involvement of the UN system in post-conflict recovery; and a review of the UN system's capabilities and modalities for ensuring a rapid and effective response to post-conflict recovery needs, including new sources and methods of funding and new forms of partnerships.

Consolidated appeals

Consolidated inter-agency humanitarian assistance appeals launched or ongoing during 1995 related to Afghanistan, Angola, the Caucasus (including Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia), Chechnya, Iraq, Liberia, Rwanda and its subregion, Sierra Leone and Guinea, Somalia, the Sudan, Tajikistan and the former Yugoslavia, requiring total funding of $2,342,024,676 to assist some 28.3 million people. Approximately 74 per cent of the requirements were covered.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/56.

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the guiding principles for providing humanitarian assistance as outlined in the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991,

Recalling other relevant General Assembly resolutions, in particular resolutions 47/168 of 22 December 1992, 48/57 of 14 December 1993 and 49/139 A of 20 December 1994, and the relevant agreed conclusions of the coordination segment of the substantive session of 1993 of the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting the differences and the limitations in the capacity of agencies, organizations, programmes and funds of the United Nations system to address effectively and in a comprehensive and coordinated manner the need for preparedness and humanitarian response, as well as prevention, rehabilitation, recovery and development, in accordance with their mandates,

Recognizing the need to review and strengthen the capacity of the United Nations system for humanitarian assistance,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with relevant organizations of the United Nations system, to submit, at a date to be determined by the Council at its substantive session of 1996, a comprehensive and analytical report, including options, proposals and recommendations for a review and strengthening of all aspects of the capacity of the United Nations system for humanitarian assistance;

2. Decides, in order to facilitate that process:

(a) To encourage Governments to ensure coherence in the direction given to the governing bodies of relevant agencies, organizations, programmes and funds of the United Nations system, with the aim of improving the coordination and effectiveness of humanitarian assistance in the United Nations system;

(b) To urge the governing bodies of relevant organizations of the United Nations system to review, during the period from 1995 to 1997, issues concerning the role and operational responsibilities, as well as the operative and financial capacities, of their respective organizations to respond, within their mandates, in the context of broad and comprehensive humanitarian programmes, bearing in mind section VII of the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/182 and the indicative list of issues contained in the annex to the present resolution;

(c) To request the Secretary-General and relevant agencies, organizations, programmes and funds of the United Nations system to include in their reports to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1996 a section on the progress achieved in the review of those issues and on the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 46/182;

3. Calls upon the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, in this context, to convene regular, informal and open information meetings with Member States, observer States and relevant intergovernmental and other organizations on the review of the above-mentioned issues so as to ensure that they are coherently addressed and appropriately reflected in the report of the Secretary-General.

ANNEX

Indicative list of issues for consideration by the governing bodies of the appropriate agencies, organizations, programmes and funds of the United Nations system

Specific measures to strengthen local capacity and coping mechanisms.

Role and operational responsibilities of each specific organization in humanitarian situations, in regard to prevention, preparedness, humanitarian response, rehabilitation, recovery and development, as applicable.

Impact of the allocation of resources on the relationship between life-saving needs, prevention, preparedness and recovery.

Development of operative memoranda of understanding between different organizations to ensure interlinkages between, and coherence of, the operational activities of relevant actors.

Operational and financial capacity of each organization to act in a timely and effective manner in relation to its role and mandate.

Practical implications for each agency of participating fully in the coordinated programming of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and in related consolidated appeals.

Development of strategies for comprehensive staff development, including inter-agency training modules.

Reporting, both operational and financial, and evaluation of programmes undertaken.

Administrative and other procedures which provide flexibility and facilitate rapid response.

Levels of delegation of authority to the field level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/57.

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 47/168 of 22 December 1992, 48/57 of 14 December 1993 and 49/139 of 20 December 1994,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 14 June 1995

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/56 of 28 July 1995, Decides to refer further deliberations on these matters, including those related to the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1996.

Participation of volunteers in humanitarian efforts

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in June 1995 a report⁽⁴⁹⁾ on participation of volunteers, "White Helmets", in activities of the UN in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development.

Based on past experience—more than 2,000 United Nations volunteers had assisted in a diverse range of activities—the Secretary-General suggested that "White Helmets" deployment could include: the delivery of urgent relief supplies and services; support to local emergency relief coordinating units; assistance in arrangements for return, resettlement and repatriation of refugees and internally displaced persons; and monitoring of respect for human rights. The United Nations Volunteers (UNV) would handle managerial and administrative aspects of the deployment of volunteers, while DHA would provide overall coordination in the field. Issues of concern arising from the implementation of the "White Helmets" initiative included the need for additional arrangements to recruit and field teams of volunteers in the earliest stages of emergency, training for volunteers, and financing for their training and deployment. The Secretary-General concluded that the "White Helmets" initiative presented a new opportunity for creative and resourceful programme design, formulation and implementation. Once several volunteer teams had served successfully under UN auspices, experiences gained would help identify the gaps in the evolving volunteer service scheme, and ways and means to enhance the effectiveness of the deployment. He invited Governments to provide the necessary financial support and to set up national volunteer teams in order to achieve the objectives of the initiative.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/44.

Participation of volunteers, 'White Helmets', in activities of the United Nations in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 49/139 B of 20 December 1994 on the participation of volunteers, "White Helmets", in activities of the United Nations in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development,

Reaffirming the guiding principles on humanitarian assistance contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991,

Recognizing the importance of voluntary national and regional actions aimed at providing the United Nations system on a stand-by basis with specialized human and technical resources for the purposes mentioned above, on a stand-by basis,

Noting that, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 49/139 B, a distinct window has been opened within the Special Voluntary Fund of the United Nations Volunteers programme to channel funds for operationalizing the activities of the "White Helmets",

Taking note of the information submitted to the Council on recent developments related to the implementation of the "White Helmets" initiative by Governments, specialized agencies and relevant bodies,

1. Expresses its satisfaction with the growing number of Governments involved in the "White Helmets" initiative;

2. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General, in particular the statement that the "White Helmets" initiative represents an innovative opportunity for the effective, efficient and economical provision of assistance to the intended beneficiaries of the operations of the United Nations system in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development, and that it presents a new opportunity for creative and resourceful programme design, formulation and implementation in such areas, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 46/182;

3. Invites Governments able to do so to set up and make available their existing national volunteer teams and individuals, taking into account the "White Helmets" initiative;

4. Encourages the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, as part of its functions of coordination of humanitarian assistance, and the relevant bodies of the United Nations, in accordance with their respective mandates, to continue to make use of the "White Helmets" and other volunteers in appropriate United Nations relief, humanitarian and development operations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the information related to the "White Helmets" initiative that has recently become available, to prepare an updated report on recent developments regarding the implementation of the initiative for submission to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session;

6. Recommends that the General Assembly include the "White Helmets" initiative and the consideration of the report mentioned in paragraph 5 above as a separate item in the agenda of its fiftieth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/4427 July 1995 Meeting 56 Adopted without vote

70-nation draft (E/1995/L.46), orally revised; agenda item 5 (a). Meeting numbers. ESC 47-49, 52, 56.

Pursuant to the Council's request, the Secretary-General submitted an October note⁽⁵⁰⁾ to the General Assembly, updating the developments regarding the initiative. He reported that since June specific project activities had been identified by UNV to involve "White Helmets" volunteers in Angola, Armenia, Gaza, Haiti and Jamaica, and that the first "White Helmets" team, composed of Argentine, Bolivian and Dominican volunteers was to be deployed in Haiti shortly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/19.

Participation of volunteers, 'White Helmets', in activities of the United Nations in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 49/139 B of 20 December 1994,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, in particular the guiding principles on humanitarian assistance embodied in the annex thereto, 47/168 of 22 December 1992 and 48/57 of 14 December 1993,

Recalling Economic and Social Council decision 1993/205 of 12 February 1993 and the agreed conclusions of the coordination segment of the Council of 1993, and Council resolution 1995/44 of 27 July 1995,

Recognizing, in the light of the increasing number and growing magnitude and complexity of natural disasters and other emergencies, the need to utilize fully the national potential of countries in providing the United Nations system, on a stand-by basis, with support for its activities in the area of humanitarian emergency assistance, as well as in the promotion of a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, which should contribute to more coordinated responses in these fields,

1. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General and the note by the Secretariat, prepared in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/44, on the participation of volunteers, "White Helmets", in activities of the United Nations in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development, as well as of the initial projects undertaken in the implementation of resolution 49/139 B;

2. Commends the activities and experiences of the United Nations Volunteers, including the White Helmets, deployed in the context of the implementation of resolution 49/139 B, as well as other experiences developed to improve, in accordance with resolutions 46/182 and 49/139 B, the capability for a quick and coordinated response to natural disasters and other emergencies, while preserving the non-political, neutral and impartial character of humanitarian action;

3. Encourages voluntary national and regional actions aimed at making available to the United Nations system, through the United Nations Volunteers, national volunteer corps such as the White Helmets on a stand-by basis, in accordance with accepted United Nations procedures and practices, in order to provide specialized human and technical resources for emergency relief and rehabilitation, and in this regard notes with satisfaction the establishment, in particular in developing countries, of national volunteer corps such as the White Helmets;

4. Encourages also the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, as part of its function of coordination of humanitarian assistance, and the relevant bodies of the United Nations, in accordance with their respective mandates, to make use of the White Helmets and other United Nations volunteers in the area of humanitarian emergency assistance, as well as to support a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development;

5. Recognizes, in this context, the operational role of the United Nations Volunteers in the selection, training, deployment and effective utilization of the White Helmets at the field level;

6. Calls upon countries in a position to do so to contribute to the distinct window created to this end, in accordance with paragraph 6 (b) of resolution 49/139 B, within the Special Voluntary Fund of the United Nations Volunteers;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, in the context of the cluster of issues related to the item "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance", on the technical, institutional and financial viability of the initiative.

Mine clearance

Responding to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1995 report⁽⁵²⁾ on assistance in mine clearance. The report discussed UN activities in providing assistance in mine clearance, and described an integrated approach of and resources for UN mine-action programmes.

Estimates indicated that there were between 95 million and 110 million land-mines scattered throughout 68 countries. An estimated 30 people were killed daily by uncleared land-mines and perhaps as many as 60 people were maimed. Land-mines that sold for as little as $3 cost the international community between $300 and $1,000 to clear. With DHA as the focal point, UN entities engaged in land-mine-related activities during 1995 in Afghanistan, Angola, Cambodia, Chad, El Salvador, Georgia, Guatemala, Mozambique, Rwanda, Somalia, the former Yugoslavia and Yemen. In Afghanistan, Angola, Cambodia and Mozambique, the United Nations took an integrated approach, involving mine clearance, national capacity-building, mine surveys, education and training in mine awareness, and treatment and rehabilitation of land-mine victims. Those activities were funded by consolidated appeals, assessed peace-keeping contributions and the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance, established in 1994.⁽⁵³⁾ DHA was working to establish a demining stand-by capacity for tapping into personnel, equipment and facilities maintained by Member States.

The Secretary-General stated that he had convened an International Meeting on Mine Clearance (Geneva, 5-7 July), which had discussed the technical aspects of mine clearance and mine-related issues, and strengthening the stand-by capacity of the United Nations in mine clearance. Participants pledged more than $20 million to the Voluntary Trust Fund and $7 million for the stand-by capacity.

The Secretary-General concluded that clearing all the mines already laid could not be accomplished within the existing funding and technology. He called for increased efforts to develop demining and mine-clearance technologies, and emphasized that only a total ban would effectively stop their spread once and for all.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/82.

Assistance in mine clearance

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993 and 49/215 of 23 December 1994 on assistance in mine clearance, both adopted without a vote,

Reaffirming its deep concern at the tremendous humanitarian problem caused by the presence of mines and other unexploded devices that have serious and lasting social and economic consequences for the populations of mine-infested countries and constitute an obstacle to the return of refugees and other displaced persons, to humanitarian aid operations and to reconstruction and economic development, as well as to the restoration of normal social conditions,

Reiterating its dismay at the high number of victims of mines, especially among civilian populations, particularly children, and recalling in this context Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/79 of 8 March 1995 on the rights of the child,

Deeply alarmed that the number of mines being laid each year, as well as the presence of a large number of mines and other unexploded devices as a result of armed conflicts, exponentially outweighs the number of such mines that can be cleared during that time, and thus convinced of the necessity and urgency of a significant increase in mine-clearance efforts by the international community,

Recognizing the importance of recording the location of mines and of retaining all such records and making them available to concerned parties upon cessation of hostilities, in accordance with international law,

Bearing in mind the serious threat that mines and other unexploded devices pose to the safety, health and lives of personnel participating in humanitarian, peace-keeping and rehabilitation programmes and operations,

Conscious of the limited availability of safe and cost-effective mine-clearance techniques, and the need for improvements thereof, and of the lack of global coordination in the field of research to improve mine-clearance technology and the urgent need to foster international technical cooperation in this field,

Aware that the rate of mine clearance needs to improve substantially if the global land-mine problem is to be tackled effectively,

Recalling its resolution 50/74 of 12 December 1995 on the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and the convening by the Secretary-

General of the Review Conference of the States Parties to that Convention at Vienna from 25 September to 13 October 1995, taking note, in this regard, of the decision of the Review Conference to continue its work in order to conclude negotiations on the strengthening of the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II), and welcoming in this regard the additional ratifications of or accessions to the Convention,

Recalling also its resolutions 48/75 K of 16 December 1993, 49/75 D of 15 December 1994 and 50/70 O of 12 December 1995 calling for a moratorium on the export of anti-personnel land-mines, and welcoming in this regard the export moratorium adopted by several States,

Bearing in mind that significant progress needs to be achieved in these fields,

Recognizing that, in addition to the primary role of States, the United Nations has an important role in the field of assistance in mine clearance,

Noting with satisfaction the inclusion in the mandates of several peace-keeping operations of provisions relating to mine-clearance work carried out under the direction of the Department of Peace-keeping Operations of the Secretariat in the context of such operations,

Commending the activities already undertaken by the United Nations system, donor and recipient Governments, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations to coordinate their efforts and seek solutions to the problems related to the presence of mines and other unexploded devices,

Also commending the role of the Secretary-General, through the work of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, in increasing public awareness of the problem of land-mines and for the establishment of the Central Land-Mine Database and its inventories of mine-awareness materials and mine-clearance techniques,

Commending in particular the outcome of the International Meeting on Mine Clearance held at Geneva from 5 to 7 July 1995, in which notable financial pledges were gathered for the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance and for the development of a demining stand-by capacity by the United Nations,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his comprehensive report of 6 September 1995 on the activities of the United Nations in providing assistance in mine clearance and on the operation of the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance, and takes note with interest of the proposals contained therein;

2. Welcomes, in particular, the efforts made by the United Nations to foster the establishment of national mine-clearance capacities in countries where mines constitute a serious threat to the safety, health and lives of the local population, and urges all Member States, particularly those that have a capacity to do so, to assist afflicted countries in the establishment and development of their national mine-clearance capacities;

3. Expresses its appreciation to Member States, United Nations organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that participated in the International Meeting on Mine Clearance for their strong expression of cooperation in the field of assistance in mine clearance, and particularly to States and regional organizations for their financial contributions to the Voluntary Trust Fund as well as for providing the necessary means to establish a de-mining stand-by capacity within the United Nations;

4. Appeals to Member States as well as to intergovernmental organizations and foundations to continue to contribute to the Voluntary Trust Fund and to continue to supply the necessary means to the United Nations to foster its de-mining stand-by capacity;

5. Invites all relevant multilateral and national programmes and bodies to include, in coordination with the United Nations, activities related to mine clearance in their humanitarian, social and economic assistance activities;

6. Emphasizes again, in this connection, the importance of coordination by the United Nations of activities related to mine clearance, including those by regional organizations, in particular activities related to information and training;

7. Welcomes the efforts of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to coordinate mine-related activities and, in particular, the establishment, in cooperation with other relevant United Nations organizations, of comprehensive mine-action programmes, and encourages the Department to continue and enhance those efforts within existing resources with a view to improving the effectiveness of assistance in mine clearance by the United Nations;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General to designate the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the focal point in the United Nations for coordinating de-mining and related issues, as the repository of information and for encouraging and facilitating international research to improve mine-clearance methods;

9. Urges Member States, regional organizations, governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations to continue to extend full assistance and cooperation to the Secretary-General and, in particular, to provide him with information and data as well as other appropriate resources which could be useful in strengthening the coordination role of the United Nations in the field of mine awareness, training, surveying, mine detection and clearance, scientific research on mine detection and clearance technology, and information on and distribution of medical equipment and supplies;

10. Calls upon Member States, especially those that have a capacity to do so, to provide the necessary information and technical and material assistance, as appropriate, and to locate, remove, destroy or otherwise render ineffective minefields, mines, booby traps and other devices, in accordance with international law;

11. Urges Member States, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations and foundations that have the ability to do so to provide, as appropriate, technological assistance to mine-afflicted countries as well as to promote scientific research and development on humanitarian mine-clearance techniques and technology so that mine-clearance activities may be more effectively carried out at lower cost and through safer means, and to promote international collaboration in this regard;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the progress achieved on all relevant issues outlined in his reports to the Assembly at its forty-ninth and fiftieth sessions on assistance in mine clearance and on the operation of the Voluntary Trust Fund;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Assistance in mine clearance".

Special economic assistance

African economic recovery and development

New Agenda for the Development of Africa

In 1995, a number of UN bodies continued to implement or monitor the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in 1991.⁽¹⁾ They included the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), UNDP, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

UNCTAD action. At its March session, the Trade and Development Board had before it a January progress report⁽²⁾ on UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of the New Agenda. The report addressed the issues of policy research and analysis, and technical cooperation in the areas of trade; commodities; debt management and negotiations; economic cooperation among developing countries; privatization; foreign direct investment; shipping, ports and multimodal transport; insurance; technology; and human resources development. UNCTAD's ongoing work had focused increasingly on the problems facing Africa and had emphasized that they were largely structural. The dramatic changes in the world economy and trading system had also placed the African countries in a relatively weaker position in international competition. UNCTAD also studied the impact of the 1994 Uruguay Round agreements on multilateral trade⁽³⁾ on low-income developing countries, particularly the African ones, with a view to strengthening its technical cooperation activities in that field. It reported that additional resources in support of Africa's development endeavours were urgently required, with a view to achieving lasting effect and long-term sustainability of policy reforms.

In agreed conclusions of 31 March,⁽⁴⁾ the Board stated that the economic situation in most of Africa continued to deteriorate and official resource flows for development purposes to Africa, including official development assistance (ODA), had fallen significantly since 1990. The Board invited African countries to strengthen industrial strategies so as to encourage economic growth and employment opportunities, to create domestic stability and to improve the business environment for both domestic and foreign direct investment. The international community was called on to support the commodity diversification efforts of Africa; to fulfil the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for overall ODA; and to implement urgently existing debt-relief agreements and negotiate further initiatives. The UNCTAD secretariat was requested to propose recommendations to facilitate access to, and acquisition of, appropriate existing and new technologies, emphasizing the utility of scientific and technological knowledge to meet basic needs and requirements for sustainable development.

UNDP activities. In response to a 1994 request,⁽⁵⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted to the Executive Board of UNDP and of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) an April report⁽⁶⁾ on UNDP's role in the implementation of the New Agenda. The report outlined activities and achievements during 1994.

In a later report on the subject,⁽⁷⁾ the Administrator stated that, during 1995, UNDP provided support to a number of African countries, with particular emphasis on priorities established in the New Agenda. It coordinated its interventions with other partners, including the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought (see below, under "Disaster relief") in the environmental field; the Africa 2000 Network on grass-roots activities in the management of natural resources; and the Global Environment Facility in biodiversity conservation and the protection of coastal areas from pollution. UNDP continued to provide assistance to the joint Organization of African Unity/Economic Commission for Africa (ECA)/African Development Bank (AfDB) secretariat charged with establishing the African Economic Community. Under the multi-donor-funded African Capacity-Building Initiative, support was extended to key training institutions in Benin, Ghana, Guinea, Nigeria, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe. In 1995, national long-term perspective studies were completed in Mauritius and were under way in Cape Verde, Cote d'Ivoire, Gabon, Guinea-Bissau, Mauritania, Senegal, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. In the area of private sector development, the African Project Development Facility, co-sponsored by UNDP, AfDB, the World Bank and bilateral donors, had completed 130 projects in 25 countries.

Economic and Social Council consideration.

As decided by decision 1995/203 of 10 February, the Economic and Social Council devoted the high-level segment (Geneva, 3-6 July) of its substantive session of 1995 to the development of Africa, including the implementation of the New Agenda.

The Council had before it a 20 June report⁽⁸⁾ of the Secretary-General on the subject. The report analysed some critical issues facing Africa in the implementation of the New Agenda, such as trade and finance, external assistance and debt, Africa's competitiveness, foreign direct investment flows to Africa, poverty eradication and human development, crisis prevention and management, capacity-building and South-South cooperation. The Secretary-General concluded that Africa needed significant and sustained support from the international community for the development of its immense natural and human resources, and Africa's needs for external assistance went well beyond the region's emergency needs. He also provided an assessment of the implementation of the New Agenda and suggested some measures for consideration that could contribute to enabling African countries and the international community to confront those issues and put the continent on the path of sustainable development.

The President of the Council, in his summary of the high-level segment,⁽⁹⁾ stated that despite Africa's economic, social and political achievements, progress had been slow and insufficient. While Africa's development was first and foremost the responsibility of the African countries themselves, it could be sustained only with the support of the international community. The President stated that African economic development had to be considered in the context of an increasingly globalized world economy, and that all the critical issues, including increasing the role of women in development, should be addressed simultaneously.

The Council, in decision 1995/309 of 27 July, took note of the report⁽¹⁰⁾ of the twenty-eighth series (New York, 27 October 1994) of Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Administrative Committee on Coordination. The report included the Chairman's summary of the consideration of the critical situation of Africa.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted two reports to the General Assembly relating to the implementation of the New Agenda. The first report,⁽¹¹⁾ prepared in response to a 1993 Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ discussed financial intermediation in Africa. It reviewed the state of financial systems and practices, categorizing countries under three broad stages of intermediation—primary, intermediate and advanced—and proposed a course of future action, including support measures that the international community could provide. Although the region's performance in both the financial and real sectors had improved substantially, financial systems were still among the weakest sectors in African countries; of the 41 countries, nearly 20 were still at the primary stage, 19 at the intermediate stage and only 2 might be at the advanced stage. Neglect of the informal sector, limited operational independence and inadequate capacity of central banks, incomplete restructuring and rehabilitation of banks and non-banks, and the lack of real sector restructuring were the constraints facing African financial systems. The report said that sustainable progress in advancing financial intermediation and its continued effectiveness required certain preconditions to be met. The foremost among them was the restoration and maintenance of a reasonable degree of macroeconomic stability; among others were the development of human capital and management systems, the building of expertise in maintaining an appropriate portfolio of financial assets, and the establishment of information channels.

Noting that the informal finance system mediated a significant amount of financial transactions in most African countries, the Secretary-General proposed that the informal and semi-informal systems, including the postal system, credit unions, other cooperatives and a variety of financial institutions run by NGOs, be preserved and encouraged, while addressing their limitations through appropriate policy initiatives and developing and strengthening the formal financial system. With respect to the formal financial sector, the Secretary-General suggested a three-pronged development strategy of strengthening financial institutions; devising a variety of financial paper; and implementing indirect instruments of monetary policy.

The second report,⁽¹³⁾ submitted pursuant to a 1994 Assembly request,⁽¹⁴⁾ outlined steps taken by AfDB, the UN system and Member States towards the establishment of a diversification facility and national diversification councils at the country level. Organized by ECA, the lead agency for the UN system's support programmes on diversification of African economies, an inter-agency workshop (Yaounde, Cameroon, 13-17 February) made recommendations on the development of private small and medium-sized enterprises, establishment of a special facility for commodity diversification, and functions of the national diversification councils. The workshop also recommended that UN organizations and agencies continue to assess the impact of the Uruguay Round on African economies and initiate measures to enhance their diversification.

During 1995, the UN Office of the Special Coordinator for Africa and the Least Developed Countries organized or co-sponsored a number of meetings on the development of Africa. They included an international workshop on development of Africa's informal sector (New York, 13-15 June); a regional workshop for eastern and southern Africa on the operationalization of the principles of the Tokyo Declaration on African Development (Harare, Zimbabwe, 26-27 July); a high-level symposium on peace and development in Africa (Tokyo, 11-12 October); and an Asia-Africa Forum core group meeting of African experts on the operationalization of the principles of the Tokyo Declaration (Seychelles, 19-21 December).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/160 A.

Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the annex to which contains the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, in paragraphs 43 (c) and (e) and 44 of which it decided, inter alia, to conduct a mid-term review and a final review and assessment of the implementation of the New Agenda,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 48/214 of 23 December 1993 and 49/142 of 23 December 1994 concerning the implementation of the New Agenda,

Recalling its resolution 45/253 of 21 December 1990 on programme planning, in which the economic recovery and development of Africa was stated to be one of the five overall priorities in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997,

Taking note of the document entitled "Relaunching Africa's economic and social development: the Cairo Agenda for Action" adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its seventeenth extraordinary session, held at Cairo from 25 to 28 March 1995, and endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in its resolution AHG/Res.236(XXXI) of 28 June 1995,^a

^a A/50/647.

Taking note also of resolution CM/Res.1596(LXII) of 23 June 1995 of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity on the implementation of the New Agenda, endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General of 20 June 1995 to the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1995, devoted to the consideration of the development of Africa, including the implementation of the New Agenda, and the summary made by the President of the Council of the debate during the high-level segment,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 6 October 1995 on advancing financial intermediation in Africa and of 11 October 1995 on diversification of Africa's commodities,^a

Recalling that the prime objective of the New Agenda is to stop and reverse the continuing deterioration in the socio-economic situation of African countries and to renew the commitment of the international community to support Africa's own efforts to achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development,

Expressing serious concern about the limited progress made so far in the implementation of the New Agenda and the continuing deterioration of the economic and social situation in Africa,

Mindful of the urgent need for African countries to increase and mobilize internal resources for the implementation of the New Agenda through, inter alia, policies for the promotion of domestic savings, improved and accessible banking facilities and further improvements in traditional practices of capital formation at local levels, as well as to continue creating an enabling environment for domestic and foreign investment,

Acknowledging that effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions have to be found to the problems of external debt and the burden of debt which continue to impede the socio-economic development of African countries despite measures taken on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis to reduce or reschedule their debt,

Recognizing the possible adverse effects and looking forward to the challenges and opportunities for African countries of the implementation of the agreements of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations and the urgent need for further technical and financial assistance to African countries, with a view, inter alia, to identifying the adverse effects and alleviating them through appropriate measures, including possible supportive measures, as appropriate, in order to maximize their participation in the world trading system,

Recognizing also the urgent need to continue to assist African countries in their efforts to diversify their economies,

Recognizing further that the mid-term review of the implementation of the New Agenda should provide an opportunity for the international community to conduct an in-depth assessment of the actions so far taken in the implementation of the New Agenda and the measures needed for sustained economic growth and sustainable development in Africa beyond the 1990s, and to continue to develop policies and measures, including new and/or corrective policies and measures, as appropriate, and continued external support to the efforts of African countries in all areas, so as to ensure the timely, effective and full implementation of the New Agenda during the remaining part of the decade,

Bearing in mind its resolution 42/163 of 8 December 1987 on the critical economic situation in Africa, in which it established an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly as the most appropriate mechanism to prepare the review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, and its resolutions 43/27 of 18 November 1988 and 45/178 A of 19 December 1990 on that review and appraisal,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on advancing financial intermediation in Africa and on diversification of Africa's commodities;

2. Takes note also of the summary made by the President of the Economic and Social Council of the debate during the high-level segment of the Council at its substantive session of 1995, devoted to the consideration of the development of Africa, including the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s;

3. Reaffirms the need for the effective implementation of the New Agenda and, to that effect, calls upon the donor countries and all other parties concerned to fulfil their respective commitments as stated in the New Agenda, and calls upon African countries to implement the measures necessary to achieve the goals of the New Agenda;

4. Decides to establish an ad hoc committee of the whole of the fiftieth session of the General Assembly as the most appropriate mechanism to prepare the mid-term review in 1996 of the implementation of the New Agenda, as provided for in the annex to resolution 46/151;

5. Also decides to convene an organizational session of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole as soon as possible but not later than 30 June 1996, for two working days, to consider and adopt the necessary arrangements for its work regarding, inter alia, the mid-term review of the implementation of the New Agenda, and that the Ad Hoc Committee should have its Bureau constituted at the highest appropriate level and composed of a Chairman, three Vice-Chairmen and a Rapporteur;

6. Further decides that the Ad Hoc Committee should meet for a period of up to seven working days in September 1996, prior to the fifty-first session of the General Assembly, to prepare the mid-term review on the basis of a report to be prepared by the Secretary-General, including relevant inputs from Governments and/or organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations, in particular the Organization of African Unity and non-governmental organizations, regarding their efforts and experiences in implementing the New Agenda;

7. Invites the Economic Commission for Africa to submit a report to the Secretary-General by June 1996 on actions taken and progress achieved by African countries in the implementation of the New Agenda;

8. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee, in carrying out its mandate, should submit its findings to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session and propose concrete measures and recommendations for sustained economic growth and sustainable development in Africa beyond the 1990s;

^a A/50/520.

9. Urges Member States and organs and bodies of the United Nations system to be represented at the highest appropriate level and to participate actively in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Ad Hoc Committee a report on the implementation of the New Agenda, including a summary and assessment of national efforts based on relevant inputs from African countries, and to continue ensuring close cooperation and coordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity concerning the contributions of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Children's Fund, in the context of his report on the preparation of the mid-term review of the implementation of the New Agenda;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the Ad Hoc Committee estimates of the projected resource requirements from all sources, public and private, domestic and international, needed for the full implementation of the New Agenda, the amount expected to be mobilized and proposals for filling any resource gaps, taking into account the specific economic and development situation of African countries;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with the organs and organizations of the United Nations system concerned, to ensure the necessary preparation of the meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the work of the Ad Hoc Committee and on the implementation of the present resolution.

System-wide Special Initiative on Africa

The issue of African economic recovery and development remained a priority concern of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) in 1995. In February, the Secretary-General, as a follow up to the consideration of the subject by ACC during 1994,⁽¹⁵⁾ proposed establishing a steering committee to develop further practical initiatives to maximize the support provided by the UN system to African development, and raise the priority given to African development in the international agenda. A number of UN bodies participated in the work of the Steering Committee and five working groups were formed dealing with water, food security, governance, social and human development, and resource mobilization. The result was a System-wide Special Initiative on Africa containing a set of specific development actions to be undertaken jointly by UN organizations, and a year-long campaign for political and resource mobilization.

ACC, at its second regular session of 1995 (New York, 12-13 October,⁽¹⁶⁾) decided to launch the Initiative in early 1996 and extended the Steering Committee's mandate for a further year to monitor it. The Steering Committee was requested to submit a progress report to ACC at its first regular session of 1996.

Special assistance to Djibouti

The situation of Djibouti had been adversely affected by the evolving critical situation in the Horn of Africa, the presence of tens of thousands of refugees, the extremes of local climate and cyclical droughts, torrential rains and floods, as well as the extremely limited financial capacity to implement reconstruction and development programmes, the Secretary-General said in his July report⁽¹⁷⁾ on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti, submitted in response to a 1994 General Assembly request.⁽¹⁸⁾

The organizations of the UN system, including UNDP, UNHCR, UNESCO, UNICEF and WFP, dealt with the growing social and economic problem of the refugees by developing activities related to repatriation, food distribution and education, by initiating regrouping efforts to resettle refugees in camps, and by clean-up operations in the capital. The Secretary-General stated that the most feasible long-term solution to the presence of the refugees in Djibouti would require the formal political commitment of the concerned countries. In addition, there were urgent needs to support the Government's demobilization programme through budgetary support and to reconstruct damaged or destroyed social infrastructures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 F.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/21 F of 20 December 1994 and its previous resolutions on economic assistance to Djibouti,

Recalling also the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, as well as the mutual commitments undertaken on that occasion and the importance attached to the follow-up to that Conference,

Distressed by the large number of persons afflicted by the torrential rains and unprecedented flooding in Djibouti in November 1994 and by the significant damage and devastation to property and infrastructure,

Noting that the economic and social development efforts of Djibouti, which is included in the list of least developed countries, are constrained by the extremes of the local climate, in particular cyclical droughts and torrential rains and floods such as those which occurred in 1989 and 1994, and that the implementation of reconstruction and development programmes, as well as of the demobilization programme, requires the deployment of substantial resources which exceed the real capacity of the country,

Noting with concern that the situation in Djibouti has been made worse by the deteriorating situation in the Horn of Africa and in particular in Somalia, and noting the presence of over 100,000 refugees and persons displaced from their countries, which has, on the one hand, placed serious strains on the fragile economic, social and administrative infrastructure of Djibouti and, on the other, caused serious security problems in the country,

Noting also the difficult economic and financial situation of Djibouti resulting in part from the number of priority development projects that have had to be suspended in view of serious developments in the international situation and in part from the prolonged effects of the previous regional conflicts, notably in Somalia, which have disrupted services, transport and trade and which are draining the State of most of its revenues,

Noting with satisfaction the progress made by the Government of Djibouti and the International Monetary Fund on the negotiations concerning the structural adjustment programme, and convinced of the necessity to support that financial recovery programme and to take effective measures to alleviate the consequences, in particular the social consequences, of that adjustment policy, which is in the course of implementation, in order that the country may achieve appreciable economic results in the context of the programme,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the United Nations Inter-Agency Assessment Mission to Djibouti organized in April 1994 and led by the United Nations Development Programme, and having considered its recommendations in the light of the new realities of the country,

Noting with gratitude the support provided to relief and rehabilitation operations by various countries and by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 26 July 1995,

1. Declares its solidarity with the Government and people of Djibouti in the face of the devastating consequences of the torrential rains and floods and the new economic realities of Djibouti, resulting in particular from the continuing critical situation in the Horn of Africa, especially in Somalia;

2. Welcomes the progress made by the Government of Djibouti and the International Monetary Fund on the negotiations concerning the structural adjustment programme, and in that context appeals to all Governments, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to respond in an appropriate manner, as a matter of urgency, to the financial and material needs of the country;

3. Considers that implementation of the demobilization programme and of the national rehabilitation plan and reinforcement of democratic institutions require appropriate assistance in the form of financial and material support;

4. Requests a review of the recommendations of the United Nations Inter-Agency Assessment Mission to Djibouti with a view to their implementation;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties faced by Djibouti;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a study of the progress made with economic assistance to Djibouti, in time for the question to be considered by the General Assembly at its fifty-first session.

Other economic assistance

States affected by sanctions against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

During 1995, a number of countries continued to experience special economic problems as a result of the severance of their economic relations with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and especially the disruption of traditional transport and communications links in that part of Europe. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1995 a report⁽²⁰⁾ on economic assistance to States affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The report reviewed the relevant action taken by the Council and its Sanctions Committee concerning Yugoslavia, with a view to alleviating the special economic problems of neighbouring and other States (see PART TWO, Chapter V). The report also summarized the information received from States, organizations of the UN system and regional organizations, namely the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the European Union, regarding economic assistance to the affected States.

UNDP, with a contribution of more than $5.7 million from the United States, continued to carry out a programme to ease the critical obstacles to commercial traffic around the territory of the Federal Republic. In the area of trade facilitation and foreign-investment promotion, UNCTAD was implementing an Automated System for Customs Data in Hungary, Romania and Slovakia, and assisted the Albanian Centre for Foreign Investment Promotion in financing study tours and developing a promotional brochure for foreign investment in Albania. The World Bank continued to provide assistance to the affected countries through balance-of-payments support, project financing and technical cooperation, while IMF provided policy advice, including assessment of the impact of the sanctions and the design of an appropriate policy response in the context of the countries' overall economic situations. From May 1992 to June 1995, the Fund's disbursements to the eight affected countries—Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania, Slovakia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Uganda and Ukraine—amounted to $2.3 billion.

The report concluded that the World Bank and IMF, as well as relevant UN bodies and organs, continued to implement substantial programmes of financial and technical assistance in the affected countries, and that those programmes had been reviewed in order to make them as responsive as possible to the particular problems of the countries concerned. Most important, however, remained the need to mobilize new and additional funds from all potential funding sources, in particular bilateral donors and the regional development banks.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 E.

Economic assistance to States affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of Articles 25, 48, 49 and 50 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 843(1993) of 18 June 1993, in which the Council entrusted the Committee established pursuant to its resolution 724(1991) of 15 December 1991 with the task of examining requests by Member States for assistance under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter, and the recommendations of the Committee in response to requests for assistance addressed to the Council by certain States confronting special economic problems arising from the implementation of Council trade and economic sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Recalling further Security Council resolution 943(1994) of 23 September 1994, in which the Council invited the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) to adopt appropriate streamlined procedures for expediting its consideration of applications concerning legitimate humanitarian assistance,

Expressing its appreciation that in the last few months the Committee established pursuant to resolution 724(1991) has undertaken measures aimed at improving and accelerating the processing of applications put forward to the Committee,

Reaffirming its resolutions 48/210 of 21 December 1993 and 49/21 A of 2 December 1994 on economic assistance to States affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

Taking note of the letter on behalf of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of five States directly affected addressed to the Secretary-General^a and in particular the proposals for taking concrete steps contained therein,

Commending the efforts of the international financial institutions, other international organizations and those States that responded to the appeal of the Secretary-General by taking into consideration the special economic problems arising from the implementation of the sanctions in their support programmes to the affected States,

Commending also the continuing attention by the inter-governmental and regional organizations, in particular the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the European Union, as well as through the Central European Initiative, to the needs of the affected States for assistance in developing regional transport and communication infrastructures,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 25 January 1995 entitled "Supplement to An Agenda for Peace: position paper of the Secretary-General on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations",^b in particular its chapter III.E, on the issue of United Nations sanctions,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General of 12 September 1995 on the implementation of resolution 49/21 A and, in particular, of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein,

1. Commends the States bordering on the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the other Danube riparian States and all other States for the measures they have taken to comply with Security Council resolutions 713(1991) of 25 September 1991, 757(1992) of 30 May 1992, 760(1992) of 18 June 1992, 787(1992) of 16 November 1992, 820(1993) of 17 April 1993 and 1021(1995) and 1022(1995) of 22 November 1995, and urges all States to continue to observe those resolutions strictly;

2. Expresses concern at the persisting special economic problems confronting States, in particular the States that border the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the other Danube riparian States and all other States adversely affected by the severance of their economic relations with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the disruption of traditional transport and communications links in that part of Europe and their long-term adverse impact on the economies of those States;

3. Reaffirms the urgent need of a concerted response from the international community to deal in a more effective manner with the special economic problems of the affected States in view of their magnitude and the adverse impact of the sanctions on those States;

4. Renews its invitation to the international financial institutions, in particular the International Monetary Fund, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, to continue to pay special attention to the economic problems of the affected States and their adverse social impact and to consider ways and means for mobilizing and providing resources on ap-appropriate terms for mitigating the continuing negative impact of the sanctions on the efforts of the affected States for financial stabilization as well as for development of regional transport and communications infrastructure;

5. Renews its request to the competent organs, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system to take into consideration, in programming their development activities, the special needs of the affected States and to consider providing assistance to them from their special programme resources;

6. Renews its appeal to all States, on an urgent basis, to provide technical, financial and material assistance to the affected States to mitigate the adverse impact of the sanctions on their economies, inter alia, through the consideration of measures for the promotion of exports of the affected countries and for the promotion of investments in their economies;

7. Encourages the States of the region affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to continue, inter alia, to cooperate actively on a regional basis in such fields as cross-border infrastructure projects or promotion of trade, thus alleviating the adverse impact of the sanctions;

8. Urges the organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system rendering humanitarian assistance to Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), including material and food supply for the United Nations Protection Force and other United Nations peace-keeping contingents, to take appropriate steps to broaden access for suppliers, particularly from the States affected by the implementation of the Security Council mandatory sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate measures to increase the opportunity for countries affected by the sanctions to participate actively in the post-conflict reconstruction and rehabilitation of the crisis-stricken areas of former Yugoslavia after the achievement of a peaceful, lasting and just political solution of the conflict in the Balkans;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to seek on a regular basis information from States and regional organizations and the concerned organs and agencies of the United Nations system on action taken to alleviate the special economic problems of those States and to report thereon to the Security Council, as well as to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Yemen

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/41.

Provision of assistance for the repair of war damage in the Republic of Yemen

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the unification of the two parts of Yemen and the formation of the Republic of Yemen in May 1990

as a unified State exercising national sovereignty over all Yemeni territory,

Also recalling General Assembly resolution 45/222 of 21 December 1990, Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/62 of 26 July 1991 and other resolutions concerning the provision of assistance to the Republic of Yemen,

Appreciating the difficulties that the Republic of Yemen is facing in its endeavours to preserve its national unity, strengthen democracy and respect for human rights and boost its economic development,

Mindful of the essential needs of the process of repairing the damage caused by the recent war and meeting development requirements in the Republic of Yemen,

1. Appeals to all Member States, all organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and all other international organizations and institutions to provide the requisite support and assistance to the Government of the Republic of Yemen to repair the war damage suffered by the economic infrastructure;

2. Calls upon those bodies to intensify their efforts to assist the Republic of Yemen to implement national reconstruction and development programmes;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council at its substantive session of 1996 of the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Report of the Secretary-General. Responding to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽²²⁾ in July 1995 on assistance to Yemen. Unification, the return of Yemeni expatriates, the flow of refugees and natural disasters in recent years had led the Government of Yemen to request large-scale foreign assistance in 1993.⁽²³⁾ The World Bank and the Government, together with UNDP and other UN agencies, had developed a multisectoral emergency recovery programme in the amount of $245 million for road construction, education, agriculture and housing. To date, the World Bank had mobilized $60 million in credits and grants while UNDP had provided $400,000. Activities targeted to programme objectives by the UN Capital Development Fund, UNICEF, the Netherlands and others brought total funds available for the programme to $86 million.

UNDP's country programme for Yemen concentrated on strategic planning, management and human development and natural resources management. Seed money had been provided to support strategic planning for the private sector, health development and women in development. Although studies had been carried out on vocational training, environment, water and privatization, approvals and budget build-up had been slow owing to internal political conflict. WFP continued to provide food aid to 13,000 Ethiopian and Somali refugees in Yemen. In addition, it supported development of rural community infrastructure, soil and water conservation, primary education, maternal and child health-care centres, and health-care units and hospitals. Control of diarrhoeal diseases, health education and vaccinations were provided by WHO.

Disaster relief

In 1995, DHA coordinated the international response in support of 55 countries faced with the sudden impact of 82 natural disasters and environmental emergencies. In 28 cases, disaster-affected countries requested DHA to launch appeals for international assistance on their behalf. Contributions of $7,399,378 were channelled through DHA, while emergency grants came to $1.21 million. UN Disaster Assessment and Coordination Teams were dispatched to nine countries. Under the Disaster Management Training Programme, jointly managed since 1990 by DHA and UNDP, country workshops were held in Azerbaijan, Cuba, Eritrea, Mozambique and Papua New Guinea, and a subregional workshop was organized in Morocco for countries of the Arab Maghreb Union.

Major natural disasters during the year included earthquakes in Indonesia, Japan, the Russian Federation and Turkey; floods in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea; a hurricane in the Caribbean; a volcano eruption in Cape Verde; chemical accidents and environmental emergencies in Guyana, Rwanda and Seychelles; and a chemical waste dumping-site fire in Slovenia.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

Report of the Secretary-General (June). In response to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁾ in June 1995 on progress made in programme activities of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (IDNDR) (1990-2000), proclaimed by the Assembly in 1989.⁽³⁾ He also discussed the International Framework of Action for IDNDR and the programme for the period 1995-2000.

The 1994 World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction⁽⁴⁾ had provided the impetus and exerted a strong influence on programme activity for the second half of the Decade. With renewed emphasis on practical applications at the national and local levels, the importance of regional and subregional organizations was growing. In addition, there was recognition of the interdependency between natural disaster reduction, environmental and natural resources management and sustainable development. The IDNDR secretariat placed emphasis on integrating disaster reduction into national development planning. Despite contributions in cash and kind, the Trust Fund for the Decade remained under-funded, barely able to support essential functions of the International Framework of Action for the Decade,⁽⁵⁾ including the Special High-level Council, the Scientific and Technical Committee and the secretariat, and equally limited its capacity to support disaster-reduction projects.

The Secretary-General stated that, while the objective of the Decade and targets of the programme of the Decade remained valid, policy orientation should be shifted from promotional aspects of disaster reduction, which had been the main focus of activities before the Conference, to a much greater commitment to the practical implementation of disaster-reduction measures. He recommended an action plan composed of core activities in the areas of development of national capacities; application of knowledge and technology; information management, public information and promotion; and international collaboration. With regard to a proposed second world conference to be held not later than the year 2000, the Secretary-General suggested that it should be used to arrange continuous interdisciplinary and cross-sectoral interaction of all partners in the Decade. The IDNDR secretariat would serve as the conference secretariat.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1995/238 of 19 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Secretary-General and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

On 27 July, it adopted resolution 1995/47 B on the International Decade.

The Economic and Social Council

1. Recognizes that disaster reduction forms an integral part of sustainable development strategies and national development plans of vulnerable countries and communities;
2. Also recognizes that concerted international action is required to promote and apply disaster reduction effectively and that it must be supported by effective coordination of the day-to-day activities for which the secretariat of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction is responsible;

3. Commends the work of the bodies comprising the International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, in particular their contribution to the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and the Plan of Action contained therein;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 49/22 A of 2 December 1994;

5. Takes note in particular of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General concerning the development of a coordinated international programme for disaster reduction, including the strengthening of the International Framework of Action for the Decade and the closing event of the Decade;

6. Again urges all United Nations bodies that are involved in disaster reduction activities to give priority to integrating, coordinating and strengthening their work to build the capacities of disaster-prone countries and regions in the field of disaster prevention, mitigation and preparedness, with particular consideration for the needs of the least developed countries and small island and land-locked developing States;

7. Expresses its concern about the continuing financial limitations with regard to effective support for the International Framework of Action for the Decade and in relation to the national, subregional, regional and international activities for the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy and the Plan of Action contained therein, as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/22 A;

8. Calls upon Member States, relevant intergovernmental bodies and all others involved in the Decade to provide adequate financial resources and technical support for the activities of the Decade;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, therefore, to include in his report to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session an examination of options from all existing sources for an adequate funding of the core functions of the secretariat of the Decade, and to specify those functions in his report;

10. Recommends that the General Assembly, at its fiftieth session, consider the question of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction as a separate sub-item under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development";

11. Also recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the draft resolution annexed to the present resolution.

Report of the Secretary-General (November).

Pursuant to the Council's request (above), the Secretary-General submitted a November report,⁽⁵⁾ describing the core functions, staff and cost of the IDNDR secretariat. Established for the period of the Decade, the secretariat supported and coordinated the International Framework of Action for the Decade; implemented the goals of the Decade; followed up on the 1994 World Conference; and supported all aspects of promotion of the Decade's goals and objectives, and advocacy of natural disaster reduction. With additional responsibilities entrusted to the secretariat for the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World and the Plan of Action, both adopted at the World Conference, as well as for preparatory work for the second conference to be held at the end of the Decade, it had a larger staff than originally foreseen. All activities and secretariat costs had been financed exclusively from extra-budgetary resources made available to the Trust Fund for the Decade. Out of $8 million contributed to the Trust Fund to date, an overall expenditure of $7.1 million had been incurred, about 87 per cent of which was staff and operational costs, limiting the secretariat's efforts to undertake necessary and additional activities that had financial implications beyond the available resources.

The Secretary-General suggested several funding options to attain financial security for the secretariat: the private sector, broadening the donor base, pledging for the remaining period of the Decade until 1999, the use of the Trust Fund as a channelling mechanism for voluntary contributions, and strengthening the secondment of specialist expertise.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/117 A.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 48/188 of 21 December 1993, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994 and 49/22 B of 20 December 1994,

Expressing its solidarity with the people and countries that suffer as a result of natural disasters,

Emphasizing once again the urgent need for concrete measures to reduce the vulnerability of societies to natural hazards, the loss of human lives and the heavy physical and economic damage that occur as a result of natural disasters, in particular in developing countries, small island States and land-locked countries,

Reiterating the validity of the conclusions of the first World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction, held at Yokohama, Japan, from 23 to 27 May 1994, in particular with regard to its call for increased bilateral, subregional, regional and multilateral cooperation in the field of disaster prevention, preparedness and mitigation, Commending those countries, national and local institutions, organizations and associations that have adopted policies, allocated resources and initiated action programmes, including international assistance, for disaster reduction and, in this context, welcoming the participation of private companies and individuals,

Also commending all countries and intergovernmental and regional organizations that have actively engaged in regional and subregional assessments of vulnerability to natural hazards and have consequently initiated regional and subregional cooperation in the field of disaster reduction, including the exchange of data and technology, as well as the development of joint administrative, technological and scientific approaches for applied disaster reduction,

Further commending those organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations, scientific associations and non-governmental organizations which, in accordance with decisions of their governing bodies, have incorporated the recommendations of the General Assembly relating to disaster reduction and those of the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction in their programmes of work, thus contributing towards effective progress in disaster reduction in their mandated responsibilities and respective fields of activity, including the allocation of budgetary resources for disaster reduction,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the specific measures for the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness and Mitigation and its Plan of Action, and requests the secretariat of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction to continue to promote and monitor their translation into concrete activities, in close cooperation with all bodies comprising the International Framework of Action for the Decade, so as to ensure timely and effective implementation;

2. Commends those developing and least developed countries that have mobilized domestic resources for disaster reduction activities and have facilitated the effective implementation of such activities, and encourages all developing countries concerned to continue in this direction;

3. Recommends that all countries, with appropriate support, continue to study conventional and non-conventional ways and means of financing disaster reduction measures, both at the national level and with respect to subregional, regional and international technical cooperation;

4. Calls upon Member States, relevant intergovernmental bodies and all others involved in the Decade to participate actively in the financial and technical support of Decade activities, in order to ensure the implementation of the International Framework of Action for the Decade, in particular with a view to translating the Yokohama Strategy and the Plan of Action contained therein into concrete disaster reduction programmes and activities;

5. Requests the Commission on Sustainable Development to pay appropriate attention at its fourth session to the issue of disaster reduction when considering the relevant chapters of Agenda 21 and of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

6. Welcomes the measures proposed by the Secretary-General to bring the International Framework of Action for the Decade into line with the Yokohama Strategy and its Plan of Action, in order to provide disaster reduction activities worldwide and regionally with authoritative and effective programme guidance so as to ensure stronger cohesion of disaster reduction programmes and the joint participation of concerned sectors in their implementation;

7. Notes the initiative for an informal mechanism between the secretariat of the Decade and Member States, intended to facilitate and support the promotion of Decade activities and the regular exchange of information between Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other organizations;

8. Welcomes, in pursuance of its resolution 49/22 A, the restructuring of the Special High-Level Council and the Scientific and Technical Committee for the Decade so that for the second half of the Decade they will provide the necessary support to global, regional and national policy and strategy development, public awareness-building and resource mobilization, and at the same time provide links with the scientific community and support the national committees for the Decade and national authorities in their cooperative efforts to integrate disaster reduction programmes into national activities for sustainable development;

9. Endorses the decision of the Secretary-General to extend until the end of the Decade the mandate of the United Nations Steering Committee for the Decade, established in pursuance of General Assembly resolutions 42/169 of 11 December 1987 and 44/236;

10. Emphasizes that effective and efficient coordination and servicing of the above-mentioned components of the International Framework of Action for the Decade require a financially and structurally stable secretariat of the Decade, reporting to the Secretary-General through the Emergency Relief Coordinator;

11. Decides, in pursuance of its resolution 49/22 A, to convene a closing event of the Decade, through coordinated sectoral and cross-sectoral meetings at all levels, in order to facilitate the full integration of disaster reduction into the substantive efforts for sustainable development and environmental protection by the year 2000;

12. Decides also that the secretariat of the Decade will serve as the substantive secretariat for the preparation of the closing event of the Decade, working with the full support of relevant bodies of the United Nations Secretariat and drawing on the contributions of the organizations of the United Nations system concerned, other international organizations and Governments;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the availability of resources for the preparatory process, including the necessary enhancement of the capacity of the secretariat, and to appeal for additional voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Decade;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the International Framework of Action for the Decade;

15. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report containing proposals on how the distinct programme and coordination capability of the secretariat of the Decade might be enhanced so as to enable it to coordinate effectively the activities of the Decade and the integration of natural disaster reduction into the sustainable development process;

16. Decides to consider the question of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction at its fifty-first session, as a separate sub-item under environmental questions related to the environment and sustainable development.

General Assembly resolution 50/117 A

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/618/Add.5) without vote, 5 December (meeting 41); draft recommended by ESC in res. 1995/47 B (A/C.2/50/L.5); agenda item 96 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 39, 41; plenary 96.

By decision 50/435, also of 20 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's November report.

Early-warning capacities of the UN system

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/47 A on the International Decade.

The Economic and Social Council

1. Recognizes the importance of reliable and hazard-resistant telecommunications for natural disaster reduction, in particular in support of early warning at the community, national, regional and international levels;

2. Invites the Secretary-General, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 49/22 B of 20 December 1994, to include, in his report to the Assembly at its fiftieth session on the early-warning capacities of the United Nations system with regard to natural disasters, proposals for further improvements in the field of disaster-related telecommunications;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to ensure, in pursuance of resolution 36 of the Plenipotentiary Conference of the International Telecommunication Union, held at Kyoto, Japan, in 1994, close cooperation between the International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the International Telecommunication Union.

Meeting numbers. ESC 42-44, 49, 56.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request⁽⁶⁾ and the Economic and Social Council's 1995 request (above), the Secretary-General reported⁽⁷⁾ in October on early-warning capacities of the UN system with regard to natural disasters. He reviewed the current early-warning activities of UN organizations and proposed improvements and ways in which they might be coordinated more effectively. Consideration was given to the roles of technology and telecommunications in the warning process.

Numerous activities had been under way within the UN system, contributing to different aspects of the early-warning process, such as for meteorological and hydrological hazards (hurricane, cyclone), geophysical hazards (earthquake, volcanic activity, tsunami), environmental hazards (drought) and technological hazards (industrial accidents). However, a review of early-warning activities of UN organizations revealed gaps and requirements for future improvements in effectiveness and coordination of early warning. The Secretary-General proposed that an informal mechanism be established to develop international doctrine and operational standards for better coordinated global early-warning analysis, forecasting and dissemination. He encouraged Governments to assess how adequately existing international, regional and national warning systems addressed their own needs to provide ready access to warnings for all citizens, and to designate a national body as the focus for the coordination of early warnings based on an all-hazards approach.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/117 B on the International Decade.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994 and 49/22 B of 20 December 1994,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1995/47 A and B of 27 July 1995,

Concerned about the continued threat posed by natural disasters and similar disasters with an adverse impact on vulnerable communities, including their environments, particularly in developing countries,

Concerned also about the continuing threat posed by natural disasters and similar disasters with an adverse impact on the environment,

Recalling the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World: Guidelines for Natural Disaster Prevention, Preparedness, and Mitigation and its Plan of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Natural Disaster Reduction on 27 May 1994,

Taking into account already existing early-warning capacities within the United Nations system, in particular within the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Meteorological Organization, the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Conscious of the need to avoid duplication of work among United Nations bodies dealing with early-warning capacities,

Emphasizing that early warnings of impending natural disasters and similar disasters with an adverse impact on the environment, linked to effective disaster preparedness measures and their effective dissemination, using, in particular, telecommunications, including broadcast services, are key factors to successful disaster prevention and preparedness,

Reaffirming that sustained economic growth and sustainable development are essential for the prevention of and preparedness for natural disasters and similar disasters with an adverse impact on the environment and that special attention should be given to disaster prevention and preparedness by the Governments concerned as well as by the international community,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on early-warning capacities of the United Nations system with regard to natural disasters and similar disasters with an adverse impact on the environment;

2. Commends the secretariat of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, as part of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat, and all concerned agencies and organizations of the United Nations system for the constructive inter-agency approach they have applied, which has led to this initial overview and analysis of early-warning concepts, capacities and gaps and to proposals for improvements in coordination and capacity-building with regard to such disasters;

3. Requests the Scientific and Technical Committee of the Decade to continue, within the scope of its work on early-warning capabilities, to examine and study new scientific and experimental concepts and methodologies for accurate and timely short-term forecasting of earthquakes, other natural disasters and similar disasters with an adverse impact on the environment, with a view to making recommendations on their applicability and development in the context of international cooperation to improve preparedness for and minimize the risks of such disasters;

4. Takes note of the conclusions and proposals made by the Secretary-General in his report with respect to the improvement of early-warning capabilities, better international coordination in their use, and more effective and beneficial exchange of knowledge and technology;

5. Invites the Secretary-General, in particular, to facilitate, within the existing International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, an internationally concerted framework for improvements in early-warning capacities by developing a concrete proposal for an effective international mechanism on early warning, to include the transfer of technologies related to early warning to developing countries, under the auspices of the United Nations and as part of the implementation of the International Framework, the Yokohama Strategy for a Safer World and its Plan of Action;

6. Also invites the Secretary-General to take the steps necessary to make the early-warning data gathered under the United Nations auspices readily available to the decision makers concerned at the international, national, regional and subregional levels;

7. Encourages all Governments to undertake, with the full support of the United Nations system, regular reviews of early-warning requirements and capabilities at national and community levels, within the framework of the development of national disaster reduction policies in order to enhance protection of their national populations and assets;

8. Calls on the secretariat of the Decade to continue to facilitate a concerted international approach to improvements in early-warning capacities for natural disasters and similar disasters with an adverse impact on the environment, within the process leading towards the closing event of the Decade;

9. Recommends that donor countries give greater priority to disaster prevention, preparedness and mitigation in their assistance programmes and budgets, on either a bilateral or multilateral basis, including through increasing contributions to the Trust Fund for the Decade, and promote and facilitate the transfer of technologies related to early warning to developing countries within the framework of the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy and its Plan of Action;

10. Encourages improved efforts, in the context of international technical assistance and cooperation within the framework of the implementation of the Yokohama Strategy and its Plan of Action, towards facilitating the availability of appropriate technology and reliable data, along with the corresponding training, and access to network systems related to early warning, particularly to developing countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Drought-stricken areas

Sudano-Sahelian region

Pursuant to a 1995 decision of the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA,⁽⁸⁾ the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO), the central entity within UNDP in the area of desertification control and drought preparedness, was renamed the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought, while keeping its acronym. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/232 of 13 July, took note of the change of name.

In his annual report covering 1995,⁽⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that UNSO supported 43 affected countries (24 in Africa and 19 in Asia and Latin America) in preparing for implementation of the 1994 International Convention to Combat Desertification in Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa.⁽¹⁰⁾ UNSO provided catalytic funding and training and capacity-building. It also provided technical advice for: the national and subregional action programme processes, development of guidelines and tools for operationalizing the Convention, awareness-raising, building partnerships and resource mobilization. African Governments were assisted in strengthening the capacity of country offices and national focal points to build genuine partnership arrangements and national compacts as required by the Convention. UNSO provided technical and catalytic support to Cape Verde, where the first national forum since the adoption of the Convention was held in November 1995. In Argentina, UNSO supported the preparation and realization of the first national conference on desertification.

UNSO made $625,000 available to the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development, the Arab Maghreb Union and the Southern African Development Community for joint conceptualization and initiation of the subregional action programme. UNSO played a leading role in promoting and defining the concept of national desertification funds, which were viewed as a key tool for mobilizing and channelling resources to the local level. Its awareness-raising activities included catalytic support to 47 countries for the first World Day to Combat Desertification (17 June).

In April, UNDP and the United Nations Environment Programme signed an agreement forming a partnership to combat desertification, under which the two organizations were to develop joint programme packages in areas of complementary expertise, broaden their geographic scope to cover all affected countries and mobilize the necessary resources.

Hurricanes and cyclones

The Caribbean region

On 4, 5 and 6 September, Hurricane Luis hit a group of small island States and a territory of the eastern Caribbean, namely Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis and Sint Maarten. It caused damage of more than $1 billion to businesses, homes, schools, churches and government buildings, and destroyed electricity and telephone systems. At the request of Antigua and Barbuda, DHA issued an international appeal, to which the international community responded by contributing $17.8 million as at 24 October.

UNDP action. On 15 September,⁽¹⁾ the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA, acknowledging the fragile ecosystems of small island countries and their particular vulnerability to natural disasters, requested the Administrator to continue to support the effective coordination of response measures and contribute to the mobilization of resources for the response effort.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 September, the General Assembly adopted resolution 49/21 P.

Emergency Assistance to Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Montserrat, Saint Kitts and Nevis and Sint Maarten (Netherlands Antilles)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/169 of 11 December 1987, 43/202 of 20 December 1988, 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 45/185 of 21 December 1990, 46/149 of 18 December 1991, 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 48/188 of 21 December 1993 and 49/22 A of 2 December 1994,

Deeply distressed by the large number of afflicted persons and the destruction wrought by Hurricane Luis, which on 4 and 5 September 1995 devastated Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Montserrat, Saint Kitts and Nevis, and Sint Maarten (Netherlands Antilles),

Conscious of the efforts of the Governments and peoples of Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis and the people of Sint Maarten (Netherlands Antilles) to save lives and alleviate the sufferings of the victims of Hurricane Luis,

Noting the enormous effort that will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster,

Conscious of the prompt response being made by Governments, the bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, international and regional agencies, non-governmental organizations and private individuals to provide relief,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the disaster and its medium-term and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the Governments and peoples of Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis and the people of Sint Maarten (Netherlands Antilles), a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad multilateral cooperation in order to meet the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas and to initiate the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Governments and peoples of Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis and the people of Sint Maarten (Netherlands Antilles);

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States of the international community, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief to the affected countries;

3. Urges all States of the international community, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the affected countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the international financial institutions and bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, to assist the Governments of Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis and the people of Sint Maarten (Netherlands Antilles) in identifying their medium-term and long-term needs and in mobilizing resources, as well as to help with the task of reconstruction of the affected countries undertaken by their respective Governments;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session a report on the collaborative effort referred to in paragraph 4 above and on progress made with the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the affected countries.

Madagascar

Pursuant to a 1994 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in July 1995 a report⁽¹³⁾ summarizing measures taken following the cyclones and floods in Madagascar in 1994.

A network of regional disaster relief centres created under a joint DHA/UNDP project from 1987 to 1993, and staff training and stockpiling of relief materials for emergency operations undertaken by DHA turned out to be very viable, the Secretary-General reported. In addition, the centres were given responsibility for monitoring food situations and carrying out food relief operations. A national fund, established to meet the costs relating to rehabilitation and reconstruction activities remained modest, while a national highways fund, solely for the reconstruction of highway infrastructure damaged by natural disasters, had 1.3 million Malagasy francs set aside for 1995. A programme for the regular maintenance of the highway infrastructure had been implemented. The World Bank supported a government project that addressed the conservation, development and restoration of cultivated areas. Other areas of support included disaster-monitoring, early warning and a statistical information system to monitor the availability of rice, the staple food of Madagascar.

The Secretary-General concluded that, in spite of all those efforts, Madagascar remained vulnerable to the impact of natural disasters. The main factor was lack of resources, which had also constrained adequate reconstruction and rehabilitation of the cyclone- and flood-affected areas. Resource limitations had also affected the development of effective coordination and management of relief and reconstruction activities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/43.

Assistance for the reconstruction of Madagascar following the natural disasters of 1994

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 48/234 of 14 February 1994 on emergency assistance to Madagascar and Economic and Social Council resolution 1994/36 of 29 July 1994 concerning the measures to be taken following the cyclones and floods that had affected Madagascar,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 1994/36,

Noting with concern that, despite the efforts made by the Government of Madagascar and by the international community, in particular the organizations of the United Nations system, the resources mobilized are inadequate and that Madagascar remains vulnerable to the impact of natural disasters,

Bearing in mind the fact that, apart from the immediate damage, such repeated climatic phenomena have residual effects which weaken the country's economic base, hold up its economic and social progress, and frustrate its development policy,

Considering that the country's sustainable development requires a capacity to overcome the after-effects of natural disasters and that disaster aid and relief should accordingly include a long-term dimension,

1. Urges all States to continue and intensify their participation in the implementation of the programmes for the recovery and reconstruction of the areas and sectors affected by the cyclones and floods;

2. Requests international and regional organizations, the specialized agencies, financial institutions and voluntary institutions to support, within the framework of their respective programmes, the requests for assistance formulated by the Government of Madagascar during the recovery and reconstruction phase;

3. Invites international cooperation to take into account, in the objectives of its assistance operations, the need to reduce the country's vulnerability to natural disasters and to safeguard its development process;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to help the Government of Madagascar to mobilize the resources needed to overcome the effects of the natural disasters and neutralize their repercussions on the development process;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to inform the Council at its substantive session of 1996 of the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/58 I.

Assistance for the reconstruction of Madagascar following the natural disasters of 1994

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/234 of 14 February 1994,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1994/36 of 29 July 1994 and 1995/43 of 27 July 1995,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 14 July 1995 relating to the implementation of resolution 48/234 and in particular the conclusions reached therein,

Noting with concern that, despite the efforts made by the Government of Madagascar and by the international community, in particular the organizations of the United Nations system, the resources mobilized are still inadequate, and that Madagascar remains vulnerable to the impact of natural disasters,

Noting that the implementation of the programmes for disaster prevention and for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the areas affected by natural disasters requires the mobilization of substantial resources that are beyond the country's real means,

Noting also that each country has responsibility for natural disaster prevention and that reconstruction and rehabilitation efforts will be enhanced by continuing national development efforts,

Considering that Madagascar's sustainable development requires a long-term capacity to prepare for and prevent disasters and to overcome the residual effects of these repeated climatic phenomena, and recognizing that the assistance provided should take this into account,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the international community, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme for the efforts they have made to supplement the action of the Government of Madagascar in the implementation of programmes for disaster prevention and for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the areas and sectors affected by natural disasters;

2. Urges all States and governmental and non-governmental organizations, together with United Nations organizations, programmes and specialized agencies, in particular the international financial institutions, to increase their support to the Government of Madagascar with a view to preventing disasters and mitigating their effects on Madagascar's development process;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources to assist the Government of Madagascar in the reconstruction of Madagascar;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Chernobyl aftermath

Communications. In a letter of 8 June,⁽¹⁴⁾ the President of Ukraine informed the Secretary-General that Ukraine had decided to close down the Chernobyl nuclear plant before the year 2000 but would require relevant technical, technological and financial assistance from the seven major industrialized Powers, the European Union, international organizations and the financial institutions. On 9 October,⁽¹⁵⁾ Ukraine further communicated that it deemed it extremely important that a thorough and in-depth study be undertaken on the consequences of the Chernobyl accident. To that end, Ukraine proposed the establishment of an International Scientific and Technological Centre for Nuclear and Radiological Accidents and solicited suggestions regarding the orientation of scientific research, the organization of work and the participation of representatives of foreign States in its activities.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a September 1995 report,⁽¹⁷⁾ in which he described the extent of the humanitarian disaster facing the three most affected countries—Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine—and the broader social and economic context in which the protracted humanitarian crisis had, and was continuing to be, played out. He also summarized the international response to date in eliminating the consequences of the Chernobyl accident.

While at least 400,000 people had chosen or been forced to leave their homes because of radioactive contamination, health risks continued to affect a great number of people. Thyroid cancers, immunological deficiencies, anaemia, neurocirculatory problems and respiratory ailments had shown an increase and, according to WHO, morbidity and mortality rates among Chernobyl recovery workers were growing. While the shrinkage of the absolute size of GDP continued in all three affected countries, they had been forced to dedicate enormous portions of their budgets to addressing Chernobyl's consequences. Huge tracts of formerly productive agricultural and forest land had been rendered uninhabitable and unusable for generations.

The response of the international community had been particularly inconsistent with a large imbalance between research activities and financial and material assistance offered to the three countries. The UN Trust Fund for Chernobyl became virtually empty, exhausting funds raised at the 1991 pledging conference,⁽¹⁸⁾ and WHO lacked funds to extend its International Programme on the Health Effects of the Chernobyl Accident beyond the pilot phase. At a meeting of the Expanded Quadripartite Committee for Coordination on Chernobyl (New York, 29 November), convened by the UN Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl, it was agreed that the tenth (1996) anniversary of the accident was to be used both to bring worldwide attention back to Chernobyl and to mark a change in the international approach to Chernobyl's problems; the focus had to be shifted from humanitarian to re-development assistance.

Expressing concern about the lack of resources, the Secretary-General said that Chernobyl was still a major humanitarian tragedy and the magnitude of its effects would continue to grow over the next 10 years. He stressed that a limited but effective range of practical, health-related projects should receive first priority, while economic projects should focus on creating a full legal framework for foreign investment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/134.

Strengthening of international cooperation and coordination of efforts to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/190 of 21 December 1990, 46/150 of 18 December 1991, 47/165 of 18 December 1992 and 48/206 of 21 December 1993,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1990/50 of 13 July 1990, 1991/51 of 26 July 1991 and

1992/38 of 30 July 1992 and Council decision 1993/232 of 22 July 1993,

Taking note of the decisions adopted by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 45/190, 46/150, 47/165 and 48/206,

Noting with appreciation the contribution made by Member States and by organizations of the United Nations system to the development of cooperation to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, and the activities of regional and other organizations, in particular the Commission of the European Communities, as well as bilateral activities and those of non-governmental organizations,

Welcoming the commitments made by Member States in the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations, adopted on 24 October 1995, to intensify cooperation on natural disaster reduction and major technological and man-made disasters, disaster relief, post-disaster rehabilitation and humanitarian assistance in order to enhance the capabilities of affected countries to cope with such situations,

Conscious of the forthcoming tenth anniversary of the disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, which became the largest technological catastrophe in terms of its scope and created humanitarian, environmental, social, economic and health consequences and problems of common concern, requiring for their solution wide and active international cooperation and coordination of efforts in this field at the international and national levels,

Expressing profound concern about the ongoing effects on the lives and health of people, particularly children, in the affected areas of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, as well as in other countries most affected by the Chernobyl disaster,

Noting the readiness of Ukraine in principle to close the Chernobyl nuclear power plant by the year 2000, bearing in mind the need for adequate support from relevant countries and international organizations for that purpose,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 8 September 1995 on the implementation of resolution 48/206,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 45/190, 46/150, 47/165 and 48/206 and, through existing coordination mechanisms, in particular the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl, to continue to maintain close cooperation with the agencies of the United Nations system, as well as with regional and other relevant organizations, with a view to encouraging the regular exchange of information, cooperation and coordination of multilateral and bilateral efforts in those areas, while implementing programmes and specific projects, inter alia, in the framework of relevant agreements and arrangements;

2. Invites Member States, in particular donor States, relevant multilateral financial institutions and other concerned parties of the international community, including non-governmental organizations, to provide support to the ongoing efforts made by Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine to cope with the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, and requests the Secretary-General to appeal to Member States to continue and intensify that assistance;

3. Notes the establishment in Ukraine of an International Scientific and Technological Centre for Nuclear and Radiological Accidents as an important step towards enhancing the capabilities of the international community to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of such accidents, and invites all interested parties to take part in its activities;

4. Declares 26 April 1996 International Day Commemorating the Tenth Anniversary of the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant Accident, and invites Member States to conduct appropriate activities to commemorate this tragic event and to enhance public awareness of the consequences of such disasters for human health and the environment throughout the world;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, under a separate sub-item, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

In keeping with the recent trend, international trade again exceeded world output in 1994, rising in volume by close to 9 per cent, mainly due to expansion of trade in manufactures. The prices of many non-oil commodities rose sharply during the year, partly because of an upsurge in demand but also because of speculative trading and a declining dollar. The United States and Western Europe received a strong impetus from exports, especially to the developing countries in East and South-East Asia and Latin America. Although Africa showed a slight improvement in terms of trade, long-term development performance remained depressed by commodity dependence, poor infrastructure, over-indebtedness, low levels of domestic investment and caution by foreign investors, as well as by political instability and conflicts.

Preparations for the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD IX), to be held in 1996, began with the approval in March 1995 by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) of a development-oriented provisional agenda. Following an offer from South Africa, received during TDB's September session, the General Assembly in December decided to convene UNCTAD IX in Midrand, Gauteng Province. The Conference was to have the unifying theme: "Promoting growth and sustainable development in a globalizing and liberalizing world economy".

Following consideration of international trade and development issues in December, the Assembly invited UNCTAD to follow developments in the international trading system, particularly their implications for developing countries, and to identify new trading opportunities arising from the implementation of the 1994 Uruguay Round agreements.

Questions of trade, environment and sustainable development were discussed by the Commission on Sustainable Development and by UNCTAD's Ad Hoc Working Group on Trade, Environment and Development, which completed its work in 1995. The Assembly invited UNCTAD and the UN Environment Programme to continue their joint programme on trade and environment issues.

The Third UN Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices took place in November.

The Conference requested the UNCTAD secretariat to revise periodically the commentary to the model law on restrictive business practices and to disseminate widely the model law and its commentary. In the area of commodities, the International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1995, was adopted in February and opened for signature in April.

The debt of low-income and some middle-income countries continued to cause concern during 1995. The Assembly in December called on the international community to implement the commitments of the major UN conferences and summits on development, organized since the beginning of the 1990s, addressing the question of external debt.

The newly named Commission on International Investment and Transnational Corporations met in April to discuss trends in foreign direct investment (FDI) and related issues. It recognized the role of investment for development, especially for Africa, and supported international activities to increase FDI flows.

With regard to transport, the Economic and Social Council, having reviewed the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, requested the Committee to elaborate proposals for globally harmonized criteria for the classification of flammable, explosive and reactive materials.

Preparations for UNCTAD IX

As requested by TDB in 1994,⁽¹⁾ the Officer-in-Charge of UNCTAD carried out informal, open-ended consultations on the provisional agenda for the ninth session of UNCTAD, to be held in 1996. At the second part of its forty-first session (Geneva, 20-31 March 1995),⁽²⁾ TDB approved the provisional agenda and agreed annotations for UNCTAD IX, requested the Officer-in-Charge to complete the provisional agenda with the customary procedural and administrative items and annexed to its report a background note on the agenda, prepared by the secretariat. On 31 March, TDB noted the Final Communiqué of the Eighteenth Meeting of the Chairmen and Coordinators of the Group of 77 (developing countries) Chapters (Geneva, 14-15 March)⁽³⁾ and annexed it to its report.

At its tenth executive session on 4 May, TDB agreed⁽⁴⁾ that exploratory work should be undertaken on new and emerging issues on the international trade agenda within the preparatory process of UNCTAD IX, in accordance with the provisional agenda and agreed annotations for the Conference. The UNCTAD secretariat was encouraged to take into account relevant work being done in other forums.

On 18 September, during the first part of TDB's forty-second session (Geneva, 11-20 September), a teleconference was held between Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Geneva, Johannesburg (South Africa) and New York, in the course of which the Premier of Gauteng Province announced South Africa's offer to host UNCTAD IX in Midrand from 27 April to 11 May 1996.

Also on 18 September, TDB agreed⁽⁵⁾ that UNCTAD IX should take place in Midrand from 27 April to 11 May 1996, preceded by a one-day senior officials' meeting, and recommended the location and dates to the General Assembly. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to make the necessary arrangements for the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/98.

Ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as an organ of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 47/183 of 22 December 1992 in which it, inter alia, emphasized the importance of the Cartagena Commitment, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its eighth session, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 8 to 25 February 1992,

Expressing its satisfaction with the early and unanimous agreement reached by the Trade and Development Board, at the second part of its forty-first session, on the development-oriented provisional agenda for the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, pursuant to which, under the unifying theme "Promoting growth and sustainable development in a globalizing and liberalizing world economy", the Conference will be addressing the following topics:

(a) Development policies and strategies in an increasingly interdependent world economy in the 1990s and beyond:

- (i) Assessment of the development problématique in the current context;
- (ii) Policies and strategies for the future;

(b) Promoting international trade as an instrument for development in the post-Uruguay-Round world;

(c) Promoting enterprise development and competitiveness in developing countries and countries in transition;

(d) Future work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in accordance with its mandate: institutional implications,

Considering that the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development is a major intergovernmental economic and development event of 1996 within the United Nations,

Taking note of the recommendation of the Trade and Development Board that the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should be held at Midrand, Gauteng Province, South Africa, from 27 April to 11 May 1996, preceded by a one-day meeting of senior officials on 26 April 1996,

1. Welcomes with appreciation the generous offer made by the Government of South Africa to host the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

2. Decides to convene the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at Midrand, Gauteng Province, South Africa, from 27 April to 11 May 1996, to be preceded by a one-day meeting of senior officials at the same place on 26 April 1996;

3. Stresses the crucial importance of the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in considering the topics of its provisional agenda, and affirms the need to achieve through the session a constructive and action-oriented outcome;

4. Calls upon all Governments to ensure their full participation, at the highest possible political level, in the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to establish a fund to which voluntary contributions can be made with a view to contributing to the participation of representatives of the least developed countries in the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

6. Urges all Governments to take appropriate steps to ensure adequate preparations at the national, regional and interregional levels and within the framework of the permanent machinery of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for the purpose of facilitating a positive and action-oriented outcome.

General Assembly resolution 50/98

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.1) without vote, 5 December (meeting 41); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.50), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.20) and orally revised; agenda item 95 (a).

International trade

World trade rose in volume by close to 9 per cent in 1994, outpacing global output, which reached 3.1 per cent, according to the Trade and Development Report, 1995(¹)—a review of international eco-conomic issues, published annually by the UNCTAD secretariat. The trade increase was the highest for two decades and was largely due to the continued expansion of trade in manufactures. Trade in services appeared to have risen much less than merchandise trade during 1994, reversing a decade-long trend. There was continued strong expansion in Asia and the Americas and a rapid recovery in Western Europe, where trade rose nearly three times faster than output. The share of intra-regional trade also rose most markedly in those regions where total trade grew most (Asia and the western hemisphere).

World trade grew even more rapidly in current dollar terms, largely because of the sharp increase in prices of many non-oil primary commodities, but also because of the fall in the value of the dollar vis-à-vis other major currencies.

In the United States, output growth accelerated from 3 per cent in 1993 to 4.1 per cent in 1994—the highest increase in 10 years. The volume of exports rose sharply, by 9 per cent, which was double the growth of the previous year, but the increase of imports was even larger (13 per cent). Depreciation of the dollar and increased productivity were major factors behind the fast expansion of United States exports, which also benefited from continued strong demand from the developing countries and the recovery in Western Europe, as well as appreciation of the Japanese yen. The spillover of domestic demand into imports was particularly marked for office machinery and telecommunication equipment, sectors in which domestic investment was strong.

Strong export demand was the main factor behind recovery in the European Union (EU) and that recovery contributed much to the rapid expansion of world trade in 1994. While trade among EU countries helped to sustain the fast pace of exports from Western Europe (a 10.1 per cent increase over 1993), most of the increase was accounted for by strong demand in third countries, especially from developing countries in Asia, but also from North America and countries of Central and Eastern Europe. Export performance was also affected by changes in competitiveness brought about by currency realignments.

Growth in Japan was weak and erratic in 1994 in spite of supportive fiscal and monetary policies. While exports were well sustained in value, due to the high yen, their volume growth was small. By contrast, the strong yen favoured imports, particularly of labour-intensive consumer goods from overseas subsidiaries of domestic firms. The volume increase in imports was as high as 12 per cent.

For developing countries as a whole, output continued to expand in 1994, but there was much variation among countries and regions. For African developing countries, output growth was higher in 1994 than in 1993, but at around 2 per cent it remained lower than population growth, resulting in a further decline in per capita gross domestic product (GDP). There was a sharp increase in prices of a wide variety of non-fuel primary commodities in 1994, which, combined with the recovery in Western Europe, benefited African countries to a varying extent. The major exporters of petroleum continued to suffer from depressed prices and the trade deficit of the African region widened further.

Trade grew rapidly in Latin America in 1994 and was most buoyant for imports. Exports benefited not only from the strength of demand in major trading partners, especially the United States, but also from large increases in the prices of many commodities, especially tropical beverages and metals, which led to an improvement in the terms of trade. However, the growth of exports continued to lag behind that of imports, particularly in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and Mexico.

In developing Asia, trade, including intra-regional trade, continued to be buoyant in 1994. In a few countries of East Asia, imports rose in volume by over 30 per cent and exports by over 20 per cent. Strong import demand in East Asia also contributed to sustaining export expansion in other developing countries, especially those in South Asia. Despite substantially increased export earnings, many Asian developing countries continued to incur trade deficits due to their large imports of capital goods and industrial raw materials. China ran up a trade deficit in 1993 for the first time since 1990, but devaluation brought about a reduction of imports in 1994.

In countries of Central and Eastern Europe, trade, especially exports, rose markedly in value in 1994, leading to a general improvement in trade balances. The surplus of the Russian Federation rose to a record level of almost $20 billion. The recovery of demand, particularly in Western Europe, was the principal factor behind the improved export performance, but supply factors also contributed in many instances, such as improved competitiveness resulting from lower production costs or devaluation. Intraregional trade also showed renewed growth, especially that involving the Czech Republic and Poland.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/95.

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, the Cartagena Commitment, Agenda 21, and the various agreements and conferences that provide an overall policy framework for sustained economic growth and sustainable development to address the challenges of the 1990s,

Recalling its resolutions 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as an organ of the General Assembly, 47/183 of 22 December 1992 on the eighth session of the Conference, and 48/55 of 10 December 1993 and 49/99 of 19 December 1994 on international trade and development,

Welcoming the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Noting the progress made by the Conference in the implementation of the outcome of its eighth session, in particular its contribution, within its mandate, to trade and development,

Emphasizing the importance of an open, rule-based, equitable, secure, non-discriminatory, transparent and predictable multilateral trading system,

Emphasizing also that a favourable and conducive international economic and financial environment and a positive investment climate are necessary for the economic growth of the world economy, including the creation of employment, in particular for the sustained economic growth and sustainable development of the developing countries, and emphasizing further that each country is responsible for its own economic policies for development,

Welcoming the successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations at the Ministerial Meeting of the Trade Negotiations Committee, held at Marrakesh, Morocco, from 12 to 15 April 1994, and noting that the Uruguay Round agreements represent a historic achievement, which is expected to contribute to strengthening the world economy and to lead to more trade, investment, employment and income growth throughout the world and in particular to the promotion of sustained economic growth and sustainable development, especially in the developing countries,

Emphasizing the importance of strengthening and attaining a greater universality of the international trading system and welcoming the process directed towards the accession to the World Trade Organization of economies in transition and developing countries that are not members of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, thereby contributing to their rapid and full integration into the multilateral trading system,

Noting the assessment and recommendations adopted at the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, held in New York from 25 September to 6 October 1995,

Noting also that the Uruguay Round agreements should lead, inter alia, to a substantial liberalization of international trade, the strengthening of multilateral rules and disciplines to ensure more stability and predictability in trade relations, and the establishing of rules and disciplines in new areas, and noting further the founding of a new institutional framework in the form of the World Trade Organization, with an integrated dispute settlement mechanism which should prevent the application of unilateral actions against international trade rules,

Recognizing that the developing countries have made a major contribution to the success of the Uruguay Round, in particular by accepting the challenges of trade liberalization reforms and measures, and stressing that there is a need for positive efforts designed to ensure that developing countries, especially the least developed among them, secure a share in the growth in international trade commensurate with their economic development needs,

Recognizing also that the subregional and regional economic integration processes, including those among developing countries, which have intensified in recent years, impart substantial dynamism to global trade and enhance trade and development possibilities for all countries, and stressing that, in order to maintain the positive aspects of such integration arrangements and to assure the prevalence of their dynamic growth effects, Member States and groupings should be outward oriented and supportive of the multilateral trading system,

Expressing concern about possible adverse effects for the least developed countries, particularly those in Africa and net food-importing developing countries, arising from the implementation of the Uruguay Round agreements, as agreed in the Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, signed at Marrakesh, and recognizing the need to assist those disadvantaged developing countries so that they benefit fully from the implementation of the Uruguay Round,

Welcoming the generous offer of the Government of South Africa to act as host for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its ninth session,

Recognizing the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in identifying and analysing new and emerging issues in the international trade agenda in accordance with agreed conclusions 410(XL) of 29 April 1994 of the Trade and Development Board on the Uruguay Round, agreed conclusions 419(XLI) of 30 September 1994 of the Board on the Uruguay Round, and decision 426(XLII) of 4 May 1995 of the Board, and with the provisional agenda for the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Noting the importance of the inaugural Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, to be held in Singapore in December 1996,

Stressing the need to promote, facilitate and finance, as appropriate, access to and the transfer of environmentally sound technologies and the corresponding know-how in particular to the developing countries, on favourable terms, including concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights, as well as the special needs of the developing countries in the implementation of Agenda 21,

Taking note with satisfaction of the recommendation on trade, environment and sustainable development made by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its third session, and recognizing, in the spirit of a new global partnership for sustainable development, the need for a balanced and integrated approach to environment, trade and development issues,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Trade and Development Board on the second part of its forty-first session and the first part of its forty-second session, and calls upon all States to take appropriate action to implement the outcome of those sessions;

2. Also takes note of the Trade and Development Report, 1995, and recognizes the contribution such reports have made to the international trade and development dialogue;

3. Emphasizes the importance of follow-up and monitoring of the implementation of the policies and measures contained in the Cartagena Commitment, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its eighth session, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 8 to 25 February 1992;

4. Stresses the urgent need to continue trade liberalization, including liberalization through a substantial reduction of tariff and other barriers to trade, in particular non-tariff barriers, and the elimination of discriminatory and protectionist practices in international trade relations, and to improve access to the markets of all countries, in particular those of the developed countries, so as to generate sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

5. Also stresses the need for the full integration of the economies in transition, as well as other countries, into the world economy, in particular through improved market access for their exports and elimination of discriminatory tariff and non-tariff measures and further liberalization of their trade regimes, including vis-a-vis developing countries, and recognizes in this respect the importance of open regional economic integration of interested economies in transition among themselves as well as with developed and/or developing countries in creating new possibilities for expanding trade and investment;

6. Further stresses the importance of the timely and full implementation of the agreements contained in the Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations and the significance of the entering into force on 1 January 1995 of the Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organization;

7. Emphasizes the importance of the full and continuing implementation of the provisions contained in the Final Act that confer special and differential treatment for developing countries, including decisions giving special attention to the situation of the least developed countries and the net food-importing developing countries;

8. Notes the work that has been undertaken jointly and separately by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the World Trade Organization on the impact of the Uruguay Round on developing countries, and looks forward to the integration of this analysis into discussions, including those at ministerial conferences;

9. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its ninth session to transmit its assessment of challenges and opportunities arising from the Uruguay Round agreements from a development perspective to the Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization;

10. Emphasizes the need for continued review and evaluation of the implementation of the Uruguay Round agreements to ensure that the benefits of the evolving multilateral trade system promote sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

11. Also emphasizes the significance of the Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, to be held in Singapore in December 1996, in helping to set the future direction of a rule-based multilateral trading system;

12. Deplores any attempt to bypass or undermine multilaterally agreed measures of trade liberalization, through resort to unilateral actions over and above those agreed to in the Uruguay Round, and reaffirms that environmental and social concerns should not be used for protectionist purposes;

13. Notes the work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on trade and environment, in particular the outcome of its Ad Hoc Working Group on Trade, Environment and Development, and also notes the work of the Committee on Trade and Environment of the World Trade Organization;

14. Also notes the progress achieved by the joint United Nations Environment Programme/United Nations Conference on Trade and Development programme in the consideration of trade and environment issues, and invites the two organizations to continue their work in accordance with paragraph 59 of chapter I of the report of the Commission on Sustainable Development on its third session;

15. Reaffirms the need as a matter of priority to implement the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, taking into account the assessment and recommendations adopted at the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, held in New York from 25 September to 6 October 1995;

16. Emphasizes the urgent need for assistance to African countries, inter alia, for evaluation of the impact of the Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations and to enable them to identify and implement adaptive measures to enhance their competitiveness;

17. Requests preference-giving countries to improve their preferential schemes, and invites the 1996 policy review of the generalized system of preferences to examine possible adaptations to the system, taking into account paragraphs 134 to 140 of the Cartagena Commitment, as well as the results of the Uruguay Round;

18. Reaffirms the role that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development has been playing as the focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of development and interrelated issues in the areas of trade, finance, technology, investment, services and sustainable development and, within this context, stresses that there should be constructive and effective cooperation between the Conference and the World Trade Organization, based on the complementarity of their functions;

19. Decides to enable the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to discharge its mandate, thereby making it a more effective and efficient instrument for promoting development;

20. Recognizes that the Conference at its ninth session will, inter alia, consider its future role, including its relationship with other international institutions, to generate synergies among them and, on the basis of its mandate and with a view to strengthening the United Nations system, the ninth session should enable the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to become a more effective instrument for promoting development;

21. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to consider, in close cooperation with other competent organizations, new and emerging issues in the international trade agenda, taking into account the new multilateral trade framework, with a view to fostering international consensus-building among Member States in such areas as trade and environment and competition policy, and, in this regard, recognizes the role of the Conference in preparing the background work and consensus-building on such issues in accordance with agreed conclusions 410(XL) and 419(XLI) and decision 426(XLII) of the Trade and Development Board;

22. Also invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in close cooperation with other competent organizations, to follow developments in the international trading system, in particular their implications for developing countries, and to identify new trading opportunities arising from the implementation of the Uruguay Round agreements so as to provide information and technical support with a view to facilitating the integration of those countries into the system and to assist them in taking full advantage of new trading opportunities, in accordance with agreed conclusions 410(XL) of the Trade and Development Board;

23. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to monitor, analyse and review the development of trade between economies in transition and developing countries and to recommend appropriate measures for its revival, thus contributing to the strengthening of the multilateral trading system;

24. Welcomes the measures taken by the secretariats of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the World Trade Organization and invites them to continue to develop their working relationship, mutual cooperation and complementarity;

25. Emphasizes the importance to the international trading system of the inclusion in multilateral trade agreements of all countries that are not members of the World Trade Organization, and urges the international community to assist appropriately and adequately those countries that are not members of the World Trade Organization in the steps towards acceding to that Organization;

26. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and invites the World Trade Organization, in accordance with their respective mandates and competence and in close cooperation with other competent United Nations bodies and the regional commissions, to address trade and environment matters comprehensively and to report, through the Commission on Sustainable Development, to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly at its special session in 1997 on the concrete progress achieved on the issue of trade and environment;

27. Also requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue its special role in the field of trade and environment, including analytical and empirical work, conceptual and empirical studies, policy analysis, and consensus-building, with a view to ensuring transparency and coherence in making environmental and trade policies mutually supportive, taking into account the need for continuing close cooperation and complementarity in the work of the Conference, the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Trade Organization;

28. Further requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to focus and intensify, where necessary, its technical assistance in the light of the Uruguay Round agreements, in cooperation with relevant international organizations, in particular the International Trade Centre and the World Trade Organization, with the aim of increasing the capacities of developing countries, especially the least developed countries, African countries, and small island developing States, so that they may participate effectively in the international trading system;

29. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to provide technical assistance to economies in transition, bearing in mind the needs of developing countries, in particular with regard to their full integration into the multilateral trading system, so as to contribute to the expansion of their external trade, inter alia, with developing countries.

General Assembly resolution 50/95

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.1) without vote, 12 December (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.73), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines (for Group of 77 and China) and Colombia (for Non-Aligned Movement) (A/C.2/50/L.17) and orally revised; agenda item 95 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 30-32, 36, 43; plenary 96.

Trade policy

Using the Trade and Development Report, 1995⁽¹⁾ as a major resource, TDB in September discussed a number of general policy issues concerning global interdependence, including the special topic of linkages between global financial and trade flows, development and levels of economic activity and employment, and the future implications following the Uruguay Round. In a section dealing with unemployment and interdependence, the Report stated that despite growing support for globalization, liberalization and outward-oriented development in industrialized countries, joblessness there was increasingly blamed on imports of manufactured products from the South (the developing countries). Proposed solutions ranged from raising import barriers to imposing higher labour standards on southern producers to lowering labour standards in the North. Although trade and technology, both identified as causes of unemployment, had indeed tended to reduce the demand for unskilled labour, dislocations of labour as a result of new competition or new technology were not new in economic history; in addition, demand for skilled labour had been weak. The Report took the view that the root of the problem was the slow pace at which demand, output and investment had expanded over the preceding two decades. It saw the remedy in international cooperation to accelerate world economic growth, noting that such a strategy would create jobs in the North while benefiting the South. It would also remove the main threat to the liberalization of trade. By contrast, a strategy of adjusting unemployment by pitting worker against worker in competitive labour markets would exacerbate conflicts among social classes and among nations. Turning labour back into another commodity was not seen as a viable recipe for advancing towards an open world economy; on the contrary, it would invigorate the forces that would prefer to go in the opposite direction, the Report stated.

The TDB President prepared a summing-up of the debate on interdependence, which the Board incorporated into the report on the first part of its forty-second session (Geneva, 11-20 September).⁽²⁾ While interdependence among unemployment, trade and development was generally recognized, some delegations expressed concern that the Report devoted too much attention to economic problems in the industrialized countries as compared to trade and development issues and problems of economic policy in developing countries. There was general optimism about the longer-term prospects for the world economy. The strong growth of exports in 1994, along with the perspectives of further trade liberalization opened by the successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, provided excellent prospects for a more open world economy. Although it was agreed that the problem of unemployment in developed countries was very real, it was suggested that the Report's figure of 34 million unemployed in the advanced industrial economies, although high by historical standards, was small compared with the number of unemployed and underemployed in developing countries. Delegations from economies in transition also pointed to historically high rates of unemployment in their own countries. There was broad agreement with the Report's conclusion that the rise of manufactured exports from developing countries was not the cause of labour-market problems in developed countries. However, it was also stated that the problem of labour-market rigidities merited greater attention. The importance of exports to developing countries was noted by many delegations as a major source of job creation in developed economies; better commodity price trends, increased development assistance and further debt relief, by enhancing the import capacity of developing countries, would help reduce unemployment in developed countries.

Structural adjustment policies

In March, TDB had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on developments relating to structural adjustment policies in developed countries and their implications.⁽³⁾ The report assessed major features of structural adjustment policies of developed countries against the backdrop of a world economic setting characterized by the gradual opening of frontiers to free trade, growing economic integration across national borders, rapid technological changes, and equally fast changes in the skill requirements of the workforce.

In its conclusions, the report stated that developed countries would need to adjust in response to growing competition resulting from the implementation of Uruguay Round commitments, from the increasing liberalization of highly protected production sectors and, in the case of some countries, from growing regional integration. Continuous investment, disinvestment and relocation in line with changes in comparative advantage, as well as technological innovation and human skill development, were at the heart of the structural adjustment process. Enterprises were increasingly pursuing global corporate strategies to take best advantage of each country's ability to produce.

Governments of developed countries were emphasizing the importance of support for investment in technological innovation, basic research and human skill development to promote shifts in production patterns into new technology- and skill-intensive industries. They were also providing support for traditional industries to move into competitive higher-value products. Such adjustment assistance could encourage developed countries to move out of production in many low- and middle-market segments of traditional industries where many developing countries and economies in transition had competitive supply capabilities. However, import protection and subsidies in support of unviable lines of production were still being provided in response to political and social constraints. Such aid denied new market opportunities to competitive suppliers in lower-cost countries and Governments needed to resist pressure to grant wasteful subsidization. For their part, a growing number of developing countries were moving their export supply capabilities into more skill- and technology-intensive industries; they would gain new market opportunities through intra-industry specialization. Liberal market access would be a crucial prerequisite. Policy makers in developed countries had to pay greater attention to structural adjustment policies for industries in which liberalization was likely to lead to increased imports from developing countries and economies in transition. Important cases in point were agriculture, textiles and clothing.

In agreed conclusions of 31 March,⁽⁴⁾ TDB stated that structural adjustment was a global issue with a crucial part to play in ensuring the enhanced participation in the world economy of developing countries and countries in transition. All countries would have to face growing competition and pressures on economic agents to adjust as the world economy became more global and trade liberalization continued. The full implementation of the Uruguay Round agreements would further increase adjustment pressures. The main responsibility of Governments in the process was to create stable framework conditions to allow for structural adjustment. Efforts had been made by countries in all regions to: introduce deregulation and privatization; open markets to competition; and provide a more liberal framework for enterprises to produce, trade and invest. TDB noted that Governments should take a positive approach to structural adjustment and adopt a global perspective favouring a dynamic process in production and trade beyond national boundaries in order to improve transparency and coherence at the multilateral level. Shifts from sectors with declining international competitiveness towards more capital- and skill-intensive activities should be encouraged. Such an approach not only would benefit the developed countries, but would have an impact on the world economy as a whole and especially on trade and development opportunities of developing countries.

Structural adjustment policies, said TDB, should not aim to maintain inefficient production structures, but should allow a positive approach to promote shifts in patterns of production and trade in line with changes in comparative advantage. That approach could support measures such as vocational training, retraining in new skills, research, technical development and technological innovation. Measures to restore the international competitiveness of enterprises could also contribute to tackling unemployment and create room for expansion of production and trade in developing countries and countries in transition in sectors where they had gained a comparative advantage. A policy framework favourable to structural adjustment could facilitate the implementation of the Uruguay Round agreements, lower resistance to further liberalization and make economies better prepared for future negotiations on improving market access. Sectors of particular concern to developing countries and countries in transition included textiles, clothing, hides and skins, footwear, steel, marine products, agriculture, agro-based industries and certain rapidly expanding services industries. Improving market access for products and services of those countries would, in turn, increase their import capacity and benefit exports and structural adjustment in developed countries.

Structural adjustment for transition to disarmament

The Ad Hoc Working Group to Explore the Issue of Structural Adjustment for the Transition to Disarmament (SATD), established by TDB in 1992⁽⁵⁾ and whose terms of reference were agreed upon in 1994,⁽⁶⁾ met in Geneva from 17 November to 2 December 1995.⁽⁷⁾ The Group had before it a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on SATD,⁽⁸⁾ which noted that world military expenditure had fallen from a peak of $995 billion in 1987 to $767 billion in 1994. As a share of gross national product (GNP), the decline was substantial in both developed and developing countries. Between 1987 and 1993, the ratio of military expenditure to GNP declined from 5.4 per cent to 3.4 per cent in the developed countries and from 4.7 per cent to 3.1 per cent in the developing countries. It was noted that the UN Development Programme (UNDP) referred to military expenditure not incurred during 1988-1994 relative to the 1987 baseline as a peace dividend.

The report discussed: the questions of the conversion from military to civilian use of three types of resources—facilities producing goods and services for the military, military installations and bases, and manpower; the effects of decreasing military expenditures on the production and export of some commodities; and the impact of disarmament and conversion on world economic growth and development, international technology flows and the exchange of experience with respect to national technology policy.

Experience since the end of the cold war, the Group concluded, showed that the cost of transition to disarmament had been greater than expected, while benefits had been slower to emerge and were smaller than had been hoped. International cooperation could help individual countries to minimize costs and maximize the benefits of SATD, including conversion. Such cooperation could take a number of forms, such as targeted increases in official development assistance (ODA). Reduced military expenditure in developed countries could release resources to support SATD and conversion in developing countries and countries in transition or to promote world economic growth and development generally.

SATD had different implications in different types of countries. In the developed countries or economies in transition, military production was the sector most at issue, while in developing countries, the demobilization of armed forces was the major question.

In summarizing the debate, the Ad Hoc Working Group Chairman stated that delegations had agreed that all countries should consider the possibilities that existed in their specific situations for reducing military expenditures and channelling the savings towards socially productive uses. Notwithstanding the uncertainties associated with the conversion process, it would be possible to realize some savings that could be rechannelled to increase the availability of development finance and ODA. Different views were expressed concerning the relationship between SATD and ODA; several delegations argued that the relationship between the two was multifaceted and that to posit a mechanical relationship between falling military expenditure in developed countries and ODA was misleading. Other matters discussed included: the use of armed forces for civilian purposes; demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants; the accumulation of small arms in politically unstable regions; conversion of former foreign military bases; the importance of market access for the output of converted activities; access to technology; and the role of the State in SATD.

The Ad Hoc Working Group also discussed institutional issues and recommended that, in the preparation process for UNCTAD IX, TDB should examine whether a work programme on SATD should be envisaged.

Trade and environment

In March, TDB considered a report⁽⁹⁾ prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat to assist the Board in its policy review of UNCTAD activities on sustainable development. The report concluded that although UNCTAD's institutional machinery was sufficiently flexible to allow sustainable development issues to be integrated into the work programmes of the Standing Committees and Ad Hoc Working Groups, gaps remained in overall coverage. Although the Board had decided to consider the theme of trade and development at the first part of its annual sessions and another theme or themes on sustainable development at the second part, it had also established an Ad Hoc Working Group on Trade, Environment and Development. Assuming that Governments would wish TDB discussions to be reserved for matters of high policy, it would seem reasonable that technical work on sustainable development should be conducted primarily in its subsidiary bodies, the report stated.

On 31 March,⁽¹⁰⁾ TDB took note of the UNCTAD secretariat report.

Commission on Sustainable Development consideration. For its general discussion on progress in implementing Agenda 21, adopted by the UN Conference on Environment and Development in June 1992,⁽¹¹⁾ the Commission on Sustainable Development (New York, 11-28 April 1995) had before it a report of the Secretary-General on trade, environment and sustainable development.⁽¹²⁾ Prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat as task manager for sustainable development and trade issues, the report described progress in implementing Agenda 21 objectives related to trade, particularly programme areas dealing with promoting sustainable development through trade and making trade and environment mutually supportive.

The report concluded that positive measures, such as improved market access, improved access to technology and finance, capacity-building and special provisions for small firms, were the most effective instruments for supporting developing countries and countries in transition in their efforts to internalize environmental externalities. An analysis of potential effects of recent product-specific policies, such as eco-labelling and certain packaging and recycling requirements, was needed. Measures such as financial and technical assistance were preferable to trade measures in encouraging the widest participation in multilateral environmental agreements. Several suggestions were made to strengthen the positive linkages between trade and environmental policies. In many cases, however, there was no clear relationship between trade and environment and, in general, trade policy should not be used for the attainment of environmental objectives, it was stated. In pursuing environmental sustainability, countries should use direct measures that addressed the specific distortions or market failures.

Also before the Commission was the report of a High-level Meeting on Trade, Environment and Sustainable Development, held in 1994,⁽¹³⁾ submitted by the secretariats of UNCTAD and the UN Environment Programme (UNEP).

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report, the Commission brought a number of trade, environment and sustainable development-related matters to the attention of the Economic and Social Council.⁽¹⁴⁾ The potential effects of product-specific policies should be analysed, particularly those based on life-cycle approaches, such as eco-labelling and certain packaging and recycling requirements, especially their potential impacts on the exports of developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The Commission considered that trade liberalization, along with sustained economic growth, could be expected to pave the way for the gradual raising of environmental standards at the national and global levels, but that needed to be complemented by the adoption of sound environmental policies.

The Commission invited UNCTAD, as task manager for trade and environment, in cooperation with UNEP, the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the UN Secretariat and other institutions, to prepare a background paper for the Commission that would review the growing volume of research on trade, environment and sustainable development linkages carried out by international organizations, academic institutions and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in developed and developing countries.

As called for in Agenda 21, the Commission recommended that Governments of developed countries and multilateral aid agencies strengthen efforts to improve access to markets and finance and access to and transfer of technology and to build capacity to support developing countries and countries with economies in transition in their efforts to internalize environmental costs. UNCTAD, in cooperation with other international bodies, was asked to undertake further work in that area with a view to identifying innovative approaches. UNCTAD was also asked to carry out an analytical study on the relationship of environmental protection to international competitiveness, job creation and development. UNCTAD and UNEP were asked to analyse how transparency and international cooperation could be strengthened with respect to product-specific policies, particularly eco-labelling and certain packaging and recycling requirements, so as to avoid adverse trade effects.

In resolution 50/95, the General Assembly noted progress achieved by the joint UNEP/UNCTAD programme on trade and environment issues and invited the two organizations to continue their work.

Ad Hoc Working Group on Trade, Environment and Development

The Ad Hoc Working Group on Trade, Environment and Development held its second and third sessions in 1995, the first having been held in 1994.⁽¹⁵⁾ The second session (Geneva, 6-9 June)⁽¹⁶⁾ had before it reports by the UNCTAD secretariat on trade, environment and development aspects of establishing and operating eco-labelling programmes⁽¹⁷⁾ and on conceptual and empirical issues of environmental policies, trade and competitiveness.⁽¹⁸⁾

In a summary of the Working Group's discussions, the Chairman stated that, with regard to market access and competitiveness, the Group focused on the competitiveness of firms, particularly those of developing countries, in the international markets. At the firm level, while short-term competitiveness effects could be negative, in many sectors the long-term effects were more likely to be positive. At the national level, it was felt that the loss in competitiveness of some sectors might be compensated by gains in others, but those possibilities were higher in dynamic economies. It was also recognized that those options were more limited in countries whose export basket comprised a few products. More analysis was called for to support alternative measures for dealing with the negative impact of environmental policies, standards and regulations on competitiveness. The importance of transparency in respect of environmental standards and regulations was emphasized. In addition, the identification of appropriate technical and/or financial assistance required by developing countries was stressed, with special attention being given to the least developed countries (LDCs).

With regard to the trade and competitiveness effects of multilateral environmental agreements, it was agreed that further work on both positive and negative impacts was necessary. Such work should run parallel with the analysis of compensatory/cooperative measures under different agreements. UNCTAD's further work on the subject could encompass: costs of late implementation of multilateral environmental agreements; the competitiveness effects of environmental policies, standards and regulations on small and medium-sized firms; and studies on sectors that produced low-value-added products and those that produced homogeneous products of export interest to developing countries. As to economic instruments, three topics were identified for further research: the trade and competitiveness effects of eco-taxes; the environmental effectiveness of border tax adjustment in the case of process taxes; and the trade effects of the use of regulatory versus incentive-based mechanisms in addressing environmental problems.

The Group's discussions on eco-labelling focused on three sets of issues: trade, environment and development effects of eco-labelling; the use of criteria related to process and production methods; and measures to take account of developing countries' interests in determining eco-labelling criteria.

The final report of the Ad Hoc Working Group also incorporated the report on its third session (Geneva, 6-10 November),⁽¹⁹⁾ at which the discussion of the trade and competitiveness effects of environmental policies, standards and regulations was continued and a preliminary discussion on newly emerging environmental policy instruments with a trade impact was held. The Group had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on the latter topic,⁽²⁰⁾ and on the policy debate on trade, environment and development.⁽²¹⁾

The Working Group recommended that UNCTAD's work on trade, environment and development be pursued, at an adequately high level in the organization's future structure, after UNCTAD IX. It recommended policies and measures to promote sustainable development for consideration by Governments; identified areas for future UNCTAD activities in trade, environment and development; and encouraged donors and UNCTAD to provide technical assistance to developing countries to help them to promote sustainable development.

In resolution 50/95, the General Assembly noted the outcome of the sessions of the Ad Hoc Working Group.

Trade preferences

Generalized system of preferences

TDB's Special Committee on Preferences held its twenty-second session in Geneva from 23 to 27 October.⁽²²⁾ It carried out a comprehensive policy review of the generalized system of preferences (GSP), with the objective of revitalizing that multilateral trade policy instrument.

In preparation for the policy review, the second Ad Hoc Expert Group on GSP met (Geneva, 15-16 May)⁽²³⁾ to follow up on the first (1994) meeting⁽²⁴⁾ and to have a more detailed discussion of the subjects addressed. It agreed on conclusions and recommendations covering: the objectives of GSP; product coverage; graduation; erosion of the preferential margin resulting from most-favoured-nation tariff reductions under the Uruguay Round; special measures in favour of LDCs; a possible extension of the GSP concept to new areas, particularly services and investment; the GSP rules of origin; and technical assistance.

The Special Committee had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on policy options and proposals for the revitalization of GSP,⁽²⁵⁾ which drew on those conclusions and recommendations.

Also before the Special Committee was the eighteenth general report⁽²⁶⁾ by the UNCTAD secretariat on the implementation of GSP, which described changes and improvements in the system, updated information on its trade effects, and provided information on technical cooperation activities during 1994 and the first half of 1995. It also described EU's new GSP scheme for industrial products, brought into effect on 1 January 1995 for the period 1995 to 1998. Changes from the previous scheme included the replacement of quotas on GSP imports by "tariff modulation" and the introduction of an open policy of graduation. Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania on 1 January were deleted from the EU beneficiary list, following the entry into force of the free-trade area with EU. South Africa was added to the list, with an extended list of exceptions, and Eritrea was added to the list of LDCs.

Changes with regard to the beneficiary lists of other countries included the addition by Japan of Albania, Armenia, Belarus, Estonia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Lithuania, the Republic of Moldova, South Africa, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkmenistan and Ukraine; the addition by the Czech Republic and Slovakia of those countries plus Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Belize, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brunei Darussalam, Chile, China, Croatia, Eritrea, Kyrgyzstan, the Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Namibia, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan; the addition by Hungary and Norway of South Africa; the addition by the United States of Armenia, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip; the addition by Poland of Algeria, the Congo, the Dominican Republic, Guyana, Peru and Zimbabwe; the removal by New Zealand of Cyprus; the suspension by the United States of the Bahamas and Israel; and the removal by Poland of Argentina, Belize, Botswana, Dominica, Fiji, Grenada, Saint Lucia and the Syrian Arab Republic.

The report also provided information on tariff rate changes made by certain countries on specific products as a consequence of the Uruguay Round commitments and changes made with regard to the duration of some schemes.

Summarizing the Special Committee's discussions,⁽²⁷⁾ the Chairman stated that there was agreement that GSP was fulfilling an important role as a multilateral tool for development. Preference-receiving countries called on preference-giving countries to expand product coverage for those sectors that were being fully integrated into the multilateral trading system. Extension of GSP to agricultural products, processed food, textiles, clothing, leather and footwear products would substantially improve the match between GSP benefits and the export capacities of developing countries, particularly LDCs. Preference-giving countries considered that it would be difficult to arrive at multilaterally agreed criteria for all of them in view of the basic differences in their GSP schemes. There was broad consensus that priorities for UNCTAD's further work in the area of GSP should include: effective utilization of existing preferences; further special measures in favour of LDCs; strengthening of technical cooperation in coordination with other institutions, particularly in favour of LDCs; and improvement of the information base on GSP and of channels for dissemination to the enterprises concerned, including the use of information technologies and stronger involvement of GSP focal points and of the Trade Point system.

Rules of origin

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Rules of Origin met in Geneva from 19 to 21 July.⁽²⁷⁾ It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat study containing options and proposals for harmonization, simplification and improvement of the rules of origin⁽²⁸⁾ and a summary of replies received from preference-giving and preference-receiving countries to a questionnaire prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat.⁽²⁹⁾ The Group adopted agreed conclusions, which it brought to the attention of the Special Committee on Preferences for its policy review of GSP.

In October,⁽²²⁾ the Special Committee endorsed the Group's recommendations and recommended that TDB adopt them and arrange for their follow-up.

Trade promotion and facilitation

During 1995, UN bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of their goods in international commerce. The International Trade Centre (ITC) was the main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area.

International Trade Centre

In 1995, ITC, which was formerly under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and known as the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT, became the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO, following an exchange of letters between the UN Secretary-General and the WTO Director-General setting out a framework for cooperation between the two organizations (see PART SIX, Chapter IV). By decision 1995/322 of 12 December, the Economic and Social Council noted the recommendation in the exchange of letters that current arrangements governing the status of ITC as a joint body should be confirmed and renewed with WTO and that the name of the Centre would become International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO.

ITC's expenditures in 1995,⁽³⁾ the funds for which came from the regular budget (contributed equally by the United Nations and WTO), trust funds, UNDP and support costs, totalled $41.8 million, an increase from $38.2 million in 1994. Trust fund delivery reached $9.8 million, compared with $9.7 million in 1994. Delivery of UNDP funding totalled $5.7 million, a drop from $6.2 million in 1994.

During the year, ITC work focused on six main programme areas or core services: product and market development; development of trade support services; trade information; human resource development; international purchasing and supply management; and needs assessment and programme design for trade promotion. Those activities were carried out with a wide variety of target groups, with particular emphasis on LDCs. Within its programme areas, ITC gave special attention to working directly with individual business enterprises, in the light of the increasing role of the private sector in economic development, and to specific follow-up actions to the Uruguay Round agreements of benefit to the business community. In addition, several issues of common concern to the international community were of particular relevance to ITC during 1995, as they had a direct link with trade promotion and export development and permeated all ITC core services. They were environmental considerations, entrepreneurship development, advancement of women, poverty alleviation, and economic and technical cooperation among developing countries.

In the core service of product and market development, ITC carried out a study on the selection of priority products for its future work. The purpose was to determine the mix of product-related expertise to be maintained; develop a methodology for selecting and updating that range of priority products; and propose a concrete selection of priority product clusters. Under that new structure, ITC's product work in 1995 covered agricultural commodities and agro-based products (coffee, tea, cocoa, spices, sugar, jute, hard fibres, fresh fruits and vegetables, floricultural products, edible nuts and processed fruits and vegetables) and manufactured products and services (textiles and clothing, wood and wood products, hides and skins, leather and leather products, rubber and plastic products, engineering products and environmental technologies, artisanal products and services).

In trade support services, ITC's main task in 1995 was to assess programme strengths and their relevance to the economic and trade environment in the post-Uruguay Round period and to draw up strategies to enable the Centre to satisfy current and future requirements with greater efficacy. Work in trade support services covered export quality and export packaging; the legal aspects of foreign trade; trade financing services; enhancing public-private partnership in institution-building; and international competitiveness for small and medium-sized enterprises.

Trade information activities were directed towards creating or strengthening trade information services and networks in developing countries and economies in transition, as well as the direct supply of information in areas in which ITC had comparative advantages over other information providers. The programme focused on building capacity in the management of trade information, bridging information gaps, and providing prices and market information on a wide range of products through ITC's Market News Service.

Human resource development activities concentrated on programmes at the national level, stressing capacity-building for in-career training. A major Uruguay Round follow-up programme involving information dissemination, needs identification and capacity-building was designed and approved for implementation in 1996. The human resource dimension was incorporated into ITC's new international competitiveness programme for small and medium-sized enterprises, one focus of which was enterprise and trade entrepreneurship training.

Under ITC's international purchasing and supply management core service, an important area of work was public procurement reform. ITC supported central tender boards through the implementation of computer-based management information systems. Procurement training was a central concern, as were the establishment and strengthening of purchasing and supply management associations, since such institutions often served as anchor points for national trading programmes and as sources of local expertise.

ITC prepared a three-year comprehensive strategy and action plan for international purchasing and supply management to focus on the key areas of: modular learning systems; management tools; information systems; national purchasing associations; regulatory and institutional aspects of importing; and quality and environmental concerns in international purchasing and supply.

As to programme development, UNDP-funded interregional projects and trust fund donors enabled ITC to execute missions to refine wider-scope programmes of technical cooperation in high-priority areas.

JAG action. The Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on ITC held its twenty-eighth session in Geneva from 29 May to 2 June.⁽³¹⁾ Documentation before it included: a review of the ITC priority-setting exercise⁽³²⁾ and reports on a 1992 ITC technical meeting on setting up a global trust fund,⁽³³⁾ on the ITC role in trade and the environment⁽³⁴⁾ and on ITC activities in 1994.⁽³⁵⁾

JAG strongly supported ITC's ongoing work in the area of revitalization; it gave ITC a mandate to operationalize priorities as presented in the priority-setting review⁽³²⁾ through restructuring, redeployment of resources, and design and implementation of work programmes.

Informal consultations on a global trust fund were concluded, as JAG adopted a revised proposal for its establishment, which it annexed to its report.

The new Global Trust Fund was launched later in 1995, with the objectives of increasing resources for technical cooperation with developing countries and economies in transition, enhancing the transparency of their use, and facilitating a more efficient and effective technical cooperation programme within JAG priorities. The Fund augmented other ITC extrabudgetary financial mechanisms: bilateral trust funds and separate trust-fund-financed projects.

A Consultative Committee was established to advise the ITC secretariat and ensure transparency in the use of Fund resources. It held its first meeting on 5 November, discussing working procedures, reviewing a proposal on use of funds and considering general conditions for implementing the Trust Fund. Two further meetings were held in 1995 to review specific programme proposals.

JAG endorsed the main purpose of strategy proposals for ITC activities on trade and the environment, as set out in an ITC report.⁽³⁴⁾ The need for a specific action programme was stressed.

ITC should coordinate and cooperate fully with its parent bodies and other organizations on trade and environment matters, JAG stated.

Trust-fund contributions were pledged by Canada, China, Finland, France, Germany, India, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States.

Trade efficiency

At its resumed eighth executive session on 29 June, TDB continued its discussion of the follow-up to the 1994 UN International Symposium on Trade Efficiency.⁽³⁶⁾ The Board adopted⁽³⁷⁾ texts on an international federation of Trade Points, conclusions on technical cooperation, and criteria for establishing and operating Trade Points.

With regard to the feasibility of establishing an international federation of Trade Points, TDB asked the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare proposals for articles of association of such a federation and to circulate them, as well as to convene the Inter-governmental Meeting of Trade Point Officials and Experts to examine secretariat proposals and comments.

In another text, the Board stated that support for establishing/strengthening Trade Points and their interconnections should continue to be an important part of technical cooperation work in trade efficiency. Since a large number of countries wanted such technical cooperation, fund-raising should be an area for rapid action by the secretariat. In countries where phase one of the Trade Point programme was complete, a second phase, with a focus on reducing transaction costs, should begin. Urgent action was particularly required in telecommunications, as effective interconnection of Trade Points was critical for their long-term success. Technical cooperation should also incorporate training, and coordination with ITC, the Economic Commission for Europe and other international and national bodies should continue in order to avoid duplication of effort.

The criteria for establishing and operating Trade Points covered basic services, operative principles and organization; an appendix to the TDB decision dealt with the creation of local Trade Point associations.

Trading opportunities

The Ad Hoc Working Group on Trading Opportunities in the New International Trading Context, established by TDB in 1994,⁽³⁸⁾ held its first session in 1995 (Geneva, 9-13 October).⁽³⁹⁾ Documents before the Group included UNCTAD secretariat reports on an analysis of trading opportunities resulting from the Uruguay Round in agriculture, textiles, clothing and other industrial products,⁽⁴⁰⁾ and on issues and policy requirements for translating Uruguay Round special provisions for LDCs into concrete action.⁽⁴¹⁾

Summarizing the discussions, the Chairman said that the Ad Hoc Working Group recognized that Uruguay Round results presented significant increases in global trading opportunities of interest to developing countries in many sectors, both agricultural and industrial. However, an assessment of the potential for developing countries and countries in transition to benefit from those opportunities must take account of such elements as: less-than-average tariff reductions, tariff peaks and tariff escalation in a number of sectors of interest to developing countries, prohibitively high tariff rates in those agricultural products subject to tariffication, and postponement of the integration programme for textile and clothing products of interest to developing countries.

To identify trading opportunities in a more concrete manner, greater effort should be made to relate the concessions of developed countries to the supply capacity and export interests of developing countries and LDCs, with a view to enabling them to benefit from those opportunities. In addition, technical assistance was needed to assist individual countries to use fully opportunities presented by the Uruguay Round agreements, including strengthening their institutional and administrative capacities.

The Working Group also discussed possible actions, as components of a safety-net package of measures, to assist LDCs to confront the problems of adjustment to the post-Uruguay Round trading system and to avoid further marginalization. It was noted that elements of the outcome of the High-level Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Programme of Action for LDCs (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) could be incorporated into the Group's final report. Those included the need for: financial resources to strengthen export capacities, develop skills and overcome infrastructural deficiencies; flexible application of anti-dumping and countervailing duty provisions, safeguard measures and rules of origin; more favourable treatment in market access in the area of textiles and in improving GSP; facilitating the export of manpower; and financial aid, measures to improve access to technology, and assistance for developing incentive schemes to promote FDI in LDCs. It was suggested that UNCTAD's work to assist LDCs in that respect could focus on identifying opportunities for, and concretizing the special provisions in favour of, those countries and on devising appropriate government policies to create an exporting community that could take advantage of those opportunities. Institutional and negotiating capacities and human resources should be strengthened.

Restrictive business practices

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices held its fourteenth session in 1995 (Geneva, 6-10 March).⁽⁴²⁾ As agreed in 1994,⁽⁴³⁾ the session was devoted to preparations for the Third UN Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (see below). The Group of Experts had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note⁽⁴⁴⁾ containing an annotated outline of a study on the scope, coverage and enforcement of competition laws and policies in member States and an analysis of the provisions of the Uruguay Round agreements relevant to competition policy, including their implications for developing and other countries. It also included a preliminary list of selected cases of restrictive business practices that had an effect in more than one country, particularly developing countries and countries in transition, and preliminary findings relative to the feasibility of developing a bibliography of relevant materials dealing with restrictive business practice issues, and the implementation of a database facility relating to decisions by competition authorities and courts.

On 10 March, the Group of Experts adopted agreed conclusions in which it requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare reports for the Third Review Conference. It also put forward proposals for consideration by the Conference and listed other proposals on which it could not reach agreement.

Third Review Conference

In accordance with a 1993 General Assembly decision,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Third UN Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices was held under UNCTAD auspices in Geneva from 13 to 21 November 1995.⁽⁴⁶⁾ The first conference to review the 1980 Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set)⁽⁴⁷⁾ was held in 1985,⁽⁴⁸⁾ and a second took place in 1990.⁽⁴⁹⁾

The Conference considered UNCTAD secretariat studies on: the role of competition policy in economic reforms in developing and other countries;⁽⁵⁰⁾ the scope, coverage and enforcement of competition laws and policies and analysis of the provisions of the Uruguay Round agreements relevant to competition policy, including their implications for developing and other countries;⁽⁵¹⁾ and the feasibility of developing a bibliography and database facility on restrictive business practices.⁽⁵²⁾ It also had before it UNCTAD secretariat notes on preparations for a handbook on restrictive business practices legislation,⁽⁵³⁾ a review of 15 years of application and implementation of the Set,⁽⁵⁴⁾ and restrictive business practices that had an effect in more than one country, in particular developing and other countries, with overall conclusions regarding the issues raised by those cases.⁽⁵⁵⁾ The Conference also considered draft commentaries to possible elements for articles of a model law or laws on restrictive business practices.⁽⁵⁶⁾

In addition, the secretariat transmitted the Declaration of Tunis, adopted at the African workshop on competition policy (Tunis, Tunisia, 17-18 October),⁽⁵⁷⁾ the conclusions of a meeting on competition policies in Latin America and the Caribbean (Caracas, Venezuela, 23-24 October)⁽⁵⁸⁾ and the Declaration and Protocol Decision of the Interstate Council for Anti-monopoly Policies of the Commonwealth of Independent States and the Commission for the Protection of Competition of the Republic of Bulgaria (Kishinev, Republic of Moldova, 6-7 November).⁽⁵⁹⁾ At the request of Turkey, the secretariat transmitted the texts of the Act on the Protection of Competition No. 4054 of 7 December 1994 and of the Law on the Protection of Consumers No. 4077 of 8 March 1995.⁽⁶⁰⁾

On 21 November, the Conference adopted a wide-ranging resolution, by which it requested the secretariat to review technical cooperation activities undertaken by UNCTAD and other international organizations, as well as by States bilaterally, with a view to strengthening its ability to provide technical assistance for capacity-building in the area of competition law and policy, and to prepare a report thereon for consideration by the Intergovernmental Group of Experts. The Conference urged intergovernmental organizations and financing programmes and agencies to provide resources for technical assistance activities, and appealed to States, particularly developed countries, to increase voluntary financial contributions and provide expertise for the implementation of such activities.

The UNCTAD secretariat was asked to prepare, for submission in 1996 to the Group of Experts, a draft outline of a study on empirical evidence of the benefits (including for consumers) to be gained by developing countries, LDCs and countries in transition from applying competition law and policy principles to economic development in order to attain greater efficiency in international trade and development. The Conference decided that future sessions of the Group of Experts should include at least three days for informal multilateral consultations among participants on competition law and policy issues and that several small workshops should be organized as part of such consultations. In addition, the Group should embark on an exercise, at the request of member States and in collaboration with national and regional competition law and policy authorities, to map and strengthen common ground among States in the area of competition law and policy in identifying restrictive business practices affecting economic development.

The Conference invited Governments to clarify the scope or application of their competition laws and policies, with a view to improving mutual understanding about substantive principles and procedures of competition law and policy, taking into account relevant provisions of the Uruguay Round agreements. It called on States to strive to implement all provisions of the Set to ensure its effective application.

The UNCTAD secretariat was asked to revise periodically the commentary to the model law on restrictive business practices in the light of legislative developments and comments made by member States for consideration by future sessions of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts and to disseminate widely the model law and its commentary as revised.

The Conference recommended the continuation of the work programme within UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery addressing competition law and policy issues and a change of title of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices to Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy. The Conference further recommended that the Assembly convene a fourth review conference in the year 2000.

Commodities

The Trade and Development Report, 1995⁽¹⁾ stated that because of an upsurge in demand, speculative trading and a declining dollar, the nominal prices in dollar terms of many non-oil commodities had risen sharply during most of 1994. After falling to record lows at the beginning of the 1990s, the terms of trade of non-oil primary commodities with respect to manufactures also went up substantially during the year. Petroleum prices, however, continued to drop and their terms of trade with manufactures were at a new low. Many price changes also reflected vagaries in supply. For example, frost in Brazil and lower production in Colombia, Cote d'Ivoire and Indonesia resulted in a tight supply situation in coffee. Prices of cotton and copra also rose due to reduced supplies. Price increases were both sizeable and widespread: among foodstuffs and tropical beverages, they rose in coffee, cocoa, rice and sugar; among agricultural raw materials, they rose in cotton, rubber, hides and skins; and among minerals, they rose in aluminium, tungsten ores, copper and nickel.

However, other commodity prices continued to fare badly, notably tea, beef and bananas, as well as iron ore.

Despite many substantial increases in nominal terms, for most commodities the declining trend in real terms since 1970 was only slightly affected. Moreover, the expected slow-down of industrial expansion in many major markets and sluggish recovery in Western Europe, in combination with the expected expansion of supply, would tend to dampen the price movements of many commodities, the Report stated.

Standing Committee on Commodities

The Standing Committee on Commodities in 1995 held its fourth session (Geneva, 30 October-3 November).⁽⁶¹⁾ It reviewed reports by the UNCTAD secretariat on: sustainable development and the possibilities for the reflection of environmental costs in prices;⁽⁶²⁾ the Uruguay Round and international commodity trade and prices;⁽⁶³⁾ and a review of the Standing Committee's work programme, with special emphasis on preparations for UNCTAD IX.⁽⁶⁴⁾ It also considered reports on the third (1994) sessions⁽⁶⁵⁾ of intergovernmental groups of experts on both tungsten and iron ore, as well as the report of the iron ore group's fourth (1995) session (see below).

In agreed conclusions adopted on 3 November, the Standing Committee stated that the expected growth of world commodity demand in the foreseeable future was likely to be accompanied by persisting traditional and newly emerging problems of the international commodity economy. Those problems, including depressed prices, faced commodity exporters and, especially, developing countries and LDCs, which were heavily dependent on commodities for their export earnings, domestic employment and food production.

Export diversification was well recognized as a key prerequisite if commodity-dependent developing economies were to succeed in moving towards sustainable development with higher growth and standards of living. There was general consensus that expanded market access for developing countries' exports was an important condition for durable expansion in their export earnings and gains in market shares. Domestic policy reform and economic and technical cooperation from the international community were crucial if developing countries were to take full advantage of available opportunities and niches in commodity production and trade. The need to assist developing countries, particularly LDCs, in that regard was emphasized.

To achieve sustainable development, it was important to take into account all relevant costs and benefits of economic activity, including those related to the environment. Existing distortions in the price system, particularly those caused by subsidies in commodity production, should be eliminated as a prerequisite for internalizing externalities. Moreover, clarifying the concept of internalization and its significance for sustainable development would contribute to both implementation at the national level and advancement of an international dialogue.

Producer-consumer cooperation was an important element of commodity policy that needed to be pursued where feasible, taking into account the particular needs of developing countries and the characteristics of individual commodities. Such cooperation could be enhanced by taking market forces more fully into account; involving both the private sector and industry experts; improving research and development; and promoting consideration of environmental issues and sustainable development.

The Standing Committee agreed that UNCTAD had an important role to play in the commodity area. It should concentrate its future work on issues where it had expertise and competence in promoting sound, compatible and consistent policies with a view to achieving the improved functioning of the international commodity economy and an enhanced role for the developing countries in that economy. Special attention was needed for highly commodity-dependent, low-income countries and other weaker economies, such as those in Africa, particularly for LDCs.

The Standing Committee agreed that, after UNCTAD IX, UNCTAD should continue to address commodity issues, which could be conceptualized in terms of the macroeconomic, sectoral, microeconomic and international dimensions. Meeting those challenges required a three-pronged approach: research and analysis; policy dialogue; and technical and economic cooperation. It was recommended that UNCTAD develop a work programme within the intergovernmental machinery that addressed commodity issues and proceeded only with the active support and participation of relevant government ministries and enterprises of member countries and other concerned organizations.

State participation and privatization in the minerals sector. The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on State Participation and Privatization in the Minerals Sector of the Standing Committee on Commodities met in 1995 (Geneva, 26-27 October).⁽⁶⁶⁾ It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on such State participation and privatization,⁽⁶⁷⁾ which discussed changes in State control of non-fuel mineral production over the preceding decades and performance of State-controlled companies and presented arguments for privatization. It also suggested the following structure for the Group's discussions: the rationale for State participation and for privatization; the conditions, policies and instruments required; and the roles of the public and private sectors.

Summarizing the Group's discussions, the Chairman said that there was no one path to privatization. In one case, minority equity participation was most appropriate; in another, full State ownership was preferred in order not to divert from the private sector the immense amounts of capital required to purchase existing State assets; in yet another, existing State assets were being capitalized in such a way as to capture more successfully for the State and society the full market value of State assets as opposed to the book value of the assets.

Whatever the path to privatization or continued State participation, the successful exploitation of mineral assets would depend on the existence of a good legislative, administrative and regulatory framework and clear and enforced labour, legal and environmental regimes. Privatization in the minerals sector was complex and lengthy and had to be seen in the context of the whole economy and include both macro- and micro-level considerations. Local communities that were largely dependent on minerals activities were stakeholders in the privatization process and should be involved. Decisions regarding the role of the State and the choices made concerning the degree and form of ownership were ultimately political in nature. Therefore, there was criticism and public debate surrounding every privatization or State participation decision. That was particularly true when the mineral asset was central to the national economy or when it was the leading economic activity of a particular area. The political objective was clear, however: to achieve the most economically efficient and socially responsible exploitation and use of the natural resource base of the nation.

The Standing Committee on Commodities took note of an oral report on the meeting presented by the Group's Chairman.

Common Fund for Commodities

The 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities,⁽⁶⁸⁾ a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing, entered into force in 1989, and the Fund became operational later that year.

As at 31 December 1995,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Agreement had been signed by 115 States and the European Community (European Union), and 103 States and the European Community had become parties to it. Turkey's withdrawal from the Fund became effective on 1 August.

Individual commodities

Agricultural commodities

Natural rubber. The UN Conference on Natural Rubber, 1994, met in its third part in Geneva from 6 to 17 February 1995,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the first two parts having taken place in 1994.⁽⁷¹⁾ On 17 February, 31 countries representing nearly 90 per cent of world trade in natural rubber adopted the International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1995, which aimed at stabilizing prices. The 1995 Agreement, the third on rubber to be negotiated under the aegis of UNCTAD, succeeded the International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1987,⁽⁷²⁾ which expired on 28 December 1995.

By its final resolution,⁽⁷³⁾ the Conference, having established the text of the Agreement in Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish, decided that those texts were equally authentic and requested that they be forwarded to the UN Secretary-General. He was asked to forward copies of the Agreement to all Governments invited to the Conference and to arrange for it to be open for signature in New York during the period laid down in article 57 (3 April-28 December 1995). The attention of Governments was drawn to the procedures laid down in articles 59 (ratification, acceptance and approval) and 61 (entry into force). They were urged to sign the Agreement and deposit instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession before 1 January 1997, or to notify that they would apply the Agreement provisionally.

As at 31 December 1995,⁽⁶⁹⁾ 19 States and the European Community had signed the Agreement, one State had formally accepted it and two States had given notification of its provisional application.

Minerals and metals

Iron ore. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Iron Ore of the Standing Committee on Commodities held its fourth session in 1995 (Geneva, 23-25 October).⁽⁷⁴⁾ It had before it iron ore statistics for 1987-1994,⁽⁷⁵⁾ an annotated bibliography on iron ore,⁽⁷⁶⁾ and a review of the current situation and outlook for iron ore,⁽⁷⁷⁾ all prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat.

On 25 October, the Group adopted a text stating that governmental representatives, industry experts and iron ore companies reaffirmed that the work of the Group was unique and extremely useful to producers and consumers. It recalled that the statistical work and the exchange of views within the Group was an important contribution to increasing market transparency.

The Group agreed that a possible application by it to the Common Fund for Commodities for designation as an eligible International Commodity Body should be considered following UNCTAD IX. It proposed that its fifth session be held in October 1996.

Tungsten. The Standing Committee on Commodities considered the report of the third (1994) session of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Tungsten,⁽⁶⁵⁾ by which it had remitted to the Standing Committee the determination of the date for its fourth session. The Committee also had before it an UNCTAD secretariat review of the current market situation and outlook in tungsten.⁽⁷⁸⁾

The Standing Committee recommended to TDB that it suspend the activities of the Group until the Board could determine that there was adequate support to re-initiate it in the future.

Services

The third session of the Standing Committee on Developing Services Sectors: Fostering Competitive Services Sectors in Developing Countries took place in Geneva from 25 to 29 September.⁽⁷⁹⁾ It had before it reports by the UNCTAD secretariat on: ways of enhancing access to and use of information networks and distribution channels;⁽⁸⁰⁾ the impact of progressive liberalization and of service imports on the development of competitive services sectors, and the difficulties faced by developing countries which prevented them from increasing their participation in world trade in services;⁽⁸¹⁾ and the work programme of the Standing Committee, with special emphasis on the preparations for UNCTAD IX.⁽⁸²⁾

On 29 September, the Standing Committee adopted agreed recommendations, which it annexed to its report. It stated that UNCTAD's future work should be oriented towards assisting developing countries to strengthen their capacities in the services sector and to identify clearly the opportunities for their services exports, as well as the barriers and impediments to their ability to compete in world markets. Work should focus on measures to overcome those difficulties, including by enhancing the negotiating capacity of developing countries in obtaining greater market access in sectors and modes of supply of export interest to them. LDCs should receive particular attention.

It was agreed that future work could focus on the following issues: the impact of subsidies, government procurement, safeguards and anti-competitive practices on development of competitive services sectors in developing countries and trade in specific services sectors and the improvement of information on current practice in those areas; analysis of trading opportunities made available as a result of market access commitments on temporary movement of natural persons in the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS); a sustained result-oriented approach in dealing with problems faced by developing countries in enhancing their access to and use of information networks and distribution channels; strengthening and making operational the Database on Measures Affecting Service Trade (MAST), giving priority to areas of ongoing negotiations at the multi-lateral and regional levels, responding to requests for cooperation from countries and regional and subregional arrangements, and disseminating MAST, particularly to the private sector; analysis of how to achieve the development objectives of GATS; the implications of environmental measures for the services trade of developing countries; evaluation of modalities and policies aimed at promoting regional, subregional and interregional cooperation on services, including among countries at different levels of economic development; the impact of economic integration arrangements on the services sectors of other countries, particularly those of developing countries; improvement of statistics on trade in services; strengthening UNCTAD's technical assistance capacity; and studying problems and opportunities faced by countries undergoing transition to a market economy in improving the role of services in their economies.

Insurance

The Standing Committee on Developing Services Sectors: Fostering Competitive Services Sectors in Developing Countries held its third session on insurance (Geneva, 13-17 November).⁽⁸³⁾ It considered the following documents prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat: a study on the establishment of effective insurance regulatory and supervisory systems;⁽⁸⁴⁾ a review of activities of the secretariat pertaining to the work programme;⁽⁸⁵⁾ and a summary of the major components and structures for catastrophe insurance schemes.⁽⁸⁶⁾ The Standing Committee also had before it, in addition to a number of background documents, the report of an expert group meeting on prudential regulation and supervision of insurance markets in developing countries and countries in transition to market economies (Geneva, 19-20 June).⁽⁸⁷⁾

In agreed conclusions adopted on 17 November, the Standing Committee stated that future UNCTAD work on insurance should focus on the following issues: the establishment of an appropriate framework for the functioning of a competitive market; catastrophe insurance; the specific needs of developing countries; and information and technical assistance.

Consumer protection

In accordance with a 1990 Economic and Social Council request,⁽⁸⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in May a report on consumer protection.⁽⁸⁹⁾ The report covered activities relating to the implementation of the guidelines for consumer protection, adopted by the General Assembly in 1985.⁽⁹⁰⁾ It described action taken within the UN system, implementation of the guidelines by Governments, regional and international cooperation and activities of NGOs. In a section on the future scope of the guidelines, the report noted that at its April 1995 session, the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) had adopted a work programme on changing production and consumption patterns, which included a call for the expansion of the guidelines for consumer protection to include those for sustainable consumption patterns. Such guidelines might cover schemes for the dissemination of properly researched information and advice on the environmental impact of consumer products, including eco-labelling and eco-profile schemes; the promotion of joint environmental testing; educational programmes on sustainable consumption; and standards on environmental claims.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/53.

Consumer protection

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/248 of 9 April 1985, in which the Assembly adopted guidelines for consumer protection,

Recalling also its resolutions 1988/61 of 27 July 1988 and 1990/85 of 27 July 1990, as well as resolution 48/7 of 23 April 1992 of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, in which Governments were urged to implement the guidelines for consumer protection and the Secretary-General was requested to provide assistance to Governments in that regard,

Noting that the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its third session, recommended that the guidelines for consumer protection be expanded to include guidelines for sustainable consumption patterns,

Aware that the need for assistance in the area of consumer protection, particularly in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, remains great,

1. Commends the Secretary-General for his report on consumer protection, prepared pursuant to Council resolution 1990/85, containing information on the efforts currently being made within the United Nations system to promote the implementation of the guidelines for consumer protection;

2. Notes with appreciation the impact the guidelines have had in the decade since their adoption in promoting just, equitable and sustainable economic and social development through their implementation by Governments;

3. Recognizes the role of civil societies and non-governmental organizations in promoting the implementation of the guidelines;

4. Urges all Governments to continue their efforts to implement the guidelines, create the appropriate legal framework and establish the means to develop, implement and monitor policies and programmes for consumer protection;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the development funds and programmes of the United Nations, the regional commissions and other relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to provide assistance to Governments, at their request, in implementing the guidelines for consumer protection, to elaborate guidelines in the area of sustainable consumption patterns, taking into account the work undertaken in other intergovernmental forums, and to examine the possible extension of those guidelines into other areas;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council at its substantive session of 1997 on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/53

28 July 1995 Meeting 57 Adopted without vote

16-nation draft (E/1995/L.27), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 6.

Meeting numbers. ESC 39-41, 45, 57.

Finance

Financial policy

In 1994 and early 1995, according to the Trade and Development Report, 1995,⁽¹⁾ there were marked differences in the growth of the major categories of external financing from the international financial markets. Those differences largely reflected the impact of unsettled conditions on issues of debt securities. Consequently, 1994 had been characterized by a slow-down in new external bond issues after the first quarter, accompanied by indications of greater reluctance among investors to purchase instruments with long maturities. The more difficult conditions in financial markets had led to a very large decrease in new bond issues by Latin American entities in the first four months of 1995 and to the postponement of international equity issues by companies from developing countries. The ripple effects from the Mexican currency crisis in late 1994 were also generally viewed as having contributed, together with such factors as rising interest rates, to ubiquitous declines in prices that took place in major emerging financial markets between mid-December 1994 and mid-January 1995.

Flows to developing countries of some major categories of financing broadly followed the movements experienced by other borrowers. However, the international equity issues of developing countries increased to more than $15.5 billion in 1994, almost double the level of the previous year; that was largely due to an increase in issues originating in South and South-East Asia. Total external purchases of developing-country equities also included those of shares in local markets, and figures for net inflows in that form (i.e., purchases less sales) showed a fall from over $60 billion in 1993 to about $40 billion in 1994.

Total claims on developing countries of banks in the Bank for International Settlements (BIS) reporting area increased more rapidly in 1994 than those on all borrowers. Their faster expansion reflected a substantial rise for countries of South and South-East Asia, a much smaller one for those of Latin America, and falls for those of Africa and West Asia. Claims also decreased for countries of Eastern Europe.

During the first half of 1994, the vigorous growth of the previous two years in the net flow of export credits to developing countries was not sustained. Indeed, total net flows to Africa and Latin America were actually negative. The costs and other terms of official insurance were especially important in depressing the levels of such credits to African countries, of which more than 50 per cent in 1993 and 60 per cent in the first half of 1994 experienced net outflows. There were also increases in the frequency of net outflows from countries in Latin America and West Asia during early 1994.

Access to major categories of financing from international financial markets in 1994 continued to be concentrated on a relatively small group of developing countries and economies in transition. For example, three Latin American countries (Argentina, Brazil, Mexico) received approximately 40 per cent of sums raised in the form of external bond issues by countries and territories other than certain major offshore financial centres. A similar proportion was centred in South and South-East Asia (China, Indonesia, Republic of Korea, Taiwan, Thailand). Of the economies in transition, only Hungary was a major borrower in this form.

Monies raised through new syndicated bank credits were still more concentrated. Five countries of South and South-East Asia (China, Indonesia, Republic of Korea, Malaysia, Thailand) accounted for 70 per cent and four of those (excluding Malaysia) accounted for almost the entire growth in 1994 of the value of claims of banks in the BIS reporting area on developing countries and territories. Borrowing in the form of various other instruments was heavily concentrated among a few Latin American countries. Argentina, Brazil and Mexico were responsible for more than 90 per cent of funds raised by developing countries through announced medium-term Euronote facilities, and they also accounted for most of developing countries' issues of Eurocommercial paper.

Between mid-1994 and April 1995, a number of countries, including Barbados, Bolivia, Ghana, Guatemala, Lebanon, Pakistan and Tunisia, issued external bonds either for the first time or after lengthy absences from the markets for such instruments. Similarly, in the spring of 1995, Romania returned to the market for syndicated international bank credits after an absence of about 15 years. However, the accession of such countries had not yet had a major effect on the distribution of financing from the international financial markets for developing countries and economies in transition.

A number of countries of South and South-East Asia, which had been left largely unscathed by the 1980s debt crisis, had increasingly been integrated into the global system of financial markets and could raise money there relatively easily. However, the spillover effects of the Mexican crisis served as a reminder of the continuing vulnerability of their financial markets to speculative international investors still inclined to lump them with emerging markets elsewhere in the developing world. Those effects were evident in downward pressures on share prices and exchange rates and contributed to substantial declines in external bond and equity issues.

Net transfer of resources

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the World Economic and Social Survey 1995⁽³⁾ reported on the question of the net transfer of resources between developing and developed countries. It stated that the developing countries taken together had, in 1994, enjoyed a fourth straight year of large net financial transfers, although the transfer was almost $15 billion less than in 1993. Coupled with strong growth of export earnings, it facilitated a double-digit growth of import volumes.

The level of official reserves rose by almost $80 billion. Some of that increase represented the larger dollar value of the stock of non-dollar reserves, owing to the depreciation of the dollar exchange rate against the yen and other reserve currencies. But the increase of reserves at constant exchange rates was over $50 billion. Not all countries shared in that experience. Mexico, in particular, saw its reserves fall from their peak of $29 billion at the end of February 1994 to $6 billion by the end of the year. Indeed, the fall in Latin America's reserves was fully accounted for by Mexico's decline. Excluding Mexico, Latin America's reserves rose by $8 billion at constant exchange rates. The reserves of sub-Saharan Africa (excluding Nigeria and South Africa) also rose, both nominally and as a share of imports.

On the whole, the quality of the financial components of the flows to the developing countries improved in 1994. For the sample of 93 capital-importing countries whose data were sufficient to construct reasonable estimates, there had been a smaller net inflow of short-term and speculative funds. Instead, net inflows of direct investment and medium- and long-term credit from private sources (particularly bonds and syndicated loans), as well as official and private grants, were larger. The bulk of the improvement was enjoyed by Asia, although direct investment in Latin America rose as well. While there was little change in the overall net transfers of sub-Saharan Africa, Africa as a whole experienced a negative transfer, as more funds were used on interest and capital outflows than were received from abroad. The net transfer to Africa through official credit was positive in 1994, and significantly positive to the sub-Saharan region, while Latin America experienced its eighth consecutive year of negative transfers on account of official credits. However, in January 1995, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) agreed to an 18-month stand-by arrangement for Mexico of almost $18 billion, far more than the Fund's total lending commitments in 1994.

More generally, developing countries were still repaying IMF loans on a net basis in 1994, although there were net disbursements of about $1 billion of concessional loans through the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility. Net disbursements by the World Bank to developing countries and transition economy borrowers remained positive, but when interest payments in the order of $8 billion were subtracted from the net capital flow, the resulting net transfer of the Bank was negative, as it had been throughout the decade. Nevertheless, lending commitments at IMF and the World Bank Group rose in 1994. Loan arrangements by all the regional development banks fell in 1994, however, except at the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, which was only in its fourth year of making loan commitments. The sharpest cut-backs were by the African Development Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/91.

Global financial integration: challenges and opportunities

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and 45/199 of 21 December 1990, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, and the Cartagena Commitment, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its eighth session,

Recalling its resolution 49/93 of 19 December 1994 on net flows and transfer of resources between developing and developed countries,

Stressing the importance at the national level in the countries concerned of a favourable climate for private financial flows, sound macroeconomic policies and appropriate functioning of markets,

Recognizing that the international community should continue to give strong support to the efforts of the developing countries to solve their grave economic and social problems as well as to promote a favourable climate for private financial flows through the creation of a favourable international economic environment,

Noting with satisfaction that the process of economic growth, in a number of developing countries, has been positively affected by the recent increase in international private capital flows,

Commending continuing efforts made by developing countries to create a more favourable national framework and stressing that a considerable number of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, especially in Africa, have not benefited from the aforementioned capital flows,

Expressing concern, within such a context, at the decline in real terms in the past three years in the overall level of official development assistance to developing countries,

Expressing concern also that a significant number of developing countries have become more vulnerable, in the course of liberalizing their external economic and financial regimes, to the volatile fluctuations of private capital flows in international financial markets,

Noting the necessity of promoting the creation of favourable conditions for achieving international stability in private capital flows and of preventing the destabilization arising from swift movements of private capital flows, in order, inter alia, to enhance development, in particular of developing countries,

Aware of the role of the International Monetary Fund in the promotion of a stable international financial environment conducive to economic growth, and taking into account the strengthening of the cooperative relationship between the United Nations and the Fund,

1. Stresses that global financial integration presents new challenges and opportunities for the international community and that it should constitute a very important element of the dialogue between the United Nations system and the Bretton Woods institutions;

2. Underscores the need for encouragement of private flows to all countries, in particular to developing countries, especially long-term flows, while reducing the risks of volatility;

3. Recognizes that, in a globalized world, sound fiscal and monetary policy in each country is among the elements essential in preventing crises relating to capital flows;

4. Emphasizes the need to explore ways to broaden appropriate enhanced cooperation and, where appropriate, coordination of macroeconomic policy among interested countries, monetary and financial authorities and institutions, so as to enhance preventive consultation arrangements between such institutions as a means of promoting a stable international financial environment conducive to economic growth, particularly in developing countries, taking into account the needs of developing countries as well as situations that may have a significant impact upon the international financial system;

5. Reiterates the need for broadening and strengthening the participation of developing countries in the international economic decision-making process;

6. Welcomes the steps taken by the International Monetary Fund and recognizes the need for a stronger and central role for the Fund in surveillance of all countries, in a symmetrical manner, in accordance with paragraph 4 of the communique of the Interim Committee of the Board of Governors of the Fund, dated 26 April 1995, with regard to potential sources of destabilization of capital markets with a view to promoting transparency and stability in international financial markets and promoting economic growth, such surveillance including, among other elements, the regular and timely provision of economic and financial data;

7. Reaffirms the objective of promoting greater transparency and openness, including increasing participation of developing countries in the work of the International Monetary Fund, an objective that involves, among other elements, the regular and timely provision of economic and financial data by all Fund members;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, at its fifty-first session, in cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/91

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/616) without vote, 5 December (meeting 41); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.56), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.6) and orally revised; agenda item 94.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 11-13, 23, 24, 32, 41; plenary 96.

Debt problems of developing countries

The Trade and Development Report, 1995⁽¹⁾ noted that the official debt of low-income debtor countries and some middle-income countries continued to cause concern. In December 1994, the Paris Club (a group of creditor Governments) had adopted the new Naples terms in favour of the poorest and most indebted countries. The terms included the option of reducing the stock of debt, provision for the level of debt reduction to be raised to 67 per cent, and more generous coverage of debt. During the first six months of 1995, nine low-income countries (Bolivia, Cambodia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Nicaragua, Senegal, Togo, Uganda) and two middle-income countries (Croatia, Russian Federation) rescheduled their debt at the Paris Club.

The multilateral debt of 41 highly indebted low-income countries more than tripled from 1982 to 1993, reaching a level of $55.5 billion, which was more than 24 per cent of their total debt outstanding. The share of multilateral debt service exceeded 46 per cent for those countries and for 28 of them the share was more than half. The higher share of debt service compared to the share of debt outstanding was indicative of the preferred creditor status of multilateral institutions which protected their claims from rescheduling or reduction. Multilateral debt had often been serviced by accumulating arrears on other types of debt.

The World Bank Group accounted for over half the multilateral debt outstanding at the end of 1993. While lending by the World Bank declined, that was more than offset by high International Development Association loans. By contrast, there was a dramatic drop in the share of IMF lending, from over 29 per cent in the period 1980-1983 to less than 12 per cent in 1993. Net transfers from IMF were negative from 1984 to 1993, but it reported positive net transfers of over $365 million in 1994. Other multilateral institutions, particularly the regional development banks, were also an important source of financing, accounting for a third of the multilateral debt of the low-income countries.

The Report concluded that, following the initiatives taken by bilateral official creditors, the debt problem had shifted to that of outstanding debt owed to multilateral financial institutions. With few exceptions, a decade of adjustment policies supported by financing from multilateral financial institutions had not halted or reversed the economic stagnation of the heavily indebted low-income countries or increased their capacity to service external debt. There was little doubt that those countries would have to rely for some time on highly concessional finance. How to use those funds to increase their export earnings and enhance their development prospects was the real challenge for both recipient countries and the rest of the international community.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on the developing-country debt situation as of mid-1995.⁽⁵⁾ The report updated the current strategy in terms of new measures launched by private, bilateral official and multilateral creditors to deal with persistent difficulties faced by developing countries in servicing their external debt obligations, analysed recent debt indicators and discussed the situation of countries that were still classified as severely indebted despite the initiatives adopted.

The report concluded that although significant relief had been accorded to some countries and for certain classes of debt, the international strategy had not comprehensively addressed the full stock of debt, leaving vulnerable those countries whose debt-servicing obligations still exceeded their capacity to pay. Removing the debt overhang would not by itself solve the development problems of the debt-crisis countries, but while it remained even the most rigorous and effective domestic economic stabilization and structural adjustment programmes would leave the countries in question with serious obstacles to moving to a sustained and sustainable development path.

Group of Seven Summit. The seven major industrialized nations (Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States), in the communique adopted at their 1995 Summit meeting (Halifax, Canada, 15-17 June),⁽⁶⁾ urged full and constructive implementation of the Naples terms. They stated that they would encourage the Bretton Woods institutions (IMF and the World Bank Group) to develop a comprehensive approach to assist countries with multilateral debt problems through flexible implementation of existing instruments and new mechanisms where necessary. They would further encourage better use of all existing World Bank and IMF resources and adoption of appropriate measures in the multilateral development banks to advance that objective and to continue concessional Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility lending operations.

Group of 77 annual meeting. In the declaration adopted at the nineteenth annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 developing countries (New York, 29 September),⁽⁷⁾ the Ministers regretted that, despite the implementation of several approaches undertaken by the international community, the debt crisis continued to persist as one of the main constraints for the development of developing countries. They reiterated the urgent need for the international community, particularly the donor countries and international financial institutions, to adopt an effective, comprehensive and equitable, once-and-for-all development-oriented and durable solution to the debt problems of the developing countries, including debt reduction and increased concessional financial flows for LDCs and Africa. They stressed that structural adjustment policies should not divert resources from social priorities in debtor countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/92.

Enhancing international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problem of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/202 of 8 December 1986, 42/198 of 11 December 1987, 43/198 of 20 December 1988, 44/205 of 22 December 1989, 45/214 of 21 December 1990, 46/148 and 46/151 of 18 December 1991 and 47/198 of 22 December 1992, and reaffirming its resolutions 48/182 of 21 December 1993 and 49/94 of 19 December 1994,

Reaffirming its resolutions 48/165 of 21 December 1993 on renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership and 48/166 of 21 December 1993 on an agenda for development,

Noting the improvement in the debt situation of a number of developing countries since the second half of the 1980s and the contribution that the evolving debt strategy has made to this improvement,

Noting with appreciation the debt-relief measures undertaken by creditor countries both within the framework of the Paris Club and through their cancellation and equivalent relief of bilateral official debt, and welcoming the even more favourable terms of the debt-relief measures recently envisaged by the Paris Club, namely the Naples terms of December 1994, for the poorest and heavily indebted countries, to help them exit from the rescheduling process, thus contributing to the prospects of those countries for resuming growth and development,

Reaffirming the urgent need for effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, and to help them exit from the rescheduling process,

Emphasizing the importance for debtor countries of continuing to pursue and intensify their efforts with respect to economic reforms, stabilization and structural adjustment programmes, in order to raise savings and investments, reduce inflation and improve economic efficiency, taking into account the need to address the social aspects of development, including the eradication of poverty, and their individual characteristics, as well as the vulnerability of the poorer strata of their populations,

Stressing the urgent need for further assisting developing countries, in particular the poorest and heavily indebted countries, especially in Africa, in their efforts to improve their debt situation in view of their continued very high level of total debt stock and servicing burdens,

Noting the urgent need for full, constructive and expeditious implementation of various debt-relief measures undertaken by creditor countries both within the framework of the Paris Club and through their cancellations and equivalent relief of bilateral official debt,

Noting also that, owing to uneven developments within the context of the evolving international debt strategy, further progress, including new and concrete measures and innovative approaches, is essential as regards contributing to effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, particularly the poorest and heavily indebted countries,

Noting with concern the continuing debt and debt-servicing problems of indebted developing countries as constituting an element adversely affecting their development efforts and economic growth, and stressing the importance of alleviating the onerous debt and debt-service burdens connected with various types of debt of many developing countries, on the basis of an effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable approach and, where appropriate, addressing the full stock of debt of the poorest and most indebted developing countries as a matter of priority,

Noting that multilateral lending operations are excluded from debt restructuring and, in this regard, emphasizing the need for the consideration of comprehensive approaches to assist low-income countries with substantial multilateral debt problems through the flexible implementation of existing instruments and new mechanisms where necessary,

Expressing its concern that, in a number of developing countries that are making continuous and strenuous economic reform efforts, the burden of debt and debt service continues to constitute a major obstacle to the revitalization of the economic growth and development of those countries, in particular the least developed among them,

Noting that those developing countries that have continued, at great cost to themselves, to meet their international debt and debt-service obligations in a timely fashion have done so despite serious external and domestic financial constraints,

Also expressing its concern that debt-relief measures taken so far have not yet fully provided effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the outstanding debt and debt-servicing problems of a large number of developing countries, in particular the poorest and heavily indebted countries,

Reaffirming the results, as agreed, of all major United Nations conferences and summits held since the beginning of the 1990s on development, relating to effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, as well as the consideration of appropriate measures relating to the mobilization of substantial, new and additional resources to enable developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development,

Noting, while addressing the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, the situation in some creditor countries with economies in transition,

Stressing the need for continuing global economic growth and the necessity for a continuing supportive international economic environment with regard to, inter alia, terms of trade, commodity prices, improved market access, trade practices, access to technology, exchange rates and international interest rates, and noting the continued need for resources for sustained economic growth and sustainable development of the developing countries,

Taking note of the results of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995, in particular, chapter III, entitled "Economic issues", of the Final Document of the Conference,

Taking note also of the communique of the Summit of the seven major industrialized countries, held at Halifax, Canada, from 15 to 17 June 1995,

Taking note further of the communique of the Interim Committee of the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund, held at Washington on 8 October 1995,

Taking note of the Ministerial Declaration of the Group of 77 adopted at the nineteenth annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 and China, held in New York on 29 September 1995,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the developing country debt situation as of mid-1995;

2. Recognizes that effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries can contribute substantially to the strengthening of the global economy and to the efforts of developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

3. Also recognizes that the evolving international debt strategy has to be supplemented by appropriate external financial flows to indebted developing countries;

4. Emphasizes the importance for developing countries of continuing their efforts to promote a favourable environment for attracting foreign investment, thereby promoting economic growth and sustainable development, and stresses the need for the international community to promote a conducive external economic environment through, inter alia, improved market access, stabilization of exchange rates, effective stewardship of international interest rates and increased resource flows, as well as improved access to technology for the developing countries;

5. Stresses the need for finding effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the continuing debt and debt-servicing problems of the poorest and most indebted developing countries and the importance of a full, constructive and expeditious implementation of the Naples terms, agreed upon in the Paris Club in December 1994, for such countries, with a view to helping them exit from the rescheduling process on the basis of sound economic policies in those countries, thus contributing to the promotion of their prospects for resuming growth and development;

6. Recognizes the efforts of indebted developing countries in fulfilling their commitments on debt servicing despite the incurring of a high social cost and, in this regard, encourages private creditors and, in particular, commercial banks to continue their initiatives and efforts to address the commercial debt problems of middle-income developing countries;

7. Invites creditor countries, private banks and multilateral financial institutions, within their prerogatives, to consider continuing the initiatives and efforts to address the commercial debt problems of the least developed countries and the requests for continued mobilization of resources through the Debt-reduction Facility of the International Development Association in order to help eligible least developed countries reduce their commercial debt;

8. Notes the high proportion of multilateral debt of a number of developing countries and invites international financial institutions to examine proposals to tackle the problems of those countries with regard to multilateral debt, taking into account the specific situation of each country, while preserving the preferred creditor status of the multilateral financial institutions, in order to ensure that they can continue to provide concessional financing to those developing countries to assist their development;

9. Reaffirms the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, in particular the appropriate actions in favour of least developed countries concerning their official bilateral, commercial and multilateral debt;

10. Notes with concern the continuing burden of debt and debt-service obligations of middle-income countries, including in particular those in Africa, and encourages creditors, including multilateral financial institutions and commercial banks, to continue to address their obligations effectively;

11. Stresses the importance of continued concessional Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility lending operations for low-income countries;

12. Also stresses the need for existing facilities to provide debt-relief measures through various debt conversion programmes, where possible, such as debt-equity swaps, debt-for-nature swaps, debt-for-child-development swaps, and other debt-for-development swaps, to be widely implemented so that the countries concerned may be ably assisted in their development efforts, as well as to support measures in favour of the most vulnerable segments of the societies of those countries and to develop techniques of debt conversion applied to social development programmes and projects, in conformity with the priorities of the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen in March 1995;

13. Further stresses the need for, in addition to debt-relief measures that include debt and debt-service reduction, new financial flows to debtor developing countries, and urges creditor countries and multilateral financial institutions to continue to extend concessional financial assistance, particularly to the least developed countries, in order to support the implementation of economic reforms, stabilization and structural adjustment programmes and the eradication of poverty by the developing countries so as to enable them to extricate themselves from the debt overhang and to assist them in achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development;

14. Stresses the need for the expeditious conclusion of the ongoing work of the International Monetary Fund, in close collaboration with the World Bank, on the steps to address the problems of those low-income countries that are undertaking strong adjustment and reform programmes but whose debt situation, including debt to multilateral institutions, may prove unsustainable, even after debt reduction on the Naples terms, within this context urging donor countries to fulfil promptly their commitments to the tenth replenishment of the International Development Association and to support a significant replenishment through the eleventh replenishment of the Association, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the outcome of the meeting of the Development Committee scheduled for April 1996;

15. Notes the initiative to develop new, parallel financing arrangements, complementary to the General Arrangements to Borrow, with the aim of doubling the resources currently available under the General Arrangements to Borrow;

16. Recognizes that the evolving debt strategy must be accompanied by a favourable and supportive international environment, including the full implementation of the results of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, and the Marrakesh ministerial decisions in favour of the least developed countries and net food-importing developing countries;

17. Invites the International Monetary Fund to continue devising concrete policy measures and actions to address the problems faced by indebted developing countries;

18. Underscores the need for encouragement of private flows to all countries, in particular developing countries, while reducing the risks of volatility;

19. Stresses the urgent need to continue to provide social safety nets to vulnerable groups most adversely affected by the implementation of economic reform programmes in the debtor countries, in particular low-income groups;

20. Urges the international community, particularly the creditor countries and multilateral institutions, as well as commercial banks and other lending institutions, when continuing the implementation of various measures aimed at contributing to effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, as well as when exploring the need for additional and innovative measures to alleviate substantially the external debt and debt-service burden of developing countries, to ensure that the debt strategy evolved through the years is fully implemented and taken into account;

21. Recognizes the urgent need for the international community to assist developing countries, in particular the poorest and heavily indebted countries, in mobilizing the resources needed for their development efforts, and also recognizes that effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries could contribute towards releasing domestic resources and sustaining their development efforts, in particular those for social development;

22. Calls upon the international community, including the relevant institutions, to build upon the momentum gained from the various meetings that have addressed debt issues and to address the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, particularly those of the least developed countries, in the elaboration of an agenda for development;

23. Also calls upon the international community, including the United Nations system, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as the private sector, to take urgent measures and action for the implementation of the commitments, agreements and decisions of the major United Nations conferences and summits organized since the beginning of the 1990s on development, addressing, inter alia, and where appropriate, the question of external debt;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/92

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/616) without vote, 12 December (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.75), based on informal consultations on draft by Colombia (for Non-Aligned Movement), Kyrgyzstan and Philippines (for Group of 77 and China) (A/C.2/50/L.7); agenda item 94.

Taxation

As decided by the Economic and Social Council in 1994,⁽⁸⁾ the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters held its seventh meeting in 1995 (Geneva, 11-15 December).⁽⁹⁾ The Group's Steering Committee had met in New York from 5 to 7 June,⁽¹⁰⁾ proposing four areas for special attention: the tax treatment of teachers and students, with reference to the possible deletion of two articles of the 1980 United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries; the tax treatment of transfer pricing; the tax treatment of financial instruments and derivatives; and the updating of the Model Convention and the Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries. The Steering Committee also considered expanding the Group's role to include the provision of technical assistance and support in the areas of tax administration, international taxation, transfer pricing and the negotiation of tax treaties. The Group of Experts included those topics on its agenda.

The Group of Experts did not reach a consensus on the deletion of articles from the Model Convention, but agreed that an addition could be made to the commentary providing advice for bilateral negotiations on visiting teachers. It was also agreed that a drafting committee should make recommendations on activities to be undertaken by the Group in the area of transfer pricing. The Group noted that consideration of the important issue of new financial instruments was in its introductory stages and further analysis was needed. In view of the lengthy process involved in revising the Model Convention, the Group indicated that it would be useful to have it reprinted and the Secretariat was asked to facilitate that task. As to expanding its role relating to technical assistance in international taxation, the Group considered a proposal for the organization of five annual inter-regional workshops, which had been developed by the Secretariat in response to a Steering Committee request. The Group noted the need to coordinate the proposed technical assistance programme with the efforts of other organizations.

Financing of development

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on the sources of finance for development at mid-decade,⁽¹²⁾ which focused on the levels of saving that could be used to finance investment and the channels for allocating savings to particular investments. The report noted that recent developments in private and official flows had put the long-standing questions of development financing in a new context, in which the volatility of private flows was more highly appreciated and the significant future growth of official flows, particularly ODA, could not be taken for granted. Policy makers in some developing countries had, therefore, begun to focus on the disparate characteristics of different types of private financial inflows, and many questioned the wisdom of early and complete liberalization of the capital account in international transactions. Meanwhile, in some developed countries, the prospective role of development assistance itself was being re-examined. A related concern was that the foreign debt difficulties of developing countries—debt owed to both private and official creditors—had not been resolved more than a decade after the debt crisis burst onto the international political stage (see above).

The report's main conclusion was that in the short to medium term the world economy seemed able to generate the savings needed to finance global investment, including that of the developing countries. It was not so clear, however, whether those savings would find their way in adequate amounts to the more desirable places and would be used for the more desirable projects in terms of equitable, sustainable and efficient development. That would depend on: the development of the financial sector in developing countries; economic reform and socio-economic policy more generally; the ability of private and public investors in developing countries to tap international financial resources; and the flow of official resources for development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/93.

Sources for the financing of development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling its resolution 45/234 of 21 December 1990 on the implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration,

Recalling also its resolution 48/187 of 21 December 1993, particularly as it relates to the decision to continue to explore the issue of the financing of development and its potential funding sources,

Decides to consider at the fifty-second session of the General Assembly the convening of an international conference on the financing of development, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-second session a report on substantive areas, including the consideration of aspects of interrelatedness and coordination necessary as a basis for the full consideration of the issue of financing of development and its potential funding sources.

General Assembly resolution 50/93

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/616) without vote, 12 December (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.74), based on informal consultations on draft by Kyrgyzstan and Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.15); agenda item 94.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 11-13, 23, 24, 32, 41, 43; plenary 96.

Also on 20 December, the Assembly, by decision 50/424, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the sources of finance for development at mid-decade.

International investment and transnational corporations

International production by transnational corporations (TNCs)—some 40,000 parent firms and some 250,000 foreign affiliates—was increasingly influencing the size and nature of cross-border transactions, stated the World Investment Report 1995: Transnational Corporations and Competitiveness.⁽¹³⁾ In the 1990s, the rate of growth of FDI stock substantially exceeded that of world output (GDP) and world exports. The size and scope of international production were amplified further by the activities of TNCs in forms other than FDI, such as subcontracting, licensing and franchising, through which markets for goods, services and factors of production could be reached and international production organized. Global sales in international markets associated with that more broadly defined international production amounted to an estimated $7 trillion in 1992, compared to some $3 trillion in arm's-length trade.

Investment stocks and flows remained concentrated primarily in the developed world and particularly in the Triad (EU, Japan and the United States), as far as both their origin and their destination were concerned. That distribution of inward FDI stock mirrored market size, with the developing countries accounting for between one fifth and one quarter of both world GDP and global inward FDI stock. However, the FDI stock in developing countries was highly concentrated: the 10 largest developing host countries accounted for about two thirds of the total stock in developing countries, more than would be expected from their share in developing-country output or trade. As far as outward stock was concerned, firms from developing countries generated only 6 per cent of the world FDI stock in 1994. As with inward investment, the outward developing-country FDI stock was largely accounted for by firms from only a handful of developing countries.

As far as FDI flows were concerned, the share of developing countries in world inflows was higher than their share in world imports (about 30 per cent in the early 1990s). In terms of FDI outflows, the developing-country share was about half of their share in world exports. By the end of 1993, FDI outflows had largely recovered from the FDI recession (reaching $222 billion) and, in 1994, maintained that level. Preliminary estimates for 1995 ($230 billion) suggested that the recovery had been further consolidated.

Commission on International Investment and TNCs

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ by which the Commission on Transnational Corporations became a commission of TDB and was renamed the Commission on International Investment and Transnational Corporations, the Board, by a 31 March decision,⁽¹⁵⁾ adopted the terms of reference of the Commission and annexed them to its decision. The Board also decided that the rules of procedure of its main committees should apply to the Commission.

The Commission held its twenty-first session in Geneva from 24 to 28 April.⁽¹⁶⁾ It had before it a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on trends in FDI,⁽¹⁷⁾ which noted that the increase of FDI outflows by 5 per cent in 1993 to $193 billion (and by an additional 6 per cent in 1994 to an estimated $204 billion) marked the end of the FDI recession. The global FDI stock stood at an estimated $2.1 trillion at the end of 1993; sales associated with some 207,000 foreign affiliates were around $5.8 trillion in 1992. The recovery of the developed economies and the continuing strong growth of several major recipient developing countries were the principal factors in the turn-around in investment flows. Underlying those cyclical factors were the ongoing liberalization of investment regimes (including the adoption of privatization programmes) and the decline of majority foreign-owned cross-border mergers and acquisitions, particularly among the developed countries. Flows into developing countries, at a record $71 billion in 1993 (and an estimated $80 billion in 1994), continued to grow, even as the economies of developed countries began to recover, thus boosting their share of total inflows to some 39 per cent. However, 80 per cent of the inflows were to 10 developing countries, in particular China. Outward FDI from several developing countries, including inter-developing-country FDI (and increasingly investments from developing to developed countries), was growing, especially from countries whose firms recognized the importance of investing abroad to remain competitive. The levels of FDI flows and stocks were not indicative of the importance of other modalities of servicing markets and accessing assets internationally. The proliferation of alliances, licensing agreements and subcontracting added more dimensions to international transactions undertaken by TNCs, diminished the risks embedded in those transactions because of diversification, and strengthened the relationship and multiplied the links between producers and consumers in different countries.

Other documentation before the Commission included UNCTAD secretariat reports on FDI in developing countries⁽¹⁸⁾ and on experience gained in technical cooperation activities relating to the commercialization of science and technology.⁽¹⁹⁾ The Commission also considered the report of the Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting on its 1995 session (see below) and a number of background documents.

In the course of the Commission session, four informal panel discussions were organized on: the international framework for FDI; recent developments in international investments and TNCs; incentives and FDI; and the FDI impact on the Mexican crisis.

On 28 April, the Commission adopted agreed conclusions, in which it stated that it would continue to review recent developments in the areas of investment, resource mobilization, particularly savings, and the interlinkages among FDI, trade, competition, technology and other international transactions. It would seek the active participation of the private sector in the context of specific topics in those areas. The Commission noted the relatively low levels of both foreign and domestic investment in Africa. It recognized the role of investment for development, with special attention to Africa, with a view to improving the climate for investment; supported international activities aimed at increasing FDI flows; and encouraged the organization of such activities in conjunction with UNCTAD IX. The Commission was prepared to undertake policy reviews of member States that so desired. Such reviews would be an occasion to familiarize other Governments and the private sector with an individual country's investment environment and policies and should be undertaken on the basis of a common format and include inputs from the private sector and non-governmental experts.

The Commission stated that it would deepen its analysis of incentives and their costs and benefits as part of the overall investment climate, as well as patterns of investment. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to undertake the necessary analytical work and to explore the possibility of preparing pilot presentations of information on incentives for a small number of countries that wished to participate. TDB was asked to explore the possibility of making the World Investment Report available in all UN official languages in time for the Commission's session.

Standards of accounting and reporting

At its thirteenth session (Geneva, 13-17 March),⁽²⁰⁾ the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting had before it reports of the UNCTAD secretariat covering a review of national environmental accounting laws and regulations;⁽²¹⁾ incentives and disincentives for the adoption of sustainable development by TNCs;⁽²²⁾ disclosure by TNCs of environmental matters at the national level in annual reports;⁽²³⁾ and the integration of environmental performance indicators with financial information by TNCs.⁽²⁴⁾ It also considered a case-study on accounting for sustainable forestry management.⁽²⁵⁾

The Group concluded that the UNCTAD Secretary-General should be asked to convene a group of experts and to prepare a report on environmental accounting. It requested the secretariat to report on environmental accounting in 1996 and welcomed voluntary contributions by Governments and/or organizations for research and studies on the subject. The Group further concluded that the 1996 work programme, to be reported on in 1997, should include research on a conceptual framework for environmental accounting and a study of the implications of the accounting standards work performed by the International Organization of Securities Commissions and the International Accounting Standards Committee. With regard to the establishment of a subgroup to investigate the development of global qualification standards for accountants and auditors to be endorsed by the United Nations, which the Group had recommended for adoption by the Commission on TNCs in 1994,⁽²⁶⁾ that recommendation was still before the Commission for consideration. The Group agreed that if the subgroup was established, work on accreditation should initially focus not on the professional accountancy level but rather on a level referred to as management and financial accountants; depending on available resources, consideration might be given to a combined approach involving parallel focus on management accountants and/or (statutory) auditors.

With regard to assistance for accountancy development, the Group, having considered the outcome of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Accountancy Training and Development, which met in 1994,⁽²⁶⁾ concurred with that Group's recommendation that the proposal for an accounting education project in Senegal should be selected for further work, together with an effort to strengthen the accounting profession in one African country.

Transport

Maritime transport

Shipping services

The third session of the Standing Committee on Developing Services Sectors: Fostering Competitive Services in Developing Countries—Shipping was held in Geneva from 6 to 9 June.⁽¹⁾ It considered UNCTAD secretariat reports on competitive services in multimodal transport;⁽²⁾ technical cooperation and human resource development in shipping, ports and multimodal transport;⁽³⁾ and the work programme of the Standing Committee, with special emphasis on preparations for UNCTAD IX.⁽⁴⁾

The Committee also reviewed work accomplished since UNCTAD VIII in 1992,⁽⁵⁾ and outlined work that remained to be done before UNCTAD IX in 1996. It suggested possible future activities that TDB might take into account for consideration by UNCTAD IX: technical cooperation and human resource development; shipping aimed at fostering progressive liberalization and facilitating the provision of free and fair competitive shipping services; ports; multimodal transport involving a sea-leg; and maritime and transport legislation aimed at fostering international trade and transport of developing countries.

Maritime legislation

Maritime liens and mortgages

The Joint UNCTAD/International Maritime Organization (IMO) Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Maritime Liens and Mortgages and Related Subjects held its eighth session in 1995 (London, 9-12 October).⁽⁶⁾ It considered a possible review of the International Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to the Arrest of Sea-going Ships, 1952. The Group had before it a note⁽⁷⁾ by the UNCTAD and IMO secretariats on such a review, which comprised a set of draft articles for a convention on arrest of ships, taking into account discussions by the Group in 1994.⁽⁸⁾ The Group established an informal Sessional Group of the Whole, which adopted the UNCTAD/IMO draft articles as its basic text. The Sessional Group introduced several amendments to the draft and decided to consider it again in 1996.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report⁽⁹⁾ on the work during 1993-1994 of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods. The Committee adopted new and amended recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods and finalized the rationalization of its Manual of Tests and Criteria for the classification of dangerous goods. It requested that the new and amended recommendations be compiled in a new revised edition (the ninth revised edition) of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, and that that revised edition be published, in all official languages, not later than the end of 1995. The Committee also requested that the Manual of Tests and Criteria be published in English and French not later than the end of 1995, and in all the other official languages as soon as possible.

The Committee took steps to give effective follow-up to Agenda 21, adopted by the UN Conference on Environment and Development in 1992,⁽¹⁰⁾ particularly chapter 19 dealing with environmentally sound management of toxic chemicals, including prevention of illegal international traffic in toxic and dangerous products.

In 1995, the Committee's Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods held its tenth (Geneva, 10-20 July)⁽¹¹⁾ and eleventh (Geneva, 4-15 December)⁽¹²⁾ sessions, while the Committee itself was scheduled to meet again in 1996.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/5.

Work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1993/50 of 29 July 1993,

Noting the increasing volume of dangerous goods in worldwide commerce and the rapid expansion of technology and innovation,

Bearing in mind the continuing need to meet the growing concern for the protection of life, property and the environment through the safe transport of dangerous goods, while facilitating trade,

Aware that, in order to achieve internationally harmonized laws, the Economic Commission for Europe, the specialized agencies, other international organizations involved in activities related to the transport of dangerous goods and interested Member States have responded positively to the Council's various resolutions adopted since 15 April 1953, and that, being committed to taking the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods as a basis for the formulation of their requirements and regulations, including those concerning labelling and classification, those organizations therefore rely on the work of the Committee,

Noting the activities of the Economic Commission for Europe and the Central Office for International Railway Transport, as well as projects of other international organizations for restructuring their regulations applicable to the transport of dangerous goods,

Noting also the advice of the Committee to the effect that reformatting the provisions applicable to all modes of transport contained in the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods into a model regulation, annexed to a basic recommendation, that could be directly integrated into all modal national and international regulations would enhance harmonization, facilitate regular updating of all instruments concerned by the relevant organizations or regulatory authorities, and result in overall considerable resource savings for the Governments of the Member States, the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other international organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods during the biennium 1993-1994 and of the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee for inclusion in its existing recommendations, including a rationalized Manual of Tests and Criteria;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for the timely publication of the eighth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods in all the official languages of the United Nations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To incorporate within the existing recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods all the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee at its eighteenth session;

(b) To publish the new and amended recommendations in all the official languages of the United Nations, in the most cost-effective manner, not later than the end of 1995;

(c) To publish, in the most cost-effective manner, the rationalized Manual of Tests and Criteria in English and French not later than the end of 1995, and in all the other official languages of the United Nations as soon as possible;

(d) To circulate the new and amended recommendations, including the Manual of Tests and Criteria, immediately after their publication to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations concerned;

4. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General their views on the Committee's work, together with any comments that they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

5. Invites all interested Governments, regional commissions and specialized agencies and the international organizations concerned, when developing appropriate codes and regulations, to take full account of the recommendations of the Committee;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps for ensuring representation of the secretariat of the Committee at appropriate meetings of international organizations committed to implementing the recommendations of the Committee or involved in the process of global harmonization of classification and labelling systems for chemicals;

7. Approves the programme of work of the Committee and its Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods for the biennium 1995-1996, and the working arrangements and the priorities of work for that biennium, as follows:

(a) Global harmonization of classification criteria (implementation of chapter 19 of Agenda 21), in accordance with Council resolution 1995/6 of 19 July 1995 on the role of the Committee in the development of a harmonized system of classification and labelling of chemicals for implementing chapter 19 of Agenda 21;

(b) Reformatting of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods into a model regulation;

(c) Review of the recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods in multimodal portable tanks;

(d) New or revised recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to maintain the appropriate staff resources for the service of meetings related to the work of the Committee and its Subcommittee, in view of the new programme of work which includes as a high priority the global harmonization of classification criteria;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council in 1997 on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/5

19 July 1995 Meeting 44 Adopted without vote

Draft by Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (E/1995/56); agenda item 6 (j).
Meeting numbers. ESC 42-44.

Also on 19 July, the Council adopted resolution 1995/6.

Role of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods in the development of a harmonized system of classification and labelling of chemicals for implementing chapter 19 of Agenda 21

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 468 G (XV) of 15 April 1953, in which it established the terms of reference of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, in particular with regard to its role in recommending and defining groupings or classifications of dangerous goods on the basis of the character of risk involved, and recommending marks or labels for each grouping or classification which should identify the risk graphically and without regard to printed text.

Recalling also its resolution 645 G (XXIII) of 26 April 1957, in which it invited the Secretary-General to continue his consultations with the Director-General of the International Labour Office on the best means of avoiding any overlapping of the work of the Committee with any work being undertaken in this field by the International Labour Organization,

Recalling further its resolution 1993/50 of 29 July 1993, in which it invited all Governments and the international organizations concerned with the implementation of chapter 19 of Agenda 21, and participating in the development of a globally harmonized system of classification and labelling of chemicals, to avoid duplication of work and to ensure that, to the greatest extent possible, the new system drew on, or was compatible with, the internationally well-recognized and implemented system developed by the Committee,

Bearing in mind that the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its second session, when reviewing progress in the implementation of Agenda 21 and, in particular, the sectoral cluster "Toxic chemicals and hazardous wastes", endorsed the priorities for action for the implementation of chapter 19 of Agenda 21, adopted by the International Conference on Chemical Safety, held at Stockholm from 25 to 29 April 1994, and welcomed in particular the targets and timetables agreed upon, including the date of 1997 for finalization of the technical work on classification criteria, and that the Commission called upon United Nations bodies and other international organizations to improve international coordination to avoid unnecessary duplication of efforts and to strengthen the International Programme on Chemical Safety,

Recalling its decision 1994/300 of 29 July 1994, in which it endorsed the decisions and recommendations contained in the report of the Commission on Sustainable Development, with the exception of that contained in chapter I, paragraph 24, and invited, inter alia, organs of the United Nations system to implement those decisions and recommendations and to take the necessary action to give them effective and transparent follow-up,

Noting that the Committee, to accelerate the work on global harmonization, is already cooperating with the International Labour Office, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development with regard to criteria for health hazards and hazards to the environment,

Noting also that the Committee, after four years of fruitful work, has just finalized an extensive revision of its Manual of Tests and Criteria, related to the classification of flammable, explosive and reactive materials,

Noting further that the Director of the International Programme on Chemical Safety and the Director of the Working Conditions and Environment Department of the International Labour Office have requested the Committee to elaborate proposals for globally harmonized criteria for the classification of flammable, explosive and reactive materials, on the basis of the newly revised Manual of Tests and Criteria, which should take account of aspects not necessarily covered under transport safety regulations, that is, of other aspects such as the protection of workers, consumers and the general environment, in collaboration with experts in those aspects,

Confirming the need for the Committee to participate actively in relevant activities associated with the implementation of Agenda 21, and to cooperate not only with international bodies involved in activities related to the transport of dangerous goods but also with those involved in other aspects of chemical safety,

1. Notes with satisfaction that the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods has taken the necessary steps to collaborate with the international bodies and international organizations concerned with the implementation of chapter 19 of Agenda 21, in particular for the purpose of establishing and elaborating a harmonized classification and labelling system for chemicals, and to strengthen its links with the International Programme on Chemical Safety;

2. Requests the Committee, as a high priority in its work programme in accordance with Council resolution 1995/5 of 19 July 1995 on the work of the Committee:

(a) To elaborate, by the end of 1996, as requested by the International Programme on Chemical Safety and the International Labour Organization, proposals for globally harmonized criteria for the classification of flammable, explosive and reactive materials, on the basis of the newly revised Manual of Tests and Criteria, taking account of aspects not necessarily covered under transport safety regulations, such as the protection of workers, consumers and the general environment, in collaboration with experts from the International Labour Organization and the Programme;

(b) To continue collaboration with the International Programme on Chemical Safety for the implementation of chapter 19 of Agenda 21;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to convene, in consultation with the Director-General of the International Labour Office, meetings of experts in the classification of physical hazards during sessions of the Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, or in conjunction with those sessions, taking into account, on the one hand, the programme of work of the Committee and its Subcommittee and, on the other, the calendar of conferences and the availability of resources to service such meetings.

UNCTAD institutional and organizational questions

UNCTAD programme

In 1995, the Trade and Development Board—the executive body of UNCTAD—held two regular sessions, one special session and three executive sessions, all in Geneva. It also resumed its eighth executive session, which had commenced in 1994.⁽¹⁾ The second part of TDB's forty-first session took place from 20 to 31 March;⁽²⁾ the first part of its forty-second session from 11 to 20 September;⁽³⁾ and its eighteenth special session from 11 to 15 December.⁽⁴⁾ In March, TDB established the provisional agenda and agreed annotations for UNCTAD IX and adopted agreed conclusions on structural adjustment policies (see above). It also adopted agreed conclusions on the implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) and on the UN New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (see preceding chapter). By a March decision, TDB adopted the terms of reference of the Commission on International Investment and TNCs (see above).

In September, the Board decided that UNCTAD IX should be held in Midrand, South Africa, from 27 April to 11 May 1996. It also discussed linkages between global financial and trade flows, development and levels of economic activity and employment, and the future implications of the outcome of the Uruguay Round (see above).

At the eighteenth special session in December, TDB reviewed the functioning of UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery (see below). By a 15 December decision,⁽⁵⁾ it transmitted the reports of its subsidiary bodies to its February/March 1996 executive session on substantive preparations for UNCTAD IX, so that they could be taken into account in relation to the substantive content of the document to be prepared for the Conference.

At the ninth executive session (17 March),⁽⁶⁾ TDB discussed the terms of reference of the Commission on International Investment and TNCs. It considered the 1994 reports of its subsidiary bodies, and endorsed their agreed conclusions. At the tenth executive session (4 May),⁽⁷⁾ TDB agreed that exploratory work should be undertaken on new and emerging issues on the international trade agenda within the preparatory process for UNCTAD IX. At the resumed eighth executive session (29 June),⁽⁸⁾ the Board adopted a decision on the follow-up to the 1994 UN International Symposium on Trade Efficiency (see above) and endorsed the recommendations of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (see below). It also adopted a decision⁽⁹⁾ on the status of the European Community (EC) in the Special Committee on Preferences, noting that the Standing Committee rules of procedure stated that intergovernmental organizations having competence in the area of GSP should be accorded the same participation rights as States, except for the right to vote. That principle would be applied mutatis mutandis in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1995/201 on the full participation of EC in the Commission on Sustainable Development. At the eleventh executive session (5 September),⁽¹⁰⁾ TDB noted the reports of its subsidiary bodies and dealt with a number of institutional matters.

By decision 1995/207 A of 10 February, the Economic and Social Council decided to consider at its 1995 substantive session TDB's report on the second part of its forty-first session and to authorize the Secretary-General to transmit directly to the General Assembly's fiftieth session the Board's report on the first part of its forty-second session. In decision 1995/234 of 17 and 19 July, the Council noted TDB's report on the second part of its forty-first session.

Medium-term plan and programme budget

The UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held two sessions in 1995, both in Geneva. At its twenty-fifth session (26-28 June),⁽¹¹⁾ the Working Party reviewed the UNCTAD section of the proposed UN programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997⁽¹²⁾ and recommended agreed conclusions and recommendations to TDB for approval.

At its resumed eighth executive session on 29 June, TDB endorsed the agreed conclusions and recommendations, annexing them to its decision.⁽¹³⁾ In part A of the conclusions and recommendations, which TDB requested the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to take into account in considering the proposed programme budget, it was felt that since UNCTAD IX was likely to affect the content and orientation of the UNCTAD work programme, it would be necessary to review the programme budget soon after the Conference in order to assess the budgetary implications of decisions taken there. Although the UNCTAD secretariat had made efforts to redeploy resources to programmes designated as high priority, it was noted that the correlation between the allocation of resources and designated priority areas was not totally satisfactory in some cases and needed further examination. Concern was voiced that there appeared to be duplications among various subprogrammes, and it was noted that presentation of the budget by subprogrammes should reflect the cross-sectoral approach needed in dealing with those issues. The Working Party experienced difficulty in reviewing the science and technology for development programme, as the Commission on Science and Technology for Development remained a subsidiary body of the Economic and Social Council and was outside the jurisdiction of UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery.

In part B, which TDB was asked to consider in its preparations for UNCTAD IX, the Working Party welcomed the Board's decision, at its ninth executive session,⁽⁶⁾ to review the matter of the large number of subprogrammes designated as high priority after the Conference. It was noted that more comprehensive information on the demand for and usage of various UNCTAD products and services would facilitate consideration of the work programmes. Further efforts were recommended to implement a 1994 Board recommendation on transparent and equitable allocation of UNCTAD's technical cooperation support costs. It was also recommended that TDB review the Working Party's role and functioning.

At its twenty-sixth session (5-8 December),⁽¹⁴⁾ the Working Party had before it a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on the technical cooperation programme of UNCTAD in 1994,⁽¹⁵⁾ and an in-depth study by the secretariat on UNCTAD's ASYCUDA (Automated System for Customs Data) programme.⁽¹⁶⁾

In agreed conclusions, the Working Party noted with concern the adverse impact on several of UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities of continued reduced levels of UNDP funding. It welcomed the increasing financial support for technical cooperation programmes by member States and other donors. The secretariat was encouraged to improve the exchange of information on such activities by and with other organizations providing technical cooperation in trade and development, and to seek to conclude memoranda of understanding with them, with a view to improving cooperation and ensuring synergy and complementarity. The Working Party commended the secretariat for the rapidly growing ASYCUDA programme, which had proved to be an effective instrument for customs reform and modernization worldwide in the context of the Trade Point programme and the Trade Efficiency initiative. It stressed the need for the ASYCUDA programme to be maintained on a regular and sustainable basis within the context of UNCTAD's overall resource constraints and programmatic priorities.

OIOS review

In December, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a review by the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services on the programme and administrative practices of the UNCTAD secretariat.⁽¹⁷⁾ The report covered programmatic issues; quality and complementarities; technical cooperation; organization and staffing; programme support and management; and programme oversight.

In conclusions and recommendations on issues of substance, the report stated that UNCTAD's programme of work should be given a fresh look by shifting emphasis from activities that had ceased to attract significant interest from member countries to those that had attracted a high level of interest. New activities should not result in duplication of the work of other UN organizations. Rather, the secretariat should focus on areas in which its competence and comparative advantage were undisputed, namely, research and policy analysis of emerging issues. The programming and budgeting process should be used more effectively. Financial constraints required strict selectivity of issues to be covered and a greater integration of the work programme into fewer mutually supporting activities. They also required issues of overlap and complementarity with other organizations to be addressed at the programme formulation stage. A related issue concerned technical cooperation activities. The report suggested that UNCTAD should endeavour to integrate its regular programme activities with those financed from extrabudgetary sources. It also suggested that the bulk of extrabudgetary resources was used for funding few successful operational projects; it was therefore recommended that greater emphasis be given to mobilizing resources towards advisory services in the areas of policy adjustments and institutional development. Also, the secretariat should address problems relating to the use of overhead resources and to administrative support to technical cooperation activities.

In conclusions and recommendations relating to administration and organization, the report stated that the UNCTAD secretariat was functioning in an environment that did not facilitate efficiency and effectiveness. It was overstaffed and top-heavy and the organizational structure was artificial and not adequately aligned to programme content. Divisional functional responsibilities were not clear and organizational linkages had clouded accountability. That situation was compounded by the limited effectiveness of programme oversight and inefficiencies at the level of administration. The report contained recommendations for action by UNCTAD's management, including streamlining the organizational structure; reducing Professional staff by 10 per cent, giving special attention to posts at the D-2, D-1 and P-5 levels; analysing the workload of the General Service staff with a view to reducing that category; and introducing a benchmark system for administrative services.

Intergovernmental machinery

At its eighteenth special session in December, TDB reviewed the functioning of the intergovernmental machinery of UNCTAD in accordance with the Cartagena Commitment, adopted by UNCTAD VIII in 1992.⁽¹⁸⁾ On 15 December,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Board recommended to UNCTAD IX that UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery be based on the following: greater coherence and simplicity in intergovernmental structures, functions and reporting lines; decision-making commensurate with the level of each body in the hierarchy; improved transparency and supervision of the budget and programme of work and of technical cooperation activities; effective follow-up and evaluation of actions agreed upon; greater attention to handling cross-sectoral issues; better use of short expert meetings to deal with technical issues; technical matters discussed at the expert level to be reported to the relevant parent body; a better-regulated calendar of meetings and a reduced number of meetings; enhanced cooperation with and participation by non-governmental interests and the business/private sector; improved participation by developing-country experts in technical meetings; and strengthened cooperation and coordination with other international organizations, such as WTO and ITC. The Board also made recommendations regarding the length and number of its regular and executive sessions.

By a 15 December decision,⁽²⁰⁾ TDB requested its President to initiate informal consultations, in the context of the UNCTAD IX preparatory process, on the participation of experts in UNCTAD inter-governmental meetings. The UNCTAD secretariat was asked to update a 1994 note on the financial implications of providing travel assistance to experts from developing countries, notably LDCs, and to provide statistical information on the participation, including financing, of experts in post-Cartagena UNCTAD meetings.

UNCTAD Secretary-General

By decision 49/325 of 14 September, the General Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General,⁽²¹⁾ confirmed the appointment of Rubens Ricupero as UNCTAD Secretary-General for a term of office of four years, beginning on 15 September 1995 and ending on 14 September 1999.

Chapter V

Regional economic and social activities

In 1995, the five UN regional commissions continued efforts to promote economic and social development in their respective regions. Four commissions met for regular sessions during the year: the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia; the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) in Bangkok, Thailand; the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) in Geneva; and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) in Beirut, Lebanon. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) did not meet in 1995, having held its most recent biennial session in 1994.

In July, the Economic and Social Council amended the terms of reference of ESCAP, so as to include the Russian Federation within the geographical scope of the Commission. The General Assembly dealt with a number of regional issues, calling for support for cooperative efforts in such areas as economic cooperation, transport and communications and industrial development, among others.

Regional cooperation

In 1995, efforts continued to strengthen the role of the regional commissions as part of the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields. The Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions, meeting in New York on 20 February, discussed coordination and decentralization of activities between the regions and Headquarters, and relations with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) as well as with UN funds and specialized agencies. The meeting emphasized that the commissions possessed an array of comparative advantages which, in the context of proper coordination and cooperation, could enhance their contribution to the Organization. The advantages included: the commissions' geographical proximity to the field; their mid-way position between UN entities operating at the global level and at the country level; work programmes tailored to the specific needs of each region; the commissions' expertise and experience in a range of economic and social sectors, which enabled them to take up regional issues of a cross-sectoral nature and act as a catalyst for the integration of economic cooperation and development in their regions; their role as a forum in which all countries of the region could participate on an equal footing and without conditions; and their cost effectiveness.

The Executive Secretaries reaffirmed that the relationship within the UN system should be founded on the principle of "subsidiarity", whereby the centre concentrated on issues and programmes which could not be pursued effectively at the local level. They noted that the establishment of regional coordination arrangements, in the context of administrative committees on coordination chaired by the Executive Secretaries, allowed the commissions to facilitate inter-agency cooperation among regional representatives. However, a number of obstacles to such cooperation were identified, including: the absence of an institutional structure for the exchange of information on work programmes; discrepancies in the geographical areas of responsibility among agencies; differences in budget and programme cycles of the agencies; the need for a common approach to decentralization of authority in programming matters; and the need to foster cooperation with non-UN bodies, using the technical and political comparative advantages of the United Nations.

The meeting examined the progress made in cooperative arrangements between the regional commissions and specific global entities. It welcomed a cooperation agreement worked out with the UN Development Programme (UNDP) concerning the preparation of the UNDP programming cycle, mobilization of resources, cooperation with non-UN partners, and collaboration on specific issues on a non-project basis. Considering the affinity between the activities of the commissions and UNCTAD, it was suggested that ways of joint programming should be investigated and that cooperation should be enhanced in the areas of trade, environment, macroeconomic policies, privatization, foreign direct investment, technology transfer, transport, and assistance to the least developed countries (LDCs). The executive secretaries noted the decline in resources from the UN Population Fund (UNFPA) for the implementation of joint population activities, and discussed ways of collaborating with UNFPA in the follow-up to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII). They also considered the impact of the decision by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) to strengthen its regional offices by withdrawing resources available to the commissions, and expressed the hope that alternative collaborative arrangements could be found to alleviate the situation.

The Executive Secretaries reviewed the implementation of decentralization measures aimed at strengthening the functions of the regional commissions and increasing their responsibilities. Noting that initial measures had already been implemented, they were of the opinion that the decentralization debate should be pursued to identify additional areas where duplication of work existed between global programmes and the commissions, and to ensure an appropriate distribution of labour and resources. The meeting noted a delayed implementation of measures in the area of natural resources and energy, and agreed to seek new sources of additional funding for joint programming exercises. It also supported planned initiatives for the decentralization of authority for some administrative matters.

It was pointed out that the Secretary-General's proposals for an integrated approach towards the wide range of economic and social issues confronting the United Nations—known as "An agenda for development"—firmly established the commissions as the regional arm of the Organization, which implied their much closer interaction with global programmes. In that regard, the executive secretaries considered possible contributions by the commissions to efforts towards an international consensus on cooperation for development (see PART FOUR, Chapter I). They further discussed regional preparations for the commemoration of the UN fiftieth anniversary as well as for the 1995 World Summit for Social Development and the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART ONE, Chapter III and PART FOUR, Chapters IX and X, respectively). Preparations were reviewed for launching the regional commissions' project on interregional cooperation in social development, concerning the impact of international migration in countries of destination and countries of origin. Consideration of that subject by the Economic and Social Council, initially proposed by the executive secretaries in 1994 as a subject of common interest to all regions, had been postponed due to time constraints. By decision 1995/206 of 10 February, the Council included it for consideration at its 1995 substantive session.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a June report⁽¹⁾ to the Economic and Social Council on regional cooperation, the Secretary-General outlined the work of the regional commissions, including matters requiring action by or brought to the attention of the Council, and provided a detailed account of the February meeting of the executive secretaries. The report also dealt with the impact of international migration in countries of destination and countries of origin, and examined current and proposed activities of the regional commissions as part of interregional cooperation in that field.

Reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services. Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General, by a 19 April note,⁽³⁾ transmitted reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on programme and administrative practices in ECA, ESCWA and ECE.

The report on ECA concluded that there was a need for greater coherence at the levels of substance, programme and administration. It was recommended that: in elaborating a new development strategy for Africa, emphasis be placed on an analysis of trade patterns within the region and with outside trading blocks; the quality of staff be improved through increased training and greater horizontal communication; a single oversight mechanism be created to programme and coordinate all ECA activities, irrespective of the source of funding; financial authorization for all funds be centralized; the capacity of administrative staff be enhanced and administrative performance upgraded; and the audit function be strengthened. In addition, the report pointed out that Headquarters should provide urgent assistance to the ECA Division of Administration by sending a short-term mission of knowledgeable staff.

As for ESCWA, the Office stated that its programme of work appeared to lack direction and focus, activities did not seem to be coordinated, a system for feedback and self-evaluation of performance was absent, as was a system of priority setting, and the quality of outputs was irregular. Noting the seriousness of the situation, which provided no assurance that resources allocated to the Commission were being used efficiently, the report recommended that a fundamental reappraisal and restructuring of the work programme take place, to be followed by a consequential reorganization of the secretariat and that, in the meantime, a freeze be imposed on personnel appointments and movements.

The report concerning ECE recommended that: the research capability of the secretariat be strengthened and more emphasis given to research and analysis of the transition problems in Eastern Europe; a single oversight mechanism be created to programme and coordinate all ECE activities; the monitoring of programme implementation be perceived as a performance evaluation tool, not as a mere reporting mechanism; new initiatives be reconciled with the priorities and objectives of the medium-term plan and the programme budget; the Administrative Unit be transformed into a full-fledged Executive Office; and a greater transparency and a more informative approach be introduced in all matters relating to the availability of resources and their redeployment between programmes.

By a 26 October note,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted comments of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the OIOS reports. The Unit emphasized the need to eliminate duplication and reinforce collaboration between ECA and specialized agencies, regional organizations and global secretariat entities in the economic and social sectors, and proposed a number of measures in that regard. It also noted that the OIOS main recommendations concerning ESCWA had been endorsed by the Commission at its 1994 session and that ESCWA's revised work programme had been endorsed by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), also in 1994.⁽⁵⁾ The Inspectors concurred in general with the recommendations pertaining to ECE, but considered that the Commission should develop stronger relationships with other relevant European organizations, especially the European Commission, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development. They also considered that the ECE secretariat could do more to play a team leadership role in coordinating UN programmes and activities in support of the economies in transition.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, by decision 1995/250, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on regional cooperation⁽¹⁾ and other documents considered in connection with the question of regional cooperation in the economic, social and related fields, including, inter alia, summaries of: the economic survey of Europe in 1994-1995;⁽²⁾ survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1994;⁽³⁾ survey of economic and social conditions in Asia and the Pacific, 1995;⁽⁴⁾ survey of economic conditions in the region of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1994;⁽⁵⁾ and survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1994.⁽⁶⁾

In its 1995 agreed conclusions,⁽¹¹⁾ the Council acknowledged that the regional commissions should play an important role in assisting countries in each region in the implementation of the recommendations of global conferences and that the Council and the General Assembly should take measures to ensure that the commissions could carry out that task effectively. It was also acknowledged that the Council should enhance coordination with and among the regional commissions, including through their more effective participation in its substantive work relating to conference follow-up. In that regard, the Council felt that, in its consideration of the chosen theme related to conference follow-up, it could benefit from the active participation of the regional commissions, among others, and that it should develop a more focused dialogue with them.

Regional institutes

On 4 December, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report⁽¹²⁾ on funding of regional institutes from the regular UN budget. He noted that there were eight regional institutes and centres currently in receipt of resources from the regular budget, including the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES), the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE), the Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation (CLADES), the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP), the UN African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI), as well as the UN regional centres for peace and disarmament in Africa and in Asia and the Pacific and for peace, disarmament and development in Latin America and the Caribbean.

The Secretary-General pointed out that a policy whereby regional institutes and centres should be funded had not been elaborated by the Assembly, as most of them were initially to operate and be financed without recourse to the regular budget. However, due to their financial difficulties, for lack of voluntary contributions, and on the urging of intergovernmental organizations, the Assembly eventually agreed to provide resources, primarily for posts. The Secretary-General was of the opinion that activities funded under the regular budget should be undertaken only by the Secretariat and that the creation of centres and institutes such as those in question should be subject to the availability of financial sources outside the budget. However, he recommended that the institutes and centres currently receiving resources from the regular budget should continue to be funded in 1996-1997.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa held its thirtieth session/twenty-first meeting of the Conference of Ministers in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 1 to 3 May 1995.⁽¹⁾ The Conference theme was "Promoting accelerated growth and sustainable development in Africa through the building of critical capacities". The Ministers reviewed perspectives of Africa's socio-economic development; the continent's economic and social situation; progress on a framework of building and utilizing African critical capacities; issues relating to regional economic integration and regional cooperation for development; and programme, administrative and organizational issues.

In his message to the Conference, the UN Secretary-General stressed that African countries must seize and retain the initiative for their own development, which required furthering economic and social reforms as well as a more supportive political environment for development, including greater democracy, better governance and increased political stability. The international community had committed itself to supporting Africa's development efforts in the UN New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (UN-NADAF), adopted by the General Assembly in 1991,⁽²⁾ and the UN system remained committed to implementation of the New Agenda and of the System-wide Plan of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development, formulated in 1992⁽³⁾ and revised in 1994.⁽⁴⁾ The Secretary-General noted that the Economic and Social Council would devote its high-level segment in 1995 to the continent's economic recovery and development (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), and emphasized the importance of the regional commissions as key actors in the development of their regions, stressing that ECA should continue to be a source of creative solutions for Africa's development challenges.

The Acting Executive Secretary of ECA observed that the Conference was taking place at a time when the Commission secretariat was acquiring a new structure, to become operational in June, when a new ECA Executive Secretary, Kingsley Amoako, would assume his duties. The economic and social situation in the region, he went on, remained disturbing and modest improvements in the rate of economic growth had to be seen against other factors: the continuing fall in per capita income, weak productive sectors, low savings and investment rates, little and declining contribution to world trade, minimal attraction of foreign private investments, accumulation of external debt, and worsening social conditions as a result of civil disturbances and inequalities; all had contributed to Africa's widespread poverty, he concluded.

At the same time, he pointed out that the region had made significant progress in terms of democracy, human rights, transparency in the management of public affairs, pursuit of economic reforms, and regional and subregional economic integration. Sustainable growth and development in the region required enhanced commitment of African Governments and peoples, their inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and their development partners, as well as the active participation of the private sector. The issues of external debt, trade, and development financing remained of major importance, and high-level negotiations should be conducted to find a long-term solution to the region's external debt.

The Conference of Ministers was preceded by the sixteenth meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole (Addis Ababa, 24-28 April), which reviewed the continent's economic performance in 1994 and the outlook for 1995;⁽⁵⁾ prospects for the implementation of the Abuja Treaty establishing the African Economic Community, adopted in 1991 by the Organization of African Unity (OAU); progress towards elaborating a framework agenda for building and utilizing critical capacities in Africa, as requested by the ECA Conference of Ministers in 1994;⁽⁶⁾ preparations for and follow-up to regional and international conferences and programmes; as well as regional cooperation in trade and development finance, human development, empowerment of women, and poverty alleviation through sustainable development. The Committee also considered the Commission's programme of work and priorities.

The Conference of Ministers reviewed, amended and adopted the Committee report,⁽⁷⁾ including a special memorandum concerning the programme of action for LDCs. It also adopted a declaration on Africa's external debt and a motion of appreciation to Layashi Yaker, former Executive Secretary of ECA, whose term of office ended on 28 February 1995. On 3 May, the Conference decided⁽⁸⁾ to include in its next agenda the issue of technical cooperation among African countries; the Executive Secretary was asked to conduct a study on the subject, for submission in 1996.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

According to a summary of the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa in 1995,⁽⁹⁾ the region's gross domestic product (GDP) increased by 2.3 per cent, compared with 2.1 per cent in 1994; however, per capita income declined by 0.6 per cent, due to population growth. The increase in output was mainly attributable to the good performance of manufacturing and a modest rebound in the mining sector. Beverage-exporting countries registered the highest growth of 5.5 per cent, up from 1.8 per cent in the previous year, while output of mineral exporters rose by 2.8 per cent, compared with 1.5 per cent in 1994. The economies of both oil-exporting States and non-oil exporters expanded by 2.3 per cent, representing an increase from 1.6 per cent in 1994 for the former group, but a slight decline of 0.2 per cent for the latter. GDP in the franc-zone countries grew by 3.6 per cent, an improvement over the 1.5 per cent rate of 1994, whereas the economies of African LDCs rebounded with a 2.4 per cent growth, having contracted by 1.6 per cent in the previous year. Output fell in only 3 countries in 1995, compared to 14 in 1994, but rose by more than 6 per cent in 8 States, up from only 2 in the previous year.

Manufacturing value-added (MVA) continued to grow at a 4.2 per cent rate, as a result of better input supplies and improvements in imports of raw materials for agro-allied industries. It rose by 6.9 per cent in southern Africa, compared with 2.6 per cent in 1994, and by 6.4 per cent in sub-Saharan Africa as a whole, up from 2.4 per cent; LDCs registered a 3.4 per cent growth, as against a 2.1 per cent increase in the previous year. On the other hand, MVA growth slowed, from 6.1 per cent in 1994 to 3.9 per cent in 1995 in East Africa and from 6.6 per cent to 0.9 per cent in North Africa, with negative rates recorded in Algeria and the Sudan. MVA contracted by 0.4 per cent in central Africa, after a 1.4 per cent decline in the previous year. Manufacturing sector performance in West Africa was adversely affected by the situation in Nigeria, characterized by a battered infrastructure, collapsing consumer demand, inflation and internal political difficulties. At the country level, South Africa registered its highest MVA growth since 1990, the manufacturing production index rising by an annualized 12.8 per cent during the first half of 1995, and capacity utilization increasing to some 83 per cent in the first quarter. MVA grew by 13.5 per cent in Namibia, against 4.1 per cent in 1994, but declined in Zimbabwe due to high input costs, weak domestic demand, loss of competitiveness in textile export markets and cash-flow problems of manufacturing companies.

Value-added in the mining sector, having declined by 3.7 per cent in 1994, rose by 2.7 per cent in 1995, due mostly to a 4.4 per cent increase in crude oil output after virtual stagnation the previous year. Higher oil production volumes were recorded in Angola, Egypt and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. At the same time, exploration and mining investments, particularly in precious metals and minerals such as gold, diamonds and other gemstones, increased in several countries as a result of extensive reforms in the mining sector.

The consumer price index in Africa, with 1990 as baseline, was up 43.4 per cent in 1995, compared to 60.6 per cent in 1994. Zaire succeeded in bringing its annual inflation rate down from 9,797 per cent in 1994 to 370.3 per cent in 1995 by reducing money supply and rationalizing public finances. In Ghana, on the other hand, average inflation more than doubled, from 34.2 per cent to 70.8 per cent, owing to inadequate food supply and adverse price effects as a result of the introduction of the value-added tax.

While policy reforms had some impact on economic stabilization in the region, in most African countries external resources needed to stimulate and accelerate economic growth were insufficient. Net flows of official development assistance (ODA) to the continent declined from $25 billion in 1992 to $23.5 billion in 1994, due to the growing demand for aid from economies in transition, fiscal constraints in donor countries and reorientation of their aid policies. Foreign direct investment to sub-Saharan Africa alone fell by almost 27 per cent, from $2.9 billion in 1994 to $2.2 billion in 1995. Only a few middle-income countries recorded encouraging volumes of inflows. Tunisia and South Africa appeared to offer the most attractive environment for foreign investment and attracted more private capital resources than other countries.

Civil conflicts and political stalemates in governance continued to disrupt and paralyse production, especially in Burundi, Liberia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan and Zaire. Instability caused by significant population migration and displacement in some countries adversely affected economic activities in neighbouring States as well, placing a further burden on their physical infrastructure, despite considerable humanitarian efforts for economic rehabilitation and for repatriation and resettlement of refugees. On the other hand, economic policies in most countries remained focused on creating an enabling environment for the private sector and an efficient operation of the market economy. Overall growth prospects for the region indicated that it had begun to gather momentum towards economic recovery. The region's total output and its agricultural production were both expected to increase in 1996, boosted by efforts to reduce macroeconomic imbalances and to return investors' confidence.

External debt

Africa's external debt, which had been $312.2 billion in 1994, continued to pose a major threat to economic recovery in 1995, due to the negative impact of debt-servicing obligations on availability of resources. A number of African middle-income countries rescheduled their commercial debt, while Nigeria succeeded in debt conversion and Chad, Comoros, Cote d'Ivoire, Ethiopia and Morocco were granted various cancellations from bilateral creditors.

In a Declaration on Africa's external debt, adopted on 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers noted the poor results of the various international initiatives to reduce the African debt burden, and observed that the debt crisis was partly due to an international financial crisis and therefore could not be resolved through debt rescheduling agreements only. The Ministers requested that African efforts for economic reforms be met with substantial debt forgiveness and an increase in concessional flows, and appealed for an 80 per cent reduction in total non-concessional debt and accumulated interest, the cancellation of rescheduled concessional debt, and innovative measures to reduce both multilateral and commercial debt. They also proposed that negotiations be held between indebted countries and their bilateral creditors and multilateral financial institutions to find a positive solution to the African debt problem.

Agriculture

Growth of output in agriculture—the mainstay of the regional economy—decelerated from 4.2 per cent in 1994 to 1.5 per cent in 1995. Value-added declined by an estimated 0.7 per cent in the North, East and southern Africa subregions, against the 1994 growth of 6.1 per cent, 1.1 per cent and 3 per cent, respectively. On the other hand, West Africa registered a 4.2 per cent increase, although lower than the 5.8 per cent rate in the previous year, and Central Africa rebounded with a 0.9 per cent rise, after a 1.9 per cent contraction in 1994. Rice production grew from 14.2 million tons to 14.9 million tons, and that of roots and tubers, constituting some 20 per cent of Africa's total food supply, reached 157.3 million tons, up from 154.7 million tons in 1994. Livestock production, however, was on the decline in 43 countries, due to the policy of rebuilding cow herds in drought-affected areas. The production of pulses stagnated between 6.5 million tons and 7 million tons, while that of fruits and vegetables increased by less than 2 per cent.

The food situation remained a serious cause of concern, with the food deficit for the region as a whole estimated at 19.6 million metric tons of cereals. Drought brought about famine conditions in 10 countries in the northern, eastern and southern subregions, while in a number of other States the decline in food production was the consequence of civil strife, displacements and insecurity.

Trade

Africa's terms of trade index, with 1990 as base-line, was up 1.5 per cent in 1995, as against 1.2 per cent in 1994. Export earnings rose by about 11 per cent, compared to 4.9 per cent in the previous year. Improved trade performance was attributable to an 8 per cent increase in oil prices, averaging $17 per barrel, and to the sustained recovery in mineral and metal prices. The aggregate price index for metals rose by 19 per cent over 1994, with copper prices growing by more than 27 per cent, whereas food prices increased by an average of 8 per cent. At the same time, growth in beverage prices was less than 1 per cent, as price increases of 6 per cent for coffee and 3 per cent for cocoa were offset by a 10 per cent decline in the price of tea.

While the 11 per cent growth in regional export value brought earnings to $98 billion, imports increased by 15 per cent to $109 billion, leading to an $11 billion deficit in trade balance and an $8.4 billion deficit in the service balance. Although the region received $16.3 billion in unrequited transfers, income net outflows, which reflected dependence on external capital, amounted to $13.6 billion and pushed the current account deficit to $16.8 billion, an increase of 46 per cent over 1994.

Despite improving terms of trade, Africa continued to lose its global market share, due to reliance on primary commodities as a source of export earnings and the failure to diversify its exports composition into secondary and tertiary commodities. As a result, the region's share fell by 30 per cent between 1990 and 1995 in relation to world trade, from 3.1 per cent to 2.2 per cent, and by 45 per cent in relation to trade of the developing countries, from 11 per cent to 6 per cent.

Subregional economic performance

The West, East and southern Africa subregions registered GDP growth rates in excess of the regional average in 1995, owing to improved performance in their agricultural and mining sectors. Economic output in East Africa grew by 4.8 per cent, compared to 4.2 per cent in 1994, while economies of West and southern Africa expanded by 4.1 per cent and 2.9 per cent, respectively, as against 1 per cent and 2.6 per cent in the previous year. In sub-Saharan Africa as a group, the growth rate of GDP increased to 3 per cent from 1.5 per cent, or from a 0.3 per cent decline, if measured without including Nigeria and South Africa.

At the same time, the rate of growth decelerated from 2.9 per cent to 1 per cent in North Africa and stagnated at 1.9 per cent in Sahelian countries as a group, while economies of central Africa contracted by 1.1 per cent, compared with a 2.5 per cent decline in 1994, due to continuing poor performances in Burundi, Cameroon, the Congo, Rwanda and Zaire.

Policy developments

During 1995, many African countries carried out domestic reforms concerning fiscal, monetary and trade policies, aimed at both reducing government intervention in the economy and improving the productivity of public expenditure and investment. Kenya, Nigeria, Uganda and Zambia implemented measures to strengthen their regulatory framework and prudential guidelines for banking and non-banking financial institutions. Value-added tax and presumptive taxation were introduced in Ghana, Nigeria and Zambia to broaden the tax base, while tax reform in other countries involved rationalization of the tariff structure, lowering of import duties and excise taxes and devolution of tax collection to lower levels of government. New land and mineral legislation were adopted in an effort to deregulate and liberalize the mining sector, along with measures to enhance the role of the private sector in the development of mineral resources. Several Governments discontinued price support policies in 1995 in favour of price and exchange rate liberalization. By mid-year, 24 States had adopted various types of floating foreign exchange rate systems and 5 countries had a "composite currency basket" system, while 29 Governments retained a "single currency reserve" system. In addition, measures were introduced to improve fiscal discipline by prioritizing, streamlining and rationalizing government budgets.

Social trends

The crisis in the social sector remained severe in most African countries in 1995, highlighting the critical need to reorient policies towards enhanced social development and poverty reduction. The health sector continued to bear a disproportionate burden of socio-economic difficulties, with the exodus of doctors, nurses and technicians, compounded by declining or stagnating public expenditure on health, culminating in a virtual collapse of health infrastructures in many States. A large proportion of public health expenditure, sometimes up to 60 per cent, was devoted to curative services. Preventive and primary health care still did not receive proper attention in African health policies, while district and community focus in health-care provision, promoted by the World Health Organization (WHO), also lacked universal endorsement in the region.

Severe budgetary cutbacks and rapid population growth also exacerbated the crisis in the education sector. Public expenditure on education in sub-Saharan Africa was the lowest in the world. Capital and recurrent expenditures for new construction, supplies, furniture, science laboratory equipment and repair and maintenance were hit hardest, while available resources were disproportionately skewed in favour of higher education. The situation was further aggravated by low salaries and poor working conditions, leading to the flight of teachers and closure of premises due to labour disputes. In many African countries, primary education received practically no funding from central Governments, except for teachers' salaries and allowances; as a result, the growth in non-formal education and literacy programmes could not compensate for the shortfalls in the formal educational system.

Problems of unemployment remained critical, particularly among educated people, including university graduates; the unemployment rate of women also continued to be relatively high for the formal sector. While the situation of women as main income earners was generally improving, their marginalization in the development process was still apparent in low rates of participation in education and the labour force and their lack of access to credit for investment in self-employment activities. The extremely high number of refugees and displaced persons in Africa placed an additional burden on its social sector, with about 7 million people formally categorized as refugees and many others displaced. Ethnic conflicts, civil wars, drought and famine were among primary causes for large-scale displacements of population in the region. On the positive side, democratic forms of governance and popular participation were gaining ground and were seen as powerful portents of a more peaceful political atmosphere on the continent.

Activities in 1995

The biennial report of the Executive Secretary for 1994-1995⁽¹⁰⁾ noted that ECA activities to promote African economic and social development focused on advocating economic and social policies, formulating plans and strategies, strengthening institutions for development, and providing technical assistance to member States and intergovernmental organizations. The Commission's substantive work was carried out under nine sub-programmes: development issues and policies; trade, regional economic cooperation and integration; poverty alleviation through sustainable development; development administration and management; human resources and social transformation; statistical and information systems development; natural resources and energy development; infrastructural and structural transformation; and women in development. Issues related to capacity-building, economic cooperation and integration, and gender were cross-sectoral themes incorporated into each subprogramme.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

ECA activities concerning development issues and policies included research for macroeconomic policy analysis and development, aimed at improving national mechanisms for the appraisal of socio-economic conditions and of development policies and programmes; review of the debt and development finance situation in the region, including promotion of capital markets and strategies for mitigating the impact of external shocks on African monetary zones; development planning and economic modelling; and policies in support of African LDCs. The first volume of the Economic Bulletin for Africa was produced, and a number of technical publications were issued, dealing with the effectiveness of debt management and techniques for debt reduction and conversion, financial sector liberalization, exchange rate management policies, and foreign direct investment in the least developed, island and land-locked African countries.

Activities to promote regional economic cooperation and integration focused on strengthening regional economic communities at the institutional and sectoral level, as well as institutional capacity to accelerate monetary and financial integration. The secretariat published a framework for the rationalization, harmonization and coordination of activities of African economic groupings and studies on, inter alia, harmonization of monetary and financial policies at the subregional level, the effectiveness of subregional financial institutions for development, coordination of intergovernmental and subregional programmes in different sectors, and the role of monetary and financial institutions in enhancing national and subregional self-reliance.

ECA continued to provide technical support and assistance to member States and regional intergovernmental organizations; its Multidisciplinary Regional Advisory Group extended advisory and training services on the institutional and substantive issues of economic cooperation and integration, including the development of cooperative arrangements, economic management, macro-economics and policy reform, and policy and programme formulation.

Programmes for African recovery and development

At its 1995 meeting, the ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole underscored the importance of the UN system as Africa's full partner in the implementation of the UN New Agenda for Africa, and noted the steps taken to strengthen coordination and harmonization of activities both within the UN Inter-Agency Task Force and the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC). The Technical Committee further noted that the OAU Council of Ministers, at its seventeenth extraordinary session (Cairo, Egypt, 27-28 March), had approved the Cairo Agenda for Action for relaunching Africa's economic and social development. Subsequently, the Agenda for Action was adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its thirty-first ordinary session (Addis Ababa, 26-28 June).⁽¹¹⁾ The ECA Acting Executive Secretary, in his statement⁽¹⁾ to the Conference of Ministers in May, noted that the Cairo Agenda placed special emphasis on peace, stability, human resource development and critical capacity-building, food self-sufficiency and security, development financing, the structural transformation of African economies, and regional cooperation and integration (see also PART FOUR, Chapter III).

In his biennial report,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Executive Secretary pointed out that ECA had organized a regional seminar on the role of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the implementation of the UN New Agenda, and prepared studies on key factors of the region's economic recovery, including resource flows, commodity diversification, and capacity-building for the diversification of African economies. He also noted the Commission's contribution to the Asia-Africa Forum (Bandung, Indonesia, 12-16 December 1994),⁽¹²⁾ which adopted the Bandung Framework for Asia-Africa Cooperation, and follow-up activities for implementation of the Framework in eastern and southern African countries (see also PART FOUR, Chapter II).

Implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs in the 1990s

The Technical Preparatory Committee had before it a progress report on the implementation by African least developed countries of the Programme of Action for LDCs in the 1990s, adopted in 1990 by the second UN Conference on LDCs⁽¹³⁾ and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.⁽¹⁴⁾ The report,⁽¹⁵⁾ submitted further to a 1994 Assembly resolution⁽¹⁶⁾ on the global mid-term review of the Programme's implementation, provided a situation analysis and evaluation of external support measures, outlined a development vision for African LDCs, and examined international cooperation and support measures as well as follow-up and monitoring mechanisms.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers, on the recommendation of the Committee, adopted a Special Memorandum on the mid-term global review, which gave an overview of the socio-economic performance of African LDCs; assessed the status of the Programme's implementation in the region; and proposed national and international support measures for its accelerated implementation in 1995-2000, as well as measures to improve follow-up and monitoring mechanisms. The Ministers recognized that reversing the socio-economic decline of African LDCs was an ethical imperative and that stronger efforts were needed by both the LDCs and their development partners to implement the Programme of Action. By a resolution⁽¹⁷⁾ of the same date, the Conference requested the Executive Secretary to intensify regional coordination of programmes and special measures in favour of the least developed and land-locked countries, and to transmit the progress report⁽¹⁵⁾ and the Special Memorandum as Africa's contribution to the high-level intergovernmental meeting on the mid-term global review, to be held in New York in September/October 1995 (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

During 1994-1995, the ECA secretariat provided technical assistance and advisory services to 23 of the 33 African LDCs in the areas of statistical and infrastructural development, agriculture, natural resources, and industrial development.

Framework agenda for capacity-building

In April, the Technical Preparatory Committee considered a progress report⁽¹⁸⁾ on a framework agenda for building and utilizing critical capacities in Africa, submitted in response to a 1994 Commission resolution.⁽⁶⁾ The report provided further findings and conclusions in the eight priority areas critical for the region's development, identified in 1994: good governance, human rights, political stability, peace and security; socio-economic policy analysis and management; human capacities; entrepreneurial capacities for public and private sector management; physical infrastructure; exploitation of natural resources and diversification of African economies into processing and manufacturing; sustainable food and agricultural production; and mobilization and efficient allocation of financial resources.

The Committee reaffirmed that systematic action for building, strengthening and utilizing critical capacities in Africa was the missing link to sustained economic growth and development, and renewed its endorsement of a broad framework agenda which would propose a regional programme of action incorporating policy measures and activities in each priority area. It noted that such a programme needed to be supported by a programme of technical cooperation involving Africa's external bilateral and multilateral development partners.

The Committee also underscored the importance of capacity-building in science and technology, including information and telematics, and in environmental management, and endorsed the proposal to establish "think-tanks" at the national, subregional and regional levels to address development problems and provide policy advice. It recommended that increased utilization of African indigenous expertise and the issue of personnel motivation be given full attention in the framework agenda, and urged that the agenda be linked to the existing development initiatives for Africa.

The Framework Agenda was subsequently finalized at a high-level expert group meeting, which identified two additional priority areas for capacity-building: managing African environmental and ecological resources, and harnessing science and technology for accelerated growth.

ECA support for the African Economic Community

At its 1995 session, the ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole had before it a progress report⁽¹⁹⁾ on implementation of the Abuja Treaty establishing the African Economic Community. The report noted that the Treaty, adopted by OAU in 1991, had entered into force in 1994 and that it had been ratified to date by 36 States. The ECA secretariat had conducted sectoral studies in various subregions on infrastructural development, production and trade liberalization, and had prepared draft protocols for consideration by the OAU Permanent Steering Committee, relating to: the free movement of persons, rights of residence and establishment; transport and communications; the rules of origin; customs cooperation within the Community; industry; and relations between the Community and subregional economic groupings. The report further described the steps taken or envisaged to harmonize and rationalize activities of subregional economic integration institutions, and examined the question of financing the integration process in Africa.

The Committee expressed concern over the slow pace of integration and urged member States to commit themselves to accelerating that process. It underlined the need to strengthen subregional integration groupings and to harmonize national legislation with the Treaty's provisions, as well as the urgent need to establish mechanisms for the mobilization of domestic funds.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers urged⁽²⁰⁾ member States and regional and subregional communities to rationalize and harmonize trade liberalization policies through the progressive unification of trade liberalization rules; establish common external tariffs and an efficient domestic taxation system and pricing policy; and institute indigenous resource mobilization mechanisms. The Ministers called for external financial assistance to implement the Treaty, for conclusion of the drafting of Treaty protocols, and for support to subregional economic communities in the rationalization of their activities and in resource mobilization.

UN Trust Fund for African Development

The Technical Preparatory Committee had before it a report⁽²¹⁾ on strengthening the operational capacity of ECA's programme of technical cooperation under the UN Trust Fund for African Development (UNTFAD). The Trust Fund, established by the Secretary-General in 1977, served to mobilize additional resources necessary for African development through biennial pledging conferences. The report described utilization of UNTFAD resources in 1993-1994 and provided resource requirements for 1996-1997, estimated at $600,000. It also set forth recommendations for revitalizing the Fund.

The Committee urged member States to honour their pledges to the Fund and requested their active participation in the 1995 pledging conference. The conference, held on 3 May in conjunction with the ECA session, received $515,000 and 9.5 million Zambian Kwachas in pledged contributions. In a resolution⁽²²⁾ of the same date, the ECA Conference of Ministers invited African countries and institutions, as well as multilateral and bilateral donors, to continue support for the Fund, and requested the Executive Secretary to review UNTFAD operations and to study the possibility of negotiating a schedule for the phased payment of pledged contributions or their outright cancellation, and of merging biennial pledging conferences with the annual General Pledging Conference of the United Nations, organized in New York.

Statistical and information systems development

ECA work in statistics was defined by the Addis Ababa Plan of Action for Statistical Development in Africa in the 1990s, adopted by ECA in 1992.⁽²³⁾ The secretariat carried out research and analysis of measures to rehabilitate, revitalize and develop statistical capacities and systems in the region, including evaluation of the Statistical Training Programme for Africa (STPA), research in national statistical services and STPA centres, current practices in statistical needs assessment and planning, and statistical data processing practices. Major publications during the year included an African compendium of environment statistics, directories of statistical databases in the region and of STPA training centres, guidelines for the improvement of statistics on elderly persons, and studies dealing with tourism statistics, selected demographic and social indicators, development of national statistical systems, and statistics on manufacturing in Africa. The secretariat also continued to update its directory of African statisticians and to publish African socio-economic indicators, the series on foreign trade statistics, the African Statistical Yearbook and the Statistical Newsletter.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers urged⁽²⁴⁾ member States to take steps to build national information networks for decision-making and planning, as part of the infrastructure for Africa's "information highway", and requested the Executive Secretary to set up a high-level working group on information technologies and communications in Africa. The working group subsequently met under the auspices of the Pan-African Development Information System (PADIS) to elaborate an action plan for exploiting information technology to accelerate the region's socio-economic development.

Among other activities to promote information for development was an African regional symposium on telematics for development (Addis Ababa, April), co-sponsored by ECA. PADIS continued to advocate replacement of inadequate telecommunications systems and reform of laws and regulations impeding the flow of information and information technology, and to publish its PADIS Newsletter on development information systems. It also provided training in data management, networking, information policy formulation and information systems development, and assisted member States in strengthening national databases and developing norms and standards to facilitate information exchange.

Public administration and finance

ECA activities in development administration and management in 1995 were aimed at promoting good governance and fostering policies for the development of the private sector, as well as enhancing the efficiency of the public service and of the use of resources, improving accountability, and increasing awareness of the need for decentralization of political and administrative authority. A study was prepared on the informal economy in Africa and its implications for appropriate fiscal policies, and national training workshops were held on integrated public financial management and related issues. Activities under a project for reinforcing the participation of civil society in socio-economic development included workshops and other meetings to facilitate the dialogue between Governments and NGOs.

International trade and development finance

In April, the ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole considered a report⁽²⁵⁾ on policies, strategies and programmes for reviving private investments in Africa. The report examined the existing constraints on investment flows, pointing out that current structural adjustment programmes—the basis of the macroeconomic policy framework in most African countries—had not succeeded in reversing the decline in investments. Noting that political stability and appropriate economic reforms were important prerequisites to an increased investment flow, the report underscored the need to develop infrastructural and human capacities, to further regional economic integration, to promote dynamic financial sectors and to adopt monetary and credit policies conductive to investments in productive sectors, as well as efficient communication strategies focusing on the region's economic potential and opportunities for capital redeployment. Efforts of African Governments should be supported by relevant international assistance programmes, increased concessional flows, and alleviation of the continent's debt burden.

The Committee observed that improving the investment climate required the right macro-economic policy frameworks to provide the public sector with a proper role in defining and implementing incentive packages, tackling the problems of domestic and external debt, optimizing rates of investment, increasing public investment in human development and infrastructure, enhancing financial intermediation, enlarging markets and promoting regionalism, improving the world's perception of Africa and building reliability through political stability, appropriate rules and regulations and continuity in the supply of foreign exchange for imports and transfers. The Committee also noted information concerning an international conference on reviving private investment in Africa, to be organized in Accra, Ghana, from 7 to 10 November, including the planned launching during the conference of an African capital markets forum. It further requested the ECA secretariat to take into account additional factors affecting investment in the region, such as the need for land reform in many African countries; the role of privatization programmes, domestic investment and South-South cooperation in the private sector development; and the impact of internal debt on the development process.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers called⁽²⁶⁾ for intensified efforts to create and maintain an enabling environment for private sector development and the growth of private investment inflows, by improving infrastructural and human development capacities through the necessary macroeconomic policy framework. The Conference also called for support from Africa's development partners in improving investment conditions and for international technical and financial assistance.

During the year, ECA activities in trade and development finance were geared towards revitalizing African domestic and external trade and strengthening intra-African trade, particularly in minerals and agricultural products. A workshop was held to consider a study on gemstone development and marketing strategies in eastern and southern Africa, leading to the establishment of an African Gemstone Development Association in October 1995. A further study was prepared on the possible impact on African economies of the 1994 Uruguay Round of multilateral trade agreements.⁽²⁷⁾ Technical publications were issued dealing with ECA's strategic objectives in trade promotion, Africa's participation in future multilateral trade negotiations, prospects for expanding South-South trade and cooperation, liberalization of trade in domestically produced goods, external trade financing techniques, promotion of trade in the agricultural and industrial sectors, the establishment of a trade information data bank, and Africa's expectations under the 1989 Lome IV Convention on trade between the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group and the European Union. The secretariat also continued to publish the African Trade Bulletin and its newsletter on trade opportunities.

Industrial development

Efforts continued in 1995 to diversify Africa's economic base by building industrial capacities for processed and semi-processed products, in order to reduce reliance on primary commodities. Studies were carried out on the region's potential industrial comparative advantage in an emerging new world order, modalities for South-South industrial cooperation, and the development of specific industries. The secretariat published the annual bulletin entitled Focus on African Industry, a directory of project profiles for small-scale industries, and surveys of the continent's basic industries and selected agro-based industries.

The Conference of African Ministers of Industry, at its twelfth meeting (Gaborone, Botswana, 6-8 June),⁽²⁸⁾ adopted the Gaborone Declaration, by which the Ministers committed themselves to: creating an enabling environment and policy framework for industrial development; building key human and institutional capacities to support industrialization; mobilizing necessary financial resources; promoting entrepreneurship and the development of the private sector and facilitating private sector participation in the industrialization process; improving competitiveness; strengthening regional and subregional cooperation; removing obstacles for women's full involvement in development; and integrating environmental issues in development programmes. The Conference also adopted the African Common Position for the sixth session of the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) (see PART SEVEN, Chapter XVII), and resolutions on, among others, mobilization of resources and the development of the private sector for industrialization in Africa, in line with the Gaborone Declaration.

Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa

ECA continued its cooperation with UNIDO in implementing the programme for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA II), 1993-2002, which was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in 1992⁽²⁹⁾ and adopted by the General Assembly later that year.⁽³⁰⁾ In June, the Conference of African Ministers of Industry appealed for full implementation of national and subregional programmes for the Decade as well as for allocation of increased resources to support their implementation, and called on African countries to incorporate the IDDA II programme in their national development plans and to identify industrial projects for inclusion in the programme, taking into account their environmental impact. ECA, UNIDO and OAU were requested to undertake in 1997 a mid-term evaluation of the programme's implementation, to revise their respective programmes and to elaborate pertinent action plans. The Conference also urged African Governments to formulate policies geared towards increasing the participation of women in industrial development and called on them to take measures to enhance women's contribution to IDDA II.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 2 November, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a progress report⁽³¹⁾ on implementation of the IDDA II programme, prepared by ECA and UNIDO in response to a 1994 Assembly request.⁽³²⁾ The report provided an overview of the industrial situation in Africa, described the progress made, and examined cooperation, coordination and harmonization of activities among ECA, OAU, UNIDO, UNDP and other UN agencies and international organizations. It also reviewed key issues relevant to the programme's implementation, including private sector development, impact of the CFA franc devaluation on the industrial sector and implications of the Uruguay Round multilateral trade agreements for that sector, competitiveness, national programmes for the Second Decade, the role of the Ministry of Industry, and regional and subregional cooperation.

UNIDO undertook a series of missions to review industrial sector programmes in 14 African countries and approved $750,000 for follow-up action. Five ad hoc expert group meetings were held during the period under review, dealing with the production of basic chemicals from natural gas in Africa, promotion of investment and industrial projects in the context of the Decade, technology transfer and acquisition, development of African metal industries based on South-South cooperation, and integrated development of natural resources and the production of phosphate. Technical cooperation projects and programmes carried out by UNIDO in Africa totalled $20.2 million in 1994, while those approved during the first eight months of 1995 amounted to $23.2 million. A new pre-screening process for project concepts was adopted, based on the five main development objectives of UNIDO: industrial and technological growth and competitiveness; development of human resources for industry; equitable development through industrial development; environmentally sustainable industrial development; and international cooperation in industrial investment and technology. The report further described activities geared towards meeting those objectives.

ECA provided technical advisory services to 15 countries to improve their IDDA II strategy formulation capabilities, while UNIDO assisted 21 countries in revising and updating national and subregional programmes for the Decade, preparing implementation plans and projects for presentation to investors and donors, and promoting investments and technology development and acquisition. It was also preparing short-term support strategies for the industrial sector of individual countries, focusing on agro-related as well as small- and medium-scale industries.

The report reaffirmed that African countries had the primary responsibility for implementing the IDDA II programme, and recommended that national and subregional committees be set up to follow up the programme's implementation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly, by decision 50/426, took note of the Secretary-General's report. On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 50/94.

Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 49/107 of 19 December 1994 on the programme for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa, in which it requested the Secretary-General to report to it at its fiftieth session on the implementation of the resolution,

Reaffirming also, in particular, paragraph 2 of its resolution 49/107,

Stressing the renewed urgency for promoting industrialization as a key element in the development of developing countries and the important role of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, which is undergoing a process of reform, and recalling the declarations of the Group of 77, of the Organization of African Unity and of the Non-Aligned Movement, on 29 September 1995, 20 October 1995 and 28 June 1995, respectively, on the essential role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in this regard,

Recognizing the need for enhanced cooperation between African countries, the United Nations system and bilateral and multilateral financial institutions, as well as African regional and subregional organizations, in the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade,

Recognizing also the important role of industrialization in promoting sustained economic growth and sustainable development in Africa in the context of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s,

Recognizing further the importance of intercontinental, interregional, regional and subregional cooperation in the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade,

Noting the far-reaching implications of the fundamental developments in the international environment for development cooperation, including the conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, and for the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade, as well as the need for concerted national and international action to enable African countries to cope with the challenges posed by, and benefit fully from, the opportunities provided by recent developments in international trade, among other things, and the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in this regard,

Emphasizing the continuing need for the mobilization of adequate resources through domestic and international initiatives for the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade, including a favourable climate for foreign direct investment, private sector development, small and medium-sized enterprises and enhanced market access,

Recognizing the need for African countries to use both human and financial resources more effectively in the process of industrialization,

Noting with appreciation the various regional and subregional initiatives and meetings that have taken place, including the Conference of African Ministers of Industry, held at Gaborone from 6 to 8 June 1995, and the contribution made by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in convening and organizing industrial investment forums aimed at the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1993-2002);

2. Emphasizes the importance of industrial development cooperation and a positive investment and business climate, at the international, regional, subregional and national levels, in promoting the expansion, diversification and modernization of productive capacities in developing countries;

3. Requests the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Economic Commission for Africa, as well as the Organization of African Unity and all other partners in the development process, to continue to play an active and more effective role in the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade, bearing in mind the undertakings made in this regard in the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s;

4. Encourages African Governments to strengthen national committees for the Second Decade in order to monitor its implementation effectively and to fashion effective policy responses to the challenges and the demands posed and the opportunities offered by changes in the domestic and international environment for industrialization;

5. Emphasizes the continuing need for technical and financial assistance from the United Nations system and from bilateral and multilateral sources to complement the efforts of African countries in achieving the objectives of the Second Decade, as well as the need for African countries to enhance cooperation among themselves in the areas of industrial policy, institutional development, human resources development, technology and investments;

6. Requests the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to facilitate the exchange of information among African Governments on activities carried out nationally in collaboration with the United Nations system and with the support of bilateral and multilateral partners in connection with the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade as a contribution to subsequent reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme;

7. Calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Economic Commission for Africa and the Organization of African Unity to enhance their assistance and coordinate their activities in human resources development for industry, with a view to improving the competitiveness of the industrial sector in Africa in the light of the globalization of production and the growth of related trade, investment and technology flows;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with all the relevant organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, to take into account the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade when preparing for the mid-term review, in 1996, of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/94

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.12) without vote, 12 December (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.76), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.40); agenda item 95.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 30-37, 39, 43; plenary 96.

Transport and communications

Activities in the area of transport and communications focused on assisting member States and intergovernmental organizations with their infrastructural and structural transformation programmes, stressing the development of their scientific and technological bases. The secretariat undertook studies of major developments in the postal services and the telecommunications sector in Africa, which made recommendations for extending postal services to rural areas and improving their competitiveness, as well as for promoting cross-border mobility with the introduction of cellular telecommunications services, establishing regulatory structures to enhance private sector participation in the development of telecommunications, and applying cellular technology to extend telecommunications services to remote areas. Other publications dealt with institutional reforms and organizational restructuring in the transport and communications sector and with cooperation in rail transport. Advisory services were provided in drafting a regional telecommunications strategy and legislation on national telecommunications policies. A training programme was carried out for postal workers from English-speaking African countries.

The Conference of African Ministers of Transport and Communications, at its tenth meeting (Addis Ababa, 20-21 March),⁽³³⁾ considered the question of reactivating the Trans-African Highway Bureau and decided that the Bureau's Statutes, adopted in 1993,⁽³⁴⁾ be amended to reduce from 26 to 18 the number of ratifications required for their entry into force. The Conference also appealed to member States to pursue the implementation of the Yamoussoukro Declaration on a New African Air Transport Policy, adopted in 1988 at the Special Conference of African Ministers responsible for Civil Aviation.⁽³⁵⁾

In April, the ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole urged member States to ratify the Statutes of the Trans-African Highway Bureau.

Transport and Communications Decade

ECA in 1995 continued activities aimed at implementing the programme for the Second United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, 1991-2000 (UNTACDA II), adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1991⁽³⁶⁾ and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.⁽³⁷⁾ Efforts focused on facilitating inter-State transport and communications, accelerating institutional reforms and improving human resources and other critical capacities through, inter alia, a regional programme on human resources and institutional development and a transport database project. The secretariat published two issues of the UNTACDA II Newsletter and produced a list of projects approved in the context of the Decade.

In March, the Conference of African Ministers of Transport and Communications reviewed the programme's implementation and adopted a programme of action for 1995-1997. The Conference urged member States to establish or strengthen national transport and communications databases and to adopt harmonized and standardized methodologies for data collection and calculation of performance indicators. It also recommended a resolution on implementation of phase II of the UNTACDA II programme, for adoption by the ECA Conference of Ministers.

In April, the Technical Preparatory Committee observed that the first mid-term evaluation of the programme, carried out in 1994, revealed unsatisfactory results due to the low priority accorded by African countries to projects approved under the programme, and to inadequate functioning of national coordination committees. The Committee noted the recommendations that the UNTACDA II programme should be focused on regional and subregional activities, scaled down to realistic levels and linked to available resources; that efforts should be concentrated only on activities of common benefit to most countries; that there should be greater reliance on mobilization of internal resources; and that the ECA regular budget be supplemented to implement the Decade's activities.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers recommended a resolution⁽³⁸⁾ for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (below). Annexed to the resolution were its programme budget implications, estimated at $224,520.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Council adopted resolution 1995/23.

Implementation of phase II of the programme for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 710(XXVI) of 12 May 1991 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, by which the Conference of Ministers adopted the programme for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Referring to General Assembly decision 46/456 of 20 December 1991, by which the Assembly approved the programme for the Second Decade, and Assembly decision 48/455 of 21 December 1993 concerning the provision of resources for its implementation,

Recalling resolution 93/89 of 13 March 1993 of the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning on the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade,

Having considered the mid-term evaluation of the programme for the Second Decade and the action programme derived therefrom,

Reaffirming the continuing relevance and critical importance of the Second Decade, especially for achieving the goals of the Treaty Establishing the African Economic Community,

Noting with concern the low level of programme implementation due to a lack of resources,

Recalling that new projects to be proposed for inclusion in the programme for the Second Decade should conform to the principles and criteria already adopted and be submitted to the executing agencies concerned, specifying, among other things, the:

- (a) Time-frame for implementation,
- (b) Resource requirements, resource availability and prospective sources,
- (c) Description of tasks to be performed and their assignment among the various partners,

1. Urges Member States to make every effort to implement the programme for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa by undertaking, inter alia, the following specific activities:

- (a) Facilitating and encouraging national coordinating committees to carry out activities by providing those committees with the necessary human and financial resources to enable them to accomplish their assigned tasks;

(b) According priority to national projects that contribute to the achievement of the objectives of the Second Decade;

(c) Coordinating and strengthening national efforts in fund-raising, so as to be able to gain access to regional indicative planning figures through such sources as the Lome IV Convention, for the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade;

(d) Taking into account the environmental impact of all transport and communications development projects;

2. Invites Member States and intergovernmental organizations to involve the subregional and subsectoral working groups in the design of regional action programmes concerning transport and communications and to provide them with all the assistance necessary to participate effectively in the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade;

3. Requests intergovernmental organizations to take an active part in the programme for the Second Decade by carrying out, within their regular work programmes, the activities set out in that programme, giving priority to those activities that promote regional integration;

4. Invites the United Nations Development Programme to consider favourably increasing the level of its support for the Second Decade by funding part of the regional action programme for the implementation of the second phase of the programme for the Second Decade;

5. Invites all donors to contribute further to the implementation of the programme approved by the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning at its tenth meeting, held at Addis Ababa on 20 and 21 March 1995;

6. Invites the General Assembly to consider providing the Economic Commission for Africa with additional resources, allocated within the regular budget, to enable it to pursue the major activities of the programme for the Second Decade;

7. Requests the African, Caribbean and Pacific Coordinating Ministers of the European Development Fund to give appropriate priority to the projects and programmes for the Second Decade in the preparation of their national and regional indicative programmes under the second financial protocol of the Lome IV Convention;

8. Calls upon the development banks and participating financial institutions to continue to work with the programme machinery of the Second Decade to provide coordinated and efficient support to the development of transport and communications in Africa;

9. Appeals to the World Bank to maintain a high level of involvement in and contribution to the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade;

10. Requests African financial institutions to provide further support to the programme for the Second Decade, in particular by systematically taking into account the guidelines and priorities of the Second Decade in the preparation of the action plans for African countries;

11. Requests the subsectoral working groups to initiate such regional action as would provide a framework for intervention by those countries that plan to commercialize or privatize their transport and communications sector;

12. Decides that the Resource Mobilization Committee for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa shall henceforth be known as the Advisory Committee on Programme Promotion for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, and adopts the terms of reference of that Committee, as set out in the report of the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning on its tenth meeting;

13. Requests the Advisory Committee to emphasize assistance for Member States in seeking, arranging and mobilizing funds for projects approved under the programme for the Second Decade;

14. Appeals to all financial institutions that are members of the Advisory Committee to play a more active role in the efforts geared to supporting the Committee's mission by providing it with the required technical expertise;

15. Requests the subsectoral working groups to assist in the evaluation of projects falling within their areas of competence, and in the coordination and integration of the Africa regional work programmes of the specialized agencies with those of the Second Decade;

16. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to:

(a) Disseminate systematically among all partners in the Second Decade information on the implementation of the Decade through workshops, seminars, symposia, other forums and information bulletins;

(b) Play a far more active role in coordinating the programme for the Second Decade and to strengthen the capacity of the Commission to provide the necessary technical support of programme implementation;

(c) Ensure that future evaluations of the implementation of the programme for the Second Decade are based on a critical analysis of the degree to which the objectives of the Decade have been achieved;

(d) Prepare a consolidated report on the status of implementation of all the projects for the Second Decade, based on reports prepared by Member States and intergovernmental organizations on the status of their projects.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

In response to a 1993 Economic and Social Council request,⁽³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General in May submitted a report,⁽⁴⁰⁾ prepared by the Executive Secretaries of ECA and ECE, on the project for a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar. The report analysed studies carried out during 1993-1994 under 1980 and 1989 cooperation agreements between Morocco and Spain and dealing with the project's geophysical, technical and socio-economic aspects, including the options of constructing a bridge or a tunnel as well as traffic forecasting. It also reviewed project baseline and evaluation studies and other related activities, such as the fourth international colloquium on the permanent link, scheduled to take place in Seville, Spain, from 16 to 18 May. The report concluded that the tunnel option appeared to be preferable; however, its technical feasibility had to be confirmed by a current off-shore drilling survey.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report by decision 1995/250 of 24 July. On 27 July, the Council adopted resolution 1995/48.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/57 of 30 July 1982, 1983/62 of 29 July 1983, 1984/75 of 27 July 1984, 1985/70 of 26 July 1985, 1987/69 of 8 July 1987, 1989/119 of 28 July 1989, 1991/74 of 26 July 1991 and 1993/60 of 30 July 1993,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 43/179 of 20 December 1988, by which the Assembly declared the period 1991-2000 the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Referring to resolution 912(1989) adopted on 1 February 1989 by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe regarding measures to encourage the construction of a major traffic artery in south-western Europe and to study thoroughly the possibility of a permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Also referring to the conclusions of the special meeting on the permanent link organized at Cairo on 5 April 1994 by the International Tunnelling Association on the occasion of its General Assembly, pursuant to Council resolution 1993/60,

Taking note of the recommendations and conclusions of the evaluation report on the studies relating to the project prepared in accordance with resolution 1991/74 and the follow-up report prepared in accordance with resolution 1993/60, in which substantial support for the project from the European Union is recommended,

Also taking note of the conclusions of the Fourth International Colloquium on the Permanent Link, held at Seville, Spain, from 16 to 18 May 1995 and attended by international experts and representatives of specialized international organizations,

Recalling the strategy adopted by the European Union at the Essen Summit in December 1994, consisting in the setting-up of a European-Mediterranean partnership through the establishment of a free-trade zone,

Recalling also the conclusions of the first meeting of the Ministers of Transport of the six western Mediterranean countries, namely, Algeria, France, Italy, Morocco, Spain and Tunisia, held in Paris on 20 January 1995, at which the Ministers undertook to identify priority projects, among them the permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar, to be proposed to the European Union for consideration of the possibilities of financing and execution,

1. Welcomes the cooperation on the project for the link through the Strait of Gibraltar established between the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Governments of Morocco and Spain and specialized international organizations;

2. Commends the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe on the work done in preparing the project follow-up report requested by the Council in its resolution 1993/60, even though necessary resources were not forthcoming from the General Assembly;

3. Thanks the International Tunnelling Association for organizing a special meeting on the project at Cairo on 5 April 1994, pursuant to Council resolution 1993/60;

4. Repeats its invitation to the competent organizations of the United Nations system to participate in the studies and work on the permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar;

5. Invites the European Commission to consider the possibility of participating in the development of the project both institutionally and financially;

6. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to take an active part in the follow-up to the project and to report to the Council at its substantive session of 1997;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide formal support and, to the extent that priorities permit, necessary resources, within the regular budget, to the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe in order to enable them to carry out the above-mentioned activities.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/48

Tourism

Activities aimed at mobilization of tourism resources for Africa's overall development included a publication on modernization of handicraft production and its adaptation to the requirements of African tourism and a study on the role of tourism in the regional integration process, which recommended the establishment of a cooperation mechanism for promoting tourism development and proposed measures for improving the airline industry and accommodation facilities, increasing participation of local entrepreneurs in the tourist sector and using Africa's cultural heritage for tourist purposes.

Science and technology

ECA continued to promote science and technology development and application in Africa through meetings, studies and advisory services geared towards strengthening infrastructural capacities, formulating appropriate policies and enhancing science and technology impact and effectiveness for Africa's overall development. Technical assistance in establishing national policy frameworks and coordination mechanisms was provided to the Central African Republic, the Congo, Mozambique, Senegal and the Sudan, while research activities remained focused on identifying appropriate science and technology indicators for Africa, analysing the role of foreign direct investment in technological capacity-building and examining incentives for science and technology promotion.

The first African Regional Conference on Science and Technology (Addis Ababa, 6-10 November)⁽⁴¹⁾ made a number of recommendations dealing with, inter alia, adoption of appropriate legislation; the use of incentives to foster scientific progress and technological innovation; accelerated technology acquisition, absorption and assimilation; institutional capacity-building for technology transfer and technology assessment and forecasting; containment of brain drain; implementation of the protocol on science and technology of the African Economic Community; strengthened acquisition and application of nuclear science and technology; participation of women; and incorporation of science and technology issues in school curricula. The Conference also decided to create five subregional conferences on science and technology, and recommended an amendment to its terms of reference to include a call for special attention to the needs of women and children.

JIU report. By a 29 March note,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council a JIU report on UN system support for science and technology in Africa, and comments of the Administrative Committee on Coordination thereon. The report described the concept and methodology of the JIU evaluation, examined the regional setting for science and technology development and the role of the UN system, and presented main findings and recommendations arising from the evaluation.

In comments on the report, ACC supported in principle the recommendation that a normative framework be established by the UN system for the design, execution and evaluation of institution-building projects in low-income countries, particularly LDCs, and agreed with the idea that long-term financial sustainability should be a main prerequisite for UN system support for such projects. The Committee also agreed that the programme approach to technical cooperation should be applied more systematically and comprehensively to those projects, and that the end-users targeted by the projects should be involved in their design and planning. It recognized the importance of the proposal to initiate discussions at the highest level of ACC for increasing UN system policy and programmatic collaboration in support of science and technology capacity-building in Africa, and considered that it could be appropriate to devote one OAU summit meeting to the problems of science and technology for development in Africa. However, reservations were expressed concerning the other recommendations.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/234 of 17 and 19 July, took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the JIU report and the ACC comments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/102.

United Nations system support for science and technology in Africa

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development and subsequently endorsed and reaffirmed by the General Assembly,

Reaffirming also its resolution 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the annex to which contains the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, having as its priority objectives the accelerated transformation, integration, diversification and growth of the African economies, in order to strengthen them within the world economy,

Having considered the report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "United Nations system support for science and technology in Africa", and the conclusions and recommendations contained therein,

Recognizing the crucial significance of science and technology, including the related information technologies, for planning, development and decision-making in science and technology and the promotion of endogenous capacity-building in science and technology in the process of growth and development,

Recognizing also that the fundamental objective of science and technology to meet basic needs should be to create conditions that increase the ability of people living in poverty to gain access to, fully understand, integrate, use and generate knowledge and technology creatively in order to satisfy their basic needs,

Stressing the importance of South-South cooperation in the promotion of science and technology in Africa in the context of, inter alia, modalities for economic and technical cooperation among developing countries,

Noting the efforts being undertaken by African leaders within the Presidential Forum on the Management of Science and Technology for Development in Africa, 1995-2005,

Taking note of the Cairo Agenda for Action, adopted on 28 June 1995 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-first ordinary session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "United Nations system support for science and technology in Africa", and the comments of the Administrative Committee on Coordination thereon;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to promote and implement activities in support of science and technology in Africa in the context of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, to make concrete proposals on activities, in the context of the mid-term review of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, to be carried out in 1996, aimed at strengthening United Nations system support for science and technology in Africa, taking into account the views and recommendations contained in the reports mentioned above and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 50/102

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/617/Add.4) without vote, 8 December (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.62), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.38); agenda item 95 1d).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 35-37, 39, 42; plenary 96.

Natural resources, energy and marine affairs

ECA continued to promote the development and management of energy, water, mineral and marine resources, as well as cartography and remote sensing services. Studies were carried out on rural electrification in the region, manufacturing of turbines and generators for mini-hydropower in African countries, the situation in the mining sector, geographic and land information systems, and marine pollution and strategies for intercountry cooperation. The secretariat continued to publish MAJI (an information bulletin on water resources) and the Cartographic and Remote Sensing Bulletin for Africa, and produced a digital geographic atlas, catalogues of maps, a directory of African experts in natural resources, and a list of charts and remote sensing imageries.

Other activities addressed such issues as privatization and deregulation of the energy sector, its role in poverty alleviation, and regional economic integration through energy trade and power pooling; a framework for water resources development in a global perspective; mining legislation and improvement of small-scale mining; development and management of ocean resources; and assistance to member States and subregional institutions in building their capacity to generate and access adequate information, and to diagnose problems and propose remedial action.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers urged⁽⁴³⁾ African countries to adopt the strategy and plan of action for water resources assessment in Africa, formulated in March by an ECA/World Meteorological Organization (WMO) international conference on water resources. The Ministers also called for an integrated approach in sustainable water resources development and management, closer cooperation for the development of transboundary river/lake groundwater basins, and action to promote the strategy and plan of action.

The first Regional Conference of African Ministers responsible for the Development and Utilization of Mineral Resources and Energy (Accra, 20-23 November)⁽⁴⁴⁾ recommended measures for building relevant capacities through studies, policies and strategies as well as cooperation and integration.

Food and agriculture

ECA activities in food and agriculture focused on enhancing national capacities for food security policy analysis and planning as well as on improving the food security situation. Measures were recommended to ensure sustainable production and rational use of food, fishery, forestry and livestock resources and to improve delivery systems. Subregional meetings were held to consider harmonization of food production and pricing policies, establishment of subregional information systems on food markets, development of credit schemes for the private sector and improvement of marketing infrastructures. The secretariat continued to publish the Rural Progress newsletter and a series on food security and its outlook in Africa, and conducted studies dealing with poverty alleviation, rural development, and cooperation in fisheries.

In April, the ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole considered a report⁽⁴⁵⁾ on food and agricultural production, food security and food self-sufficiency in Africa. The report examined the food security situation and related constraints, and identified priorities for sustainable agricultural food production and security. The Committee recognized that improvement in food security would entail effective policies for promoting local food production and greater popular participation and improving agricultural delivery systems, credit programmes and market efficiency, and emphasized the urgent need for land reform, water development and irrigation management systems, crop diversification, and farm storage facilities. Other important areas were research and training, improved climatic and early warning systems, subregional and regional cooperation, and promotion of strong linkages between the agricultural and industrial sectors.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers called⁽⁴⁶⁾ on member States to create a macro-economic environment conducive to the enhancement of all required capacities for food and agricultural production; urged subregional economic communities to build an appropriate cooperation framework; appealed for international measures to mitigate the impact of agricultural price liberalization on Africa's food and agriculture sector; and called on ECA and FAO to develop a strategy for sustainable agricultural and rural development. In another resolution,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Conference requested the Executive Secretary to undertake studies on food security and self-sufficiency in North Africa, and called for international assistance in analysing the impact of trade liberalization in agricultural commodities on the subregion's exports and imports.

Cooperation in fisheries

By a 13 June note,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a report on cooperation in fisheries in Africa, prepared by the Director-General of FAO in response to a 1994 Council request.⁽⁴⁹⁾ The report reviewed the status of the FAO Regional Convention on Fisheries Cooperation among African States Bordering the Atlantic Ocean, adopted in 1991, and described FAO activities in support of the Ministerial Conference on the same subject, including its advisory project on improving the legal framework of West African coastal States for fisheries cooperation, management and development.

The third session of the Ministerial Conference was held in Praia, Cape Verde, on 17 and 18 July. The Regional Convention entered into force on 11 August, having received seven instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1995/234 of 17 and 19 July, took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the report.

Environment

Agenda 21,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the wide-ranging action plan adopted in 1992 by the UN Conference on Environment and Development,⁽⁵¹⁾ continued to be at the centre of ECA work in that area. The ECA secretariat carried out a number of activities under the African Strategies to implement Agenda 21, which had been approved by the ECA Conference of Ministers in 1993.⁽⁵²⁾ Technical assistance was provided to the African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development in strengthening its operations and work programme, and measures were recommended in support of efforts to combat desertification. The secretariat also continued to publish the ECA Environment Newsletter.

Social development and humanitarian affairs

In April, the ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole considered a report⁽⁵³⁾ on human development in Africa—the first in a biennial series launched in 1995. The report examined the concept and measurement of human development and its current state in the region, reviewed regional goals concerning children, health and basic education for all, and outlined future perspectives. The Committee underscored the importance of the well-being of both children and women, noted the need to restore or improve the quality of services, such as basic health care and education, as well as to address gender gaps in terms of service access and socio-economic and political status, and emphasized the need to monitor the human situation in Africa on a continuous basis. It also discussed the Declaration adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development, held in Denmark in March (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX), and stressed the importance of establishing follow-up mechanisms.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers urged⁽⁵⁴⁾ member States to monitor human development indicators, called for international financial and technical cooperation in preparing human development reports, and requested the Executive Secretary to promote the cause of human development in Africa and to monitor progress in attaining regional targets for education, children and social development. In other action, the Conference, on the recommendation of the Governing Board of the UN African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (fourth meeting, Addis Ababa, 4-5 January), approved⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Board's composition for 1995-1999, endorsed a biennial rotational basis for its membership, urged Governments to accede to the Statute of the Institute, and appealed for financial and programme support for UNAFRI.

ECA continued to assist Governments in developing human resources, building and strengthening institutional capacities, and fostering popular participation in social development. The secretariat provided policy guidance and extended technical assistance to member States through seminars, workshops and advisory services. Studies were undertaken on South African labour policy and on the socio-economic impact of AIDS on households and families, and manuals were produced on management and administration of education, planning for human development, and planning and implementation of curricula for peace and nation-building. The secretariat issued guidelines for improving the informal sector's productivity and its linkages with other sectors of the economy, and continued to analyse trends and issues in human resources planning, development and utilization in Africa and to publish its People First series and training information notices.

Population

At its 1995 meeting, the ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole stressed the importance of implementing the Cairo Programme of Action adopted by the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) in 1994⁽⁵⁶⁾ and the Dakar/Ngor Declaration on Population, Family and Sustainable Development, adopted by the third African Population Conference in 1992⁽⁵⁷⁾ and endorsed by ECA in 1993.⁽⁵⁸⁾

A workshop of experts and NGOs on the implementation of the Dakar/Ngor Declaration and the ICPD Programme of Action (Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, 6-9 June) approved⁽⁵⁹⁾ recommendations to African Governments and NGOs, as well as to subregional, regional and international organizations, on the formulation and implementation of national population policies and programmes, monitoring and evaluation of their implementation, and relevant capacity-building; promotion of education about family life and its inclusion in educational curricula, and outreach to vulnerable population groups; and facilitation of pertinent information exchange as well as support to activities of national population commissions at the subregional, regional and international levels.

ECA secretariat activities continued to address the issues of family planning, migration, ageing, the interrelationship between population and sustainable development, and management of population programmes. Two issues of the African Population Newsletter were published, and technical publications were produced on the integration of population variables into development planning, consequences of teenage pregnancy and measures to reduce the magnitude of the problem, contraceptive prevalence and practice in ECA member States, and linkages among the environment, urbanization and migration in Africa.

Human settlements

As part of regional preparations for the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held in Turkey in 1996 (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII), a second Special Meeting of African Ministers responsible for Human Settlements (Johannesburg, South Africa, 16-18 October) adopted a declaration embodying a common African position on key issues of interest to the region. The declaration identified critical problems common to human settlements in Africa, such as inadequate shelter, lack of proper maintenance of urban infrastructure and services, poor sanitation, unemployment and poverty, as well as factors exacerbating those problems, including social and political conflicts and instability, wars, external debt burdens, natural disasters, desertification, population pressures, and an unfavourable macroeconomic climate.

By the declaration, the Ministers also underscored the need to create an enabling environment and promote strategies for the land and housing sector development; pledged support for efforts to increase production, supply and accessibility of shelter for all segments of the population, especially the poor; emphasized the importance of rural-urban development balance and the necessity of human settlements planning; decided to revise legal and regulatory systems of land administration and management and give priority to land-tenure reform; and urged Governments to ensure decentralization of responsibilities to local authorities, strengthen administrative and revenue-generation capacity at all levels of government, and develop innovative financial mechanisms.

The secretariat's work focused on the formulation and implementation of human settlements policies aimed at mitigating rural/urban imbalances in African countries and promoting the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, adopted by the General Assembly in 1988.⁽⁶⁰⁾ Guidelines were issued for improving human settlements management, elaborating and implementing policies on shelter provision for the urban and rural poor, and developing sustainable energy and transport systems in human settlements. A technical publication was produced on a strategy for building materials and construction industries development.

Preparations for Habitat II were also reviewed in 1995 by subregional ministerial meetings for eastern, central and southern Africa.

Integration of women in development

In April, the Technical Preparatory Committee reviewed regional activities in preparation for the Fourth World Conference on Women, which was subsequently held in Beijing in September (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). It also considered a progress report⁽⁶¹⁾ on a proposed African bank for women and promotion of women entrepreneurship. The Committee noted that a meeting of experts on practical modalities for establishing an African bank for women, held in 1994,⁽⁶²⁾ had recommended the establishment of a regional institution—an "Africa Women's Bank"—with affiliates at the national level, and that the idea had gained prominence in nearly all African countries. However, it was deemed necessary to conduct an additional study on the bank's structure and capital, its legal aspects and its impact on the advancement of African women, particularly rural women.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers, on the recommendation of the Africa Regional Coordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development (sixteenth meeting, Addis Ababa, 20-22 April),⁽⁶³⁾ adopted⁽⁶⁴⁾ the African Platform for Action: African Common Position for the Advancement of Women, approved by the fifth African Regional Conference on Women in 1994,⁽⁶⁵⁾ and urged member States to give full support to its implementation. In another resolution,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Ministers urged African countries to make adequate financial appropriations in their national budgets for implementing the Platform for Action, and called for strengthening national institutions for the advancement of women and for assistance from regional financial institutions and business associations, Africa's development partners and the international community.

The ECA secretariat produced technical publications on gender issues in Africa, African women and leadership, participation of women in the economic sector, and international legal instruments relevant to women in the region. It issued guidelines for implementing the African Platform for Action, continued to publish the ATRCW Update newsletter of the African Training and Research Centre for Women, and established an African Women Leadership Fund as a follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women.

Programme, administrative and organizational questions

The ECA Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole reviewed a new organizational chart of the Commission's secretariat and a proposed programme of work and priorities for 1996-1997⁽⁶⁶⁾ clustered, as in 1994-1995, around nine sub-programmes (see above, under "Activities in 1995"). The programme also incorporated activities of policy-making organs and those related to executive direction and management and to programme support. The Committee observed that the proposed programme did not pay adequate attention to conflict resolution, and urged closer cooperation with OAU in that regard. It also urged the secretariat to expand and update its programme evaluation methods, and proposed that there should be enhanced communication between the ECA Conference of Ministers and the African Group in the General Assembly and in other principal UN organs so as to ensure continuity in Africa's position on major issues.

On 3 May, the ECA Conference of Ministers recommended a resolution⁽⁶⁷⁾ for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/24.

Programme of work and priorities of the Economic Commission for Africa for the biennium 1996-1997

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and subsequent relevant resolutions on programme planning,

Recalling its resolution 1992/52 of 31 July 1992, entitled "Restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic and social fields: strengthening the role and functions of the Economic Commission for Africa", and resolution 769(XXVIII) of 6 May 1993 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa on strengthening the role of the Commission to provide team leadership and coordination of United Nations system activities with a regional perspective in Africa,

Reaffirming that measures to improve the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the Secretariat and to improve the planning, programming and budgeting process, as called for by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/212 of 23 December 1992, would significantly contribute to enhancing the effectiveness of the Commission in dealing with the development challenges facing the Africa region,

Conscious of the importance of the ongoing measures to improve the effectiveness of the United Nations resulting from General Assembly resolution 46/235 of 13 April 1992, on the basis of which resources and activities have been decentralized from Headquarters to the Commission during the biennium 1994-1995,

Having examined the proposed programme of work and priorities of the Commission for the biennium 1996-1997,

Taking note of the new organizational structure which, among other things, is aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of the Commission,

Appreciative of the redeployment of resources to the Commission's regular programme of technical cooperation to enhance the multidisciplinary regional advisory services it renders to member States,

Noting with appreciation the grant made available to the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning, which has contributed significantly to the operational capacity of the Commission,

1. Endorses the proposed programme of work and priorities of the Economic Commission for Africa for the biennium 1996-1997;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, through the Administrative Committee on Coordination, that United Nations programmes and activities for the Africa region are coordinated and harmonized for cost-effectiveness, synergy and greater impact;

3. Urges the Secretary-General, in making his proposals for the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, to take into consideration the special development needs of the Africa region, by stressing the need to make available to the Commission adequate resources to enable it to carry out fully those activities under programme 30 (Regional cooperation for development in Africa) and programme 45 (Africa: critical economic situation, recovery and development), in particular sub-programme 2 thereof (Monitoring, assessment and follow-up of the implementation of action programmes, including their financial aspects), of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997;

4. Urgently appeals to the General Assembly to consider the possibility of converting, within existing resources, the grant provided to the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning to establish core posts in the regular budget, as called for by the Economic and Social Council in its resolutions 1992/51 of 31 July 1992 and 1993/68 of 30 July 1993;

5. Endorses the appeal of the Economic Commission for Africa to the Committee for Programme and Coordination to consider these proposals favourably and to recommend, through the Economic and Social Council, their adoption by the General Assembly at its fiftieth session;

6. Calls upon the General Assembly, through its Second and Fifth Committees, to take the necessary action to ensure that adequate resources are made available to the Commission for the implementation of its work programme;

7. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to endeavour to maintain and strengthen the cohesion of the programme of technical cooperation, especially at the implementation level.

Programme evaluation

The Technical Preparatory Committee considered a progress report⁽⁶⁸⁾ on programme evaluation in ECA, which described steps taken to implement the Commission's recommendations emanating from its 1994 review⁽⁶⁹⁾ of the ECA Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCs) and PADIS, an in-depth evaluation of the programme for African recovery and development under the 1992-1997 UN medium-term plan, and self-evaluation of ECA sub-programmes in marine affairs (non-living resources); least developed, land-locked and island developing countries; environment and development; trade development and cooperation; natural resources; and energy, including new and renewable sources of energy.

The Committee noted the progress made and urged the secretariat to ensure full implementation of Commission recommendations. It also acted on recommendations of intergovernmental committees of experts of the five MULPOCs, adopted at their meetings in March and April 1995.

At its 1995 session,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Committee for Programme and Coordination recommended that the General Assembly review the level of resources devoted to implementing the programme for African recovery and development, taking into account the enormous needs of that region.

Cooperation between SADC and the United Nations

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽⁷¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October a report⁽⁷²⁾ on cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community (SADC), established in 1992 as successor to the 10-member Southern African Development Coordination Conference. The report described assistance provided to southern African countries by the UN system and various Member States.

The UN Secretariat had 118 ongoing development cooperation projects in SADC countries, focusing on human resources development and institution-building in the areas of public administration and governance, electoral assistance, support to aid coordination, development programming, and water and other natural resources for development. The UN Children's Fund (UNICEF) extended assistance in formulating national programmes of action and goals for children and facilitating a review of the progress made; developing analytical materials on major issues affecting southern African children; promoting human resources development in basic education; and assessing health, nutrition and water needs arising from the 1994/1995 drought, in preparation for the launching by SADC of a regional drought programme and consolidated appeal. UNCTAD assisted in drafting an SADC protocol on trade cooperation, provided advisory services on matters related to rules of origin and enterprise cooperation, and carried out a programme on multimodal transport and trade facilitation in Mozambique.

UNDP funded projects totalling $16.4 million in support of various sectors such as transport, petroleum, mining, food security and education, while the World Food Programme (WFP) delivered food aid valued at $226 million, committed $49 million for commodities and transport in the countries most affected by the 1994/95 drought, and purchased $108 million worth of commodities from the region. Projects financed by the World Bank focused on structural adjustment, private sector development, poverty alleviation, private investment and foreign direct investment, development of human resources and physical infrastructure, and economic integration. The Bank's commitments to SADC members for 1991-1995 totalled $4.5 billion. Activities of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) were aimed at opening SADC economies to the advantages of larger markets and fostering market integration.

The UN Environment Programme (UNEP) provided assistance in environmental monitoring and assessment, expansion of environmental networks and information systems, development of environmental legislation, and personnel training. The UN Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) cooperated with Governments in formulating effective housing finance systems and programmes for human settlements development, rehabilitation of the housing and urban development sector, and environmentally sound management. The UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and SADC finalized a memorandum of understanding on cooperation and collaborated in the area of water use management training and research, among others. SADC members received assistance from other UN programmes and agencies, such as the International Trade Centre, the International Labour Organization (ILO), FAO, WHO, the Universal Postal Union, WMO, the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) and UNIDO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/118.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 37/248 of 21 December 1982, 38/160 of 19 December 1983, 39/215 of 18 December 1984, 40/195 of 17 December 1985, 42/181 of 11 December 1987, 44/221 of 22 December 1989, 46/160 of 19 December 1991 and 48/173 of 21 December 1993, in which, inter alia, it requested the Secretary-General to promote cooperation between the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and the Southern African Development Coordination Conference, and urged intensification of contacts in order to accelerate the achievement of the objectives of the Lusaka Declaration of 1 April 1980, by which the Conference was established,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the strengthening of the Southern African Development Community through the admission of South Africa and Mauritius as member States,

Commending member States of the Community for demonstrating their support and commitment to deeper and more formal arrangements for cooperation within the new Community,

Commending also the efforts made by the Community to implement its programme of action,

Reaffirming that the successful implementation of the development programmes of the Community can be achieved only if the Community has adequate resources at its disposal,

Noting that the effects of war, loss of life and destruction of economic and social infrastructure in southern Africa demand the continuation and strengthening of rehabilitation programmes to regenerate the economies of the countries of the region,

Noting with grave concern the recurrence of drought in the region and the increase of poverty as a result, especially in rural communities,

Recognizing the strengthening of democratic governance and other positive developments in the region, including the holding of elections and installation of a democratic Government in South Africa, and the restoration of democratic rule in Lesotho in September 1994, as well as the holding of multi-party elections in Malawi and recently in the United Republic of Tanzania,

Welcoming with satisfaction the reintegration of Walvis Bay and the offshore islands into Namibia, and noting the impact of Walvis Bay as a major harbour on regional economic cooperation,

Also noting that despite the positive developments in the political and military situation in Angola, the economic, social and humanitarian situation remains dire, and reaffirming both the importance of and the need for a continued and effective United Nations presence in promoting a negotiated settlement in Angola with a view to fostering the peace process,

Noting with satisfaction the successful implementation of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique, which has created favourable conditions for the establishment of lasting peace, the enhancement of democracy, the promotion of national reconciliation, and the implementation of a programme of national reconstruction and development in Mozambique,

Recognizing the valuable and effective economic and financial contribution that some organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system have made to complement national and subregional efforts for the advancement of the process of democratization, rehabilitation and development in southern Africa,

Welcoming the outcome of recent United Nations conferences, in particular the Fourth World Conference on Women, and recognizing the important role that women play in development in the region,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, in which he describes progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolutions dealing with cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community;

2. Commends the States Members of the United Nations and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that have maintained, enhanced and initiated development cooperation with the Community;

3. Calls upon the States Members of the United Nations and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that have not yet established contact and relationships with the Community to explore the possibility of doing so;

4. Commends also the members of the Community for the progress that has been achieved to date in implementing its programme of action, and encourages perseverance with those efforts;

5. Expresses appreciation to the international community for the financial, technical and material support given to the Community;

6. Renews its appeal to the international community to maintain current levels of, and increase, where appropriate, its financial, technical and material support to the Community in order to enable it to implement fully its programme of action and to meet the reconstruction and rehabilitation needs of the region;

7. Appeals to the international community and to relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to extend appropriate assistance to the Community in order to enable it to advance further the process of regional economic integration;

8. Appeals to the United Nations, its related organs and the international community to assist the Community with appropriate resources to implement the programmes and decisions adopted by various United Nations world conferences, with specific emphasis on the enhancement of the role of women in the development process;

9. Welcomes the economic and political achievements and reforms undertaken within the Community, which are intended to address better the challenges of regional cooperation and integration in the 1990s and beyond;

10. Appeals to the international community to extend the needed assistance to the newly democratized South African nation to enable it to implement its reconstruction and development programme as speedily as possible;

11. Calls upon the United Nations to intensify its efforts to assist the Government of Angola and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola in the rapid implementation of the Lusaka Protocol in all its aspects;

12. Expresses its appreciation for the substantial contributions of Member States, United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations to meet the needs of the Angolan people, and encourages additional substantial contributions;

13. Calls upon the international community to continue to extend its support to the people of Mozambique in their efforts to consolidate their newfound peace and democracy based on national reconstruction and development in that country;

14. Reaffirms its appeal to the international community to continue rendering assistance to Namibia to enable it to implement its national development programmes;

15. Commends the Secretary-General and members of the international community for their timely response to the drought situation in southern Africa, which has averted famine in the region;

16. Appeals to the United Nations and the international community for continued assistance in addressing the drought situation in the southern African region, especially through strengthening the capacity of the Community in drought mitigation, drought monitoring, early warning and preparedness;

17. Invites the donor community and other cooperating partners to participate at a high level in the Annual Consultative Conference of the Southern African Development Community, to be held at Johannesburg on 1 and 2 February 1996;

18. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the Southern African Development Community, to continue to intensify contacts aimed at promoting and harmonizing cooperation between the United Nations and the Community;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, at its fifty-first session (Bangkok, Thailand, 24 April-1 May),(¹) had as its theme topic "Strengthening of regional cooperation in human resources development, with special reference to the social implications of sustainable economic growth in Asia and the Pacific". The Commission also reviewed recent economic and social developments and their likely impact on the region, and considered issues pertaining to regional economic cooperation; the environment and sustainable development; poverty alleviation through economic growth and social development; transport and communications; statistics; the situation in the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries; inter-organizational cooperation to promote regional development; as well as programme and organizational questions (see below, under specific subject headings).

In his message to the session, the UN Secretary-General noted that there had been increasing awareness in recent years of the fundamental importance of economic and social development to international welfare and referred to efforts to find solutions to economic and social problems and to formulate and implement a global strategy in support of social progress. Asia and the Pacific, despite its economic dynamism, faced many challenges posed by those problems, he said, adding that the Commission represented a valuable forum to address those issues. The Secretary-General was confident that Commission decisions would help to bring the region closer to a future of social strength and shared prosperity.

In his policy statement, the ESCAP Executive Secretary drew attention to the region's success in sustaining its economic growth, underpinned by the continued momentum of economic reform in most countries. He also emphasized the need to assist States with slower economic growth through increased regional cooperation in a wide range of areas, exchanges of experience on policies, and more intraregional transfers of technology and investment. He noted that the most serious challenges confronting Asian and Pacific countries pertained to providing macroeconomic stability with generally low rates of inflation, resolving growing infrastructural bottlenecks, and mitigating emerging social concerns. The Executive Secretary called for efforts to establish cooperative relationships among countries at different stages of development; to sustain development of intraregional trade and investment; to implement measures aimed at poverty alleviation and provision of social security services; to protect the environment and promote sustainable development; and to ensure the development of human resources and of transport, communications and power infrastructures. He concluded that ESCAP should focus its work on three basic functions: in-depth research on the region's pressing problems, mobilization of the intergovernmental machinery to foster the exchange of experience, and provision of technical and advisory assistance.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

The Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1996(2) reviewed world economic developments in 1995 and their implications for the ESCAP region. It discussed the region's macroeconomic performance and policies, regional trade performance and balance of payments, as well as the role of the private sector in development and of public expenditure in the provision of social services.

A summary⁽³⁾ of the survey noted that the region's developing countries recorded a 7.8 per cent growth rate in 1995, compared with 8 per cent in 1994. A small deceleration in growth was expected to continue through 1996 and 1997, as some economies were overcoming constraints, such as shortages of labour, skills and infrastructure that had emerged as a result of years of rapid expansion. At the same time, annual inflation decreased from 10.4 per cent in 1994 to 8.4 per cent in 1995, due to anti-inflationary policies put in place in most countries. Economic performance remained uneven among individual States, subregions and economic groups, with LDCs and island economies registering growth rates well below the regional average and negative growth rates persisting in the Central Asian republics.

Among the region's three developed economies, Australia and New Zealand had emerged from their earlier 1990-1992 slowdown and had experienced strong economic growth in 1993 and 1994, leading to some rise in inflationary pressures

(up from 1.9 per cent in 1994 to 4.6 per cent in 1995 in Australia and from 1.7 per cent to 2.3 per cent in New Zealand) and a consequent tightening of monetary policy in the second half of 1994 that brought about the beginnings of a new slowdown. Growth of GDP fell in 1995 compared to 1994, from 4.9 per cent to 2.1 per cent, and from 4.3 per cent to 2.2 per cent, respectively, with a subdued performance of the manufacturing sector in both countries and, in New Zealand, drought in some regions that negatively impacted agriculture.

Japan's economy, on the other hand, remained weak after experiencing a fall in output in 1993, and had eased both monetary and fiscal policy in efforts to stimulate the economy. Growth of Japanese GDP was only 0.7 per cent, following a 0.6 per cent growth in the previous year. Inflation, which had increased by 0.7 per cent in 1994, was expected to register zero growth in 1995, due to a continued decline in asset prices, the increase in low-cost imports with the rise of the yen, and the prolonged recession. Other major concerns during the year related to the reconstruction after the Kobe earthquake, a massive trade surplus, implementation of further deregulation measures, and the debt overhang in the financial sector.

Private consumption and investment in Australia and New Zealand, which had been strong in 1994, slowed somewhat early in 1995 after the tighter monetary policies dampened consumer confidence, but were expected to increase following continued wage and employment gains in the year. Unemployment dropped about 1 per cent in both countries, to 8.7 per cent and 7.2 per cent, respectively. Unemployment in Japan, while lower than those rates, was rising and had reached 3.1 per cent compared to 2.9 per cent the previous year, and personal consumption showed a downward trend.

In the Asian and Pacific least developed countries, half a decade of economic reforms aimed at enhancing the role of the private sector in development and promoting greater efficiency in resource mobilization and allocation had had a favourable impact on overall economic performance, which showed improvement during 1990-1995 over a comparable period in the previous decade. In 1994, GDP had grown by 6.8 per cent in Myanmar, 6.5 per cent in Bhutan, 5.5 per cent in Maldives and 4.9 per cent in Cambodia, an increase over the previous year for all those countries except Maldives. Growth rates were expected to accelerate from 4.6 per cent in 1994 to 5 per cent in 1995 in Bangladesh, but to decline from 8 per cent to 7 per cent in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and from 7 per cent to 2.6 per cent in Nepal.

The agricultural sector, which provided the largest share of GDP and remained the main source of employment in LDCs, thus playing an important role in poverty alleviation and overall development, expanded by 2.6 per cent in Bangladesh, up from 1.8 per cent in 1994, but contracted by 1 per cent in Nepal, after a 7.7 per cent growth in the previous year. Agricultural output had rebounded in 1994 with 6.1 per cent growth in Myanmar, and was up 2.4 per cent in Maldives, 2 per cent in Bhutan, and 1.4 per cent in Cambodia.

The continuing civil strife in Afghanistan had had severe effects on major economic sectors and on the economic and social infrastructure in that country, it was reported. Dislocations and disruptions in agricultural production required food imports of up to 650 thousand tons a year, while production in major industries, such as textiles, cement and food processing, was drastically reduced or had ceased altogether; the transport sector was seriously disrupted by the lack of spare parts and extensive war damage. The economic situation was also characterized by high inflation and a volatile exchange rate, fueled by large fiscal and current account deficits and a rapid rise in the money supply. In the remainder of LDCs, inflation rates remained mostly in double digits. They did fall from 8.9 per cent to 8 per cent in Nepal but accelerated from 1.8 per cent to 4 per cent in Bangladesh and from 6.9 per cent to more than 15 per cent in the Lao People's Democratic Republic. Most LDCs also continued to face constraints imposed by inadequate infrastructure, a low level of human resource development, widening budget deficits, a narrow tax base, low savings rates and growing environmental concerns.

The Pacific island economies generally failed to improve their economic performance—although the rapid exploitation of natural resources boosted growth in some countries—and remained vulnerable to exogenous shocks. Poor performance of public enterprises, coupled with continuing large budget deficits, highlighted the need to enhance the role of the private sector in development. While most island economies managed to sustain high rates of investment relative to GDP, much of it was undertaken by the public sector and financed by external aid. In addition, little success was achieved in expanding their export bases. With high population growth rates not matched by economic expansion, per capita GDP continued to decline.

In 1994, total output had fallen by 7.1 per cent in Samoa and 0.4 per cent in Kiribati, and had increased at rates lower than in 1993 in the Cook Islands (1.5 per cent), the Solomon Islands (4.2 per cent), Tuvalu (2.6 per cent) and Vanuatu (2 per cent), improving only in Tonga (5.7 per cent). GDP was expected to grow in 1995 by 2.7 per cent in Fiji, down from 5.2 per cent in 1994, and to fall by 4.6 per cent in Papua New Guinea, after growth of 3 per cent the previous year and 16.6 per cent in 1993, owing to a contraction of its mining and industrial sectors. Some positive achievements in economic performance were recorded by Guam, New Caledonia, the Northern Mariana Islands and Palau, due mainly to increased tourism. Guam's economy had recovered from a 1992 typhoon and a 1993 earthquake with 3.2 per cent growth in 1994, while, at last report, Palau's GDP had increased by an estimated 5.3 per cent in 1993.

Most Pacific island economies experienced low and falling inflation rates, owing to declining inflation in their major suppliers (Australia, New Zealand, United States); the rates were expected to remain below 3 per cent in 1995 in the Cook Islands, Fiji, Tonga, Tuvalu and Vanuatu and at around 5 per cent in Kiribati, but to reach 16 per cent in Papua New Guinea, compared with 2.9 per cent in 1994, due to a sharp depreciation of the local currency and an increase in import and excise duty rates. Samoa's inflation was expected to decrease. Following the introduction of value-added tax and shortfalls in the taro crop there, the rate had reached 18.4 per cent in 1994, a tenfold rise over 1993.

Subregional economic performance

The economies of East Asia grew by 9.3 per cent in 1995, compared with 9.9 per cent in 1994, while annual inflation for the subregion as a whole fell from 14.6 per cent to 10.6 per cent. The rate of growth in China decreased from 11.8 per cent to 10 per cent, due to austerity measures to counter inflationary pressures, but nevertheless remained the highest in the ESCAP region; at the same time, China's inflation was brought down from 21.7 per cent in 1994 to the targeted 15 per cent in 1995. Agricultural production, affected by heavy floods in 1994, increased by 4 per cent in 1995, up from 3.5 per cent in the previous year, while the services sector maintained the 1994 expansion rate of 10 per cent. Industrial output was expected to rise at a slower rate of 12 per cent, against 16.3 per cent in 1994.

The high growth rate of the Chinese economy had a stimulating effect on neighbouring countries, as well as on the rest of the region. GDP rose by 9.3 per cent in the Republic of Korea, compared with 8.4 per cent in the previous year; its agriculture rebounded with an estimated 7.4 per cent growth rate, having gained only 1.2 per cent in 1994, while rates of increase in the industrial and services sectors were expected to accelerate. Following the introduction of a tight monetary policy to curb excessive domestic demand, inflation was estimated at 5 per cent, a 1 per cent drop from the previous year. The economy of Hong Kong maintained a 5.5 per cent growth rate, despite a sharp slowdown in consumer spending. The services sector was the main source of growth, along with a strong stimulus from expanding construction activities. Inflation increased slightly, from 8.1 per cent in 1994 to 8.5 per cent in 1995, owing to such factors as high inflation rates in China, rising import costs of commodities, and rising labour and housing costs.

Mongolia, an economy in transition to a market system, reversed the output contraction experienced in the early 1990s, registering growth rates of 2.1 per cent in 1994 and 3.5 per cent in 1995. The recovery was attributed to strong improvements in agricultural and industrial production, a modest expansion of the mining sector, growing private participation in trading and retail activities, and an encouraging upturn in the volume of trade, investment and foreign aid. Efforts to restrict monetary and credit expansion against a background of gradual price liberalization had led to a fall in inflation from 268 per cent in 1993 to 88 per cent in 1994 and below 30 per cent in 1995. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea, on the other hand, seemed to be facing economic difficulties, aggravated by flood damage to agricultural production, which necessitated substantial rice shipments to the country.

In South-East Asia, the average rate of growth accelerated slightly to 8 per cent in 1995, compared with 7.9 per cent in 1994, while inflation rose by 0.1 per cent to reach 6.4 per cent. The subregion's growth was underpinned by strong domestic demand and high savings and investment rates. The economy of the Philippines maintained its recovery, growing by 5.3 per cent, a 1 per cent increase over the previous year. A downturn in that country's agricultural sector, which expanded by 1.9 per cent against 2.3 per cent in 1994, was offset by stronger performance of industry and services. The pace of economic growth also accelerated in Viet Nam, with GDP growth estimated at 9.5 per cent in 1995 against 8.8 per cent in 1994, as its industrial and services sectors maintained high expansion rates of some 14 per cent and 10 per cent, respectively, while agriculture grew by 5.2 per cent, up from 3.9 per cent.

Growth rates in Malaysia accelerated from 9.2 per cent in 1994 to 9.6 per cent in 1995 but decreased in Indonesia from 7.3 per cent to 7.1 per cent and in Singapore from 10.1 per cent to 9 per cent. Thailand's economy grew by 8.6 per cent, only an estimated 0.1 per cent improvement over the previous year. Most countries registered higher growth rates than in 1994 in their agricultural, industrial and services sectors; however, agricultural output expanded more slowly in Singapore, while industrial performance was below 1994 levels in Indonesia, Malaysia and Singapore. Inflation rates in Malaysia were expected to decline from 3.7 per cent in 1994 to 3.5 per cent in 1995, from 9.1 per cent to 8 per cent in the Philippines, and from 3.1 per cent to 2.2 per cent in Singapore, but increased from 9.2 per cent to 10 per cent in Indonesia, 5 per cent to 5.5 per cent in Thailand and 14.4 per cent to 14.9 per cent in Viet Nam. Brunei Darussalam stood in marked contrast to the rest of the subregion, having achieved growth rates of only 0.5 per cent in 1993 and 1.8 per cent in 1994, after a contraction in 1992. However, its inflation rate had dropped to 2.4 per cent in 1994, from 4.3 per cent in 1993.

The South Asian economies registered a slight improvement in their performance, with the GDP growth rate increasing from 5.1 per cent in 1994 to 5.5 per cent in 1995 and inflation declining from 9.9 per cent to 8.4 per cent. Despite recent economic reforms in the subregion, savings and investment activities remained relatively weak and budget deficits large.

The economy of India expanded by 5.7 per cent, up from 5.3 per cent in 1994, as the growth rate in its services sector rose from 5.5 per cent to 7.5 per cent; however, rates of increase decelerated from 8.3 per cent in 1994 to 6.9 per cent in 1995 for industry and from 2.4 per cent to 2.1 per cent for agriculture. GDP was expected to grow by 5.1 per cent in Iran, compared with 3 per cent in the previous year, with a 3.9 per cent recovery in its industrial sector after a decline of 0.3 per cent in 1994, and a 7.4 per cent expansion in services. Pakistan's output rose by 4.7 per cent, against 3.8 per cent in the previous year, due to a revival in agricultural production, which grew by 4.9 per cent—2 per cent faster than in 1994—as well as improved performance of both the industrial and services sectors. In Sri Lanka, GDP expanded by 5.4 per cent, down from 5.6 per cent in 1994, with its agriculture and industry performing below the 1994 level and services maintaining a growth rate of some 5.3 per cent.

Inflation decreased from 10.3 per cent in 1994 to 8 per cent in 1995 in India, but rose from 11.2 per cent to 12.9 per cent in Pakistan and from 8.4 per cent to 9.1 per cent in Sri Lanka. It was expected to exceed the 1994 level of 35.2 per cent in Iran.

The situation in several Central Asian economies in transition showed the first signs of improvement since 1991, although Armenia was the only country in the group to have recorded a positive growth rate—5.2 per cent—after a 2 per cent contraction in 1994. The fall in GDP and in industrial production slowed in most countries. Output dropped 8.9 per cent in Kazakhstan, 7.5 per cent in Turkmenistan, 6.2 per cent in Kyrgyzstan and 0.5 per cent in Uzbekistan, compared with respective 1994 decreases of 25 per cent, 12 per cent, 26 per cent and 4 per cent. However, rates of decline continued at the 1994 level of some 17 per cent in Azerbaijan and 12 per cent in Tajikistan. Agricultural production continued to suffer from shortages of fuel, fertilizers and spare parts for machinery; in 1994, it had contracted by 25 per cent in Tajikistan, 17 per cent in Kazakhstan, 13 per cent in Azerbaijan and 1 per cent in Uzbekistan, but had expanded by 3 per cent in Armenia and 2 per cent in Turkmenistan, in the latter after a 9 per cent growth rate in 1993. At the same time, the fall in agricultural output slowed in Kyrgyzstan, from 15 per cent in 1994 to an estimated 4.5 per cent in 1995.

Armenia was also the only country to have maintained growth in its industrial sector, although at a lower rate of 2.4 per cent, compared with 6.9 per cent in the previous year. In other economies, the rates of decline in industrial production decelerated from 24 per cent in 1994 to 21.4 per cent in 1995 in Azerbaijan, 28.5 per cent to 7.9 per cent in Kazakhstan, 24.5 per cent to 12.5 per cent in Kyrgyzstan, 30.8 per cent to 5.1 per cent in Tajikistan and 25 per cent to 6.9 per cent in Turkmenistan; in Uzbekistan, industrial output contracted 0.2 per cent after a 1 per cent increase in 1994. The services sector proved more resilient to the adverse economic climate, with retailing and financial services showing positive growth rates. Measures to contain inflation yielded results in most countries as annual rates fell from 5,060 per cent to 280 per cent in Armenia, from 1,760 per cent to 510 per cent in Azerbaijan, from 1,980 per cent to 280 per cent in Kazakhstan, from 380 per cent to 150 per cent in Kyrgyzstan, and from 1,650 per cent to 420 per cent in Uzbekistan. In Tajikistan, however, inflation was expected to rise from 340 per cent to about 500 per cent. At the same time, budget deficits remained a principal concern, ranging from 1.5 per cent of GDP in Turkmenistan to between 3 per cent and 5 per cent in Kazakhstan and Azerbaijan and more than 12 per cent in Armenia and Kyrgyzstan.

External sector

Both the export and import trade of the region's developing countries continued to grow strongly in 1995, although the overall rate of growth was estimated to be somewhat lower than in 1994, when exports from those countries totalled $677.5 billion, a 19.6 per cent increase over the previous year, while imports grew by 18.2 per cent to reach $714.5 billion. Exports in 1994 rose by 19.1 per cent in East Asia and 22.2 per cent in South-East Asia, to respective totals of $368.6 billion and $261.6 billion. China and Hong Kong accounted for the bulk of export receipts, followed by Singapore and the Republic of Korea. South Asian countries increased their exports by 14.3 per cent to $40.5 billion, with India's share amounting to $25 billion.

Trade of the ESCAP LDCs, Pacific island countries and economies in transition, on the other hand, continued to suffer from structural weaknesses such as a narrow export base limited to a few primary commodities or simple manufactured goods—textiles or garments. Consequently, their trade sector, although recording high growth rates, constituted a very small part of GDP. In 1994, exports grew by 19.9 per cent in LDCs and by 7 per cent in Pacific island countries, but their value totalled only $4.7 billion and $3.7 billion, respectively. At the same time, export value declined in Central Asian republics from $3.8 billion in 1993 to $3.3 billion in 1994. Bangladesh, Papua New Guinea and Kazakhstan were the leading exporters in their respective groups. Importers were led by Bangladesh, Papua New Guinea and Uzbekistan. In most countries imports far outstripped exports.

Imports to Asian and Pacific LDCs reached $8.5 billion, 18.3 per cent more than the previous year and $3.8 billion more than exports. Pacific island countries registered a 14.3 per cent increase in their imports to about $3.7 billion, only slightly less than exports. Central Asian imports rose from $2.6 billion in 1993 to $2.8 billion in 1994 and continued to climb in 1995, approaching the level of exports.

In other developing economies of the region, both export and import expansion were significant. Import values increased in 1994 by 16.3 per cent to $379.9 billion for East Asia, by 22.1 per cent to $279.8 billion for South-East Asia and by 12.4 per cent to $48.4 billion for South Asia. The leading importers in those subregions were, respectively, China and Hong Kong; Singapore; and India.

The balance-of-payments situation raised concerns in several countries, as continuing liberalization and openness of trade regimes, as well as easier access to credit and capital, including offshore facilities, contributed to a rapid growth of imports, while exports faced more intense competition due to differences in costs and efficiency. Higher labour production costs, stemming from shortages of labour and skills, highlighted the need to improve labour productivity in a number of Asian and Pacific countries and to make their production more technology-intensive. The management of the balance of payments in open and deregulated trade and financial environments also posed new challenges, necessitating greater reliance on market forces. The balance of trade and payments deteriorated in a number of more advanced developing economies, including India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka and Thailand, with their merchandise trade deficits aggravated by the deficits incurred in trade in invisibles. The balance of payments suffered from structural disequilibrium in most LDCs, Pacific island countries and economies in transition, with merchandise imports generally exceeding exports by a margin of two to one. China and Singapore, on the other hand, recorded surpluses in both their merchandise and invisible trade accounts; trade surpluses were also expected in Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan.

Private capital inflows to the region remained relatively small. In 1994, Asia received $26.6 billion, or 10.5 per cent, of the global total announced by syndicated credit facilities. China, Indonesia and Thailand alone accounted for $21 billion of that. The region also received $15.4 billion, or 4 per cent, of global bond issues, with more than half channelled to China and the Republic of Korea. In 1993, China alone had received 45 per cent of total flows to Asian developing countries, while Singapore had accounted for an additional 20 per cent, followed by Indonesia, Malaysia and Thailand. India and Viet Nam also emerged recently as recipients of substantial flows of foreign direct investment (FDI).

Policy developments

Most countries in the ESCAP region showed strong commitment to reform aimed at restructuring, stabilizing and liberalizing their economies. Privatization of public enterprises and accelerated measures of trade and investment liberalization constituted the cornerstone of reform programmes, which differed, however, in their immediate objectives. The Asian and Pacific LDCs gave high priority to promoting savings and investment and accelerating growth with macroeconomic stability. Pacific island countries faced the need to reduce government involvement in their economies, control substantially public expenditure, improve economic management, and strengthen decision-making and planning machineries. Reform measures in Central Asia focused on establishing a legal framework to facilitate the functioning of market-oriented economies, carrying out privatization, and increasing the role of financial intermediation, as well as containing expenditure and increasing budget revenues. Similar reforms also continued in Mongolia and Viet Nam.

In South Asia, India and Iran implemented a range of stabilization and adjustment policies, while Pakistan and Sri Lanka continued efforts towards deregulation and liberalization of their economies. South-East Asian policies were geared towards enhancing efficiency, competitiveness and the growth process. In May, Indonesia introduced a reform package for its import tariff structure, while Malaysia in June announced measures to develop its capital market. Policy efforts in East Asian countries centred on curtailing a further rise in inflation and enhancing external competitiveness.

Most policy reforms were aimed at encouraging the development of the private sector and enhancing its role in economic activities. Measures already implemented highlighted the need for an appropriate legal framework, dealing with property rights and contract enforcement, among others; price liberalization and incentives promotion; improvement of tax systems and deregulation of financial sectors; liberalization of trade and investment regimes; promotion of competition; and the development of entrepreneurship and of small and medium-sized enterprises.

Inflation concerns prevailed in Australia and New Zealand, while Japan pursued measures to stimulate economic growth and to bring its economy out of recession, although at the expense of a balanced budget.

Social trends

The social situation in the ESCAP region was characterized by growing awareness of the importance of human and social development in the overall development process and increasing demand for social services, which in turn enhanced the traditional role of the public sector in the delivery of such services. As a result, public spending on health, education, housing, water supply and sanitation, and social protection had risen since the early 1990s to more than 20 per cent of total budgetary expenditures, representing between 5 per cent and 10 per cent of GDP in most countries. Although inequities in social allocations persisted in many countries, with higher education and curative health care receiving a greater share than primary education and preventive services, the situation in the social sector improved considerably, as reflected in the growing number of schools, teachers, hospitals, doctors and other relevant institutions and personnel. Public health and sanitation programmes were expanded to cover the majority of the population, while increased accessibility of various services led to a rise in school enrolment ratios and literacy rates and reductions in morbidity and mortality.

Life expectancy at birth in the period 1990-1995 was 67.3 to 75.6 years for men and 74.9 to 81.8 years for women in newly industrializing economies (NIEs) (Hong Kong, Republic of Korea, Singapore); 61.5 to 69.5 years and 68.5 to 75.5 years, respectively, in Central Asian republics; 43 to 67.3 years and 44 to 65.2 years in the region's LDCs; and 55.2 to 69.7 years and 60.4 to 74.2 years in other developing countries of Asia and the Pacific. Crude death rates ranged between 5.6 and 6.2 deaths per 1,000 in NIEs and between 6.1 and 7.5 in Central Asia to between 7.2 and 21.8 in LDCs and between 4.5 and 10.7 in other developing countries. Newly industrializing economies also had the lowest infant mortality rates, 6 to 11 deaths per 1,000 live births, compared with 21 to 57 in Central Asian States, 84 to 163 in LDCs and 13 to 91 in other countries. In addition to the Central Asian republics, universal or near-universal access of the population to health services was achieved in NIEs, China, Mongolia, Papua New Guinea, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Viet Nam. Countries where only about half the population or less had health services were Afghanistan (29 per cent), Bangladesh (45 per cent), Cambodia (53 per cent) and Pakistan (55 per cent).

Quantitative and qualitative deficiencies persisted in many other social areas. School enrolment rates were still relatively low and drop-out rates high in several countries, particularly for female and underprivileged children in rural areas and depressed urban locations, and the quality of education often remained poor due to a lack of teachers and an inadequate supply of educational equipment. For countries lacking public health coverage, infectious and communicable diseases continued to be a major health hazard, and they also experienced high infant and maternal mortality rates. In addition, HIV/AIDS emerged as a new major threat to public health. Those challenges highlighted the need for increased allocation of public resources to expand and improve the social services infrastructure, as well as for involvement of the private sector, NGOs and local communities in developing and maintaining facilities and delivering many social services, which in turn required considerable decentralization and devolution to the local level of activities, resources and decision-making powers.

Activities in 1995

ESCAP activities in 1995 were implemented under six thematic subprogrammes approved by the Commission in 1994:⁽⁷⁾ regional economic cooperation; environment and sustainable development; poverty alleviation through economic growth and social development; transport and communications; statistics; and least developed, land-locked and island developing countries.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

At its 1995 session, the Commission had before it a study on strengthening regional cooperation in human resources development, with special reference to the social implications of sustainable economic growth in Asia and the Pacific,⁽⁸⁾ as well as its summary.⁽⁹⁾ Those documents analysed key aspects of the human resources development situation in the region, examined emerging challenges, reviewed institutional arrangements and provided proposals for regional cooperation in that area. The Commission noted that the study had been considered by a panel of eminent persons in 1994,⁽⁷⁾ which subsequently adopted the Bangkok Statement on Regional Cooperation in Human Resources Development. The Commission affirmed that continued and increased investment in the region's human resources through education, skills formation and improved health was crucial to enhancing the quality of life in Asia and the Pacific and to maintaining its competitive edge.

In a May resolution⁽⁸⁾ on the subject, the Commission invited its members to strengthen the scope and effectiveness of their human resources development policies, plans and programmes and to identify their potential for regional cooperation in that area. The Executive Secretary was requested to examine the feasibility of organizing a regional network of centres to promote regional cooperation in human resources development and to seek advice of the Panel of Eminent Persons on further action in that regard; to highlight human resources development as a strategy to alleviate poverty in the medium-term plan for 1998-2001; to devote particular attention to promoting women's human resources development as a means of ensuring gender equity; and to report in 1999 on progress made.

In another resolution,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission welcomed the major recommendations made at an expert group meeting (New Delhi, India, April) on follow-up to implementation of the Delhi Declaration on Strengthening Regional Economic Cooperation in Asia and the Pacific towards the Twenty-first Century, adopted by ESCAP in 1994.⁽¹⁰⁾ It requested the Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation and its Steering Group to propose further measures to strengthen regional cooperation, with a view to preparing a comprehensive strategy in that respect, and recommended that the feasibility of establishing a number of regional mechanisms and networks be examined for enhancing trade, investment, technology transfer and economic cooperation. Other recommendations dealt with linking trade and environment-related as well as social issues, human resources development and the ESCAP secretariat's leading role in assisting States to take advantage of emerging information and communication technologies. The Executive Secretary was to report in 1996 on the progress made.

The Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation, at its fourth session (Bangkok, 8-9 February),⁽¹¹⁾ endorsed the text of the revised draft New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific, recommended by its Steering Group at the sixth meeting (Jakarta, Indonesia, 23-26 January) pursuant to a 1994 Commission request.⁽¹²⁾ The Action Plan was subsequently adopted by the Commission (see below). The Committee also adopted ESCAP's draft work programme for 1996-1997, pertaining to regional economic cooperation. Later in the year, the Committee's Steering Group held its seventh meeting (Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia, 19-22 September) to consider issues relating to regional economic cooperation in trade and investment, technology transfer, promotion of industrial restructuring in Asia and the Pacific, and economic cooperation in North-East Asia.

In 1995, the ESCAP secretariat organized a second consultative meeting of executive heads of subregional organizations (Jakarta, January), which reiterated the need to pursue inter-subregional cooperation in trade and investment, transport and communications, human resources development, and energy. The Regional Inter-agency Committee for Asia and the Pacific (RICAP), established by the Inter-agency Meeting on Strengthening Coordination at the Regional Level in May 1994, held its second meeting on 22 June 1995 to consider emerging priority issues of the region. Several subcommittees were constituted under RICAP, including those on disability-related concerns, the advancement of women, population and development, urbanization, water, environment and sustainable development, regional space applications programme, HIV/AIDS, poverty alleviation, and industry and technology, as well as the Inter-Agency Steering Group on Phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific. Most of those subcommittees met during the year (see below, under specific subject headings).

The secretariat provided advisory services to Bangladesh on major trends in macroeconomic policy developments in the region and to Myanmar on macroeconomic modelling and policy analysis, and issued publications dealing with management of economic reforms, privatization issues and prospects, social accounting models for policy analysis, tax system reforms, strategies for technological transformation through regional cooperation, and technological transaction patterns for enhancing regional cooperation in biotechnology. It also continued to publish the Asia-Pacific Development Journal.

Action plan on infrastructure development

At its 1995 session, the Commission considered issues relating to infrastructure development in Asia and the Pacific, stressing the importance of regional and subregional cooperation in that respect, as well as the need to mobilize domestic private capital and FDI for infrastructure development. It proposed the establishment of a regional information system on infrastructure. The Commission also supported the decision of the World Infrastructure Forum-Asia 1994⁽¹²⁾ to establish an Asia Infrastructure Development Alliance (AIDA), and endorsed the suggestion that the ESCAP secretariat participate actively in the work of the Alliance.

On 1 May, the Commission adopted⁽¹³⁾ the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific, 1997-2006, and decided to convene in 1996 a ministerial conference on infrastructure to launch the Action Plan and to review phase II of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, as well as to hold, in conjunction with the conference, the World Infrastructure Forum-Asia 1996. It invited member States to adopt policies making the provision of infrastructure more sensitive to user demand and to establish national focal points for infrastructure development; requested them to identify areas for action in promoting their infrastructural development; and urged them to promote the active involvement of the public sector in the process and to strengthen the public-private sector partnership. The Committee on Transport and Communications was requested to review its terms of reference, including its name, to cover aspects relating to the development of physical infrastructure and tourism. The Commission called for international assistance in implementing the Action Plan and asked the Executive Secretary, inter alia, to support preparations for the ministerial conference on infrastructure and to report annually on the implementation of the Action Plan.

The Action Plan, annexed to the Commission resolution, provided an overview of infrastructure requirements and issues to be addressed, and included proposals for action relating to infrastructure planning and policy; administration and management; private sector participation; logistics and facilitation; environment and safety; human resources development; poverty alleviation, rural areas and disadvantaged population groups; and infrastructure needs of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, as well as economies in transition. The Action Plan also outlined implementation modalities, timeframe, priorities, monitoring mechanisms, and strategies for resource mobilization.

As requested by the Commission, the secretariat participated in a meeting to establish AIDA (Bangkok, May) and in the first meeting of the Steering Committee for Establishment of AIDA (New Delhi, September). In November, the Committee on Transport and Communications endorsed a regional programme for the implementation of the New Delhi Action Plan and recommended that its title and terms of reference be changed (see below, under "Transport and communications").

Least developed and land-locked developing countries

The Special Body on Least Developed and Land-locked Developing Countries, at its second session (Bangkok, 1749 April),⁽¹⁴⁾ made a number of recommendations to strengthen regional input to the global mid-term review of the implementation of the UN Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s, adopted in 1990 by a United Nations conference held in Paris⁽¹⁵⁾ and endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.⁽¹⁶⁾ The Special Body noted that the overall growth rate of the region's LDCs had been insufficient to have an impact on the main social and economic problems facing those countries, and expressed concern over their low domestic savings and investment rates. It also reviewed sectoral developments and welcomed initiatives towards deregulation and liberalization, particularly measures to boost the growth of the agricultural and industrial sectors. The Special Body further pointed out that relatively high population growth rates in LDCs, the status of women, and education and health remained areas of continuing concern, and called for the commitment of adequate resources to those areas, their better use, and delivery of improved services.

In 1995, the Commission expressed concern over the slow progress in implementing the 1990 Programme of Action and identified priorities in its implementation for the remaining years of the decade, including poverty alleviation, human resources development and capacity-building for effective environmental planning and management. In a resolution,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Commission endorsed recommendations of the Special Body, urged active participation of member States in the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s (see PART FOUR, Chapter I), and called on the ESCAP secretariat to prepare regional input for that meeting. It reaffirmed that progress in the Programme's implementation required effective national policies of LDCs for their socio-economic development and urged adequate international assistance in support of LDC development efforts.

During the year, the secretariat organized a meeting of senior officials and experts on the mid-term review (Bangkok, April). It provided advisory services and technical assistance to LDCs and land-locked countries through workshops, seminars, expert group meetings and training courses, in such areas as macroeconomic management; trade, technology and industrial development; social development and poverty alleviation; environment, energy and natural resources; transport and communications; and statistical development. The first in a series of national workshops in LDCs to assist in policy design for enhanced access of women to formal credit was held in Bhutan in December. Publications were issued on lessons for LDCs to be derived from early development experience of NIEs and on public expenditure and the provision of social services in Bangladesh and Nepal, among others.

Special problems of Pacific island countries

The Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries, at its third session (Bangkok, 20-21 April),⁽¹⁸⁾ recognized the urgent need for those countries to attract increased flows of foreign investment and made recommendations in that regard. It also recommended action to expand trade and investment relations between Pacific island countries and the Asian region, by increasing the flows of information on export products and investment opportunities, enhancing business contacts, promoting exchange of experience in policy areas and identifying potential export products for Asia. Measures were proposed for the development of the local private sector. The need was underlined for more training for both public and private sectors. The Special Body further reviewed implications for the region of the first Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (the Barbados Conference), held in 1994,⁽¹⁹⁾ pointing out that Pacific island countries needed assistance in implementing Conference recommendations. In that regard, it called for improved cooperation and coordination between ESCAP and Pacific subregional organizations.

At its 1995 session, the Commission endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Body and emphasized that ESCAP should act as a bridge between the Pacific and Asia to assist Pacific island countries in expanding trade and investment links. It also reaffirmed the usefulness of the Pacific Trust Fund in facilitating those countries' participation in Commission sessions.

During the year, the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre provided advisory services focusing on programming, corporate planning, central banking, macroeconomic policy formulation, development planning and financial systems, trade promotion, planning and improvement of port infrastructure, and computerization. The ESCAP secretariat undertook studies of Fiji's export potential and of energy and urban development issues in the Solomon Islands and Vanuatu, and launched a project on enhancing cooperation in trade and investment between Pacific island countries and economies of East and South-East Asia. ESCAP also cooperated with the South Pacific Forum and the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme in the follow-up to the 1994 Barbados Conference.⁽¹⁹⁾

ESCAP transition economies

During the year, the ESCAP secretariat continued to provide assistance to the Asian and Pacific disadvantaged economies in transition to a market system. National workshops on economic reform were held in Armenia, Azerbaijan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan. A publication was issued on lessons of East and South-East Asian growth experience for macroeconomic reforms in economies in transition. In addition, agencies in Kyrgyzstan and Turkmenistan were advised on the role of ESCAP in promoting regional economic cooperation and on existing opportunities for such cooperation, as well as benefits to be derived from it.

In 1995, the Commission noted the continuing need of economies in transition for analytical and technical assistance in the areas of macroeconomic management and policy, trade and investment, privatization, industrial restructuring and technological upgrading, transport and human resources development. It further observed the need for coordination between ESCAP and ECE in the use of resources, in view of the shared membership in those two regional commissions of several economies in transition.

Economic and technical cooperation

During 1995, ESCAP received $22.4 million in contributions for technical cooperation activities, a marginal decrease of some $23,000 from 1994, including $9.12 million from sources within the UN system and $13.25 million from donor States, developing member countries and organizations.⁽²⁰⁾ Australia, Finland, France, Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Sweden contributed 86.13 per cent of total bilateral assistance received. China, India, Indonesia and the Republic of Korea were the largest contributors among developing member countries that provided assistance in 1995. In addition to cash contributions, donor States and developing member countries provided 372 work-months of expert services, compared with 221 in 1994. Financial requirements for the 140 new project proposals recommended for bilateral funding in 1996 amounted to $11.65 million. Bilateral donors approved 99 projects, totalling $8.18 million, for execution under ESCAP's work programme, excluding special projects and regional institutions. A corps of 14 regional advisers undertook 144 missions to 48 developing countries of the region.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

The Commission in 1995 commended the ESCAP secretariat on its catalytic role in promoting technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) and recommended that efforts be intensified to mobilize additional resources for TCDC activities, to strengthen TCDC national focal points, and to streamline and prioritize TCDC programmes, which should be related to development schemes, address the most common critical needs and capitalize on local resources. The importance of follow-up activities was also emphasized.

During the year, the secretariat carried out some 130 promotional TCDC activities, financed from extrabudgetary resources and complemented by resources under the UN regular programme of technical cooperation. With the support of China, the Netherlands and the Republic of Korea, 51 operational TCDC activities were implemented through the TCDC supplementary fund. Those activities, aimed at promoting self-reliance and strengthening South-South cooperation through an exchange of information and the sharing of experience and expertise, covered a broad range of subjects including, inter alia, water resources management, computer applications systems in customs documentation, telecommunications, port management and operations, population information, flood and storm forecasting, energy conservation, manufacturing of agricultural machinery, information technology management, banking operations in a market economy, housing construction, reinsurance management and social issues relating to the disabled.

Ten training courses were offered by China and six by Singapore under their TCDC programmes. Kazakhstan entered into a long-term TCDC agreement on water resources management with Thailand, and two exchange visits were undertaken to discuss water resources development and planning. The secretariat continued efforts to promote exchanges of population programme managers, to establish a women's information network and networks of trade-related research institutions and of human settlements management authorities, and to strengthen TCDC national focal points. In 1995, its TCDC programme was thematically reoriented to focus on trade and investment, the environment, poverty alleviation, macroeconomic policy coordination, human resources development, transfer of technology, small and medium-sized enterprises, rural development, and tourism.

International trade and finance

At its 1995 session, the Commission noted the progress made in implementing the Action Programme for Regional Economic Cooperation in Trade and Investment, which it had endorsed in 1993,⁽²¹⁾ including activities to promote export-oriented small and medium-sized enterprises and to strengthen the regional investment information and promotion service. It approved proposed revisions to the Action Programme, directed the secretariat to carry out studies on commodity trade problems of concern to the region, and recommended that issues relating to trade in primary products and raw materials be examined within the framework of the Action Programme. The Commission also recommended the revitalization of the 1975 Bangkok Agreement on trade negotiations among ESCAP developing member States, and stressed that the Agreement's membership needed to be expanded and the national list of concessions under the Agreement extended. In that regard, it noted that China was in the process of acceding to the Agreement and that Papua New Guinea was at the final stage of ratifying its accession.

On 1 May, the Commission adopted a resolution⁽²²⁾ on Asia-Pacific International Trade Fairs (ASPAT), in which it requested member States to participate actively in ASPAT'96, to be held in the Philippines, called on them and other UN Members, as well as UNDP, to extend full support to that and subsequent fairs, and asked the Executive Secretary to support the participation in those fairs of least developed, Pacific island and landlocked countries and economies in transition.

During the year, consultative meetings, seminars and workshops were held on: the Bangkok Agreement, agricultural trade, the networking of trade-related research institutions, the use of information technologies for trade and investment, intraregional trade in rice, trade facilitation and promotion in the ESCAP region, exploitation of trade and investment complementarities in North-East Asia, integration of Asian and Pacific countries not members of the World Trade Organization into the international trading system, promotion of foreign investment, export credit and finance, country-specific models for trade policy analysis, electronic applications in international trade, export marketing, and expansion of trade in pulses. Advisory services were provided to ESCAP member States on the regional investment information and promotion service, promotion of trade and investment flows between subregions, preparations for ASPAT'96, investment promotion, and assistance to industry for export promotion.

The secretariat updated the directory of trade and investment-related organizations of developing countries and areas; issued publications on electronic commerce initiatives of ESCAP, foreign investment incentive schemes and regional implications of the Uruguay Round multilateral trade agreements, signed in 1994;⁽²³⁾ prepared a number of studies on trade and investment issues; and continued to publish the TISNET Trade Information Bulletin.

Transport and communications

In 1995, the Commission reviewed activities relating to land, railway, urban, multimodal, maritime and inland water transport; freight forwarding; commercialization and private sector involvement in ports, dredging and inland waterways; and phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (see below). The Commission reiterated its strong support for the integrated Asian Land Transport Infrastructure Development (ALTID) project, comprising the Asian Highway, the Trans-Asian Railway Network and transport facilitation measures, and stressed the need for countries to consider acceding to international conventions on road and rail transport modes in relation to facilitation measures, as it had recommended in 1992.⁽²⁴⁾ It noted the inauguration of the railway route Bafq-Bandar Abbas, which served the needs of Central Asian republics; progress in constructing a railway link between Iran and Turkmenistan; and a feasibility study on various railway linkages between China, Kazakhstan, the Korean peninsula, Mongolia and the Russian Federation.

The Committee on Transport and Communications, at its second session (Bangkok, 6-10 November),⁽²⁵⁾ considered developments in the transport, communications and tourism sectors, as well as issues relating to infrastructure development in the region. The Committee endorsed a plan of action for phase II (1996-1997) of the ALTID project and a regional programme for the implementation of the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific, adopted by the Commission in May (see above, under "Development policy and regional economic cooperation"). It recommended that the ALTID project should constitute a priority item under the Action Plan. It also stressed the need for further action in implementing the 1992 Commission resolution⁽²⁴⁾ on road and rail transport modes in relation to facilitation measures, and endorsed a proposal to develop guidelines for port commercialization and privatization. As requested by the Commission in May, the Committee recommended that its title be changed to the "Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development" and that its terms of reference be adjusted accordingly.

During the year, the secretariat organized a series of national, subregional and regional workshops, seminars and expert group meetings on freight forwarding, multimodal transport, international maritime traffic, inland water transport and locomotive and rolling stock maintenance, and another on commercialization and private sector participation in ports, related activities, dredging and inland waterways. Under the ALTID project, a policy-level meeting was held (Bangkok, October) to consider the feasibility of connecting the rail networks of China, Mongolia, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation and the Korean peninsula, and expert group meetings were convened on the development of a highway network in Asian republics and on trans-Asian railway route requirements in the southern corridor (Bangladesh, India, Iran, Myanmar, Nepal, Pakistan).

The secretariat provided advisory services to Kyrgyzstan, Sri Lanka and Thailand on road taxation systems and on commercial aspects of railway modernization. It continued to publish the Transport and Communications Bulletin for Asia and the Pacific. A map of the Asian highway route was produced, and studies were undertaken on commercial aspects of inland water transport, land transport linkages from Central Asia to seaports in South and East Asia, maritime manpower for the shipping industry, the railway break-of-gauge problem, road safety in Asia and the Pacific, and the development of freight forwarding and multimodal and urban transport in the region.

Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific

At its 1995 session, the Commission expressed concern about the lack of funding for 13 activities under the regional action programme for phase II (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, and urged donor countries and agencies to support priority projects. The Decade, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1984⁽²⁶⁾ and extended in 1991⁽²⁷⁾ until 1996, promoted infrastructure improvements in both the ESCAP and ESCWA regions.

The Decade programme's implementation was reviewed in 1995 by the Inter-Agency Steering Committee on Phase II of the Decade at its fourth session (Bangkok, 2-3 November). Also in November, the Committee on Transport and Communications endorsed the Steering Committee's recommendations and called for continuing coordinated efforts to implement the remaining part of the programme, noting that it was of considerable benefit to the countries in the region.

Decade-related information continued to be disseminated during the year in Decade News, published by the ESCAP secretariat.

Tourism

In 1995, the Commission reaffirmed the important role of tourism in the region's socio-economic development and urged the ESCAP secretariat to intensify its activities in that sector. It supported recommendations for convening an intergovernmental meeting on tourism development and establishing a regional network of tourism training institutes. In November, those recommendations were endorsed by the Committee on Transport and Communications.

Activities to promote tourism included the first two meetings of a working group on the Greater Mekong subregion tourism sector, workshops on ecotourism development in Asia and the Pacific and on integrated tourism planning in Pacific island countries, and national seminars on integrated tourism planning and tourism marketing in the Marshall Islands and Nauru. The secretariat carried out studies on foreign investment in the tourism sectors of Samoa and Vanuatu, and continued to publish the ESCAP Tourism Review and the ESCAP Tourism Newsletter.

Industrial and technological development

The Commission reviewed activities for implementing the mandates of the Seoul Plan of Action for Promoting Industrial Restructuring in Asia and the Pacific, adopted in 1992,⁽²⁸⁾ and the Tehran Declaration on Strengthening Regional Cooperation for Technology-led Industrialization in Asia and the Pacific, as well as the Regional Strategy and Action Plan for Industrial and Technological Development, both endorsed in 1993.⁽²⁹⁾ The Commission emphasized the need to pursue open multilateral policies to accelerate the pace of industrial and technological development in the region, expressed concern at persisting and growing disparities in that sector, and identified target areas for further action, including FDI, technology transfer, private-sector development and privatization, the development of small and medium-sized enterprises, industrial relocation and complementarities, industrial and technological skills development, information sharing, and quality control and standardization.

The ESCAP secretariat organized a subregional workshop on assistance in matching investment and industrial relocation, an expert group meeting on promoting regional cooperation for industrial and technological skills development, and a symposium on strengthening private sector involvement in enhancing manufacturing competitiveness. It also published a small industry bulletin for Asia and the Pacific and provided advisory services to Indonesia on coconut industry development and to Nepal on policy measures to promote small- and medium-scale enterprises. Issues relating to industrial and technological development were discussed at a regional meeting of Asian and Pacific ministers of industry (New Delhi, October), convened in cooperation with UNIDO.

Asian and Pacific Development Centre

The year 1995 marked the beginning of programme phase VI (1995-1998) in the work of the Asian and Pacific Development Centre (APDC), located in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. The Centre issued seven publications and carried out 27 research and training activities in the programme areas of economic management and information technology, energy and the environment, gender and human development, poverty alleviation and employment, and public management. The Centre's institutional fund for 1995 totalled $2,914,480. Centre activities were reviewed in 1995 by the APDC Management Board (fourteenth meeting, Kuala Lumpur, 13-14 July).

Natural resources and marine affairs

Mineral resources

Mineral resources activities included publications on the development of industrial minerals in the region and on the mineral resources potential and development policy in Asian LDCs, as well as preparation of mineral resources atlases of Afghanistan and Myanmar. The ESCAP secretariat provided advisory services to Cambodia in drafting its mining law and strengthening its institutional capacity for mineral resources development and offered training in mining and environmental management in Viet Nam. Meetings were convened on trends and policies in sustainable development of land and mineral resources, environmental and urban geology of fast-growing cities, and urban geology in the ESCAP region.

The Coordinating Committee for Coastal and Offshore Geoscience Programmes in East and South-East Asia (CCOP) continued to focus on the sectors of energy, minerals and coastal zones. In 1995, projects dealt with resource data management and dynamic basin analyses, application of computer technology to regional map compilation and the interpretation of geoscientific data, a geoscience programme for integrated management and development of South-East and East Asian coastal zones, and a symposium on geological aspects of sustainable development in coastal and offshore areas.

Water resources

ESCAP secretariat activities related to water resources development and management included an assessment of water resources and water demand by user sectors in Myanmar and a study on the protection of water resources, water quality and aquatic ecosystems in Asia and the Pacific. The secretariat also continued to publish the Water Resources Journal. It organized an expert meeting on the implications of Agenda 21⁽³⁰⁾ for integrated water management in the region and an international workshop on water-related problems in low-lying coastal areas. Other projects dealt with water pricing policies and structure for sustainable management of water demand, guidelines on water and sustainable development, urban water management, and promotion of women's role in the protection and management of water resources. Advisory services were provided to Brunei Darussalam, Iran and the Philippines in water resources development and management and to Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan on management and funding arrangements in addressing the Aral Sea crisis. The inter-agency Subcommittee (formerly Task Force) on Water for Asia and the Pacific met in Bangkok in June and December.

Marine affairs

ESCAP activities in the area of marine affairs included a workshop on coastal and marine environmental management, a consultative meeting on coastal and marine environmental management in the South China Sea, a training seminar on the removal and disposal of obsolete offshore installations and structures in the exclusive economic zone and on the continental shelf, and a publication on integrated coastal zone management, under the series on development and management of non-living resources in the region's coastal zones.

Mekong River basin development

Negotiations within the framework of the Interim Committee for Coordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin culminated in 1995 in the signing, at a conference of plenipotentiaries (Chiang Rai, Thailand, 5 April), of the Agreement on Cooperation for Sustainable Development of the Mekong River Basin among the four riparian States (Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam). The Agreement established the Mekong River Commission to replace the Interim Committee, with the mandate of promoting and coordinating the development, use, conservation and management of Mekong River water and related resources, as well as the socio-economic development of the riparian States, ensuring environmental protection in the region and strengthening cooperative relations with other international organizations to that end. At its 1995 session, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific welcomed the establishment of the Mekong River Commission; noted its intention to emphasize a basin-wide programme approach and activities while maintaining core functions of basic data collection and analysis and water quality and environmental monitoring; and urged UNDP and other donors to provide financial and technical support.

The Mekong River Commission consisted of three permanent bodies—the Council, the Joint Committee and the Secretariat. In addition, three permanent subcommittees were set up: to formulate the Mekong Basin development plan, to elaborate rules for water utilization and inter-basin diversion, and to establish a donor consultative group. Some 46 projects received funding in 1995, including those dealing with sustainable protection of resources in the basin, watershed classification, improvement of the hydrometeorological network, the role of women in water resources development, development of the Upper Srepok basin, the access channel to the Bassac River, and legal aspects of international cooperation for water resources development. The Commission also adopted a strategy for the development of human resources.

New donor commitments totalled $27 million in 1995, compared with $9.6 million in 1994. The Mekong work programme for 1996 included 97 projects, with a funding requirement of $217 million. Funding requirements were 68.6 per cent basin-wide and 31.4 per cent national, reflecting a continuing shift from national to basin-wide and regional priorities.

Energy

Activities in energy development and management included workshops, seminars and symposia on energy conservation and efficiency, wind energy development and utilization, renewable energy, demand-side management in integrated resource planning of the power sector, integration of environmental considerations into energy planning, investment promotion in the domestic manufacturing of energy-efficient products, energy-efficient design and operation of commercial buildings, and gas pricing and investment. Other meetings and training courses focused on marketing of energy efficiency services in China, energy conservation in Mongolia, energy resiliency and the integration of the environment into energy policy and planning. An advisory group meeting under the UNDP-funded Programme for Asian Cooperation on Energy and the Environment was held in December in Bangkok.

Advisory services on natural gas activities were provided to Iran, and training for energy/power utility personnel was completed in Cambodia. Guidebooks and manuals were prepared on energy efficiency, energy and environment planning, energy survey, analysis of energy and environment data, as well as sectoral energy demand analysis and long-term forecasting for developing countries. Studies were undertaken on electric power in Asia and the Pacific, promotion of energy end-use efficiency in Asian developing countries, and environmental consequences of private sector participation in power generation. The secretariat issued a directory of energy consultants, service companies, manufacturers and distributors of energy-efficient equipment and appliances in Asia, and continued to disseminate information through the publication of the energy, environment and sustainable development series and ESCAP Energy News.

Agriculture and rural development

In 1995, ESCAP reviewed a secretariat note⁽³¹⁾ containing proposals for action in, inter alia, rural industrialization and the introduction of science and technology in rural areas, as well as popular participation in the alleviation of rural poverty. In endorsing those proposals, the Commission called for enhancing regional cooperation in technology transfer and industrialization of rural areas and emphasized the need for developing the agricultural and non-agricultural sectors in those areas as a means of expanding employment opportunities and accelerating rural poverty alleviation. In that regard, it recommended that the secretariat continue assisting small and medium-scale industries in promoting their competitiveness. The Commission also cited the critical importance of people's participation in the design and implementation of rural poverty alleviation programmes and endorsed a project on poverty alleviation in South Asian countries through sister-district arrangements to enhance the participation of the poor.

The Committee on Poverty Alleviation through Economic Growth and Social Development, at its second session (Bangkok, 25-29 September),⁽³²⁾ considered policy issues related to agriculture and rural development and other issues. The Committee emphasized the need for adopting an integrated approach to rural development, including the introduction of science and appropriate technology in rural areas. Such technology should address basic needs, be environmentally friendly and take into account the natural, human and financial resource endowments, market environment and competitive advantage of each locality. In calling for measures to facilitate rural industrialization, it emphasized that special steps should be taken to assist small and medium-scale industries through technological upgrading and capacity-building, skills development, marketing and access to credit (see also below, under "Social development").

Studies were made of programmes for popularizing food-processing and storage technology and of modalities for the use of targeting in poverty alleviation programmes. A safety guide on handling and application of agro-pesticides and a compendium of UN programmes on rural poverty alleviation were issued and the Agro-chemicals News in Brief and Poverty Alleviation Initiatives were published. National workshops were held in China, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand and Viet Nam on the effects of price liberalization and market reform on rural poverty, and in Mongolia and Nepal on poverty alleviation through market-generated rural employment. An expert group meeting was organized on the role of the informal service sector in poverty alleviation.

Workshops and seminars were held on fertilizer legislation, balanced fertilizer use to increase crop yields and improve the environment, fertilizer development and marketing management, environment aspects, and fertilizer sector development in Kazakstan, Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan. A regional fertilizer conference for Asia and the Pacific was held in Perth, Australia, in November. A monthly information bulletin was published on fertilizer trade.

The Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery (RNAM) continued to assist members in the development of agricultural machinery and its local manufacture, testing and popularization, as well as in mechanization policy formulation, enhancement of employment opportunities for rural women, and promotion and development of agro-related metalworking industries in LDCs and Pacific island countries. Other projects in 1995 included a regional workshop on the manufacture and extension of agricultural machinery (Tehran, Iran, September) and an agricultural machinery exhibition and symposium, AGRIMACH'95 (Nakorn Ratchasima, Thailand, November).

The Regional Coordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber (CGPRT) Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific continued to expand in 1995.⁽³³⁾ It conducted training seminars on socio-economic methodologies for agricultural research and on forecasting and modelling methods in agricultural planning. A regional conference on women's role in upland farming development was held in Chiang Mai, Thailand. Projects continued on farmers' agricultural diversification strategies, synthesis of soybean studies, sustainable upland agriculture in South-East Asia, market prospects of upland crop products and policy analysis in selected Asian countries, and implications of agricultural diversification and food-crop trade for agricultural policies in South-East Asia. The Centre published monographs, working papers and project reports as well as its quarterly Palawija News.

In 1995, the Commission suggested that the Centre should undertake new activities on rural poverty alleviation, market development, crop diversification and the effects of trade liberalization on CGPRT producers. Centre activities were reviewed in 1995 by its Governing Board (fourteenth session, Bogor, Indonesia, 4-6 December).

Science and technology

In 1995, the Commission noted progress in implementing the Action Programme for Regional Economic Cooperation in Investment-related Technology Transfer, which it had endorsed in 1994,⁽³⁴⁾ and stressed the importance of technology transfer in the development and industrialization process. Such transfer should be undertaken at minimum cost, taking into account local absorption capabilities, with particular attention to rural areas and to small and medium-scale enterprises, it stated. Regional cooperation in science and technology should give priority to building endogenous capacities for the development, assessment, transfer, adaptation and use of technology, including new and clean technology, as well as to increasing the role of the private sector and upgrading the overall technological capabilities, particularly in less dynamic economies.

In a resolution concerning regional cooperation on space applications,⁽³⁵⁾ the Commission endorsed recommendations of the Ministerial Conference on Space Applications for Development in Asia and the Pacific, held in 1994,⁽³⁶⁾ as well as the Beijing Declaration on Space Technology Applications for Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific, the Strategy for Regional Cooperation in Space Applications, and the Action Plan on Space Applications for Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific, adopted by the Conference, and called for their early implementation. It urged active participation of member States in the Regional Space Applications Programme, launched by the Conference, and recommended that the Intergovernmental Consultative Committee on the Regional Remote Sensing Programme reconstitute itself as the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Consultative Committee on the Regional Space Applications Programme for Sustainable Development, under the purview of the UN Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development. The Commission further called for inclusion of the Programme in the next intercountry programme of UNDP.

During the year, activities in science and technology comprised efforts for strengthening national capabilities to receive, transfer, adopt and develop technologies as well as for promoting the integrated application of remote sensing and geographic information systems (GIS). Expert group meetings, workshops and seminars were held on space technology applications for sustainable development; regional economic cooperation for industrial and technological skills development, including requirements for adapting new and emerging technologies; enhancement of technology flows from advanced developing countries to Asian and Pacific LDCs; elaboration of guidelines for GIS standards and standardization procedures; remote sensing and GIS for land and marine resources and environment management in the Pacific subregion; and remote sensing in tropical ecosystem management.

The secretariat also organized a working group meeting on the regional information services and education networks of the Regional Space Applications Programme as well as an expert consultation on a prefeasibility study for the establishment of an Earth space information network in Asia and the Pacific, and provided advisory services to

Samoa on institutional issues in connection with GIS development and applications. GIS and remote-sensing guidelines were prepared for planners and decision-makers, and a study was made on patent laws, regulations and organizational structure for acquisition and use of selected technologies in the region. The Asia-Pacific Remote Sensing Journal and Remote Sensing Newsletter continued to be published.

Activities in space applications were reviewed at meetings of directors of national remote-sensing centres and programmes in the region and of the Intergovernmental Consultative Committee on Space Applications for Sustainable Development (formerly on the Regional Remote Sensing Programme). The inter-agency Subcommittee on the Regional Space Applications Programme for Sustainable Development, meeting in October, identified areas for inter-agency cooperation, including databases and information networks; satellite information for natural resources and environment management; and standardization of project outputs for improved information sharing.

Centre for technology transfer

During the year, the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology organized or co-sponsored 10 regional workshops, five national training programmes, two expert group meetings, three exhibitions, two business needs programmes, and two women's entrepreneurship development programmes.⁽³⁶⁾ It continued to promote environmentally sound technologies under the Mechanism for Exchange of Technology Information, to strengthen technology management, to promote technological information and technology utilization, and to encourage more effective participation of women in the field of technology. Findings were published in the bi-monthly Asia-Pacific Tech-Monitor and Value Added Technology Information Service.

The Centre's work was reviewed by its Governing Board at its tenth session (New Delhi, 7-8 December), which endorsed proposals to set up a regional association for commercialization of research and development results and a panel of experts to assist the Centre in technology selection and evaluation.

JIU report. By a 6 November note,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a JIU report on UN system support for science and technology in Asia and the Pacific, recommending: that UNDP and other UN agencies publicize, on a regular basis, technical cooperation achievements; additional measures to strengthen regional cooperation in science and technology, including training programmes, especially to benefit Pacific island countries, LDCs and economies in transition; periodic evaluation of UN agencies' science and technology information, easier accessibility by potential users in developing regions, linkage with the UNDP global information referral system and with data banks of the regional commissions; and more systematic use of UN agencies' experience, projects and institutional capacities in science and technology to expand cooperation with developing regions, which should be reflected in their technical cooperation budgets. Also recommended were specific administrative and organizational measures by regional commissions to strengthen interregional cooperation in science and technology.

Social development

On 1 May, the Commission welcomed⁽³⁸⁾ the Manila Declaration and endorsed the Agenda for Action on Social Development in the ESCAP Region, both adopted in 1994 by the Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference in Preparation for the World Summit for Social Development.⁽³⁹⁾ It also welcomed the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Summit in March 1995 (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX), and urged its members to implement those documents. The Commission called for financial support to implement the Agenda for Action, and requested the Executive Secretary to assist States and ensure UN inter-agency coordination in the Agenda's implementation and to convene a regional ministerial conference on social development in 1997 to assess the progress achieved. In that regard, it welcomed the interest of Sri Lanka in hosting a meeting of senior officials in 1996 on implementation of the Agenda for Action, with special reference to poverty alleviation.

The Commission also considered an ESCAP overview⁽⁴¹⁾ of policy issues related to social security, drug abuse and HIV/AIDS, disabled and elderly persons, youth, urban poverty and the informal sector, and information, education and communication for poverty alleviation. The Commission noted the need to promote the participation of the destitute in anti-poverty programmes and recommended that social protection be an important aspect of development policies aimed at achieving growth with equity. Governments should consider alternative approaches to the provision of social protection for the poor, based on self-help and community participation, the Commission stated, and it called for concerted action to combat youth unemployment.

In a resolution on regional cooperation to eradicate the demand for drugs subject to abuse,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Commission urged its members to accord priority to the development and implementation of policies and programmes to reduce such demand, as well as to promote activities and methods for the treatment and rehabilitation of drug abusers. It invited them to establish or strengthen national focal points on demand aspects of drug abuse control and called for intensified collaboration with UN agencies, NGOs and community-based organizations. The Executive Secretary was asked to assist Pacific countries in exploring the possibility of establishing a subregional training centre for drug demand reduction and to consider convening a regional expert meeting on drug abuse control.

The Committee on Poverty Alleviation through Economic Growth and Social Development, meeting in September at its second session,⁽³²⁾ reviewed the regional poverty situation and recommended that ESCAP members adopt a holistic and integrated approach to the reduction of poverty and that policies and programmes targeted to the poor follow a decentralized approach, be responsive to local needs, enable the poor to participate in the decision-making process and recognize the necessity of special measures to assist disadvantaged groups of the population. The Committee also recommended that policies and programmes for the poor give due attention to income generation and distribution, asset creation and basic needs provision, including social safety nets. It reviewed the recommendations contained in recent global and regional mandates, including, inter alia, the Programme of Action adopted by the World Summit for Social Development and the Agenda for Action on Social Development in the ESCAP Region, and provided guidance to the secretariat on further follow-up activities. The Committee endorsed the proposed medium-term plan, 1998-2001, for the subprogramme on poverty alleviation.

During the year, the secretariat issued a review of the incidence of poverty in the region and target-oriented poverty alleviation programmes, an Asia-Pacific fact sheet on drug demand reduction and HIV/AIDS prevention, and an overview of five demonstration projects on community-based drug demand reduction and a manual on the subject; it also continued to publish the Social Development Newsletter. Studies were undertaken on the informal sector and urban poverty alleviation in the region and on the role of NGOs in implementation of the Agenda for Action on Social Development in the ESCAP Region, and advisory services were provided to member States on the formulation of national policies for poverty alleviation and for youth, the treatment of prisoners and their education and classification, as well as other issues relating to correctional management, the role of the community in the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, and juvenile vocational training. National training workshops on youth participation in development were organized in Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Sri Lanka. Expert group meetings were convened on training local officials in concepts and issues of public participation and on enhancing social security for the poor in the ESCAP region. The inter-agency Subcommittee on HIV/AIDS held its first meeting in June to consider ways to assist countries in planning and implementing national HIV/AIDS programmes.

Disabled persons

In 1995, the Commission underscored the value of the Agenda for Action for the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002, adopted in 1993,⁽⁴¹⁾ and urged the secretariat to strengthen its efforts to promote regional cooperation on disability issues and the participation of rural people with disabilities in poverty alleviation programmes. It endorsed guidelines on the promotion of non-handicapping physical environments for disabled persons, adopted by a regional meeting on the subject in 1994,⁽⁷⁾ and called for their national application.

The progress of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons was reviewed at a meeting on the subject (Bangkok, 26-30 June), which adopted targets and recommendations for implementing the Decade's Agenda for Action, endorsed in September by the Committee on Poverty Alleviation through Economic Growth and Social Development. Inter-agency cooperation in implementing the Agenda for Action was considered by the Subcommittee on Disability-related Concerns in October. Workshops were organized on the indigenous production and distribution of assistive devices, on pilot projects to promote non-handicapping environments, and on women with disabilities. The ESCAP secretariat provided advisory services to India and Singapore concerning the Decade and to Viet Nam on development of self-help organizations of people with diverse disabilities. It undertook case studies on the promotion of non-handicapping environments and on women and girls with disabilities in the ESCAP region, and issued a regional review of legislation on equal opportunities and full participation in development of disabled persons.

Human resources development

At its 1995 session, the Commission adopted a resolution on regional cooperation in human resources development (see above, under "Development policy and regional economic cooperation") and reiterated its endorsement of the Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development in the ESCAP Region, as Revised in 1994.⁽⁷⁾

Activities during the year included a regional training seminar on promoting human resources development services for the poor (Manila, Philippines, September) and a regional workshop on distance education as an aspect of human resources development (Shanghai, China, October). The secretariat also issued a publication on promoting the role of the private sector in human resources development.

Women in development

On 1 May, the Commission endorsed⁽⁴²⁾ the Plan of Action for the Advancement of Women in Asia and the Pacific, contained in the Jakarta Declaration, adopted in 1994 by the Second Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Women in Development.⁽⁴³⁾ It urged its members to implement the Declaration and Plan of Action, and called for financial support in their implementation. It asked that an inter-agency task force be established to promote intersectoral participation and coordination of activities within the UN system.

The Committee on Poverty Alleviation through Economic Growth and Social Development, in 1995, reviewed national activities towards implementation of the Jakarta Declaration and Plan of Action, as well as the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women in September 1995 (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). The Committee agreed that the feminization of poverty in the region had to be addressed by empowering women and promoting women's access to productive resources, such as education, training, credit and asset endowment, wage employment and skill generation programmes.

During the year, the ESCAP secretariat organized a training course on entrepreneurship for women; expert group meetings on the implementation of the Jakarta Declaration in LDCs, the status of women in poverty, and promotion of women's participation in decision-making; and workshops on the enhancement of employment opportunities for women, women with disabilities, promotion and implementation of the Jakarta Declaration, and a women's information network. It issued a directory of national focal points for the advancement of women in Asia and the Pacific, and prepared a study on functional literacy for women's empowerment in South Asia. As recommended by the Commission, an inter-agency Subcommittee on the Advancement of Women in Asia and the Pacific was established and held its first meeting in October.

Population

ESCAP population activities in 1995 were geared towards implementing the Bali Declaration on Population and Sustainable Development, endorsed by the Commission in 1993,⁽⁴⁴⁾ in accordance with targets and goals adopted in 1994,⁽⁴⁵⁾ as well as the Programme of Action adopted by the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development.⁽⁴⁵⁾ An expert group meeting was organized on the linkages between population and poverty, and a number of workshops on population information were held within the framework of the Asia-Pacific Population Information Network (POPIN). The ESCAP secretariat conducted seminars on population ageing and development, migration and development, and population change, development and women's role and status, as well as a training workshop on selected population topics and information technology. Publications included an ESCAP population data sheet, an annotated bibliography on policy and programme issues in the field of ageing, a POPIN directory, a manual for preparing computerized population information directories, and a study of trends, patterns and implications of rural-urban migration in India, Nepal and Thailand. Population information was disseminated through the Asia-Pacific Population Journal and the Population Headliners newsletter. An Inter-organizational Subcommittee on Population and Development in Asia and the Pacific was established and held its first meeting in November.

Human settlements

ESCAP's work in the area of human settlements focused on the implementation of the Regional Action Plan on Urbanization, adopted by the Commission in 1994,⁽⁴⁶⁾ as well as preparations for the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held in Turkey in 1996 (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII). Seminars, workshops and expert group meetings were organized on community-based housing, land management in Asia, preparation of regional documentation for Habitat II, the use of urban forums for urban planning and policy-making, and coordination in the Rawalpindi-Islamabad metropolitan area in Pakistan. The ESCAP secretariat conducted an international training course on dwelling construction technology and prepared a diagnostic manual on "healthy" cities in Asia and a review of current research in urban issues in the form of a computer database. The Inter-organizational Committee on Urbanization held its second meeting in February.

Environment

Activities under the ESCAP environment sub-programme continued to focus on implementation of Agenda 21⁽³⁰⁾ and the Regional Strategy on Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development, endorsed by the Commission in 1991.⁽⁴⁷⁾ In 1995, the Commission endorsed the 1994 recommendations of the Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development⁽⁴⁸⁾ and adopted a resolution⁽⁴⁹⁾ urging the strengthening of the Regional Network of Research and Training Centres on Desertification Control in Asia and the Pacific. It also urged ESCAP members to become signatories to the UN Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, concluded in 1994,⁽⁵⁰⁾ and requested the Executive Secretary to convene a high-level meeting of the Regional Network to develop its work programme.

The third Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, 22-28 November)⁽⁵¹⁾ adopted the Ministerial Declaration and the Regional Action Programme for Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development 1996-2000, calling for concerted action to arrest the rapid deterioration of the environment in the region, including a massive loss of resources and increased pollution of air, water and soil. The Conference stressed the need to strengthen regional cooperation in order to address such issues as transboundary and marine pollution and acid rain. It recommended that cooperative agreements be concluded on the exchange of information in technology transfer and capacity-building and welcomed the proposal to establish a new trust fund as a regional funding mechanism for the implementation of the Regional Action Programme. It also recommended that the private sector be actively involved in implementation activities and that modalities and mechanisms be developed for both Governments and the private sector with regard to the promotion and transfer of environmentally sound technologies.

The Regional Action Programme identified 24 programme areas, grouped under four objectives: pollution reduction and prevention, as well as control and enhancement of environmental quality; conservation and management of natural resources and ecosystems; improvement of sustainable development policy; and sustainable development indicators and assessment.

The NGO/Media Symposium on Environment and Development and the Sustainable Development Asia-Pacific Forum 1995, both organized by the private sector, were held in conjunction with the Conference. The Conference was preceded by a preparatory meeting of senior officials on environment and development and other preparatory meetings. Other activities in 1995 included the fourth Asia-Pacific seminar on climate change; an Asia-Pacific meeting on follow-up to the International Convention to Combat Desertification; expert group meetings on the feasibility of establishing a regional waste exchange data bank and on the environmental impact of coastal development; a training course on wind erosion control; seminars on tropical ecosystem management and on environmentalist business management; and a panel of experts and a workshop on desertification control in Asia and the Pacific.

The secretariat carried out studies on incorporating sustainable development considerations into economic decision-making and on the state of the environment in the region, launched a new Asia-Pacific Environment quarterly, and continued to publish Environmental News Briefing. The Inter-agency Subcommittee on Environment and Sustainable Development in Asia and the Pacific met in July and in August, both times in Bangkok.

Natural disaster reduction

The Typhoon Committee (twenty-eighth session, Kuala Lumpur, 5-11 December)⁽⁵²⁾ reviewed activities undertaken in 1995 under the meteorological, hydrological, disaster prevention and preparedness, training and research components of its work programme. It considered, inter alia, issues relating to typhoon forecasting and analysis, as well as flood forecasting and flood-loss prevention and management. Member States were urged to enhance the coverage of upper-air observation data. The Committee reviewed the Regional Cooperation Programme Implementation Plan on natural disaster reduction and stressed the need for better international cooperation and agreement on protocols for the exchange of warnings.

During the year, ESCAP issued a publication on natural hazards and natural disaster reduction in Asia and the Pacific, organized a training workshop on flood risk analysis and mapping (Nepal, September), and concluded an assessment of current preparedness programmes, forecasting systems and operational methods for water-related natural disaster reduction in the region. A new project proposal, dealing with land-use planning and practices in watershed management and disaster reduction, was submitted to potential donors for funding. The WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones held its twenty second session (Colombo, Sri Lanka, March).

Statistics

At its 1995 session, the Commission endorsed the 1994 recommendations of the Committee on Statistics⁽⁵³⁾ and the work programme in statistics for 1996-1997, and decided to proclaim the period 1995-1999 the quinquennium for improving civil registration and vital statistics in the ESCAP region. It emphasized the importance of implementing the 1993 System of National Accounts (SNA 1993) (see PART FOUR, Chapter XV), noted progress made in developing the ESCAP Statistical Information System (ESIS), and made recommendations concerning social and economic, demographic, poverty and gender, and environment statistics.

Activities during the year included seminars, workshops and meetings on environment statistics, statistics on trade in services, gender statistics, review of data under the 1993 International Comparison Programme for national accounts (see PART FOUR, Chapter XV), and computerization development in the public sector. Advisory services were provided to member States on organizational and institutional issues affecting national statistical services, statistical database development, the 1996 population census, collection and compilation of industrial statistics, processing of multiround surveys, and demographic data analysis. Publications were issued under the series on statistical indicators for Asia and the Pacific, as well as on foreign trade statistics in the region; an overview entitled "Asia-Pacific in Figures 1995", the Statistical Newsletter and the Government Computerization Newsletter were also published.

Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific

Pursuant to a 1994 Commission recommendation,⁽⁵³⁾ the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific in Tokyo acquired the legal status of an ESCAP subsidiary body as of 1 April 1995, with the host country agreement between the UN and Japan taking effect on that date. On 1 May, the Commission adopted⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Statute of the Institute, as recommended by the Committee on Statistics, which provided, inter alia, for the establishment of the Institute's Governing Board.

During the year, the Institute conducted training courses on practical statistics, automatic data processing, analysis and interpretation of statistics, sample design for household and establishment surveys, statistical methodology, and human development indicators.

Programme and organizational questions

In 1995, the Commission reviewed the implementation of the 1994-1995 programme of work,⁽⁵⁵⁾ noting that it was the first biennium in which the programme had been restructured in line with a thematic programme approach. It stated that it appreciated initiatives for reorganizing the secretariat's structure and setting up six working groups on each of the subprogrammes, but observed that implementation rates were relatively low in respect of subprogrammes on transport and communications and on least developed, land-locked and island developing countries. The Commission endorsed a tentative calendar of meetings for 1995/96⁽⁵⁶⁾ and approved proposed programme changes for 1995⁽⁵⁷⁾ affecting the six thematic subprogrammes. It also considered and endorsed a proposed programme of work and priorities for 1996-1997.⁽⁵⁸⁾

The Commission further reviewed activities of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission,⁽⁵⁹⁾ and proposed that its role should be enhanced, particularly regarding the preparation of draft resolutions. The Advisory Committee was requested to make recommendations for improving the functioning of the Committee for Regional Economic Cooperation in relation to its Steering Group.

Annual sessions

The Commission endorsed⁽⁶⁰⁾ Advisory Committee recommendations on the organization of ESCAP's future sessions⁽⁶¹⁾ and decided to: meet annually for up to seven working days, with the last three days meeting at the ministerial level, to discuss and decide upon important issues concerning economic and social development in the region, to endorse recommendations of its subsidiary bodies and of the Executive Secretary, to examine and approve the programme of work and to take any other decisions required; upgrade the Informal Working Group on Draft Resolutions to enable it to function along with the three Committees of the Whole; and review new arrangements for holding its sessions in 1996.

Terms of reference

The Commission, having considered a proposed amendment to its terms of reference,⁽⁶²⁾ recommended that the Russian Federation, already a member State under paragraph 3, be included within the geographical scope of ESCAP as defined in paragraph 2, so as to allow Commission programme activities to be extended to that country, particularly its Siberian and far-eastern regions.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1995/22, decided to amend paragraph 2 of the ESCAP terms of reference accordingly.

Fifty second session of ESCAP

At its fifty-first session, the Commission decided to hold its fifty-second session in Bangkok in March or April 1996, and chose as its theme for that session "Sustainable development and poverty alleviation in Asia and the Pacific".

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

By an 8 June letter,⁽⁶³⁾ States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO)—Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan—requested the inclusion in the provisional agenda of the General Assembly's fiftieth (1995) session of an item on cooperation between the United Nations and ECO. The explanatory memorandum accompanying that letter noted that ECO, which was granted observer status with the Assembly in 1993,⁽⁶⁴⁾ had made significant progress in promoting cooperation with ESCAP and several UN bodies and specialized agencies, and described those activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/1.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/2 of 13 October 1993, by which it granted observer status to the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian nature,

Recalling further that the Charter of the United Nations provides for the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters as maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that their activities are consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that the Treaty of Izmir, signed at Izmir, Turkey, on 12 March 1977, created a permanent body for intraregional cooperation, consultation and coordination in order to enhance economic, social and cultural development,

Taking note of the communique of the Third Meeting of the Heads of Government of the member States of the Economic Cooperation Organization, held at Islamabad on 14 and 15 March 1995,

Affirming the need to strengthen the cooperation that already exists between entities of the United Nations system and the Economic Cooperation Organization in the areas of economic and social development,

Convinced of the need for the coordinated utilization of available resources to promote common objectives of the two organizations,

1. Takes note of the decision of the heads of Government of the member States of the Economic Cooperation Organization on the desirability of strengthening cooperation and coordination between the Secretariat of the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization;

2. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Economic Cooperation Organization, to promote and expand cooperation and coordination between both secretariats in order to increase the capacity of the two organizations to attain their common objectives;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Economic Cooperation Organization, to promote meetings between their representatives for consultation on policies, projects, measures and procedures that will facilitate and broaden cooperation and coordination between them;

4. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Economic Cooperation Organization in order to initiate, maintain and increase consultation and programmes with the Economic Cooperation Organization and its associated institutions in the attainment of their objectives;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization".

General Assembly resolution 50/1

12 October 1995 Meeting 30 Adopted without vote

9-nation draft (A/50/L.1); agenda item 153.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Iran, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkey, Turkmenistan.

Europe

The fiftieth session of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) was held in Geneva from 3 to 11 April 1995,⁽¹⁾ at a time when the rapid pace of political, economic and social change in the ECE region continued to pose challenges to Governments and international institutions. The Commission noted important developments in the scope and structure of regional cooperation that had occurred since its 1994 session, including the enlargement of the European Union to 15 member States and the succession of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) by the World Trade Organization (WTO). It was also noted that economic performance in most of Eastern Europe showed a marked improvement as the European economies in transition to a market system continued to implement legislative, economic and restructuring measures to pursue further the reform process. At the same time, policy problems pertaining to transition persisted, as had the difficulties of overcoming macroeconomic imbalances and of making progress in structural reforms, highlighting the need for investment, project financing and improved market access, as well as for Western financial and technical assistance in supporting reforms. The transition process was also threatened by conflicts in the region, which continued despite international efforts to restore peace and stability.

The Commission reviewed its implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Act of the 1975 Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (Helsinki Conference)⁽²⁾ and of the Concluding Document adopted by the CSCE Review Conference in 1994,⁽³⁾ as well as economic cooperation in the Mediterranean region in the light of the Final Act. The Executive Secretary was asked⁽⁴⁾ to take steps to strengthen cooperation between ECE and OSCE in implementing provisions of OSCE documents, to participate in the OSCE Economic Forum, and to establish close cooperation with OSCE in the economic dimension. The Commission called on its subsidiary bodies to contribute to follow-up activities in that area. In another decision,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission reiterated its requests to the Executive Secretary to identify means of enhancing economic cooperation in the Mediterranean in all areas of the ECE programme of work and to pursue efforts for increasing cooperation on matters within the competence of ECE and of common interest to Mediterranean countries. The Executive Secretary was also asked to continue cooperation with other regional commissions and relevant UN bodies to secure interaction with Mediterranean countries not members of ECE, and to cooperate with the informal open-ended contact group on the Mediterranean, to be established within the framework of the OSCE Permanent Council in Vienna. The Commission further took note of follow-up activities to the project on the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar (see above, under "Africa").

During the year, ECE participated in the third OSCE Economic Forum (Prague, Czech Republic, 7-9 June), which focused on regional economic cooperation in the fields of trade, investment and infrastructure. It also contributed to a seminar on the trans-European role of infrastructure in maintaining stability and security in the Black Sea region, held in Sofia, Bulgaria. The ECE secretariat prepared a study on the implementation of commitments contained in the final document of the 1990 Bonn Conference on Economic Cooperation in Europe. It also supported or followed closely activities and initiatives for the Mediterranean region, including a seminar on the OSCE experience in confidence-building, conflict prevention and crisis management (Cairo, Egypt, 26-28 September), the Euro-Mediterranean Ministerial Conference (Barcelona, Spain, 27-28 November) and an international expert group meeting on integrated coastal area management in the Mediterranean and Adriatic (Ljubljana, Slovenia, November).

In April, the Commission approved⁽⁶⁾ its work programme for 1995-1996 and endorsed the programme for 1995-1999, subject to review at its 1996 session. The work programme included sub-programmes on policy and coordination of work, environment, transport, statistics, trade facilitation, economic analysis, energy, development of international trade, industry and technology, agriculture and timber, and human settlements.

The Commission asked the Executive Secretary to: bring to the attention of the Secretary-General the need for resources necessary to fulfil the Commission's mandate; explore ways of increasing the visibility and outside perception of ECE activities; and take steps towards establishing close cooperation with the Council of Europe and its Parliamentary Assembly. The Secretary-General was urged to consider the possibility of strengthening the Commission, while the ECE principal subsidiary bodies were requested to rationalize their proceedings so as to make optimal use of available resources. The Commission also decided to convene in 1997 a high-level fifty-second jubilee session with a view to adopting a Declaration on strengthening of economic cooperation in Europe, which would define strategic directions of future ECE activities.

At a special session (Geneva, 20 September),⁽⁷⁾ the Commission reviewed its cooperation with FAO and with the Council of Europe, and considered measures to enhance its programme of work and achieve greater efficiency and savings. In a decision on the Declaration on strengthening of economic cooperation in Europe,⁽⁸⁾ it established an ad hoc Working Group to define strategic directions of future ECE activities, and specified the Group's mandate. It also adopted a decision on the future work of its Committee on Agriculture (see below, under "Activities in 1995").

In response to a 1991 Commission request,⁽⁹⁾ its Chairman continued to convene ad hoc informal meetings of ECE to consult on policy matters, assist with preparations for the annual sessions, monitor progress in work programmes and offer guidance to the Executive Secretary. The Chairman also arranged consultations between the Executive Secretary and ECE subsidiary bodies, in accordance with a 1992 Commission decision on the provision of adequate resources.⁽¹⁰⁾

Economic trends

In 1995, economic developments in various parts of the ECE region became increasingly divergent, according to a summary of the economic survey of Europe in 1995.⁽¹¹⁾ Economic growth slowed in both Western Europe and North America. Although annual averages showed GDP rising by 2.7 per cent in Western Europe, compared with 2.5 per cent in the previous year, preliminary statistics for the last quarter of 1995 actually fell slightly. Sluggish private consumption, reflecting weak consumer confidence and held down also by higher taxes and social security charges and reductions in governmental transfers, was a contributing factor. Consumption grew on average by 2 per cent in 1995, compared with annual rates well over 3 per cent between 1986 and 1990. GDP growth rates decelerated from 4.6 per cent in 1994 to 2.2 per cent in 1995 in Canada, from 3.8 per cent to 2.4 per cent in the United Kingdom, from 3.5 per cent to 2.1 per cent in the United States, and from 2.9 per cent in both France and Germany to 2.4 per cent and 1.9 per cent, respectively. Economic performance improved slightly in Italy, where GDP grew by 3 per cent, up from 2.2 per cent in the previous year; at the same time, some smaller economies, such as Belgium and Switzerland, registered negative growth for two consecutive quarters during the year.

The weakening of demand led to a steady reduction in investment plans, although fixed investment still rose on average by 4 per cent, against 1.6 per cent in 1994. However, rather than focusing on expansion of productive capacity, investment concentrated on cost reduction and the modernization of the capital stock. Limited progress was achieved in reducing unemployment, which averaged 10.5 per cent in Western Europe in 1995—below its 1994 peak of 10.9 per cent, but still above the recession year of 1993. Its weaker rate of job creation contrasted sharply with the more buoyant expansion in North America, where the number of new jobs had increased by 3 per cent in 1994 and 2 per cent in 1995. Unemployment declined from 6 per cent in 1994 to 5.6 per cent in 1995 in the United States, from 8.4 per cent to 8.2 per cent in Germany, from 9.5 per cent to 8.7 per cent in the United Kingdom, from 10.3 per cent to 9.5 per cent in Canada, and from 12.3 per cent to 11.6 per cent in France, but rose from 11.4 per cent to 11.8 per cent in Italy. Several countries implemented early retirement schemes and other measures to encourage withdrawals from the labour force. At the same time, unemployment among young people, although slightly reduced due to special labour market programmes in some countries, remained at 20 per cent or more and constituted a major social problem.

Annual inflation dropped from 2.7 per cent in 1994 to 1.8 per cent in 1995 in Germany, remained at 1.7 per cent in France and increased from 2.6 per cent to 2.8 per cent in the United States and from 2.5 per cent to 3.4 per cent in the United Kingdom. Canada and Italy, on the other hand, recorded larger increases, from 0.2 per cent to 2.1 per cent and from 3.9 per cent to 5.4 per cent, respectively. Domestic activity in Western Europe continued to be supported by export growth, although its net effect was smaller than in the previous year because of a slowdown in intraregional trade and, in early 1995, exchange rate turbulence. Nevertheless, the region continued to benefit from the strong global demand for investment goods and from the rapid growth of imports into transition economies and developing countries.

Economic performance of the European countries in transition was uneven. Aggregate real GDP in Eastern Europe grew by 5.4 per cent in 1995, compared with 4 per cent in the previous year. Rates of growth accelerated from 4.8 per cent to 7.4 per cent in Slovakia, from 5.2 per cent to 7 per cent in Poland, from 3.9 per cent to 6.9 per cent in Romania, and from 2.6 per cent to 5.2 per cent in the Czech Republic, but declined from 5.3 per cent to 4.8 per cent in Slovenia. Albania also showed strong economic expansion, and some recovery was registered in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) following the success of its 1994 programme to end hyperinflation. On the other hand, GDP increased only by 2 per cent in Hungary, down from 2.9 per cent in the previous year, and by 2.5 per cent in Bulgaria, and continued to fall in Croatia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and almost certainly in Bosnia and Herzegovina, for which no data were available.

The recovery in Eastern Europe was largely based on the revival of industrial production, which rose by more than 7 per cent. The recovery of industry was accompanied by large annual gains in productivity—between 10 and 16 per cent in many countries. Agricultural output also expanded by between 2 and 5 per cent in most countries except Poland, where agricultural production increased by 13 per cent after a 9.3 per cent decline in 1994.

The performance of the Baltic States continued to lag behind most of Eastern Europe; in 1995, their economies grew by some 1 per cent. Nevertheless, a modest recovery was registered in Lithuania, where output grew by 2 per cent, up from 1 per cent in the previous year, while Estonia's GDP increased by 2.5 per cent, compared with a 2.7 per cent contraction in 1994. At the same time, Latvia experienced a further setback as its economy contracted by 1.6 per cent, partly due to a major crisis in the banking sector, after a 0.6 per cent growth in the previous year. GDP continued to fall in most countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), but the rate of decline decelerated considerably in 1995, while Armenia and Georgia experienced positive growth. Output decreased by 3 per cent in the Republic of Moldova, 4 per cent in the Russian Federation, 10 per cent in Belarus and 12 per cent in Ukraine, compared with respective declines of 31.2 per cent, 12.6 per cent, 15.8 per cent and 23 per cent in 1994 (for economies of Central Asia and the Caucasus, see above, under "Asia and the Pacific").

According to preliminary data, domestic demand, strong in Eastern Europe and weak in CIS member States, had a major impact on the economic situation in those countries. Private consumption, supported by rising real incomes, increased in the Czech Republic, Poland, Romania and Slovakia. They also experienced substantial growth in fixed investment, at rates ranging from 13 per cent in Romania to 22 per cent in Slovakia. On the other hand, austerity programmes and income policies held consumption down in Bulgaria, Croatia and Hungary, while in the Russian Federation it fell by 7 per cent, due to declining real wages. Another important development was a sharp drop in inflation, except in Tajikistan and Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), but the actual annual rates remained high, at between 25 and 40 per cent in Hungary, Poland, Romania and the Baltic States and even higher in Bulgaria. Among CIS countries, inflation rates varied from 30 per cent in the Republic of Moldova to 197 per cent in the Russian Federation, 377 per cent in Ukraine and 709 per cent in Belarus.

Unemployment was a major problem in almost all transition economies, although the strong economic growth in Eastern Europe led to a marked slowdown in the fall of employment levels and an increase in Albania, Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, Poland and Slovakia. However, average unemployment remained high at 13 per cent, with rates ranging from 3 per cent in the Czech Republic and 9 per cent in Romania to 18 per cent in Croatia. There were exceptionally high levels in Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. In the Baltic States, unemployment remained largely unchanged in Estonia and Latvia, but rose sharply in Lithuania. It averaged 5.4 per cent in CIS countries, although actual unemployment in that group was believed to be much higher than "registered unemployment". Young people accounted for between 26 and 40 per cent of the unemployed, and the number of long-term unemployed people continued to grow rapidly. The problem was also aggravated by the weakening of traditional safety nets in those countries.

Foreign trade of transition economies continued to expand rapidly in the first three quarters of 1995. The volume of Eastern European exports was estimated to have risen by between 10 and 12 per cent and imports by between 13 and 15 per cent, while their value increased by some 28 per cent for exports and by about one third for imports. The prevalence of imports over exports, due to the recovery of domestic demand, led to a sharp deterioration in trade deficits, which grew from $7 billion to $13 billion in Eastern Europe and from $0.6 billion to $0.9 billion in the Baltic States. As a result, the aggregate current account deficit in Eastern Europe almost doubled, reaching $8.8 billion. On the other hand, both the value and volume of exports from the Russian Federation and other CIS countries grew much faster than imports, and their trade surpluses increased from nearly $15 billion to $22 billion and from $1.5 billion to $3.5 billion, respectively. Western Europe became the major trading partner of most transition economies, taking some 50 to 70 per cent of their exports and accounting for a similar share of imports. At the same time, trade among transition economies also strengthened, except for intra-CIS trade, the volume of which was reported to have continued to fall.

In 1995, net capital flows to Eastern Europe tripled to reach more than $31 billion, from $10.6 billion in 1994, which was more than what was required to finance current account deficits and, consequently, constituted large additions to foreign-currency reserves in most countries. The inflows consisted of a wide range of types of capital, from FDI and portfolio investment to medium- and long-term bank credits, while short-term obligations accounted for just a small portion of the total. However, the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland alone received nearly 90 per cent of total inflows.

Activities in 1995

The transition process in Central and Eastern European countries and their integration into the European and global economies remained a focus of ECE activities in 1995.⁽¹²⁾ Since the inception of its programme to assist economies in transition in 1990, ECE had organized a total of 183 workshops on issues relating to human settlements, environment, industrial development, energy, transport, statistics, forestry, economic analysis and population, including women and elderly persons. Their conclusions often influenced work programmes of ECE subsidiary bodies and were incorporated into follow-up activities pertaining to ECE programmes, national policies or specific technical assistance projects. The Trust Fund on Assistance to Countries in Transition continued to help those States to defray the costs of their participation in ECE workshops and experts' meetings. The ECE secretariat also contributed to technical cooperation programmes and projects funded by other organizations and agencies, completed a list of experts and specialists in the problems of privatization, and took part in activities focusing on reconstruction of war-torn areas in Europe. Initial contacts were established with the European Training Foundation, an autonomous agency of EU created in 1995 in Turin, Italy, to coordinate training activities in economies in transition. The secretariat also continued cooperation with the ILO Centre in Turin in developing training manuals.

Under the ECE regional advisory services programme,⁽¹³⁾ 144 missions were carried out between July 1994 and September 1995, including 50 to CIS members, 48 to Central and Eastern European economies in transition, 8 to the Baltic States and 38 to donor countries. The missions covered a broad range of issues relating to strategic policy formulation and implementation in the areas of privatization, industrial restructuring and energy, development of entrepreneurship, institution-building for a market economy, and attraction of foreign direct investment. The regional advisers assisted Georgia in elaborating a medium-term strategy of economic reconstruction, recovery and reform, and organized workshops on the expansion of trade in transition economies and on harmonization of transport infrastructure networks and transport regulations. The programme also contributed to a regional workshop of CIS and Baltic States on regional trade and enterprise cooperation and major challenges of increased participation in international trade (Chisinau, Republic of Moldova, January). Regional advisory services on population and development were initiated in February.

In an April⁽¹⁴⁾ decision the Commission asked the Executive Secretary to report on the objectives and activities of the regional advisory services programme, including ways to improve its effectiveness; to request allocation of adequate resources; and to intensify cooperation of the ECE regional advisory services with other relevant organizations. In another decision,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Commission recommended that the Executive Secretary, in consultation with UNDP and other international and regional organizations, explore the possibility of establishing, in one of the interested countries in transition, training courses in matters of market economy for the administration and business community of transition economies. It requested him to study the feasibility of cooperation between ECE and international and regional organizations in the collection and sharing of data on FDI projects in those economies, confirmed the importance of continuing the programme of workshops and seminars, and invited member States and international organizations to finance it through the Trust Fund.

Other areas of activity included ECE's participation in OSCE meetings,⁽¹⁶⁾ cooperation with other organizations and subregional groupings active in the region,⁽¹⁷⁾ and its contribution to UN global programmes, as well as to programmes of assistance to developing countries of other regions.⁽¹⁸⁾ On 11 April, the Commission recommended⁽¹⁵⁾ that the Secretary-General consider the possibility of using ECE as a focal point to promote and enhance mutual cooperation with UN global programmes, organs and specialized agencies. It also noted the ECE contribution to preparations for UN global conferences, including the 1994 high-level regional preparatory meeting⁽¹⁹⁾ for the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women (see PART FOUR, Chapter X), and invited⁽⁶⁾ the Executive Secretary to focus work in the field of population on follow-up activities to implement the Programme of Action adopted by the International Conference on Population and Development in 1994.⁽²⁰⁾

As part of preparations for the World Summit for Social Development, held in Denmark in March (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX), the secretariat organized a workshop on population ageing in Europe and North America (Geneva, 13-14 February), which adopted a message to the World Summit entitled "Towards a mature society for all ages", containing recommendations for action on the issues of poverty, employment, integration in society, and data and research. ECE also took part in an NGO meeting on links between social and economic development and the role and experience of NGOs in promoting civil society, focusing on Central and Eastern European economies in transition and held in conjunction with the World Summit.

International trade

At its 1995 session, the Commission held a round table to consider a study on ways of promoting the expansion of trade in transition economies,⁽²¹⁾ prepared by the Executive Secretary in response to a 1994 Commission request.⁽²²⁾ The study analysed the importance and structure of trade in those countries, examined the main factors affecting their trading competitiveness, and proposed specific measures to facilitate trade. It also provided recommendations for a coordinated Regional Action Programme to Boost Trade in Transition Economies. The round table endorsed the recommendations in general and suggested that the study be disseminated to a wider audience after revision. On 11 April, the Commission took note⁽⁶⁾ of the study and invited the Committee on the Development of Trade and other subsidiary bodies concerned to continue their work geared towards promoting the expansion of trade in transition economies, including improvements in market access and market competitiveness. The Commission also stressed the importance of continuing policies aimed at further trade liberalization and expansion among Western countries and economies in transition, reducing the remaining constraints to trade among ECE countries, improving the export competitiveness of economies in transition and facilitating their integration into the international trading system.

The ECE Committee on the Development of Trade, at its forty-fourth session (Geneva, 5-7 December),⁽²³⁾ reviewed its work and the activities of its Working Parties relating to trade analysis, facilitation and promotion, and held a panel discussion on ways of financing trade and investment in transition economies. It supported the general direction of work towards establishing a centre for facilitation of procedures and practices for administration, commerce and transport, as well as proposals concerning the production of legal guides on international contract practices in industry. The Committee agreed on its programme of work for 1996-1999 and on future directions for its activities, and asked the secretariat to prepare a study on the institutional, legal and business framework for developing more efficient systems to finance trade and promote more dynamic intra-regional trade between ECE countries.

The Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry (forty-fourth session, Geneva, 13-15 November) organized a forum on attracting private investment for large-scale infrastructure projects in the transition economies of Central and Eastern Europe, which adopted recommendations concerning the development of guidelines on new project financing and construction budget techniques, information and training seminars on those techniques, confidence-building measures to lower investment risks, private-sector experience sharing, and comparability of financing terms for infrastructure projects in developed countries and economies in transition. Acting on those recommendations, the Working Party decided to establish an expert group of private- and public-sector representatives charged with developing project financing guidelines, and requested the secretariat to explore other proposals with the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). It also decided to convene such forum meetings annually and to build its future work around them, and agreed on the procedure for holding those meetings.

The Working Party further reviewed the text and amended the title of a guide for the transition economies of Central and Eastern Europe and the CIS on adapting property laws, and agreed on a timetable for finalizing and publishing the guide. It also noted that the secretariat had finalized a guide for the transition economies on financing trade and private companies, to be published in 1996.

The Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures held two sessions in Geneva in 1995 (forty-first, 21-24 March; forty-second, 18-22 September). It reviewed matters arising from its restructuring process and agreed to set up three groups to develop policy and overall objectives as well as a framework for procedures to "empower" technical bodies, and to undertake an evaluation of possible organizational structures. It was also agreed that the general direction of the process should be towards the establishment of a centre for facilitation of procedures and practices for administration, commerce and transport. The Working Party approved recommendations of its meetings of experts on: data elements, automatic data interchange, procedures and documentation relating to the development of messages for the UN Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (UN/EDIFACT) as a standard for world trade; activities of the steering group to develop models for international trade transactions; trade facilitation of the transport of dangerous goods; facilitation measures related to international trade procedures; and various trade-related codes.

The Working Party also dealt with trade facilitation and UN/EDIFACT in economies in transition, including activities of the regional adviser on trade facilitation. It approved two draft UN/EDIFACT directories and confirmed the appointment of rapporteurs for the Africa, Asia, Australia/New Zealand, Central and Eastern European, Pan American and West European EDIFACT Boards.

During the year, the secretariat prepared a study on trade and investment finance in transition economies, published four issues of East-West Investment News, compiled its trade facilitation recommendations into a single volume, and launched a trade facilitation "home page" on the Internet. The regional advisor on trade facilitation assisted economies in transition in promoting intra-CIS and Baltic trade, organizing in the Russian Federation the first Eastern European conference on electronic data interchange and UN/EDIFACT, and strengthening or establishing national trade facilitation bodies.

Industry

On 11 April, the Commission, further to its 1994 decision to consider convening a European Forum on Sustainable Industrial Development,⁽²²⁾ decided⁽²⁴⁾ to hold in 1996 a Round Table Conference on cooperation and sustainable industrial development, and invited the Executive Secretary to make the necessary preparations.

The Working Party on the Chemical Industry, at its fifth session (Geneva, 27-29 September),⁽²⁵⁾ reviewed the implementation of the regional programme on sustainable economic and ecological development of the chemical industry and held a round-table discussion on the chlorine industry and sustainable development. It endorsed the reports of its meetings of experts on the pilot project demonstrating the environmental clean-up of selected sites polluted by chemicals and on the periodic survey of the chemical industry, as well as the report on activities of the Regional Environmental Management Centre for the Chemical Industry. The Working Party approved the first version of the comparative study of chemical legislation in ECE member countries and changed the project's title to "comparative data bank"; noted the progress in the study on trends in structural and ownership changes in the chemical industries of the economies in transition; agreed that the secretariat should publish The Chemical Industry in 1995—Annual Review and continue publishing statistics on aromatic hydrocarbons and olefins; and requested that efforts be pursued to publish the Directory of Chemical Producers and Products. It also considered preparations for or follow-up to workshops, seminars and study tours organized under its work programme, and adopted the programme of work for 1996-2000.

Activities during the year included a seminar on the complex utilization of raw materials using advanced low- and non-waste process technologies (Moscow, 12-15 September), an international workshop on technologies for soil decontamination and remediation of soils polluted by chemical products (Paris, 5-7 December), and a study tour in the Czech Republic, Hungary and Slovakia (19-24 June). The secretariat produced a publication on the current economic situation and outlook in the plastics sector and issued the annual review of the chemical industry for 1994 and the second edition, Part I, of the directory of chemical producers and products, dealing with chemical enterprises in Central and Eastern Europe.

The Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation, which did not meet in 1995, focused its activities on economic analysis and industrial statistics, environmental protection and sustainable industrial development, and assistance to economies in transition. It organized a seminar on national experiences of conversion to international classification standards in industrial statistics (Geneva, 19-20 October), whose recommendations were approved at the seventeenth Meeting on Questions of Statistics concerning Engineering Industries and Automation (Geneva, 20 October).

The first open-ended meeting of experts on robotics (Geneva, 4 September) endorsed a draft publication on world industrial robots, dealing with statistics for 1983-1994 and forecasts to 1998. The ECE secretariat published an overview of performance and prospects in world engineering industries and automation for 1993-1995 and prepared a review of industrial restructuring in selected countries in transition, considered by an advisory workshop (Geneva, 8-9 June), which focused on strategic planning for industrial restructuring in different countries. The ECE regional adviser on industry and technology provided assistance to economies in transition in elaborating industrial policies, including a round table on national industrial policy in Hungary, and launched a project for the development of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in those countries. A workshop on SMEs was held in Moscow in September.

The Working Party on Steel, at its fifth session (Geneva, 25-27 October),⁽²⁶⁾ considered a report of its meeting of experts on the steel market in 1994 and prospects for 1995, the status of annual bulletins of steel statistics and studies on iron and steel scrap and on restructuring and changing ownership in the steel industry, as well as issues relating to the steel industry and the environment, including the preparation of a directory of environmental organizations in the steel sector. It heard a report on a global review of the steel industry in Europe undertaken by several regional and international organizations and endorsed the secretariat's participation in a study on opportunities for regional cooperation in the steel industry in Europe. The Working Party also reviewed preparations for or follow-up to seminars, workshops and study tours organized under its programme of work and adopted its programme of work for 1996-2000.

During the year, the secretariat issued a publication on iron and steel scrap and the annual bulletin of statistics of world trade in steel. Among other activities were a seminar on the steel industry and recycling (Düsseldorf, Germany, 24-27 April) and a study tour of the steel industry in the Russian Federation (September).

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee, at its fifty-seventh session (Geneva, 16-20 January),⁽²⁷⁾ analysed the transport situation in member countries, reviewed the results of the second Pan-European Transport Conference (Crete, Greece, 14-16 March 1994) and preparations for the 1996 Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment, as well as the status of application of international UN/ECK transport agreements and conventions. It also considered activities to assist economies in transition, and discussed issues relating to transport trends and policy and economics; road, rail, inland water and combined transport; customs questions; international trade procedures related to transport; transport of dangerous goods and perishable foodstuffs; transport statistics, including the preparation of the 1995 census of road traffic; measures to facilitate the movement of persons with reduced mobility; and the development of electronic procedures and documentation.

The Committee noted proposals for the follow-up to the second Pan-European Conference and requested its subsidiary bodies to study the possibilities of their implementation. It endorsed the decisions of its Working Party on Transport Trends and Economics to convene an ad hoc session in 1995 to consider ways and forms of rendering assistance to Central and Eastern European countries and to examine transport flow indices and the interface between land and sea transport. The Committee approved the report on the methodological basis for the definition of common criteria regarding bottlenecks, missing links and the quality of service of infrastructure networks, and decided that regulatory and infrastructural measures to improve the transport situation should be designed as a follow-up to the report. The Working Party should attach greater importance to transport problems in the Mediterranean region, it was stated. The importance of updating further the European Agreement on Main International Traffic Arteries was stressed. The Committee called for simplification of procedures to obtain a visa for professional drivers in international road traffic and noted the draft amendments to the 1958 Agreement concerning the Adoption of Uniform Conditions of Approval and Reciprocal Recognition of Approval for Motor Vehicle Equipment and Parts. The Working Party on the Construction of Vehicles was asked to consider proposals for a global agreement on the subject, as well as for environmental standards for vehicles in international road traffic. Governments were invited to follow the recommendations for the installation of child restraint systems. The amendments subsequently entered into force on 16 October 1995, thereby modifying the title of the 1958 Agreement to read the "Agreement Concerning the Adoption of Uniform Technical Prescriptions for Wheeled Vehicles, Equipment and Parts which can be Fitted and/or be Used on Wheeled Vehicles and the Conditions for Reciprocal Recognition of Approvals Granted on the Basis of these Prescriptions".

The Committee endorsed the decisions of its Working Party on Rail Transport to postpone modification of the infrastructure parameters under the European Agreement on Main International Railway lines and to set up a Steering Group and an ad hoc group on railway facilitation. The Working Party was asked to propose measures for harmonizing existing legal regimes in different rail transport systems. It also endorsed the decision of its Working Party on Inland Water Transport to convene a special session in 1995 to consider a draft European Agreement on Main Inland Waterways of International Importance; took note of a map of European inland waterways based on a new classification, and decided to revise it on a regular basis; and approved the conclusions of a study on the role of coastal shipping and its potential as an alternative for land transport in Europe, noting that provisions on coastal shipping could be incorporated into a legal instrument along with provisions on inland water transport using combined transport techniques. The Committee initiated an urgent revision of the Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets (TIR Convention), welcomed progress in preparing a convention on international customs transit procedures for the carriage of goods by rail, and decided to set up an international working group to draft a European agreement concerning the international carriage of dangerous goods by inland waterways. In April, the Commission endorsed that decision. Noting the continuing revision of provisions concerning the carriage of gases under the European Agreement concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road, the Committee stressed the importance of concluding the restructuring of that Agreement as early as possible.

The Preparatory Committee for the 1996 Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment, established in 1994,⁽²⁸⁾ held five sessions during 1995 to elaborate the draft final documents of the Conference, including guidelines for a common strategy on transport and the environment, a programme of action and a political declaration. The Preparatory Committee also identified issues on which binding agreement could be achieved, such as environmental standards for vehicles in international transport, periodic technical inspections of vehicles and development of combined transport on inland waterways and coastal shipping.

In April, the Commission supported⁽²⁹⁾ the Preparatory Committee's findings and requested it to continue its work. It noted the conclusions of the Inland Transport Committee at its fifty-seventh session, urging it to complete at its next sessions regulations for combined transport on inland waterways and possibly for coastal shipping. The Commission also welcomed the holding of the second Road Safety Week in the ECE region (27 March-2 April), and emphasized the necessity of an urgent revision of the TIR Convention.

In 1995, the European Agreement on Main Inland Waterways of International Importance was finalized, bringing the total number of ECE agreements and conventions in the field of transport to 51. During the year, 29 States, of which 13 were economies in transition and 2 were non-ECE members, became contracting parties to one or more legal instruments. Forty ECE members agreed to carry out the 1995 census of motor traffic on main international traffic arteries in Europe. The consolidated text of the revised European Provisions concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Inland Waterway was finalized. Work began on the revision of the TIR Convention. Activities continued under the Trans-European North-South Motorway (TEM) and Trans-European Railways (TER) projects, aimed at the coordinated development of international road and rail as well as combined transport infrastructure in Central and Eastern Europe, including the updating of existing networks, development of databases, preparation of studies and organization of workshops and training seminars. A seminar on ECE work in the field of transport, including legal instruments, was held for the benefit of CIS members (Geneva, September). The regional adviser on transport issues assisted economies in transition in formulating programmes of transport development planning and of economic regulatory activities and advised them on transport pricing, transport funds and railway restructuring. The secretariat continued to publish the annual bulletin of transport statistics for Europe and North America.

Energy

At its 1995 session, the Commission emphasized⁽³⁰⁾ the growing importance of energy in the development of economic cooperation in the region, noted the report and conclusions of the fourth session of the Committee on Energy, held in 1994,⁽³¹⁾ and confirmed the importance of continuing the programme of workshops and seminars in the field of energy for countries in transition. The Commission welcomed activities under the technical cooperation programme for the promotion and development of a market-based gas industry in transition economies within the framework of a Gas Centre, as well as under the Energy Efficiency 2000 project, aimed at reducing the gap between energy-intensive industries in Eastern Europe and energy-saving technologies of the West through trade and cooperation. Member States and international organizations were invited to participate in the project and the Centre and to contribute to their trust funds.

The Committee on Energy, at its fifth session (Geneva, 7-9 November),⁽³¹⁾ reviewed the energy situation and policies in the region, particularly in the economies in transition, and activities assisting the transition of the coal, gas and electric power industries in Central and Eastern Europe, including efforts to enhance energy efficiency and to promote and develop a market-based gas industry, as well as workshops on energy aspects of economic reforms. The Committee also considered cooperation in the field of renewable sources of energy and held a round table on restructuring, privatization and deregulation. It endorsed the recommendations of its Working Parties concerning the preparation of explicit studies in the gas and energy fields, the restructuring policies of the coal industry and sustainable development of coal-mining regions, as well as further development of the implementation programme on accelerating clean coal technology. It requested the secretariat to examine ways of mobilizing resources for the programme, including the creation of a trust fund. The Committee also endorsed a programme of work in the area of renewable sources of energy, and decided to promote international technical cooperation in the establishment of energy efficiency demonstration zones and projects using such sources.

The Working Parties on Coal, Gas and Electric Power held their fifth sessions in Geneva. The Working Party on Coal (18-20 October) considered general energy problems in the ECE region of relevance to coal; economic reforms and restructuring of the coal industry in Europe; sustainable coal development and policies; environmental protection related to coal-mining and coal utilization; and mine safety. It approved the reports of an ad hoc meeting on the elaboration of market-oriented UN classification for assessment of coal and mineral deposits (Geneva, 13-15 March) and of its expert meetings on research, management and transition in the coal industry; on coal trade, statistics and transport; and on clean coal technologies. The Working Party adopted recommendations concerning the restructuring of the coal industry, development and modernization of profitable mining operations, further privatization of coal-mining companies and development of the stock market, creation of vertical structures between coal producers and coal users, regulations and financial support for the closure of uneconomic coal mines, promotion of new economic activities in the slowdown mining regions, and larger community participation in decision-making and in the programme of retraining and investment. It also endorsed the recommendations of a symposium on sustainable development of opencast coal-mining regions (Krasnojarsk, Russian Federation, 12-16 June). The Working Party held a round table on coal in the European energy market, considered the results of workshops on coal-related issues, and approved its programme of work for 1995-1999.

Activities during the year included workshops on geodynamic zoning, development of clean small-sized boilers for industrial household and farming sectors, market adaptation of the coal industry in Central and Eastern Europe, and reassessment of coal and mineral deposits under market conditions, the latter focusing on the development of a UN classification for reserves and resources of solid fuels and mineral commodities.

The Working Party on Gas (23-25 January) reviewed developments in the gas industry and implications of reforms and restructuring in Central and Eastern Europe for gas markets and the gas industry in the region, and considered issues relating to the gas industry and the environment and the rational use of gas, including conservation and efficiency measures. It adopted the reports of its meetings of experts on natural gas resources, the use and distribution of gas and the transport and storage of gas, and decided to reinforce the role of the Gas Centre in its programme of assistance to economies in transition, as well as to update the study of gas grids, dealing with interconnections and extensions. The Working Party requested the secretariat to examine the feasibility of organizing a joint interregional symposium with ESCWA and ECA on developments and prospects of the gas industry and gas markets, as well as a symposium on the use of gaseous fuels for motor vehicles, and to explore the prospects of cooperation in implementing the European Energy Charter in the field of gas.

During 1995, seminars were organized on the gas industry and the European market economies and on gas contracting principles and practices, and a workshop was held on rehabilitation and enhancement techniques of natural gas transmission and distribution systems. Publications were issued on gas industry operations, gas pricing, rate-making and tariff design. The secretariat completed a glossary on national gas reserves, prepared a study on measures of gas conservation dealing with household gas consumption and appliances, and began developing a database and training manuals for the Gas Centre.

The Working Party on Electric Power (3-5 May) reviewed the electric power situation in the region and considered the interconnection of electric power transmission systems and problems of improving efficiency, environmental issues, and energy-related activities of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Council. It took note of the progress made on the study of prospects of natural gas demand for electric power generation and their impact on the development of natural gas and electric power industries. It asked that statistical information on national equipment plans and policies be published and a note be prepared on programmes of other organizations to support demand-side management. The Working Party approved its programme of work for 1995-1999, including a project on the regulation of electric power industry.

A symposium on coal-fired power generation, the environment and public acceptance was held in Turkey (Ankara, 30 May-1 June), and a workshop on achievement and future development of cogeneration and district heating, in Romania (Poiana Brasov, 10-12 October). A meeting of experts on electric power generation and the environment held its fifth session (Geneva, 25-26 September).

The Steering Committee of the Energy Efficiency 2000 project, at its sixth session (Geneva, 22-24 May), reviewed activities under the second phase (1994-1997) of the project and preparations for the UNDP/ECE energy efficiency demonstration zones project, and approved the proposed budget of the energy efficiency project trust fund for 1995-1996 as well as proposed project activities for 1995/96. It recommended that training courses using the manuals on financial engineering and business planning be set up for energy efficiency demonstration zone managers and that the item on harmonization of energy efficiency standards and labels throughout the ECE region be integrated in the work under the project and activities in that area be coordinated with other bodies, particularly the Working Party on Standardization Policies (see below, under "Standardization"). The Steering Committee also agreed on the transfer of activities and experience-sharing between the two projects.

Other activities during 1995 included an ad hoc meeting on business opportunities in energy efficiency demonstration zones and the conversion of military industries to the manufacture of energy-efficient technologies (Minsk, Belarus, 24-27 October), a workshop on the use of solar energy (Bet Berl, Israel, July/August), as well as symposia and trade fairs of energy-efficient technologies. An ECE/EU project was implemented on energy efficiency standards in Belarus, Bulgaria, Hungary and Ukraine, as was a UNDP/ILO/ECE project on the conversion of military bases into zones of employment, entrepreneurship and energy conservation in Belarus. The regional adviser on energy assisted economies in transition in assessing the current status and prospects of their fuel and energy complex, upgrading energy production, elaborating energy conservation policies, and selecting energy efficiency zone sites and promoting their commercialization. The secretariat continued to publish annual statistical bulletins for coal, electric energy and gas.

Agriculture

At its special session,⁽⁷⁾ the Commission considered matters relating to the future work of the Committee on Agriculture in the light of a 1994 decision by FAO to strengthen its regional and subregional offices by withdrawing staff from the regional commissions, including ECE. During the discussion, FAO reaffirmed its readiness to consider the ECE proposal to establish a new joint body to deal with agriculture issues of particular interest to the European region. The Commission decided to postpone action on the future of the Committee on Agriculture until 1996. In a related decision,⁽³²⁾ the Commission invited the Committee to adapt its 1996 programme of work to the limited ECE resources currently available for work on agriculture, pending a Commission decision on its future work in that field. The Executive Secretary was invited to continue consultations with FAO on modalities of further cooperation.

The Committee on Agriculture, at its forty-sixth session (Geneva, 20-23 November),⁽³³⁾ examined two options regarding its future status: one calling for its discontinuance, the other suggesting its merger with the FAO European Commission on Agriculture. It recommended that ECE consider the proposal for merging its activities with FAO, and adjusted its programme of work for 1995-1996 in accordance with the Commission's decision (above). The Committee also reviewed recent developments in agriculture and agricultural policies, particularly in transition countries; discussed the impact of institutions and policies relating to agricultural markets on regional trade; and considered issues relating to standardization of perishable produce and quality development, economics of the agri-food sector and farm management, relations between agriculture and the environment, and food and agricultural statistics in Europe. It accepted that the Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce and Quality Development be integrated into activities of the Committee on Development of Trade, and noted a training workshop on private farming in Eastern Europe (Rambouillet, France, 6-10 November).

The Timber Committee, at its fifty-third session (Geneva, 13-16 November),⁽³⁴⁾ reviewed activities to assist economies in transition, discussed market developments for forest products in 1995 and prospects for 1996, and considered the follow-up to UNCED and to the 1993 Helsinki Ministerial Conference on the Protection of Forests in Europe.⁽³⁵⁾ It welcomed the review by the Joint FAO/ECE/ILO Committee on Forest Technology, Management and Training of its structure, objectives, methods and programme of work, and noted a long-term strategy for Joint Committee activities, prepared by its Steering Committee (twelfth session, Geneva, 26-27 June). The Committee endorsed the report of the Joint FAO/ECE Working Party on Forest Economics and Statistics (twenty-second session, Geneva, 20-22 June), and approved the redesign of the annual Timber Bulletin, published by the secretariat. It stressed the importance of developing standard global terms and definitions for key parameters under the project on global resource assessment 2000 (temperate zone); endorsed the mandate for a team of specialists on the supply and demand of non-wood goods and services; extended for one year the mandate of the team of specialists on certification of forest products; and asked the secretariat to prepare a policy workshop on timber markets, recycling and energy generation from wood. The Committee noted the finalization of the fifth study of European timber trends and prospects (ETTS V) and requested the ECE secretariat to develop a proposal for evaluating the ETTS V process. It approved its work programme for 1996-2000, requested its office holders to propose a modified programme adapted to the new priorities and challenges and to the availability of resources, and endorsed the incorporation of its secretariat into the ECE Trade Division.

During the year, the regional adviser on forestry and forest products undertook missions to six economies in transition to identify areas for possible international cooperation, and provided assistance to facilitate follow-up to the Ministerial Conference on the Protection of Forests in Europe. Draft project outlines were developed on forest ecosystem monitoring and on establishing extension services for small-scale private forestry. An international forestry seminar (Prince George, British Columbia, Canada, 9-15 September) proposed that international guidelines be prepared for drawing up codes of practice on multiple use forestry. The secretariat issued publications on the milk and dairy products markets, the role of farmers and professional agricultural organizations as partners of Governments in policy development and implementation, prices of agricultural products and selected inputs in Europe and North America, and the human factor in agriculture, among others. It prepared a survey of the structure of the sawmilling industry in the ECE/FAO region and a country profile of forest and forest products in Armenia.

Economic analysis

The Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments, at their thirty-first session (Geneva, 19-23 June),⁽³⁶⁾ exchanged information on the development of national economies and on policies and programmes, reviewed long-term projections and perspectives for the world economy, and considered selected structural economic issues relating to trends and policies in interregional and intraregional trade, sustainable economic development, and the impact of structural changes in the region on employment, labour productivity, working patterns and income distribution. The Advisers also discussed maintaining the momentum of the recovery and mobilizing resources for sustained growth in transition economies, and adopted their programme of work for 1995-1999. They recommended that work be undertaken on macroeconomic development scenarios for the global and ECE economies and their implications for countries in transition, the relation between industrial restructuring and international trade, and access of exports from transition economies to world markets. The Advisers noted the results of a workshop on the contact zone of Bratislava-Bрно-Győr-Vienna (Bratislava, Slovakia, 17 May), dealing with transboundary cooperation in that geo-economic subregion and held in preparation for an international conference on the subject.

During 1995, ECE secretariat activities in economic analysis and projections focused on trends in transition countries, as well as on population research dealing with international and regional migration issues, fertility and family surveys, and ageing. It continued to publish the annual Economic Bulletin for Europe and prepared a study on the role of agriculture in the transition process towards a market economy.

Environment

The Commission in 1995 endorsed⁽³⁷⁾ the recommendations prepared in 1994⁽³⁸⁾ by the Committee on Environmental Policy on problems and bottlenecks in ECE activities in the field of environment and sustainable development. It noted the clarification provided to the Committee by the secretariat concerning resource implications of the draft ECE Action Plan to implement Agenda 21.⁽³⁹⁾ It also stressed the need to strengthen ECE activities in the field of environment and sustainable development, requested the Committee on Environmental Policy to make a decision concerning both the development and provision of resources for an ECE programme of country environmental performance reviews, and called on it to cooperate with the Inland Transport Committee in promoting sustainable development and preparing the Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment (see above, under "Transport"). The Commission reiterated its call for the ratification of or accession to ECE environmental conventions and their protocols, and invited its members and international organizations to consider the needs of economies in transition in implementing the provisions of the conventions.

The Committee on Environmental Policy, at its second session (Geneva, 29-31 May),⁽⁴⁰⁾ reviewed preparations for the Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe" and for the Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment, follow-up to UNCED in the ECE region, implementation of the environmental conventions pending their entry into force, and progress in specific areas of cooperation. The Committee also discussed its future role in international environmental legislation and retained the subject for further consideration. It noted reports of the Joint Working Group on Environment and Economics (fifth session, Geneva, 25-26 January) and of the workshop on interaction between privatization processes and the environment (Geneva, 23-24 January), organized by Estonia, Lithuania and Norway, as well as the results of the first session (Bilthoven, Netherlands, 13-14 March) of the European Environment and Health Committee, established in 1994⁽³⁸⁾ to implement the Environmental Health Action Plan for Europe. The Committee adopted guidelines on the prevention and control of water pollution from fertilizers and pesticides in agriculture, recommendations concerning management of hazardous chemicals, and recommendations for action by ECE Governments and EU in the implementation of the 1992 Convention on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents, pending its entry into force. It noted progress made in developing the initial ECE programme of country environmental performance reviews, including a review mission to Estonia in May, and invited its Bureau to consider a peer-review mechanism for ECE reviews, criteria for country selection and other relevant issues.

The Working Group of Senior Governmental Officials "Environment for Europe" held four sessions in Geneva in 1995 (13-15 February, 31 May-2 June, 31 July-3 August and 11-12 September). It considered substantive preparations and practical arrangements for the Ministerial Conference and prepared draft documents for the Conference.

The Third Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe" (Sofia, 23-25 October) considered measures to improve environmental conditions in transition economies as well as issues relating to harmonization and convergence of environmental policies in the region, including policies for the involvement of business and industry in securing environmentally sustainable development, conservation of biological and landscape diversity, and public participation in environmental decision-making. The Conference adopted a Ministerial Declaration reaffirming their commitment to cooperation in the field of environmental protection in Europe, welcoming the progress in implementing the Environmental Action Programme for Central and Eastern Europe, and endorsing the Environmental Programme for Europe, highlighting a number of long-term environmental priorities at a pan-European level, as well as the ECE Guidelines on Access to Environmental Information and Public Participation in Environmental Decision-Making. The Conference supported initiatives to follow up recommendations of the ECE Integrated Report on Environmental Financing, and called for better implementation of and compliance with ECE environmental conventions.

The Executive Body for the 1979 Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution, at its thirteenth session (Geneva, 28 November-1 December), adopted and approved for publication the 1995 annual review of strategies and policies for air pollution abatement and reviewed activities of the Working Groups on Strategies (Geneva, fourteenth session, 6-8 March; fifteenth session, 28-31 August), on Effects (fourteenth session, Geneva, 10-12 July) and on Technology, which did not meet in 1995. It noted progress made in developing a strategy to reduce nitrogen compounds and related substances, elaborating options for reducing emissions of ammonia and implementing activities concerning the effects of major air pollutants on human health and the environment. It agreed to begin negotiations on three protocols: a second step to the protocol on the control of nitrogen oxide emissions, and protocols on heavy metals and on persistent organic pollutants.

The Executive Body adopted the amended mandate of the Working Group on Abatement Techniques and revised mandates of the ad hoc preparatory working groups on heavy metals and on persistent organic pollutants. It established expert groups on implementation of the protocol for the control of nitrogen oxide emissions and on amendments to the technical annexes to the protocols concerning emissions of nitrogen oxides and of volatile organic compounds from mobile sources other than road vehicles. It called for harmonizing approaches and emission reduction levels concerning the air pollution from ship and air traffic, and approved for publication reports on the effects of nitrogen and ozone, on the calculation of critical loads of nitrogen as a nutrient, and on forest condition in Europe. The Executive Body considered the work of the Steering Body to the Cooperative Programme for Monitoring and Evaluation of the Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe (EMEP) (nineteenth session, Geneva, 4-6 September), and requested the Steering Body to evaluate the performance of EMEP centres. It also made decisions on long-term financing of EMEP, of the International Cooperative Programmes for the Assessment and Monitoring of Air Pollution Effects and of the Mapping Programme.

By the end of 1995, there were 40 parties to the Convention. There were 25 parties to its protocol on the control of nitrogen oxide emissions, 13 parties to its protocol on the control of emissions of volatile organic compounds, and 3 parties to its protocol on further reduction of sulphur emissions. The 1992 Convention on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes and the 1991 Convention on Environmental Impact Assessment in a Transboundary Context, whose status and implementation were reviewed in 1995 at the fourth meeting of its signatories (Geneva, 14-17 March), were expected to enter into force in 1996. The status and implementation of the 1992 Convention on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents were also reviewed in 1995 by its signatories (fourth meeting, Geneva, 8-10 February). Recommendations were made concerning: the use of the ECE accident notification system, the work of the ECE regional coordinating centres for industrial accident training and exercise (Warsaw, Poland) and the prevention of industrial accidents (Budapest, Hungary), and efforts to set up a network of relevant centres in ECE countries.

The Working Party on Water Problems held its eighth session in 1995 (Geneva, 28 February-3 March), and workshops were organized on chemical accidents (Divonne-les-Bains, France, 6-7 February) and on trends in effects of air pollution on the environment (Oslo, Norway, 15-16 March), as was a seminar on the prevention and control of groundwater pollution from the storage of chemicals and from waste disposal (Madrid, Spain, 11-15 September). The secretariat participated in the pilot OECD environmental performance review of Bulgaria, conducted the first pilot ECE review of Estonia, and selected Slovenia as the next country to be reviewed. It prepared guidelines on public participation in environmental decision-making and issued publications on effects and control of long-range transboundary air pollution and on the protection and sustainable use of waters. The regional adviser on environmental protection provided assistance in formulating projects and programmes dealing with transboundary water management and protection, industrial safety, sustainable investment in water management, and mitigation of environmental effects of the military complex and its conversion to peaceful uses.

Human settlements

At its 1995 session, the Commission reviewed preparations for the second UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held in Turkey in 1996 (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII), including the outcome of the ECE Regional Preparatory Meeting for Habitat II, organized in 1994.⁽⁴¹⁾ The Commission called⁽⁴²⁾ on the Committee on Human Settlements to provide policy guidance and practical expertise in reforming the housing and construction sector in transition countries, developing schemes for financing housing and infrastructure investments, accelerating the modernization and improving the maintenance of the housing stock, creating and improving land registration/cadastre, and developing guidelines for urban planning and the provision of local infrastructure and services.

The Committee on Human Settlements, at its fifty-sixth session (Geneva, 18-20 September),⁽⁴³⁾ noted activities of the task force established in 1994⁽⁴⁴⁾ to implement ECE preparations for Habitat II and the outcome of the fourth Meeting of Ministers Responsible for Human Settlements in Countries in Transition (Budapest, 13-14 June), and adopted a document entitled "Towards sustainable human settlements development in the ECE region" as the regional contribution to Habitat II. It requested the task force to pursue the preparatory process and welcomed in principle the proposal to hold, in conjunction with the Conference, one or more special events on key issues of Committee activity.

The Committee reviewed the human settlements situation and trends and activities relating to sustainable human settlements planning and management, policies on urban renewal and housing modernization, cadastre and land registration systems, and human settlements statistics. It endorsed guidelines on sustainable human settlements planning and management, strategies to implement human settlements policies on renewal and modernization, and land administration guidelines, prepared by its task forces, and agreed to set up a task force on a framework of activities to promote sustainable human settlements development. The Committee also noted progress made in the project on country profiles of the housing sector and decided to prepare a glossary on housing finance and related policy issues and a study on major trends influencing human settlements development, and to publish the revised ECE compendium of model provisions for building regulations. Acting on the recommendations of the expert meeting on human settlements problems in southern Europe (Bucharest, Romania, 4-6 September), the Committee confirmed the necessity to continue convening such meetings, approved its synthesis report and agreed to include it with the regional contribution to Habitat II.

In 1995, the Working Parties on Housing Development, Modernization and Management and on Sustainable Human Settlements Planning held their third sessions in Geneva (10-12 May and 22-24 May, respectively). They considered housing financing; country profiles of the housing sector; housing statistics and urban indicators; cadastre and land registration systems; promotion of sustainable human settlements policies; implementation of policies for the renewal and modernization of human settlements; major trends influencing human settlements development; and management of real property and land information systems. In September, the Committee on Human Settlements endorsed their reports.

During the year, the secretariat published the annual bulletin of housing and building statistics for Europe and North America, and a number of workshops were held on cadastre and land registration and on urban renewal and housing modernization.

Standardization

The Working Party on Standardization Policies, at its fifth session (Geneva, 22-24 May),⁽⁴⁴⁾ reviewed developments in the field of standardization, including coordination, harmonization, conformity assessment and metrology in testing, and agreed on its revised terms of reference and the change of its title to the Working Party on Technical Harmonization and Standardization Policies. It noted the establishment of a list of contact points within ECE member States for information on national standards documentation, conformity assessment procedures and metrology, as well as progress made in the fourth revision of the ECE standardization list and in the elaboration of harmonized international standards for calibration and testing, inspection, codification, and accreditation of laboratories. The Working Party also considered possible cooperation with the group of experts on energy efficiency standards under the "Energy Efficiency 2000" project (see above, under "Energy"), and adopted its programme of work for 1995-1999, including a new element on quality policy and competitiveness.

A first training seminar on metrology was organized in Paris in March, and a workshop on quality assurance was held in Iasi, Romania, in May. At an October meeting of office-bearers, coordinators and rapporteurs, agreement was reached on a study of the possibility of transforming some ECE recommendations on standardization policies into more binding legal forms, such as intergovernmental agreements.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians, at its forty-third session (Geneva, 12-15 June),⁽⁴⁵⁾ considered an integrated presentation of international statistical work in the ECE region, dealing with the organization and operation of statistical services, technical infrastructure and other cross-cutting issues, economic statistics, social and demographic statistics, natural resources and environment statistics, dissemination and support for secretariat activities, and its future work. The Conference also reviewed issues relating to ECE statistical publications, the analytical use of national statistics at the international level, the statistical treatment of persons on leave, data protection, and possible statistical description of the effects of ongoing integration processes in Europe. It approved planned activities of the ECE secretariat under a UNDP-funded project on the development of social and demographic statistics in economies in transition, launched in 1995; requested its Bureau to consider including in its programme of work a project on statistical services in the Mediterranean region and to examine the possibility of international coordination in tourism statistics; urged accelerated harmonization of concepts on migration statistics, including statistics on refugees; suggested that higher priority be given to work on classifications in environment statistics and physical environmental accounting; and urged statistical institutes to make better use of available statistics to describe the situation of youth. The Conference approved its programme of work for 1995/96 and 1996/97 and agreed to consider new statistical and analytical approaches to labour market dynamics as a substantive topic in 1996.

The Joint ECE/OECD Meeting on National Accounts (Paris, 9-12 May) reviewed the implementation of the 1993 System of National Accounts (see PART FOUR, Chapter XV) and other related issues, including accounting for the hidden economy. Among other activities during the year were meetings on energy statistics, consumer price indices, food and agricultural statistics and gender statistics. The Working Parties on Transport Statistics and on Electronic Data Processing also held sessions in 1995. The secretariat published the first volume of the Statistical Yearbook of the ECE—Trends in Europe and North America, 1995, as well as a volume of gender-specific statistics in Europe and North America for 1995, and continued to issue the Statistical Journal. The regional adviser on economic statistics assisted 13 countries in transition in implementing the system of national accounts, improving the quality of basic data used for the estimation of major macroeconomic aggregates, and accounting for the hidden economy.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean did not meet in 1995. In accordance with a 1994 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽¹⁾ the Commission's twenty-sixth session was to be held in San Jose, Costa Rica, in 1996.

Economic trends

According to a summary of the 1995 economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean,⁽²⁾ the region's economic panorama during the year was dominated by three features: the financial crisis in Mexico, which had begun at the end of 1994 and produced major after-effects in Argentina; consolidation of the stabilization programme in Brazil; and the similarity of economic performance in other countries to that of 1994, characterized by moderate growth rates, moderate and diminishing inflation, large current account deficits covered by external capital, and low domestic savings rates. Due to the Mexican financial crisis, which caused an economic contraction of 7 per cent in Mexico and of 2.5 per cent in Argentina, the region's GDP grew by a mere 0.6 per cent, compared with 4.6 per cent in 1994, marking a pause in the recovery begun in 1991. Per capita GDP fell by 1.1 per cent, in contrast to the increases of the four preceding years. However, excluding those two countries, regional output recorded a gain of slightly more than 4 per cent—nearly equal to the 1994 level, the highest in 15 years.

The economies of four countries expanded by more than 5 per cent—8 per cent in Chile, 7.5 per cent in Peru, 6.5 per cent in El Salvador and somewhat more than 5 per cent in Colombia. Four other countries recovered after the poor results of previous years, their growth rates ranging from 2 per cent in Venezuela to 3.5 per cent in Haiti and Honduras and 4 per cent in Nicaragua. GDP rose by some 5 per cent in the Dominican Republic, 4.5 per cent in Guatemala, 4 per cent in Brazil, 3.5 per cent in Bolivia, 3 per cent in Panama and in Trinidad and Tobago, 2.5 per cent in Costa Rica and in Ecuador, 2 per cent in Barbados, and 0.5 per cent in Jamaica. Economic activity in Cuba increased by 2.5 per cent, owing to the growth in manufacturing, tourist and electricity services, mining, non-sugar agriculture and construction; however, the deep economic crisis, which had persisted there for several years, continued.

Apart from Argentina and Mexico, which were affected by a sharp devaluation of the local currency, a reversal of capital inflows and the resultant decline in domestic demand and in aggregate output, Uruguay was the only other country to have registered a drop in GDP, of around 1.5 per cent, attributable to the steep decline in demand from Argentina and the abrupt downturn in domestic demand as a result of fiscal adjustment. Per capita GDP also fell in those three countries and in Jamaica, and remained unchanged in Venezuela; however, despite relatively high population growth rates, it increased by 3 per cent or more in Chile, Colombia, El Salvador and Peru, and by between 1 per cent and 3 per cent in the rest of the region. At the subregional level, the growth rate dropped to 2.9 per cent in South America, down from 5.1 per cent in 1994, but rose to 3.4 per cent in Central America and the Caribbean, compared to 2.5 per cent in the previous year.

With Brazil recording a marked decline in its annual inflation rate—to 22 per cent, down from 129 per cent in 1994 and 489 per cent in 1993—inflation in the region as a whole plummeted to 25 per cent in 1995, from 340 per cent in 1994 and 890 per cent in 1993. The consumer price index fell or remained stable in 17 of the 22 countries observed; apart from Mexico, where inflation accelerated from 7.1 per cent in 1994 to 48.5 per cent in 1995, it grew only in three countries, compared with the previous year: from 8.5 per cent to 10.7 per cent in Bolivia, from 8.9 per cent to 11.4 per cent in El Salvador, and from 19.9 per cent to 24.9 per cent in Costa Rica. In other countries, inflation rates varied from less than 2 per cent in Argentina, Barbados and Panama and less than 10 per cent in Chile, Guatemala and Trinidad and Tobago to between 11 per cent and 16 per cent in the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Nicaragua, Paraguay and Peru, and between 20 per cent and 30 per cent in Colombia, Ecuador, Haiti and Honduras. Although below the 1994 level, inflation remained high in Venezuela, at 52.9 per cent, and in Uruguay, at 36.8 per cent.

The decline in economic growth had a considerable impact on labour markets. The regional open unemployment rate increased from 6.4 per cent in 1994 to 7.4 per cent in 1995, rising significantly in Argentina, Mexico and Venezuela. Real wages stagnated or fell in most countries; in Mexico, they had fallen by 13 per cent up to July. At the same time, average and minimum wages went up in real terms by some 4 per cent in Chile, and unemployment rates decreased, albeit modestly, in Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Peru.

As in the previous year, terms of trade improved in most of Latin America and the Caribbean—rising by 1.8 per cent, against the 2.7 per cent increase in 1994—owing largely to higher commodity prices. Chile, Colombia, Honduras and Peru registered increases of 10 to 12 per cent, while the Dominican Republic and El Salvador improved their terms of trade by 14.4 per cent and 15.7 per cent, respectively. On the other hand, terms of trade stagnated in Brazil and declined in Bolivia, Ecuador, Mexico, Panama and Uruguay. Regional merchandise exports expanded by 10.5 per cent in volume and by 23 per cent in value—the highest value growth since 1980, with Argentina and Mexico accounting for 60 per cent of the increase. In addition to those countries, the value of exports grew by more than 30 per cent in Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti and Nicaragua; on the other hand, growth rates were less than 10 per cent in Bolivia, Brazil, Panama, Paraguay and Uruguay. The unit value of exports rose in all countries, increasing by 11.1 per cent for the region as a whole, compared with 6.6 per cent in 1994.

Due to the positive evolution of prices and export quantities, the value of regional imports reached $220 billion—a record high and up from $174 billion in the previous year; however, the rate of increase was 12 per cent, lower than the 1994 level of 18.5 per cent. Excluding Argentina and Mexico, where imports declined by, respectively, 10 per cent and 7.7 per cent in value and 17.4 per cent and 14.9 per cent in volume, the growth rate stood at 33 per cent. Much of the increase was attributable to the success of the stabilization plan and a growing demand in Brazil, which expanded its imports by 51 per cent in value and by 36.7 per cent in volume, compared with a respective 28.8 per cent and 24.9 per cent in 1994. The value of imports also expanded by more than 30 per cent in Chile, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Peru and Venezuela, owing variously to such factors as a fast-growing domestic demand, exchange-rate appreciation, or a surge in industrial activity.

The unit value of imports rose by 9.1 per cent in 1995, up from 3.6 per cent in 1994, while import volume for the region as a whole grew by only 2.8 per cent, compared to 14.3 per cent in the previous year. In addition to Argentina and Mexico, the volume of imports declined or remained unchanged in Bolivia, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay and Uruguay. As export growth outstripped slower growing imports, the region's balance of merchandise trade showed a surplus of $2.3 billion for the first time since 1991. Significant surpluses accumulated by Argentina and Mexico more than offset the shift in the opposite direction in Brazil, which swung from a $10 billion surplus in 1994 to a $3 billion deficit in 1995. In addition, the regional deficit of net service payments was reduced from nearly $27 billion in 1994 to some $6 billion in 1995.

Latin America's current account deficit declined to $34.5 billion, from some $50 billion in the previous year, due entirely to the improved balance of goods and services. All countries except the Dominican Republic and Venezuela registered a deficit; Venezuela's considerable surplus of 1994 dropped by more than half, from $4.1 billion to $1.7 billion. The deficit was reduced from $10.2 billion in 1994 to $3.3 billion in 1995 in Argentina and from $28.9 billion to $0.2 billion in Mexico, but ballooned in Brazil from $1.7 billion to $17.9 billion.

Net capital inflows to the region, not including exceptional financial assistance provided to Argentina and Mexico to mitigate the consequences of the financial crisis, declined to $22.4 billion in 1995, compared to some $45 billion in 1994. However, excluding outflows from Mexico and Venezuela, the region's capital account balance was $43 billion. Capital inflows increased substantially to Brazil, which received $28 billion, up from $9 billion in 1994. According to the 1995 preliminary overview of the Latin American and Caribbean economy,⁽²⁾ Colombia's net inflows increased from $3 billion to $4.2 billion—a record figure for that country, with more than half in direct investment, while those in Peru remained at the previous year's exceptional level of $4.6 billion. At the same time, Argentina and Mexico recorded net outflows of $0.4 billion and $16.9 billion, respectively, after inflows of some $11 billion each in 1994. The capital flight also continued from Venezuela, with outflows totalling $3.7 billion—lower than the 1994 outflow of $4.9 billion.

During the year, all countries had to adjust their macroeconomic policy in response to the Mexican financial crisis. In addition to Mexico, the solvency of the financial system was jeopardized in Argentina, Brazil, Ecuador, Nicaragua, Paraguay and Venezuela. Despite the diversity of prevailing economic climates, the achievement of domestic price stability and fiscal equilibrium remained a priority in all countries. Mexico changed its exchange-rate policy, allowing the local currency to float; Brazil and Ecuador adopted flotation band systems; and Honduras implemented an auction mechanism with intervention by its central bank.

External debt

In 1995, the external debt of Latin America and the Caribbean approached $574 billion, an increase of 7.5 per cent over 1994, attributable mainly to a 14 per cent growth in Brazil and a 12.7 per cent growth in Mexico, after respective increases of only 1.8 per cent and 6.2 per cent in the previous year. Rates of increase declined significantly in a number of countries, including from 15.6 per cent in 1994 to 6.4 per cent in 1995 in Colombia, from 14.4 per cent to 0.3 per cent in Uruguay, from 11.6 per cent to 5 per cent in Bolivia, and from 10.1 per cent to 2.4 per cent in Argentina. Several other countries reduced their debt: Guatemala by 0.3 per cent, after the 1994 growth of 3.4 per cent; Chile and Ecuador by almost 5 per cent, having increased it by 11.3 per cent and 7 per cent, respectively, in the previous year; Nicaragua by some 11 per cent, compared to a 6.4 per cent rise in 1994. The Dominican Republic's debt continued to decline, dropping by 10.8 per cent in 1995, but grew in the rest of the region at rates ranging from 1.1 per cent in Jamaica and 1.8 per cent in Haiti to between 3 per cent and 5 per cent in Guyana, Honduras, Panama, Paraguay and Peru, and between 6 per cent and 7 per cent in Costa Rica, El Salvador and Trinidad and Tobago.

The regional debt burden continued the downward trend of several years. The ratio of total interest due to exports of goods and services, although unchanged at 16 per cent for the region as a whole, went down in most countries, except Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Haiti and Uruguay, which experienced a moderate rise. That indicator was below 10 per cent in Chile, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala and Paraguay, and between 14 per cent and 17 per cent in Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Uruguay and Venezuela. The highest ratios were in Nicaragua (80 per cent), Peru (32 per cent), Argentina (23 per cent) and Brazil (22 per cent). At the same time, the debt/export ratio fell from 250 per cent in 1994 to 220 per cent in 1995, the lowest level since 1980, including drops from 448 per cent to 392 per cent in Peru, from 439 per cent to 346 per cent in Argentina, from 348 per cent to 300 per cent in Honduras, and from 327 per cent to 272 per cent in Ecuador. In seven countries (Chile, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Paraguay, Uruguay), external debt was practically equal to or less than the annual level of exports of goods and services. The ratio continued to improve in Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela, but remained high at 1,664 per cent in Nicaragua, despite a substantial reduction from 1994.

During the year, most of the region's heavily indebted countries renegotiated their external debt. Panama signed an agreement to restructure its commercial external debt, while Peru reached a preliminary restructuring agreement. Nicaragua repurchased 80 per cent of its debt at 7 per cent of its nominal value, using funds from the Inter-American Development Bank, the World Bank and a number of European Governments. Bolivia, Haiti and Nicaragua signed agreements to restructure their bilateral debt, and Honduras was also negotiating a restructuring. However, while those measures brought some relief to the most indebted countries, the level of their debt burden still remained high.

Activities in 1995

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

According to the report on Commission activities between its 1994 and 1996 sessions,⁽⁴⁾ the ECLAC Economic Development Division in 1995 continued to monitor economic trends in the region, as reflected in its annual publications—Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, Economic Panorama of Latin America and Preliminary Overview of the Economy of Latin America and the Caribbean. The Division continued to study the distributive aspects of economic development, including the effects of adjustment processes on income distribution and the effectiveness of government policies for changing production patterns and promoting sustainable development and social equity. Seminars, workshops and meetings were held on fiscal policy, stabilization and adjustment, privatization in Bolivia and Nicaragua, fiscal decentralization and decentralized management in the region, and decentralizing and financing social spending on education and health services. Training courses were offered on fiscal decentralization in Latin America, statistics on regional trade and external finances, and financial relations between the central Government and territorial entities.

The Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Development (CLADES), which focused on strengthening the management of information and documentation for development, continued to provide technical assistance to Governments and to publish the periodicals PLANINDEX and Informativo Terminológico. The Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) conducted international and related national courses on development issues, advisory assistance missions to Governments and to academic institutions, a seminar on economic reforms and strategic public management and a workshop on the public decision-making process and resource allocation. The Institute's activities were reviewed at the seventeenth meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Council for Planning (Caracas, Venezuela, 28-29 August), which considered the proposed work programme of ILPES for 1996 and its financial situation in 1994-1996, as well as matters relating to the public decision-making process in the region. Following the meeting's recommendation, the publication of the Boletín del Instituto was resumed at the end of September.

Activities in the area of regional integration and cooperation included publications dealing with the Latin American economic integration process, technical cooperation assistance to Governments and integration agencies, and seminars on complementarity of production between members of the Southern Common Market (MERCOSUR), the social dimension of regional integration, and development of trade between Latin America and EU.

Industrial, scientific and technological development

The Joint ECLAC/UNIDO Industrial and Technological Development Unit focused on the industrial restructuring process and policy formulation to enhance competitiveness of Latin American and Caribbean countries. It continued to provide technical assistance on policies for export promotion, human resources development and technological innovation and dissemination, as well as on the design of industrial policies and modernization of business associations. Studies were produced on interactions between micro- and macroeconomics and on the automobile, pharmaceutical, petrochemical and pulp and paper industries in selected countries. Computer programs were developed to evaluate the export competitiveness of individual countries and industrial performance in the region; 13 training course-workshops were conducted on the use of the programs. International seminars were held on industrial policy, successful experiences in government-private sector cooperation, and the new role of business associations in the development of production. Training courses were offered on structural adjustment in the region, innovation theory and technological change, industrial analysis of paper and pulp, and the Cuban pharmaceuticals industry. To promote the exchange of information on restructuring and industrial policy, a regional network of researchers in that field was established.

As part of a joint ECLAC/International Development Research Centre (IDRC) project, a conference was held on productivity, technological change and mechanisms for innovation in Latin America in the 1990s. Other activities included a national forum on competitive industrial development in Venezuela, a meeting on restructuring public institutions, and publication of the Desarrollo Productivo series on restructuring and competitiveness.

International trade and development finance

During 1995, ECLAC activities to foster the continued expansion and improvement of the region's commercial links with the world economy included a seminar on new developments in and promotional strategies for foreign direct investment in Latin America, and publications on the agricultural agreement reached in 1994 in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations,⁽⁵⁾ the world market for bananas, Latin American exports of fish products, trade liberalization and growth in Chile and Uruguay, measures to attract foreign capital, trade in services, the region's economic relations with China and EU, and trade relations between Latin American and Eastern European countries. In addition, training courses were offered on the theory of international trade and monetary and financial policy, the region's linkages with the global economy, capital movements, and international trade statistics.

In the area of development finance, work began on a project dealing with reforms of health systems financing, and an expert workshop was held on a methodology for evaluating the distributive consequences of macroeconomic policies. Case studies of Argentina, Brazil and Colombia were completed under a new project on income distribution and recent stabilization and adjustment policies. Studies commenced on regulation and supervision of financial conglomerates, the access of low- and medium-income strata to housing finance, and financial institutions and capital formation in the region. National seminars were held on policies to support financing of small firms in Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica and Ecuador, and training courses on public policies, economic reforms and strategic public management.

New developments and initiatives in international trade and development finance continued to be reflected in ECLAC periodic publications, such as CEPAL News and Financiamiento del desarrollo.

Natural resources and energy

Activities of the ECLAC Natural Resources and Energy Unit in the areas of water, marine and mineral resources, hazardous wastes and energy focused on institutional management issues; defining the role of the State, particularly with regard to privatization and regulation; the design and application of public policies for integrated natural resources management; and the regional implementation of international environmental agreements, such as Agenda 21.⁽⁶⁾ National seminars were held on energy and development in Chile, Colombia and El Salvador; regional seminars on private-sector participation in water utilities and on the role of new and renewable sources of energy, such as geothermal energy, in sustainable development of the region; and an expert group meeting on the implementation of Agenda 21 concerning integrated water resources management. Training courses were offered on management of watersheds and coastal areas, sustainable development models and their applications, natural resources management, and methods and models for determining energy requirements. Advisory services were provided on coastal management, mining operations, and the application of international regulations concerning biodiversity, transportation of hazardous products and wastes, high-seas fisheries, seabed regime, and protection of marine resources. Studies were made on those issues and information in a mining databank was compiled and updated.

Transport

The work of ECLAC in the field of transport concentrated on research, technical cooperation and institutional support in the areas of railways operation, road maintenance, port management, and urban transport. Technical assistance was provided to Governments within the framework of the Operational Network of Regional Cooperation among Maritime Authorities in South America, Mexico and Panama. Cooperation projects were carried out with the Central American Bank for Economic Integration in preparing guidelines for its investments in port infrastructure and services in Central American countries. Assistance was extended to regional organizations in, inter alia, drafting international agreements on land and multimodal transport. ECLAC organized a seminar on public works in Chile and an expert meeting concerning the impact of ports on the exporting process, and continued to publish its Boletín FAL on the facilitation of trade and transport in the region.

Social development

In 1995, the ECLAC Social Development Division, acting as the regional coordinating centre for youth and social policy activities in the UN system, completed regional preparations for the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen, Denmark, in March (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX). The 1995 edition of the Social Panorama of Latin America was prepared, describing recent social trends in the region, and the Políticas sociales series on social policies continued to be published. A project was launched to assess the impact of social policies and the progress made by Latin American countries in the socio-economic sphere. A high-level expert meeting was convened on coordination of social and economic policies in the region. Governments were assisted in the formulation and evaluation of social programmes and projects, and training courses offered on the social impact of recent economic changes in Latin America, social effects of economic globalization in the region, and poverty and social policies.

Activities in the area of youth focused on strengthening inter-agency action on youth issues and conducting research on policies regarding youth, particularly from rural areas. The Division analysed educational policies designed to reduce inequalities in the opportunities available to youth from different social backgrounds, and studied alternatives for improving both the quality and equity of the educational system, which was the subject of several meetings and a new research project. Seminars were held on the social dimension of regional integration on adolescent health and on economic and social development policies in Latin America, the Russian Federation and several European countries.

Integration of women

The Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean (twenty-first meeting, Santiago, Chile, 3-4 July)⁽⁷⁾ reviewed regional and national preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing, September) (see PART FOUR, Chapter X). They analysed the Regional Programme of Action for the Women of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1995-2001, adopted in 1994⁽⁸⁾ as a regional contribution to the World Conference.

During the year, the ECLAC Women and Development Unit continued to study the situation of women in the region with regard to work, education, health, political participation, violence and human resource training, among other matters. Its activities were geared in particular towards strengthening regional cooperation and improving coordination among ECLAC members and with NGOs and the UN system, and aimed at promoting integration of women in development.

Environment

The Joint ECLAC/UNEP Development and Environment Unit focused on the application of economic policy instruments for environmental management and sustainable development in Latin American and Caribbean countries, international trade and the environment, and environmentally sound waste management. Activities were carried out in Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala and Mexico to identify socio-economic factors affecting soil erosion, deforestation, declining biodiversity and deterioration of inland waters, and to recommend economic policy instruments to deal with those processes. A regional symposium was held on environmental information and indicators, and a seminar on economic instruments for environmental management in the region. A publication was issued on free trade agreements and environmental issues, and assistance provided to Argentina, Colombia and Chile in formulating waste management policies, with an emphasis on the institutional and legal framework, technological policy and urban planning.

Human settlements

The ECLAC/UNCHS Unit on Human Settlements began the second phase of a project on urban management in selected medium-sized cities of Latin America, and launched a new project dealing with changing production patterns in the region's housing sector. Under the new project, two subregional seminars were held during the year—at La Paz, Bolivia in August, and Havana, Cuba, in December. Technical studies were prepared on the design of indicators and models as an aid to decision-making in human settlements and on the development of corresponding statistical bases for the region.

In preparation for the UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held in Turkey in 1996 (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII), a regional meeting was held in November to review regional trends in human settlements and to adopt a common position before the Conference. The meeting adopted⁽⁹⁾ a Regional Plan of Action on Human Settlements, containing recommendations for action in achieving social equity and alleviating urban poverty, raising the productivity of human settlements for improving the quality of life, improving the human settlements environment, as well as governability and participation, and increasing the efficiency of urban and housing policy and management.

In conjunction with that meeting, the fourth Regional Meeting of Ministers and High-level Authorities of the Housing and Urban Development Sector of Latin America and the Caribbean was held on 16 and 17 November to review progress made in such areas as sectoral statistics, institutional structure, financing of housing and urban services, land management, and housing technology and production. The Meeting agreed to initiate new activities relating to, inter alia, housing subsidies, decentralization, urban poverty and monitoring of housing policies.

Population

ECLAC population activities were organized around the areas of population and development, demographic analysis and projections, processing of population data and documentation, and training and special programmes. They were designed to reflect the integrated perspective of changing production patterns with social equity, as well as the Latin American and Caribbean Regional Plan of Action on Population and Development, approved in 1994⁽¹⁰⁾ as a regional contribution to the International Conference on Population and Development held that year.⁽¹¹⁾

Seminars and workshops were organized on information concerning population and poverty for social programmes, future trends in mortality and the application of a population database programme. Training activities included a fifth post-graduate course on population and development under the UNFPA Global Programme of Training in Population and Development and the eighteenth intensive regional course on demographic analysis for development. The Latin American Demographic Centre continued to: provide technical assistance and advisory services to national public-sector organizations; collaborate with universities, public institutions, NGOs and international organizations in the training of national officials and in the exchange of teachers and research fellows; and conduct research and issue publications on population issues, including periodicals such as DOCPAL: Latin American Population Abstracts, and Notas de Población.

Food and agriculture

The ECLAC Agricultural Development Unit focused on policy formulation for transforming agricultural production in the region, as well as promoting the socio-economic integration of small- and medium-scale farmers into agro-industry. National seminars on the latter subject were held during the year in Colombia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Peru, and Trinidad and Tobago. Case studies and thematic studies were prepared on agro-industrial relations and the transformation of agriculture, national systems of technological innovation in agriculture, and technological applications in the forestry sector and in agricultural markets. In addition, information continued to be compiled and analysed on biotechnology research, land and labour markets, and agricultural situations and policies outside the region.

Statistics and economic projections

The ECLAC Statistics and Economic Projections Division continued to analyse the region's position in the global economy, carry out activities to expand the regional network of statistical information and regional cooperation in statistics, and undertake studies on Latin American and Caribbean development. Thematic databases were used, and a system of retrieval and analysis of information from the External Trade Data Bank for Latin America and the Caribbean was set up.

Special emphasis was placed on implementation of the revised System of National Accounts (SNA 1993) (see PART FOUR, Chapter XV). A seminar was organized on dissemination of statistical information (3-7 July) and an expert group meeting was held on international price comparison in the framework of SNA 1993 (4-7 December). Technical cooperation projects focused on household surveys, social policies and programmes, and production of basic statistics, including environmental and poverty statistics and indicators. Studies were undertaken on outside factors affecting the evolution of Latin American and Caribbean economies and on potential economic growth trends for individual countries and the region as a whole. National macroeconomic projections were updated and the regional economy monitored in the context of Project Link, which coordinated world economic projections.

Transnational corporations

The Joint ECLAC/UNCTAD Unit on TNCs carried out activities concerning transnational corporations relating to information, economic research and technical cooperation. Work continued on development of an electronic system for a statistical database on foreign investment, and research was conducted on economic and institutional reforms and the investment process in major national and transnational companies. The contribution of TNCs to industrial restructuring and international competitiveness was analysed, and a study prepared on industrial restructuring and the role of TNCs in Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Mexico. Comparative studies were also conducted on the legal and contractual framework of the petroleum sectors in Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela and Mexico, as well as on foreign investment and technology transfer in several countries of Asia and Latin America.

Technical cooperation and assistance

During the year, the ECLAC Programme Planning and Operations Division completed 21 regional, 2 subregional and 24 country projects financed from extrabudgetary funds. It launched 22 new projects, 8 of which were completed in 1995; an additional 17 were in progress. New regional and subregional projects focused on decentralization of fiscal policy and management, environmentally sound waste management, health systems financing reform, improvement of the petroleum supply to Central America, trade and investment promotion, public financing and provision of social services, human resources training in development planning, urban management in selected medium-sized cities, study of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), and social policies evaluation, support and promotion. Agreements were concluded between ECLAC and the Latin American Confederation of Pulp and Paper Industry, the municipality of La Plata in Argentina, and universities in Chile and Colombia. Country projects dealt with support for regional planning in Bolivia, business development strategies and the 1994 economic census in Argentina, regional development in Brazil, and local development and a project and operations bank in Colombia.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

The Programme Planning and Operations Division continued to carry out activities within the framework of the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries.⁽¹²⁾ Its efforts focused on the incorporation of TCDC elements in projects to strengthen national institutions, establish and support cooperation networks, improve information systems to expedite the match-up of technical cooperation supply and demand between countries, and consolidate national TCDC focal points. The Division also supported seminars and technical meetings to exchange experiences, prepared studies to identify opportunities for cooperation, and facilitated provision of services by local experts and consultants.

ECLAC collaborated with the Latin American Economic System (SELA) and UNDP within the framework of a regional coordination mechanism for TCDC. In that context, a cooperation project was carried out on instruments and mechanisms to create linkages between the private and public sectors; the project results pertaining to instruments of support to SMEs led to a joint SELA/UNDP initiative on intraregional cooperation in that area. The Commission also continued to publish the newsletter Cooperation and Development.

In 1995, TCDC issues were considered at the tenth meeting of national directors for international technical cooperation in March, which adopted the Montevideo (Uruguay) Declaration in support of TCDC subject areas and projects proposed for the next UNDP regional programming cycle (see PART FOUR, Chapter II), as well as at the eleventh meeting of the Coordination Mechanism for Regional Bodies and Forums Engaged in TCDC Activities (Montevideo, 15-17 May).

Subregional activities

Caribbean

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean, located in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, continued to analyse socio-economic development in the subregion and to support activities of subregional bodies, including the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee (CDCC) and the Caribbean Council for Science and Technology (CCST). High priority was accorded to promoting cooperation in functional and sectoral areas both among CDCC member States and between them and other Latin American countries. In that context, assistance was provided for the establishment of the Association of Caribbean States. The subregional headquarters carried out preparatory and follow-up activities with regard to global conferences organized under UN auspices, and assisted Governments in conducting research on issues relating to environmentally sustainable development programmes, as well as in formulating their science and technology and population policies, and in analysing census data and population projections.

Studies were prepared on socio-economic and sustainable development issues, public sector reform, structural adjustment and privatization policies in the subregion. New databases were established on intra-CDCC trade, social statistics and environmental data. Expert group meetings took place on population and development (Bahamas, 3-5 May) and on the implementation of the Programme of Action for Small Island Developing Countries (Port of Spain, 17-19 May) (see PART FOUR, Chapter I), as did a workshop for ECLAC/CDCC focal points and seminars on agro-industry and small-scale agriculture and on the promotion of competitiveness. The bulletin External Sector Briefing Notes and the Focus newsletter were issued.

ECLAC activities in the Caribbean were reviewed at the seventh meeting of the CDCC Monitoring Committee and at the thirteenth session of CCST (Cuba, 22-27 September).

Mexico and Central America

The activities of the ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico City continued to focus on the analysis of economic change experienced during the year by Central American countries, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Mexico. Efforts were made to elaborate on various aspects of the integrated approach and the concept of open regionalism as development options for the subregion. The subregional headquarters also supported integration efforts of Central American organizations, such as the Central American Bank for Economic Integration and the Central American Economic Cooperation Committee (CCE). ECLAC convened a special consultation meeting of CCE (Mexico City, 10 March) and its eleventh regular meeting (Guatemala City, 28-29 September) to exchange ideas and review the progress made in the areas of open regionalism and effective protection in Central America, hemispheric integration, and investment and its links with trade.

Technical cooperation activities dealt with macroeconomic policy, institutional change, national accounts, non-traditional agricultural exports, assessment of industrial competitiveness and electrical integration. A seminar was held on the role of investment and financing in changing production patterns in Central America (Tegucigalpa, Honduras, 3 and 4 July), and an expert meeting took place (Mexico City, May) on the issue of social security. Studies were prepared on the status of women in relation to human resources, poverty, the urban informal sector and the "maquiladora" industry; the effects of the North American Free Trade Agreement on the economies of the subregion; and public investment. Privatization programmes, industrial development and the food situation were other areas of concern.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴⁾ on 18 September on cooperation between the UN and the Latin American Economic System, reiterating that collaboration between the two organizations had intensified over the years since the establishment of SELA in 1975 and had become more diversified in terms of both the activities and the participation of UN bodies.

Some essential activities were carried out jointly with ECLAC, which participated in SELA meetings and supported various SELA projects, particularly those on integrated social policies, demographics, training in information management, international trade, and industrial policy. A meeting of experts was held under a joint project for coordination of economic and social policies in the region (Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, 21-23 June), and a working mechanism was established for convening an annual meeting of trade policy officials. The two organizations launched a cooperative project to identify and describe the current status of industrial policy in countries in the region.

FAO continued to collaborate with SELA through action committees dealing with marine and freshwater products, fertilizers, the economic and social development of Central America, and plant genetic resources. The two organizations discussed establishing a cooperation framework for the regional programme on vegetal germplasm and the project on biotechnology and food security. Cooperation also continued with ILO, which participated in the dialogue of high-level government officials on new orientations for international macroeconomic coordination and gave lectures on labour-market issues and changing production patterns and on competitiveness concepts and labour costs. SELA received technical assistance from the International Maritime Organization (IMO) in the area of shipping, and was finalizing a cooperation agreement with the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD).

UNESCO participated in a regional meeting on challenges of urban youth, co-sponsored by SELA (Caracas, 12-13 June). A network of Latin American economic dailies was initiated under the UNESCO-SELA agreement on communication for integration, and UNESCO links were established with projects for the development of the regional handicraft industry. UNESCO continued to cooperate with SELA in the area of intellectual property, as did the World Intellectual Property Organization.

UNIDO was involved in follow-up to the Regional Forum on Industrial Policy in Latin America and the Caribbean, held in October 1994, through the work of the Coordination Committee established on the Forum's recommendation. It attended an inter-agency meeting on investment promotion and technological innovation and a regional meeting on human resources training in support of processes to modernize production and competitiveness. Agreement was reached on activities to promote the development of the handicraft sector in the region. A joint meeting was being organized on privatization processes in Latin America. SELA was preparing a new initiative on privatization, supported by the World Bank.

UNDP collaborated with SELA in identifying and improving mechanisms to facilitate economic links and industrial modernization among SELA members; a series of studies and meetings were conducted on trade and the environment, industrialization and technological development, and integration and regional cooperation. Cooperation with UNCTAD was aimed at implementing the LATINTRADE project, disseminating the Uruguay Round results and identifying new business opportunities, modernizing and updating legislative and regulatory frameworks for trade relations, as well as improving information management, human resources development and training, and institution-building, national administration and coordination mechanisms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/14.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/6 of 21 October 1994 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 18 September 1995 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Bearing in mind the Agreement between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System, in which the parties agree to strengthen and expand their cooperation in matters which are of common concern in the field of their respective competence pursuant to their constitutional instruments,

Considering that the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean has developed ties of cooperation with the Latin American Economic System which have grown stronger in recent years,

Bearing in mind also that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System has carried out several programmes with the support of the United Nations Development Programme in areas that are considered of priority for the economic development of the region,

Considering also that the Latin American Economic System is developing joint activities with the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis of the Secretariat, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the International Telecommunication Union,

Welcoming the continued monitoring of changes in the treatment of topics relating to the United Nations system, in close contact with the delegations of the Member States participating in such deliberations,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Urges the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to continue broadening and deepening its coordination and mutual support activities with the Latin American Economic System;
3. Urges the United Nations Development Programme to strengthen and expand its support to the programmes that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System is carrying out, aimed at complementing the technical assistance activities conducted by the Latin American Economic System;
4. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their support for, and cooperation in the activities of, the Latin American Economic System;
5. Requests both the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Permanent Secretary of the Latin American Economic System to assess, at the appropriate time, the implementation of the Agreement between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/14

15 November 1995 Meeting 60 Adopted without vote
28-nation draft (A/50/L.16); agenda item 25.

Western Asia

In accordance with a 1994 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia held its eighteenth session in Beirut, Lebanon, on 24 and 25 May 1995.⁽²⁾ The Commission's session was preceded by the ninth session of its Technical Committee (Beirut, 22-23 May). ESCWA and the Technical Committee assessed progress in implementing the work programme for 1994-1995, reviewed follow-up action on Commission resolutions adopted in 1994, and examined regional preparations for and follow-up to UN world conferences and ESCWA regional meetings, cooperation among developing countries and regional organizations and the impact of the single European market on ESCWA member States, as well as programme and organizational matters. The Commission reviewed, amended and adopted the Technical Committee's report,⁽³⁾ including its draft resolutions.

In July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on Commission recommendations, decided to establish within ESCWA committees on energy and on water resources (see below).

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

Overall economic performance in Western Asia improved in 1995, according to a summary of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region for that year.⁽⁴⁾ The region's GDP, excluding Iraq, grew 2.8 per cent, compared with an adjusted rate of 0.8 per cent in 1994. The growth was attributable to increases in oil prices, as well as the past several years' economic and structural reforms carried out in many countries. Owing to a relatively high population growth rate, however, per capita GDP stagnated, after a 1.8 per cent decline in the previous year. At the same time, the continuation of UN sanctions against Iraq and the low level of regional economic cooperation restrained further growth and development in Western Asia.

Economies of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC)—Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates—after contracting by 0.5 per cent in 1994, expanded by 2 per cent due to the development of the oil sector which offset reductions in government expenditures on some other economic sectors. On the other hand, the group's per capita GDP was estimated to have decreased another 1 per cent, after falling 3.2 per cent the previous year. Growth rates increased from 0.1 per cent in 1994 to 1.3 per cent in 1995 in the United Arab Emirates, from 2 per cent to 2.7 per cent in Bahrain and from 3.5 per cent to 4.5 per cent in Oman, while the economies of Kuwait, Qatar and Saudi Arabia, which recorded respective declines of 0.4 per cent, 1.5 per cent and 1.1 per cent in 1994, rebounded with growth rates of 2.9 per cent, 1 per cent and 1.7 per cent, respectively. Saudi Arabia's economic performance was boosted mainly by the growth of the oil sector, but was adversely affected by the reduction in subsidies of public goods and services, higher costs of imports, significant cutbacks in government expenditures, and the outflow of expatriate workers' remittances, which increased from $15.2 billion in 1994 to $17.2 billion in 1995.

Total output of the region's more diversified economies (Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen, the West Bank and Gaza Strip), with the exception of Iraq, rose 5.2 per cent, up from 4.3 per cent in the previous year, while their per capita GDP grew 2.3 per cent, compared with 1.7 per cent in 1994. Among contributing factors were: the rejuvenation of the private sector following economic reform and liberalization measures, improved conditions for private investment, increased revenues from tourism, large inflows of workers' remittances, and a declining debt-servicing burden. Egypt's growth rate accelerated from 3.9 per cent in 1994 to 4.9 per cent in 1995, due to an expansion in both oil and non-oil exports, a 21 per cent increase in the number of tourists and growing revenues from the Suez Canal, among other factors. Jordan registered a 6.3 per cent growth, up from 5.7 per cent in the previous year, with its exports rising by 20 per cent and tourism revenues by 24 per cent. Economic growth in Lebanon slowed, from 8 per cent to 7 per cent but remained the highest in the region for the second consecutive year as that country continued to benefit from large-scale reconstruction activities, capital inflows and a boom in the services sector, particularly tourism and banking. The Beirut Stock Exchange reopened in 1995, having been closed for 13 years because of civil strife. The Syrian Arab Republic recorded a 6 per cent growth rate, a 1 per cent increase over 1994, while Yemen's GDP grew by 0.5 per cent, as against a 0.5 per cent decline in the previous year. Economic conditions in Iraq, already among the world's lowest in per capita GDP, deteriorated further as a result of UN sanctions and were characterized by hyper-inflation and vast underutilization of productive capacities due to the oil embargo and a lack of raw materials, spare parts, seeds, fertilizers, pesticides and herbicides. Economic performance of the West Bank and Gaza Strip was adversely affected by a poor olive crop and restrictions on the employment of Palestinian workers in Israel; the GDP growth rate decelerated from 7.3 per cent in 1994 to 3 per cent in 1995.

Inflation rates jumped in the GCC countries, where, except for Kuwait, all currencies were pegged to the United States dollar. Coupled with the reduction in subsidies of public goods and services, the weakening of the US dollar led to higher inflation in that economic group in 1995, ranging from 1 per cent in Oman to 4.8 per cent in Saudi Arabia and 5 per cent in the United Arab Emirates. Among the more diversified economies implementing IMF-supported structural adjustment programmes, Jordan experienced a steady inflation rate of 3.5 per cent. The rate declined in Egypt from 8.2 per cent in 1994 to some 4.9 per cent in November 1995, and fell from 100 per cent to 45 per cent in Yemen. Inflation decreased from 16 per cent to 12.5 per cent in Lebanon and from 30 per cent to 25 per cent in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, but was estimated to have risen in the Syrian Arab Republic from 15 per cent in the previous year. Hyper-inflation persisted in Iraq as its currency continued to depreciate and its money supply increased. Unemployment remained a major regional problem, with Yemen and the West Bank and Gaza Strip registering the highest rates, estimated at 30 per cent.

Most ESCWA countries continued to carry out economic reform and structural adjustment programmes in 1995, aimed at correcting internal and external imbalances and enhancing efficiency and productivity. New investment and tax laws were formulated to encourage private investment, particularly FDI, which remained modest compared to other developing regions; several States also began privatization of public enterprises, albeit at a slow pace for fear of higher unemployment and inflation. Most GCC countries restrained spending and adopted policies to increase non-oil revenues by raising fees on public services or privatizing parts of public-sector enterprises. As a result, their aggregate budget expenditures declined from $72 billion in 1994 to some $68 billion in 1995, and their budget deficit from $17.3 billion to $9.6 billion. In the more diversified economies, Egypt's targeted 2 per cent ratio of budget deficit to GDP was expected to rise by some 6 per cent and Lebanon's budget expenditures were almost double its revenues. On the other hand, the deficit was kept close to budgeted figures in Jordan, and dropped to 7 per cent of GDP in Yemen, down from 17 per cent the previous year. In the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the Palestinian Authority, which took over taxation from Israel in 1995, covered its $200 million deficit by collecting $70 million in tax revenues and using $130 million received from foreign funding sources.

Banking-sector activities, characterized by tight conditions in the first half of 1995, eased significantly and led to record profits for the banks by the end of the year. The share of consumer banking in the region's banking market rose from 45 per cent in 1994 to 55 per cent in 1995. Advances were also recorded in the region's stock markets, which proved to be an adequate vehicle for raising private capital for banks, other financial institutions and corporations; however, their insufficiently developed legal, administrative and institutional infrastructures inhibited their ability to finance the development process effectively.

The external debt of ESCWA countries, excluding Iraq, remained in 1995 at about $182 billion. Jordan's debt dropped from $7 billion to $6 billion due to its partial cancellation by a number of creditors, and the debts of Kuwait and of Saudi Arabia were reduced significantly. On the other hand, Egypt's debt reached $33 billion, a 7 per cent increase over 1994, while that of Lebanon rose by some 68 per cent, to $1.3 billion.

Oil

Crude oil production in oil-exporting ESCWA countries grew in 1995 by almost 1 per cent, to 15.89 million barrels per day. Output rose 6.3 per cent in Oman, 5 per cent in Iraq, 4.5 per cent in Qatar, 4.3 per cent in the Syrian Arab Republic, and 1.5 per cent in Yemen, but remained unchanged in the rest of the region, owing either to quota limitations established by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) or to limited production capacity.

Due mostly to the upward adjustment in oil prices, to an average $16.88 per barrel, compared with $15.53 per barrel in 1994, oil revenues rebounded with a 9.3 per cent increase to reach $78.4 billion, after a 5 per cent decline the previous year. Revenues grew in all oil-exporting countries, with Oman, Qatar and Yemen registering the greatest increases of 14 per cent, 13.7 per cent and 10.3 per cent, respectively. While the refining capacity of oil exporters remained largely unchanged from its 1990 level, several States embarked on a number of projects to expand it during 1997-2000.

Proven oil reserves in the region were estimated at 570 billion barrels, or 57 per cent of the world total and some 74 per cent of OPEC's total.

Agriculture

The ESCWA region's production of cereals was estimated at 30.8 million tons in 1995, a 7.6 per cent increase over 1994, owing to favourable weather conditions in most of the region. The GCC countries recorded a 4.8 per cent growth, mostly in Saudi Arabia, and accounted for 14 per cent of the region's total. In more diversified economies, cereal output rose by 8 per cent, to 26.5 million tons, including 17 million tons—an 11.1 per cent increase—in Egypt alone, which represented some 55.2 per cent of the region's total. Egypt increased its wheat production by 28 per cent, to a record 5.7 million tons, mainly by using high-yield varieties, while its output of paddy (rice before threshing) was expected to have grown by 113,000 tons to reach 4.7 million tons.

The Syrian Arab Republic registered growth rates in the year of 8 per cent for cereals and 10 per cent for barley, and its output of wheat expanded by 330,000 tons to a total of 4 million tons. In Jordan, the aggregate production of wheat and barley rose 8 per cent, owing to a marked expansion of the area planted, while output of lentils more than doubled to reach 5,000 tons. Combined production of wheat and barley was estimated at 73,000 tons in Lebanon, an increase of 10,000 tons over the previous year; however, its cereal output covered only about 10 per cent of total requirements, and the country remained dependent on imports to meet the demand for rice, sugar and milk powder. In Saudi Arabia, wheat production declined, from 3.4 million tons in 1993 to 2.5 million tons in 1995, as the country continued its water-conservation policy of reducing wheat production to the level of local demand; the production of barley increased only slightly. Cereal output continued to decline in Yemen, with imports of cereals estimated at 2 million tons in 1995, a 19 per cent increase over 1994. In Iraq, cereal production dropped 10 per cent due to the lack of foreign exchange, which led to a significant reduction in the use of agricultural inputs such as spare parts, fertilizers and pesticides and extreme shortages of basic food items; the country needed an estimated $2.7 billion to meet its import requirements for 1995/96.

The value of regional food imports was estimated to have risen by 7.8 per cent in 1995 and was projected to grow annually by an average 8.9 per cent during 1996-2000. In addition, the European Union's new trade policy of applying the entry price system, particularly for fresh vegetables and fruits, was expected to affect adversely exports from Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

While food imports in the region rose 2.5 per cent to $11.8 billion in 1994, the region's food gap (net imports) also increased, by 2.9 per cent, to reach $10 billion, and that gap was expected to widen further as a result of world agricultural trade liberalization following the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, concluded in 1994.⁽⁷⁾

In the light of those developments, the reform of agricultural sectors continued in several ESCWA countries. Egypt liberalized production and marketing activities for agricultural inputs; Jordan was removing producer subsidies on crops and planned to liberalize trade in barley; and the Palestinian Authority began to build up institutional capabilities to rehabilitate the agricultural sector in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and focused on establishing a Ministry of Agriculture.

Industrial development

The region's overall manufacturing value-added, excluding Iraq and the West Bank and Gaza Strip, grew 3.6 per cent in 1995, compared with more than 4 per cent in 1994. In GCC countries that rate was unchanged from the previous year, whereas the more diversified economies experienced a decline in growth from the 1994 rate of 5 per cent. Developments in the manufacturing sector were influenced by structural adjustment programmes and public-sector reform, continued economic recovery of major export markets, and a rise in the production and export value of major products, such as petrochemicals, fertilizers, aluminium and textiles. The expansion was restrained, however, by trade barriers in EU and other major markets, increased international competition especially from East Asia, reduced public investment in manufacturing projects and still insufficient involvement of the private sector, which was hindered by the slow pace of economic reforms. In many countries, a lack of electricity-generation capacity was another obstacle to manufacturing development.

Long-standing challenges confronting the transport sector persisted in 1995, including the need to rehabilitate networks damaged by war and civil strife, standardization of technical specifications, harmonization of border-crossing procedures, removal of trade barriers and improved maintenance of existing infrastructure and equipment. A number of transport projects were considered by ESCWA member States, dealing with a sub-regional rail network linked to Europe and to North Africa, a bridge over the Suez Canal, and development of seaports and airports in the Gulf of Aqaba, as well as several other international airports.

Trade

Regional exports and imports, excluding Iraq, were positively affected by rising oil prices and higher GDP growth rates. Exports expanded by 8.4 per cent to $109.8 billion. Imports rose 9.2 per cent to $93.4 billion, representing a reversal of the previous year's downward trend. Agricultural exports grew from $2.9 billion in 1994 to an estimated $3.5 billion in 1995, while agricultural imports increased from $14.4 billion to some $16.2 billion over the same period. The region's export/import ratio, a measure of its ability to finance imports from export proceeds, remained at 1.18 in 1995; it grew from 1.53 to 1.57 in the GCC countries, but declined from 0.43 to 0.40 in the more diversified economies.

Exports from the GCC countries, amounting to $97 billion—an 8 per cent increase over 1994—accounted for 88 per cent of the region's total. Within that group, Kuwait, Qatar and Saudi Arabia registered increases of more than 9 per cent. The growth in exports from the more diversified economies exceeded 11.6 per cent, reaching more than $12.4 billion, largely due to the performances of Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon.

Imports of the GCC countries grew by almost 6 per cent, to some $62 billion, with rates of increase ranging from 8 to 5 per cent in Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Bahrain was the only country to record a slight decrease. The more diversified economies witnessed a 16.6 per cent rise in imports, totalling $31 billion; however, rates varied from more than 12 per cent in Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon to between 5 per cent and less than 1 per cent in other countries of the group.

The current account deficit (excluding Iraq, Lebanon, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen, where data were not available) declined further in 1994 to $7.1 billion from $15.1 billion a year earlier; it dropped by one third of the 1993 level in Jordan, while in Saudi Arabia the deficit fell from $17.3 billion in 1993 to $9.1 billion in 1994 and was estimated to have declined to $5 billion in 1995. The combined current account of the more diversified economies showed a deficit of $1 billion in 1994 after a surplus in 1993, as Egypt's surplus decreased from $2.3 billion to $31 million. The deficit in the balance of goods and services in the more diversified economies declined only slightly in 1994, as inflows of expatriate workers' remittances, counted on to finance the overall trade deficit, fell from $9 billion to $6.7 billion, including from $7 billion to $4.62 billion for Egypt alone. GCC countries, however, regained a surplus as Kuwait made a full return to the oil market, while outflows of remittances from that group dropped from $18.4 billion to $17.7 billion.

The region's international reserves, excluding Iraq, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen, rose from $45.7 billion in 1994 to $50 billion in 1995, or 9.4 per cent. GCC countries accounted for $24.2 billion in reserves, with Saudi Arabia ($9.8 billion) and the United Arab Emirates ($7.6 billion) being the largest holders. Reserves of the more diversified economies totalled $25.9 billion, of which Egypt held $18 billion.

Social trends

The population of the ESCWA region was expected to reach 150.2 million by mid-1996, growing at a yearly rate of about 2.7 per cent. Annual growth rates ranged from 7.07 per cent in Kuwait and 3.91 per cent in the West Bank and Gaza Strip to 1.79 per cent in Egypt and 1.31 per cent in Qatar. Also by mid-1996, 40.36 per cent of the total population was projected to be under age 15, and 3.45 per cent over age 65. The crude birth rate was expected to decrease slightly, from 31.3 to 30.1 births per 1,000 over 1994-1995, exceeding that of the less developed regions of the world (25 per 1,000) and more than twice the rate in the more developed regions (13 per 1,000). The crude death rate declined to 6.98 deaths per 1,000 in mid-1994, less than the world's average of 9.3 deaths per 1,000, and was expected to decrease to 6.82 deaths per 1,000 by mid-1996. Life expectancy at birth in the region remained at 65.58 years.

The total fertility rate was expected to drop to 4.5 births per woman by mid-1996, owing mostly to a fertility decline in Egypt, the region's most populous country, as well as in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic. In mid-1994, averages varied from between 6 and 7.5 births per woman in Kuwait, Oman, Saudi Arabia, the West Bank and Gaza Strip and Yemen to less than 4 in Egypt and less than 3 in Lebanon. By mid-1996, Yemen was expected to have the highest rate, at 7.5 births per woman, and Lebanon the lowest, at 2.76 births per woman. The infant mortality rate stood regionally at 58.38 deaths per 1,000 live births, and ranging up to 90 per 1,000 in Iraq and more than 80 in Yemen, but as low as 16 deaths per 1,000 in Kuwait.

The urban population accounted for 53 per cent of the region's total in 1993 and was projected to reach 58 per cent by the year 2000. In addition to such factors as a natural increase in population and rural-urban migration, rapid urbanization in the ESCWA region was boosted by a massive flow of population between labour-sending and labour-absorbing countries. Its impact on urban areas manifested itself in a boom in housing construction, coupled with soaring land and housing prices. As a result, high vacancy rates in luxurious dwellings in large cities of the more diversified economies were paralleled by the spread of squatter settlements, increasing overcrowding, and substandard housing for the growing category of low-income people. In GCC countries, however, high vacancy rates reflected their dependence on expatriate labour, which made them vulnerable to fluctuations in the job market and affected their ability for efficient planning of urban expansion and public service delivery. Between 75 and 90 per cent of households in that group of countries had access to water, a sewerage network and electricity, and more than 95 per cent were connected to kitchen and bathroom facilities.

Environmental conditions deteriorated further in many areas of the ESCWA region in 1995, owing to rapid population growth, inappropriate economic and social policies, weak regulatory and administrative systems, and insufficient public awareness. Increasing water demand strained the region's limited water resources and exacerbated the problem of water scarcity, as substantial volumes drawn from rivers and aquifers were shared among countries both within and outside the ESCWA region. To overcome the problem, several States were desalinating sea water and brackish water, reusing renovated waste water and utilizing non-conventional water sources. Significant efforts were made to update and implement national water plans, and laws were enacted to protect existing water sources and to regulate excessive water utilization. Most countries were also formulating strategies or plans to combat environmental degradation; however, their implementation was hindered by financial constraints and reduced public spending.

Activities in 1995

During 1995, ESCWA activities under its programme of work and priorities for 1994-1995 focused on five thematic subprogrammes, established pursuant to the 1994 programme revision: (6) management of natural resources and environment; improvement of the quality of life; economic development and cooperation; regional development and global changes; and special programmes and issues.

Development planning, development finance and international trade

At its 1995 session, the Technical Committee considered the Executive Secretary's note⁽⁷⁾ regarding the impact of the single European market on ESCWA member countries. The note summarized the single market's implications for the region's foreign trade, agriculture, manufacturing, banking and finance, and science and technology, and provided recommendations for action in each of those areas. The Technical Committee requested the secretariat to undertake studies of obstacles to the creation of an Arab common market, reasons for the decline in trade relations between the ESCWA region and EU, possibilities and relative advantages of early agricultural production for export to EU, and the potential for developing scientific and technological institutions in member States in conformity with their counterparts in the industrialized countries. The secretariat was also requested to monitor and assess developments in the world trade system, assist in building awareness of the importance of concerted Arab action in dealing with economic coalitions, and establish coordination mechanisms with international and regional organizations to enhance Arab cooperation until the creation of an Arab common market.

Implications of the single European market for the economic sectors covered in the Executive Secretary's note were the subject of a series of studies published during the year. The secretariat also issued the annual survey of economic and social developments in the region and an overview of the region's stock markets, and undertook studies on the establishment of business incubators and on privatization in the Gulf countries as well as in the more diversified economies. Publications on international trade and development finance included annual reviews of developments and issues in the external trade and payments situation of ESCWA countries, and of developments and trends in the monetary and financial sectors in the region.

Food and agriculture

Activities in the area of agriculture included training workshops on food and agricultural policy analysis, agricultural sector management, project planning and environmental considerations in agriculture, and monitoring and evaluation of rural development projects. ESCWA continued to issue its annual publication Agriculture and Development in Western Asia, and carried out studies on resource conservation policies for agriculture in the Syrian Arab Republic, the impact of structural adjustment measures on food production and consumption in Egypt, the impact of population growth and urbanization on food consumption patterns in Jordan, and agricultural integration among Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. Other publications dealt with the development of fisheries statistics in the United Arab Emirates and agricultural extension and its future prospects in Yemen.

The secretariat also contributed to the formulation of an action programme for restructuring agriculture institutions in the occupied territories by preparing a national farm data handbook for the West Bank and Gaza Strip as well as studies on prospective developments of agricultural institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories and on the cropping pattern in the Gaza Strip and prospects for development.

Industrial development and technology

In 1995, the secretariat published a review of recent developments in manufacturing activities and prospects in the ESCWA region for 1994, and produced studies on industrial strategies and policies in the region, investment environment in the industrial sector in Yemen, and the use of cleaner industrial production technologies in selected ESCWA countries. Expert group meetings on industrial strategies and policies and on entrepreneurial and managerial skills were organized in Bahrain, and a workshop was held on micro- and small-enterprise development in the occupied Palestinian territories. A regional seminar was held on total quality management based on International Organization for Standardization (ISO) requirements. The Second Arab Conference and Expo for Electronics, Software and Communications Industries in the Arab Countries was organized in cooperation with the Arab Industrial Development and Mining Organization, UNIDO and other agencies.

In the area of science and technology, expert group meetings were held on revitalization of research and development activities in ESCWA countries and on techno-economic aspects of the commercial application of new materials technologies, and related studies on those subjects were issued.

Natural resources, energy and environment

Water resources

In the area of water resources, the secretariat published an assessment of water quality in the ESCWA region, organized a training course on using remote-sensing techniques in hydrology, and undertook studies of shared basalt aquifers in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic and on the introduction of appropriate mechanisms to promote regional cooperation in the water sector. Expert group meetings reviewed regional activities for integrated water management in implementation of relevant provisions of Agenda 21,(8) and provided recommendations for the establishment of a regional training network in the water sector.

In 1995, the Commission decided to establish a committee on water resources and recommended a resolution⁽⁹⁾ for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Council adopted resolution 1995/26.

Establishment of a committee on water resources within the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Conscious of the importance of water security in view of the scarcity of water resources in the States members of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia,

Conscious also of the importance of developing the water resources of those States and rationalizing their use,

Taking into account the need to monitor scientific and technological developments in the use of both traditional and non-traditional water sources,

Also taking into account the importance of the participation of the competent authorities of the States members of the Commission in the planning, development and monitoring of the programmes of the secretariat of the Commission in the field of water resources,

1. Decides to establish, within existing resources, a Committee on Water Resources within the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, made up of representatives of States members of the Commission who are specialists in the field of water resources, which will undertake the following tasks:

- (a) Participation in the establishment and formulation of priorities for the programme of work and medium-term plan in the field of water resources;
- (b) Monitoring of developments in the field of water resources in the States members of the Commission;
- (c) Monitoring of the progress achieved in the activities of the secretariat of the Commission in the field of water resources;
- (d) Follow-up of international and regional conferences, participation of member States in them and coordination of regional efforts relating to the implementation of resolutions and recommendations;

2. Also decides that the Committee on Water Resources will hold its meetings every two years, starting in 1996;

3. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to follow up the implementation of the present resolution and report thereon to the Commission at its nineteenth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/26

24 July 1995 Meeting 50 Adopted without vote

Draft by ESCWA (E/1995/40), orally amended by United States; agenda item 7.

Meeting numbers. ESC 45, 46, 50.

Energy

The secretariat continued to issue its annual ESCWA Energy Bulletin and prepared a compilation of energy information and a study of recent projects on the development of oil and natural gas in Jordan and Yemen.

In May, the Commission decided to establish a committee on energy and recommended a resolution⁽¹⁰⁾ for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Council adopted resolution 1995/25.

Establishment of a committee on energy within the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware that petroleum and gas are not the only energy resources available in States members of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, but that renewable sources of energy are also available, and aware also that close regional cooperation is needed to strengthen the capabilities of those States for developing the use of renewable sources of energy,

Aware of the importance of coordinating activities in the field of energy with efforts to protect the environment in States members of the Commission, as well as the importance of related issues pertaining to the development, transport and use of energy sources, the rationalization of their use and the impact of their use on the environment and on the sustainable development of those States,

Conscious of the importance of the participation of the competent authorities of the States members of the Commission in the planning and development of the programmes of the secretariat of the Commission in the field of energy and in monitoring their implementation,

Inspired by the steps taken by other regional commissions for the establishment of specialized committees on various energy areas to ensure the coordination of action at the regional level,

1. Decides to establish, within existing resources, a Committee on Energy within the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, made up of representatives of the States members of the Commission who are specialists in the field of energy, which will undertake the following tasks:

- (a) Participation in the establishment and formulation of priorities for the programme of work and medium-term plan in the field of energy;

- (b) Monitoring of developments in the field of energy in the States members of the Commission;

- (c) Monitoring of the progress achieved in the activities of the secretariat of the Commission in the field of energy;

- (d) Follow-up of international and regional conferences, participation of member States in them and coordination of regional efforts relating to the implementation of resolutions and recommendations;

2. Also decides that the Committee on Energy will hold its meetings every two years, starting in 1996;

3. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to follow up the implementation of the present resolution and report thereon to the Commission at its nineteenth session.

Draft by ESCWA (E/1995/40), orally amended by United States; agenda item 7.

Meeting numbers. ESC 45, 46, 50.

Environment

Activities in the area of environment were geared towards regional implementation of Agenda 21⁽⁸⁾ within the framework of the Joint Committee on Environment and Development in the Arab World, established in 1993,⁽¹¹⁾ and the Arab Programme of Action for Sustainable Development, adopted in 1992 by the Council of Arab Ministers Responsible for Environment. Work focused on implementing 1994 Joint Committee recommendations⁽¹²⁾ aimed at building an environmental information system for policy makers in the region, convening an expert meeting on biological diversity, and creating a regional mechanism to monitor and deal with illegal traffic in hazardous wastes. Other activities included those on: combating desertification and increasing the green area in the region; improving environmental education, awareness and information; and reducing industrial pollution. A workshop on popular participation in environmental protection programmes was held (Tunis, Tunisia, 10-13 January) to review the role of the family, women and children in that respect and to consider practical ways of protecting the environment in the Arab world.

Transport and communications

The ESCWA work programme for transport was linked to activities under the second phase (1992-1996) of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (see above, under "Asia and the Pacific"). An expert group meeting was held on development of a multimodal transport chain in the ESCWA region, which formulated a regional strategy for multimodal transport development. A study was conducted on upgrading the performance level and the quality of services in transport and port management in Egypt, a port pricing model for the region was prepared and the Transport Bulletin was published.

Social development, population and human settlements

The secretariat continued to monitor progress in social programmes of member States and took steps to implement a 1994 Economic and Social Council resolution⁽¹³⁾ establishing a committee on social development within ESCWA, and to define national focal points for coordination of various social activities. ESCWA countries were assisted in preparations for the World Summit for Social Development (Denmark, March) (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX); publications were issued on human development and its socio-cultural specificity in the Arab world and on social dimensions of human development; and studies prepared on a social perspective of poverty in Western Asia and the impact of macroeconomic and social policies on poverty in Egypt, Jordan and Yemen. ESCWA was also formulating a follow-up to the recommendations of the expert group meeting on the Arab family, held in 1994.⁽¹³⁾

Population activities were linked to implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the International Conference on Population and Development in 1994.⁽¹⁴⁾ A regional expert group meeting on population estimates and projections was organized (Cairo, 10-14 June), and biennial demographic and related socio-economic indicators were published. The annual Population Bulletin was issued.

In preparation for the second UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), to be held in Turkey in 1996 (see PART FOUR, Chapter VIII), a regional expert group meeting was convened (Amman, 23-26 January) to review urbanization trends and the housing situation in the Arab world; assess policies relating to sustainable development of human settlements; draft a general outline for national reports to be presented at the Conference; and discuss a regional contribution to Habitat II. Recommendations were formulated concerning the form and content of a draft Arab Declaration on Sustainable Development for Human Settlements. The Declaration, subsequently approved by the third Arab Preparatory Meeting for Habitat II (Rabat, Morocco, 25-30 September) and adopted by the Council of Arab Ministers of Housing and Reconstruction at its thirteenth session (Cairo, 13-14 November), confirmed that adequate housing was a fundamental right and requirement. It included commitments aimed at ensuring, inter alia, balanced urban-rural development and infrastructure development, popular participation in housing policy formulation, optimum land utilization, the strengthening of the role of the media and local authorities as well as of women and youth, shelter provision to all population categories, appropriate housing finance mechanisms, establishment of real estate systems, development of adequate construction technologies, capacity-building for human settlements management, promotion of community-based efforts for poverty alleviation, rational energy consumption, incorporation of environmental considerations into urbanization projects, reconstruction and development of settlements damaged by conflicts, and preservation of the architectural heritage and historical sites.

A case study was made of technological and social aspects of upgrading and revitalizing settlements, and a report prepared on technical assistance activities to improve the quality of life in human settlements.

Role of women

Activities in the area of women and development included a study on the situation of disabled women, including their marginalization and measures for social integration in the ESCWA region, and a compilation of statistical data on Arab women. As part of final preparations for the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing, September) (see PART FOUR, Chapter X), a regional workshop was organized for Arab official delegations to the Conference. ESCWA participated in national workshops held in Kuwait and in Lebanon as a follow-up to the Conference.

Statistics

The ESCWA Statistical Committee, established in accordance with a 1993 Economic and Social Council resolution,⁽¹⁵⁾ held its first session in 1995 (Amman, 6-9 November).⁽¹⁶⁾ The Committee discussed and recommended for adoption 10 fundamental principles of official statistics; assessed regional activities and global developments in the area of statistics; considered progress made in 1994-1995, a work programme for 1996-1997 and the ESCWA subprogramme on statistics within the medium-term plan for 1998-2001; examined technical cooperation in statistics, a national household survey capability programme and gender statistics in the Arab countries; and reviewed matters relating to international statistical programmes, including the 1993 System of National Accounts, the International Comparison Programme and a programme for vital statistics and civil registration systems (see PART FOUR, Chapter XV). The Committee adopted recommendations concerning each of those areas.

During the year, ESCWA continued to publish its annual Statistical Abstract of the ESCWA Region and National Account Studies of the ESCWA Region and its biennial Prices and Financial Statistics in the ESCWA Region. It also produced a second issue of the bulletin of industrial statistics for the Arab countries, and organized workshops on computer processing of statistical data, the International Comparison Programme, and uses of geographic information systems in statistics.

Programme and organizational questions

At its 1995 session, the Commission approved⁽¹⁷⁾ its programme of work and priorities for 1996-1997.⁽¹⁸⁾ It noted that the programme had incorporated changes proposed by member States and reflected an integrated approach to Commission activities, based on its five thematic subprogrammes (see above, under "Activities in 1995"). The programme also included proposals concerning technical cooperation activities.

The Commission, having considered a report⁽¹⁹⁾ on the meeting (Amman, 3 May) of the Advisory Committee established pursuant to a 1989 ESCWA resolution,⁽²⁰⁾ amended⁽²¹⁾ paragraph 1 (a) of that resolution to read: "To invite member States to set up an advisory body comprising the heads of their diplomatic missions in the host country, or such persons as may be delegated by their Governments and a representative of the host country, to assist the Executive Secretary in the study of problems connected with the work of the Commission."

The Technical Committee, at its ninth session, noted the text of the Executive Secretary's note⁽²²⁾ on the financial status of ESCWA programmes, which provided information on activities financed under the regular UN budget, from extra-budgetary resources, and from the Trust Fund for ESCWA Regional Activities.

Permanent headquarters

The Commission had before it a report⁽²³⁾ of the Executive Secretary on follow-up action concerning relocation of ESCWA to its permanent headquarters in Beirut, in accordance with a 1994 Economic and Social Council resolution.⁽²⁴⁾ The report described arrangements with regard to the permanent headquarters building and to the previous headquarters building in Baghdad, Iraq. The Commission called⁽²⁵⁾ on member States to take measures in support of the Secretary-General's efforts to secure the necessary resources for ESCWA's relocation.

Chapter VI

Natural resources and energy

The use and conservation of natural resources and energy were considered by a number of United Nations bodies in 1995, with the environmental aspects of increased exploitation receiving particular attention. The Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development held a special session in February and adopted a series of recommendations for sustainable energy in the rural areas of developing countries.

Having considered a report by the Secretary-General on progress made in providing safe water supply and sanitation for all during the first half of the 1990s, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council called on Governments to develop and implement, in the context of a national sustainable development strategy, measures for drinking water supply and sanitation. Organizations of the UN system were called on to intensify their financing and technical support efforts for developing countries and countries in transition in that regard.

In his annual address to the Assembly, the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency observed that nuclear power could provide part of the solution to the problem of providing sufficient energy for developing countries without increased emissions of carbon dioxide, sulphur dioxide or nitrogen oxides. The main obstacle to increased use was public concern with safety, radioactive waste and non-proliferation.

Natural resources

Exploration

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE) was undergoing revitalization in 1995 with support from the Government of Japan, said the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme in his annual report covering 1995.⁽¹⁾ Proposals for the Fund's revitalization included that it should: maintain its unique characteristic—the replenishment feature—which embodied the concept of self-reliance and enabled the Fund to take a cost/benefit approach; have a catalytic role in teaming developing country Governments with mining companies from around the world for mining activities in harmony with environmental protection; focus on deposits appropriate for small-scale mining among the less stable developing countries; establish close collaboration within the UN system, as well as with external organizations that could provide support; and diversify the Fund's activities to include information services, through mining forums, round-table conferences and other mechanisms.

In 1995, two projects were operational and the project pipeline was structured to reach a level of five operational projects by 1998. At the same time, UNRFNRE was streamlining its activities so that strategic interventions in areas of poverty eradication, job generation and environmental protection would be made.

Following the discovery in 1993⁽²⁾ of a gold deposit in the United Republic of Tanzania worth some $400 million, UNRFNRE assisted the Government in an international bidding exercise for discoveries made by the Fund. Of 40 mining companies that expressed interest in the project, 3 were selected to bring the discoveries to the feasibility and production stage. A successful placer-gold project in Peru was sold to a Brazilian company for $5 million, with start-up estimated to begin in 1998.

Technical cooperation

In his report covering UN technical cooperation activities in 1995,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General observed that artisanal mining was an economic mainstay of many rural communities in developing countries, providing income for local economic and social development. Many developing countries and economies in transition were interested in formalizing artisanal mining into legal, small-scale mining so as to maximize revenue and minimize environmental degradation. The Department for Development Support and Management Services (DDSMS) was acting as a catalyst in several such national efforts, through activities emphasizing legislative approaches and community mobilization.

Water resources

Water supply and sanitation

In response to a 1990 General Assembly request,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report,⁽⁵⁾ through the Economic and Social Council, on progress made in providing safe water supply and sanitation for all during the first half of the 1990s. The report provided information on the water supply and sanitation service coverage situation from 1990 to 1994 in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Western Asia, and on the level of services that would be achieved by the year 2000, should the 1990-1994 trend in service delivery continue. It was noted that, in 1994, some 1.11 billion people lacked access to safe water and 2.87 billion lacked access to sanitation. An additional 783 million people were provided with access to safe water during the four-year period and the total number of people without clean water decreased by 472 million. It appeared that the annual rates of increase in water supply over the four years constituted an acceleration of the pace witnessed during the previous decade.

The challenge of providing full water supply and sanitation coverage to the urban areas of developing countries remained daunting, especially because of high rates of population growth and urbanization. The neglect of urban sanitation was particularly critical in Africa, where only an additional 1 million people were reported to have gained access to safe sanitation. The ranks of those without such services swelled by as many as 36 million. In all four developing regions, the proportion of people with access to safe sanitation remained considerably lower than in the case of water supply.

Progress with regard to the provision of clean water to rural areas was significant. About 611 million people were added to the ranks of those having access to safe water; the number without services decreased by 504 million. By contrast, rural sanitation was totally neglected. With the exception of Western Asia, the levels of sanitation services to rural areas remained dismally low. Africa reported some progress, having increased by 23 million the number of people with access. Nevertheless, those without services increased by 23 million. No gains were made in Latin America; an apparent decrease in coverage for Asia and the Pacific was due to a reported drastic change in criteria in the larger countries of the region.

Despite calls to action dating back to the Mar del Plata Action Plan, adopted by the UN Water Conference in 1977,⁽⁶⁾ the situation concerning urban water supply and sanitation had steadily deteriorated. It was particularly alarming with regard to neglect of sanitation and inadequate attention to pollution from urban waste. The problem of providing services to rural areas was closely linked to the fact that these accounted for a large proportion of people living at or below the level of absolute poverty.

The report concluded that no real solution to the problem of water supply and sanitation would be at hand without significant infusions of funding. In the case of urban water supply, the problem was compounded by the need for considerable additional capital investments in infrastructure and increasing costs in the light of a growing demand for water from rapidly expanding cities. The 1994 Ministerial Conference on Drinking Water Supply and Environmental Sanitation⁽⁷⁾ had stressed the need for a partnership approach to water resources development in general, and drinking water supply and environmental sanitation in particular. It had recommended that Governments develop detailed guidelines for investments in order to rationalize resource generation and use. With regard to issues requiring the attention of the international community, it was clear that priority needed to be given to the African region. Urgent attention was equally required to achieve significant progress with regard to sanitation in urban and rural areas, with special attention given to problems confronting large and rapidly growing urban concentrations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1995/46.

Water supply and sanitation

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/18 of 10 November 1980, by which it proclaimed the period 1981-1990 as the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade,

Recalling also its resolution 45/181 of 21 December 1990, in which it expressed its deep concern about the slow rate of progress in the provision of services in water and sanitation,

Bearing in mind that the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990, the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro from 3 to 14 June 1992, reiterated the need to provide, on a sustainable basis, access to safe water in sufficient quantities and proper sanitation for all,

Deeply concerned that at the current rate of progress the provision of drinking water will be insufficient to satisfy the needs of a very large number of people by the year 2000 and that the lack of progress in the provision of basic sanitation services is likely to have dramatic environmental and health consequences in the near future,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in providing safe water supply and sanitation for all during the first half of the 1990s;

2. Takes note of the programme strategies in water and environmental sanitation adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund at its annual session for 1995^a and of resolution AFR/RC 43/R2 of the Regional Committee for Africa of the World Health Organization, in which the Committee endorsed the Africa 2000 initiative for water supply and sanitation in Africa;

3. Calls upon Governments to implement fully the provisions concerning water resources in general and water supply and sanitation in particular contained in chapter 18 of Agenda 21, and the recommendations made by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its second and third sessions, including the recommendations for action contained in the Action Programme of the Ministerial Conference on Drinking Water and Environmental Sanitation convened by the Government of the Netherlands on 22 and 23 March 1994, in particular:

(a) To develop, review or revise by 1997 and implement, in the context of a national sustainable development strategy consistent with Agenda 21, measures for drinking water supply and environmental sanitation, taking into account the goals set by the World Summit for Children;

(b) To undertake, as appropriate, legal, regulatory and institutional reforms designed to bring about the management of water resources at the lowest appropriate level, including stake-holder participation and the involvement of the private sector, and to adopt strategies for capacity-building;

(c) To assign high priority to programmes designed to provide basic sanitation and excreta disposal systems to urban and rural areas and to the treatment of waste waters, with provisions for community involvement;

(d) To formulate and implement investment strategies and cost recovery policies aimed at generating a flow of financial resources commensurate with needs, taking into account the needs and conditions of the peri-urban and rural poor;

(e) To establish or strengthen a nationwide water and sanitation monitoring system, making full use, as appropriate, of the information support system developed by the Joint Monitoring Programme of the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund;

4. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system and other relevant organizations to intensify their efforts concerning financial and technical support for developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

5. Urges donor Governments, multilateral financial and development institutions and non-governmental organizations to give favourable and appropriate consideration to requests for grants and concessional financing, particularly with regard to environmental sanitation and sewerage and to waste-water treatment projects, which are intended to implement programmes consistent with the provisions and recommendations referred to in paragraph 3 of the present resolution;

6. Decides to review at its fifty-fifth session the situation at the end of the 1990s and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to it, through the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Economic and Social Council, containing an assessment of the water supply and sanitation situation in developing countries, including proposals for action for the ensuing decade at the national and international levels.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/46

27 July 1995 Meeting 56 Adopted without vote

Draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (E/1995/L.36), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 6 (ml).

Meeting numbers. ESC 42-44, 50, 56.

On 19 July, the Council, by decision 1995/234, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Inter-agency coordination

The Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Coordination held its sixteenth session in New York from 4 to 6 October.⁽⁸⁾ It was preceded by the Inter-Agency Steering Committee for Water Supply and Sanitation (2-3 October). Issues discussed included measures to strengthen coordination, a comprehensive assessment of the freshwater resources of the world, water resources management in Africa, public information with particular reference to the World Day for Water (22 March), and facilitation of information flows concerning programmes and activities of the UN system and non-governmental organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/126.

Water supply and sanitation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/18 of 10 November 1980, by which it proclaimed the period 1981-1990 as the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade,

Recalling also its resolution 45/181 of 21 December 1990, in which it expressed its deep concern about the slow rate of progress in the provision of services in water and sanitation,

Recalling further its resolution 47/193 of 22 December 1992, in which it declared 22 March of each year World Day for Water,

Bearing in mind that the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990, the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro from 3 to 14 June 1992, reiterated the need to provide, on a sustainable basis, access to safe water in sufficient quantities and proper sanitation for all,

General Assembly resolution 50/126

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/615/Add.1) without vote, 30 November (meeting 40); draft recommended by ESC in res. 1995/46 (A/C.2/50/L.3), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 12. Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 15, 16, 40; plenary 96.

Technical cooperation activities

Through DDSMS, the United Nations carried out water resource planning and management projects—from simple provision of rural water supply and training of technicians to complex interventions involving models, computer software packages, capacity-building and community empowerment.⁽³⁾ In several West African countries, work was focusing on the participation of all basin stakeholders in decision-making and the introduction of new regulatory principles. For capacity-building in water resource organizations, DDSMS assisted in training national multidisciplinary teams and using advanced tools for integrated water resources management. It helped to establish networks for assessing water supply and demand, which provided essential inputs to planners formulating strategies for water and land use, protection and conservation, and for making decisions on water allocations. Examples were the establishment of computer-based economic planning models in China and the Sudan, incorporating geographical information systems databases with water resource allocation techniques that reflected social, environmental and economic criteria.

Energy

Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development

In accordance with a 1994 Economic and Social Council decision,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development held a special session in New York from 6 to 17 February.⁽²⁾ As decided by the Council in 1994,⁽³⁾ the Committee discussed the issues of energy for rural development, biomass for energy and energy coordination.

In recommendations to the Commission on Sustainable Development, to be taken into account during its consideration of the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 Conference on Environment and Development⁽⁴⁾ (see PART FOUR, Chapter I), the Committee noted that adequate energy inputs were required to raise standards of living and the productivity of human labour and for income-generation in rural areas in developing countries. To that end, rural energy policies and technologies should promote a mix of cost-effective options to improve the efficiency of energy consumption and the utilization of fossil and renewable energy sources. With regard to energy for rural development, the Committee described the major problems of rural development, the importance of energy in solving those problems, the existing status and recent trends in rural energy conversion, and the present and future patterns of energy services in rural areas. In its consideration of energy options, the Committee discussed energy and material efficiency, renewable energy technologies (photovoltaic systems, solar thermal energy conversion, wind energy, biomass energy, hydropower), fossil fuels and system aspects.

The strategy recommended by the Committee for sustainable rural energy development included the establishment of national sustainable energy action programmes for agriculture and rural development, priority-setting, capacity-building, new directions in management and institutional arrangements, new financial and investment arrangements, accelerated development and implementation of new technologies, new international actions for rural energy development and strengthening sustainable energy activities within the UN system.

By decision 1995/240 of 19 July, the Council took note of the Committee's report and approved the revised provisional agenda for its second (1996) session.

By decision 1995/234 of 19 July, the Council took note of an oral report by the Director of the Division for Sustainable Development on the format in which the Committee on Natural Resources and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development should present their work.

Nuclear energy

On 21 August,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the 1994 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to the General Assembly. Presenting and updating the report in the Assembly on 1 November, the IAEA Director General addressed the issues of nuclear non-proliferation, the possibility of a comprehensive nuclear test-ban treaty, the IAEA nuclear safeguards system and verification of States' compliance with nuclear-arms-control pledges, including inspection missions in Iraq and verification activities in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (see PART TWO, Chapter IV), nuclear-weapon-free zones, nuclear safety and waste disposal, and illicit trafficking in nuclear materials.

The Director General stated that a great challenge facing the international community was to find the proper means of providing sufficient energy for sustainable development—energy without unacceptable damage to the environment. The Agency was cooperating with several international organizations in drawing up methodologies and databases for a comparative assessment of different options for producing electric power. Solar power, wind power, biomass and other renewable forms of energy would bring a valuable but minor contribution to the global energy supply, but it was evident that developing countries would need energy in much greater amounts. Expansion of nuclear power, which was providing about 8 per cent of the world's energy and 17 per cent of its electricity, could provide a part of the solution on the supply side without increasing emissions of carbon dioxide, sulphur dioxide or nitrogen oxides. The main obstacle to increased use was public concern with safety, radioactive waste and non-proliferation. Few developing countries had the technological level and infrastructure to allow them to make use of the existing types of nuclear power reactors. It was to be hoped that smaller and less costly nuclear reactors would become available in the future for generating electricity and also for the desalination of water to compensate for scarce freshwater resources. It was obvious that the increasing number of cities with more than a million, even more than 10 million, inhabitants in developing countries could not be provided with electricity generated by solar cells, windmills or biomass, for example. Their real choice for decades to come would be between fossil fuels and nuclear power.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/9.

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1994,

Noting the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 1 November 1995, in which he provided additional information on the main developments in the activities of the Agency during 1995,

Reaffirming that the Agency is the competent authority responsible for verifying and assuring, in accordance with the statute of the Agency and the Agency's safeguards system, compliance with its safeguards agreements with States parties undertaken in fulfilment of their obligations under article III, paragraph 1, of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to preventing diversion of nuclear energy from peaceful uses to nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, and also reaffirming that nothing should be done to undermine the authority of the Agency in this regard and that States parties that have concerns regarding non-compliance with the safeguards agreement of the Treaty by the States parties should direct such concerns, along with supporting evidence and information, to the Agency to consider, investigate, draw conclusions and decide on necessary actions in accordance with its mandate,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency in promoting the further application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, as envisaged in its statute and in accordance with the inalienable right of States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other relevant internationally legally binding agreements that have concluded relevant safeguards agreements with the Agency to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with articles I and II of the Treaty, with other relevant articles and with the objectives and purposes of the Treaty,

Also recognizing the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance from the Agency and the importance of funding in order to benefit effectively from the transfer and application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes as well as from the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development,

Conscious of the importance of the work of the Agency in the implementation of the safeguards provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to achieve similar objectives, as well as in ensuring, as far as it is able, that the assistance provided by the Agency or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purpose, as stated in article II of its statute,

Further recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency on nuclear power, applications of nuclear methods and techniques, nuclear safety, radiological protection and radioactive waste management, including its work directed towards assisting developing countries in all these fields,

Again stressing the need for the highest standards of safety in the design and operation of nuclear installations so as to minimize risks to life, health and the environment,

Taking note of the report of the Director General to the General Conference on the developments which took place in August 1995 related to Iraq's nuclear-weapons programme and of resolution GC(39)/RES/5 of 22 September 1995 of the General Conference,

Taking note also of resolutions GOV/2711 of 21 March 1994 and GOV/2742 of 10 June 1994 of the Board of Governors and GC(39)/RES/3 of 22 September 1995 of the General Conference in connection with the implementation of the Agreement between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the statements by the President of the Security Council of 31 March, 30 May and 4 November 1994, and the authorization by the Board of Governors, on 11 November 1994, to the Director General to carry out all the tasks requested of the Agency in the statement by the President of the Security Council of 4 November 1994,

Bearing in mind resolutions GC(39)/RES/14 on the strengthening of the Agency's technical cooperation activities, GC(39)/RES/15 on a plan for producing potable water economically, GC(39)/RES/16 on extensive use of isotope hydrology for water resources management, GC(39)/RES/17 on strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system, GC(39)/RES/18 on measures against the illicit trafficking in nuclear materials, GC(39)/RES/4 on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa, GC(39)/RES/5 on the implementation of Security Council resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991) relating to Iraq, GC(39)/RES/24 on application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East, GC(39)/RES/21 and GC(39)/RES/22 on the amendment of article VI of the statute relating to the membership of the Board of Governors, GC(39)/RES/13 on the Convention on Nuclear Safety, GC(39)/RES/19 on the staffing of the Agency's secretariat and GC(39)/RES/23 on nuclear testing, adopted on 22 September 1995 by the General Conference of the Agency at its thirty-ninth regular session,

Also bearing in mind resolution GC(39)/RES/20 on women in the secretariat adopted on 22 September 1995 by the General Conference, calling upon the Director General to examine the Platform for Action developed at the Fourth World Conference on Women and to integrate, where applicable, the elements of this Platform into the Agency's relevant policies and programmes,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Affirms its confidence in the role of the Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

3. Welcomes the measures and decisions taken by the Agency to maintain and strengthen the effectiveness and cost efficiency of the safeguards system in conformity with the Agency's statute, and calls upon States to cooperate in implementing the decisions taken by the Agency to that end;

4. Urges all States to strive for effective and harmonious international cooperation in carrying out the work of the Agency, pursuant to its statute; in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of the necessary measures to strengthen further the safety of nuclear installations and to minimize risks to life, health and the environment; in strengthening technical assistance and cooperation for developing countries; and in ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the safeguards system of the Agency;

5. Welcomes also the measures and decisions taken by the Agency to strengthen and fund its technical cooperation activities, and calls upon States to cooperate in implementing the measures and decisions pursuant thereto;

6. Commends the Director General and the secretariat of the Agency for their continuing impartial efforts to implement the safeguards agreement in force between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, including their efforts to monitor the freeze of specified facilities in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea as requested by the Security Council, expresses concern over the continuing non-compliance of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with the safeguards agreement, and urges the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to cooperate fully with the Agency in the implementation of the safeguards agreement and to take all steps the Agency may deem necessary to preserve, intact, all information relevant to verifying the accuracy and completeness of the initial report of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on the inventory of nuclear material subject to safeguards until the Democratic People's Republic of Korea comes into full compliance with its safeguards agreement;

7. Also commends the Director General of the Agency and his staff for their strenuous efforts in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April, 707(1991) of 15 August and 715(1991) of 11 October 1991, expresses deep concern that Iraq has, since 1991, withheld from the Agency information about its nuclear-weapons programme in violation of its obligations under resolutions 687(1991), 707(1991) and 715(1991), and stresses the need for Iraq to cooperate fully with the Agency in achieving the complete implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions;

8. Appeals to all States to ratify or accede to the Convention on Nuclear Safety;

9. Welcomes the measures taken by the Agency in support of efforts to prevent illicit trafficking in nuclear materials and other radioactive sources;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the fiftieth session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

General Assembly resolution 50/9

1 November 1995 Meeting 47 144-1-8 (recorded vote)

41-nation draft (A/50/L.11 & Add.1); agenda item 14.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: plenary 46, 47.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Latvia, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Abstaining: China, Cuba, Ghana, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania,* Viet Nam.

*Subsequently advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Before the adoption of the resolution, a recorded vote was taken on an amendment to operative paragraph 7, proposed by Iraq, which was rejected by 95 votes against to 8 in favour, with 22 abstentions. By that amendment, the following words would have been added after 715(1991) "notes in paragraph 13 of the Agency's report of 6 October 1995 to the Security Council (S/1995/844) that 'of the information which has been reviewed and analysed to date, nothing suggests that a change is warranted in IAEA's conclusion that Iraq's nuclear-weapon programme has been, for all practical purposes, destroyed, removed or rendered harmless'". The words "Iraq to cooperate fully" would have been replaced with "Iraq to continue its cooperation".

Separate recorded votes were taken on the fourth and eleventh preambular paragraphs, which were adopted by 128 to 3, with 7 abstentions, and by 121 to none, with 10 abstentions, respectively. Operative paragraph 7 was adopted by a recorded vote of 128 to none, with 10 abstentions.

Chapter VII

Environment

In 1995, the United Nations continued to work towards overcoming the challenges of environmental degradation, particularly through the work of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The first session of the Conference of the Parties to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change adopted the Berlin Mandate, under which talks were launched on a protocol or another legal instrument that would contain stronger commitments for Parties included in Annex I of the Convention (developed and transition countries) after the year 2000. The UNEP Governing Council, having noted the Climate Agenda—a proposal for an integrating framework for international climate-related programmes, which encompassed all the climate-related activities of international organizations—endorsed the proposal that UNEP should be responsible for coordinating international activities with regard to studies of climate impact assessments and response strategies to reduce vulnerabilities.

Stressing the need to further assess actions taken to combat deforestation and forest degradation and to promote management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests, the Commission on Sustainable Development recommended the establishment of an open-ended ad hoc Intergovernmental Panel on Forests, under its aegis. In June, the Economic and Social Council approved the establishment of the panel.

The Intergovernmental Conference to Adopt a Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities, convened in October/November by the UNEP Executive Director, adopted the Programme of Action, which was designed to guide national and/or regional authorities in devising and implementing sustained action to prevent, reduce, control and/or eliminate marine degradation from land-based activities.

The second meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity decided that a protocol on biosafety should be developed, and established an open-ended ad hoc working group to do so.

The UNEP Governing Council held its eighteenth session at UNEP headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya, from 15 to 26 May.

United Nations Environment Programme

At its eighteenth session, held at the headquarters of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), (Nairobi, Kenya, 15-26 May), the UNEP Governing Council adopted decisions on environmental and administrative matters, which were contained in its report on the session.⁽¹⁾ That report was taken note of by the Economic and Social Council in July in decision 1995/234.

By decision 1995/207/B of 10 February, the Council had decided that, when reviewing the UNEP Governing Council's report on its eighteenth session, it would not consider new draft proposals, except for specific recommendations that required action by the Council and proposals on matters relating to the coordination aspects of UNEP's work.

In resolution 50/110 of 20 December, the General Assembly endorsed the Governing Council's report and the decisions contained therein.

Role and priorities

By a 26 May decision,⁽²⁾ the UNEP Governing Council stated the Programme should concentrate on assessing and addressing emerging critical environmental issues; promoting international cooperation and recommending, as appropriate, policies to that end; acting as a catalyst to address major threats to the environment; monitoring the status of the global environment; facilitating the coordination of activities of all UN bodies on environmental matters; supporting, upon request, the work of environment ministries and other national environmental authorities in formulating their policies and related capacity-building activities; furthering the development of international environmental law; providing expert advice on the development and use of environmental economic concepts and instruments; and developing environmental regional programmes. It decided that the major results of UNEP activities should be international arrangements to enhance environmental protection; periodic and scientific cally sound forecasts designed to support decision-making and the creation of an international consensus on the main environmental threats and responses; more effective coordination within the UN system; policy options and advice to Governments, multilateral organizations and others, incorporating the environmental dimension into the sustainable process and strengthening environmental protection; and higher public awareness and greater capacity for environmental management and effective responses to threats of environmental degradation. The Executive Director was asked to take the Council's decision into account in shaping and executing future UNEP programmes and to bring the Governing Council's report on its eighteenth session⁽¹⁾ to the attention of the Secretary-General, as a contribution to his preparations for the special session of the General Assembly in 1997 to review the follow-up of Agenda 21 (for General Assembly action on the special session, see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

In a decision⁽³⁾ of the same date, the Council, taking note of the Executive Director's report on international environment technology centres,⁽⁴⁾ including the progress report on the UNEP International Environmental Technology Centre, asked her to make proposals on UNEP's own role and its partnership role in the context of international environmental technology centres, and on ways to financing endogenous capacity-building of scientific and technological centres, in particular of developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The Council asked her to report in 1997.

Governing structures

By a 26 May decision,⁽⁵⁾ the Governing Council decided to review in 1997 UNEP's governing structures, with a view to taking action or, where necessary, recommending that the General Assembly take action to modify and streamline the structures to produce greater efficiency, effectiveness and transparency. It asked the Executive Director to propose options in this regard to the Council in 1997, following consultations with Governments.

In-depth evaluation of programme on environment

At its May session, the Governing Council considered a note by the Executive Director⁽⁶⁾ transmitting a report on the in-depth evaluation of the programme on the environment prepared by the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) and transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), and another document comprising the draft report of CPC on its discussion of the report at its May/June session⁽⁷⁾ and its conclusions on it. By a 26 May decision,⁽⁸⁾ the Council asked the Executive Director to consider and take action on the OIOS recommendations and to take due consideration of the CPC conclusions and recommendations.

The OIOS recommendations aimed at refocusing UNEP activities by strengthening its partnership with other organizations within and outside the UN system, with due regard to its role as a global environment programme.

Role of NGOs

The Governing Council, having noted the OIOS recommendations,⁽⁶⁾ asked the Executive Director, by a 26 May decision,⁽⁹⁾ to give high priority to developing a policy framework and mechanisms within the secretariat for working with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) involved in the environment, including the assigning of the function of coordinator to an existing senior position.

Globalization and the environment

The Governing Council, in a 26 May decision,⁽¹⁰⁾ urged the Executive Director to pay special attention to regional and national particularities and the implications and impact of sustainable development for developing countries and countries with economies in transition, when (1) evaluating the link between trade and environment policies, international agreements and trade, trade rules, and the development of themes to assess the effectiveness of policy instruments; (2) providing technical assistance to Governments, where requested, for the analysis and formulation of environmental regulations and legislation to facilitate the implementation of international agreements at the national level; and (3) ensuring that the work under the sub-programme, globalization and the environment, included activities that UNEP was invited to undertake by the Commission on Sustainable Development in its decisions on trade, environment and sustainable development and consumption and production patterns, adopted at its 1994⁽¹¹⁾ and 1995 (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) sessions. In so doing, UNEP was to cooperate with all relevant international organizations, the Council stated.

Regional support

UNEP maintained regional offices in Africa (Nairobi), Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand), Europe (Geneva), Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City), North America (New York) and West Asia (Manama, Bahrain). (For UNEP regional activities, see below under "Regional concerns".)

Coordination and cooperation

UNEP and Commission on Sustainable Development

The Governing Council, having considered a March report of the Executive Director on environment and sustainable development,⁽¹²⁾ adopted a decision⁽¹³⁾ in which it stressed the need for UNEP to focus on the system-wide activities for which it had been assigned a special responsibility by Agenda 21, adopted by the UN Conference on Environment and Development in 1992,⁽¹⁴⁾ and the major policy issues and challenges in the environment, as determined by the Council. UNEP should continue to support the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development by providing scientific, technical and policy information and advice on the environment, the Council stated.

UNEP and small island
developing States

The Governing Council, in a 26 May decision,⁽¹⁵⁾ welcomed the action taken by the Executive Director in response to the 1994 Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,⁽¹⁶⁾ including the establishment of a focal point and a task force within UNEP to coordinate activities relevant to the Programme of Action adopted by the Conference. It urged the Executive Director to ensure that attention was given to the needs and vulnerabilities of small island developing States and to encourage an integrated approach within UNEP to addressing issues of relevance to those States.

UNEP and Habitat

The Commission on Human Settlements (see next chapter) adopted a 1 May decision⁽¹⁷⁾ in which it commended the UN Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) (Habitat) and UNEP on their decision to join forces in the Sustainable Cities Programme (SCP) and supported an agreement between them to mobilize their scientific and technical resources. It asked the Executive Director of UNCHS (Habitat) to extend SCP support to additional cities and to accelerate SCP operations.

International events

In a March report,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Executive Director summarized the conclusions of major international events since the Council's 1993 session, and submitted proposals for follow-up strategies by UNEP for the Council's consideration. The report cited the Secretary-General's 1992 report "An Agenda for Peace",⁽¹⁹⁾ the agenda for development initiative (see PART FOUR, Chapter I), the 1994 Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,⁽¹⁶⁾ the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development,⁽²⁰⁾ the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,⁽²¹⁾ which entered into force in 1994,⁽²²⁾ and the 1995 World Summit for Social Development (see PART FOUR, Chapter IX).

On 25 May, the Governing Council took note of the Executive Director's report and endorsed her proposals regarding follow-up action by UNEP.⁽²³⁾

General Assembly issues

The Executive Secretary, in March, provided information on issues emanating from resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 1993 and 1994 that were relevant to UNEP.⁽²⁴⁾ Those issues concerned Antarctica,⁽²⁵⁾ the effects of atomic radiation,⁽²⁶⁾ strengthening UNEP,⁽²⁷⁾ drought and desertification,⁽²⁸⁾ the elaboration of an international convention to combat desertification,⁽²⁹⁾ monitoring global environmental problems,⁽³⁰⁾ the 1994 report of the Commission on Sustainable Development,⁽³¹⁾ the Convention on Biological Diversity,⁽³²⁾ early warning capacities of the United Nations system with regard to natural disasters,⁽³³⁾ the International Day for the Preservation of the Ozone Layer,⁽³⁴⁾ observance of the World Day to Combat Desertification and Drought,⁽³⁵⁾ the International Year of the Ocean (1998),⁽³⁶⁾ the Global Learning and Observations to Benefit the Environment Programme,⁽³⁷⁾ the dissemination of the principles of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development,⁽³⁸⁾ protection of global climate,⁽³⁹⁾ the Global Conference on Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,⁽⁴⁰⁾ fisheries by-catch and discards and their impact on the sustainable use of the world's living marine resources,⁽⁴¹⁾ the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks,⁽⁴²⁾ an agenda for development,⁽⁴³⁾ and the report of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development.⁽⁴⁴⁾

On 25 May, the Governing Council took note of the Executive Director's report and authorized her to submit to future sessions her report on issues arising from General Assembly resolutions as an information document.⁽⁴⁵⁾

The General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee discussed matters relating to environment and sustainable development and made recommendations on a number of issues. By decision 50/430 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of part one of the Committee's report.

Telecommunications services

The Governing Council had before it the report of the Executive Director on the Mercure satellite telecommunications system.⁽⁴⁶⁾ The system, which was being provided by several European countries to generate and deliver environmental data to UNEP's global participants, was under implementation. By a 25 May decision,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Council asked the Executive Director to ensure that a full review and cost-benefit analysis of the system and experience gained in its initial operation be carried out as soon as technically feasible. She was asked to report on the matter in 1997. The Council decided that the Mercure agreement should be submitted to the General Assembly for endorsement, in accordance with UN procedures.

UNEP Fund

In a report to the Governing Council,⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Executive Director discussed the use of the resources of the Environment Fund in the bienniums 1992-1993 and 1994-1995 and the proposed use of projected resources in the 1996-1997 biennium. By a 26 May decision,⁽⁴⁹⁾ the Council approved a $90 million appropriation for Fund programme activities for the 1996-1997 biennium and apportioned the appropriation between sub-programmes, with $35.1 million earmarked for sustainable management and use of natural resources; $27 million for global and regional servicing and support; $10.8 million for a better environment for human health and well-being; $9.9 million for sustainable production and consumption; and $7.2 million for globalization and the environment. It approved an additional $15 million for Fund programme activities if sufficient resources became available and $5 million to the Fund programme reserve for the 1996-1997 biennium. The Council asked the Executive Director to prepare, for the 1998-1999 biennium, two alternative programmes for Fund activities, of $105 million and $130 million, and to report to the Committee of Permanent Representatives at its regular meetings on matters of programme implementation and planning.

By another decision of the same date,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Council, noting with deep concern that 1995 pledges and contributions had not only fallen short of the target established by the Council, but might be insufficient to finance the Fund programme of activities approved by it in 1993,⁽⁵¹⁾ asked the Executive Director to undertake a process of negotiating the amount and timing of pledges and contributions with Member States.

She was also asked to analyse the causes of falling contributions, recommend solutions and study ways to raise additional financial resources, periodically to inform the Committee of Permanent Representatives of the progress made and to report in 1997.

Following consideration of a March report of the Executive Director on the financial report and audited accounts of the Fund for the 1992-1993 biennium ended 31 December 1993,⁽⁵²⁾ and having noted comments of the Executive Director on the 1994 report of the Board of Auditors and on the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ),⁽⁵³⁾ the Governing Council, by a 25 May decision,⁽⁵⁴⁾ asked the Executive Director to report in 1997 on measures taken to respond to queries raised by the auditors and views expressed at the Council's 1995 session.

Also on 25 May,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Governing Council, having considered the Executive Director's March report containing the performance report on the programme and programme support costs budget for the 1994-1995 biennium and the proposed management and administrative support costs budget for the 1996-1997 biennium,⁽⁵⁶⁾ together with the relevant comments of ACABQ, noted that ACABQ had subsequently acknowledged the receipt of a response from the Executive Director.⁽⁵⁷⁾ The Council asked the Executive Director to transmit to ACABQ her report on the UN Office at Nairobi⁽⁵⁸⁾ and her note on ACABQ's report. It also asked her to ensure that ACABQ received sufficient and timely information for its purposes in future. The Council approved a revised appropriation of $41.05 million for the programme and programme support costs for the 1994-1995 biennium, and provisionally approved the staff redeployment and upgrading and the creation of the Ombudsman Unit, as proposed by the Executive Director in her reports,⁽⁵⁶⁾⁽⁵⁸⁾ on the condition that there was no overall increase in posts and budgetary allocations. The Council asked the Executive Director to report annually on the activities of the Ombudsman, including any comments of UN/OIOS on those activities. It decided to review in 1997 provisional transfers, upgrades and personnel changes, with a view to final approval. As to the management and administrative support costs for the 1996-1997 biennium, the Council approved an appropriation of some $42 million.

Following consideration of a March report of the Executive Director on Fund programme activities for the 1996-1997 biennium,⁽⁵⁹⁾ the Governing Council, by a 26 May decision,⁽⁶⁰⁾ provisionally approved the work programme and a core appropriation of $90 million for Fund programme activities, with an additional supplementary appropriation of $15 million, if and when funds became available. It decided to apportion the appropriation for Fund programme activities as outlined in an annex to its decision. The Executive Director was asked to continue mobilizing resources for the 1996-1997 work programme.

ACABQ action. ACABQ met from 15 to 19 May⁽⁶¹⁾ to discuss, among other things, the availability and use of Fund resources, the revised estimates for the 1994-1995 biennium for the Fund's programme and programme support costs budget, the Fund's proposed budget for the 1996-1997 biennium for management and administrative support costs, and its financial report and audited accounts for the 1992-1993 biennium, ended 31 December 1993. The Committee also considered the management of trust funds, new developments in conference-servicing, and the establishment of a UN office in Nairobi (see below for Governing Council action on these issues).

Trust funds

Taking note of a report of the Executive Director providing details on newly established trust funds and those on which the Governing Council was being requested to take action,⁽⁶²⁾ the Council, by a 25 May decision,⁽⁶³⁾ approved the establishment of 11 trust funds and the extension of another 10. It provisionally approved the extension of 14 trust funds and closed three others.

Also on 25 May, the Council, in a decision⁽⁶⁴⁾ in which it expressed concern that contributions to the trust funds were not being paid ahead of the year in which they were required, resulting in temporary advances from the Fund, asked donors to abide strictly by the terms of the trust funds and asked the Executive Director to conduct a cost-management study of expenditure on administering trust funds, of resource shortfalls and of possible ways to overcome such shortfalls, if any, and to report thereon in 1997. It also asked her to keep the Committee of Permanent Representatives informed of the measures taken on the matter.

Implementation of Agenda 21

In a March report,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the Executive Director estimated that the costs for UNEP to implement fully the parts of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992,⁽¹⁴⁾ specifically recommended for UNEP's attention was $105 million for the 1996-1997 biennium. On 26 May,⁽⁶⁶⁾ the Governing Council took note of the Executive Director's report and asked her to present broad-based estimates to the Council in 1997.

Administrative matters

UNEP Governing Council

Sessions

In a March report,⁽⁶⁷⁾ the Executive Director proposed that the Governing Council revert to annual sessions and limit the sessions to three working days. She discussed the possibility of setting up a preparatory committee of the Council to serve as its primary subsidiary organ to meet on a permanent basis every two years in odd years in sessions immediately preceding the Council session itself. She proposed maintaining the month of May for the sessions and that the Council recommend that the Commission on Sustainable Development be invited to schedule its meetings in order to allow the Council's deliberations to offer timely policy contributions to Commission meetings. In an April addendum,⁽⁶⁸⁾ the Executive Director clarified her proposals.

On 25 May, the Governing Council decided to hold its nineteenth session in Nairobi from 27 January to 7 February 1997 and approved its provisional agenda for that session.⁽¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/110.

Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, in which it decided to establish the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling also its resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992, in which it endorsed the recommendations on international institutional arrangements to follow up the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, as contained in chapter 38 of Agenda 21, in which, inter alia, the need for a strengthened role for the United Nations Environment Programme and its Governing Council was stressed and priority areas on which the Programme should concentrate were elaborated,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its eighteenth session, the report of the Secretary-General on the strengthening of the Programme, the note by the Secretary-General on the activities of the Programme in environmental monitoring, and the note by the Secretary-General on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment,

1. Endorses the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its eighteenth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Recognizes, in particular, Governing Council decisions 18/1 on the role and priorities of the United Nations Environment Programme, 18/5 on the in-depth evaluation of the programme on environment and 18/7 on environment and sustainable development, all of 26 May 1995, and decision 18/10 of 25 May 1995 on good environmental housekeeping within the United Nations system;

3. Requests the Governing Council to prepare a report on the role and activities of the United Nations Environment Programme in the implementation of Agenda 21, in accordance with its mandate, and to submit that report to the General Assembly at its special session on the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21;

4. Notes the importance of sufficient and timely contributions to the Environment Fund, and calls upon Governments to make contributions in a timely fashion in order to allow for the full and effective implementation of the work programmes;

5. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Environment Programme to promote maximum and cost-effective utilization of the conference facilities at its headquarters at Nairobi, and calls upon Governments and relevant intergovernmental bodies to support such efforts to ensure optimum utilization of the capacity of all United Nations conference facilities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 50/110

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/618/Add.6) without vote, 8 December (meeting 42); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.69), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.28); agenda item 96.

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 18-23, 34, 35, 38, 39, 42; plenary 96.

UN Office at Nairobi

In a May report,⁽⁵⁸⁾ the Executive Director described how a UN Office in Nairobi (UNON) would be established as from 1 January 1996 by combining the administrative and conference services of UNEP with those of UNCHS (Habitat) and the UN Common Services in Nairobi.

By a 25 May decision,⁽⁶⁹⁾ the Governing Council approved the attachment of administrative and conference services staff of UNEP to UNON, as set out in the Executive Director's report, and the payment of the costs of their emoluments from the management and administrative support costs budget of the Environment Fund. It asked that the Committee of Permanent Representatives be kept informed of the Council's decision and requested the Executive Director to report in 1997 on progress made.

Conference-servicing

By a 25 May decision,⁽⁷⁰⁾ the Governing Council, taking note of the Executive Director's March report on new developments in conference-servicing,⁽⁷¹⁾ asked her to provide adequate communications facilities for the use of government representatives at UNON and to keep under review the financial viability of establishing a team of interpreters in Nairobi, and, if found financially advantageous, to establish a team on a pilot basis. She was also asked to offer, at cost, interpretation services wherever possible to UNCHS (Habitat) and the Economic Commission for Africa. Endorsing the Executive Director's efforts to limit documents for the Governing Council to a maximum of four pages, it asked her to encourage convention secretariats administered by UNEP to do the same.

Human resources

The Governing Council, by a 25 May decision,⁽⁷²⁾ asked the Executive Director to present to the Committee of Permanent Representatives a quarterly report on consultancies and to submit to the Committee a statement listing the procedures to be followed in identifying the need for consultancies, selecting consultancies and assessing that their duties had been properly performed. It asked the Executive Director to take into account a series of principles when selecting consultancies and to ensure that the results of consultancies were evaluated by UNEP.

On 26 May, the Council asked the Executive Director to examine how the level of expertise in UNEP might be further improved, and to keep the Committee of Permanent Representatives informed of her efforts and report in 1997.⁽⁷³⁾

Waste, fraud and mismanagement

On 25 May, the Governing Council asked the Executive Director, in consultation with OIOS, to draw up and enact a specific plan of action to heighten the awareness of UNEP staff members concerning the need to combat waste, fraud and mismanagement and establish measures that would enable them to do so.⁽⁷⁴⁾ The Council presented measures to be included in the plan of action and recommended the production and dissemination of an administrative handbook containing the plan of action and a guide to the administrative manuals regulating UNEP and highlighting the practices that could be most subject to waste, fraud and mismanagement. In the interests of transparency, the Council stated that Governments should have access to information on the status of all audit investigations, their results and recommendations, and the response of UNEP management. The Executive Director was asked to implement the Council's decision in consultation with the Committee of Permanent Representatives and to report thereon in 1997. The biennial report of the UNEP Board of Auditors was to be submitted to the Governing Council at its regular sessions.

Strengthening UNEP

In response to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report on strengthening of UNEP,⁽⁷⁶⁾ in which he described steps taken to strengthen the liaison function for the Commission on Sustainable Development and efforts to increase UNEP's financial resources. He also discussed progress made in ensuring maximum use of conference facilities in Nairobi and in improving their cost-effectiveness.

In resolution 50/110 of 20 December, the Assembly noted the importance of sufficient and timely contributions to the Environment Fund and called on Governments to make contributions in a timely fashion. It also called on Governments to support UNEP's efforts to ensure optimum use of the capacity of UN conference facilities.

International conventions and mechanisms

In a report to the UNEP Governing Council,⁽¹⁾ the Executive Director gave the status, as at 30 November 1994, of new and existing conventions dealing with the environment.

By a 25 May decision,⁽²⁾ the Council authorized the Executive Director to transmit her report, on its behalf, to the General Assembly at its 1995 session, which the Secretary-General did by a note of 28 September.⁽³⁾ The Council asked the Executive Director to continue the regular publication of the Register of International Treaties and Other Agreements in the Field of Environment and called on States that had not yet done so to sign, ratify or accede to those conventions and protocols dealing with the environment to which they were eligible to become parties.

Climate change convention

As at 31 December 1995,⁽⁴⁾ there were 151 States parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which was opened for signature in 1992,⁽⁵⁾ and entered into force in 1994.⁽⁶⁾ The Convention aimed at stabilizing atmospheric concentrations of greenhouse gases at levels that would prevent human activities from interfering dangerously with the global climate system.

The Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for a Framework Convention on Climate Change held its eleventh session (New York, 6-17 February), during which it continued to prepare for the first session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention.⁽⁷⁾ The Committee remitted the draft rules of procedure to the Conference for consideration. Recommendations approved dealt with temporary arrangements between the Committee and the Global Environment Facility (GEF) and guidelines for parties in creating inventories on national greenhouse gases and assessing climate change impacts. A draft protocol on greenhouse gas emissions reduction was introduced. In addition, the Committee considered options for the site of the permanent secretariat of the Convention. In accordance with a 1992 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General, by an October note,⁽⁹⁾ transmitted the final report of the Chairman of the Committee.

The Conference of the Parties, at its first session (Berlin, Germany, 28 March-7 April),⁽¹⁰⁾ adopted the Berlin Mandate, by which talks were launched on a protocol or another legal instrument containing stronger commitments for Parties included in Annex I of the Convention (developed and transition countries) after the year 2000. The Conference established the Ad Hoc Group on the Berlin Mandate (see below). It adopted the Convention budget for the 1996-1997 biennium and decided to accept the offer of Germany to host the Convention secretariat in Bonn. The Conference outlined the functions of the Convention's subsidiary bodies—the Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice (SBSTA), which held its first session (Geneva, 28 August-1 September),⁽¹¹⁾ primarily of an organizational nature, and the Subsidiary Body for Implementation (SBI), which at its first session (Geneva, 31 August-1 September) considered communications from Annex I Parties⁽¹²⁾ and discussed its proposed programme of work.⁽¹³⁾ opment of an operational strategy in the climate change area and on initial activities in that area,⁽¹⁴⁾ and decided to adopt a mixed strategy, whereby projects would be selected with a double set of programme priorities, if they met either one of the long-term programme priorities or one of the short-term programme priorities. The Conference also took action on communications from Parties, activities implemented jointly under the Convention, the maintenance of interim arrangements, the transfer of technology, funding, and financial procedures and mechanisms.

Ad Hoc Group meetings. The Ad Hoc Group on the Berlin Mandate (AGBM) met twice in 1995 in Geneva (21-25 August⁽¹⁵⁾ and 30 October-3 November⁽¹⁶⁾), to identify possible policies and measures for Annex I Parties that could contribute to limiting and reducing emissions by sources and protecting and enhancing sinks and reservoirs of greenhouse gases. Under the Berlin Mandate process, quantified emission limitation and reduction objectives were to be set within specified timeframes. AGBM invited Parties to make preliminary submissions to the secretariat by 15 January 1996, offering ideas and comments on policies and measures. In addition, it held an initial exchange of views on the establishment of quantified limitation and reduction objectives within specified timeframes, such as 2005, 2010 and 2020, for anthropogenic emissions by sources and removals by sinks of greenhouse gases for Annex I Parties.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1994,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a November report on protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind,⁽¹⁸⁾ in which he described action taken, including activities by States to ratify, accept, approve or accede to the Convention. He also described initial communications submitted by Annex I Parties, the work of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, and activities of the interim secretariat. The Secretary-General discussed decisions taken at the first session of the Conference of Parties and their institutional, administrative and financial implications for the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/115.

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/212 of 21 December 1990, 46/169 of 19 December 1991, 47/195 of 22 December 1992, 48/189 of 21 December 1993 and 49/120 of 19 December 1994,

Noting with satisfaction that a large number of States and one regional economic integration organization have ratified the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and calling upon other States to take appropriate action to that end,

Noting that, in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 2 of General Assembly resolution 48/189, the first session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change was convened from 28 March to 7 April 1995 in Berlin, and that it was attended by one hundred and sixteen of the then one hundred and eighteen Parties to the Convention, as well as by a large number of governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental observers,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Government of Germany for the generous manner in which it hosted the first session of the Conference of the Parties,

Looking forward to the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies in addressing climate change within the framework of the Convention and to the successful conclusion of the Berlin Mandate process at the third session of the Conference of the Parties,

Noting the important scientific contribution of the World Meteorological Organization/United Nations Environment Programme Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to the Convention process and looking forward to the completion of its second assessment report,

Recognizing the contribution to the Convention process of the interim secretariat of the Convention, within the framework of the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development of the Secretariat, as well as the support provided to that secretariat by the World Meteorological Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme and bilateral contributors,

Taking note of the advice of the Secretary-General on an institutional linkage for the secretariat of the Convention with the United Nations, including the procedures indicated therein for the application of the Financial Regulations and the Staff Regulations and Staff Rules of the United Nations and for the appointment and accountability of the head of that secretariat,

Taking note also of the decision of the Conference of the Parties, on the basis of the advice of the Secretary-General, that the Convention secretariat shall be institutionally linked to the United Nations, while not being fully integrated into the work programme and management structure of any particular department or programme,

Taking note further of the financial procedures for the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, its subsidiary bodies and its permanent secretariat adopted at its first session, whereby, inter alia, the Secretary-General is asked to establish trust funds for the purposes of the Convention, to be managed by the head of the Convention secretariat in accordance with duly delegated authority,

Taking note further of the decision of the Conference of the Parties whereby the General Assembly is requested, bearing in mind the institutional linkage of the Convention secretariat to the United Nations and the large number of States that are Parties to the Convention, to decide to finance from the regular programme budget of the United Nations the conference-servicing costs arising from sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies for the duration of the institutional linkage mentioned above,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 49/120, with particular reference to the implications arising from the report of the Conference of the Parties on its first session,

1. Takes note with appreciation of:

(a) The report of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee on a Framework Convention on Climate Change on its eleventh session;

(b) The final report prepared on behalf of the Committee, by its Chairman, on the completion of the Committee's work;

(c) The report of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on its first session and its presentation on behalf of the President of the Conference;

2. Endorses the institutional linkage between the Convention secretariat and the United Nations, as advised by the Secretary-General and adopted by the Conference of the Parties;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to review the functioning of this institutional linkage not later than 31 December 1999, in consultation with the Conference of the Parties, with a view to making such modifications as may be considered desirable by both parties and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

4. Notes that the Conference of the Parties has decided to accept the offer of the Government of Germany to host the Convention secretariat and expresses its appreciation for the support offered by the future host Government for the relocation and effective functioning of the Convention secretariat;

5. Notes with appreciation contributions made to the extrabudgetary funds established under paragraphs 10 and 20 of General Assembly resolution 45/212, and maintained in accordance with its resolution 47/195;

6. Urges Member States that are Parties to the Convention to pay promptly and in full for each of the years 1996 and 1997, in accordance with the indicative scale adopted by consensus by the Conference of the Parties, the contributions required for the trust fund for the core budget of the Convention envisaged in paragraph 13 of its financial procedures, so as to ensure continuity in the cash flow required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties, the subsidiary bodies and the Convention secretariat;

7. Calls upon Member States that are Parties to the Convention to also contribute generously to the trust fund for participation in the Convention process envisaged in paragraph 15 of its financial procedures, as well as to the trust funds envisaged for supplementary activities under the Convention;

8. Decides to include in the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1996-1997 the sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies envisaged for that biennium entailing twelve weeks of conference-servicing facilities;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to include in the calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 1998-1999 those sessions of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies that the Conference may need to convene in that period;

10. Takes note of the transitional arrangement for administrative support to the Convention secretariat, outlined in the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 49/120, with particular reference to the implications arising from the report of the Conference of the Parties, on its first session, which should facilitate the establishment and relocation of the Convention secretariat and assist it in addressing any initial financial and personnel problems that may be encountered within this context, and also takes note of the financing arrangements contained in paragraphs 8 and 9 above, and requests the Secretary-General to review these arrangements towards the end of the biennium 1996-1997 and to report upon the results of this review to the Assembly at its fifty-second session;

11. Notes that the Secretary-General intends:

(a) To transfer the end-1995 balance in the trust fund for the negotiating process established under paragraph 20 of General Assembly resolution 45/212 into the trust fund for the core budget of the Convention envisaged in paragraph 13 of its financial procedures;

(b) To transfer the end-1995 balance in the special voluntary fund for participation in the negotiating process established under paragraph 10 of the same resolution into the trust fund for participation in the Convention process envisaged in paragraph 15 of the aforementioned financial procedures;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session the item entitled "Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind".

Convention on Biological Diversity

The Convention on Biological Diversity, which was opened for signature in 1992,⁽¹⁹⁾ and entered into force in 1993,⁽²⁰⁾ had been ratified or acceded to by 137 States as at 31 December 1995.⁽⁴⁾

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽²¹⁾ the Executive Secretary of the Convention submitted a June report on progress achieved in implementing the Convention.⁽²²⁾ He discussed decisions adopted at the first (1994) meeting of the Conference of the Parties⁽²³⁾ relating to financial resources and financial mechanism; technical and scientific matters; the statement to the Commission on Sustainable Development for submission to its third (1995) session; the 1995-1997 medium-term programme of work; and organizational matters.

The Open-ended Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Biosafety (Madrid, Spain, 24-28 July)⁽²⁴⁾ met to consider the need for a protocol setting out procedures, including advance informed agreement, in the area of safe transfer, handling and use of any living modified organism (LMO) resulting from biotechnology that might have an adverse effect on the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity. It also considered existing knowledge, experience and legislation in the area of biosafety. A panel of 15 Government-nominated experts (Cairo, Egypt, 1-5 May) prepared a background document describing current approaches to risk assessment and management, a survey of existing national, regional and international guidelines/regulations, and recommendations on further action to be taken to improve safety in biotechnology. The report was annexed to the Group's report. The Group stressed the immediate need for international action to achieve adequate safety of LMOs and suggested items to be considered in an international framework on biosafety. It presented options for an international framework that were relevant for the Conference of the Parties in considering the need for a protocol.

The second meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Jakarta, Indonesia, 6-17 November)⁽²⁵⁾ decided to develop a protocol on biosafety and established an open-ended ad hoc working group to do so. It adopted decisions concerning, among other things, the transfer and development of technology, forests and biological diversity, marine and coastal biological diversity, access to genetic resources, intellectual property rights, cooperation with other biodiversity-related conventions, the convening of an intergovernmental workshop on cooperation between the Convention and other international conventions on related issues, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) Global System for the Conservation and Utilization of Plant Genetic Resources, national reports by Parties, the 1996-1997 medium-term programme of work of the Conference, and the financing and budget for the Convention. It decided to locate the Convention secretariat in Montreal, Canada. The Conference considered the report of the first meeting of the Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice (SBSTTA) (Paris, 4-8 September).⁽²⁶⁾ SBSTTA had designed the Convention's programme of work for 1995-1997, which the Conference approved. At its two-day ministerial segment (14 and 15 November), the Conference of Parties adopted the Jakarta Ministerial Statement on the implementation of the Convention. The third meeting of the Conference was scheduled to take place from 4 to 15 November 1996 in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Commission on Sustainable Development. At its third session (New York, 11-28 April),⁽²⁷⁾ the Commission on Sustainable Development urged Governments that had not yet done so to ratify, accede to and begin implementing the Convention. It encouraged the Conference of the Parties to explore means for coordinating relevant global and regional agreements related to the Convention and establishing effective cooperation mechanisms. The Commission called on multilateral organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with the Convention and Governments in developing coordinating mechanisms. It welcomed the decision of the Conference to include in its medium-term programme consideration of the knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous and local communities. Welcoming the decision of the Conference to establish the clearing-house mechanism of the Convention, the Commission urged Governments and non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations to collect, analyse and disseminate more reliable and adequate data for measuring achievements at the national, regional and global levels.

UNEP Governing Council action. On 26 May, the Governing Council welcomed the designation of UNEP to carry out the functions of the secretariat of the Convention.⁽²⁸⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/111.

Convention on Biological Diversity

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 49/117 on the Convention on Biological Diversity and 49/119 on the International Day for Biological Diversity, of 19 December 1994,

Recalling the Convention on Biological Diversity,

Recalling also Agenda 21, particularly its chapter 15 on the conservation of biological diversity, and related chapters,

Recalling further the recommendations made at the third session of the Commission on Sustainable Development on the review of chapter 15 of Agenda 21 on the conservation of biological diversity,

Deeply concerned by the continuing loss of the world's biological diversity and, on the basis of the provisions of the Convention, reiterating the commitment to the conservation of biological diversity, and the sustainable use of its components, as well as the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising from the use of genetic resources,

1. Welcomes the results of the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, held at Nassau from 28 November to 9 December 1994, as reflected in the report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention,^a submitted in accordance with paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 49/117;

2. Takes note that the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity has decided to accept the offer of the Government of Canada to host the secretariat of the Convention, and expresses its appreciation for the support offered by the Canadian authorities to ensure the effective functioning of the secretariat;

3. Also takes note of the results of the first meeting of the Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice, held at the headquarters of the United

^a A/50/218.

Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris from 4 to 8 September 1995, including its medium-term programme of work for 1996-1997 and its contribution to the Open-ended Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Panel on Forests of the Commission on Sustainable Development;

4. Calls upon those States that have not yet ratified the Convention to expedite their internal procedures of ratification, acceptance or approval;

5. Invites the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the results of the second meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, held at Jakarta from 6 to 17 November 1995, and also invites the Secretary to make the reports of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention available to the Commission on Sustainable Development.

General Assembly resolution 50/111

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/618/Add.1) without vote, 30 November (meeting 40); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.45), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.8); agenda item 96 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 18-23, 40; plenary 96.

Montreal Protocol and Ozone Convention

At their seventh meeting (Vienna, 5-7 December),⁽²⁹⁾ the Parties to the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer⁽³⁰⁾ considered the reports of the Scientific Assessment Panel, the Environmental Effects Panel, and the Technology and Economic Assessment Panel; the report of the Co-Chairs of the Open-ended Working Group of the Parties to the Protocol on the outcome of the preparatory meeting on the issues before its 1995 meeting; the report of the President of the Implementation Committee; and the report of the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Protocol. Decisions adopted by the Parties dealt with, among other things, adjustments and reductions of production and consumption of the controlled substances listed in Annexes to the Protocol; provision of financial support and technology transfer; the definition of "quarantine applications" with respect to methyl bromide and of "pre-shipment applications"; the reduction of methyl bromide emissions; trade in methyl bromide; review of methyl bromide controls; uses of controlled substances as chemical process agents after 1996; alternatives to controlled substances used for laboratory and analytical purposes; limitations on the use of halon; the Multilateral Fund of the Montreal Protocol; and other financial and administrative matters.

The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) stated that, as at the end of December 1995, UNDP was assisting 41 countries to eliminate ozone-depleting substances (ODS) under the Protocol.⁽³¹⁾ During the year, $32.4 million in UNDP work programmes had been approved and funded by the Executive Committee of the Multilateral Fund of the Montreal Protocol, thus raising the UNDP 1991-1995 cumulative project portfolio to $110 million. The portfolio comprised 398 projects, including 207 technology transfer investment projects, which would eliminate 14,128 tons of ODS per year. The regional shares of the cumulative programme were: Africa and the Middle East, 13 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 51 per cent; Latin America and the Caribbean, 33 per cent; and regional and global programmes, 3 per cent. The foam and refrigeration sectors accounted for four-fifths of the total programme.

As at 31 December,⁽⁴⁾ 152 States and the European Community (EC) were parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer,⁽³²⁾ which had entered into force in 1988.⁽³³⁾ At the same date,⁽⁴⁾ 150 States and EC were parties to the 1987 Montreal Protocol,⁽³⁰⁾ 103 States and EC were parties to the 1990 Amendment to the Protocol,⁽³⁴⁾ and 50 States and EC were parties to the 1992 Amendment.⁽³⁵⁾

Convention to Combat Desertification

As at 31 December 1995,⁽⁴⁾ the UN Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, which was adopted in 1994⁽³⁶⁾ and was opened for signature in October of that year, had been signed by 114 countries and the European Community and been ratified, accepted or acceded to by 19 States.

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly decision,⁽³⁷⁾ the Intergovernmental Committee continued to function, pending the entry into force of the Convention, which would occur 90 days after the deposit of the fiftieth instrument of ratification. It held its sixth (New York, 9-18 January) and seventh (Nairobi, 7-17 August) sessions in 1995. By notes of January⁽³⁸⁾ and February⁽³⁹⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the reports of those sessions to the Assembly, which, by decision 50/432 of 20 December, took note of them.

In January, the Intergovernmental Committee adopted resolutions relating to the work programme for the period leading to the first session of the Conference of Parties and observance of the World Day to Combat Desertification and Drought (17 June), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽⁴⁰⁾ It also adopted a decision on accreditation of NGOs. Annexed to the Committee's January report were the conclusions of the Committee Chairman regarding urgent action for Africa and action taken in other regions, and the review of the situation regarding extrabudgetary funds.

At its August session, the Committee recommended to the Assembly that the Committee hold its eighth and ninth sessions in 1996 from 5 to 16 February in Geneva and from 3 to 13 September in New York, respectively. It also recommended to the Assembly the convening in 1997 of its tenth session in New York from 6 to 17 January and its eleventh session in April, the exact dates and venue to be determined. It requested the Assembly to review the financial situation of the Trust Fund to support the work of the Committee and the interim secretariat and the Special Voluntary Fund. The Committee recommended that, upon the Convention's entry into force, the Conference of Parties be convened in either June or August 1997. It adopted decisions regarding accreditation of NGOs, the identification of an organization to house the Global Mechanism, financial rules, programme and budget, the location and designation of a permanent secretariat, the draft rules of procedures of the Conference of the Parties, procedures for communication of information and review of implementation and organization of scientific and technological cooperation.

Reports of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽⁴¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an August report,⁽⁴²⁾ stating that support for the implementation of the Convention was urgently required, since more than 900 million people lived under the shadow of desertification and drought. He noted that it was especially important to support immediate actions in Africa. The Secretary-General hoped that greater efforts could be made to increase contributions for multilateral funding for the Convention and appealed for donors to support subregional programmes and active subregional organizations.

In response to a 1994 Assembly request,⁽³⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported in October on the work of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee in 1995 (see above), activities on urgent measures for Africa and interim action in other regions, and future work concerning the Convention.⁽⁴³⁾

Executive Board action. The Executive Board of UNDP/United Nations Population Fund, in a 13 January decision,⁽⁴⁴⁾ expressed support for the UNDP Administrator's initiatives to promote UNDP measures in support of the implementation of the Convention and its regional annexes. The Executive Board encouraged the Administrator, in light of the Convention, to take the necessary steps to change the name of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO), while keeping its acronym. UNSO was subsequently renamed the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought (see also PART FOUR, Chapter III).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/112.

Elaboration of an international convention to combat desertification in those countries experiencing serious drought and/or desertification, particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/172 of 19 December 1989 and 44/228 of 22 December 1989 and its other relevant resolutions and decisions, and the recommendations made in Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Recalling also its resolution 47/188 of 22 December 1992, by which it decided to establish the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the Elaboration of an International Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,

Recalling further its resolution 49/234 of 23 December 1994, in which it decided that the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee should continue to function in order, inter alia, to prepare for the first session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, as specified in the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 49/234 and on possible requirements for intergovernmental and secretariat work on the implementation of the Convention and its regional implementation annexes, and having also considered Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee resolution 7/1 of 17 August 1995 on dates and venue of the sessions of the Committee during the period up to and including the first session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention,

Expressing its concern about the present level of the Special Voluntary Fund for participation in the negotiation process of developing countries affected by desertification and drought, in particular the least developed countries,

Noting that the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee has established two working groups in order to be able to discharge its responsibilities in the preparation for the first session of the Conference of Parties to the Convention,

Also expressing its concern about the present level of the Trust Fund, established pursuant to its resolution 47/188, to support the work of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee and the interim secretariat,

Considering that the Convention is one of the main steps in the implementation and follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

1. Welcomes the signing of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, by a large number of States and one regional economic integration organization and the ratification of the Convention by a growing number of States, and urges States that have not yet signed or ratified the Convention to do so, so that it may enter into force as soon as possible;

2. Decides that the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the Elaboration of an International Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, shall continue to prepare for the first session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention as specified in the Convention;

3. Also decides, for this purpose, to convene two sessions of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee in 1996, each of up to two weeks' duration, the eighth session to be held at Geneva from 5 to 16 February and the ninth session in New York from 3 to 13 September;

4. Further decides to convene the tenth session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, which is to be held in New York from 6 to 17 January 1997 and, pending the entry into force of the Convention, to convene, as necessary, a further session of the Committee in 1997, of up to two weeks' duration, the exact dates and venue of which shall be determined at a later stage;

5. Recommends that, upon the entry into force of the Convention, a session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention be convened in the second and third weeks of June 1997 or, alternatively, in the second and third weeks of August 1997, the exact dates and venue of the session to be determined at a later stage;

6. Requests all countries, the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, relevant subregional and regional organizations, appropriate scientific and business communities, trade unions, relevant non-governmental organizations and other interested groups, to take action for the prompt implementation of the Convention and its relevant regional implementation annexes upon its entry into force and in this regard to respond effectively to the needs in the African, Asian and Latin American and Caribbean regions;

7. Urges all countries, the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, relevant subregional and regional organizations and all other relevant actors to undertake actions and measures for the full and effective implementation of the provisions of Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee resolution 5/1 of 17 June 1994 on urgent action for Africa, as well as to promote actions for other affected developing countries and regions, and invites all States to continue to communicate to the interim secretariat of the Convention, in addition to the information they have already provided, information on actions undertaken and/or envisaged for the implementation of the provisions of resolution 5/1;

8. Decides that the work of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee and the interim secretariat shall continue to be funded through existing United Nations budgetary resources, without negatively affecting its programmed activities, and through voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 47/188 specifically for that purpose and administered by the head of the interim secretariat under the authority of the Secretary-General, with the possibility of using the Fund, as appropriate, to support the participation of representatives of non-governmental organizations in the work of the Committee and of carrying over resources contributed from one fiscal year to the other;

9. Urges States, regional economic integration organizations and other interested organizations to reinforce the capacity of the interim secretariat of the Convention through substantial contributions to the Trust Fund;

10. Renews its appeals to Governments, regional economic integration organizations and other interested organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to make early contributions to the Special Voluntary Fund in order to ensure an enhanced effective participation in the negotiation process of developing countries affected by desertification and/or drought, in particular the least developed countries;

11. Notes the arrangements and contributions made by the Secretary-General and relevant organizations active in the fields of desertification, drought and development, including the United Nations Development Programme/Office to Combat Desertification and Drought, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Bank, as regards the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee and the interim secretariat in the conduct of their mandate, and invites them to intensify and expand such support and collaboration in the future, as appropriate;

12. Also notes the arrangements concluded between the interim secretariat of the Convention and the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the World Meteorological Organization, whereby appropriate actions are taken for an active collaboration and support of activities at the national and regional levels in affected developing countries, in particular those in Africa, and the least developed countries;

13. Requests the Chairman of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee to submit progress reports on the work of the Committee to the General Assembly, the Commission on Sustainable Development and other appropriate bodies of the United Nations;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, the relevant specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations, international financial institutions, other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other relevant institutions;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution relative to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, under the item entitled "Implementation of decisions and recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development".

The Climate Agenda

In March, the UNEP Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council a summary of a proposal for an integrating framework for the 1979 World Climate Programme (WCP).⁽¹⁾ Entitled "Climate Agenda",⁽²⁾ the proposal for international climate-related programmes was presented jointly by the six international organizations involved in implementing WCP—UNEP, FAO, the International Union of Scientific Unions, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC), and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO). It suggested action to be taken by international organizations and Governments and summarized achievements to date. It stated that the Agenda would be developed along four main thrusts: new frontiers in climate science and production; climate services for sustainable development; studies of climate impact assessments and response strategies to reduce vulnerability; and dedicated observations of the climate system.

By a 26 May decision,⁽³⁾ the UNEP Governing Council endorsed the proposal that UNEP should be responsible for coordinating international activities under thrust 3 of the Agenda (studies of climate impact assessments and response strategies to reduce vulnerabilities) of the four thrusts identified. It urged relevant international organizations to align their climate-related activities according to the Agenda's priorities and to implement those activities, and to establish reporting and coordinating mechanisms for WCP. It asked Governments to undertake those parts of the programme for which they had the required expertise; to strengthen or establish national climate programmes required by the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change⁽⁴⁾ and the Intergovernmental Meeting on WCP;⁽⁵⁾ to cooperate in building the scientific and technical capacity of developing countries and countries with economies in transition; and to provide a modest amount of additional resources to international organizations to coordinate the implementation of the Climate Agenda and to manage the programmes, through the inter-agency Coordinating Committee of WCP.

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

By a 25 May decision,⁽⁶⁾ the Governing Council, taking note of a report of the Executive Director on the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) during 1994,⁽⁷⁾ asked her, jointly with the Secretary-General of WMO, to continue arrangements to support IPCC and to ensure the participation of specialists in its activities. It asked IPCC to continue to update the assessments on the science, impacts, response options and technical aspects of the socio-economics of climate change. Governments were urged to continue to support the Panel's activities and to contribute to its trust fund. The Council also asked the Panel to report to the Governing Council in 1997.

IPCC (Rome, December 1995) approved the 1995 Second Assessment Report, which was expected to improve the world's understanding of the causes of global climate change.

Biological diversity

Report of the Secretary-General. The Commission on Sustainable Development (New York, 11-28 April), considered a February report of the Secretary-General⁽⁸⁾ reviewing the progress made in implementing the aims set out in Chapter 15 (conservation of biological diversity) of Agenda 21, since its adoption by UNCED in 1992.⁽⁴⁾ The Secretary-General concluded that there appeared to have been no major initiatives on the issues of technology transfer and financial mechanisms that would ensure the additional financial resources needed by developing countries. Some issues that still needed to be addressed included the harmonization of principles and obligations; implementation of methods and procedures for better understanding and identification of various components of biodiversity and the conservation and management of indigenous species; the mobilization and exchange of information relevant to conservation and the sustainable use of biodiversity; coordinated promotion of public awareness; and the determination of the potential impact of intended projects and programmes on the delicate balance and well-being of fragile and complex ecosystems worldwide. The Secretary-General noted, however, that significant progress had been made on most issues pertaining to the Convention on Biological Diversity.

Proposals for action dealt with cooperation programmes and collaborative arrangements; information exchange and networking; education, science, human resources development, technology transfer and capacity-building; policy reforms; UN assessment of the impacts of macro-economic and other issues affecting biodiversity; government assessment of existing information systems; and improving and increasing understanding of the role of biodiversity in sustainable development.

Commission action. In April,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission on Sustainable Development urged the international community to support efforts towards capacity-building, human resource development and the transfer of technology to developing countries for the conservation of biodiversity. Countries were urged to take measures with the aim of having the private sector facilitate access to joint development of technology. The international community should make efforts to develop economic mechanisms to determine the costs and benefits of the conservation of biological diversity and sustainable use of its components. Governments were asked to undertake policies aimed at the implementation of the objectives of chapter 15 of Agenda 21, and to integrate actions to conserve biodiversity and to promote sustainable development. The Commission further urged Governments to promote the fair and equitable sharing of benefits accruing from the utilization of biological resources.

Biosafety

In a 25 May decision,⁽¹⁰⁾ the UNEP Governing Council expressed support for the holding of a global expert consultation on International Technical Guidelines for Safety in Biotechnology and Related Capacity-Building Requirements and endorsed and supported UNEP sponsorship of regional consultations on the subject. It asked the Executive Director to consult with the secretariat of the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity⁽¹¹⁾ in implementing its decision and to report in 1997.

The UNEP International Guidelines for Safety in Biotechnology were adopted at the Global Consultation of Government-designated Experts (Cairo, Egypt, December 1995) following a consensus building process involving seven regional and subregional consultations and encompassing a wide spectrum of stakeholders including the biotechnology industry. A capacity-building programme related to the implementation of the Guidelines was formulated by UNEP for submission to potential donors for financial and technical support to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition developing national biosafety mechanisms.

Desertification and drought control

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1993 General Assembly request,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an August report⁽¹³⁾ on desertification and drought. He noted that cooperation between UNEP and UNDP had been strengthened, with the two organizations having signed, on 26 April 1995, a new partnership agreement to refocus the joint venture into the Partnership to Combat Desertification and Drought. Under the agreement the two organizations would develop programme packages and jointly mobilize resources in areas where they had complementary expertise. He described support activities undertaken by the international community to combat desertification and drought.

Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

On 26 May, the Governing Council, having considered the Executive Director's report on progress achieved in 1993 and 1994⁽¹⁴⁾ in implementing the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (PACD),⁽¹⁵⁾ including implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region, adopted a decision⁽¹⁶⁾ in which it expressed support for UNEP efforts concerning the development of an updated assessment method for drylands and desertification, as well as its efforts to increase awareness of desertification and disseminate information materials to a range of media. It asked the Executive Director to continue promoting cooperation and coordination of efforts to combat desertification and intensifying research and development in collaboration with relevant institutions and centres. The Council asked the Executive Director to submit her report on PACD, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fiftieth (1995) session. It also requested her to participate in assisting Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to implement the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,⁽¹⁷⁾ and to support the Convention's interim secretariat. The Executive Director was further asked to: report to the Council in 1997 on the implementation of the April 1995 UNEP/UNDP Partnership to Combat Desertification; contribute to implementing the 1994 Convention and to urgent action for Africa; invite other UN organizations and agencies, financial institutions, funds and other interested parties to join the Partnership and contribute to efforts of developing countries to combat desertification and mitigate the effects of drought; and to report to the Council in 1997 on the activities undertaken.

By a June note,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the Executive Director's report to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly. In June, the Council, by decision 1995/234, took note of the Secretary-General's note and, by decision 50/434 of 20 December, the Assembly took note of it.

(For the activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, renamed in 1995 the Office to Combat Drought and Desertification, see PART FOUR, Chapter III.)

Commission on Sustainable Development action. At its April session,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Commission on Sustainable Development expressed concern that, according to a February report of the Secretary-General on combating desertification and drought,⁽¹⁹⁾ the economic loss caused by desertification worldwide, in terms of average income foregone, was estimated in 1991 to be more than $42 billion annually, most of it in Africa ($9.3 billion) and Asia ($20.9 billion). The Commission urged Governments to take an integrated approach to combating desertification and drew their attention to the potential of the 1994 Convention⁽¹⁷⁾ to provide an in-country coordinating mechanism for integrated land management in arid, semi-arid and sub-humid lands. It also urged them to enhance public awareness of the issue. The Commission recommended that organizations of the UN system take steps to facilitate the financing of programmes and projects in dry and sub-humid areas and urged developed countries to agree on policies and resource allocations for fulfilling their commitments towards implementing the 1994 Convention. Affected countries and regional and subregional organizations were urged to: set up institutional arrangements and policy frameworks for developing, managing and implementing national strategies and action programmes; encourage Governments to improve national coordination among agencies to combat desertification and manage drought more effectively and for the sustainable use of natural resources; and establish, as a matter of highest priority, coordinating arrangements and to create partnerships with donors and national stakeholders, within the context of the 1994 Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/114.

Desertification and drought

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/175 of 21 December 1993 in which it recalled the decisions of the United Nations

Conference on Environment and Development set forth in chapter 12 of Agenda 21, entitled "Managing fragile ecosystems: combating desertification and drought", and took note of the recommendation contained in paragraph 38.27 of Agenda 21 and of decision 93/33 of 18 June 1993 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Noting the work being undertaken by the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for the Elaboration of an International Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,

Referring to its resolution 48/175, in which it recalled the appeals to the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Environment Programme to continue and strengthen their cooperation in combating desertification, notably through support for the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought by the joint venture programme,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of its resolution 48/175,

Expressing its concern at the present level of resources available to relevant United Nations bodies, including the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought of the United Nations Development Programme, to support activities to combat desertification and mitigate the effects of drought in all affected developing countries and regions,

1. Welcomes the efforts made by the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Development Programme to strengthen their cooperation in combating desertification through the United Nations Environment Programme/United Nations Development Programme partnership to combat desertification;

2. Renews its appeal to Governments, regional economic integration organizations and other interested organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to make contributions to relevant United Nations bodies, including the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought of the United Nations Development Programme, to strengthen their capacity to support activities to combat desertification and mitigate the effects of drought in all affected developing countries and regions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, which would be considered under one unified sub-item on the agenda entitled "Implementation of decisions and recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development", under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development".

General Assembly resolution 50/114

20 December 1995 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/50/618/Add.2) without vote, 5 December (meeting 41); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/50/L.52), based on informal consultations on draft by Philippines, for Group of 77 and China (A/C.2/50/L.29); agenda item 96 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: 2nd Committee 18-23, 38, 41; plenary 96.

World Day to Combat Desertification and Drought

In a June report to the General Assembly,⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General described activities undertaken by the interim secretariat of the 1994 Convention and UN programmes and specialized agencies to observe the first World Day to Combat Desertification and Drought (17 June 1995), which was proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1994.⁽²¹⁾ The purpose of the activities was to raise public awareness with a view to ensuring the successful implementation of the Convention. The Secretary-General outlined ways and means by which the interim secretariat could assist Member States in organizing their national activities.

On 20 December, the General Assembly by decision 50/433 took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Deforestation and forest degradation

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Sustainable Development a February report,⁽²²⁾ prepared by FAO as task manager for chapter 11 (combating deforestation) of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992.⁽²³⁾ Chapter 11 and the Non-legally Binding Authoritative Statement of Principles for a Global Consensus on the Management, Conservation and Sustainable Development of All Types of Forests (Forest Principles), also an outcome of UNCED, both aimed to achieve the sustainable management of all types of forests, with an equal emphasis on conservation and management. The report summarized information on progress made and experiences reported by 34 Governments, 20 NGOs, 5 private-sector associations, 14 UN agencies and 6 non-UN intergovernmental organizations and presented proposals for action by the Commission.

At its April session,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission urged Governments and interested organizations and groups to mobilize financial resources and the transfer of environmentally sound technology for the effective implementation of the Forest Principles and chapter 11 of Agenda 21. It considered further concrete actions, on the management, conservation and sustainable development of forests, particularly by Governments, to be an urgent priority. Stressing the need to further assess actions taken to combat deforestation and forest degradation and to promote management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests, the Commission decided to establish an open-ended ad hoc intergovernmental panel on forests, under its aegis. The Panel's mandate, modalities for its establishment and terms of reference for the Panel were annexed to the Commission's report.

In a May note to the Economic and Social Council,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretariat outlined the priority areas for the proposed panel, which were to include elements based on chapter 11 of Agenda 21 and the Forest Principles. The panel would consider the following main issues: implementation of UNCED decisions related to forests; international cooperation in financial assistance and technology transfer; scientific research, forest assessment and development of criteria and indicators for sustainable forest management; trade and environment relating to forest products and services; and international organizations and multilateral institutions and instruments, including legal mechanisms. The note discussed the Panel's work programme, composition and programme budget implications.

The Council, by decision 1995/226 of 1 June, approved the establishment of an open-ended ad hoc intergovernmental panel on forests. By decision 1995/316 of 28 July, the Council decided that the Panel should meet in New York from 11 to 15 September 1995.

The open-ended Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Panel on Forests (IPF), at its first session (New York, 11-15 September),⁽²⁵⁾ elected its officers, adopted its agenda and decided on the dates and venues of future meetings. The Panel considered suggestions regarding its future work programme as contained in an August report of the Secretary-General.⁽²⁶⁾ It decided to extend the duration of its second session, to be held in Geneva, by one week so that the dates would be from 11 to 22 March 1996, and that its third session would be from 2 to 13 September 1996, at a venue to be determined. That decision was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1995/318 of 25 October 1995.

UNEP Governing Council action. On 25 May, the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to place UNEP's experience and expertise in environmental issues related to forests at the disposal of the Panel, and to further develop and strengthen that expertise through the relevant elements of the UNEP work programme so as to contribute effectively to the Panel's work.⁽²⁷⁾

Sustainable mountain development

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Sustainable Development a February report on progress made in implementing the aims set out in chapter 13 of Agenda 21 (managing fragile ecosystems: sustainable mountain development).⁽²⁸⁾ The report was prepared by FAO, as task manager of the issue, in consultation with the Secretariat. It focused on new approaches concerning the integrated management of the natural resource base, the interaction between rural mountain populations and resources in terms of sustainable livelihoods, and efforts to ensure environmentally sound and sustainable development of mountain areas. Proposals for action dealt with poverty eradication; strengthening a global information network and database; strengthening country capacity; raising awareness through the preparation and organization of a world conference on sustainable mountain development; and formulating and negotiating regional or sub-regional mountain conventions and developing a global mountain charter.

At its April session,⁽⁹⁾ the Commission called on Governments and the international community to take action to combat poverty in mountain areas, diversify mountain economies, protect the environment and food security of local communities, strengthen global information networks and databases, addressing environmental problems, and create new livelihood opportunities. It urged expanding the network of protected mountain areas to cover all types of mountain ecosystems, strengthening existing management capabilities for conserving mountain ecosystems, species and genetic diversity and promoting local and non-governmental organizations' participation in the management of those areas. It urged interested Governments to prepare and implement comprehensive national and/or local mountain development programmes.

Land resources

The Commission on Sustainable Development considered a February report,⁽²⁹⁾ submitted by the Secretary-General describing progress made in implementing the aims set out in chapter 10 of Agenda 21 (Integrated approach to the planning and management of land resources). The report, prepared by FAO in consultation with the Secretariat, concluded that advances had been made in developing tools and technology to support more productive sustainable land use, but much less progress had been made in creating the capacity to apply the tools routinely in all countries. It noted that attention needed to be paid to developing linkages between traditional knowledge and land management systems on the one hand, and the application of science and technology on the other. A series of proposals for action by the Commission were presented.

The Commission, at its April session,⁽⁹⁾ noting with concern the convergence of poverty, hunger and the degradation of terrestrial resources in environmentally more fragile marginal lands, where the large majority of poor smallholder farmers were increasingly located, called on Governments, bilateral donors, multilateral financial institutions, technical specialized agencies, and NGOs to give high priority to rural development in such lower-potential areas. It asked the Secretary-General to strengthen coordination and cooperation within the UN system by developing and implementing joint approaches and collaborative programmes. The Commission urged Governments, with the cooperation and support of UN bodies and organizations, to pay particular attention to establishing stable land-use systems in areas where important ecosystems or ecoregions were being endangered by human activities; applying integrated planning and development approaches in regions that were becoming open to intensified settlement and agricultural production; and bringing about integrated approaches to capacity-building. Noting with appreciation the outcome of the International Workshop on Integrated Land Management (Wageningen, the Netherlands, 20-22 February 1995),⁽³⁾ organized by FAO and hosted by the Government of the Netherlands, the Commission invited the Government and FAO to disseminate the workshop's report and recommendations as widely as possible.

Marine ecosystems

Protection of the marine environment from land-based activities

UNEP action. By a 25 May decision,⁽³¹⁾ the Governing Council called on all States and relevant international and non-governmental organizations to consider the draft Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities,⁽³²⁾ and to communicate any proposals for amendment to the Executive Director for submission to the Intergovernmental Conference to Adopt a Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities (see below). It called on States participating in the Conference to consider how attention could be given to support national and regional activities on urban waste-water management and treatment and persistent organic pollutants (POPs).

Intergovernmental Conference. The Intergovernmental Conference to Adopt a Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities (Washington, D.C., 23 October-3 November 1995)⁽³³⁾ was convened by the UNEP Executive Director pursuant to a 1993 Governing Council decision.⁽³⁴⁾ The Conference was preceded by a preparatory meeting (Reykjavik, Iceland, 6-10 March)⁽³⁵⁾ and a Consultation on Financial and Capacity-building Issues related to the Global Programme of Action (Washington, DC., 16-18 August 1995).⁽³⁶⁾

Following consideration of the draft Global Programme of Action⁽³²⁾ and the comments submitted thereon,⁽³⁷⁾ the Conference adopted the Programme of Action, which was designed to guide national and/or regional authorities in devising and implementing sustained action to prevent, reduce, control and/or eliminate marine degradation from land-based activities. Actions for consideration by States dealt with sewage, POPs (polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs), dioxans and furans, aldrin, dieldrin, DDT, endrin, chlordane, hexachlorobenzene, mirex, toxaphene, heptachlor), radioactive substances, heavy metals, oils (hydrocarbons), nutrients, sediment mobilization, litter, and physical alterations and destruction of habitats.

The High-Level Segment of the Conference was held on 31 October and 1 November. It discussed institutional follow-up and preparations for consideration of oceans issues by the Commission on Sustainable Development, the mobilization of resources finance and the importance of the oceans and the marine environment to life on Earth and the serious degradation afflicting them. At the close of the High-Level Segment, the Washington Declaration on Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities was adopted. By the Declaration, the 109 countries participating in the Conference declared their commitment to protect and preserve the marine environment from the impacts of land-based activities through numerous measures.

As to future activities, it was stated that during the first two months of 1996, the UNEP secretariat would review the status of activities dealing with the protection of the marine environment from land-based activities in the 13 regions of the UNEP Regional Seas Programme and other regional seas and activities. Based on that review, a series of regional workshops would be organized to identify the activities and projects that individual nations and regions would have to carry out to develop and begin implementation of regional strategic programmes.

Living marine resources

Drift-net fishing

In response to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽³⁸⁾ the Secretary-General submitted, in October, information received from States, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and scientific institutions on activities undertaken with regard to large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas.⁽³⁹⁾

Unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction

In accordance with a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Secretary-General, in an October report,⁽⁴¹⁾ presented information provided by States, UN bodies and organizations, intergovernmental organizations, regional and subregional fisheries organizations and arrangements, and NGOs on the issue of unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and its impact on living marine resources.

Fisheries by-catch and discards

Pursuant to a 1994 General Assembly request,⁽⁴²⁾ the Secretary-General, by an October note,⁽⁴³⁾ transmitted a report by FAO on fisheries by-catch and discards and their impact on the sustainable use of the world's living marine resources. The report presented an assessment of fisheries by-catch and discards and noted that the Rome Consensus on World Fisheries, adopted by the Ministerial Meeting on Fisheries (Rome, 14 and 15 March), stated that improved fisheries conservation and management, along with better protection from harmful sea- and land-based activities, were crucial to maintaining world fish resources and aquatic ecosystems. The Meeting urged Governments and international organizations to take prompt action to adopt policies, apply measures and develop techniques to reduce by-catches, fish discards and post-harvest losses. Concerning high seas fisheries, the report pointed out that information was poor and incomplete, and as a result conservation and management of high seas resources was weak. The United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, which met in 1993⁽⁴⁴⁾ and 1994,⁽⁴⁵⁾ sought to improve and strengthen the conservation and management of those two types of stocks and to ensure that data and the timeliness of the provision of data were greatly enhanced. (For action concerning the 1995 meetings of the Conference and the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, see PART FIVE, Chapter IV.) The draft international code of conduct for responsible fisheries, which was currently open for revision, addressed matters pertaining to by-catch and discards. FAO estimated that a significant reduction in discards by the year 2000 of around 60 per cent could be achieved by improving the selectivity of fishing gear; developing international standards for research, and additional research designed specifically to address problems resulting from by-catch; greater interaction between research staff, industry and fisheries managers; and by applying appropriate technology through fisheries regulations. As a consequence of a June decision of the FAO Council, an open-ended Technical Committee was set up to review and agree on the form and content of the code of conduct for responsible fisheries and any follow-up action that might be required to finalize the code prior to its submission to the 1995 FAO Conference (see also PART SEVEN, Chapter III).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 50/25.

Large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas; unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas; and fisheries by-catch and discards and their impact on the sustainable use of the world's living marine resources

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 44/225 of 22 December 1989, 45/197 of 21 December 1990 and 46/215 of 20 December 1991, as well as its decisions 47/443 of 22 December 1992, 48/445 of 21 December 1993 and 49/436 of 19 December 1994, on large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas,

Recalling its resolution 49/116 of 19 December 1994 on unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas,

Recalling also its resolution 49/118 of 19 December 1994 on fisheries by-catch and discards and their impact on the sustainable use of the world's living marine resources,

Recognizing the efforts that international organizations and members of the international community have made to reduce by-catch and discards in fishing operations,

Conscious of the need to promote and facilitate international cooperation, especially at the regional and subregional levels, in order to ensure the sustainable development and use of the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas, consistent with the present resolution,

Noting that the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, provides in its general principles that States shall minimize pollution, waste, discards, catch by lost or abandoned gear, catch of non-target species, both fish and non-fish species, and impacts on associated or dependent species, in particular endangered species, through measures including, to the extent practicable, the development and use of selective, environmentally safe and cost-effective fishing gear and techniques, and further provides that States shall take measures, including the establishment of regulations, to ensure that vessels flying their flags do not conduct unauthorized fishing within areas under the national jurisdiction of other States,

Noting also that the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations has adopted a Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries, which sets out principles and global standards of behaviour for responsible practices to conserve, manage and develop fisheries, including guidelines for fishing on the high seas and in areas under the national jurisdiction of other States, and on fishing gear selectivity and practices, with the aim of reducing by-catch and discards,

Expressing deep concern at the detrimental impact of unauthorized fishing in areas under national jurisdiction, where the overwhelming proportion of the global fish catch is harvested, on the sustainable development of the world's fishery resources and on the food security and economies of many States, particularly developing States,

Reaffirming the rights and duties of coastal States to ensure proper conservation and management measures with respect to the living resources in areas under their national jurisdiction, in accordance with international law as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas, and unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas,

Taking note also of the report of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on fisheries by-catch and discards and their impact on the sustainable use of the world's living marine resources,

Acknowledging with appreciation the measures taken and the progress made by members of the international community, international organizations and regional economic integration organizations to implement and support the objectives of resolution 46/215,

Expressing deep concern that there are continuing reports of activities inconsistent with the terms of resolution 46/215 and unauthorized fishing inconsistent with the terms of resolution 49/116,

1. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to compliance with its resolution 46/215, in particular to those provisions of the resolution calling for full implementation of a global moratorium on all large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing on the high seas of the world's oceans and seas, including enclosed seas and semi-enclosed seas;

2. Urges all authorities of members of the international community to take greater enforcement responsibility to ensure full compliance with resolution 46/215 and to impose appropriate sanctions, consistent with their obligations under international law, against acts contrary to the terms of that resolution;

3. Calls upon States to take the responsibility, consistent with their obligations under international law as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and resolution 49/116, to take measures to ensure that no fishing vessels entitled to fly their national flags fish in areas under the national jurisdiction of other States unless duly authorized by the competent authorities of the coastal State or States concerned; such authorized fishing operations should be carried out in accordance with the conditions set out in the authorization;

4. Urges States, relevant international organizations and regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements to take action to adopt policies, apply measures, collect and exchange data and develop techniques to reduce by-catches, fish discards and post-harvest losses consistent with international law and relevant international instruments, including the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries;

5. Calls upon development assistance organizations to make it a high priority to support, including through financial and/or technical assistance, efforts of developing coastal States, in particular the least developed countries and the small island developing States, to improve the monitoring and control of fishing activities and the enforcement of fishing regulations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community, relevant intergovernmental organizations, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, regional and subregional fisheries management organizations, and relevant non-governmental organizations, and invites them to provide the Secretary-General with information relevant to the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that reporting on all major fisheries-related activities and instruments is effectively coordinated and duplication of activities and reporting minimized and that relevant scientific and technical studies are disseminated to the international community, and invites the relevant specialized agencies, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, as well as regional and subregional fisheries organizations and arrangements, to cooperate with the Secretary-General to that end;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session a report on further developments relating to the implementation of resolutions 46/215, 49/116 and 49/118, taking into account the information provided by States, relevant specialized agencies, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and other appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and arrangements and other relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-first session, under the item entitled "Law of the sea", a sub-item entitled "Large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas; unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas; and fisheries by-catch and discards and their impact on the sustainable use of the world's living marine resources".

General Assembly resolution 50/25

5 December 1995 Meeting 81 Adopted without vote

19-nation draft (A/50/L.36 & Add.1); agenda item 96 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 50th session: plenary 80, 81.

In 1995, Australia, France, Jamaica, Japan, the Philippines, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States announced a major initiative to protect coral reefs in partnership with other coral reef nations around the world, NGOs, international organizations, multilateral development banks, and private sector businesses. The eight nations hosted an international workshop (Dumaguete City, the Philippines, 29 May-2 June), during which they adopted a Call to Action which defined the purpose and urgency of the workshop and developed a Framework for Action to serve as a basis for national and local coral reef management efforts.

UNEP action. In a 26 May decision,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the UNEP Governing Council welcomed the international coral reef initiative, which was a partnership of Governments, international organizations and NGOs, to address capacity-building, research and monitoring and sustainable management and use of coral reefs and associated ecosystems. It supported the establishment of a global reef coral monitoring network, as proposed as part of the coastal zone and shelf module of the Global Ozone Observing System by UNEP, the World Conservation Union, IOC, WMO and the International Geosphere-Biosphere Programme, to monitor the status of reefs and enhance their management.

For Governing Council action regarding the Action Plan for the Protection and Management of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the South Asian Seas Region, see below.

Conservation of wildlife

The Agreement on the Conservation of African-Eurasian Migratory Waterbirds was adopted at a meeting (The Hague, Netherlands, 12-16 June), held under the auspices of the Convention on Migratory Species. The Agreement covered species of birds that were ecologically dependent on wetlands for at least part of their annual cycle and included 172 species, among them, pelicans, storks, flamingoes, ducks and geese, and concerned 116 countries in Europe, parts of Asia and North America, the Middle East and Africa, in addition to the European Union. The Netherlands agreed to provide an interim secretariat for the Agreement and to host the first session of the meeting of the Parties. The secretariat functions were to be assumed by the secretariat of the Convention in Bonn, Germany, which was administered by UNEP.

The first meeting of the Parties to the Agreement on the Conservation of Bats in Europe (Bristol, United Kingdom, July) established a permanent secretariat and a work programme. The regional agreement was concluded in 1994 under the auspices of the Convention on Migratory Species.

Memoranda of Understanding on the conservation of two extremely endangered species, the Siberian crane and the slender-billed curlew, were signed in 1995.

Protection against harmful products and wastes

The Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly a May report⁽⁴⁵⁾ for the fourth triennial review of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments. Previous reviews were submitted in 1992,⁽⁴⁷⁾ 1989,⁽⁴⁸⁾ and 1986.⁽⁴⁹⁾

The Secretary-General presented an overview of recent developments regarding harmful products and their effects on human health and the environment. In order to enhance the efficiency of production and distribution of the List, the Secretary-General proposed publishing it in two parts, one for pharmaceuticals and the other for chemicals, and that the List be issued every two years with a supplement for the intervening year.

In July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report by decision 1995/234, as did the Assembly by decision 50/431 of 20 December.

Persistent organic pollutants

In a 25 May decision,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the UNEP Governing Council invited the Inter-Organization Programme for the Sound Management of Chemicals, working with the International Programme on Chemical Safety and the Intergovernmental Forum on Chemical Safety, to initiate an assessment process of POPs and asked the Executive Director to support the work of the process. It invited the Intergovernmental Forum to develop recommendations and information on international action, including an international legal mechanism on POPs to be considered in 1997 by the Council and the WHO World Health Assembly. The Council called on States, the United Nations and its specialized agencies, regional organizations and other relevant organizations to participate and provide contributions for the assessment process and for the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition.

Chemical safety

In a May addendum⁽⁵¹⁾ to a report concerning activities related to measures beyond the prior informed consent (PIC) procedure for certain hazardous chemicals in international trade,⁽⁵²⁾ which might be considered in conjunction with the development of a PIC convention, the Executive Director stated that the issue was considered at the first meeting of the Intersessional Group of the Intergovernmental Forum on Chemical Safety (Bruges, Belgium, 20-23 March).⁽⁵³⁾ The meeting had expressed broad support for the development of a PIC convention. Trade-related issues that might be considered under the proposed convention were discussed at the first session of the UNEP Meeting of the Expert Group on International Environmental Agreements and Trade (New York, 30 and 31 March).

By a 26 May decision,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the UNEP Governing Council authorized the Executive Director to prepare for and convene, with FAO and in consultation with Governments and other relevant international organizations, an intergovernmental negotiating committee to prepare an international legally binding instrument for the application of the PIC Procedure. She was invited to convene also, in cooperation with FAO, a government-designated group of experts to consider the negotiations on the convention on PIC and the activities to be undertaken in accordance with the Council's decision on POPs (see above). The Council asked her to recommend further measures needed to reduce the risks from a limited number of hazardous chemicals, either within or beyond the scope of the existing PIC procedure, and to report thereon in 1997. The Council decided that it should consider in 1997 the need to develop further measures, including the possibility that the mandate of the intergovernmental negotiating committee for the legally binding PIC procedure be extended to provide a basis for developing such measures. It also decided that the committee should begin its work as soon as possible and not later than January 1996. The Executive Director was asked to invite relevant international organizations to participate in the negotiating process for the development of the instrument and to convene, together with the FAO Director-General, a diplomatic conference to adopt and sign an international legally binding instrument for the application of the PIC procedure, preferably not later than early 1997.

Leaded gasoline

At its April session,⁽⁵⁾ the Commission on Sustainable Development, taking note of an International Workshop on Phasing Lead Out of Gasoline (Washington, D.C., 14-15 March) hosted by Mexico and the United States, called on all countries to consider developing action plans with a view to phasing out or reducing the use of lead in gasoline and invited them to inform the Commission in 1996 of their decisions and progress.⁽⁷⁾ Donor countries and international financial institutions should assist developing countries in the financing and transfer of relevant technologies and developing countries were encouraged to disseminate their knowledge in the reduction of or phasing out of leaded gasoline, including the use of biomass ethanol as an environmentally sound substitute. The Commission called on countries to guard against the replacement of lead in gasoline with the excessive use of aromatics that were also harmful to human health.

UNEP action. In a 26 May decision,⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Governing Council called on Governments to fully consider the costs and benefits of phasing out lead in gasoline, including the risks associated with increased aromatic components in the absence of catalytic converters. It urged countries that had already begun to phase out the use of lead in gasoline, as well as international organizations and international financial institutions to assist other countries in their efforts to achieve such a phase-out and to promote the transfer of technology towards the overall reduction of vehicular emissions. The Executive Director was invited to participate in those efforts as part of her broader efforts to promote more effective approaches to emissions control.
