nomic and Social Council resolution 1989/1, and asserting that Democratic Yemen was unable to sustain the mounting burden for the rehabilitation and reconstruction, requested the UNDP Administrator to consider the provision of additional assistance from Special Programme Resources. The Council asked the Administrator to report to it in 1990 on his efforts to implement the resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/179 without vote.

Assistance to Democratic Yemen

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the extensive and unprecedented damage and devastation in Democratic Yemen caused by torrential rain and floods twice in the present decade, in March 1982 and in March and April 1989,

Extremely concerned about the destruction of the country's infrastructure, in particular roads, health centres and schools, as well as water supplies, electricity supplies, communication systems and other public utilities, and concerned that tens of thousands of hectares of cultivated land were inundated and that hundreds of villages have completely disappeared, leaving tens of thousands of persons without shelter or food,

Considering that Democratic Yemen, being one of the least developed countries, is unable to sustain rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes in spite of (he efforts made by its Government,

Recalling the resolutions on assistance to Democratic Yemen that it has adopted since 1982 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/1 of 10 May 1989, resolution 176(XV) of 18 May 1989 adopted by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia at its fifteenth session and decision 89/37 of 30 June 1989 adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its thirty-sixth session,

Noting with appreciation the support provided by various States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to emergency relief operations,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and people of Democratic Yemen in facing the devastating consequences of the torrential rain and floods;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have rendered support and assistance to the Government of Democratic Yemen in its relief and rehabilitation efforts;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize and co-ordinate relief and rehabilitation assistance for Democratic Yemen;

4. Calls upon all States to contribute generously and to respond urgently and effectively to the rehabilitation and reconstruction needs of the country;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to co-ordinate, in close co-operation with the Government of Democratic Yemen, the efforts of the United Nations system to help Democratic Yemen to mobilize resources for the implementation of its rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes and to keep the international community informed of its needs;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/179

19 December 1989 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Floods in Djibouti

In an October report⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General stated that in early April more than 500 millimetres (mm) of rain in three days had caused severe flooding and destroyed a major portion of the nation's social and economic infrastructure. The damage was a severe set-back to development efforts, which were already burdened by the presence of thousands of refugees and displaced persons. On 10 April, UNDR0 appealed for international assistance; 11 Governments responded immediately with relief materials, food, medical supplies and equipment. Material support was also provided by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, UNICEF, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and WFP, as well as non-governmental and other relief organizations. Some Governments also provided specialized personnel for relief operations. UNDP, the Red Cross of Canada and several Governments made cash grants for emergency operations.

On 25 April, rains again flooded the town of Djibouti, worsening the precarious condition of the population. UNDR0 chartered an aircraft to bring in water-pumping equipment and emergency relief supplies for the worst-affected population, and also collaborated with WHO in a nationwide anti-malaria spraying operation. UNDR0 recorded total contributions and pledges of over $4.2 million for immediate relief supplies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/2 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Djibouti

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned at the extensive damage and devastation in Djibouti caused by unprecedented torrential rain and floods in April 1989,

Extremely concerned that thousands of dwellings were destroyed, especially in populated areas, and that a major portion of the nation's infrastructure has been affected, in particular roads, water supplies, health centres, hospitals, schools and other public services,

Considering the severe damage sustained by the limited agricultural resources of Djibouti, including the destruction of its livestock,

Noting that these serious problems have compounded the already existing burden created by the presence of thousands of refugees and displaced persons in the country,

Aware of the efforts made by the Government and the people of Djibouti to save lives and alleviate the sufferings of the 150,000 disaster victims,

Noting the enormous effort that will be required by Djibouti, which is a least developed country, to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural calamity and to promote lasting and permanent solutions, such as programmes for rehabilitation and reconstruction, particularly those pertaining to the urban development works of the city of Djibouti,

Noting with gratitude the support provided to emergency relief operations by several countries and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and the people of Djibouti in facing the devastating consequences of the torrential rains and floods;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the States and international institutions and non-governmental organizations that have rendered emergency relief assistance to the country;

3. Calls upon all States to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in Djibouti;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with international financial institutions and organizations of the United Nations system, not only to help the Government of Djibouti to strengthen its capacity to assess, predict and mitigate natural disasters, but also to assist in identifying and meeting its medium- and long-term needs, particularly with regard to its plans and programmes for rehabilitation and reconstruction;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 of his efforts and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/177 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/2 of 12 May 1989 and recalling the previous resolutions of the General Assembly on economic assistance to Djibouti,

Deeply concerned by the extensive damage and devastation in Djibouti caused by the unprecedented torrential rains and floods in April 1989,

Noting with concern the destruction of thousands of dwellings, particularly in working-class areas, and the damage to major sectors of the national infrastructure, particularly the road network, the water supply, health centres and hospitals, educational establishments and other public services,

Considering the severe damage to the scarce agricultural resources of Djibouti, including the destruction of its livestock,

Noting that the economic and social development efforts of Djibouti, which is included in the list of least developed countries, are thwarted by the negative consequences of the torrential rains and floods that periodically devastate that vulnerable country, and that the implementation of reconstruction and development programmes requires the deployment of considerable resources which exceed the real capacities of the country,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 and to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session,

Noting with gratitude the support provided to emergency relief operations by various countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and people of Djibouti in facing the devastating consequences of the torrential rains and floods;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the States, international institutions and non-governmental organizations that have provided emergency relief to that country and, in that connection, notes with satisfaction that the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator has undertaken a mission to strengthen the capacity of the Government of Djibouti with respect to disaster prevention and preparedness;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the concerned organs and organizations of the United Nations system and in close collaboration with the Government authorities, to carry out an evaluation of the requirements of Djibouti with a view to drawing up an urgent programme of rehabilitation and reconstruction following the damage to the infrastructure of the country;

4. Also calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that the international community is informed of those requirements in order that it may respond favourably to them;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help the Government of Djibouti in its reconstruction and development efforts;

6. Encourages the specialized agencies, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to intensify their programmes of assistance and to expand them in response to the needs of Djibouti;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Emergencies in China

Earthquakes, a hailstorm, typhoons, floods and landslides struck several provinces of China in 1988-1989. In his report⁽¹⁾ on UNDRO activities, the Secretary-General noted that UNDRO had been involved in 12 major events affecting more than 100 million people, including earthquakes and a hailstorm in Sichuan province in April 1989, a typhoon in Guangdong province in June of the same year, floods and landslides in Sichuan province in July, a typhoon in Zhejiang and Jiangsu provinces in September, and earthquakes in Shanxi province in October. UNDRO promptly provided $50,000 in cash grants to meet immediate needs until other assistance arrived. Australia, Canada and the Netherlands channelled their contributions through UNDRO and UNDP. Contributions for relief for China reported to UNDRO in 1989 totalled $4.9 million.

Other disasters

Earthquake in Algeria

The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁾ that, on 29 October 1989, an earthquake measuring 6.0 on the Richter scale shook the northern provinces of Algeria, causing more than 30 deaths and injuring 700 persons. UNDRO organized an immediate air lift of 80 metric tons of relief supplies, valued at $500,000, which were distributed among 2,000 homeless families. On 17 November, winter tents and blankets were also airlifted to Algeria.

Earthquake in the Soviet Socialist Republic of Tajikistan

The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁾ that, on 23 January 1989, an earthquake measuring 5.8 on the Richter scale struck the Soviet Socialist Republic of Tajikistan, triggering a massive mudflow of more than 10 million cubic metres that affected an area 1 kilometre (km) wide and 8 km long. Deposits in one area were 25 metres high. Some 200 lives were lost and more than 50,000 people were left homeless. UNDRO's supply depot in Pisa had been depleted by relief operations following the December 1988 Armenian earthquake but a $484,000 contribution from the United Kingdom allowed UNDRO to purchase winter tents, diesel heaters, blankets and boots, and to establish shelters in Tajikistan. Later in the year, UNDRO and the USSR organized a training seminar on the management of mudflows and landslides caused by earthquakes.

Locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa

UNDP action. In a January 1989 report⁽¹⁶⁾ on alternative strategies for desert locust control, the UNDP Administrator stated that, despite international efforts, a major desert locust outbreak had occurred since 1985, and could affect as many as 60 countries. The Administrator had taken the initiative in early 1988 to investigate whether alternatives to synthetic pesticides might be developed, and UNDP convened a meeting on the development of environmentally acceptable alternatives for desert locust control in Cairo in December 1988, which was attended by representatives of Governments, international organizations and scientists.

On 24 February 1989⁽¹⁷⁾ the Governing Council noted the Administrator's proposals for research on alternative approaches to desert locust control, and agreed that he should continue consultations with a view towards presenting more specific proposals to the Council.

In a June decision⁽¹⁸⁾ the Governing Council approved the global project for the development of environmentally acceptable alternative strategies for desert locust control⁽¹⁹⁾ including the establishment of a scientific advisory panel, to be jointly selected by UNDP and FAO as programme co-sponsors. The decision stated that consideration would be given to the need to involve African-based scientists and institutions, and that progress reports would be submitted to the panel and to FAO's Desert Locust Control Commission.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a June report⁽²¹⁾ on the international strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa. The report said that, whereas recent scientific evidence suggested that the current locust and grasshopper plague might be diminishing, May rains had produced new infestations and discouraged optimism. In early June, therefore, the Secretary-General had called the attention of heads of relevant UN organizations to the continued risk of new outbreaks, and urged them to maintain their vigilance and their assistance to affected countries.

Donor countries had been extremely responsive to the 1988 Assembly resolution, and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the World Meteorological Organization had contributed their expertise. In January, the Secretary-General organized a United Nations task force, under the chairmanship of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, to ensure co-ordination and support for the efforts of FAO against locust and grasshopper infestations. The task force was composed of executive and department heads of UNDP, ECA, UNDRO, UNEP, the Department for Special Political Questions, Regional Co-operation, Decolonization and Trusteeship, and the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development. Members of the task force participated in meetings on locust and grasshopper control held in Rome, Italy, and in Rabat, Morocco. The report noted that between 1986 and 1989, UNDP provided approximately $2.4 million in financial assistance to national programmes for desert locust control.

FAO report. In response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁰⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in June a report⁽²²⁾ by the Director-General of FAO on the international strategy for the fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa. The report stated that there had been a dramatic decline in the desert locust plague in Africa and the Near East in late 1988 and early 1989. Large-scale ground and aerial control operations had eliminated the great majority of high-density populations, while a massive westward movement of adult locusts from West Africa in October 1988 had drowned a tremendous number in the Atlantic. The virtual failure of the winter rains in countries bordering the Red Sea caused further reductions. But because low-density populations and a few swarms remained in the region, the threat persisted of a rapid recrudescence of the plague, depending on the duration and intensity of summer rains.

In a later report⁽²³⁾ the Director-General stated that during the second half of 1989, no major incidents of desert locust infestation were reported in Africa and the Near East, though there was a small outbreak in India and Pakistan. Infestations of Moroccan locusts in north-western Afghanistan, however, caused heavy damage to the wheat crop. Grasshoppers caused heavy local damage to millet and sorghum in most Sahelian countries. In a note attached to the report, the Secretary-General stated that two meetings of donors were held during the year, under the joint chairmanship of UNDP and FAO, to develop a consensus for the formation of a Consultative Group for Locust Control Research (CGLR). Composed primarily of donors and representatives from locust-affected countries, CGLR was expected to co-ordinate support for desert locust research and to review recent technical progress. An external Scientific Advisory Committee (SAC) was nominated to advise CGLR on its work. Donors provided more than $66.5 million in assistance for locust and grasshopper control in 1989.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1989/98 without vote.

International strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 41/185 of 8 December 1986 and 43/203 of 20 December 1988, Economic and Social Council resolutions 1988/2 of 5 February 1988 and 1988/3 of 24 May 1988 and resolution 660(XXIV) of 7 April 1989 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/99 of 26 July 1989 on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, and aware that the Decade will cover locust and grasshopper infestations,

Noting with satisfaction the almost general decline of locust and grasshopper infestations, owing to the determined efforts of the affected countries and the generous assistance of the international community,

Noting also the results of the Conference of Heads of State of the countries members of the Joint Anti-Locust and Anti-Avarian Organization held at Dakar in February 1989,

Conscious of the risk of a rapid resurgence of the locust and grasshopper infestation and of the possible reappearance of swarms as a result of widespread and abundant rainfall in the Saharan region and in other regions of the world,

Noting that small to medium-sized swarms of desert locusts have been reported or are anticipated in several Saharan countries between June and mid-August 1989 by the Emergency Centre for Locust Operations of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Considering that a number of countries, particularly the poorest countries, have still to overcome the complex and harmful effects of the recent disastrous locust and grasshopper infestation,

1. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General and of that of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on the implementation of the international strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa;

2. Welcomes the creation of the International Desert Locust Task Force under the technical and operational responsibility of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for the purpose of providing direct support to the countries affected, particularly seriously infested or relatively inaccessible regions;

3. Also welcomes the generous and effective co-operation that exists in this regard among the States members of the Maghreb Arab Union;

4. Further welcomes the appeal of the Conference of Heads of State of the countries members of the Joint Anti-Locust and Anti-Avarian Organization to the international community to support the organization strongly in the rigorous implementation of the plan of action in the short, medium and long terms to combat locusts, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the organization at its twenty-fourth session, held at N'Djamena from 10 to 16 December 1988;

5. Expresses its support for the long-term research initiatives of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme and a number of Governments aimed at further developing more effective, economical and environmentally sound control methods along with short-term activities and medium-term programmes for prevention and environmentally acceptable alternative long-term strategies for locust and grasshopper control;

6. Invites the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to continue to play its role as lead agency in locust control and related research activities, in close collaboration with other competent organizations and institutions, and to ensure that the proposals and plans of the International Desert Locust Task Force are implemented and fully complement the activities of national and regional authorities and donor activities;

7. Notes that, although the present desert locust plague appears to have receded, continued vigilance will be required on the part of all concerned with regard to the locust population still present and the new swarms reported in several Saharan countries;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the international community for the assistance provided to the affected countries, and calls for continued support for short-term, medium-term and long-term efforts to control locusts and grasshoppers;

9. Appeals to the international community, particularly the developed countries, to make the necessary resources available to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and to co-operate with it in further developing remote-sensing techniques, training, the testing and evaluation of pesticides, the collection and dissemination of information, prevention, co-ordination and funding, and in establishing or strengthening national and regional early-warning systems in order to improve the ability of affected or vulnerable countries to cope with future threats;

10. Endorses the appeal made by the Secretary-General to the executive heads of other organizations of the United Nations system to remain vigilant and not to lose the expertise acquired in the past two years in controlling locust and grasshopper infestations, and requests the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990 an up-to-date report on the implementation of the international strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, by decision 44/438, endorsed Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/98.

Disaster prevention and preparedness

In his report⁽¹⁾ on UNDRO activities during 1988 and 1989, the Secretary-General stated that disaster mitigation fell into two broad categories: technical and preventive measures, and logistical planning or preparedness activities. The comprehensive disaster mitigation programmes recommended by UNDRO, which were implemented with UNDRO assistance a number of countries, involved a series of five steps, namely: to determine the hazards; to assess the vulnerability of people and property; to identify and implement the most cost-effective measures for reducing vulnerability; to develop logistical plans for responding to imminent disaster threats and providing post-disaster assistance; and to ensure that such plans were properly understood by local officials and the general population. In recent years, the Secretary-General reported, the United Nations had undertaken regional and national disaster mitigation projects in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, the Mediterranean and the South Pacific. During the biennium, UNDRO organized or participated in regional and national seminars and training programmes. An international training seminar on lessons learned from the management of recent earthquakes was held in October 1989 in Moscow.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

In accordance with 1987⁽²⁴⁾ and 1988⁽²⁵⁾ resolutions, the Secretary-General submitted a report in June 1989⁽²⁶⁾ on natural disasters and responses to them, and preparations for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction in the 1990s. During the previous two decades, he said, natural disasters had resulted in about 3 million deaths and had adversely affected at least 800 million people, causing immediate damages in the hundreds of billions of dollars. The Secretary-General reported that the impact of disasters, particularly severe in developing countries, could be reduced through improved risk assessment and disaster preparedness.

The International Ad Hoc Group of Experts, appointed by the Secretary-General in 1988, met at Rabat, Morocco, in January 1989 and in Tokyo in April 1989. On the recommendation of the United Nations, several Governments created national committees for the Decade, or designated a national focal point. The Secretary-General outlined those organizations and institutions he believed should play a major role in implementing the Decade, and described the four categories of activities that the Group had suggested as a basis for national programmes: hazard prediction, risk assessment, disaster preparedness and disaster management. The Secretary-General supported the Group's view that the most important efforts to mitigate the impacts of disasters must be undertaken at national and local levels.

An annex to the report contained the Tokyo Declaration on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, adopted by the Group on 11 April 1989. It called for global support for the Decade, described the role of national committees, and suggested that the United Nations create a mechanism to fund and support the Decade.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By resolution 1989/99 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of the Secretary-General's report, expressed its appreciation for the work of the International Ad Hoc Group of Experts, and recommended that the General Assembly take action to develop an appropriate framework for international co-operation to attain the Decade's goals. The Council asked that the Group's full report be submitted to the Assembly.

Report of the International Ad Hoc Group of Experts. In response to the Economic and Social Council's request, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the full report⁽²⁷⁾ of the International Ad Hoc Group of Experts on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction. It stated that the Decade represented an opportunity for the world community to use existing scientific and technical knowledge to reduce the damage done by natural disasters, but that the implementation of an effective disaster prevention programme might require organization and education far exceeding the economic capacity and organizational ability of a single nation. Consequently, regionally integrated programmes would be needed.

The elements of an integrated approach to disaster management and the types of natural disaster to be covered by the Decade were outlined, as well as impediments to disaster reduction. The Group described the Decade as an opportunity to link ongoing activities and to apply scientific and technological breakthroughs. A plan of action for implementing the goals of the Decade would have to set targets for activities in widely differing regions and at various levels, establish procedures for allocating resources and suggest structures for co-ordinating activities.

The benefits of natural disaster warning systems, integrated disaster management, hazard modification and locust research were noted. The main bodies the Group considered important to co-ordinated action during the Decade included representatives of UN organizations, individual countries, regional groups, scientific organizations, research institutions, insurance and financial institutions, the media, civil protection organizations and donors. Organizational criteria for the Decade's successful implementation were given, and included the establishment of a board of trustees, a committee, a secretariat and a trust fund. International and regional forums and an international day for disaster preparedness were among the activities proposed for the Decade's initial phase.

In an addendum⁽²⁸⁾ the Secretary-General provided details of various projects proposed for global and regional application during the Decade. A common characteristic of the projects was that they were based on readily available technology and thus did not require significant basic research, and could yield rapid results. They also showed a shift from post-disaster relief to pre-disaster preparedness and had potential for regional application. Planning for several of the projects had already started in the respective UN entities proposing them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/236 without vote.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/169 of 11 December 1987, in which it decided to designate the 1990s as a decade in which the international community, under the auspices of the United Nations, would pay special attention to fostering international co-operation in the field of natural disaster reduction,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of its resolution 42/169 and its resolution 43/202 of 20 December 1988, and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/99 of 26 July 1989, in which the Council recommended that the General Assembly take action to develop an appropriate framework for international co-operation to attain the objective and goals of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction,

Considering that natural disasters have adversely affected the lives of a great number of people and caused considerable damage to infrastructure and property world wide, especially in developing countries,

Recognizing the importance of environmental protection for the prevention and mitigation of natural disasters,

Considering that the international community as a whole has now improved its capacity to confront this problem and that fatalism about natural disasters is no longer justified,

Recognizing the necessity for the international community to demonstrate the strong political determination required to mobilize and use existing scientific and technical knowledge to mitigate natural disasters, bearing in mind in particular the needs of developing countries,

Recognizing also the important responsibility of the United Nations system as a whole for promoting international co-operation in order to mitigate natural disasters, provide assistance and co-ordinate disaster relief, preparedness and prevention,

Recalling the specific responsibilities and functions in the field of disaster prevention and preparedness entrusted to the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, as set out in its resolution 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971,

Bearing in mind the crucial role of professional and other non-governmental organizations, particularly scientific and technological societies, humanitarian groups and investment institutions, the participation of which in the implementation of specific programmes planned for the Decade is highly desirable,

Also bearing in mind the need for the United Nations system to pay special attention to the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries in that regard,

Emphasizing that appropriate emergency planning for natural disasters and its integration in national development plans could also be very helpful in preventing other kinds of disasters, such as those of an industrial or technological nature,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General,

Expressing its appreciation for the work done by the International Ad Hoc Group of Experts on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, which submitted its report to the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the common position on natural disasters of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,

1. Proclaims the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, beginning on 1 January 1990;

2. Decides to designate the second Wednesday of October International Day for Natural Disaster Reduction, to be observed annually during the Decade by the international community in a manner befitting the objective and goals of the Decade;

3. Adopts the International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction contained in the annex to the present resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution, including the organizational arrangements made for the Decade, and on the status of existing international protocols and conventions for mutual assistance in cases of disaster;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, intergovernmental organizations, appropriate non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and competent scientific institutions in the field of disaster mitigation;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction".

ANNEX

International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

A. Objective and goals

1. The objective of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction is to reduce through concerted international action, especially in developing countries, the loss of life, property damage and social and economic disruption caused by natural disasters such as earthquakes, windstorms, tsunamis, floods, landslides, volcanic eruptions, wildfires, grasshopper and locust infestations, drought and desertification and other calamities of natural origin.

2. The goals of the Decade are:

(a) To improve the capacity of each country to mitigate the effects of natural disasters expeditiously and effectively, paying special attention to assisting developing countries in the assessment of disaster damage potential and in the establishment of early-warning systems and disaster-resistant structures when and where needed;

(b) To devise appropriate guidelines and strategies for applying existing scientific and technical knowledge, taking into account the cultural and economic diversity among nations;

(c) To foster scientific and engineering endeavours aimed at closing critical gaps in knowledge in order to reduce loss of life and property;

(d) To disseminate existing and new technical information related to measures for the assessment, prediction and mitigation of natural disasters;

(e) To develop measures for the assessment, prediction, prevention and mitigation of natural disasters through programmes of technical assistance and technology transfer, demonstration projects, and education and training, tailored to specific disasters and locations, and to evaluate the effectiveness of those programmes.

B. Policy measures to be taken at the national level

3. All Governments are called upon:

(a) To formulate national disaster-mitigation programmes, as well as economic, land-use and insurance policies for disaster prevention, and, particularly in developing countries, to integrate them fully into their national development programmes;

(b) To participate during the Decade in concerted international action for the reduction of natural disasters and, as appropriate, establish national committees in co-operation with the relevant scientific and technological communities and other concerned sectors with a view to attaining the objective and goals of the Decade;

(c) To encourage their local administrations to take appropriate steps to mobilize the necessary support from the public and private sectors and to contribute to the achievement of the purposes of the Decade;

(d) To keep the Secretary-General informed of the plans of their countries and of assistance that can be provided so that the United Nations may become an international centre for the exchange of information and the co-ordination of international efforts concerning activities in support of the objective and goals of the Decade, thus enabling each State to benefit from the experience of other countries;

(e) To take measures, as appropriate, to increase public awareness of damage risk probabilities and of the significance of preparedness, prevention, relief and short-term recovery activities with respect to natural disasters and to enhance community preparedness through education, training and other means, taking into account the specific role of the news media;

(f) To pay due attention to the impact of natural disasters on health care, particularly to activities to reduce the vulnerability of hospitals and health centres, as well as the impact on food storage facilities, human shelter and other social and economic infrastructures;

(g) To improve the early international availability of appropriate emergency supplies through the storage or earmarking of such supplies in disaster-prone areas.

4. Scientific and technological institutions, financial institutions, including banks and insurance companies, and industrial enterprises, foundations and other related non-governmental organizations are encouraged to support and participate fully in the programmes and activities of the Decade prepared and implemented by the international community, including Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations.

C. Action to be taken by the United Nations system

5. The organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system are urged to accord priority, as appropriate and in a concerted manner, to natural disaster preparedness, prevention, relief and short-term recovery, including economic damage risk assessment, in their operational activities; the Secretary-General is requested, in this regard, to ensure that adequate means are made available to the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator so that it may diligently discharge its specific role and responsibilities in the field of disaster mitigation and response in conformity with its mandate, as contained in General Assembly resolution 2816(XXVI).

6. The Secretary-General is requested, in close association with the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, in particular through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, as well as national information authorities, to assist in the formulation and implementation during the Decade of public information programmes aimed at raising public awareness of disaster prevention.

7. The United Nations resident co-ordinators and the field representatives of the United Nations system are requested to work closely and in a co-ordinated manner with Governments to achieve the objective and goals of the Decade.

8. The regional commissions are urged to play an active role in implementing the activities of the Decade, considering that natural disasters often transcend national boundaries.

9. The Secretary-General is requested to designate the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in accordance with his mandate as set out in General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, as the focal point for overview and co-ordination of the programmes and activities of the United Nations system referred to in the present resolution, in close co-operation with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and, as appropriate, in consultation with the Director of the secretariat of the Decade, mentioned in paragraph 14 of the present annex.

10. The Secretary-General is requested to report biennially to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the activities of the Decade.

1. Special high-level council

11. The Secretary-General is requested to establish, with due regard to equitable geographical representation, a special high-level council, consisting of a limited number of internationally prominent persons, which would provide him with general advice with respect to the Decade, take appropriate action to promote public awareness and mobilize the necessary support from the public and private sectors.

2. Scientific and technical committee on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

12. The Secretary-General is requested to establish, with due regard to equitable geographical representation and covering the diversity of disaster-mitigation issues, a scientific and technical committee on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, consisting of twenty to twenty-five scientific and technical experts selected in consultation with their Governments on the basis of their personal capacities and qualifications, including experts from the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system.

13. The role of the committee shall be to develop overall programmes to be taken into account in bilateral and multilateral co-operation for the Decade, paying attention to priorities and gaps in technical knowledge identified at the national level, in particular by national committees, as well as to assess and evaluate the activities carried out in the course of the Decade and to make recommendations on the overall programmes in an annual report to the Secretary-General.

3. Secretariat

14. The Secretary-General is requested to establish a small secretariat, to be funded by extrabudgetary resources, as follows:

(a) The secretariat shall be established at the United Nations Office at Geneva, in close association with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, with its members drawn, as appropriate, from the international community of disaster reduction experts and other relevant experts seconded, inter alia, from competent United Nations organizations, Governments and non-governmental organizations;

(b) The secretariat shall be responsible for the day-to-day co-ordination of Decade activities and shall provide substantive and secretarial support to the special high-level council and the scientific and technical committee, as well as for other related activities.

E. Financial arrangements

15. It is recommended that extrabudgetary resources be provided for implementation of the activities of the Decade and, therefore, that voluntary contributions from Governments, international organizations and other sources, including the private sector, be strongly encouraged; to this end, a trust fund shall be established by the Secretary-General, who will be entrusted with its administration.

F. Review

16. The Economic and Social Council, during its second regular session of 1994, will carry out a mid-term review of the implementation of the International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction and report its findings to the General Assembly.

Solutions to natural disasters in Bangladesh

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁹⁾ which appealed to the international community to help strengthen the disaster mitigation capacity of Bangladesh, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽³⁰⁾ in October on short-, medium- and long-term solutions to the problem of natural disasters in that country. Three great rivers have their confluence in Bangladesh, which is plagued by damaging floods.

Recent efforts by the Government to step up its disaster response capacity included the creation of a 1.4 million-ton stockpile of food supplies, stored at strategic locations throughout the country, and the establishment of a National Disaster Prevention Council. Several UN bodies had provided assistance to Bangladesh, including the Secretariat's Department of Technical Cooperation for Development, UNICEF, UNDP, the United Nations Population Fund, WFP, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Meteorological Organization and the International Development Association. In September 1989, UNDRP launched an appeal for international assistance on behalf of the Government, which brought donations of more than $100 million within six weeks. United Nations efforts towards a long-term solution to Bangladesh flooding should be one of the major activities of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, according to the report, which also recommended that the Government organize pre- and post-disaster activities under a co-ordinated national disaster preparedness and relief strategy. Disaster mitigation in Bangladesh should not be seen as a separate activity, but as a part of all development planning.

In decision 44/443 of 22 December 1989, the General Assembly took note of the report.

Disasters and nutrition

Nutrition in Times of Disaster (27-30 September 1988), organized by WHO and UNHCR, encouraged donors and disaster-affected countries to ensure that food rations for victims were nutritionally adequate and proposed a minimum daily standard (see also PART THREE, Chapter XI). In a note⁽³¹⁾ to the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General drew attention to a decision of ACC, which noted with concern the prospect of a continuing need for food relief for some 20 million displaced persons, endorsed the statement of the Conference and brought it to the attention of the Council. The Council took note of the ACC decision in its decision 1989/175 of 26 July.

Emergency relief and assistance

Afghanistan

The Office of the United Nations Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan (UNOCA) issued its second consolidated report on Afghanistan⁽¹⁾ in October 1989. Hopes for peace had not been realized, and the overall refugee situation remained largely unchanged; however, the capacity of the United Nations and its operational partners to cope effectively inside Afghanistan with a massive refugee return had improved significantly. Much of the country had been visited by UN assessment missions. Offices and sub-offices for UNOCA's Operation Salam were established, from which aid commodities could be delivered. Scores of UN-funded assistance projects were initiated inside the country, while large-scale pre-positioning of aid commodities had been accomplished in bordering areas. By September 1989, UNDP, UNICEF, UNHCR, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, the United Nations Volunteers, FAO, WFP and WHO were all engaged in a concerted effort to implement a broad range of projects, while additional programmes prepared by ILO and UNESCO awaited funding.

The United Nations Plan of Action 1989, prepared in March 1989 through inter-agency consultation, provided a framework for economic and humanitarian assistance for the year. Under the plan, projects were being implemented in agriculture, food aid, public health, mother and child care, public works, mine clearance, emergency aid to disadvantaged groups, crop substitution, rural reconstruction, vocational training, educational rehabilitation and the promotion of an institutional capacity for recovery and rehabilitation. Funding was inadequate, and, according to the report, some activities (such as road repair, anti-narcotics programmes, education and help for the disabled) would make little progress unless additional contributions were received. Given the unlikely prospect of early military or political solutions to the conflict, massive UN-system-managed multilateral economic and humanitarian assistance through the "humanitarian encirclement" of Afghanistan offered the best prospect of stability.

By September 1989, the UNDP/UNOCA NGO support and rural works programme, designed to assist small, grass-roots-level activities, had financed 20 projects, with more in planning. The report noted that there was a limit to what the United Nations could ask of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and that Afghan partners who could meet the financial and reporting requirements of UN agencies would have to be identified—a far-from-easy task given conflicting groups and interests. Above all, the lack of funding remained a serious problem. Although total donor contributions of $991.5 million had been reported by September 1989, $694.3 million were contributions in kind, by far the greater part of which had not yet been received. Actual cash received by the Co-ordinator in the Afghanistan Emergency Trust Fund as at 31 August totalled $157.8 million, of which $90.5 million was earmarked for specific agencies. In addition, approximately $102 million had been paid by donors directly to UN agencies and other organizations.

Between September 1988 and July 1989, seven fact-finding missions visited Afghanistan to help the Co-ordinator formulate relief and rehabilitation strategies and programmes. Salam Mobile Units (SMUs) established a more durable presence inside the country, undertook more in-depth analyses, created working relationships with local partners and delivered aid. The report also chronicled the work of field monitoring missions, progress in data collection, and population movements and responses to them by UN agencies, particularly UNHCR. Agricultural and food assistance was outlined, as was the mine-clearance programme and UN efforts towards the reconstruction of Afghanistan's roads, shelters, irrigation and water supplies, power plants, and telecommunication and health services. Other aspects addressed in the report included establishment of field offices in Afghanistan and neighbouring countries; delivery of medical supplies; a health manpower training programme and several other health-related activities; assistance with education and training; and the establishment of a logistics and transport operation named UNILOG, based in Pakistan. Summaries of the situation in, and assistance for, each of Afghanistan's 28 provinces were given.

Romania

On 27 December, Romania⁽²⁾ requested the inclusion of an additional item in the General Assembly agenda entitled "Emergency humanitarian assistance to Romania", for priority consideration. An explanatory memorandum stated that as a result of recent events in Romania there had been a tremendous loss of life, and humanitarian assistance was urgently needed for a large number of other persons who were suffering.

In his report on the 1989 work and activities of UNDRO,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General noted that, following civil strife in late 1989, the UNDRO appeal for relief assistance on 22 December met with a massive but unco-ordinated international response. That situation created logistical problems, and on 28 December Romania accepted an UNDRO offer of help. A relief co-ordination officer travelled to Bucharest, met with Romania's new leaders, assisted with the co-ordination of international emergency assistance, and helped establish a National Committee for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Aid. The Committee and UNDRO also co-ordinated the mobilization of a Romanian trucking fleet and refrigerated trains to collect relief supplies from European donation points.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/239 without vote.

Emergency humanitarian assistance to Romania

The General Assembly,

Expressing its concern at the loss of human lives and at the large number of afflicted persons in Romania,

Noting the need for emergency humanitarian assistance to the people of Romania,

Urges all States, international financial institutions and organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as a matter of urgency, to offer generous emergency humanitarian assistance to Romania.

Somalia

The Secretary-General, in accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution⁽⁴⁾ submitted a May 1989 report⁽⁵⁾ on emergency assistance to Somalia. Unrest in northern Somalia in 1988 had led to armed conflict in the north-west, with devastating consequences for populations in the region. In addition to deaths and disablement, the region suffered destruction of property and facilities, and disruption of civil administration, education, banking, livestock movements and trade. Massive population movements took place both within Somalia and across borders into neighbouring countries, with some northern urban cities becoming "ghost cities". Security in urban centres continued to be of great concern, and refugee camps had come under repeated attack.

Following consultations with Somali authorities, the Secretary-General dispatched a UN inter-agency mission to Somalia on 25 February to assess urgent humanitarian and rehabilitation needs. It completed its field work on 12 March, and recommended an immediate emergency assistance programme of $19.4 million, with an additional rehabilitation programme to follow as refugees returned. It also recommended reactivation of WFP development projects, the creation of a national emergency preparedness and response policy and a monitoring system for epidemics and other health emergencies, rehabilitation of national health facilities, preparation of an environmental health plan and improvement of the water supply and sanitation. Specific proposals regarding the water situation in the regions of Berbera, Borama, Burao, Hargeisa and Las Anod were given. Action was also recommended for the agricultural sector, livestock and fisheries.

The mission urged the creation of a government crisis-management entity, and noted that the special three-man committee established on 5 March 1989 to bring about a normalization of conditions could fulfil this role. It was recommended that similar UN bodies be established in both New York and Mogadishu. The office of the Special Coordinator for Emergency Relief Operations in Somalia needed to have adequate resources, and UN personnel operating in Somalia required a secure working environment. In a later report,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General detailed ongoing actions by several UN agencies to deal with the emergency.

At the end of August, UNHCR and WFP informed the Government that poor security in north-west Somalia gave them no option but to suspend assistance temporarily. Subsequently, the Secretary-General approached the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) about formulating a humanitarian assistance programme for the north-west, and ICRC agreed to expand its presence there, provided that its normal conditions for operating were upheld. UNHCR and WFP responded favourably to the Secretary-General's request to participate in the Extraordinary Interim Emergency Programme on a "good offices" basis. The Secretary-General designated the United Nations Special Coordinator for Emergency Relief Operations as his special representative on all matters concerning the programme, and a task force consisting of UNDP, UNHCR, WFP and ELU/CARE was established.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council in May adoptee! decision 1989/111 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Somalia

At its 12th plenary meeting, on 22 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of General Assembly resolution 43/206 of 20 December 1988 and the message addressed to the Secretary-General by the Head of State of Somalia, in which he drew attention to the grave humanitarian situation that has developed in the northern provinces of Somalia as a result of attacks by armed bandits on towns and villages and on public installations and appealed for emergency assistance to help the Government cope with the large numbers of displaced persons and the repair, rehabilitation and reconstruction of vital public facilities and installations; extremely concerned at the displacement of the population in the affected provinces of northern Somalia as a result of the attacks, at the extensive damage and destruction caused to dwellings and the widespread damage to or disruption of the country's infrastructure, in particular bridges, water supplies, electricity supplies, communication systems, health centres, schools and other public services; and taking note of the statements made before the Council by the representative of the Secretary-General and the representative of Somalia concerning emergency assistance to Somalia, decided:

(a) To express its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts he is making to mobilize international resources to assist the Government and people of Somalia in coping with the emergency situation in the affected provinces of northern Somalia;

(b) To call upon all States and the competent inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to meet the urgent needs identified by the United Nations inter-agency mission to Somalia;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to continue to co-ordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to help Somalia in its emergency and rehabilitation programme;

(d) To request the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 of his efforts and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present decision.

Economic and Social Council decision 1989/111

Adopted without vote

Meeting numbers. ESC 6, 11, 12.

By decision 1989/176 of 26 July, the Council took note of two reports made to it on 7 July: one on emergency assistance to Somalia made on behalf of the Secretary-General by a representative of the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Co-operation, Decolonization and Trusteeship, and another by a UNDP representative on assistance to refugees in Somalia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/178 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Somalia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of emergency assistance to Somalia,

Recalling its resolution 43/206 of 20 December 1988 and taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1989/111 of 22 May 1989,

Noting that in humanitarian terms a grave situation has developed in the northern regions of Somalia as a result of attacks by armed bandits on rural and urban centres,

Extremely concerned at the displacement of the population in the affected regions of northern Somalia as a result of the attacks, at the extensive damage and destruction caused to dwellings and at the widespread damage to the country's infrastructure, in particular bridges, water supplies, electricity supplies, communication systems, health centres, schools and other public services,

Taking note with satisfaction of the measures taken by the Secretary-General to obtain an assessment of the emergency and rehabilitation needs of the displaced population,

Reaffirming the need for the international community to respond fully to requests for emergency humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance for Somalia,

Considering that Somalia, as one of the least developed countries, is unable to cope with the mounting burden of providing adequate food, medicine and shelter for the large number of displaced people,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts he is making to mobilize international resources to assist the Government and people of Somalia in coping with the emergency situation in the affected regions of northern Somalia;

2. Takes note of the interim report of the United Nations inter-agency mission that visited Somalia from 25 February to 12 March 1989;

3. Once again appeals to all States and the competent intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously and urgently to meet the needs identified by the United Nations inter-agency mission to Somalia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to co-ordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to help Somalia in its emergency and rehabilitation programme;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1990 of his efforts and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Operation Lifeline Sudan

In accordance with two 1988 General Assembly resolutions⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General issued a September report⁽⁸⁾ on emergency assistance to the Sudan. The report noted that whereas progress had been made on implementing the resolution (43/8) requesting the Secretary-General to co-ordinate UN emergency assistance in the Sudan, unforeseen political developments in the country had prevented the convening of the follow-up meeting outlined in the second resolution (43/52) between donors and pertinent organizations, intended to mobilize resources for relief to displaced persons. Some 3 million people were displaced between 1986 and 1988, and more than 400,000 had died from disease and starvation. Administrative, financial and operational constraints, as well as disruptions resulting from civil strife, caused difficulties in transporting food and other relief supplies. By January 1989, it was clear that implementation of the emergency programme then in place would not alone be sufficient. Unless adequate food aid and other emergency items were transported to the south without delay, it appeared that there could be a repetition of the large-scale human tragedy of the previous two years.

At the Secretary-General's suggestion, a high-level meeting between Sudan's main aid partners, the Government and the United Nations was held in Khartoum on 8 and 9 March to devise a crash-delivery programme that would move in-country food stocks to areas where they would be needed during the rainy season. Donors were asked to support major airlifts, to provide funding for convoys and non-food emergency supplies, and to provide advisory personnel and storage facilities. Estimated total cost of the relief operations was $133 million, of which $78 million had already been committed in response to the Secretary-General's October 1988 appeal.

All participants accepted the proposed plan of action and welcomed the participation of non-governmental organizations in relief activities. It was agreed that the United Nations would provide logistical and field advisers to ensure that relief was delivered according to the plan. Immediately following the Khartoum meeting, talks between UNICEF and the Sudanese People's Liberation Army (SPLA) led to agreement on the concept of eight "corridors of tranquillity" along which supplies could be transported without interference. UNICEF was selected as the UN lead agency in SPLA-controlled areas in the south, with WFP and the UNDP Emergency Unit in Khartoum also co-ordinating relief operations in specific areas. On 23 March, the Secretary-General appointed James P. Grant, Executive Director of UNICEF, as his Personal Representative for the operation, to work closely with the Special Co-ordinator from the UNDP Emergency Unit in Khartoum.

"Operation Lifeline Sudan" (OLS) was launched in the first week of April, with bases in Khartoum and Nairobi. It succeeded in linking and strengthening a number of programmes carried out by the Government and various organizations, through the sharing of information, transport, infrastructure, commodities and staff, thus enhancing efficiency and impact. Through OLS, medication was supplied for 250,000 people for three months in SPLA-controlled areas, and more than 51,000 children were vaccinated against childhood diseases. By the end of August, more than 97,000 tons of food and non-food supplies had been delivered. The donor community had almost covered the outstanding $55 million needed to fund OLS, but increased costs arising from newly identified needs resulted in a new outstanding balance of $37 million at the end of August.

The Secretary-General stated that OLS had set an important and historic precedent among complex relief operations: for the first time the two major parties to what was essentially a civil war had agreed to a common large-scale plan of action for civilian relief assistance on both sides of the conflict, and had allowed unescorted relief convoys to operate in "corridors of tranquillity". One of the lessons of OLS, he said, was that humanitarian programmes undertaken by neutral and impartial parties could be catalysts for peace.

In a subsequent report⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General noted that renewed armed conflict in the Sudan intensified in October, following a six-month cease-fire. Drought and late rainfall seriously affected crops and livestock, causing significant numbers of people to migrate towards Ethiopia because of food shortages. To contain the situation, efforts were made under OLS to accelerate the movement of relief food, seeds and fishing equipment to the south, and to improve cattle vaccination, basic health care and immunization programmes for children and pregnant women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 May, by decision 1989/112, the Economic and Social Council took note of a 5 May statement by the Director of the Office for Emergencies in Africa, representing the Secretary-General, on relief efforts for the Sudan.

On 26 July, by decision 1989/176, the Council took note of a 7 July report made on behalf of the Secretary-General by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Co-operation, Decolonization and Trusteeship.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/12 without vote.

Operation Lifeline Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/8 of 18 October 1988 and 43/52 of 6 December 1988 on assistance to the Sudan, in which it called upon the international community to contribute generously and respond urgently and effectively to the country's emergency, rehabilitation and reconstruction needs, in particular the urgent requirements of displaced persons and other affected Sudanese nationals,

Recalling also the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, in particular the section concerning emergency relief and rehabilitation assistance for least developed countries,

Noting with deep concern that the Sudan has continued to suffer from the cumulative and negative impact of persistent natural disasters and civil strife, which have resulted in the widespread destruction of its socio-economic infrastructure and large numbers of displaced persons,

Noting that large areas of the Sudan have been struck again by drought, with resulting crop failures and consequent food shortages,

Recognizing that the Sudan continues to face a complex emergency and humanitarian situation and that the magnitude of the disaster and its long-term effect will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the Government and people of the Sudan, a continuation of international solidarity and humanitarian concern, in order to meet the urgent requirements for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Noting with appreciation that the Khartoum plan of action for Operation Lifeline Sudan endorsed by the high-level meeting organized jointly by the Government of the Sudan and the United Nations, which was held at Khartoum on 8 and 9 March 1989, has been successfully and fully implemented,

Noting the consultations currently under way at Khartoum between the representatives of the Government, the donor community and the United Nations system for the preparation of a plan to cover the second phase of Operation Lifeline Sudan in order to meet the relief and rehabilitation requirements of the displaced population in the Sudan,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on Operation Lifeline Sudan,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and the people of the Sudan in facing a complex humanitarian situation;

2. Expresses its deep gratitude and appreciation to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that rendered support and assistance to the Government of the Sudan in its relief and rehabilitation efforts;

3. Expresses its particular appreciation to the Secretary-General for his outstanding leadership role and vigorous efforts in the effective mobilization and successful co-ordination of Operation Lifeline Sudan, thereby guaranteeing its remarkable success in averting a critical disaster situation;

4. Reaffirms the need for the international community to continue to respond fully and effectively to requests for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction during the forthcoming phase of Operation Lifeline Sudan to enable displaced persons to become self-reliant;

5. Calls upon all States to continue to contribute generously to the relief and rehabilitation requirements of displaced persons;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize support and to co-ordinate the efforts of the international community, to intensify rehabilitation activities and to monitor and keep those activities under constant review;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/12

24 October 1989 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

32-nation draft IA/44/L.11/Rev.1 & Add.1; agenda item 154.

International trade, finance and transport

International trade and global output continued to grow in 1989 following rapid expansion in 1988. However, the picture of an international economy in apparent good health contained a double image. Although some areas of the world, particularly the developed market Economies and several developing countries of East Asia, were enjoying boom conditions, others—Africa and Latin America—were in the grip of depression and disorder.

The Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), at both its 1989 sessions, discussed the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system and the external debt problems of developing countries. In December, the General Assembly expressed its appreciation for the constructive spirit of the Board's deliberations and invited all parties to give effect to its resolutions and decisions. In other action, the Assembly stressed that deterioration in the economic situation of debtor developing countries constituted a major obstacle to their growth and could be a threat to their economic, social and political stability.

There was a major advance in the commodities area in 1989, with the coming into force in June of the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities, a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing. Another commodity-related development was the establishment of the International Agreement on Jute and Jute Products, 1989. The Agreement, which contained no price or supply stabilization measures, was primarily in support of research and development in agriculture, industry and market promotion.

The volume of international sea-borne trade increased for the fourth consecutive year in 1989, reaching over 3.9 billion tons. However, although 47.6 per cent of world trade originated in developing countries, the effective control of 67.5 per cent of the world merchant fleet remained concentrated in the developed market-economy and open-registry countries.

At its October session, the Trade and Development Board devoted a special meeting to commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of UNCTAD. It also agreed that the eight session of UNCTAD should be held in 1991 in Latin America.

UNCTAD VII follow-up

At the second part of its thirty-fifth session (Geneva, 6-17 March, 22 March and 19 May)⁽¹⁾ the Trade and Development Board (TDB) discussed the respective roles of national policies and the external environment in promoting social and economic development in the context of the Final Act of the seventh (1987) session of the Conference (UNCTAD VII).⁽²⁾

Summarizing the debate on the issue, the TDB President stated that there was a striking degree of consensus on the importance of a number of elements of domestic reform programmes that had been successfully applied in some developed and developing countries. However, it was noted that much remained to be done by all countries to respond fully to the broad understanding contained in the Final Act (paragraphs 25-32), on the basis of shared responsibility, with each country contributing in accordance with its capacities and weight in the world economy. The importance of complementarity of national policies and the external environment had been stressed—national policies to foster long-term sustainable growth would have little chance of succeeding without a supportive external environment nurtured by all countries.

It was suggested that in the pursuit of UNCTAD's mandate in various sectors of activity, the UNCTAD intergovernmental bodies and the secretariat should emphasize further the interaction between national policies and the external environment.

International trade

The volume of world trade expanded by over 9 per cent in 1988, well above the annual rate of 3 per cent which had prevailed in the 1980s, said the Trade and Development Report, 1989.⁽¹⁾ Buoyant economic activity in the developed market-economy countries, particularly as regards investment, and strong growth in several developing countries of South-East Asia were important factors contributing to their strong expansion. Exports from the developed market Economies rose by some 7 per cent in 1988, compared with 5.8 per cent in 1987. The import markets for capital goods which expanded fastest were those of Japan, the South-East Asian developing Economies exporters of manufactures and the countries of Western Europe. The United States experienced a strong recovery in its exports due to the accelerated growth of demand in other developed market-economy countries and the earlier realignment of the dollar exchange rate. However, United States exports lost much of their momentum in the second half of 1988. In Japan, where total imports rose by some 16 per cent in 1988, there was only a modest expansion of exports during the year. Most other developed market Economies experienced a rapid acceleration of exports.

Exports from developing countries increased by some 13 per cent in volume in 1988. While the exporters of manufactures fared best, primary commodity exporters also benefited from the enhanced demand, although there were some important exceptions. Compared with other regions, Africa was handicapped by the product composition of its exports. The non-oil-exporting Asian and Latin American countries generally benefited from the buoyant trading environment, particularly with respect to manufactures.

The World Economic Survey 1989⁽²⁾ observed that the improvement in the growth of world trade in 1988 was accompanied by an unexpected 4.3 per cent growth in world output, the best since 1984. The growth of trade, which was twice as fast as that of output, could be partly explained by large shifts in export and import demand resulting from the realignment of major currencies. Another significant factor was the continued fast growth of the newly industrializing countries, which had a large income elasticity of trade.

Although rising incomes probably accounted for a large part of the growth of trade, other factors were difficult to explain. Revolutionary changes in technology that greatly reduced the costs of transport and communication, quickened the response to changes or new information, introduced new products and led to an integration of world financial markets could be contributing forces.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 44/219 without vote.

Report of the Trade and Development Board

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Final Act adopted by the Conference at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987,

Recalling also its resolution 43/188 of 20 December 1988 on the report of the Trade and Development Board,

Noting that the Trade and Development Report, 1989 has made a constructive contribution to the consideration by the Trade and Development Board, at the first part of its thirty-sixth session, of the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, as well as to the Board's consideration of the debt and development problems of the developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on the second part of its thirty-fifth session and the first part of its thirty-sixth session, expresses its appreciation for the constructive spirit permeating recent deliberations of the Board, and invites all parties to give effect to its resolutions and decisions;

2. Welcomes the efforts made by Governments and the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to strengthen the debates of the Trade and Development Board on the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, and also welcomes Board resolution 374(XXXVI) of 13 October 1989 on that topic;

3. Welcomes the significant contribution made by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to the search for durable solutions to the problem of external indebtedness of developing countries, and also welcomes Trade and Development Board resolution 375(XXXVI) of 13 October 1989, on debt and development problems of developing countries;

4. Welcomes Trade and Development Board decision 367(XXXV) of 17 March 1989 on protectionism and structural adjustment, and urges the Governments concerned to fulfil their commitments to halt and reverse protectionism and to take expeditious and concrete structural adjustment measures conducive, in particular, to the widening of markets for exports of products in which the developing countries have or may develop a comparative advantage;

5. Also welcomes Trade and Development Board decision 368(XXXV) of 17 March 1989 on trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems and all trade flows resulting therefrom, and invites the Board to develop a programme for further promotion of trade and economic co-operation among those countries, in particular East-South trade, based on an analysis and evaluation undertaken by an intergovernmental group of experts of the existing and evolving trends and potential factors related to inter-system trade;

6. Notes that the Trade and Development Board has decided to consider, at a future session, the implications of bilateral arrangements and regional economic integration, especially those which have a major impact on global trade, in particular on the trade and development of developing countries, and agrees on the need to ensure that such schemes impart dynamism to global trade and enhance trade and development possibilities for the developing countries;

7. Stresses that in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations commensurate attention should be given to all areas of negotiation, especially those of particular relevance to the trade and development of developing countries;

8. Invites the Trade and Development Board to continue to follow closely developments and issues in the Uruguay Round that are of particular concern to the developing countries;

9. Notes that the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities has entered into force and that the Common Fund has started operations, welcomes the decisions taken by the Governing Council of the Common Fund at its first annual meeting and invites States members of the Common Fund to provide full support for its operations;

10. Takes note of Trade and Development Board decision 377(XXXVI) of 13 October 1989 on arrangements and preparations for the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to be held in 1991, including the agreement to hold consultations on its location in Latin America.

General Assembly resolution 44/219

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 49); draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.53/Rev.1); agenda item 82 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 38, 44, 48, 49; plenary 85.

In resolution 1989/118 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council invited the UN regional commissions to formulate, jointly with UNCTAD, a draft proposal for interregional co-operation for facilitation of international trade.

Trade policy

The Trade and Development Report, 1989⁽¹⁾ stated that, despite assertions from North America and Western Europe of undiminished support for the open, multilateral trading system, resort to protectionist measures, evident since the mid-1970s, had intensified. Recent developments had done much to generate fresh concern about the protectionist drift in trade policies: a 1988 United States law required bilateral negotiations for improved market access abroad and, if unsuccessful, restriction of foreign access to United States markets; the countries of the European Economic Community (EEC) had decided to unify their markets by 1992; the United States and Canada had created a free trade area; and trade between Japan and South-East Asian countries had grown. That combination had promoted fears that the world trading system might be fragmenting into three major trading blocs.

The trade policies of both EEC and the United States were at a difficult and dangerous juncture as opposing forces struggled for ascendancy, stated the Report. On the hopeful side was the fact that the mid-term review of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations had taken place in 1988⁽²⁾ and the negotiating phase had begun (see PART SEVEN, Chapter XVIII). If the negotiations were to result in an effective standstill and roll-back of non-tariff measures, the incorporation of agricultural trade and textiles into the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and the restoration of an adequate multilateral safeguards discipline, developing countries could look forward to a more promising trading environment in the 1990s.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

In March, TDB conducted its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report⁽⁴⁾ covering restrictions on trade and structural adjustment issues in the world economy. An addendum⁽⁵⁾ provided statistics and other information. The UNCTAD secretariat also reproduced information received from member States on their experience with regard to structural adjustment.⁽⁶⁾

By a 17 March decision,⁽⁷⁾ TDB urged Governments to implement fully the commitments to halt and reverse protectionism as agreed in the Final Act of UNCTAD VII.⁽⁸⁾ It recommended that Governments consider, as part of their fight against protectionism, concrete actions to establish transparent mechanisms at the national level, as indicated in the Final Act. The Board decided to consider at a future session the implications of bilateral arrangements and regional economic integration, especially those having a major impact on global trade, particularly on the trade and development of developing countries. The UNCTAD secretariat was asked to carry out a study of the costs and consequences of non-tariff measures, particularly those adversely affecting the exports of developing countries. The Board recommended that the special problems of the least developed countries (LDCs) be kept in view while undertaking measures to improve market access.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Second Committee had before it a draft resolution⁽⁹⁾ on protectionism and structural adjustment, consideration of which had been postponed annually by the Assembly since 1980. By the draft, the Assembly would have urged developed countries to refrain from introducing new tariff and non-tariff barriers affecting the exports of developing countries, eliminate existing barriers, and provide market access for the products of those countries.

On 17 December, Malaysia, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, withdrew the draft.

In resolution 44/219, the Assembly welcomed the TDB decision on protectionism and structural adjustment⁽⁷⁾ and urged Governments to take expeditious and concrete structural adjustment measures conducive to the widening of markets for exports of products in which the developing countries had or could develop a comparative advantage.

Services

For its discussion of trade in services, TDB had before it in March an UNCTAD secretariat report⁽¹⁰⁾ which noted that no generally accepted definition of trade in services existed, although such trade was generally considered to include payments for transportation, travel and other services. The question of definition was being negotiated in the Uruguay Round. Trade in services, particularly tourism, had provided developing countries with an important source of foreign exchange, as well as remittances by service professionals and workers abroad. On the whole, however, developing countries ran deficits in service trade, which reflected the weakness of their domestic service sectors in terms of their support to production and trade in other sectors. A key factor in development was the strengthening of a "knowledge-based" service sector supportive of production and export in other areas of the economy and the competitiveness of national firms.

Many proposals to expand service trade seemed designed to enable firms possessing a strong competitive position in services internationally to penetrate world markets more effectively and to operate more efficiently on a global basis by facilitating their ability to locate abroad, transfer information within their global networks and compete with local suppliers. Such initiatives aimed at reducing regulation of services, which would not necessarily benefit developing countries as, to a large extent, firms there lacked the means to develop services to foreign markets. Much of the service export earnings of developing countries was linked to the movement of persons abroad. In addition, corporate policies could be such as to frustrate the efforts of developing countries to strengthen their domestic service industries and to penetrate world markets.

Trade in services could be directly supportive of development if it took place within a policy framework ensuring its consistency with overall development objectives. Expanded services trade could enhance developing countries' ability to further objectives such as upgrading human capital, transfer of technology and development of indigenous technological capacities and knowledge-intensive services, more equitable redistribution of incomes, strengthened infrastructures, increased foreign exchange earnings from goods and service exports, and others.

Trade preferences

Generalized system of preferences

TDB's Special Committee on Preferences held its sixteenth session at Geneva from 24 April to 3 May 1989⁽¹¹⁾

It had before it the UNCTAD secretariat's twelfth general report on implementing the generalized system of preferences (GSP),⁽¹²⁾ which updated and highlighted changes and improvements in the various schemes that had taken place since the Committee's 1988 session.⁽¹³⁾ Statistics relating to the value of dutiable products excluded from the schemes of EEC, Japan and the United States indicated that developing countries, particularly the least developed, could benefit from an extension of the product coverage to such products without any significant domestic impact on preference-giving countries.

Also before the Committee was a review of GSP,⁽¹⁴⁾ prepared in response to an UNCTAD VII request,⁽¹⁵⁾ which analysed the extent to which the multilaterally agreed principles relating to the generalized, non-discriminatory and non-reciprocal character of GSP had been complied with in the improvements of the autonomous GSP schemes since their inception. It concluded that most of the schemes had been improved as regards product coverage, depth of tariff cuts and, to some extent, the rules of origin. However, it indicated that, despite those improvements, there had been significant deviations from the multilaterally agreed principles.

By a 28 April decision⁽¹⁶⁾ the Committee agreed that preference-giving countries should strictly comply with the multilaterally agreed principles relating to their generalized, non-discriminatory and non-reciprocal character. Those countries were invited to consider improving their autonomous GSP schemes by simplification, greater transparency and stability. The Committee recommended that special consideration be given to products of export interest to LDCs while undertaking measures in the field of GSP, including those in respect of technical co-operation activities. It noted with appreciation that a number of preference-giving and preference-receiving countries had provided resources in support of technical co-operation in connection with GSP and called on countries to consider providing resources in support of technical co-operation activities. The UNCTAD secretariat should undertake an evaluation of the effectiveness of technical assistance activities and report to the Committee in 1991. The secretariat was also asked to study the feasibility and usefulness for exporters and importers of consolidating information on GSP and to report in 1990.

For the first time, the rules of origin, normally considered in the working group on the subject, were dealt with by a Sessional Committee of the Whole, which had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report⁽¹⁷⁾ that attempted to prioritize initiatives. The highest priority was accorded to initiatives which appeared to present the least difficulties for implementation. The report provided information emerging from seminars held under the auspices of the UNCTAD Technical Co-operation Programme on GSP from 1986 to 1988 and reviewed the special transitory arrangements that had been made for the introduction in January 1988 of the process criterion origin rules based on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System.

In agreed conclusions⁽¹⁸⁾ the Committee recognized that the approach and possible initiatives in the secretariat report provided a suitable basis for discussion with a view to improving the GSP rules of origin in regard to their harmonization, simplification and liberalization. It agreed that the main elements of the report should be carried forward for detailed consideration at its 1990 session.

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

In a 17 March decision⁽¹⁹⁾ TDB stated that the consultations of the UNCTAD Secretary-General with Governments on the potential for increased inter-systems trade, as called for by UNCTAD VII⁽²¹⁾ and by the Board in 1988⁽²¹⁾ should be carried out as soon as possible. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to report on those consultations in 1990. The Board established the terms of reference of an intergovernmental group of experts on further promotion of inter-systems trade, outlined work to be carried out by the UNCTAD secretariat on the subject, and indicated action to be taken by the secretariat in providing technical assistance to developing countries in order to promote and expand trade with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. Annexed to the decision was the outline of the approach by the Group D (centrally planned Economics) countries to the elaboration of a programme for the further promotion of trade and economic co-operation among countries having different systems, in particular East-South trade, referred to in the Final Act of UNCTAD VII.⁽²¹⁾

The meeting of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Further Promotion of Inter-Systems Trade took place at Geneva from 27 November to 1 December.⁽²²⁾ The Group carried out an analysis and evaluation of the existing and evolving trends and potential factors related to inter-systems trade, with a view to identifying the problems and constraints, as well as the potential areas and necessary conditions for further expansion of that trade, including preference schemes, financing of inter-systems trade and economic co-operation, including payment arrangements and joint ventures. It also discussed the elements of a draft programme for further promotion of trade and economic co-operation among countries having different systems, in particular East-South trade, and recommendations to be made to TDB as to the orientations of the research work of the secretariat, proposals for technical assistance activities and the treatment of specific issues to be included in the programme. The Group of Experts received proposals for draft elements for the elaboration of a programme on the promotion of inter-systems trade from the Group of 77 developing countries and for a programme on the promotion of East-West-South trade from participating States members of Group D (except Hungary).

Trade promotion and facilitation

During 1989, UN bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and facilitate the movement of goods in international commerce. The International Trade Centre (ITC) continued to play a leading role in the delivery of technical co-operation projects.

International Trade Centre

In 1989, ITC, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and GATT, continued to serve as a focal point for UN assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes.

During the year, ITC's expenditures on technical co-operation activities increased by 12 per cent (nearly $3.3 million) over the previous year's delivery, reaching an estimated record level of $29.6 million, stated the annual report covering ITC's activities in 1989.⁽²³⁾

For the second time in its history, the volume of ITC activities financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—52 per cent—overtook that financed by trust fund contributions, which stood at 48 per cent. Delivery of UNDP-funded projects increased by 18 per cent, or nearly $2.4 million, reaching a record level of almost $15.4 million, while that of trust fund-financed projects increased by 7 per cent, or $0.9 million, thus reaching, again, a record level of some $14.3 million.

ITC assistance with regard to institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level was geared to improving the overall institutional framework by encouraging optimal reallocation of functions, development of clearer and better strategies for export development, and improving the co-ordination mechanism between Governments and business organizations active in this field. Under the subprogramme, ITC projects were under implementation in all geographical areas during 1989. An important activity was a major interregional project on trade development support for structural adjustment, the objective of which was to identify why some policy-level measures did not have their desired impact at the operational level and to recommend remedial measures.

The export market development subprogramme had three elements: trade information, product and market development (for agro-based products, manufactured products and technical consultancy services) and export development of commodities. All three elements were backed by research and development activities.

The specialized national trade promotion services subprogramme was giving increased emphasis to the enterprise approach. ITC continued to provide assistance to improve administrative and technical skills in export packaging, export financing, costing and pricing for export, trade promotion communications, quality control for export, national commercial representation overseas, legal aspects of foreign trade, export co-operation schemes for small and medium-sized enterprises and export-oriented joint ventures, and international physical distribution for exports and imports.

Other ITC technical assistance subprogrammes dealt with commodity promotion, which focused mainly on jute products; human resource development for trade promotion, which continued to emphasize direct training in specialized areas to meet short-term needs, complemented by a comprehensive approach to the strengthening of training institutions; import operations and techniques; the special programme of technical co-operation with LDCs; and technical co-operation with chambers of commerce and other business organizations.

The Centre also carried out work on trade between developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, technical and economic co-operation among developing countries and the participation of women in trade promotion activities.

The special programme of technical co-operation with LDCs continued to play a catalytic role in ITC's overall technical co-operation programme, with over 30 per cent of the Centre's delivery of technical co-operation going to those countries. Within the special programme, ITC gave special attention to commodities and to activities in the product and market development of processed and semi-processed commodities. It carried out sectoral surveys on tropical beverages, conducted market promotion activities for selected jute products in Japan and Western Europe, implemented training workshops and in-service training activities, and prepared trainers' manuals on coffee and coffee promotion and on cotton trading. During the year, eight ITC projects were evaluated—three interregional, two in Latin America, two in Asia and one in Africa; five were financed from trust funds and three by UNDP.

As evidenced in some of the evaluations, ITC's enterprise approach was showing results, with better results occurring where in-depth assistance was given to a limited number of enterprises, rather than where resources were thinly spread over a whole sector. To maximize the impact of project activities, a number of the evaluations recommended assistance in even greater depth.

JAG action. The Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on ITC held its twenty-second session at Geneva from 10 to 14 April 1989.⁽²⁴⁾ It had before it the annual report on ITC activities during 1988,⁽²¹⁾ a report of the technical meeting on the ITC 1988 programme evaluation and on ITC's medium-term plan⁽²⁵⁾ and a report on the evaluation of the ITC programme elements National Trade Representation, and Trade Fairs and Commercial Publicity.⁽²⁶⁾

In general recommendations, JAG suggested that future annual reports should reflect more systematically the measures taken to follow up on its recommendations; ITC should pursue with its trust-fund donors and with UNDP initiatives to obtain increased financing for its technical co-operation programme; current ITC efforts to reinforce its co-operation with other international agencies should be continued and expanded; project design, evaluation and technical backstopping, and appropriate selection of experts should continue to be given utmost attention in order to help safeguard the qualitative aspects of the ITC programme at a time of rapid quantitative expansion; and ITC's regular resources should be increased to keep pace with the expansion of its programme.

In reviewing ITC activities by subprogramme, JAG recommended that ITC should continue to expand its trade information services, with emphasis on modern methods for speedy access to, and dissemination of, trade information and on upgrading technical capabilities in trade information at national and regional levels; it should strengthen its technical backstopping capabilities for its enterprise-oriented export development projects, as they were effective channels for providing result-oriented product and market development assistance; it should continue to assist in the export development of non-traditional products (including technical consultancy services), emphasizing new products whenever appropriate; increased trust-fund and UNDP support should be sought for ITC activities in commodity promotion, in particular those of special relevance to the rural development programmes of developing countries; the Centre should proceed with its efforts to secure financing for the project proposal to assist developing countries to organize export support exhibitions; it should continue to strengthen its technical assistance in the field of joint ventures for export, in co-ordination with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other agencies; it should examine with its parent bodies the type of assistance that it could provide to developing countries for the export of services traded internationally; and increased attention should be given to providing expanded training support to developing countries, with emphasis on strengthening training institutions, refining and adapting training methodologies, providing direct training in new fields, and long-term training for LDCs, supported by on-the-job training. JAG also recommended that, in implementing the subprogramme on import operations and techniques, ITC should maintain its emphasis on result orientation while stressing the provision of information on sources of supply and the application of innovative management methods. The Centre should maintain its strong support for LDCs and continue to enlist the co-operation of its trust-fund donors; it should strengthen its efforts to assist developing countries to take advantage of expanding trade opportunities in the socialist countries of Eastern Europe; and it should proceed with a strategy to strengthen the role of women in trade promotion.

Restrictive business practices

The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices held its seventh session from 27 February to 8 March⁽²⁷⁾ and its eighth session from 23 to 27 October⁽²⁸⁾ both at Geneva.

At its seventh session, the Group had before it information from States⁽²⁹⁾ on steps taken by them to meet their commitments to the 1980 Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set).⁽³⁰⁾ Other reports before the Group dealt with legislative and other developments in developed and developing countries in the control of restrictive business practices (1985-1988)⁽³¹⁾ the work programme on restrictive business practices⁽³²⁾ replies from States on the use of the consultation procedures on restrictive business practices;⁽³³⁾ the proposed handbook on restrictive business practices legislation⁽³⁴⁾ a revised study on tied purchasing practices⁽³⁵⁾ and activities relating to specific provisions of the Set⁽³⁶⁾ The Group also considered a communication from the European Communities concerning EEC participation in the Group's work⁽³⁷⁾

The Group annexed to its report draft decisions submitted by the Group of 77, Group B (the developed market Economics) and Group D. It decided that the question of EEC participation in its work should be referred to TDB for action.

By a 15 March decision⁽³⁸⁾ TDB accorded intergovernmental organizations having competence in the area of restrictive business practices the same participation rights in the Group of Experts as those accorded to States, except for the right of vote.

At its eighth session, the Group considered its annual report for 1989 on legislative and other developments in developed and developing countries in the control of restrictive business practices⁽³⁹⁾ an UNCTAD secretariat note on the handbook on restrictive business practices legislation⁽⁴⁰⁾ a secretariat report on activities relating to specific provisions of the Set;⁽⁴¹⁾ and replies by States and regional groupings on steps taken to meet their commitment to the Set.⁽⁴²⁾

In its agreed decisions and conclusions, the Group expressed concern at the continued existence of restrictive business practices adversely affecting international trade, particularly the trade and development of developing countries, took note of efforts by a number of States to introduce, improve or effectively use their national restrictive business practices control systems in accordance with the Set, and underlined the importance of the adequate implementation of all provisions of the Set by all States. Recognizing the importance of adequate preparations for the United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set, to be held in 1990, the Group requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare the necessary documentation in order to assist the Group at its ninth (1990) session in preparing for the review of all aspects of the Set, including making proposals for the Conference. The secretariat was also asked to prepare for the ninth session, as well as for the Conference, a further compilation of the handbook on restrictive business practices legislation, to continue its work on the study of the concentration of market power through mergers, take-overs, joint ventures and other acquisitions of control and to continue its work on the model law or laws on restrictive business practices. The Group invited all countries, particularly the developed ones, to continue to make voluntary financial and other contributions, with a view to strengthening and broadening the technical assistance programme of the UNCTAD secretariat in the field of restrictive business practices, while expressing appreciation to France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Norway and Sweden for their efforts to support technical assistance activities.

Commodities

The World Economic Survey 1989⁽²⁾ noted that, for a large number of developing countries, the prices of their primary commodity exports rose significantly in 1988, the first such increase since a mild upturn in 1983-1984, which was followed by an almost continuous decline. By December 1988, the overall index of dollar prices of non-fuel primary commodities exported by developing countries was only 5 per cent below its 1979-1981 average. For the year as a whole, it was about 18 per cent higher than in 1987. The significant improvement in world growth during 1987-1988 was an important factor behind the increase in commodity prices and, in some cases, reduced supply resulting from elimination of excess capacity also contributed to the rise.

Of the 40 commodity prices in the UNCTAD price index, 37 increased, many of them sharply. Prices of food and beverages, which accounted for over 50 per cent of the value of exports of primary products from the developing countries, increased by about 12 per cent over their average 1987 level. Wheat and rice prices rose sharply from the low levels of the mid-1980s, with weather-related supply factors, especially drought in the United States and some Asian countries, and low stocks contributing to the increase. Sugar prices recovered from the low levels of the mid-1980s but there were only marginal increases in prices of tropical beverages, which accounted for over half of the value of exports in the group. Coffee prices rose following a 1987 agreement on export quotas. Cocoa prices, however, reached record low levels in 1988 as the largest producers continued to increase production in the face of stagnant demand. Tea prices, which had remained weak since 1984 as supply increased, rose modestly in 1988 in dollar terms. Prices of agricultural raw materials, which accounted for about 20 per cent of non-fuel primary exports of the developing countries, rose by some 8 per cent in 1988 following a significant increase in 1987. Prices of oil and oilseeds increased by 30 per cent on the average.

The sharpest increase in prices—34 per cent over 1987 levels—occurred in minerals and metals, which accounted for a fifth of the exports of primary products of developing countries. Increased demand from world manufacturing activities and a decline in capacity over the years of low prices were contributing factors. Copper, the most important in the group, was about 45 per cent higher in 1988 than in 1987. There were also large increases in aluminium and nickel. Among the major metals, tin showed only a modest increase.

Prices of primary commodities appeared to have already peaked by the end of 1988 and a slower projected growth of world output in 1989 and improved supply of a number of commodities in response to high prices suggested that commodity prices could be somewhat lower in 1989 than in 1988 and fall again in 1990.

Inter-agency consideration. At an inter-agency meeting on commodities held at Geneva from 1 to 3 May,⁽⁴³⁾ the situation and prospects with regard to commodities and related policy aspects were discussed by experts of the organizations of the UN system. It was noted that, although there had been an upward movement in nominal prices for most non-fuel commodities since 1987, the overall price index was still about 10 per cent below its average level for 1979-1981, which was a period of relatively high prices. The short-term prospects for international commodity markets were influenced by an expected slower rate of economic growth in the industrialized countries, continued abundance of supplies of tropical beverages and a continuing relatively tight supply situation for basic food commodities. The prices of metals and minerals were expected to decline substantially over the next two years. In real terms, the overall price index for commodities was expected to decline by 10 per cent in 1989-1990. In the longer term, real prices were expected to remain depressed during the period 1990-2000, since only a modest improvement was projected in non-fuel commodity prices.

Diversification, processing, marketing and distribution. The Working Party on Diversification, Processing, Marketing and Distribution, including Transportation, held its second session at Geneva from 18 to 22 September.⁽⁴⁴⁾ In agreed conclusions, the Working Party noted that, while one third of the 86 developing countries examined by the UNCTAD secretariat had achieved some degree of diversification in terms of their dependence on commodities in export earnings during the period 1967 to 1986, two thirds still remained heavily commodity-dependent and half of those had even experienced an increased reliance on one or two major commodities in their export earnings. The Working Party considered market access conditions and other factors and conditions pertinent to the development of viable diversification programmes, identification of sectors offering opportunities for diversification and increased participation of developing countries in processing, marketing and distribution, and technical assistance for implementing those programmes. It agreed that, at its next session, it would consider the improvement of information flows to aid investment decisions and adequate financial resources for diversification.

On 19 June 1989, the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities⁽⁴⁵⁾ entered into force, following a decision taken at a meeting of ratifying countries in New York. The Fund comprised two separate accounts. The First Account was intended as a source of finances for international commodity organizations established under international commodity agreements that contained buffer-stocking provisions. The Second Account would help to finance commodity measures other than stocking, such as research and development, quality and productivity improvement, and market development.

The first annual meeting of the Governing Council of the Common Fund took place at Geneva from 10 to 21 July.

During 1989, the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund was ratified by Portugal, bringing the number of parties to 104.⁽⁴⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/218 by recorded vote.

Commodities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Conference resolutions 93(IV) of 30 May 1976 on the Integrated Programme for Commodities, 124(V) of 3 June 1979, 155(VI), 156(VI) and 157(VI) of 2 July 1983, and the Final Act adopted by the Conference at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987,

Recognizing the need for better functioning of commodity markets and the desirability of stable and more predictable conditions in commodity trade, of avoiding excessive price fluctuations and of searching for long-term solutions to commodity problems,

Bearing in mind that commodity exports continue to play a key role in the economics of developing countries as a whole, in particular by making a crucial contribution to their export revenues and investments and to the reactivation of their growth and development,

Expressing concern at the difficult situation faced by developing countries in the area of commodities,

Bearing in mind that developing countries, in particular the least developed and commodity-dependent developing countries, have felt the most severe impact of the commodity price situation,

Welcoming the entry into force on 19 June 1989 of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities and expressing the hope that the establishment of the Common Fund, in full compliance with the provisions of the Agreement, will provide a positive impetus towards long-term solutions to the commodity problems of developing countries,

1. Stresses the urgent need for appropriate and early action to address the present world situation in the area of commodities;

2. Expresses its concern at the negative effects of the long-term downward trend of commodity prices on the economic development of the developing countries, which hinders their efforts to improve the living conditions of their peoples and to redress increasing poverty;

3. Stresses the need for all countries, according to their economic capacity and their weight in the world economy, international organizations, multilateral financial institutions and other relevant organizations to undertake measures for the diversification of the commodity economy of developing countries and to ensure greater participation of those countries in the processing, marketing and distribution, including transportation, of commodities, and, in this context, stresses the importance of market access for commodities from developing countries and of improved market transparency;

4. Recognizes that decisions on diversification are primarily the responsibility of developing countries, emphasizes, in that context, the need for continued implementation of their diversification programmes, bearing in mind, inter alia, the long-term evolution of market conditions and the linkage between diversification efforts and market access, and invites developed countries, international financial institutions and other relevant organizations to extend financial support to such diversification programmes;

5. Notes with concern that a further decline in commodity prices and commodity export earnings, as well as the long-term deterioration in the terms of trade of developing countries, in particular the least developed and the commodity-dependent among them, would hinder any prospect of sustained growth and development for those countries;

6. Expresses its conviction that more stable market conditions for commodities would be conducive to the social and economic development of developing countries and could, inter alia, contribute to the international campaign against illicit production of, trafficking in and abuse of narcotic drugs, thus supporting the efforts undertaken by countries to combat such illicit activities;

7. Recognizes the need for a better functioning of commodity markets as well as the desirability of achieving stable and more predictable conditions in commodity trade and of avoiding excessive fluctuations of prices, and urges co-operation between producers and consumers, with a view to improving the functioning of existing international commodity agreements or arrangements and/or, as appropriate, negotiating other commodity agreements or arrangements, in line with the relevant provisions of the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session;

8. Urges all parties involved to meet agreed commitments and work for a balanced approach to the multilateral trade negotiations within the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, launched during the Special Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September 1986, so as to ensure that their successful conclusion brings about further expansion and liberalization in trade in commodities, taking into account the special and differential treatment for developing countries, as well as all other principles contained in the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round;

9. Recognizes the urgent need to address the grave problem of shortfalls in export earnings in the commodities of developing countries and, in this regard, notes that a special session of the Trade and Development Board will be devoted to compensatory financing of these shortfalls;

10. Calls upon those countries which have ratified the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities to contribute to making both accounts of the Common Fund fully operational as soon as possible, in full compliance with the provisions of the Agreement and, in this connection, welcomes the significant voluntary contributions made to the second account of the Common Fund and expresses the hope that further contributions will be forthcoming;

11. Invites all countries, particularly major exporters and consumers of commodities that have not yet ratified the Agreement, to do so as soon as possible, thereby contributing to the improvement of market conditions to the benefit of both producers and consumers;

12. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on world commodity trends and prospects, with particular reference to the situation of the commodity-dependent developing countries;

13. Decides to include the question of commodities in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session.

General Assembly resolution 44/218

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 146-0-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee IA/44/746/Add.21 by recorded vote (113-0-2), 17 December (meeting 51); draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.52/RBV.1); agenda item 82 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 44, 48, 49, 51; plenary 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Coffee. On 3 July, the International Coffee Council decided to extend for two years to 30 September 1991 the International Coffee Agreement, 1983, which was due to expire on 30 September 1989; the extension entered into force on 1 October. The Council suspended the quotas under the Agreement as from 4 July 1989. At its October session, the Council decided to prepare the way for resumption of negotiations for a new agreement.

Jute and jute products. On 3 November, the United Nations Conference on Jute and Jute Products, 1989 (Geneva, 30 October-3 November), established the International Agreement on Jute and Jute Products, 1989.⁽⁴⁷⁾ The new Agreement—a successor to the International Agreement on Jute and Jute Products, 1982,⁽⁴⁸⁾ which was due to expire on 8 January 1991—would come into force on 1 January 1991, if by that time required conditions had been fulfilled. Those conditions were that the Agreement should be signed or ratified by three Governments accounting for at least 85 per cent of net world exports and 20 Governments representing at least 65 per cent of net world imports. The new Agreement would be valid for five years, with a possibility of two extensions of two years each.

As was the case with the 1982 Agreement, the new Agreement did not contain price or supply stabilization measures; its orientation remained primarily in support of research and development in the fields of agriculture and industry, as well as projects in the area of market promotion.

The International Jute Organization, established under the 1982 Agreement and based in Dhaka, Bangladesh, would continue to administer the provisions and supervise the operation of the new Agreement.

Minerals and metals

Iron ore. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Iron Ore held its third session at Geneva from 16 to 19 October.⁽⁴⁹⁾ The Group recommended to TDB that UNCTAD's work on iron ore should be maintained and that regular intergovernmental meetings of experts should be convened, with the participation of industry advisers, to exchange views on the iron ore situation and to review and enhance iron ore statistics.

Tin. The United Nations Tin Conference, 1988, held the second part of its session from 29 March to 7 April 1989, when it established the Terms of Reference of the International Tin Study Group.⁽⁵⁰⁾ As at 31 December,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Terms of Reference had been accepted by Malaysia and Nigeria.

Tungsten. At its twenty-first session from 4 to 8 December,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Committee on Tungsten assessed the current market situation and its short-term outlook. The Committee examined factors that had resulted in only a limited market improvement for tungsten despite the upturn in demand. These were an over-abundant supply, competition for market share between tungsten concentrates and intermediate products and the uncertainty created by increased protectionism and stockpile releases. The Committee requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare a paper containing the different definitions and methodologies used in major tungsten-producing countries and to review existing research and development programmes to promote new applications for tungsten. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to approach the Common Fund for Commodities informally for its view on the eligibility of the Committee to be an international commodity body.

Manufactures

The UNCTAD Committee on Manufactures held its twelfth session at Geneva from 9 to 17 November 1989,⁽⁵²⁾ the eleventh having been held in 1986.⁽⁵³⁾ The Committee had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports reviewing the trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures of developing countries and territories in 1989,⁽⁵⁴⁾ on factors affecting exports of manufactures and semi-manufactures from developing countries,⁽⁵⁵⁾ and on the Committee's work programme.⁽⁵⁶⁾

The Committee adopted a decision,⁽⁵⁷⁾ in which it underscored the crucial importance of improved access to markets for the manufactured and semi-manufactured products of export interest to developing countries. While noting that some developing countries had upgraded and diversified their exports of manufactures, it expressed concern that developing countries as a whole had a low share of world exports of manufactures and a narrow product base, and emphasized the need for a substantial increase in the participation of developing countries in world trade in manufactures.

The Committee recognized that, although the primary responsibility for adopting policies conducive to improving the export supply capability of developing countries lay with the countries themselves, a supporting and stable international economic environment would play a key role.

The Committee established the main elements of its future programme of work.

Finance

Financial policy

The World Economic Survey 1989⁽¹⁾ noted that two related issues of international finance were key global policy concerns. With regard to the first—foreign indebtedness—the developing countries that were in protracted debt crisis had necessarily been a major focus of world attention, as had certain centrally planned economies. However, the country with the largest absolute amount of foreign debt was the United States. Although it was not experiencing debt-servicing difficulties, concern had been raised about the sustainability of the growth of its net foreign debtor position.

The second area of broad concern to policy makers was the availability of financing, with developing countries striving to obtain external financing to support economic adjustment and development, centrally planned economies experimenting with ways that countries with non-market economic structures might better draw on private international financing, and developed countries focusing on changing capital flows and their impact on exchange rates and on official financial movements made in response to changing private international flows.

The Trade and Development Report, 1989⁽²⁾ observed that international capital markets during the 1980s had been notable for the difference between their overall dynamism on the one hand, and the contraction in their role as a source of financing for developing countries on the other. Recent financial innovations had served various objectives, such as the facilitation of risk transfer, liquidity enhancement, and increases in the supply of credit and equity financing. Participants in the international capital markets from the private sector had primarily benefited from those innovations, although Governments and public enterprises of countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development had also deployed them in their international borrowing. As to developing countries, financial innovation had been manifest mainly in techniques for reducing their external debt or exchanging it for other financial instruments. The innovations had had a much more limited impact on Governments and other economic actors from those countries. For example, developing countries' share of underwritten Euronote facilities during 1984-1988 was less than 10 per cent, and their share of non-underwritten facilities during 1985-1988 was below 2 per cent. Several causes had contributed to the small role of developing countries in the markets for new financial instruments, including controls and regulations in their domestic capital markets, costs and other problems associated with establishing the required networks of communications and computer facilities and, for countries experiencing difficulties over debt service, shortages of foreign exchange.

International monetary issues

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a November 1989 report on current international monetary issues.⁽⁴⁾ The report discussed recent developments in the international monetary system (trends in monetary variables and international payments, and exchange-rate management and international policy co-ordination), monetary issues in developing countries (exchange rates and inflation, and fiscal and monetary management) and the questions of the convertibility of the Soviet rouble and the liberalization of Soviet external payments.

The report noted that, since the stock market crash of 1987, there had been increased volatility of the exchange rates of the major currencies; reduced use of monetary policy for exchange-rate management; an upward trend in interest rates; and an absence of a steady decline in the trade imbalances of the major market economies. The instability in exchange rates appeared to have stemmed more from uncertainty regarding the course of monetary policy in the United States than from the evolution of trade imbalances and differences in interest rates.

Intervention in currency markets increased significantly following the meeting of the Group of Seven major industrialized countries in September 1989, helping to push the dollar down to levels more conducive to trade adjustment. However, the report stated, the magnitude of trade imbalances could make it very difficult to manage inflation, growth and exchange rates with monetary policy alone; fiscal policy had therefore to become more flexible.

Developing countries continued to experience balance-of-payments difficulties in 1989. The report noted that those countries were suffering the effects of devaluing their currencies in order to adjust to declines in export prices, rises in interest rates and cut-back in lending. The effect of such devaluation, especially in countries with debt overhang, had been extremely destabilizing. Because the adjustment process also led to a sharp fall in investment in capacity expansion, continued depreciations designed to switch current output from domestic to foreign markets had been needed, resulting in distributional conflicts, since total resource availability itself had declined because of the collapse of growth and sharp decline in external resource transfers. Depreciations had also destabilized demand and added to budget deficits by raising the cost of debt service and of imports for public investment. The report noted that those effects had often outweighed the revenue-increasing effect of depreciation. It was essential for those countries to reduce reliance on depreciations and achieve external adjustment by lifting investment, particularly in the tradable goods industries.

The report noted that the restructuring of the USSR economy and its integration with the international trading and financial systems were closely related to the question of the rouble's convertibility and the liberalization of Soviet external payments. Convertibility required that the rouble be given more command over domestically produced goods and services than had proved possible under the régime of comprehensive central planning. The report cautioned that there was a danger that premature liberalization of exchange and payments arrangements could generate acute difficulties, such as increasing substitution of convertible currencies for the rouble in the domestic market.

An annex to the report contained a summary of recent proposals for convening an international conference on international monetary and financial issues.

By decision 44/449 of 22 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Net transfer of resources

In response to a 1988 Economic and Social Council request,⁽⁵⁾ a chapter of the World Economic Survey 1989⁽¹⁾ was devoted to economic adjustment and the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries. The Survey noted that at the level of the aggregate of the capital-importing developing countries, 1989 would mark the seventh consecutive year of such negative transfers of financial resources. Those transfers were not everywhere related to economic distress; in rapidly growing economies such as the Republic of Korea, they were a sign of growing economic maturity and success. But in most cases, the negative transfer was due to adverse changes in credit-related flows that were intimately related to the developing country debt crises of the 1980s. Viewing the net transfer as the net capital flow minus the net payment of investment income, the group of countries that had not had debt-servicing problems had continuously registered a net financial resource inflow, whereas the aggregate of the debt-problem group of countries had last received a net resource inflow in 1982.

There was clearly a close relationship between net financial transfer and the adjustment problem: not a single developing country that experienced serious debt-servicing difficulties in the early 1980s and was adjusting by mid-decade had been able to recover sufficiently to restore the confidence of its international creditors and regain normal access to international finance. The solution to the adjustment problem was not merely to return financial transfers to their previous levels but to find the appropriate mix of policy reforms and to determine how much international finance to supply in support of reform.

Having reviewed five country experiences of adjustment (Bolivia, Ghana, Jamaica, Mexico, Philippines), the Survey concluded that, in addition to ensuring the availability of an adequate supply of investment resources, it was essential that those resources be applied most effectively. That involved both export diversification, particularly into products with high income elasticities of demand and efficient import substitution. It also involved an oversight function of economic policy-making that scanned the economy for possibilities of increasing inter-industry and inter-sectoral supply, as well as surveying emerging technologies that could have application to small-scale entrepreneurs as well as large ones. Also, some activities that might once have been seen as belonging to the domain of large-scale public or private initiatives could also be re-designed to capitalize on the untapped energies of the people.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/112 by vote.

Net transfer of resources from developing countries and its impact on their economic growth and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned about difficult economic conditions confronting developing countries which undermine their development potential and about the sharp decline in the standard of living of a large number of people,

Concerned that difficult financial situations in developing countries, including net transfers of resources, are limiting them in the utilization of their own resources for investment, for much needed social programmes and for the reactivation of their per capita economic growth and development,

Emphasizing that the efforts being undertaken by developing countries to foster sustained economic growth, though important, cannot succeed in reactivating growth and development without a favourable international economic environment,

Requests the Secretary-General to include in the World Economic Survey, 1990 a more comprehensive analysis of the transfer of resources to and from developing countries, the main factors affecting such transfers and their impact on the growth and development of developing countries, presenting alternative hypotheses on the future evolution of this issue, taking into account recent developments in the world economy and distinguishing between both gross and net resource transfers and financial transfers, and to present a preliminary oral report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/232 by recorded vote.

Trends in the transfer of resources to and from the developing countries and their impact on the economic growth and sustained development of those countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/202 of 8 December 1986 on strengthened international economic co-operation aimed at resolving the external debt problems of developing countries, 42/198 of 11 December 1987 on furthering international co-operation regarding the external debt problems and 43/198 of 20 December 1988 on external debt crisis and development and the search for a durable solution of the debt problems,

Recalling also its resolution 43/197 of 20 December 1988 on fulfilment of the target for official development assistance,

Recalling Economic and Social Council decision 1988/160 of 27 July 1988 on the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries, and taking note of Council resolution 1989/112 of 28 July 1989 on the net transfer of resources from developing countries and its impact on their economic growth and development,

Aware that the pronounced decline in the flow of resources, severe external indebtedness, the deterioration in terms of trade, the long-term downward trend of commodity prices, continued protectionism and other trade measures have resulted in a net transfer of resources from developing countries,

Deeply concerned that such a phenomenon is still contributing to the deprivation of the developing countries affected of resources needed for economic growth and sustained development and may threaten their social and political stability,

Bearing in mind that, owing to the persistent structural imbalances of the world economy, the developing countries continue to face major problems in the areas of money, finance, resource flows, trade, commodities and external debt,

Gravely concerned about the trend in the net flow of resources, and believing that there is an urgent need for all countries to act in a concerted way to address this problem in order to ensure the reactivation of economic growth and sustained development of the developing countries,

1. Urges the international community to take concrete measures to ensure adequate resources for the reactivation of economic growth and sustained development in developing countries, taking into account the following recommendations:

(a) The Governments of developed countries should promote an adequate flow of resources to developing countries, and donor countries should bring up the official development assistance rate as quickly as possible to internationally agreed targets;

(b) Where appropriate, national economic measures should be taken that are conducive to capital formation in developing countries with insufficient savings and flow of external resources;

(c) In order to overcome the longstanding external indebtedness of developing countries, there should be, inter alia and as appropriate, a reduction in the stock and service of debt that is large enough to contribute to the attainment of the objective of the resumption of vigorous growth and sustained development in indebted developing countries;

(d) The Governments of countries members of multilateral financial institutions should ensure that these institutions have an adequate level of resources for the full discharge of their mandates in order to contribute to meeting the needs and requirements of the economic and social programmes of developing countries in the context of an approach consistent with the socio-economic objectives and growth and development priorities of those countries;

(e) Intensified efforts should be made by industrial countries to continue structural adjustment, maintain the vigour of their expansion while reducing and/or containing inflation, and work towards a mix of fiscal and monetary policies that would allow interest rates to come down, and hence induce a more favourable international economic climate;

(f) All Governments should work towards a more open international trading system that improves access, especially for the export products of developing countries, particularly in the context of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, launched during the Special Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September 1986;

2. Recommends that the Trade and Development Board give in-depth consideration at its thirty-seventh session to the transfer of resources to and from developing countries;

3. Invites the Joint Ministerial Committee of the Board of Governors of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries to continue its work and to give in-depth consideration to the transfer of resources to and from developing countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the recommendations contained in paragraph 1 of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/232

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 147-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/832/Add.1) by recorded vote (113-1), 17 December (meeting 51); draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.12/Rev.1, orally revised; agenda item 12).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 15-17, 19, 20, 25, 29, 31, 34, 41, 44, 46, 48, 49, 51; plenary 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Against: United States.

Debt problems of developing countries

TDB action. At its October session, TDB held an integrated discussion on the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system and the debt and development problems of developing countries. It had before it the Trade and Development Report, 1989,⁽²⁾ which observed that decisive improvement in the debt situation of developing countries had remained elusive in 1988. The ratio of debt to exports had improved somewhat for some developing countries (but not for those of sub-Saharan Africa), but was still generally higher than in 1982-1984. Furthermore, rising interest rates since the second half of 1988 had exerted upward pressure on the ratio of payments to exports, and lending from capital markets remained depressed. Because of its adverse impact on the availability and cost of traditional financing and payment arrangements, the debt crisis had generated increased interest in alternative mechanisms, such as counter-trade and regional clearing and payments arrangements. In practice, however, both had proved for various reasons to be subject to limitations.

There had been enhanced efforts to provide relief to the developing countries on official bilateral debt, the main initiative being action to implement the agreement reached at the 1988 Toronto economic summit of the Group of Seven.⁽⁶⁾ Thirteen countries had benefited from concessional debt relief within the framework of the Paris Club (a group of creditor Governments) since October 1988. However, all of the countries benefiting from the measures belonged to the group included in the World Bank's Special Programme of Assistance to sub-Saharan Africa. Thus, most debt-distressed developing countries, including a number of low-income countries, had been excluded. A number of donor countries had applied more generous measures to official development assistance (ODA) debt of poorer developing countries by converting them into grants. The USSR had indicated its readiness to grant debt write-offs or 100-year moratoria to LDCs. France had announced its intention to cancel $2.5 billion equivalent of ODA debt owed by 35 African countries and the United States had decided to write off up to $1.3 billion of ODA loans made to sub-Saharan African countries implementing adjustment programmes.

While the new thinking on debt represented significant and irreversible progress, more was required in terms of action, said the Report. Creditor Governments needed to widen their role and enlarge the scale of debt and debt-service reduction by providing further inducements and/or imposing sanctions. In addition, the conditionality on adjustment programmes had to adapt to take full account of the difficulty and complexity of overcoming disorder which had become entrenched, as well as the limits to which countries could engage in debt equity swaps and privatization without jeopardizing their public finances.

By a 13 October resolution,⁽⁷⁾ TDB agreed that the highest priority needed to be given to making rapid and effective use of the improved and strengthened debt strategy, in conjunction with appropriate economic policies and an improved international environment. That would require: the negotiation of financing packages adequate to support growth-oriented adjustment programmes, including debt reduction, debt-service reduction, new lending and other techniques, so that the financial obligations and payment capacity of individual debtor countries could be made more compatible; the formulation and implementation by debtor countries of appropriate programmes of growth and development-oriented macro-economic stabilization and structural adjustment and reform; review by creditor Governments of tax, regulatory and accounting practices in order to remove unnecessary obstacles with respect to new lending to developing countries and debt reduction and debt-service reduction; intensified efforts by industrial countries to pay special attention to the need for an increase in the exports of heavily indebted countries, to undertake structural adjustment measures, to maintain the vigour of their expansion while reducing and/or containing inflation, and to work towards a mix of fiscal and monetary policies that would allow interest rates to come down; that all those elements be brought together in a way that would bolster confidence in the economic and financial prospects of individual debtor countries and in the strategy itself; and that all involved should take into account the above requirements in working towards a growth-oriented solution to the problems of external indebtedness of all middle-income countries with serious debt-servicing problems, including those whose debt was mainly to official creditors or multilateral institutions.

The Board underscored the importance of ongoing discussions to endow the international monetary and financial institutions with the resources required to meet the needs of all their members. It urged developed donor countries to implement the 1978 TDB resolution⁽⁸⁾ regarding adjustment of the terms on past ODA debt and urged creditor countries to implement fully the measures with respect to Paris Club debts called for by the Board in 1988.⁽⁹⁾

In a 13 October resolution on the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system,⁽⁹⁾ TDB recommended that Governments design and implement effective national and international policies and adopt measures to promote balanced and more evenly spread economic growth and development for the benefit of all countries. Governments should also engage in a more comprehensive, sustained and productive dialogue towards that end.

ACC consideration. In the annual overview report of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) for 1989,⁽¹⁰⁾ it was stated that, given the pervasive nature of the debt problem and its widespread consequences, ACC had discussed the debt issue in various contexts at both of its regular sessions. It summarized a number of main points that had been made during the discussions as they pertained to global aspects, the international economic environment, adjustment programmes, the social costs of such programmes, resources for multilateral financial institutions and the future of the debt strategy.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an October 1989 update⁽¹²⁾ to his 1988 report on the subject.⁽¹³⁾ He discussed the debt and development issue, outlined recent initiatives in debt policy and, based on extensive consultations with heads of State and Government, foreign ministers and diplomatic representatives of a large number of Member States, described the state of international opinion on the debt crisis.

Despite strenuous efforts by all concerned, the economic difficulties of most debt-troubled countries had worsened. Growth in Africa remained stagnant, and in Latin America it had deteriorated sharply. The negative net transfer of financial resources, which resulted directly from the crisis, rose sharply in 1988, reaching an unprecedented $33 billion compared with $26 billion in 1987. The large budget deficit in a key industrialized country and the imbalances among industrialized countries had led to uncertainty and high real interest rates; those rates had, in turn, helped to attract large amounts of resources from the rest of the world. Against that background, said the report, there had been reluctant acceptance of the need for significant debt reduction and there were reasons to fear that the amount of debt reduction produced by recently adopted arrangements would be insufficient to improve adequately the net resource transfer situation of countries affected by slow growth, financial disorder and debt overhang.

The international community had sought to contain the debt crisis and cautiously manage the sensitive economic and financial adjustments of debtors and creditors. Although progress had been significant, it remained insufficient for many highly indebted countries. More needed to be done if the debt problem was to be mastered and conditions established that were conducive to the resumption of development.

First among areas that merited particular attention was that negotiation of debt-reduction schemes—which could take eight months or more—was much too slow and cumbersome. The process would benefit from a clarification of the positions of concerned Governments and their commitment to a firm framework for debt negotiation that would be widely regarded as adequate to resolve the debt problem once and for all, rather than merely manage it through a recurring cycle of debt negotiations. Part of that framework had to be an understanding that adequate financial resources would be made available to support the debt-reduction and financing needs of each debtor country participating in the process. If the available resources—estimated at around $30 billion—were spread over a large number of countries, it would only partially reduce the debt overhang.

It was also necessary to focus on debt owed to Governments since, in many cases, reduction of bank debt would not be sufficient to reach a sustainable debt-servicing burden. Thus, creditor Governments had to be more forthcoming in reducing Paris Club debt.

A more general concern was that the debt-rescheduling negotiations did not necessarily result in the financing appropriate to the adjustment programmes negotiated in other forums, nor was the burden-sharing among different types of creditors or debtors distributed according to any clear principle. The Paris Club accorded its most favourable terms to low-income countries, while commercial bank rescheduling committees afforded their best terms to middle-income debtors.

Numerous proposals had been made for an international facility for debt reconsolidation, which would buy up or collateralize bank debt at an appropriate discount and treat banks and debtor countries in a consistent way, but they had been coolly received. A World Institute for Development Economics Research study group saw the merit of such a facility, but concluded that its negotiation and establishment would take too long. If a new facility was not created, the functions intended for it would have to be carried out by the international financial institutions. The study group saw the International Monetary Fund (IMF) as the lead agency, negotiating in the first instance an agreed debt reduction with the debtor country and providing the funds. If no agreement was reached between the debtor and the banks, the banks would face arrears to which IMF should not object and which it should not make into a reason for discontinuing its services to the debtor country. That would provide the leverage to bring the parties to the table. Whatever the precise mechanism, adequate debt reduction would require a much more active involvement of creditor Governments—directly or through international organizations.

The large debts of some Latin American countries commanded most of the attention in the media and in the financial community. However, debt burdens weighed heavily on many African countries and the servicing of debts of Eastern European countries put additional strains on the economic reforms they were undertaking. In Africa, official creditors played a larger role, whereas elsewhere private banks accounted for most of the claims. However, debt cancellation called for strict burden-sharing, as no creditor was anxious to help to pay off another creditor. That was an argument in favour of allocating responsibility for the management of the international debt crisis to an internationally trusted agency.

Debt reduction was no substitute for policies to restore internal and external balance to manageable proportions, but it had become a condition for such policies to succeed. Sometimes it was necessary to write off debts that owed their origins to assumptions about the future that turned out to be mistaken. Such debts could make it impossible to build a new relationship that was more profitable to all parties. Since banks were unable or unwilling to act on that recognition, said the report, the time had come for Governments to do so.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/205 by recorded vote.

Towards a durable solution of external debt problems

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/202 of 8 December 1986, 42/198 of 11 December 1987 and 43/198 of 20 December 1988,

Recalling also Trade and Development Board resolutions 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978, 222(XXI) of 27 September 1980 and 358(XXXV) of 5 October 1988 and taking note of Board resolution 375(XXXVI) of 13 October 1989,

Concerned that a large number of developing countries experiencing debt difficulties, with serious social consequences, have recorded unsatisfactory rates of growth of output and development for many years, and that overall prospects for these countries are for a continuing unsatisfactory performance in 1989,

Recognizing that such weak growth, aggravated by the external debt crisis, can pose a threat to their social and political stability,

Convinced that, in this context, overcoming the long-standing external indebtedness of developing countries would require, inter alia and as appropriate, a reduction in the stock and service of debt large enough to contribute to the attainment of the objective of the resumption of vigorous growth and sustained development in debtor developing countries,

Recognizing that a number of recent initiatives aimed at a reduction of the stock and service of debt of developing countries, as well as debt relief measures, represent a conceptual advance and an important contribution to the efforts aimed at dealing with the debt crisis and that, in this regard, those initiatives need to be rapidly implemented to enhance their impact on the resolution of the debt crisis of developing countries,

Noting the close interrelationship between money, finance, resource flows, trade, commodities, development and external debt, and recognizing in this regard the important policy implications of this interrelationship for a durable solution to the debt problems,

Concerned at the decline of external resources available to developing countries for development, due, inter alia, to severe external indebtedness,

Recognizing that overcoming the debt problems and ensuring that financial flows are fully and effectively utilized require continuing adjustment efforts on the part of all countries, collectively and individually, each country contributing to the common objective in accordance with its capacities and weight in the world economy,

Emphasizing that the efforts being undertaken by developing countries to foster sustained economic growth, although important, cannot succeed in reactivating growth and development without a favourable international economic environment,

Recognizing that such a favourable international economic environment requires, inter alia, adjustment in the economies of the industrialized countries having a major impact on the world economy, including appropriate fiscal, monetary and trade policies, in order to eliminate the major imbalances in the world economy,

Welcoming the recognition of the need to continue efforts by all parties concerned to resolve the severe debt crisis and to forestall its proliferation and prevent its further aggravation,

Noting with deep concern the changes that have continued to occur in the destination and pattern of flow of external resources and the decline in the flow of those resources to developing countries, which have made the economic recovery and sustained development of developing countries more difficult,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the external debt crisis and development;

2. Welcomes the contributions of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to the international search for a solution to the external debt crisis of developing countries and, in this regard, recalls Trade and Development Board resolutions 165(S-IX) and 375(XXXVI) on debt and development problems of developing countries;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to find a solution to the debt problems of developing countries and encourages him to continue his efforts;

4. Recognizes the role of the international financial institutions in dealing with the debt problems of developing countries;

5. Urges all parties concerned to continue their efforts in pursuit of a durable, equitable and mutually agreed growth-oriented and development-oriented solution to the debt problems of developing countries, which requires concerted international action;

6. Stresses that the deterioration in the economic situation of the debtor developing countries constitutes a major obstacle to their economic growth and sustained development and can be a threat to their economic, social and political stability;

7. Welcomes the increasing acceptance by creditor countries of the need for writing off and/or reducing the stock and service of debt of developing countries and also welcomes the contributions that the recent initiatives aimed at the reduction of the stock and service of debt of the developing countries can make;

8. Stresses that a supportive international economic environment, together with a growth-oriented development approach, is needed for supporting the efforts of debtor developing countries to deal with their external indebtedness and alleviate the political and social costs of structural adjustment programmes and adjustment fatigue, thus contributing to the restoration of their economic growth, development and credit-worthiness;

9. Expresses deep concern that the overall indebtedness of the debtor developing countries has persisted and often increased, that their growth and development are severely limited and that their economic and social prospects continue to be a cause of serious concern;

10. Stresses the urgent need for the broadest implementation of the recent initiatives;

11. Emphasizes that in order to ensure that the recent initiatives, in particular those for debt reduction, in conjunction with appropriate economic policies and a favourable international environment, have an effective and comprehensive impact on the reactivation of economic growth and sustained development in the developing countries, the following measures would be required:

(a) Financial packages should be negotiated that are adequate to support growth-oriented adjustment programmes, including, as appropriate, debt reduction, debt-service reduction, new lending and other measures, so that the financial obligations and payment capacity of individual debtor countries are made more compatible; the combination of these elements should lead to the release of sufficient resources to generate higher levels of investment, the resumption of vigorous growth and development and the satisfaction of the needs of the populations;

(b) Creditor Governments should review tax, regulatory and accounting practices in order to remove unnecessary obstacles with respect to new lending to developing countries and to debt reduction and debt-service reduction in order to ensure that a supportive policy environment is achieved and maintained;

(c) The medium-term and long-term perspective of the rescheduling process should be enhanced by ensuring that it takes fully into account the policies and programmes oriented towards development and adjustment with growth that are formulated by each country concerned; in this context, consideration should be given, where appropriate, to rescheduling agreements on a multi-year basis;

(d) The Governments of member countries of the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and other multilateral financial institutions should ensure that these institutions have adequate resources for the full discharge of their mandates, including, where appropriate, their role in the implementation of recent initiatives;

(e) Serious consideration should continue to be given to mutually agreed ways and means of assisting debtor developing countries faced with large and bunched debts to the multilateral financial institutions;

(f) The parties concerned should continue to exercise increased flexibility in the development of innovative approaches, including those devised by banks and debtors, to take advantage of discounts prevailing in secondary markets;

(g) All those involved should take into account the above, as appropriate, in working towards a growth-oriented solution to the problems of external indebtedness of developing countries that are facing serious debt-servicing problems, including those whose debt is mainly to official creditors or multilateral institutions;

12. Stresses that a durable solution to the debt problems and the revival of growth and sustained development in the developing countries require, inter alia, the following:

(a) All Governments should work towards a more open international trading system that improves access, especially for the export products of developing countries, particularly in the context of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, launched during the Special Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September 1986;

(b) Increased efforts should be directed to the diversification of exports of developing countries in order to enable them to achieve more stable earnings; strengthened existing compensatory financing arrangements for shortfalls in export earnings from commodities can facilitate this process;

(c) External resources should be increased to complement domestic measures conducive to capital formation in developing countries with insufficient savings and inadequate flow of resources from abroad;

(d) Industrialized countries should intensify efforts to continue structural adjustment, maintain the vigour of their expansion while reducing and/or containing inflation, and work towards a mix of fiscal and monetary policies that would allow interest rates to come down, and hence induce a more favourable international economic climate;

(e) It is essential for debtor developing countries to pursue and intensify their efforts to raise savings and investment, reduce inflation and improve efficiency, taking into account their own individual characteristics and the vulnerability of the poorer strata of their populations;

(f) Coherent and co-ordinated policies should be developed on the part of the industrialized countries, including multilateral surveillance, aimed at addressing the imbalances in the world economy;

13. Recognizes that the external indebtedness of some other countries with serious debt-servicing problems also gives rise to considerable concern and invites all those involved to take into account, as appropriate, the provisions of the present resolution in addressing those problems and in working towards a growth-oriented solution to the external debt problems;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution, including an assessment of the impact of the external debt crisis on the availability of resources for the growth and socio-economic development of developing countries.

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 139-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/861) by recorded vote (120-1), 15 December (meeting 50); draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.47/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 84.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 26-31, 41, 50; plenary 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

By decision 44/445 of 22 December, the Assembly deferred to its 1990 session consideration of a draft decision on the establishment of an advisory commission on debt and development.⁽¹⁴⁾ By that draft, which had also been deferred in 1988,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Assembly would have established an advisory commission to develop innovative approaches and evolve specific proposals related to all types of debt.

Development finance

By an October note,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Secretariat transmitted to the General Assembly the text of a draft resolution, deferred from 1988,⁽¹⁷⁾ by which the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to undertake consultations with a view to convening an intergovernmental committee to start the preparatory process for an international conference on money and finance for development. By decision 44/448 of 22 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the draft text until its 1990 session.

Trade-related finance

Export earnings

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Compensatory Financing of Export Earnings Shortfalls held its resumed second session at Geneva from 10 to 18 April 1989,⁽¹⁸⁾ the first part of the session having been held in 1987.⁽¹⁹⁾ Having continued its analysis of the need for a new facility on compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls, the Group of Experts adopted agreed conclusions and recommendations to TDB. It noted that the IMF Executive Board had established in 1988 a new facility called the Compensatory and Contingency Financing Facility, which was based on a balance-of-payments approach and not a commodity-specific one. The Group recognized that compensatory financing could be commodity-related, addressing some aspects of the instability problems in the commodity sector, an approach that could also contribute to rehabilitation and diversification in the area of commodities. It recommended that the problem of commodity export earnings shortfalls of developing countries arising from export earnings instability, as well as actions taken or required in the area of compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls, should be kept under continuous review in UNCTAD. It that regard, the Group requested the UNCTAD secretariat to follow developments in various compensatory financing schemes and their implications for the development of developing countries.

The Group suggested that, in accordance with a 1985 TDB decision,⁽²⁰⁾ the Board's special session be convened as soon as possible to decide on follow-up action with regard to the Group's work.

Taxation

The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters held its fifth meeting at Geneva from 6 to 12 December.⁽²¹⁾

The Group discussed the mutual consultation procedure; monitoring the impact of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries, adopted by a predecessor group in 1979;⁽²²⁾ tax sparing relief; and other topics, including a possible increase in the Group's membership to include experts from the centrally planned economies.

The Group directed a set of recommendations to the international tax administrations of developed and developing countries that would enable them to enhance the formulation and application of double taxation treaties, maximize tax compliance, improve tax equity, decrease and/or eliminate tax evasion and avoidance, and promote international co-operation in tax matters.

The Group recommended that tax authorities endeavour to obviate the need for invoking the mutual consultation procedure by publicizing their tax rules and practices. In addition, it recommended that competent authorities exchange information, publish changes in their tax laws and be flexible within the law to ensure that the taxpayer was treated according to procedure.

The Secretariat was of the view that the Group's future work should include: problems arising from tax treaties in connection with the taxation of the earnings of migrant workers; and the problems arising out of transfer pricing, the exchange of information, the relationship of withholding tax on gross sums and the credit relief applicable to the net profit component, comparison and contrast of national procedures for the assessment and collection of tax, comparison of national tax laws and practices and the prevention of tax evasion, treaty shopping and the countering of avoidance.

Transport and tourism

Maritime transport

In 1989, the total volume of international seaborne trade increased for the fourth consecutive year, reaching over 3.9 billion tons—a 5.5 per cent increase over 1988—said the Review of Maritime Transport.⁽¹⁾ The Review explained that the underlying factors driving the increase had been the size and growth of the economies of developed market-economy countries. Developed market economics generated 44.6 per cent of all goods loaded and were the destination of 67.1 per cent of goods unloaded in 1989. The developing countries expanded slightly in the goods-loaded category to 47.6 per cent and experienced a 0.1 per cent decrease in goods unloaded to 26.4 per cent. Oil cargoes accounted for most of the changes in both loaded and unloaded categories.

The year saw an upturn in deadweight tonnage, with the world total mid-year figures reaching 638 million deadweight tons (dwt). While the 10.1 million dwt increase over the 1988 mid-year figure was well below the average annual growth of 16.4 per cent for the 1970-1989 period, it indicated a reversal of the annual decline in world deadweight tonnage that occurred during 1987 and 1988. The effective control of 67.5 per cent of the world merchant fleet remained concentrated in the developed market-economy and open-registry countries. The developing countries' share was 21.1 per cent, of which almost 70 per cent was concentrated in 10 countries or territories. Conversely, 47.6 per cent of world trade originated in developing countries, which had to make disproportionate freight payments. The ratio of freight to c.i.f. (cost, insurance and freight) value of imports for developing countries in Africa and Oceania was almost three times greater than that for developed countries.

Shipping

The Group of Experts on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries in Shipping, Ports and Multimodal Transport (Geneva, 26-30 June)⁽²⁾ identified a number of areas in which developing countries could intensify co-operation to achieve their shipping-policy objectives. They included: operational activities, such as central freight booking, pooling of cargoes and shipping space, joint ventures, information exchange, multinational companies, research and development, establishment of multimodal transport operators, co-operation in manning, joint financing, determination of base ports/trans-shipment ports, ship repair and building up of computer systems; training; policy formulation; and the creation or maintenance of institutional structures necessary to implement co-operation programmes at the subregional, regional and interregional levels.

Multimodal and container transport

The Review of Maritime Transport 1989⁽¹⁾ noted that statistics on the development of multimodal transport operators (MTOs) remained scarce. However, according to information from Japan, the number of non-vessel-operating MTOs operating in that country increased from 123 in 1987 to 153 in 1989, a 29 per cent increase. While a similar situation might not exist in all developed countries, the general impression was that of an overall increase in MTOs.

Maritime liens and mortgages

The Joint Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Maritime Liens and Mortgages and Related Subjects, established by UNCTAD and the International Maritime Organization (IMO), held its sixth and final session in London from 25 to 29 September.⁽³⁾ It carried out the final reading of the draft articles for a convention on maritime liens and mortgages and considered the scope of the revision of the 1952 International Convention relating to the Arrest of Seagoing Ships.

Having completed the final reading of the draft articles, the Group decided that the draft convention was sufficiently developed for submission to a diplomatic conference for adoption, and recommended that TDB and the IMO Council suggest the convening of such a conference to the relevant UN bodies.

The Group also adopted its final report⁽⁴⁾ covering its work since 1986.⁽⁵⁾

Transport of dangerous goods

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods did not meet in 1989.

The Economic and Social Council had before it a report⁽⁶⁾ of the Secretary-General covering the work of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies during the 1987-1988 biennium.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/104 without vote.

Work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1983/7 of 26 May 1983, 1985/9 of 28 May 1985, 1986/66 of 23 July 1986 and 1987/54 of 28 May 1987,

Noting the ever-increasing volume of dangerous goods in world-wide commerce and the rapid expansion of technology and innovation,

Bearing in mind the continuing need to meet the growing concern for the protection of life and property through the safe transport of dangerous goods while facilitating trade,

Aware that, in order to achieve internationally harmonized laws, the specialized agencies and other international organizations and interested Member States are committed to taking the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods as a basis for the formulation of their requirements and regulations and therefore rely on the work of the Committee,

Reaffirming the desirability of widening the decision-making base of the Committee by encouraging the participation of developing countries and other non-member countries in its future work,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods in the biennium 1987-1988 and of the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee for inclusion in its existing recommendations;

2. Welcomes and approves, in principle, the request of the Government of India to become a full member of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods as a suitable step towards widening its decision-making base;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To incorporate in the existing recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods all the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee at its fifteenth session;

(b) To publish the new and amended recommendations in all the official languages of the United Nations, in the most cost-effective manner, not later than the end of 1989;

(c) To circulate the new and amended recommendations immediately after their publication to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned;

4. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General their views on the Committee's work, together with any comments they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

5. Invites all interested Governments and the international organizations concerned, when developing appropriate codes and regulations, to take full account of the recommendations of the Committee;

6. Endorses the decision of the Committee, aimed at increasing efficiency, to combine its two subsidiary bodies, the Group of Rapporteurs and the Group of Experts on Explosives, into a single Sub-Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, adequate time to be allocated during the sessions of the Sub-Committee to the discussion of matters relating to the transport of explosives;

7. Recommends that adequate funding be provided to support the work of the Committee as indicated in the report of the Committee in its fifteenth session, if possible by setting up a special fund;

8. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to make available, within existing resources, the staff necessary for the adequate servicing of the Committee, namely one Professional and one General Service post, and regrets that the requests made in its resolutions 1983/7, 1985/9, 1986/66 and 1987/54 have not yet been met;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council in 1991 on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/104

27 July 1989 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/140) without vote, 24 July (meeting 26); draft by Committee of Experts (E/1989/63), orally amended following informal consultations; agenda item 7 (h).

Tourism

As requested by the General Assembly in 1987,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization (WTO) reported⁽²⁾ on progress made in implementing the 1980 Manila Declaration on World Tourism⁽³⁾ and the 1982 Acapulco Document on World Tourism.⁽¹⁰⁾

The report stated that international tourist arrivals, which totalled 390 million in 1988, were an estimated 37 per cent higher than in 1980. Receipts from international tourism, totalling an estimated $195 billion in 1988, represented an increase of 90 per cent over 1980. The annual turnover of world tourism, including domestic tourism, was estimated at some $1,400 billion, accounting for 12 per cent of the world's gross national product. The report discussed the image of tourism; tourism and the environment; the facilitation of travel and tourist stays; tourist protection and security; human resources development; and WTO technical assistance to developing countries to increase their share of the benefits of tourism.

Annexed to the report was the Hague Declaration on Tourism, adopted by the Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Tourism (The Hague, Netherlands, 10-14 April 1989).

By decision 1989/180 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the WTO report, as did the General Assembly by decision 44/455 of 22 December.

Programme and finances of UNCTAD

The Trade and Development Board—the executive body of UNCTAD—held two sessions in 1989, in Geneva. The second part of its thirty-fifth session was held from 6 to 17 March, on 22 March and on 19 May;⁽¹⁾ the first part of its thirty-sixth session was held from 2 to 13 October and on 18 October.

The Board adopted four resolutions and 10 decisions during 1989. In March, it adopted a resolution on UNCTAD's twenty-fifth anniversary (see below) and decisions on the rules of procedure of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices, protectionism and structural adjustment and trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems (see above); on its calendar of meetings (see below); on UNCTAD's contribution to sustainable development; and on UNCTAD's contribution to preparations for the international development strategy for the fourth UN development decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I). In October, resolutions were adopted on the twenty-fifth anniversary (see below) and on the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system and on debt and development problems of developing countries (see above). Decisions were adopted on UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development (see preceding chapter); on its contribution to preparations for the international development strategy for the fourth development decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I); and on arrangements for UNCTAD VIII and the Board's calendar of meetings (see below).

By decision 1989/167 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of TDB on the second part of its thirty-fifth session.

The General Assembly, in resolution 44/219, took note of the reports of TDB on its two 1989 sessions and invited all parties to give effect to its resolutions and decisions.

Programme policy

The TDB Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held its seventeenth (8-12 May)⁽⁵⁾ and eighteenth (30 October-8 November)⁽⁴⁾ sessions in 1989, both at Geneva.

Programme budget (1990-1991)

At its May session,⁽⁵⁾ the Working Party reviewed the UNCTAD section of the proposed UN programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991.⁽⁵⁾

In agreed conclusions, the Working Party stated that programme budgets should clearly reflect the work to be carried out by the secretariat and differentiate between final and intermediate outputs. The secretariat should ensure that posts allocated to various programmes were staffed and were located within the appropriate programmes. Secretariat activities based on intergovernmental mandates should have priority over ad hoc requests without such mandate. The distinction between actions to be taken by Governments and by the secretariat should be taken into consideration in preparing the programme budget document. The Working Party stressed the importance of using consultants for tasks of a specialized nature that were not expected to be performed by the regular staff. It expressed the hope that the secretariat would further develop its own expertise in the various areas covered by UNCTAD's mandate. Recognizing the indicative nature of items concerning ad hoc expert groups, the Working Party considered that their work should be related to areas of special interest in the work of the intergovernmental machinery. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was invited to allow for interactions between experts participating in those groups and delegations. Ad hoc expert groups in areas where intergovernmental groups of experts had been convened should be avoided.

The Working Party agreed to amendments to the proposed programme budget and to their transmittal to the appropriate bodies in New York.

In resolution 44/202 A of 21 December, the General Assembly established the programme budget for the 1990-1991 biennium, allocating $73,107,600 for the UNCTAD programme.

Medium-term plan (1992-1997)

At its October/November session,⁽⁴⁾ the Working Party reviewed the draft UNCTAD sections of the UN medium-term plan for 1992-1997.⁽⁶⁾

In agreed conclusions, the Working Party, noting that a number of major events that would take place in the forthcoming period would have implications for the UNCTAD sections of the medium-term plan, stressed the importance of taking into account the results of those events in revising the plan. It approved a text⁽⁷⁾ reflecting the outcome of its review for transmission to the appropriate authorities in New York.

Technical co-operation

In a report to the UNDP Governing Council⁽⁸⁾ the UN Secretary-General stated that, in 1989, expenditure under UNCTAD technical co-operation activities reached the record level of about $19 million, an increase of some 50 per cent over 1988. The objectives of the programme remained the strengthening of national capacities for formulating and implementing national and international policies, strategies, measures and instruments for developing international trade, promoting a better functioning of the international economic system in support of national development and enhancing economic co-operation among developing countries.

Within the international trade programmes, UNCTAD assisted developing countries to participate effectively in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations through studies and seminars/workshops on the issues involved. Developing countries were also assisted, through advisory services and regional and national seminars, to take advantage of various schemes offered under GSP. UNCTAD responded to increasing requests from developing countries for assistance in studying and developing the service sector of their economies. As regards technical co-operation with interested developing countries to expand their trade with socialist countries in Eastern Europe, seminars and workshops in 1989 addressed the implications of the new reforms in the foreign trade systems and external economic relations of those countries.

Technical co-operation in data management expanded rapidly in 1989. Activities continued to improve and disseminate the data base on trade control measures and to support simplification of trade procedures. Progress was made in software development and in implementing the automatic customs data system.

Under the resources for development programmes, assistance was provided within the framework of the debt-management and financial analysis system. An improved software of that system was introduced in 1989. Increased attention was given to supporting government efforts to strengthen the administrative and institutional environment in offices dealing with national debt.

As regards commodities, contributions from Italy and Switzerland provided an impetus to UNCTAD assistance to food-importing developing countries to improve their import management and policies in the context of national food plans and to reduce the foreign exchange costs of food imports.

A main focus of the UNCTAD technical co-operation programme continued to be maritime and multimodal transport, which covered inter-linked activities related to the management and operations of ports, shipping, multimodal transport, maritime legislation and training in maritime issues.

Organizational questions

Twenty-fifth anniversary of UNCTAD

On 14 March,⁽³⁾ TDB decided to devote one meeting at the first part of its thirty-sixth session to marking UNCTAD's twenty-fifth anniversary and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to undertake the necessary preparations.

On 5 October, TDB held a special meeting to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary. On 13 October,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Board, acknowledging with appreciation statements and messages delivered on that occasion, adopted a declaration stating that the main substantive challenge facing UNCTAD was to bring fresh thinking to bear on long-standing problems and new areas of concern with a view to promoting innovative policy measures. It should do so taking full account of the interdependence of economies and of policy areas, of long-term structural changes in the world economy, as well as of the need for a more supportive and predictable international economic environment for trade and development, particularly of developing countries. Member States pledged themselves to enhance their political support for the organization and to make it a more effective and responsive instrument of international co-operation for trade, growth and development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/19 without vote.

Twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964 by which the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) was established,

Recalling also its resolution 43/183 of 20 December 1988,

Noting that 1989 marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of UNCTAD,

Noting with appreciation the valuable contribution that UNCTAD as a whole has made to the promotion of international economic co-operation and development,

Recognizing that important policy advances and agreements have been achieved through intergovernmental negotiation and deliberation, conceptual innovation and implementation, and recognizing also the influence of the work of UNCTAD on the thinking and decisions of Governments and of other international forums,

1. Congratulates the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on the twenty-fifth anniversary of its establishment;

2. Reaffirms the role of UNCTAD as set out in resolutions of the General Assembly and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in the Final Act of the seventh session of the Conference;

3. Invites UNCTAD to continue its efforts to bring fresh thinking to bear on long-standing problems and new areas of concern, with a view to promoting effective and innovative policy measures;

4. Invites the member States of UNCTAD to enhance their political support for that organization and to make it a more effective and responsive instrument of international co-operation for trade, growth and development, particularly of developing countries;

5. Endorses the Declaration on the twenty-fifth anniversary of UNCTAD adopted by the Trade and Development Board at the first part of its thirty-sixth session.

14 November 1989 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Draft by Malaysia (A/44/L.391; agenda item 82 (b)).

Other matters

On 13 October,⁽¹¹⁾ TDB agreed that the eighth session of UNCTAD should be held in 1991, and requested consultations on a location in Latin America and an agenda.

On 17 March,⁽¹²⁾ TDB approved a calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1989 and noted draft calendars for 1990 and 1991. On 13 October,⁽¹³⁾ it approved the calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1989 and 1990 and noted the tentative calendar for 1991.

Transnational corporations

The impact of transnational corporations (TNCs) on international development, trade and global investment flows continued to attract the attention of the international community in 1989.

The Commission on Transnational Corporations (fifteenth session, New York, 5-14 April) considered, among other things, the draft code of conduct on TNCs, the role of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia, TNCs and international economic relations, the role of TNCs in services and trans-border data flows, and the work of the Centre on Transnational Corporations. At the seventh session of the Commission's Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts (New York, 5-14 April), international standards of accounting and reporting were discussed.

In May, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to conduct a study of joint ventures among national corporations from various developing countries and their contributions to the development process (resolution 1989/21). It also requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on trends concerning TNCs and international economic relations (1989/22), and to study the impact of development assistance to least developed countries on flows of foreign direct investment to them (1989/23).

The Council further requested the Secretary-General to conduct a study of the main sectors of TNC activity that had an adverse impact on the environment (1989/25) and to prepare a report on the activities of transnational banks in relation to the external indebtedness of developing countries (1989/28). It condemned TNCs that continued to collaborate with the racist minority régime in South Africa (1989/27), and requested the Chairman of the Commission's special session to intensify consultations on the code of conduct (1989/24).

Draft code of conduct

The Commission on TNCs, at its fifteenth session,⁽¹⁾ continued its work towards a draft code of conduct on TNCs. In a February report,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General reviewed the status of code negotiations, as well as recent developments in the international economic situation of relevance to the code. The report mentioned the transnationalization of economic activity, the ongoing round of multilateral trade negotiations aimed at establishing an international régime on foreign direct investment measures and a framework for liberalization of trade in services, and the development of joint ventures between the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and foreign private investors relevant to the code of conduct.

In April,⁽¹⁾ the Commission noted the report and requested the Secretary-General to report again on the subject in 1990.

International arrangements related to TNCs

The Secretary-General, in his report⁽³⁾ on international arrangements and agreements related to TNCs, considered trends and developments in international economic co-operation in areas that touched upon foreign direct investment. The report reviewed relevant discussions in the context of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations⁽⁴⁾ and current developments in the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency. International standards to be observed by TNCs and Governments in protection of intellectual property rights, labour relations and environment were also reviewed. It was noted that a new trend was emerging towards a greater linkage of national and international policies and measures relating to economic issues.

In April⁽¹⁾ the Commission took note of the report and requested the Secretary-General to update it for its 1990 session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/24 without vote.

Code of conduct on transnational corporations

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on a code of conduct on transnational corporations and on international arrangements and agreements related to transnational corporations,

Reiterating that the Commission on Transnational Corporations, meeting in special session, continues to be the competent and authoritative body of the United Nations for negotiating the code of conduct on transnational corporations,

Reaffirming the need to finalize the code of conduct on transnational corporations as soon as possible,

Taking into account the comments on the subject made by delegations during the fifteenth session of the Commission,

Requests the Chairman presiding at the special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, in co-ordination with the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, to intensify consultations on the code of conduct on transnational corporations, with a view to resuming negotiations on the code in the context of the special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations, if possible no later than the end of 1990.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/24

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/87) without vote, 19 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1989/28/Rev.I); agenda item 8.

Standards of accounting and reporting

The seventh session of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting was held in New York from 5 to 14 April 1989.⁽¹⁾ The Group had before it two reports of the Secretary-General on current developments in the field of accounting and reporting by TNCs, viewed at a global⁽²⁾ and at a national level.⁽³⁾ It also reviewed the Secretary-General's reports on accounting for inflation and changing prices and market and historical values of assets and liabilities,⁽⁴⁾ appropriate measures to give effect to the work of the Group,⁽⁵⁾ information disclosure requirements concerning the annual reports of boards of directors,⁽⁶⁾ the special case of Africa in developing ways to improve education, research and practical training in the field of accounting and reporting in Member States,⁽⁷⁾ objectives and concepts underlying financial statements,⁽⁸⁾ and data on foreign direct investment.⁽⁹⁾

The Group recognized the usefulness of the review of important current developments in accounting and reporting at both a global and a national level and suggested that a short questionnaire accompany the note verbale to promote a more structured format in replies from Governments.

With regard to accounting for inflation, changing prices, and market and historical values of assets and liabilities, the Group concluded that "hyperinflation" described an environment where inflation had reached a very high or excessive rate, and agreed to several descriptions of accounting problems that arise during periods of hyperinflation.

In considering the question of information disclosure requirements concerning the annual reports of boards of directors, the Group identified a number of subjects for discussion and analysis that could be included in the directors' reports.

The Group discussed the feasibility of the Centre's offering technical assistance in Africa in the fields of accounting education, research and practical training, and agreed that a survey should first be conducted to collect information on local needs and practices in all countries in Africa.

Regarding measures to give effect to its work, the Group requested the Centre to complete a promotional brochure, including a cover design with a logo by which the Group could be identified. It also asked that items already in the agreed conclusions be deleted from the list of accounting and reporting issues, and that an explanatory paragraph be provided for each remaining item. The Group also suggested that a trust fund be created to defray the cost of participation by developing countries in the Group's sessions.

With regard to objectives and concepts underlying financial statements, the Group agreed that the report⁽⁸⁾ could be issued as a companion publication to Conclusions on Accounting and Reporting by Transnational Corporations, published in 1988.

The Commission on TNCs adopted⁽¹⁰⁾ the Group's recommendation on the following three measures to be taken by the Centre to give effect to the work of the Group: publishing the objectives and concepts underlying financial statements as a companion volume to the Conclusions, completing and publishing the work on the promotional brochure, and establishing a trust fund.

The Commission also approved the report of the Group and the provisional agenda for its eighth (1990) session.⁽¹¹⁾

Commission on TNCs

The Commission on TNCs held its fifteenth session in New York from 5 to 14 April 1989. Among the subjects discussed were recent developments related to TNCs and international economic relations, activities of the Centre on TNCs, work related to the code of conduct on TNCs, international standards of accounting and reporting (see above), TNCs in South Africa and Namibia, strengthening of the negotiating capacity of developing countries in their dealings with TNCs, the role of TNCs in services (including transborder data flows), the Centre's development of a comprehensive information system, and the provisional agenda for the Commission's sixteenth (1990) session.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on its fifteenth session (decision 1989/125) and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its sixteenth session (decision 1989/124).

TNCs in South Africa and Namibia

The Commission on TNCs, at its April session,⁽¹⁾ had before it three reports by the Secretary-General related to the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia. The first⁽²⁾ examined their collaboration with the racist minority régime in that area and reviewed the state of the South African economy, its main trading partners and changes in foreign direct investment. It also examined the potential impact of a cessation in foreign trade and disinvestment, and the cutting off of new loans and trade credits on South Africa's economy. The report showed that while a number of countries had reduced their trade with South Africa, pulled out investments and cut off loans, there was evidence that other countries had filled part of that gap. It also suggested that curtailing foreign trade and loans would have more immediate impact on the South African economy than changes in foreign direct investment, because of the tendency of departing firms to maintain non-equity arrangements which allowed for continued technology transfers.

Another report⁽³⁾ discussed the responsibilities of the home countries of TNCs that operated in South Africa and Namibia in violation of United Nations resolutions and decisions. The report concluded that differences in the content, scope, nature and approach of national measures pursuant to resolutions against apartheid tended to create opportunities for avoiding sanctions. The various economic measures applied were illustrated with a view to standardizing measures and devising co-ordinated action to strengthen the sanctions.

A third report⁽⁴⁾ followed up the recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Person⁽⁵⁾ which was established to conduct public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia. The report listed those TNCs that had disposed of their equity interests, as well as those with continuing interests in South Africa and Namibia. The Commission took note of the reports and approved the information programme for public hearings in 1989 on the role of TNCs in both countries. It condemned TNCs that continued to collaborate with the racist minority régime in South Africa in defiance of UN resolutions and called on the Governments of home countries of TNCs to consider adopting further measures to prohibit all forms of collaboration.

Public hearings

The Panel of Eminent Persons, established by the Secretary-General in accordance with a 1988 Economic and Social Council request,⁽⁶⁾ conducted the second public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia at the United Nations Office at Geneva from 4 to 6 September 1989. In its report,⁽⁷⁾ the Panel examined the current situation in South Africa, finding that economic and political changes were under way due to the domestic and international pressures on the Government and the business community to dismantle the apartheid system. The Panel reviewed the impact, efficacy and monitoring of sanctions, and considered the importance of training and educating black South Africans for a post-apartheid era. It recommended that the General Assembly appoint an independent group to prepare a detailed report on Governments' and TNCs' circumvention of sanctions in many areas, including trade in arms, oil and technology, and noted that the arms and oil embargoes should be strengthened. The Panel also made specific recommendations on financial, investment and trade sanctions, and the monitoring system of the sanctions, and recommended that a comprehensive study of a future training programme for black South Africans be conducted. (See also PART TWO, Chapter I.)

In connection with the public hearings, six background papers were prepared by the Centre on TNCs on: an overview of the activities of TNCs in South Africa;⁽⁸⁾ the activities of TNCs in Namibia;⁽⁹⁾ the South African economy and TNCs;⁽¹⁰⁾ the role of transnational banks in South Africa;⁽¹¹⁾ sanctions against South Africa;⁽¹²⁾ and the list of TNCs with interests in South Africa and Namibia.⁽¹³⁾ The papers concluded that the immediate effect of sanctions and disinvestment on South Africa had been felt by all segments of the economy, including black workers who had lost benefits and employment as a result of disinvestment by TNCs, but that the world economy was too fluid for any set of measures to be fully effective. Loopholes and explicit sanctions-busting actions had weakened the impact of the measures and of disinvestment by TNCs. Although disinvestment had not prevented the transfer of technology essential to the functioning of South Africa's economy, the evidence indicated that sanctions and disinvestment had imposed economic costs on South Africa. The falling due in 1990 of foreign debt of about $8 billion was expected to increase further the country's vulnerability to international pressure.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/27 by recorded vote.

Activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia, in particular resolution 1988/56 of 27 July 1988, in which it urged all transnational corporations to stop immediately all forms of collaboration with the racist minority régime in South Africa and called for specific actions by Member States and transnational corporations to end such collaboration,

Noting with grave concern the brutal perpetuation of the inhuman system of apartheid in South Africa and the continued denial of the civil and political rights of the majority of the population in that country,

Bearing in mind the fact that continued investments, trade, technological co-operation and other covert or overt activities by transnational corporations inside and outside South Africa provide sustenance to apartheid,

Noting the current efforts to implement Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 and attain the independence of Namibia,

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia and collaboration of such corporations with the racist minority régime in that area and on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to the transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

1. Reiterates its abhorrence of apartheid, which is a crime against humanity, and condemns the South African régime for its perpetuation of apartheid, for its continued oppression of the majority of the people of South Africa and for its acts of military and economic destabilization against the neighbouring independent States;

2. Condemns those transnational corporations that continue to collaborate with the racist minority régime in South Africa in defiance of United Nations resolutions and international public opinion and, in many cases, in violation of measures adopted by their home countries;

3. Welcomes as an initial step the measures taken by some Governments to impose restrictions on investments, bank loans and other economic activities in South Africa, as well as the divestment by some transnational corporations of their equity investments in South Africa;

4. Deeply regrets that the measures taken so far fall short of the comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime in South Africa called for in relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Calls upon the Governments of home countries of transnational corporations to implement fully the provisions of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/56, and to consider adopting further measures to prohibit all forms of collaboration by transnational corporations with the racist minority régime in South Africa, including not only direct investments, but also services, non-equity forms of business arrangements, technology licensing, distribution and franchising agreements and other such activities;

6. Urges all transnational corporations to stop immediately any operations in South Africa and all forms of trade and economic links with the racist minority régime;

7. Calls upon all multilateral financial and development institutions to cease immediately any kind of support or other form of collaboration with the racist régime in South Africa;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to expedite the implementation of paragraph 9 of Council resolution 1988/56 and to report on the results thereof to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its sixteenth session;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue the useful work of collecting and disseminating information on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and in Namibia until the attainment of its independence, including the compiling of a list of transnational corporations still conducting operations there;

(b) To prepare studies on the level and forms of operations by transnational corporations in South Africa and in Namibia until the attainment of its independence, including their non-equity business arrangements and their involvement in particular sectors of the South African and Namibian economies, and an updated study on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to the transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations;

(c) To report annually to the Commission on Transnational Corporations, the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/27

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 45-2-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/87) by roll-call vote (34-2-7), 19 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1989/28/Rev.1); agenda item 8.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Poland, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: United Kingdom

Abstaining: Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ireland, Japan, Netherlands, Portugal.

TNCs and international economic relations

In February, the Secretary-General issued a report⁽¹⁴⁾ on recent developments related to TNCs and international economic relations. While total world-wide outflows of foreign direct investment had trebled from the end of 1983 through 1987, with average annual outflows during that period reaching $81 billion, the developing countries' share had declined from 27 per cent of the total in the period 1981-1983 to 21 per cent in 1984-1987. Developed countries, especially France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States, increased their share of both foreign direct investment inflows and outflows. Services as a share of foreign direct investment outflows continued to grow, representing more than half of total outflows. The report concluded that the creation of a single market within the European Economic Community by the end of 1992 was already stimulating greater activities within the Community by both Community- and non-Community-based TNCs, but that the implications for developing countries remained uncertain.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/22 without vote.

Recent trends concerning transnational corporations and international economic relations

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1908(LVII) of 2 August 1974 and 1913(LVII) of 5 December 1974 on the impact of transnational corporations on the development process and on international relations,

Reaffirming also its resolution 1988/58 of 27 July 1988 on strengthening the role of the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the activities of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in support of developing countries,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on recent developments related to transnational corporations and international economic relations and on the role of transnational corporations in the least developed countries,

Aware that structural imbalances in the economies of major actors in the world economy have an impact on investment flows, including those to developing countries,

Noting that developed market economy countries increasingly attract foreign direct investment in a situation in which developing countries increasingly face limitations on financial and technological resources that could contribute to their economic and social development,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its sixteenth session, in 1990, a report analysing those trends and to recommend ways and means of increasing the operations of transnational corporations in developing countries in order to contribute to their economic, social and technological development;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in that report an assessment of the potential impact of the regional economic integration processes taking place among developed countries on the future operations of transnational corporations, particularly in developing countries, and, in turn, the impact on regional economic integration processes in developing countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/22

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/87) without vote, 19 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1989/28/Rev.1); agenda item 8.

Role of TNCs in the least developed countries

Pursuant to a 1988 request by the Commission on TNCs, in February the Secretary-General issued a report⁽¹⁵⁾ on the role of TNCs in the least developed countries. The report stated that there were a number of areas in which TNCs could help to accelerate development in those countries, but that they had so far played an insignificant role. The report suggested actions that could be taken by host countries, home countries of TNCs and international organizations to accelerate the flow of foreign direct investment to the least developed countries and to improve its qualitative contribution to their economies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/23 without vote.

Role of transnational corporations in the least developed countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the role that transnational corporations can play in the development of the least developed countries, and concerned that transnational corporations have largely bypassed those countries,

Stressing the need for appropriate policies and measures, including those instituted by Governments of home countries of transnational corporations, and for international action, including action by the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, to enhance the contribution of transnational corporations in the least developed countries,

Mindful of the development objectives and priorities of the least developed countries,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the role of transnational corporations in the least developed countries,

1. Emphasizes the crucial need for the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations to provide assistance to the Governments of the least developed countries, at their request, in various areas pertaining to foreign direct investment by transnational corporations, as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General, with a view to strengthening their capabilities in dealing with transnational corporations, as well as to devise innovative and action-oriented approaches in that regard, aimed at substantially increasing the contribution of transnational corporations in the least developed countries;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct a study on home-country legislation on investment by transnational corporations in the least developed countries;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to study further the impact of levels of official development assistance, balance-of-payment support, technical assistance and other forms of assistance to the least developed countries on flows of foreign direct investment to those countries;

4. Requests the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations to participate actively in the Secand United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held in 1990, and in the preparatory meetings for that Conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its sixteenth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/23

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/87) without vote, 19 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1989/28/Rev.II; agenda item 8.

TNCs and the environment

Pursuant to a 1988 request by the Commission on TNCs, the Secretary-General, in February, issued a report⁽¹⁶⁾ on TNCs and issues related to the environment, which identified ways in which TNCs could contribute to long-term development and sustainable growth. At the macro-economic level, TNCs could make investment changes to reduce their negative impact on the global environment. The report stated that, at a more immediate and practical level, TNCs could adopt environmentally sensitive policy directives and management techniques, improve their methods for examining the environmental consequences of high-risk technologies, disseminate more complete information on their environmental practices, and change their procedures for handling toxic wastes. The report also identified some general management principles for sustainable development, namely, that TNCs take more fully into account the social and environmental costs of production; use natural resources efficiently; employ longer time horizons in decision-making; develop and transfer technologies that were environmentally and socially appropriate to each particular region; and invest more in production in poorer countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/25 by recorded vote.

Transnational corporations and environmental protection in developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 42/186 of 11 December 1987 on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, 42/187 of 11 December 1987 on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development and 43/196 of 20 December 1988 on a United Nations conference on environment and development,

Aware that large industrial enterprises, including transnational corporations, are frequently the repositories of scarce technical skills for the preservation of the environment, and conduct activities in sectors that have an impact on the environment and, to that extent, have a specific responsibility,

Recognizing the role that the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations can play in analysing the activities and strategies of transnational corporations in the context of environmental protection and preservation,

Expressing concern that pollution-intensive processes which disrupt the ecological balance and use technology that poses a high risk for the environment have been transferred to developing countries through the operations of transnational corporations,

Expressing concern about the illegal traffic in and dumping of toxic and other hazardous wastes and products in many countries, particularly developing countries,

Noting with satisfaction the recent adoption of the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal,

Emphasizing the need for all transnational corporations to develop further technologies that are not pollution-intensive or environmentally hazardous and to apply them wherever they operate,

Aware of the co-ordinating role of the United Nations Environment Programme in the field of the environment,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on transnational corporations and issues relating to the environment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with leading experts in this field, transnational corporations and appropriate international organizations, to conduct an analytical study of the main sectors of activity that have adverse effects on environmental preservation and the factors that determine the allocation of activities between developed and developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the specific responsibilities in this field of large industrial enterprises, including transnational corporations, to continue to develop ways and means of strengthening the participation of those enterprises in efforts to preserve and protect the environment, including, in particular, the elaboration of a set of criteria and operational principles;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to gather data on existing sources of information on technologies that are environmentally hazardous and on the availability of alternative technologies, and to make recommendations on ways and means of increasing and facilitating the effective transfer of alternative technologies to developing countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to identify ways in which developing countries in particular might benefit from the experience of other countries in their efforts to protect the environment in relation to the activities of industrial enterprises, including transnational corporations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Governments and other interested parties, to examine, within the context of overall efforts for the preservation of the environment, in particular for strengthening the role of transnational corporations, the feasibility of establishing a fund financed by voluntary contributions from transnational corporations and devoted to supporting the efforts of developing countries to protect the environment;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its sixteenth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 53-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee IE(1989/87) by roll-call vote (34-1-0), 19 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1989/28/Rev.1); agenda item 8.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Poland, Portugal, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.
Against: United States.

Transnational services

In February⁽¹⁷⁾ the Secretary-General issued a report on the role of TNCs in services other than banking. It focused on the approaches and policies of (developing countries towards transnational service corporations and on the possible contributions such corporations could make to development. It found that developing countries had, in general, not been left out of the global shift in foreign direct investment towards services, but that regulations for foreign direct investment in services in developing countries tended to be more restrictive than for manufacturing.

In March,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General issued a report on the role of transnational banks in developing countries, noting that lending to those countries peaked in 1974-1982 and was followed by a sharp reduction, which, when combined with debt service on the previous loans, led to a sizeable reverse transfer of resources during the period 1983-1986. The report stated that new initiatives were needed to integrate proposals for debt relief into a coherent strategy. One suggestion was that debt problems should be treated as if an international law of bankruptcy were in effect. The report also suggested policy measures to improve the contribution of transnational banks to development through on-shore operations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/28 by recorded vote.

Role of transnational banks in developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/198 of 20 December 1988 entitled "External debt crisis and development: towards a durable solution of the debt problems",

Recalling its resolution 1988/58 of 27 July 1988 on strengthening the role of the Commission on Transnational Corporations and the activities of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in support of developing countries,

Reaffirming the importance of continuing the consideration by the Commission on Transnational Corporations of issues related to the activities of transnational banks,

Taking into account the linkage existing between the activities of transnational banks on the one hand, and the financial flow of resources to, and the external indebtedness of, the developing countries on the other,

Taking into account also the role of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in the context of the interrelatedness of the activities and policies of all relevant actors in the field of external indebtedness,

Taking into account further the contribution transnational banks can make to a solution of the external debt problems of developing countries and certain other countries with serious debt-servicing problems,

Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for submission to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its sixteenth session a report on the present and potential activities of transnational banks related to the external indebtedness of developing countries and certain other countries with serious debt-servicing problems, taking into account the recent proposals that emphasize, inter alia, reduction of the stock and service of commercial debt.

Centre on TNCs

In 1989, the UN Centre on TNCs continued to develop an information system, to conduct research and to carry out technical co-operation activities. It also acted as the secretariat to the Commission on TNCs and the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting.

The Secretary-General submitted a report on activities of the Centre and the joint units established with the regional commissions.⁽¹⁾ It summarized the Centre's work on securing an effective code of conduct and other international arrangements and agreements relating to TNCs. It also described the Centre's activities aimed at minimizing the negative effects of TNCs and enhancing their contribution to development, as well as strengthening the capacities of host developing countries in dealing with matters relating to TNCs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/21 without vote.

Activities of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations related to economic co-operation among developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3241(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 32/182 of 19 December 1977, 33/134 of 19 December 1978 and 39/216 of 18 December 1984 concerning economic co-operation among developing countries,

Reaffirming the important role that economic co-operation among developing countries can play in promoting the development of developing countries,

Recognizing the competence of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in the areas of transnational corporations in general and of joint ventures and other alternative and new forms of international economic co-operation among national corporations from different developing countries,

Encouraged by the fact that a sizeable portion of the foreign investment in the least developed among the developing countries is received from developing countries,

1. Affirms the need to enlarge the role of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in promoting new forms of economic co-operation among developing countries within its mandate and in technical co-operation and assistance for interested developing countries;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct a study of the experience of joint ventures among national corporations from different developing countries and their contribution to the development process in developing countries, including an analysis of the possibilities and potentialities offered in this field by regional economic integration and co-operation among developing countries;

3. Invites the Centre to explore the possibilities for further increasing the co-operation between the least developed countries and other developing countries in the field of foreign investment;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the study referred to in paragraph 2 above specific proposals on ways and means of promoting that form of co-operation and to report on the matter to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its sixteenth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/21

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/87) without vote, 19 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1989/28/Rev.1); agenda item 8.

Information system

The Centre has developed a system for the exchange of textual information and statistical data on TNCs and foreign direct investment. In response to the need for information on TNCs in developing countries, the Centre compiled a data-base on international standards to facilitate integration into national data-bases. Other activities to develop the information system included compiling statistics on foreign direct investment, economic and financial data on the world's largest TNCs in the manufacturing and extractive sectors and information on policies, laws and regulations. The Centre added to its collection of contracts and agreements negotiated between developing countries and TNCs, and provided information on information sources. It continued its work on a directory and data-base of the world's 500 largest service firms and began a feasibility study on creating a UN information dissemination system on hazardous technologies.

During the year, work continued on a manual on information needs and sources.⁽²⁾ Intended to meet the requirements of developing countries when making decisions on involving TNCs in their economies, the manual would address the kinds of information pertinent to the decision-making process, as well as the sources, tools and technologies useful in that process. The second part of the manual would concern information system development.

The Centre continued to respond to requests from government institutions for assistance in developing and refining national information systems on TNCs, with a view to increasing the effectiveness of those systems.

During 1989, requests from Governments, trade unions, business organizations, academic institutions and the media and public interest groups increased. The information system received 2,019 requests for which the responses required research, as well as an additional 2,415 short queries.

Joint units with regional commissions

Joint units of the Centre and the UN regional commissions continued to operate in 1989 in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Western Asia.⁽¹⁾

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) focused its efforts on research on TNCs within the context of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,⁽³⁾ emphasizing the role of foreign private investment in African development and the role of institutional mechanisms in promoting foreign direct investment. Studies were also conducted on the role of TNCs in the development of information technology in Africa and on regional co-operation in arrangements and agreements relating to foreign direct investment in the ECA region. The unit collected data on foreign direct investment and the main TNC operations in the African region for the directory to be issued by the Centre, and assisted in workshops and training programmes. A number of advisory missions were undertaken to selected countries to assess the role of TNCs in development financing in Africa, as well as to review the development of national information systems on TNCs, regional arrangements related to TNCs, and the role of TNCs in the development of information technology in Africa.

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) undertook research projects on international co-operation agreements and international take-overs/mergers, the establishment of Japanese TNCs in Europe, foreign direct investment and TNCs in services, and public development finance corporations as a means to enhance foreign direct investment in developing countries. The unit also assisted in seminars and meetings, represented the Centre in intergovernmental conferences held in Geneva, supported the European Documentation Centre on TNCs, and maintained liaison with other international organizations and governmental agencies in Europe.

The joint unit with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) researched the impact of TNCs in the trade of selected primary commodities in the ESCAP region and the subject of transnational technology towards the year 2000. The unit also conducted preparatory data collection and literature review for its project on TNCs and selected service industries of Asian and Pacific developing countries. During the year, an expert group meeting on environmental management of TNCs in pollution-intensive industries in the ESCAP region (Bangkok, Thailand, 10-12 May) and a workshop on transnational investments in Malaysia (Kuala Lumpur, 13-17 November) were organized. The unit also provided advisory services in China, Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Singapore.

The joint unit established with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean continued to help prepare the World TNC Yearbook by gathering information from national sources, developing a regional network of focal points, identifying methodologies and working definitions in each country, and supplementing local reports with additional information available to the unit. The first phase of the project, to be completed in 1990, would include 11 country reports (Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela). Research was undertaken on policy alternatives towards foreign investment, USSR-Latin American joint ventures, the impact of TNCs on industrial restructuring in Latin America and the Caribbean, transnational banks and national financing sectors, and transnational banks and the debt crisis.

The joint unit established with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) prepared a report on the status of the negotiations on the draft code of conduct relating to TNCs and other relevant regional and international agreements. It assisted in an intergovernmental meeting on trade in services and development in the ESCWA region (Baghdad, Iraq, 17-19 January) and a pan-arab intergovernmental meeting on UN efforts towards the international harmonization of accounting and reporting by TNCs (Baghdad, 19 and 20 November). The unit and the Centre co-sponsored a workshop, organized by ESCWA and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, on negotiating and contracting for the acquisition of technology, equipment and materials (Muscat, Oman, 18-28 October). A research project was begun on Arab petrochemicals and rising protectionism in the developed market economies, particularly the European Community, and would be completed during 1990 with the cooperation of the joint unit with ECE.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1989/26, requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report containing, inter alia, recommendations on alternative strategies to encourage TNCs to respond positively to improvements in the investment climate in Africa, thereby promoting economic growth and self-sustaining development, in accordance with the UN Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.

Research

In February, the Secretary-General issued a report⁽⁴⁾ on continuing and future research programmes of the Centre, focusing on the impact of new technologies on the activities of TNCs and the transfer of such technologies to developing countries. It stated that although new technologies could create many opportunities for developing countries, there were also potential problems. The principal areas likely to be affected by the new technologies were the competitiveness of exports of minerals, commodities and traditional processed products from developing countries; the structure and strategies of TNCs; the location of enterprises based on the utilization of new technologies; and employment and earnings as a result of the above factors. The report emphasized the need for constant review and re-evaluation of policies on TNCs and the transfer of new technologies to developing countries.

During 1989, the Centre published two issues of the CTC Reporter and four issues of Transnationals, a new quarterly newsletter.

In co-operation with the International Development Research Centre of Canada, a paper on small and medium-sized enterprises in foreign direct investment was prepared.

The Centre started a research project on intellectual property rights and foreign direct investment, particularly in relation to computer software, semiconductor layouts and data-bases. Another study, on the adverse effects of energy-producing and energy-consuming TNCs on global climate change, was also begun.

The Centre continued its research in response to a growing interest in services resulting from the progress of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, and published Transnational Service Corporations and Developing Countries: Impact and Policy Issues(5) and Transnational Corporation in the Construction and Design Engineering Industry(6)

In 1989,(1) host developing countries continued to seek the Centre's assistance in devising investment policies, structuring régimes for investments in specific sectors, and drafting model contracts and agreements in order to attract more appropriate investments and much-needed technologies.

During the year, the Centre completed or initiated 120 advisory and information projects, the majority of which concerned the formulation of foreign investment régimes and model contracts and agreements, and the streamlining of institutional mechanisms and administrative procedure for promoting and monitoring foreign investment. Of the Centre's projects, 30 were on general issues, 20 on hard-rock mining, 16 on tourism and other services, and 20 on petroleum. The rest dealt with such other issues as technology transfer, manufacturing, forestry, agriculture and fisheries. By region, 65 projects were in Africa, 42 in Asia and the Pacific and 13 in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Centre implemented 30 training projects, consisting of 20 workshops and 10 study tours and fellowships. Syllabuses in economics, business administration and law on TNCs developed by the Centre were used in a number of universities in Asia and the Pacific. The programme was introduced in Africa and would later be applied in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Countries that newly entered the foreign investment arena involved the Centre in their formulation of liberalized investment laws and regulations. Programmes were designed for seven countries to assist them in establishing legal, fiscal and financial régimes, and to develop the skills of public and private-sector officials in implementing them.

The Centre organized a seminar in the USSR to promote the understanding of accounting practices used in joint ventures and to identify areas for future training. It received a number of requests for assistance and began to set up a task force on the Nakhodka (Soviet Far East) zone of joint entrepreneurship.

The Centre initiated a programme for the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) to train ASEAN officials on financial policy and institutional management for better access to external resources from TNCs and transnational banks. Preparations were made for national studies on the financial systems of the ASEAN countries. The Centre also assisted the Pacific Forum secretariat in negotiating with a TNC on the establishment of a regional satellite telecommunications system.

With regard to natural resources, the Centre provided a number of developing countries with assistance in establishing an appropriate fiscal and legal framework for natural resource projects and in strengthening their capacity to handle negotiations with TNCs, particularly in the mining and petroleum sectors.

In a report(7) on experience gained in technical co-operation activities with respect to policies of developing countries for the acquisition of foreign technology, the Secretary-General described the evolution of technology policies, examined some factors that determined an appropriate technology policy, and analysed the critical issues relevant to licensing agreements between TNCs and local enterprises in host countries.

Financing

The Centre's technical co-operation programme continued to be financed mainly by extra-budgetary resources from the Centre's Trust Fund and from allocation from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).(1) Total extra-budgetary resources in 1989 amounted to $4,752,061. Contributions to the Trust Fund totalled $2,883,974. The Fund's opening balance was $1,845,222 and interest income amounted to $150,000. Resources made available by UNDP totalled $1,696,465. Total disbursements in 1989 amounted to $4,180,594, with workshops and other training activities accounting for $1,820,868 and advisory projects for $1,155,582.

Chapter VI

The development of natural resources, problems of energy resources, and cartographic issues continued to be dealt with by several UN bodies in 1989.

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration entered a new phase with its ongoing efforts to assist developing countries in the exploration and exploitation of their mineral and geothermal energy resources. The Economic and Social Council requested the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to outline a programme for the implementation of new techniques, including remote sensing, by which developing countries could enhance their technical capacity for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources (resolution 1989/9).

At its eleventh session, the Committee on Natural Resources considered the report of the Secretary-General on trends and salient issues in energy resources. By resolution 1989/5, the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to conduct studies on prospects for small-scale mining and to explore ways and means of strengthening technical co-operation and possible sources of financing for small-scale mining initiatives.

In May, the Economic and Social Council called for an outline for a programme on energy-saving devices to overcome the lack of electrical power in developing countries (1989/6).

Concerns for the diminishing stock of the world's scarce water resources continued to engage the attention of the United Nations and its related bodies. The Council (1989/7) requested the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on strategies and measures to continue implementation of the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan on the development and conservation of water resources.

In October, the General Assembly affirmed its confidence in the role of the International Atomic Energy Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes (44/13). All nations were urged to strive for effective and harmonious international co-operation in carrying out the work of the Agency and to ensure the effectiveness and efficiency of the Agency's safeguards system for nuclear installations.

UN work in the area of cartography continued in 1989. The Fourth UN Regional Conference for the Americas was held in New York in January. The UN Group of Experts on Geographical Names met in Geneva in May.

Natural resources

Committee on Natural Resources

The Committee on Natural Resources, at its eleventh session (New York, 27 March-5 April 1989),(1) discussed mineral, water and energy resources; new techniques for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources; activities of the UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration; permanent sovereignty over natural resources; co-ordination of programmes within the UN system; and programme questions. The Committee recommended eight draft resolutions and one draft decision for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. It also decided(2) to include in its 1990 agenda an item entitled "Disaster prevention and mitigation in developing and utilizing natural resources".

On 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/117, noted the Committee's report, approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1990 session, and decided that priority should be given to the question of energy resources.

Exploration

UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

In 1989, the UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration continued to assist developing countries in natural resources exploration and development. It also pursued the two long-term goals of more equitable geographic distribution of its projects and greater diversity in the type of minerals being sought.(3)

The Fund signed its first replenishment agreement with the Government of the Philippines, covering deposits of metallurgical chromite ore on the island of Dinagat. The deposits, an estimated 2 million tons with a potential ground value as high as $200 million, were to be extracted by small-scale miners under licence from the Government. The Fund completed a gold exploration operation in Peru which identified 250 million cubic metres of gold-bearing gravel. In Honduras, drilling in the Yuscarán area was completed, confirming the existence of gold and silver deposits with an estimated value of $150 million. Another drilling programme was completed in Ghana, and a report was being prepared on the feasibility of extensions to dormant gold-mines.

New projects began during the year. A pyrophyllite project was started in Fujian Province, China, with financial support from Italy; in Bolivia, a gold exploration project was initiated.

The Fund also negotiated for heavy mineral exploration in Sri Lanka, for gold drilling in the United Republic of Tanzania and in Zimbabwe, and for chromite exploration in Madagascar. El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras agreed to seek financing for Fund mineral projects in the Trifinio region, which incorporates part of each of the three countries.

In the field of geothermal energy, the Fund submitted a final report for its first geothermal project in St. Lucia and continued to assist the Government in attracting investment for it. Work on geothermal exploration continued in China and in Nicaragua.

UNDP action. On 30 June 1989, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) took note(4) of the Administrator's report on Fund activities for 1987-1988.(5) It noted his approval of supplementary short-term financing for the geothermal exploration project in St. Lucia, and approved exploration for pyrophyllite in China, chromite in the Philippines, and precious and base metals in Guatemala. The Administrator was asked to explore alternative ways of securing the Fund's activities, in view of the continuing low levels of financial contributions.

Financing

In 1989, Fund project expenditures totalled $1.2 million, compared to $6.9 million in 1988. Total income was $3.5 million, including voluntary contributions of $2.5 million from seven Governments. At year's end, the Fund's balance stood at $4.5 million.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/9 without vote.

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3167(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1762(LIV) of 18 May 1973, concerning the establishment of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 33/194 of 29 January 1979 on multilateral development assistance for the exploration of natural resources,

Recognising the important role of the Fund in providing assistance to developing countries in the development of their natural resources,

Recognising also the need for the developing countries to enhance their technical capacity for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources,

Noting the low level of the general financial resources of the Fund, and the consequent limitations on its ability to fulfil its mandate,

1. Notes with appreciation the achievements of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration and its ongoing efforts to assist developing countries in the exploration of their mineral and geothermal energy resources;

2. Welcomes the further efforts made by the Fund to promote pre-investment follow-up of successful mineral discoveries, in close co-operation with recipient Governments;

3. Notes the interest shown by an increasing number of Governments in co-financing specific projects of the Fund;

4. Notes also the efforts of the Fund to expand the geographical distribution of its projects and to promote exploration for a greater variety of minerals;

5. Requests that projects implemented by the Fund incorporate, where appropriate and within the existing mandate of the Fund, new techniques, including remote sensing, and provide appropriate opportunities by which developing countries can enhance their technical capacity for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources;

6. Requests the Fund to expand the use of locally available goods and services in the implementation of its projects;

7. Recognizes the urgent need to increase financial support for the Fund by means of voluntary contributions so that it may continue to fulfil its mandate;

8. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/9

22 May 1989 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/86) without vote, 17 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1989/26); agenda item 7.

On 28 July, the Council, by decision 1989/189, took note of the report of the Administrator on the Fund's activities for 1987-1988.

New techniques for exploration and assessment

In 1989, at its eleventh session,(1) the Committee on Natural Resources considered new techniques for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources. It had before it a report(6) of the Secretary-General on the feasibility of establishing an information referral system on satellite remote-sensing data.

The report described the major sources of satellite remote-sensing data and discussed selected existing commercial satellite remote-sensing referral systems that provide data on global coverage.

Due to financial constraints, an alternative to the establishment of an information referral system within the Secretariat was proposed, by which existing data banks and referral systems would be used, with the United Nations performing a clearing-house function.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/8 without vote.

New techniques, including remote sensing, for identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/65 of 3 December 1986 on principles relating to remote sensing of the Earth from outer space,

Recalling also its resolution 1987/9 of 26 May 1987,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on an information referral system on satellite remote-sensing data,

Considering that developing countries need to be apprised of the limitations and opportunities of commercial and non-commercial hardware and software systems for digital processing of remote-sensing data and of procedures for obtaining access to such systems,

Bearing in mind the important role of remote-sensing data in the process of identifying, exploring for and assessing natural resources,

Recognizing the need for developing countries to have access to the information obtained by remote sensing in order to optimize the utilization of their natural resources,

1. Takes note of the two options proposed in the report of the Secretary-General and requests the Secretary-General to submit an updated version of that report to the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session;

2. Calls upon the developed countries to expand the sharing of their technical capacity in remote sensing with the developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to explore appropriate ways and means by which the developing countries can gain easier and increased access to remote-sensing systems in order to optimize the exploration and exploitation of their natural resources;

4. Calls upon the developed countries to contribute to the efforts of the Secretary-General aimed at identifying approaches and modalities that would facilitate the transfer of new and emerging remote-sensing technologies to the developing countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, within existing resources, in the dissemination of available remote-sensing software packages, in both the commercial and the public sectors, for the exploration, exploitation, management and development of natural resources through application-oriented workshops, seminars and training courses to be organized at the regional or the country level in developing countries;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/8

22 May 1989 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1969/86) without vote, 17 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1989/26); agenda item 7.

Application of microcomputers

In response to a 1987 Economic and Social Council request,(7) the Secretary-General reported(8) to the Committee on Natural Resources on the application of microcomputer technology to resource development in developing countries. He reviewed new techniques and innovations, recent activities of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), and activities of other UN organizations in the energy and natural resources sectors. DTCD had embarked on the establishment of a microcomputer software reference library, which was to contain software developed for the natural resource sectors relating to energy, minerals and water.

The Secretary-General emphasized, in the light of the importance of microcomputer-based information systems for the planning and development of energy, mineral and water resources, the need for seminars and workshops for the training of developing country nationals.

In a report(9) submitted in accordance with a 1987 request(10) by the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General discussed developments related to the exercise of permanent sovereignty over natural resources, particularly in the non-fuel minerals industry. The report considered the relationship between mineral-producing developing countries and the international economic system. It also reviewed public-sector activities in mineral and petroleum development; mineral development policy and permanent sovereignty; the relationship of mineral financing and national debt; mineral taxation; and developments in the hydrocarbon sector, including natural gas exploitation and cross-border petroleum development.

The ability of mineral-producing countries to sell commodities in an open world market had been hampered by such measures as tariffs, non-tariff trade barriers, production subsidies which distorted or restricted trade, and government regulations protecting domestic mineral production at prices far above competitive world market prices. The report concluded that resource protectionism and distortion of free trade were in the interest of neither producing nor consuming countries, and that free access to consuming markets was a condition for the success of mineral development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/10 without vote.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/12 of 26 May 1987,

Recognizing the problems that the present international economic situation causes all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Noting that it is important for all countries, in particular the developing countries, to make optimum economic use of their natural resources in order to strengthen their economic development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on permanent sovereignty over natural resources,

Taking into account the work done by other organs and organizations of the United Nations system regarding permanent sovereignty over natural resources,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the principle of permanent sovereignty over natural resources;

2. Also reaffirms the importance of the ongoing work of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on a code of conduct on transnational corporations, as it relates to natural resources;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session a concise, updated report on permanent sovereignty over natural resources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/10

22 May 1989 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/86) without vote, 17 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1989/26); agenda item 7.

Mineral resources

In 1989, total delivery for mineral resources projects executed by DTCD was $15.2 million, up from $12.5 million in 1988,⁽¹¹⁾ with most expenditures in Africa and Asia. DTCD conducted 120 advisory missions; requests for advisory services were mainly in mineral sector planning, programming, mineral exploration and processing, organizational strengthening, investment promotion and fields requiring highly specialized expertise.

Two seminars took place in 1989. A seminar held in co-operation with the International Chamber of Commerce of Minas Gerais and with UNDP support (Belo Horizonte, Brazil, 28-29 September) trained executives in joint-ventures negotiations under new legislation, while an interregional seminar (Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire, 11-15 December) addressed the mining exploration and investment potential of West Africa and was organized by DTCD and the Ministry of Mines of Côte d'Ivoire with UNDP support.

In a report⁽¹²⁾ on mineral resources, the Secretary-General discussed trends in the international mineral sector, in particular consumption, trade and supply patterns, stocks and prices, short-term prospects for metal markets, technology and long-term consumption trends, new cost-saving technologies, and development of non-metallic minerals. He concluded that the current high prices for major metals and continuing fluctuations of mineral commodity prices were likely to induce consuming sectors to seek alternatives to raw metallic materials. The mining industry, Governments and companies would be well advised to strengthen efforts to develop new applications and make natural raw materials more efficient in current applications. Market development activities would also be necessary in other sectors, in particular copper, lead, zinc and tin, if more substitution of metals was to be avoided.

In another report,⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General discussed small-scale mining prospects in developing countries. These types of operations included artisanal mining, involving individuals, families and ad hoc groups; co-operatives; and partly mechanized, centrally managed quarrying and mining activities with limited technical and managerial know-how. The report described the growing interest in small-scale mining; its significance and characteristics; socio-economic conditions and national policies; and technical co-operation activities of DTCD.

The report stated that problems of small-scale mining—including a lack of technical and managerial expertise and mechanized equipment, an uncertain legal environment, social hardships and difficult access to markets—must be dealt with at the national level. It suggested such measures as the creation of legal, fiscal and administrative conditions favourable to an active small-scale mining sector; introduction and maintenance of a reasonable foreign exchange régime combined with easy access to marketing channels; and realistic pricing of mineral products in accordance with world market conditions. Noting a need for regional and international programmes to assist developing countries, it also suggested, as possible future activities of DTCD, basic data gathering and dissemination of information; formulation of policies and legislation; human resources development; technical advice; and the supply of essential equipment.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/5 without vote.

Trends and salient issues in the development of mineral resources, especially small-scale mining

Recalling its resolutions 1985/47 of 25 July 1985 and 1987/8 of 26 May 1987, in which the effective contribution of small-scale mining to the economic and social development of some countries was recognized, in particular as a source of employment and regional development,

Considering that small-scale mines are often characterized by high labour intensity and low labour productivity and that working conditions are often hazardous and related legal protection is often inadequate,

Noting that the International Labour Organisation will hold the Fifth Tripartite Technical Meeting for Mines

Other than Coal Mines at Geneva in 1990, at which labour and social issues in the sector will be discussed,

Aware of the need to balance small-scale mining operations with the improvement of social working conditions and benefits and the consideration of health hazards and safety,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on small-scale mining prospects in developing countries and on trends and salient issues in mineral resources;

2. Recommends that in the elaboration of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, in regard to issues relating to mineral resources, special attention should be given to training in the development of new approaches, including methods, in small-scale mining, in accordance with national development plans and priorities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to conduct studies on prospects for small-scale mining, to evaluate the experience gained through technical co-operation endeavours and to explore ways and means of strengthening technical co-operation and possible sources of financing for small-scale mining initiatives;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the assistance of the United Nations system in providing adequate facilities for seminars and symposia, to promote local dissemination of information on small-scale mining and to establish policies and programmes, according to the priorities of Member States, for the support and promotion of small-scale mining projects;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session an updated report on trends and salient issues in the development of mineral resources, especially small-scale mining, including the outcome of the Fifth Tripartite Technical Meeting for Mines Other than Coal Mines, to be convened by the International Labour Organisation at Geneva in 1990, particularly with regard to issues relating to working conditions and occupational safety and health hazards in small-scale mining.

Implementation of the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan

In 1989, the Committee on Natural Resources considered the Secretary-General's report(14) on improved efficiency in the management of water resources and developments in co-operative action in the field of shared water resources, as well as his report(15) on progress achieved and problems foreseen in the implementation by Governments of the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan.(16)

The first report presented the views of 28 Governments in response to the report of the Interregional Symposium on Improved Efficiency in the Management of Water Resources: Follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan.(17) The major problems identified were a lack of financial resources and insufficient trained manpower. The improvement of water quality was cited as a primary goal. The report found that since the adoption of the Action Plan, more emphasis had been placed on legislation, institution-building, human resources, training and community participation. As for co-operative action in shared water resources, the report discussed the exchange of data and information on meteorological, hydrological and climatological phenomena; common efforts against land degradation, desertification and floods; and prevention and control of transboundary pollution of water. Significant progress was noted in the development of data bases, data exchange, flood and erosion alleviation studies and measures, and prevention and control of transboundary pollution.

The second report reviewed progress in implementation of the Action Plan by region, and considered the formulation of a strategy for the 1990s. It expressed concern over the serious situation regarding water resources assessment, drinking-water supply and sanitation, agriculture, urban growth and pollution, water management and legislation, and financing of water resources development. As demand grew, efficient water use became more necessary. It concluded that these issues needed to be worked out in more detail for the implementation of the Action Plan.

In March, a panel of experts, financed by UNDP and hosted by the World Health Organization, met (Challes Les Eaux, France, 8-10 March) to formulate a strategy. It recommended the establishment of benchmarks against which progress could be gauged, and that assessments should take into account the principles of sustainable development and the effects of population dynamics. Other areas recommended for particular attention were water resources assessment and management, mobilization of financial resources, water resources technology and human resources management.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/7 without vote.

Water resources and progress in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan

Recalling General Assembly resolution 32/158 of 19 December 1977,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 34/191 of 18 December 1979, in which the Assembly requested the Committee on Natural Resources to review during the 1980s the progress made by Governments in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan and provide guidance to the supporting water-related activities undertaken by the organizations of the United Nations system,

Recalling further its resolutions 1979/67, 1979/68 and 1979/70 of 3 August 1979, 1981/80 and 1981/81 of 24 July

1981, 1983/57 of 28 July 1983, 1985/49 of 25 July 1985 and 1987/7 of 26 May 1987 concerning the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Aware that some of the major obstacles confronting developing countries in their endeavours to implement the Mar del Plata Action Plan are lack of financial and technical resources and insufficient expertise in water resources management,

Considering the need to give high priority to strengthening the capacity of the developing countries to assess their water resources through the collection, analysis and dissemination of hydrological and hydrogeological data,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on improved efficiency in the management of water resources and developments in co-operative action in the field of shared water resources and on progress achieved and foreseen in the implementation by Governments of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Bearing in mind the oral report on the work of the panel of experts, carried out under the auspices of the United Nations Development Programme in March 1989, regarding issues to be incorporated in the proposals for a comprehensive strategy to implement the Mar del Plata Action Plan, made before the Committee on Natural Resources at its 204th meeting, on 30 March 1989, by the representative of the United Nations Secretariat,

1. Expresses its deep concern regarding the obstacles that make it difficult for the developing countries to prevent natural disasters, such as flooding, which endanger the lives of a large number of their inhabitants and have negative effects on the process of development, especially of agriculture;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on improved efficiency in the management of water resources and developments in co-operative action in the field of shared water resources, part one of which contains the views of Governments on the report of the Interregional Symposium on Improved Efficiency in the Management of Water Resources: Follow-up to the Mar del Plata Action Plan, held in New York from 5 to 9 January 1987, and includes possible solutions to the problems facing countries, particularly developing countries, in dealing with water resources management;

3. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system to intensify their efforts and increase their activities in water resources management, including recycling of waste water, with a view to strengthening the capacities of developing countries in water resources development through, inter alia, the assessment, analysis and dissemination of hydrological and hydrogeological data;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session a comprehensive report on strategies and measures necessary for the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan, as requested in Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/7.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/7

22 May 1989 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/86) without vote, 17 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1989/26); agenda item 7.

Inter-agency co-ordination

The Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), at its tenth session (New York, 25-27 October),⁽¹⁸⁾ discussed progress on a proposed strategy to implement the Mar del Plata Action Plan in the 1990s. Other topics considered included the water situation in Africa; collection and dissemination of hydrogeological information by UN organizations; issues pertaining to the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990)⁽¹⁹⁾ and environmental aspects of water resources.

In 1989, water resources projects executed by DTCD were valued at $24.2 million, as compared to $19.2 million in 1988.⁽¹¹⁾ UNDP financed 117 projects, and 35 interregional advisory missions were sponsored under the UN Regular Programme for Technical Co-operation, covering fields such as water legislation, water-well drilling, computerized data management and hydrogeology.

DTCD's activities concentrated on improving rural water-supply conditions through exploration and development of ground water, maintaining reserve water points for emergency use in water-short areas of developing countries, and strengthening water resources planning at the national and river basin levels. In the area of water supply, the earlier concentration on borehole drilling had evolved to broader water resources planning and management, including training, operation and maintenance, and monitoring.

Due to an increasing demand for the transfer of high technology, DTCD was developing computer software and holding training seminars and workshops. Computers were used in almost all DTCD water projects, which involved storing and analysing data on such factors as rainfall, run-off river flows, lake levels and aquifer characteristics, as well as for modelling. For Bermuda and Nepal, DTCD was developing hydrogeological software consisting of 10 packages and programs sufficient for most normal hydrogeological studies.

Some projects aimed to preserve the environment in parallel with water resources development. In Brazil, a project was under way to restore polluted Lake Paranao, both by reducing the pollution load from the city of Brasilia and by studying inexpensive pollution control methods. In Qatar, the relationship between overpumping and sea-water intrusion into ground-water aquifers was examined.

During the year, DTCD convened four interregional seminars on various subjects: water resources management techniques for small island countries (Suva, Fiji, 26 June-1 July); water quality management in developing countries (Warsaw, Poland, 18-22 September); water resources planning and management in arid areas (Tashkent, USSR, 17-25 October); and water resources management in drought-prone areas (New Delhi, India, 27 November-1 December).

Co-ordination of UN activities

In a report(20) to the Committee on Natural Resources, the Secretary-General presented an overview of the objectives, priorities and activities of the UN system for the biennium 1988-1989 in water, mineral and energy resources. The review showed that the activities had been carried out in accordance with the guidelines established by the Committee and elaborated upon in the Mar del Plata Action Plan(16) and in the Nairobi Programme of Action on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy.(21) No duplication was revealed in the activities of the various units, but it was suggested that further consideration should be given to strengthening the co-ordination of the activities in minerals and energy resources, particularly at the programming stage. Co-ordination of activities was facilitated by the Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources and the Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, both of the ACC, in their respective fields.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/12 without vote.

Co-ordination of programmes within the United Nations system in the field of natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations system in water, mineral and energy resources,

Bearing in mind the broad range of activities proposed for the United Nations in preparation of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997,

Convinced of the need to increase the effectiveness and relevance of the work of the United Nations system,

Concerned that the documentation relating to the co-ordination of programmes within the United Nations system in the field of natural resources, prepared for the eleventh session of the Committee on Natural Resources, was not provided sufficiently in advance of the session to allow the Committee to give guidance on the programming and implementation of activities in the United Nations system for the development of natural resources, as called for in its terms of reference,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session an updated report containing an overview of the activities of the United Nations system in water, mineral and energy resources, identifying the organizations or units within the United Nations system mandated to carry out work in those fields and assessing the extent to which the guidelines provided by the Committee have been followed;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to implement fully the measures to improve the work of the Committee identified at its tenth session, and to submit documentation at least three months in advance of the Committee's sessions;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to identify, in the report referred to in paragraph 1 above, the existing priorities and objectives for the work of the United Nations system in the field of natural resources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/12

22 May 1989 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/86) without vote, 17 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1989/26); agenda item 7.

Also on 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/11 without vote.

Impact of financial constraints on the development, conservation and maintenance of the natural resources and related infrastructure in developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing that the financial constraints facing developing countries have reduced their ability to develop, conserve and maintain their natural resources and related infrastructures,

Bearing in mind the detrimental consequences of those problems, which have affected the long-term development prospects of developing countries,

Calls upon the Secretary-General to include in the report requested in paragraph 1 of Council resolution 1989/12 a section on the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system relating to the impact of financial constraints on developing countries in the development, conservation and maintenance of their natural resources.

Energy

Energy resources development

In 1989, the Committee on Natural Resources had before it a report(1) by the Secretary-General on salient issues in energy resources.

It described trends in the institutional and technological underpinnings of the energy market, including reintegration in the oil industry, movement towards a single European energy market, new electric power technology and advances in super-conductive materials. Energy supply and demand scenarios for the remainder of the century were given separately for developed market economies, developing countries and centrally planned economies.

The report concluded that vigorous policy measures to enhance energy efficiency and spur energy production in forms appropriate to specific locales could not only favourably shape the evolution of the energy sector but also augment the rate of economic growth over the rest of the century.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/6 without vote.

Development of energy resources and efficient use of energy production and utilization infrastructures

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/208 of 17 December 1985 on the development of the energy resources of developing countries,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 43/193 of 20 December 1988, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to outline a programme of action aimed at accelerating the exploration and development of the energy resources of developing countries,

Recalling further its resolution 1987/10 of 26 May 1987 on the application of microcomputer technology in the assessment and development of natural resources and energy,

Considering that the Committee on Natural Resources at its tenth and eleventh sessions focused on water and mineral resources, respectively, and that the practice of giving priority consideration to a particular subject at each session has improved the work of the Committee,

1. Decides that the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session shall give priority consideration to energy resources, emphasizing the need to intensify technical co-operation programmes aimed at the exploration, development and efficient utilization of the energy resources of the developing countries, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee at that session a report on the question of technical co-operation programmes in energy resources;

2. Reaffirms the need for the United Nations system to intensify its efforts to promote the international exchange of experience and knowledge and the flow of efficient technologies, especially new and emerging ones and particularly to developing countries, for use in the exploration and exploitation of energy resources, and to pursue actively the establishment of computer-based national information systems on energy technologies and projects, as well as other information for energy policy analysis and energy sector management;

3. welcome the report of the Secretary-General on trends and salient issues in energy resources and requests him to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session a report on trends and salient issues in energy, including the potential of development and utilization of the natural gas, heavy crude, tar sand, oil shale and geothermal resources available in the developing countries, as well as prospects for subregional, regional and interregional co-operation in that area;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee on Natural Resources at its twelfth session a report on energy-saving strategies and measures to improve the efficient utilization of the electricity system, on power-loss reduction and on the upgrading of electricity generation plants, including the level of investment required, as well as other possible options, such as small hydropower stations, to overcome the lack of electrical power in the developing countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/6

22 May 1989 Meeting 12 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/86) without vote, 17 May (meeting 7); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1989/26); agenda item 7.

Technical co-operation

During 1989,(2) DTCD undertook 33 advisory missions, which provided advice on energy policy, resource evaluation and exploration and project design. Feasibility studies were also conducted, in the areas of petroleum, coal, natural gas, electric power, energy planning and conservation, geothermal, solar, wind and multi-source renewable energy packages, computerized data banks and microcomputer-based energy analysis.

Under an interregional project executed in co-operation with the Latin American Energy Organization (OLADE), a training centre equipped with microcomputers, projection systems and course material in Spanish, English and French was established. Several DTCD projects aimed at reducing environmental problems in developing countries, such as geothermal fluid production in Bolivia and China (Tibet); reduction of power losses in Bangladesh; and the efficiency of industrial, transport and residential/commercial sector operations in India, Peru and Zambia. Other projects assisted energy-deficient countries in developing indigenous energy sources. New petroleum development technologies were introduced in China, and pilot programmes were designed for the application in India of enhanced oil recovery techniques.

Under the DTCD global large-scale power plant modernization and rehabilitation programme, projects were under way in Angola, China, Guinea-Bissau and Viet Nam.

Meetings were held to explore new fields of technical co-operation in developing countries, namely petroleum geology and geochemistry (Kiev, Ukrainian SSR, 31 May-6 June); power plant operation, maintenance, rehabilitation and distribution in the Arab region (Amman, Jordan, 3-8 June); wind energy (Roskilde, Denmark, 20-27 August); energy conservation (Stockholm, Sweden, 3-9 September); policy and management of petroleum resources (Oslo, Norway, 25-30 September); solar energy applications (Lanshou, China, 23-29 October); and a marine engineering geological survey for petroleum exploration (Guangzhou, China, 30 November-6 December).

New and renewable energy sources

The ACC Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, at its eighth session (Geneva, 9 and 10 March),⁽³⁾ considered the follow-up to the Castel Gandolfo Colloquium of High-level Experts on New and Renewable Sources of Energy. ⁽⁴⁾ It also analysed the report of the fourth (1988) session of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy.⁽⁵⁾ Individual entities of the Group presented their current and planned activities. The Group affirmed the need to look at new and renewable sources of energy in relation to the environment and sustainable development, and also agreed that women's needs should be taken into account and their full participation assured in the planning and implementation of projects.

As a follow-up to proposals made at the Castel Gandolfo Colloquium, the first meeting of the Consultative Group of High-level Experts on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (Rome, 27 and 28 April) provided guidance regarding the feasibility of an international network of research centres in this field. Types of mission and suitable geographical locations for the centres, as well as the networking scheme, were discussed. It was agreed that three or four centres should act as focal points for the creation of networks; Group members would verify, with their respective Governments, their willingness to undertake start-up actions to create the first centres.

IAEA report

Total installed nuclear-power-generating capacity in the world amounted to 318 gigawatts in 1989. Nuclear power plants accounted for about 16.8 per cent of the world's electricity generation. During the year, 12 nuclear power plants came on line, in the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Japan, the Republic of Korea, Mexico, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, bringing the world's total number of operating reactors to 426. In addition, construction began on five reactors in Japan, the Republic of Korea and the USSR.

In August, the Secretary-General transmitted⁽⁶⁾ to the General Assembly the 1988 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).⁽⁷⁾ In presenting an update of the report to the General Assembly on 25 October,⁽⁸⁾ the IAEA

Director General discussed Agency work in such areas as nuclear safeguards (see PART ONE, Chapter II) and nuclear power and the environment. He expressed optimism that the risks associated with nuclear energy could be reduced. Although the advent of nuclear power had been greeted by unbounded optimism and was followed by rapid expansion, the pace of construction had levelled off. He noted that the World Commission on Environment and Development⁽⁹⁾ had recognized the need for energy to achieve growth, but had expressed concern over both the severe damage inflicted on the environment by the use of fossil fuels and questions of nuclear waste, accidents and proliferation.

The Director General also said that, as the UN system did not have any agency that covered all energy systems, the IAEA was co-operating with other international organizations, including UNEP, the World Health Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the World Bank, OECD and the World Energy Conference, in arranging a symposium in which senior experts would examine the consequences for life, health and the environment of different ways of generating electricity.

In 1989, IAEA organized two regional workshops, in China and in Cyprus, to promote the exchange of experience in the use of IAEA methodologies for energy, electricity and nuclear power planning. Agency support was provided to Iran in the review of its Bushehr nuclear power project, and to Romania in the preparation of commissioning procedures for a reactor cooling system. An advisory mission to Indonesia assisted its National Atomic Energy Agency in drawing up terms of reference for a feasibility study on the introduction of nuclear power plants. Quality assurance assistance was provided through 15 technical co-operation projects. The Agency also completed the preparatory work for establishing a regional co-operative agreement for Member States in Africa.

IAEA also participated in the work of the Inter-governmental Panel on Climate Change, providing factual information on the potential role of nuclear power in avoiding carbon dioxide emissions and on issues of nuclear safety. (See PART SEVEN, Chapter I, for further information on activities of IAEA.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/13 without vote.

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency
The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1988,

Taking note of the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 25 October 1989, which provides additional information on the main developments in the Agency's activities during 1989,

Recognising the importance of the work of the Agency to promote further the application of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, as envisaged in its statute,

Also recognizing the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance by the Agency in order to benefit effectively from the application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes as well as from the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development,

Conscious of the importance of the work of the Agency in the implementation of safeguards provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to achieve similar objectives, as well as in ensuring, as far as it is able, that the assistance provided by the Agency or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purpose, as stated in article II of its statute,

Further recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency on nuclear power, nuclear safety, radiological protection and radioactive waste management, including its work directed towards assisting developing countries in planning for the introduction of nuclear power in accordance with their needs,

Again stressing the need for the highest standards of safety in the design and operation of nuclear plants so as to minimize risks to life, health and the environment,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Agency on its programme activities with a view to achieving the objectives of sustainable and environmentally sound development,

Noting that the General Conference of the Agency at its thirty-third regular session approved the reappointment by the Board of Governors of the Agency of Mr. Hans Blix as Director General of the Agency for a further term of four years, commencing on 1 December 1989,

Bearing in mind resolutions GC(XXXIII)/RES/506 on Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat, GC(XXXIII)/RES/508 on measures to strengthen international co-operation in matters relating to nuclear safety and radiological protection, GC(XXXIII)/RES/509 on dumping of nuclear wastes, GC(XXXIII)/RES/510 on the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, GC(XXXIII)/RES/511 on the Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency, GC(XXXIII)/RES/515 on the plan for the production of low-cost potable water and GC(XXXIII)/RES/524 on South Africa's nuclear capabilities, adopted on 29 September 1989 by the General Conference of the Agency at its thirty-third regular session,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Affirms its confidence in the role of the Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

3. Urges all States to strive for effective and harmonious international co-operation in carrying out the work of the Agency, pursuant to its statute; in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of the necessary measures to strengthen further the safety of nuclear installations and to minimize risks to life, health and the environment; in strengthening technical assistance and co-operation for developing countries; and in ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the Agency's safeguards system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly relating to the Agency's activities.

Conventions

Following the nuclear power plant disaster at Chernobyl, Ukrainian SSR, in April 1986, two international conventions were adopted in September of the same year by the IAEA General Conference: one on early notification of a nuclear accident, and the second on assistance in the case of a nuclear accident or radiological emergency.⁽¹⁰⁾ The question of UN accession to these instruments was considered in 1987⁽¹¹⁾ and again in 1988.⁽¹²⁾ On 22 December 1989, by decision 44/452, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, deferred action on the question.

Cartography

During 1989, UN projects in cartography in developing countries continued. Technical co-operation projects addressed institution-building, transfer of technical expertise to national cartographic and hydrographic institutions and provision of training and equipment. Fellowships and grants were awarded to candidates from all regions for studies in data processing, photogrammetry, cartography and map compilation, cadastral and land information systems, geographical information systems, integrated digital mapping, geodetic science, map reproduction and map printing.

Fourth UN Regional

Cartographic Conference for the Americas

the value of holding such conferences in the region and called for a more active involvement of the countries concerned. The latest technology in cartographic data gathering and processing was also reviewed, with special emphasis on potential applications in developing countries. Other topics included the latest developments related to policies and management of national mapping and charting programmes, matters of technical assistance, transfer of appropriate and affordable technology, and future UN regional cartographic conferences. Among the 17 resolutions adopted by the Conference were those concerning technical assistance related to national mapping standards; geographical names of undersea features; training courses in toponymy; hydrographic surveying and nautical charting; development of a world-wide digital cartographic data base; remote sensing for cartography; and the Fifth United Nations Cartographic Conference for the Americas.

On 22 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/116, noted the Secretary-General's report on the Conference and endorsed the recommendation to convene the Fifth Conference in 1993. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to take measures, where appropriate, to implement the other recommendations made by the Conference.

Standardization of geographical names

In 1989, the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names, at its fourteenth session (Geneva, 17-26 May), considered progress in the standardization of geographical names since its thirteenth session the previous year. The Group reviewed the latest technology related to the standardization of geographical names and its relationship to policy, economy and development in the fields of cartographic data acquisition, manipulation and depiction. It also considered matters of technical assistance and transfer of technology in these areas.

Chapter VII

Science and technology

The year 1989 marked the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, the cornerstone of United Nations activities in that field. An end-of-decade review provided an opportunity for UN bodies dealing with science and technology issues to evaluate progress made through the Vienna Programme of Action and suggest improvements. The General Assembly reaffirmed the Programme's basic goals and validity and expressed concern regarding its implementation.

The activities of UN bodies concerned with science and technology continued to focus on strengthening the scientific and technological activities of developing countries, mobilizing financial resources and upgrading institutional arrangements. The UN Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued to make policy recommendations for action. The Assembly called on UN organizations to devote increased attention to national capacity-building in science and technology and entrusted the Centre, through the Advance Technology Alert System, to serve as the focal point for technological assessment within the UN system.

The Assembly recommended that the UN Fund for Science and Technology for Development give priority to pilot projects on the endogenous capacity-building of developing countries, activities related to new and emerging areas of science and technology, and projects aimed at fostering co-operation among developing countries. It also called upon the Fund and other UN organizations to enhance co-ordination and harmonization at the country level.

Consultations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology continued. The Assembly invited the Secretary-General of the UN Conference on Trade and Development to submit a complete report on the outcome of those consultations.

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the main directing and policy-making body for that area, held its tenth session in August/September, focusing on the end-of-decade review of the Vienna Programme of Action. The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, which provides policy and planning advice to the Intergovernmental Committee, held its eighth session in September.

Implementation of the Vienna Programme

The year marked the tenth anniversary of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, adopted in August 1979.⁽¹⁾ Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ the tenth session of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development was devoted to the substantive theme of the end-of-decade review of the Programme.

Strengthening capacities of developing countries

In 1989, the Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued to manage a series of pilot projects, originally launched in 1987, to assist developing countries in developing endogenous capacity in science and technology.⁽³⁾ Dialogue meetings were held in Nepal and Jordan, the first two countries to undertake such projects. Other projects were slated for the United Republic of Tanzania, as well as for another African country where the impact of simple technologies on women in rural areas was to be assessed.

In April,⁽⁴⁾ the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) stated that the emphasis in this area might in the future be placed on promoting endogenous capacity-building through involving all segments of society concerned with the development process in order to identify prioritized activities in science and technology. Emphasis should also be placed on assistance to Member States in developing their technology assessment capacity to enable them to evolve policy issues and options in technological development, and enhancing the collective contribution of the UN system to endogenous capacity-building of developing countries through technical co-operation activities, including joint inter-agency missions. ACC recognized that the future focus of the UN system could be on emerging science and technologies and on medium- and small-scale industries.

Drought and desertification

On the basis of the Intergovernmental Committee recommendations made in 1987,⁽⁵⁾ the Centre for Science and Technology for Development was to organize, in Lanzhou, China, an international seminar on desertification processes of contiguous areas: science and technology policy issues and options. The Centre reported that while understanding of drought and desertification had been greatly enhanced, the individual situations in affected countries did not seem to have improved much.(3) The problem seemed to lie in the fact that past approaches addressed global conditions; what was needed now was development of an interdisciplinary approach more specific to variable local conditions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/14 B without vote.

Endogenous capacity-building in science and technology

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant parts of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development.

Stressing that the endogenous capacity of developing countries in science and technology lies, inter alia, in their capacity to choose, acquire, adapt, utilize and innovate technologies, including new ones, through institutional mechanisms for technology assessment in the areas of priority action,

Emphasizing that the building by developing countries of endogenous capacity for science and technology is of major concern to the United Nations system,

Recalling also resolutions 4(VIII) of 6 June 1986 and 1(IX) of 7 August 1987 of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, in which the Committee recommended that the Centre for Science and Technology for Development of the Secretariat should carry out studies on helping interested Member States to identify priority activities in science and technology for development, in accordance with national development plans and objectives, so as to lead to the strengthening of their endogenous capacities,

Taking note with appreciation of the work of the Centre in initiating pilot studies on endogenous capacity-building in some selected countries and welcoming the close co-operation between the Centre and the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development in undertaking the studies and in planning additional studies in the future,

Recalling further the sections of resolution 1(IX) of the Intergovernmental Committee on the problems and requirements of the least developed countries in the field of science and technology, and emphasizing in that regard the need to enhance the level of commitment and support for the special needs of the least developed countries in that area,

Stressing the importance of the continued integration of women in the development process, particularly in developing countries, and, in that context: recalling resolution 2, adopted on 31 August 1979 by the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, and the relevant parts of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women in the field of science and technology,

1. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system to devote increased attention to national capacity-building in science and technology, in accordance with the development objectives, priorities and plans of developing countries, and to enable them to take effective measures to build better and more sustainable institutions, strengthen human resource capacities and develop and adapt technology;

2. Stresses that international co-operation to foster the endogenous capacity-building of developing countries, in accordance with their autonomous decision-making in science and technology, must also be oriented to demand-driven priorities in order to support the efforts of developing countries in economic growth and development;

3. Emphasizes that international co-operation to foster endogenous capacity-building should give particular attention to management of technology in order to cope with technological change and promote technological innovation;

4. Calls upon the United Nations system to provide sustained support to the process of building the endogenous capacities of developing countries in science and technology including their capacity for assessment of technology;

5. Urges the Centre for Science and Technology for Development of the Secretariat and the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development, in co-operation with other bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to implement further pilot studies;

6. Also urges the United Nations Development Programme and other interested bodies of the United Nations system, as well as major donor countries, to support the implementation of those studies;

7. Invites the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development to provide expert advice and support for that endeavour;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an interim progress report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development at its eleventh session.

End-of-decade review

In a July report on the end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action,(6) the Secretary-General summarized the achievements of and gaps in the Programme in relation to goals set out at the 1979 Vienna Conference on Science and Technology for Development. Despite a high level of societal awareness of the importance of science and technology for development, he said, accomplishments during the 1980s fell far short of the Vienna Programme's objectives, except in a limited number of countries. That slow-down could be partly attributed to the difficult economic environment world wide during the decade. More important was the inertia which had delayed the drastic changes needed in conceptual and institutional approaches to fulfil the three basic goals of the Programme—strengthening the endogenous capacity of developing countries; restructuring international scientific and technological relations; and strengthening the role of the UN system.

The concept of endogenous capacity-building should be interpreted as a demand-driven process, since conventional supply-oriented processes, such as building policy-making bodies, were not sufficient to enable science and technology to play an effective role in mainstream national efforts. Ways to determine areas of priority attention had to be sought, as top-down centralized formulation of science and technology programmes had generally failed. Development efforts should be re-directed to reduce disparities, as well as to achieve increased levels of production.

Systems of development assistance required major rethinking to achieve the following goals: greater coherence and effectiveness of development support; a balanced approach to priority demands among different problem areas; complementarity in support from bilateral and multilateral agencies; and reinforcement for endogenous capacity-building as a process leading to autonomous decision-making ability, in addition to encompassing equipment supply, infrastructure and expertise for isolated projects.

The potential of UN institutions dealing with science and technology had not been realized to the extent anticipated. Nevertheless, an analysis of their role over the last 10 years had reinforced the validity of the assumptions in creating those institutions. What was needed was a redefinition of their scope and functions. They should primarily undertake specific activities to: promote the endogenous capacity in arriving at portfolios of priority actions through national policy dialogues among stakeholders, policy analysis and technology assessments; assess the implications of change in technological environments on specific themes of socio-economic interest to the General Assembly; and catalyse the participatory linkages in the UN system, development co-operation agencies, the science and technology community and other concerned stakeholders.

Pursuant to a 1987 Intergovernmental Committee resolution,(7) the Centre for Science and Technology for Development addressed a questionnaire to all national focal points asking Member States to report on their experiences and constraints in implementing the Vienna Programme. Responses were detailed in a July report.(3) Some developing countries indicated that limited financial resources earmarked for science and technology constituted a major obstacle to implementation of the Vienna Programme. Still, many developing countries said they had established science and technology structures and policies. Most UN entities affirmed that the Vienna Programme had positively affected their activities in the area of science and technology. Analytical studies by the UN in four regions of the developing world clearly indicated different perspectives concerning the use of science and technology to meet specific priority needs of development.

Based on those studies, the Centre for Science and Technology had organized four regional meetings and one interregional meeting. One consensus that had emerged from those meetings was that the results of the Vienna Programme had lagged considerably behind the expectations of developing Member States, in particular with regard to mobilization of additional resources for promoting science and technology for development. The gap between developed and developing countries in science and technology remained and was widening, including among groups of developing countries. There was a need for new approaches in implementing the Vienna Programme of Action and for international co-operation in science and technology, it was felt.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/14 A without vote.

End-of-decade review of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and its revitalization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/218 of 19 December 1979, in which it endorsed the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development,

Stressing the increasing importance of science and technology for development in the context of the rapidly changing international economic environment,

Noting with great concern that the effect of increasing disparities in scientific and technological capabilities between the industrialized countries and the developing countries as a whole has been to contribute to a widening of the economic gap between them,

Stressing also the central role that science and technology play as vital instruments for the improvement of the quality of life and the eradication of poverty in the context of the promotion of economic growth and sustained development in developing countries,

Expressing concern that the absence of a favourable external economic environment has adversely affected the capacity of developing countries to foster and finance their activities concerning science and technology for development,

Emphasizing the need to enhance human resources development in order to promote the endogenous capacity in science and technology of developing countries, in particular to face the challenges of development and accelerated technological change posed by the present scientific and technological revolution,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and its basic goals, and expresses concern regarding its implementation;

2. Considers that science and technology should be one of the major components in the deliberations of the special session of the General Assembly in 1990 devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and the proposed United Nations conference on environment and development.

Co-ordination and harmonization

The framework for formulating policy guidelines for harmonizing activities of UN organizations in the area of science and technology for development had been set out in 1987 by the Intergovernmental Committee.(8) In July 1989, the Secretary-General reported(3) on the activities of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, discussing guidelines and progress made in harmonizing science and technology activities. Nine guidelines were proposed, including the following: that science and technology for development might be included as a major programme in medium-term plans of UN organizations and agencies; that the future focus of co-ordination in science and technology for development should be at the country level; that co-ordination of science and technology for development required the enhanced involvement and co-operation of other intergovernmental policy-making bodies; and that harmonization of UN policies in this area could be greatly stimulated if policies of individual countries were fully in consonance with each other. The Secretary-General concluded that the co-operation between the Centre and the Fund for Science and Technology for Development had in the past two years brought about a close and interactive relationship.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/14 C without vote.

Co-ordination and harmonization of activities in the field of science and technology

The General Assembly,

Recalling the parts of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development relating to co-ordinated implementation of the Programme by the United Nations system and the formulation of policy guidelines for the harmonization of policies of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in regard to activities in the field of science and technology,

Also recalling resolution 4(IX) of 7 August 1987 of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, which provided the framework for the formulation of policy guidelines for the harmonization of activities of the organizations of the United Nations system in science and technology for development,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development of the Secretariat, which, inter alia, analysed and provided information on harmonization of science and technology activities within the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the leadership role assigned to resident co-ordinators of the United Nations system to harmonize the efforts of the different organizations of the system, in accordance with the priorities of each Government,

Taking note of the guidelines suggested in paragraph 66 of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Calls upon the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development, to enhance co-ordination and harmonization at the country level, including the inter-agency missions, at the request of interested developing countries, through the office of the resident co-ordinator, in order to increase coherence and efficiency in responding adequately to the priorities in science and technology established by each developing country;

2. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to ensure close monitoring and follow-up of the mandated programmes and activities of the United Nations system in the areas of science and technology for development for the successful implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and to report thereon regularly to the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development.

Financial resources for science and technology strengthen national technical capacities through strategic funding, project design and implementation, and advisory services to enhance project effectiveness. The UNDP Administrator, in April,(1) reviewed activities of short-term advisory services (STAS) and the Transfer of Knowledge through Expatriate Nationals (TOKTEN) programmes, which had been managed by the Fund since 1987, and of the Energy Account, which had become a separate sub-account of UNFSTD in 1988.

UN Fund for Science and Technology for Development

UNFSTD resources had been used in two ways: to initiate activities from core resources to prepare the ground for larger-scale projects, and to help develop projects for co-financing arrangements with bilateral and multilateral partners. Fifty-two new and ongoing projects were being implemented by the Fund, which had responded to 132 requests for advice from UNDP regional bureaux and field offices in 1987 and 1988.

The UNDP Administrator stated that the integration of UNFSTD with UNDP in 1987 had helped alleviate the Fund's financial situation. UNFSTD expenditures for 1987-1988 under core and co-financing arrangements had been over $17 million. Total expenditures for 1989 were estimated at $10.23 million and for 1990 at $13.9 million. Voluntary contributions amounting to $250,000 were received by the Fund in early 1988; in November of that year, 32 countries had pledged $1.4 million. UNFSTD administrative expenses were met wholly from its own core/non-core resources. The UNDP Administrator noted that the Fund had made vigorous efforts to reduce its administrative expenses, which represented about 11 per cent of the Fund's overall expenditure and which could drop as its operations increased.

The UNDP Administrator stated that the Fund had given UNDP greater operational flexibility, better opportunities for unified country programming, and the capacity to move rapidly in innovative directions and in specialized fields. High-risk activities had been initiated with seed money provided by the Fund, which then could be followed up through the use of UNDP and bilateral resources. Every dollar provided by the Fund had attracted three dollars through co-financing arrangements, it was stated.

On 30 June,(2) the UNDP Governing Council welcomed UNFSTD's revitalized close co-operation with the UN Centre for Science and Technology for Development and expressed its appreciation for the efforts of the UNDP Administrator to reduce the Fund's administrative expenses. The Council stated that arrangements for co-financing had been diversified and had helped to maintain the Fund's overall resource base, but noted with concern that, without a substantial increase in its core resources, it would be difficult to maintain the Fund as an identifiable entity within UNDP. The UNDP

Administrator was asked to explore ways to strengthen Fund activities and to report on that issue for consideration by the Council in 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26, October 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/14 D without vote.

Financing of science and technology for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant parts of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development,

Concerned at the continued inadequacy of resources devoted to fostering science and technology for development,

Recalling its resolution 41/183 of 8 December 1986 on the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development,

Recalling also resolution 5(IX) of 7 August 1987 of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development,

Recalling further decision 89/52 of 30 June 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

1. Reaffirms the need for adequate resources on a continuous and assured basis to foster science and technology for development in accordance with the priorities of developing countries;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of organizing a more effective coalition of resources within the United Nations development system, multilateral financial institutions, regional development banks and bilateral funding agencies to strengthen the endogenous capacity-building of developing countries in science and technology;

3. Stresses the importance of the work of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development as an identifiable entity with the present size of staff and mode of operation;

4. Requests the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development to continue to provide policy guidance and set priorities for activities of the Fund within the framework of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development;

5. Calls upon the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to continue to ensure close and interactive co-operation between the Fund and the Centre for Science and Technology for Development of the Secretariat on a programmatic and substantive basis, Particularly in implementing decisions emanating from the end-of-the-decade review of the Vienna Programme of Action;

6. Recommends that the Fund, at the request of the interested developing countries, accord priority in support of:

(a) Pilot projects on the endogenous capacity-building of developing countries;

(b) Activities directly related to the follow-up of substantive themes such as new and emerging areas of science and technology considered by the Intergovernmental Committee;

(c) Projects and programmes aimed at fostering co-operation among developing countries;

7. Emphasizes the important function played by the Fund as the focal point within the United Nations Development Programme for endogenous capacity-building in developing countries and networking with the international science and technology community;

8. Takes note of the decision of the Intergovernmental Committee to include an item entitled "Financing science and technology for development" in the agenda of its eleventh session and to request the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report to it on the question.

26 October 1989 Meeting 42 Adopted without vote

Draft by Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development (A/44/37); agenda item 82 (i).

Operational activities

UNFSTD continued to help developing countries to assess national needs and to devise policies and structures with regard to science, technology and energy. It continued to provide assistance to five projects: in Burundi, Cyprus, Ethiopia and Jordan and in the member States of the Gulf Cooperation Council.

Several projects continued in the field of initiating new technologies and upgrading traditional technologies. The woodstove development programme in West Africa continued, as did research on using the soapberry plant in East Africa as an agent in the fight against schistosomiasis. The Fund assisted in assessing the potential use of Zambia's abundant raw materials and agricultural waste products to be put to use through biotechnology-based methods. The UNFSTD-funded Computer Science Division at the Asian Institute of Technology in Bangkok, Thailand, was considered a success by an evaluation mission. Projects in remote-sensing training and the development of drip irrigation techniques in semi-arid environments in China continued. Several countries benefited from projects in non-conventional energy, such as Costa Rica and Djibouti (geothermal energy), Cape Verde (biogas) and Seychelles, Maldives and Mauritius (photovoltaic technology).

Ten new countries were expected to participate in the technological information pilot system, an information exchange among over 2,000 users in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and Latin America. Preparations were made to establish a technology expert knowledge system—a computer-based technical and scientific information network of UNDP offices around the world.

UNFSTD conducted a major programme on technological innovation and entrepreneurship, including efforts to establish business incubators in developing countries to enhance the viability of small technology-based firms. One feasibility exercise examined the possibility of setting up such incubators in China; a conference was held in Gabon in March/April 1988 on business incubators for West African States. INNOTECH, a technology incubator in Trinidad and Tobago, was launched in February 1989. The third Beijing international conference on technological innovation and entrepreneurship was held in September 1989.

In the area of quality control and maintenance, the UNFSTD-supported National Food Technology and Quality Control Research Centre in China, inaugurated in September 1988, worked on soybean-derived proteins and national standards for quality control. The problem of lack of maintenance of scientific instruments in Africa was addressed, using Fund resources. The training of technicians in Latin America in the use of ultra high-frequency sound waves, lasers and other techniques continued.

The TOKTEN programme completed 449 projects in 1988, the most productive year in its 10-year history, attaining a cumulative total of 2,270. Its basic strength was considered to be the concept of fielding skilled third world professionals living in industrialized countries to provide voluntary consultancy services to their countries of origin. The STAS programme completed 70 assignments in 1988, with experts from developed and developing countries helping to solve technical and managerial problems in private and parastatal enterprises. Since STAS began operations in 1985, 131 assignments had been completed. The linking of STAS and TOKTEN under UNFSTD was seen as mutually beneficial.

Institutional arrangements

Intergovernmental Committee

The Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, at its tenth session (New York, 21 August-1 September), adopted one resolution and one decision.(1) The resolution dealt with the activities of the UN system in science and technology, including those of the Centre, the Advisory Committee and the Fund for Science and Technology for Development.

The Intergovernmental Committee decided to continue holding its sessions on a biennial basis.

Advisory Committee

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development was established to provide policy and planning advice to the Intergovernmental Committee. At its eighth session in 1988,(2) it had focused on endogenous capacity-building and technological innovation, including human resources and information systems, and on financial resources for science and technology. Its ninth session, at Vienna, was held from 4 to 12 September 1989.

A declaration⁽³⁾ to mark the tenth anniversary of the Vienna Programme of Action was issued by current and former Committee members in July. In September, the Intergovernmental Committee invited⁽⁴⁾ the Advisory Committee to hold sessions, to the extent possible, in developing countries, in order to provide opportunities for interaction between Committee members and the host countries' science and technology communities. It encouraged the Advisory Committee to provide a substantive contribution to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade.

Centre for Science and Technology

Serving as the secretariat for the Intergovernmental Committee, the Advisory Committee and the ACC Task Force, the Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued in 1989 to provide support for implementing the Vienna Programme of Action.

In a March report,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General described the Centre's activities, which, pursuant to a 1987 Intergovernmental Committee request,⁽⁶⁾ concentrated on: endogenous capacity-building; development of the Advanced Technology Alert System (ATAS); harmonization of science and technology activities within the UN system; and issues dealing with science and technology information. These priorities and programmes were to continue to be the principal focus for the Centre during 1990 and 1991. The Centre's work in 1989 focused on the theme of the tenth session of the Intergovernmental Committee: the end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action.

The Intergovernmental Committee, at its August/September session,⁽⁴⁾ requested the Centre to report, in line with the Committee's substantive theme for its eleventh session, on ensuring the participation of developing countries in international co-operation for development of environmentally sound technology. The Centre was to continue pilot studies on building endogenous capacities, employ subregional approaches to endogenous capacity-building in the area of science and technology, and examine possibilities of co-ordinating efforts to improve the infrastructure of institutions of higher learning in the field of science and technology in developing countries, particularly in Africa. The Centre was also to report on the contribution of the UN system to endogenous capacity-building, and on planning and management of science and technology policy to promote science and technology in developing countries. The Intergovernmental Committee requested the Centre to enhance its efforts to promote science and technology in the least developed countries and to submit concrete proposals on that issue through the Preparatory Committee for the Second UN Conference on the Least Developed Countries. Reports were also requested on: progress made in involving women in activities in the field of science and technology, and the question of financing science and technology for development. The Committee approved the draft programme in science and technology of the UN medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 in the light of the end-of-decade review of the Vienna Programme of Action.

Advance Technology Alert System

The Secretary-General, in May, reported⁽⁷⁾ on the ATAS pilot project, which had ended in 1987. An evaluation had been made at a workshop of international experts held in the German Democratic Republic in August 1988. Participants recommended that the Centre, through ATAS and in co-operation with other UN organizations, be the focal point for technology assessment within the UN system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/14 E without vote.

Assessment of technology

The General Assembly.

Recalling decision 7(V) of 20 June 1983, in which the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development established the Advance Technology Alert System and called for a review of the project, and the Committee's resolution 4(VIII) of 6 June 1986,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the evaluation by the international group of experts of the Advance Technology Alert System,

Recognizing that, because of the complexity and the global implications of new and emerging areas of science and technology, careful assessment of technology is required to take full advantage of such emerging technologies and to avoid negative repercussions for developing countries,

1. Resolves that, in pursuance of the substantive theme approach, the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development shall choose subjects of particular significance with major science and technology dimensions with a view to providing an assessment of technology and related policy analysis in order to facilitate the debate of the question in the General Assembly;

2. Decides:

(a) To continue and to improve further the Advance Technology Alert System as an important and effective means of applying technology assessment to endogenous capacity-building in developing countries;

(b) To continue also to publish the ATAS Bulletin within existing resources, focusing on the risks and benefits of new and emerging technology to development, especially in developing countries, and on diverse practices of technological assessment being used by Member States and international organizations;

(c) To entrust the Centre for Science and Technology for Development of the Secretariat, through the Advance Technology Alert System and in co-operation with other United Nations bodies, to serve as the focal point for technological assessment within the United Nations system and, where possible, for relations with Governments and non-governmental organizations concerning technological assessment activities in Member States;

3. Taking note of the decision of the Intergovernmental Committee to choose as the substantive theme for its eleventh session "Ways and means of ensuring the participation of developing countries in international co-operation for research on and development of environmentally sound technologies, and the rapid and effective transfer of such technologies to those countries";

4. Requests the Centre to study ways and means of assisting developing countries in enhancing their capacity to assess new technologies, and recommends that a study be undertaken regarding new materials and the processing of raw materials, making use of the results of the Centre's ongoing programme on materials technology, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the Intergovernmental Committee at its eleventh session.

ACC Task Force

The Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, established by ACC to promote closer co-operation among UN bodies, in 1989 held its tenth session (Vienna, 13-16 March).⁽⁸⁾ It concentrated on three subjects: impact studies and inter-agency missions to selected countries; closer inter-institutional co-operation on assessment of new technologies; and review of the implementation during the 1980s of the Vienna Programme of Action. The Task Force considered that there was currently no need for additional joint activities in the field of new and emerging areas of science and technology.

Technology transfer

Draft code of conduct

Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) Secretary-General reported on progress made in the negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology.⁽²⁾ The draft consisted of a preamble and nine chapters on: definitions and scope of application; objectives and principles; national regulation of transfer-of-technology transactions; restrictive practices; responsibilities and obligations of parties to transfer-of-technology transactions; special treatment for developing countries; international collaboration; international institutional machinery; and applicable law and settlement of disputes. The UNCTAD Secretary-General stated that, despite all efforts, no concrete results enjoying general consensus had so far emerged. Most issues still outstanding in the code concerned restrictive practices and applicable law and settlement of disputes.

The President of the UN Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology and the UNCTAD Secretary-General in 1989 continued consultations with regional groups and interested Governments (23 January-2 February). Subsequently, the UNCTAD secretariat informed all UNCTAD member States that the UNCTAD secretariat might study the relevance to the draft code of conduct of recent policy and legislative developments in the area of technology, particularly issues outstanding in the negotiations. The UNCTAD Secretary-General would then report to the General Assembly in 1990 on the study's outcome.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 44/216 without vote.

International code of conduct on the transfer of technology

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/184 of 17 December 1985, 41/166 of 5 December 1986 and 42/172 of 11 December 1987 and its decision 43/439 of 20 December 1988 on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the consultations carried out in 1989 relating to the negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology;

2. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a complete report, based on the outcome of consultations, so as to enable the Assembly to take appropriate action on the negotiations on the draft code of conduct.

Other questions

Social welfare

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/47, calling upon all States to encourage co-operation to ensure scientific and technological progress for the welfare and social and economic development of their peoples. The Council requested the Secretary-General, in the next report on the world social situation, to take due account of the effects of science and technology on processes of social welfare and development. It also requested the Secretary-General to consider convening in the near future a seminar of experts on the effects of science and technology on social welfare and development.

In December, by resolution 44/54, the General Assembly endorsed the Council's recommendations.

Education

Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly resolution,(1) the Secretary-General, in January 1989, reported(2) on national experiences in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress, including the promotion of education, science and technology. The report also provided information on science and technology policies submitted by six developing countries and four countries with centrally planned or developed market economies. Developing countries emphasized ways to make best use of their limited resources and to overcome organizational constraints. In developed countries, stress was laid on policies aimed at concentrating research efforts on those spheres considered most important for future progress.

International security

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(3) the Secretary-General reported in September on scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security,(4) based on information received from Governments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 44/118 A, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to conclude his work on the issue and report to the Assembly in 1990. The Assembly also decided, by resolution 44/118 B, to include in its 1990 provisional agenda an item entitled "Science and technology for disarmament".

Informatics

A decision by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), contained in a note by the Secretary-General,(5) invited the UNESCO Director-General to ensure that UNESCO made its specific contribution to international co-operation in the field of informatics, in close collaboration with the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the International Telecommunication Union and relevant non-governmental organizations, fostering the use and promotion of informatics as an instrument of development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In decision 1989/179, the Economic and Social Council decided to consider, at its organizational session for 1990, the inclusion of a separate item on international co-operation in the field of informatics in its 1990 programme of work.

Chapter VIII

Environment

The year 1989 witnessed a heightened interest in the environment, both internationally and regionally, as the world's political leadership made environmental issues, particularly the relationship between environment and development, a major priority. In January, the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer entered into force, and in March the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal was adopted and signed at an international conference in Switzerland, organized by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). During the year, environmental concerns were discussed at major regional and international conferences and meetings. In December 1989, the General Assembly decided to convene in Brazil in 1992 the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and established a preparatory committee for the Conference. The Assembly also urged Governments to prepare a framework convention and associated protocols on climate change.

The Economic and Social Council concluded that increasing attention needed to be paid to the provision of new and additional financial resources to address the environmental concerns of the developing countries and that such provision should be kept under continuous review.

In 1989, UNEP acted to strengthen its role and effectiveness as the central catalysing, coordinating and stimulating body in the field of the environment within the UN system. The UNEP Governing Council in May, meeting at Nairobi, Kenya, adopted a record number of decisions on the environment. The Programme continued its various activities to conserve biological diversity and protected areas, control soil erosion and forest loss, protect the marine environment and collect information on such topics as air and water quality, food contamination and ozone depletion.

ment over the past two years, as well as the relationship between environmental matters and their management and national and international security. He identified as key issues those concerning the atmosphere, fresh water, oceans and coastal areas, land degradation, impoverishment of biological diversity, and hazardous wastes and toxic chemicals. The Executive Director outlined the nature of UNEP's role and immediate measures to enhance its effectiveness, and discussed preparations for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (see below), environmentally sound and sustainable development and the financial resources of the Environment Fund.

On 25 May, the Governing Council reaffirmed⁽²⁾ the role of UNEP as the central catalysing, coordinating and stimulating body in the field of the environment within the UN system, and stressed the need to further develop and strengthen that role and make the Governing Council a more effective and efficient mechanism. The Council urged Governments to establish UNEP national committees, and requested the Executive Director to support their establishment and to ensure the flow of information and views between them and UNEP. It decided on areas of focus for UNEP efforts and calls upon the international community, including protection of the atmosphere by combating climate change and global warming, depletion of the ozone layer and transboundary air pollution; protection of the quality of freshwater resources, oceans and coastal areas and resources and land resources by combating deforestation and desertification; conservation of biological diversity; and environmentally sound management of biotechnology, and minimization of hazardous wastes and toxic chemicals. The Governing Council agreed to set a target of $100 million for contributions to the Environment Fund by 1992, and called on Governments to increase their contributions by at least 35 per cent per annum from 1 January 1989 levels.

International co-operation

In an introductory report⁽¹⁾ to the UNEP Governing Council, the Executive Director pointed to the dramatic increase in concern for the environ-

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 44/453, of 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee,⁽³⁾ decided to consider the draft resolution⁽⁴⁾ entitled "International co-operation in the field of the environment", as orally revised, and to take appropriate action at the current session.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/229 without vote.

International co-operation in the field of the environment

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the increasing degradation of the environment, which, if allowed to continue, could endanger not only economic and social development but the very basis of life itself,

Noting the increased political interest in solving environmental problems and intensified international co-operation to that effect,

Welcoming the fact that there have been encouraging developments in some important areas of environmental co-operation,

Reaffirming that there is a direct interrelationship between environment and development, and recognizing that a favourable international economic climate conducive to sustained economic growth and development, particularly in developing countries, is of major importance for sound management of the environment,

Reaffirming also the importance of integrating environmental concerns and considerations into policies and programmes in all countries without introducing a new form of conditionality in aid or development financing or constituting a pretext for unjustified barriers to trade,

Noting the fact that the largest part of the current emission of pollutants into the environment, including toxic and hazardous wastes, originates in developed countries, and recognizing that those countries therefore have the main responsibility for combating such pollution,

Recognizing that serious environmental problems are arising for all countries and that those problems must be progressively addressed through preventive measures at their sources by national efforts and international co-operation,

Reaffirming the need for developed countries and appropriate international organs and organizations to strengthen technical co-operation with developing countries, increase the transfer of technology and provide additional resources to enhance the capacity of developing countries to solve their environmental problems,

Recognising that the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 1992, is a unique opportunity for all nations to address environmental and development issues in an integrated manner and to mobilize their political will to solve environmental problems through international co-operation,

Recalling decision 14/10 of 18 June 1987 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the environmental impact of apartheid on black agriculture in South Africa,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its fifteenth session,

1. Endorses the work of the United Nations Environment Programme, welcomes the report of the Governing Council on the work of its fifteenth session and takes note with appreciation of the decisions therein, as adopted, in the light of the present resolution;

2. Reaffirms the mandate of the Programme as defined in General Assembly resolution 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, and supports further strengthening of the role of the Programme as the central catalysing, co-ordinating and stimulating body in the field of the environment within the United Nations system;

3. Welcomes the measures adopted by the Governing Council, in its decision 15/1 of 25 May 1989, to improve its own effectiveness and efficiency;

4. Reaffirms that, owing to its universal character, the United Nations system, through the General Assembly, is the appropriate forum for concerted political action on global environmental problems;

5. Considers, in this regard, that the structure of the United Nations and its responsiveness in dealing with major environmental issues should be reviewed in order to strengthen its capacity to deal with these matters in an integrated, coherent and effective way, and requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on this issue, taking into account the views expressed by Governments, to be considered in the preparatory process for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development;

6. Takes note of the areas of concentration for the international community set out by the Governing Council in section IV of its decision 15/1 and the list of issues within those areas, which are not listed in any particular order of priority, to which the Programme should give special attention;

7. Takes note of Governing Council decision 15/4 of 26 May 1989 and supports the decision of the Council to hold a special session in 1990 of three days' duration at the same location as, and in conjunction with, the first substantive session of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, which, at its organizational session, should bear this issue in mind with a view to achieving an effective preparatory process for the Conference; this special session should deal with the elaboration of and the process of making and implementing decisions on priority environmental issues, in particular ways and means of enhancing the role of the Programme within the United Nations system in addressing those issues;

8. Reaffirms the need to provide new and additional financial resources to support developing countries in identifying, analysing, monitoring, preventing and managing environmental problems primarily at their source, in accordance with their national development goals, objectives and plans, so as to ensure that their development priorities are not adversely affected;

9. Stresses the need for new and additional financial resources for measures aimed at solving major environmental problems of global concern, and especially to support those countries, in particular developing countries, for whom the implementation of such measures would entail a special or abnormal burden, due, in particular, to their lack of financial resources, expertise and/or technical capacity;

10. Expresses its satisfaction at indications that the flow of resources to the Environment Fund is increasing in real terms, and endorses the annual target of a minimum of one hundred million United States dollars in contributions by the year 1992, taking into account the increasing tasks of the Programme, and calls upon all Governments to contribute or increase their contributions to the Fund by at least 35 per cent per annum from the 1 January 1989 level to enable that target to be met by 1992;

11. Endorses the views and suggestions of the Governing Council as expressed in its decision 15/2 of 26 May

1989 on the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 42/186 and 42/187 of 11 December 1987 as a positive step towards a better understanding of the concept of sustainable and environmentally sound development by all countries;

12. Takes note of the recommendation made by the Governing Council in its decision 15/5 of 25 May 1989 and stresses that sustainable and environmentally sound development in all countries should become one of the central guiding principles in the international development strategy being elaborated for the fourth United Nations development decade;

13. Concurs with Governing Council decision 15/14 of 25 May 1989 on the clearing-house function, in which it is considered that the Programme should play a more vigorous role in supporting developing countries, upon their request:

(a) To establish and strengthen their institutions and professional capacities to integrate environmental considerations into their development policies and planning;

(b) To formulate and initiate programmes and activities for dealing with their most serious environmental problems;

(c) To formulate and participate in action plans for the common management of ecosystems and critical environmental problems at the national, regional and global levels;

14. Stresses that sustainable and environmentally sound development requires changes in the unsustainable pattern of production and consumption, particularly in industrialized countries, and the development of environmentally sound technologies, and, in this context, stresses also the need to examine, with a view to making recommendations, effective modalities for favourable access to, and transfer of, environmentally sound technologies, in particular to the developing countries, including on concessional and preferential terms, and modalities for supporting all countries in their efforts to create and develop their endogenous technological capacities in the field of scientific research and development, as well as in the acquisition of relevant information, and, in this context, stresses further the need to explore the concept of assured access for developing countries to environmentally sound technologies, in its relation to proprietary rights, with a view to developing effective responses to the needs of developing countries in this area;

15. Take note of Governing Council decision 15/24 of 25 May 1989 on sustainable agriculture, and calls upon the Governing Council to pay special attention to the implementation thereof;

16. Reaffirms the urgent need for Governments, multilateral organizations and governmental and non-governmental financial institutions to take into account in their policies, decision-making processes and financial mechanisms the relationship between the foreign debt and the ability of developing countries to strengthen their capacity to address the critical environmental issues fundamental to development and protection of the environment;

17. Urges the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to take the necessary steps to ensure the participation of developing countries in scientific and policy aspects of its work, and calls upon the international community, in particular the developed countries, to consider contributing generously to the Intergovernmental

Panel on Climate Change Trust Fund with a view to financing the participation of experts designated by Governments of the developing countries in all the meetings of the Intergovernmental Panel, including those of its working groups and sub-groups;

18. Supports the request made by the Governing Council, in its decision 15/36 of 25 May 1989, that the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, in co-operation with the Secretary-General of the World Meteorological Organization, begin preparations for negotiations on a framework convention on climate, taking into account the work of the Intergovernmental Panel and its interim report, as well as the results achieved at international meetings on the subject, including the Second World Climate Conference, and recommends that such negotiations begin as soon as possible after the adoption of the interim report of the Intergovernmental Panel and that the General Assembly at an early date during its forty-fifth session take a decision recommending ways and means and modalities for further pursuing these negotiations, taking into account the work of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 1992;

19. Notes with satisfaction the progress made in the protection of the ozone layer and urges all States to co-operate with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme in the process of strengthening the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, adopted on 16 September 1987, in the light of the Helsinki Declaration on the Protection of the Ozone Layer, adopted on 2 May 1989, and emphasizes the importance of taking into account the special needs and requirements of developing countries and developing appropriate funding mechanisms in order to enable all countries, in particular developing countries, to participate effectively in the revised Protocol;

20. Notes the adoption, on 22 March 1989, of the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal, and calls upon all States to consider signing the Convention without prejudice to the final position to be adopted by regional organizations in this regard and to strengthen their co-operation in problem areas within the scope of the Convention;

21. Supports Governing Council decision 15/23 of 25 May 1989 on desertification, in which the Council, inter alia, invites donor Governments and intergovernmental bodies to accord high priority in their bilateral and multilateral assistance activities to national programmes for combating desertification and for the rehabilitation of land resources;

22. Considers the conservation and utilization of biological diversity to be a priority issue, an important element of ecological balance and a source of benefit to mankind, and welcomes Governing Council decision 15/34 of 25 May 1989;

23. Notes the consideration given by the Governing Council in its decision 15/10 of 25 May 1989 to the proposed establishment of a United Nations centre for urgent environmental assistance and takes note of the information provided by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on the preliminary results of his consultations regarding the views expressed by Governments and organizations on this matter, bearing in mind the mandates of the Programme, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Maritime Organization and the International Atomic Energy Agency, as well as other relevant United Nations specialized agencies and bodies;

24. Expresses its satisfaction at the impetus given to addressing environmental concerns through meetings at the regional level, and calls on the Programme and other relevant organizations to continue to play an effective role in this regard.

5-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.63/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 82 (f).

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Egypt, Finland, Iran, New Zealand.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 46, 49-52; plenary 85.

International conventions

The UNEP Executive Director reported(5) in February on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment. The report contained information on changes in the status of existing conventions and information describing the reported intentions of Governments to take action with regard to multilateral legal instruments. The 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer(6) entered into force on 1 January 1989, and the Convention Concerning Safety in the Use of Asbestos entered into force on 16 June.

On 25 May, the Governing Council asked(7) the Executive Director to transmit his report to the General Assembly at its 1989 session, and called on States and regional intergovernmental organizations in a position to do so and that had not already done so to sign, ratify, approve, accede to or accept and implement multilateral legal instruments in the field of the environment.

On 22 December, by decision 44/454, the General Assembly took note of the Executive Director's report.

Biological diversity

The Executive Director, in a February report(8) on programme matters requiring policy guidance from the UNEP Governing Council, outlined the decisions of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on biological diversity, endorsing the view that a new global legal instrument and additional measures were required for the conservation of biological diversity. He proposed that the UNEP Governing Council decide on the process and procedures to that end.

On 25 May, the Governing Council agreed(9) that the full implications of the new biotechnologies should be taken into account in any international legal instrument on the conservation of the biological diversity of the planet. It urged the Executive Director to promote co-operation in the implementation of existing international instruments and agreements, and to convene, in co-operation with other appropriate international organizations, additional sessions of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to consider the technical content within a broad socio-economic context of a suitable new international legal instrument and other measures for the conservation of the biological diversity of the planet. It authorized him, on the basis of the final report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on biological diversity, to convene an ad hoc working group of legal and technical experts with a mandate to negotiate an international legal instrument for the conservation of biological diversity. The Council called on Governments to provide financial and technical resources for the functioning of the Working Group and, in particular, the participation of the developing countries. It requested the Executive Director to expedite the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group with the aim of having the proposed new international legal instrument ready for adoption as soon as possible, and to submit a progress report to the first session of the preparatory committee for the 1992 Conference on Environment and Development and to the 1990 session of the Governing Council.

Transboundary movements of hazardous wastes

The UNEP Executive Director, in a May progress report,(10) informed the Governing Council that the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal had been adopted on 22 March by the 116 States participating in the Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Global Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes, held at Basel, Switzerland. Thirty-five States had signed the Convention, which was to enter into force upon ratification by 20 States. As of 31 December 1989,(11) 40 States and the European Community had ratified the Convention and Jordan had approved it.

The Convention provided for the orderly control of imports and exports of hazardous wastes, and called for international co-operation to assist countries lacking the technical, legal and administrative capacity to manage and dispose of wastes in an environmentally sound manner, and emphasized the importance of assisting developing countries in that regard. It authorized the establishment of a secretariat to process and disseminate information provided by the parties to the Convention, to ensure co-operation between parties and to assist them in implementing the Convention. UNEP would function as the interim secretariat, pending the first meeting of the parties to the Convention after its entry into force.

On 25 May, the Governing Council requested(12) the Executive Director to assist in implementing the Basel Convention and the resolutions of the Final Act of the Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Global Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes. It called on Governments that were in a position to do so to sign and ratify the Convention, and to consider voluntary contributions towards the operating costs of the interim secretariat. The Council asked the Executive Director to develop programmes for assisting developing countries and to submit them to donors for financing, and to avoid duplication between the work of the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (see below) and that of the interim secretariat.

In December, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's report(13) on developments in regard to a global convention on the control of the transboundary movement of hazardous wastes, which it took note of by decision 44/454 of 22 December.

Also on the same date, the Assembly, in resolution 44/229, noted the adoption of the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal and called upon all States to consider signing the Convention, without prejudice to the final position to be adopted by regional organizations in that regard, and to strengthen their co-operation in problem areas within the scope of the Convention.

Regional and other efforts

Latin America and the Caribbean Environmental Conference

The Sixth Ministerial Meeting on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean (Brasilia, 30-31 March)(14) focused attention on the urgent need to find a balance between socio-economic development and the protection and conservation of the environment through the proper utilization of natural resources and control of the environmental impacts. The Ministers adopted the Declaration of Brasilia, in which they recognized the inextricable relationship between environmental concerns and socio-economic development, as well as the obligation to ensure the rational use of resources for the benefit of present and future generations. The Ministers urged the international financing agencies to ensure, through specific institutional facilities, availability of sufficient additional resources, on concessional terms, to fund environmental protection projects in developing countries. They argued that international co-operation for environmental protection should include free access to scientific information and the transfer—at cost—to the developing countries of non-polluting technologies and of technologies intended for environmental conservation. Access to new environmental technologies, they said, could not be subject to purely commercial interests. The countries of the region, in addition to their internal efforts to design and implement national plans for the protection and conservation of the environment, expressed commitment to strengthening their co-operation and to requesting technical and financial co-operation from extra-regional countries and international organizations.

On 25 May, the Governing Council requested(15) the UNEP Executive Director to transmit the Declaration of Brasilia, which was annexed to its decision, to Governments and international governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and also to inform other interested entities. It invited Governments, international multilateral credit organizations and NGOs to take into account the Declaration as a frame of reference for international co-operation with developing countries.

In other action, the Council requested(16) the Executive Director to support the plans and programmes already being implemented in the Latin American and Caribbean region, and to initiate, in consultation with the Governments of the region, the formulation of an Action Plan for the Environment for Latin America and the Caribbean. It urged him to initiate the programmes selected for priority at the Sixth Ministerial Meeting on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Co-operation with the Council of Arab Ministers

On 25 May, the Governing Council requested(17) the Executive Director to provide technical and financial assistance to the priority programmes in the work plan of the Council of Arab Ministers Responsible for the Environment, particularly in the areas of desertification control and expansion of the area suitable for cultivation in the Arab world, the control of industrial pollution and environmental education and awareness. It also requested him to support the technical secretariat of the Council of Arab Ministers Responsible for the Environment through the provision of technical advice, particularly in the initial years of its activities.

UNDP activities

The UNDP Administrator, in a May report,(18) outlined the UNDP strategy at country, regional and international levels for responding to increasing demands from Governments for technical co-operation in the integration of environmental considerations into development planning and macro-economic management. The strategy envisaged expanded collaboration among relevant agencies of the UN system, especially UNEP, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), multilateral financial institutions, regional commissions and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). It also focused on strengthening the technical capacity of developing countries to participate effectively in the international dialogue on the biosphere's systems; education and human resources development; communications; community and NGO participation; and the role of women.

On 30 June, the UNDP Governing Council endorsed(19) expanded collaboration among UN agencies, and requested the Administrator to implement activities outlined in his report and to report thereon to the Council in 1990.

Environment and development

UN conference preparations

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(1) in May submitted a report,(2) with later addenda, containing the views of Governments, UN organs, organizations and programmes, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on the convening of a UN conference on environment and development. Those views related to the scope, objectives and content, conference title, preparatory process, time and place, and other modalities. All responses cited the importance and timeliness of such a conference, and there was general agreement that an intergovernmental preparatory committee would be required and that NGOs should take an active role in preparations. The conference should be held for two weeks in 1992 at the highest political level, it was stated.

The report also addressed the financial implications of preparing and convening the conference, including a proposal that the Assembly establish a trust fund to receive voluntary contributions for special projects, media events and publicity and other activities. The comments of the USSR were contained in a 15 May letter(3) addressed to the Secretary-General. In November, France submitted the views of the European Community.(4)

The UNEP Executive Director, in a May note,(5) transmitted to the UNEP Governing Council the Secretary-General's report.

On 25 May, the Governing Council recommended(6) that the Assembly, when taking a decision on the exact scope, title, venue and date of a UN conference on environment and development, to be held no later than 1992, and on the modalities and financial implications of holding such a conference, should consider the elements annexed to the Council's decision on the subject.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/87 without vote.

Convening of a United Nations conference on environment and development

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/196 of 20 December 1988,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of the convening of a United Nations conference on environment and development,

Taking note also of decision 15/3 adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on 25 May 1989,

Decides to transmit decision 15/3 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, together with the views on the convening of a United Nations conference on environment and development expressed under items 2 and 7 (f) of the agenda of the second regular session of 1989 of the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session for consideration and appropriate action.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/87

26 July 1989 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Draft by Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Malaysia for the Group of 77, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Sweden and Switzerland (E/1989/L.36); agenda item 7 (f).

Meeting numbers. ESC 28, 33, 35.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/228 without vote.

United Nations Conference on Environment and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/196 of 20 December 1988 on a United Nations conference on environment and development,

Taking note of decision 15/3 of 25 May 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on a United Nations conference on environment and development,

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/87 of 26 July 1989 on the convening of a United Nations conference on environment and development,

Taking note further of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/101 of 27 July 1989 on strengthening international co-operation on environment through the provision of additional financial resources to developing countries,

Recalling its resolutions 42/186 of 11 December 1987 on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond and 42/187 of 11 December 1987 on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of the convening of a United Nations conference on environment and development,

Mindful of the views expressed by Governments in the debate at its forty-fourth session on the convening of a United Nations conference on environment and development,

Recalling the Declaration of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment,

Deeply concerned by the continuing deterioration of the state of the environment and the serious degradation of the global life-support systems, as well as by trends that, if allowed to continue, could disrupt the global ecological balance, jeopardize the life-sustaining qualities of the Earth and lead to an ecological catastrophe, and recognizing that decisive, urgent and global action is vital to protecting the ecological balance of the Earth,

Recognizing the importance for all countries of the protection and enhancement of the environment,

Recognizing also that the global character of environmental problems, including climate change, depletion of the ozone layer, transboundary air and water pollution, the contamination of the oceans and seas and degradation of land resources, including drought and desertification, necessitates action at all levels, including the global, regional and national levels, and the commitment and participation of all countries,

Gravely concerned that the major cause of the continuing deterioration of the global environment is the unsustainable pattern of production and consumption, particularly in industrialized countries,

Stressing that poverty and environmental degradation are closely interrelated and that environmental protection in developing countries must, in this context, be viewed as an integral part of the development process and cannot be considered in isolation from it,

Recognizing that measures to be undertaken at the international level for the protection and enhancement of the environment must take fully into account the current imbalances in global patterns of production and consumption,

Affirming that the responsibility for containing, reducing and eliminating global environmental damage must be borne by the countries causing such damage, must be in relation to the damage caused and must be in accordance with their respective capabilities and responsibilities,

Recognizing the environmental impact of material remnants of war and the need for further international co-operation for their removal,

Stressing the importance for all countries of taking effective measures for the protection, restoration and enhancement of the environment in accordance, inter alia, with their respective capabilities, while at the same time acknowledging the efforts being made in all countries in this regard, including international co-operation between developed and developing countries,

Stressing the need for effective international co-operation in the areas of research, development and application of environmentally sound technologies,

Conscious of the crucial role of science and technology in the field of environmental protection and of the need of developing countries, in particular, for favourable access to environmentally sound technologies, processes, equipment and related research and expertise through international co-operation designed to further global efforts for environmental protection, including the use of innovative and effective means,

Recognizing that new and additional financial resources will have to be channelled to developing countries in order to ensure their full participation in global efforts for environmental protection,

I

1. Decides to convene the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, which shall be of two weeks' duration and shall have the highest possible level of participation, to coincide with World Environment Day, on 5 June 1992;

2. Accepts with deep appreciation the generous offer of the Government of Brazil to act as host to the Conference;

3. Affirms that the Conference should elaborate strategies and measures to halt and reverse the effects of environmental degradation in the context of increased national and international efforts to promote sustainable and environmentally sound development in all countries;

4. Affirms also that the protection and enhancement of the environment are major issues that affect the well-being of peoples and economic development throughout the world;

5. Affirms further that the promotion of economic growth in developing countries is essential to address problems of environmental degradation;

6. Affirms the importance of a supportive international economic climate conducive to sustained economic growth and development in all countries for the protection and sound management of the environment;

7. Reaffirms that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the applicable principles of international law, States have the sovereign right to exploit their own resources pursuant to their environmental policies, and also reaffirms their responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and to play their due role in preserving and protecting the global and regional environment in accordance with their capacities and specific responsibilities;

8. Affirms the responsibility of States, in accordance with national legislation and applicable international law, for the damage to the environment and natural resources caused by activities within their jurisdiction or control through transboundary interference;

9. Notes that the largest part of the current emission of pollutants into the environment, including toxic and hazardous wastes, originates in developed countries, and therefore recognizes that those countries have the main responsibility for combating such pollution;

10. Stresses that large industrial enterprises, including transnational corporations, are frequently the repositories of scarce technical skills for the preservation and enhancement of the environment, that they conduct activities in sectors that have an impact on the environment and, to that extent, have specific responsibilities and that, in this context, efforts need to be encouraged and mobilized to protect and enhance the environment in all countries;

11. Reaffirms that the serious external indebtedness of developing countries and other countries with serious debt-servicing problems has to be addressed in an efficient and urgent manner in order to enable those countries to contribute fully and in accordance with their capacities and responsibilities to global efforts to protect and enhance the environment;

12. Affirms that, in the light of the foregoing, the following environmental issues, which are not listed in any particular order of priority, are among those of major concern in maintaining the quality of the Earth's environment and especially in achieving, environmentally sound and sustainable development in all countries:

(a) Protection of the atmosphere by combating climate change, depletion of the ozone layer and transboundary air pollution;

(b) Protection of the quality and supply of freshwater resources;

(c) Protection of the oceans and all kinds of seas, including enclosed and semi-enclosed seas, and coastal areas and the protection, rational use and development of their living resources;

(d) Protection and management of land resources by, inter alia, combating deforestation, desertification and drought;

(e) Conservation of biological diversity;

(f) Environmentally sound management of biotechnology;

(g) Environmentally sound management of wastes, particularly hazardous wastes, and of toxic chemicals, as well as prevention of illegal international traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes;

(h) Improvement of the living and working environment of the poor in urban slums and rural areas, through the eradication of poverty by, inter alia, implementing integrated rural and urban development programmes, as well as taking other appropriate measures at all levels necessary to stem the degradation of the environment;

(i) Protection of human health conditions and improvement of the quality of life;

13. Emphasizes the need to strengthen international co-operation for the management of the environment to ensure its protection and enhancement and the need to explore the issue of benefits derived from activities, including research and development, related to the protection and development of biological diversity;

14. Reaffirms the need to strengthen international co-operation, particularly between developed and developing countries, in research and development and the utilization of environmentally sound technologies;

15. Decides that the Conference, in addressing environmental issues in the developmental context, should have the following objectives:

(a) To examine the state of the environment and changes that have occurred since the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, held in 1972, and since the adoption of such international agreements as the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone

Layer, adopted on 22 March 1985, and the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, adopted on 16 September 1987, taking into account the actions taken by all countries and intergovernmental organizations to protect and enhance the environment;

(b) To identify strategies to be co-ordinated regionally and globally, as appropriate, for concerted action to deal with major environmental issues in the socio-economic development processes of all countries within a particular time-frame;

(c) To recommend measures to be taken at the national and international levels to protect and enhance the environment, taking into account the specific needs of developing countries, through the development and implementation of policies for sustainable and environmentally sound development with special emphasis on incorporating environmental concerns in the economic and social development process and of various sectoral policies and through, inter alia, preventive action at the sources of environmental degradation, clearly identifying the sources of such degradation and appropriate remedial measures, in all countries;

(d) To promote the further development of international environmental law, taking into account the Declaration of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, as well as the special needs and concerns of the developing countries, and to examine in this context the feasibility of elaborating general rights and obligations of States, as appropriate, in the field of the environment, and taking into account relevant existing international legal instruments;

(e) To examine ways and means further to improve co-operation in the field of protection and enhancement of the environment between neighbouring countries, with a view to eliminating adverse environmental effects;

(f) To examine strategies for national and international action with a view to arriving at specific agreements and commitments by Governments for defined activities to deal with major environmental issues in order to restore the global ecological balance and to prevent further deterioration of the environment, taking into account the fact that the largest part of the current emission of pollutants into the environment, including toxic and hazardous wastes, originates in developed countries, and therefore recognizing that those countries have the main responsibility for combating such pollution;

(g) To accord high priority to drought and desertification control and to consider all means necessary, including financial, scientific and technological resources, to halt and reverse the process of desertification with a view to preserving the ecological balance of the planet;

(h) To examine the relationship between environmental degradation and the international economic environment, with a view to ensuring a more integrated approach to problems of environment and development in relevant international forums without introducing new forms of conditionality;

(i) To examine strategies for national and international action with a view to arriving at specific agreements and commitments by Governments and by intergovernmental organizations for defined activities to promote a supportive international economic climate conducive to sustained and environmentally sound development in all countries, with a view to combating poverty and improving the quality of life, and bearing in mind that the incorporation of environmental concerns and considerations in development planning and policies should not be used to introduce new forms of conditionality in aid or in development financing and should not serve as a pretext for creating unjustified barriers to trade;

(j) To identify ways and means of providing new and additional financial resources, particularly to developing countries, for environmentally sound development programmes and projects in accordance with national development objectives, priorities and plans and to consider ways of effectively monitoring the provision of such new and additional financial resources, particularly to developing countries, so as to enable the international community to take further appropriate action on the basis of accurate and reliable data;

(k) To identify ways and means of providing additional financial resources for measures directed towards solving major environmental problems of global concern and especially of supporting those countries, in particular developing countries, for which the implementation of such measures would entail a special or abnormal burden, owing, in particular, to their lack of financial resources, expertise or technical capacity;

(l) To consider various funding mechanisms, including voluntary ones, and to examine the possibility of a special international fund and other innovative approaches, with a view to ensuring, on a favourable basis, the most effective and expeditious transfer of environmentally sound technologies to developing countries;

(m) To examine, with a view to making recommendations, effective modalities for favourable access to, and transfer of, environmentally sound technologies, in particular to the developing countries, including on concessional and preferential terms, and modalities for supporting all countries in their efforts to create and develop their endogenous technological capacities in the field of scientific research and development, as well as in the acquisition of relevant information, and, in this context, to explore the concept of assured access for developing countries to environmentally sound technologies, in its relation to proprietary rights, with a view to developing effective responses to the needs of developing countries in this area;

(n) To promote the development of human resources, particularly in developing countries, for the protection and enhancement of the environment;

(o) To recommend measures to Governments and the relevant bodies of the United Nations system, with a view to strengthening technical co-operation with the developing countries to enable them to develop and strengthen their capacity for identifying, analysing, monitoring, managing or preventing environmental problems in accordance with their national development plans, objectives and priorities;

(p) To promote open and timely exchange of information on national environmental policies, situations and accidents;

(q) To review and examine the role of the United Nations system in dealing with the environment and possible ways of improving it;

(r) To promote the development or strengthening of appropriate institutions at the national, regional and global levels to deal with environmental matters in the context of the socio-economic development processes of all countries;

(s) To promote environmental education, especially of the younger generation, as well as other measures to increase awareness of the value of the environment;

(t) To promote international co-operation within the United Nations system in monitoring, assessing and anticipating environmental threats and in rendering assistance in cases of environmental emergency;

(u) To specify the respective responsibilities of and support to be given by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system for the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

(v) To quantify the financial requirements for the successful implementation of Conference decisions and recommendations and to identify possible sources, including innovative ones, of additional resources;

(w) To assess the capacity of the United Nations system to assist in the prevention and settlement of disputes in the environmental sphere and to recommend measures in this field, while respecting existing bilateral and international agreements that provide for the settlement of such disputes;

II

1. Decides to establish the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, which shall be open to all States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies, with the participation of observers, in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

2. Decides that the Preparatory Committee shall hold an organizational session of two weeks' duration in March 1990 and a final session, both at United Nations Headquarters, as well as three additional substantive sessions, the first at Nairobi and the following two at Geneva, the timing and duration of which shall be determined by the Preparatory Committee at its organizational session;

3. Decides that the Preparatory Committee, at its organizational session, shall elect, with due regard to equitable geographic representation, a chairman and other members of its Bureau, comprising a substantial number of vice-chairmen and a rapporteur;

4. Decides that the host country of the Conference, Brazil, shall be ex officio a member of the Bureau;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, following the organizational session of the Preparatory Committee, to establish an appropriate ad hoc secretariat at the United Nations Office at Geneva, with a unit in New York and another unit in Nairobi, taking into account the decisions to be made by the Preparatory Committee regarding the preparatory process for the Conference and based on the principle of equitable geographic distribution;

6. Decides that the ad hoc secretariat will be headed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, who will be appointed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations;

7. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to prepare a report for the organizational session of the Preparatory Committee containing recommendations on an adequate preparatory process, taking into account the provisions of the present resolution and the views expressed by Governments in the debate at the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly;

8. Decides that the Preparatory Committee shall:

(a) Draft the provisional agenda of the Conference, in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

(b) Adopt guidelines to enable States to take a harmonized approach in their preparations and reporting;

(c) Prepare draft decisions for the Conference and submit them to the Conference for consideration and adoption;

9. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme, as the main organ dealing with environmental issues, and other organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as other relevant intergovernmental organizations, to contribute fully to the preparations for the Conference on the basis of guidelines and requirements to be established by the Preparatory Committee;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the coordination of contributions from the United Nations system through the Administrative Committee on Coordination;

11. Invites all States to take an active part in the preparations for the Conference, to prepare national reports, as appropriate, to be submitted to the Preparatory Committee in a timely manner, and to promote international co-operation and broad-based national preparatory processes involving the scientific community, industry, trade unions and concerned non-governmental organizations;

12. Requests relevant non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to contribute to the Conference, as appropriate;

13. Stresses the importance of holding regional conferences on environment and development with the full co-operation of the regional commissions, and recommends that the results of such regional conferences be introduced into the preparatory process for the Conference, bearing in mind that regional conferences should make important substantive contributions to the Conference;

14. Decides that the preparatory process and the Conference itself should be funded through the regular budget of the United Nations without adversely affecting other ongoing activities and without prejudice to the provision of sources of extrabudgetary resources;

15. Decides to establish a voluntary fund for the purpose of assisting developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, to participate fully and effectively in the Conference and in its preparatory process, and invites Governments to contribute to the fund;

16. Requests the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth and forty-sixth sessions on the progress of work of the Committee;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth and forty-sixth sessions an item entitled "United Nations Conference on Environment and Development".

General Assembly resolution 44/228

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.7) without vote, 19 December (meeting 52); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.86), based on informal consultations on drafts by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.55) and by France for European Community (A/C.2/44/L.58) and on draft decision by UNEP Governing Council (A/C.2/44/L.7); agenda item 82 (f). Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/44/903: S-G, A/C.2/44/L.88, A/C.5/44/53.

Meeting numbers GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 31, 32, 40, 44, 46, 49-52; 5th Committee 60; plenary 85.

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted section IX of resolution 44/201 B without vote.

Section 18, United Nations Environment Programme

[The General Assembly...]

Invites the Secretary-General to ensure that all efforts are made in the United Nations system for the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 1992, and the implementation of other new mandates, including provisions for adequate resources for effective co-ordination in the secretariat of the United Nations Environment Programme;

Resolutions 42/186 and 42/187

In a March note,(7) the UNEP Executive Director submitted proposed comments of the Governing Council on the responses received from Governments on the implementation of 1987 General Assembly resolutions 42/186 and 42/187, respectively, on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond,(8) and on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development.(9) Annexed to the note was material for the consolidated report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the two resolutions.

On 14 May, the Governing Council requested(10) the Executive Director to arrange for the views and suggestions of the Council to be incorporated in the draft report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 42/186 and 42/187, so that the amended report could be submitted through the Economic and Social Council to the Assembly in 1990. It invited the attention of the Assembly to the understanding of the UNEP Governing Council with regard to the concept of sustainable development, and requested the Executive Director to pursue full implementation and follow-up to the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General in July submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly a report(11) on the implementation of Assembly resolutions 42/186 and 42/187 on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond(8) and on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development,(9) respectively. The report contained the views of the UNEP Governing Council on efforts towards sustainable and environmentally sound development, as well as information received from Governments and the European Community and from governing bodies of UN organizations, bodies and programmes on action and activities undertaken to achieve such development. The Council also offered suggestions on long-term strategies and new environmental concerns. The data confirmed that long-standing environmental priorities continued to require attention and effort by Governments and the UN system in their ongoing programmes. Further reports(12) on progress made towards sustainable, environmentally sound development were submitted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the World Health Organization (WHO), UNESCO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the World Food Programme, WMO, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/177 of 27 July, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 42/186 and 42/187 and of the reports of governing bodies of UN organs, organizations and programmes on progress made towards sustainable and environmentally sound development.

The General Assembly, by decision 44/454 of 22 December, also noted the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/227 without vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolutions 42/186 and 42/187

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/186 of 11 December 1987 on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, in which it adopted the Environmental Perspective as a broad framework to guide national action and international co-operation on policies and programmes aimed at achieving sustainable and environmentally sound development in all countries,

Recalling also its resolution 42/187 of 11 December 1987 on the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, in which it welcomed the report and, inter alia, invited Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to take account of the analysis and recommendations contained in the report in determining their policies and programmes,

Recalling further its resolution 43/196 of 20 December 1988 on a United Nations conference on environment and development,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, containing information on action taken by Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to pursue sustainable and environmentally sound development in all countries, and taking note of decision 15/2 of 26 May 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Note with appreciation the efforts made by Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to promote sustainable and environmentally sound development in all countries;
3. Expresses its concern, none the less, that much more needs to be done in translating the increased understanding of the need for sustainable and environmentally sound development into concrete action in all countries;
4. Notes with satisfaction the regional activities that have taken place or are being planned with a view to promoting sustainable and environmentally sound development, including the First African Regional Conference on Environment and Sustainable Development, organized by the Economic Commission for Africa and the United Nations Environment Programme and held at Kampala from 12 to 16 June 1989, as well as similar conferences in the other regions planned to take place in 1990;
5. Invites Governments and the governing bodies of the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to intensify further their efforts towards promoting and achieving sustainable and environmentally sound development by integrating environmental concerns and considerations into policies and programmes in all areas;
6. Notes with appreciation the efforts made by the Secretary-General in reviewing, co-ordinating and strengthening the activities of the United Nations system for the promotion of sustainable and environmentally sound development;
7. Notes that serious environmental problems are arising for all countries and that those problems must be progressively addressed through preventive measures at their sources by national efforts and international co-operation;
8. Reaffirms that there is a direct interrelationship between environment and development, and recognizes that a supportive international economic climate conducive to sustained economic growth and development, particularly in developing countries, is of major importance for sound management of the environment;
9. Reaffirms also that environment issues are closely related to development policies and practices and that, consequently, environmental goals and actions need to be defined in relation to development objectives and policies;
10. Notes that the critical objectives for environment and development policies that follow from the need for sustainable and environmentally sound development must include creating a healthy, clean and safe environment in all countries, reviving overall economic growth, particularly in developing countries, and improving its quality, eradicating poverty and satisfying human needs by raising the standard of living and improving the quality of life, addressing the issues of sound management and enhancement of the resource base, furthering the promotion, accelerated development and transfer of environmentally sound technology, minimizing environmental dangers and merging environment and economics in decision-making in all countries, as well as taking cognizance of the interrelationship between people, resources, environment and development;

11. Stresses that sustainable and environmentally sound development requires changes in the unsustainable pattern of production and consumption, particularly in industrialized countries, and the development of environmentally sound technologies, and, in this context, stresses also the need to examine, with a view to making recommendations on effective modalities for favourable access to, and transfer of, environmentally sound technologies, in particular to the developing countries, including on concessional and preferential terms, and on modalities for supporting all countries in their efforts to create and develop their endogenous technological capacities in the field of scientific research and development, as well as in the acquisition of relevant information, and, in this context, stresses further the need to explore the concept of assured access for developing countries to environmentally sound technologies, in its relation to proprietary rights, with a view to developing effective responses to the needs of developing countries in this area;

12. Endorses the views and suggestions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its fifteenth session on the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 42/186 and 42/187, contained in the report of the Secretary-General, regards Governing Council decision 15/2 as a positive step towards a better understanding of the concept of sustainable and environmentally sound development and of the implications of the implementation of the concept for all countries, and invites Governments and the governing bodies of the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system as well as other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to take them into account in their further efforts towards promoting and achieving sustainable and environmentally sound development in all countries;

13. Reaffirms the need to provide new and additional financial resources to support developing countries in measures, inter alia, to identify, analyse, monitor, prevent and manage environmental problems, primarily at their sources, in accordance with their national development goals, objectives and plans, so as to ensure that their development priorities are not adversely affected;

14. Stresses the need for new and additional financial resources for measures aimed at solving major environmental problems of global concern, and especially to support those countries, in particular developing countries, for which the implementation of such measures would entail a special or abnormal burden, due, in particular, to their lack of financial resources, expertise and/or technical capacity;

15. Reaffirms the need for developed countries and relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to strengthen technical co-operation with the developing countries to assist them to develop and strengthen their endogenous capacity for identifying, analysing, monitoring, preventing and managing environmental problems in accordance with their national development plans, priorities and objectives;

16. Reaffirms also that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, States have the sovereign right to exploit their own resources pursuant to their environmental policies, and reaffirms further their responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and to play their due role in preserving and protecting the global and regional environment in accordance with their capacities and specific responsibilities;

17. Considers that the regional follow-up conferences should contribute to a better understanding and a more concrete definition of the concept of sustainable and environmentally sound development and of the implications of the implementation of the concept, and should make important substantive contributions to the United Nations conference on environment and development in 1992;

18. Invites the preparatory committee for the conference to take duly into account the recommendations contained in the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond and the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development in the preparatory process for the conference, as well as recommendations for action by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and the views and suggestions expressed by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and other organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system on those matters;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for submission to the preparatory committee for the conference, and to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Economic and Social Council, a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

20. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for submission to the conference and to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Economic and Social Council, a new consolidated report on further substantive follow-up to General Assembly resolutions 42/186 and 42/187 by Governments and organizations of the United Nations system.

General Assembly resolution 44/227

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.7) by consensus. 19 December (meeting 52): 30-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.64/Rev.1). orally revised; agenda item 82 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 31, 32, 40, 44, 46, 49-52; plenary 85.

Sustainable agriculture

The UNEP Governing Council, on 25 May, recommended(13) convening a joint FAO and UNEP meeting on sustainable agriculture, within the framework of the preparation of the proposed 1992 United Nations conference on environment and development, with a view to reviewing the mechanism for integrating agricultural production and environmental policies world wide; elaborating a world strategy for sustainable agriculture to guide agricultural policies at national and international levels, in order to ensure that such policies encouraged farmers to adopt practices that were ecologically sustainable and that led, inter alia, to improving the quality of life of rural people; and formulating recommendations for practical action that might be taken by UNEP, FAO and other international organizations within the context of their ongoing activities to promote sustainable agriculture. It requested the Executive Director to forward its recommendation to the Director-General of FAO, for consideration by the FAO Council.

International development strategy

On 25 May, the UNEP Governing Council recommended⁽¹⁴⁾ to the General Assembly that sustainable and environmentally sound development should become a central guiding principle in the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I). It invited the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade to recognize, in view of the global character of some major environmental problems, the common interest of all countries in pursuing policies aimed at the equitable and sustainable use of global resources, and to reflect that fully in the international development strategy under preparation. It also invited the Ad Hoc Committee to reaffirm, in the context of the international development strategy, that the critical objectives for environment and development policies that followed from the need for sustainable and environmentally sound development must include creating a healthy, clean and safe environment, reviving growth and improving its quality, remedying the problems of poverty and the satisfaction of human needs by raising the standard of living and the quality of life, addressing the issues of population and of conserving and enhancing the resource base, reorienting technology and managing risk, and merging environment and economics in decision-making. It called on the Executive Director to contribute to the preparatory process for the strategy and to keep the Governing Council and its Committee of Permanent Representatives informed of developments.

Environmental aspects of political, economic and other issues

Israeli-occupied territories

In 1989, the Governing Council had before it the Executive Director's report on the environmental situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories.⁽¹⁵⁾ UNEP and WHO were taking part in a 25-month project beginning in February 1989 entitled "Training course on water supply, sanitation and health for environmental health officers working with the Palestinian people". The project would facilitate training in pollution control and environmentally sound management of environmentally related diseases in refugee camps and settlements. Although there was general improvement in the environmental situation in the occupied territories, great public awareness and additional funding were needed for water treatment, refuse and conservation measures and other environmental improvements. There was also a need, the report said, for specific studies and collaborative efforts among UNDP, Israel and local authorities and other public and private entities to undertake environmentally sound development programmes and projects. The Executive Director recommended that an apolitical joint professional programme of environmentally sound development projects and other specific scientific, legal, economic and ecological efforts related to the territories should be considered.

On 25 May,⁽¹⁶⁾ the Council noted that the Executive Director's report did not include deference to the environmental situation in the Palestinian refugee camps in their occupied homeland or in the Syrian and Lebanese territories occupied by Israel. It considered the Executive Director's report to be inadequate and said that it should be updated and the information it contained corroborated. It further considered that the formation of a group of consultants specialized in environmental problems was required, with a mandate to prepare a comprehensive report on the environmental situation in the occupied Palestinian and other territories, making use of the relevant data and information from sources provided by the population of those territories and by the States and regional and international organizations concerned. The Council requested the Executive Director to submit in 1991 a comprehensive report based on findings of that group.

Economic crisis, foreign debt and the environment

On 25 May, the UNEP Governing Council expressed concern⁽¹⁷⁾ that the deterioration of the economic situation of developing countries, exacerbated by the debt crisis, had contributed to a significant and dangerous diminution in the capacity of those countries to protect and preserve the environment. It decided to bring to the attention of Governments, multilateral organizations, and governmental and non-governmental financial institutions the urgent need to change the existing conditions and treatment of the foreign debt of developing countries, in order to strengthen their ca-capacity to address the critical environmental issues fundamental to development and protection of the environment.

Transnational corporations and environmental protection

The Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a February report⁽¹⁸⁾ on ongoing and future research relating to transnational corporations (TNCs) and issues relating to the environment. The report examined TNCs and aspects of sustainable development, including their role in environmental restructuring, international corporate environmental management, technology assessment, environmental information disclosures and international waste disposal. It also identified criteria for sustainable development management of TNCs.

The Council, in resolution 1989/25 of 24 May, requested the Secretary-General to conduct a study of the main sectors of activities that had adverse effects on environmental preservation and the factors that determined the allocation of activities between developed and developing countries and to continue to strengthen the participation of TNCs (see PART THREE, Chapter V) in efforts to preserve and protect the environment, including the elaboration of a set of criteria and operating principles.

Chemical and other weapons of mass destruction

On 25 May,⁽¹⁹⁾ the UNEP Governing Council expressed its concern at the devastating effects of chemical and other weapons of mass destruction on mankind and the environment, and recognized the need for international scientific and technical co-operation in order to protect mankind and the environment from such weapons. The Council requested the Executive Director to prepare a comprehensive report on the devastating effects of chemical weapons on human health and the environment, for submission in 1991.

Human settlements

The Governing Council had before it a February report⁽²⁰⁾ by the Executive Directors of UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) on co-operation between the two organizations, particularly in assessment of environmental conditions in human settlements; environmental aspects of policies, planning and management of both rural and urban human settlements; environmentally sound and appropriate human settlements technology; and research, training and the dissemination of information on environmentally sound human settlements planning and management.

On 25 May,⁽²¹⁾ the Governing Council requested the UNEP Executive Director, in consultation with the Executive Director of Habitat, to increase co-operation between the two organizations, particularly with respect to the application of Environmental Guidelines for Settlements Planning and Management in selected metropolitan areas and, inter alia, the special needs of coastal human settlements likely to be affected by global climate change.

Transfer of environmental protection technology

On 25 May,⁽²²⁾ the Governing Council urged UNEP to continue its catalytic role to promote, with Governments, industry, research organizations and other relevant institutions, the establishment of a network for information sharing in environmental protection technology. It invited Governments to find bilateral and multilateral arrangements for financial support for exports of environmental protection technology, taking into account the needs of developing countries; and to promote the holding of symposia, exhibitions and training courses in support of a more effective dissemination of information about environmental protection technology and knowledge.

Cultural and natural heritage in Western Asia

On 25 May,⁽²³⁾ the Governing Council took note of the report⁽²⁴⁾ of the Joint Inspection Unit concerning the UN contribution to the preservation and management of cultural and natural heritage in Western Asia, and of the comments by the Executive Director thereon.

Environmental activities

Monitoring and assessment

In 1989, Earthwatch, the environmental assessment arm of UNEP, was composed of three units—the Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS), the International Environmental Information System (INFOTERRA) and the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC).⁽¹⁾ Earthwatch gathered information on the state of and trends in the environment and fed the processed information back to managers and decision makers.

Global Environmental Monitoring System

In 1989, GEMS continued to co-ordinate environmental data collection and the production of relevant and timely information for those responsible for managing natural resources and the environment. Due to the growing demand for good environmental information and assessments, consideration was given to reshaping the monitoring assessment machinery of GEMS.

During the year, officials of the GEMS Programme Activity Centre visited several African countries to ascertain their needs in resource monitoring and assessment capabilities. Specific proposals were formulated for Guinea and Mali. Efforts were also made to establish a network of subregional and national geographic information system centres across Africa which would be the nucleus for national environmental monitoring and assessment centres. UNEP, in collaboration with other organizations, universities and research centres, was developing a satellite-based technology to support global forest assessments, particularly in Africa and Amazonia. The GEMS/WATER programme was revised to facilitate the setting up of a select global network of strategically sited monitoring stations in the major basins of the world. Under the GEMS/AIR programme, a systematic collection of national and regional data on urban air pollution and other related factors was initiated to provide a wider basis for interpreting urban air-quality assessments.

Global Resource Information Data Base

During 1989, the Global Resource Information Data Base (GRID), the principal data management programme within GEMS, grew significantly. In addition to GRID-Nairobi and GRID-Geneva, a new GRID-Bangkok facility was established within the Asian Institute of Technology. In August, the first self-financed GRID node in a developed country was opened in Norway, which was intended to provide the system with data from Nordic and polar regions and with special technical and environmental assessment support. GRID's global and regional data holdings rose to nearly 100 data sets. A project was initiated to develop a global landcover data set, using landcover classifications detectable from space and verifiable on the ground. GRID would also take a lead role in providing a data management service for the International Biosphere-Geosphere Programme. The GRID-Nairobi laboratory was used by the International Laboratory for Research and Animal Diseases to model the areas of Africa at risk from tick-borne disease and East Coast fever. GRID also provided technical support to developing countries in the form of training, data sets and analyst time. Some 40 experts from 30 developing countries were trained in GRID technology.

INFOTERRA

In 1989, INFOTERRA, the UNEP environmental information system, placed greater emphasis on providing substantive and quality data. During the year, more than 16,000 inquiries were received from some 95 countries; more than half came from developing countries. The number of INFOTERRA national focal points grew to 137, and the regional service centres increased to 9. INFOTERRA Special Sectoral Sources grew to 28.

The Executive Director, in co-operation with the Government of the USSR, convened a World Conference on Environmental Information Exchange in the 1990s (INFOTERRA 3) in Moscow (13-18 March).⁽²⁾ The Conference, attended by representatives of 120 countries and UN agencies and organizations, reviewed all aspects of INFOTERRA activities. Thirty-two recommendations were approved, covering such areas as network development, operations, new technology and promotional activities, and constituting a strategy for the further development of INFOTERRA. The revision of the INFOTERRA Thesaurus for Environmental Terms was completed, and the second volume in the INFOTERRA Exchange of Environmental Experiences series—Drylands, Wetlands, croplands: Turning Liabilities into Assets—and the fifth volumes of the INFOTERRA International Directory and the Index were published. Efforts were also made to strengthen the information infrastructure in less developed countries by associating national focal points from those countries with those from developed countries.

In May, the Governing Council called upon⁽³⁾ Governments to make full use of INFOTERRA services and to strengthen their INFOTERRA national focal points. It requested the Executive Director to strengthen INFOTERRA, taking into account the recommendations of the World Conference on Environmental Information Exchange, and to provide technical and operational assistance to developing countries to afford them more effective participation in the international exchange of environmental information and experience.

Environmental impact assessment

In February, the Executive Director reported⁽⁴⁾ that UNEP was providing information, guidance, advice and assistance to countries in the application of environmental impact assessment (EIA), including the use of the goals and principles of EIA adopted by the Governing Council in 1987.⁽⁵⁾ The application of EIA was promoted from sectoral, methodological, legal and procedural standpoints, and included training of personnel from developing countries, providing guidance on EIA techniques and procedures for developing project design and for appraising, and systematizing the inclusion of environmental objectives in the development process. The report also included the opinions of States and relevant international organizations on measures to further international co-operation and agreement in the field, including the application of EIA to development projects with possible transboundary effects.

On 25 May, the Governing Council reaffirmed(6) that EIA was a valuable means of promoting and integrating environmental issues into planning and programme implementation and that it helped to identify potential adverse impacts and the additional resources required to avoid them. The Council called upon Governments to identify the use of the goals and principles of EIA and authorized the UNEP Executive Director to continue to seek the views of Governments and relevant international organizations on modes of further development in EIA.

Harmonization of environmental measurements

The UNEP Executive Director reported(4) in April that, in accordance with the recommendation of a meeting of experts in Munich, Federal Republic of Germany (9-11 March 1987), on improving and harmonizing environmental measurements, the GEMS/Harmonization of Environmental Measurement project was established in Munich, with financial support from the Federal Republic of Germany. Additional funds were being sought from other interested countries. The objectives of the project included establishing and updating inventories of environmentally harmonized techniques and practices of environmental measurement; establishing a system to determine the quality and compatibility of environmental data; and preparing a priority list of areas where data compatibility should be increased.

On 25 May, the Governing Council requested(7) the Executive Director to follow up on contacts with interested countries in seeking support for the project. It appealed to Governments and international organizations to assist the project by participating and by providing financial resources and seconding staff. The Council also requested the Executive Director to report in 1990 on the project.

Control of harmful products, chemicals and wastes

Consolidated List of Products

In a 30 May report(8) on products harmful to health and the environment, the Secretary-

General pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly request,(9) reviewed the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments,(10) and examined it in relation to protection against products harmful to health and the environment. The review covered arrangements for the production of the List, its coverage and scope, utilization, format, publication in language versions, questions of direct computer access and the public health context. It also considered the issue of protection against products harmful to health and the environment, including new initiatives on prior informed consent and technical assistance. The report concluded that the noxious effect on human health and the environment of hazardous products was gaining increased international recognition. It recommended that production of the List by WHO and UNEP/IRPTC would be improved if a data-base system was established that would be usable by the three organizations, and if the List was made available every year in English. The List should continue to refer to all the technical work being accomplished within the system and ensure that for each product entry, reference was made to the relevant complementary publications and conventions.

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1989/177 of 27 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals

In 1989, the computerized central files of the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC) continued to be updated and expanded.(1) Complete data profiles existed for more than 600 chemicals of international concern. Priorities for further development were based on the needs identified in the implementation of the amended London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade.(11) During the year, IRPTC focused on the collection of data on chemicals and their toxicity to mammals and aquatic organisms, and on legal information. The incorporation of all the evaluations of more than 600 chemicals carried out by the International Agency for Research on Cancer was completed, and efforts were initiated to incorporate the relevant health and environmental risk appraisals for chemicals evaluated by the International Programme on Chemical Safety. Co-operation continued with network partners from Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the Netherlands in the exchange and management of toxicity, and legal and other data on specific priority chemicals. IRPTC, with the support of the Netherlands, initiated an expanded three-year effort to establish national registers of potentially toxic chemicals.

In March, the Executive Director reported⁽¹²⁾ to the Governing Council that IRPTC required additional human and financial resources to meet its expanding responsibilities. While longer-term resource needs could be met from extrabudgetary sources, an immediate increase in UNEP funding was required to stabilize IRPTC and to enable the programme to attract external funding for its additional tasks, particularly in the light of the major responsibilities emanating from the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal. The Executive Director also proposed, on the basis of recommendations of a 1988 expert consultation,⁽¹³⁾ a number of amendments to the objectives and strategies for IRPTC.

On 25 May, the Governing Council requested⁽¹⁴⁾ the Executive Director to give high priority to the work of the Register through full and flexible utilization of the resources of the Fund, additional sources of income and co-ordination with other related budget sub-programmes; to solicit extrabudgetary resources from Governments to cover the resource needs of the Register and prepare package programmes for the different activities; and to submit the programmes to potential donors for financing. It approved the revised objectives and strategies of the Register to reflect its expanded responsibilities, as contained in the annex to its decision. The Council invited the Executive Director to assist developing countries in the legal and institutional arrangements for the management of chemicals at the national level and to organize training activities.

List of harmful chemical substances

Responding to a 1987 Governing Council request⁽¹⁵⁾ the Executive Director reported⁽²⁾ in April that he had kept the list of selected environmentally harmful chemical substances, processes and phenomena of global significance under continuous review by collecting and screening new scientific, technical and legal information on the subjects listed. He planned to refer the report on the list to Governments, relevant international institutions, industries and NGOs for further study and action by the end of the year, and to invite them to respond to the report, including measures adopted and planned to prevent serious impacts of the environmentally harmful chemical substances, processes and phenomena cited. Based on the responses, he would prepare an updated report for submission to the Governing Council in 1991, containing sections on cadmium, lead, mercury, carbon dioxide, nitrogen oxides and photochemical oxidants, sulphur dioxide and derivatives, production and use of coal and other fossil fuels, injudicious use of pesticides, oil pollution and eutrophication. The Executive Director would also decide whether other chemical substances, processes and phenomena should be added to the list.

On 25 May, the Governing Council noted⁽¹⁶⁾ the Executive Director's report.

Amended London Guidelines on chemicals

The second session of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts⁽²⁾ on Prior Consent and Other Modalities to Supplement the London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade⁽¹¹⁾ was held in New York from 13 to 16 February. The Working Group reached consensus on a prior informed consent procedure and on a measure for incorporating it into the London Guidelines. A list of chemicals that had been banned or severely restricted by 10 or more countries would be circulated to Governments participating in the London Guidelines for their decision regarding future importation; a list of chemicals banned or severely restricted by five or more countries would be circulated and decisions sought. Whenever a country banned or severely restricted a chemical that had previously not been the subject of a control action, participating countries would be notified and provided with guidance documents for a decision regarding future importation. An expert group would consider the problem of acutely hazardous pesticide formulations of concern to developing countries, to determine whether there should be a list of such products. The Working Group also developed proposed amendments to the Guidelines.

On 25 May, the Governing Council adopted⁽¹⁷⁾ the amended London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade, and recommended: that the Expert Group to be established keep the issue of acutely hazardous pesticides formulations under review with a view to formulating recommendations for additional action; that UNEP and FAO develop an information exchange system to ensure that designated national authorities of importing and exporting countries had a single contact point for obtaining information and communicating decisions on chemicals subject to the prior informed consent procedure; and that the operational responsibility be shared for implementation of the prior informed consent procedure and that common elements be jointly managed and implemented, including the selection of chemicals to be included in the prior informed consent procedure, preparation of prior informed consent decision guidance documents, mechanisms for environmental information-sharing and creation of data bases. It called on FAO to adopt procedures equally protective for man and the environment for pesticides subject to the prior informed consent procedure.

The Council requested the Executive Director to reconvene the Ad Hoc Working Group to monitor the implementation of the amended Guidelines, with particular attention to the prior informed consent procedure and the technical assistance provisions of part III of the Guidelines; review other activities related to the production and use of chemicals in States; and report on further steps needed to supplement the amended London Guidelines, including possibility of a convention, for submission to the Governing Council in 1990. It urged Governments to take steps for the early implementation of the London Guidelines.

Illegal traffic in toxic products and wastes

Responding to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁸⁾ the Secretary-General in July reported⁽¹⁹⁾ on illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes. The report contained an assessment, by region of origin and of destination of illegal traffic, and a classification of types of toxic and dangerous products; and examined the relation of the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal (see above), as well as the relation of the amended London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade, with efforts to eliminate or reduce illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes. Replies from countries and organizations to the Secretary-General's request for information on the instances and impact of illegal traffic were also summarized. The report concluded that the threat of illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes would continue to grow as landfill-area capacity decreased and disposal prices increased. The quantity of such products and wastes would likely increase as the global economy continued to expand. It recommended that efforts be made to achieve the earliest entry into force of the Basel Convention and world-wide participation in it, as well as the prior informed consent procedures of the amended London Guidelines. Through the auspices of UNEP, a technical working group of experts should begin developing waste minimization and disposal technology and guidelines. Funding should be provided for technical legal assistance to developing countries for the development of national legislation dealing with hazardous and other wastes and participation in the prior informed consent procedure of the amended London rules. All countries should comply with the notification provisions of the Basel Convention and the London Guidelines, and maintain an inventory of imports and exports, which could be used to control and monitor the transboundary movement of wastes. Efforts should be made to prevent the avoidance of waste designation as hazardous by sham recycling schemes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/226 without vote.

Traffic in and disposal, control and transboundary movements of toxic and dangerous products and wastes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/137 of 17 December 1982, 38/149 of 19 December 1983 and 39/229 of 18 December 1984, as well as its decision 41/450 of 8 December 1986,

Recalling also its resolution 42/183 of 11 December 1987 on traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes,

Recalling further its resolution 43/212 of 20 December 1988 entitled "Responsibility of States for the protection of the environment: prevention of the illegal international traffic in, and the dumping and resulting accumulation of, toxic and dangerous products and wastes affecting the developing countries in particular",

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1988/70 and 1988/71 of 28 July 1988 and taking note of Council resolution 1989/104 of 27 July 1989,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on products harmful to health and the environment and Economic and Social Council decision 1989/177 of 27 July 1989,

Taking note also of decisions 15/28 and 15/30 of 25 May 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes,

Taking note of the conclusion of the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal,

Inviting all States to consider signing the Basel Convention without prejudice to the final positions to be taken by regional intergovernmental organizations in this regard,

Mindful of the growing threat to the environment and to human health and safety posed by the improper management and the increased generation, complexity and transboundary movement of hazardous wastes,

Convinced that illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes poses a severe threat to the environment and to human health and safety,

Also convinced that these problems cannot be resolved without adequate co-operation among members of the international community,

Deeply concerned by the fact that cases of illegal transboundary movement and dumping of dangerous products and wastes particularly harmful for the environment and human health continue to occur, affecting, in particular, developing countries,

Convinced of the need to assist all countries, particularly developing countries, in obtaining all appropriate information concerning toxic and dangerous products and wastes and in reinforcing their capacity to detect and halt any illegal attempt to introduce toxic and dangerous products and wastes into the territory of any State in contravention of national legislation and relevant international legal instruments, as well as traffic not carried out in compliance with internationally accepted guidelines and principles in this field,

I

Traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes

1. Requests each regional commission, within existing resources, to contribute to the prevention of the illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes by monitoring and making regional assessments of this illegal traffic and its environmental and health implications, on a continuing basis, in each region, and, in this context, in co-operation with and relying upon expert support and advice from the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant bodies of the United Nations, including the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals, the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Prior Informed Consent and Other Modalities to Supplement the London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade, and the Interim Secretariat of the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal, without prejudice to the final position to be taken by regional inter-governmental organizations on the Convention, and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session starting in 1990;

2. Also requests the regional commissions to interact among themselves and co-operate with the United Nations Environment Programme, with a view to maintaining efficient and co-ordinated monitoring and assessment of the illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes;

3. Requests the Economic and Social Council to submit recommendations to the General Assembly on the findings and conclusions of the regional commissions, in their consideration of environmental issues;

4. calls upon all countries to co-operate with their respective regional commissions with the aim of preventing the illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes;

II

Protection against products harmful to health and the environment

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report on products harmful to health and the environment, which contains a review of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments;

2. Notes with appreciation the co-operative relationship established between the United Nations, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals for the preparation of the Consolidated List;

3. Notes, in this context, the need to utilize also the work being done by the Working Group on Export of Domestically Prohibited Goods and Other Hazardous Substances established by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and those activities which are currently under way within the framework of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in connection with implementation of prior informed consent schemes for chemicals and pesticides in international trade and which implement the system of information exchange envisaged by the developers of the Consolidated List, as well as the work being done under international agreements and conventions in related areas;

4. Expresses its appreciation for the growing co-operation by Governments in the preparation of the Consolidated List, and urges all Governments that have not yet done so to provide the necessary information for inclusion in updated versions of the Consolidated List;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, within existing resources, publication of the Consolidated List in English, French and Spanish, in accordance with demand, bearing in mind its resolution 39/229;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to undertake a special effort to ensure effective and wider dissemination of the Consolidated List in all appropriate circles;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General, in this context, to consider ways and means of ensuring more effective involvement of non-governmental organizations in promoting the dissemination and utilization of the Consolidated List;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the preparation of his next scheduled report on the question:

(a) To make specific suggestions on ways and means of providing technical co-operation, including through appropriate United Nations organizations, to countries, in particular developing countries, to create and strengthen their capacity to utilize the Consolidated List;

(b) To study all the pending issues, such as sustainable alternatives to banned and severely restricted products and unregistered pesticides, with a focus on improving the usefulness of the Consolidated List;

III

Control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal

1. Recognizes the necessity of developing rules of international law, as early as practicable, on liability and compensation for damage resulting from the transboundary movement and disposal of hazardous wastes;

2. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, in accordance with the resolutions adopted at the Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Global Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes, held at Basel Switzerland, from 20 to 22 March 1989, to establish, on the basis of equitable geographical representation and in consultation with Governments, an ad hoc working group of legal and technical experts to develop, as early as practicable, elements that might be included in a protocol on liability and compensation for damage resulting from the transboundary movement and disposal of hazardous wastes and to report to the preparatory committee of the United Nations conference on environment. and development and to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, in accordance with its mandate in this regard;

3. Invites the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization, in consultation, as appropriate, with other relevant international organizations, to review the existing rules, regulations and practices with respect to the disposal of hazardous wastes at sea, in order to harmonize the provisions of the relevant conventions as adopted in this regard;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress achieved in the implementation of the provisions of the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal and of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/226

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.7) without vote, 17 December (meeting 51); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.80), based on informal consultations on draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.43/Rev.1); agenda item 82 (f).

Dumping of nuclear wastes

By a May note,(20) the UNEP Executive Director, in response to a 1988 Economic and Social Council request,(21) submitted to the Governing Council the Secretary-General's report on the effects on the environment of dumping of nuclear wastes. The report, prepared by IAEA, examined national and international standards and procedures for waste disposal, the environmental impacts of the dumping of radioactive wastes, the transboundary movements of such wastes, future international co-operation in radioactive waste management and its impact on the transboundary movement of wastes, the issue of alleged dumping of radioactive wastes, and the code of practice for international transactions involving nuclear wastes. The report distinguished between disposal performed under regulatory control and illicit dumping. The consequences of dumping, it said, could vary from negligible to the exposure of whole population groups to significant hazards. There was, however, no evidence to date that any transboundary dumping of nuclear wastes had occurred; international transactions involving nuclear waste were based on bilateral agreements and took place under strict regulatory supervision. IAEA, in accordance with a 1988 resolution of its General Conference,(22) invited a group of experts to meet in Vienna, Austria, from 22 to 26 May to elaborate an internationally agreed code of practice for international transactions involving nuclear wastes. It was expected that the group of experts would complete its task in time for consideration by the IAEA General Conference in 1990.

On 25 May, the Governing Council took note(23) of the efforts of IAEA to elaborate an internationally agreed code of practice for international transactions involving nuclear wastes and requested the Executive Director to participate fully in its preparation.

The Secretary-General's report(24) was also submitted to the General Assembly, which took note of the report by decision 44/454 of 22 December.

Other risks

In March, the Executive Director submitted a report(25) on emerging environmental issues, which focused on health risks from diesel vehicles, acid fog, environmental issues in new technologies, algal blooms in the sea, and the need to develop an Antarctic conservation strategy and conventions for the environmental protection and management of the region's various ecosystems.

On 23 May, the Governing Council took note(26) of the Executive Director's report and of the reservations of various delegations with regard to the issue of Antarctica. It requested him to provide in 1991 a detailed elaboration of the issue of new technologies and a brief description of issues on municipal waste, plastics and the ecological situation in the Arctic.

Environmental emergencies

International co-operation

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/224 without vote.

International co-operation in the monitoring, assessment and anticipation of environmental threats and in assistance in cases of environmental emergency

The General Assembly,

Convinced that one of the main global problems facing the world today is the deterioration of the environment,

Recalling its resolution 43/196 of 20 December 1988 on a United Nations conference on environment and development,

Aware that increasing environmental degradation caused by human activities has led in some cases to irreversible changes in the environment that threaten life-sustaining ecosystems and undermine the health, well-being, development prospects and very survival of life on the planet,

Also aware that potential environmental disasters, whether natural, accidental or caused by human beings, as well as accidents, could pose serious and immediate dangers to populations and to the economic development and environment of the affected countries and regions,

Convinced that through monitoring, assessment, anticipation and prompt multilateral response upon request, in particular on the part of the United Nations system, environmental threats could be minimized or even prevented,

Also convinced that early warning of emerging environmental threats and degradation would help Governments to take preventive action,

Noting with appreciation the work undertaken by the United Nations Environment Programme to develop criteria for the identification of environmental threats at the national, regional and global levels,

Stressing the need for close co-operation between all countries, in particular through a broad exchange of information, scientific knowledge and experience as well as transfer of technology, in monitoring, assessing and anticipating environmental threats, dealing with environmental emergencies and rendering timely assistance, at the request of Governments, in accordance with respective national laws, regulations and policies and taking into account the particular needs and requirements of the developing countries,

Affirming the need, in this context, for closer co-operation between the United Nations Environment Programme, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the World Health Organization and the World Meteorological Organization, as well as other competent organs, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, bearing in mind the co-ordinating role of the United Nations Environment Programme in environmental matters in the United Nations system,

Noting that other proposals have been made on strengthening and improving the effectiveness within the United Nations system of international co-operation in monitoring, assessing and anticipating environmental threats and the rendering of timely assistance in cases of environmental emergency,

1. Recognizes the need to strengthen international co-operation in monitoring, assessing and anticipating environmental threats and rendering assistance in cases of environmental emergency;

2. Reaffirms that, owing to its universal character, the United Nations system, through the General Assembly, is the appropriate forum for concerted political action on global environmental problems;

3. Underlines the importance of broader participation in Earthwatch, established by the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment and operated by the United Nations Environment Programme, in order to strengthen its capacity to make authoritative assessments, to anticipate environmental degradation and to issue early warnings to the international community;

4. Reaffirms that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, States have the sovereign right to exploit their own resources in accordance with their environmental policies, and also reaffirms their responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction as well as to play their due role in preserving and protecting the global and regional environment in accordance with their capacities and specific responsibilities;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, assisted by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, to prepare a report, on the basis of the views of Member States and existing national and international legislation in this field, containing proposals and recommendations on possible ways and means to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations:

(a) To monitor, assess and anticipate environmental threats;

(b) To define criteria for determining when environmental degradation undermines health, well-being, development prospects and the very survival of life on the planet to such an extent that international co-operation may be required, if requested;

(c) To issue early warnings to the international community when such degradation becomes imminent;

(d) To facilitate intergovernmental co-operation in monitoring, assessing and anticipating environmental threats;

(e) To assist Governments facing environmental emergencies, at their request;

(f) To mobilize financial resources and technical co-operation to fulfil the tasks listed in paragraphs 5 (a) to (e) of the present resolution, taking into account the needs of the countries concerned, particularly the developing countries;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme the report called for in paragraph 5 of the present resolution for consideration during the preparatory process for the United Nations conference on environment and development;

7. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to consider that report and to present its views thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

22 December 1989

Meeting 85

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.7) without vote, 27 November (meeting 46); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.60), based on informal consultations on 15-nation draft (A.C.2/44/L.29/Rev.1), subsequently withdrawn: agenda item 82 (f).
Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 18, 21-24, 26, 31, 32, 35, 38, 40, 44, 46; plenary 85.

A 1988 draft resolution on the same subject,(27) the consideration of which had been deferred by the General Assembly,(28) was also withdrawn.

Proposed centre for urgent environmental assistance

In a 2 May letter(29) to the Secretary-General, the Soviet Union transmitted a 30 April letter outlining proposals concerning the establishment of a UN centre for emergency environmental assistance, and its objectives and functions.

On 25 May, the Governing Council requested(30) the Executive Director to invite Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies and competent regional organizations to express their views regarding the need for and the objectives, scope and functions of the proposed centre; to assess the contribution of such a centre to existing UNEP activities, WMO's Global Telecommunications System, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, IMO, IAEA and other relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies, and the advisability and financial implications of establishing such a centre; to inform the Assembly at its forty-fourth session of the preliminary results of that assessment and consultation; and to report to the Council in 1990.

The General Assembly, in resolution 44/229 of 22 December, noted the Governing Council's consideration of the proposed centre and information from the Executive Director on his consultations regarding the views of Governments and organizations on the matter.

Industrial accidents

On 25 May, the Governing Council noted⁽³¹⁾ the activities of the Executive Director in the field of industrial accidents.⁽²⁾ It called upon the United Nations and its specialized agencies, in particular the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, and NGOs and world industry to support the APELL (awareness and preparedness for industrial accidents at the local level) process. It requested the Executive Director to set up a network of organizations and experts to facilitate the exchange of information and technology for the prevention of industrial accidents, to assist in the case of emergencies, and to report to the Council on those efforts in 1990.

Major areas of concern

Global climate change

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), whose establishment in 1988 by UNEP and WMO was endorsed⁽¹⁾ by the General Assembly, continued to be the major forum for examining the issue of climate change within the framework of its three main working groups. The Group on the Scientific Aspects of Climate Change, at its first session (Nuneham Park, United Kingdom, 24-26 January), agreed on its terms of reference and on the format and authorship of its report. The Group on Environmental and Socio-economic Impacts resulting from Climate Change held two sessions during the year. At the first (Moscow, 2 and 3 February), the Group agreed on the principal focus of its work and established corresponding subgroups and a steering committee to co-ordinate and facilitate liaison with other

IPCC working groups. At its second session (Geneva, 31 October and 1 November), the Group reviewed the progress made by the different subgroups in compiling their reports. The first session of the Response Strategies Working Group (Washington, D.C., 30 January-1 February) established four subgroups and identified the basis of a multidisciplinary approach to the implementation of strategies in response to climate change. The Group's second session was held in Geneva from 2 to 6 October.

At its first session (6 and 7 February), the IPCC Bureau reviewed work plans, proposed the structure of the three working groups, made recommendations on the structure of IPCC's first assessment report, and endorsed the budget for the secretariat. It established an ad hoc group to examine and report on the low level of participation of developing countries in IPCC activities. At its second session (Nairobi, 28-30 June), the Bureau endorsed progress reports of the working groups and of the ad hoc group on developing countries' participation. IPCC established a trust fund to finance its activities and set a target of $1 million to support the participation of developing countries. A target date of 1990 was set for the completion of the first assessment report on climate change, which would consist of the reports of the three working groups. It also agreed to establish the elements for a future convention on climate change and decided that the first assessment report of the work of IPCC should form the starting-point for negotiations on a framework convention on climate change.

In March, the Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council a report on global climate change.⁽²⁾ In September, the Secretary-General, in response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ submitted to the Assembly a report⁽³⁾ on protection of global climate for present and future generations. He reported that he had brought that resolution to the attention of concerned parties, but had received only a small number of replies, mainly from international organizations.

On 25 May, the Governing Council requested⁽⁴⁾ the Executive Director, in collaboration with the WMO Secretary-General, to consult with IPCC on the determination of its internal organization and procedures, its budget and financing, and authorized him to support the work of IPCC. It urged UN Member States, specialized agencies and international organizations, including IAEA, and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support and participate in the work of IPCC. It also urged IPCC to ensure the scientific and policy participation of developing countries in its work, and recommended that the international community provide assistance in that respect. The Council requested the Executive Director, in co-operation with the WMO Secretary-General, to begin preparations for negotiations on a framework convention on climate, taking into account the outcome of recent and forthcoming international meetings on the subject. Such negotiations should be initiated as soon as possible after the adoption of the interim report of IPCC. Governments and competent regional integration economic organizations should consider options for averting the potentially damaging impacts of climate change, for removing its causes and for developing programmes more appropriate to national needs. The Council also recommended the institution of programmes and measures of assistance, including technology transfer, that would make it possible for developing countries to avoid global climate risks. Governments should also increase their activities in support of the UNEP World Climate Programme and International Geosphere-Biosphere Programme, including the monitoring of atmospheric composition and climate conditions, and the international community should support efforts by developing countries to participate in those scientific activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/207 without vote.

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/53 of 6 December 1988, in which it recognized climate change as a common concern of mankind,

Taking note of decision 15/36 of 25 May 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on global climate change,

Taking note of the message of the Chairman of the Conference on Saving the Ozone Layer, held in London from 5 to 7 March 1989, the Declaration of The Hague endorsed by 24 heads of State or Government or their representatives at The Hague 11 March 1989, the Helsinki Declaration on the Protection of the Ozone Layer adopted on 2 May 1989, the relevant parts of the Langkawi Declaration on Environment issued by the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting on 21 October 1989, the Declaration adopted at Noordwijk, the Netherlands, by the Ministerial Conference on Atmospheric Pollution and Climate Change, held on 6 and 7 November 1989, and relevant parts of the Caracas Declaration adopted at the special ministerial meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, held at Caracas from 21 to 23 June 1989,

Taking note of the relevant declarations and decisions adopted at intergovernmental regional meetings during 1989, including the Amazon Declaration, adopted by the Presidents of the States parties to the Treaty for Amazonian Co-operation at Manaus, Brazil, on 6 May 1989, the Declaration of Brasilia, issued at the Sixth Ministerial Meeting on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean, held at Brasilia on 30 and 31 March 1989, and the relevant parts of the Final Communiqué of the Twentieth South Pacific Forum, held at Tarawa, Kiribati, on 10 and 11 July 1989,

Noting that, in the Economic Declaration adopted in Paris on 16 July 1989, at the Summit of the seven major industrial nations, the heads of State or Government of those countries and the President of the Commission of the European Communities supported the decision of the World Meteorological Organization to establish a global reference network to detect climate change, agreed that a framework convention on climate was urgently required and recognized that specific protocols with commitments could develop within this framework,

Taking note of the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, which, inter alia, emphasized that necessary and timely action should be taken to deal with climate changes and their consequences within a global framework and, in this context, called for the preparation and adoption of a framework convention on climate on an urgent basis in conformity with General Assembly resolution 43/53,

Recognizing the need for additional research and scientific studies into all sources, causes and effects of climate change,

Noting the fact that the largest part of the current emission of pollutants into the environment originates in developed countries, and recognizing therefore that those countries have the main responsibility for combating such pollution,

Recognizing the need for international collaboration with a view to adopting effective measures on the question of climate change, within a global framework and taking into account the particular needs and development priorities of developing countries,

Concerned that the participation of the developing countries in the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change remains limited, and stressing the need for the Intergovernmental Panel, in view of its intergovernmental nature, to do all that it can to ensure adequate participation and governmental involvement in its activities in accordance with United Nations practice,

1. Emphasizes the need to address with urgency the question of climate change as reflected in the conclusions of various important international meetings;

2. Recommends that Governments, with due consideration for the need for increased scientific knowledge of the sources, causes and impact of climate change and of global, regional and local climates, continue and, wherever possible, increase their activities in support of the World Climate Programme and the International Geosphere-Biosphere Programme, including the monitoring of atmospheric composition and climate conditions, and also recommends that the international community support efforts by developing countries to participate in these scientific activities;

3. Urges Governments, in keeping with their national policies, priorities and regulations, and intergovernmental organizations to collaborate in making every possible effort to limit, reduce and prevent activities that could adversely affect climate, and calls upon non-governmental organizations, industry and other productive sectors to play their due role;

4. Reaffirms that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, States have the sovereign right to exploit their own resources in accordance with their environmental policies, and also reaffirms their responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and to play their due role in preserving and protecting the global and regional environment in accordance with their capacities and specific responsibilities;

5. Reaffirms that, owing to its universal character, the United Nations system, through the General Assembly, is the appropriate forum for concerted political action on global environmental problems;

6. Welcomes the joint efforts of the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme in providing support to the urgent work being undertaken by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and its three working groups established to assess scientific information on, and the social and economic impact of, climate change and to formulate response strategies;

7. Invites all Governments, as well as relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to support fully and participate actively in the work of the Intergovernmental Panel;

8. Welcomes the establishment of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change Trust Fund and the contributions made to it;

9. Urges the Intergovernmental Panel to take the necessary steps to ensure the participation of developing countries in scientific and policy aspects of its work, and calls upon the international community, in particular the developed countries, to consider contributing generously to the Trust Fund, with a view to financing the participation of experts designated by Governments of developing countries in all the meetings of the Intergovernmental Panel, including its working groups and subgroups;

10. Supports the request made by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, in its decision 15/36, that the Executive Director of the Programme, in co-operation with the Secretary-General of the World Meteorological Organization, begin preparations for negotiations on a framework convention on climate, taking into account the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, as well as the results achieved at international meetings on the subject, including the Second World Climate Conference, and recommends that such negotiations begin as soon as possible after the adoption of the interim report of the Intergovernmental Panel and that the General Assembly, at an early date during its forty-fifth session, take a decision recommending ways and means and modalities for pursuing these negotiations further, taking into account the work of the preparatory committee for the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in 1992;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate for the information of delegations the reports of the third and fourth plenary meetings of the Intergovernmental Panel, as well as its interim report, as official documents of the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

12. Urges Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and scientific institutions to collaborate in efforts to prepare, as a matter of urgency, a framework convention on climate and associated protocols containing concrete commitments in the light of priorities that may be authoritatively identified on the basis of sound scientific knowledge, and taking into account the specific development needs of developing countries

13. Recommends that Governments and competent intergovernmental organizations consider, while awaiting the outcome of the negotiations, the range of possible options for averting the potentially damaging impact of climate change, for removing the causes of the phenomenon and for developing programmes for implementing those options which respond more appropriately to national needs as outlined in paragraphs 11 (a) to (f) of decision 15/36 of the Governing Council;

14. Encourages Governments and relevant international organizations to further the development of international funding mechanisms, taking account of proposals for a climate fund and other innovative ideas and bearing in mind the need to provide new and additional financial resources to support developing countries in identifying, analysing, monitoring, preventing and managing environmental problems, primarily at their source, in accordance with national development goals, objectives and plans, so as to ensure that development priorities are not adversely affected;

15. Decides that the concept of assured access for developing countries to environmentally sound technologies and assured transfer of those technologies to developing countries on favourable terms and the relation of that concept to intellectual property rights should be explored in the context of the elaboration of a framework convention on climate, with a view to developing effective responses to the needs of developing countries in this area;

16. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of ongoing intergovernmental and other efforts in this field, to continue his support for the formulation and implementation of strategies to respond to climate change;

17. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, as well as intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and scientific institutions with expertise in matters concerning climate;

18. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution;

19. Decides to include this question in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session, without prejudice to the application of the principle of biennialization.

General Assembly resolution 44/207

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/862) without vote, 17 December (meeting 51); 51-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.40/Rev.1); agenda item 85. Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 18, 21-24, 33, 35, 40, 45, 48, 51; plenary 85.

The Assembly, by decision 44/446 of the same date, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind.(3)

Protection of the ozone layer

In 1989, UNEP continued to work on implementation of the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer(5) and the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer.(6) Four panels were established to review the scientific, environmental, technical and economic information required so that the parties to the Montreal Protocol could undertake a review of control measures. The scientific review found that man-made chemicals containing halogens were primarily responsible for the springtime loss of Antarctic ozone; the same potentially ozone-destroying processes for the Antarctic ozone hole had been identified in the Arctic stratosphere, and the possibility of future significant ozone destruction could not be ruled out; there had been a downward trend in ozone concentrations in the northern hemisphere of 3 to 5 per cent from 1969 to 1988, which could not be attributed to natural processes; and there was continuing uncertainty about the predictive capability of current models, particularly with regard to future ozone changes at high altitudes. Those findings had had important implications for the parties to the Montreal Protocol with regard to the decision to amend the existing control measures for ozone-depleting substances.

An international meeting, "Saving the Ozone Layer Conference", convened in London in March by the United Nations with the support of UNEP, underscored the importance of protecting the ozone shield. There was a consensus among representatives from 120 countries that all countries should aim at ending the production and consumption of chlorofluorocarbons by the end of the century.

On 25 May, the Governing Council noted(7) the entry into force of the Montreal Protocol on 1 January 1989 (see above, under "International conventions"), and urged all countries that had not done so to become parties to it and to the Vienna Convention. It also noted the offer of Finland to make available some 8.6 million markkaa to facilitate activities of developing countries within the scope of the Vienna Convention and the Montreal Protocol. The Council welcomed the proposal by Norway to set aside 0.1 per cent of its annual gross national income towards an international climate fund, provided other industrialized countries did likewise. It requested the Executive Director to support activities as approved by the parties to the Vienna Convention and the Montreal Protocol, until the establishment of the trust fund and the permanent secretariat.

In a June note,(8) the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly the report of the UNEP Executive Director, pursuant to a 1987 Assembly request,(9) in which he reported on decisions adopted by the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention and the first meeting of the parties to the Montreal Protocol, which were held at Helsinki, Finland, from 26 to 28 April and from 2 to 5 May, respectively.

The General Assembly, by decision 44/454 of 22 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Sea-level rise

In a 20 November letter(10) to the Secretary-General, Maldives transmitted the text of the Malé Declaration on Global Warming and Sea Level Rise, adopted by the Small States Conference on Sea Level Rise, held at Malé, Maldives, from 14 to 18 November. Conference participants decided to adopt a programme of action for co-operation and exchange of information on strategies and policies relating to climate change, global warming and sea-level rise, to establish an action group to oversee implementation of Conference recommendations, and a climate and sea-level programme and a monitoring network, and to apply to UN agencies, particularly WMO, UNEP and UNESCO, for assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/206 without vote.

Possible adverse effects of sea-level rise on islands and coastal areas, particularly low-lying coastal areas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/202 of 11 December 1987 and 43/53 of 6 December 1988,

Aware of the potential global problem of sea-level rise, which could adversely affect islands and coastal areas, particularly low-lying coastal areas,

Recognizing the need for further scientific study of climate change, including the possibility of sea-level rise induced by global warming,

Noting the ongoing work within the United Nations system, in particular within the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Meteorological Organization and the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, on the potential global problem of sea-level rise, and taking note, in this connection, of decision 15/36 of 25 May 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on global climate change,

Noting also the concern expressed in the Final Communiqué of the Twentieth South Pacific Forum, held at Tarawa, Kiribati, on 10 and 11 July 1989, at the possible effects on island countries of rising sea levels resulting from global warming,

Noting further the support expressed in the Langkawi Declaration on Environment, adopted by the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting on 21 October 1989, for low-lying and island countries in their efforts to protect themselves and their vulnerable natural marine ecosystems from the effects of sea-level rise,

Taking note of the Malé Declaration on Global Warming and Sea Level Rise, adopted by the Small States Conference on Sea Level Rise, held at Malé, Maldives, from 14 to 18 November 1989, in which the participants declared their intent to work, collaborate and seek international co-operation to protect the low-lying small coastal and island States of the world from the dangers posed by climate change, global warming and sea-level rise, Expressing concern that sea-level rise resulting from global climate change could lead, inter alia, to abnormally high tides, which could intensify flooding and the erosion of coastal areas and damage infrastructure on islands and in low-lying coastal areas,

1. Welcomes the growing attention being given worldwide to the potentially serious effects on islands and coastal areas, particularly low-lying coastal areas, of sea-level rise resulting from climate change;

2. Urges the international community to provide effective and timely support to countries affected by sea-level rise, particularly developing countries, in their efforts to develop and implement strategies to protect themselves and their vulnerable natural marine ecosystems from the particular threats of sea-level rise caused by climate change;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Meteorological Organization and, through them, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to take account in their work of the particular situation of islands and coastal areas, particularly low-lying coastal areas, by undertaking further scientific studies and by seeking ways to address the problems of sea-level rise, inter alia, by providing expertise, as requested, in accordance with their specific mandates, for improved management of coastal zones;

4. Recommends that the vulnerability of affected countries and their marine ecosystems to sea-level rise be considered during discussions of a draft framework convention on climate as well as within the framework of the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in 1992 and during the preparatory process for the conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council and the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme.

General Assembly resolution 44/206

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/862) without vote, 4 December (meeting 48); 46-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.38/Rev.1); agenda item 85. Meeting numbers. GA 46th session: 2nd Committee 18, 21-24, 33, 35, 40, 45, 48; plenary 85.

Desertification

In 1989, UNEP continued to implement the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.⁽¹¹⁾ It focused its efforts on engaging countries affected by desertification and donors to search for effective institutional mechanisms to integrate desertification control programmes into national development plans and priorities. In that regard, it held consultations with Argentina, Mali, Mauritania, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen. UNEP also initiated action for the development and assessment of simple technologies for application in regions prone to desertification, and assisted selected countries in the identification and development of methodologies to assess and map desertification. Other activities related to reinforcing regional networking, subregional projects and development of a global data base.

The Inter-Agency Working Group on Desertification (IAWGD) supported and co-ordinated a number of regional networks of training and research institutions dealing with sand-dune stabilization and afforestation and supported NGOs in Africa, Asia and Latin America. UNEP assisted NGOs in Asia to administer national forums, with a view to setting up a regional network for NGOs. UNEP also established the Desertification Information System to deal with information related to drylands development and desertification processes.

In February, the Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council a report⁽¹²⁾ on the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, which discussed the Special Account to finance the implementation of the Plan and additional financing measures; ways of enhancing the efficiency of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control; and measures to enhance the work of IAWGD and implementation of the Plan of Action, particularly in the Sudano-Sahelian region.

On 25 May, the Council invited⁽¹³⁾ affected countries to prepare national programmes to combat desertification within the framework of national plans for development of natural resources and rehabilitation of impaired ecosystems; provide appropriate resources for the implementation of the programme for combating desertification; and establish or strengthen machineries to mobilize national resources for implementing the national programme and for monitoring progress. It invited donor Governments and intergovernmental bodies, including aid agencies and NGOs, to accord high priority in their bilateral and multilateral activities to national programmes for combating desertification and for the rehabilitation of degraded land resources, and to take into account the promotion of long-term ecological and social rehabilitation programmes in areas prone to desertification. The Council requested IAWGD to implement measures to enhance its work. The Executive Director was asked to assist countries to develop programmes for combating desertification and to include in UNEP's proposed programme budget for 1990-1991 activities on pastoral nomadism and to invite other UN agencies and donors to support such activities. It further requested an external evaluation of the Plan of Action, with its results to be presented in time for the 1992 UN conference on environment and development, but not later than the 1991 session of the Governing Council.

In related action, the Council recommended(14) the abolition of the United Nations Special Account to finance the implementation of the Plan of Action. It asked that the Consultative Group for Desertification Control hold sessions every two years (in even-numbered years starting from 1990), to review the status of the Plan of Action and to exchange information on scientific research, national programmes and the implementation of the Plan of Action, as well as to advise on further action against desertification. It invited the international community to create the necessary economic and financial conditions to enable countries prone to desertification to appropriate part of their resources to combat that phenomenon.

The Assembly, in resolution 44/172 A of 19 December, approved the Council's recommendations relating to the Special Account and additional measures for financing the Plan of Action.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to a 1987 General Assembly request,(15) submitted a May report(16) on African countries stricken by desertification and drought. He drew attention to various other reports on the subjects of desertification and drought and to the activities of the specialized agencies.

In a July report(17) on the implementation of three 1987 Assembly resolutions,(18) the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly a report(12) of the UNEP Governing Council on the Special Account.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/102 without vote.

Plan of Action to Combat Desertification The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 42/189 of 11 December 1987 concerning the implementation and financing of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, in particular resolution 42/189 B concerning the implementation of the Plan in the Sudano-Sahelian region,

Taking note with interest of the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 42/189 A, B and C,

Noting that the delay in the availability of documentation prevented the Council from giving full consideration to this question,

Decides to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, for in-depth consideration and appropriate action, the reports of the Secretary-General and of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and decision 15/23 of 25 May 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, as well as the draft resolution contained in the annex to decision 15/23 D, together with the views and comments expressed at the second regular session of 1989 of the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/102

27 July 1989 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/140) without vote, 20 July (meeting 24); draft by Mauritania (E/1989/C.1/L.13), orally revised; agenda item 7 (g).

On the same date, the Council, in resolution 1989/103 on countries stricken by desertification and drought in Africa, appealed to the international community, particularly donor countries, while maintaining their support for the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, to continue to support the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development and the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification.

The General Assembly, in decision 44/437 of 19 December, endorsed Council resolution 1989/103.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/172 A without vote.

Implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/172 of 19 December 1977, by which it approved the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, and all its subsequent resolutions on the subject,

Recalling also its resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, by which it adopted the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, which identified measures to combat desertification as a priority,

Bearing in mind the draft resolution to be adopted at the present session, concerning the United Nations conference on environment and development, to be held in 1992, fifteen years after the adoption of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Deeply concerned that the problem of desertification, which has a global impact, is still on the fringe of the growing awareness on the part of the international community that it is imperative to combat environmental deterioration effectively within the framework of the interdependence of nations,

Gravely concerned by the continuing spread and intensification of desertification in developing countries, particularly in Africa, and the indescribable human suffering, economic and financial losses and social disruption caused by that scourge,

Aware that drought and desertification place a considerable burden on the economic and financial capacities of the developing countries affected and that the negative effects of the international economic environment impede their efforts to undertake effective and sustained programmes to combat desertification, for which they bear primary responsibility,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 42/189 A, B and C of 11 December 1987 and of the relevant section of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme;

2. Expresses its deep concern about the inadequacy of financial resources for the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

3. Urges Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to increase and intensify their efforts to combat desertification and to accord the highest priority to the recommendations contained in the Plan of Action;

4. Invites the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to consult the principal international organizations, private foundations, individuals and the major media enterprises that finance or promote environmental protection activities in order to draw their attention to the compelling need to consider desertification control on an equal footing with other current environmental issues;

5. Invites the United Nations conference on environment and development, to be held in 1992, to accord high priority to desertification control and to deploy all means necessary, including financial, scientific and technological resources, to halt and reverse the process of desertification with a view to preserving the ecological balance of the planet;

6. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to contribute substantially to the discussion on desertification at the conference, inter alia, by undertaking a general evaluation, sufficiently in advance of the conference, of the progress achieved in implementing the Plan of Action;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, to submit to the conference, through its preparatory committee, a report containing relevant expert studies on, inter alia, the following:

(a) Relevant suggestions and proposals formulated within the United Nations system on the possibility of utilizing new methods to finance the programmes of multilateral organizations at the global level, over and above regular budgets and conventional extrabudgetary resources;

(b) The state of implementation of the Plan of Action and objectives and courses of action to further the struggle against desertification, including an evaluation of the additional resources needed in order to attain the minimum objectives of the struggle against desertification;

(c) Ways and means of promoting, in particular in the developing countries, research into and development of existing and potential technology to combat desertification and procedures for the transfer of such technology on favourable terms, in particular to developing countries;

(d) Possibilities for obtaining loans on concessional terms, from Governments and other sources, to finance the struggle against desertification;

(e) Possibilities for reducing the impact of desertification, including reafforestation, with the help of mechanisms involving the cancellation or reduction of external debt;

(f) Possibilities for strengthening and co-ordinating the activities of funds established for that purpose in various international institutions;

(g) Ways of encouraging the active participation of non-governmental organizations, foundations and individuals in the financing of training and scientific research programmes to combat desertification, including reafforestation programmes;

8. Decides to close the Special Account to finance the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, and requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to take the necessary steps to do so;

9. Also decides that the Consultative Group for Desertification Control will meet every year until the conference on environment and development is held in 1992 and every two years thereafter, and reaffirms its mandate as contained in resolutions 32/172 of 19 December 1977 and 39/168 of 17 December 1984;

10. Calls upon the Consultative Group, in co-operation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, to contribute to the enhancement of awareness of environmental issues and to intensify its efforts to mobilize additional resources, to exchange information on scientific research, national programmes and the implementation of the Plan of Action and to give its opinions on the actions to be undertaken in the battle against desertification;

11. Urges the Governments of countries affected by desertification to accord high priority, in their national development plans, to medium-term and long-term strategies and programmes for desertification control;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, together with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the various provisions of the present resolution, and to ensure that it is submitted, immediately after publication, to the preparatory committee for the United Nations conference on environment and development.

19 December 1989 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.8) without vote, 11 December (meeting 49): draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.72), based on informal consultations on 13-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.33); agenda item 82 (g).

Sudano-Sahelian region

In 1989, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO), which was responsible for implementing the Plan of Action in the region, focused on the protection and rehabilitation of natural productive resources and the promotion of sustainable development in 22 Sudano-Sahelian countries. It continued to assist Governments in the planning and co-ordination of anti-desertification activities. Its strategy entailed close co-operation with Governments in formulating strategic policy frameworks and programmes to protect the productive capacity of the natural resources of each country. In the United Republic of Tanzania, UNSO helped to establish a Drought and Desertification Control Unit within the National Environment Council, and assisted in preparing a national plan to combat desertification, establishing a data base and mapping areas threatened by desertification. In Kenya, it supported the planning and formulation of desertification control policies and programmes, and assisted Mali in improving its operational and institutional capacities to monitor and co-ordinate its desertification control efforts. Activities in planning and co-ordination also took place in Chad, Guinea-Bissau and Mauritania.

In 1989, UNSO's ongoing projects focusing on deforestation control, rangeland management and water resources development, soil protection and sand-dune stabilization and integrated land management reached a value of some $100 million. Total resources mobilized through the UNSO Trust Fund were $37.5 million, an increase of more than 37 per cent over 1988.

In April, the UNDP Administrator presented to the UNDP Governing Council a report(19) on UNSO activities in 1988.

On 25 May, the UNEP Governing Council requested(20) UNSO to consider the Council's recommendations on implementation of the Plan of Action and authorized the Executive Director to continue to support the Office as a joint venture with UNDP. It invited him and the UNDP Administrator to intensify efforts to mobilize resources for continued assistance to the countries served by the Office.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/172 B without vote.

Implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/170 of 19 December 1977, 33/88 of 15 December 1978, 34/187 of 18 December 1979, 35/72 of 5 December 1980, 36/190 of 17 December 1981, 37/216 of 20 December 1982, 38/164 of 19 December 1983, 39/168 B and 39/206 of 17 December 1984, 40/198 B of 17 December 1985, S-13/2 of 1 June 1986 and 42/189 B of 11 December 1987,

Rearranging in mind the particularly serious nature of the problem of desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region and of the critical situations it creates, which impede the economic and social development of the region and have tragic implications for the living conditions of the population,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, as well as the relevant section of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme;

2. Stresses with deep concern:

(a) That desertification in the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region has worsened and that it has spread to other regions of Africa;

(b) That the chronic insufficiency of financial resources continues to pose obstacles to desertification control;

(c) That the struggle against desertification requires financial and technical resources beyond the means of the affected countries;

3. Urges the affected countries that have not yet done so to include projects to combat desertification and drought in their national development plans and to accord high priority to them;

4. Also urges the affected countries to use all appropriate mechanisms, including the round-table meetings of the United Nations Development Programme and the consultative groups of the World Bank, to mobilize resources for the implementation of programmes to combat desertification, and appeals to donor countries to provide substantial additional resources for the financing of such programmes;

5. Notes with satisfaction that the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office has endorsed the concept of sustainable development in adopting a global approach to the question of the management and conservation of natural resources and to environmental issues and in emphasizing the importance of the incorporation of desertification control activities in national development plans;

6. Urges the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to assist the countries of the region with their preparations for the United Nations conference on environment and development, to be held in 1992, and with the resulting follow-up activities;

7. Notes with appreciation the interest displayed at the Summit of the seven major industrial nations, held in Paris from 14 to 16 July 1989, in aspects of the struggle against desertification and, specifically, in the planned observatory for the Sahara and the Sahel;

8. Expresses its gratitude to those Governments which contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities, and renews its urgent appeal to all members of the donor community to contribute substantially to the Trust Fund in order to enable the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to respond more effectively to the pressing needs of the African countries stricken by desertification;

9. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to strengthen their common undertaking to support the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office;

10. Invites the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office:

(a) To intensify its efforts to mobilize additional resources to support the efforts of the countries covered under its mandate and of the relevant regional organizations, in particular the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development and the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel;

(b) To continue to support the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Economic Community of West African States, in the Maghreb countries, in Egypt and in the Sudan (COMIDES) and, in this context, to co-operate with the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and with the Arab Maghreb Union.

19 December 1989 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.8) without vote, 11 December (meeting 49); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.72), based on informal consultations on 13-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.33); agenda item 82 (g).

Marine ecosystems

Protection of the marine environment

Work continued under the direction of the Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution (GESAMP) on a major global review of the state of the marine environment. Based in part on 14 regional reports prepared with UNEP support, a GESAMP working group of the world's leading specialists analysed and prepared a summary of the health of the oceans.

In the light of the growing concern about the possibilities of a major climate change and sea-level rise as a result of the greenhouse effect, a significant effort was made, through a series of UNEP-supported regional teams, to determine the potential effects of the changes on coastal and marine areas, with particular emphasis on vulnerable islands. Two new task teams were formed, for eastern and western Africa, and the first regional intergovernmental meeting was held to present the results to government planners and policy makers.

Planning continued for the development of a globally co-ordinated marine pollution monitoring system. Under the general supervision of UNEP's Oceans and Coastal Areas Programme Activity Centre (OCA/PAC), work continued on the standard set of reference methods for marine pollution studies. Those methods, prepared through the collaboration of several international agencies, were designed to ensure the high quality and comparability of data from all regions of the world.

On 25 May, the Governing Council recommended(21) that Governments adopt the "principle of precautionary action" as the basis of their policies with regard to the prevention and elimination of marine pollution. It urged all eligible Governments that had not done so to become contracting parties to all relevant conventions. The international community was to work towards the complete elimination of the practice of dumping of pollutants liable to endanger the marine environment.

In a decision on pollution of the Red Sea, the Council emphasized(22) the need to combat pollution by oil and other harmful substances and to mobilize resources beyond those available in the area. It requested the Executive Director to prepare, in co-operation with IMO and relevant organizations, an inventory of available equipment and expertise for combating, surveying and containing pollution, as well as for shore clean-up, in cases of pollution by oil and other harmful substances, which could be made available for immediate response in any affected regional sea. It also requested that regional and subregional arrangements be developed where such arrangements did not exist so as to facilitate immediate response on either a reciprocal or a payment basis, and that Governments participating in the UNEP regional seas programme, in co-operation with IMO, facilitate the preparation of the inventory and develop customs procedures to promote the mobility of equipment.

Offshore mining

In a February report,(23) the Executive Director updated information on environmental co-operation concerning natural resources shared by two or more States. The report was based on replies received from Governments and international organizations in response to requests for information on the implementation of the principles of conduct in the field of the environment for the guidance of States in the conservation and harmonious utilization of shared natural resources,(24) as well as the conclusions of a 1981 study on the legal aspects concerning the environment related to offshore mining and drilling within the limits of national jurisdiction.(25) On 25 May, the Governing Council noted(26) the Executive Director's report, and called on Governments and international organizations to take further action to implement the principles of conduct and the conclusions of the study.

"Extraterritorial spaces"

In an 11 August letter(27) to the Secretary-General, Malta requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly under item 82, "Development and international economic co-operation", a supplementary sub-item entitled "Environmental protection of extraterritorial spaces for present and future generations". Malta explained that the environmental protection of “extraterritorial spaces”, such as the high seas, was vital to safeguard the global environment, and proposed that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to establish, through the Executive Director of UNEP, a group of eminent persons to prepare a study and make recommendations on how the effective and comprehensive environmental protection of such spaces could best be achieved.

On 20 November, Malta submitted a draft resolution(28) also on behalf of Maldives, Mali, Morocco, Paraguay, Togo and Vanuatu, entitled “Environmental protection of extraterritorial spaces for present and future generations”, by which the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to establish such a group.

By decision 44/451 of 22 December, the General Assembly decided to take no action on the draft resolution.

Driftnet fishing

In a 28 November letter(29) to the Secretary-General, New Zealand, also on behalf of Australia, Fiji, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Solomon Islands and Vanuatu, transmitted a press communiqué issued by the South Pacific Driftnet Fishing Conference (Wellington, New Zealand, 21-24 November). The Conference adopted the Convention on the Prohibition of Driftnet Fishing in the South Pacific, which called for an immediate ban on the practice of driftnet fishing in the South Pacific Commission region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/225 without vote.

Large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas

The General Assembly,

Noting that many countries are disturbed by the increase in the use of large-scale pelagic driftnets, which can reach or exceed 30 miles (48 kilometres) in total length, to catch living marine resources on the high seas of the world's oceans and seas,

Mindful that large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing, a method of fishing with a net or a combination of nets intended to be held in a more or less vertical position by floats and weights, the purpose of which is to enmesh fish by drifting on the surface of or in the water, can be a highly indiscriminate and wasteful fishing method that is widely considered to threaten the effective conservation of living marine resources, such as highly migratory and anadromous species of fish, birds and marine mammals,

Drawing attention to the fact that the present resolution does not address the question of small-scale driftnet fishing traditionally conducted in coastal waters, especially by developing countries, which provides an important contribution to their subsistence and economic development,

Expressing concern that, in addition to targeted species of fish, non-targeted fish, marine mammals, seabirds and other living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas can become entangled in large-scale pelagic driftnets, either in those in active use or in those that are lost or discarded, and as a result of such entanglement are often either injured or killed,

Recognizing that more than one thousand fishing vessels use large-scale pelagic driftnets in the Pacific, Atlantic and Indian Oceans and in other areas of the high seas,

Recognizing also that any regulatory measure to be taken for the conservation and management of living marine resources should take account of the best available scientific data and analysis,

Recalling the relevant principles elaborated in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

Affirming that, in accordance with the relevant articles of the Convention, all members of the international community have a duty to co-operate globally and regionally in the conservation and management of living resources on the high seas, and a duty to take, or to co-operate with others in taking, such measures for their nationals as may be necessary for the conservation of those resources,

Recalling that, in accordance with the relevant articles of the Convention, it is the responsibility of all members of the international community to ensure the conservation and management of living marine resources and the protection and preservation of the living marine environment within their exclusive economic zones,

Noting the serious concern, particularly among coastal States and States with fishing interests, that the overexploitation of living marine resources of the high seas adjacent to the exclusive economic zones of coastal States is likely to have an adverse impact on the same resources within such zones, and noting also, in this regard, the responsibility for co-operation in accordance with the relevant articles of the Convention,

Noting also that the countries of the South Pacific Forum and the South Pacific Commission, in recognition of the importance of living marine resources to the people of the South Pacific region, have called for a cessation of such fishing in the South Pacific and the implementation of effective management programmes,

Taking note of the adoption of the Tarawa Declaration on this subject by the Twentieth South Pacific Forum at Tarawa, Kiribati, on 11 July 1989 and the adoption by South Pacific States and territories of the Convention on the Prohibition of Driftnet Fishing in the South Pacific, at Wellington on 24 November 1989,

Noting that some members of the international community have entered into co-operative enforcement and monitoring programmes for the immediate evaluation of the impact of large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing,

Recognizing that some members of the international community have taken steps to reduce their driftnet operations in some regions in response to regional concerns,

1. Calls upon all members of the international community, particularly those with fishing interests, to strengthen their co-operation in the conservation and management of living marine resources;

2. Calls upon all those involved in large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing to co-operate fully with the international community, and especially with coastal States and the relevant international and regional organizations, in the enhanced collection and sharing of statistically sound scientific data in order to continue to assess the impact of such fishing methods and to secure conservation of the world's living marine resources;

3. Recommends that all interested members of the international community, particularly within regional organizations, continue to consider and, no later than 30 June 1991, review the best available scientific data on the impact of large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing, and agree upon further co-operative regulation and monitoring measures, as needed;

4. Also recommends that all members of the international community, bearing in mind the special role of regional organizations and regional and bilateral co-operation in the conservation and management of living marine resources as reflected in the relevant articles of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, agree to the following measures:

(a) Moratoria on all large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing on the high seas by 30 June 1992, with the understanding that such a measure will not be imposed in a region or, if implemented, can be lifted, should effective conservation and management measures be taken based upon statistically sound analysis to be jointly made by concerned parties of the international community with an interest in the fishery resources of the region, to prevent the unacceptable impact of such fishing practices on that region and to ensure the conservation of the living marine resources of that region;

(b) Immediate action to reduce progressively large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing activities in the South Pacific region leading to the cessation of such activities by 1 July 1991, as an interim measure, until appropriate conservation and management arrangements for South Pacific albacore tuna resources are entered into by the parties concerned;

(c) Immediate cessation of further expansion of large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing on the high seas of the North Pacific and all the other high seas outside the Pacific Ocean, with the understanding that this measure will be reviewed subject to the conditions in paragraph 4 (a) of the present resolution;

5. Encourages those coastal countries which have exclusive economic zones adjacent to the high seas to take appropriate measures and to co-operate in the collection and submission of scientific information on driftnet fishing in their own exclusive economic zones, taking into account the measures taken for the conservation of living marine resources of the high seas;

6. Requests specialized agencies, particularly the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and other appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as the various regional and subregional fisheries organizations, urgently to study large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing and its impact on living marine resources and to report their views to the Secretary-General;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, and well-established scientific institutions with expertise in relation to living marine resources;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/225

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.7) without vote, 15 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.81), based on informal consultations on draft by Japan (A/C.2/44/L.28/Rev.1) and on 18-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.30/Rev.1); agenda item 82 (f).
Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 31, 32, 40, 44, 46, 49-50; plenary 85.

Freshwater issues

UNEP's efforts related to fresh water focused on the management of lake and river basins, particularly the implementation of the Zambezi Action Plan.⁽³⁰⁾ In co-operation with the International Institute for Applied System Analysis, a computer-oriented programme for the Zambezi decision support system was developed and tested. In July, a training seminar was organized in Kariba, Zimbabwe, to demonstrate the system to professionals from the countries participating in the Zambezi Action Plan.

At the second meeting of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (AMCEN) Committee on River and Lake Basins, which was held in Harare, Zimbabwe, in April, priorities were established for subregional activities in Africa. Following a decision of AMCEN to support the Lake Chad Basin Commission to halt the drying-up of Lake Chad and to use its waters and ecosystems rationally during 1988-1989, the programme for environmentally sound management of inland waters focused on the Lake Chad basin. A diagnostic study for an action plan on the national management of the Lake Chad basin was completed. In August and September, a training course for specialists from the Lake Chad basin was organized in co-operation with the USSR Commission for UNEP (UNEP/COM). In the Mekong Delta, UNEP, jointly with the Mekong Delta Commission and UNEP/COM, supported activities to increase food production through the improvement of water and land management and the reclamation of acid sulphate soils.

An International Conference on Climate and Water was convened by WHO in Helsinki, Finland, in September. In co-operation with the Water Research Centre and the Ministry of Public Works and Water Resources of Egypt, UNEP supported an international seminar on climatic fluctuations and water management in Cairo in December, at which the impacts of climate change in developing countries were studied. The seminar reviewed policy, management and operational implications of climate fluctuations on water development. Seminar recommendations were subsequently submitted to the International Conference on Climate, held in Cairo in December.

In co-operation with the International Training Centre for Water Resources Management, UNEP organized training courses in environmentally sound water management. It also supported an international conference entitled "Industrial Wastewaters '89", organized by the International Association on Water Pollution Research and the University of Tampere in Nairobi, Kenya, to discuss the problems of wastewaters in Africa.

Role of UNEP

Programme and other issues

UNEP Council

At its fifteenth session, held in Nairobi (15-26 May), the UNEP Governing Council adopted decisions on environmental and administrative matters.⁽¹⁾

On 25 May,⁽²⁾ the Governing Council stressed the need to: make the Council a more effective and efficient mechanism in order to promote international co-operation and to recommend policies to that end; provide policy guidance for the direction and co-ordination of environmental programmes within the UN system; keep under review the world environmental situation to ensure that emerging environmental problems of international significance received adequate consideration by Governments; promote the contribution of relevant scientific and other professional communities to the acquisition, assessment and exchange of environmental knowledge and information; and review the impact of national and international environmental policies and measures on developing countries, as well as the problem of additional costs to developing countries incurred in implementing environmental programmes and projects.

The organization of the Governing Council's regular sessions would be restructured, with the first week devoted to work on programme, Fund, finance and administrative questions, and the second week to discussion in plenary, at the ministerial or equivalent level, of major policy issues.

On an experimental basis, the Bureau of the fifteenth session was to meet with bureaux of counterpart organs of specialized agencies and other UN organs to develop more collaborative relationships, and the Executive Director was invited to put forward proposals for a standing committee, including its membership, functions and financial implications, for consideration by the Council in 1991.

The Council also took a decision⁽³⁾ to hold a three-day special session in 1990, immediately preceding, and at the same location as, the first meeting of the preparatory committee for the 1992 UN conference on environment and development. The session would deal with the elaboration and implementation of decisions on priority environmental issues, particularly ways of enhancing the role of UNEP within the UN system in addressing those issues, with the understanding that regular programme and budget matters would be discussed at the Council's 1991 session, the agenda of which was approved.

By decision 1989/177, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the UNEP Governing Council.

Provision of language facilities

In a December note⁽⁴⁾ to the Governing Council, the Executive Director provided information on language services for the meetings of the Committee of Permanent Representatives to UNEP. On 25 May, the Governing Council decided⁽⁵⁾ to recognize the requirements for full language services for the meetings of the Committee of Permanent Representatives and to provide them as soon as funding could be provided.

State of the environment

On 23 May, the UNEP Governing Council took note⁽⁶⁾ of the Executive Director's 1988 state-of-the-environment report on the public and environment,⁽⁷⁾ his report on the state of the world environment for 1989⁽⁸⁾ and the outline of the 1990 state-of-the-environment report on children and the environment.⁽⁹⁾ The Council drew the attention of Governments and relevant intergovernmental organizations to salient findings in the 1988 and 1989 reports, and requested the Executive Director to accord high priority to enhancing the role and active participation of women in environmental protection and to supporting global, regional, national and local training programmes on environmental awareness directed at media personnel. With regard to the 1989 report, the Executive Director was asked to give priority to activities related to the control of global emissions of substances that depleted the ozone layer, possible climate change and limitation of emissions of greenhouse gases and management of hazardous wastes.

The Council also requested the Executive Director to proceed, in consultation with UNICEF, with preparing, for submission to the Council at its sixteenth session, the 1990 state-of-the-environment report on children and the environment, including sections on female children, drugs and smoking, and institutional structures for enhancing children's environment. The Executive Director should continue to produce, in odd years, reports on the state of the environment along the lines of the 1989 report; prepare, for presentation at the 1992 UN conference on environment and development, a brief analytical report on changes in the state of the world environment since 1972; and prepare a comprehensive report on the state of the environment, covering the decade since the Council's 1982 special session in Nairobi, for submission to the Council in 1993.

On the same day, the Council took note(6) of the Executive Director's report(10) on activities since its eleventh session to implement Council decisions related to the annual state-of-the-environment reports, and requested him to report on the follow-up and implementation of decisions related to the annual state-of-the-environment reports.

System-wide medium-term programme

The Executive Director submitted to the Governing Council a January note(11) on guidelines for the revision of the system-wide medium-term environment programme for 1990-1995 (SWMTEP), which had been approved by the Council in 1988.(12) He reported that he had received only 27 responses to his request to Governments for their views on possible changes to SWMTEP, and, of those, only 14 had made suggestions for its revision. Suggestions related to general recommendations, amendments to specific paragraphs or sections of the document, and inclusion of new subjects or rearrangement of the structure of the document. The report also referred to the timetable for the Council's consideration of SWMTEP, the UNEP medium-term plan and programme budget documents, and raised the difficulties faced by the UNEP secretariat and UN bodies that participated in the monitoring, evaluation and revision process of SWMTEP. The Executive Director recommended that SWMTEP II be revised only once, preferably on the basis of the mid-term review of the plan, which could then be presented to the Council in 1993, together with the results of the mid-term review.

On 25 May, the Governing Council decided(13) that, while the system-wide medium-term environment programme for 1990-1995 should not be subject to a formal revision at the present time, its development and implementation should continue in the course of ongoing joint programming, resulting, inter alia, in forthcoming biennial environment programmes of UNEP and other UN bodies reflecting more closely the structure and recommendations of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond(14) and taking into account the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development(15) so as to orient the programmes towards an anticipatory and preventive approach. No further evaluation of the system-wide medium-term environment programme was needed for the period 1984-1989, and the medium-term review for 1990-1995 should be carried out in accordance with paragraph 411 of the programme. In 1991, the Governing Council would provide the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) with its views as policy guidance for the preparation of the 1996-2001 programme.

Environmental education and training

The International Environmental Education Programme (IEEP), developed jointly by UNEP and UNESCO, remained the only major world-wide programme for environmental education. In 1989, four issues of the IEEP journal Connect were produced in six languages. International, regional and national training courses, workshops and seminars on environmental education were organized for teachers, teacher trainers, administrators, professionals and other groups in 20 countries, providing direct training to 640 cadres and, through them, indirect training to thousands of others. In the area of environmental training, UNEP's policy and activities promoted the acceptance of the concept of sustainable development. Under a joint project, UNEP, UNIDO, the USSR and the Tampere University of Technology (Finland) organized a five-week training course on environment management for industrial managers and engineers from Asia and the Pacific (11 October-15 November). The thirteenth annual international post-graduate course conducted by UNEP and UNESCO, with the new title of post-graduate course in environmental management and a completely revised curriculum, took place at the Technical University of Dresden, German Democratic Republic. UNEP helped several universities to set up undergraduate or master's degree courses in environmental science or studies.

Public information

During 1989, UNEP reported that media and public interest in the environment continued to surge. On 5 June, World Environment Day ceremonies in Brussels focused on global warming--an appeal for global action to cope with the greenhouse effect. UNEP presented the Global 500 Awards to 114 individuals and organizations in 1989 for outstanding achievements in protecting and improving the environment.

Media coverage of various environmental issues helped the public to understand better the scope of the challenge and helped UNEP to fulfil its role as a catalyst through the dissemination of information on crucial environmental issues. UNEP was able to win support from all segments of society for its outreach activities. UNEP's audio-visual activities increased, with radio productions, traveling exhibits, television and film productions and an expanded video library. A new 12-panel photo exhibit was produced on the subject of the marine environment, and five exhibits were assembled for various meetings and conferences in Nairobi and abroad. The UNEP video presentation "View from UNEP", produced in collaboration with the Television Trust for the Environment, was distributed world wide through United Nations information centres and UNEP regional offices.

UNEP also strengthened its relationships with NGOs and community groups, giving special attention to youth groups. More than 3,000 students participated in a global youth forum on the environment, organized by UNEP in May. UNEP continued to publish a wide range of books, brochures, periodicals and other materials. Of particular interest was A Coast in Common, about the Eastern African Action Plan, and Our Planet, a new quarterly that replaced UNEP News. Efforts were concentrated on joint publications requiring minimal funding, such as The Economics of Dryland Management, Action on the Environment: the Role of the United Nations, published in association with the National Centre for Atmospheric Research. UNEP's promotional booklet UNEP Profile appeared in Chinese and Japanese.

Finances

UNEP Fund

On 18 May, the UNEP Governing Council reconfirmed(16) the appropriation of $25,846,300 previously authorized for 1988-1989 with the revised distribution by programme and object of expenditure proposed by the Executive Director. It also approved for 1990-1991 an appropriation of $29,087,000 for the programme and support costs budget and requested the Executive Director to report to its sixteenth session on implementation of the programme and programme support costs budget during the first year of the 1990-1991 biennium.

The Council appealed(17) to Governments to pledge contributions for the 1992-1993 biennium at an increasing rate to provide the Executive Director with a firm basis on which to plan future programmes, as well as to pay their contributions either before the end of the year preceding that to which their contributions related or as near as possible to the beginning of that year. The Council approved an appropriation of $68 million for Fund programme activities for 1990-1991 and an appropriation of $4 million to the Fund programme reserve for the same period. Core activities approved by the Governing Council should be afforded first priority in implementation. The Executive Director was to enter into commitments not exceeding $16 million for Fund programme activities in 1992-1993.

In other action,(2) the Council confirmed that the programme of activities within the appropriation for Fund programme activities for 1990-1991 did not cover all the urgent environmental activities for the next biennium, and decided that the additional tasks enumerated by the Executive Director in his supplementary programme should be implemented as soon as resources were available. For the supplementary programme, it approved an appropriation of $35 million.

The Council also took note(18) of the comments of the Executive Director on the report of the Board of Auditors and the observations of ACABQ.(19)

Additional funding sources

The Executive Director, in a February report,(20) described steps taken to secure additional funding to the Environment Fund, and identified possibilities for expanding the funding base, including additional sources from Governments for specific projects that governmental agencies might wish to support; non-governmental funding from industry and foundations; and resources for projects that appealed to special audiences.

On 19 May, the UNEP Governing Council requested(21) Governments to increase their support in the form of funds for the employment of UNEP additional staff, including staff in developing countries, and for specific activities within the programme. It requested the Executive Director to secure additional support from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, regional banks, NGOs and private corporations; and to ensure that all fund-raising activities were self-financed and would generally have no financial or other implications for the regular budget or the Environment Fund.

The Secretary-General, responding to a 1988 Economic and Social Council request,(22) submitted in June(23) to the Council and the General Assembly the report of the UNEP Executive Director on the provision of additional resources to developing countries. The report summarized information from six States and the European Community and from five UN organizations. The Executive Director stated that the information received was not an adequate basis for the review requested by the Assembly in 1972(24) and considered that a further request for information would be required, as well as the convening of a small, geographically balanced group including experts and financing institutions of the UN system.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/101 without vote.

Strengthening international co-operation on the environment: provision of additional financial resources to developing countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972 on institutional and financial arrangements for international environmental co-operation, in particular, section III, paragraph 4, thereof,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/69 of 28 July 1988,

Taking note of the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme,

1. Concludes that increasing attention needs to be paid to the provision of new and additional financial resources to developing countries for environmental programmes and projects, so as to ensure that their development priorities are not adversely affected, and that such provision should be kept under more effective and continuous review;

2. Recommends that, during the preparatory process for the proposed United Nations conference on environment and development and at the conference itself, careful consideration should be given to this question with a view to enabling the conference to establish modalities for effective monitoring or review, in order to provide a factual basis for promoting appropriate action.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/101

27 July 1989 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/140) without vote, 24 July (meeting 26); draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (E/1989/C.1/L.12), orally revised; agenda item 7 (f).

The General Assembly, in resolution 44/229, reaffirmed the need for new and additional financial resources to support developing countries in dealing with environmental problems to ensure that their development priorities were not adversely affected, as well as to support measures to solve major environmental problems of global concern and to support those countries, especially developing countries, for which implementation of such measures would entail a special or abnormal burden.

Trust funds

On 19 May, the UNEP Governing Council urged(25) Governments to pay their contributions to the trust funds before the beginning of the year.

It approved the extension of six general trust funds and approved the establishment of four new general trust funds: the Trust Fund for Environmental Training Network in Latin America and the Caribbean, from 1 July 1989 to 31 December 1991; the Trust Fund for the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer,(26) from 1 October 1989 to 31 March 1993; the Trust Fund for the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer,(27) from 1 October 1989 to 31 March 1993; and the Trust Fund for the Conference on the Global Environment and Human Response towards Sustainable Development, from 1 March 1989 to 28 February 1990. It also approved, on a contingency basis, the Trust Fund for the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal (see above) for two years, effective on the first day of the month after the Convention came into force. The Council also noted with approval the extension by the Executive Director of six technical co-operation trust funds and the establishment of six new ones.

Regional office system

In March, the Executive Director reported(28) on UNEP's regional office system, reviewing the role of the system and making suggestions for strengthening it, as well as related financial considerations. The report indicated that the regional office system was essential to the effective discharge of UNEP's mandate, but its staff and resources were insufficient to meet the environmental challenges of the 1990s. He proposed to strengthen it through the creation of new regions by the subdivision of existing ones and by the establishment of a regional relations section at UNEP headquarters. Costs for implementing the proposals should be met through arrangements with donor Governments.

On 25 May, the Governing Council welcomed(29) the Executive Director's intention to strengthen relationships between the regional offices of UNEP and the relevant offices of UNDP, the World Bank and the regional development banks in order to enhance immediate and sustainable development; develop closer working relationships with the UN regional commissions; and improve the management and administration of the regional offices. It approved his proposal to reduce the charges to the programme and the programme support costs budget by 11.4 per cent by increasing the proportion of the cost of the existing regional offices charged as Fund programme activities by approximately 24 per cent in 1990-1991; and requested him to consult with concerned Governments about the establishment of sub-regional offices, taking into account that Africa and Latin America and the Caribbean should each be served by one office with subregional offices as appropriate.

The Council noted the Executive Director's intention to establish a regional relations unit at headquarters to serve the regional offices, requested him to support, through the regional office for Africa, the Cairo Programme for African Co-operation⁽³⁰⁾ and invited the governing bodies of UNDP, the World Bank and the regional development banks to support the development of stronger relationships among the relevant field offices of those organizations to enhance immediate and sustainable development. Regional economic and social commissions were to play a more active role in the activities of the designated officials for environmental matters.

UNEP clearing-house mechanism

UNEP's clearing-house mechanism, established as a bridge between developing countries and potential donors, supported its co-ordinating and catalytic role in assisting those countries to deal with environmental problems and to help secure the needed financial and technical resources.

The Executive Director reported to the UNEP Governing Council on the results of the external evaluation⁽³¹⁾ of UNEP's clearing-house function. The Executive Director's summary of the evaluation discussed the achievements of the clearing-house during the period 1982-1988, the efficiency and catalytic impact of the mechanism, its relevance to sustainable development policy in relation to the UNEP mandate, causes of successes and failures, and recommendations of the external evaluation team. That team recommended that the distribution of tasks between the clearing-house and other UNEP entities concerned, and the Office of the Environment Programme in particular, should be revised so as to leave to the clearing-house unit the tasks of internal co-ordination, presentation of activities to donors and fund-raising. Other, more substantive tasks pertaining to the clearing-house function should be entrusted to other UNEP entities. UNEP should prepare a long- and medium-term clearing-house fund-raising plan for presentation to donors, including activities of a global nature and activities addressed to the problems of developing countries. The report also contained the comments of the Executive Director on the report of the evaluators.

On 25 May, the Governing Council reaffirmed⁽³²⁾ that the clearing-house function was an essential aspect of the co-ordinating and catalytic role of UNEP. It should enable developing countries to: establish and strengthen their policies, institutions and professional capacity to integrate environmental considerations into their development policies; initiate programmes and activities for dealing with their most serious environmental problems; and formulate and participate in action plans for the common management of ecosystems and critical environmental problems. The Council stressed that UNEP should play an active role in providing and mobilizing assistance to developing countries and expressed concern that UNEP had not attracted sufficient additional resources in that respect. The Council reiterated its call to Governments and other donors to consider favourably requests by UNEP for additional resources as well as direct requests from developing countries. It requested the Executive Director to revise the terminology with regard to the clearing-house function in order to make it clearer and to continue his efforts to obtain additional resources to manage and implement its activities. He should ensure that clearing-house activities were made more widely known to all sources of development assistance. The Executive Director was requested to study and implement organizational arrangements to make UNEP more efficient in assisting developing countries, to clarify the responsibilities of its various departments and to strengthen the execution of the clearing-house function.

By resolution 44/229 of 22 December, the General Assembly concurred with the Governing Council decision on the clearing-house function.

Chapter IX

Population and human settlements

In 1989, the United Nations Population Fund assisted more than 3,500 country and intercountry projects and completed upwards of 200 projects. Major activities of the Fund focused on maternal/child health care and family planning; information, education and communication; basic data collection; utilization of population data and research for policy formulation and development planning; and issues related to women, population and development. Special programmes largely concentrated on AIDS-related activities.

After a third review of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action, several recommendations were proposed for its further implementation, which were subsequently adopted by the Economic and Social Council. The Council also decided to convene in 1994 an international meeting on population in order to assess the progress made in carrying out the Plan and provide guidance for the treatment of population issues for the next decade. The International Forum on Population in the Twenty-first Century, held in November, adopted the Amsterdam Declaration, recommending specific population goals to be achieved by the year 2000.

The Commission on Human Settlements considered as its major themes the implementation, monitoring and financing of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000; opportunities for co-operation between governmental and non-governmental sectors in human settlements; and maintenance of buildings and infrastructure. It adopted its first report to the General Assembly on implementation of the first phase of the Global Strategy.

The UN Centre for Human Settlements, also known as Habitat, was designated the lead agency in implementing the Global Strategy. In addition, Habitat continued to assist developing countries in human settlements activities, including technical co-operation, research and development and information dissemination.

Population

Third review of World Population Plan

The third review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action, adopted at the 1974

World Population Conference,(1) covered progress made towards achieving the goals of the Plan in the period 1984-1989.

A report by the Secretary-General(2) on action by the United Nations to implement that Plan focused on 31 selected population issues in the fields of: socio-economic development, the environment and population; the role and status of women; development of population policies; population trends, prospects, goals and policies; promotion of knowledge and policy; the role of national Governments and the international community; and monitoring, review and appraisal. It concluded that the Plan continued to provide a policy framework for carrying out population activities at the national, regional and global levels. The Plan's implementation was judged to have been satisfactory, and 11 recommendations were proposed for its further implementation. Governments and organizations were urged to reiterate their support for the principles and provisions of the Plan, to pay special attention to recommendations of the World Commission on Environment and Development, and to strengthen programmes to improve the role and status of women. Other recommendations dealt with halting the spread of the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) pandemic, evaluating biotechnologies affecting human reproduction, assisting refugee populations, improving population data collection, and giving priority to assisting population programmes in the least developed countries, in particular those in sub-Saharan Africa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/92 without vote.

Strengthening actions concerned with the fulfilment of the World Population Plan of Action

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3344(XXIX) of 17 December 1974 on the United Nations World Population Conference and 39/228 of 18 December 1984 on the International Conference on Population,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1985/4 of 28 May 1985, 1986/7 of 21 May 1986 and 1987/72 of 8 July 1987 on follow-up to the recommendations of the International Conference on Population,

Having considered and approved the findings of the third quinquennial review and appraisal of progress made towards achieving the goals of the World Population Plan of Action which was called for in paragraph 108 of the Plan of Action and recommendation 88 of the International Conference on Population,

Expressing its appreciation of the action taken by many States, organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations pursuant to the provisions of the World Population Plan of Action,

Concerned about certain population issues that have emerged during the past five years and the need to reinforce previous recommendations that urgently call for new action,

1. Urges all Member States and regional and international bodies to continue their advocacy of the principles and objectives of the World Population Plan of Action and the recommendations for its further implementation adopted by the International Conference on Population and in particular to provide special support for the implementation of the recommendations contained in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Urges governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and organizations of the United Nations system that provide technical and financial assistance in the area of population to increase their efforts to implement the World Population Plan of Action through their programmes of work and to give special attention to the recommendations contained in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Conclusions and recommendations of the third review and appraisal of progress made towards the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action

A. Overall assessment

1. The World Population Plan of Action and the recommendations for its further implementation continue to provide a policy framework for carrying out population activities at the national, regional and global levels. Governments have found the provisions useful for formulating, implementing and evaluating their population policies. The international community has made them the analytical basis for the provision of financial and technical assistance to developing countries.

2. During the recent discussions on the efficiency of the United Nations and on its intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields, the field of population was singled out as one in which the work of the United Nations had been relatively effective. In spite of the inherently controversial nature of the subject, population is one of the main fields of work of the United Nations and other international organizations and is considered a programmable sector by many Governments. Today, there is a set of reliable population indicators for virtually every country in the world. Population is one of the better co-ordinated sectors of international assistance. Furthermore, the World Population Plan of Action is an international instrument that serves as a standard reference and continues to rest firmly on a global consensus. Although there are many reasons for such achievements, it is important to emphasize the benefits that result from bringing together the political will of Governments and the scientific and programming skills of many units of the United Nations and of numerous academic centres and professional associations and other non-governmental organizations.

3. It can be concluded that the main findings of the third review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan have been judged satisfactory, although a number of issues remain unresolved and others have emerged only recently. Further implementation of the Plan requires the serious consideration of certain critical issues. On the basis of the findings of the current assessment, the following recommendations have been adopted to address, in particular, the new issues that have emerged during the past five years and, in a few cases, to reinforce previous recommendations that urgently require new action.

B. Recommendations

Recommendation 1

Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, parliamentarians and the public in general are urged to reaffirm their support for the principles, objectives and provisions of the World Population Plan of Action and the recommendations for its further implementation.

Recommendation 2

Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations are urged to attach high priority to co-operative efforts to alleviate problems arising from the difficult economic situation faced by developing countries, including the problem of external indebtedness, in order to overcome major obstacles to the economic and social development of developing countries, and to the fulfilment of the objectives of the World Population Plan of Action.

Recommendation 3

Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations are invited to pay special attention to the conclusions and recommendations of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond and the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, particularly on matters pertaining to population issues.

Recommendation 4

Governments and international organizations are encouraged to give the support needed to strengthen programmes to improve the role and status of women. In those programmes particular attention should be paid to the needs of young women and the importance of the active involvement of men in all areas of family responsibility, including family planning and child care.

Recommendation 5

Governments are urged to give full attention to all aspects of population in the formulation of their social and economic development plans and programmes, both within and outside the context of formal development planning, and the international community should assign high priority to supporting them in that respect. The concept of integrating population factors into development plans and programmes needs to be more clearly defined, as do the approaches to be used. The definitions must cover the institutional and human resources needed for effective integration.

Recommendation 6

Governments and international organizations are urged to strengthen their efforts to achieve the targets established by the International Conference on Population for mortality in general and child and maternal mortality in particular.

Recommendation 7

A continuous assessment of the demographic, economic and social consequences of the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) pandemic should be made at the national, regional and global levels, and the results should be conveyed to Governments and international organizations. Special attention should be given to the spread of AIDS among the working-age population and among children, protection of the human rights of persons infected with AIDS, the devastating consequences for the families of persons infected with AIDS and the possible adverse effects on resource allocations to general health and development programmes. Governments are urged to encourage patterns of behaviour and promote the development and use of barrier contraceptive methods that would deter the spread of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases.

Recommendation 8

In view of the rapid development and growing availability of new biotechnologies affecting human reproduction, Governments should evaluate their multiple consequences, both with respect to universally recognized ethical values and human rights and with respect to their possible demographic impact.

Recommendation 9

Considering that the new area of assistance called "refugee aid and development" is aimed at assisting not only refugees but also host communities, Governments and local and international organizations are urged to collaborate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in providing full support for the design and implementation of programmes in that area.

Recommendation 10

Governments are invited to design a balanced programme of data collection, analysis and dissemination that includes gathering population data through civil registration systems, population censuses and national sample survey programmes. To that end, international organizations are invited to provide support and assistance. Special emphasis should be given to data on the education and socio-economic integration of women and special population groups, such as indigenous communities, disabled persons, youth and the elderly.

Recommendation 11

Governments and the international community should strengthen the institutional base required to carry out the theoretical, methodological and applied research needed to support population programmes and policies and to fill gaps in knowledge. While biomedical research should continue to receive support, more intensive policy-oriented research is needed on the socio-cultural factors affecting human behaviour in relation not only to reproduction but also to morbidity, mortality, migration and urbanization.

Recommendation 12

Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations are urged to give high priority to the managerial aspects of population programmes and to ensure the availability of trained specialists in that area. Increased efforts will be needed to establish monitoring, evaluation and research activities and make use of them in formulating and implementing population programmes. Family planning programmes should receive increased support in order to guarantee higher standards and meet the demand for services.

Recommendation 13

The Governments concerned and the international community should give the highest priority to assisting the population programmes of the least developed countries that have large populations and high rates of population growth, in particular those in sub-Saharan Africa.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/92

26 July 1989	Meeting	35	Adopted	without	vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/139) without vote. 21 July (meeting 25); draft by Population Commission (E/1989/24); agenda item 7 (d).

Follow-up to the 1984 Conference

As a follow-up to the 1984 International Conference on Population,(3) the Secretary-General submitted three reports to the Economic and Social Council and/or the Population Commission: on the activities of the United Nations system in the field of population;(4) on the work of inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations in the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action;(5) and on monitoring of multilateral population assistance (see below).(6)

UNFPA activities. As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1987,(7) the Executive Director of the UN Population Fund (UNFPA) reported to the Population Commission on the Fund's activities.(8) The report reviewed the mandate of the Fund, re-examined its recent realignment and decentralization of authority and responsibility, surveyed the financial scope of its activities and examined its programme of work.

The Executive Director noted that 1989 marked the twentieth anniversary of UNFPA, and stated that it would continue to concentrate on enhanced programme delivery and on improving the quality and effectiveness of its programmes. The Fund's goals would be better data for programme and operational use; better integration of population with other development programmes; safe, acceptable, cheap and easy-to-use means of contraception; better delivery systems; more self-reliance and commitment of national resources; and improved co-ordination within and outside the United Nations system.

Proposed international meeting on population (1994)

In January, the Secretary-General submitted a report(9) to the Population Commission on options for convening an intergovernmental conference on population in 1994. It provided factual information to enable the Commission to consider and advise the Economic and Social Council on the possibilities for such a conference and suggested five options: an intergovernmental conference; a special session of the General Assembly; a special session of the Economic and Social Council; a special session of the Population Commission; and a joint meeting of the Population Commission and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/91 without vote.

Convening of an international meeting on population in 1994

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3344(XXIX) of 17 December 1974 on the United Nations World Population Conference and 39/228 of 18 December 1984 on the International Conference on Population,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1985/4 of 28 May 1985, 1986/7 of 21 May 1986 and 1987/72 of 8 July 1987 on follow-up to the recommendations of the International Conference on Population,

Recognizing the full validity of the principles and objectives of the World Population Plan of Action, adopted by the United Nations World Population Conference in 1974,

Having considered the findings of the third review and appraisal of progress made towards achieving the goals and objectives of the World Population Plan of Action,

Noting with appreciation the efforts and achievements of many States, organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations pursuant to the provisions of the World Population Plan of Action, the recommendations for the further implementation of the Plan adopted by the International Conference on Population in 1984 and the Mexico City Declaration on Population and Development,

Concerned about the magnitude and growing urgency of population issues in the next decade,

Aware of the evolving diversity of population issues, including the regional variations in demographic trends and population problems, as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General on the monitoring of world population trends and policies,

Stressing the need for continued attention to be given to population issues at a high policy level in order to ensure that population concerns are integrated into policies, priorities and programmes for social and economic development, and, in that context, recognizing the usefulness of convening periodic international meetings at a high level to address population issues,

1. Decides, in principle, to convene in 1994, under the auspices of the United Nations, an international meeting on population that would bring together high-level governmental authorities and population experts and be open to all States as full participants, the specialized agencies and other relevant organizations, in order to:

(a) Assess the progress made and identify the obstacles encountered in carrying out the World Population Plan of Action and the recommendations for its further implementation;

(b) Increase the level of awareness of population issues on the international agenda;

(c) Provide guidance at the global, regional and national levels on the treatment of population issues of the highest priority for the next decade;

(d) Adopt a consolidated and updated set of recommendations;

2. Decides further that the international meeting on population should be conducted effectively and efficiently and that its size, duration and other cost factors should be determined with due regard for economy;

3. Decides, in the light of paragraph 1 of the present resolution, to designate the Population Commission, meeting in open-ended session, with the participation of any Member of the United Nations that is not a member of the Commission and of any other State, as the preparatory committee for the international meeting on population, and for that purpose decides that rule 11 of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council and rule 1 (d) of the rules governing payment of travel expenses and subsistence allowances in respect of members of organs or subsidiary organs of the United Nations shall be waived;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the regional commissions, the specialized agencies, other bodies of the United Nations system and other international organizations make a substantive contribution to the international meeting on population;

5. Requests the Population Commission, utilizing, inter alia, the reports of the Secretary-General and in consultation with appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to consider at its twenty-sixth session and to submit recommendations to the Council on:

(a) The further elaboration and refinement of the objectives of the international meeting on population as set out in paragraph 1 of the present resolution;

(b) The issues to be discussed at the meeting;

(c) The nature of the preparatory work for the meeting, including the possibility of holding regional intergovernmental meetings;

(d) The assignment of responsibilities for the preparation of the meeting to organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary organizational arrangements for the preparation of the international meeting on population, including the appointment of principal officers, and to submit to the Council, through the Population Commission at its twenty-sixth session, a detailed report on the state of the preparations for the meeting, including:

(a) The financial implications of alternative preparatory options, bearing in mind paragraph 2 of the present resolution;

(b) Measures proposed to ensure the participation and co-ordination of the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to obtain resources for the international meeting on population, to report on progress to the Council at its second regular session of 1990 and to report on the results obtained to the Council, through the Population Commission at its twenty-sixth session, in 1991.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/91

26 July 1989 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/139) without vote, 24 July (meeting 26); draft by Population Commission (E/1989/24); agenda item 7 (d).

UN Population Fund

UNFPA activities

The largest share of UNFPA assistance in 1989 was directed to maternal and child health care and family planning (MCH/FP) activities, followed by communication and education programmes, population dynamics programmes, basic data collection, and formulation and evaluation of population policies. Work also proceeded on special programme interests, including those related to youth, aging and AIDS.

Total UNFPA income in 1989 was $184.9 million. The number of donors was 98, including two first-time donors—Equatorial Guinea and Vanuatu. The Fund's ongoing efforts to secure multi-bilateral and other arrangements generated an additional $6.4 million during 1989 for projects with allocations totalling $10.1 million at year's end. Project allocations amounted to $194.2 million, while expenditures were close to $204 million, including $109.8 million for country programmes, $47.7 million for intercountry (regional, inter-regional and global) programmes, $32.1 million in administrative and programme support services, and $11.6 million in field office costs. Agency support costs amounted to $14.1 million.

At the end of 1989, UNFPA was assisting 3,538 projects: 2,596 country and 942 regional and intercountry projects. Some 229 projects were completed during the year, bringing to 3,173 the cumulative total of all projects completed until the end of 1989.

Assistance to MCH/FP programmes totalled $89.8 million, 46.3 per cent of total allocations. UNFPA supported more than 500 country and intercountry family planning projects, approximately two thirds of which were in the Africa and Asia and Pacific regions.

A highlight of UNFPA technical assistance was the transformation of the Tunisian national training programme in family planning into an international programme, with the establishment in Tunis of an international training centre for family planning for French-speaking countries, particularly those in Africa. UNFPA developed a diagnostic instrument covering management information inputs, outputs, quality and impact during the year, and used it to diagnose management information systems in countries in the Africa, Asia and Pacific, and Latin America and Caribbean regions. It also examined the MCH/FP logistics systems of 18 sub-Saharan African countries.

The Fund continued to support the improvement of contraceptive technologies. It organized an in-house seminar for headquarters staff on community-based MCH/FP programmes in rural areas. On 30 June, the UNDP Governing Council requested(10) the UNFPA Executive Director to submit in 1991 a report detailing the Fund's current expenditures for contraceptives and its estimate of the contraceptive requirements of developing countries in the 1990s.

UNFPA assistance for information, education and communication totalled $32.7 million, 16.8 per cent of total programme allocations. The Fund helped to develop strategies in that field for country programming exercises, to clarify national population objectives, identify key target groups, select appropriate communications channels, and design information and education messages. Other projects included: using modern communications technology, such as videotape and computer graphics, to reach groups with low levels of literacy; educating adolescents as to how to deal with reproductive health issues and AIDS prevention; examining educational approaches to reach newly married couples; and integrating the safe-motherhood concept into population education programmes. UNFPA assessed training institutions in both developed and developing countries and contributed to an action plan to assess communication needs to support development in Africa in the 1990s. The Fund expanded activities related to non-formal education in order to reach the large number of school drop-outs and unschooled youth, and provided support for national sex-education programmes.

Basic data collection received $21.1 million, 10.9 per cent of total allocations. Some 74 country projects under the 1990 round of population censuses were supported, the majority in Africa. Assistance was provided for population sample surveys, to establish or strengthen civil registration and vital statistics systems, and for demographic analysis and training.

UNFPA allocated $37.6 million, 19.3 per cent of its assistance, to programmes on population dynamics, formulation and evaluation of population policies, and implementation of policies. This aid aimed at developing suitable methodological techniques for policy formulation and development planning, strengthening national technical capacities, and setting up institutional arrangements for population policies. Activities included studies on the social and economic consequences of population trends; the interrelationship between population, environment, resources and development; the formulation and evaluation of development policies; and the integration of population factors into national development plans.

Assistance for women, population and development activities amounted to $5.9 million, 3.1 per cent of total allocations. The Fund continued to strengthen its capacity to deal with those issues. The UNFPA Advisory Panel on Women, Population and Development (New York, February) made recommendations regarding implementation of the UNFPA strategy, the 1989 State of World Population report, and background documents for the International Forum on Population in the Twenty-first Century (see below). Following a mid-term review, the UNFPA Executive Director, in reporting on implementation of the strategy,⁽¹¹⁾ stated that the Fund would continue to focus attention on training activities to ensure that all international staff, as well as other policy makers, acquired skills for incorporating women's concerns and needs into all population and development activities.

On 30 June, the UNDP Governing Council requested⁽¹⁰⁾ the UNFPA Executive Director to report in 1991 on the final two years of the implementation of the strategy to strengthen the Fund's capacity to deal with issues concerning women, population and development.

Training workshops on issues of special importance in the area of women, population and development were organized in the Asia and Pacific and Latin America and Caribbean regions. In-depth evaluations of UNFPA-supported programmes underscored the need for: sharpening the focus on the women's dimension in the terms of reference for evaluation missions; requiring that the women's dimension be included in evaluation reports; identifying shortcomings in evaluated programmes; and providing practical and concrete approaches to reflect women's concerns more effectively in the programmes.

Special programme interests—youth, aging and AIDS—received $1.6 million in assistance, 0.8 per cent of allocations. UNFPA-supported projects aimed at youth focused on the areas of population and family life education, communication and family planning. Projects in the field of aging sought to increase the awareness of policy makers and strengthen the capability of developing countries to understand the causes and implications of population aging and its interrelationship with socio-economic development. UNFPA special components on AIDS were integrated into MCH/FP and information and education projects in several countries. Collaborative work continued under the Global Programme on AIDS of the World Health Organization (WHO), and with other organizations, notably the UN Children's Fund.

Review and assessment of population experience

The findings of a two-year review and assessment of accumulated population experience by UNFPA were discussed in an April report to the UNDP Governing Council by the UNFPA Executive Director.⁽¹²⁾ He recommended that the Council endorse the strengthening of population interventions by developing countries in the 1990s, as well as future population goals.

On 30 June, the Council expressed concern⁽¹³⁾ at the high rate of population growth and its social, economic and environmental implications for the 1990s and beyond. It endorsed the general population goals and approaches contained in the UNFPA report and requested the development of financial resource requirements for international population assistance.

The International Forum on Population in the Twenty-first Century (Amsterdam, Netherlands, 6-9 November), organized by UNFPA in co-operation with the Government of the Netherlands, brought together some 250 senior government officials and population experts from around the world to discuss the most important population questions of the 1990s and beyond. Participants discussed ways to implement population policies and programmes more effectively, and recommended strategies for mobilizing resources to support future population activities.

The Forum issued a declaration entitled "A Better Life for Future Generations", recommending specific population goals and objectives to be achieved by the year 2000, including: an increase in family planning user couples from 326 million to 535 million; a substantial reduction in very early marriage and in teenage pregnancy; a reduction of infant mortality rates to, at most, 50 per 1,000 live births and of maternal mortality rates by at least 50 per cent; and an increase in life expectancy at birth to 62 years or more for men and women in countries with high mortality.

The Amsterdam Declaration called on all countries to increase their commitment to population policies and programmes, as well as to contribute to the development of comprehensive population objectives and goals. All countries should make every effort to provide the financial resources necessary to reach the UN medium variant population projection by the year 2000, estimated at $9 billion a year by that time, approximately double the current level of such resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/210 without vote.

Future needs in the field of population, including the development of resource requirements for international population assistance

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the principles and objectives of the World Population Plan of Action, which were affirmed and expanded at the International Conference on Population,

Recalling decision 87/30 of 18 June 1987 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, in which the Governing Council welcomed the intention of the United Nations Population Fund to conduct a wide-ranging review and assessment of accumulated population experience in key areas within its mandate,

Recalling also its resolution 43/199 of 20 December 1988, in which it welcomed the review and assessment being conducted by the United Nations Population Fund of its experience in the field of population and requested that an appropriate summary of the main findings, conclusions and recommendations be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session,

Mindful of the diversity in culture and traditions and in social, economic and political conditions among countries, and respectful of the national sovereignty of all countries with regard to the formulation, promotion and implementation of their own population policies,

1. Takes note of the report prepared by the United Nations Population Fund containing the findings, conclusions and recommendations resulting from its review and assessment of population programme experience;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the Amsterdam Declaration on A Better Life for Future Generations, adopted by the International Forum on Population in the Twenty-first Century, held at Amsterdam from 6 to 9 November 1989;

3. Stresses the importance of taking duly into account the outcome of the International Forum in the preparations for and deliberations on relevant forthcoming United Nations conferences, particularly the proposed international meeting on population in 1994, and in the preparation of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade;

4. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund:

(a) To bring the results of the International Forum to the attention of Governments, United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations;

(b) To examine in particular the implications of the Amsterdam Declaration for population programmes and to develop further the analysis of resource requirements for international population assistance;

(c) To submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 44/210

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/863) by consensus, 15 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.79), based on informal consultations on 19-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.67); agenda item 86. Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 30, 37-43, 47, 49, 50; plenary 85.

Population and the environment

In March, the UNFPA Executive Director reported(14) on the Fund's programmes and projects aimed at sustainable development. Efforts to incorporate environmental and resource concerns into population activities were examined and an overview given of current activities in the area of population, environment and sustainable development. The report also contained suggestions on how to ensure the integration of environmental concerns into population activities.

On 30 June,(10) the UNDP Governing Council encouraged the Fund to continue to develop insight into the relationship between population, environment and development.

Country and intercountry programmes

In 1989, UNFPA focused on the needs of 56 priority countries, 31 of which were in Africa, 16 in Asia and the Pacific, 6 among the Arab States and 3 in Latin America and the Caribbean. Of total resources allocated in 1989 to country programmes and projects, 74.6 per cent was allocated to those priority countries. Allocations for intercountry activities (regional, interregional and global) totalled $52.7 million, 27.1 per cent of allocations.

In May, the UNFPA Executive Director reported(15) on implementation of the Fund's 1988-1991 intercountry programme. It was noted that improvement was needed in the areas of technical backstopping and research, and that the lack of timely recruitment reduced the effectiveness of technical backstopping and thus affected the pace of project implementation.

On 30 June, the UNDP Governing Council requested(16) the Executive Director to include information on the status of the Fund's intercountry programme in his report for 1989. The Council also approved country programmes for Algeria, the Central African Republic, Chad, China, the Comoros, El Salvador, Mauritius, Nicaragua, Panama, the Philippines, Sao Tome and Principe, Togo and Zimbabwe.

Also on 30 June, the Council requested(17) that the Executive Director provide information on the number, cost and placement by agency of regional and interregional advisory services. He was also to review periodically the adequacy of existing arrangements for providing advisory services with a view to ensuring requisite standards of quality, cost and effectiveness. The Council invited UN entities with UNFPA-funded advisory posts to integrate population posts into their regular budgets.

In April, the UNFPA Executive Director reported(18) on the status of the strategy for the Fund's assistance to sub-Saharan Africa. She stated that UNFPA had made significant strides towards achieving the objectives set forth in the strategy in the previous two years, and that the Fund would intensify efforts at both country and regional levels to improve implementation of approved country programmes in sub-Saharan Africa. On 30 June, the UNDP Governing Council requested(10) the Executive Director to report in 1991 on the status of support for the establishment of a regional information, education and communication clearing-house and regional training centres on population, education, communication and MCH/FP. She was also to report on issues surrounding the financing of technical assistance provided to demographic centres in the African countries, including the question of increasing such financing.

Work programmes,
planning and evaluation, financing

In an April report(19) on the work plan for 1990-1993, the UNFPA Executive Director provided information on the Fund's resource situation and utilization, and distribution of programmable resources between country and intercountry activities. It also provided information on allocations and utilization of resources in 1988. Another report(20) gave the status of financial implementation of UNDP Governing Council-approved UNFPA programmes and projects.

On 30 June, the Governing Council, on the basis of the UNFPA report,(19) endorsed(21) the use of the following estimates for new programmable resources for 1991-1993: $172.8 million for 1991, $191.1 million for 1992 and $211.3 million for 1993. The Council approved the revised programme ceiling for 1989 of $191.6 million and the request for programme expenditure authority in the amount of $156.2 million for 1990.

Evaluation activities of UNFPA, intensified in 1988-1989, as well as the independent, in-depth evaluations undertaken during that period, were outlined in a March report by the UNFPA Executive Director.(22) Evaluation activities were seen as a useful management tool, with their focus shifted from individual projects to country and intercountry programmes and to technical areas and issues in a global comparative perspective. The Fund introduced in 1989 the Programme Review and Strategy Development exercise, combining evaluation, needs assessment and strategy development, which took the place of separate country programme evaluations.

Evaluations were undertaken in Indonesia, Nicaragua and Zimbabwe in 1988, and in Nigeria and Zaire in 1989. Also evaluated were the intercountry programmes of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation and those of the WHO Regional Offices for Africa and for the Eastern Mediterranean. UNFPA conducted a series of diagnostic exercises of MCH/FP management information systems in 27 sub-Saharan African, 5 Asian and 8 Latin American and Caribbean countries in 1989. It also studied five approaches being carried out in Indonesia, Mexico and the Philippines in the area of family planning education and services for newly-weds.

In 1989, the UNDP Governing Council had before it budget estimates for UNFPA administrative and programme support services for the 1990-1991 biennium.(23) The total biennial budget amounted to $84.2 million, compared to $63.2 million for 1988-1989.

On 30 June, the Council approved(24) gross appropriations of $83,492,500 to finance the 1990-1991 biennial budget for administrative and programme support services.

Other population activities

Population Commission

The Population Commission, at its twenty-fifth session (New York, 21 February-March),(25) reviewed action taken by the United Nations to implement the recommendations of the 1974 World Population Conference,(1) programme implementation, the proposed programme of work for the biennium 1990-1991, the medium-term plan for 1992-1997, and follow-up to the recommendations of the 1984 International Conference on Population.(3)

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/170, approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's twenty-sixth (1991) session. Also on that date, by decision 1989/171, the Council noted the report of the Commission on its 1989 session(25) and reports by the Secretary-General and the UNDP Governing Council relating to population issues.

Population work programme

In response to Economic and Social Council requests of 1986(26) and 1987,(7) the Secretary-General submitted to the Council, through the Population Commission, an overview(4) of the main activities in the field of population carried out by the various organizations of the UN system.

The overview covered socio-economic development, the environment and population; the role and status of women; development of population policies; population goals and policies; and promotion of knowledge and policy. The institutional framework, resources and co-ordination of population activities in the UN system were also described.

In a report on monitoring multilateral population assistance,(6) the Secretary-General concluded that the concept of population programmes was taking root in the developing countries. He stated that population policy formulation within the context of development would become increasingly important and would thus require greater attention by the multilateral system in the future. While that sentiment was widely accepted, multilateral assistance was quite inadequate compared to the demand and need for population programmes in developing countries.

The Secretary-General also submitted two reports on the progress of recent work of the UN Secretariat in the field of population. One report(27) described the work in the areas of world demographic analysis, demographic projections, population policies, population and development, monitoring and review and appraisal, factors affecting patterns of reproduction and dissemination of population information. The other(28) detailed technical co-operation activities during the period 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988, particularly support for projects in training in demography and population, evaluation and analysis of basic population and demographic data, and population policy planning and development; and analysis and evaluation of technical co-operation activities in population.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/94 without vote.

United Nations support for African countries in the field of population

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, the annex to which contains the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, and 43/27 of 18 November 1988 on the mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme,

Recalling also the Kilimanjaro Programme of Action for African Population and Self-Reliant Development adopted by the Second African Population Conference and endorsed by the Economic Commission for Africa,

Noting with satisfaction the activities carried out in the field of population by the organizations of the United Nations system, as reported by the Secretary-General, and especially the priority given by the United Nations Population Fund to African countries in view of the serious economic and social problems they face,

Reaffirming the need for technical assistance and financial resources for training additional personnel in African countries so as to ensure that those countries are able to effectively implement policies to harmonize population growth with economic and environmental capacities,

1. Welcomes the proposed programme of work for the biennium 1990-1991 in technical co-operation in the field of population;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the continued availability of funds for technical co-operation in the field of population, particularly for fellowships for training at the United Nations-supported Cairo Demographic Centre, the Regional Institute for Population Studies at Accra, the Institut de formation et de recherche démographiques at Yaoundé and other United Nations demographic centres and programmes serving African countries;

3. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system to give priority to population needs and problems in Africa in accordance with the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/94

26	July	1989	Meeting	35	Adopted	without	vote

1990-1991 work programme

In January, the Secretary-General, reporting(29) on the proposed UN work programme for the 1990-1991 biennium in the area of population, said it was designed to carry out research of the highest priority, to disseminate research findings in an effective manner and to provide support for technical co-operation projects in the field of population.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/93 without vote.

Work programme in the field of population

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3344(XXIX) and 3345(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, concerning the recommendations of the United Nations World Population Conference, and 39/228 of 18 December 1984 on the International Conference on Population,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1981/28 of 6 May 1981 on the strengthening of actions concerned with the fulfilment of the World Population Plan of Action, 1985/3 on population structure, 1985/4 on the implications of the recommendations of the International Conference on Population and 1985/6 on the status and role of women and population, all of 28 May 1985, 1986/7 of 21 May 1986 on population questions and 1987/71 of 8 July 1987 on the work programme in the field of population,

Stressing the supportive role of the work programmes of the United Nations system in the field of population in the attainment of the goals and objectives of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade and the pursuit of economic co-operation,

Recalling the preamble, the section on peace, security and population, and the other sections of the recommendations for the further implementation of the World Population Plan of Action adopted by the International Conference on Population, at which it was reaffirmed that the principles and objectives of the World Population Plan of Action remained fully valid and that creating conditions for international peace and security was of great importance for the achievement of the goals of population policies and economic and social development and at which emphasis was placed on a number of issues in the field of population that should continue to be included in the work programme, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the important role of the Population Commission as the advisory body of the Economic and Social Council on population matters,

Taking note of the report of the Population Commission on its twenty-fifth session and the views expressed therein on the progress of work in the field of population and the proposed work programme,

1. Notes with satisfaction the progress made in implementing the work programme for the biennium 1988-1989 and the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1991 in the field of population;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in formulating the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, to take into account, as appropriate, the views expressed at the twenty-fifth session of the Population Commission and the guidelines for the work programmes of the United Nations Secretariat set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the present resolution;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to give high priority to the monitoring of world population trends and policies, including in-depth consideration of special topics;

(b) To continue work on the following:

(i) Studies on the interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development, with particular attention to studies to promote the integration of population factors into development planning;

(ii) Studies on the interrelationship between population and the status and role of women;

(iii) Comparative analysis of population policies;

(iv) Periodic revision of estimates and projections of population and its structure and of urbanization;

(v) Analysis of mortality, in particular infant and child mortality;

(vi) Studies on reproductive behaviour and on family planning and its demographic impact;

(vii) Studies on internal and international migration and on comparative patterns of urbanization and population distribution;

(viii) Dissemination of population information and further development of the Population Information Network at the regional and global levels;

(c) To start substantive preparatory work for the international meeting on population in 1994, as appropriate;

(d) To continue to work closely with Member States, organizations of the United Nations system, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, in the implementation of programmes;

(e) To further improve communication and co-ordination between the Population Division of the United Nations Secretariat, the regional commissions and Governments, particularly in order to prepare the most accurate and widely accepted population estimates and projections possible, an activity in which the Population Division should play a leading role;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue and strengthen interdisciplinary technical co-operation activities in the field of population, including technical co-operation among developing countries, as appropriate, in the following areas:

(i) Training in demography and matters related to population and development, including courses to upgrade knowledge and skills, particularly in the use of microcomputer software;

(ii) Evaluation and analysis of basic population data, particularly from the 1990 round of population censuses, dissemination and utilization of the results and use of computer technology, ensuring technical co-ordination at the national level in the process;

(iii) Formulation and implementation of population policies and programmes in the context of national development plans, with special attention to cultural and socio-economic conditions at the subnational level;

(b) To continue to evaluate and analyse experience with technical co-operation activities in the field of population and publish studies thereon;

(c) To prepare for the Population Commission at its twenty-sixth session a report on requirements for population specialists in national institutions and international organizations;

5. Re-emphasizes the importance of maintaining the scope, effectiveness and efficiency of the global population programme and of continuing to strengthen co-ordination and collaboration among the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, the regional commissions, the United Nations Population Fund and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in the planning and execution of their population programmes, as well as the need for organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen co-ordination and collaboration with Member States, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental and national organizations, as appropriate.

Meeting 35

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/139) without vote, 21 July (meeting 25); draft by Population Commission (E/1989/24); agenda item 7 (d).

Population trends and policies

In January, the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽³⁰⁾ to the Economic and Social Council on monitoring world population trends and policies, with special emphasis on the population situation in the least developed countries. Trends included population growth, structure, mortality, fertility, population distribution, and international migration in all countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/89 without vote.

Population situation in the least developed countries

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 42/177 of 11 December 1987 and 43/186 of 20 December 1988 on the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held in September 1990,

Reaffirming the close relationship between population and social and economic development,

Expressing serious concern at the fact that the least developed countries, which are economically the weakest members of the international community, face serious demographic challenges, in particular high levels of mortality, fertility and population growth,

Recognizing also the need for special attention to be given to the population situation in the least developed countries,

Expressing appreciation for the report of the Secretary-General on the monitoring of world population trends and policies, with special emphasis on the population situation in the least developed countries,

1. Decides that special attention shall be accorded, in the activities of the United Nations system, to the population situation in the least developed countries;

2. Recommends that population issues be incorporated in the policies and measures to be adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries to accelerate the development process of the least developed countries during the 1990s;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to address appropriately population issues and their relationship to the socio-economic development of the least developed countries in the preparations for the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for the Conference a report on the population situation in the least developed countries, with specific recommendations for action at the national, regional and international levels, taking into account the findings regarding the situation in the least developed countries contained in his report on the monitoring of world population trends and policies, in particular the high levels of mortality, fertility and population growth in those countries;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to include a separate analysis on the population situation in the least developed countries in his reports on the monitoring of world population trends and policies;

6. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system to incorporate population issues in their programmes and activities relating to the least developed countries, with a view to strengthening the ability of those countries to address population issues in an effective manner.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/89

26 July 1989 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/139) without vote, 21 July (meeting 25); draft by Population Commission (E/1989/24); agenda item 7 (d).

Also on 26 July and on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1989/90 without vote.

Incorporating population factors in the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/182 of 20 December 1988, in which the Assembly decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also the recommendations of the United Nations World Population Conference, in particular those contained in the World Population Plan of Action, in which it is stated, inter alia, that the explicit aim of the Plan is to help co-ordinate trends in population and trends in economic and social development and that population measures should be integrated into comprehensive social and economic plans and programmes,

Recalling the section on population of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 42/186 of 11 December 1987,

Recalling its own resolution 1979/32 of 9 May 1979 and the annex thereto, in particular section C, paragraph 2, in which it urged that the results of periodic monitoring, review and appraisal, regional consultations on population and development and associated activities of appropriate agencies of the United Nations should be fully taken into account in the formulation of any new international development strategy,

Recalling also the recommendations of the International Conference on Population, in particular recommendation 1, which states that social and economic development is a central factor in the solution of population and interrelated problems, that population factors are very important in development plans and strategies and have a major impact on the attainment of development objectives and that international development strategies should therefore be formulated on the basis of an integrated approach that takes into account the interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development,

Noting with satisfaction the recognition of the role of population factors in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in paragraph 166 of which it is stated that population policies will be considered an integral part of overall development policies and that all countries will continue to integrate their population measures and programmes into their social and economic goals and strategies,

1. Urges all States, in formulating the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, to give full consideration to the interrelationships between population factors, social, economic, cultural and political development and protection of the environment;

2. Calls upon organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in contributing to the preparation of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, to give appropriate recognition to the interrelationships between population factors, social, economic, cultural and political development and the protection of the environment, taking into account the section on population of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the contributions of the secretariats of the organizations of the United Nations system to the preparation of the international development strategy take due account of the World Population Plan of Action and the recommendations for its further implementation adopted by the International Conference on Population;

4. Recommends that the General Assembly, in considering the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, give due weight to the role of population and the importance of population policies and activities and duly integrate them into the goals and objectives and the policy measures of the strategy.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/90

Human settlements

Commission on Human Settlements

At its twelfth session (Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, 24 April-3 May 1989),(1) the Commission on Human Settlements adopted its first report(2) to the General Assembly on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, adopted in 1988(3) It decided to establish a Latin American and Caribbean Centre for the Exchange and Promotion of Human Settlements Technologies as a contribution to the fulfilment of the objectives of the Global Strategy.(4)

Other topics dealt with by the Commission included: assistance to the Namibian people and victims of apartheid in Africa, conditions of human settlements in Lebanon, promotion of low-cost shelter construction, adoption of a strategy and mechanism for the early mobilization of human settlements project sites, housing conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories, a programme for the eradication of poor housing conditions and for the urban rehabilitation of historic centres, and the contribution of the Commission to the preparations for a UN conference on environment and development in 1992.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/172, noted the report(1) of the Commission on Human Settlements on its twelfth session and on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000. By the same decision, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

On 2 May, the Commission, recalling its 1988 decision regarding the selection of two themes for its thirteenth (1991) session and having considered the report by the Executive Director of the UN Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) on themes for consideration,(5) requested(6) the Executive Director to prepare two papers for that session: one on the significance of human settlements and the Global Strategy for Shelter to the year 2000 for the concept of sustainable development, and another on the use of energy by households, in construction and in production of building materials, with emphasis on renewable, non-polluting energy sources. It also decided to consider in 1991 the inclusion of two of the following themes in the agenda of its 1993 session: the improvement of metropolitan and municipal management; land policies with emphasis on access and affordability to low-income groups; and natural disaster reduction and its effect on the construction and maintenance of buildings.

Human settlements activities

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

In 1988, the General Assembly had adopted(3) the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, to facilitate the provision of shelter for all by then, and requested the Commission to report biennially on progress made.

In February, the UNCHS Executive Director issued a report,(7) proposing a series of activities for the Centre in support of the Strategy's first phase (1989-1991). Those activities covered: technical assistance in the formulation of national shelter strategies; support to lead countries in the establishment of Strategy monitoring and evaluation capabilities; development of shelter-sector training capacities; and promotion of awareness of the Global Strategy among policy makers and professionals in developing countries. A budget was suggested for which donors might make contributions to a special Global Strategy account under the UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. The report also suggested guidelines for the monitoring of national shelter strategies by Governments. A series of indicators were identified, by which progress in the implementation of the Strategy could be measured.

Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly request,(3) the Commission submitted in June the first biennial report on the implementation of the Global Strategy,(8) covering the period between its formulation in April 1988 and the review of progress at the Commission's twelfth session in May 1989. The report outlined the general framework and timetable for the Global Strategy as follows: formulation of national shelter strategies, design of new institutional arrangements and implementation of national programmes (1989-1991); introduction of new institutional arrangements and strengthening of existing national programmes (1992-1994); and the full-scale operation of national programmes and progressive strengthening of institutions beyond the year 2000 (1995-2000). The main principles of the Strategy were summarized as follows: enabling policies should be at the heart of national and international efforts; the important links between shelter and economic development had to be recognized in policy-making; sustainable management of the environment should be an important factor in designing programmes; and the role of women, as income-earners, home-makers and heads of households, should be fully recognized. Annexed to the report was the 1989-1991 Plan of Action for the Strategy.

The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in considering the implementation of the Global Strategy, noted that UNCHS would be designated as the lead agency for implementation and would exercise a certain degree of flexibility with regard to the modality for inter-agency co-operation in that area.(9)

On 3 May, the Commission adopted(10) its first report on the implementation of the Global Strategy,(8) and urged Governments to prepare annual progress reports on national shelter strategies. It requested the UNCHS Executive Director to use the Global Strategy as an overall guide for all Centre activities, and to report to the Commission in 1991 on implementation of the first phase of the Strategy.

On 2 May, the Commission urged(11) the international community to: establish conditions that favoured the generation of investments in developing countries, which would include an essential factor in attaining the objectives of the Global

Strategy, assume their responsibilities in the allocation of resources required for the implementation of the Strategy; and consider shelter as an investment in a social asset. The Commission also appealed to all Governments and relevant institutions and organizations to ensure that appropriate consideration was given to the needs and requirements for low-income groups in the implementation of the Strategy.(12)

The Commission recommended that the UNCHS Executive Director prepare a study on the possibilities of formulating a strategy and mechanism to ensure early mobilization of human settlements project sites for implementation within the Global Strategy, and requested him to incorporate the results of that study in a 1993 report on land policy.(13)

Governmental and non-governmental sectors

In a report on the roles, responsibilities and capabilities of governmental and non-governmental sectors in the field of human settlements,(14) the Executive Director identified recent policy and institutional innovations in the management of human settlements, and outlined policy options available to Governments in deepening the involvement of different sectors in that area. Considering that report, as well as a report on 49 case-studies of recent policy initiatives in decentralization and non-governmental sector participation in the field of human settlements,(15) the Commission requested the Executive Director, in the development of the Global Strategy, to develop the relations between government and the private and community sectors in areas such as the supply of urban services, housing and land, and to encourage effective community participation at all levels in human settlements programmes.(16) The Commission also requested Governments to take steps to help shelter organizations to increase their co-operation with their respective partners abroad, and requested them and the Executive Director to report on those aspects of the Global Strategy.

Maintenance of buildings

In a report on the maintenance of buildings and infrastructure,(17) the Executive Director proposed national and international action to improve maintenance practices. In another report,(18) he reviewed the funding practices of local authorities concerned with the maintenance of buildings and infrastructure and examined strategies to improve revenue generation, accounting and budgeting procedures. On 2 May, the Commission urged(19) Governments to reflect the significance of the maintenance of buildings and infrastructure in their national development programmes and budgets as a contribution towards the implementation of the Global Strategy. It requested the Ex-

Executive Director to incorporate in the work programme of UNCHS the issues of building maintenance and actively encourage international co-operation.

Aid for human settlements

In considering the Global Strategy, the Commission considered the Executive Director's report on financial and other assistance for developing countries for human settlements.⁽²⁰⁾ Noting that a low priority had been accorded to aid for human settlements, the report outlined remedies for that problem, including increasing the scale of aid, setting new priorities for aid and utilizing new channels to meet poor groups' basic needs. From 1980 to 1987, less than 2 per cent of all bilateral and multilateral aid programmes had gone to "shelter" projects; in 1985 and 1986, less than 6 per cent of bilateral aid from members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development was directed to water supply and less than 6 per cent to health and population.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/173 without vote.

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/181 of 20 December 1988, in which it designated the Commission on Human Settlements as the United Nations intergovernmental body responsible for co-ordinating, evaluating and monitoring the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, the core of which consists of integrated national shelter strategies,

Also recalling its request, contained in paragraph 7 of resolution 43/181, that the Commission on Human Settlements, as the body designated to co-ordinate implementation of the Global Strategy, report biennially to the General Assembly on progress made in its implementation,

Recognizing that the Global Strategy is the most ambitious programme that the international community has so far adopted in the human settlements sector and, as such, requires the concerted efforts of all Member States, United Nations bodies and donor agencies, as well as the entire attention of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat),

Convinced that, while integrating the most effective and efficient policy tools in all action areas, national shelter strategies can be crucial instruments of enablement leading to the full mobilization of all types of resources on a sustainable basis and thereby facilitating adequate shelter for all by the year 2000,

Paying special attention to the need to ensure equal access to available resources by all population groups, while recognizing the critical role that women should play in the implementation of the Global Strategy, as well as the need to remove obstacles that some population groups, such as households headed by women, may face in this respect,

Concerned about the economic constraints many countries face in their development efforts, but at the same time encouraged by the positive impact which enabling shelter strategies have on economic development,

Emphasizing that the objective of facilitating shelter for all can be promoted by a national strategy which is recognized and supported at the highest possible political level, adjusted to the macro-economic need of consolidating the national resource base and minimizing the import content, based on nationally and individually affordable standards, flexible in terms of the diversity of shelter priorities and specific in terms of institutional arrangements for partnership between various sectors of implementation,

Having considered the first report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,

Noting with satisfaction the support given to the Plan of Action of the Global Strategy by donor Governments and international bodies and agencies in assisting Governments in the formulation of their national shelter strategies,

Cognizant of the importance of sustaining and expanding national and international support to this crucial phase of the Plan of Action,

Noting that, when considering future voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, donors will be influenced by the degree of emphasis of the work programme of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) on the Global Strategy and by the priorities within the Global Strategy reflected in that programme,

1. Commends Governments which are reviewing, revising and consolidating their national shelter strategies, as well as implementing them with great determination, and urges all other Governments to do the same;

2. Recommends that all Governments gradually set in place the monitoring system to be proposed by the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), following the guidelines to be prepared by the Executive Director;

3. Invites Governments to make voluntary contributions whenever possible to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, in cash or in kind, in order to facilitate the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000;

4. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, and other multilateral and bilateral agencies to provide financial and other support to the implementation of the Plan of Action of the Global Strategy.

General Assembly resolution 44/173

19 December 1989 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.9) without vote, 3 November (meeting 30); draft by Commission on Human Settlements (A/44/8); agenda item 82 (h).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 10-13, 29, 30; plenary 83.

Human settlements and political, economic and social issues

Assistance to Africa

On 2 May, the Commission strongly condemned⁽²¹⁾ South Africa for its acts of aggression and destabilization against neighbouring States and for its continuous forced removal of the African population from their homes. It called on the international community to extend political and material support to the front-line States and to provide material assistance to the displaced and homeless victims in southern Africa. It requested the Executive Director to intensify his efforts for the provision of increased assistance to victims of apartheid and to continue assisting the national liberation movements in obtaining approval of their human settlements project proposals within a reasonable time.

Also on 2 May, the Commission requested(22) the Executive Director to prepare a short-term shelter strategy for the resettlement of returning refugees in Namibia, as well as a proposal for a long-term comprehensive national shelter strategy. He was also requested to identify and implement specific projects to facilitate an orderly and effective resettlement of the returning refugees, to continue the implementation of an intensive training programme to ensure that Namibia would possess a core of skilled construction labour at the time of independence, and to report to the Commission in 1991 on the implementation of its requests.

Aid for Palestinians

In February, the Executive Director reported(23) on the results of a study on the reconstruction needed in Palestinian camps in Lebanon, concluding that detailed studies were needed to prepare comprehensive reconstruction, improvement and development plans. In a report on the housing requirements of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories,(24) the Executive Director described difficulties in communications and those related to the hiring of a consultant, due to the situation in the occupied territories.

Annexed to an October note by the Secretary-General(25) was a report from UNCHS, outlining steps taken to implement the development of the programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people. The report identified 30 specific project proposals to be prepared by experts. Annexed to another October note by the Secretary-General(26) was a study on transport infrastructure in the occupied Palestinian territories, which included a description of the current transportation system and proposals for a future one.

By 30 votes to 1, with 10 abstentions,(27) the Commission called on the Israeli authorities to cease their malpractices against Palestinian people in the occupied territories, particularly the destruction of Palestinian homes, and to open the houses sealed by military order. The Secretary-General was asked to establish an international fund to rebuild homes and other structures demolished by the Israeli occupation authorities. The Commission condemned Israel's alteration of the demographic character of the occupied territories by establishing exclusively Jewish colonies on the Palestinian homeland. It called on the UNCHS Executive Director to dispatch a fact-finding mission to the occupied territories to investigate the question of denial of housing rights to and the destruction of housing of the Palestinian people, and to devise a national housing development strategy for the year 2000 for the Palestinian people based on the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000.

The Commission also called for an end to the continuous destruction of human settlements in Lebanon and appealed to the world community to assist in the reunification and rebuilding of that country.(28)

Environmental aspects of human settlements

Pursuant to 1987 General Assembly requests,(29) the Executive Director submitted in February a report on human settlements and sustainable development.(30) It contained a narrative, based on the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, to show how the medium-term plan and the Centre's biennial work programme had been oriented to contribute to the international efforts towards sustainable development.

On 2 May, the Commission requested(31) the Executive Director to give due consideration to the issues raised in his report,(30) as well as to issues such as the production and use of energy with regard to human settlements and shelter, recycling of building materials, sanitation and sewage facilities, and avoidance of the production and use of hazardous and unhealthy building materials. It recommended to the General Assembly that the critical role and contribution of human settlements and urbanization to sustainable development and their impact on the environment should be among the issues to be addressed within the context of a UN conference on environment and development.

In January, the Executive Directors of UNCHS and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) submitted a joint progress report(32) on co-operation between the two bodies. Four subject areas were highlighted: assessment of environmental conditions in human settlements; environmental aspects of policies, planning and management of human settlements; environmentally sound human settlements technology; and research, training and the dissemination of information on environmentally sound human settlements planning and management. On 2 May, the Commission requested(33) the UNCHS Executive Director, in consultation with the UNEP Executive Director, to continue and increase co-operation between the Centre and UNEP.

Rehabilitation of historic centres

On 2 May, the Commission adopted a resolution(34) urging international organizations and interested countries to bear in mind the fact that, in many countries, the inner cities, which represented a valuable historical and cultural heritage, had become slum areas that constituted a serious social problem demanding solutions. It urged them to mobilize resources to address both the social problem and the conservation of the historical and cultural heritage, and requested the Executive Director to co-ordinate with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other organizations and Governments the technical and financial assistance required for such rehabilitation programmes.

Other issues

On 2 May, the Commission invited(35) the Statistical Commission to include the item "Human settlements statistics" on the agenda of its next session.

In February, the Executive Director submitted a report(36) on low-cost alternatives to inter-sessional consultations with Governments after 1989, including: establishment of a formal inter-sessional programme committee; formal meetings of the Bureau of the Commission or of an enlarged Bureau; a special ad hoc group of experts designated by Governments; and a full-fledged inter-sessional informal consultation meeting with Governments, perhaps through their permanent representatives in Nairobi. The Commission decided that the informal Committee of Permanent Representatives to UNCHS and/or Government-designated officials should continue to ensure liaison between Governments and the Executive Director between Commission sessions.(37)

UN Centre for Human Settlements

Activities

The 1988-1989 UNCHS work programme(38) had eight subprogrammes: policies and strategies, settlement planning, shelter and community services, the indigenous construction sector, low-cost infrastructure, land, mobilization of finance, and institutions and management.

Under the first subprogramme, an executive summary of the Global Report on Human Settlements, 1986 was issued and a publication entitled A New Agenda for Human Settlements was widely distributed. An illustrated summary of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 was also made widely available.

Under the settlement planning subprogramme, research on rural settlements development continued and a technical publication reviewing national rural settlement programmes in developing countries was prepared. Three volumes of Environmental Guidelines for Settlements Planning and Management were published.

As for shelter and community services, the UNCHS community participation training programme, being implemented in Bolivia, Sri Lanka and Zambia, continued to offer support services to national and local authorities in strengthening their capacity to work with low-income communities to improve their shelter and environmental conditions. Two training manuals on affordable shelter projects were produced, one in English and one in Arabic. Workshops on housing in development were held in Bangkok, Thailand, and Nairobi, Kenya. Research continued on public sector strategies for the consolidation of stability in inner-city areas.

With regard to the indigenous construction sector, three technical papers were prepared on soil construction technology, selected local building materials, and development of the construction industry for delivery of low-income shelter and infrastructure. A bibliography on earth construction technology and the first volume of a journal for African countries on local building materials technology were also made available. Workshops on standards and specifications for local building materials were held in Ghana and Malawi. Missions were sent to Malawi and Zambia in connection with the establishment of pilot plants for selected building materials.

Concerning low-cost infrastructure, reports and publications were prepared on new and renewable sources of energy, improvement of sanitation and the design and manufacture of low-cost motorized vehicles. Missions were undertaken to Bangladesh, to assist in formulating rural housing programmes, and to Brazil, on alternative technologies for housing and sanitation.

The subprogramme on land continued to assess organizational and technical requirements for setting up and operating low-technology land-registration systems through local governments. A workshop to review basic issues and research on land management was held, and a technical publication on land for housing was issued.

In the area of human settlements financing, case-studies were prepared on employment-generation activities in low-income human settlements development programmes in Chile, India, Nigeria, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Zambia. A draft report was prepared on that subject. Research on human settlements finance focused on mobilization of public and private resources, and the adequate and efficient channelling of resources of human settlements development activities. A technical publication on mechanisms to mobilize and channel resources was completed, a trainers' manual on urban finance and management was published, and a manual on housing finance was prepared.

The subprogramme on institutions and management continued to formulate guidelines and proposals for the introduction of appropriate legislative, institutional and management procedures for human settlements, and to design, implement and evaluate training courses in human settlements management for national and local officials. Advisory services in the evaluation and design of training courses were provided to Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, India, Kenya, Rwanda, Senegal and Thailand.

UNCHS information activities included the production of issues of the Shelter Bulletin, which had replaced the former IYSH Bulletin, UNCHS (Habitat) News, information kits, posters and photographic exhibitions, as well as two supplements on seminars on women in human settlements development and management, radio programmes and video programmes. An update of the Habitat Directory was begun.

Work programme

On 3 May, the Commission, after considering the Executive Director's report on the draft 1990-1991 work programme of UNCHS,(39) and noting that it reflected the principles and orientations of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, adopted(40) the draft work programme. It decided on a higher-priority designation for the programme elements on land policies and procedures and on shelter co-operatives. The element on global conditions and trends was to receive a lowest-priority designation. The Executive Director was requested to maintain a high level of research and information activities on low-cost water supply and sanitation.

Medium-term plan

On 3 May, the Commission endorsed(41) the draft medium-term plan for human settlements proposed by the UNCHS Executive Director, as translated into his report on the draft programme of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997.(42) It confirmed that the number of subprogrammes in the draft plan could not be reduced and reaffirmed that the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and its enabling approach should guide the implementation of the subprogrammes.

Co-ordination

On 2 May, the Commission, having reviewed the Executive Director's report on co-ordination and co-operation within the United Nations system,(43) welcomed(44) the synoptic table of activities of the United Nations system in the area of human settlements, as included in that report. It decided that co-ordination in the area of human settlements should focus on the following priority areas: national policies and strategies, including land policies; settlements management, with particular emphasis on urban management; and infrastructure.

The Commission emphasized(45) the importance of human settlements development as a means of revitalizing the economies of developing countries, and recommended that Governments give priority to the promotion of indigenous building materials and construction techniques and to meeting shelter needs. It requested the UNCHS Executive Director to bring its resolution to the attention of the ad hoc committee of the whole for the preparation of the international development strategy for the fourth UN development decade.

The Commission invited the Executive Director to ensure that the Commission and UNCHS participated fully in the activities of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (the 1990s), and requested him to report on those activities.(46)

Global parliamentarians on Habitat

The Committee of Global Parliamentarians on Habitat, which held its third meeting in Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, in conjunction with the twelfth session of the Commission, decided to hold a conference in Japan in 1990 to discuss, among other things, the role of parliamentarians in the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000.

The Commission on 2 May noted(47) the meeting's decisions and recommendations, which were annexed to the Commission's resolution.

Financing

During the 1988-1989 biennium, the UNCHS work programme was financed from the United Nations regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources. Programme support income from the execution of projects financed by UNDP and trust funds amounted to $4.3 million, while income for the UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation was $12.7 million.

UNCHS project delivery amounted in 1988-1989 to $48.3 million, including projects financed by UNDP ($34.3 million), the Foundation ($7.6 million) and other sources ($6.4 million).

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

In February, the Executive Director reported(48) on the proposed budget of the UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation for the biennium 1990-1991, which also contained revised estimates of income and expenditure of the Foundation in the biennium 1988-1989. Expected contributions and pledges for 1990-1991 were $8.5 million; total resource availability was about $13.2 million. The estimated programme expenditure and project commitments for the period amounted to some $11.2 million.

The status of voluntary contributions to the Foundation, as at 1 March 1989,(49) consisted of unpaid pledges of $553,638 and pledges for 1989 of $2.86 million.

On 3 May, the Commission approved(50) the revised estimates for the biennium 1988-1989 and the budget proposals for the biennium 1990-1991.

Chapter X

Human rights

In 1989, the United Nations continued its efforts to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms and to curtail their violations.

Progress continued to be made on a number of international instruments. In November, the General Assembly adopted and opened for signature the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and called on States to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority (resolution 44/25). In December, the Assembly adopted the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aimed at abolishing the death penalty (resolution 44/128).

The Working Group on Indigenous Populations reviewed developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous peoples. It considered the first revised text of the draft Universal Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples prepared by the Group's Chairman/Rapporteur. The Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families discussed the provisions of the draft convention still pending during the second reading. As in the past; the Commission on Human Rights set up an informal open-ended working group to elaborate a draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. The Working Group on Detention discussed a new draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearance.

In economic and social matters, the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development considered the implementation of the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights examined reports submitted by countries on their implementation of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Committee's day of general discussion focused on the right of each person to an adequate standard of living for self and family.

The Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fifth session, held in January-March, reviewed activities under the UN programme of advisory services in the field of human rights and the programme of the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights, and considered the implications of scientific and technological developments for human rights as well as other issues relating to the promotion and protection of human rights. It examined situations involving alleged human rights violations on a large scale in several countries. The Commission adopted 75 resolutions and 14 decisions. Its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its forty-first session, held in August/September, adopted 47 resolutions and 13 decisions.

Discrimination

Racial discrimination

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993)

Implementation of the Programme for the Decade

In 1989, United Nations efforts to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination continued under the plan of activities for 1985-1989 put forward in 1984.(1) In 1988,(2) the General Assembly affirmed again the need for implementing the plan of activities for the remainder of the Decade (1990-1993).

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1988,(3) the Secretary-General submitted in April his annual report(4) summarizing activities carried out or planned within the UN system to achieve the Decade's objectives. In later addenda,(5) the Secretary-General presented information from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and information relating to the review and appraisal of Decade activities and the formulation of suggestions and recommendations.

The Secretary-General submitted a September report(6) informing the Assembly that he was proceeding with the publication of the global compilation of national legislation against racial discrimination, in accordance with a 1985 Assembly resolution.(7)

Also in September, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report(8) containing the views of three Governments, two specialized agencies and two NGOs on his 1986 report(9) on the role of private group action to combat racism and racial discrimination.

Pursuant to a 1988 Assembly request,(2) the Secretary-General submitted, in October, a report(10) on the implementation of the Programme of Action. It described actions taken by UN bodies, national legislation to combat racism, seminars and training courses, the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade, and the plans of activities for both halves of the Second Decade. He noted that the global consultation on racism and racial discrimination had taken place in 1988 (Geneva, 3-6 October), as authorized by the Assembly in 1987,(11) and set out its conclusions and recommendations, which were annexed to a March note.(12)

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council by decision 1989/159 took note of the Secretary-General's note on the global consultation.

Human Rights Commission action. On 23 February,(13) the Commission noted with concern that despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983) had not been attained, and that millions continued to be victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. It appealed to those States that had not yet done so to take steps to ratify, accede to and implement the international instruments relevant to the Decade. The Commission decided to give thematic consideration each year to a selected topic within the plan of activities for 1990-1993, as listed in the annex to a 1987 Assembly resolution,(11) and requested the Secretary-General to envisage organizing a seminar on the political, historical, economic, social and cultural factors that contribute to racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. The Commission decided that the topic of the global consultation for 1991 would be ways and means of denying support to racist régimes with a view to making them change their policies. It appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade. The Secretary-General was asked to prepare and finalize a handbook of recourse procedures for victims of racism and racial discrimination, to ensure that sufficient resources were included in the proposed programme budgets for the 1990-1991 and 1992-1993 bienniums to provide for implementation of the activities of the Second Decade and to organize in 1990 a meeting of representatives of national institutions and organizations promoting tolerance and harmony and combating racism and racial discrimination. Report of special Rapporteur. In a July report and latter addendum, (14) Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway) submitted his final report on the achievements made and obstacles encountered during the first and Second Decades.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August,(15) the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities decided to refer the final report of Special Rapporteur Eide to the Commission for further consideration and recommended to the Commission that the report be published and distributed as widely as possible.

Other action. At its thirty-seventh session (Geneva, 7 August-1 September),(16) the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) considered revisions proposed for its study(17) on progress made towards achieving the objectives of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which it had prepared in 1978 for the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.(18) The Convention was adopted by the General Assembly in 1965(19) and had been in force since 1969.(20) The Committee agreed that the revised draft should be prepared by the Secretariat, in consultation with designated members, for approval by the Committee in 1990. CERD endorsed the conclusions and suggestions that had emerged from the 1988 global consultation on racism and racial discrimination.(12) The Committee also agreed on arrangements to commemorate in 1990 its twentieth year of activities.

In 1989, the Commission on Human Rights had before it the annual reports on racial discrimination submitted by the International Labour Organisation (ILO)(21) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).(22)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/83 without vote.

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the purpose set forth in the Charter of the United Nations of achieving international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling the proclamation by the General Assembly, in its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recalling also the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/14 to which it is annexed, to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade,

Reaffirming the plan of activities for the periods 1985-1989 and 1990-1993, to be implemented by the Secretary-General in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 39/16 of 23 November 1984 and 42/47 of 30 November 1987,

Conscious of the responsibility conferred upon it by the General Assembly for co-ordinating and, in particular, evaluating the activities undertaken in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Bearing in mind, in particular, its mandate under General Assembly resolution 41/94 of 4 December 1986 to submit to the Assembly, during the period of the Second Decade, annual reports on the activities undertaken or contemplated to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Noting that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the first years of the Second Decade have not been attained, and that millions of human beings continue to be victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Stressing the need to continue the co-ordination of activities undertaken by various United Nations bodies and specialized agencies for the purpose of implementing the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

1. Reaffirm the importance of achieving the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, in particular the recommendations contained therein;

3. Welcomes the results of the global consultation on racism and racial discrimination organized by the Secretary-General and held at Geneva from 3 to 6 October 1988;

4. reaffirms the need for continued co-ordination of the full range of programmes being implemented by the United Nations system as they relate to the objectives of the Second Decade;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the effective and immediate implementation of those activities proposed for the first half of the Second Decade that have not yet been undertaken, in particular the 1989 seminar on cultural dialogue between the countries of origin and the host countries of migrant workers;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to proceed with the implementation of the activities for the period 1990-1993 listed in the annex to General Assembly resolution 42/47, and requests him, in this context, to accord the highest priority to measures to combat apartheid;

7. Also invites all Governments to take or continue to take all necessary measures to combat all forms of racism and racial discrimination and to support the work of the Second Decade by making contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, in order to ensure further implementation of activities for the Second Decade;

8. Decides, as a matter of priority, to give particular attention to the specific activities of the Programme of

Action for the Second Decade that are directed towards the elimination of apartheid, in view of the explosive situation in southern Africa;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in his reports, to continue to pay special attention to the situation of migrant workers and their families;

10. Emphasizes the importance of public information activities in combating racism and racial discrimination and in mobilizing public support for the objectives of the Second Decade, and, in this context, commends the efforts of the Co-ordinator for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

11. Decides to continue to accord the highest priority each year to the agenda item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/83

24 May 1989 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Draft by Burkina Faso (E/1989/L.18) on behalf of the African States; agenda item 2.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/52 without vote.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objective set forth in the Charter of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming also its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, on the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, on the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recalling further the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and 1983,

Bearing in mind the Report of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Convinced that the Second World Conference represented a positive contribution by the international community towards attaining the objectives of the Decade, through its adoption of a Declaration and an operational Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting with concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were not attained and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling its resolutions 39/16 of 23 November 1984, 42/47 of 30 November 1987 and 43/91 of 8 December 1988,

Emphasizing once again the necessity of attaining the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General and his reports submitted within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained international measures for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination and the total eradication of apartheid in South Africa,

Aware that certain activities of the Second Decade scheduled for the period 1985-1989 have not been implemented owing to a lack of financial resources,

Aware also of the importance and the magnitude of the phenomenon of migrant workers, as well as the efforts undertaken by the international community to improve the protection of the human rights of migrant workers and their families,

Taking note of the conclusions and suggestions of the global consultation on racism and racial discrimination held at Geneva from 3 to 6 October 1988, the conclusions and recommendations of the seminar on the effects of racism and racial discrimination on the social and economic relations between indigenous peoples and States, held at Geneva from 16 to 20 January 1989, and the conclusions and recommendations of the seminar on cultural dialogue between the countries of origin and the host countries of migrant workers, held at Athens from 18 to 26 September 1989,

1. Declares once again that all forms of racism and racial discrimination, particularly in their institutionalized form, such as apartheid, or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity, are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

2. Decides that the international community, in general, and the United Nations, in particular, should continue to give the highest priority to programmes for combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and intensify their efforts, during the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to provide assistance and relief to the victims of racism and all forms of racial discrimination and apartheid, especially in South Africa and Namibia and in occupied territories and territories under alien domination;

3. Appeals to all Governments and to international and non-governmental organizations to increase and intensify their activities to combat racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and to provide relief and assistance to the victims of these evils;

4. Takes note of the reports submitted by the Secretary-General containing information on the activities of Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, as well as United Nations organs, to give effect to the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

5. Notes and commends the efforts made to co-ordinate all the programmes currently under implementation by the United Nations system that relate to the objectives of the Second Decade and encourages the Co-ordinator for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination to continue his efforts;

6. Note with satisfaction the holding of the seminar on the effects of racism and racial discrimination on the social and economic relations between indigenous peoples and States and the seminar on cultural dialogue between the countries of origin and the host countries of migrant workers and requests the Secretary-General to give the reports on the seminars wide distribution among Governments, competent United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations;

7. Notes that the publication of the global compilation of national legislation against racial discrimination is proceeding, and requests the Secretary-General to transmit it to Governments as soon as possible;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the study on the effects of racial discrimination on the children of minorities, in particular those of migrant workers, in the field of education, training and employment, and to submit, inter alia, specific recommendations for the implementation of measures to combat the effects of that discrimination;

9. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the study on the role of private group action to combat racism and racial discrimination;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and issue as soon as possible a collection of model legislation for the guidance of Governments in the enactment of further legislation against racial discrimination;

11. Renews its invitation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and teaching aids to promote teaching, training and educational activities on human rights and against racism and racial discrimination, with particular emphasis on activities at the primary and secondary levels of education;

12. Welcomes the completion and the submission to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the study of the results achieved and the obstacles encountered during the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the first half of the Second Decade, and requests the Commission on Human Rights to transmit this study to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

13. Emphasizes again the importance of adequate recourse procedures for victims of racism and racial discrimination, and therefore once again requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the results of the seminars held on this topic, to prepare and finalize, with the assistance of experts in this field, a handbook of recourse procedures;

14. Considers that all the parts of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination should receive equal attention in order to attain the objectives of the Second Decade;

15. Invites the Secretary-General to implement immediately those activities scheduled for the period 1985-

1989 not yet carried out and to proceed with the implementation of the activities scheduled for the biennium 1990-1991;

16. Affirms once again the need for the implementation of the plan of activities proposed for the period 1990-1993 contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 42/47;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to accord the highest priority, in executing the plan of activities, to measures for combating apartheid;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 42/47, to ensure that sufficient additional resources are included in the proposed programme budgets for the bienniums 1990-1991 and 1992-1993 to provide for the implementation of the activities of the Second Decade, and requests him to inform the Assembly of the steps taken in that regard;

19. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to accord special attention to the situation of migrant workers and their families and to include regularly in his reports all information on such workers;

20. Invites all Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate fully in the implementation of the plans of activities for the periods 1985-1989 and 1990-1993 by intensifying and broadening their efforts to bring about the speedy elimination of apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

21. Considers that voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination are indispensable for the implementation of the above-mentioned programmes;

22. Notes once again with regret that the present situation of the Trust Fund is not encouraging;

23. Strongly appeals, therefore, to all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund and, to this end, requests the Secretary-General to continue to undertake appropriate contacts and initiatives to encourage contributions;

24. Takes note of the reports on the activities of the Second Decade, and reiterates its request to the Economic and Social Council, throughout the Decade, to submit annually to the General Assembly a report containing, inter alia:

(a) An enumeration of the activities undertaken or contemplated to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade, including the activities of Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other international and regional organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations;

(b) A review and appraisal of those activities;

(c) Its suggestions and recommendations;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

26. Decides to keep the item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination" on its agenda throughout the Second Decade and to consider it as a matter of the highest priority at its forty-fifth session.

General Assembly resolution 44/52

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/715) without vote, 27 October (meeting 21); draft by Kenya (A/C.3/44/L.6) on behalf of the Group of African States, orally revised; agenda item 89.

Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 3rd Committee 3-11, 15, 21; plenary 78.

Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1989,(23) there were 128 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in 1965(19) and in force since 1969.(20) Yemen became a party in 1989.

Implementation of the Convention

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), set up under article 8 of the Convention, held only one extended session in 1989 (Geneva, 7 August-1 September).(16) Due to non-payment of contributions by a number of States parties, the Committee was unable to hold its spring session. Normally it held two 3-week sessions annually.

Most of CERD's work was devoted to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions. It considered 49 reports submitted by 28 States parties under article 9 of the Convention. The report summarized the views of Committee members on each country report and the statements made by the States parties concerned.

CERD also considered, in conformity with article 14 of the Convention, communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD competence to receive and consider such communications. Twelve States parties-Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Iceland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Senegal, Sweden and Uruguay-had declared such recognition.

Under article 15 of the Convention, the Secretary-General transmitted to CERD documents related to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. CERD observed that it found it impossible to fulfil its function under article 15 as the documents did not include copies of petitions and did not contain valid information concerning legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures directly related to the Convention's principles and objectives. The Committee asked that appropriate information be furnished.

As to its critical financial situation, the Committee adopted a decision containing a draft resolution by which the General Assembly would have authorized the Secretary-General to ensure, on a temporary basis, the financing of the expenses of the members of the Committee from the UN regular budget until a more permanent solution was found. In an October report,(24) the Secretary-General stated that as at 1 September 1989, the total of outstanding assessments and arrears amounted to $168,758.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/68 without vote.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and resolution 43/95 of 8 December 1988 on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, as well as its other relevant resolutions on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Reiterating the importance of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which is the most widely accepted human rights instrument adopted under the auspices of the United Nations,

Aware of the importance of the contributions of the Committee to the efforts of the United Nations to combat racism and all other forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Welcoming the report of the Committee on the work of its thirty-seventh session,

Reiterating once again the need to intensify the struggle for the elimination of racism and racial discrimination throughout the world, especially the elimination of the system of apartheid in South Africa and Namibia,

Emphasizing the obligation of all States parties to the Convention to take legislative, judicial and other measures in order to secure full implementation of the provisions of the Convention,

Recalling the urgent appeals made by the Secretary-General, the General Assembly, the eleventh and twelfth meetings of States parties to the Convention and the Committee itself to the States parties to honour their financial obligations under the Convention,

Gravely concerned that, despite those appeals and other efforts, the meeting schedule of the Committee has been interrupted and the proper functioning of the Committee continues to deteriorate,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the members of the Committee to explore ways and means to overcome the Committee's current financial crisis,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the question of financing the expenses of the members of the Committee,

1. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination have still not fulfilled their financial obligations, which led to the cancellation of the February/March 1989 session of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

2. Expresses once again its concern that such a situation led to a further delay in the discharge of the substantive obligations of the Committee under the Convention;

3. Commends the Committee for its work with regard to the implementation of the Convention and the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the work of its thirty-seventh session;

5. Calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligations under article 9, paragraph 1, of the Convention and to submit in due time their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention;

6. Endorses the decision of the Committee to hold one of its regular sessions in New York, if resources are available, in commemoration of its twentieth year of activities under the Convention, to coincide with the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, 21 March 1990;

7. Strongly appeals to all States parties, especially those in arrears, to fulfil their financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention and to pay their outstanding contributions and, if possible, their contributions for 1990 before 1 February 1990, so as to enable the Committee to meet regularly;

8. Invites the Secretary-General to do everything possible to ensure that funds are available to meet all the costs of the meetings of the Committee in 1990, including the expenses of its members;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to invite those States parties which are in arrears to pay the amounts in arrears, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the States parties at their thirteenth meeting on all legal and administrative measures that the States parties and the General Assembly could take to guarantee the regular functioning of the Committee;

11. Invites States parties at their thirteenth meeting to decide on administrative and legal measures to improve the financial situation of the Committee;

12. Decides to consider at its forty-fifth session, under The item entitled "Elimination of all forms of racial discrimination", the next report of the Committee, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee.

General Assembly resolution 44/68

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/716) without vote, 27 October (meeting 21); 29-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.7), orally revised; agenda item 100. Financial implications, S-G, A/C.3/44/L.12.

Other aspects of discrimination

Religious intolerance

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in 1987,(25) the Secretary-General, in a May report,(26) presented information received from 22 Governments, 2 specialized agencies and 9 NGOs relevant to its consideration of measures that might be taken to eliminate all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. The Commission on Human Rights had before it in 1989 a report of the Special Rapporteur, Angelo Vidal d'Almeida Ribeiro (Portugal),(27) containing allegations transmitted to the Governments concerned regarding situations which seemed to be inconsistent with the provisions in the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,(28) and a summary of the replies received. He discussed national and international guarantees for freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, and presented examples of some positive steps taken to implement the Declaration. The report contained an analysis of the information collected by the Special Rapporteur as evidence of the persistence of numerous infringements of the rights set out in the Declaration.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that incidents and governmental actions inconsistent with the provisions of the Declaration persisted in nearly all regions of the world, but also that genuine efforts were being made to introduce and implement measures to combat the problem. He recommended the preparation of new international norms on the elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief and urged States to ratify the relevant international human rights instruments. Advantage should be taken, he stated, of the advisory services made available by the United Nations in the field of human rights.

Human Rights Commission action. As requested by the General Assembly in 1988,(29) the Commission continued in 1989 to consider measures to implement the Declaration. On 6 March,(30) it urged States to provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief; to combat intolerance; and to ensure that members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respected different religions and beliefs. The Commission further called on them to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect for freedom of religion or belief. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to accord high priority to disseminating the Declaration in all UN official languages and to make the text available for use by UN information centres (UNICs) and other interested bodies. It also asked him to invite interested NGOs to consider facilitating the text's dissemination in national and local languages.

The Commission recalled its request to the Sub-Commission to: prepare a compilation of provisions relevant to the elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief contained in the Declaration and other international instruments; examine the issues and factors which should be considered before any drafting of a further binding international instrument on freedom of religion and belief took place; and report on those issues in 1989.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report to it in 1990 and to assist the Special Rapporteur to enable him to report in 1990 as well.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August,(31) the Sub-Commission decided to submit to the Commission for consideration in 1990 the Secretary-General's report(26) and a working paper(32) by Theo van Boven (Netherlands), which contained a compilation of provisions relevant to the elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief and a discussion of issues and factors that should be taken into account before drafting a further binding international instrument on freedom of religion or belief. It brought to the Commission's attention the following issues: the Declaration should continue to serve as a basis for any further work in standard-setting and in considering measures to ensure respect for the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief; the possibility of drafting any new binding instrument should be considered along the lines of a 1986 General Assembly resolution;(33) the Secretary-General might be asked to organize within the programme of advisory services, and not later than 1991, a seminar on the interrelationship between the enjoyment of the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and the other human rights and fundamental freedoms; and consideration might also be given to organizing, in co-operation with UNESCO, the United Nations University, other interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and academic and research institutions, a global consultation on the positions and approaches of different religions and beliefs to human rights and fundamental freedoms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/131 without vote.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the need to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling its resolution 43/108 of 8 December 1988, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration,

Encouraged by the efforts being made by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to study relevant developments affecting the implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/55 of 8 March 1988 and Economic and Social Council decision 1988/142 of 27 May 1988, by which the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate was extended for two years,

Emphasizing that non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups at every level have an important role to play in the promotion of tolerance and the protection of freedom of religion or belief by, inter alia, engaging in the examination of the most effective means to promote the implementation of the Declaration,

Conscious of the importance of education in ensuring tolerance of religion and belief,

Seriously concerned that intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief continue to occur in many parts of the world,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a right guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States, therefore, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems and with such internationally accepted instruments as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, to provide, where they have not already done so, adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies where there is intolerance or discrimination based on religion or belief;

3. Urges all States to take all appropriate measures to combat intolerance and to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and, in this context, to examine where necessary the supervision and training of their civil servants, educators and other public officials to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, they respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

4. Invites the United Nations University and other academic and research institutions to undertake programmes and studies on the encouragement of understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

5. Considers it desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and to ensure that appropriate measures are taken to this end in the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the dissemination of the text of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, in all the official languages of the United Nations, and to take all appropriate measures to make the text available for use by United Nations information centres, as well as by other interested bodies;

7. Welcomes the efforts of non-governmental organizations to promote the implementation of the Declaration, including the Second International Conference on Ways to Promote the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, held at Warsaw from 14 to 18 May 1989;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to invite interested non-governmental organizations to consider what further role they could envisage playing in the implementation of the Declaration and in its dissemination in national and local languages;

9. Urges all States to consider disseminating the text of the Declaration in their respective national languages and to facilitate its dissemination in national and local languages;

10. Recalls with satisfaction the decision of the Economic and Social Council, based on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth session, to renew for two years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate;

11. Notes that the Commission on Human Rights, on the basis of a report to be submitted by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, intends to consider at its forty-sixth session the question of drafting a binding international instrument on freedom of religion or belief, and emphasizes, in this connection, the relevance of General Assembly resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986, entitled "Setting international standards in the field of human rights";

12. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration and to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance" and to consider the report of the Commission on Human Rights under that item.

General Assembly resolution 44/131

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/825) without vote, 22 November (meeting 52); 34-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.58); agenda item 106.

Meetings numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 36-43, 50, 52; Plenary 8 2.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(34) the Commission welcomed the Sub-

Commission's 1988 decision⁽³⁵⁾ to entrust to the Chairman/Rapporteur of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), the further development of a draft declaration on indigenous rights, and asked the Secretary-General to give her the assistance she needed to carry out the task. The Economic and Social Council endorsed those actions by decision 1989/140 of 24 May. The Secretary-General was also asked to assist the Working Group in discharging its tasks and to distribute widely the report⁽³⁶⁾ on the UN seminar on the effects of racism and racial discrimination on the social and economic relations between peoples and States (Geneva, 16-20 January).

The Commission appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to consider favourably requests for contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations. It also asked the Working Group and the Sub-Commission to consider ways to broaden the scope and activities of the Fund and to transmit their recommendations thereon in 1990.

Working Group activities. At its seventh session (Geneva, 31 July-4 August),⁽³⁷⁾ the Working Group on Indigenous Populations reviewed developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous peoples. It had before it the first revised text of the draft universal declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples⁽³⁸⁾ prepared by the Chairman/Rapporteur. Subsequent addenda⁽³⁹⁾ contained comments received on the draft declaration from Member States, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The Working Group recommended that the Chairman/Rapporteur prepare a second revised text of the draft declaration and that the Sub-Commission strongly encourage Governments and indigenous peoples to hold joint meetings in order to present to the Group in 1990 and in future sessions agreed-upon texts.

The Group decided to consider further the possibility of establishing a United Nations Commissioner for Indigenous Peoples, to co-ordinate international action for the recognition and promotion of the rights of indigenous peoples and for the improvement of their economic, social and political conditions. It recommended that the General Assembly proclaim 1993 the International Year for Indigenous Rights.

Sub-Commission action. By a resolution of 1 September,⁽⁴⁰⁾ the Sub-Commission recommended that the Chairman/Rapporteur prepare a second revised text of the draft declaration and asked the Secretary-General to assist her. It also asked him to transmit the Working Group's report to Governments, indigenous peoples and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for comments and proposals on the revised text. The Sub-Commission further asked him to assist the Working Group in discharging its tasks and to consider ways of better publicizing the aims of the Working Group.

Also on 1 September, ⁽⁴¹⁾ the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to encourage the global consultation on the realization of the right to development (see below, under "Economic, social and cultural rights") to take account of the rights and concerns of indigenous peoples, particularly the report of the seminar on the effects of racism and racial discrimination on the social and economic relations between indigenous peoples and States, and to consider the extent to which the same principles might be applicable to other groups. It also asked him to organize regional training courses for indigenous peoples' organizations on international human rights standards and procedures, and to facilitate their participation in the work of the Working Group and their attendance at other UN human rights organs and bodies. The United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations was invited to assist the Working Group in compiling information on investments and operations on the lands of indigenous peoples.

On the same date,⁽⁴²⁾ the Sub-Commission entrusted Asbjorn Eide and Christy Mbonu (Nigeria) with the task of preparing a working paper on possible UN activities for an international year for indigenous rights.

In other action on that date, the Sub-Commission decided⁽⁴³⁾ to endorse the recommendations made by the Working Group on Indigenous Populations in annex I of its report on its 1989 session. It also recommended, for the Working Group's consideration, an agenda including: the scope and effective exercise of internal autonomy and self-government; fiscal and administrative relations between indigenous governments and States; effective means of planning for and implementing autonomy, including negotiated constitutional arrangements and involving both territorial and personal autonomy; and recommendations for standard-setting.

The Sub-Commission expressed its thanks to Bangladesh⁽⁴⁴⁾ for progress made in the treatment of its tribal populations.

Study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements

On 6 March,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Commission on Human Rights recommended to the Economic and Social Council a draft text regarding a study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations and the appointment of Special Rapporteur Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba). The text was adopted by the Council on 24 May (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/77 without vote.

Study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations

Recalling its decision 1988/134 of 27 May 1988,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1988/56 of 9 March 1988 and 1989/41 of 6 March 1989 and resolutions 1987/17 of 2 September 1987 and 1988/20 of 1 September 1988 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Taking into account the outline of the study prepared by the Special Rapporteur, Mr. Miguel Alfonso Martínez, and of the substantive debate on the topic in the Sub-Commission's Working Group on Indigenous Populations at its sixth session,

1. Confirms the appointment of Mr. Miguel Alfonso Martínez as Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and authorizes him to carry out the study on the potential utility of treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between indigenous populations and Governments referred to in Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/56;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur in order for him to carry out the study;

3. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit a progress report to the Sub-Commission at its forty-first session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/77

24 May 1989 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) without vote, 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); agenda item 9.

On 1 September,(46) the Sub-Commission authorized the Special Rapporteur to undertake the travel necessary to prepare his preliminary report. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and to secure the appointment of a consultant to help him during the 1990-1991 biennium.

Hopi-Navajo relocation

On 1 September,(47) the Sub-Commission expressed its appreciation to Erica-Irene Daes and John Carey for their report(48) regarding the relocation of Navajo and Hopi families in northern Arizona (United States) in accordance with the settlement of a land dispute between the two parties. It welcomed initiatives taken by the Navajo Nation and Hopi Tribe to resolve the situation by agreement.

Migrant workers

Draft convention

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March,(49) the Commission asked the Secretary-General to inform it in 1990 of the progress made on the draft international convention on the protection of migrant workers and their families.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families held its eighth inter-sessional meeting from 31 May to 9 June(50) and its tenth session from 26 September to 6 October(51) both in New York.

At the meetings, the Group discussed the provisions of the draft convention still pending during the second reading.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/155 without vote.

Measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and standards set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind the principles and standards established within the framework of the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the importance of the task carried out in connection with migrant workers and their families in other specialised agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles and standards, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling its resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979, in which it decided to establish a working group open to all Member States to elaborate an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/198 of 15 December 1980, 36/160 of 16 December 1981, 37/170 of 17 December 1982, 38/86 of 16 December 1983, 39/102 of 14 December 1984, 40/130 of 13 December 1985, 41/151 of 4 December 1986, 42/140 of 7 December 1987 and 43/146 of 8 December 1988, by which it renewed the mandate of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and requested it to continue its work,

Having examined the progress made by the Working Group at its eighth inter-sessional meeting, held from 31 May to 9 June 1989, and at the current session of the General Assembly, from 26 September to 6 October 1989, during which the Working Group continued with the second reading of the draft convention,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the two most recent reports of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and, in particular, of the progress made by the Working Group on the drafting, in second reading, of the draft convention;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to entrust to the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat the technical revision of the text of the articles of the draft convention that have been approved so far by the Working Group in second reading, with a view to ensuring uniformity of terminology and gender and to harmonizing the versions in the official languages of the United Nations, bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986, and to transmit the results of this technical revision to Governments as soon as possible, and at least one month before the next meeting of the Working Group, to be held in 1990;

3. Decides that the Working Group shall hold a meeting of two weeks' duration in New York, immediately after the first regular session of 1990 of the Economic and Social Council, with a view to completing the remaining articles and considering the results of the technical revision of the draft convention;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments the two most recent reports of the Working Group so as to enable the members of the Working Group to finish the drafting, in second reading, of the draft convention during the meeting referred to in paragraph 3 of the present resolution, as well as to transmit the results obtained at that meeting to the General Assembly so that it may take a decision during its forty-fifth session;

5. Also invites the Secretary-General to transmit the above-mentioned documents to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the international organizations concerned, for their information, so as to enable them to continue their co-operation with the Working Group;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to do everything possible to ensure adequate secretariat services for the Working Group during the meeting to be held immediately after the first regular session of 1990 of the Economic and Social Council, for the timely fulfilment of its mandate.

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/848) without vote, 29 November (meeting 60); 25-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.74), agenda item 12.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/44/854; S-G, A/C.3/44/L.92, A/C.5/44/42.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 48, 50-60; 5th Committee, 53; plenary 82.

Protection of minorities

The Commission on Human Rights again established an informal open-ended working group to continue work on a draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities. The working group considered draft articles 4 and 5 in meetings held on 8, 9, 10, 14 and 20 February and 6 March.(52)

On 8 March,(53) the Commission decided to establish another working group in 1990 to consider the draft declaration. It further decided that the group would have no fewer than four full meetings, preferably during the first two weeks of the Commission's 1990 session. The Secretary-General was asked to give the group the assistance it needed. The Commission's decisions and request to the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1989/146 of 24 May.

As requested by the Sub-Commission in 1988,(54) Claire Palley (United Kingdom) submitted a July working paper(55) on possible ways and means to facilitate the peaceful and constructive resolution of situations involving racial, national, religious and linguistic minorities. On 1 September,(56) the Sub-Commission decided to entrust Asbjorn Eide with preparing a further report on national experience in that area, in accordance with the guidelines and principles set out in the working paper submitted by Claire Palley, for consideration in 1991 and asked him to present a progress report in 1990.

HIV- and AIDS-related discrimination

As requested by the Sub-Commission in 1988,(57) Luis Varela Quirós (Costa Rica) in a July report(58) submitted proposals for a study on AIDS and human rights. He discussed medical and legal aspects of AIDS and possible questions for a study on human rights and AIDS.

On 31 August,(59) the Sub-Commission decided to entrust Mr. Varela Quirós with a study of problems and causes of discrimination against HIV-infected people or people with AIDS and recommended that the Special Rapporteur take into account a resolution of the Commission on Human Rights concerning non-discrimination in the field of health(60) (see below, under "Other human rights questions") and the guidelines contained in the International Consultation on HIV/AIDS and Human Rights (Geneva, 26-28 July).(61) It recommended that the Special Rapporteur carry out the study in close co-operation with the World Health Organization (WHO) and asked him to make a preliminary report in 1990. It asked the Secretary-General and the WHO Global Programme on AIDS to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the assistance he needed for the task.

Civil and political rights

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1989, parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966(1) and in force since 1976,(2) totalled 89 and 48 States, respectively(3) Argentina and Ireland ratified the Covenant in 1989; Algeria, Ireland, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua and the Philippines acceded to or ratified the Optional Protocol.

In August, the Secretary-General reported on the status of the Covenant as at 1 August 1989.(4)

Human Rights Commission action. On 2 March,(5) the Commission appealed to States that had not yet done so to become parties to the Covenant and Optional Protocol and to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1990 on the status of the Covenant and its Protocol.

Second optional protocol

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(6) the Commission decided to transmit to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, the comparative analysis and the draft second optional protocol to the Covenant aimed at abolishing the death penalty prepared in 1987,(7) as well as the comments expressed thereon by the Sub-Commission in 1988 and 1989 and the Commission in 1989. It asked the Secretary-General to bring the comparative analysis to the attention of all Governments and to invite them to communicate their comments on the text of the draft. He was also requested to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly in 1989. The Commission recommended that the Assembly consider taking action on the second optional protocol.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1989/64, recommended that Member States take steps to implement the safeguards and strengthen further the protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted decision 1989/139 by recorded vote.

Elaboration of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights aiming at the abolition of the death penalty

At its 16th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/25 of 6 March 1989, approved the Commission's decision to transmit to the General Assembly for suitable action the comparative analysis concerning the proposal to elaborate a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the draft second optional protocol prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as well as the comments expressed at the thirty-ninth and fortieth sessions of the Sub-Commission and the forty-fifth session of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1989/139

27-7-15 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) by recorded vote (28-4-17)), 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); agenda item 9.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zaire.

Against: Iran, Jordan, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan-

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Cameroon, Cuba, Ghana, Guinea, Indonesia, Japan, Lesotho, Liberia, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, Trinidad and Tobago, Yugoslavia, Zambia-

Reports of the Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General presented the views of 28 Governments on the draft text of the second optional protocol.(8)

In an October note,(9) the Secretary-General stated that pursuant to decisions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council (see above), the comparative analysis and other necessary documents had been transmitted to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/128 by recorded vote.

Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 3 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted in its resolution 217 A (III) of 10 December 1948,

Recalling also article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights contained in the annex to its resolution 2200 A (XXI) of 16 December 1966,

Mindful of its decision 35/437 of 15 December 1980, reaffirmed in its resolution 36/59 of 25 November 1981, to consider the idea of elaborating a draft of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty,

Mindful also of its resolution 37/192 of 18 December 1982, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider the idea of elaborating a draft of a second optional protocol, and its resolution 39/137 of 14 December 1984, in which it requested the Commission and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to consider the idea further,

Taking note of the comparative analysis prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Taking note also of the views expressed by Governments in favour of and against the death penalty and of their comments and observations regarding such a second optional protocol, as reproduced in the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Referring to its decision 42/421 of 7 December 1987, and to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/25 of 6 March 1989 and Economic and Social Council decision 1989/139 of 24 May 1989, pursuant to which the comparative analysis and the draft second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty, prepared by the Special Rapporteur, were transmitted to the General Assembly for suitable action,

Wishing to give States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that choose to do so the opportunity to become parties to a second optional protocol to that convention,

Having considered the draft second optional protocol,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the work achieved by the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

2. Adopts and opens for signature, ratification and accession the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty, contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Calls upon all Governments in a position to do so to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Second Optional Protocol.

ANNEX

Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Believing that abolition of the death penalty contributes to enhancement of human dignity and progressive development of human rights,

Recalling article 3 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted on 10 December 1948, and article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted on 16 December 1966,

Noting that article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights refers to abolition of the death penalty in terms that strongly suggest that abolition is desirable, penalty should be considered as progress in the enjoyment of the right to life,

Desirous to undertake hereby an international commitment to abolish the death penalty,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

1. No one within the jurisdiction of a State Party to the present Protocol shall be executed.

2. Each State Party shall take all necessary measures to abolish the death penalty within its jurisdiction.

Article 2

1. No reservation is admissible to the present Protocol, except for a reservation made at the time of ratification or accession that provides for the application of the death penalty in time of war pursuant to a conviction for a most serious crime of a military nature committed during wartime.

2. The State Party making such a reservation shall at the time of ratification or accession communicate to the Secretary-General of the United Nations the relevant provisions of its national legislation applicable during wartime.

3. The State Party having made such a reservation shall notify the Secretary-General of the United Nations of any beginning or ending of a state of war applicable to its territory.

Article 3

The States Parties to the present Protocol shall include in the reports they submit to the Human Rights Committee, in accordance with article 40 of the Covenant, information on the measures that they have adopted to give effect to the present Protocol.

Article 4

With respect to the States Parties to the Covenant that have made a declaration under article 41, the competence of the Human Rights Committee to receive and consider communications when a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations shall extend to the provisions of the present Protocol, unless the State Party concerned has made a statement to the contrary at the moment of ratification or accession.

Article 5

With respect to the States Parties to the first Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights adopted on 16 December 1966, the competence of the Human Rights Committee to receive and consider communications from individuals subject to its jurisdiction shall extend to the provisions of the present Protocol, unless the State Party concerned has made a statement to the contrary at the moment of ratification or accession.

Article 6

1. The provisions of the present Protocol shall apply as additional provisions to the Covenant.

2. Without prejudice to the possibility of a reservation under article 2 of the present Protocol, the right guaranteed in article 1, paragraph 1, of the present Protocol shall not be subject to any derogation under article 4 of the Covenant.

Article 7

1. The present Protocol is open for signature by any State that has signed the Covenant.

2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification by any State that has ratified the Covenant or acceded to it. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. The present Protocol shall be open to accession by any State that has ratified the Covenant or acceded to it.

4. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

5. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States that have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 8

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession.

2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession, the present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 9

The provisions of the present Protocol shall extend to all parts of federal States without any limitations or exceptions.

Article 10

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States referred to in article 48, paragraph 1, of the Covenant of the following particulars:

(a) Reservations, communications and notifications under article 2 of the present Protocol;

(b) Statements made under articles 4 or 5 of the present Protocol;

(c) Signatures, ratifications and accessions under article 7 of the present Protocol;

(d) The date of the entry into force of the present Protocol under article 8 thereof.

Article 11

1. The present Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Protocol to all States referred to in article 48 of the Covenant.

Implementation

The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 1989: its thirty-fifth from 20 March to 7 April in New York; and the thirty-sixth from 10 to 28 July(10) and thirty-seventh from 23 October to 10 November,(11) both in Geneva.

At those sessions, the Committee considered reports submitted under article 40 of the Covenant from 11 States—Bolivia, Cameroon, Chile, Democratic Yemen, Italy, Mauritius, New Zealand, the Philippines, Togo, the USSR and Uruguay.

In April, the Committee adopted a general comment on article 24 (the enjoyment by children of the right of special protection), which was transmitted to the Economic and Social Council. On 9 November, the Committee adopted a general comment on non-discrimination for transmission to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session in 1990.

State of siege or emergency

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(12) the Commission, noting a 1988 Sub-Commission resolution,(13) approved the Sub-Commission's request to its Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and states of emergency to continue to update his work and to submit to the Sub-Commission in 1989 an annual report and a list updated on the basis of the information received, and to update his report to the Sub-Commission for the forty-sixth session of the Commission. It further approved the Sub-Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance he required.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), submitted his third annual report⁽¹⁴⁾ containing information on States or territories which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency. The first and second annual reports were issued in 1987⁽¹⁵⁾ and 1988⁽¹⁶⁾ respectively.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,⁽¹⁷⁾ the Sub-Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to present in 1990 the next annual report and list updated on the basis of the information received and to update his present report for the Commission's consideration in 1990. It asked the Secretary-General to give consideration to the technical assistance which might be provided by the Special Rapporteur or by the Secretariat to States requesting it. The Secretary-General was also asked to assist the Special Rapporteur.

As requested by the Sub-Commission, the Special Rapporteur submitted revised and updated information on countries where measures had been taken that constituted the proclamation, introduction, extension, maintenance or termination of emergency regimes in various forms.⁽¹⁴⁾

Self-determination of peoples

By five resolutions adopted in 1989, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the right to self-determination of the People of Afghanistan,⁽¹⁸⁾ Kampuchea,⁽¹⁹⁾ Palestine,⁽²⁰⁾ Namibia⁽²¹⁾ and Western Sahara.⁽²²⁾ A sixth resolution adopted under the item on the right to self-determination pertained to mercenaries and condemned their use as a means to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination.⁽²³⁾

In an October report,⁽²⁴⁾ the Secretary-General summarized action taken by the Commission and the Economic and Social Council on the right of peoples to self-determination. He also summarized replies received from 13 Governments, 4 specialized agencies, 5 intergovernmental organizations and 3 NGOs in response to his request for information for inclusion in his report. The report was prepared in response to two 1988 General Assembly resolutions.⁽²⁵⁾

On 8 December 1989, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the right to self-determination, a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

On the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/79 by recorded vote.

Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in the importance of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Reaffirming also the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, national sovereignty and territorial integrity and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples as imperatives for the full enjoyment of all human rights.

Reaffirming further the obligation of all Member States to comply with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial and foreign domination,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) and all relevant resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolutions on the question of Namibia, in particular resolutions 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and S-14/1 of 20 September 1986, as well as the relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976, 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, 629(1989) of 16 January 1989, 632(1989) of 16 February 1989 and 640(1989) of 29 August 1989,

Recalling further the final communiqué adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its ministerial meeting held at United Nations Headquarters on 2 October 1987,

Expressing its support for, and solidarity with, the people of Namibia in their demand for the removal of the racist South African military personnel from Namibia and for the total removal of former Koevoet elements from the South West Africa Police,

Bearing in mind the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa,

Welcoming the adoption at Harare on 21 August 1989 of the Declaration of the Organization of African Unity Ad Hoc Committee on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa and its subsequent endorsement by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^b

Bearing in mind the outcome of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel, held at Vienna from 11 to 13 July 1983,

Taking note of resolutions CM/Res.1206(L) on Namibia and CM/Res.1207(L) on South Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fiftieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 17 to 22 July 1989,^c

Reaffirming that the system of apartheid imposed on the South African people constitutes a violation of the fundamental rights of that people, a crime against humanity and a constant threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming also its resolution 39/2 of 28 September 1984, and recalling Security Council resolution 554(1984) of 17 August 1984, in which the Council rejected the so-called "new constitution" as null and void, Council resolution 569(1985) of 26 July 1985 and the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 13 June 1986 on the nation-wide state emergency in South Africa,

Alarmed by the increasing number of assassinations and abductions of members and leaders of the national liberation movements in Africa and elsewhere by hit squads deployed and paid by the racist régime,

Deeply concerned that the restrictions imposed by the Pretoria régime in 1988 on thirty-four democratic and non-violent organizations have not been lifted and that since the beginning of 1989 severe restrictions have been imposed on over six hundred political activists committed to peaceful means of struggle against apartheid,

Indignant at the latest ploy of the Pretoria régime aimed at legitimizing its undemocratic structures, namely, the staging on 6 September 1989 of so-called "general elections" for its tri-cameral parliamentary system, which has been overwhelmingly rejected,

Outraged by the massacre of twenty-nine peaceful demonstrators by the racist police during a non-violent protest against the so-called "general elections",

Deeply concerned about the racist régime's increased attacks on the religious community and its individual leaders, including the recent poisoning of the Secretary-General of the South African Council of Churches, as well as the spraying of poisonous substances in the church premises serving as the venue for a conference of religious leaders,

Gravely concerned about the apartheid régime's continued use of the death penalty against South African patriots with contemptuous disregard for appeals for clemency from the international community, including the General Assembly,

Considering the concerted campaign by the new President of the apartheid regime to project himself as a reformer in order to ward off the further imposition of sanctions by the international community,

Deeply concerned about the continued terrorist acts of aggression committed by the Pretoria regime against independent African States in the region, in particular the unprovoked attacks against Botswana, Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe,

Deeply indignant at the persistent policy of hostility by the racist régime of South Africa against Angola, which constitutes an act of aggression against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country,

Reaffirming the national unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling the Political Declaration adopted by the first Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the League of Arab States, held at Cairo from 7 to 9 March 1977,

Recalling also the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,

Considering that the denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, sovereignty, independence and return to Palestine and the brutal suppression by the Israeli forces of the heroic uprising, the intifadah, of the Palestinian population in the occupied territories, as well as the repeated Israeli aggression against the population of the region, constitute a serious threat to international peace and security,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January 1988 and 608(1988) of 14 January 1988 and General Assembly resolutions 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/177 of 15 December 1988 and 44/2 of 6 October 1989, on the deterioration of the situation of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories,

Deeply concerned and alarmed at the deplorable consequences of Israel's continuing acts of aggression against Lebanon and recalling all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982 and 521(1982) of 19 September 1982,

1. Calls upon all States to implement fully and faithfully all the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination and independence by peoples under colonial and foreign domination;

2. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign occupation by all available means, including armed struggle;

3. Reaffirms also the inalienable right of the Namibian people, the Palestinian people and all peoples under foreign occupation and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without foreign interference;

4. Strongly condemns those Governments that do not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples still under colonial domination, alien subjugation and foreign occupation, notably the peoples of Africa and the Palestinian people;

5. calls upon Israel to refrain from deporting any Palestinian civilians from the occupied Palestinian territories and to release immediately all Palestinian detainees;

6. Strongly condemns the constant and deliberate violations of the fundamental rights of the Palestinian people, as well as the expansionist activities of Israel in the Middle East, which constitute an obstacle to the achievement of self-determination and independence by the Palestinian people and a threat to peace and stability in the region;

7. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other international organizations, to extend their support to the Palestinian people through its sole and legiti-mate representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization, in its struggle to regain its right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

8. Welcomes the adoption by the Security Council of resolutions 629(1989) and 632(1989), by which the Council commenced the process of implementing the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, contained in its resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978);

9. Reaffirms that Namibia remains under the direct and legal responsibility of the United Nations until independence, and expresses full support for the inalienable rights of the Namibian people to self-determination and genuine national independence, in a united Namibia, with its territorial integrity untruncated;

10. Expresses concern that South Africa has persistently violated the letter and spirit of Security Council resolution 435(1978), which remains the only internationally acceptable basis for the peaceful settlement of the Namibian conflict and must be implemented in its original and definitive form;

11. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all Namibians still imprisoned and detained by the Pretoria régime;

12. Demands also that the racist régime of Pretoria put an immediate end to the persistent denial of equal access to the State-controlled media in Namibia by all political organizations participating in the electoral process in accordance with Security Council resolution 435(1978);

13. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other international organizations, to extend their support to the Namibian people in their struggle for self-determination and national independence in accordance with the Charter;

14. Condemns the policy of "bantustanization" and reiterates its support for the oppressed people of South Africa in its just and legitimate struggle against the racist minority régime of Pretoria;

15. Reaffirms its rejection of the so-called "new constitution" and the so-called "general elections" based on that constitution as null and void, and reiterates that peace in South Africa can be guaranteed only by the establishment of majority rule through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and undivided South Africa;

16. Commends the mass democratic movement in South Africa for the tremendous advances scored during the recent campaign of defiance to unjust apartheid laws in the ongoing struggle against apartheid;

17. Strongly condemns the holding of so-called "general elections" on 6 September 1989, which will further entrench white supremacy, and demands the calling of free and fair elections based on universal adult suffrage in a united and democratic South Africa;

18. Also strongly condemns the wanton killing of peaceful and defenceless demonstrators and workers on strike, as well as the arbitrary arrests of leaders and activists of the mass democratic movement, including women and young children, and demands their immediate and unconditional release, in particular that of Nelson Mandela;

19. Further strongly condemns South Africa for the imposition, renewal and extension of the state of emergency under its repugnant Internal Security Act and calls for the immediate lifting of the state of emergency, as well as the repeal of the Internal Security Act and all other legislation designed to circumscribe political activity;

20. Welcomes the unconditional release of Walter Sisulu and six other political prisoners and demands that the apartheid régime lift the restrictions imposed on all of the released political prisoners;

21. Strongly urges the apartheid régime to respond positively to the provisions of the Declaration of the Organization of African Unity Ad Hoc Committee on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa, adopted at Harare on 21 August 1989, by releasing unconditionally all political prisoners and detainees, including Nelson Mandela, by lifting all bans and restrictions on all proscribed and restricted organizations and persons, and by halting all political trials and political executions as a means of creating an environment conducive to the peaceful resolution of the South African situation;

22. Strongly condemns the increased attacks on the religious community and its leaders and demands that the racist Pretoria régime bring to justice those responsible for the bombing of the offices of religious bodies and for the poisoning of the Secretary-General of the South African Council of Churches and the attempts to poison other religious leaders;

23. Also strongly condemns the establishment and use of armed terrorist groups by South Africa with a view to pitting them against the national liberation movements and destabilizing the legitimate Governments of southern Africa;

24. Calls once again for the full implementation of the provisions of the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa;

25. Again demands the immediate application of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, imposed under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by all countries and more particularly by those countries which maintain military and nuclear co-operation with the racist Pretoria régime and continue to supply it with related matériel;

26. Strongly condemns the policy of those Western States, Israel and other States whose political, economic, military, nuclear, strategic, cultural and sports relations with the racist minority regime of South Africa encourage that regime to persist in its suppression of the aspirations of the people to self-determination and independence;

27. Denounces the collusion between Israel and South Africa and expresses support for the Declaration of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel;

28. Strongly condemns the persistent policy of hostility and aggression pursued by racist South Africa against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola, which constitutes a violation of the New York accord of 22 December 1988;

29. Demands that the Pretoria régime respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola and the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of that State, and demands the immediate payment of compensation to Angola for damages caused, in accordance with the relevant decisions and resolutions of the Security Council;

30. Commends the Government of Angola for its political will, diplomatic flexibility and constructive spirit in the search for a negotiated solution to the problems of southern Africa;

31. Strongly reaffirms its solidarity with the independent African countries and national liberation movements that are victims of murderous acts of aggression and destabilization by the racist régime of Pretoria, and calls upon the international community to render increased assistance and support to these countries in order to enable them to strengthen their defence capacity, defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity and peacefully rebuild and develop;

32. Strongly condemns the racist régime of Pretoria for its acts of destabilization against Lesotho, and strongly urges the international community to continue to extend maximum assistance to Lesotho to enable it to fulfil its international humanitarian obligations towards refugees and to use its influence on the racist régime so that it desists from such acts against Lesotho;

33. Also strongly condemns the unprovoked and unwarranted military attacks of 14 June 1985, 19 May 1986 and 20 June 1988 on the capital of Botswana, and demands that the racist régime pay full and adequate compensation to Botswana for the loss of life and damage to property;

34. Further strongly condemns the escalation of massacres of defenceless people and the continuing destruction of economic and social infrastructures perpetrated against Mozambique by armed terrorists, who are an extension of the South African army of aggression;

35. Reaffirms all relevant resolutions adopted by the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations on the question of Western Sahara, including General Assembly resolution 43/33 of 22 November 1988, and calls upon the current Chairman of the Assembly, of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue their efforts to find a just and lasting solution to the question;

36. Notes the contacts between the Government of the Comoros and the Government of France in the search for a just solution to the problem of the integration of the Comorian island of Mayotte into the Comoros, in accordance with the resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations on the question;

37. Strongly condemns the continued violation of the human rights of the peoples still under colonial domination and alien subjugation;

38. Calls for a substantial increase in all forms of assistance given by all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid through national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity;

39. Reaffirms that the practice of using mercenaries against sovereign States and national liberation movements constitutes a criminal act, and calls upon the Governments of all countries to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories and the transit of mercenaries through their territories to be punishable offences, and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General;

40. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, full respect for their fundamental individual rights and compliance with article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, under which no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment;

41. Expresses its appreciation for the material and other forms of assistance that peoples under colonial rule continue to receive from Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations, and calls for a substantial increase in that assistance;

42. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system to do their utmost to ensure the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to intensify their efforts to support peoples under colonial, foreign and racist domination in their just struggle for self-determination and independence;

43. Requests the Secretary-General to give maximum publicity to the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to give the widest possible publicity to the struggle of oppressed peoples for the achievement of their self-determination and national independence and to report periodically to the General Assembly on his activities in this regard;

44. Decides to consider this item at its forty-fifth session on the basis of the reports on the strengthening of assistance to colonial territories and peoples that Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations have been requested to submit.

Also on 8 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/80, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, without vote.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth and forty-fifth sessions,

Reiterating its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986, 42/94 of 7 December 1987 and 43/105 of 8 December 1988,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of these acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session under the item entitled "Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights".

General Assembly resolution 44/80

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/717) without vote, 30 October (meeting 23); 25-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.9); agenda item 105.

Afghanistan

On 6 March,(18) the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the conclusion in 1988 of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan(26) and the completion of the withdrawal of foreign troops from the country. It also welcomed the appointment of the Special Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance relating to Afghanistan and called on all States to provide adequate resources to the Special Co-ordinator to repatriate and rehabilitate Afghan refugees, as well as for the economic and social reconstruction of the country. Reaffirming the right of the Afghan people to self-determination, the Commission called for the establishment of a broad-based representative government to ensure the broadest support and immediate participation of all segments of the Afghan people, thus enabling them freely to exercise that right. It called on the parties concerned to work for the urgent achievement of a comprehensive political solution and the creation of peace and normal conditions. The Secretary-General was asked to facilitate the early realization of a comprehensive political settlement.

Kampuchea

On 6 March,(19) by a roll-call vote of 35 to 7, with 1 abstention, the Commission reiterated its condemnation of persistent gross violations of human rights in Kampuchea and reaffirmed that the continued illegal occupation of the country by foreign forces deprived Kampucheans of their right to self-determination and constituted the primary human rights violation in that country. It emphasized that the withdrawal of all foreign forces, restoration of Kampuchea's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, recognition of the Kampucheans' right to self-determination and the commitment of all States to non-interference in the country's internal affairs were essential for a solution. The Commission reaffirmed its call for an end to hostilities and an immediate withdrawal of foreign forces. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to monitor developments in Kampuchea and to intensify efforts to bring about a comprehensive political settlement and the restoration of fundamental human rights. The Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council continue to undertake measures to implement recommendations to achieve the full enjoyment of fundamental human rights and freedoms by the Kampuchean people.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/156 of 24 May, also expressed its grave concern at the continued violations of fundamental human rights in Kampuchea by foreign occupying forces, in particular the shelling of civilian camps along the border, and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council any further violations perpetrated against Kampuchean civilian refugees. It endorsed the Commission's resolution and reaffirmed its previous calls for the withdrawal of all foreign forces. The Council also took note of the announced withdrawal of occupying forces, the dialogue between the parties directly involved and other diplomatic activities; however, it expressed concern at the unresolved problem of the 350,000 Kampuchean civilians still stranded in Thailand (see also PART TWO, Chapter III).

Palestinians

On 6 March,(20) by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 11 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and calling on Israel to withdraw from the Palestinian and Arab territories. It asked the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission, prior to its 1990 session, all information pertaining to the implementation of its resolution and to transmit the resolution to Israel and to report thereon in 1990.

South Africa and Namibia

In a 6 March resolution,(21) the Commission called on States to take steps to enable the peoples of South Africa and Namibia to exercise fully and without delay their right to self-determination and independence. It reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands. The Commission demanded that South Africa release all people detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence and that it guarantee full respect for their fundamental rights. It also demanded that all States impose mandatory and comprehensive sanctions against South Africa in order to stop it from committing further acts of destabilization against neighbouring States.

(For human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia, see below, under "Human rights violations". For details on the situation in Namibia, see also PART TWO, Chapter II, and PART FOUR, Chapter III.)

Western Sahara

On 6 March,(22) by a roll-call vote of 24 to none, with 17 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed that the question of Western Sahara was one of decolonization to be resolved through the exercise of the people's right to self-determination and independence. It again requested the parties to the conflict, the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO), to negotiate directly with a view to bringing about a ceasefire and creating conditions for a referendum for self-determination.

Mercenaries

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution of 6 March,(23) adopted by a roll-call vote of 32 to 10, with 1 abstention, the Commission condemned the increased recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, and urged States to take measures to prohibit those and all other forms of assistance to mercenaries. Taking note of a report of the Special Rapporteur (see below), the Commission asked him, among other things, to develop further the position that mercenary acts and mercenarism in general were means of violating human rights and thwarting the self-determination of peoples. It also asked him to submit a report to the Commission in 1990 and a preliminary report to the General Assembly in 1989. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur in carrying out his duties. The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council that it make arrangements to ensure that the resources were provided to implement its resolution.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Commission in 1988,(27) the Special Rapporteur, Enrique Bernaldes Ballesteros (Peru), submitted a January report(28) containing information on mercenary activities. Based on replies received in response to his request to States for information, the Special Rapporteur noted that despite repeated condemnation of mercenary activities by the United Nations, the problem continued to exist, and that the main form taken by such activities was directly related to illicit activities involving interventionism and the use of force. It also appeared from the replies that few countries had made specific provision in their national legislation to treat mercenary activities as offences. Among other things, the Special Rapporteur recommended support for the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries. The General Assembly adopted the Convention in December 1989 by resolution 44/34 (see PART FIVE, Chapter II).

In accordance with a 1988 request of the General Assembly,(29) the Secretary-General, by an October note,(30) transmitted a report of the Special Rapporteur which stated that the number of complaints of mercenary activities had declined appreciably, and that the world had entered a phase of significant easing of tensions.

The Special Rapporteur recommended strengthening UN principles and declarations by adding provisions aimed at eliminating all types of mercenary activities; the inclusion by States in their national legislation of sanctions against mercenary activities; and calling on States to ensure that their territory was not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries or the planning of mercenary activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/81 by recorded vote.

Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, as well as a scrupulous respect for the principle of the non-use or threat of use of force in international relations, as developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples and their liberation movements for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign intervention and occupation, and that their legitimate struggle can in no way be considered as or equated to mercenary activity,

Recognizing that the use of mercenaries is a threat to international peace and security,

Deeply concerned about the menace that the activities of mercenaries represent for all States, particularly African, Central American and other developing States,

Alarmed at the emergence of new international criminal activities carried out by mercenaries in collusion with drug traffickers,

Recognizing that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to the fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and impede the process of the self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Recalling all of its relevant resolutions, in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of lighting against national liberation movements, and recalling also the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, as well as of the Organization of African Unity,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the short-term and long-term negative effects on the economy of southern African countries resulting from mercenary aggression,

Convinced that it is necessary to develop international co-operation among States for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of such offences,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights for his report on the question of the use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination;

2. Condemns the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, as well as all other forms of support to mercenaries for the purpose of destabilizing and overthrowing the Governments of States in southern Africa and Central America and of other developing States and lighting against national liberation movements of peoples struggling for the exercise of their right to self-determination;

3. Affirms that the use as well as the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries are offences of grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its use of groups of armed mercenaries against national liberation movements and for the destabilization of the Governments of southern African States;

5. Denounces any State that persists in the recruitment, or permits or tolerates the recruitment, of mercenaries and provides facilities to them for launching armed aggression against other States;

6. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to ensure, by both administrative and legislative measures, that the territory of those States and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries, or for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State and to fight the national liberation movements struggling against racism, apartheid, colonial domination and foreign intervention or occupation;

7. Calls upon all States to extend humanitarian assistance to victims of situations resulting from the use of mercenaries, as well as from colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation;

8. Considers that the use of channels of humanitarian and other assistance to finance, train and arm mercenaries is inadmissible;

9. Welcomes the provisions of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1988/7 of 22 February 1988 aimed at giving the Special Rapporteur the full opportunity to carry out his mandate most effectively;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the use of mercenaries.

Rights of detained persons

Administration of justice

On 6 March,(31) the Commission called on Member States to provide effective legislation and other mechanisms to ensure implementation of UN standards on human rights in the administration of justice, taking into account recommendations made by the General Assembly in 1988.(32) It called on its special rapporteurs and working groups to give special attention to questions relating to the effective protection of human rights in the administration of justice and to provide specific recommendations, including proposals for concrete measures under the UN advisory services programmes. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to study the feasibility of drafting model texts for national legislative or other measures for the effective implementation of standards in the area of the administration of justice, to seek the views of Member States on the issue and to inform the Commission in 1990 of the results of his study.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In a July report(33) the Secretary General presented succinct information on the work of the Human Rights Committee and CERD, developments elsewhere in the human rights programme and the activities within the UN programme on crime prevention and control related to the rights of detained or imprisoned persons. In addition, he discussed extralegal, arbitrary and summary executions; capital punishment; the work of the Committee against Torture; the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment;(34) standard minimum rules for the treatment of prisoners; independence of the judiciary; a code of conduct for law enforcement officials; victims of crime and abuse of power; juvenile justice; computerization of the administration of justice; and advisory services and the administration of justice.

Also in July, the Secretary-General presented a synopsis of material from NGOs referring to practices such as enforced disappearances, administrative detention without charge or trial, death during detention, and extrajudicial executions and other arbitrary or summary executions. Special attention was called to the issues of children in detention, the death penalty and the involvement of doctors in torture.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/162 without vote.

Human rights in the administration of justice

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the principles embodied in articles 3, 5, 9, 10 and 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in particular article 6, which explicitly states that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life and prohibits the imposition of the death penalty for crimes committed by persons below eighteen years of age,

Bearing in mind also the relevant principles embodied in the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Calling attention to the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, set forth in the annex to its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988,

Calling attention also to the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, as well as to the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, the Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners and recommendations on the treatment of foreign prisoners, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners,

Reaffirming in this context the importance of the principles contained in its resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986 on standard-setting in the field of human rights,

Recognizing the important contribution of the Commission on Human Rights in the field of human rights in the administration of justice, as reflected in its resolutions 1989/24 of 6 March 1989 on human rights in the administration of justice, 1989/32 of 6 March 1989 on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers, 1989/38 of 6 March 1989 on administrative detention without charge or trial and 1989/64 of 8 March 1989 on summary or arbitrary executions,

Recognizing also the significant work accomplished in this area under the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, including the results of the interregional and regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Convinced of the need for further co-ordinated and concerted action in promoting respect for human rights in the administration of justice,

Noting with satisfaction that the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1989/24, inter alia, stressed the desirability of providing States, at their request, with continued assistance in the field of the administration of justice and of including in such assistance the provision of model texts for national legislative or other measures for the effective implementation of standards in this field,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the full implementation of United Nations norms and standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

2. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/63 of 24 May 1989 on the implementation of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice;

3. Also endorses the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions set forth in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/65 of 24 May 1989;

4. Further endorses Economic and Social Council resolutions 1989/57 of 24 May 1989 on the implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, 1989/60 of 24 May 1989 on the Procedures for the Effective Implementation of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, 1989/61 of 24 May 1989 on Guidelines for the Effective Implementation of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and 1989/64 of 24 May 1989 on the implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty;

5. Invites Member States to pay attention to these resolutions in developing strategies for the practical implementation of United Nations norms and standards on human rights in the administration of justice, as it requested in its resolution 43/153 of 8 December 1988;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to invite the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to study the practical implementation of United Nations norms and standards in this field and to recommend practical measures to the Commission;

7. Requests the Secretary-General in this regard:

(a) To solicit from Member States as well as from the relevant international agencies and bodies, in particular the Human Rights Committee, the Committee against Torture and the Committee for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, comments on the implementation of these standards;

(b) To forward those comments to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its next session;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To identify general problems that may impinge on the effective implementation of standards and norms and to recommend viable solutions with action-oriented proposals;

(b) To formulate practical proposals on procedures and action at the national, regional and international levels to implement United Nations norms and standards on human rights in the administration of justice for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

(c) To continue to assist Member States, at their request, in implementing existing international human rights standards in the administration of justice, in particular under the programme of advisory services;

(d) To continue to provide all necessary support to United Nations bodies working on standard-setting in this field;

(e) To co-ordinate the various technical advisory services provided by the Centre for Human Rights and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat with a view to undertaking joint programmes and strengthening existing mechanisms for the protection of human rights in the administration of justice;

9. Emphasizes the important role of the regional commissions, specialized agencies and United Nations institutes in the area of human rights and crime prevention and criminal justice and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including national professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards in this field;

10. Draws the attention of the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as well as the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, to the issues raised in the present resolution, so that priority is accorded to issues related to human rights in the administration of justice;

11. Decides to consider at its forty-fifth session the question of human rights in the administration of justice.

General Assembly resolution 44/162

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/946) without vote, 29 November (meeting 60); 21-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.83); agenda item 12.

Torture and cruel treatment

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In January, Special Rapporteur Peter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands) presented a report to the Commission on questions relating to torture.⁽³⁶⁾ As in previous years, the Special Rapporteur received allegations of torture from different sources. After analysing them, letters with a summarized description of the allegations were transmitted to 37 countries for clarification. The letters and replies received were summarized in the report.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the majority of allegations received referred to torture practised during incommunicado detention and recommended a formal prohibition of that form of detention. He also recommended medical inspection of persons at the time of arrest and regular inspections thereafter, with compulsory inspections whenever a detainee was transferred from one place of detention to another; identification of all persons present during an interrogation; interrogation only at official interrogation centres; the establishment of independent bodies to inspect regularly places of detention; and the right by detainees to initiate proceedings before a court on the lawfulness of their detention.

In a later report,(37) the Special Rapporteur described his visits to Guatemala (18-24 September) and Honduras (25-27 September).

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1989,(3) 49 States had become parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,(38) 10 of them (Algeria, Australia, Brazil, Finland, Guinea, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, New Zealand, Poland, Portugal) in 1989. The Convention entered into force in 1987.(39) The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) also entered into force in 1987; 23 parties had made the required declarations.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 August 1989.(40)

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(41) the Commission requested all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority. It invited all ratifying or acceding States and those States parties that had not done so to make the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to submit annual reports on the Convention's status and to ensure appropriate staff and facilities for the effective functioning of the Committee against Torture.

On the same date,(42) the Commission decided to postpone until 1991 consideration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention submitted by Costa Rica in 1980 which would provide a system of periodic visits by a committee of experts to places of detention or imprisonment within the jurisdiction of States parties to the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/144 without vote.

Status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Recalling further its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and called upon all Governments to consider signing and ratifying the Convention as a matter of priority, as well as its resolutions 40/28 of 13 December 1985, 41/134 of 4 December 1986, 42/123 of 7 December 1987 and 43/132 of 8 December 1988 and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1987/30 of 10 March 1987 and 1988/36 of 8 March 1988, and taking note of Commission resolution 1989/29 of 6 March 1989,

Mindful of the relevance, for the eradication of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and of the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling the adoption of the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,

Seriously concerned about the alarming number of reported cases of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment taking place in various parts of the world,

Determined to promote the full implementation of the prohibition, under international and national law, of the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1988/32 of 8 March 1988, to extend for two years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to examine questions relevant to torture,

1. Welcomes the report of the Committee against Torture;
2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;
3. Stresses the importance of strict adherence by States parties to the obligations under the Convention regarding the financing of the Committee against Torture, to enable it to carry out in an effective and efficient manner all the functions entrusted to it under the Convention, and appeals to all States parties not to take any measures that might impair the financing of all the functions of the Committee under the Convention, so as to ensure the long-term viability of the Committee as an essential mechanism for overseeing the effective implementation of the provisions of the Convention;
4. Welcomes the attention that the Committee against Torture has given to the development of an effective system of reporting on the implementation of the Convention by States parties, and especially its decision to revise its general guidelines for the submission of initial reports by States parties;

5. Notes with appreciation the adoption by the Committee against Torture of its rules of procedure;

6. Welcome the exchange of views that has taken place between the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on questions relating to torture, and requests that this exchange be continued;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee against Torture;

8. Reiterates its request to all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

9. Once again invites all States, upon ratification of or accession to the Convention, or subsequently, to consider the possibility of making the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session and to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

11. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-fifth session under the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

General Assembly resolution 44/144

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/441627) without vote, 22 November (meeting 52): 35-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.52); agenda item 112.
Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 36-43, 50, 52; plenary 82.

Committee against Torture

The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its second session in Geneva from 17 to 28 April.⁽⁴³⁾ It examined reports submitted by Austria, Denmark, Egypt, Mexico, Norway, the Philippines and Sweden under article 19 of the Convention.

The Committee adopted rules of procedure pertaining to its activities under article 20, by which the Committee studied confidential information appearing to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party to the Convention.

The Committee held its third session, also in Geneva, from 13 to 24 November,⁽⁴⁴⁾ during which it examined reports submitted by Argentina, the Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Colombia, France, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Senegal, Switzerland and the USSR. Under article 22, the Committee declared inadmissible the first three communications submitted to it by individuals claiming to be victims of violations by a State party.

Fund for victims of torture

On 6 March,⁽⁴⁵⁾ the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, which was established in 1981.⁽⁴⁶⁾ It asked the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments its appeals for contributions, to assist the Board of Trustees in its efforts to make the Fund and its work better known and to inform the Commission annually of the Fund's operations.

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Fund,⁽⁴⁷⁾ the Secretary-General stated that, at its eighth session (Geneva, 24-28 April), the Fund's Board of Trustees discussed its mandate, the definition of torture and the prevention of torture with a view to making the best possible use of the finances available. It decided to make recommendations to the Secretary-General for grants of nearly $500,000. The focus of the grants was on therapy and rehabilitation projects and extended to some 36 countries in Africa, the Americas, Asia and Europe. The Secretary-General reported that during the period from 16 October 1988 to 15 October 1989, 21 States had contributed or pledged $857,859 to the Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/145 without vote.

United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture The General Assembly:

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling with satisfaction the entry into force on 26 June 1987 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims of torture in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

Convinced that the struggle to eliminate torture includes the provision of assistance in a humanitarian spirit to the victims and members of their families,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

2. Calls upon all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for initial as well as further contributions to the Fund;

3. Invites Governments to make contributions to the Fund, if possible on a regular basis, in order to enable the Fund to provide continuous support to projects that depend on recurrent grants;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include the Fund on an annual basis among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Board of Trustees of the Fund for the work it has carried out;

6. Also expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support given to the Board of Trustees of the Fund;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to make use of all existing possibilities, including the preparation, production and dissemination of information materials, to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known and in its appeal for contributions.

Torture or inhuman treatment of detained children in South Africa and Namibia

As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1988,(48) the Ad Hoc Working Group on southern Africa, in a January report,(49) described incidents regarding allegations of torture and ill-treatment and the detention of children in South Africa and Namibia. The Group concluded that torture and other forms of inhuman and degrading treatment of children and young people continued unabated. (For further details, see below, under "Human rights violations".)

On 23 February,(50) the Commission condemned the detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and Namibia, and demanded their immediate and unconditional release; the immediate dismantlement of the so-called "rehabilitation camps" or "re-education centres"; the termination of the state of emergency and abrogation of all repressive and discriminatory legislation; and the immediate abolition of the apartheid system. It asked the Ad Hoc Working Group to pay special attention to the detention, torture and other inhuman treatment of children and to report in 1990. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Working Group; to intervene with the Government of South Africa to bring an end to the detention, torture and other inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and to report in 1990; and to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of relevant UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs.

In an October report,(51) the Secretary-General summarized information received from UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs concerning torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa and Namibia and presented relevant excerpts from the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/143 without vote.

Torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa and Namibia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/134 of 8 December 1988 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/4 of 23 February 1989,

Recalling also the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Declaration on the Rights of the Child,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and in particular the conclusion that torture and other forms of inhuman and degrading treatment of children and young people have continued unabated during the period under review,

1. Expresses its profound outrage at evidence of detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa;

2. Vigorously condemns the apartheid racist régime for the increasing detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa;

3. Reiterates its demand for the immediate and unconditional release of children held in detention by the apartheid régime in South Africa;

4. Demands the immediate dismantlement of the so-called "rehabilitation camps" and "re-education centres" in South Africa, since they only serve the racist régime's strategy of physically and mentally abusing black South African children;

5. Reiterates its request to all relevant United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to intensify the world-wide campaign aimed at drawing attention to, monitoring and exposing these inhuman practices;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to pay special attention to the question of detention, torture and other inhuman treatment of children in South Africa;

7. Also requests the Commission on Human Rights to pay special attention to the children of Namibia who have been victims of torture, detention and other inhuman treatment by the apartheid régime, with a view to rehabilitating them;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to consider this question at its forty-fifth session under the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

General Assembly resolution 44/143

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/827) without vote, 22 November (meeting 52); 34-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.51): agenda item 112.

Detention of juveniles

On 1 September,(52) the Sub-Commission, considering that a 1987 report of the Secretary-General(53) concerning the incarceration of children under the age of 18 with adult prisoners had not yet been discussed by the Sub-Commission, and that further information had meanwhile been made available to the Secretary-General on the issue, asked him to submit a revised version to the Sub-Commission for discussion in 1990. It decided to appoint Maria Concepción Bautista (Philippines) to prepare a report on the application of international standards concerning the human rights of detained juveniles, in particular the separation of juvenile children and adult offenders in penal institutions, detention pending trial, least possible use of institutionalization, and the objectives of institutional treatment. The Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit its resolution to Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs and request their comments on those issues.

Detention without charge or trial

On 6 March (54) the Commission, taking note of an analysis of questions dealt with in a paper on administrative detention without charge or trial(55) prepared by Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France), asked the Sub-Commission to consider the report to be submitted by Mr. Joinet and to make any proposals necessary on the question.

In a July report on administrative detention,(56) Mr. Joinet recommended the annual submission to the Commission of a special report on the development of all forms of administrative detention throughout the world, and said that particular attention should be paid to the subject by the Special Rapporteurs on summary executions, torture and states of emergency, as well as by the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and other relevant UN monitoring bodies. It was recommended that the Special Rapporteur carry out an in-depth study, with a view to submitting proposals to the Commission.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(57) the Sub-Commission, expressing its appreciation for the report submitted by Mr. Joinet, regretted that it was unable to study the report properly due to lack of time, and decided to examine his proposals and his revised report in 1990 as a matter of high priority.

Working Group on Detention

The Working Group on Detention met on 9 to 11, 15, 17 and 23 August in Geneva.(58) It discussed a new draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearance, taking into account comments and views on the draft received from Governments, specialized agencies, UN bodies, NGOs and regional organizations.(59) The Group continued to consider detention resulting from the exercise of the right to freedom of expression, reviewed developments concerning the human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment and discussed the privatization of prisons. On 1 September,(60) the Sub-Commission decided to ask the Group's Chairman, Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba), to prepare a working paper for consideration in 1990 containing proposals on the best way for the Sub-Commission to study further the issue of privatization of prisons. In response to the Working Group's suggestion, the Sub-Commission appealed(61) to States that retained the death penalty to consider the possibility of enacting legislation prohibiting the imposition of the death penalty on those persons under 18 years of age. The Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to all Governments, requesting comments and information on their legislation on the subject, as well as to specialized agencies and NGOs, and to prepare a report for submission in 1990 on the basis of information received.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(62) the Commission strongly condemned hostage-taking and those responsible and demanded the immediate release of those being held. It called on States to take preventive and punitive measures to put an immediate end to causes of abduction and unlawful restraint. It asked the Secretary-General, whenever a State so requested, to use all available means to secure the immediate release of persons held hostage.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(63) the Sub-Commission condemned hostage-taking and the torture and murder that frequently accompanied it. It asked that all States take steps to prevent hostage-taking and to charge and bring to trial those who might participate in hostage-taking. The Secretary-General was asked to provide, prior to the Sub-Commission's 1990 session, a complete, up-to-date list of all UN personnel held in captivity including information concerning their names and the whereabouts of the captors, if known.

Detained UN staff members

Report of the Secretary-General. In February, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report(64) updating developments pertaining to the detention of international civil servants and their families. Annexed to the report was a consolidated list of staff members under arrest and detention or missing.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(65) the Commission appealed to Member States to respect and ensure respect for the rights of staff members and others acting under UN authority and their families, and urged them, in accordance with the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,(34) to provide adequate and prompt information concerning their arrest or detention. It further urged Member States to allow medical teams to investigate the health of detained staff members, experts and their families and permit the necessary medical treatment. It asked the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure that the human rights, privileges and immunities of UN staff members, experts and their families were fully respected, and to submit an updated report in 1990 on the situation of UN staff members, experts and their families detained, imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, including those cases that had been successfully settled during the last year.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In August, Maria Concepción Bautista submitted a preliminary report(66) on the protection of the human rights of UN staff members, experts and their families. She discussed procedures to be followed in cases of arrest, detention or death; legal rights of the United Nations in cases of arrest or detention of staff members; relevant international instruments; and the Secretary-General's efforts to ensure respect for the privileges and immunities of UN staff members and experts.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(67) the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to redouble his efforts to ensure that the human rights, privileges and immunities of UN personnel, experts and their families were fully respected. It asked Maria Concepción Bautista, the Special Rapporteur, to continue her study and to submit an updated version of her report in 1990. Member States, the Secretary-General and the heads of the secretariats of the specialized agencies who had not yet done so were asked to communicate all information concerning cases of arrest, detention or abduction of officials of the United Nations or the specialized agencies since 1980, in order to enable the Special Rapporteur to complete her task.

Summary or arbitrary executions

Reports of the Special Rapporteur. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report(68) submitted by its Special Rapporteur on summary or arbitrary executions, S. Amos Wako (Kenya). In response to allegations of imminent or threatened summary or arbitrary executions which appeared prima facie relevant to his mandate, the Special Rapporteur addressed urgent appeals to 23 Governments, and summarized the messages and replies in the report. He also sent letters to 36 Governments concerning alleged summary or arbitrary executions in their countries. Those allegations and the replies thereto were summarized in the report.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that there had been much indiscriminate killing of unarmed civilians on the part of governmental forces in conflict areas. He had also received more reports than at any prior time alleging increased use of chemical weapons. In addition, there was an increasing number of allegations to the effect that thousands of people had lost their lives at the hands of police or other enforcement officials in demonstrations. He recommended that the Centre for Human Rights should organize seminars for law enforcement officials to train them to carry out their work with due respect for the human rights of the individual, and to familiarize them with international human rights instruments related to their work.

The Special Rapporteur submitted a report(69) on his visit to Colombia (11-20 October) made at the invitation of the Government in connection with reports on summary or arbitrary executions transmitted to it by the Special Rapporteur.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(70) the Commission strongly condemned the large number of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions taking place throughout the world, and appealed to Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to take action to combat and eliminate them. It asked the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions to continue examining such executions and to respond effectively to information he received. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur, to consider ways to publicize his work and recommendations, and to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights(1) appeared not to be respected.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1988 Sub-Commission request,(71) the Secretary-General, in July, described action by other international forums on international standards for the investigation of suspicious deaths in detention, as well as adequate autopsies.(72)

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(73) the Sub-Commission, emphasizing that law enforcement officials should not use force in ways which would undermine the right of everyone to peaceful assembly, recommended a draft text for adoption by the Commission on Human Rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/159 without vote.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in which it is stated that every human being has the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in which it is stated that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling its resolution 36/22 of 9 November 1981, in which it condemned the practice of summary or arbitrary executions, and its resolutions 37/182 of 17 December 1982, 38/96 of 16 December 1983, 39/110 of 14 December 1984, 40/143 of 13 December 1985, 41/144 of 4 December 1986, 42/141 of 7 December 1987 and 43/51 of 8 December 1988,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty annexed thereto, which resolution was endorsed by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in its resolution 15,

Recalling also the close co-operation established between the Centre for Human Rights, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with regard to the elaboration of the principles on the effective prevention and investigation of arbitrary and summary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Welcoming the adoption by the Economic and Social Council of its resolution 1989/65 of 24 May 1989, containing the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions,

Welcoming also the adoption by the Economic and Social Council of its resolution 1989/64 of 24 May 1989, entitled "Implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty" and the recommendations contained therein,

Convinced of the need for appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary executions, which represents a flagrant violation of the most fundamental human right, the right to life,

1. Once again strongly condemns the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, that continue to take place in various parts of the world;

2. Demands that the practice of summary or arbitrary executions be brought to an end;

3. Appeals urgently to Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take effective action to combat and eliminate summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions;

4. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/35 of 7 May 1982, in which the Council decided to appoint a special rapporteur to consider the questions related to summary or arbitrary executions;

5. Recalls with satisfaction Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/38 of 7 May 1988, by which the Council decided to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S Amos Wako, for two years, while maintaining the annual reporting cycle;

6. Urges all Governments, in particular those which have consistently not responded to communications transmitted to them by the Special Rapporteur, and all others concerned to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur so that he may carry out his mandate effectively;

7. Requests the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, to respond effectively to information that comes before him, in particular when a summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or threatened, or when such an execution has recently occurred, and, furthermore, to promote exchanges of views between Governments and those who provide reliable information to the Special Rapporteur, where the Special Rapporteur considers that such exchanges of information might be useful;

8. Welcomes the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur in his reports to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth and forty-fifth sessions with a view to eliminating summary or arbitrary executions;

9. Encourages Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to organize training programmes and support projects with a view to training or educating law enforcement officers in human rights issues connected with their work, and appeals to the international community to support endeavours to that end;

10. Considers that the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, should continue to seek and receive information from Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, as well as medical and forensic experts;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur so that he may effectively carry out his mandate;

12. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appear not to have been respected;

13. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session, on the basis of the report of the Special Rapporteur to be prepared in conformity with Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/35, 1983/36, 1984/35, 1985/40, 1986/36, 1987/60 and 1988/38, to make recommendations concerning appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary executions.

General Assembly resolution 44/159

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/848) without vote, 29 November (meeting 60); 23-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.80); agenda item 12.

Disappearance of persons

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(74) the Commission requested the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to submit all information it deemed necessary and any specific recommendations it might have regarding the fulfilment of its task and to report to the Commission in 1990. It noted the intention of the Working Group to submit to the Sub-Commission in 1989 observations concerning the draft declaration on enforced or involuntary disappearances. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to consider ways of better publicizing the Group's work and to ensure that the Group received all necessary assistance, in particular staff and resources, especially in carrying out missions and holding sessions in countries that were prepared to receive them.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980,(75) held three sessions in 1989: its twenty-seventh in New York (17-21 April), and its twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth in Geneva (28 August-1 September, 6-15 December).(76) The Group examined information on enforced or involuntary disappearances received from Governments, NGOs and relatives of missing persons.

In 1989, the Working Group received some 2,700 reports of enforced or involuntary disappearances and transmitted some 1,650 newly reported cases to the Governments concerned; 721 of those cases were reported to have occurred in 1989, 515 were transmitted under the urgent action procedure, and 112 were clarified in the same year. The remaining cases were referred back to the sources as they lacked elements required by the Group for their transmission.

The Working Group examined the draft declaration on enforced or involuntary disappearances, which was annexed to a 1988 report of the Working Group on Detention.(77)

In its concluding observations, the Group reviewed its activities over the past 10 years. It stated that during those years it had transmitted 19,000 cases to a total of 41 Governments. It noted that advisory services would benefit countries where the problem of disappearance was endemic.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/160 without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons, and its resolution 43/159 of 8 December 1988 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Deeply concerned about the persistence, in certain cases, of the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances, and about the fact that, in certain cases, the families of disappeared persons have been the target of intimidation and ill-treatment,

Expressing its profound emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who are unsure of the fate of their relatives,

Convinced of the need to continue implementing the provisions of its resolution 33/173 and of the other United Nations resolutions on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, with a view to finding solutions for cases of disappearances and helping to eliminate such practices,

Welcoming the progress made in the preparation of the draft declaration on enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/27 of 6 March 1989,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for its humanitarian work and to those Governments that have cooperated with it;

2. Recalls the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-fourth session, to extend for two years the term of the mandate of the Working Group, as defined in Commission resolution 20(XXXVI) of 29 February 1980, while maintaining the principle of annual reporting by the Working Group;

3. Also recalls the provisions made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1986/55 of 13 March 1986 to enable the Working Group to fulfil its mandate with greater efficiency;

4. Appeals to the Governments concerned, particularly those which have not yet replied to the communications addressed to them by the Working Group, to cooperate fully with it so as to enable it, with respect for its working methods based on discretion, to perform its strictly humanitarian role, and in particular to reply more quickly to the requests for information addressed to them;

5. Encourages the Governments concerned to consider the wish of the Working Group, when such a wish is expressed, to visit their countries, thus enabling it to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

6. Extends its warm thanks to those Governments that have invited the Working Group and requests them to give all necessary attention to its recommendations;

7. Appeals to the Governments concerned to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against any intimidation or ill-treatment of which they may be the target;

8. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group when it considers the report to be submitted by the Working Group to the Commission at its forty-sixth session;

9. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary facilities.

General Assembly resolution 44/160

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/848) without vote, 29 November (meeting 60): 24-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.81), orally revised; agenda item 12. Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 48, 50-60; plenary 82.

Other aspects of civil and political rights Slavery

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(78) the Commission asked the Secretary-General to invite States parties to the three slavery conventions—the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery,(79) and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others(80)—to submit regular reports to the Sub-Commission on the situation in their countries. It invited States that had not ratified the conventions to do so, or to explain in writing why they felt unable to. Relevant intergovernmental organizations, UN organizations and NGOs were asked to supply information to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery. The Secretary-General was asked to undertake a study of ways of establishing an effective mechanism to implement the three slavery conventions; to assign a full-time professional staff member to serve the Working Group and undertake other activities relating to contemporary forms of slavery; to designate the Centre for Human Rights as the focal point for the co-ordination of activities; and to submit his final report on the sale of children to the Working Group in 1989.

Working Group activities. The Sub-Commission's five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its fourteenth session (Geneva, 31 July-4 August and 25 August),(81) considered the status and implementation of the conventions on slavery and slavery-like practices; prevention of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; and developments in other areas, including slavery and the slave trade, exploitation of child labour, debt bondage, the prevention of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others and slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism.

The Working Group had before it a May report(82) of the Secretary-General on ways of establishing an effective mechanism to implement the slavery conventions. He addressed the issues of amendment or modification of the slavery conventions, the establishment of a reporting procedure and strengthening the mandate, role and functioning of the Working Group on Slavery.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September,(83) the Sub-Commission congratulated the Anti-Slavery Society, the oldest human rights organization in the world, on its one-hundred-and-fiftieth anniversary.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/74 without vote.

Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1982/20 of 10 March 1982 on the question of slavery and the slave trade in all their practices and manifestations, including the slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism,

Recalling also its resolutions 1982/20 of 4 May 1982 and 1983/30 of 26 May 1983 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others,

Considering that the report of its Special Rapporteur on the suppression of the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others still constitutes a useful basis for further action,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 38/107 of 16 December 1983 and 40/103 of 13 December 1985 on the prevention of prostitution,

Gravely concerned that slavery, the slave trade and slavery-like practices still exist, that there are modern manifestations of those phenomena and that such practices represent some of the gravest violations of human rights,

Aware of the complexity of the issue of the suppression of the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, and the need for further co-ordination and co-operation to implement the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur and by various United Nations bodies,

1. Reminds States parties to the Slavery Convention of 1926, the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery of 1956, and the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 1949 of their obligation to submit to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities regular reports on the situation in their countries, as provided for under the relevant conventions and under Council decision 16(LVI);

2. Endorses the request made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1989/35 of 6 March 1989 that the Secretary-General should assign a full-time professional staff member to serve the Working Group and undertake other activities relating to contemporary forms of slavery under the post which has been included in the budget of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat for questions relating to slavery and slavery-like practices;

3. Also endorses the request made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1988/42 of 8 March 1988, that the Secretary-General should report to the Council on the steps taken by Member States. United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to implement the recommendations made in Council resolution 1983/30, and the request made by the Commission in its resolution 1989/35 that the Secretary-General should report to the Council at its first regular session of 1990 on the comments received;

4. Further endorses the request made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1989/35 that the Secretary-General should designate the Centre for Human Rights as the focal point for the co-ordination of United Nations activities for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery;

5. Decides to consider the question of the suppression of traffic in persons at its first regular session of 1990 under the agenda item entitled "Human rights".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/74

24 May 1989 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) without vote, 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/201, amended by Netherlands (E/1989/C.2/L.16); agenda item 9.

Freedom of movement

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(84) the Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide the necessary assistance to the Sub-Commission and the Special Rapporteur during the consideration of the Special Rapporteur's report(85) (see below, under "Discrimination") and the draft declaration on the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country

Report of the Secretary-General. In a May report and later addenda,(86) the Secretary-General presented comments on the draft declaration received from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August,(87) the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to prepare an analytical compilation of the comments on the draft declaration received from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and of the comments made by Sub-Commission members. It decided to establish, at its 1990 session, a sessional open-ended working group with a view to preparing a revised version of the draft declaration.

Human rights and fundamental freedoms

On 7 March (88) the Commission expressed concern that in many parts of the world, persons were detained for seeking to exercise peacefully their human rights and fundamental freedoms, particularly the rights to freedom of expression, assembly and association. It asked Governments to release all persons deprived of their liberty for seeking peacefully to exercise those rights and freedoms or to promote and defend them and called on Governments, pending such release, to take measures to safeguard their human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Freedom of speech

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March,(89) expressing concern at the extensive occurrence of detention of persons exercising their right to freedom of opinion and expression, the Commission appealed to States to ensure respect and support for that right. It took note of a 1988 Sub-Commission decision asking Danilo Türk (Yugoslavia) to prepare a working paper containing a proposal for carrying out a study concerning the right to freedom of opinion and expression to serve as a basis for future Sub-Commission decisions.

Working paper. In a June working paper,(90) Mr. Türk discussed the main elements of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, permissible limitations of that right and the limitations which might jeopardize it. He recommended that the Sub-Commission appoint two of its members to work jointly on a study to be entitled "The right to freedom of opinion and expression: current problems of its realization and measures necessary for its strengthening and promotion". He stated that the priority area of the study should be the political dimension of that right.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August,(91) the Sub-Commission, endorsing the recommendations made by Mr. Türk, decided to entrust Louis Joinet and Mr. Türk with preparing a study on the right to freedom of opinion and expression, current problems of its realization and measures necessary for its strengthening and promotion.

Conscientious objectors

Report of the Secretary-General. In 1989, the Commission on Human Rights had before it a report of the Secretary-General(92) presenting views on conscientious objection to military service of States with national military service that provided for alternatives to service in the armed forces; of States that did not, in principle, allow conscientious objection to military service but considered individual cases; of States that had no standing army or with voluntary military service; and of UN bodies and specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March,(93) the Commission requested the Secretary-General to report in 1991 on conscientious objection to military service, taking into account comments provided by Governments and other information received by him.

Independence of the judicial system

On 6 March,(94) the Commission expressed its appreciation to Special Rapporteur L. M. Singhvi (India) for his 1985 study on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary(95) and the revised draft declaration on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers(96) It also asked Governments to take into account the principles set forth in the draft declaration in implementing the 1985 Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary.(97) It asked the Sub-Commission to consider effective means to monitor the implementation of the Basic Principles and the protection of practising lawyers. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the study and the draft declaration to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and to the Eighth (1990) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. The Commission also urged the Committee and the Congress to take them into account in completing work on the draft basic principles on the role of lawyers (see PART THREE, Chapter XII).

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1989/60 of 24 May, adopted the Procedures for the Effective Implementation of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary (see PART THREE, Chapter XII).

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, (98) the Sub-Commission asked Louis Joinet to prepare a working paper on ways by which the Sub-Commission could assist in ensuring respect for the independence of the judiciary and the protection of practising lawyers. It also asked the Secretary-General to assist Mr. Joinet.

Right to a fair trial

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September, (99) the Sub-Commission decided to appoint Stanislav Chernichenko (Russian Federation) and William Treat (United States) as rapporteurs to prepare a report on existing international norms and standards pertaining to the right to a fair trial. It asked them to recommend which provisions guaranteeing the right to a fair trial should be made non-derogable.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Report of the Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report of the Secretary-General containing replies from Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs on their policies regarding the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights.(1)

Human Rights Commission action. On 2 March,(2) by a roll-call vote of 31 to 10, with 1 abstention, the Commission appealed to States to pursue policies for the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights and called on them to co-operate in promoting social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur, Danilo Türk, appointed in 1988,(3) with any assistance he might need in preparing a study of problems, policies and progressive measures relating to a more effective realization of those rights. On the same date,(4) the Commission approved the Sub-Commission's 1988 decision(3) to entrust the Special Rapporteur with the study and its request to him to submit a preliminary report in 1989, as well as its request to the Secretary-General for assistance. The Commission's request to the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1989/138 of 24 May.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In a preliminary report(5) submitted in June, the Special Rapporteur discussed the possibility of a unified UN approach to economic, social and cultural rights, problems in realizing those rights at the national level, and international co-operation. He indicated a number of problem areas on which the study on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights should focus; these included further discussion of a unified approach to the interpretation and realization of the rights in question; extreme poverty and the effects of structural adjustment policies; international co-operation; and the role of UN development agencies.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August,(6) the Sub-Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to prepare a progress report for consideration at its forty-second session and requested the Secretary-General to provide him with all the assistance he needed.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

As at 31 December 1989, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966(7) and in force since 1976,(8) had been ratified or acceded or succeeded to by 94 States. Algeria and Ireland became parties to the Covenant in 1989.(9)

The Secretary-General provided information on the status of ratifications of or accessions and successions to the Covenant as at 1 August 1989.(10)

Implementation of the Covenant

Human Rights Commission action. On 2 March,(11) the Commission appealed to all States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant. It encouraged the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to strive towards the application of universally recognized criteria in implementing the Covenant and encouraged Governments to publish the Covenant in as many languages as possible and to disseminate it widely. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to report in 1990 on the status of the Covenant.

On the same date,(12) the Commission asked the Secretary-General to consult with the Committee as to how the programme of advisory services could be used to promote enhanced respect for economic, social and cultural rights.

Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, established in 1985,(13) held its third session at Geneva from 6 to 24 February.(14) Its pre-sessional working group, a five-member group established in 1988(15) to meet for one week prior to each session, met at Geneva from 30 January to 3 February.

Concerning the rights covered by articles 6 to 9 of the Covenant (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, trade union rights and the right to social security), the Committee examined reports from Canada,(16) the Netherlands,(17) Rwanda,(18) and Trinidad and Tobago.(19) Rights covered under articles 10 to 12 (the protection of the family, mothers and children, and the right to an adequate living standard and to physical and mental health) were examined in reports submitted by Cameroon, (20) France(21) the Netherlands,(22) Poland,(23) Trinidad and Tobago,(24) Tunisia(25) and the United Kingdom.(26) As to the rights covered by articles 13 to 15 (education, including compulsory education, and cultural participation), the Committee considered reports from the Netherlands,(27) Rwanda,(28) and Trinidad and Tobago.(29) It also considered supplementary information submitted by Zaire.(30)

The Committee's day of general discussion focused on article 11, the right of everyone to an adequate standard of living for himself and his family (including adequate food, clothing and housing) and to the continuous improvement of living conditions.

In response to a 1988 Economic and Social Council request,(31) Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide made a presentation of his 1987 study(32) on the right to adequate food in order for the Committee to submit its observations thereon.

In 1989, the Committee began to prepare general comments based on the articles and provisions of the Covenant with a view to assisting the States parties in fulfilling their reporting obligations. Its first general comment outlined the objectives of reports submitted by States parties.

Annexed to the Committee's report was a list of States parties to the Covenant as at 24 February 1989 and provisional rules of procedure adopted by the Committee on 21 February.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/158 of 24 May, took note of the provisional rules of procedure and decided to defer until 1990 consideration of those rules. In the interim, the Council asked the Committee to continue to use the rules of procedure of the Council.(33)

Other action. The Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the eleventh report of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Applications on progress made towards the observance of the provisions of the Covenant lying within ILO's scope of activities. The report described progress in the observance of articles 6 to 10 in 13 States.(34)

Interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/130 by recorded vote.

Indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the obligations of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Recalling that in the preambles to the International Covenants on Human Rights, it is recognized that the ideal of free human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can be achieved only if conditions are created whereby persons may enjoy their economic, social and cultural rights as well as their civil and political rights,

Also recalling its resolutions 40/114 of 13 December 1985, 41/117 of 4 December 1986, 42/102 of 7 December 1987 and 43/113 of 8 December 1988,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977 that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights can never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Convinced that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights,

Desirous of removing all obstacles to the full realization of human rights, in particular mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

Reaffirming that there is a close and multidimensional relationship between disarmament and development, that progress in disarmament would considerably promote progress in development and that resources released through disarmament measures could contribute to the economic and social development and well-being of all peoples,

Recognizing that the realization of the right to development may help to promote the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1985/42 of 14 March 1985, 1986/15 of 10 March 1986, 1987/19 and 1987/20 of 10 March 1987, and 1988/22 and 1988/23 of 7 March 1988, and taking note of Commission resolutions 1989/12 and 1989/13 of 2 March 1989, in which it is stated that the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights have not received sufficient attention within the framework of the United Nations system.

1. Notes the essential importance of national efforts and international co-operation to achieve the full and effective realization of all human rights recognized in the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international instruments;

2. Appeals to all States to pursue policies directed towards the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights recognized in the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international instruments;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts under the programme of advisory services to States in the implementation, promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms set forth in the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international instruments;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to take determined steps, within existing resources, to give publicity to the Human Rights Committee and to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to ensure that they receive full administrative support in order to enable them to discharge their functions effectively;

5. Requests the organs of the United Nations, in co-operation with the specialized agencies, Member States and non-governmental organizations, to pay equal attention to economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights in the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights;

6. Decides to consider the question of the indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights at its forty-fifth session under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights".

Right to development

Working Group activities. In 1989, the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development held its twelfth session (Geneva, 23-27 January).⁽³⁵⁾

Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,⁽³⁶⁾ the 15-member Group considered an analytical compilation of comments on the implementation of the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development⁽³⁷⁾ prepared by the Secretary-General and replies received from Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, governmental organizations and NGOs.⁽³⁸⁾ The Group recommended eliciting from Governments, UN organs and other bodies through a questionnaire more specific views on ways to implement the Declaration. It also advised: integrating the right to development with other human rights in the World Public Information Campaign to be launched in 1989; including the right to development in the advisory services of the Centre for Human Rights; paying special attention to vulnerable groups; inviting the Secretary-General to prepare, on a continuing basis, an analytical compendium containing provisions of national laws and administrative and judicial measures that implement the Declaration's provisions; and urging the Secretary-General to increase collaboration and co-ordination with interested NGOs. It recommended to the Commission on Human Rights that the Commission request the Secretary-General to explore possibilities of initiating consultation and an exchange of views with experts in development and human rights, and invite him to organize a global consultation on the realization of the right to development, in 1989 if possible. It reiterated its recommendation that there was a need for continuing evaluation mechanisms regarding the Declaration.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, (39) the Commission asked the Secretary-General to circulate the Working Group's report to Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, governmental organizations and NGOs, drawing their attention to the analytical compilation of replies. It also asked him to transmit the Group's report to the General Assembly at its current session and to transmit a questionnaire to Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, governmental organizations and NGOs to elicit additional, updated and more specific views on the implementation and further enhancement of the Declaration. It further invited him to organize, in 1989, a global consultation on the realization of the right to development; to prepare background documents to assist the consultation; and to submit a report on the consultation in 1990. The Commission requested that the right to development be fully integrated with other human rights in the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights to be launched in 1989 and that the right to development be included in the programme of activities of the advisory services of the Centre for Human Rights.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/141, approved the Commission's invitation to the Secretary-General to organize a global consultation.

The global consultation was scheduled to be held in January 1990 at Geneva.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August, (40) the Sub-Commission, considering that among the reasons for the non-realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms in developing countries were economic, social and cultural problems, decided to consider, on an annual basis, the item

"The new international economic order and the promotion of human rights".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/62 without vote.

Right to development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the proclamation by the General Assembly at its forty-first session of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling also its resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development, and taking note of Commission resolution 1989/45 of 6 March 1989, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council by its decision 1989/141,

Reiterating the importance of the right to development for all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Having considered the report of the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development and all other relevant documents submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session,

Aware of the interest shown by several Member States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations in the work of the Working Group,

1. Expresses the hope that the replies of Governments, United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, and governmental and non-governmental organizations, including those active in development and human rights, to the request made by the Secretary-General, pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/45, will contain additional, updated and more specific views and proposals on the subject of the implementation and further enhancement of the Declaration on the Right to Development;

2. Takes note of the invitation of the Commission to the Secretary-General to organize, within existing resources, a global consultation on the realization of the right to development, which would involve experts with relevant experience gained at the national level and representatives of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and interested non-governmental organizations, including those active in development and human rights, and which would focus on the fundamental problems posed by the implementation of the Declaration, the criteria that might be used to identify progress and mechanisms for evaluating and stimulating such progress;

3. Expresses the hope that the results of that global consultation, the report on which is to be presented to the Commission at its forty-sixth session, will substantially contribute to the future work of the Commission on the implementation and further enhancement of the Declaration;

4. Endorses the view of the Commission that there is a need for a continuing evaluation mechanism to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles set forth in the Declaration;

5. Urges all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, particularly the specialized agencies, when planning their programmes of activities, to take due account of the Declaration and to make efforts to contribute to its application;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission at its forty-sixth session and the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session of the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system for the implementation of the Declaration;

7. Calls upon the Commission to decide at its forty-sixth session on the future course of action on the question, in particular on practical measures for the implementation and enhancement of the Declaration;

8. Invites the Commission to report on the question to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

9. Decides to consider this question at its forty-fifth session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

General Assembly resolution 44/62

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/799) without vote, 20 November (meeting 49); 39-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.38); agenda item 96 (b).

Extreme poverty

Human Rights Commission action. On 2 March,(41) the Commission drew the attention of the General Assembly and all UN bodies to the contradiction between the existence of situations of extreme poverty and exclusion of society and the duty to guarantee full enjoyment of human rights, and urged the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to give the necessary attention to that question. It asked the Sub-Commission to pay particular attention to the question of extreme poverty and exclusion from society and to examine the feasibility of a study on the topic.

Foreign debt

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 30 to 6, with 6 abstentions, the Commission, on 2 March,(42) decided to include in the agenda of its 1990 session the subject of foreign debt, economic adjustment policies and their effects on the full enjoyment of human rights and, in particular, on the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August,(43) by a roll-call vote of 17 to 1, with 1 abstention, the Sub-Commission invited the Special Rapporteur on problems, policies and progressive measures relating to the more effective realization of economic, social and cultural rights to take those factors into account in his study. It considered it necessary to invite the developed countries and multilateral financial institutions to take particular account, in formulating their debt policies, of social objectives and growth and development priorities.

Right to food

In a July report,(44) the Secretary-General presented information received from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the International Law Association on the right to food in response to his request for a description of laws States had pertaining to the right to food.

Popular participation and human rights

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Commission had before it two reports of the Secretary-General on popular participation and human rights.

One of the reports(45) contained comments on a 1985 study on popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights(46) received from Governments, UN bodies and Secretariat departments, specialized agencies and NGOs. The other report, a study of laws and practices regarding popular participation,(47) presented the views of States on popular participation in relation to some civil and political rights, certain economic, social and cultural rights, and vulnerable or disadvantaged groups.

Human Rights Commission action. On 2 March,(48) the Commission invited Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies and NGOs that had not yet done so to comment on the study on popular participation,(45) and asked the Secretary-General to submit a report in 1990 containing comments made by them. It also asked him to prepare a study for submission in 1991 regarding the extent to which the right to participation had been established and had evolved at the national level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/53 without vote.

Popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/152 of 17 December 1979, 37/55 of 3 December 1982, 38/24 of 22 November 1983 and 40/99 of 13 December 1985.

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/31 of 27 May 1983 and decision 1984/131 of 24 May 1984 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/14 of 2 March 1989,

Reaffirming that popular participation in all its various forms constitutes an important factor in socio-economic development and in the full realization of all human rights and the dignity of the human person,

1. Invites Governments, the concerned specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the relevant non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to transmit to the Secretary-General their comments on the study on popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to consider at its forty-sixth and, if desired by the Commission, at its forty-seventh, forty-eighth and forty-ninth sessions, the question of popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in the full realization of all human rights, and to inform the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Economic and Social Council, of the results of that consideration;

3. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its forty-eighth session, in the context of the item relating to the world social situation, under the sub-item entitled "Popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights".

General Assembly resolution 44/53

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/749) without vote, 9 November (meeting 37): 20-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.13): agenda item 90 (b). Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 12-20, 30, 37: plenary 78.

Advancement of human rights

In November, in his fourth biennial progress report on international conditions and human rights⁽¹⁾ issued pursuant to a 1981 General Assembly request,⁽²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted substantive information and views on the subject received during the year from seven Governments and four UN specialized agencies.

The Secretary-General noted that Member States had drawn attention to such issues as international peace and security and human rights; the impact of the arms race on human rights; international co-operation and human rights; elimination of racial discrimination and apartheid; decolonization; development and international economic conditions; legislative activity and the implementation of international human rights instruments; activities of international organizations; and measures undertaken at the national level. Specialized agencies, for their part, described activities for the promotion and protection of human rights within their areas of concern. Some Governments and organizations underlined the necessity to intensify the struggle against racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, stating that their eradication was central to achieving the UN objectives in maintaining world peace and securing social progress. It was emphasized that all forms of racial discrimination, besides constituting a violation of fundamental human rights, tended to jeopardize friendly relations among peoples, co-operation between nations, and international peace and security.

Noting the complex interrelationship between international conditions and human rights, the Secretary-General pointed out that human rights violations led to political consequences injurious to the long-term interests of peace and that the stability of national and international society could only rest upon a foundation of assured human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/63 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also the purposes and principles of the Charter to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

Recalling also its resolutions 34/46 of 23 November 1979, 35/174 of 15 December 1980, 36/133 of 14 December 1981, 38/124 of 16 December 1983, 39/145 of 14 December 1984, 40/124 of 13 December 1985, 41/131 and 41/133 of 4 December 1986, 42/119 of 7 December 1987 and 43/125 of 8 December 1988,

Taking into account Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/43 of 14 March 1985,

Reiterating that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of development opportunities is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals within nations,

Recognizing that the human being is the main subject of development and that everyone has the right to participate in, as well as to benefit from, the development process,

Bearing in mind that the grave economic situation facing the developing countries noticeably affects the effective promotion and full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Reiterating once again that the establishment of the new international economic order is an essential element for the effective promotion and full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reiterating also its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights,

Emphasizing the need for the creation, at the national and international levels, of conditions for the promotion and full protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples,

Recognizing that international peace and security are essential elements for the full realization of human rights, including the right to development,

Convinced that the resources that would be released by disarmament could contribute significantly to the development of all States, in particular the developing countries, reiterating that co-operation among all nations on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, is essential for the promotion of peace and development,

Convinced that the primary aim of such international co-operation must be the achievement by all human beings of a life of freedom and dignity and freedom from want,

Concerned, however, about the occurrence of violations of human rights in the world,

Reaffirming that nothing in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or in the International Covenants on Human Rights may be interpreted as implying for any

State, group or person the right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at destroying any of the rights and freedoms proclaimed therein,

Affirming that the ultimate aim of development is the steady improvement of the well-being of the entire population, on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom,

Considering that the efforts of the developing countries for their own development should be supported by an increased flow of resources and by the adoption of appropriate and substantive measures for creating an external environment conducive to such development,

Taking into account the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^a

Bearing in mind the stipulations of the final documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 17 to 19 May 1989,^b particularly paragraphs 10 to 13 of the Economic Declaration,

Emphasizing the special importance of the purposes and principles proclaimed in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Taking into account Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1989/15 of 2 March 1989 and 1989/45 of 6 March 1989,

Reaffirming the importance of furthering the activities of the organs of the United Nations in the field of human rights in conformity with the principles of the Charter,

Emphasizing that Governments have the duty to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

1. Reiterates its request that the Commission on Human Rights should continue its current work on overall analysis with a view to further promoting and strengthening human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the programme and working methods of the Commission, and on the overall analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with the provisions and concepts of General Assembly resolution 32/130 and other relevant texts;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international co-operation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom, dignity and peace for all peoples and for every human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from promoting and protecting the others;

3. Reaffirms that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reaffirms also that it is of paramount importance for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms that Member States should assume specific obligations by acceding to or ratifying international instruments in this field and, consequently, that the work within the United Nations system of setting standards in the field of human rights and universal acceptance and implementation of the relevant international instruments should be encouraged;

5. Reiterates or again that the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those mentioned in paragraph 1 (e) of General Assembly resolution 32/130, paying due attention also to other situations of violations of human rights;

6. Reaffirms its responsibility for achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and expresses its concern at serious violations of human rights, in particular mass and flagrant violations of those rights, wherever they occur;

7. Expresses concern at the present situation as regards the achievement of the objectives and goals for the establishment of the new international economic order, and at its adverse effects on the full realization of human rights, in particular the right to development;

8. Reaffirm that the right to development is an inalienable human right;

9. Reaffirms also that international peace and security are essential elements for achieving full realization of the right to development;

10. Recognizes that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent;

11. Considers it necessary for all Member States to promote international co-operation on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, with a view to solving international economic, social and humanitarian problems;

12. Expresses concern at the disparity existing between established norms and principles and the actual situation of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in the world;

13. Urges all States to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

14. Reiterates the need to create, at the national and international levels, conditions for the full promotion and protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples;

15. Reaffirms once again that, in order to facilitate the full enjoyment of all human rights without diminishing personal dignity, it is necessary to promote the rights to education, work, health and proper nourishment through the adoption of measures at the national level, including those that provide for the right of workers to participate in management, as well as the adoption of measures at the international level, including the establishment of the new international economic order;

16. Decides that the approach to future work within the United Nations system on human rights matters should also take into account the content of the Declaration on the Right to Development and the need for the implementation thereof;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

National institutions for human rights protection

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,(3) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission at its 1989 session an updated report(4) on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, prepared further to his 1987 report on the subject.(5) The updated report analysed information received from seven Governments as at 15 February 1989 with regard to various models of institutions and their functioning, including legislative organs and organs established to examine the constitutionality of law, judicial organs, administrative organs and the ombudsman, as well as the role of NGOs. Annexed to the report was a list of national institutions.

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March, the Commission reaffirmed(6) the importance of developing national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights and of maintaining their independence and integrity. It encouraged Member States to exchange information and experience as well as to develop funding and other strategies concerning the establishment and operation of such institutions. The Commission also affirmed the role of national institutions as focal points for the dissemination of human rights materials and other public information activities under UN auspices, and requested the Secretary-General to assist Member States in that regard.

Note of the Secretary-General. In a 22 September note,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that, pursuant to its 1987 request, (3) the Centre for Human Rights was in the process of preparing his updated report for publication as a UN handbook in the six official languages, to be distributed world wide.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/64 without vote.

National institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant resolutions concerning national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights, notably its resolution 41/129 of 4 December 1986 and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1987/40 of 10 March 1987 and 1988/72 of 10 March 1988, and taking note of Commission resolution 1989/52 of 7 March 1989,

Emphasizing the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international instruments for promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Affirming that priority should be accorded to the development of appropriate arrangements at the national level to ensure the effective implementation of international human rights standards,

Conscious of the significant role that institutions at the national level can play in protecting and promoting human rights and fundamental freedoms and in developing and enhancing public awareness of those rights and freedoms,

Recognizing that the United Nations can play a catalytic role in assisting the development of national institutions by acting as a clearing-house for the exchange of information and experience,

Mindful in this regard of the guidelines on the structure and functioning of national and local institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 33/46 of 14 December 1978,

Noting the diverse approaches adopted throughout the world for the protection and promotion of human rights at the national level, and recognizing the value of such approaches,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the importance of developing, in accordance with national legislation, effective national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights and of maintaining their independence and integrity;
3. Encourages Member States to establish or, where they already exist, to strengthen national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights and to incorporate those elements in national development plans;
4. Welcomes the increase in the number of national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights in various countries around the world;

5. Encourages initiatives on the part of Governments and regional, international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations intended to strengthen existing national institutions and to establish such institutions where they do not exist;

6. Notes with appreciation the action taken by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to co-operate with regional and national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights;

7. Encourages all Member States to take appropriate steps to promote the exchange of information and experience concerning the establishment and operation of such national institutions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of experts, if necessary, and incorporating materials submitted by Governments, a report containing conceptual models of national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights, to be submitted to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to respond favourably to requests from Member States for assistance in the establishment and strengthening of national institutions as part of the programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to include in an updated report all the information provided by Governments and any additional information that Governments may wish to provide, giving particular emphasis to the functioning of various models of national institutions in the implementation of international standards on human rights, as well as a list of existing national institutions with contact points and a bibliography of relevant materials;

11. Affirms the role of national institutions as agencies for the dissemination of human rights materials and other public information activities under the auspices of the United Nations;

12. Recognises the constructive role that non-governmental organizations can play in relation to national institutions;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN machinery

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its forty-fifth session at Geneva from 30 January to 10 March 1989 and adopted 75 resolutions and 14 decisions. In addition, it recommended 8 draft resolutions and 20 draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

On 24 May, by decision 1989/157, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-fifth session.⁽⁸⁾

With regard to the organization of its work, the Commission decided(9) to set up informal open-ended working groups on the question of a convention on the rights of the child; on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities; and on the drafting of a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms.

On 6 March, the Commission, having considered a report(10) of its Sub-Commission's Chairman on the implementation of the guidelines for organizing the Sub-Commission's work set out by the Commission in 1988,(11) noted the steps taken by the Sub-Commission to rationalize and streamline its work. The Sub-Commission was encouraged to continue that process, and further guidelines were recommended. The Chairman of the Sub-Commission was requested to report to the Commission on their implementation.

On 7 March, the Commission emphasized(13) the need to increase the effectiveness of its monitoring mechanisms, and requested the Secretary-General to consider convening a meeting of its special rapporteurs and representatives, and representatives of other mechanisms established by the Commission, as well as its Chairman and the Chairman and rapporteurs of the Sub-Commission, to discuss ways of improving the monitoring procedures. It decided to examine the meeting's recommendations no later than at its forty-seventh (1991) session.

Organization of work of the 1990 session

On 7 March, the Commission decided,(14) subject to the approval of the Economic and Social Council, to set up a live-member working group to examine particular human rights violations that might be referred to it at its 1990 session by the Sub-Commission under the confidential procedure governed by a 1970 Council resolution.(15)

On 24 May, by decision 1989/144, the Council approved the Commission's decision. By decision 1989/155 of the same date, the Council, on the Commission's recommendation,(16) authorized 30 fully serviced additional meetings for the Commission's forty-sixth (1990) session. It noted that the Commission had requested its Chairman to make every effort to organize the session's work within the time normally allotted, with additional meetings to be held only if absolutely necessary.

Enlargement of the Commission

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/167 by recorded vote.

Enlargement of the Commission on Human Rights and the further promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 845(XXXII) of 3 August 1961, 1147(XLI) of 4 August 1966 and 1979/36 of 10 May 1979,

Appreciating the contribution made by the Commission on Human Rights to the cause of human rights and recognizing the need to reinforce the Commission,

Reaffirming that the Commission on Human Rights shall be guided by the standards in the field of human rights laid down in the various international instruments in that field,

Emphasizing the importance of further improving the effective functioning of the Commission on Human Rights and the participation therein by Member States at a high level,

Taking note of the relevant section of the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries adopted at Belgrade on 7 September 1989,^a in which it is recognized that, in order to strengthen the role and efficiency of the United Nations and to reinforce United Nations mechanisms so as to allow for efficient co-ordination of the Organization's activities, there is an urgent need, inter alia, for an overall review of the current distribution of membership in the various United Nations bodies and commissions, with a view to achieving a more equitable geographical distribution,

1. Decides to recommend that the Economic and Social Council take the necessary steps, at its first regular session of 1990, to expand the membership of the Commission on Human Rights, on the basis of the principle of equitable geographical distribution, for the further promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon the Economic and Social Council to conclude deliberations on this question with urgency;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to examine ways and means of making its work more effective and to submit its recommendations thereon to the Economic and Social Council.

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its forty-first session at Geneva from 7 August to 1 September 1989;(17) it adopted 47 resolutions and 13 decisions. It also recommended 14 draft resolutions and 4 draft decisions for adoption by the Commission on Human Rights, its parent body.

On 25 August, by a roll-call vote of 14 to 6, with 4 abstentions, the Sub-Commission suspended(18) its rule of procedure concerning the method of voting, so as to allow for voting by secret ballot on decisions considered under the confidential procedure governed by a 1970 Economic and Social Council resolution.(15) By another decision,(19) adopted by a roll-call vote of 14 to 6, with 3 abstentions, the Sub-Commission provisionally suspended the same rule of procedure with regard to decisions relating to human rights violations, including policies of racial discrimination and segregation and of apartheid, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories. It also decided,(20) by 15 votes to 2, with 7 abstentions, that its Working Group on Communications, acting under the 1970 Council resolution,(15) should not consider a communication unless the Government concerned had had five months to submit a reply from the day on which the communication was transmitted to the Government.

On 30 August, the Sub-Commission, noting the organizational guidelines recommended by the Commission on Human Rights in March (see above), decided(21) to examine in 1990 ways of rationalizing proposals for studies, as well as the possibility of drawing up a medium-term programme that would ensure participation of the greatest number of Sub-Commission members in this programme. The Secretary-General was requested to submit a list of the studies already undertaken and the names of those who prepared them. On the same date, the Sub-Commission decided(22) to continue the review of its work at its forty-second (1990) session and to establish at that session a five-member working group to prepare an overview of proposals for improving the Sub-Commission's functioning in dealing with human rights violations. On 1 September, the Sub-Commission approved(23) the composition of its working groups on communications, slavery, and indigenous populations, each representing five regions (Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America, and Western Europe and others).

Strengthening the Centre for Human Rights

On 7 March, the Commission on Human Rights expressed(24) its support for the Secretary-General's efforts to enhance the role of the Centre for Human Rights as a co-ordinating unit for bodies dealing with the protection of human rights, and invited him to request Governments, UN specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to express their views on strengthening the Centre's activities.

Programme and budgetary questions

On 21 April, the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) a report(25) on the in-depth evaluation of the UN human rights programme. The report described basic characteristics of the programme, provided observations on the programme as a whole and evaluated its four subprogrammes: implementation of international standards, instruments and procedures; elimination and prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities and vulnerable groups; advisory services, technical assistance in the field of human rights and publications; and standard-setting, research and studies. It set forth 17 recommendations for the subprogrammes and for programme management, which included improving the reporting systems for human rights instruments and monitoring and response capacity; ensuring that financial problems did not hamper the functioning of the supervisory systems; enhancing co-ordination of activities to combat racism and racial discrimination and to protect and assist vulnerable groups; strengthening national capacity through enhanced advisory services and technical assistance projects; enhancing publicity, information dissemination and education; improving procedures for drafting new instruments, the use of results from research and studies, and programmatic co-ordination; rationalizing meetings of human rights bodies; and increasing the resources of the Centre for Human Rights.

In May,(26) CPC took note of the Secretary-General's report and recommended that he ensure the balanced implementation of international human rights instruments and strengthen co-ordination between the UN Secretariat's Department of Public Information (DPI) and the Centre for Human Rights. The Committee also considered the proposed programme budget in the field of human rights for the biennium 1990-1991 and recommended it for adoption by the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted resolution 44/201 B, section XI, without vote.

Section 23. Human rights

1. Decides that additional requirements for those new mandates emanating from decisions of the Economic and Social Council which are outside the scope of the perennial activities included in section 23 are to be treated in accordance with the provisions for the use and operation of the contingency fund;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to include the question of the relationship between the treatment of perennial activities in the programme budget and the use of the contingency fund in the report that he is to prepare in the light of the experience gained with regard to the contingency fund during the implementation of the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991;

Public information activities

On 19 January, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report⁽²⁷⁾ on the development of public information activities in the human rights field, with special emphasis on commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽²⁸⁾ in 1988⁽²⁹⁾ as well as activities carried out by the Centre for Human Rights and DPI.

In addition, the report provided an outline of the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights, launched by the General Assembly in 1988,⁽³⁰⁾ including its aims and scope; envisaged responsibilities of the UN system, Member States and NGOs; target audiences; co-ordination and financing; and planned activities.

Activities focused on organization of workshops and training courses on human rights issues, provision of fellowships and internships, and dissemination of information on UN activities through publications, audio-visual materials, briefings and radio and television interviews. The report paid special attention to the Human Rights Day (10 December) activities and to co-ordination and co-operation within and outside the UN system. It also noted the establishment of a new dissemination division within DPI to revise the Department's distribution methods, and the creation by the Centre for Human Rights of a consolidated computerized list of addresses for the dissemination of information.

The Secretary-General emphasized the role of the 67 UN information centres (UNICs) in the dissemination of information, and pointed out that their directors had been instructed to undertake special programmes to draw the attention of national communities to human rights observances. He further noted that DPI had continued to reprint and distribute basic reference works and UN materials for UNICs and that it had produced and distributed the Universal Declaration in some 86 languages, while the Centre for Human Rights had finalized a teaching booklet, ABC Teaching Human Rights, and begun worldwide distribution.

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March, the Commission supported⁽³¹⁾ the general thrust of the proposed programme for the World Public Information Campaign, reaffirmed the need to tailor information materials on human rights to regional and national requirements and specific target audiences, and urged the Secretariat to ensure further production and dissemination of such materials in national and local languages. It emphasized the need to harmonize UN public information activities in the human rights field with organizations such as the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). It asked the Centre to co-ordinate World Campaign activities within the UN system.

The Commission encouraged Member States to publicize UN human rights activities and give priority to disseminating international instruments in their national and local languages, and urged them to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights. The Secretary-General was requested to draw the attention of Member States to the booklet on teaching human rights, to complete the establishment of collections of basic UN information and reference materials on human rights at each UNIC by the end of 1989, to ensure adequate funding for the World Campaign and other public information activities in that field, and to report on those activities in 1990.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,⁽³⁰⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽³²⁾ on activities of the Centre for Human Rights and DPI. He noted that efforts for the promotion of human rights within the framework of the World Campaign were grouped into five major areas: preparation and dissemination of printed public information and reference materials; workshops, seminars and training courses; fellowships and internships; special human rights observances; and coverage and promotion activities (see also below, under "Advisory services").

The report noted that the Centre continued to publish its Fact Sheet series, the Newsletter on Human Rights, the Bulletin on Human Rights and a series of ad hoc publications on human rights issues. On 12 April, the Centre convened an inter-agency meeting to identify potential areas of co-operation in human rights information and education as well as advisory services and technical assistance.

The Department of Public Information co-sponsored a symposium on the World Campaign (New York, 19 October) and launched a comprehensive education campaign for teachers and students on global issues, including human rights issues, and UN activities. The Department ensured that UN information centres and services intensified direct and systematic communication exchange with local media, informational and educational institutions and NGOs.

UNICS promoted coverage of UN activities in the local and national press as well as on radio and television, and organized or co-sponsored numerous seminars, symposia, workshops, lectures, exhibitions, film festivals, concerts and round tables to generate public discussion on human rights issues.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report was a list of national focal points for the World Campaign designated by Governments as at 31 August.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/61 without vote.

Development of public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that activities to improve public knowledge in the field of human rights are essential to the fulfilment of the purposes of the United Nations set out in Article 1, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations and that carefully designed programmes of teaching, education and information are essential to the achievement of lasting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the resolutions adopted on this subject, in particular its resolution 43/128 of 8 December 1988, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/53 of 7 March 1989,

Recognizing the catalytic effect of initiatives of the United Nations on national and regional public information activities in the field of human rights,

Recognizing also the valuable role that non-governmental organizations can play in those endeavours,

Believing that the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights is a valuable complement to the activities of the United Nations further to promote and to protect human rights world-wide,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights;

2. Reaffirms the need for information materials on human rights to be carefully designed in clear and accessible form, to be tailored to regional and national requirements and circumstances with specific target audiences in mind and to be effectively disseminated in national and local languages and in sufficient volume to have the desired impact, and for effective use also to be made of the mass media, in particular radio and television and audio-visual technologies, in order to reach wider audiences, with priority being given to children, other young people and the disadvantaged, including those in isolated areas;

3. Appreciates the measures taken by the Secretariat to update, increase stocks and extend the language versions of human rights information materials, especially those on the basic United Nations human rights instruments and institutions, and urges the Secretariat to take measures to ensure the further production and effective dissemination of such documents in national and local languages, in co-operation with regional, national and local organizations as well as with Governments, making full and effective use of the United Nations information centres;

4. Encourages all Member States to make special efforts to provide, facilitate and encourage publicity for the activities of the United Nations in the field of human rights and to accord priority to the dissemination, in their respective national and local languages, of the texts of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international conventions, as well as to information and education on the practical ways in which the rights and freedoms enjoyed under those instruments can be exercised;

5. Urges all Member States to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues, and encourages all those responsible for training in law and its enforcement, the armed forces, medicine, diplomacy and other relevant fields to include appropriate human rights components in their programmes;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the attention of Member States to the teaching booklet on human rights, which could serve as a broad and flexible framework adaptable to national circumstances for the structuring and development of the teaching of human rights;

7. Notes the special value, under the advisory services and technical assistance programme, of regional and national training courses and workshops, in co-operation with Governments, regional and national organizations and non-governmental organizations, in promoting practical education and awareness in the field of human rights, and welcomes the priority given to the organization of such activities by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the fullest effective deployment of the skills and resources of all concerned units of the Secretariat and to make available, within existing resources, and in particular from the budget of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, adequate funding for developing practical and effective human rights information activities, including those within the programme of the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights;

9. Calls upon the Centre for Human Rights, which has primary responsibility within the United Nations system in the field of human rights, to co-ordinate the substantive activities of the World Campaign pursuant to the direction of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights, and to serve as liaison with Governments, regional and national institutions, non-governmental organizations and concerned individuals in the development and implementation of the activities of the World Campaign;

10. Calls upon the Department of Public Information, which has primary responsibility for public information activities, to co-ordinate the public information activities of the World Campaign and, in its responsibility as secretariat to the Joint United Nations Information Committee, to promote co-ordinated system-wide information activities in the field of human rights;

11. Stresses the need for close co-operation between the Centre for Human Rights and the Department of Public Information, inter alia, in the implementation of the aims established for the World Campaign and the need for the United Nations to harmonize its activities in the field of human rights with those of other organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, with regard to the dissemination of information on international humanitarian law, and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, with regard to education for human rights;

12. Requests the Secretariat, in the implementation of the World Campaign, to take advantage, as much as possible, of the collaboration of non-governmental organizations for, inter alia, the dissemination of human rights materials, with a view to increasing universal awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

13. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-sixth session, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General, to give priority consideration to this question with a view to providing appropriate guidance on the aims and activities of the World Campaign;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

General Assembly resolution 44/61

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/799) without vote, 20 November (meeting 49); 24-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.37), orally corrected; agenda item 96 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 34, 35, 43, 49; plenary 78.

Advisory services

In 1989, under the UN programme of advisory services and technical assistance in human rights established in 1955,(33) the Centre for Human Rights organized a seminar on the effects of racism and racial discrimination on social and economic relations between indigenous peoples and States (Geneva, 16-20 January), subregional and national workshops on human rights issues (Quito, Ecuador, 8-12 May; Manila, Philippines, 31 July-4 August), and an international seminar on cultural dialogue between countries of origin and host countries of migrant workers (Athens, Greece, 17-26 September). Training courses were held on the application of international human rights standards (Conakry, Guinea, 17-22 April; Moscow, 27 November-1 December), human rights and the administration of justice (Rome, Italy, 11-22 September; Buenos Aires, Argentina, 9-13 October; Antigua, Guatemala, 23-27 October), and UN monitoring mechanisms, humanitarian law and national legislation (Lima, Peru, 2-6 October). The Centre assisted the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), inaugurated on 12 June, in organizing a training course on developing national strategies and mechanisms for human rights promotion and protection in Africa (Banjul, Gambia, 24 April-2 May). It also provided assistance to the newly established Arab Institute of Human Rights in Tunis, and continued to strengthen co-operation with the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the Inter-American Institute of Human Rights, the Strasbourg Institute of Human Rights (France) and a number of other academic and research institutes.

Under a co-operative project to strengthen legal institutions in the Gambia, launched in 1989, a feasibility study was carried out on the establishment of an African Centre for Democracy and Human Rights Studies at Banjul, and advisory services were rendered in the revision of national laws. The Centre also continued its technical assistance programmes to Colombia and Guatemala. Most of those activities were financed by the UN Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights (see below).

In addition, the Centre granted training fellowships to 31 individuals and one NGO, and awarded 36 internships to outstanding graduate students. Within the UN system, the Centre co-operated, inter alia, with the World Health Organization (WHO) in organizing a global consultation on AIDS and human rights (Geneva, 26-28 July); with UNESCO in exploring the development of educational curricula on human rights and distribution of materials through UNESCO national channels; with the UN Children's Fund (UNICEF) in the envisaged follow-up to the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child (see below, under "Other human rights questions"); and with the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the UN Centre for Social Development at Vienna in considering the development of human rights training materials for African countries, strengthening of legal aid services in Latin America, organization of training workshops for the judiciary and activities related to the administration of justice.

During the year, requests for advisory services and technical assistance in human rights were received from 43 Governments.

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General presented a report⁽³⁴⁾ to the Commission in 1989 on advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights, which covered 1988 activities involving country programmes and projects; training courses, workshops and seminars; expert services; and fellowships and internships. The report also described the programme development under the UN Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance, and outlined a plan of future activities.

In another report,⁽³⁵⁾ the Secretary-General communicated to the Sub-Commission an additional request from a State and a list of requests for technical assistance to strengthen legal institutions, received as at 19 June 1989 from States in response to a 1987 Sub-Commission resolution.⁽³⁶⁾

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission recommended that expert assistance and other activities to assist Governments in developing necessary infrastructures to meet international human rights standards should continue to increase, and requested the Secretary-General to: pursue his efforts for a medium-term plan for advisory services and technical assistance, as well as continue to facilitate the flow of bilateral assistance; explore further possibilities for co-operation between the Centre for Human Rights and the UN Development Programme (UNDP), UNHCR and other UN bodies and agencies, as well as ICRC; ensure close co-ordination between activities financed under the regular programme and by the Voluntary Fund; bring the need for further technical legal assistance to the attention of the relevant UN bodies and agencies; draw the attention of Governments, within the framework of the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights (see above, under "Public information activities"), to the availability of advisory services and technical assistance; and report to the Commission in 1990 on progress made in implementing the programme of advisory services.

The Commission requested its special rapporteurs and representatives, as well as the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, to inform Governments of the availability of advisory services, and invited competent UN bodies to make proposals for their implementation. It also appealed to Member States to consider organizing national training courses for government personnel on the application of international human rights standards, and encouraged Governments in need of technical assistance to take advantage of the advisory services of experts in the field of human rights.

Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services

In 1989, the UN Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights, established pursuant to a 1987 Commission resolution⁽³⁸⁾ endorsed by the Economic and Social Council,⁽³⁹⁾ financed eight training courses and workshops, projects of assistance to the OAU African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, and country programmes in Colombia, Guatemala and the Gambia, including the provision of 21 fellowships and the advisory services of 17 experts. As at 31 December 1989, contributions to the Fund totalled $1,035,404, and an additional $361,730 had been pledged.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission called for voluntary contributions to the Fund, and recommended that activities under the Fund be directed towards expert assistance to Governments. It also recommended that the Secretary-General continue implementing through the Fund those projects that could catalyse the realization of international human rights standards, paying due attention to the needs of developing countries. It requested him to bring to the attention of Governments and competent human rights organs the availability of advisory services and technical assistance under the Fund, elaborate guidelines on the use and allocation of resources, and report annually to the Commission on the operation and administration of the Fund.

Equatorial Guinea

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of the Secretary-General's report⁽⁴¹⁾ on the situation in Equatorial Guinea, recommended⁽⁴²⁾ to the Government of that country that it consider becoming a party to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,⁽⁴³⁾ and requested it to consider implementing the plan of action for full restoration of human rights, proposed by the United Nations in 1981,⁽⁴⁴⁾ taking particular account of the recommendations and proposals submitted by the Secretary-General's appointed Expert, Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica), in 1985.⁽⁴⁵⁾ A report on progress in implementing the plan was requested for submission to the Commission in 1990.

On 24 May, by decision 1989/151, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to consider the Expert's report on the manner in which Equatorial Guinea intended to implement the plan of action.

Further developments. On behalf of the Expert on Equatorial Guinea, Consultant Arnaldo Ortiz Lopez (Costa Rica) visited the country from 20 to 26 November and held discussions with the President, other senior government officials and members of the judiciary. The Consultant observed that the Government had agreed to comply with and implement the UN plan of action. It undertook to establish immediately a drafting committee to prepare an up-to-date codification of fundamental laws that could be adapted to the country's ethnic and cultural composition. A media campaign was under way to increase public awareness of the importance of law and courts as well as an education programme on values and advantages of a democratic government and of harmonization with the indigenous cultural heritage. A training programme in public administration was being offered at the School of Public Administration with expert assistance from the UN Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, and training to encourage popular participation in electoral processes and democratic decision-making had been initiated.

The Consultant further noted that the Government was prepared to co-operate in implementing other recommendations of the plan of action, including the training of lawyers and court staff and the establishment of codification commissions to draft penal and civil codes, codes of civil and criminal procedure and a judicial power organization act. A general labour bill was already under consideration by the Government. The Consultant made a number of recommendations to the Government concerning the need to set up a Special Review Commission to monitor implementation of the plan of action; promulgate a General Associations Act for the establishment and registration of political parties other than the official party; and develop a free press, including the installation of a printing press, which the country currently lacked. He also noted the President's willingness to consider relevant constitutional amendments in accordance with the plan of action.

In December 1989, Equatorial Guinea decided to issue a decree, based on international human rights instruments, to indicate the fundamental rights and freedoms of its citizens.

Guatemala

In his report on advisory services to Guatemala,⁽⁴⁶⁾ submitted to the Commission on 20 January, Expert Hector Gros Espiell (Uruguay) reviewed the legal framework and the current human rights situation in that country, summarized the results of his three visits undertaken in 1988, and described activities under the technical assistance programme to Guatemala for 1988-1989, financed by the Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services. He concluded that, while the human rights situation had generally improved, the continuing climate of violence, coupled with problems of indigenous populations and severe deficiencies regarding respect for economic, social and cultural rights, as well as other negative factors, prevented the Government from ensuring full safeguards and respect for human rights. The Expert recommended continuation of the broad programme of assistance, particularly support for courses and seminars for the judiciary, police and armed forces as well as human rights courses at all levels of education.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission recognized⁽⁴⁷⁾ that the Government of Guatemala was committed to guaranteeing and promoting the protection of human rights, and encouraged it to continue examining the situation of its indigenous populations and to take into account their demands and proposals. At the same time, the Commission expressed its serious concern at the persistent harmful conditions which placed severe limitations on the process of improving the human rights situation in that country, and urged Guatemala to intensify efforts to ensure that all authorities and security forces respected the rights and freedoms of its citizens. The Secretary-General was requested to continue providing advisory services and other assistance to Guatemala and to renew for one year the mandate of the Expert, who was asked to report in 1990.

By decision 1989/153 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the request to extend the Expert's mandate.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, the Sub-Commission encouraged⁽⁴⁸⁾ Guatemala to adopt measures for improving the economic, social and political conditions of its indigenous populations and to create conditions for a safe return of refugees, urged it to apply energetic measures to prevent human rights violations, and recommended that the Expert, in his forthcoming report, give particular attention to the existing obstacles to the full realization of human rights in that country, and indicate ways to remedy the situation.

Further developments. The Expert on Guatemala visited that country twice in 1989, in May and from 22 October to 3 November. He held meetings with the President and other senior government officials, the Procurator for Human Rights, and the Chairwoman of the Ad Hoc Committee for Aid to Returnees, as well as with members of the judiciary, the Human Rights Commission of Congress, the National Reconciliation Commission, and public figures.

Haiti

In his report on advisory services to Haiti,⁽⁴⁹⁾ submitted to the Commission on 6 February, Expert Philippe Texier (France) reviewed the history of events in Haiti from 7 February 1986 to 31 December 1988, described the legal framework and the current human rights situation, and summarized the results of his December 1988 visit. He concluded that, despite signs of an awareness of the need to ensure respect for human rights, the current Government—brought to power in a military take-over on 17 September 1988—had not been able to prevent human rights violations from occurring on a daily basis, nor had any measures been devised to conduct inquiries into past violations and punish the culprits. Among obstacles to the improvement of the situation were an ineffective judiciary, the militarization of rural areas, failure to separate the army and police forces, the failure to put on trial those responsible for past massacres, and the military and economic power of paramilitary forces.

The Expert asserted that the situation could not change without the firm will to ensure respect for the rule of law, which would involve the prompt entry into force of Haiti's 1987 Constitution and speedy restoration of the electoral process. He recommended that the Commission consider appointing a special rapporteur to study the human rights situation in Haiti and examine whether conditions had been met for that country to continue receiving UN advisory services. Should such assistance be maintained, the Expert recommended that efforts focus on holding free elections, strengthening and improving the judiciary, planning a general policy for development and assistance for the poorest communities, and fostering the organization of civilian police forces trained in human rights. He also recommended involving all human rights organizations in any training programmes.

Human Rights Commission action. The human rights situation in Haiti was considered by the Commission in closed session under the agenda item on the study of situations that appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross human rights violations. In an 8 March resolution,⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Commission noted with concern that the basic causes of human rights violations in Haiti had not been eradicated; urged the Haitian authorities to take measures without delay for the rapid investigation of violations that had occurred before 17 September 1988 and to ensure that the commission of inquiry was enabled to single out the culprits for arrest and trial; expressed the hope that the Haitian Government would fulfil its pledge to restore as early as possible a constitutional regime freely chosen by the people; and encouraged it to pursue contacts with democratic forces in the country so as to expedite the resumption of the electoral process.

The Commission appealed for international assistance to Haiti and requested the Secretary-

General to provide advisory services and other assistance in order to encourage the régime's democratic development, with emphasis on strengthening the independence of the judiciary and promoting the organization of civilian police trained in human rights. The Secretary-General was also requested to extend the Expert's mandate for one year and to give him all necessary assistance; the Expert was asked to encourage implementation of the assistance programme, to make recommendations to the Government for the full restoration of human rights, and to report to the Commission in 1990, including in his report information on the development of the human rights situation in Haiti.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/152, approved the Commission's request that the Secretary-General extend the Expert's mandate and give him all necessary assistance.

Note of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 Sub-Commission request,⁽⁵¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a note⁽⁵²⁾ on 28 April informing the Sub-Commission of the action taken by the Commission on Human Rights with regard to the situation in Haiti.

Further developments. During 1989, major developments in Haiti included the establishment of an Electoral Council, a decision to undertake a thorough reform of the justice system, and elaboration of an electoral timetable providing for municipal and legislative elections in July 1990 and presidential elections in October/November 1990. The 1987 Constitution was partially restored in March, but the nature of the reservations meant that the power of the head of State was unchanged. An attempted military take-over in April failed, and there were subsequent violent confrontations between the Presidential Guard and elements of the military. In September, an independent public body for prison administration was established. An intensification of repression and a new deterioration in the human rights situation occurred in November with the arrest of several trade union and political leaders, and the use of torture and illegal searches.

The Expert on Haiti visited the country from 25 July to 3 August to renew contact with authorities as well as with democratic forces and NGOs, to monitor developments and assess the human rights situation, and to offer special assistance to the Government concerning human rights and the electoral process.

Paraguay

On 31 August, the Sub-Commission, bearing in mind the acknowledged progress in the field of human rights in Paraguay as well as the request by the Paraguayan authorities for co-operation in that field, recommended that the Commission adopt a resolution encouraging Paraguay to further democratization and advances in the field of human rights. It also requested the Secretary-General to provide advisory services and other assistance in the human rights field to Paraguay.

International human rights instruments

Human rights treaty bodies

There were six human rights treaty instruments in force in 1989, the implementation of which was monitored by expert bodies established under each treaty. Those instruments and their respective treaty bodies were: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination(54) (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination); the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights(55) (Human Rights Committee); the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights(55) (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid(56) (Group of Three); the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (57) (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); and the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment(43) (Committee against Torture).

On 2 February, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a note(58) containing conclusions and recommendations of the second meeting of persons chairing the treaty bodies, held in 1988.(59)

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, the Commission welcomed(60) the meeting's recommendations aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of the human rights treaty bodies, acknowledged the need to ensure financing and adequate staffing resources for their operations, suggested alleviating their financial difficulties by allocating advances from the UN regular budget against contributions to be received within the same budget year, and urged States parties to the human rights instruments to meet their financial obligations under those instruments. The Secretary-General was requested to report regularly to the Commission on possible technical assistance projects identified by the treaty bodies, to entrust an independent expert with preparing a study on long-term approaches to enhancing the effectiveness of existing and prospective treaty bodies and to report on that matter to the General Assembly in 1989 and to the Commission in 1990.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/143, approved the Commission's request for the study.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, by 15 votes to 2, with 3 abstentions, the Sub-Commission recommended(61) that the Commission adopt a resolution emphasizing the need to enhance the effectiveness of and co-ordination between the human rights monitoring mechanisms, and requesting the Secretary-General to consider convening, not later than 1991, an international meeting of experts on issues related to international monitoring in the field of human rights.

Note of the Secretary-General. By an 8 November note,(62) the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the study called for by the Commission in March.(60) The study provided an overview of the rapidly changing environment within which the treaty bodies were functioning, reviewed reporting procedures under the human rights instruments (see below), examined financial and administrative aspects as well as substantive issues related to the functioning of treaty bodies, and considered a long-term perspective on standard-setting as well as other long-term issues. It set forth a number of recommendations, proposing, inter alia, to change the method of financing of treaty bodies from funding by States parties to regular budget funding temporarily, while other options were explored; to better publicize activities of treaty bodies; and to prepare an inventory of international human rights standard-setting activities, to be updated on a regular basis.

Reporting obligations of States parties

By a 3 February note,(63) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the second meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies. The meeting made proposals for remedial action concerning harmonization and consolidation of reporting guidelines, co-ordination of reporting, measures for expediting consideration of reports, and projects for technical assistance and advisory services to help States parties fulfil their reporting obligations.

The study on enhancing the effectiveness of treaty bodies (above) noted the problem of overlapping reporting requirements under different instruments and suggested using cross-references in reports to different bodies to reduce such duplication. The question of reporting procedures was also considered in 1989 by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (see above, under "Economic, social and cultural rights"), which had before it the Secretary-General's report(64) on the nature and extent of overlapping under the six human rights instruments.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, the Commission endorsed(60) recommendations of the second meeting aimed at streamlining, rationalizing and improving reporting procedures, and requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly in 1989 and to the Commission in 1990 on progress in that regard. On the same date, it requested⁽⁶⁵⁾ him to appoint a task force to prepare a study on computerizing the work of the treaty bodies in relation to reporting, to give it all possible assistance and to report to the Commission in 1990 on the results.

By decision 1989/142 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request for establishment of the task force.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 6 October report⁽⁶⁶⁾ to the Assembly, the Secretary-General reviewed specific actions as well as views and suggestions by relevant UN bodies concerning the effective implementation of international human rights instruments, including reporting obligations of States parties. He summarized activities of the newly appointed task force on computerization of work of the treaty bodies and noted that several of those bodies had already approved consolidated guidelines governing the initial part of reports of States parties and had decided to appoint individual rapporteurs or establish pre-session working groups to expedite consideration of reports. In addition, a detailed manual to assist States in fulfilling their reporting obligations was expected to be finalized by the end of the year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/135 without vote.

Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/115 of 8 December 1988, as well as its other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1989/46 and 1989/47 of 6 March 1989,

Reaffirming that the effective implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights is of major importance to the efforts made by the Organization, pursuant to the Charter of the United Nations and to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established pursuant to United Nations instruments on human rights is indispensable for the effective implementation of such instruments,

Reaffirming its responsibility to ensure the proper functioning of the treaty bodies established pursuant to instruments adopted by the General Assembly and, in this connection, further reaffirming the importance of:

(a) Ensuring the effective functioning of systems of periodic reporting by States parties to these instruments;

(b) Addressing the problem of securing sufficient financial resources, which continues to hamper the proper functioning of human rights treaty bodies, and of providing sufficient resources to ensure their effective functioning;

(c) Addressing the question of reporting obligations and that of financial implications whenever considering the possibility of establishing any further instruments on human rights,

Recognizing that the effective implementation of instruments on human rights, involving periodic reporting by States parties to the relevant treaty bodies and the efficient functioning of the treaty bodies themselves, not only enhances international accountability in relation to the promotion and protection of human rights, but also provides States parties with a valuable opportunity to review policies and programmes affecting the promotion and protection of human rights and to make any appropriate adjustments,

Expressing concern about the continuing and increasing backlog of reports on implementation by States parties of United Nations instruments on human rights and about delays in consideration of reports by the treaty bodies,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on progress achieved in enhancing the effective functioning of the treaty bodies, pursuant, inter alia, to the conclusions and recommendations of the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva from 10 to 14 October 1988,

Taking note with appreciation of the study on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations instruments on human rights, prepared by an independent expert pursuant to the above-mentioned resolutions,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies aimed at streamlining, rationalizing and otherwise improving reporting procedures, and supports the continuing efforts in this connection by the treaty bodies and the Secretary-General within their respective spheres of competence;

2. Welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General of a task force to prepare a study on computerizing, as far as possible, the work of the treaty-monitoring bodies, with a view to increasing efficiency and facilitating compliance by States parties with their reporting obligations and the examination of reports by the treaty bodies;

3. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights showing the extent of overlapping of issues dealt with in international instruments on human rights, which will assist efforts to reduce, as appropriate, duplication in the supervisory bodies of issues raised with respect to any given State party;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to proceed with the planned finalization of the draft detailed reporting manual to assist States parties in the fulfilment of their reporting obligations, as well as with its circulation to the various treaty bodies by the end of 1989;

5. Again urges States parties to make every effort to meet their reporting obligations and to assist, individually and through meetings of States parties, in identifying and implementing ways of further streamlining and improving reporting procedures as well as enhancing co-ordination and information flow between the treaty bodies and with relevant United Nations bodies, including specialized agencies;

6. Welcomes the emphasis placed by the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies and by the Commission on Human Rights on the importance of technical assistance and advisory services and, therefore:

(a) Endorses the request of the Commission that the Secretary-General report regularly to it on possible technical assistance projects identified by the treaty bodies;

(b) Invites the treaty bodies to give priority attention to identifying such possibilities in the regular course of their work of reviewing the periodic reports of States parties;

7. Endorses the recommendations of the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies on the need to ensure financing and adequate staffing resources for the operations of the treaty bodies and, with this in mind:

(a) Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General review the need for adequate staffing resources in regard to the various treaty bodies;

(b) Requests that he report on this question to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session and to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

8. Calls upon all States parties to meet fully and without delay their financial obligations under the relevant instruments on human rights, and requests the Secretary-General to consider ways and means of strengthening collection procedures and making them more effective;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of priority, to consider administrative and budgetary measures to alleviate the current financial difficulties of the treaty bodies and thus guarantee their regular functioning, and to report on these measures to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session;

10. Emphasizes that the adoption of such administrative and budgetary measures shall not prejudice the duty of States parties under United Nations human rights instruments to meet all their financial obligations pursuant to such instruments;

11. Invites the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies to maintain communication and dialogue with each other on common issues and problems and, to this end, requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to convene a meeting of the persons chairing the treaty bodies in 1990;

12. Expresses its satisfaction with the study by the independent expert on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations instruments on human rights, which contains several recommendations on reporting and monitoring procedures, servicing and financing of supervisory bodies and long-term approaches to human rights standard-setting and implementation mechanisms, and which will be presented to the Commission on Human Rights for detailed consideration at its forty-sixth session;

13. Decides to give priority consideration at its forty-fifth session to the conclusions and recommendations of the independent expert, in the light of the deliberations of the Commission on Human Rights and those of the meeting of persons chairing the treaty bodies, under an item entitled "Effective implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights and effective functioning of bodies established pursuant to such instruments".

General Assembly resolution 44/135

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/B.49) without vote, 29 November (meeting 60); 17-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.73), orally revised; agenda item 109. Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 48, 50-60; plenary 82.

International Covenants on Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 2 March, the Commission adopted a resolution(67) on the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights,(55) which corresponded largely to resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly later in the year (see below). The Commission appealed for the application of uniform standards in the implementation of the Covenants, invited the Secretary-General to assist States with their ratification of or accession to those instruments, and requested him to consider ways of assisting States parties to prepare their reports. The Secretary-General was also requested to report in 1990 on the status of the Covenants and the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/81 without vote.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its important responsibilities in relation to the co-ordination of activities to promote the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in promoting and implementing the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its third session, as well as the general comments of the Human Rights Committee on article 24 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Committee at its thirty-fifth session,

Emphasizing the importance of General Assembly resolution 43/128 of 8 December 1988, by which the Assembly decided to launch a World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights,

Convinced of the continuing need to promote the universal observance and enjoyment of human rights, which contributes to peaceful and friendly relations among nations,

1. Reaffirms the central importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights in international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and recognizes these instruments as a basis for any standard setting and codification in the field of human rights, bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986;

2. Appeals strongly to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, so that those instruments may acquire genuine universality;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties to the Covenants with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

4. Invites the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

5. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and the necessity for strict observance of all the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation, under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

6. Reaffirms the important role of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights with respect to the implementation by States parties of the International Covenants on Human Rights, and expresses its satisfaction with the serious and constructive manner in which those Committees are carrying out their functions;

7. Welcomes the general comments of the Human Rights Committee on article 24 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

8. Also welcomes the decision of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to consider articles 22 and 23 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as to continue to focus on article 11, with a view to developing general comments at its fourth session, so as to encourage States parties to the Covenant to take appropriate steps to ensure the implementation of that article;

9. Further welcomes the relevant activities of the Commission on Human Rights in the field of effective implementation of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights, and the promotion of universal adherence to the International Covenants on Human Rights;

10. Urges the Secretary-General, in conjunction with the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights, to publicize the work of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to ensure sufficient administrative and related support of their meetings and activities to enable them to carry out their respective functions effectively;

11. Encourages all Governments to publicize the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

12. Decides to include in the agenda of its first regular session of 1990 an item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights" and to consider under that item the general comments of the Human Rights Committee and the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its fourth session;

13. Also decides to transmit the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its third session to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session for consideration under the agenda item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/81

24	May	1989	Meeting	16	Adopted	without	vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) without vote, 19 May (meeting 22); 14-nation draft (E/1989/C.2/L.19); agenda item 9.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 Assembly request,(68) the Secretary-General reported(69) on 11 August 1989 on the status of the International Covenants as at 1 August, as well as on questions related to their implementation (see also above, under "Civil and political rights" and "Economic, social and cultural rights").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/129 without vote.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/51 of 14 December 1978, 34/45 of 23 November 1979, 35/132 of 11 December 1980, 36/58 of 25 November 1981, 37/191 of 18 December 1982, 38/116 and 38/117 of 16 December 1983, 39/136 and 39/138 of 14 December 1984, 40/115 and 40/116 of 13 December 1985, 41/32 of 3 November 1986, 41/119 and 41/121 of 4 December 1986, 42/103 and 42/105 of 7 December 1987 and 43/114 of 8 December 1988, and taking note of the general comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee at its 891st meeting, on 5 April 1989, under article 40, paragraph 4, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto,

Also recognizing the important role of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Bearing in mind the important responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council in relation to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Welcoming the submission to the General Assembly of the annual report of the Human Rights Committee and the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its third session,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the relevant provisions of international instruments on human rights plays a fundamental role and hence represents an important continuing concern of the United Nations,

Noting with concern the critical situation with regard to overdue reports from States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling with satisfaction the results of the meeting of persons chairing human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva from 10 to 14 October 1988,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Human Rights Committee on its thirty-fourth, thirty-fifth and thirty-sixth sessions, including the suggestions and recommendations of a general nature approved by the Committee;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its third session, including its suggestions and recommendations;

3. Expresses its satisfaction with the serious and constructive manner in which both Committees are carrying out their functions;

4. Urges States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights to pay active attention to the protection and promotion of civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that have submitted their reports to the Human Rights Committee under article 40 of the Covenant and urges States parties that have not yet done so to submit their reports as speedily as possible;

6. Urges those States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that have been requested by the Human Rights Committee to provide additional information to comply with that request;

7. Commends the States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights that have submitted their reports under article 16 of the Covenant and urges States parties that have not yet done so to submit their reports as soon as possible;

8. Notes with satisfaction that the majority of States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and an increasing number of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights have been represented by experts in the presentation of their reports, thereby assisting the respective monitoring bodies in their work, and hopes that all States parties to both Covenants will arrange such representation in the future;

9. Again urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

10. Invites the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

11. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

12. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and underlines the necessity of strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency, so that the justification for and appropriateness of measures taken in these circumstances can be assessed;

13. Appeals to States parties to the Covenants that have exercised their sovereign right to make reservations in accordance with relevant rules of international law to consider whether any such reservation should be reviewed;

14. Urges States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the specialized agencies and other relevant United Nations bodies to extend their full support and co-operation to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights informed of the relevant activities of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee against Torture and, where appropriate, other functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies, and also to transmit the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to those bodies;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to ensure that the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights are able to hold the necessary sessions and are provided with administrative support and summary records;

17. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat effectively assists the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of their respective mandates;

18. Again urges the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Human Rights Committee, to take determined steps, within existing resources, to give more publicity to the work of that Committee and, similarly, to the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

19. Encourages all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights", a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Electoral processes

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March, the Commission recommended,(70) through the Economic and Social Council, that the General Assembly adopt the framework for future efforts to enhance the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections proposed by the Commission. The framework emphasized such aspects as universal and equal suffrage; the right to take part in the government of one's country, directly or through freely chosen representatives; the right to equal access to public service; the need for a secret vote or equivalent free voting procedures; freedoms of peaceful assembly, of association and of opinion and expression, including the freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas; the right of citizens to change their governmental system through appropriate constitutional means; equal opportunity for all citizens to become candidates for public office; and the right of candidates to put forward their political views. National institutions should ensure universal and equal suffrage and impartial administration, with particular emphasis on independent supervision, appropriate voter registration, reliable balloting procedures and methods for preventing electoral fraud and resolving disputes. It was also stressed that the country holding elections might wish to invite observers or seek advisory services, either from regional organizations or from the UN system.

By decision 1989/145 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's resolution and recommended that the Assembly adopt the annexed framework for future efforts. The framework was transmitted to the Assembly by a 16 August note(71) of the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/146 without vote.

Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections

The General Assembly,

Aware of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to take part in the government of his or her country, directly or through freely chosen representatives, that everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his or her country, that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government, and that this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures,

Noting that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provides that every citizen shall have the right and the opportunity, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, to take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives, to vote and to be elected at genuine periodic elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret ballot, guaranteeing the free expression of the will of the electors, and to have access, on general terms of equality, to public service in his or her country,

Condemning the system of apartheid and any other denial or abridgement of the right to vote on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Considering that the tricameral parliament established under the system of apartheid is a gross violation of the principle of universal and equal suffrage and has been overwhelmingly rejected by the international community,

Recalling that all States enjoy sovereign equality and that each State has the right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems,

Recognizing that there is no single political system or electoral method that is equally suited to all nations and their people,

Recalling its resolution 43/157 of 8 December 1988,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/51 of 7 March 1989,

1. Underscores the significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which establish that the authority to govern shall be based on the will of the people, as expressed in periodic and genuine elections;

2. Stresses its conviction that periodic and genuine elections are a necessary and indispensable element of sustained efforts to protect the rights and interests of the governed and that, as a matter of practical experience, the right of everyone to take part in the government of his or her country is a crucial factor in the effective enjoyment by all of a wide range of other human rights and fundamental freedoms, embracing political, economic, social and cultural rights;

3. Declares that determining the will of the people requires an electoral process that provides an equal opportunity for all citizens to become candidates and put forward their political views, individually and in co-operation with others within the constitution and national legislation;

4. Recognizes that the efforts of the international community to enhance the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections should not call into question each State's sovereign right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems, whether or not they conform to the preferences of other States;

5. Underscores the duty of each member of the international community to respect the decisions taken by other States in freely choosing and developing their electoral institutions;

6. Reaffirms that apartheid must be abolished, that the systematic denial or abridgement of the right to vote on the grounds of race or colour is a gross violation of human rights and an affront to the conscience and dignity of mankind, and that the right to participate in a political system based on common and equal citizenship and universal franchise is essential for the exercise of the principle of periodic and genuine elections;

7. Rejects the tricameral parliament established under the system of apartheid as an abhorrent expression of a fundamentally oppressive and flagrantly inhuman political system;

8. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-sixth session, to continue its consideration of appropriate ways and means of enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections, in the context of full respect for the sovereignty of Member States, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections".

General Assembly resolution 44/146

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/828 & Corr.1) without vote, 27 November (meeting 56); 25-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.59), orally revised, and amended by 10 nations (A/C.3/44/L.72); agenda item 114.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 36-43, 50, 54, 56; plenary 82.

On the same date, the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/147 by recorded vote.

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Also recalling its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, by which it approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Further recalling the principle enshrined in Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter of the United Nations, which establishes that nothing contained in the Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the Charter,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, will enjoy equal and full political and other rights and participate freely in the determination of their destiny,

Also reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to decide freely on their own future,

Recognizing that the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of any State should be respected in the holding of elections,

Also recognizing that there is no single political system or single model for electoral processes equally suited to all nations and their peoples, and that political systems and electoral processes are subject to historical, political, cultural and religious factors,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right, freely and without external interference, to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

2. Affirms that it is the concern solely of peoples to determine methods and to establish institutions regarding the electoral process, as well as to determine the ways for its implementation according to their constitution and national legislation;

3. Also affirms that any extraneous activities that attempt, directly or indirectly, to interfere in the free development of national electoral processes, in particular in the developing countries, or that intend to sway the results of such processes, violate the spirit and letter of the principles established in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Urges all States to respect the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States and the sovereign right of peoples to determine their political, economic and social system;

5. Strongly appeals to all States to abstain from financing or providing, directly or indirectly, any other form of overt or covert support for political parties or groups and from taking actions to undermine the electoral processes in any country;

6. Condemns any act of armed aggression or threat or use of force against peoples, their elected Governments or their legitimate leaders;

7. Solemnly declares that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and non-fragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution to the explosive situation in South Africa;

8. Reaffirm once again the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to determine their political, economic and social system, without external interference;

9. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-sixth session, to give priority to the review of the fundamental factors that negatively affect the observance of the principle of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections".

Regional arrangements

In 1989, the Commission had before it the Secretary-General's report(72) on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian and Pacific region, submitted pursuant to a 1988 Commission resolution.(73) As requested by the Commission, the Secretary-General continued to encourage the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) to pursue the establishment of a depository centre for UN human rights materials at Bangkok, Thailand, to collect, process and disseminate such materials in the Asian and Pacific region. The report noted, however, that there had been no substantive change in the ESCAP mandate that would enable it to establish the centre. It also stated that UN development agencies in the region had been informed of the Commission's particular interest in promoting regional arrangements and of the Secretary-General's readiness to assist them in that regard, and had been asked to forward their comments on the matter to the Centre for Human Rights.

Human Rights Commission action. On 7 March, the Commission requested(74) the Secretary-General to continue to assist the ESCAP Executive Secretary in establishing the depository centre, to ensure a continuing flow of human rights materials to the ESCAP library for their dissemination in the region, and to report in 1990 on the progress achieved. UN development agencies in the region were encouraged to co-ordinate with ESCAP their efforts to promote the human rights dimension in their activities.

Further developments. On 23 November, the Secretary-General reported(75) to the Commission that in April ESCAP had adopted a resolution requesting its Executive Secretary to pursue the establishment of the centre, following which the ESCAP library was designated as depository centre for UN human rights materials. Its dissemination capacity, however, was limited to distribution of bibliographies, references and reading lists; for the library to become a disseminating centre would necessitate development of a clearing-house operation, which would require sufficient additional resources. The Secretary-General noted that the Centre for Human Rights had provided the ESCAP library with an initial stock of its human rights information and reference materials issued to date.

Responsibility to promote and protect human rights

Working group activities. The working group on a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms met at Geneva from 23 to 30 January and on 27 February.⁽⁷⁶⁾ It discussed various elements of chapters III and IV of the draft declaration, and provisionally adopted, at first reading, paragraph 1 of chapter IV. Annexed to the group's report was a compilation of all the texts showing the state of the whole draft declaration.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission decided⁽⁷⁷⁾ to continue work at its 1990 session on the elaboration of the draft declaration and to make meeting time available to the working group prior to and during that session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/80 without vote.

Question of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/60 of 8 March 1989,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of eight working days prior to the forty-sixth session of the Commission, in order to continue the elaboration of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognised human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meetings prior to and during the forty-sixth session of the Commission and in order to enable it to continue its work on the elaboration of the draft declaration, to transmit the report of the working group that met prior to and during the forty-fifth session of the Commission, together with the annexes thereto, to all Member States in advance of the next meeting of the working group.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/80

24 May 1989 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) without vote, 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); agenda item 9.

International co-operation in human rights

On 7 March, the Commission called⁽⁷⁸⁾ on all States to implement fully the international standards for the promotion and protection of human rights, and urged them to co-operate fully with the relevant UN bodies and human rights treaty bodies. It also invited Governments and international organizations to submit to the Secretary-General their comments and views on ways of strengthening international co-operation in solving international problems of a social, cultural and humanitarian character, and in promoting universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms. Governments were also invited to co-operate closely with special rapporteurs of the Commission.

World conference on human rights

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/156 without vote.

World conference on human rights

The General Assembly,

Noting the progress made by the United Nations over the past twenty years towards achieving its goal of promoting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Noting also that there are still areas in which further progress could be made towards this goal,

Considering that, in view of the progress made and the new challenges that lie ahead, it would be appropriate to conduct a review of what has been accomplished through the human rights programme and what remains to be done,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Governments, specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and United Nations bodies concerned with human rights on the desirability of convening a world conference on human rights for the purpose of dealing at the highest level with the crucial questions facing the United Nations in connection with the promotion and protection of human rights;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on this question;

3. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-fifth session.

General Assembly resolution 44/156

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/848) without vote, 29 November (meeting 60); 43-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.75); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 48, 50-60; plenary 82.

Human rights based on solidarity

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/148 without vote.

Human rights based on solidarity

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and other international instruments adopted by the United Nations concerning human rights,

Stressing that respect for the inherent dignity and for the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Convinced that the severe suffering of innumerable human beings throughout the world, particularly those in conditions of extreme poverty, calls for the strengthening of a common sense of human solidarity,

1. Request the Commission on Human Rights to obtain from States, the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as from other international organizations, including non-governmental organizations, their views and to study the question;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Human rights based on solidarity".

General Assembly resolution 44/148

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/829) without vote, 27 November (meeting 56); draft by Colombia (A/C.3/44/L.61/Rev.1); agenda item 115. Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 36-43, 50, 54, 56; plenary 82.

Human rights violations

In 1989, alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were examined by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and appointed officials. In addition, alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples were discussed with regard to Afghanistan, Kampuchea, South Africa, Western Sahara and the Palestinian people (see above, under "Civil and political rights").

Under a procedure established by the Economic and Social Council in 1970(1) to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Working Group on Communications of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities met from 24 July to 4 August 1989. After consideration of the Working Group's confidential report, the Sub-Commission referred to the Commission for consideration situations which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross human rights violations. It decided to defer action on certain communications until 1990 and to take no action on certain others.

On 7 March 1989, the Commission Chairman announced that the Commission had examined, in closed session, the human rights situations in Brunei Darussalam, Haiti, Honduras, Iraq, Paraguay, Somalia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Zaire, referred to it by the Sub-Commission at its 1988 session. He also announced that the situations in Honduras, Iraq, the Syrian Arab Republic and Zaire were no longer under consideration under the 1970 procedure.

Africa

South Africa and Namibia

Working Group activities. On 31 January, the six-member Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1967,(2) reported(3) to the Commission on recent developments in South Africa and Namibia. It described, in particular, the results of its 1988 fact-finding mission,(4) during which the Group held 24 meetings and heard 59 witnesses.

Developments dealt with in the report concerned the right to life, physical integrity and protection from arbitrary arrest and detention; apartheid, including bantustanization and forced population removals; the right to education, health and freedom of expression and of movement; and the right to work and freedom of association, including the situation of black workers and trade union activities in both South Africa and Namibia. Issues relating to Namibia also included human rights violations affecting individuals, such as capital punishment, and other manifestations of policies and practices constituting a violation of human rights, as well as the situation of refugees. The report also noted that the Group had not received sufficient information during the period under review to determine the responsibilities of persons suspected of being guilty of the crime of apartheid or of a serious human rights violation. Annexed to the report was a list of known political detainees in South Africa from January to May 1988.

The Working Group observed that the extension of the state of emergency in South Africa continued to cause new outbreaks of violence, while the extremely broad powers granted to the police and armed forces gave rise to abuses of authority. The Group pointed to the persistence of massive repression against students and trade union members, resumption of forced population removals, new restrictions on freedom of expression, and a growing number of arrests and detentions without trial of political prisoners, as well as cases of torture and ill-treatment, in particular against children (see above, under "Civil and political rights"). Accordingly, the Working Group was of the opinion that discrimination continued to be the rule in South Africa as apartheid remained institutionalized, despite indications that the Government envisaged reviewing its policy. With regard to Namibia, the Group, while underscoring the continuing illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa characterized by repression and flagrant human rights violations, noted recent efforts towards implementing the UN plan for the independence of Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

The report set forth a number of recommendations for action by the Commission.

In pursuance of its mandate, the Group carried out a mission of inquiry to London from 14 to 18 August, to gather information on policies and practices violating human rights in South Africa and Namibia, on the situation of children and on trade union rights in South Africa. It also undertook a joint mission with the Special Rapporteur on summary and arbitrary executions (see above, under "Civil and political rights") to collect on-the-spot information concerning violations of the right to life. The Group heard 18 witnesses with respect to the situation in South Africa and 6 witnesses with respect to the situation in Namibia. On 14 August, it decided to postpone its on-the-spot investigation of living conditions in Namibia and the treatment of its people by South Africa, requested by the Commission earlier in the year (see below).

Human Rights Commission action. On 23 February, by a roll-call vote of 35 to 3, with 5 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned(5) the escalation of human rights violations in South Africa since the imposition of the state of emergency in June 1986,(6) the widespread detention and incarceration of children and pregnant women, the use of torture and other ill-treatment against political opponents and indiscriminate use of force against unarmed demonstrators. It demanded that South Africa immediately abolish the system of apartheid in all its forms, and denounced the policies of "bantustanization" and denationalization, the forced removals of the black population and so-called "voluntary" removals. The Commission rejected South Africa's so-called reforms, which fell short of terminating the state of emergency, abolishing apartheid laws, dismantling the "bantustans", lifting bans on political organizations and parties and on the return of political exiles and freedom fighters, and ensuring the unconditional release of political prisoners.

The Commission demanded that South Africa desist from its brutal repression, torture and harassment of organizations and individuals opposed to apartheid and from the abduction and assassination of political refugees and members of liberation movements based in neighbouring States, and called on it to respect international standards on trade union rights and to desist from harassing, intimidating, arresting and maltreating black trade union leaders. It also demanded that South Africa repeal its ban on political organizations, release unconditionally all political prisoners and ensure that all South Africans were afforded access to a unified, free educational system. It condemned South Africa for its military pressures and other destabilization policies towards the front-line States.

Urging all States to stop any assistance to South Africa, the Commission called on the Security Council to impose mandatory sanctions against the South African régime, and endorsed, pending the adoption of sanctions, other measures adopted by certain countries, including prohibition of the transfer of technology; cessation of exports, sales or transport of oil and oil products as well as of any co-operation with South Africa's oil industry; cessation of further investments, financial loans and credit guarantees or support for trade; prohibition of the sale of krugerrand and other coins minted in South Africa; prohibition of imports from South Africa; termination of visa-free entry and of the promotion of tourism to South Africa; termination of air and shipping links; cessation of academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations; suspension or abrogation of agreements and termination of double taxation agreements; and a ban on government contracts with majority-owned South African companies.

The Commission strongly recommended to the Economic and Social Council that a year be declared as Academic Year against Apartheid and that the subject of the evils of apartheid be taught in educational institutions world wide, so as to sensitize public opinion to the realities of that system. It endorsed recommendations of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, renewed its mandate and decided that the Group should continue to study human rights violations in South Africa and Namibia, as well as infringements of trade union rights in South Africa. The Group was requested to continue bringing to the Commission Chairman's attention particularly serious violations and, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to continue investigating cases of torture, ill-treatment and deaths of detainees in South Africa. The Group Chairman was also authorized to participate in events connected with action against apartheid organized under the Special Committee's auspices.

In connection with the Group's on-the-spot investigations of living conditions in South African and Namibian prisons and the treatment of prisoners, the Commission requested South Africa to guarantee the Group free and confidential access to any current or former prisoner or detainee or any other persons, and to grant those persons immunity from any State action arising from their participation in the investigation. It also requested the Secretary-General to provide the Group with all possible assistance, and asked the Group to submit its interim report to the Commission in 1990 and its final report in 1991.

In another resolution,⁽⁷⁾ adopted on 23 February by a roll-call vote of 32 to none, with 10 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed the Namibian people's inalienable right to self-determination and independence under conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978,⁽⁸⁾ which it said remained the only internationally accepted basis for a peaceful and definitive settlement of the Namibian problem, and reiterated that South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia was an act of aggression. It condemned South Africa for the militarization of Namibia; the use of mercenaries; the recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies; the proclamation of a so-called security zone in Namibia; forcible displacement of Namibians from their homes; torture and brutality against the population and captured freedom fighters in particular; the military conscription of Namibians; the exploitation and depletion of Namibia's natural resources; and the use of Namibia as a supply base for armed groups based in Angola.

The Commission denounced South Africa's schemes to achieve a neo-colonial solution to the Namibian problem, as well as its attempts to separate parts of the Territory from the rest of Namibia; it urged States to reject such schemes and not to recognize any administration in Namibia that did not ensue from free elections conducted under UN auspices. It strongly urged the immediate holding of free and fair elections in Namibia, called for support to and co-operation with the UN Transition Assistance Group, appealed to the Security Council to adopt measures for implementing the UN plan for the independence of Namibia, and demanded that South Africa co-operate with the United Nations in bringing about Namibia's independence (see also above, under "Civil and political rights", and PART FOUR, Chapter III). The Commission also demanded that South Africa terminate the curfew in Namibia and release unconditionally all Namibian political prisoners; discontinue its military build-up and military conscription there as well as the torture and murder of innocent Namibians; accord prisoner-of-war status to captured freedom fighters and apply international humanitarian law to the liberation struggle in Namibia; and account for all "disappeared" Namibians. In that regard, it declared South Africa to be liable for compensating the victims, their families and the future lawful Government of an independent Namibia for losses sustained.

The Commission called for the unimpeded return of all Namibian refugees and exiles and urged international assistance in their repatriation. It requested the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to make an on-the-spot investigation in 1989 of living conditions in Namibia and the treatment of Namibians by the South African régime, to bring to the Commission Chairman's attention human rights violations in Namibia and to report to the Commission in 1990. The Secretary-General was asked to provide the Group with all necessary assistance.

By decision 1989/136 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to renew the Working Group's mandate and its request to the Secretary-General to provide the Group with all possible assistance.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, the Sub-Commission reaffirmed⁽⁹⁾ that apartheid was a crime against humanity and demanded the immediate lifting of the state of emergency, the cessation of all acts of brutality by the South African army and security forces, and the release of all political prisoners. Urging South Africa to lift promptly the ban on anti-apartheid organizations, the Sub-Commission strongly condemned it for the recent imposition of capital punishment on 66 opponents of apartheid; the continuing acts of international terrorism and destabilization carried out against the front-line and other neighbouring States; and the decision to proceed with local government elections organized along racial lines. It reaffirmed the right of all persons to refuse service in military or police forces used to enforce apartheid, appealed for international pressure on South Africa not to proceed with the execution of apartheid opponents, and requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to transmit that appeal urgently to the South African Government. The Sub-Commission urged States to provide assistance to the people of South Africa and Namibia, and called on them to assist the front-line States and to continue efforts towards the apartheid régime's total economic, cultural and political isolation.

Condemning all collaboration with South Africa and any breach or circumvention of the international sports boycott against apartheid, the Sub-Commission called on States, particularly Equatorial Guinea and Israel, to cut all military links with that country. It also called for immediate and complete disinvestment from South Africa and urged the foreign companies concerned to ensure that benefits that had accrued to the black labour force were fully respected.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1989,(10) the number of parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973(11) and entered into force in 1976,(12) remained at 88. In a 9 August report(13) to the Assembly on the status of the Convention, the Secretary-General provided a list of States that had signed, ratified or acceded to it as at 1 August.

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three (Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Mexico)—established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions—held its twelfth session at Geneva from 23 to 27 January.(14)

The Group examined, in the presence of representatives of the reporting States, an initial report from Trinidad and Tobago; the second periodic report from Romania; the third periodic reports from Peru and Rwanda; the fourth periodic report from Yugoslavia; the fifth periodic reports from Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Qatar; and the sixth periodic reports from Cuba and the USSR. It agreed to postpone consideration of the report from Czechoslovakia to its 1990 session.

The Group also continued to consider whether actions of transnational corporations (TNCs) operating in South Africa and Namibia came under the definition of the crime of apartheid. It had before it a note(15) by the Secretary-General transmitting the views of three States parties, as well as previously expressed views of States parties, specialized agencies and NGOs. The Group reiterated its view that such TNCs exhausted South African and Namibian natural resources, exploited the region's labour force with the single aim of making larger profits, and strengthened the apartheid régime. It endorsed the conclusion that, by their complicity, those TNCs must be considered, in conformity with article III (b) of the Convention, accomplices in the crime of apartheid and must be prosecuted for their responsibility in continuing that crime. However, the Group was of the opinion that further examination of the extent and nature of that responsibility was needed.

Noting the recommendations of the second meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held in 1988(16) (see also above, under "Advancement of human rights"), the Group authorized its Chairman to request the 38 States parties that had not yet submitted their initial reports to do so for its consideration in 1990. It also recommended that the Commission on Human Rights extend the periodicity of reporting by States parties from two to four years. The Group had before it the Secretary-General's note(17) indicating the status of submission of reports; noting with concern that more than 190 reports were overdue as at 31 December 1988, the Group urged those parties to fulfil their reporting obligations. It made a further number of recommendations for action by the Commission.

Human Rights Commission action. On 23 February, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission urged(18) States that had not done so to ratify or accede to the 1973 Convention against apartheid without delay and to ratify the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide(19) (see below, under "Genocide"), and requested States parties to the former Convention to submit their initial reports not later than two years after the Convention's entry into force for them, and their periodic reports at four-year intervals. It reiterated its recommendations that parties take into account the general guidelines for submission of reports, laid down by the Group of Three in 1978,(20) and that States parties be represented during the Group's consideration of their reports.

The Commission requested the Group to continue examining the extent and nature of TNCs' responsibility for the continued existence of the apartheid system as well as legal action that could be taken against TNCs whose operations came under the crime of apartheid, and to report in 1990. The Secretary-General was requested to invite the comments of States parties on that matter. He was further asked to invite States parties, specialized agencies and NGOs to provide the Commission with relevant information on the forms of the crime of apartheid, as described in article II, committed by TNCs operating in South Africa. The Commission decided on the time-frame for the Group's 1990 meeting and requested the Secretary-General to provide it with all necessary assistance. He was also asked to intensify his efforts to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation.

The Commission further called on States parties whose TNCs continued to do business with South Africa to terminate their dealings with South Africa and Namibia and to strengthen co-operation in implementing UN decisions aimed at preventing, suppressing and punishing the crime of apartheid. States, UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs were asked to step up their activities in enhancing public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the South African régime.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1989/137 by vote.

Implementation of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

At its 16th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/8 of 23 February 1989, approved the Commission's decision that the Group of Three of the Commission, established in accordance with article IX of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, should meet for a period of not more than five days before the forty-sixth session of the Commission to consider the reports submitted by States parties in accordance with article VII of the Convention. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Group of Three.

Economic and Social Council decision 1989/137

39-1-13 (unrecorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) by recorded vote (40-1-13), 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); agenda item 9.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/69 by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/103 of 4 December 1986, 42/56 of 30 November 1987 and 43/97 of 8 December 1988,

Mindful that the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid constitutes an important international treaty in the field of human rights and serves to implement the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid is a crime against humanity and constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and a gross violation of human rights, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Strongly condemning the abhorrent policy and system of apartheid and the brutal repression it engenders, which continue to aggravate the situation in South Africa,

Emphasizing that the root cause of the conflict in southern Africa is apartheid and the racist régime's policy of aggression, State terrorism and destabilization against the front-line and other neighbouring States,

Condemning the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and other fields as an encouragement to the intensification of its odious policy of apartheid,

Firmly convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa against apartheid, racism and colonialism and for the effective implementation of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence demands more than ever all necessary support by the international community and, in particular, further action by the Security Council in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter,

Underlining that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and the implementation of its provisions without any delay are necessary for its effectiveness and will therefore contribute to the eradication of the crime of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention that have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Appeals once again to those States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay, in particular those States that have jurisdiction over transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia and without whose co-operation such operations could not be halted;

4. Underlines the importance of the universal ratification of the Convention, which would be an effective contribution to the fulfilment of the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other human rights instruments;

5. Recalls with satisfaction the report of the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights, which was set up under the Convention, and, in particular, the conclusions and recommendations contained in that report;

6. Once again draws the attention of all States to the opinion expressed by the Group of Three in its report that transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia must be considered accomplices in the crime of apartheid, in accordance with article III (6) of the Convention;

7. Calls upon all States whose transnational corporations continue to do business with South Africa to take appropriate steps to terminate their dealings with South Africa;

8. Request the Commission on Human Rights to intensify, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, its efforts to compile periodically the progressive list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as those against whom or which legal proceedings have been undertaken;

9. Request the Secretary-General to circulate that list among all States parties to the Convention and all Member States and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all means of mass communication;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite the States parties to the Convention, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide the Commission on Human Rights with relevant information concerning the forms of the crime of apartheid, as described in article II of the Convention, committed by transnational corporations operating in South Africa;

11. Notes the importance of measures to be taken by States parties in the field of teaching and education for fuller implementation of the Convention;

12. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities to enhance public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the racist régime of South Africa;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

General Assembly resolution 44/69

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 124-1-27 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/716) by recorded vote (110-1-28), 27 October (meeting 21); 33-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.11); agenda item 100. Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 3-11, 15, 21; plenary 78.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraphs 6, 7 and 10 by recorded votes of 113 to 16, with 20 abstentions, 117 to 8, with 25 abstentions, and 120 to 15, with 15 abstentions, respectively. The Third Committee had approved the same paragraphs by recorded votes of 104 to 16, with 17 abstentions, 107 to 8, with 23 abstentions, and 106 to 15, with 16 abstentions. By a recorded vote of 115 to 15, with 19 abstentions, the Assembly retained the words "State terrorism" in the fifth preambular paragraph, as had the Committee by a recorded vote of 107 to 15, with 16 abstentions.

Foreign support to South Africa

Human Rights Commission action. On 23 February, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 8, with 4 abstentions, the Commission expressed its appreciation(21) to the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur, Ahmed Khalifa (Egypt), for his updated 1988 report(22) on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance to South Africa. It vigorously condemned assistance to South Africa by major Western countries and Israel, particularly in the military field, and demanded that such assistance, which it was convinced was a hostile action against the people of South Africa, Namibia and neighbouring States, be immediately terminated. Condemning the continuing nuclear collaboration of some Western States, Israel and others with South Africa, the Commission urged them to stop supplying it with nuclear equipment and technology, and called on Governments to end technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies in South Africa and Namibia and to cease all nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

Reaffirming the right of the South African and Namibian peoples to dispose of natural resources in their territories and to obtain reparation for the exploitation, depletion, loss or depreciation of those resources, the Commission strongly condemned foreign economic activities in Namibia and demanded that TNCs exploiting Namibian resources immediately refrain from new investments or activities there, withdraw from the Territory and end their co-operation with the South African administration. It called on States to take measures to prevent nationals and corporations under their jurisdiction from trading, manufacturing and investment in South Africa and Namibia, and appealed for intensified international efforts to force the South African régime to comply with UN resolutions and decisions. In that regard, the Commission welcomed the General Assembly's request to the Security Council to consider complete and mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in particular the prohibition of technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies; cessation of nuclear collaboration; prohibition of loans to and investment in South Africa, and the cessation of trade; and an embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic goods.

The Commission rejected all policies that encouraged the South African régime to intensify its repression of South Africans and Namibians and to escalate its aggression against neighbouring States, and demanded that South Africa cease all acts of aggression and destabilization against those States. It appealed to States, specialized agencies and NGOs to co-operate with the recognized liberation movements of southern Africa and to intensify, along with regional intergovernmental organizations, their campaign aimed at mobilizing public opinion to enforce economic and other sanctions against South Africa. The Commission urgently requested specialized agencies, particularly the International Monetary Fund (IMF), to refrain from granting loans or financial assistance to the South African regime, and called for contributions to the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund, as well as for measures to facilitate implementation of the Tripartite Agreement for Namibia's independence (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

Also on 23 February, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 7, with 4 abstentions, the Commission recommended⁽²³⁾ a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/73 by recorded vote.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 39/15 of 23 November 1984 and 41/95 of 4 December 1986,

1. Expresses its satisfaction to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mr. Ahmad Khalifa, for his updated report;

2. Expresses its thanks to all Governments and all organizations that have provided information to the Special Rapporteur;

3. Invites the Special Rapporteur:

(a) To continue to update, subject to annual review, the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the racist régime of South Africa, giving such details regarding enterprises listed as the Rapporteur may consider necessary and appropriate, including explanations of responses, if any, and to submit the updated report to the Commission on Human Rights, through the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

(b) To use all available material from other United Nations organs, Member States, specialized agencies and other relevant sources in order to indicate the volume, nature and adverse human consequences of the assistance given to the racist régime of South Africa;

(c) To intensify direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, with a view to consolidating mutual co-operation in updating his report;

4. Calls upon Governments:

(a) To co-operate with the Special Rapporteur in making the report even more accurate and informative;

(b) To disseminate the updated report and give its contents the widest possible publicity;

5. Invites the Sub-Commission to consider the updated report at its forty-first session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 41/95, to make available to the Special Rapporteur two economists to help him to develop his work of analysis and documentation of certain specific cases of particular importance;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance that he may require in the exercise of his mandate, with a view to intensifying direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid,

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to bring the updated report of the Special Rapporteur to the attention of Governments whose national financial institutions continue to deal with the régime of South Africa and to call upon them to provide the Special Rapporteur with any information or comments they may wish to present on the matter;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give the updated report of the Special Rapporteur the widest distribution and publicity as a United Nations publication;

10. Requests the Special Rapporteur to provide the Sub-Commission at its forty-first session with a concise note on the feasibility of consolidating the lists maintained by United Nations organs of enterprises doing business in South Africa;

11. Also requests the Special Rapporteur to provide the Sub-Commission at its forty-first session with a brief analysis of the partial disinvestment of foreign enterprises in South Africa, enumerating the various techniques employed to avoid total withdrawal from participation in the South African economy;

12. Decides that the Commission on Human Rights shall consider the updated report at its forty-sixth session under the agenda item entitled "The adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/73

24 May 1989 Meeting 16 38-7-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) by recorded vote (39-7-7), 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); agenda item 9.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ghana, Guinea, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, Niger, Oman, Poland, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Canada, Denmark, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Liberia,* New Zealand, Norway.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. On 11 and 12 July, the Special Rapporteur presented to the Sub-Commission an updated report and later addendum,(24) which analysed disinvestment trends in South Africa and listed TNCs, banks, insurance companies, firms and other enterprises giving direct or indirect military, economic and other assistance to that country. The report also provided comments on the subject from 12 States and 6 UN organs and specialized agencies, and noted that 3 regional intergovernmental organizations, 6 NGOs and a number of other bodies of the UN system had replied.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, the Sub-Commission recommended(25) that the Commission recommend to the Economic and Social Council a resolution requesting the Special Rapporteur to continue updating his report for annual review by the Sub-Commission and the Commission; calling on States to co-operate with the Rapporteur and to disseminate his report; requesting the Secretary-General to provide the Rapporteur with all necessary assistance and to bring the report to the attention of Governments concerned; and inviting him to give it wide distribution and publicity as a UN publication.

Trade union rights in South Africa

In 1989, the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa (see above) continued to study alleged infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1988.(26) By a 3 April note,(27) the Secretary-General communicated to the Council sections of the Group's report(3) to the Commission containing its findings concerning labour legislation, freedom of association, restrictions under state-of-emergency regulations, as well as the situation of black workers, trade union activities, action against trade union movements, and sanctions and disinvestment in South Africa.

On 7 April, the Secretary-General informed(28) the Council that the International Labour Organisation (ILO) had in 1988 referred for Council consideration, in accordance with its 1950 resolution,(29) certain allegations of infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, addressed to ILO by the Congress of South African Trade Unions (COSATU). As South Africa was not a member of ILO, the Secretary-General had sought its Government's consent to having the allegations referred to the ILO Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association. He provided a 14 February 1989 reply from South Africa, which stated that COSATU had not yet exhausted the available internal procedures to settle the complaint in question and that it would be premature to refer it to the ILO Commission.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/82 without vote.

Infringements of trade union rights in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988/41 of 27 May 1988,

Having examined the relevant section of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights and having considered the complaint made by the Congress of South African Trade Unions against the South African régime concerning the infringement of the right of freedom of association, referred to the Council in accordance with its resolution 277(X) of 17 February 1950 and contained in annex II to the note by the Secretary-General on allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights,

Noting that the reply from the Government of South Africa addressed to the Secretary-General and contained in annex III to the note by the Secretary-General pre-dates the enactment of the legislation which constitutes the subject of the complaint,

Gravely concerned at the further deterioration of the situation as a result of the enactment of new legislation placing drastic restrictions on the exercise of trade union rights,

Noting with indignation that dehumanizing conditions imposed on black workers by the Government of South Africa and police intervention in industrial disputes, including mass arrests, banning and harassment of trade unionists, continue,

Aware of the ever-growing importance of the role of the independent black trade union movement in the struggle against apartheid,

1. Takes note of the relevant section of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights;

2. Condemns the increased repression of the independent black trade union movement by the Government of South Africa;

3. Demands once again that the persecution of trade unionists and repression of the independent black trade union movement cease;

4. Requests once again immediate recognition of the right of the entire population of South Africa to exercise freedom of association and to form and join trade unions without impediment or discrimination of any kind;

5. Demands the immediate unconditional release of all trade unionists imprisoned for exercising their legitimate trade union rights;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to continue to study the situation and to report thereon to the Commission on Human Rights and the Council;

7. Also requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, in the discharge of its mandate, to consult with the International Labour Organisation and the Special Committee against Apartheid, as well as with international and African trade union confederations;

8. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1990 the question of allegations regarding infringements of trade union rights in South Africa as a sub-item of the item entitled "Human rights";

9. Requests the Secretary-General to persist in his efforts to ensure referral of the complaint made by the Congress of South African Trade Unions to the Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association of the International Labour Organisation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/82

24 May 1989 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) without vote, 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Burkina Faso, for African States (E/1989/C.2/L.20); orally amended by Lesotho in plenary; agenda item 9.

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Report of the Special Rapporteur. On 16 February 1989, Special Rapporteur Felix Ermacora (Austria) submitted to the Commission a report⁽³⁰⁾ on the human rights situation in Afghanistan. The Special Rapporteur visited that country and Pakistan in 1988, and again in 1989, from 27 January to 1 February (Pakistan) and from 2 to 5 February (Afghanistan).

He stated that the situation in Afghanistan was characterized by such factors as the decision to withdraw Soviet troops by 15 February 1989 (see PART TWO, Chapter III); efforts to establish a broad-based interim government including members of the current Government; and the continuation of the armed conflict. The human rights situation was adversely affected by government attempts to retain control over the areas formerly occupied by Soviet troops and by opposition attacks during the troop withdrawal, as well as retaliatory action, resulting in considerable civilian casualties and damage to property. At the same time, the Government accused the opposition of rejecting all its proposals to normalize the situation in the country, while the opposition claimed that the so-called policy of national reconciliation pursued by the Government had had no effect on either the return of refugees or the restoration of human rights in Afghanistan, due to continued bombing raids, arbitrary arrests and cases of torture and ill-treatment.

The Special Rapporteur continued to receive allegations concerning disappearances of persons, and was informed of cases of torture and ill-treatment which occurred during interrogation. Despite the Government's claim that only two interrogation centres existed in the country, he had obtained information that tended to confirm that other similar centres existed. He described the situation of prisoners awaiting trial as deplorable, and noted that Iranian and Pakistani prisoners had not benefited from general amnesties. He also pointed out that, whereas 16,110 prisoners had been released since 1986, 3,405 more persons were imprisoned during the same period; the official figure given for political prisoners was 3,500, but whether there were more prisoners in places other than known detention centres could not be determined.

Following the rejection by the opposition of the Government's proposal for a cease-fire, the downward trend in casualties in combat areas had reversed. It had been asserted, the Rapporteur said, that the Soviet forces used military strength to safeguard their troop withdrawal and that government troops attacked areas recently vacated by the Soviet forces. The Special Rapporteur also underscored that neither the use of prisoners of war for bargaining or exchange nor their treatment in general met the provisions laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949. As a result of the conflict, the food supply had decreased dramatically, which had especially negative effects on lower strata of the population and children.

The number of Afghan refugees outside the country stood at some 5.5 million, with only 185,945 having returned from Iran and Pakistan. Despite the existence of 31 "peace guest houses", 4 receiving points, 12 receiving camps and 8 clinics for refugees, their return was impeded by continued fighting, the presence of mines and the absence of an Islamic government or a broad-based government without members of the current ruling party demanded by most refugees. In that regard, the report noted attempts by the opposition alliance to designate a traditional consultative body, Shura, to hold power until general elections. It also stressed that only a portion of the population accepted the type of government provided for in the Constitution of December 1987 and that the existence of such a high number of refugees, who had not had the opportunity to express themselves on the Constitution, created a major obstacle to the full exercise of the right to self-determination.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the human rights situation in Afghanistan remained a matter of deep concern and that all parties to the conflict were responsible for ensuring the respect for human rights in areas under their control. He recommended that all parties strictly respect provisions of humanitarian law, increase efforts to solve the conflict by peaceful means, co-operate in facilitating the return of refugees, allow humanitarian NGOs (particularly ICRC) unrestricted access to all parts of the country and transmit to them the names of all political prisoners and detained Afghan soldiers, and release prisoners of war without delay or conditions of reciprocity. It was also recommended that all military commanders provide minefield plans to facilitate mine-clearing activities, that members of the armed forces and civil servants not be subjected to arbitrary justice but stand fair trial on an individual basis, that the fate of disappeared persons be thoroughly investigated, that no ban on supplies of medicine and foodstuffs and other essential goods be declared as a means of pressure against the civilian population, and that international consensus be promoted to implement humanitarian projects in Afghanistan. The Special Rapporteur further suggested that, in implementation of those recommendations and in other respects, recourse might be had to the assistance provided under advisory services of the UN Centre for Human Rights.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission noted⁽³¹⁾ with grave concern the continuation of the armed conflict in Afghanistan and urged efforts for a comprehensive political solution and for the creation of a situation permitting the full enjoyment of human rights in that country. It again called on parties to the conflict to respect provisions of international humanitarian law and to co-operate with humanitarian organizations by granting them unrestricted access to all parts of the country. The parties were urged to treat all prisoners in accordance with humanitarian law and to release all prisoners of war, while the Afghan authorities were called upon to investigate thoroughly the fate of disappeared persons. The Commission expressed its concern at the large number of political prisoners, conditions of prisoners awaiting trial and reports of ill-treatment and torture during interrogation by Afghan authorities, as well as at alleged atrocities committed against Afghan soldiers, civil servants and their families. It was also concerned at the number of refugees outside Afghanistan, and urged every effort possible to facilitate their return.

The Commission requested the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (see above, under "Civil and political rights") to examine the cases of disappeared persons, a list of whom was annexed to the Special Rapporteur's report, and took note of his recommendation regarding the possibility of assistance from the Centre for Human Rights in respect of Afghanistan. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and to have him report to the General Assembly in 1989 and to the Commission in 1990, while the Secretary-General was asked to give him all necessary assistance. In addition, all parties concerned were urged not to place any ban on supplies of medicine, food and other essential goods and to extend their co-operation to the Commission and its Special Rapporteur.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/149, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request that the Secretary-General give him all necessary assistance.

Interim report of the Special Rapporteur. On 30 October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly an interim report⁽³²⁾ on the human rights situation in Afghanistan, prepared by the Special Rapporteur in response to the Commission's request. The report provided an evaluation of the current situation following the Special Rapporteur's visits to Pakistan from 9 to 16 September, to Afghanistan from 17 to 20 September and to Iran from 30 September to 5 October.

The Special Rapporteur reported that, in accordance with the Afghan Constitution, a state of emergency had been declared by the President of the Republic of Afghanistan on 19 February and a law was issued to that effect on 22 February. The parliament was suspended and State power concentrated in the hands of the President, who could suspend or limit by decree certain provisions of the Constitution concerning human rights; however, he had not yet used those powers. At the same time, far-reaching powers granted to the attorney for State security and a broad definition of crimes under the security law created a potential for violations of the right to freedom and security of the individual, and arrests for political activities continued. In the Special Rapporteur's opinion, prison conditions, despite some surface improvements, remained deplorable, including at the rehabilitation centre for adolescents in Dar-el-Taadib, where none of the minimum detention requirements were fulfilled. He also noted that a person sentenced to less than 10 years of imprisonment could not lodge an appeal and that an accused person could not choose his legal assistance, which contradicted international human rights standards. The Special Rapporteur pointed out that ICRC had access to convicted prisoners at Kabul and outside the capital, but regretted that no agreement had been reached on ICRC visits to prisoners awaiting trial.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the educational situation appeared to have improved and that the Government was pursuing a policy of combating illiteracy. The Special Rapporteur was informed that 400 of the 700 mosques destroyed during the past 10 years had been rebuilt. The enjoyment of economic rights was poor as a result of the war situation, and he stated that the population outside of towns could only survive with the help of the UN humanitarian programme and NGOs operating in Afghanistan (see PART THREE, Chapter III). Severe food shortages caused a reported exodus of farm families to cities in Afghanistan and Iran.

From March to August 1989, more than 7,431 war-wounded were registered at various hospitals in Afghanistan and Pakistan, while acts of terrorism committed between 15 February and 19 September caused the deaths of 2,249 civilians and wounded 5,269. The Rapporteur reiterated that the existence of minefields remained a particular cause for anxiety and fear. He further noted that the fate of Soviet prisoners of war remained unclarified and that captured members of the opposition forces were treated not as prisoners of war but as terrorists and were submitted to the courts of State security.

As for the refugee situation, the Government reported that the number of returnees had risen from 185,945 at the end of January to 203,943 by the end of September. The Rapporteur estimated the number of refugees outside Afghanistan at more than 5 million, including some 2.3 million in Iran, and noted that no official statistics were available concerning internally displaced persons. At the same time, the living conditions of refugees had become increasingly difficult as international aid to them had diminished.

The Special Rapporteur reiterated recommendations made in his report to the Commission⁽³⁰⁾ and added that fighters should be recognized as combatants within the meaning of the Geneva Conventions of 1949; any use of weapons against the civilian population must be qualified as terrorism; humanitarian assistance to refugees should be reinforced; amnesty decrees should apply equally to foreign detainees, the conditions of prisoners awaiting trial should be improved and the waiting period should be shortened; and the right to self-determination should also be respected by the opposition forces.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/161 without vote.

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, with a view to formulating proposals that could contribute to ensuring full protection of the human rights of the inhabitants of the country before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces,

Recalling also its relevant resolutions as well as resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and decisions of the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note in particular of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/67 of 8 March 1989, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of its Special Rapporteur for one year and requested him to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan,

Emphasizing the relevance of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation relating to Afghanistan, concluded at Geneva on 14 April 1988, which constitute an important step towards a comprehensive political solution,

Welcoming the completion, on 15 February 1989, of the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan in accordance with the Agreements concluded at Geneva,

Welcoming also the co-operation that the Afghan authorities have extended in particular to the Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan, and to international organizations such as the specialized agencies, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross,

Having examined the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, a situation which remains a matter of great concern even after the withdrawal of Soviet troops,

Noting with deep concern that a situation of armed conflict persists in Afghanistan, leaving large numbers of victims and causing enormous suffering to the civilian population,

Noting with grave concern that the treatment of prisoners detained in connection with the conflict does not conform to the internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law,

Noting with equal concern that more than live million refugees are living outside Afghanistan, that many Afghans are displaced within the country and that in both cases the numbers have increased,

Aware that the main reasons given by the refugees for not returning to Afghanistan pending the achievement of a comprehensive political solution are the continued fighting in some provinces, the use of very destructive arms in the conflict, and the minefields that have been laid in many parts of the country,

Noting with concern that acts of terrorism have significantly increased,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Welcomes the co-operation of the Afghan authorities with the Special Rapporteur;

3. Urges all parties concerned to work for the achievement of a comprehensive political solution based on the right of self-determination and for the creation of a situation that will permit the return of refugees and the full enjoyment of human rights by all Afghans;

4. Calls once again upon all parties to the conflict, in order to alleviate the serious suffering of the Afghan people, strictly to respect human life and the principles and provisions of international humanitarian law and to co-operate fully and effectively with international humanitarian organizations, especially the International Committee of the Red Cross, in particular by granting it unrestricted access to all parts of the country;

5. Notes with grave concern the continuation of the armed conflict, which threatens the life and security of innocent men, women and children;

6. Urges all parties to the conflict to respect the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population, to transmit to humanitarian organizations, in particular to the International Committee of the Red Cross, the names of all political prisoners and detained Afghan soldiers, and to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit all prisoners in accordance with its established criteria;

7. Also urges all parties to the conflict to release all prisoners of war in accordance with the internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law;

8. Expresses its concern at reports that the living conditions of refugees, especially those of women and children, are becoming increasingly difficult because of the decline in international humanitarian assistance;

9. Urges appeals to all Member States, humanitarian organizations and all parties concerned to co-operate fully, in co-ordination with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in order to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons in safety;

10. Urgently appeals also to all Member States and humanitarian organizations to promote the implementation of the projects envisaged by the Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan and the programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

11. Urges all parties to the conflict to treat all prisoners in their custody in accordance with the internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law and to protect them from all acts of reprisal and violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary execution;

12. Notes with concern reports of the interrogation practices of the Afghan authorities, the large number of political prisoners and the conditions of prisoners awaiting trial;

13. Calls upon the Afghan authorities to investigate thoroughly fate of persons who have disappeared, to apply amnesty decrees equally to foreign detainees, to reduce the period during which prisoners await trial, to treat all prisoners, especially those awaiting trial or those in custody in juvenile rehabilitation centres, in accordance with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit them regularly in accordance with its established criteria;

14. Requests the Afghan authorities strictly to apply to all convicted persons article 14, paragraphs 3 (d) and 5, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

15. Notes with concern the allegations of atrocities committed against Afghan soldiers, civil servants and captured civilians;

16. Urges all parties concerned to extend their full co-operation to the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

18. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-fifth session, the situation of human rights in Afghanistan in order to examine it anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Iran

Report of the Special Representative. On 26 January, Special Representative Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador) submitted to the Commission a report(33) on the human rights situation in Iran. He summarized discussions held with Iranian government representatives in New York and Geneva in November 1988 and January 1989, as well as information provided by the Government and the statements made during informal hearings at Geneva on 11 January by eight witnesses of alleged human rights violations. The report also contained written information pertaining to alleged violations of the right to life and the situation of the Baha'i religious community.

It stated that the Special Representative continued receiving persistent reports about a wave of executions of political prisoners; it alleged that there were several thousand victims. A list containing more than 1,000 names of victims made available to the Representative was annexed to his report. He also noted that the Special Rapporteur on summary and arbitrary executions (see above, under "Civil and political rights") had, from July to December 1988, transmitted to the Iranian Government allegations regarding the summary or arbitrary execution of several hundred persons, and sent urgent appeals concerning some 150 persons facing an imminent danger of execution. It was alleged that many of those serving prison sentences in Iran had had their sentences changed to the death penalty, in contravention of international human rights instruments to which Iran was a party.

The Special Representative received information concerning the execution of two members of the Baha'i community. The number of Baha'i prisoners continued to decrease and stood at 101 as at January 1989, including four detained without charges; the sentences of some Baha'i prisoners had reportedly been reduced and detention conditions of some had improved. Yet many Baha'is continued to be denied jobs in education and government or their pensions, and there was new information on persons who lost their jobs on the grounds of belonging to the Baha'i community or whose property had been confiscated.

Reports also continued to be received of ill-treatment and torture; arrests made in an intimidatory manner; investigation, trial and serving of sentence effected under duress; and detention incommunicado or in solitary confinement as a method of obtaining confessions or information.

The Special Representative examined such aspects of Iran's legal system as punishment and the death penalty, irregularities concerning investigation and trial, and available remedies. He noted the view of the Iranian Government that its Constitution was Islamic in nature, but pointed out that the upcoming revision of Iran's Penal Code provided the Government with a unique opportunity to bring its legal system in line with international human rights standards. Among incompatibilities between the current system and the human rights treaties to which Iran was a party were corporal punishment; a broad application of the death penalty; denial of the right of defendants to call defence witnesses or examine prosecution witnesses, as well as of the right of a convicted person to present statements with respect to his or her trial and conviction during the review of the sentence by a higher tribunal; and absence of legal recourse under which persons condemned to death could seek pardon or commutation of the sentence.

In addition, the Representative pointed to a recent judicial directive approving the imprisonment or exile for up to two years of anyone with a criminal record, even without evidence of further criminal acts, and to reported practices of detaining family members of persons accused of political crimes, detaining prisoners after the expiration of their sentence, and making arrests without an explanation of reasons to the prisoner. According to both oral and written information, political detainees did not receive legal assistance, nor were they given the opportunity to prepare their defence or communicate with a legal counsel. Hearings concerning political defendants were usually held without a lawyer, family members, the public or the press. The report also stated that, whereas Iranian laws provided judicial remedies against abuses of power and human rights violations, there was no known case of punishment of a government official for abuse of power nor of compensation for arbitrary arrest.

The Special Representative concluded that acts still occurred in Iran that were inconsistent with international human rights instruments and justified international concern, study and monitoring. He set forth a number of recommendations which were acted on by the Commission on Human Rights (below). He pleaded with the Iranian Government, inter alia, to limit the use of the death penalty strictly to the most serious crimes, to exempt from that penalty those under 18 years of age and to replace punishments involving torture by those compatible with international standards. The Special Representative also suggested that a national commission on human rights be set up and that Iran consider establishing a programme of information on human rights for law enforcement personnel and taking advantage of the technical assistance provided by the UN Centre for Human Rights.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, by a roll-call vote of 20 to 6, with 12 abstentions, the Commission expressed its deep concern⁽³⁴⁾ about allegations of grave human rights violations in Iran, including summary executions and cases of ill-treatment and torture, and endorsed the Special Representative's conclusion that those acts were inconsistent with human rights instruments and justified international concern, study and monitoring. It also endorsed his concern about apparent flaws in Iran's legal system, in particular frequent irregularities regarding fair trial, the large number of arrests and poor conditions of imprisonment, and urged the Iranian Government to investigate and report in detail on all allegations of human rights violations; to ensure fair trial; to ensure that the prison régime conformed to international standards and that prisoners were not subjected to unjustified or unnecessary hardships; to suppress ill-treatment and torture; and to ensure that a firm policy of compliance with international human rights instruments was adopted and enforced by the highest competent officials.

Taking note of an amnesty declared on 11 February 1989, the Commission nevertheless expressed its deep concern at the existence of political prisoners and at allegations that persons could be jailed on the basis of mere suspicion of misdoing or on account of their political opinions or political criticism. It called on Iran immediately to provide detailed information concerning the allegations brought to its attention, and urged it to respect and ensure to all individuals within its territory and under its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,⁽³⁵⁾ to which it was party. The Commission also urged the Iranian Government to extend full co-operation to the Special Representative and to permit him to visit that country; decided to extend his mandate for another year; requested him to report to the General Assembly in 1989 and to the Commission in 1990; and asked the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1989/148 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

At its 16th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/66 of 8 March 1989, approved the decision of the Commission to extend the mandate of the Special Representative on the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, as contained in Commission resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, for a further year. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative.

Economic and Social Council decision 1989/148

22-8-16 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) by recorded vote (23-8-15), 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); agenda item 9.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Lesotho, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Rwanda, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Cuba, Indonesia, Iran, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, Oman, Sri Lanka, Sudan.

Abstaining: Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Cameroon, Ghana, Guinea, Kenya, Liberia, Niger, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Thailand, Tunisia, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Sub-Commission action. In a resolution(36) adopted by secret ballot on 31 August by 17 votes to 3, with 4 abstentions, the Sub-Commission expressed its deep concern about grave human rights violations in Iran related to the right to life and to freedom from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the right to liberty and security of person; and the right to a fair trial and to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and expression. It urged Iran to cease executions, particularly those of political prisoners, and to co-operate fully with the Special Representative, including by facilitating his visits to prisons and other places of detention. The Secretary-General was requested to inform the Sub-Commission in 1990 of the Special Representative's report and of relevant reports by other special rapporteurs or human rights bodies, and of steps taken by the UN system to prevent human rights violations in Iran.

Interim report of the Special Representative. On 2 November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report(37) of the Special Representative, prepared in accordance with the Commission's request. The report summarized communications with the Iranian Government, in which Iran pointed, inter alia, to 140 forged names and particulars of persons included in the Special Representative's list as allegedly executed between July and September 1988, and questioned the credibility of his sources. The report provided further oral information obtained by the Representative during informal hearings of 15 witnesses on 10, 12 and 17 July 1989, as well as written information transmitted by Iran and received from other sources. The Special Representative also informed the Assembly of his meeting with a representative of the Government at Geneva on 19 and 22 September.

He noted that on 6 March, Iran had submitted its comments and views, stating that 2,000 persons had thus far been granted amnesty. With regard to the study of human rights in Iran, the Government asked that UN organs take into account the situation in the country, particularly the eight years of international war and the revolutionary process, under harassment and threats from terrorist and subversive groups. Iran repeated its complaint that countries subjected to the scrutiny of the Commission on Human Rights were determined selectively, for political reasons, and called for equal treatment of all countries in similar situations. In its view, the United Nations did not give appropriate consideration to groups and organizations responsible for human rights violations which acted separately from and even against the Government. Iran further criticized the text of Commission resolutions, saying that they attempted to confer the status of a religious minority on Baha'is, which prevented the Government from co-operating fully with the Special Representative. However, it expressed its readiness to improve such co-operation.

In the meantime, the Special Representative continued to receive allegations of human rights violations in Iran and to communicate them to the Government. The allegations related to the right to life, to liberty and security of person and to a fair trial, as well as to freedom from torture or ill-treatment and freedom of conscience and religion. The Representative stated that the Government, which had disputed 140 cases of execution contained on his most recent list, had yet to reply to previous lists as well as to other allegations, and pointed to continuing reports of torture and ill-treatment in Iranian prisons, distressing conditions for prisoners, and the lack of procedural guarantees relating to fair trial and the legality of detention. He noted that no measures had been taken to rectify the situation, and expressed his conviction that the treatment of prisoners continued to be left to the initiatives of guards and that investigators used methods at variance with humanitarian principles to extract confessions or information.

The report stated that harassment of Baha'is had decreased and that many had been released from prison; they were being admitted to primary and secondary schools and were permitted to use their cemeteries, and some Baha'i businesses had been reopened. On the other hand, 14 Baha'is were still in prison and 4 had been executed, their access to universities remained blocked, and their right to travel freely was still denied. Regarding the recent amnesty, the Special Representative noted that there had been allegations that some of those released had subsequently disappeared, and politically motivated executions had again been reported, coupled with a dramatic increase in the number of executions for ordinary offences, in particular drug trafficking. He also reported the public hanging of scores of men and women, carried out in various cities and in groups in implementation of a 21 January law making drug trafficking punishable by death.

The Special Representative concluded that the basic framework regarding human rights in Iran had not changed and that his recommendations to the Commission remained current and pertinent. He deemed it appropriate to renew the appeal to the Government for full co-operation with him, and maintained his conviction that acts committed in that country were incompatible with international human rights instruments binding on Iran and that the persistence of such acts justified both international concern and study and constant vigilance by the Assembly and the Commission.

Communication from Iran. On 24 November, Iran transmitted to the Secretary-General its Government's invitation to the Special Representative to visit the country.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/163 without vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights;
2. Takes note of the view of the Special Representative that, in order to achieve full co-operation between the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Special Representative, there is a need to proceed to another stage in the discharge of his mandate;
3. Welcomes the invitation by the Islamic Republic of Iran to the Special Representative for him to visit that country;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative;
5. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran during its forty-fifth session in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Kampuchea

On 6 March, by a roll-call vote of 35 to 7, with 1 abstention, the Commission, inter alia reiterated⁽³⁹⁾ its condemnation of persistent flagrant violations of human rights in Kampuchea and reaffirmed that the continuing illegal occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces constituted the primary violation of human rights in that country. It deplored military attacks against civilians by occupying forces as a violation of human rights, and reaffirmed its call for the unconditional withdrawal of such forces to enable the Kampuchean people to exercise their inalienable human rights in their totality.

Europe and the Mediterranean

Albania

Communication from Albania. By an 8 February note verbale,⁽⁴⁰⁾ Albania transmitted to the Commission information concerning the socialist democracy, rights and freedoms enjoyed by its citizens. It listed the rights and freedoms guaranteed under the Albanian Constitution and examined the functioning of the legal system to ensure their observance. It dealt in particular with the protection of minorities and the freedom of conscience, stating that the Government decreed neither the protection of religion nor its suppression by administrative measures and had never allowed any administrative infringement on religious sensibilities of believers. At the same time, Albania condemned those who had committed criminal acts under the cover of religion and religious rites.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, by a roll-call vote of 23 to 3, with 13 abstentions, the Commission, noting with regret Albania's failure to respond to allegations of human rights violations transmitted to it by the Commission's Special Rapporteur on religious discrimination, reminded⁽⁴¹⁾ Albania of its obligation to co-operate with the Commission and called on it to provide information on its compliance with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁽⁴²⁾ and to respond to the specific allegations concerning discrimination based on religion or belief. The Secretary-General was asked to invite the Albanian Government to provide the requested information and co-operation, and to report to the Commission in 1990.

Note and report of the Secretary-General. In a 22 June note and a later addendum,⁽⁴³⁾ the Secretary-General informed the Sub-Commission of his request for information from Albania concerning implementation of the Commission's March resolution and Albania's reply that, in its view, it had already complied with the request for co-operation with the Commission by submitting its note verbale in February (above).

He subsequently reported⁽⁴⁴⁾ to the Commission that Albania, on 27 July, had submitted to the Sub-Commission a document(45) containing information on the guarantee of freedoms and rights to all its citizens and, on 30 August, had replied to allegations of human rights violations.

Cyprus

Human Rights Commission action. At its 1989 session, the Commission had before it the Secretary-General's 2 February report(46) describing developments in Cyprus relating to human rights. On 7 March, the Commission decided(47) to postpone consideration of the question of human rights in Cyprus until 1990, on the understanding that action required by its previous resolutions on the subject would remain operative, including its request to the Secretary-General to report to the Commission.

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General subsequently reported that the two sides in Cyprus had agreed on 29 June to complete an outline for an overall settlement; however, the Turkish Cypriot side subsequently expressed reservations about the process. He nevertheless believed that it should be possible for the two leaders to proceed expeditiously with their work on the outline. The Committee on Missing Persons held eight sessions between 1 December 1988 and 4 December 1989, while the UN Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus continued, under its mandate, to discharge humanitarian functions on behalf of the Greek Cypriots remaining in the northern part of the island, whose number stood at 611 at the beginning of December, as well as to make periodic visits to Turkish Cypriots living in the south. (See PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

Romania

On 9 March, by a roll-call vote of 21 to 7, with 10 abstentions, the Commission expressed its concern(49) at the allegations of serious human rights violations in Romania, as well as at the imposition of increasingly severe obstacles to the maintenance of cultural identity of Romania's national minorities, and noted that the Government's policy of rural systematization, which involved forcible resettlement and affected long-standing traditions, would, if implemented, lead to further human rights violations. It also noted with concern that Romanian nationals continued to seek protection and refuge in neighbouring countries for reasons related to serious violations of their human rights, and urged the Romanian Government to abide by its international obligations under human rights treaties.

The Commission requested its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the human rights situation in Romania; authorized the Rapporteur to seek relevant information from Romania's Government, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations; and requested him to report to it in 1990. Romania was urged to co-operate with the Commission and its Special Rapporteur, while the Secretary-General was asked to give him all necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1989/154 by recorded vote.

Human rights situation in Romania

At its 16th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/75 of 9 March 1989, approved the decision of the Commission to request its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur of the Commission with the mandate to examine the human rights situation in Romania. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the special rapporteur to enable him to carry out his mandate in the best possible conditions.

Economic and Social Council decision 1989/154

19-7-19 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) by recorded vote (21-7-18), 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); agenda item 9.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Canada, Colombia, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Against: China, Cuba, Indonesia, Iran, Nicaragua, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Cameroon, Ghana, Guinea, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Niger, Oman, Rwanda, Sudan, Thailand, Zaire, Zambia.

Speaking prior to the vote, Romania stated that there were no ethnic or social problems in that country, where de jure and de facto equality existed among all inhabitants, and that the Commission's resolution and a draft decision before the Council amounted to attempts to sow discord among ethnic groups and dismember sovereign States. Accordingly, it rejected such attempts, as well as the methods of investigation and monitoring by "special rapporteurs", as incompatible with the principles of sovereignty of States and non-interference in their internal affairs, and considered those decisions null and void.

Activities of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Joseph Voyame (Switzerland), appointed pursuant to the Commission's March resolution, reported(50) that he had, on 15 June, requested Romania to allow him to visit the country in implementation of his mandate. On 30 June, the Romanian authorities replied that they considered the Commission's resolution as well as any action to implement it null and void. The Rapporteur proceeded to collect information from available sources, including oral testimony from witnesses, and visited Hungary from 24 to 29 September. On 30 October, he transmitted to Romania a list of alleged human rights violations in that country as well as a list of requests for family reunification; updated versions were subsequently communicated to the Government on 11 December.

Later in December, however, revolutionary events in Romania brought about a new organization of power in that country, which was now headed by the Council of the National Salvation Front and a Government appointed by it, until elections in April 1990. On 23 December, the National Salvation Front announced the release of all political prisoners and the arrest of the President and his spouse, who were subsequently sentenced to death by a military court and executed on 25 December; on 29 December, the official name of the State was changed to "Romania"; and on 31 December, the Chairman of the Council of the National Salvation Front announced the abolition of the death penalty, introduction of a live-day work week and a programme to redistribute collectivized land to peasants. Measures were also adopted to repeal certain laws of the previous régime, to make arrangements for the distribution of food products and to set up emergency courts to try "terrorists".

Latin America and the Caribbean

Chile

Report of the Special Rapporteur (February). In a 17 February report⁽⁵¹⁾ to the Commission on the human rights situation in Chile, Special Rapporteur Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica) described his fourth visit to that country (October 1988), during which he observed the presidential plebiscite held on 5 October. The Special Rapporteur noted that he had been afforded full co-operation by the Government and given complete freedom of action.

At the same time, he received oral testimony from witnesses complaining of torture and ill-treatment during detention, arbitrary incommunicado detention, unlawful searches, illegal expropriation of property, irregularities in trial proceedings, threats and intimidation against the security of individuals, persecution of recent returnees from exile, detention for political reasons, convictions for illegal entry into Chile despite the lifting of any administrative ban on entry, lack of judicial independence, and the absence of co-operation between law enforcement agencies and the judiciary. The Special Rapporteur also received written information alleging violations of the rights to life, physical and moral integrity, liberty, security, freedom of expression and information and freedom of movement.

A number of complaints were brought up by defence lawyers against military prosecutors, dealing with the misuse of legal definitions, use of extrajudicial confessions for conviction, unlawful coercion to obtain confessions, improper use of measures to make detention more difficult, unjustified extension of investigatory powers of the magistrate, extension of pre-trial detention and impediments to trial proceedings and to the right to a defence. During his meetings with government officials, the Rapporteur also expressed his concern at apparent cases of bogus confrontations, which seemed actually to have been arbitrary executions, and at the difficulty created by the existence of legal incommunicado detention up to 10 days under the Anti-Terrorism Act. He was informed that an amendment to the Code of Penal Procedure to that effect was pending.

The Special Rapporteur drew attention to a number of unresolved cases of gross human rights violations, terrorist activities and grave deficiencies of the military justice system, which, in his view, constituted a serious obstacle to the enjoyment of human rights in Chile. Despite those negative developments, he nevertheless acknowledged that important progress had been made with regard to respect for human rights, and noted that the success of the 1988 plebiscite and the scheduling of presidential and parliamentary elections for the end of 1989 gave grounds for hope for further improvements. In that regard, he recommended that the National Congress Organization Act, governing the establishment of democratic institutions, be concluded without delay, and that maximum attention be devoted to outstanding cases of human rights violations, and assistance be provided by police authorities to judicial investigators. He said that efforts should be intensified to ensure respect for human dignity of detainees; eliminate torture, unlawful coercion and other ill-treatment; amend provisions for incommunicado detention and/or repeal the Anti-Terrorism Act; establish a judicial police force; and review the legislation concerning indigenous populations, particularly the division of land, to avert expulsions and observe proper respect for their culture.

Other recommendations dealt with the investigation of specific cases such as missing detainees and judicial proceedings brought against 29 journalists, as well as with the need for a drastic change in the conduct of those responsible for military justice. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the Government and people of Chile should make every effort to ensure the establishment of democratic institutions in their country, scheduled for March 1990.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission took note⁽⁵²⁾ of the Chilean Government's decision to respect the results of the 1988 referendum and of its partial response to the demands of various political and social elements in the country, and urged it to work for the re-establishment of a representative and pluralistic democracy based on the expression of popular sovereignty and on the full enjoyment of human rights. At the same time, the Commission expressed dismay at continued acts of extreme violence in Chile and concern at the persistence of serious human rights violations, and urged the Government to put an end to those situations and to continue adopting measures for the restoration of the rule of law, as well as to authorize publication of the 1966 International Covenants on Civil and Political Rights⁽³⁵⁾ and on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.⁽⁵³⁾ The Government was particularly urged to promote reforms of the institutional framework so as to bring it into line with relevant international standards, to allow investigation of all complaints of human rights violations with a view to the trial and punishment of those responsible, to ensure the independence of the judiciary and the effectiveness of legal remedies, and to restore the full range of economic, social and cultural rights.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one more year and to request him to report to the Assembly in 1989 and to the Commission in 1990, and recommended that the Economic and Social Council ensure provision of the necessary resources and staff.

On 24 May, the Council, by decision 1989/147, approved extension of the Special Rapporteur's mandate and the Commission's recommendation regarding appropriate financial and staff arrangements.

Note of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 Sub-Commission request,⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a 24 July note⁽⁵⁵⁾ on the results of the Special Rapporteur's investigations as well as on General Assembly and Commission deliberations and resolutions. He noted in particular that the Government of Chile had informed him of its decision no longer to co-operate with ad hoc procedures for consideration of the human rights situation in that country, stating that its previous co-operation with the Rapporteur was not fully appreciated by UN human rights bodies, which continued to treat Chile in a discriminatory, selective and unfair manner, in contrast with the actual situation in the country. At the same time, the Government affirmed that it would continue to take part in universal and regular UN procedures to ensure fuller protection of human rights.

Report of the Special Rapporteur (October). On 17 October, the Secretary-General transmitted⁽⁵⁶⁾ to the General Assembly a report prepared by the Special Rapporteur in accordance with the Commission's March request.

The Special Rapporteur noted Chile's decision not to co-operate with the Commission's ad hoc monitoring procedures and stated that he had received no reply from the Chilean Government to his September request to visit the country. He summarized replies by the Government to previous complaints of human rights violations, communicated to him during his fourth visit, as well as a March 1989 government report on terrorist acts that had occurred in the country since October 1988. The Special Rapporteur also provided information on complaints of new human rights violations, alleged to have occurred between October 1988 and June 1989, concerning the rights to life, physical and moral integrity, liberty, security, and a fair trial and procedural guarantees. Another complaint involved allegations of ill-treatment, torture, unlawful detention and sexual abuse of minors, which had prompted government investigation.

The Rapporteur stated that the human rights situation in Chile had improved in the past six months, as manifested by constitutional reforms approved by Chileans on 30 July 1989 and aimed at ending the special powers of the President, ensuring respect for political pluralism and strengthening the rule of law and a representative political system. The movement towards representative democracy was to culminate in general elections in December 1989 and inauguration of the National Congress in March 1990. However, the democratic process could be jeopardized by certain situations which continued to have an adverse effect on the protection of basic freedoms in Chile, such as the persistence of torture, violations of the rights to life and to physical and moral integrity, irregularities concerning fair trial and procedural guarantees, and broad powers of military justice. Among other causes for concern were the lack of progress in the investigation of both new and long-standing cases of human rights violations, including disappearance; continuing judicial banishments of two trade union leaders; inadequate conditions of imprisonment and trial proceedings of those detained for offences against the security of State; the unsatisfactory situation of the indigenous population; and continuing terrorist acts. Government replies to previous complaints of human rights violations did not cover all the cases reported and were in some cases incomplete.

The Special Rapporteur reiterated the recommendations contained in his February report, emphasizing that the practice of torture must end immediately; investigations of past and recent violations, including forced disappearances, should be completed; and judicial banishments of trade union leaders should be repealed. He also recommended that the Government take measures to strengthen the civil justice system, give attention to activities of groups apparently close to the Government which threatened or violated freedoms, and make the situation of indigenous peoples consistent with the enjoyment of human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/166 by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights in Chile

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and bearing in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and determined to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Reiterating that the Government of Chile has the obligation to respect and protect human rights in accordance with the international instruments to which Chile is a party,

Bearing in mind that the concern of the international community about the situation of human rights in Chile has been expressed by the General Assembly in a number of resolutions, particularly resolution 33/73 of 20 December 1978, on disappeared persons, and resolution 43/158 of 8 December 1988,

Bearing in mind the pertinent resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, particularly resolution 1989/62 of 8 March 1989, in which the Commission decided, inter alia, to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year, to consider the question as a matter of high priority in view of the persistence of serious violations of human rights in Chile and to determine how the item was to be dealt with on the agenda of its forty-sixth session in the light of developments in the situation,

Regretting the decision of the Government of Chile to discontinue its co-operation with the Special Rapporteur,

Regretting also that the process of restoration of civil and political rights in Chile does not yet include the amendment of numerous laws that constitute an institutional and legal framework that makes violations of human rights possible,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur submitted in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/62;

2. Congratulates the Chilean people on their peaceful progress towards the re-establishment of a representative and pluralist democracy based on respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and for reaffirming their will to achieve peace and national reconciliation through the restoration of justice;

3. Expresses its satisfaction at the progress of the Chilean electoral process which it considers an important step towards the rapid return of democracy in that country;

4. Welcomes, as a positive development, the decision by the Government of Chile to heed the demands of democratic sectors of the country and of the international community with regard to reforming certain aspects of the institutional and legal framework harmful to civil and political rights;

5. Takes note with satisfaction of the decision by the Government of Chile to incorporate the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights into domestic law;

6. Welcomes the improvement of the situation of human rights in Chile noted by the Special Rapporteur during the six months covered by his report;

7. Regrets, nevertheless, the decision of the Government of Chile to discontinue its co-operation with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate, and urges it to resume such co-operation in compliance with the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights;

8. Urges the Government of Chile to continue to make progress regarding respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all the Chilean people, including the indigenous peoples, especially by adapting the legal system to the relevant principles and provisions and refraining from making any more changes in national institutions without duly consulting the people, and to be guided by those principles and provisions in the exercise of its powers in the same way as the judiciary;

9. Also urges the Government of Chile for that purpose to ensure the independence of the judiciary and the effectiveness of judicial remedies, by respecting procedural guarantees, equality before the law and the right to defence in all cases;

10. Expresses its concern at acts of violence of any origin that continue to occur in Chile, thereby aggravating the climate of insecurity and rendering the return to democracy more difficult;

11. Again expresses its serious concern at the persistence of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile involving, inter alia, cases of death, torture and ill-treatment, and at the Colonia Dignidad case, as described by the Special Rapporteur in his report;

12. Urges the Government of Chile to investigate all cases of serious violations of human rights that occurred in the past, bearing in mind the reports of special rapporteurs;

13. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to evaluate at its forty-sixth session the situation of human rights in Chile, bearing in mind the reports presented by special rapporteurs, to consider the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and also how the item is to be dealt with on the agenda in the light of developments in the situation, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

El Salvador

Report of the Special Representative (February). In a 2 February report(57) to the Commission on the human rights situation in El Salvador, covering mainly the events of 1988, Special Representative José Antonio Pastor Ridruejo (Spain) noted that the situation of economic, social and cultural rights continued to deteriorate as a result of the continuing armed conflict between the government troops and guerrilla forces of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN), the absence of conditions safeguarding private investment, FMLN attacks on the economic infrastructure, alleged corruption in the administration of public funds, the world economic crisis and the prolonged drought. He drew particular attention to the difficult living conditions of some communities in resettled areas, which he had been able to observe during his October 1988 visit to the country. The Special Representative also noted complaints alleging violations of labour rights, including arrests, and ill-treatment, including summary execution and disappearance of trade union leaders, attacks on their offices and threats against them. He emphasized that FMLN's systematic attacks on the infrastructure also seriously undermined the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, and provided a list of damage caused by recent violent acts.

As for civil and political rights, an alarming number of politically motivated summary executions, including mass executions, had been carried out by members of the State apparatus, particularly the armed forces, reversing the recent downward trend in such crimes. Many summary executions and other serious human rights violations were attributed to the so-called "death squads", allegedly linked to the army or security forces, while the guerrilla organizations persisted in the practice of ajusticiamientos of alleged collaborators with the armed forces, which was equivalent to summary execution, and revived the practice of indiscriminate urban terrorism. Cases of politically motivated disappearances also had been reported, as well as guerrilla abductions of individuals, including young people and very young children. The Special Representative continued to report ill-treatment of political detainees during interrogation, although he did not believe that practice to be widespread and to represent a government policy. At the same time, activities of the criminal justice system to investigate serious human rights violations and punish those responsible remained highly unsatisfactory, which, combined with the promulgation and application of the Amnesty Act of October 1987, reinforced a climate of impunity.

The Special Representative provided information on civilian victims of indiscriminate attacks by both the army and guerrillas, stating that the guerrilla organizations continued to cause more deaths and injuries than the army as a result of contact mines. He also reported problems with evacuation from the country of wounded guerrilla fighters in need of humanitarian treatment. Acknowledging efforts to strengthen respect for human rights in El Salvador, including activities of the Salvadorian Human Rights Commission, the Special Representative expressed his belief that the Government continued to be committed to a policy of human rights observance, although its ability to exert efficient control over all State agencies was more limited than in previous years.

He appealed to El Salvador's political powers, agencies and forces to end completely attempts on the life and physical integrity of individuals, and recommended that the Government and FMLN create conditions for an open dialogue conducive to an early peaceful settlement of the conflict. The Special Representative reiterated his previous recommendations to the country's constitutional authorities, particularly adoption of measures to ensure efficient control of all State agencies, dismissal from service of those responsible for human rights violations, investigation of such violations as early as possible and punishment of offenders, urgent attention to health and food needs of peasant populations resettled in combat zones, and the use of the advisory services offered by the UN Centre for Human Rights (see above, under "Advancement of human rights"). He further recommended that FMLN and guerrilla organizations refrain from summary executions and indiscriminate urban terrorist acts, planting of contact mines in a manner incompatible with international humanitarian law, attacks on the country's economic infrastructure and prohibition of road traffic.

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission emphasized(58) the significance of the Special Representative's observation that the Government of El Salvador remained committed to a policy of respect for human rights, and expressed its confidence that the fulfilment of commitments under the agreement on procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America (see PART TWO, Chapter II) would lead to an improvement in the human rights situation in that country. However, the Commission expressed its deep concern at the increased number of politically motivated human rights violations in El Salvador, at continuing frequent breaches of international humanitarian law and at the unsatisfactory capacity of the judicial system to determine those responsible for human rights violations, and urged the authorities to implement reforms and measures for ensuring the efficiency of the system. It requested parties to the conflict in El Salvador to end attempts on the life and physical integrity of individuals as well as attacks on the economic infrastructure and other action constituting human rights violations; to continue applying agreements for the evacuation of those wounded or maimed in combat for medical attention; and to co-operate with humanitarian organizations concerned with alleviating the suffering of civilians.

The Commission also encouraged the parties to make all possible efforts to arrive at an early peaceful solution to the conflict, and reiterated its appeal to all States to refrain from intervening in the internal situation in El Salvador and to encourage dialogue until a just and lasting peace was achieved. Noting with satisfaction mass returns of refugees to resettle in rural areas, it urged the Salvadorian authorities to ensure assistance to returnees in meeting their basic health and food needs. The Commission repeated its request to the UN bodies and organizations to provide necessary advice and technical assistance to El Salvador in the human rights and legal fields upon its request, and decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for another year and requested him to report to the Assembly in 1989 and to the Commission in 1990.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/150, approved extension of the Special Representative's mandate.

Note of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 Sub-Commission request,(59) the Secretary-General submitted on 15 June 1989 a note(60) on the results of the Special Representative's investigations as well as on General Assembly and Commission deliberations and resolutions.

Sub-Commission action. In a resolution(61) adopted by secret ballot on 31 August by 12 votes to 7, with 5 abstentions, the Sub-Commission expressed its deep concern at the continuing increase in the number of human rights violations in El Salvador and at the persistent failure to observe the fundamental norms of humanitarian law which hold that persons not participating directly in combat preserve their civilian character and must not be subjected to military attacks or prevented from receiving medical, food and material assistance.

It reminded the Government of its obligation to respect and give protection to the war-wounded and disabled, not to obstruct their evacuation by ICRC and not to punish health personnel for their medical activities. The Government was strongly urged to take measures to bring to trial those responsible for the murder of the Archbishop of San Salvador and to ensure the independence and effectiveness of the judicial system, compatibility of the Penal Code with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights(42) and respect for human rights by all military, paramilitary and police forces.

The Sub-Commission expressed the hope that parties to the conflict in El Salvador could develop a negotiation process to achieve a comprehensive political settlement and guarantee the full exercise of economic, political and social rights in the country. It repeated its request to the Special Rapporteur on human rights and disability to undertake all possible measures for the prompt and regular evacuation of the war-wounded and disabled and to report in 1990.

Report of the Special Representative (October). On 26 October, the Secretary-General transmitted(62) to the Assembly a report on the human rights situation in El Salvador, prepared by the Special Representative in accordance with the Commission's request.

The Special Representative visited El Salvador from 8 to 15 October, and reported that the armed conflict between government and guerrilla forces continued but did not prevent presidential elections from taking place on 19 March. Despite attempts by FMLN to disrupt the process, Alfredo Cristiani was elected and was inaugurated President of the Republic on 1 June. His subsequent efforts to resume dialogue with the country's various political parties culminated in talks held in September and October. At the same time, the economic situation continued to be adversely affected by the persistent climate of violence, including FMLN's systematic attacks on the infrastructure and the increasing government action against trade unions as well as peasant and other organizations, some of which the Government claimed answered to FMLN.

The Special Representative also received information regarding many cases of summary execution as well as arrests, abductions and disappearances attributed to both government forces and guerrilla organizations. There had been an increase in the number of political arrests during the first nine months of 1989, while the number of politically motivated summary executions carried out by the State apparatus was comparable to 1988. There were no reports of mass executions, however, and investigations and judicial proceedings had been instituted in some cases of summary executions.

The number of people detained for political offences had risen to 250 by 14 October 1989, much higher than the 45 political prisoners reported in October 1988, and the Representative believed that there were also more cases of torture during interrogation than in the previous year. As for the criminal justice system, the Special Representative noted that the Criminal Investigation Commission had closed investigation of 49 out of the 87 cases assigned to it between 1985 and 1989, that proceedings had been brought against some members of the armed forces accused of summary executions and that in September an army officer was sentenced for the crime of homicide. However, there had been no convictions or significant progress in the investigations of some other cases of human rights violations. The Representative concluded that the functioning of the criminal justice system remained highly unsatisfactory. He noted, however, new proposals for judicial reform by the Government and measures to improve the administration of justice, including the establishment of a National Council of the Judiciary and new criminal courts and a draft bill amending the Criminal Code.

He provided information regarding attacks by the armed forces on civilian communities and the number of civilian deaths as a result of military actions by the army and by guerrillas as well as explosion of contact mines. The Special Representative noted that civilian casualties caused by the army were not widespread and fewer than from summary executions, but stated that the army had killed medical and health personnel and patients when dismantling FMLN health facilities. No casualties from contact mines had been reported since July.

Among other important developments were a truce between parties to the conflict, agreed to on 5 March to facilitate child immunization in El Salvador; a unilateral cease-fire declared by FMLN in September; elaboration of plans for the repatriation of Salvadorian refugees in Honduras; and a special amnesty adopted on 6 October to enable the war-wounded and disabled to leave the country for medical treatment. In addition, 644 talks on human rights and international humanitarian law were reported to have been given to 32,200 members of the armed forces, which planned to establish an office for civilian affairs and human rights, and the Salvadorian Human Rights Commission continued its activities.

The Special Representative reiterated his appeal for a complete end to attempts on the life, physical integrity and dignity of individuals, and recommended that FMLN and guerrilla organizations refrain from indiscriminate urban operations and from planting contact mines, and that El Salvador's constitutional authorities ensure conformity of police interrogation of detainees to international human rights standards and to the country's 1983 Constitution and persevere with the judicial, agrarian and other structural reforms.

In November, FMLN launched a heavy general offensive throughout the country, purportedly to put pressure on the armed forces to stop opposing the negotiations; as a result, a state of emergency was declared in accordance with the Constitution, and a curfew was proclaimed. On 8 December, the Legislative Assembly extended the state of emergency for another month.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/165 without vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the humanitarian rules laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocol II thereto, of 1977,

Deeply alarmed that, despite the encouraging signs offered by the meetings held by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, the aggravation of the conflict and the resurgence of violence have seriously affected the civilian population,

Reaffirming that it is the duty of the Governments of all Member-States to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations that they have assumed under the relevant international instruments,

Recalling that, since 1980, it has been expressing its deep concern about the situation of human rights in El Salvador, as indicated in its resolution 43/145 of 8 December 1988,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 32(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, in which the Commission decided to appoint a special representative on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, and subsequent resolutions, and taking note of Commission resolution 1989/68 of 8 March 1989, in which it decided to extend the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and requested him to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session and to the Commission at its forty-sixth session,

Considering that an armed conflict of a non-international character continues in El Salvador, in which the parties involved are under an obligation to apply the minimum standards of protection of human rights and humanitarian treatment provided for in article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and in Additional Protocol II thereto, of 1977,

Deeply concerned that, as the Special Representative has indicated in his report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, the number of politically motivated serious violations of human rights continues to increase and, in particular, that there has been a resurgence of torture and an increase in arrests and that summary executions, disappearances, abductions, attacks on the economic infrastructure and violations of the humanitarian rules of war have remained at disturbing levels,

Concerned that many sources continue to attribute summary executions and other serious violations of human rights to the so-called "death squads",

Deeply disturbed by the collective assassination in cold blood, on 16 November 1989, of the Rector, five professors and two members of the service staff of the Central American University,

Expressing its concern that as a consequence of the current situation, acts of intimidation and harassment have been carried out against the church hierarchy, political and trade union leaders, members of humanitarian organizations belonging to various churches and the headquarters of political parties and trade unions, as well as against relatives of members of the armed forces and against civil servants and members of their families,

Considers that there has been no progress during 1989 in the judicial case of the assassination of Monsignor Romero, which took place in 1980, and that it is a matter of urgency that those responsible for many other recent violations of human rights, including the assassination of the Minister for the Presidency and the fatal collective attacks on a trade union federation, should be identified and punished,

Convinced that the strict fulfilment of the commitments assumed by the Government of El Salvador under the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting and the joint declarations of the Central American Presidents signed in Costa Rica, El Salvador and Honduras will contribute to the promotion, respect and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador,

Recognizing the importance of the fact that, in the agreements adopted at Tela, Honduras, the five Central American Presidents expressed their firm belief in the necessity of an immediate and effective end to hostilities in El Salvador and therefore strongly urged the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to carry out a constructive dialogue for the purpose of achieving a just and lasting peace and, equally strongly, urged the Government of El Salvador to arrange, with full guarantees and in the spirit of the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, the integration of members of the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional into peaceful and institutional life,

Considering it necessary and urgent to return to the agreements of 15 September and 18 October 1989 signed at Mexico City and at San José, respectively, by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional by which, inter alia, they undertook to maintain a process of ongoing dialogue not permitting unilateral withdrawal, in order that they might, in an effort to arrive at a negotiated understanding, manage to end the armed conflict by political means as soon as possible, promote the democratization of the country and reunify Salvadorian society and agreed on the need to create international verification mechanisms appropriate to the characteristics and realities of El Salvador to monitor the implementation of the agreements reached by them,

Considering that, under Additional Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions, the war-wounded and war-injured must be respected and protected, their evacuation by the International Committee of the Red Cross so that they may receive the medical care that they need must not be impeded and no one may be punished for carrying out medical activities compatible with medical ethics, regardless of the circumstances and the beneficiaries of such activities,

Taking note of the holding of the summit at San Isidro Coronado, Costa Rica, from 10 to 12 December 1989,

Aware that a negotiated political solution of the Salvadorian conflict can be cut short if external forces do not support the resumption of the dialogue but instead seek in different ways to spur the intensification or prolongation of the war, with ensuing grave effects on the situation of human rights and the possibilities of economic recovery in El Salvador,

1. Commends the Special Representative for his report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, endorses the recommendations contained therein and requests him to update the report in the light of the serious events taking place in that country;

2. Expresses its deepest dismay at the aggravation of the conflict, the resurgence of violence, the bombings and the indiscriminate use of high-powered heavy weapons in densely populated areas, resulting in numerous civilian casualties and substantial material damage;

3. Expresses its deep concern about the systematic attacks on the country's economic infrastructure, which seriously undermine the present and future enjoyment by the Salvadorian people of important economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Urgently appeals to the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to put an immediate end to the armed conflict and to work for a resumption of the currently suspended dialogue in order to reach agreements that would lead to the definitive cessation of all hostilities within an agreed time-frame;

5. Requests the parties to the conflict to guarantee respect for the international standards applicable to an armed conflict of a non-international character, in particular the protection of the civilian population and the war-wounded, to make possible the immediate evacuation of the war-wounded and war-injured, whether civilians or combatants, in order that they may receive the medical care that they need and, furthermore, to co-operate with humanitarian organizations working to alleviate the suffering of the civilian population in any part of the country in which such organizations are operating, and requests that medical and health personnel shall under no circumstances be penalized for carrying out their activities;

6. Supports fully the expressed readiness of the Secretary-General to help bring about, as the first stage of a political solution, an immediate agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict, and his decision taken last September to accept the invitation from the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional for him or his representatives to participate in their process of dialogue and negotiation, since all this forms part of the mission of good offices that he is performing to assist the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve the objectives set forth in the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting;

7. Expresses its firm support for the efforts of the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States to bring about a resumption of the political dialogue in El Salvador;

8. Urgently appeals to the parties to the conflict to respect and guarantee the security of the staff and official premises of international agencies;

9. Condemns the brutal assassination of the Rector and seven other members of the Central American University and hopes that the Government of El Salvador will fulfil its pledge to carry out an immediate investigation and to punish those responsible for such an abominable crime;

10. Expresses its deep concern about the persistence of and increase in politically motivated serious violations of human rights, such as summary executions, enforced disappearances, torture and abductions;

11. Also expresses its deep concern about the persistence of and increase in the alleged activities of the so-called "death squads", which are operating with impunity in El Salvador;

12. Renews its appeal to all States to refrain from intervening in the internal situation of El Salvador and, instead of seeking in different ways to spur the prolongation and intensification of the armed conflict, to stimulate dialogue until a firm and lasting peace is attained;

13. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that the capacity of the Salvadorian judicial system continues to be extremely unsatisfactory, despite the efforts made by the Government to determine the responsibility of the instigators of some violations of human rights, and consequently urges the competent authorities to accelerate the adoption of the measures necessary for ensuring the effectiveness of the system and its compatibility with the commitments made in the field of human rights;

14. Renews its appeal to the competent organs and organizations of the United Nations system that, on the basis of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/68 and General Assembly resolution 43/145, they provide the advice and assistance that the Government of El Salvador may request in order to enhance the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

15. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session to consider the situation of human rights in El Salvador and the mandate of its Special Representative, taking into account the evolution of the situation of human rights in that country and the developments linked to the fulfilment of all the agreements signed by the Central American Presidents within the framework of the regional peace process and the agreements concluded by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional at Mexico City and San José;

16. Urges, in accordance with the recommendations of the Special Representative, the Government of El Salvador and all the country's political powers, agencies and forces, including the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, to adopt immediate measures to put an end to attacks on the life, integrity and dignity of persons outside, during and as a result of combat situations;

17. Reiterates its call to the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to continue co-operating with the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights;

18. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-fifth session, the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador in order to re-examine this situation in the light of the information provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 44/165

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/848) by recorded vote (96-1-34), 29 November (meeting 61); 17-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.86/Rev.1), orally revised; revised in plenary by Mexico (A/44/L.61); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 48, 50-61; plenary 82.

Middle East

Lebanon

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, by a roll-call vote of 30 to 1, with 12 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned(63) Israel for its continued violations of human rights in southern Lebanon, manifested by forced occupation of parts of that territory, bombardment of civilian populations, their arrest and detention, destruction of their property and their expulsion from the occupied area, as well as other arbitrary practices. It called on Israel to end such practices immediately, to liberate the detained Lebanese, to return those who were expelled to their homes, to stop expelling Palestinians arbitrarily to southern Lebanon, and to implement Security Council resolutions requiring Israel's immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal from all Lebanese territory and respect for Lebanon's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity.

The Commission also called on Governments assisting Israel to exert pressure to end its aggressive and expansionist policy in southern Lebanon. The Secretary-General was requested to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of Israel and to invite it to provide information on its implementation, and to report to the General Assembly in 1989 and to the Commission in 1990 on the results of his efforts.

Sub-Commission action. In a resolution(64) adopted by secret ballot on 31 August by 18 votes to 2, with 3 abstentions, the Sub-Commission expressed grave concern at the escalating violence in Lebanon and extensive loss of life and called on all parties in that country to initiate confidence-building measures towards restoring peaceful democratic processes. Considering that restoration of confidence was possible only through restoration of Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity, it called for implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions. The Sub-Commission underlined that humanitarian aid should reach all the civilian population in Lebanon without discrimination, and that it must not be used selectively for political purposes. The Sub-Commission further recommended that the Commission consider in 1990 the human rights situation in Lebanon and the role of external Powers in aggravating that situation.

On 1 September, the Sub-Commission called(65) on all parties in Lebanon to release immediately and unconditionally all their detainees and hostages detained for political, religious, ethnic or other reasons inconsistent with human rights norms, and considered that a lasting solution to the tragedy of hostages in Lebanon should be sought primarily by helping that country to recover its sovereignty and legal authority and to re-establish the rule of law in its territory.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with the Commission's request (above), the Secretary-General reported(66) to the Assembly in October that he had asked Israel in April for information on the implementation of the Commission's resolution; as at 6 October, he had received no reply.

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1989, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Special Committee on Israeli practices), and other bodies (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

Reports of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in 1988,(67) the Secretary-General reported(68) to it on 24 January 1989 that he had brought the Commission's 1988 resolutions on human rights violations in the Israeli-occupied territories to the attention of Governments as well as General Assembly and Security Council members, the Special Committee on Israeli practices and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; they had also been transmitted to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the Council of Europe, the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of American States and the League of Arab States, and had been brought to the attention of the ICRC and 24 other NGOs. Information on human rights in the Israeli-occupied territories, including relevant UN resolutions, was disseminated through UN press releases, publications, media information kits, audio-visual services, UN radio and television programmes as well as arrangements with television networks, fact-finding missions for media representatives, journalists' encounters on the question of Palestine, and special activities held in observance of relevant international days and weeks. The UN Department of Public Information published a booklet on the rights of Palestinians in Arabic, English, French and Spanish and began revising its booklet on the work of the Special Committee on Israeli practices. It also established a project manager on the question of Palestine to co-ordinate public information activities.

Also in accordance with the 1988 Commission request,(67) the Secretary-General submitted(69) on 21 January a list of all UN reports issued since 11 March 1988 on the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories.

Human Rights Commission action. On 17 February, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 8, with 2 abstentions, the Commission affirmed(70) that occupation itself was a gross violation of human rights, that Israel's violations of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) constituted war crimes under international law, and that practices of the Israeli occupation authorities amounted to serious violations of the principles of international law, human rights and fundamental freedoms. It condemned Israel for the gross violation of international conventions and called on it to withdraw from the Palestinian territories occupied by force and to desist from practices such as the killing of Palestinians, breaking of bones, imposition of curfews and military siege, throwing of gas bombs into houses as well as mosques and hospitals, savage beatings and maltreatment of pregnant women, torture of Palestinian detainees, imposition of collective punishment on towns and villages, forced deportation and expulsion of Palestinians, raiding and demolition of their houses and confiscation of their property.

The Commission also condemned the expropriation of Palestinian land and the establishment of Israeli settlements, attacks against holy places and obstruction of the freedom of worship and religious practices, attacks on and closure of educational institutions and obstruction of education. It further condemned Israel for annexing Jerusalem and altering its architectural character and demographic and structural composition as well as the institutional status of the occupied Palestinian territories, and considered such measures and their consequences null and void. The Secretary-General was requested to give the resolution wide publicity and to provide the Commission with all UN reports on the situation in the occupied territories issued between Commission sessions.

Also on 17 February, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 9 abstentions, the Commission, reaffirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, including Jerusalem, strongly condemned(71) Israel for refusing to apply that Convention and for ill-treating and torturing Palestinian detainees and prisoners, urging it to grant prisoner-of-war status to all captured Palestinian fighters and to treat them accordingly. It also strongly condemned Israel for deporting Palestinians and called on it to desist from that policy and to comply with the UN resolutions demanding their return to their homeland. States parties to the fourth Geneva Convention were urged to make every effort to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem.

By another resolution,(72) adopted on the same day by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission strongly condemned Israel for persistently disregarding and defying UN resolutions regarding occupied Syrian Arab territory, and strongly deprecated its failure to end its occupation of and human rights violations in that territory. Demanding that Israel allow the Special Committee on Israeli practices access to the occupied Arab territories, the Commission declared once again that Israeli occupation of the Golan Heights and its 1981 decision(73) to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the territory were acts of aggression, declared that decision null and void and without international legal effect as a violation of international law and the UN Charter and called on Israel to rescind it. The Commission condemned Israel's persistence in changing the Golan Heights' physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status and emphasized that evacuated persons must be allowed to return and recover their property. It further emphasized the need for Israel's total and unconditional withdrawal from the occupied Syrian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem.

The Commission deplored the inhuman treatment, terror and other practices applied against Syrian citizens in the Golan Heights, including the imposition of Israeli citizenship and identity cards, which was a flagrant violation of international law and UN resolutions, and called on Israel to cease its acts of terrorism. It also condemned Israel for repressing educational institutions in the Golan Heights and imposing curricula promoting hatred, prejudice and religious intolerance, as well as for expropriating land in the occupied territory, establishing Israeli settlements, and depriving the Syrian Golan population of the right to export their agricultural products. The Commission called on all States to urge Israel to cease such practices and to facilitate the marketing of the Golan population's agricultural produce. It also reaffirmed its request to Member States not to recognize any jurisdiction, laws or measures established by Israel in the occupied territories, and called on the specialized agencies and other international organizations to comply in their relations with Israel with the provisions of the Commission's resolution. The Secretary-General was requested to provide the Special Committee on Israeli practices with the resources necessary to visit the occupied territories and investigate Israeli policies and practices, and to give wide publicity to the resolution. He was also asked to report in 1990 on progress in implementing the resolutions and to bring them to the attention of Governments, UN organs and agencies, intergovernmental and international humanitarian organizations and NGOs.

Sub-Commission action. In a resolution(74) adopted by secret ballot on 31 August by 15 votes to 5, with 2 abstentions, the Sub-Commission reaffirmed that Israeli occupation constituted a gross violation of human rights in the occupied territories and that acts perpetrated by Israel that caused the death of or physical harm to Palestinians, as well as the obstruction of delivery of food and medical supplies to their cities, villages and camps, imposition of curfews and attacks on their houses, mosques and hospitals were grave violations of international law. It also affirmed the right of Palestinians to resist the occupation by all means, including the uprising, and reaffirmed their inalienable rights to return to their homeland, to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent and sovereign State, as well as the need to enable them to enjoy full sovereignty over their land without foreign interference. It reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to the occupied territories and that Israel's violations of its provisions, including torture and ill-treating Palestinian detainees, imposition of collective punishment and administrative detention, expelling and deportation of Palestinians and destruction of their properties, were crimes of war. The Sub-Commission condemned Israel for such practices and called on it to desist from them, and also to withdraw from the occupied territories. It called for the dismantlement of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories and confirmed that measures taken by Israel to alter the territories' political, cultural, religious and other characteristics were illegal, null and void.

The Sub-Commission also condemned Israel's occupation of the Golan Heights, its inhuman and terrorist practices against Syrians in that territory for their refusal of Israeli identity cards, and its 1981 decision(73) to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, which the Sub-Commission considered null and void. It requested States and international organizations not to recognize Israeli laws or jurisdiction in respect of the Golan Heights, and supported the call to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East to achieve a settlement in accordance with the provisions of a 1967 Security Council resolution.(75) The Secretary-General was requested to provide the Sub-Commission in 1990 with an updated list of reports, studies, statistics and other documents and UN decisions and resolutions on the question of Palestine and other Arab territories.

Pursuant to a similar request made in 1988,(76) the Secretary-General presented such a list(77) on 19 May 1989.

Other alleged human rights violations

Burma (now Myanmar)

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission, concerned at allegations of human rights violations in Burma in 1988, encouraged(78) the Burmese authorities to take measures to assure fundamental freedoms, and, welcoming their undertaking to organize free and fair multiparty democratic elections, urged them to implement it as early as possible. The Burmese delegation was invited to continue providing the Commission with the necessary information on the subject.

China

Sub-Commission action. In a resolution(79) adopted by secret ballot on 31 August by 15 votes to 9, the Sub-Commission, concerned about recent events in China and their consequences in the field of human rights, requested the Secretary-General to transmit to the Commission information provided by the Chinese Government and other reliable sources, and made an appeal for clemency, in particular in favour of persons deprived of their liberty as a result of those events.

Further developments. On 1 December,(80) in its reply to the Secretary-General's note verbale of 30 October, China stated that a rebellion had occurred in Beijing in June which constituted an attempt to overthrow the legitimate Government through violent means, and that the Chinese Government had taken resolute measures to quell it. China considered the matter to be its internal affair and different in nature from the human rights question and declared its firm objection to the Sub-Commission's resolution, regarding it as an interference in its internal affairs and deeming it to be illegal, null and void.

Cuba

On 21 February, a six-member group, established in accordance with a 1988 Commission decision(76) and mandated to visit Cuba to observe the human rights situation, submitted a report(81) on its activities. The report noted that the group, headed by the Commission Chairman, held a total of five meetings and undertook a mission to Cuba from 16 to 25 September 1988. In the course of its work, the group gathered written and oral information from individuals, organizations and the Cuban Government on various aspects of the human rights situation in the country.

The report contained comments by Cuban officials on questions put by the group, as well as testimony received from other sources, concerning constitutional and legal aspects of human rights in Cuba; civil and political rights; and economic, social and cultural rights. The group sought, in particular, the Government's comments with regard to compatibility of the Cuban Constitution with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights(42) and implementation of relevant provisions, as well as replies to specific complaints relating to the administration of justice and judicial protection of rights and freedoms; limit on freedoms recognized by the Constitution; states of emergency; guarantees of the freedom of movement, opinion and expression, the press, religion, education and conscience, and association and assembly; guarantees of the rights of citizenship and of asylum and of the right to life, liberty, physical integrity, security, privacy and political participation; and labour matters and social security, health, housing, education and culture.

Human Rights Commission action. On 21 February, the Commission decided(82) to discuss the group's report under a sub-item of the agenda item on further promotion and encouragement of human rights and fundamental freedoms. On 9 March, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission took note(83) of the report; thanked the Government and people of Cuba for co-operating with the mission, and the Cuban authorities for reaffirming the desire to continue co-operation in the human rights sphere and to keep the Secretary-General informed; noted the Government's willingness to analyse the mission's observations and to take into account its assessments with regard to the exercise and enjoyment of human rights in Cuba; welcomed Cuba's willingness to maintain direct contact with the Secretary-General on issues and questions contained in the report; and emphasized the spirit of multilateral co-operation which characterized the fulfilment of the mission.

East Timor

In a resolution(84) adopted by secret ballot on 31 August by 12 votes to 9, with 3 abstentions, the Sub-Commission, considering repeated allegations of gross human rights violations in East Timor, requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to encourage co-operation of all parties concerned in achieving a durable solution, and took note of a communication addressed to the Secretary-General which called for a referendum in East Timor (see PART FOUR, Chapter I). The Sub-Commission appreciated the Indonesian Government's new policy of openness in East Timor but regretted that more arrests, torture and summary executions were alleged to have taken place since the end of 1988, and hoped that the Government would allow representatives of human rights organizations to visit the territory. It further recommended that the Commission consider the human rights situation in East Timor at its 1990 session.

Iraq

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, by a roll-call vote of 17 to 13, with 9 abstentions, the Commission decided⁽⁸⁵⁾ not to take action on a draft resolution by which it would have expressed concern at the human rights situation in Iraq, including the reported killing of Kurdish civilians by military attacks with the use of chemical weapons, and would have urged the Government of Iraq to ensure full respect for human rights. The Commission also would have requested its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur to study the human rights situation in that country.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, by secret ballot, the Sub-Commission decided⁽⁸⁶⁾ by 14 votes to 10, to take no action on a draft resolution by which it would have recommended that the Commission study at its 1990 session the evolution of the human rights situation in Iraq.

Mass exoduses

Human Rights Commission action. On 8 March, the Commission invited⁽⁸⁷⁾ Governments and international organizations to intensify their co-operation and assistance in efforts to address the causes of mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons and the problems resulting from them, and requested States to ensure implementation of the relevant international instruments to avert new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons. It encouraged the Secretary-General to continue discharging responsibilities pursuant to the 1986 report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees⁽⁸⁸⁾ and looked forward to his report to the General Assembly in 1989 on developments relating to the Group's recommendations. He was also urged to consolidate the system for early-warning activities in the humanitarian area by computerizing the UN Office for Research and the Collection of Information, serving as an inter-agency focal point for situation analysis and policy response, and by strengthening co-ordination within the UN system in that respect.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 General Assembly request⁽⁸⁹⁾ and the Commission's resolution (above), the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁹⁰⁾ on 17 October 1989 on human rights and mass exoduses. The report summarized activities of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information, which continued to monitor and provide early warning of situations that had the potential to cause mass exoduses. The Office also continued its efforts to establish a computerized early-warning system, including elaboration of criteria and co-ordination measures necessary for the operation of such a system and the development of early-warning indicators and data systems. Consultations on the subject were held with specialized agencies and NGOs, and a preliminary study was begun on co-ordination of early-warning activities with regard to potential refugee outflows.

The report also provided views and information on the question of mass exoduses and related developments received from four Governments, three UN bodies and specialized agencies, and one intergovernmental organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/164 without vote.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons.

Conscious of the fact that human rights violations are one of the multiple and complex factors causing mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, as indicated in the study of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on this subject and also in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Aware of the recommendations concerning mass exoduses made by the Commission on Human Rights to its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and to special rapporteurs to be taken into account when violations of human rights in any part of the world are studied,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own and upon the international community as a whole, by these sudden mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Stressing the need for international co-operation aimed at averting new massive flows of refugees while providing durable solutions to actual refugee situations,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/70 of 3 December 1986, in which it endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, Bearing in mind its resolution 43/154 of 8 December 1988 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/63 of 8 March 1989, as well as all previous relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Welcoming the steps taken so far by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons in all its aspects, including its root causes,

1. Reaffirms its support for the recommendation of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees that the principal organs of the United Nations should make fuller use of their respective competencies under the Charter of the United Nations for the prevention of new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

2. Again invites all Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations concerned to intensify their co-operation with and assistance to world-wide efforts to address the serious problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and also the causes of such exoduses;

3. Requests all Governments to ensure the effective implementation of the relevant international instruments, in particular in the field of human rights, as this would contribute to averting new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

4. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to keep the question of human rights and mass exoduses under review with a view to supporting the early-warning arrangement instituted by the Secretary-General to avert new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

5. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses, and invites him to inform the General Assembly in future reports of the modalities of early warning activities to avert new and massive flows of refugees;

6. Specially encourages the Secretary-General to continue to discharge the task described in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to develop the role of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information of the Secretariat as a focal point for the operation of an effective early-warning system and the strengthening of co-ordination of information-gathering and analysis among United Nations agencies with a view to preventing new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

8. Urges the Secretary-General to use available resources to consolidate and strengthen the system for undertaking early-warning activities in the humanitarian area by, inter alia, early computerization of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information and strengthened co-ordination among the relevant parts of the United Nations system, especially the Office for Research and the Collection of Information, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and the relevant specialized agencies;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the strengthened role that he is playing with regard to early-warning activities, especially in the humanitarian area, as well as on any further developments relating to the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees;

10. Decides to continue consideration of the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its forty-fifth session.

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/848) without vote, 29 November (meeting 60); 22-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.85); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 48, 50-60; plenary 82.

Genocide

On 2 March, the Commission strongly condemned(91) the crime of genocide and affirmed the necessity for international co-operation towards its elimination. It noted that many States had ratified or acceded to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide(19) and urged those that had not done so to become parties without delay.

Status of the 1948 Convention

As at 31 December 1989,(10) 102 States had ratified, acceded to or succeeded to the Convention. Three States—the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Yemen—became parties in 1989. On 8 August, the Secretary-General reported(92) to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 1 August 1989).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/158 without vote.

Status of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/142 of 13 December 1985, 41/147 of 4 December 1986, 42/133 of 7 December 1987 and 43/138 of 8 December 1988,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1986/18 of 10 March 1986, 1987/25 of 10 March 1987 and 1988/28 of 7 March 1988, and taking note of Commission resolution 1989/16 of 2 March 1989,

Recalling further its resolution 260 A (III) of 9 December 1948, by which it approved and proposed for signature, ratification or accession the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide annexed thereto,

Reaffirming once again its conviction that genocide is a crime that violates the norms of international law and runs counter to the spirit and aims of the United Nations,

Convinced that international co-operation is necessary in order to liberate mankind from such an odious crime,

Recognizing that crimes of genocide have caused great losses to mankind,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Once again strongly condemns the crime of genocide;
2. Reaffirms the necessity of international co-operation in order to liberate mankind from such an odious crime;
3. Notes with satisfaction that many States have ratified the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide or have acceded thereto;
4. Expresses its conviction that implementation of the provisions of the Convention by all States is necessary for the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide;
5. Urges those States that have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede thereto without further delay;
6. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the status of the Convention.

Other aspects of human rights violations

Protection of journalists

In a resolution(93) adopted by secret ballot on 31 August by 15 votes to 6, with 2 abstentions, the Sub-Commission called on journalists and other mass media personnel to carry out their mission to expose gross human rights violations and to inform public opinion with maximum neutrality, fairness and objectivity, and requested Governments to protect their human rights and support their efforts to reveal human rights violations. It also requested Waleed Sadi (Jordan) to prepare for Sub-Commission consideration in 1990 a report on the feasibility of a study on ways of extending additional protection and assistance to journalists and mass media personnel.

Compensation for human rights violations

On 31 August, the Sub-Commission recommended(94) that the Commission recommend to the Economic and Social Council a resolution authorizing the Sub-Commission to entrust one of its members, Theo van Boven (Netherlands), with undertaking a study on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross human rights violations, with a view to exploring the possibility of developing some basic principles and guidelines in that respect, and asking the Secretary-General to provide him with all necessary assistance. The Sub-Commission requested Theo van Boven to submit a preliminary report to it in 1990.

Other human rights questions

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

In a September 1989 report(1) on the status of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims,(2) the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that 13 States had ratified or acceded to the Protocols since his 1988 report on the subject,(3) and provided a list of all States that had ratified or acceded to the Protocols as at 20 September 1989.

As at 31 December, 91 States and the United Nations Council for Namibia had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts), including 14 States—Algeria, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Côte d'Ivoire, Gambia, Greece, Hungary, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Mali, Malta, Peru, Spain, USSR—that did so in 1989.

All except 12 of the parties also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts). Two States—France and the Philippines—adhered only to Protocol II.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, the Sub-Commission recommended(4) that the Commission on Human Rights adopt a resolution calling on Governments to give particular attention to educating members of the police and armed forces in the international law of human rights and humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts, including, inter alia, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the two 1977 Additional Protocols, and requesting them to submit information on the scope of such education.

Rights of the child

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The open-ended working group on a draft convention on the rights of the child met from 21 to 23 February 1989(5) and adopted the draft convention at the second reading.

On 8 March, the Commission on Human Rights decided(6) to adopt the draft convention(7) as submitted by the working group and to transmit it to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

By an 11 April note,(8) the Secretariat transmitted to the Council general comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee on 5 April concerning provisions of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights(9) relating to the rights of the child (see also above, under "Civil and political rights"). The Committee was of the view that, in so far as article 24 of the Covenant recognized the right of every child to receive the protection required by his or her status as a minor, its implementation entailed the adoption of special measures to protect children, in addition to those required for the protection of the rights of all persons. The Committee pointed out that some other provisions of the Covenant expressly indicated that minors should be afforded greater protection than adults.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/79 without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions on the question of a convention on the rights of the child, in particular resolution 43/112 of 8 December 1988, in which the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to submit a draft convention on the rights of the child, through the Council, to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session,

Expressing its appreciation to the Commission for having concluded the elaboration of a draft convention on the rights of the child,

Decides to submit the draft convention on the rights of the child and the report of the working group of the Commission on Human Rights to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, with a view to the adoption of the draft convention.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/79

24	May	1989	Meeting	16	Adopted	without	vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) without vote, 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); agenda item 9.

By a 16 October note,(10) the Secretary-General transmitted the text of the draft convention to the Assembly.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September, the Sub-Commission expressed(11) concern that the current formulation of article 21 of the draft convention, concerning adoption of children, was open to differing interpretations, and the belief that the article should be revised to preclude the use of adoption as a source of profit. It also expressed deep concern at the participation of children in military training and hostilities in some countries, and recognized that no effort should be spared to prevent the militarization of children, as stipulated in article 38. The Secretary-General was requested to bring the Sub-Commission's resolution to the attention of the General Assembly and to submit to the Sub-Commission in 1990 a report on the adoption of children for commercial purposes and on their recruitment into armed forces and their participation in hostilities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/25 without vote.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions, especially resolutions 33/166 of 20 December 1978 and 43/112 of 8 December 1988, and those of the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council related to the question of a convention on the rights of the child,

Taking note, in particular, of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/57 of 8 March 1989, by which the Commission decided to transmit the draft convention on the rights of the child, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/79 of 24 May 1989,

Reaffirming that children's rights require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as for their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of inadequate social conditions, natural disasters, armed conflicts, exploitation, illiteracy, hunger and disability, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and of that of the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Convinced that an international convention on the rights of the child, as a standard-setting accomplishment of the United Nations in the field of human rights, would make a positive contribution to protecting children's rights and ensuring their well-being,

Bearing in mind that 1989 marks the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child and the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Child,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Commission on Human Rights for having concluded the elaboration of the draft convention on the rights of the child;

2. Adopts and opens for signature, ratification and accession the Convention on the Rights of the Child contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority and expresses the hope that it will come into force at an early date;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all the facilities and assistance necessary for dissemination of information on the Convention;

5. Invites United Nations agencies and organizations, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on the Convention and to promoting its understanding;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

7. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-fifth session under an item entitled "Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child".

ANNEX

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Preamble

The States parties to the present Convention,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Bearing in mind that the peoples of the United Nations have, in the Charter, reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity and worth of the human person, and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Recognizing that the United Nations has, in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenants on Human Rights, proclaimed and agreed that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Recalling that, in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the United Nations has proclaimed that childhood is entitled to special care and assistance,

Convinced that the family, as the fundamental group of society and the natural environment for the growth and well-being of all its members and particularly children, should be afforded the necessary protection and assistance so that it can fully assume its responsibilities within the community,

Recognizing that the child, for the full and harmonious development of his or her personality, should grow up in a family environment, in an atmosphere of happiness, love and understanding,

Considering that the child should be fully prepared to live an individual life in society, and brought up in the spirit of the ideals proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, and in particular in the spirit of peace, dignity, tolerance, freedom, equality and solidarity,

Bearing in mind that the need to extend particular care to the child has been stated in the Geneva Declaration of the Rights of the Child of 1924 and in the Declaration of the Rights of the Child adopted by the General Assembly on 20 November 1959 and recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (in particular in articles 23 and 24), in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (in particular in article 10) and in the statutes and relevant instruments of specialized agencies and international organizations concerned with the welfare of children,

Bearing in mind that, as indicated in the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, "the child, by reason of his physical and mental immaturity, needs special safeguards and care, including appropriate legal protection, before as well as after birth",

Recalling the provisions of the Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption Nationally and Internationally; the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules); and the Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict,

Recognizing that, in all countries in the world, there are children living in exceptionally difficult conditions, and that such children need special consideration,

Taking due accounts of the importance of the traditions and cultural values of each people for the protection and harmonious development of the child,

Recognizing the importance of international co-operation for improving the living conditions of children in every country, in particular in the developing countries,

Have agreed as follows:

Part I

Article 1

For the purposes of the present Convention, a child means every human being below the age of eighteen years unless, under the law applicable to the child, majority is attained earlier.

Article 2

1. States Parties shall respect and ensure the rights set forth in the present Convention to each child within their jurisdiction without discrimination of any kind, irrespective of the child's or his or her parent's or legal guardian's race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, disability, birth or other status.

2. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that the child is protected against all forms of discrimination or punishment on the basis of the status, activities, expressed opinions, or beliefs of the child's parents, legal guardians, or family members.

Article 3

1. In all actions concerning children, whether undertaken by public or private social welfare institutions, courts of law, administrative authorities or legislative bodies, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration.

2. States Parties undertake to ensure the child such protection and care as is necessary for his or her well-being, taking into account the rights and duties of his or her parents, legal guardians, or other individuals legally responsible for him or her, and, to this end, shall take all appropriate legislative and administrative measures.

3. States Parties shall ensure that the institutions, services and facilities responsible for the care or protection of children shall conform with the standards established by competent authorities, particularly in the areas of safety, health, in the number and suitability of their staff, as well as competent supervision.

Article 4

States Parties shall undertake all appropriate legislative, administrative, and other measures for the implementation of the rights recognized in the present Convention. With regard to economic, social and cultural rights, States Parties shall undertake such measures to the maximum extent of their available resources and, where needed, within the framework of international co-operation.

Article 5

States Parties shall respect the responsibilities, rights and duties of parents or, where applicable, the members of the extended family or community as provided for by local custom, legal guardians or other persons legally responsible for the child, to provide, in a manner consistent with the evolving capacities of the child, appropriate direction and guidance in the exercise by the child of the rights recognized in the present Convention.

Article 6

1. States Parties recognize that every child has the inherent right to life.

2. States Parties shall ensure to the maximum extent possible the survival and development of the child.

Article 7

1. The child shall be registered immediately after birth and shall have the right from birth to a name, the right to acquire a nationality and, as far as possible, the right to know and be cared for by his or her parents.

2. States Parties shall ensure the implementation of these rights in accordance with their national law and their obligations under the relevant international instruments in this field, in particular where the child would otherwise be stateless.

Article 8

1. States Parties undertake to respect the right of the child to preserve his or her identity, including nationality, name and family relations as recognized by law without unlawful interference.

2. Where a child is illegally deprived of some or all of the elements of his or her identity, States Parties shall provide appropriate assistance and protection, with a view to speedily re-establishing his or her identity.

Article 9

1. States Parties shall ensure that a child shall not be separated from his or her parents against their will, except when competent authorities subject to judicial review determine, in accordance with applicable law and procedures, that such separation is necessary for the best interests of the child. Such determination may be necessary in a particular case such as one involving abuse or neglect of the child by the parents, or one where the parents are living separately and a decision must be made as to the child's place of residence.

2. In any proceedings pursuant to paragraph 1 of the present article, all interested parties shall be given an opportunity to participate in the proceedings and make their views known.

3. States Parties shall respect the right of the child who is separated from one or both parents to maintain personal relations and direct contact with both parents on a regular basis, except if it is contrary to the child's best interests.

4. Where such separation results from any action initiated by a State Party, such as the detention, imprisonment, exile, deportation or death (including death arising from any cause while the person is in the custody of the State) of one or both parents or of the child, that State Party shall, upon request, provide the parents, the child or, if appropriate, another member of the family with the essential information concerning the whereabouts of the absent member(s) of the family unless the provision of the information would be detrimental to the well-being of the child. States Parties shall further ensure that the submission of such a request shall of itself entail no adverse consequences for the person(s) concerned.

Article 10

1. In accordance with the obligation of States Parties under article 9, paragraph 1, applications by a child or his or her parents to enter or leave a State Party for the purpose of family reunification shall be dealt with by States Parties in a positive, humane and expeditious manner. States Parties shall further ensure that the submission of such a request shall entail no adverse consequences for the applicants and for the members of their family.

2. A child whose parents reside in different States shall have the right to maintain on a regular basis, save in exceptional circumstances, personal relations and direct contacts with both parents. Towards that end and in accordance with the obligation of States Parties under article 9, paragraph 1, States Parties shall respect the right of the child and his or her parents to leave any country, including their own, and to enter their own country. The right to leave any country shall be subject only to such restrictions as are prescribed by law and which are necessary to protect the national security, public order (order public), public health or morals or the rights and freedoms of others and are consistent with the other rights recognized in the present Convention.

Article 11

1. States Parties shall take measures to combat the illicit transfer and non-return of children abroad.

2. To this end, States Parties shall promote the conclusion of bilateral or multilateral agreements or accession to existing agreements.

Article 12

1. States Parties shall assure to the child who is capable of forming his or her own views the right to express those views freely in all matters affecting the child, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child.

2. For this purpose, the child shall in particular be provided the opportunity to be heard in any judicial and administrative proceedings affecting the child, either directly, or through a representative or an appropriate body, in a manner consistent with the procedural rules of national law.

Article 13

1. The child shall have the right to freedom of expression; this right shall include freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art, or through any other media of the child's choice.

2. The exercise of this right may be subject to certain restrictions, but these shall only be such as are provided by law and are necessary:

(a) For respect of the rights or reputations of others; or

(b) For the protection of national security or of public order (ordre public), or of public health or morals.

Article 14

1. States Parties shall respect the right of the child to freedom of thought, conscience and religion.

2. States Parties shall respect the rights and duties of the parents and, when applicable, legal guardians, to provide direction to the child in the exercise of his or her right in a manner consistent with the evolving capacities of the child.

3. Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals, or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.

Article 15

1. States Parties recognize the rights of the child to freedom of association and to freedom of peaceful assembly.

2. No restrictions may be placed on the exercise of these rights other than those imposed in conformity with the law and which are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, public order (ordre public), the protection of public health or morals or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

Article 16

1. No child shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on or her honour and reputation.

2. The child has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

Article 17

States Parties recognize the important function performed by the mass media and shall ensure that the child has access to information and material from a diversity of national and international sources, especially those aimed at the promotion of his or her social, spiritual and moral well-being and physical and mental health. To this end, States Parties shall:

(a) Encourage the mass media to disseminate information and material of social and cultural benefit to the child and in accordance with the spirit of article 29;

(b) Encourage international co-operation in the production, exchange and dissemination of such information and material from a diversity of cultural, national and international sources;

(c) Encourage the production and dissemination of children's books;

(d) Encourage the mass media to have particular regard to the linguistic needs of the child who belongs to a minority group or who is indigenous;

(e) Encourage the development of appropriate guidelines for the protection of the child from information and material injurious to his or her well-being, bearing in mind the provisions of articles 13 and 18.

Article 18

1. States Parties shall use their best efforts to ensure recognition of the principle that both parents have common responsibilities for the upbringing and development of the child. Parents or, as the case may be, legal guardians have the primary responsibility for the upbringing and development of the child. The best interests of the child will be their basic concern.

2. For the purpose of guaranteeing and promoting the rights set forth in the present Convention, States Parties shall render appropriate assistance to parents and legal guardians in the performance of their child-rearing responsibilities and shall ensure the development of institutions, facilities and services for the care of children.

3. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that children of working parents have the right to benefit from child-care services and facilities for which they are eligible.

Article 19

1. States Parties shall take all appropriate legislative, administrative, social and educational measures to protect the child from all forms of physical or mental violence, injury or abuse, neglect or negligent treatment, maltreatment or exploitation, including sexual abuse, while in the care of parent(s), legal guardian(s) or any other person who has the care of the child.

2. Such protective measures should, as appropriate, include effective procedures for the establishment of social programmes to provide necessary support for the child and for those who have the care of the child, as well as for other forms of prevention and for identification, reporting, referral, investigation, treatment and follow-up of instances of child maltreatment described heretofore, and, as appropriate, for judicial involvement.

Article 20

1. A child temporarily or permanently deprived of his or her family environment, or in whose own best interests cannot be allowed to remain in that environment, shall be entitled to special protection and assistance provided by the State.

2. States Parties shall in accordance with their national laws ensure alternative care for such a child.

3. Such care could include, inter alia, foster placement, kafalah of Islamic law, adoption or, if necessary, placement in suitable institutions for the care of children. When considering solutions, due regard shall be paid to the desirability of continuity in a child's upbringing and to the child's ethnic, religious, cultural and linguistic background.

Article 21

States Parties that recognize and/or permit the system of adoption shall ensure that the best interests of the child shall be the paramount consideration and they shall:

(a) Ensure that the adoption of a child is authorized only by competent authorities who determine, in accordance with applicable law and procedures and on the basis of all pertinent and reliable information, that the adoption is permissible in view of the child's status concerning parents, relatives and legal guardians and that, if required, the persons concerned have given their informed consent to the adoption on the basis of such counselling as may be necessary;

(b) Recognize that inter-country adoption may be considered as an alternative means of the child's care, if the child cannot be placed in a foster or an adoptive family or cannot in any suitable manner be cared for in the child's country of origin;

(c) Ensure that the child concerned by inter-country adoption enjoys safeguards and standards equivalent to those existing in the case of national adoption;

(d) Take all appropriate measures to ensure that, in inter-country adoption, the placement does not result in improper financial gain for those involved in it;

(e) Promote, where appropriate, the objectives of the present article by concluding bilateral or multilateral arrangements or agreements, and endeavour, within this framework, to ensure that the placement of the child in another country is carried out by competent authorities or organs.

Article 22

1. States Parties shall take appropriate measures to ensure that a child who is seeking refugee status or who is considered a refugee in accordance with applicable international or domestic law and procedures shall, whether unaccompanied or accompanied by his or her parents or by any other person, receive appropriate protection and humanitarian assistance in the enjoyment of applicable rights set forth in the present Convention and in other international human rights or humanitarian instruments to which the said States are Parties.

2. For this purpose, States Parties shall provide, as they consider appropriate, co-operation in any efforts by the United Nations and other competent intergovernmental organizations or non-governmental organizations co-operating with the United Nations to protect and assist such a child and to trace the parents or other members of the family of any refugee child in order to obtain information necessary for reunification with his or her family. In cases where no parents or other members of the family can be found, the child shall be accorded the same protection as any other child permanently or temporarily deprived of his or her family environment for any reason, as set forth in the present Convention.

Article 23

1. States Parties recognize that a mentally or physically disabled child should enjoy a full and decent life, in conditions which ensure dignity, promote self-reliance and facilitate the child's active participation in the community.

2. States Parties recognize the right of the disabled child to special care and shall encourage and ensure the extension, subject to available resources, to the eligible child and those responsible for his or her care, of assistance for which application is made and which is appropriate to the child's condition and to the circumstances of the parents or others caring for the child.

3. Recognizing the special needs of a disabled child, assistance extended in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article shall be provided free of charge, whenever possible, taking into account the financial resources of the parents or others caring for the child, and shall be designed to ensure that the disabled child has effective access to and receives education, training, health care services, rehabilitation services, preparation for employment and recreation opportunities in a manner conducive to the child's achieving the fullest possible social integration and individual development, including his or her cultural and spiritual development.

4. States Parties shall promote, in the spirit of international co-operation, the exchange of appropriate information in the field of preventive health care and of medical, psychological and functional treatment of disabled children, including dissemination of and access to information concerning methods of rehabilitation, education and vocational services, with the aim of enabling States Parties to improve their capabilities and skills and to widen their experience in these areas. In this regard, particular account shall be taken of the needs of developing countries.

Article 24

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health and to facilities for the treatment of illness and rehabilitation of health. States Parties shall strive to ensure that no child is deprived of his or her right of access to such health care services.

2. States Parties shall pursue full implementation of this right and, in particular, shall take appropriate measures:

(a) To diminish infant and child mortality;

(b) To ensure the provision of necessary medical assistance and health care to all children with emphasis on the development of primary health care;

(c) To combat disease and malnutrition, including within the framework of primary health care, through, inter alia, the application of readily available technology and through the provision of adequate nutritious foods and clean drinking-water, taking into consideration the dangers and risks of environmental pollution;

(d) To ensure appropriate pre-natal and post-natal health care for mothers;

(e) To ensure that all segments of society, in particular parents and children, are informed, have access to education and are supported in the use of basic knowledge of child health and nutrition, the advantages of breast-feeding, hygiene and environmental sanitation and the prevention of accidents;

(f) To develop preventive health care, guidance for parents and family planning education and services.

3. States Parties shall take all effective and appropriate measures with a view to abolishing traditional practices prejudicial to the health of children.

4. States Parties undertake to promote and encourage international co-operation with a view to achieving progressively the full realization of the right recognized in the present article. In this regard, particular account shall be taken of the needs of developing countries.

Article 25

States Parties recognize the right of a child who has been placed by the competent authorities for the purposes of care, protection or treatment of his or her physical or mental health to a periodic review of the treatment provided to the child and all other circumstances relevant to his or her placement.

Article 26

1. States Parties shall recognize for every child the right to benefit from social security, including social insurance, and shall take the necessary measures to achieve the full realization of this right in accordance with their national law.

2. The benefits should, where appropriate, be granted, taking into account the resources and the circumstances of the child and persons having responsibility for the maintenance of the child, as well as any other consideration relevant to an application for benefits made by or on behalf of the child.

Article 27

1. States Parties recognize the right of every child to a standard of living adequate for the child's physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development.

2. The parent(s) or others responsible for the child have the primary responsibility to secure, within their abilities and financial capacities, the conditions of living necessary for the child's development.

3. States Parties, in accordance with national conditions and within their means, shall take appropriate measures to assist parents and others responsible for the child to implement this right and shall in case of need provide material assistance and support programmes, particularly with regard to nutrition, clothing and housing.

4. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to secure the recovery of maintenance for the child from the parents or other persons having financial responsibility for the child, both within the State Party and from abroad. In particular, where the person having financial responsibility for the child lives in a State different from that of the child, States Parties shall promote the accession to international agreements or the conclusion of such agreements, as well as the making of other appropriate arrangements.

Article 28

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to education, and with a view to achieving this right progressively and on the basis of equal opportunity, they shall, in particular:

(a) Make primary education compulsory and available free to all.

(b) Encourage the development of different forms of secondary education, including general and vocational education, make them available and accessible to every child, and take appropriate measures such as the introduction of free education and offering financial assistance in case of need;

(c) Make higher education accessible to all on the basis of capacity by every appropriate means;

(d) Make educational and vocational information and guidance available and accessible to all children;

(e) Take measures to encourage regular attendance at schools and the reduction of drop-out rates.

2. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that school discipline is administered in a manner consistent with the child's human dignity and in conformity with the present Convention.

3. States Parties shall promote and encourage international co-operation in matters relating to education, in particular with a view to contributing to the elimination of ignorance and illiteracy throughout the world and facilitating access to scientific and technical knowledge and modern teaching methods. In this regard, particular account shall be taken of the needs of developing countries.

Article 29

1. States Parties agree that the education of the child shall be directed to:

(a) The development of the child's personality, talents and mental and physical abilities to their fullest potential;

(b) The development of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

(c) The development of respect for the child's parents, his or her own cultural identity, language and values, for the national values of the country in which the child is living, the country from which he or she may originate, and for civilizations different from his or her own;

(d) The preparation of the child for responsible life in a free society, in the spirit of understanding, peace, tolerance, equality of sexes, and friendship among all peoples, ethnic, national and religious groups and persons of indigenous origin;

(e) The development of respect for the natural environment.

2. No part of the present article or article 28 shall be construed so as to interfere with the liberty of individuals and bodies to establish and direct educational institutions, subject always to the observance of the principles set forth in paragraph 1 of the present article and to the requirements that the education given in such institutions shall conform to such minimum standards as may be laid down by the State.

Article 30

In those States in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities or persons of indigenous origin exist, a child belonging to such a minority or who is indigenous shall not be denied the right, in community with other members of his or her group, to enjoy his or her own culture, to profess and practise his or her own religion, or to use his or her own language.

Article 31

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to rest and leisure, to engage in play and recreational activities appropriate to the age of the child and to participate freely in cultural life and the arts.

2. States Parties shall respect and promote the right of the child to participate fully in cultural and artistic life and shall encourage the provision of appropriate and equal opportunities for cultural, artistic, recreational and leisure activity.

Article 32

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to be protected from economic exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education, or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development.

2. States Parties shall take legislative, administrative, social and educational measures to ensure the implementation of the present article. To this end, and having regard to the relevant provisions of other international instruments, States Parties shall in particular:

(a) Provide for a minimum age or minimum ages for admission to employment;

(b) Provide for appropriate regulation of the hours and conditions of employment;

(c) Provide for appropriate penalties or other sanctions to ensure the effective enforcement of the present article.

Article 33

States Parties shall take all appropriate measures, including legislative, administrative, social and educational measures, to protect children from the illicit use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances as defined in the relevant international treaties, and to prevent the use of children in the illicit production and trafficking of such substances.

Article 34

States Parties undertake to protect the child from all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse. For these purposes, States Parties shall in particular take all appropriate national, bilateral and multilateral measures to prevent:

(a) The inducement or coercion of a child to engage in any unlawful sexual activity;

(b) The exploitative use of children in prostitution or other unlawful sexual practices;

(c) The exploitative use of children in pornographic performances and materials,

Article 35

States Parties shall take all appropriate national, bilateral and multilateral measures to prevent the abduction of, the sale of or traffic in children for any purpose or in any form.

Article 36

States Parties shall protect the child against all other forms of exploitation prejudicial to any aspects of the child's welfare.

Article 37

States Parties shall ensure that:

(a) No child shall be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Neither capital punishment nor life imprisonment without possibility of release shall be imposed for offences committed by persons below eighteen years of age;

(b) No child shall be deprived of his or her liberty unlawfully or arbitrarily. The arrest, detention or imprisonment of a child shall be in conformity with the law and shall be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time;

(c) Every child deprived of liberty shall be treated with humanity and respect for the inherent dignity of the human person, and in a manner which takes into account the needs of persons of his or her age. In particular, every child deprived of liberty shall be separated from adults unless it is considered in the child's best interest not to do so and shall have the right to maintain contact with his or her family through correspondence and visits, save in exceptional circumstances;

(d) Every child deprived of his or her liberty shall have the right to prompt access to legal and other appropriate assistance, as well as the right to challenge the legality of the deprivation of his or her liberty before a court or other competent, independent and impartial authority, and to a prompt decision on any such action.

Article 38

1. States Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for rules of international humanitarian law applicable to them in armed conflicts which are relevant to the child.

2. States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that persons who have not attained the age of fifteen years do not take a direct part in hostilities.

3. States Parties shall refrain from recruiting any person who has not attained the age of fifteen years into their armed forces. In recruiting among those persons who have attained the age of fifteen years but who have not attained the age of eighteen years, States Parties shall endeavour to give priority to those who are oldest.

4. In accordance with their obligations under international humanitarian law to protect the civilian population in armed conflicts, States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure protection and care of children who are affected by an armed conflict.

Article 39

States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to promote physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration of a child victim of: any form of neglect, exploitation, or abuse; torture or any other form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; or armed conflicts. Such recovery and reintegration shall take place in an environment which fosters the health, self-respect and dignity of the child.

Article 40

1. States Parties recognize the right of every child alleged as, accused of, or recognized as having infringed the penal law to be treated in a manner consistent with the promotion of the child's sense of dignity and worth, which reinforces the child's respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of others and which takes into account the child's age and the desirability of promoting the child's reintegration and the child's assuming a constructive role in society.

2. To this end, and having regard to the relevant provisions of international instruments, States Parties shall, in particular, ensure that:

(a) No child shall be alleged as, be accused of, or recognized as having infringed the penal law by reason of acts or omissions that were not prohibited by national or international law at the time they were committed;

(b) Every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees:

- (i) To be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law;
- (ii) To be informed promptly and directly of the charges against him or her, and, if appropriate, through his or her parents or legal guardians, and to have legal or other appropriate assistance in the preparation and presentation of his or her defence;
- (iii) To have the matter determined without delay by a competent, independent and impartial authority or judicial body in a fair hearing according to law, in the presence of legal or other appropriate assistance and, unless it is considered not to be in the best interest of the child, in particular, taking into account his or her age or situation, his or her parents or legal guardians;
- (iv) Not to be compelled to give testimony or to confess guilt; to examine or have examined adverse witnesses and to obtain the participation and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under conditions of equality;
- (v) If considered to have infringed the penal law, to have this decision and any measures imposed in consequence thereof reviewed by a higher competent, independent and impartial authority or judicial body according to law;
- (vi) To have the free assistance of an interpreter if the child cannot understand or speak the language used;
- (vii) To have his or her privacy fully respected at all stages of the proceedings.

3. States Parties shall seek to promote the establishment of laws, procedures, authorities and institutions specifically applicable to children alleged as, accused of, or recognized as having infringed the penal law, and, in particular:

(a) The establishment of a minimum age below which children shall be presumed not to have the capacity to infringe the penal law;

(b) Whenever appropriate and desirable, measures for dealing with such children without resorting to judicial proceedings, providing that human rights and legal safeguards are fully respected.

4. A variety of dispositions such as care, guidance and supervision orders; counselling; probation; foster care; education and vocational training programmes and other alternatives to institutional care shall be available to ensure that children are dealt with in a manner appropriate to their well-being and proportionate both to their circumstances and the offence.

Article 41

Nothing in the present Convention shall affect any provisions which are more conducive to the realization of the rights of the child and which may be contained in:

- (a) The law of a State Party; or
- (b) International law in force for that State.

Part II

Article 42

States Parties undertake to make the principles and provisions of the Convention widely known, by appropriate and active means, to adults and children alike.

Article 43

1. For the purpose of examining the progress made by States Parties in achieving the realization of the obligations undertaken in the present Convention, there shall be established a Committee on the Rights of the Child, which shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided.

2. The Committee shall consist of ten experts of high moral standing and recognized competence in the field covered by this Convention. The members of the Committee shall be elected by States Parties from among their nationals and shall serve in their personal capacity, consideration being given to equitable geographical distribution, as well as to the principal legal systems.

3. The members of the Committee shall be elected by secret ballot from a list of persons nominated by States Parties. Each State Party may nominate one person from among its own nationals.

4. The initial election to the Committee shall be held no later than six months after the date of the entry into force of the present Convention and thereafter every second year. At least four months before the date of each election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within two months. The Secretary-General shall subsequently prepare a list in alphabetical order of all persons thus nominated, indicating States Parties which have nominated them, and shall submit it to the States Parties to the present Convention.

5. The elections shall be held at meetings of States Parties convened by the Secretary-General at United Nations Headquarters. At those meetings, for which two thirds of States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Committee shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of States Parties present and voting.

6. The members of the Committee shall be elected for a term of four years. They shall be eligible for re-election if renominated. The term of five of the members elected at the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election, the names of these five members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting.

7. If a member of the Committee dies or resigns or declares that for any other cause he or she can no longer perform the duties of the Committee, the State Party which nominated the member shall appoint another expert from among its nationals to serve for the remainder of the term, subject to the approval of the Committee.

8. The Committee shall establish its own rules of procedure.

9. The Committee shall elect its officers for a period of two years.

10. The meetings of the Committee shall normally be held at United Nations Headquarters or at any other convenient place as determined by the Committee. The Committee shall normally meet annually. The duration of the meetings of the Committee shall be determined, and reviewed, if necessary, by a meeting of the States Parties to the present Convention, subject to the approval of the General Assembly.

11. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee under the present Convention.

12. With the approval of the General Assembly, the members of the Committee established under the present Convention shall receive emoluments from United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as the Assembly may decide.

Article 44

1. States Parties undertake to submit to the Committee, through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, reports on the measures they have adopted which give effect to the rights recognized herein and on the progress made on the enjoyment of those rights:

(a) Within two years of the entry into force of the Convention for the State Party concerned;

(b) Thereafter every five years.

2. Reports made under the present article shall indicate factors and difficulties, if any, affecting the degree of fulfilment of the obligations under the present Convention. Reports shall also contain sufficient information to provide the Committee with a comprehensive understanding of the implementation of the Convention in the country concerned.

3. A State Party which has submitted a comprehensive initial report to the Committee need not, in its subsequent reports submitted in accordance with paragraph 1 (b) of the present article, repeat basic information previously provided.

4. The Committee may request from States Parties further information relevant to the implementation of the Convention.

5. The Committee shall submit to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, every two years, reports on its activities.

6. States Parties shall make their reports widely available to the public in their own countries.

Article 45

In order to foster the effective implementation of the Convention and to encourage international co-operation in the field covered by the Convention:

(a) The specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations organs shall be entitled to be represented at the consideration of the implementation of such provisions of the present Convention as fall within the scope of their mandate. The Committee may invite the specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund and other competent bodies as it may consider appropriate to provide expert advice on the implementation of the Convention in areas falling within the scope of their respective mandates. The Committee may invite the specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations organs to submit reports on the implementation of the Convention in areas falling within the scope of their activities;

(b) The Committee shall transmit, as it may consider appropriate, to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund and other competent bodies any reports from States Parties that contain a request, or indicate a need, for technical advice or assistance, along with the Committee's observations and suggestions, if any, on these requests or indications;

(c) The Committee may recommend to the General Assembly that it request the Secretary-General to undertake on its behalf studies on specific issues relating to the rights of the child;

(d) The Committee may make suggestions and general recommendations based on information received pursuant to articles 44 and 45 of the present Convention. Such suggestions and general recommendations shall be transmitted to any State Party concerned and reported to the General Assembly, together with comments, if any, from States Parties.

Part III

Article 46

The present Convention shall be open for signature by all States.

Article 47

The present Convention is subject to ratification. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 48

The present Convention shall remain open for accession by any State. The instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 49

1. The present Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.

2. For each State ratifying or acceding to the Convention after the deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the deposit by such State of its instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 50

1. Any State Party may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to States Parties, with a request that they indicate whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposals. In the event that, within four months from the date of such communication, at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted to the General Assembly of the United Nations for approval.

2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall enter into force when it has been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and accepted by a two-thirds majority of States Parties.

3. When an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding on those States Parties which have accepted it, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Convention and any earlier amendments which they have accepted.

Article 51

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall receive and circulate to all States the text of reservations made by States at the time of ratification or accession.

2. A reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the present Convention shall not be permitted.

3. Reservations may be withdrawn at any time by notification to that effect addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall then inform all States. Such notification shall take effect on the date on which it is received by the Secretary-General.

Article 52

A State Party may denounce the present Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation becomes effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

Article 53

The Secretary-General of the United Nations is designated as the depositary of the present Convention.

Article 54

The original of the present Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Convention.

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, the Commission commended⁽¹²⁾ the Sub-Commission and its Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, noting that the Group's 1989-1991 work programme concerned, inter alia, the prevention of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, as well as the eradication of child labour and of debt bondage. It requested interested specialized agencies and NGOs to gather and communicate to the Secretary-General information on the sale of children, including their observations on ways of preventing it, and asked the Secretary-General to submit his final report on the subject in 1989. Member States were urged to take measures to protect children and promote their rights, and to enact legislation making it a crime to produce, distribute or possess pornographic material involving children.

Note of the Secretary-General. In a 12 July note⁽¹³⁾ to the Sub-Commission, the Secretary-General stated that, pursuant to the Commission's March resolution, he had requested Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to submit information relevant to the issue of the sale of children. By 1 July, replies had been received from four States, two intergovernmental organizations and three NGOs. Most communications, however, dealt with the general question of trafficking in human beings and not specifically the sale of children. The note provided a summary of replies and reviewed other developments that had occurred since the Secretary-General's 1988 report on the subject,⁽¹⁴⁾ including the 1988 activities of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery.

The Secretary-General concluded that, in view of the paucity of replies, he was not in a position to produce a comprehensive final report on the sale of children, nor did the new communications add much to complement information previously submitted on the subject, in particular on organ transplants in the context of the sale of children. No information at all had been received on the foetus trade. He therefore suggested that the Sub-Commission consider the Working Group's recommendation that a special rapporteur be appointed to undertake an overall study of the question.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its fourteenth session⁽¹⁵⁾ (see also above, under "Civil and political rights"), examined, inter alia, issues related to the adoption of children for commercial purposes, child prostitution and child pornography and the exploitation of child labour and debt bondage. It recommended two draft resolutions for adoption by the Sub-Commission (see below), including a draft programme of action for prevention of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. The draft programme proposed action in the areas of information and education, social measures and development assistance, legal measures and law enforcement, rehabilitation and reintegration for victims of sexual exploitation, and international co-ordination. The Working Group also called on the Sub-Commission to study the possibility of drafting model laws to combat the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and recommended that requests for additional information on child labour and bonded labour be sent as early as possible to Governments, relevant intergovernmental organizations and NGOs competent in that field.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September, the Sub-Commission endorsed⁽¹⁶⁾ the draft programme of action proposed by the Working Group and recommended that the Commission transmit it to Governments, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental as well as non-governmental organizations for comments, and that it examine the draft programme at its 1991 session. The Sub-Commission also recommended(17) that the Commission appoint for one year a special rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, including the adoption of children for commercial purposes, and request the rapporteur to report to it in 1991.

Youth and human rights

Note of the Secretary-General. By a 13 February note,(18) the Secretary-General informed the Commission that the Sub-Commission had, in 1988,(14) requested him to invoke the applicability of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations(19) to ensure the completion of a report on human rights and youth, entrusted to Special Rapporteur Dumitru Mazilu (Romania) in 1985,(20) as the Romanian authorities had not permitted the Special Rapporteur to travel to Geneva to present his report at the 1988 session of the Sub-Commission. In case of non-concurrence by Romania with the applicability of the Convention, the matter was to be brought to the attention of the Commission on Human Rights.

Annexed to the note was an aide-mémoire transmitted by Romania to the UN Legal Counsel on 6 January 1989 and stating, inter alia, that Mr. Mazilu had applied for and received a disability pension due to ill health and was unable to prepare the report; that his term as a Sub-Commission member had expired at the end of 1987; that the applicability of the Convention was limited only to activities of experts while on mission, but not during their stay in the country of residence, and only to acts performed as part of that mission; and that the report should be prepared by the current Romanian expert serving on the Sub-Commission.

The Secretary-General noted that the Legal Counsel had made it clear that acceptance of the aide-mémoire for transmittal to the Commission did not mean his acceptance of its contents. The note also indicated that the Secretariat continued to collect information relating to the report and to seek Romania's assistance in establishing contact with the Special Rapporteur.

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, by a roll-call vote of 26 to 5, with 12 abstentions, the Commission recommended a resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below On 8 March, the Commission reaffirmed(22) the role of youth in promoting the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and called for legislative, administrative and other action to allow the exercise by young people of all human rights, including the right to education and the right to work, so as to create conditions for their active participation in implementation of national development programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/75 by recorded vote.

Status of special rapporteurs

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered resolution 1988/37 of 1 September 1988 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/37 of 6 March 1989,

1. Concludes that a difference has arisen between the United Nations and the Government of Romania as to the applicability of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946 to Mr. Dumitru Mazilu as Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

2. Requests, on a priority basis, pursuant to Article 96, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 89(I) of 11 December 1946, an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the legal question of the applicability of article VI, section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations in the case of Mr. Dumitru Mazilu as Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/75

24 May 1989 Meeting 16 24-8-19 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) by recorded vote (26-9-16), 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); oral amendment by United States adopted in plenary; agenda item 9.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Against: Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Iran, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Abstaining: Cameroon, China, Ghana, Guinea, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Lesotho, Liberia, Nicaragua, Niger, Oman, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Tunisia, Zaire, Zambia.

Before adopting the resolution as a whole, the Council adopted, by a recorded vote of 17 to 9, with 22 abstentions, the United States oral amendment inserting the words "on a priority basis" in operative paragraph 2.

Speaking prior to the vote, Romania stated that the case in question involved incapacity for work, that it considered the efforts to transform a case of illness into a political and legal issue to be contrary to the purposes of the UN Charter, and that it did not agree that the alleged dispute should be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In 1989, the Sub-Commission had before it a report(23) on human rights and youth, prepared by Special Rapporteur Dumitru Mazilu and transmitted to it on 10 July. In an introductory note, the Secretary-

General explained that the report was reproduced as received, as he had been unable to consult with the Special Rapporteur regarding its presentation and editing.

The report reviewed the situation of young people and the state of human rights in the world, examined the rights and freedoms of youth as an important component of human rights, and discussed the need to ensure the freedom of thought and expression and the enjoyment by youth of the right to life, education and work. It also suggested measures to be taken by Governments to ensure and promote the rights and freedoms of the younger generation, and proposed a charter of the rights and freedoms of youth. In an addendum, the Special Rapporteur discussed the situation of human rights and youth in Romania, including unprecedented aggression against the rights and freedoms of the younger generation and the destruction of their values and faith under political despotism.

The Special Rapporteur made a number of recommendations pertaining to the right of young people to life; creation of a healthy economic and social environment for youth; measures to attack the production of, demand for and use of illicit drugs; education, vocational training and employment programmes for young people; the establishment of non-exploitative working conditions; the use of science and technology to promote the rights and freedoms of youth; and the promotion of cultural exchanges and organization of seminars and conferences to stimulate public discussion of problems affecting youth.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September, the Sub-Commission, by 12 votes to 4, with 2 abstentions, requested(24) the Special Rapporteur to update his report and invited him to present it in person to the Sub-Commission in 1990; the Secretary-General was asked to continue to provide him with information relevant to his report and to give the Special Rapporteur all necessary assistance. The Sub-Commission also expressed its deep concern at reports of the personal situation of Mr. Mazilu and his family and asked the Secretary-General to follow the matter closely. The Special Rapporteur on the human rights of UN staff members, experts and their families was requested to submit a note on the subject of Mr. Mazilu's situation to the Commission on Human Rights and to report to the Sub-Commission in 1990.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and children

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, the Commission approved(25) the Sub-Commission's 1988 request(26) to Halima Em-

barek Warzazi (Morocco) to study recent developments with regard to traditional practices affecting the health of women and children and to report to the Sub-Commission in 1989, as well as its request to the Secretary-General to provide her with all necessary assistance.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In a preliminary report(27) on the subject, transmitted to the Sub-Commission on 21 August, the Special Rapporteur summarized information received from 17 Governments, 3 UN bodies and 12 NGOs on traditional practices affecting health. In view of the small number of replies, she recommended the continuation of the study and measures to obtain more information and strengthen the report.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, the Sub-Commission recommended(28) to the Commission that the Special Rapporteur's mandate be extended for two years and that she undertake field missions, if possible to two countries where harmful traditional practices were prevalent; that seminars be held on such practices in Africa and Asia; that the Centre for Human Rights provide necessary support in preparation of the study, including a full-time professional assistant; and that the subject remain on the Sub-Commission's agenda for sustained follow-up.

Human rights and science and technology

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/133 without vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the decisive factors in the development of human society,

Recalling the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3384(XXX) of 10 November 1975,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Conscious that it is only the creative genius of man that makes progress and the development of civilization possible in a peaceful environment and that human life must be recognized as supreme,

Recalling the fundamental importance of the right to life,

Convinced that in the era of modern scientific and technological progress, the resources of mankind and the activities of scientists should be used to promote the peaceful economic, social and cultural development of countries and to improve the living standards of all people,

Bearing in mind that the exchange and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge is one of the important ways to accelerate the social and economic development of the developing countries,

Recalling its relevant resolutions,

1. Reaffirms the value of the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind in the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Culls upon all States to make every effort to use the achievements of science and technology in order to promote peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress;

3. Recalls the historic responsibility of the Governments of all countries of the world to preserve civilization and to ensure that everyone enjoys his or her inherent right to life, and calls upon them to do their utmost to assist in protecting the right to life through the adoption of appropriate measures at both the national and international levels;

4. Culls upon all States, appropriate United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to take the necessary measures to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress and the material and intellectual potential of mankind are used for the benefit of mankind and for promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give attention, in its consideration of the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments", to the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration;

6. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to assist the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in preparing the study requested by the Commission in its resolutions 1982/4 of 19 February 1982, 1984/29 of 12 March 1984, 1986/11 of 10 March 1986 and 1988/61 of 9 March 1988;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

Computerized personal files

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, the Commission, having considered the final report on guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files submitted by Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France) to the Sub-Commission in 1988,(29) recommended(30) a resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1989/78 without vote.

Guidelines on the use of computerized personal files

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of resolution 1988/29 of September 1988 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/43 of 6 March 1989 on guidelines on the use of computerized personal files,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mr. Louis Joinet, for his study on guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files;

2. Decides to transmit to the General Assembly the final report of the Special Rapporteur;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the attention of all Governments to the final report of the Special Rapporteur and to invite them to communicate their comments to him before 1 September 1989;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session the final report of the Special Rapporteur and a report containing the views expressed thereon by Governments;

5. Recommends that the General Assembly consider, as a matter of priority, the adoption and publication of the guidelines on the use of computerized personal files.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/78

24 May 1989 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) without vote, 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20); agenda item 9.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a 24 October report to the General Assembly and a later addendum,(31) the Secretary-General analysed replies from nine Governments containing general comments and suggestions on the draft guidelines, as well as comments and proposals for principles stating the minimum guarantees to be incorporated into national legislation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/132 without vote.

Guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/43 of 6 March 1989 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/78 of 24 May 1989, entitled "Guidelines on the use of computerized personal data files",

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mr. Louis Joinet, for his report on the draft guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files;

2. Conveys its thanks to the Governments that have communicated to the Secretary-General their comments and suggestions on the draft guidelines;

3. Invites the Special Rapporteur to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session a revised version of the draft guidelines, taking into account, inter alia, those comments and suggestions;

4. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to examine the revised draft guidelines and, once it has examined and, if necessary, modified them, to transmit them, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session for final adoption.

Chemical weapons and the right to life

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 Sub-Commission request,(32) the Secretary-General submitted a 17 August report(33) on chemical weapons and respect for the right to life. The report analysed substantive information received from 23 Governments, 3 UN bodies, and 10 NGOs and educational institutions. The information dealt with such topics as the definition of chemical weapons, their use and allegations of use, the importance and continuing validity of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 banning the use of asphyxiating, poisonous and other gases and analogous liquids as well as bacteriological weapons, and multilateral and national action to ban chemical weapons. The Secretary-General concluded that the use of chemical weapons constituted a violation of basic human rights, the right to life and to liberty and security of person, and that urgent and effective international measures should be undertaken to prevent their future use. The complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons as well as their destruction should be pursued as a matter of continuing urgency, he said. Other conclusions dealt with the strict observance by States of the 1925 Geneva Protocol and mobilization of public opinion in favour of banning chemical weapons.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September, the Sub-Commission took note(34) of the Secretary-General's report, called on States to abide strictly by their international obligations in that field, and decided to consider the matter further in 1990.

Human rights and the environment

On 31 August, the Sub-Commission concluded(35) that the information on human rights and the environment provided to it in 1989 by a number of NGOs and some of its members, together with the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond adopted by the General Assembly in 1987,(36) justified consideration of a study of the environment and its relation to human rights. Accordingly, the Sub-Commission asked one of its members, Fatma Ksentini (Algeria), to submit in 1990 a note on methodology for such a study. The Secretary-General was requested to seek relevant information and observations from Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

Movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and waste

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, the Commission requested(37) States producing toxic and dangerous wastes to ban their export to countries technically incapable of their environmentally sound disposal; abrogate existing agreements for the disposal of such wastes and products with those countries; and take measures to ensure that those wastes did not imperil human health and the ecosystem in their own as well as other countries. It also requested the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) to expedite elaboration of a global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes, and asked the Secretary-General to report on the matter to the Sub-Commission in 1989.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to the Commission's March request, the Secretary-General reported(38) to the Sub-Commission on 19 June that a conference of plenipotentiaries, convened in Basel, Switzerland, by the Executive Director of UNEP, had adopted on 22 March 1989 the Final Act of the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). The Final Act provided, inter alia for the establishment of a technical working group to prepare draft guidelines on environmentally sound waste management aimed at minimizing the risk to human health, and urged States to take steps to stop illegal traffic in hazardous wastes, including by signing and becoming parties to the Convention. The Secretary-General informed the Sub-Commission that UNEP was in the process of finalizing a report to the General Assembly on illegal traffic of hazardous wastes, and that the Basel Convention addressed steps to prevent and respond to such traffic.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, the Sub-Commission recommended(39) that the Commission adopt a resolution requesting UNEP to enter into negotiations with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to find global solutions to the problem of the transboundary movement of hazardous wastes and their disposal, and asking the Secretary-General to report on the result of the negotiations to the Sub-Commission in 1990 and to the Commission in 1991.

Human rights and health

On 2 March, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed⁽⁴⁰⁾ the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, recognized the importance of non-discrimination in access to health care, and invited the Sub-Commission to consider extending the scope of a study on discrimination against persons with HIV or suffering from AIDS (see above, under "Discrimination") to other kinds of discrimination against sick or disabled persons.

Human rights of disabled persons

On 6 March, the Commission approved⁽⁴¹⁾ the Sub-Commission's 1988 requests⁽³²⁾ to Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina) to continue his work on the study of the relationship between human rights and disability and to submit a final report to the Sub-Commission in 1990. It also approved the request to the Secretary-General to provide the Rapporteur with all possible assistance.

Mental illness

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, the Commission decided⁽⁴²⁾ to establish an open-ended working group to revise the draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care, adopted by the Sub-Commission in 1988,⁽⁴³⁾ and requested the working group to meet for two weeks before the Commission's 1990 session. Member States were invited, pending the adoption of a body of principles and guarantees, to adhere to the existing standards set out in international human rights instruments and to take steps to protect the rights of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to invite comments on the subject from Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs for consideration by the working group.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/76 without vote.

Principles and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/40 of 6 March 1989,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of two weeks prior to the forty-sixth session of the Commission to examine, revise and simplify as necessary the draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care submitted to the Commission by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, with a view to submitting it to the Commission at its forty-sixth session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meeting to be held prior to the forty-sixth session of the Commission;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, on the basis of the comments received from Governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations in response to paragraph 6 of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/40, to prepare a working paper showing the modifications that would be made to the existing draft body of principles and guarantees as a result of those comments.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/76

24 May 1989 Meeting 16 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/88) without vote, 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1989/20), amended by 6 nations (E/1989/C.2/L.17); agenda item 9.

Sponsors of amendment: France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Peru, Philippines, United Kingdom.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, the Sub-Commission requested⁽⁴⁴⁾ the Secretary-General to make available to the working group and to the Commission's 1990 session copies of the study on principles, guidelines and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on the grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder, as well as the relevant documentation containing a summary of national legislation and comments on the subject from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.⁽⁴⁵⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/134 without vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution 33/53 of 14 December 1978, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to urge the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake, as a matter of priority, a study of the question of the protection of those persons detained on the grounds of mental ill-health, with a view to formulating guidelines,

Bearing in mind the obligation of all States to promote and respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of everyone, including disadvantaged people, such as those suffering from mental illness,

Mindful of the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also its resolution 43/109 of 8 December 1988, in which it welcomed the progress made by the Working Group of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and invited the Commission on Human Rights to consider the subject at its forty-fifth session, in the light of the Sub-Commission's recommendations,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/40 of 6 March 1989 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/76 of 24 May 1989, by which the Council authorized an open-ended working group of the Commission to examine, revise and simplify as necessary the draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care submitted by the Sub-Commission, with a view to submitting it to the Commission at its forty-sixth session,

Expressing its belief that all mentally ill persons should be treated with humanity and the respect due the inherent dignity of the human person,

Reaffirming its conviction that the misuse of psychiatry to detain persons in mental institutions on account of their political views or on other non-medical grounds, as reflected in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission, is a violation of their human rights,

1. Reiterates the urgent need for principles and guarantees to protect persons suffering from mental disorder or detained on the grounds of mental ill-health;

2. Welcomes the establishment of the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights, and urges that group to examine expeditiously the draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider the subject at its forty-sixth session, in the light of the deliberations and recommendations of the open-ended working group, with a view to submitting the draft body of principles and guarantees to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 44/134

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/826) without vote, 22 November (meeting 52); 17-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.56); agenda item 107.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 36-43, 50, 52; plenary 82.

Human rights of the individual and international law

Human Rights Commission action. On 6 March, the Commission approved(46) the Sub-Commission's 1988 request(32) to Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece) to update her study on the status of the individual and contemporary international law for submission to the Sub-Commission in 1989, and the request to the Secretary-General to give the Rapporteur all necessary assistance.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. On 26 July, the Special Rapporteur submitted her updated study(47) to the Sub-Commission. The study provided an overview of contemporary international law, reviewed institutions and concepts related to the protection of the individual and his responsibilities, discussed the individual as a subject of international duties and as a subject in contemporary international law, and considered the international procedural capacity of the individual and his position in the European Community, in the inter-American system and in the African system.

It concluded that the legal doctrine after the Second World War prevalently recognized a world community of individuals who were subjects of international law along with States, and that the individual became the bearer of rights under the rules of international law. The study recommended greater popularization of international human rights standards and dissemination of information on the promotion, protection and restoration of those rights; creation of more effective institutions accessible to individuals for protecting their rights; new mechanisms for reviewing violations of such rights and obtaining redress, and for appeal to international procedures when domestic remedies had been exhausted; easier access for individuals to international courts and tribunals; due ratification and application as substantive law of international human rights instruments; recognition by States of the need for supranational protection and enforcement of human rights norms; and the accordance of the individual with personality under international law and with certain rights and responsibilities as a subject of such law. Other recommendations dealt with the establishment of an objective international criminal jurisdiction, adoption of international standards related specifically to the status of the individual, and proposed studies on related topics.

Sub-Commission action. On 1 September, the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission a resolution by which it would decide that the study on the status of the individual and contemporary international law should be published and widely disseminated.

Human rights and international peace

On 1 September, the Sub-Commission, convinced of the necessity to undertake a study on the negative consequences of the arms race requested by the Commission in 1982,(49) and having discussed the Secretary-General's 1988 report(26) on the interrelationship between human rights and international peace, emphasized(50) that that interrelationship required further examination and invited one of its members, Murlidhar Bhandare (India), to prepare a working paper on the subject for consideration in 1991. It also emphasized that the strengthening of international peace and security and reduction of expenditure for arms were important conditions for social and economic development and for the materialization of all human rights, particularly the right to life and the right to development. It also underlined that the realization of human rights in the whole world would contribute to achieving international peace and security.

Chapter XI

Health, food and nutrition

In 1989, the United Nations continued to respond to international problems concerning health, food and nutrition. As the global dimension of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and their extensive socio-economic and humanitarian implications became widely known, collaboration among organizations of the UN system and governmental and non-governmental organizations accelerated. The World Health Organization estimated the actual number of AIDS cases world wide to be three times higher than officially reported. In December, the General Assembly urged increased efforts to advance the global strategy against the pandemic (resolution 44/233).

Efforts continued to reactivate and strengthen national disability committees to attain the goals set in the Programme of Action concerning the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons. The Assembly reaffirmed the validity of the Programme of Action and reiterated that for the second half of the Decade, special emphasis should be placed on the equalization of opportunities for the disabled (44/70). It also drew attention to the Tallinn Guidelines for Action on Human Resources in the Field of Disability, adopted at an International Meeting held in the USSR.

World food production rose 3.2 per cent in 1989. In per capita terms, it rose 1.4 per cent, after having fallen by a cumulative 2.5 per cent during 1986-1988. In all developing regions except East Asia, food and agricultural growth fell below the average rate of the 1980s. In May, the World Food Council adopted the Programme of Co-operative Action, calling for fundamental policy changes and a firm political commitment to eliminating hunger and poverty. In July, the Economic and Social Council urged the World Food Council to carry out activities in the areas of nutrition, food security and agricultural trade (resolution 1989/88). A sum of $1.5 billion was set by the General Assembly as the target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme for the period 1991-1992 (resolution 44/230).

The statement issued by the 1988 Conference on Nutrition in Times of Disaster was brought to the Economic and Social Council's attention in July.

Health

Human and environmental health

In 1989, human and environmental health questions were dealt with by several United Nations agencies and bodies such as the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the International Labour Organisation (ILO).

During the year,(1) WHO continued to promote human and environmental health by monitoring air, water and food; studying the potential and actual risks of modern technology to human health; and controlling adverse health effects of industrial development and energy use. It carried out a wide range of activities in community water supply and sanitation, environmental health in rural and urban development and housing, control of environmental health hazards and food safety. It co-operated with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) on nutrition and safe use of pesticides; with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on health education and AIDS; with ILO on occupational safety and health and social security schemes; and with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization on industrial aspects of the production of essential drugs and pharmaceutical supplies.

The WHO/ILO/UNEP International Programme on Chemical Safety continued to provide information on the risks to human health and the environment of potentially toxic chemicals, and guidance in the safe use of chemicals. (See also PART SEVEN, Chapter V.)

In a May report,(2) the Secretary-General reviewed the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments, including its scope, format and use. He recommended introducing a data-base system, an annual compilation in English and cross-referencing for each product entry.

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, at its thirty-eighth session in May, decided(3) to undertake studies in the following fields: occupational radiation exposures; effects of radiation exposures on plants and animals in the environment; effects on the developing human brain from pre-natal radiation exposures; and mechanisms by which radiation causes cancer.

AIDS prevention and control

In May, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a WHO Director-General's report on a global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS,(4) and a supplementary note on AIDS-related activities by the organizations of the UN system.(5) The report, requested by the General Assembly in 1988,(6) reviewed the global epidemiological situation and WHO's collaboration with organizations of the system and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

The number of AIDS cases reported to WHO continued to rise rapidly in 1989. As at 1 March, 141,894 cases had been reported by 145 of the 177 reporting countries and territories. This included 99,752 cases, or 70 per cent, in the Americas, 85 per cent of which were in the United States. Africa and Europe each accounted for some 15 per cent of the world total, while Asia and the Pacific (including the Eastern Mediterranean region) reported 1 per cent. However, under-recognition of AIDS cases and under-reporting to national health authorities had resulted in an underestimate of the total. The actual cumulative number of AIDS cases as at the same date was estimated to be some 450,000.

The Global Commission on AIDS, a group of eminent experts established to give guidance to the Director-General of WHO, held its first meeting (Geneva, 29-31 March) and recommended integrating activities of the Global Programme on AIDS, intensifying co-operation with the United Nations Drug Control Programme on policies on AIDS and drug use, paying attention to risk behaviours and applicable international law on human rights, and involving NGOs. The Global Programme on AIDS continued to alert countries to the serious public health problem represented by AIDS and collaborated with them to strengthen national programmes on AIDS. Its Management Committee consisted of UNICEF, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNESCO, the United Nations Population Fund and the World Bank, as well as the Commission for the European Communities, 18 donor Governments and 12 member States selected by WHO. By the end of 1989, the Global Programme had collaborated with 159 countries on a technical evaluation of the HIV/AIDS situation or in support of national programme formulation. Of those countries, 123 had a short-term plan and 95 had formulated a medium-term plan for their programme. To strengthen collaboration with NGOs, WHO supported the organizing committee for a proposed non-governmental international council of AIDS service organizations, to be launched in 1990. In addition, over $650,000 were provided to NGOs for country-level activities. In May, the WHO World Health Assembly emphasized the importance of the collaboration between WHO and NGOs; urged Member States to collaborate with WHO to increase their capacity; and requested the Director-General to ensure co-ordination between the WHO programme on the prevention and control of drug and alcohol abuse and the Global Programme on AIDS.

Co-ordination of activities of the United Nations system was facilitated through the United Nations steering committee, established by the Under-Secretary-General for International Economic and Social Affairs as the focal point at UN Headquarters for activities related to the prevention and control of AIDS, and through the Inter-Agency Advisory Group on AIDS, established by WHO in response to a 1987 General Assembly resolution.(7) The steering committee provided input to the work of the Advisory Group.

Under the auspices of the WHO/UNDP Alliance to Combat AIDS, proclaimed in 1988,(8) UNDP assisted the integration of national AIDS plans into overall development policies and priorities, supported programme development and delivery, and helped Governments minimize the impact of AIDS on social and economic development.

WHO, in collaboration with UNESCO, completed a guide for school health education to prevent AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, which served as a catalyst for seven projects aimed at introducing innovative approaches to AIDS education. In March, UNESCO established the AIDS School Education Resource Centre to collect, analyse and disseminate information and documentation among UNESCO member States and their partners in education for AIDS prevention.

During the year, several volumes were published in the WHO AIDS series, including: the second edition of the Guidelines on Sterilization and Disinfection Methods Effective against Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), Guidelines on the Monitoring of National AIDS Prevention and Control Programmes, and the Guide to Planning Health Promotion for AIDS Prevention and Control.

In December, the Population Division Task Force of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, in collaboration with WHO, organized a workshop on modelling the demographic impact of the AIDS epidemic in pattern II (sub-Saharan African and some Caribbean and Latin American) countries. A consultation on AIDS and human rights was organized by the United Nations Centre for Human Rights (Geneva, 26-28 July), which discussed the need to protect the human rights and dignity of people with AIDS or HIV infection and those perceived to be at risk, and specified a number of areas for further work (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

With the Government of France, who organized the International Conference on the Implications of AIDS for Mothers and Children (Paris, 27-30 November). Among topics discussed were virology, HIV and pregnancy, and diagnosis. World AIDS Day was observed on 1 December with a focus on AIDS and youth.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/108 without vote.

Prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988/55 of 27 July 1988, General Assembly resolution 43/15 of 27 October 1988, World Health Assembly resolutions WHA 42.20 of 17 May 1989 and WHA 42.33 and WHA 42.34 of 19 May 1989, other relevant resolutions, the London Declaration on AIDS Prevention and the discussions at the Fifth International Conference on AIDS, held at Montreal from 4 to 9 June 1989,

Acknowledging the established leadership of the World Health Organization in directing and co-ordinating AIDS education, prevention, control and research,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as national Governments and non-governmental organizations,

Welcoming in particular, the World Health Organization/United Nations Development Programme Alliance to Combat AIDS and the role of the Alliance in facilitating the implementation at the country level of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS,

Recalling the resolutions of the World Health Assembly and the General Assembly concerning the socio-economic and humanitarian aspects of the problem, including the need to respect the human rights and dignity of all people, including those infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV),

Reaffirming that the struggle against AIDS should be consistent with and divert neither attention nor resources from other national public health priorities and development goals and should not divert international efforts and resources needed for overall health priorities,

Aware that AIDS can have serious economic and social consequences, particularly in countries with a high incidence of infection from the human immunodeficiency virus and limited public health services and other developmental resources,

Aware of the need to address the problem of drug abuse from the perspective of AIDS prevention and control,

Concerned that, depending upon individual and social circumstances, women and children recently appear to have developed a higher risk of infection from the human immunodeficiency virus,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS and the supplementary report on AIDS-related activities being carried out by the organizations of the United Nations system;

2. Note with appreciation and welcomes the arrangements made by the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Director-General of the World Health Organization, to ensure a co-ordinated response by the United Nations system to the AIDS pandemic pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/55 and General Assembly resolution 43/15;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the potentially serious implications of the AIDS pandemic for socio-economic development in some developing countries, to intensify his efforts, in close co-operation with the Director-General of the World Health Organization, to mobilize the technical and other relevant resources of the United Nations system, through co-ordinated research and programme measures, to deal with this aspect of the problem;

4. Calls upon Governments and non-governmental organizations to co-ordinate their efforts with the World Health Organization in implementing the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS;

5. Invites the General Assembly to consider the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization and the response of the United Nations system to the AIDS pandemic and to take an appropriate decision on further action, taking the present resolution into account.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/108

27 July 1989 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1969/1331 without vote, 21 July (meeting 16); 23-nation draft (E/1989/C.3/L.10/Rev.1); agenda item 9c.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 44/233 without vote.

Prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/15 of 27 October 1988, other relevant resolutions and the London Declaration on AIDS Prevention adopted by the World Summit of Ministers of Health on Programmes for AIDS Prevention on 28 January 1988 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/108 of 27 July 1989, World Health Assembly resolutions WHA 42.20 of 17 May 1989 and WHA 42.33 and WHA 42.34 of 19 May 1989 and the discussions of the Fifth International Conference on AIDS, held at Montreal, Canada, from 4 to 9 June 1989,

Acknowledging the established leadership of the World Health Organization in directing and co-ordinating AIDS education, prevention, control and research,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public and private sector, in combating the spread of AIDS,

Welcoming, in particular, the World Health Organization Global Programme on AIDS, and noting that the World Health Organization/United Nations Development Programme Alliance to Combat AIDS is facilitating the implementation at the country level of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS,

Recalling the resolutions of the General Assembly, the World Health Assembly and the Economic and Social Council concerning the need to respect the human rights and dignity of all people, including those affected by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), their families and those with whom they live,

Reaffirming that the struggle against AIDS should be consistent with and divert neither attention nor resources from other national public health priorities and development goals and should not divert international efforts and resources needed for overall health priorities,

Aware that AIDS can have serious social and economic consequences, particularly in countries with a high incidence of infection from HIV and limited public health services and other developmental resources,

Recognizing that, depending upon individual and social circumstances, women and children may be at a higher risk of infection from HIV than previously recognized and may otherwise suffer deprivation as a consequence of the indirect impact of AIDS on their families and communities,

Emphasizing the crucial importance of a supportive socio-economic environment in ensuring the effective implementation of national AIDS prevention programmes and the humane care of affected persons,

Recognizing the need for all sectors of society to contribute actively to the local, national and international efforts for HIV/AIDS prevention and control,

Noting that scientific research is making progress in the development of improved diagnostic, therapeutic and preventive technologies and pharmaceuticals, and stressing the importance of making these technologies and pharmaceuticals available as soon as possible and at an affordable cost,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS and the supplementary report on activities and programmes being carried out by United Nations entities on the socio-economic and humanitarian aspects of AIDS;

2. Notes with appreciation and welcomes the arrangements made by the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Director-General of the World Health Organization, to ensure a co-ordinated response by the United Nations system to the AIDS pandemic pursuant to General Assembly resolution 43/15 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/108;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the potentially serious implications of the AIDS pandemic for socio-economic development in some developing countries, to intensify his efforts, in collaboration with the Director-General of the World Health Organization, all other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, and the World Health Organization/United Nations Development Programme Alliance to Combat AIDS, to mobilize the technical and other relevant resources of the United Nations system, at all levels, including at the regional and country levels, through co-ordinated research and programmes, to deal with this aspect of the problem;

4. Urges Member States to increase their efforts to combat AIDS and to encourage, support and facilitate national efforts to prevent the further spread of AIDS;

5. Calls upon Governments, the World Health Organization, all other relevant United Nations organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to promote greater awareness about the transmission of the pandemic in order to avoid misconceptions as much as possible and to increase the understanding of the general public towards people affected by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV);

6. Calls upon international, national and research institutions and organizations to co-ordinate their activities so as to provide input to and be supportive of the policy of national AIDS committees and the global AIDS strategy of the World Health Organization in a manner appropriate to local conditions and requirements;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the World Health Organization, in close collaboration with the other organizations of the United Nations system and without prejudice to ongoing priorities and programmes, to continue to develop and advance the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS, and specifically:

(a) To promote the contribution of non-governmental organizations to the global strategy through support of national efforts;

(b) To collaborate, as appropriate, with the United Nations Office at Vienna, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations bodies, as well as Governments and non-governmental organizations in their efforts to develop:

- (i) Policies, programmes and research proposals to address the impact of AIDS, including issues affecting women, and to promote the vital role of women in preventing and controlling the pandemic;
- (ii) Policies and programmes to alleviate the impact of AIDS, in all its aspects, on children;
- (iii) Policies and programmes to combat the illicit traffic in and abuse of drugs, with a view to contributing to a reduction in the spread of HIV infection;

(c) To promote access of all peoples to appropriate preventive, diagnostic and therapeutic technologies and pharmaceuticals and to help make these technologies and pharmaceuticals available at an affordable cost;

(d) To promote the active participation of public and private sector enterprises, including through financial contributions, in HIV/AIDS prevention and control efforts at the local, national and international levels;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the World Health Organization to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/233

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/832/Add.1) by consensus, 21 November (meeting 41): draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.34), based on informal consultations on 30-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.22) and orally revised; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 15, 17, 34, 35, 41; plenary 85.

Women and AIDS

In a February report(9) on the effects of AIDS on the advancement of women, submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women, the Secretary-General outlined the nature and epidemiology of AIDS, considered the particular vulnerability of women to HIV infection and dealt with effects of HIV/AIDS on women, both infected and non-infected. Women in many societies lacked equal access to education, training, health, independent incomes, and property and legal rights, which affected both their access to knowledge of AIDS and the measures to prevent transmission of HIV virus, as well as their ability to protect themselves from infection. According to WHO, at least 1.5 million women were infected with HIV world wide. Non-infected women were also affected in so far as societies and families expected women to bear the sole burden as carers for AIDS patients, and in cases where their partners on whom they were economically dependent died of the disease. The report recommended the holding of a seminar for representatives of both the national machineries and the national AIDS committees; co-operation between the United Nations and relevant NGOs to assist Governments in policy formulation and implementation; and action-oriented research on economic, social and cultural consequences for women of the AIDS pandemic in order to assist national machineries to develop their role.

By decision 1989/127 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report. It requested the Secretary-General to convene an expert group meeting to prepare for an international meeting of representatives of national machineries for the advancement of women and of national AIDS committees, to identify appropriate strategies and programmes at the national level and to promote co-operation between them.

Disabled persons

Implementation of the Programme of Action

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a January report(10) to the Commission for Social Development, reviewed progress made in monitoring and evaluating the implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons(11) for the second half of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992).(12) He noted that considerable additional resources were still needed to ensure the success of the Decade. While a global campaign in support of the Decade had been proposed, it had not been possible to raise the seed money to launch it. For its part, the Commission called for further implementation of the Programme of Action and the consistent financial support of the Member States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/52 without vote.

United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and 37/53 of 3 December 1982, by which it proclaimed the period 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, and other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 43/98 of 8 December 1988, by which the Assembly adopted a list of priorities for global activities and programmes for the second half of the Decade and requested the Secretary-General to undertake a feasibility study on the substantive, financial and administrative implications of alternative ways of marking the end of the Decade in 1992, and to submit the study to the Assembly at its forty-fifth session,

Noting with satisfaction the strengthening of the Disabled Persons Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat through the generous financial support of some Governments,

Noting with appreciation the installation at the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of a Thiel Braille Printer donated by a foundation,

Noting with deep concern that many developing countries are facing enormous difficulties in dealing with increasing numbers of disabled people, and recognizing the need for developed countries and appropriate United Nations bodies to take this into account when planning bilateral and multilateral development co-operation,

Recognizing the pivotal role of the United Nations in promoting the exchange of information, experience and expertise and closer regional and interregional co-operation to advance the status and welfare of disabled persons,

Stressing that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs is the focal point within the United Nations system for the implementation and monitoring of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,

Mindful that the incidence of disability rapidly increases with age, that the problems facing the aging are very often similar to those facing the disabled and that the number of aged persons affected by disability is increasing,

Mindful also of the often extremely difficult position of disabled women,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in monitoring and evaluating the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons for the second half of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

1. Calls upon Member States, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to further the practical implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons during the second half of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, based on the list of priorities for global activities and programmes set forth in the annex to General Assembly resolution 43/98;

2. Urges Member States, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide all possible support to the awareness and fund-raising campaigns to give added momentum to the Decade;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the clearing-house function of the Secretariat by exploring possibilities, including the financial implications of implementing an international information system, and by encouraging Member States and organizations that have acquired experience in the disability field to inform the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat of their experience;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to disseminate relevant information, on a pilot basis, within existing resources and with voluntary contributions, on the activities of the Disabled Persons Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs in forms accessible to blind persons, in order to facilitate the Secretary-General's examination of ways of making United Nations meetings, information materials and documents accessible to disabled persons, as well as his determination of the financial implications thereof, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 43/98, paragraph 7;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to determine the financial implications of the implementation of the recommendations contained in the three studies on accessibility to United Nations buildings, documents and information by persons with sensory disabilities, prepared in conjunction with the International Year of Disabled Persons 1981, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 35/133 of 11 December 1980;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and Member States to pay special attention during the second half of the Decade to the functioning and reactivation of national bodies for disabled persons and to the development and strengthening of powerful and influential organizations of disabled persons;

7. Calls upon Member States to give due consideration to the close interrelationship between aging and disability and to give attention to the application of measures aimed at avoiding or curing disabilities of aging persons, and invites Member States that have conducted research in this field to provide the Secretariat with information on the results;

8. Also calls upon Member States and appropriate United Nations organizations and bodies, when planning their development co-operation and similar projects, to give increased attention to the needs of disabled persons in developing countries;

9. Invites the Secretary-General, in connection with the preparation of the feasibility study of alternative ways to mark the end of the Decade in 1992, to convene an expert meeting in 1990, within the existing resources, inter alia, to advise on the best possible ways of marking the end of the Decade and of continuing the work in the disability field;

10. Requests the Secretary-General and Member States to give particular attention to improving the situation of vulnerable groups, as outlined in the World

Programme of Action, emphasizing the need for social justice and the participation of those groups in each sector of society;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that contributions, in kind or cash, related to the Decade are channelled into the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, already established by the General Assembly; such contributions may be earmarked by the donors for special purposes;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/52

24	May	1989	Meeting	15	Adopted	without	vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1989/25); agenda item 11.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(13) the Secretary-General reported(14) on the implementation of the Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons. In reviewing the recent activities of Member States, organizations of the UN system, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, he stated that progress since 1983 in attaining the goals of the Programme of Action-namely, prevention, rehabilitation and equalization of opportunities-had been slow and frustrating at all levels.

National disability committees or similar co-ordinating bodies continued to play a crucial role in the implementation of the Programme of Action. In May, the Secretary-General appealed to Member States to establish or strengthen their co-ordinating committees on disability. The Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Office at Vienna prepared a study on the structure and functioning of those committees. Other activities of the Centre included disseminating information material, strengthening organizations of disabled persons, co-ordinating inter-agency collaboration in the field of disability, developing its own clearing-house capacity through a data-base system and promoting employment opportunities for disabled persons in the United Nations.

The Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Promotion of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons established contacts with some 200 organizations of or for disabled persons and organized a consultative meeting with international NGOs (Vienna, 8 and 9 June).

The seventh inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (Vienna, 6-8 December)(15) discussed employment and social security; statistics on disabled persons, including necessary adaptation of the International Classification of Impairment, Disability and Handicap; the second round of the monitoring and evaluation exercise on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons; alternative ways to mark the end of the Decade in 1992; and equal employment opportunities for disabled persons in the United Nations. It made a number of recommendations to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC).

Although progress was made in planning the global campaign to increase public awareness of the Decade and to raise funds for projects to benefit disabled people, the seed money needed to launch it had not yet been raised. The campaign was to be carried out under the auspices of the United Nations with the full participation of key international NGOs.

UNDP action. The Governing Council of UNDP, in June, requested⁽¹⁶⁾ the Administrator to provide the necessary support to enhance the capacity of the International Initiative against Avoidable Disablement⁽¹⁷⁾ and its network foundations to promote actions for the prevention and cure of the causes of disability. The International Initiative, established in 1983 with the joint sponsorship by UNDP, WHO and UNICEF, in collaboration with the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, sought to apply proven low-cost techniques for preventing and treating disabilities by incorporating them into health and other development programmes.

Human resources in the field of disability

In 1989, the International Meeting on Human Resources in the Field of Disability was convened (Tallinn, USSR, 14-22 August) by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs. It considered the situation of human resources development in the field of disability, particularly in developing countries. The Meeting adopted the Tallinn Guidelines for Action on Human Resources Development in the Field of Disability (see below) to promote the participation, training and employment of disabled persons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 44/70 without vote.

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and resolution 37/53 of 3 December 1982, in which, inter alia, it proclaimed the period 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Recalling also its resolution 43/98 of 8 December 1988, and reaffirming all of the relevant provisions contained therein, in particular the list of priorities for global activities and Programmes during the second half of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons set forth in the annex to the resolution,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/52 of 24 May 1989, in which the Council, inter alia, urged Member States, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide all possible support to the awareness and fund-raising campaigns to give added momentum to the Decade,

Noting the important work currently being undertaken by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on human rights and disability, which could serve as a useful basis for the continued efforts to ensure for disabled persons the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Taking into account the concrete measures already carried out by the Governments of Member States, the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to implement the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the Decade, and recognizing that much more should be done at all levels to improve the living conditions of persons with disabilities,

Mindful that Member States bear the ultimate responsibility for the implementation of the World Programme of Action and that national disability committees or similar co-ordinating bodies play a crucial role in this regard,

Recognizing the pivotal role of the United Nations in promoting the exchange of information, experience and expertise and closer regional and interregional co-operation towards more effective strategies and policies to advance the status and welfare of persons with disabilities,

Stressing that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat is the focal point within the United Nations for the implementation and monitoring of the World Programme of Action,

Noting with satisfaction the strengthening of the Disabled Persons Unit of the Centre through the generous financial support of some Governments,

Concerned that the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons continues to suffer from a lack of sufficient contributions and that, unless this declining trend is reversed and the resource capacities of the Fund are strengthened, many priority requests may not be met and the implementation of the World Programme of Action will be seriously affected,

Mindful that, since developing countries are experiencing difficulties in mobilizing resources, international co-operation should be encouraged to assist in national efforts to implement the World Programme of Action and the objectives of the Decade,

Noting that the International Meeting on Human Resources in the Field of Disability was held at Tallinn, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, from 14 to 22 August 1989 and that it adopted a nine-point strategy to promote the participation, training and employment of disabled persons, especially in developing countries,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General.

1. Reaffirms the validity of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons;

2. Reiterates that for the second half of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons special emphasis should be placed on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons;

3. Urges Member States, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to translate into action at all levels, as appropriate, the priorities for global activities and programmes during the second half of the Decade, such as those set forth in the annex to General Assembly resolution 43/98;

4. Renews its invitation to all States to give high priority to projects concerning the prevention of disabilities, rehabilitation and the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons within the framework of bilateral assistance, as well as financial support to strengthen organizations of disabled persons;

5. Invites Governments to participate actively in the international co-operation with a view to improving the living conditions of disabled persons by encouraging professional experts, in particular disabled persons, in various aspects of rehabilitation and the equalization of opportunity, including the expertise of retired persons;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to assist Member States in establishing and strengthening national committees on disability issues and similar co-ordinating bodies and to promote and support the establishment of strong national organizations of disabled persons;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to encourage all organs and bodies of the United Nations, including regional commissions, international organizations and specialized agencies, to take into account in their programmes and operational activities the specific needs of disabled persons;

8. Invites the Secretary-General, in connection with the feasibility study on the substantive, financial and administrative implications of alternative ways to mark the end of the Decade in 1992, called for by the General Assembly in its resolution 43/98, to request Member States, in consultation with organizations of disabled persons, to submit their comments to him by 28 February 1990 for inclusion in the background document to be discussed at the meeting of experts to be held at Helsinki in May 1990;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the regional commissions to enable them to promote technical co-operation activities and the sharing of national resources for personnel training, the exchange of information, policy and programme development and research and the participation of disabled persons;

10. Invites the Secretary-General and Member States to involve disabled persons to a greater extent in United Nations programmes and activities, including the provision of employment opportunities, and to give particular attention to improving the situation of special groups as outlined in the World Programme of Action, emphasizing the need for social justice and the participation of these groups in each sector of the society;

11. Invites the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to expand its close collaboration with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations active in the field of disability, in particular organizations of disabled persons, and to consult with them on a regular and systematic basis on matters relating to the implementation of the World Programme of Action, with a view to ensuring that the results of the Decade become meaningful and lasting;

12. Notes with satisfaction the progress made by the office of the Special Representative for the Promotion of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons;

13. Calls upon Member States, national committees, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, especially organizations of disabled persons, to assist in a global information and fund-raising campaign to publicize the Decade through all appropriate means;

14. Recognizes the important role of non-governmental organizations, especially those representing persons with disabilities, in the effective implementation of the World Programme of Action, in raising international awareness of the concerns of persons with disabilities and in monitoring and evaluating progress achieved during the Decade;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that contributions, in cash or in kind, related to the Decade are channelled into the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, while giving donors the option of earmarking contributions for special purposes;

16. Reaffirms that the resources of the Voluntary Fund should be used to support catalytic and innovative activities in order to implement further the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the Decade, with priority given, as appropriate, to programmes and projects of the least developed countries;

17. Invites Governments and non-governmental organizations to continue their contributions to the Voluntary Fund, and calls upon Governments and non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Voluntary Fund so as to enable it to respond effectively to the growing demand for assistance;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the Tallinn Guidelines for Action on Human Resources Development in the Field of Disability, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution, to the attention of Member States, national co-ordinating mechanisms in the field of disability, organizations of the United Nations system, other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations concerned with disabilities;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons".

ANNEX

Tallinn Guidelines for Action on Human Resources Development in the Field of Disability

Introduction

1. The International Meeting on Human Resources in the Field of Disability, convened at Tallinn, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, from 14 to 22 August 1989, having considered the situation of human resources development in the field of disability, particularly in developing countries, firmly believes that it is necessary to reinforce existing activities, as well as to undertake new and innovative ones, in order to promote the further development and continued progress of disabled persons.

2. Following the adoption of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons by the General Assembly, in its resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, there has been a growing need for higher priority to be given to the development of the human resources of disabled persons, with specific reference to education and training, employment, and science and technology. In this connection, the General Assembly, in its resolution 37/53 of 3 December 1982, proclaimed the period 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, encouraging Member States to utilize that period as one of the means to implement the World Programme of Action.

3. The main objectives of the World Programme of Action are to promote effective measures for the prevention of disability, for rehabilitation and for the realization of the goals of full participation and equality for persons with disabilities. To accomplish these goals, due regard must be paid to education, training and work opportunities.

4. While it is acknowledged that the living conditions of the general population in developing countries urgently need to be improved, the objectives of the World Programme of Action call for the situation of disabled persons to be given special attention during the remainder of the Decade and beyond. Effective implementation of the World Programme of Action will make an important contribution to the process of development of societies through the mobilization of more human resources.

5. While it is also acknowledged that a number of countries have already initiated or carried out activities within the framework of the World Programme of Action, further concerted efforts should be made to integrate the human resources development of disabled persons into intersectoral planning at the national level.

Guiding philosophy

6. Human resources development is a process centred on the human person that seeks to realize the full potential and capabilities of human beings. This process is fundamental to the concept of equalization of opportunities, in keeping with the goals of the World Programme of Action.

7. Through human resources development, disabled persons are able effectively to exercise their rights of full citizenship. As full citizens, they have the same rights and responsibilities as other members of society, including the right to life, as declared in international human rights instruments. They also have the same choices as other citizens in the social, cultural, economic and political life of their communities.

8. Because persons with disabilities are agents of their own destiny rather than objects of care, Governments and organizations need to reflect this perception in their policies and programmes. This means that disabled persons, as individuals and as members of organizations, should be involved in the decision-making process as equal partners.

9. The abilities of disabled persons and their families should be strengthened through community-based supplementary services provided by Governments and non-governmental organizations. These services should promote self-determination and enable disabled persons to participate in the development of society. Governments should recognize and support the role of organizations of disabled persons in enabling those persons to take charge of their own lives.

Strategies

A. Participation of persons with disabilities

10. A statutory basis is required to enable disabled persons to participate as full citizens in decision-making at all levels of the planning, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes.

11. To facilitate the full participation of disabled persons and to enable them to exercise their rights as citizens, access to information is essential. To this end, all information has to be adapted to appropriate formats. These information formats may include Braille script, large print, audio-visual media and sign-language interpretation. Information channels should include television, radio, newspapers and postal services. Governments should work with organizations of disabled persons to identify appropriate information formats and channels to reach disabled citizens.

12. Governments should adopt, enforce and fund legally binding standards and regulations to improve access for persons with disabilities, ensuring that buildings, streets, and road, sea and air transport are barrier-free, architecturally and in all other ways. Communication systems and security and safety measures should be developed and adapted to meet the needs of disabled citizens.

13. To facilitate the recruitment of disabled persons and to assist private-sector industries in hiring them, organizations at the national, regional and international levels, including the United Nations, should identify and maintain listings of qualified disabled candidates.

B. Strengthening of grass-roots initiatives

14. Local community initiatives should be especially promoted. Disabled persons and their families should be encouraged to form grass-roots organizations, with governmental recognition of their importance and governmental support in the form of financing and training.

15. Governmental and non-governmental organizations concerned with disability issues should allow disabled persons to participate as equal partners.

16. The efficient functioning of governmental and non-governmental organizations concerned with disability calls for training in organizational and management skills.

C. Promotion of an integrated approach

17. Overall national policy frameworks with supporting legislation should be developed.

18. The essence of an integrated approach is the inclusion of disability issues in all government ministries and at every level of governmental policy and planning. National co-ordination bodies, with linkages at the local, regional and interregional levels, should be established or strengthened. The membership of those bodies should include all government ministries, legislative committees and non-governmental organizations, particularly organizations of disabled persons. Those bodies should review existing policies, plans and programmes, identify existing and projected resources and monitor and evaluate the implementation of national policies.

19. National development programmes should include disability components.

20. Disabled women should be included in the existing national and regional programmes aimed at women.

21. At the level of service delivery, an integrated approach entails co-operation and referral among professionals working in organizational settings that provide educational, vocational, health and social services.

D. Promotion of education and training

22. The early years are critical in the overall development of a disabled child and for the fostering of positive attitudes towards the child. Specific programmes and training materials should be developed to address these needs during the formative infant and pre-school years.

23. Education at the primary, secondary and higher levels should be available to disabled persons within the regular educational system and in regular school settings, as well as in vocational training programmes. When such education is provided to deaf students, teachers and/or interpreters who are proficient in the indigenous sign language must be provided.

24. Special education programmes and schools that promote the indigenous sign language and the indigenous deaf culture must be available to deaf people. Deaf people should be employed in such programmes and schools.

25. Cost-effective alternatives to segregated school facilities should be developed and implemented by Governments at the national and local levels. These alternatives include special education teachers as consultants to regular education teachers, resource rooms with specialized personnel and materials, special classrooms in regular schools and interpreters for deaf students.

26. The education of disabled children should involve the co-operation and concerted efforts of health and social services, as well as of teachers and parents. It should provide support measures, such as technical aids, especially adapted pedagogical approaches, and incentives for teachers.

27. The content and quality of education and training should ensure the acquisition of skills that are economically viable and that provide opportunities for work. Career education and vocational training programmes should be available to ensure the transition of disabled students into the economic mainstream.

28. In addition to being offered formal skills training and education, disabled persons should be offered training in social and self-help skills to prepare them for independent living. Special efforts should be made to promote education and skills training for disabled girls and women, in both urban and rural areas.

29. General teacher-training curricula should include a course of study in skills for teaching disabled children and young persons in regular schools.

30. Each Government should have a national plan for training and employing an adequate number of health, education and vocational professionals in rehabilitation. Persons with disabilities should be recruited for such training and employment.

31. In fields such as education, labour, health and social services, law, architecture and technical development, which are often involved in the different aspects of rehabilitation, professional training should include training on the rights and needs of disabled people. Professionals in these fields should also be made aware of the resources available for disabled persons so that appropriate referrals can be made or services provided.

32. Appropriate technology should be considered essential for the utilization of available resources. This may include simple, universally available equipment, as well as computer technology.

E. Promotion of employment

33. Disabled persons have the right to be trained for and to work on equal terms in the regular labour force. Community-based rehabilitation programmes should be encouraged to provide better job opportunities in developing countries. Use should be made of the vocational services, guidance and training, placement, employment and related services that already exist for workers in general. On-the-job training may be more effective than conventional training.

34. General development programmes that provide loans, training and equipment for income-generating activities should include disabled persons.

35. Employment opportunities can be promoted, primarily, by measures relating to employment and salary standards that apply to all workers and, secondarily, by measures offering special support and incentives. In addition to formal employment, opportunities should be broadened to include self-employment, co-operatives and other group income-generating schemes. Where special national employment drives have been launched for youth and unemployed persons, disabled persons should be included. Disabled persons should be actively recruited, and when a disabled candidate and a non-disabled candidate are equally qualified, the disabled candidate should be chosen.

36. Organizations of employers and of workers should adopt, in co-operation with organizations of disabled persons, policies that promote the training and employment of disabled persons, including women, and non-disabled persons on an equal basis.

37. Policies for affirmative action should be formulated and implemented to increase the employment of disabled women. Governments and non-governmental organizations should support the creation of income-generating projects involving disabled women.

F. Provisions for funding

38. In general, funding should be allocated through regular sectoral budgeting systems. A national rehabilitation fund may be established to facilitate the employment or self-employment of disabled persons. This fund could be used to cover the costs of training, equipment and initial capital outlay.

39. Similarly, funds should be established for loans to small-scale pilot projects at the grass-roots level; such funds could be administered locally with the use of simple procedures.

G. Promotion of community awareness

40. To increase community understanding of the rights, needs and potentials of disabled persons, collaborative efforts with disabled persons and their organizations are required to develop and promote a flow of information using mass media, especially film, television, radio and print media. In particular, information for disabled persons and their families on all aspects of living with a disability should be as clear and uncomplicated as possible.

41. Community awareness programmes should include specific strategies for the prevention of disability. Government efforts aimed at early identification, intervention and prevention should be strengthened through community awareness and community involvement in programmes on disability.

42. Persons with mental disabilities (mental retardation or mental illness) or multiple disabilities are among the most stigmatized groups of citizens. They have the right to make choices, take risks, control their own lives and live in the community. Their adult status, abilities and aspirations must be respected and reinforced by their inclusion in decision-making, although many may need individual advocacy to be clearly understood.

43. It should be acknowledged that people with mental and multiple disabilities benefit from education, skills training and work opportunities. For many of these people, opportunities need to be individualized. Support is required to help them and their families to establish and maintain a positive life-style.

44. The World Programme of Action should be translated into all national languages, through governmental action. Braille, large print and simplified versions should also be made available by the appropriate media to ensure as wide a distribution as possible to all citizens, including disabled persons, their families and non-governmental and governmental organizations.

H. Improving the methodology for human resources development

45. Policies and programmes for human resources development concerning disabled persons should be based on an assessment of their needs and resources as well as on the potential of existing development programmes and services to meet those needs. The implementation of such policies and programmes should be periodically monitored, with adjustments made to ensure effective implementation.

46. Evaluation should be built into programmes at the planning stage so that their overall efficacy in fulfilling policy objectives can be assessed. Persons with disabilities should play an active role in developing the criteria for monitoring and evaluation.

47. Increased attention should be given to services for people with hearing, speech, mental, intellectual or multiple disabilities.

48. The requirements of particular groups, such as disabled children, disabled women, the disabled elderly, disabled migrants and refugees, should also be recognized and met.

49. Governmental and non-governmental organizations should utilize recent developments in education through communications media, also known as distance education, which has been found to be an appropriate methodology in human resources development in the field of disability.

50. The local use of appropriate technologies for producing such items as wheel chairs, prosthetic devices and mobility aids, as well as aids for hearing and seeing, should take into account the technical, socio-economic and cultural conditions in the particular society. Each country should have a national system for the delivery of rehabilitation aids.

I. Regional and international co-operation

51. Training programmes in human resources development in the field of disability should be strengthened by collaborative efforts at the regional and/or subregional levels. Such programmes should be co-ordinated through existing intergovernmental and regional organizations, including those of disabled persons.

52. International development aid projects should include a component specifically aimed at supporting organizations of disabled persons and training their members. In addition, employment opportunities should be made available to disabled individuals within these projects.

53. All international development assistance programmes directed at macro-level planning and development, such as those in agriculture or education, should include a specific component ensuring the participation of disabled persons in such programmes.

54. At both the national and interregional levels, Governments should strongly support collaboration with non-governmental agencies in specific areas of disability, to ensure co-ordination and to prevent duplication of services.

55. Linkages between organizations of disabled persons in developed and developing countries should be strengthened. This can be done through the exchange of information, training and meetings to provide forums for disabled persons to share experiences on strategic approaches. Workshops and field studies should be organized to train trainers and the management personnel of organizations of disabled persons.

56. Implementation of these Guidelines relies on effective action at the national level. This action should be supplemented by concerted efforts at the international level, particularly on the part of the United Nations and its focal point for the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, as well as relevant United Nations organizations and specialized agencies. National and international non-governmental organizations, in particular organizations of disabled persons, should be fully involved.

General Assembly resolution 44/70

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/755) without vote, 9 November (meeting 37); 35-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.20), orally revised; agenda item 101. UN trust fund

The Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons since 1980 had provided over $2 million in seed money grants to 110 projects of benefit to disabled persons.⁽¹⁴⁾ It received more than 70 requests for assistance in the 18-month period ending June 1989. Of those, 25 were approved for funding, involving a resource disbursement of $353,651; of those grants, 8 were in Africa, 7 in Asia and the Pacific, 2 in Latin America and the Caribbean, 1 in Western Asia, and 7 were interregional and global. Projects included training, technical exchange, data collection and applied research, support to organizations of or for disabled persons, promotional activities and technical co-operation on disability policies and programmes.

At the 1989 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 30 and 31 October), a total of $237,035 from 11 Governments was pledged or paid to the Fund for 1990.

Food and agriculture

Food problems

World agricultural and food production rose 3.2 per cent in 1989, exceeding the average of the 1980s by a substantial margin. This increase mainly reflected a recovery in North America after the 1988 drought and a moderate recovery in Eastern Europe and the USSR from the 1988 shortfall. Although developing countries increased agricultural and food production by 2.5 per cent, 64 of them failed to increase per capita food production. In a report to the World Food Council (WFC) on the current world food situation,(1) the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) provided an overview of the food supply, food emergencies, cereal stocks, food imports by developing countries and food aid.

In Africa, food supplies in the sub-Saharan region remained stable in most of the 45 countries, but critical shortages persisted in several countries, including Ethiopia and the Sudan. Shortfalls in food supplies requiring exceptional or emergency assistance were reported also in Afghanistan, Haiti, Lebanon, Nicaragua, Peru, Samoa and Sri Lanka.

Global cereal production reached 1,867 million tons, 123 million tons more than in 1988; however, world cereal stocks were expected to decline by 13 million tons to 293 million tons, which would represent 17 per cent of total cereal consumption, the minimum level estimated by FAO to safeguard world food security.

In the 1989/90 season, cereal imports by developing countries were expected to increase by 3.5 per cent to 121 million tons; wheat, 71.3 million tons; coarse grain, 39.5 million tons; and rice, 10.4 million tons. Food aid in cereals for the same season was estimated at 11.6 million tons, compared to 10 million tons in 1988/89. The increase reflected additional allocations, mainly to Poland and Romania, from the European Economic Community, the United States and other donors. Total shipments to low-income food-deficit countries were expected to be 8.5 million tons.

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(2) the Secretary-General submitted an updated comprehensive report(3) on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products and on the liberalization of international agricultural trade. He discussed the importance of agricultural production and trade to developing countries, global and regional trends in this area, and the current situation and short-term prospects for international agricultural markets, including food security. Suggestions were made on ways and means of increasing the share of developing countries in international agricultural trade, while avoiding the potentially adverse short-term effects on these countries, in particular those that imported food.

WFC activities

The 36-member WFC, the highest international body dealing with food problems, held its fifteenth ministerial session(4) (Cairo, Egypt, 22-25 May) in 1989, and deliberated on the implementation of the Cyprus Initiative against Hunger in the World.(5) The Council's discussions were based on its President's report,(6) comprised of a review of global hunger 15 years after the World Food Conference,(7) an assessment of the effectiveness of selected policies and programmes against hunger and malnutrition, and a proposed programme of co-operative action. The Council noted that hunger was growing and existed everywhere, including in many developed countries, despite the fact that the world was feeding more people than at the time of the World Food Conference. It stated that the elimination of hunger and poverty must be made a central objective of national policies, emphasizing the importance of supportive changes in social and cultural policies, economic reforms, employment, judicious population policies and comprehensive food strategies. The Programme of Co-operative Action was adopted as a framework for individual and collective action to combat hunger. The Council decided to refer to its conclusions and recommendations as the Cairo Declaration.

As a follow-up to the Cairo Declaration, WFC organized a regional consultation for Latin America and the Caribbean (San Jose, Costa Rica, 5-6 December). The meeting reviewed the hunger and poverty situation, identified priorities to improve the food security of the poor and discussed the issue of international co-operation and assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/88 without vote.

Food and agriculture

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned that hunger, malnutrition and poverty continue to increase in large areas of the third world while the world has the capacity to provide adequate food for every human being,

Noting with concern that, although the growth of world agricultural production has to some degree slowed down, tensions concerning trade in agricultural markets remain serious, notably owing to the persistence and, in some cases, intensification of agricultural protectionism and support measures, including, among other problems, import restrictions and export subsidies in some developed countries,

Taking note of the report of the World Food Council on the work of its fifteenth session and of the report of the Secretary-General on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products and the liberalization of international agricultural trade,

1. Welcomes the renewed international commitment to fight hunger, malnutrition and poverty expressed in the Cyprus Initiative against Hunger in the World and in the Cairo Declaration of the World Food Council;

2. Welcomes also the Programme of Co-operative Action annexed to the Cairo Declaration, as a framework for concrete action against hunger and poverty by Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations;

3. Urges developed countries that are in a position to do so to increase their official development assistance flows and to adopt aid strategies that focus in particular on meeting the needs of the poorest countries and peoples and on improving their food production capabilities;

4. Stresses the urgent need for substantial progress in stimulating food production in developing countries and the importance of increasing domestic food production for stimulating national economic growth and social progress in those countries and helping to resolve the problem of hunger and malnutrition in an effective way;

5. Calls upon all countries to continue to respond to food emergency situations promptly and flexibly, in conformity with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 43/131 of 8 December 1988;

6. Reaffirm that the right to food is a human right that should be guaranteed to all people and, in that context, that, as a general principle, food should not be used as an instrument of political pressure at either the national or the international level;

7. Stresses that the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations presents a unique opportunity to develop a more open, viable and durable trading system, to reverse the disquieting rise in protectionism and to bring agriculture under the strengthened and more operationally effective rules and disciplines of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, in accordance with the relevant parts of the Punta del Este Declaration and the mid-term review of the Uruguay Round, taking into account the need to avoid potentially adverse effects on developing countries, especially those that import food, and bearing in mind the overall benefits of trade liberalization;

8. Urges the World Food Council, within its mandate, to continue:

(a) To assess the overall impact of structural adjustment programmes in developing countries on the nutritional levels of their populations, especially among children and low-income groups, and to suggest remedial measures, including ways of stimulating the provision of resources to eliminate the suffering of those groups;

(b) To assess the potential impact of liberalizing international trade in agricultural and tropical products on all countries, and especially on the food security and development efforts of developing countries, and, in this context, to maintain an active interest in the progress and outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;

(c) To promote activities related to food security and agricultural trade as well as to regional and South-South co-operation in food and agriculture, within the context of economic growth and the development needs of developing countries;

(d) To stimulate progress in and contribute more actively to the full implementation of the food policy and programme components of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

9. Calls upon bilateral, multilateral and non-governmental international organizations to improve the co-ordination of their activities in support of efforts to fight hunger and poverty in developing countries;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the World Food Council, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to prepare for the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session an updated comprehensive report on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products and the liberalization of international agricultural trade.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/88

26 July 1989 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/137) without vote, 24 July (meeting 27); draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (E/1989/C.1/L.10), orally revised; agenda item 7 (b).

Food aid

CFA activities

At its twenty-seventh session (Rome, Italy, 29 May-3 June),⁽⁸⁾ the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA)—the governing body of the World Food Programme (WFP)—conducted its fourteenth annual review of food aid policies and programmes and approved the WFP Executive Director's annual report covering 1988.⁽⁹⁾ It approved the strong rural bias in WFP-assisted projects and urged the strengthening of agricultural and rural development assistance by improving planning and implementation and by training local personnel. CFA supported the Executive Director's proposal to increase WFP assistance on a case-by-case basis to help least developed countries bear the costs of internal transport, storage and handling of food provided by WFP, and to sell limited amounts of food, within existing authorities and guidelines, for that purpose. Endorsing the comprehensive WFP sectoral guidelines on women and development, it urged intensified support for women's access to credit, land and other factors of production, as well as investment in social services that would improve women's participation in production sectors. CFA also endorsed new funding mechanisms for protracted emergency operations for refugees and displaced persons; from 1990, $15 million would be set aside each year for sudden emergencies, while situations that had endured for more than one year would be funded from a subset of regular resources to be contributed separately by donors over and above their pledges, which could be supplemented by up to $30 million annually from regular resources.

The Committee approved 17 projects with a total cost of $300.6 million, representing a food commitment of approximately 718,600 tons, as well as budget increases for five approved projects, making a total cost of $15.8 million.

At its twenty-eighth session (Rome, 11-13 December),⁽¹⁰⁾ CFA approved 14 projects with a combined cost of $225.9 million, representing a food commitment of approximately 760,000 tons. The Committee also approved the 1990 WFP operations and resources for the relief and rehabilitation of Afghan refugees and displaced persons.

The fourteenth annual report covering WFP's activities in 1988 was submitted to the Economic and Social Council in June 1989.⁽¹¹⁾ The Council, by decision 1989/189 of 28 July, took note of the report.

WFP activities

In 1989, WFP—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and FAO—continued to provide developing countries with food aid for development and emergency relief.⁽¹²⁾ The volume of food aid deliveries declined due to the reduction in aggregate cereal production in the major food-exporting developed countries in 1987 and 1988. Twenty-three per cent of all food aid was channelled through WFP, which delivered 1.6 million tons of cereals and 262,000 tons of non-cereals, compared to 2.4 million tons and 311,000 tons in 1988, respectively. In value terms, nearly half of the food aid, including that for development and emergency purposes, was to least developed countries.

WFP provided 8.4 million people with emergency food assistance. A record 680,000 tons of food, valued at over $157 million, was purchased using its own resources and funds provided through the Food Aid Convention (FAC), the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR), and on behalf of bilateral donors and other UN organizations. More than two thirds of the commodities were purchased in developing countries.

During the year, more than 3,500 government officials from 35 countries participated in WFP training programmes in the areas of project management, monitoring and evaluation, food storage and distribution.

Development assistance

At the end of 1989, WFP had 288 active development projects with a total value of $3.45 billion—193 agricultural and rural development projects valued at $2.23 billion and 95 human resources development projects valued at $1.23 billion—155 of which had environmental components.⁽¹³⁾ WFP shipped over 1 million tons of food with a total value of $486 million to development projects; a further $575 million (representing 1.58 million tons of food) was committed for future delivery to 43 new development projects or expansions of existing projects as well as budget increases for ongoing ones.

Low-income food-deficit countries received 80 per cent of 1989 commitments for development activities. With $1.2 billion worth of ongoing projects, sub-Saharan Africa received the largest share—32 per cent of total WFP development assistance. However, new commitments for projects in 1989 were $141 million, compared to $266 million committed in 1988. The region also received $15.4 million of non-food assistance. New development commitments in 1989 to other regions were as follows: $184 million (32 per cent) to Asia and the Pacific; $106 million (18 per cent) to Latin America and the Caribbean; and $144 million (25 per cent) to North Africa and the Middle East.

During the year, 22 projects for protracted assistance to refugees and displaced persons were approved for 1990 under new funding modalities, entailing a total commitment of 857,000 tons of food with a value of $265.6 million.

Emergency operations

Nearly 8.4 million people in 24 countries received emergency food assistance through WFP's 46 emergency operations approved in 1989. The year's commitment under those programmes of 259,000 tons of food, valued at more than $93 million, was considerably lower than in 1988. The decline was a result of the introduction of the umbrella programme for Afghan refugees and of the protracted refugee and displaced person projects, both funded under separate subsets of WFP resources. Sub-Saharan Africa received 76 per cent of the emergency resources; Europe, North Africa and the Near East, 13 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 8 per cent; and Latin America and the Caribbean, 3 per cent.

Man-made disasters required 78 per cent of WFP's emergency resources. These disasters included new situations in El Salvador, Mauritania and Senegal, Rwanda and Burundi, Namibia, Turkey, and Uganda. Six countries (Ethiopia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania) received assistance to overcome drought or crop failures.

In 1989, WFP participated in "Operation Lifeline Sudan", the relief effort launched by the United Nations, and transported some 40,000 tons of food aid to the war-devastated country. Its costs were funded by pledges from donors amounting to $21.9 million (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

WFP resources

Pledges and contributions

For the 1989-1990 biennium, combined total resources contributed or pledged to WFP regular resources, FAC, IEFER, the Afghanistan programme and other efforts reached nearly $1.4 billion, including some 3.6 million tons of food. By the end of 1989, 73 countries had pledged just over $1 billion, or 72 per cent of the target. Of that amount, 75 per cent was in the form of commodities, with 25 per cent in cash.

Contributions to IEFER for 1989 amounted to some 400,000 tons of food, worth $129 million. In addition, 188,000 tons of food for Afghan refugees was pledged, but was accounted for separately starting 1 April 1989. Twenty-three donors, including four developing countries, contributed to IEFER. Had assistance for Afghan refugees been included in the IEFER total, contributions would have exceeded the 1989 target of 500,000 tons.

CFA proposed a pledging target of $1.5 billion for the WFP regular resources for the 1991-1992 biennium, of which one third should be in cash.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1989/121 without vote.

Target for World Food Programme pledges for the period 1991-1992

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the comments of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme concerning the minimum target for voluntary contributions to the Programme for the period 1991-1992,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2462(XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and 2682(XXV) of 11 December 1970, in which the Assembly recognized the experience gained by the World Food Programme in the field of multilateral food aid,

1. Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the draft resolution annexed to the present resolution;

2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to undertake the necessary preparations for the announcement of pledges at the Fourteenth Pledging Conference for the World Food Programme.

ANNEX

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/121

28 July 1989 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1989/135) without vote, 24 July (meeting 17); draft by Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (E/1989/107); agenda item 8.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/230 without vote.

Target for World Food Programme pledges for the period 1991-1992

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 2095(XX) of 20 December 1965 to the effect that the World Food Programme is to be reviewed before each pledging conference,

Recalling also the provisions of paragraph 4 of its resolution 42/164 of 11 December 1987 stipulating that, subject to the review provided for in its resolution 2095(XX), the next pledging conference, at which Governments and appropriate donor organizations should be invited to pledge contributions for 1991 and 1992, with a view to reaching such a target as may then be recommended by the General Assembly and by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, should be convened at the latest early in 1990,

Noting that the Programme was reviewed by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme at its twenty-seventh session and by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989,

Having considered Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/121 of 28 July 1989, and the recommendation of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Recognizing the value of and continuing need for multilateral food aid as provided by the World Food Programme, both as a form of capital investment and for meeting emergency food needs,

1. Establishes for the period 1991-1992 a target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme of 1.5 billion United States dollars, of which not less than one third should be in cash and/or services, and expresses the hope that those resources will be substantially augmented by additional contributions from other sources in view of the prospective volume of sound project requests and the capacity of the Programme to operate at a higher level;

2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and appropriate donor organizations to make every effort to ensure that the target is fully attained;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to convene a pledging conference for this purpose at United Nations Headquarters early in 1990.

General Assembly resolution 44/230

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/832) by consensus, 15 November (meeting 34); draft recommended by ESC res. 1989/121 (A/C.2/44/L.3); agenda item 12.

1986 Food Aid Convention

In 1989, six States (Belgium, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom) became parties to the Food Aid Convention, 1986, bringing the total number to 20.(14) The Food Aid Convention, together with the Wheat Trade Convention, 1986, constitutes the International Wheat Agreement, 1986.

Nutrition

Advances in technology, the spread of knowledge and the adoption of effective policies over the past few decades had raised food production to a level sufficient to feed everyone on earth, yet 500 to 730 million people were still chronically deprived of food, according to the report(1) prepared by the United Nations on the world social situation. Unequal food distribution, the lack of food purchasing power and the fall in food production due to civil strife and natural disasters in a number of countries contributed to the problem. Of all those deprived of adequate food in the late 1980s, 60 per cent lived in Asia, 25 per cent in Africa, 10 per cent in Latin America and 5 per cent in West Asia.

While global per capita dietary energy supplies increased from 2,340 calories a day in 1961-1963 to 2,666 in 1983-1985, 42 developing countries experienced a decline. With regard to daily per capita consumption of dietary energy, there were 42 countries, more than half of them in Africa, where it was less than the required minimum.

Malnutrition was especially severe in developing countries owing to widespread deficiencies in the intake of vitamin A, iron and iodine. Vitamin A deficiency was the largest single cause of the estimated total of 40 million people world wide considered to be blind. Some new cases of vitamin A deficiency occur among 700,000 children every year.

Almost 50 per cent of women of reproductive age in developing countries suffered from anaemia, caused by iron deficiency. About 800 million people were at risk of iodine deficiency, most of them in Asia, with an estimated 300 million in China and 200 million in India.

In industrialized countries, both those with centrally planned and market economies, malnutrition was a problem caused by excess dietary fat, due to over-consumption of animal protein (beef, pork), saturated fat (palm oil, coconut oil) and dairy products, which scientists and epidemiologists have associated with certain illnesses. Many individuals had started to reduce their daily intake of dietary fat and adopted a more active life-style, for example, by engaging in physical exercise.

UNU activities. The alleviation of hunger and malnutrition remained a priority of the Council of the United Nations University (UNU), according to its report(2) on its 1989 activities. To that end, UNU continued its research, training and information dissemination activities in the areas of food, nutrition and biotechnology.

The first phase of the joint regional project with the Association of African Universities was under way, aimed at co-ordinating Africa's scientific and technological resources in the areas of food and nutrition. Workshops were held on the development of high protein-energy foods from grain legume sources (Ghana, 25 September-4 November) and on research planning and management for directors of food and nutrition institutions (Douala, Cameroon, 20 November-2 December).

The rapid assessment procedure (RAP) methodology, pioneered by UNU and UNICEF with WHO endorsement, operates through participant observation and focused group discussions; it had proved to be an efficient tool for producing and analysing information. A number of organizations were using RAP, and its wider distribution in the form of a video was planned. A workshop on using RAP for child survival programmes was held at Cairo, Egypt, in July for participants from North Africa and the Middle East.

ACC activities. The Sub-Committee on Nutrition and its Advisory Group on Nutrition, at its fifteenth session (New York, 27 February-3 March),(3) drew the attention of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) to the objectives of the fourth United Nations development decade (1990s) in the area of nutrition and proposed an international conference on nutrition. It also addressed nutrition in times of disaster (see below) and the significance of small body size in populations. A symposium on women and nutrition, held during the session, considered the nutritional status of women and their role in determining nutrition of households and societies. It recommended action for direct nutrition interventions for women as well as for the strengthening of their roles as an important step in improving nutrition for all. The Sub-Committee also examined work in various areas, such as a report updating the nutrition situation; economic adjustment and nutrition; food security in Africa; iodine, vitamin A and iron deficiencies; the International Dietary Energy Consultative Group; the International Network of Food Data Bases; and the Inter-Agency Food and Nutrition Surveillance Programme.

ACC, at its 1989 second regular session in October, welcomed the joint initiative of FAO and WHO, following the proposal of the Sub-Committee, to convene the international conference on nutrition in 1992 or 1993.(5)

Nutrition in times of disaster

Following the 1988 Conference on Nutrition in Times of Disaster (Geneva, 27-30 September 1988), convened under the auspices of the ACC Sub-Committee on Nutrition and the International Nutrition Planners Forum and organized by WHO and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, ACC decided to bring to the attention of the Economic and Social Council a statement issued by the Conference.(6) The decision and the statement were transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General.(7) The statement noted that famine and disasters in the past 15 years had resulted in unprecedented numbers of people depending for survival upon international food aid, and that the volume of emergency resources had fallen short of the escalating needs. The Conference considered that 1,900 kilocalories per person (including all essential nutrients) was a minimum daily requirement under emergency conditions. It urged donors to help the United Nations achieve that goal, to increase their emergency resource allocation and to diversify the composition of food aid to meet the nutritional standards. It also encouraged efforts to strengthen the capacity of Governments of affected countries to cope with their own disasters.

By decision 1989/175 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of ACC's decision.

Chapter XII

Human resources, social and cultural development

In 1989, the United Nations advanced efforts to promote human resources and social and cultural development, which involved work in numerous interrelated areas including literacy, the family, crime prevention and criminal justice.

In a report on the world social situation, the Secretary-General cited economic adversity as one of the most prominent features of the current social situation, noted a widespread demand for a more efficient use of resources in promoting social welfare, and suggested that the private sector and voluntary associations should play a more important role in social development. The report included for the first time a section on the impact of structural adjustment on the social development of developing countries. In addition, the report emphasized the social aspects of rural development.

The Commission for Social Development held its thirty-first session in March. It reviewed trends and strategies for social integration, popular participation, and policies for the advancement of specific social groups. On its recommendation, the Economic and Social Council adopted a series of resolutions.

Concerning crime prevention and criminal justice, efforts were made to improve the functioning of the UN work programme, to promote implementation of international standards and norms, and to increase international co-operation. The Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions recommended by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth (1988) session.

With respect to cultural development, the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) conducted the first biennial review on the progress of the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997).

Human resources

Human resources development

Responding to a 1987 Economic and Social Council request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General in May submitted a report⁽²⁾ on human resources development and the activities of the UN system in that field. The concept of human resources development, which originally had been defined narrowly in terms of labour supply or the provision of skills, was now widely accepted as a process of human-centred development that sought to enhance the full capacities and capabilities of human beings, he said. Deteriorating economic conditions in many countries in the 1980s had brought about a reversal of previous positive trends in economic growth, and the adjustment process imposed on many developing countries had curbed spending on social services. A renewed interest in human resources development was partly a reaction to the set-backs that had accompanied the adjustment process in most countries; other factors included the spectre of labour redundancy resulting from new labour-saving technologies, changing global production patterns and their impact on labour markets, and problems encountered in efforts to upgrade and adapt human resources in an era of rapid change and world-wide economic instability. Although there was no commonly accepted definition of what in practice constituted human resources development, some progress was made in defining for the UN system a workable and integrative approach. Referring to recommendations made at the 1987 joint meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General concluded that there seemed to be considerable scope for all UN organizations to increase their co-operation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The organizations of the UN system could work together to prepare joint technical advisory notes as well as an agenda of action, including country-specific support policies and programmes related to human resources development.

The Committee for Development Planning, at its twenty-fifth session (New York, 9-12 May),⁽⁴⁾ stated that the emergence of a new pragmatism in economic policy-making called for an international development strategy for the 1990s. It identified four key elements of the strategy, including greater concern for human development, and recommended that over the next 10 years, people be placed firmly at the centre of the development process and emphasis be placed on the areas of education and training, health and nutrition, and housing.

Communications. On 15 May,⁽⁵⁾ Ethiopia transmitted the text of the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation, adopted by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) on 10 April. The Framework set the attainment of food self-sufficiency as the very first goal towards the achievement of overall well-being for the people through a sustained improvement in their living standards. At the tenth meeting of the Conference of Heads of Government of the Caribbean Community (Grand Anse, Grenada, 3-7 July),⁽⁶⁾ the future of the Community was considered, and it was acknowledged that countries of the region must place greater emphasis on human resources development, improved competitiveness and more active promotion of service.

Human resources in the field of disability

An international meeting was held at Tallinn, USSR, from 14 to 22 August 1989, to consider the situation of human resources development in the field of disability, particularly in developing countries. The Tallinn Guidelines for Action on Human Resources Development in the Field of Disability (see PART THREE, Chapter XI) were adopted at its conclusion.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/120 without vote.

Development of human resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the crucial role of human resources in the socio-economic development process, and recognizing that the development of human resources is both an essential pre-condition for development and the ultimate aim of development,

Bearing in mind that it is the sovereign right and responsibility of each country to formulate and implement national strategies, policies, plans and programmes for human resources development as part of the overall development process and within the context of its specific national development needs and objectives,

Recognizing that the integrated and concerted strategies, policies, plans and programmes for development in the 1990s should place greater emphasis on human resources development,

Emphasizing that many developing countries are devoting a considerable share of their limited resources to the development of their human resources,

Taking into account the continuing evolution of the concept of human resources development and the consequent variety in the scope and nature of the experience and technical capacity of organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in contributing to the promotion of human resources development in their respective fields of competence, and convinced of the need for greater effectiveness, clarity and co-ordination in carrying out such activities,

Aware that the development of human resources is a long-term and multidisciplinary process requiring an integrated approach,

Believing that a more common operational definition of human resources development, reflecting the views, priorities and objectives of Member States, would enhance the effectiveness and impact of activities of the United Nations system in this field,

Noting with satisfaction the contribution to the elaboration of the concept of human resources development made by the Khartoum Declaration: Towards a Human-focused Approach to Socio-economic Recovery and Development in Africa, the Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development in the ESCAP Region and the African Alternative Framework for Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-economic Recovery and Transformation,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/81 of 8 July 1987 on the development of human resources,

Also recalling decision 88/29 of 1 July 1988 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its experience in human resources development,

Bearing in mind that human resources development is an important area of activity for organizations of the United Nations system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on human resources development and the activities of the United Nations system in that field;

2. Recognizes the important work already done by relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including funding bodies, in the field of human resources development, and invites them to enhance those activities;

3. Notes that the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme intends to issue a report on human development, and invites him to continue to prepare the report in close co-operation with the other organizations of the United Nations system concerned;

4. Reaffirms the need for an integrated and multidisciplinary approach to all aspects of human resources development as an important feature of the programmes of work of the relevant mandated organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that deal with economic and social development;

5. Stresses the continuing need to strengthen and expand the human resource base of developing countries and their capacity to face the challenges of development and accelerated technological change in order to achieve sustained development, and calls upon the international community to support the efforts of developing countries in this area, in accordance with their national priorities and plans;

6. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including funding bodies, to co-operate effectively with developing countries in support of the development and implementation of their strategies, policies, plans and programmes for human resources development and to promote the effective co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system in this field;

7. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade to consider the issue of human resources development in the light of its economic and social impact on the overall process of development;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance the efforts made in the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to elaborate a more common operational definition of human resources development in order to strengthen the effectiveness of programmes in this field in accordance with specific national development objectives and needs;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to entrust the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, within his competence and functions as set out in General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, with the responsibility for overall co-ordination of the activities of relevant secretariat units of the organizations of the United Nations system in the field of human resources development;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution in the context of the reports on operational activities for development and on the world social situation and to include in those reports recommendations for improving operational arrangements and focusing support, especially financial and technical support, for more commonly delineated human resources development activities.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/120

28 July 1989 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1989/135) without vote, 24 July (meeting 17); 4-nation draft (E/1989/C.3/L.15/Rev.1); agenda item 8.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/213 without vote.

Developing human resources for development

The General Assembly,

Affirming that the human being is at the centre of all development activities,

Recognizing that human resources development is a broad concept encompassing many components and requiring integrated and concerted strategies, policies, plans and programmes to ensure the development of the full potential of human beings,

Recalling resolution 40/213 of 17 December 1985 on the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1986/73 of 23 July 1986 and 1987/81 of 8 July 1987 on the development of human resources,

Emphasizing that education and the acquisition and upgrading of skills, as well as continued technical training, are inextricably linked to the economic growth and sustained development of all countries, in particular developing countries,

Stressing the importance of international co-operation in supporting and strengthening the development of human resources in developing countries and, in this context, stressing also the valuable role that technical co-operation, particularly among developing countries, can play,

Deeply concerned that the negative impact of the international economic situation of the 1980s on developing countries and the resulting adjustment measures have led to significant cuts in national expenditures, including expenditures in sectors crucial to the development of human resources, and in this regard, that prolonged reduction of investment in human resources development will have grave implications for sustained growth and development,

1. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/120 of 28 July 1989 on the development of human resources;

2. Welcomes the contributions to the elaboration of the concept of human resources development made by the Khartoum Declaration: Towards a Human-focused Approach to Socio-economic Recovery and Development in Africa, the Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development in the Region of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation, and the communiqué of the tenth Meeting of the Conference of Heads of Government of the Caribbean Community, held at Grand Anse, Grenada, from 3 to 7 July 1989;

3. Emphasizes that efforts for human resources development should optimize all means for the overall development of human beings so that they may, individually and collectively, be capable of improving their standard of living;

4. Also emphasizes that it is within the context of this objective that economic growth and sustained development should be pursued, and that human resources development in itself is a specific means to achieve specific economic goals;

5. Further emphasizes the need to continue to strengthen and expand the human resources base of developing countries in order to enable them to face the challenges of development and accelerated technological change so as to achieve sustained development;

6. Stresses the need for demand-oriented strategies for human resources in order to encourage programmes aimed at inspiring people to upgrade their knowledge and skills and making it possible for them to fulfil their aspirations, and, in this context, also stresses the need to pay attention to employment constraints that affect the most vulnerable groups;

7. Further stresses the critical importance of developing human resources at all levels and strengthening the scientific and technological capabilities of developing countries in order to overcome present economic challenges and to take advantage of the opportunities unfolding in the world economy;

8. Reaffirms that education and training of nationals, including the most vulnerable groups, are an integral and the most important part of human resources development, and emphasizes that the flow of resources to developing countries for these activities needs to be increased;

9. Stresses the need for human resources development strategies to encompass supportive measures in such vital and related areas as health, nutrition, water, sanitation, housing and population;

10. Also stresses that the public sector is an essential element in the growth and development of developing countries and that, therefore, in the process of making the public sector more effective, it is desirable that efforts be made to foster new and productive employment opportunities so as to minimize any adverse impact on overall employment levels;

11. Further stresses that policies, plans and programmes for human resources development in developing countries should focus, inter alia, on generating employment in all sectors, including self-employment and entrepreneurship;

12. Emphasizes the need, in formulating strategies and programmes for human resources development, to intensify efforts for the full integration of women in the development process and to create opportunities for them, as well as to intensify efforts for the full integration of, and to create opportunities for, youth and the poor in the development process, both as beneficiaries and as agents of development;

13. Also emphasizes the importance of human resources development in enhancing the endogenous capacity-building of the developing countries in the fields of science and technology;

14. Further emphasizes the vital importance of qualified nationals in enhancing capacity-building in developing countries and, in this context, calls upon the international community to pay due attention to the serious problem of the brain drain from developing countries;

15. Agrees that internationally supported structural adjustment programmes should be designed and formulated to have, inter alia, a positive impact on human resources development in developing countries;

16. Calls upon the international community, including the multilateral financial and development institutions, to support the efforts of developing countries in human resources development, taking into account the national priorities and plans of those countries, through, inter alia, operational activities of the United Nations system;

17. Invites the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade to take the present resolution into account in the formulation of the new strategy;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on human resources development, including an assessment of the negative impact of the current economic situation facing developing countries or their efforts for human resources development, recommendations for policy measures to promote human resources development in developing countries and ways and means of increasing the support of the international community, in particular developed countries, for human resources development in developing countries, taking into account, inter alia, the report requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1989/120 and the results of the World Conference on Education for All, to be held at Bangkok in March 1990.

General Assembly resolution 44/213

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.11) by consensus, 11 December (meeting 49); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.78), based on informal consultations on draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.57) and orally revised; agenda item 82.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 44, 46, 49; plenary 85.

Also on 22 December, the Assembly, by decision 44/455, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Education and literacy

Preparations for the International Literacy Year

During 1989, various UN bodies continued, with UNESCO as the lead agency, preparations for the International Literacy Year (ILY) (1990), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1987.(7) The Year was officially launched on 6 December 1989.

The ILY programme was formulated within the framework of the Plan of Action for the Eradication of Illiteracy by the Year 2000, approved in 1989 by the UNESCO General Conference. The Plan identified the creation of a literate world as the absolute priority of UNESCO and defined main areas of effort as: alerting world public opinion to the problems of illiteracy; rallying the international community; strengthening regional literacy programmes; and reinforcing technical co-operation with Member States. The ILY secretariat established by UNESCO prepared key documents on literacy, as well as a poster and a video for international distribution.

In Africa, the Regional Programme for the Eradication of Illiteracy called for: training in forming integrated plans for the eradication of illiteracy; fellowships to promote exchanges of ideas between key personnel from education ministries; projects on literacy and civic education of women; and intensified national efforts to develop teaching materials for literacy and post-literacy education. Under the regional programme for the Arab States, 10 studies on the status of literacy and primary education were conducted, and a manual on project identification and preparation was produced. Regional programmes were also organized for Europe and Asia and the Pacific.

To mobilize public opinion, more than 30 international and regional NGOs and other co-operating bodies formed the International Task Force on Literacy which met throughout the year, and 107 national committees were set up to plan literacy-related activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/127 without vote.

International Literacy Year

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/104 of 7 December 1987, by which it proclaimed 1990 as International Literacy Year,

Recalling also that in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights the inalienable right of every individual to education is recognized,

Mindful of the fact that the eradication of illiteracy is one of the paramount objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and should become one of the objectives of the strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade,

Emphasizing that widespread illiteracy, especially in many developing countries, seriously hinders the process of economic and social development and the cultural and spiritual advancement of society,

Convinced that literacy, especially functional literacy and adequate education, represents an indispensable element for development and for the harnessing of science, technology and human resources for economic and social progress,

Confident that International Literacy Year will offer a unique opportunity for mobilizing efforts at the national, regional and international levels to combat illiteracy,

Welcoming the programme for International Literacy Year prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Recognizing that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization has assumed the role of lead organization for International Literacy Year,

1. Notes with satisfaction the commendable work done by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its Director-General to ensure adequate preparation for International Literacy Year;

2. Commends those Governments that have established national committees or similar structures for International Literacy Year and have launched national programmes aimed at meeting the objectives of the Year;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system for their contribution to the preparation for International Literacy Year;

4. Notes with satisfaction the active involvement of many non-governmental organizations in preparatory activities for International Literacy Year and, in particular, the establishment of the International Task Force on Literacy;

5. Welcomes the convening of the World Conference on Education for All, to be held in Thailand in March 1990 under the joint sponsorship of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Bank;

6. Invites Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to take appropriate measures with a view to achieving the objectives of International Literacy Year;

7. Also invites Governments that have not yet done so to establish a programme of measures for enhancing literacy and functional literacy for the period up to the year 2000 along the lines of the Plan of Action for the Eradication of Illiteracy by the Year 2000 of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

8. Appeals to Governments, economic and financial organizations and institutions, both national and international, to lend financial and material support to local, national and regional initiatives to promote literacy;

9. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to give wide publicity to the activities and measures to be undertaken during International Literacy Year;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the programme for International Literacy Year;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "International Literacy Year".

General Assembly resolution 44/127

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/798) without vote, 22 November (meeting 52); 41-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.57); agenda item 95.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 36-43, 50, 52; plenary 82.

Research and training

UN Institute for Training and Research

During 1989, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) was restructured and reduced its staff, as requested by the General Assembly in 1987.⁽⁸⁾ The volume of UNITAR activities, however, continued to grow. The UNITAR Executive Director reported in October 1989⁽⁹⁾ that all resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had been requested to consult the Governments of their countries of assignment to ensure that UNITAR's 1990-1991 work programme responded as closely as possible to the desires of the countries.

UNITAR activities

In the area of international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy, UNITAR continued to organize orientation courses on the role, function and work of the United Nations for new members of permanent missions to the United Nations in New York and orientation courses on practices and procedures of organs and institutions of the UN system for new members of UN permanent missions at Geneva. Other training for members of UN permanent missions included workshops and seminars on drafting of international legal instruments; the structure, retrieval and use of UN documentation; international economics for non-economists; international development issues; and the setting, issues and techniques of multilateral economic negotiations.

During 1989, the Institute launched a new training course on the Security Council; designed training programmes for peace-making and peace-keeping; and helped organize a training course on diplomatic practices and international co-operation for French-speaking junior diplomats from developing countries. For the first time, a programme of lectures for UN staff members preparing for promotion examinations was held.

Other training exercises dealt with social development, the use of informatics in development organization and management, prospective techniques for officers of ministries of planning, planning under conditions of uncertainty, port management, and oil spill containment.

Studies were executed on the changing role of the United Nations, a new approach to arms control and disarmament, the influence of the UN Charter on the constitutions of Member States, and UN-related research in European institutions.

The first issue of the UNITAR Newsletter, published in June, contained a list of publications prepared by UNITAR and information on Institute activities.

UNITAR financing

In 1989, UNITAR's General Fund income—from government contributions and other sources—totalled $1,175,478, while total expenditures amounted to $1,279,454. Income of the Special Purpose Grants Fund was $2,116,852; expenditures, amounting to $2,189,710, surpassed income by $72,858.(10)

1988 accounts

In July, the UN Board of Auditors submitted to the General Assembly the financial statements of UNITAR for 1988.(11) In August,(12) the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a summary of the Board's principal findings and conclusions for remedial action. The Board recommended that expenditures not be allowed to exceed allotments and that no expenditures be incurred for any special purpose projects unless allotments had been issued for that purpose. It stressed that the administration should provide in the General Fund budget for the possible losses from the undocumented accounts receivable and deferred charges and that the reconciliation of accounting records should be updated and improved. Also, special purpose grants should always be accounted for as UNITAR funds so that project support income could be derived.

Commenting on the Board's remarks, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) in September(13) endorsed the Board's view that activities should not be commenced unless funds were available. The Committee, while noting that corrective action was being taken with regard to the direct receipt by a fellow of grant funds for a UNITAR project, cautioned that that improper practice should not be allowed to happen again.

The Assembly, in resolution 44/183 of 19 December, accepted the financial statements and the audit opinions and report of the Board of Auditors regarding UNITAR.

UNITAR restructuring

In response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(14) the Secretary-General submitted a report in October(15) reviewing steps taken or to be taken in regard to the restructuring of UNITAR prescribed by the Assembly in 1987.(8) The report presented an analysis of the current and projected financial situation and discussed possible measures that would enhance greater co-ordination among autonomous UN research bodies.

UNITAR in 1989 maintained the same level of training activities in international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy as in previous years, despite an overall reduction in staff. The UNITAR Board of Trustees agreed in 1989 that priority would be given to training on peace-making and peace-keeping, as well as for new members of the Security Council. Joint training projects were developed in the area of economic and social development. The Secretary-General forwarded to the General Assembly the proposal of the UNITAR Board of Trustees that the Institute be given the status of executing agency of UNDP. As the Board of Auditors noted,(11) existing arrangements under which UNITAR had to pre-finance UNDP-sponsored projects before it received reimbursement had further strained the Institute's already limited funds.

Negotiations on the sale of UNITAR headquarters, authorized in 1987(8) by the General Assembly, encountered problems, with the non-negotiable decision of the sellers of the land the building occupied to increase the selling price from $4 million (quoted in 1986) to $4.5 million requiring further consultation with ACABQ. The closing, however, took place on 22 September, with realized savings for the Organization amounting to $207,000. The sale of the entire property, however, could not be completed, thus precluding the establishment of the reserve fund endorsed by the Assembly in 1987.(8)

Regarding the conditions for appointment of full-time senior fellows, it was considered that they should undertake work within the framework of the UNITAR programme; conduct their work on a full-time basis and free of charge to the Institute, though they could receive certain honorariums; and have no concurrent outside remunerated activities without prior approval of the Secretary-General. Based on those revised criteria and procedures for appointment, eight eminent persons were appointed as full-time senior fellows for 1989.

The Institute's draft General Fund budget for 1989 was reviewed by ACABQ prior to approval by the Board of Trustees, as requested by the General Assembly in 1987.(14) ACABQ recommended that UNITAR budget submissions include narratives highlighting policy considerations and underlying assumptions and explaining proposed changes in the estimates of income and expenditures from one year to the next. It also said that future submissions should include information on the status of funding and use of UNITAR under special purpose grants, and that information should also be provided on the status of the Institute's total accumulated operating deficits from prior years, as well as on reimbursements of the advance of $886,000 approved by the General Assembly in 1983.(16) The ACABQ recommendations were endorsed by the UNITAR Board of Trustees.

The Secretary-General concluded that although efforts had been made to further strengthen the administrative, financial and programmatic reorganization of the Institute, the financial situation remained a source of grave concern. The delay of the sale of the entire property, compounded by a decline in government contributions to the General Fund, led in 1989 to a net increase in the overall liabilities of the Institute.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/175 without vote.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/172 of 5 December 1986, 42/197 of 11 December 1987 and 43/201 of 20 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and taking into account the statements made by the representative of the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research,

Recognizing the continuing importance and relevance of the mandate of the Institute, particularly in the field of training,

Recognizing also the need for Governments to contribute or increase their voluntary contributions, as appropriate, to the Institute,

Noting with concern the continuing lack of a sufficiently broad base of donor countries supporting the Institute,

Deeply concerned that the sale of the headquarters building of the Institute, which would enable a reserve fund for the Institute to be established, has not yet been completed,

Noting with concern that the 1989 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities did not provide the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research with the level of resources required for it to maintain a minimum training programme and institutional structure,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the continuing validity and relevance of the mandate of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, as contained in the amended statute;
3. Commends the Secretary-General for the measures taken to implement the provisions of resolution 43/201 and encourages him to take further steps in that direction;
4. Takes note of the criteria and qualifications to apply to full-time senior fellows of the Institute and of the amendment to the statute of the Institute regarding full-time senior fellows, fellows, consultants, correspondents and advisory bodies, contained in the annexes to the report of the Secretary-General;
5. Reiterates its request that the budgetary proposals of the Institute for 1990, as well as those for subsequent years, be submitted to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for review and comment prior to approval by the Board of Trustees of the Institute;
6. Authorizes the Institute to enter into appropriate arrangements with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to execute projects funded by the Programme falling within the functions of the Institute, taking into account all relevant factors, including the comments of the Board of Auditors concerning the status of the Institute as an executing agency of the United Nations Development Programme;
7. Urges the Secretary-General to proceed rapidly with the sale of the headquarters building of the Institute, as approved in resolutions 42/197 and 43/201;
8. Reiterates its approval of the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the Institute should, after the sale of the building, repay the amounts currently owed to the United Nations and use the balance to establish a reserve fund for the Institute;
9. Agrees with the Secretary-General that the purpose of the reserve fund to be established by the Institute is to provide greater stability, predictability and reliability in the financing of the Institute, and notes that the fund is not intended to be a substitute for voluntary contributions from Governments, either to the General Fund of the Institute or to the special projects;
10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Board of Trustees of the Institute at its forthcoming session a complete report on his efforts to sell the headquarters building of the Institute and the land on which it is situated;
11. Urges all States that have not yet contributed to the General Fund of the Institute to do so and calls upon all contributing States to increase their contributions to the Institute so as to enable it to continue to fulfil its mandate and to implement fully and successfully the provisions of the present resolution and other relevant resolutions;
12. Appeals to all States to provide appropriate special-purpose grants to enable the Institute to implement the training and research programmes that cannot be financed from its General Fund, and calls upon appropriate intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the Institute;

13. Emphasizes the urgent need for broad-based financing for the Institute and invites the traditional donors, in implementation of resolutions 42/197 and 43/201 and the present resolution, to resume or continue, as appropriate, their voluntary contributions to the Institute;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Board of Trustees of the Institute, on the longer-term issues related to the financing of the Institute;

15. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to explore new modalities for greater interfacing among United Nations research bodies, endorses the proposals of the Secretary-General and requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to organize a meeting of United Nations research institutes with a view to enhancing practical co-operation among them, particularly in regard to the formulation and implementation of their programmes and plans;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/175

19 December 1989 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/833) without vote, 15 November (meeting 34); draft by Vice-Chairman based on informal consultations (A/C.2/44/L.36), orally revised; agenda item 87.

United Nations University

Activities and financing

In 1989,(17) the United Nations University (UNU), an autonomous academic institution within the UN system, carried out research, training and dissemination projects in eight programme areas: peace, culture and governance; global economy and development; global life-support systems; alternative rural-urban configurations; science, technology and society; food, nutrition and biotechnology; human and social development; and global learning and informatics. Most of the programmatic and operational developments were part of preparations for start-up of the second medium-term perspective for 1990-1995. The restructuring of the University was completed by the end of 1989 as part of overall institutional development of the University.

A series of workshops were held in 1989 dealing with the human dimensions of environmental issues: global environmental change (Moscow, USSR); carbon dioxide emission reduction strategies (Budapest, Hungary); understanding global environmental change (Worcester, Massachusetts, United States); and global modelling (Moscow). Also, three regional workshops were organized in Africa, Latin America and Asia, to review research and training activities.

UNU continued to make progress in establishing its own research and training centres. In September, formal negotiations commenced with Macau to establish the Institute for Software Technology. A feasibility study was under way on a proposed institute on culture and development at Fukuoka, Japan. A pre-feasibility study, consisting of a survey on the establishment of an international network of centres of excellence on new and renewable resources of energy, was being carried out in collaboration with the Office of the Director-General for International Economic Co-operation of the UN Secretariat and the Nuclear and Alternative Energy Commission of Italy, with a grant from the Government of Italy. The Government of Japan initiated construction of the University's headquarters building, to be completed in 1991.

The University Centre published 25 new books in 1989, bringing the number published to date to well over 250. Twenty issues of the University's four journals were published: Abstracts Of Selected Solar Energy Technology (ASSET) (eight issues), Journal of Food Composition and Analysis (quarterly) Food and Nutrition Bulletin (quarterly) and Mountain Research and Development (quarterly).

During the year, 40 UNU fellows completed their training, bringing to 988 the total trained since 1976 by the University under the regular fellowship programme. In addition, the University sponsored other training activities involving some 700 short-term trainees. Forty-one regular fellows commenced training.

Total UNU income in 1988-1989 was $65.9 million, while expenditures amounted to $41.6 million.(18) Unpaid pledges as at 31 December 1989 amounted to $19 million, with $26.2 million collected during the year.

Council activities

The UNU Council met twice in 1989, holding its thirty-third session at Budapest, Hungary, from 3 to 8 July and its thirty-fourth session at Tokyo from 4 to 8 December.

At the July session, during which a symposium on global challenges and international responses in the 1990s was held, the Council focused mainly on the University's ongoing and future programmes and the need to broaden its approach to achieve a more interrelated overall programme. It endorsed the report on a feasibility study on the proposed establishment at Macau of a research and training centre on computer software technology, and authorized the Rector to proceed with negotiations for a host country agreement and a memorandum of agreement.

The Council took action to defend the Endowment Fund from further erosion. It decided to reinvest a portion of the interest income each year in the Fund and to establish an independently managed portfolio that would provide a greater degree of flexibility for investments in the international financial markets. In December, the Council approved the programme and budget for the biennium 1990-1991.

By decision 1989/113 of 22 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council noted the report of the UNU Council on the work of the University in 1988.(19)

Social and cultural development

Social aspects of development

World social situation

The 1989 Report on the World Social Situation,(1) prepared in accordance with guidelines set forth by the General Assembly(2) in 1985 and by the Economic and Social Council(3) in 1987, was the twelfth in a series issued by the United Nations since 1952.

Responding to a 1987 Council resolution,(4) the Report assessed the impact of structural adjustment, discussed consequences for the social situation and social development, and emphasized the social aspects of rural development. It included, as requested by the Council,(5) a section on recent views and trends concerning the family. Pursuant to another Council request,(6) information on the critical social situation in Africa was provided in the annex.

The Report noted that the 1980s had been a period of profound change. On the political front, international tensions had eased considerably and regional conflicts had subsided. The decade also witnessed a resumption of economic growth in developed market economies, a process of reform in most industrialized socialist countries, and some improvements in food and industrial production in Asia. In Africa and Latin America, however, socio-economic conditions had worsened perceptibly.

Changes had occurred in the structure and function of the family, largely depending upon the level of national economic development and diversification, the Report stated. The number of single-parent families was on the rise, creating legal and social problems. Developed countries achieved considerable progress in increasing the participation of women in the labour force, but wages and responsibilities remained very different for men and women. In developing countries, women still did not have equal access to education in all forms. Hunger and malnutrition continued to be world-wide problems owing to unequal distribution of food. The disparity in per capita incomes between developed and developing countries continued to widen in absolute as well as relative terms. Recent advances in electronics, biotechnology and materials development had had a major impact on social life in the advanced industrial countries and, to some extent, on the world community as a whole, becoming more closely integrated because of new instant communication facilities. Although there was world-wide concern over the environment, adjustments involving structural change often met opposition, because of loss of jobs and displacement of those who did not have the skills required for new jobs. The Report also discussed social development and disarmament; international co-operation against drug abuse, terrorism and AIDS; migrants and refugees; and changing perceptions regarding social development issues.

Commission action. The Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-first session in March,(7) had before it a mimeographed version of the Report.(8) On 22 March,(9) the Commission noted the Report, recommending that the quality of social conditions be addressed in the next issue.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1989, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/72 by recorded vote.

World social situation

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling (General Assembly resolution 40/100 of 13 December 1985 and Council resolutions 1987/40 and 1987/52 of 28 May 1987,

Bearing in mind the importance of the report on the world social situation for increasing awareness of the advances made towards the goals of social progress and better standards of living, established in the Charter of the United Nations, and of the obstacles to further progress,

Deeply concerned at the low levels of per capita income and overall reductions in the standards of living and the main indicators of social well-being in a great number of the developing countries during the 1980s,

Reaffirming the common goal of realizing, through national and international efforts, the well-being of the world's population, especially with regard to the basic indicators of social development—food, employment, housing, education and health care,

Considering that there is a need for greater efforts to study and disseminate data on the existing world social situation, particularly the situation in developing countries,

Bearing in mind the importance of the report on the world social situation for the preparation of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade,

Stressing the need for a comprehensive and integrated view of the interrelationships between economic and social problems,

1. Reaffirms that, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 40/100 and Council resolutions 1987/40 and 1987/52, the 1989 report on the world social situation will be submitted to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Council at its first regular session of 1990, an expanded version of the 1989 report on the world social situation, which should include:

(a) A special chapter devoted to a comprehensive overview of the general trends in the main indicators of the social situation and standards of living world wide, particularly in developing countries, giving special attention to those cases, at the national and regional levels, in which there have been negative trends and low levels of per capita income during the 1980s;

(b) A special chapter on an analysis of the relationship between trends in the world economy and trends in the social situation, including projections to the year 2000, with special attention to the developing countries;

(c) A chapter which, in full implementation of Council resolution 1987/40, studies the impact of structural adjustments and the external indebtedness of developing countries on the social situation;

(d) A chapter in which the individual conclusions of chapters dealing with specific social problems are integrated and placed in the overall context of the world economic and social situations;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Council, on the work being done within the United Nations system to improve and further develop quantitative and qualitative indicators that measure accurately the social condition and the standards of living of the world's population, particularly in developing countries;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the next report on the world social situation, to give high priority to an analysis of the main indicators of social progress and standards of living, and to make a comprehensive analysis of the main causes and circumstances that explain negative trends in those indicators; chapters devoted to the study of specific social problems must be related to the global economic and social situations, taking into account both national and international conditions.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/72

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 39-1-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91/Add.1) by recorded vote (40-1-13), 19 May (meeting 22); draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (E/1989/C.2/L.9/Rev.1), orally revised: agenda item 11.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ghana, Guinea, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua, Niger, Oman, Poland, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/56 by recorded vote.

World social situation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1392(XIV) of 20 November 1959, 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 40/98 and 40/100 of 13 December 1985, 42/49 of 30 November 1987 and 43/113 of 8 December 1988 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987/39, 1987/40, 1987/46 and 1987/52 of 28 May 1987, and taking note of Council resolution 1989/72 of 24 May 1989 and Council decision 1989/113 of 28 July 1989,

Bearing in mind the objective of improving the well-being of the world's population on the basis of the full participation of all members of society in the process of development and the fair distribution to them of the benefits therefrom, and recognizing that the pace of development in the developing countries should be accelerated substantially in order to enable them to achieve this objective, especially to meet the basic needs for food, housing, education, employment and health care,

Concerned about the worsening economic situation in the developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries, as evidenced by, inter alia, a significant decline in living conditions, the persistence and increase of widespread poverty in a large number of countries and the decrease of the main social and economic indicators of those countries,

Conscious that each country has the sovereign right freely to adopt the economic and social system that it deems the most appropriate and that each Government has the primary role of ensuring the social progress and well-being of the people,

Convinced of the urgent need to eradicate policies and practices that hinder social progress, including racism and racial discrimination, in particular apartheid,

Convinced also of the crucial need to eradicate dangerous trends and habits that debilitate individuals and incapacitate society, in particular drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Bearing in mind the importance of the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation for increasing awareness of the advances made towards the goals of social progress and better standards of living, established in the Charter of the United Nations, and of the obstacles to further progress,

Believing that there is a need for greater efforts by the United Nations system to study and disseminate data on the existing world social situation, in particular in the developing countries,

Bearing in mind the important contribution of the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation to the preparation of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade,

Taking note of the deliberations on the question of the world social situation by the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session and by the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1989,

Having considered the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation,

Concerned about certain shortcomings in the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation,

1. Takes note of the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation, including the information on the critical social situation in Africa provided in the annex thereto;

2. Urges the timely issue of future reports on the world social situation in order to enable the Commission for Social Development to consider them;

3. Notes with deep concern the continuing deterioration of the economic and social situation in the developing countries, in particular in the least developed countries, as well as in the low-income countries;

4. Notes also with deep concern that the situation faced by the developing countries has been worsened by sharp fluctuations in exchange rates, high real rates of interest, fluctuations in commodity prices, a serious deterioration in the terms of trade of developing countries, increased protectionist pressures, the net transfer of resources from developing countries, crushing debt burdens, the restrictive adjustment process demanded by financial and development institutions, the decline in official development assistance in real terms and the severe inadequacy of resources experienced by multilateral development and financial institutions;

5. Notes further with deep concern the critical social situation in Africa resulting from structural imbalances and weaknesses of the African economy and a hostile international economic environment, in spite of the efforts of the Governments of African countries to undertake measures, with the support of the international community, to stabilize and adjust their economies;

6. Reaffirms the principles and objectives of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and calls for their effective realization as a means of attaining a more equitable world social situation;

7. Calls upon all Member States to promote economic development and social progress by the formulation and implementation of an interrelated set of policy measures to achieve the goals and objectives established within the framework of national plans and priorities for employment, education, health, nutrition, housing facilities, crime prevention, the well-being of children, equal opportunities for the disabled and the aging, full participation of youth in the development process and full integration and participation of women in development;

8. Calls upon the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to mobilize the necessary resources to undertake measures aimed at improving social conditions world wide;

9. Endorses the request made by the Economic and Social Council in paragraph 2 of its resolution 1989/72 that the Secretary-General should submit an expanded version of the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation to the Council at its first regular session of 1990, as well as the other requests made of him in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the same resolution;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue monitoring the world social situation in depth on a regular basis and to submit the next full report on the world social situation, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly in 1993, for consideration at its forty-eighth session, and also requests the Secretary-General to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1991, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for the wider dissemination of the reports on the world social situation;

12. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the preparation of future reports by making available all relevant information pertaining to their respective areas of competence;

13. Decides to include the item entitled "World social situation" in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session for the purpose of considering the expanded version of the 1989 Report on the world Social Situation, in that of its forty-sixth session for the purpose of considering the interim report, and in that of its forty-eighth session for the purpose of considering the next full report in 1993.

Critical social situation in Africa

The Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council considered the critical social situation in Africa, detailed in an annex to the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation.⁽¹⁾ The annex reviewed and analysed economic crisis and social deterioration, particularly in the areas of employment, income, food, nutrition, health and education. It also dealt with the pervasive social effects of apartheid and destabilization on the peoples and States of southern Africa, and considered other regional conflicts.

The Council adopted resolution 1989/46 on 24 May, in which it appealed to members of the international community to increase their co-operation and assistance to enhance efforts of African countries to establish or improve their infrastructure through the creation of a favourable economic environment (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Social progress and development

Implementation of the 1969 Declaration

Pursuant to a 1986 General Assembly resolution (10) the Secretary-General reported⁽¹¹⁾ in February on the implementation of the 1969 Declaration on Social Progress and Development.⁽¹²⁾ He also provided, as requested by the Assembly in 1987,⁽¹³⁾ a summary of responses received from Member States on the subject.

The report contained a historical review of how the UN system had promoted economic and social advancement and a summary of activities undertaken by UN bodies since the adoption of the Declaration in the areas of trade, finance and environment. It also described contributions of the UN system to national efforts in food security, poverty alleviation, employment, health, illiteracy and education, housing and human settlements, human rights, the status of women and protection of vulnerable groups, and dissemination of information on UN activities.

The Secretary-General concluded that the goals of the 1969 Declaration remained valid. The United Nations had stressed the provision of services to Member countries and mobilization of international support for national efforts in such fields as eradication of mass diseases, development of human resources, and norm-setting in transportation and development finance. There was a growing perception that multilateral institutions played an important role in ensuring a favourable international environment and that they were necessary to bring about a fair distribution of the benefits of international economic relations and to support economic forces working towards social progress. The Secretary-General noted that the preparation of a new international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade⁽¹⁴⁾ (1991-2000) would be an opportunity for the international community to incorporate a wide array of economic and social issues into a comprehensive framework.

On 22 March,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Commission for Social Development noted the report, as did the General Assembly by decision 44/421 of 8 December.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/48

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1989/25), orally amended by Bulgaria; agenda item 11.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/57 without vote.

Twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, by which it solemnly proclaimed the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, and resolutions 2543(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 32/117 of 16 December 1977, 34/59 of 29 November 1979 and 41/142 of 4 December 1986 on the implementation of the Declaration,

Reaffirming, on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of its proclamation, the importance of the Declaration as a source of inspiration for national and international efforts for the promotion of social progress and development,

Recalling its resolutions 40/98 of 13 December 1985 on the improvement of the role of the United Nations in the field of social development, 42/49 of 30 November 1987 on the achievement of social justice, and 43/113 of 8 December 1988 on the indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights,

Recalling also that in its resolution 42/48 of 30 November 1987 it decided to observe in 1989 the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration,

Desirous of achieving effective application of the provisions of the Declaration,

Noting the continuing validity and importance of the principles and objectives proclaimed in the Declaration,

1. Invites all Governments to take into consideration the provisions of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development in their developmental policies, plans and programmes, as well as in their bilateral and multilateral co-operation;

2. Recommends that the Declaration be taken into account in the formulation of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade and in the implementation of programmes of international action to be carried out during the decade;

3. Recommends also that the international organizations concerned with development continue to use the provisions of the Declaration, which is an important United Nations document, in formulating strategies, programmes and international instruments aimed at social progress and development;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to carry out the activities indicated in the annex to its resolution 42/48 in order to ensure the successful observance of the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration;

5. Reiterates its invitation to all States that have not yet done so to transmit to the Secretary-General their views and comments Pursuant to paragraphs 4 and 5 of its resolution 42/48;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the next report on the world social situation a special section dealing with the activities carried out in pursuance of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-ninth session an item entitled "Twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development".

General Assembly resolution 44/57

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/750) without vote, 9 November (meeting 37); draft recommended by ESC res. 1989/48 (A/C.3/44/L.4); agenda item 91.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 12-13, 15-20, 37; plenary 78.

Social progress

In connection with the preparation of the international development strategy for the fourth UN development decade,(14) the Commission for Social Development in March(7) put forward proposals on the social dimension of the strategy. It was proposed that the strategy emphasize the interaction of social and economic policies and the need to improve the social situation; consider the roles of both the public and private sectors; support the advancement of women; and propose measures to strengthen the capacity of countries for co-ordinating social policy.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/55 recommending that the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth UN Development Decade take into consideration the proposals of the Commission, and also deciding that the Commission should consider the implementation of social components of the strategy at its thirty-second (1990) session.

National experience in social progress and co-operation

Responding to a 1987 General Assembly request,(16) the Secretary-General reported(17) in January on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for social progress.

The report, a summary of replies from 29 Member States to a questionnaire on the subject, described accounts of achievements in social development in the areas of employment, social welfare and income distribution; education, science and technology; the environment; capital formation; and rural development.

Approaches to social and economic issues, the Secretary-General said, had been subject to a searching re-examination in most parts of the world. The problems of resource mobilization and lack of revenue had forced many Governments to seek new avenues towards social progress, less dependent on redistribution and more reliant on incentives and self-help. The provision of productive and remunerative work to all those seeking employment, particularly the young, remained a high priority. At the same time, there was increased concern that training be geared to adapting the skills of those employed to the changing demands of the workplace. Significant achievements had been made with regard to assistance to handicapped and vulnerable groups, incorporation of women, minorities and the rural population into the mainstream of economic and social life, and the preservation of the environment; still, social conditions for nearly 1 billion people continued to deteriorate drastically, mostly in Africa and Latin America.

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1989/135 of 24 May, took note of the report. On 8 December, the General Assembly, in decision 44/422, also noted the report.

Monitoring of information in the social field

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/66 without vote.

Monitoring of information on effective measures and alternative methods of implementing the plans, strategies and programmes of action in the social field at the national level

The General Assembly,
Having considered the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation.

Recalling its resolutions 37/51 of December 1982, in which it endorsed the International Plan of Action on Aging, 37/52 of 3 December 1982, in which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, 40/14 of 18 November 1985, in which it endorsed the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, 40/32 of 29 November 1985, in which it approved the Milan Plan of Action, and 40/108 of 13 December 1985, in which it endorsed the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recalling also its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987, in which it endorsed the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future,

Aware that much remains to be done at the national level to achieve the full realization of the principles and objectives contained in those major documents adopted at the international level,

Convinced of the need to study effective measures and alternative methods of implementing the above-mentioned plans, strategies and programmes of action,

Recognizing that, in addition to material and technical assistance, both committed leadership and self-reliance of people for effective popular participation are required for mobilization to action in the social field,

Considering that sustained co-operation and regular dialogue are necessary between leaders and people and among citizens themselves in order to foster social change,

1. Recognizes the need for Member States to select their own specific social priorities;

2. Emphasizes that national leaders need commitment and political will in order to realize in concrete terms, at the national, local and grass-roots levels, the provisions of the plans, strategies and programmes of action approved by the General Assembly in its resolutions 37/51, 37/52, 40/14, 40/32 and 40/108;

3. Reaffirms that non-governmental organizations and individual citizens require the qualities of self-reliance and initiative in order to undertake their own programmes and projects;

4. Recognizes the need for Governments, non-governmental organizations and citizens to co-operate effectively with each other in undertaking social development programmes, notably with regard to social welfare policies, youth, the elderly, the advancement of women and disabled persons, as well as crime prevention and criminal justice;

5. Stresses the need to formulate at the national level innovative, effective and viable measures for social development in the face of limited budgetary allocations for social issues and diminishing natural resources;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, in particular, to include on a regular basis in their reports on social issues more information on ways and means of fully implementing the above-mentioned plans, strategies and programmes of action at the national, local and grass-roots levels, stressing, inter alia, the attitudes and values that leaders and citizens need to adopt in order to achieve social goals despite limited resources, effective methods that can be used on a larger scale at the national level and adopted in other countries, and methods of co-operation and networking at the international level aimed at assistance in the implementation of plans of action at the national level.

Social justice

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/71 without vote.

Achievement of social justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 42/49 of 30 November 1987 and Council resolution 1988/46 of 27 May 1988.

Considering the pledge made by States Members of the United Nations in the Charter to take joint and separate action to promote higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, social progress and development shall be founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person and shall ensure the promotion of human rights and social justice,

Convinced that more extensive international and regional co-operation is important for promoting social progress at the national level, mindful of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future,

Persuaded of the importance of taking measures to ensure co-ordination within the United Nations system in order to develop a comprehensive approach to developmental social welfare, including integrated and mutually supportive economic and social development policies, focused on the achievement of social justice,

1. Recognizes that social justice is one of the most important goals of social progress;

2. Calls upon States to take concepts of social justice as a basis for the preparation of their national development plans and programmes, giving priority to endeavouring to solve problems relating to employment, education, health care, nutrition, housing, social welfare and the raising of standards of living;

3. Recommends that the appropriate United Nations bodies and specialized agencies take into account the need to achieve social justice for all when considering social development issues and the observance of human rights;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in his studies and reports concerning international social development issues, including the reports on the world social situation, to devote attention to social justice issues and, in particular, to ways of achieving the objective in question;

5. Requests the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-second session, when monitoring the implementation of international plans and programmes of action, specifically the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, to consider ways and means of developing approaches to the achievement of social justice.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/55 without vote on 8 December.

Achievement of social justice

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/49 of 30 November 1987 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/46 of 27 May 1988, and taking note of Council resolution 1989/71 of 24 May 1989,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, social progress and development shall be founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person and shall ensure the promotion of human rights and social justice,

Convinced that more extensive international and regional co-operation is important for promoting social progress at the national level,

Mindful of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future,

Persuaded of the importance of taking measures to ensure co-ordination within the United Nations system in order to develop a comprehensive approach to developmental social welfare, including better integrated and mutually supportive economic and social development policies, aimed at the achievement of social justice,

1. Considers that the common purpose of the international community must be to forge from varied economic, social and political conditions a global environment of sustained development, full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and social justice and peace;

2. Recognizes that social justice is one of the most important goals of social progress;

3. Reaffirms the importance of co-operation among countries in promoting a climate conducive to the achievement by individual countries of the goals of development and social justice and progress;

4. Considers that such co-operation should continue to be a major focus of activities of the United Nations, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Calls upon Member States, in elaborating their national policy in the field of social development, to take into consideration the importance of achieving social justice for all;

6. Recommends that the Secretary-General, in preparing studies and reports on social problems and, in particular, the report on the world social situation, should examine questions concerning the achievement of social justice and ways in which it could be realized;

7. Requests the Commission for Social Development, at its next regular session, to continue to consider the question of achieving social justice.

Social welfare, development and science and technology

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/47, concerning social welfare, development and science and technology (see General Assembly resolution 44/54 below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/54 without vote.

Social welfare, development and science and technology

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is an important factor in the social and economic development of society,

Reaffirming the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, which was proclaimed by the General Assembly by its resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, in which States were called upon to share equitably scientific and technological advances, to intensify international co-operation in the field and to use science and technology for the benefit of the social development of society,

Reaffirming also the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, which was proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3384(XXX) of 10 November 1975, in which all States were called upon to promote international co-operation to ensure that the results of scientific and technological developments were used in the interests of strengthening international peace and security, freedom and independence, and also for the purpose of the economic and social development of peoples and the realization of human rights and freedoms in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Considering that implementation of those Declarations will contribute to the social and economic development of peoples and international co-operation in the interests of scientific and technological progress, as well as to the strengthening of peace,

Emphasizing that international co-operation among States for the promotion of scientific and technological progress is in the interest of the social and economic development of all peoples,

Convinced that, in a time of rapid scientific and technological progress, the resources of mankind and the work of scientists make an important contribution to the peaceful economic and social development of nations and to the improvement of the living standards of all peoples,

Aware that technical co-operation, including the possibility of transfer of technology, is one of the ways of achieving better social progress in developing countries,

1. Calls upon all States to encourage co-operation to ensure scientific and technological progress for the welfare and social and economic development of their peoples, as well as of all human beings, and to contribute to the promotion of economic development and the elimination of grave social problems in the world;

2. Stresses the necessity of using scientific and technological progress as a major aspect of the process of fully implementing fundamental civil and political, economic, social and cultural human rights, as laid down in the International Covenants on Human Rights;

3. Calls upon all Governments to make every effort to use scientific and technological achievements for the promotion of peaceful social and economic development and to prevent their misuse to the disadvantage of human beings;

4. Invites the Commission for Social Development, in its discussion of the world social situation, to pay increasing attention to the effects of science and technology on the processes of social welfare and development;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, when elaborating the next report on the world social situation, to take due account of the effects of science and technology on processes of social welfare and development on the basis of information available from Governments and from organizations of the United Nations system;

6. Requests the Secretary-General or interested Governments to consider convening in the near future, within existing resources, a seminar of experts on the effects of science and technology on social welfare and development.

Social welfare

Guiding Principles for Social Welfare Policies and Programmes

The Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-first session in March,(7) reviewed the results of the 1987 Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes,(18) as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1987.(19) The Secretary-General reported(20) on activities initiated in line with the suggestions for follow-up, contained in the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future.(18) Initially, highest priority was given to the widest possible dissemination of the documents of the Interregional Consultation and the Guiding Principles. A European expert meeting (Bonn, 25-27 January) was held as the first regional follow-up to the Consultation.

Alcohol use

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/49 without vote.

Follow-up to the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/48 of 28 May 1987 on the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987, in which the Assembly, inter alia, endorsed the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, adopted by the Interregional Consultation,

Taking note of the recommendation made to the Interregional Consultation by the Conference of European

Ministers Responsible for Social Affairs, held at Warsaw in April 1987, that the United Nations should look into ways in which the international community could in the future deal with pressing problems related to alcohol use,

Guided by the recommendations set out in the Guiding Principles for action at the national, regional and interregional levels to identify social measures that may appropriately be taken to meet the challenges posed to social structures, values, traditions and attitudes by, inter alia, the negative social consequences of alcohol use,

Mindful of the important contribution made by the World Health Organization in highlighting the negative health aspects of alcohol use,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to consider ways of following up the recommendations of the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes by, inter alia, carrying out a study on the negative social consequences of alcohol use, based on the report of an expert meeting to be convened in 1990 under the auspices of the United Nations;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the offer of the Government of Norway to act as host to the expert meeting on the negative social consequences of alcohol use;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources and drawing on support from interested Governments and appropriate intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to make the necessary preparations for the expert meeting;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to consult with Member States on the nomination of experts to attend the meeting and to invite Member States to participate in the preparatory work by, inter alia, contributing national reports on relevant aspects of the questions deemed of particular importance;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-second session on the outcome of the expert meeting and to distribute the report of the meeting to Member States, inviting their comments on the recommendations contained therein.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1989/25); agenda item 11.

Follow-up measures

The Council also adopted on 24 May, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, resolution 1989/53 without vote.

Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future and follow-up to the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 44/65 below.]

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/53

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1989/25); agenda item 11.

In a 7 July note(21) responding to a 1987 General Assembly request,(22) the Secretary-General outlined steps taken pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/53 (see above). A special task force was established within UNOV to provide input on social policy to the new international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade.(14) The focus was on integrated family- and community-oriented cost-effective innovations in social welfare, planning a data base and expert meetings and preparing a policy manual. A study was also being carried out on co-operation in social matters among the countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/65 without vote.

Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future and follow-up action to the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes
The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 217 A (III) of 10 December 1948, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, contained in the annex to its resolution 2200 A (XXI) of 16 December 1966, and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development proclaimed by the Assembly in its resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, as well as other relevant international instruments,

Reaffirming the importance and value of strategies and plans of action concerning the situation of women, aging, youth, the disabled, crime prevention and drug abuse,

Recalling its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987, in which, inter alia, it endorsed the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future and requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure follow-up action to the Guiding Principles,

Stressing the importance of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/48 of 28 May 1987, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to redeploy resources to ensure appropriate follow-up action to the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes,

Mindful of the critical importance of practical social welfare questions and the need to provide adequate resources to deal with them,

Concerned about the lack of follow-up action in the regions of Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean, Africa and Western Asia,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future as an appropriate framework for future action in the field of social welfare and development;

2. Calls upon Governments to make use of the Guiding Principles, to apply the recommendations contained therein, as appropriate, in accordance with their national structures, needs and objectives, to inform the Secretary-General of problems of implementation at the national level, and to accelerate the follow-up action to the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes;

3. Requests the executive secretaries of the regional commissions to give particular attention to the recommendations for action at the regional level contained in the Guiding Principles;

4. Urges the Secretary-General and all organizations of the United Nations system concerned to include the implementation of the Guiding Principles in their respective programmes of work and to assist Governments, particularly those of the developing countries, in formulating appropriate social welfare policies and in setting up effective programmes according to their needs;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the follow-up action to the Interregional Consultation, focusing, inter alia, on integrated, family-oriented and community-oriented cost-effective innovations in the design of social welfare policies and programmes;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation and technical support for Governments, especially those of developing countries, focusing on the policy, planning, administration and training aspects of developmental social welfare;

7. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to redeploy resources for taking measures to follow up the Interregional Consultation;

8. Recommends the organization of additional regional expert group meetings devoted to issues raised in the Guiding Principles, such as the first regional follow-up international expert meeting, held at Bonn in January 1989;

9. Also recommends that the efforts to reinforce the functioning of United Nations intergovernmental machinery in the social field should continue in line with the view expressed in paragraph 95 of the report of the Interregional Consultation;

10. Decides that social issues as conceived in the Guiding Principles should become a major part of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade;

11. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the results of and follow-up action to the Interregional Consultation;

12. Notes the progress made so far in strengthening the United Nations Office at Vienna as the nucleus for all issues and reports relating to social policy and development;

13. Invites funding agencies within the United Nations system to consider a readjustment and an appropriate increase of their input of resources in the field of social development in order to reflect fully the changing world situation and actual requirements;

14. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To enhance the monitoring functions of and within the United Nations Office at Vienna and to maintain effective co-ordination between its individual units;

(b) To prepare, maintain and publicize an overview of social components and internationally accepted norms of the many international plans, covenants, declarations and strategies in the social field;

(c) To ensure that all bodies of the United Nations system concerned with developmental programmes and projects consult the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat on the social components of those programmes and projects;

(d) To reflect appropriately the recommendations of the Guiding Principles in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and in the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991;

(e) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the progress achieved in implementing and following up the Guiding Principles and the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Implementation of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future".

Co-operatives

In accordance with a 1987 Economic and Social Council resolution,(23) the Secretary-General reported on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement in developing countries.(24) Based on information received from 28 Member States, 3 specialized agencies and 3 international NGOs, he discussed the participation of all population groups, but particularly peasants, and including women, youth, disabled persons and the aging, in co-operatives. The role of government support and other programmes in promoting co-operatives was also discussed.

Co-operatives had become an integral part of the development process, demonstrating their ability to enable the poor to band together in successful self-help ventures, he stated. The majority of all co-operatives in developing countries were active in agriculture (53 per cent) and in finance (29 per cent); they were the most widespread form of organization of rural people. Their potential, however, for meeting the needs of poor peasants, the landless and nomadic populations had not been fully used. Urban co-operatives were facing challenges to improve management and financing in order to increase financial resources. While there was continuous growth of informal, pre-co-operative women's groups, little attention had been paid to the needs of youth, the aging and disabled persons. There was a compelling need for co-operatives to adopt new technologies to increase productivity and ensure improved levels of marketing in the agricultural, commercial and industrial spheres.

The Secretary-General recommended that Governments encourage greater citizen participation; adopt legislation governing the status, membership and administrative procedures of all types of co-operative organizations; and strengthen co-operative organizations at the national level to enable them to function as full partners to government in all areas of common concern.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/135, took note of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/58 without vote.

National experience in promoting the co-operative movement

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2459(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 3273(XXIX) of 10 December 1974, 31/37 of 30 November 1976, 33/47 of 14 December 1978 and 36/18 of 9 November 1981, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1983/15 of 26 May 1983, 1985/22 of 29 May 1985 and 1987/47 of 28 May 1987,

Aware of the ongoing work to elaborate the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade,

Bearing in mind that co-operatives in their different forms are becoming an indispensable factor of economic and social development in all countries, especially the developing countries,

Noting that co-operatives are called upon to help to ensure the fullest possible participation in the development process of all population groups, including women, youth, disabled persons and the aging, and to contribute to the implementation of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future,

Having in mind the recent wide spread reassessment by Governments of the status of co-operatives and their role in enhancing economic and social development,

Convinced that the sharing among countries of national experience relating to the active involvement of co-operatives in the development process is acquiring increasing importance in the light of new trends in the approach to co-operatives,

1. Commends the report of the Secretary-General on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement;

2. Invites all States, the regional commissions and the specialized agencies concerned to make further efforts with a view to promoting the co-operative movement as an important instrument of economic and social development, thus contributing to the implementation of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely national experience in promoting co-operatives and to encourage all forms of international co-operation, in collaboration with interested Governments, governmental and non-governmental organizations, as an important part of the social development strategy;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States and relevant organizations of the United Nations system, to prepare a report on the status and role of co-operatives in the light of new economic and social trends and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

5. Decides to consider a question entitled "Co-operatives and new trends in socio-economic development" at its forty-seventh session as a sub-item of the item entitled "National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress".

The family

International co-operation
to protect and assist the family

In compliance with a 1987 Economic and Social Council resolution,(5) the Secretary-General reported on the social situation of families,(25) describing results of a survey of national policies for families received from 48 Governments.

According to replies, the single-parent family was most likely to receive attention from the Government, owing to its high incidence of poverty and dependence on the State and the heavy responsibilities falling on the woman who headed such a family. Specific concerns were expressed regarding children, women, youth, the aging and the disabled. The services and benefits mentioned by Governments covered such sectors as health, education, housing and welfare.

It was observed that Governments often designed policies and programmes aimed at specific target groups, such as children and the aging. Such an approach might not support the family as a unit. At the same time, family policy was often framed with a particular family model in mind, which did not reflect the rich variety of family forms in each country. The survey also showed that in many cases families were supported in their attempts to meet their needs, not by governmental intervention, but by private charities and other organizations providing services to people in need.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/54 without vote.

Need to enhance international co-operation in the field of protection and assistance to the family

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/135 of 8 December 1988,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Social situation of families: results of the survey of national policies for families", prepared in accordance with its resolution 1987/46 of 28 May 1987;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, Member States, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, to implement fully General Assembly resolution 43/135.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1989/25); agenda item 11.

International year of the family

Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly request,(26) the Secretary-General reported on preparations for an international year of the family.(27) An annex dealt with issues that might be addressed during such an international year.

The Secretary-General recommended that the year 1994 be proclaimed "International Family Year", with the theme "Family: resources and responsibilities in a changing world", and that the UN system and all organizations intending to participate undertake specially focused activities. The international year would aim to increase awareness of family issues among Governments, as well as in the private sector; strengthen national institutions to implement family-related policies and to respond to family-related problems; enhance local efforts and improve collaboration among NGOs; and build on results of international activities concerning women, children, youth, the aging and the disabled. A number of fundamental principles were also recommended as a foundation for all activities for the international year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/82 without vote.

International Year of the Family

The General Assembly,

Guided by the resolve of the peoples of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being, which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations between nations,

Guided also by the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, according to which the widest possible protection and assistance should be accorded to the family,

Bearing in mind its resolution 42/49 of 30 November 1987 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1988/46 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/71 of 24 May 1989 entitled "Achievement of social justice",

Bearing in mind also the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and recalling that by its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987 it endorsed for action the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, which called for social welfare policies to give greater attention to the family,

Recognizing the efforts of Governments at the local, regional and national levels in carrying out specific programmes concerning the family, in which the United Nations may have an important role to play, and in raising awareness, increasing understanding and promoting policies that improve the position and well-being of the family,

Recalling its resolutions 42/134 of 7 December 1987 and 43/135 of 8 December 1988 on the need to enhance international co-operation in the field of the protection of and assistance to the family, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1983/23 of 26 May 1983 and 1985/29 of 29 May 1985, and taking note of Council resolution 1989/54 of 24 May 1989,

Taking into account its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 concerning guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

Taking note with interest and appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in pursuance of its resolution 43/135,

1. Proclaims 1994 as International Year of the Family;

2. Decides that the major activities for the observance of the Year should be concentrated at the local, regional and national levels and assisted by the United Nations and its system of organizations, with a view to creating among Governments, policy-makers and the public a greater awareness of the family as the natural and fundamental unit of society;

3. Endorses the main recommendations, objectives and principles for the observance of the Year, as contained in the comprehensive outline of a possible programme for the Year;

4. Invites all Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, as well as interested national organizations, to exert all possible efforts in the preparation for and observance of the Year and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in achieving the objectives of the Year;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, on the basis of his report and in consultation with Member States, concerned specialized agencies and interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, a draft programme for the preparation for and observance of the Year and to submit a progress report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to take specific measures, through all the communication media at his disposal, to give widespread publicity to the activities of the United Nations system in the area of family issues and to increase the dissemination of information on this subject;

7. Designates the Commission for Social Development as the preparatory body and the Economic and Social Council as the co-ordinating body for the International Year of the Family;

8. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-fifth session under an item entitled "International Year of the Family".

Migrant workers

The situation of migrant workers was dealt with in the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation.(1) Economic and social inequalities as well as man-made and natural disasters motivated people to migrate to other countries in search of better economic opportunities and freedom from persecution and discrimination, the report stated. The increasing number of migrants gave rise to sensitive and difficult issues for an international community in which States had come to consider it natural to control immigration, emigration, or both.

In a report on the social situation of migrant workers and their families(28) submitted pursuant to a 1985 Economic and Social Council request,(29) the Secretary-General discussed problems and needs of second-generation migrants, with particular reference to developed market economies. He also described the principal features of contract migration in western Asia and southern Africa, referring to the social situation of both migrant workers and the families left behind in the home country.

Restrictive measures on immigration taken by Governments during the 1970s had, ironically, encouraged a large number of migrant workers to settle permanently in receiving countries and to bring their families and relatives to live with them. With their relatively high birth rates, the numbers of young people were increasing within total foreign populations. In France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Luxembourg, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland, the proportion of those under 24 years was between 35 and 40 per cent, and in Belgium and the Netherlands, around 50 per cent. They often constituted a disproportionately high number of the long-term unemployed, school drop-outs, and juvenile delinquents, in spite of their best efforts and special programmes designed to help them. The report pointed out that second-generation migrants were socially integrated but in a subordinate position, as a result of the cultural structure, diffused or disguised discrimination or rigid educational systems in receiving countries. It suggested that social integration of migrants was more a matter of helping societies adapt their individuals, and of offering equal opportunities to all, native and migrant.

Contract-migration workers, living and working in segregated compounds, had very little control over their living and working conditions and were often exploited. Their lengthy absences from home might cause family problems and have negative economic consequences in the sending countries. The report suggested guiding principles for establishing social services for second-generation and contract migrants.

In March,(30) the Commission for Social Development took note of the report.

Poverty

The 1989 Report on the World Social Situation(1) discussed inequality in world incomes. Inequalities of income distribution among countries were extremely large, and trends in inequality, employment and poverty diverged markedly among the developing regions. In Asia as a whole, there was continued progress in providing employment and reducing poverty. In sub-Saharan Africa, on the other hand, significant set-backs were experienced in those areas. In Latin America, the situation had sharply deteriorated and eventually had stabilized at a new, lower level. Income distribution had not changed markedly in Asia, whereas it worsened in the heavily indebted countries of Latin America. The difference between the relative income shares of urban and rural populations narrowed in the poorer countries of sub-Saharan Africa.

In March, the Commission for Social Development considered the problem of extreme poverty, in accordance with a 1988 Economic and Social Council request.(31) It was generally agreed that the light against extreme poverty remained an international challenge that required full international co-operation and, within countries, further intensification of efforts involving state agencies, civic associations and humanitarian organizations.

Institutional machinery

Commission for Social Development

At its thirty-first session (Vienna, 13-22 March),(7) the Commission for Social Development adopted three resolutions and five decisions. The draft resolutions covered social welfare, development and science and technology (Council resolution 1989/47); twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development (1989/48); the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future (1989/53) and its follow-up (1989/49); international co-operation in the field of protection and assistance to the family (1989/54); the social dimension of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (1989/55); the critical social situation in Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III); the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging; youth in the contemporary world (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV); and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (see PART THREE, Chapter XI).

The Commission also recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of another 10 draft resolutions and one draft decision.

On 24 May, the Council, by decision 1989/131, noted the Commission's report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the thirty-second (1991) session.

Improvement of work

At its thirty-first session, the Commission for Social Development considered a note by the Secretary-General summarizing suggestions for improvement of its work.(32) These suggestions covered the agenda, advance selection of specific topics for in-depth consideration, inter-session expert group meetings, in-session, open-ended working groups, organization of the work of future sessions, draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, Commission membership and the frequency and duration of sessions.

Having considered the note, the Commission reaffirmed(33) that it would organize its substantive work under three agenda items and decided to select specific subjects for in-depth consideration at each session. For the thirty-second session, it selected the integration of young people into society and the social impact of the critical economic environment on developing countries; and for the thirty-third session, either disability matters or family issues would be given such consideration. The Commission encouraged Governments to host expert group meetings which would prepare for in-depth consideration of priority subjects. No consensus was reached on membership or the frequency of sessions.

Programme of work

In a report(34) submitted to the Commission for Social Development, the Secretary-General summarized the programme of work for the period 1988-1989 in the field of social development of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) at the UN Office at Vienna, and the UN Department of International Economic and Social Affairs. The report also summarized social welfare and social development activities by the regional commissions.

In March, the Commission noted(35) the report.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

In 1989, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) began a new research programme, approved by its Board in 1988.(36)

In preparation for the programme dealing with crisis, adjustment and social change, UNRISD organized, in co-operation with the Institute of Social and Economic Research of the University of the West Indies, a conference on economic crisis in the third world: impact and response (Kingston, 3-6 April), and successfully secured funding by the Netherlands for the research phase of the programme. Under a programme on food pricing and marketing reform, a seminar was held (Geneva, 20-22 November) to facilitate dialogue among researchers. In February, the Institute began preparing an annotated bibliography and a review monograph on the social, economic and political consequences of illicit trade in cocaine, heroin, marijuana and hashish. Following a workshop on economic reform and social participation (Geneva, September) attended by European scholars, a preliminary research phase was launched in central and eastern Europe and the USSR, involving an overview of the economic and political reforms introduced in the 1980s, with an assessment of implications for different social groups and probable changes in forms of participation. Other ongoing research activities involved the environment, sustainable development and social changes; ethnic conflict and development; patterns of consumption; political violence and social movements; and refugees, returnees and local society.

UNRISD continued to disseminate its research results in a variety of publications. Several reports were co-published in Latin America and a number of English-language monographs were issued.

Institute assets prior to expenditures in 1989 totalled $3,716,459. Of this amount, $200,000 represented the legal operating reserve, and an additional $1,259,741 was tied income or otherwise unavailable for expenditure in 1989. The amount available for expenditure in 1989 therefore totalled $2,256,718. Expenditures in 1989 amounted to $1,775,861.

On 22 March, the Commission for Social Development considered a report of the UNRISD Board,(38) covering Institute activities in 1987 and 1988. Governments were invited to make or increase financial contributions to the Institute. The Commission also decided(39) to increase the number of nominated members of the UNRISD Board from 7 to 10, and that the nomination and confirmation of the 3 additional members would take place at the first regular session in 1989 of the Economic and Social Council. By decision 1989/132 of 24 May, the Council endorsed the increase in members, but deferred the nomination and confirmation issue to its second regular session of 1989. On 6 July, the Council, in decision 1989/181, confirmed the nomination of the three candidates. (For members, see APPENDIX III.)

Crime prevention and criminal justice

In 1989, the United Nations continued to focus its activities in crime prevention and criminal justice on the implementation of the 1985 Milan Plan of Action, adopted by the Seventh UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,(40) and the preparation for the Eighth Congress, to be held in 1990.

Report of the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(41) the Secretary-General in August reported(42) on progress achieved by Governments and relevant entities of the UN system in implementing the Milan Plan of Action. A total of 14 Governments provided information on activities to implement the Plan, international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice, measures against the most serious forms of crime, and human rights in the administration of justice. They indicated that measures to strengthen international co-operation and harmonize national policies in line with the Milan Plan of Action and other recommendations of the Seventh Congress were either already fully implemented in national legislation and policies or efforts were being made towards that end. Organized crime and illicit drug trafficking were of great concern to many Member States.

Other topics dealt with included preparations for the Eighth Congress and technical co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/72 without vote.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the responsibilities assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice under Economic and Social Council resolution 155 C (VII) of 13 August 1948 and General Assembly resolution 415(V) of December 1950, as well as its pivotal role in the promotion of international co-operation in this field, in accordance with Assembly resolutions 3021(XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 32/59 and 32/60 of 8 December 1977 and 35/171 of 15 December 1980,

Emphasizing the importance of its resolution 40/32 of 29 November 1985, in which it approved the Milan Plan of Action, adopted by consensus by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, as a useful and effective means of strengthening international co-operation in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling its resolution 41/107 of 4 December 1986, in which it invited Member States and the Secretary-General to ensure timely preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, its resolution 42/59 of 30 November 1987, in which, inter alia, it welcomed the results of the comprehensive review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice conducted by the Secretary-General and approved the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1986/11 of 21 May 1986 and 1987/53 of 28 May 1987, and its resolution 43/99 of 8 December 1988, in which it stressed the necessity for Member States to continue to make concerted and systematic efforts to strengthen international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/49 of 28 May 1987, in which the Council approved the provisional agenda for the Eighth Congress, and taking note of Council resolutions 1989/68 of 24 May 1989 on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice and 1989/69 of 24 May 1989 on the continuation of preparations for the Eighth Congress,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1989/56 of 24 May 1989, the annex to which contains the statute of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, 1989/59 of 24 May 1989 concerning the establishment of the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, 1989/62 of 24 May 1989 on concerted international action against the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action and 1989/67 of 24 May 1989 on domestic violence,

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council decision 1989/134 of 24 May 1989 by which the Council accepted the invitation of the Government of Cuba to hold the Eighth Congress at Havana from 27 August to 7 September 1990,

Conscious that the convening of such a global meeting demonstrates the continuing interest and capacity of Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, scholars and experts to react to the challenge posed by the new forms and dimensions of criminality, both nationally and internationally,

Acknowledging that the United Nations congresses, as major intergovernmental forums, have influenced national policies and practices by facilitating the exchange of views and experiences, mobilizing public opinion and recommending policy options at the national, regional and international levels, thus making a significant contribution to progress and the promotion of international co-operation in this field,

Appreciative of the success of all the preparatory activities for the Eighth Congress, which have been carried out in a spirit of mutual understanding, productive consensus and professional competence,

Mindful of the main objectives of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, which include the promotion of a more effective administration of justice, the strengthening of international co-operation in the light against transnational crime, the observance of human rights and the pursuance of the highest standards of fairness, efficiency, humanity and professional conduct,

Aware that transnational criminality, particularly in its violent and organized forms, constitutes a serious threat to the development and security of nations,

Concerned about the increase in the incidence and seriousness of crime, both conventional and non-conventional, as well as juvenile delinquency, in many parts of the world, and its negative effects on the quality of life and the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Also concerned about the level of the human and financial resources available to the United Nations in this field, taking into account the increased responsibilities and expanded mandates of the Organization,

Recognizing that constraints of an economic and technical nature impede many countries in their light against crime, and that technological advances may not only entail dangers to the human environment but may also be utilized in the perpetration of sophisticated forms of crime, against which criminal law can serve a useful function, including the penal protection of the environment,

Convinced of the urgent need to strengthen international co-operation and co-ordination at all levels in order to meet the challenge posed by contemporary crime,

Determined to improve joint action to achieve further progress in combating crime, particularly in its new forms and transnational dimensions, and in ensuring respect for the rule of law, as well as to increase the usefulness and impact of the Eighth Congress through the discussion and adoption of new important international instruments and heightened public awareness of the results of the Congress,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of its resolution 43/99, in which, inter alia, the recommendations of the regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders are summarized;

2. Reaffirms the continued validity of the Milan Plan of Action and the importance of its goals, which include the strengthening of international co-operation and the enhancement of the United Nations role in this field;

3. Urges the international community to implement the recommendations contained in the Milan Plan of Action, together with the resolutions adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and invites those Governments that have not yet done so to provide relevant information to the Secretary-General on the progress made in this regard;

4. Expresses the hope that the Eighth Congress will make a major contribution to the solution of problems related to crime prevention and criminal justice;

5. Approves the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1989/68 and 1989/69, and requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to translate them into action;

6. Acknowledges the crucial functions of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, which the Economic and Social Council has entrusted with developing practical crime prevention and criminal justice policies and monitoring the implementation of United Nations standards and norms in this field and which is also the preparatory body for the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;

7. Welcomes the establishment by the Committee of a sub-committee charged with the task of providing an overview of the problem of crime and assessing the most efficient means of stimulating practical international action in support of Member States, as well as the establishment of a pre-session working group to oversee the process of implementing existing standards;

8. Also welcomes the adoption of the statute of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the formal establishment, at Kampala, of the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

9. Invites the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its eleventh session, to give priority attention to the conclusions and recommendations of its sub-committee and to consider appropriate follow-up thereto by the Eighth Congress;

10. Stresses the importance of the programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice and the necessity of strengthening it in order to make it more responsive to the needs and expectations of Member States, whose stability and social peace, as well as law enforcement and judicial structures, may be undermined by the growing level and impact of criminality;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the level of human and financial resources of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat is sufficient for it to carry out its multiple tasks mandated by United Nations policy-making bodies, including the promotion of collaborative action by Governments on problems of mutual concern, evaluation research, the collection and dissemination of information, the preparation of reports and studies, and technical co-operation activities, and to ensure that the specialized nature of the programme of work of the Branch is fully reflected in its management and staffing;

12. Takes note of the efforts made by the Secretariat towards the establishment of a global crime prevention and criminal justice information network, urges governmental agencies concerned and criminal justice institutions to join the network, in view of its value, and requests the Secretary-General to secure adequate resources for its full development and functioning;

13. Invites the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1990, to give priority consideration to the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the work of its eleventh session, paying attention also to the operational aspects of the programme of work in crime prevention, with a view to assisting interested countries in developing self-reliant and adequate law enforcement and judicial structures through human resources development, the reinforcement of national machinery, the promotion of human rights, the organization of joint training activities and the development of pilot and demonstration projects, and urges the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat and other funding agencies to continue to provide financial support and assistance for technical co-operation activities;

14. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in co-operation with the Secretariat, to play an active role in the formulation and implementation of technical co-operation projects in crime prevention and criminal justice, to allocate adequate resources and expertise for technical assistance activities and to increase their support to the interregional and regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;

15. Reiterates its invitation to Governments to participate actively in the preparations for the Eighth Congress, particularly through the involvement of national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and control, the submission of national position papers on the different agenda items, the establishment, as appropriate, of national committees and focal points and the encouragement of contributions from the academic community and relevant scientific institutions;

16. Urges Member States to contribute to the two research workshops to be held during the Eighth Congress on the computerization of criminal justice information and alternatives to imprisonment by preparing research and technical papers and other information that would make possible a substantive and fruitful exchange of national experiences in these areas;

17. Calls upon the specialized agencies, in particular the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization and the International Maritime Organization, and other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to participate actively in the Eighth Congress and to give the necessary attention and priority to national, regional and international measures aimed at preventing crime and improving the quality of the administration of justice;

18. Requests the Eighth Congress, under item 3 of its provisional agenda, to give urgent attention to strengthening international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in pursuance of the recommendations of the preparatory meetings and of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, which also emphasized, inter alia, the role of criminal law in environmental protection;

19. Also requests the Eighth Congress, under item 5 of its provisional agenda, to pay particular attention to the linkages between illicit drug trafficking, organized crime and terrorist criminal activities, and to propose viable control measures;

20. Encourages Member States to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence in order to enable the Fund to undertake activities of assistance to countries requesting it;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, with a strengthened information programme, that the substantive and organizational work of the Eighth Congress is fully adequate for the successful outcome of the Congress, and to provide the required resources;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Eighth Congress and to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Seventh Congress, to be prepared in pursuance of resolution 22 of the Seventh Congress and of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/49, with a view to assessing the progress achieved and ensuring continuity between the congresses;

23. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session his views and recommendations on the implementation of the conclusions of the Eighth Congress;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice".

General Assembly resolution 44/72

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/756) without vote, 9 November (meeting 37); 22-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.22); agenda item 102.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 12-20, 30, 37; plenary 78.

Review of UN crime programme

In response to a 1988 Economic and Social Council resolution,(43) the Secretary-General reported(44) on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice. He also drew attention to recommendations made by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its 1988 session.(45) Other topics discussed included preparations for the Eighth Congress (see below) and regional and international collaboration and activities.

The Sub-Committee of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (Riyadh, 18-19 January)(46) discussed the world-wide problem of crime, the need for international co-operation and assistance, the inadequacy of the present co-operation and assistance, and development of an effective international crime and justice programme. It concluded that existing mechanisms for collective action and assistance were seriously deficient in both concept and capacity; therefore, national Governments should develop and subscribe to a broad UN convention on crime to provide a foundation for a genuinely effective international programme of crime prevention and control. It suggested that a new convention could be submitted to the Ninth UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

To deal with its increasing activities in this area, the Secretariat had attempted to make operational activities more cost-effective and to better integrate them with criminological and legal research, policy analysis, monitoring of global trends and implementation of existing standards. The Secretary-General pointed out that human and financial resources available to the United Nations programme for crime prevention were shrinking while legislative mandates were multiplying.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/68 without vote.

Review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice in pursuance of Council resolution 155 C (VII) of 13 August 1948 and General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950,

Recalling also its resolutions 1986/11 of 21 May 1986, 1987/53 of 28 May 1987 and 1988/44 of 27 May 1988, and General Assembly resolutions 40/32 of 29 November 1985, 41/107 of 4 December 1986 and 42/59 of 30 November 1987,

Alarmed at the increase both in the incidence and seriousness of crime, both conventional and non-conventional, in many parts of the world, which undermines the development process, impairs the quality of life and threatens human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Bearing in mind the fact that crime has assumed a transnational character, which calls for a concerted international response,

Convinced of the urgent need to strengthen international co-operation in order to face the challenge posed by contemporary forms of crime,

Determined to improve regional, interregional and international co-operation to achieve further progress in combating crime, particularly in its new forms and dimensions,

Recognizing the pivotal role of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in providing guidance in this field through the elaboration of draft instruments, model agreements and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice, the preparation of United Nations congresses and the co-ordination of United Nations activities,

Recalling that 1988 is the fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the programme of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Determined to make further progress in the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the relevant Economic and Social Council and General Assembly resolutions on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Aware of the constraints the Secretary-General faces in allocating to particular programmes the resources available to the United Nations,

Noting with alarm that the present capacity and the status of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat are not commensurate with its enlarged responsibilities and expanded programme mandates,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General concerning the progress made in the implementation of the conclusions of the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Reaffirms its conviction of the importance of the programme of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and the necessity of strengthening it in order to make it more fully responsive to the needs and expectations of Member States;

3. Reaffirms also the value of the quinquennial United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders in fostering the exchange of information and experiences and recommends that the congresses focus on priority issues for in-depth examination and expand the number of workshops on specific topics involving the regional and interregional institutes, the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre at Riyadh, non-governmental organizations and relevant professional associations;

4. Notes that, while serious efforts have been made to implement recommendations related to the substantive aspects of the programme, more attention should be paid to the existing structure and level of management of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in pursuance of Council resolutions 1986/11 and 1987/53 and General Assembly resolution 42/59;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to implement paragraph 3 (a) of its resolution 1987/53, in which he was requested to develop the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch as a specialized body in the field of crime and justice;

6. Notes with concern the shortage of staff of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch needed to carry out the multiple tasks mandated by the policy-making bodies, including action-oriented research, collection and dissemination of information, preparation of reports and technical co-operation, and reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to increase the number of regular posts assigned to the Branch, at least to the former level;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing his proposals for the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1995, to incorporate a separate programme on crime and justice and to include in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 sufficient resources for the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to enable it to implement fully its programme activities;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General and the organizations concerned to take appropriate measures for the full implementation of the conclusions and recommendations adopted as a result of the programme review, as contained in Council resolutions 1986/11, 1987/53 and 1988/44 and General Assembly resolution 42/59;

9. Calls upon Member States to contribute more generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence so as to enable the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch and the regional and interregional institutes to intensify technical co-operation activities and organize training courses and regional seminars on more effective crime prevention and criminal justice policies and strategies in the context of development;

10. Takes note of the efforts made towards the establishment of a global crime prevention and criminal justice information network and requests the Secretary-General to secure adequate resources for its full realization, including:

(a) Designing the specifications for the system;

(b) Recruiting a specialist to implement it, ensuring access to all potential users and taking advantage of existing information networks;

11. Urges Governments in the process of improving the management of criminal justice to consider the use of suitable information technology, including electronic data processing, and requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to develop guidelines and training materials on the use of information technology in the management of criminal justice for interested Member States, and to seek additional extrabudgetary resources to expand that work;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to improve the efficiency of the implementation of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue making the necessary provisions for the optimal functioning of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, pursuant to Council resolutions 1986/11 and 1987/53;

14. Determines that, in view of the crucial role of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control as the preparatory body for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and in view of the various draft instruments and widely ranging recommendations stemming from the preparatory meetings, the eleventh session of the Committee, to be held in 1990 before the Congress, should be extended by two days;

15. Decides to authorize the Chairman of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to convene, whenever necessary, inter-sessional working groups in co-operation with the Secretariat and to designate special rapporteurs, in pursuance of Council resolution 1986/11, to consider priority issues of concern to Member States and prepare recommendations thereon, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary resources;

16. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the regional and interregional institutes, the regional commissions and relevant agencies, to intensify the operational aspects of the United Nations programme in crime prevention and criminal justice, inter alia, through the formulation and implementation of technical assistance projects on specific crime prevention and criminal justice issues;

17. Also requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the professional capacity of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch in order to support interregional advisory services and follow up the recommendations made at the country level;

18. Urges the Secretary-General to seek increased support for the critically needed interregional advisory services in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, to expand such services and to provide additional interregional and regional advisers as soon as budgetary and extrabudgetary resources permit;

19. Invites the United Nations funding agencies, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat, to continue to provide financial support to the United Nations regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice so as to assist them in carrying out their technical co-operation programmes, and invites other United Nations entities, such as the World Bank, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and the United Nations Children's Fund, to support projects in this field relating to their areas of concern;

20. Invites the regional commissions to increase their involvement in activities related to crime prevention and criminal justice by establishing closer collaborative ties with the regional institutes, and to designate focal points to co-ordinate technical co-operation activities undertaken at the regional and national levels, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources;

21. Expresses its appreciation to the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre for organizing annual meetings on the co-ordination of activities of the regional and inter-regional institutes, which helped strengthen existing collaborative arrangements between the Secretariat and the institutes, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure appropriate follow-up of agreed programmes;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the full co-ordination of activities relating to crime prevention and criminal justice in the United Nations system, paying particular attention to the strengthening of collaboration with the United Nations drug control bodies and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat;

23. Urges the Secretary-General to promote joint initiatives involving the Secretariat, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the professional community, to support the full realization of the project on the establishment of an advisory council of scholars and scientific organizations, and to inform the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control of progress made in that regard;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, at its first regular session of 1990, a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution, paying particular attention to Council resolution 1986/11, paragraph 4, Council resolution 1987/53, paragraphs 3 (a) and 4, and General Assembly resolution 42/59, paragraph 5.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/68

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1988/20): agenda item 11.

On the same date, the Council, by decision 1989/133, took note of the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its tenth (1988) session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its eleventh (1990) session.

Preparations for the Eighth (1990) Congress

During 1989, five regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders were convened, bringing together more than 600 participants from 129 Member States, as well as a large number of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in Bangkok (10-14 April), Helsinki (24-28 April), San José, Costa Rica (8-12 May), Cairo (27-31 May) and Addis Ababa (5-9 June). Resolutions were adopted on the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme, international co-operation and international instruments, among other subjects.

The International Commission of Jurists, under UN auspices, organized a conference (Caracas, 16-18 January) on the independence of judges and lawyers, adopting the Caracas Plan of Action in support of the UN programme aimed at strengthening the independence and impartiality of the judiciary and enhancing the role of lawyers. The seventh joint colloquium of the International Association of Penal Law, the International Society for Criminology, the International Society of Social Defence and the International Penal and Penitentiary Foundation (Bellagio, Italy, 4-7 May) submitted a statement⁽⁴⁷⁾ to the Economic and Social Council, calling on the United Nations to intensify relations with NGOs. An international seminar on corruption in government, organized by the Netherlands Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the UN Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, reviewed major causes and forms of corruption in government, exchanged experiences, and evaluated measures taken by Governments to combat corruption. It also considered a draft manual on practical measures against corruption, for submission to the Eighth Congress.

In March, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁴⁴⁾ that conference facilities, hotel accommodation and other facilities in Havana, Cuba, had been found satisfactory, and urged the Economic and Social Council to decide on the venue of the Congress urgently in view of time constraints and the need for advance planning.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/69 without vote.

Continuation of preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 415(V) of 1 December 1950, 32/60 of 8 December 1977, 41/107 of 4 December 1986 and 42/59 of 30 November 1987,

Recalling its resolutions 1986/11 of 21 May 1986, 1987/49 and 1987/53 of 28 May 1987 and 1988/44 of 27 May 1988,

Recalling also its decision 1988/146 of 27 May 1988, by which it took note with appreciation of the offer of the Government of Cuba to act as host to the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Noting that many members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its tenth session, expressed support for the invitation and gratitude to the Government of Cuba for its generous offer,

Bearing in mind that the General Assembly and the Council have reaffirmed in numerous resolutions the importance of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Acknowledging that the United Nations congresses, as global events, have influenced national policies and practices by facilitating the exchange of views and experiences, by mobilizing public opinion and by recommending policy options at the national, regional and international levels, thus making a significant contribution to the promotion of international and technical co-operation in this field,

Emphasizing the importance of undertaking all preparatory activities for the Eighth Congress in a timely and concerted manner,

Conscious of the need to increase the relevance and impact of the results of the Eighth Congress through heightened public awareness of those results,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 42/59, in which the Secretary-General was requested to take immediate steps to ensure the successful and cost-effective preparation of the Eighth Congress, including the appropriate scheduling of interregional and regional preparatory meetings and the timely finalization and circulation of the required documentation through the provision of the necessary resources, including temporary assistance,

Aware that the resources so far allocated for the preparation of the Eighth Congress are considerably less than the funds usually provided for the consultants, temporary staff, travel and public information activities for major conferences,

Also aware of the important work to be accomplished by the regional preparatory meetings and by the Secretariat in preparing the relevant documentation,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General relating to preparations for the Eighth Congress,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the work so far accomplished by the United Nations Secretariat in the preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in pursuance of Council resolution 1987/49 and following the directives of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

2. Notes with appreciation the interest shown and the support given to the Secretariat in the preparations for the Eighth Congress by many Governments and non-governmental organizations and the professional and scientific community;

3. Takes note of the Discussion guide for the interregional and regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders which provides general guidelines for the discussion at interregional meetings of the substantive topics of the Congress, and of the reports of the interregional preparatory meetings;

4. Take note also of the various documents prepared by the Secretariat on the substantive items considered by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and requests the Secretary-General to update them for submission to the Eighth Congress under the relevant agenda items;

5. Endorses the recommendations contained in the reports of the interregional preparatory meetings for the Eighth Congress and requests the Secretary-General to transmit those reports to the regional preparatory meetings, to be organized in 1989, with the observations, amendments and specific comments made on the occasion of the tenth session of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, as contained in annex IV to the report of the Committee on its tenth session;

6. Recommends that the regional preparatory meetings consider in depth the recommendations of the interregional preparatory meetings and make specific comments on the draft instruments contained in the reports;

7. Approves the documentation for the Eighth Congress as contained in annex III to the report of the Committee on its tenth session, pending further review by the Committee at its eleventh session;

8. Decides that item 3 of the provisional agenda for the Eighth Congress should serve as an umbrella topic, under which Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations could exchange experiences and examine problems encountered and successes achieved in international co-operation in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice;

9. Recommends that a research workshop on alternatives to imprisonment, consisting of at least two sessions with full conference support services, be held within the framework of item 4 of the provisional agenda for the Eighth Congress and that the report adopted be submitted to the committee dealing with that item;

10. Also recommends that work should continue on the development of guidelines for the computerization of the administration of criminal justice and that a workshop for the discussion of national experiences be held within the framework of item 4 of the provisional agenda for the Eighth Congress, the report of which should be submitted to the committee dealing with that item;

11. Further recommends that the Eighth Congress finalize the United Nations draft Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (the Tokyo Rules), the draft Bilateral Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, the United Nations draft Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (the Guidelines of Riyadh), the United Nations draft Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty, the draft Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, the draft Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, the draft Model Agreement on Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters and the draft Model Agreement on Transfer of Supervision of Foreign Offenders Who Have Been Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released, and make every effort to secure their adoption for the strengthening of regional and international co-operation in the fight against crime;

12. Decides that the Eighth Congress should be held from 27 August to 7 September 1990, with the necessary pre-Congress consultations;

13. Also decides that the theme for the Eighth Congress should be "International co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice for the twenty-first century";

14. Approves the rules of procedure for the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders adopted by the Seventh Congress, on the understanding that the Eighth Congress should make every effort to reach a consensus on all substantive matters;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in his preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991, to allocate the necessary resources for the organization of the Eighth Congress, in accordance with past practice and the existing guidelines for the organization of major United Nations conferences;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue the practice of inviting twenty-five consultants to participate in the congresses at the expense of the Organization so as to ensure that adequate expertise is provided to the Eighth Congress by each region for each substantive item of the provisional agenda;

17. Calls on Governments to make preparations for the Eighth Congress by all appropriate means, with a view to formulating national position papers;

18. Urges the regional commissions, regional and interregional institutes in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, specialized agencies and other entities within the United Nations system, other intergovernmental organizations concerned, and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council to become actively involved in the preparations for the Eighth Congress;

19. Invites representatives of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control attending the regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth Congress to assist Government representatives in their substantive deliberations on the topics to be considered by the Congress and provide adequate follow-up of the recommendations made by the interregional preparatory meetings;

20. Also invites the Committee, at its eleventh session, to accord priority attention to the preparations for the Eighth Congress and to ensure that all necessary organizational and substantive arrangements are made in good time;

21. Requests the Secretary-General, in his report to the General Assembly, to stress the urgency of providing the necessary additional resources, including temporary assistance and travel for the Secretary-General of the Eighth Congress and additional staff members of the Secretariat, to service the regional preparatory meetings in 1989 and to engage in relevant consultations with Member States so as to enable the Secretariat to undertake, in an effective and timely manner, all the preparatory activities for the Congress;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the information programme related to the Eighth Congress in order to create awareness among experts and the general public of the significance of the work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/69

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1988/20); agenda item 11.

Also on 24 May and on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted decision 1989/134 by recorded vote.

Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 24 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council, recalling its decision 1988/146 of 27 May 1988, in which it took note with appreciation of the offer of the Government of Cuba to act as host, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985, to the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders at Havana in 1990, and taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on crime prevention and criminal justice, which indicated that a first planning mission visited Havana and concluded that the conference facilities were satisfactory, and that, in view of time constraints and the need to make preparations, a decision by the Council on the venue of the Congress was urgently required, accepted with gratitude the kind offer of the Government of Cuba to act as host to the Eighth Congress.

Economic and Social Council decision 1989/134

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 51-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) by recorded vote (43-2), 12 May (meeting 14); 15-nation draft (E/1989/C.2/L.7); agenda item 11.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Poland, Portugal, Rwanda, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Concerted action against crime

On 24 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/62 without vote.

Concerted international action against the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Milan Plan of Action, unanimously adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and resolutions 1 on organized crime, 2 on the struggle against illicit drug trafficking, 22 on crime prevention in the context of development, and 23 on criminal acts of a terrorist character, also unanimously adopted by the Seventh Congress,

Recalling also its resolution 1986/10, section I, of 21 May 1986, in which the Secretary-General was urged to accord priority to the development of specific proposals for concerted international action against the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions 41/107 of 4 December 1986 and 42/59 of 30 November 1987, in which the Assembly called for priority attention to be accorded to the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action,

Alarmed by the marked increase in the transnational dimensions of grave forms of crime and by the comparative impunity enjoyed by the perpetrators of such forms of crime,

Noting with dismay the shortcomings of existing international co-operation arrangements and instruments for the prevention of transnational forms of crime,

Gravely concerned at the growing tendency of some Governments and transnational corporations to facilitate the dumping of toxic nuclear and industrial waste in developing countries,

Deeply preoccupied with the devastating damage to the environment which is the direct outcome of harmful and illicit practices, such as the dumping of toxic waste, the thoughtless depletion of non-renewable resources, the extermination of animal species, the massive use of herbicides and defoliants and the release into the atmosphere of harmful gases and radioactive substances,

Concerned about the sustained pillage of archaeological sites and the illicit international trade in objects belonging to the cultural heritage of nations, and the ensuing damage to the national identity of peoples,

Aware of the necessity of revising existing international instruments so as to make them more responsive to the new realities of transnational forms of crime,

Conscious of the indispensability of international co-operation and concerted action for the effective control of transnational forms of crime,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on proposals for concerted international action against the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action;

2. Invites Governments, international organizations, concerned non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and other decision-making bodies to examine favourably the recommendations contained in that report, with a view to implementing them, taking into account the social, political and economic characteristics of each country;

3. Urges Governments to examine existing domestic legislation with a view to enacting provisions, including penal provisions, to protect the natural environment, in cases where such legislation is non-existent or insufficiently developed, and to establish adequate compensation for the victims of such practices;

4. Reiterates the need for the international community to make a concerted effort to prevent, combat and monitor all actions leading to the dumping of toxic nuclear and industrial waste in developing countries, in close co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme and the International Atomic Energy Agency;

5. Invites Governments to exercise stricter and more effective control over the industrial sector or other sectors that could be involved in such conduct;

6. Decides that the topics of transnational crimes against the environment and against the cultural patrimony of countries should be considered under item 3 of the provisional agenda for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in order to explore the possibilities of formulating comprehensive policies of international co-operation for the prevention of such offences, including the imposition of sanctions;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the present resolution, to expand his report on proposals for concerted international action against the forms of crime identified in the Milan Plan of Action, for submission to the Eighth Congress.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/62

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1988/20); agenda item 11.

Organized crime

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/70 without vote.

International co-operation in combating organized crime

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Concerned that organized crime has increased in many parts of the world and has become more transnational in character, leading, in particular, to the spread of such negative phenomena as violence, terrorism, corruption, illegal trade in narcotic drugs and, in general, undermining the development process, impairing the quality of life and threatening human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Taking into account the decisions of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders relating to organized crime, as well as views expressed on the matter by members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Convinced of the need to strengthen international co-operation in combating organized crime,

Recognizing the pivotal role of the Committee in providing guidance and the co-ordinating role to be played by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, especially by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, in strengthening international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

1. Invites the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to give special attention in its work to promoting international co-operation in combating organized crime;

2. Calls upon Governments, international organizations and interested non-governmental organizations to co-operate to that end with the Committee and to submit to the Committee, through the Secretary-General, their proposals on strengthening international co-operation in combating organized crime;

3. Requests the Committee to consider ways of strengthening international co-operation in combating organized crime, taking due account of the opinions of Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations, and to submit its views to the Council at its first regular session of 1992.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/71 without vote.

International co-operation in combating organized crime

The General Assembly,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Concerned that organized crime has increased in many parts of the world and has become more transnational in character, leading, in particular, to the spread of such negative phenomena as violence, terrorism, corruption and illegal trade in narcotic drugs and, in general, undermining the development process, impairing the quality of life and threatening human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Taking into account the decisions of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders relating to organized crime, as well as the views expressed on the matter by members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/70 of 24 May 1989,

Convinced of the need to strengthen international co-operation in combating organized crime,

Convinced also that the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders will, inter alia, explore the possibilities and ways of strengthening further international co-operation in combating organized crime,

Recognizing the pivotal role of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in providing guidance and the co-ordinating role to be played by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, especially by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, in strengthening international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

1. Invites the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its eleventh session, to give special attention in its work to promoting international co-operation in combating organized crime;

2. Calls upon Governments, international organizations and interested non-governmental organizations to co-operate to that end with the Committee and to submit to the Committee, through the Secretary-General, their proposals on strengthening international co-operation in combating organized crime;

3. Requests the Committee to consider ways of strengthening international co-operation in combating organized crime, taking due account of the opinions of Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations, as well as opinions expressed at and decisions taken by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and to submit its views, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Domestic violence

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 1989/67 without vote.

Domestic violence

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/36 of 29 November 1985,

Recalling also its resolution 1986/10, section IV, of 21 May 1986,

Bearing in mind the significance for victims of domestic violence of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power,

Aware of the need for measures to be taken on behalf of victims of crime and abuse of power,

Taking into account its resolution 1988/27 of 26 May 1988 on efforts to eradicate violence against women within the family and society, in which, inter alia, it requested the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth session the relevant recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Violence in the Family with Special Emphasis on its Effects on Women, held at Vienna from 8 to 12 December 1986, in order for the Committee to review them and provide guidance on their implementation, and to submit appropriate documentation thereon to the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Concerned about the fact that domestic violence against spouses, children and the elderly cuts across all cultures and socio-economic classes,

Mindful of the need for different legal and social systems, at all levels, to provide a more effective and concerted response to domestic violence and to ensure the fair treatment of victims by justice and social assistance systems,

Bearing in mind that the question of domestic violence should be considered under item 6 of the provisional agenda for the Eighth Congress, entitled "Prevention of delinquency, juvenile justice and the protection of the young: policy approaches and directions",

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the note by the Secretary-General on progress achieved with respect to the implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/36 on domestic violence;

2. Takes note of the recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Violence in the Family with Special Emphasis on its Effects on Women;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to pursue actively the implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/36;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to undertake further comparative research, studies and reports on developments in the phenomenon of domestic violence against spouses, children and the elderly, from the perspective of criminal justice, criminal law and procedure, taking into account the recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting, especially the role of crisis intervention and protection and of social and other service delivery systems;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on domestic violence for consideration under item 6 of the provisional agenda for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/67

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Rights of those facing death penalty

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/64 without vote.

Implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984, in which it approved the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty,

Recalling also resolution 15 of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling further section X of its resolution 1986/10 of 21 May 1986, in which it requested a study on the question of the death penalty and new contributions of the criminal sciences to the matter,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty,

Noting with satisfaction that a large number of Member States have provided the Secretary-General with information on the implementation of the safeguards and have made contributions,

Noting with appreciation the study on the question of the death penalty and the new contributions of the criminal sciences to the matter,

Alarmed at the continued occurrence of practices incompatible with the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty,

Aware that effective implementation of those safeguards requires a review of relevant national legislation and the improved dissemination of the text to all persons and entities concerned with them, as specified in resolution 15 of the Seventh Congress,

Convinced that further progress should be achieved towards more effective implementation of the safeguards at the national level on the understanding that they shall not be invoked to delay or to prevent the abolition of capital punishment,

Acknowledging the need for comprehensive and accurate information and additional research about the implementation of the safeguards and the death penalty in general in every region of the world,

1. Recommends that Member States take steps to implement the safeguards and strengthen further the protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, where applicable, by:

(a) Affording special protection to persons facing charges for which the death penalty is provided by allowing time and facilities for the preparation of their defence, including the adequate assistance of counsel at every stage of the proceedings, above and beyond the protection afforded in non-capital cases;

(b) Providing for mandatory appeals or review with provisions for clemency or pardon in all cases of capital offence;

(c) Establishing a maximum age beyond which a person may not be sentenced to death or executed;

(d) Eliminating the death penalty for persons suffering from mental retardation or extremely limited mental competence, whether at the stage of sentence or execution;

2. Invites Member States to co-operate with specialized bodies, non-governmental organizations, academic institutions and specialists in the field in efforts to conduct research on the use of the death penalty in every region of the world;

3. Also invites Member States to facilitate the efforts of the Secretary-General to gather comprehensive, timely and accurate information about the implementation of the safeguards and the death penalty in general;

4. Further invites Member States that have not yet done so to review the extent to which their legislation provides for the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty as set out in the annex to Council resolution 1984/50;

5. Urges Member States to publish, for each category of offence for which the death penalty is authorized, and if possible on an annual basis, information on the use of the death penalty, including the number of persons sentenced to death, the number of executions actually carried out, the number of persons under sentence of death, the number of death sentences reversed or commuted on appeal and the number of instances in which clemency has been granted, and to include information on the extent to which the safeguards referred to above are incorporated in national law;

6. Recommends that the report of the Secretary-General on the question of capital punishment, to be submitted to the Council in 1990, in pursuance of its resolution 1745(LIV) of 16 May 1973, should henceforth cover the implementation of the safeguards as well as the use of capital punishment;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to publish the study on the question of the death penalty and the new contributions of the criminal sciences to the matter, prepared pursuant to Council resolution 1986/10, section X, and to make it available, with other relevant documentation, to the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

Juvenile justice

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/66 without vote.

United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/33 of 29 November 1985, to which is annexed the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules),

Recalling also section II of its resolution 1986/10 of 21 May 1986, entitled "Juvenile justice and the prevention of juvenile delinquency",

Aware of the exemplary role of the Beijing Rules in promoting the development, improvement and reform of juvenile justice systems world wide,

Emphasizing the need to promote continued progress and reform in the administration of juvenile justice and to ensure universal and effective recognition of, and respect for, the legitimate rights and interests of juveniles in conflict with the law,

1. Expresses its satisfaction with the report of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/33 and other resolutions on juvenile justice;

2. Expresses its appreciation of the efforts of Member States, specialized agencies, United Nations regional commissions and institutes, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, experts, policy makers and practitioners, as well as the Secretariat, to promote the principles of the Beijing Rules;

3. Calls upon Member States that have not yet done so to apply the Beijing Rules and to submit information thereon to the Secretary-General;

4. Invites Member States to exchange views and information on their experiences and progress in implementing the Beijing Rules and to undertake multifaceted co-operation;

5. Urges Member States to provide funds for model projects which promote the principles of the Beijing Rules at the national, regional and interregional levels;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to promote concerted regional and international action and co-operation in connection with the Beijing Rules;

(b) To continue to disseminate the Beijing Rules widely in all official languages of the United Nations and to assist those countries that have not yet done so in translating the text of the Rules into their national languages and in disseminating them for the benefit of those working in the field of juvenile justice;

(c) To promote the letter and spirit of the Beijing Rules wherever possible, especially in all United Nations programmes relating to young persons;

(d) To ensure effective programme interlinkages within the United Nations system between juvenile justice, within the framework of the Beijing Rules, and situations of "social risk", especially youthful drug abuse, child abuse, child sale and trafficking, child prostitution and street children;

(e) To conduct collaborative research on various aspects of the administration of juvenile justice, with emphasis on innovative and effective programming, and to develop training programmes, material and curricula for juvenile justice personnel;

(f) To provide the necessary technical assistance to Member States, particularly the developing countries, in implementing the Beijing Rules, developing projects and evaluating achievements;

(g) To allocate the necessary funds for activities relating to the Beijing Rules, especially pilot projects;

7. Invites the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to promote and apply the principles of the Beijing Rules in all activities and programmes of relevance to young persons;

8. Calls upon the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme to support projects of technical assistance, to co-operate in promoting activities in the field of juvenile justice, and to invite other funding agencies within and outside the United Nations system to provide financial support for programmes relating to the administration of juvenile justice;

9. Requests the United Nations regional commissions and institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders to intensify efforts to promote the Beijing Rules, both in their work programmes and their project and advisory activities;

10. Decides that the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders should consider the progress achieved in the implementation of the Beijing Rules, and that the Secretary-General should submit an updated report thereon for consideration under item 6 of the provisional agenda for the Congress.

Arbitrary and summary executions

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/65 without vote.

Effective prevention and investigation of extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that article 3 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Bearing in mind that paragraph 1 of article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights states that every human being has an inherent right to life, that that right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her life,

Also bearing in mind the general comments of the Human Rights Committee on the right to life as enunciated in article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Stressing that the extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions contravene the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Mindful that the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in resolution 11 on extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions, called upon all Governments to take urgent and incisive action to investigate such acts, wherever they may occur, to punish those found guilty and to take all other measures necessary to prevent those practices,

Mindful also that in its resolution 1986/10, section VI, of 21 May 1986, it requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to consider at its tenth session the question of extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions with a view to elaborating principles on the effective prevention and investigation of such practices,

Recalling that the General Assembly in its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 expressed its deep concern about reports from various parts of the world relating to enforced or involuntary disappearances and called upon Governments, in the event of such reports, to take appropriate measures to search for such persons and to undertake speedy and impartial investigations,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of non-governmental organizations to develop standards for investigations,

Emphasizing that the General Assembly, in its resolution 42/141 of 7 December 1987, strongly condemned once again the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, that continued to take place in various parts of the world,

Noting that in the same resolution the General Assembly recognized the need for closer co-operation between the Centre for Human Rights and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in efforts to bring to an end summary or arbitrary executions,

Aware that effective prevention and investigation of extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions requires the provision of adequate financial and technical resources,

1. Recommends that the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions annexed to the present resolution should be taken into account and respected by Governments within the framework of their national legislation and practices, and should be brought to the attention of law enforcement and criminal justice officials, military personnel, lawyers, members of the executive and legislative bodies of the Governments and the public in general;

2. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to keep the above recommendations under constant review, taking into account the various socio-economic, political and cultural circumstances in which extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions occur;

3. Invites Member States that have not yet ratified or acceded to international instruments that prohibit extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, to become parties to these instruments;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include the Principles in the United Nations publication entitled Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments;

5. Requests the United Nations regional and inter-regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders to give special attention in their research and training programmes to the Principles, and to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the provisions of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and other international instruments relevant to the question of extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions.

ANNEX

Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions

Prevention

1. Governments shall prohibit by law all extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions and shall ensure that any such executions are recognized as offences under their criminal laws, and are punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account the seriousness of such offences. Exceptional circumstances including a state of war or threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency may not be invoked as a justification of such executions. Such executions shall not be carried out under any circumstances including, but not limited to, situations of internal armed conflict, excessive or illegal use of force by a public official or other person acting in an official capacity or by a person acting at the instigation, or with the consent or acquiescence of such person, and situations in which deaths occur in custody. This prohibition shall prevail over decrees issued by governmental authority.

2. In order to prevent extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions, Governments shall ensure strict control, including a clear chain of command over all officials responsible for apprehension, arrest, detention, custody and imprisonment, as well as those officials authorized by law to use force and firearms.

3. Governments shall prohibit orders from superior officers or public authorities authorizing or inciting other persons to carry out any such extra-legal, arbitrary or summary executions. All persons shall have the right and the duty to defy such orders. Training of law enforcement officials shall emphasize the above provisions.

4. Effective protection through judicial or other means shall be guaranteed to individuals and groups who are in danger of extra-legal, arbitrary or summary executions, including those who receive death threats.

5. No one shall be involuntarily returned or extradited to a country where there are substantial grounds for believing that he or she may become a victim of extra-legal, arbitrary or summary execution in that country.

6. Governments shall ensure that persons deprived of their liberty are held in officially recognized places of custody, and that accurate information on their custody and whereabouts, including transfers, is made promptly available to their relatives and lawyer or other persons of confidence.

7. Qualified inspectors, including medical personnel, or an equivalent independent authority, shall conduct inspections in places of custody on a regular basis, and be empowered to undertake unannounced inspections on their own initiative, with full guarantees of independence in the exercise of this function. The inspectors shall have unrestricted access to all persons in such places of custody, as well as to all their records.

8. Governments shall make every effort to prevent extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions through measures such as diplomatic intercession, improved access of complainants to intergovernmental and judicial bodies, and public denunciation. Intergovernmental mechanisms shall be used to investigate reports of any such executions and to take effective action against such practices. Governments, including those of countries where extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions are reasonably suspected to occur, shall co-operate fully in international investigations on the subject.

Investigation

9. There shall be a thorough, prompt and impartial investigation of all suspected cases of extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions, including cases where complaints by relatives or other reliable reports suggest unnatural death in the above circumstances. Governments shall maintain investigative offices and procedures to undertake such inquiries. The purpose of the investigation shall be to determine the cause, manner and time of death, the person responsible, and any pattern or practice which may have brought about that death. It shall include an adequate autopsy, collection and analysis of all physical and documentary evidence, and statements from witnesses. The investigation shall distinguish between natural death, accidental death, suicide and homicide.

10. The investigative authority shall have the power to obtain all the information necessary to the inquiry. Those persons conducting the investigation shall have at their disposal all the necessary budgetary and technical resources for effective investigation. They shall also have the authority to oblige officials allegedly involved in any such executions to appear and testify. The same shall apply to any witness. To this end, they shall be entitled to issue summonses to witnesses, including the officials allegedly involved, and to demand the production of evidence.

11. In cases in which the established investigative procedures are inadequate because of lack of expertise or impartiality, because of the importance of the matter or because of the apparent existence of a pattern of abuse, and in cases where there are complaints from the family of the victim about these inadequacies or other substantial reasons, Governments shall pursue investigations through an independent commission of inquiry or similar procedure. Members of such a commission shall be chosen for their recognized impartiality, competence and independence as individuals. In particular, they shall be independent of any institution, agency or person that may be the subject of the inquiry. The commission shall have the authority to obtain all information necessary to the inquiry and shall conduct the inquiry as provided for under these Principles.

12. The body of the deceased person shall not be disposed of until an adequate autopsy is conducted by a physician, who shall, if possible, be an expert in forensic pathology. Those conducting the autopsy shall have the right of access to all investigative data, to the place where the body was discovered, and to the place where the death is thought to have occurred. If the body has been buried and it later appears that an investigation is required, the body shall be promptly and competently exhumed for an autopsy. If skeletal remains are discovered, they should be carefully exhumed and studied according to systematic anthropological techniques.

13. The body of the deceased shall be available to those conducting the autopsy for a sufficient amount of time to enable a thorough investigation to be carried out. The autopsy shall, at a minimum, attempt to establish the identity of the deceased and the cause and manner of death. The time and place of death shall also be determined to the extent possible. Detailed colour photographs of the deceased shall be included in the autopsy report in order to document and support the findings of the investigation. The autopsy report must describe any and all injuries to the deceased including any evidence of torture.

14. In order to ensure objective results, those conducting the autopsy must be able to function impartially and independently of any potentially implicated persons or organizations or entities.

15. Complainants, witnesses, those conducting the investigation and their families shall be protected from violence, threats of violence or any other form of intimidation. Those potentially implicated in extra-legal, arbitrary or summary executions shall be removed from any position of control or power, whether direct or indirect, over complainants, witnesses and their families, as well as over those conducting investigations.

16. Families of the deceased and their legal representatives shall be informed of, and have access to, any hearing as well as to all information relevant to the investigation, and shall be entitled to present other evidence. The family of the deceased shall have the right to insist that a medical or other qualified representative be present at the autopsy. When the identity of a deceased person has been determined, a notification of death shall be posted, and the family or relatives of the deceased immediately informed. The body of the deceased shall be returned to them upon completion of the investigation.

17. A written report shall be made within a reasonable period of time on the methods and findings of such investigations. The report shall be made public immediately and shall include the scope of the inquiry, procedures and methods used to evaluate evidence as well as conclusions and recommendations based on findings of fact and on applicable law. The report shall also describe in detail specific events that were found to have occurred and the evidence upon which such findings were based, and list the names of witnesses who testified, with the exception of those whose identities have been withheld for their own protection. The Government shall, within a reasonable period of time, either reply to the report of the investigation, or indicate the steps to be taken in response to it.

Legal proceedings

18. Governments shall ensure that persons identified by the investigation as having participated in extra-legal, arbitrary or summary executions in any territory under their jurisdiction are brought to justice. Governments shall either bring such persons to justice or co-operate to extradite any such persons to other countries wishing to exercise jurisdiction. This principle shall apply irrespective of who and where the perpetrators or the victims are, their nationalities or where the offence was committed.

19. Without prejudice to principle 3 above, an order from a superior officer or a public authority may not be invoked as a justification for extra-legal, arbitrary or summary executions. Superiors, officers or other public officials may be held responsible for acts committed by officials under their authority if they had a reasonable opportunity to prevent such acts. In no circumstances, including a state of war, siege or other public emergency, shall blanket immunity from prosecution be granted to any person allegedly involved in extra-legal, arbitrary or summary executions.

20. The families and dependants of victims of extra-legal, arbitrary or summary executions shall be entitled to fair and adequate compensation within a reasonable period of time.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/65

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1988/20); agenda item 11.

UN crime prevention and criminal justice programmes

During 1989, the Economic and Social Council adopted five resolutions aimed at strengthening international co-operation and implementing internationally applicable principles of criminal justice.

Network of national correspondents

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/58 without vote.

United Nations network of government-appointed national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and control

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950, by which the Assembly established a system of national correspondents appointed by Governments to co-operate with the Secretariat in all matters concerning crime prevention and control,

Reaffirming also its resolution 357(XII) of 13 March 1951, in which it emphasized that the appointment of national correspondents should be made on the basis of their expert qualifications or experience, professional or scientific, in the field of crime prevention and control,

Recognizing the important role of national correspondents, the valuable contributions they have made and the work they have accomplished in the promotion and implementation of the United Nations programme of work in the field of crime prevention and control, including that of the United Nations institutes, the United Nations quinquennial congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Recognizing also the role the network has played in achieving a consensus and promoting co-operation, at the regional, interregional and international levels, on questions of criminal policy,

Bearing in mind the various legislative directives which have, over the years, called upon the national correspondent network to undertake an increasing number of activities of a technical and scientific nature, such as the conducting of research, participation in the implementation of major regional and global surveys, preparation of analytical reports on developments in crime and juvenile delinquency and criminal justice operations,

Also bearing in mind the fact that the role, functions and contributions of the network have substantially increased over the years, both in level and scope,

Taking into account the recommendations of the first general meeting of national correspondents, held on the occasion of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

1. Expresses satisfaction with the work and efforts of the Secretariat in bringing about an expansion of the national correspondents network to cover nearly all countries of the world;

2. Invites those Member States that have not yet done so to appoint one or more national correspondents and to inform the Secretary-General accordingly;

3. Also invites Member States:

(a) To appoint national correspondents from among experts, practitioners and policy makers in the field of crime prevention and control, and when appointing more than one national correspondent, to designate a chief national correspondent as national co-ordinator, as is already the case in numerous countries;

(b) To facilitate and support the work of national correspondents, recognizing their role and functions and according appropriate official status at the national level, thus promoting more effective collaboration with the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and control;

(c) To enhance the representation and involvement of national correspondents in technical meetings of the United Nations by, inter alia, including them in governmental delegations to United Nations quinquennial congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and relevant preparatory meetings;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to strengthen the functional capacity of the network and to co-ordinate and mobilize it by, inter alia:

(a) Fostering more systematic involvement in the United Nations programme of work;

(b) Ensuring a more effective flow of information and closer collaboration;

(c) Taking more fully into account the views of national correspondents on key questions of criminal policy to ensure their reflection in the work of the United Nations, facilitating consensus building, and ensuring that the programme of work responds to the technical needs and problems of various regions;

(d) Convening general meetings of national correspondents attending United Nations quinquennial congresses;

(e) Exploring ways and means of establishing strong, permanent, ongoing links between the network and the United Nations Secretariat, the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, the United Nations Development Programme and United Nations institutes, as well as justice agencies, scientific institutions and other organizations world wide;

(f) Continuing to publish, at regular intervals, information circulars to keep national correspondents abreast of developments in the work programme of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and control;

(g) Encouraging the organization of international advisory groups and meetings of national correspondents, to review, in particular, the implementation of relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to provide liaison services between national correspondents and the Secretariat;

6. Requests the United Nations institutes to involve national correspondents more fully in their activities;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its eleventh session;

8. Recommends that the Secretary-General transmit the present resolution to the Governments of Member States.

UN principles, standards and norms

Principles of justice for victims

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/57 without vote.

Implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind that the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/34 of 29 November 1985, adopted the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, set forth in the annex to the resolution, which had been approved by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling the request made to Member States to take the necessary steps to give effect to the provisions of the Declaration so as to secure for victims of crime and abuse of power the rights due to them,

Taking into account section III of its resolution 1986/10 of 21 May 1986, in which it recommended that continued attention be given to the implementation of the Declaration with a view to developing the co-operation of Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public in securing justice for victims and in promoting integrated action on behalf of victims at the national, regional and international levels,

Noting that the first report of the Secretary-General concerning measures taken to implement the Declaration indicates a number of areas which require further attention,

Noting with satisfaction the adoption of the European Convention on the Compensation of Victims of Violent Crimes by the Council of Europe on 24 November 1983 and of the recommendation on assistance to victims and the prevention of victimization by the Council of Europe on 17 September 1987, as well as the creation by some Member States of national funds for the compensation of victims of intentional and non-intentional offences,

Recognizing that effective implementation of the provisions of the Declaration in respect of victims of abuse of power is sometimes hampered by problems of jurisdiction and by difficulties in identifying and halting such abuses, owing, inter alia, to the transnational nature of the victimization,

Noting with appreciation the significant efforts made since the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to follow up and give effect to the Declaration, including the report prepared by an ad hoc committee of experts at the International Institute of Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences at Syracuse, Italy, in May 1986, as revised at a colloquium of leading non-governmental organizations active in crime prevention, criminal justice and the treatment of offenders and victims, held at Milan, Italy, in November and December 1987,

1. Recommends that the Secretary-General consider, subject to the provision of extrabudgetary funds and consideration by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, the preparation, publication and dissemination of a guide for criminal justice practitioners and others engaged in similar activities, taking into account the work already done on the subject;

2. Also recommends that Member States take the necessary steps to give effect to the provisions contained in the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, through:

(a) The adoption and implementation of the provisions contained in the Declaration in their national justice systems in accordance with their constitutional process and domestic practice;

(b) The introduction of legislation to simplify access by victims to the justice system in order to obtain compensation and restitution;

(c) The examination of methods of assisting victims, including adequate redress for the actual harm or damage inflicted, identifying limitations and exploring ways by which these may be overcome, to ensure that they meet effectively the needs of victims;

(d) The establishment of measures to protect victims from abuse, calumny or intimidation in the course or as a result of any criminal or other proceedings related to the crime, including effective remedies, should such abuses occur;

3. Further recommends that Member States, in collaboration with relevant services, agencies and organizations, endeavour:

(a) To encourage the provision of assistance and support services to victims of crime, with due regard to different social, cultural and legal systems, taking into account the experience of different models and methods of service delivery and the current state of knowledge concerning victimization, including its emotional impact, and the consequent need for service organizations to extend offers of assistance to victims;

(b) To develop suitable training for all who provide services to victims to enable them to develop the skills and understanding needed to help victims cope with the emotional impact of crime and overcome bias, where it may exist, and to provide factual information;

(c) To establish effective channels of communication between all those who are involved with victims, organize courses and meetings and disseminate information to enable them to prevent further victimization as a result of the workings of the system;

(d) To ensure that victims are kept informed of their rights and opportunities with respect to redress from the offender, from third parties or from the State, as well as of the progress of the relevant criminal proceedings and of any opportunities that may be involved;

(e) Where informal mechanisms for the resolution of disputes exist, or have been newly introduced, to ensure, if possible and with due consideration to established legal principles, that the wishes and sensibilities of victims are fully taken into consideration and that the outcome is at least as beneficial for the victims as would have been the case if the formal system had been used;

(f) To establish a monitoring and research programme to keep the needs of victims and the effectiveness of services provided to them under constant review; such a programme might include the organization of regular meetings and conferences of representatives of relevant sectors of the criminal justice system and other bodies concerned with the needs of victims, in order to examine the extent to which existing law, practice and victim services are responsive to the needs of victims;

(g) To undertake studies to identify the needs of victims in cases of unreported crime and make the appropriate services available to them;

4. Recommends that, at the national, regional and international levels, all appropriate steps be taken to develop international co-operation in criminal matters, inter alia, to ensure that those who suffer victimization in another State receive effective help, both immediately following the crime and on their return to their own country of residence or nationality, in protecting their interests and obtaining adequate restitution or compensation and support services, as necessary;

5. Recognizes the need to work out in greater detail part B of the Declaration and to develop international means for preventing the abuse of power and for providing redress for victims of such abuse where national channels may be insufficient, and recommends that appropriate steps be taken to this effect;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to organize, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funds, a meeting of experts to formulate specific proposals for the implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/34 and the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and the Abuse of Power, in so far as those documents apply to the abuse of power, in time for the proposals to be submitted to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its eleventh session and for consideration by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

Principles on the independence of the judiciary

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/60 without vote.

Procedures for the effective implementation of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolutions 40/32 of 29 November 1985 and 40/146 of 13 December 1985,

Recalling also that the Congress, in its resolution on the Basic Principles, recommended them for national, regional and interregional action and called upon the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to consider, as a matter of priority, the effective implementation of that resolution,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1986/10, section V, of 21 May 1986, by which Member States were invited to inform the Secretary-General every five years, beginning in 1988, of the progress achieved in the implementation of the Basic Principles, including their dissemination, their incorporation into national legislation, the problems faced in their implementation at the national level and assistance that might be needed from the international community,

Also bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 41/149 of 4 December 1986, in which the recommendations made by the Council were welcomed,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its tenth session,

Guided by the desire to promote the independence and impartiality of the judiciary,

1. Adopts the Procedures for the Effective Implementation of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, recommended by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and annexed to the present resolution;

2. Invites the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and its preparatory body to accord priority to ways and means of stimulating adherence to the Procedures.

ANNEX

Procedures for the effective implementation of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary

Procedure 1

All States shall adopt and implement in their justice systems the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary in accordance with their constitutional process and domestic practice.

Procedure 2

No judge shall be appointed or elected for purposes, or be required to perform services, that are inconsistent with the Basic Principles. No judge shall accept judicial office on the basis of an appointment or election, or perform services, that are inconsistent with the Basic Principles.

Procedure 3

The Basic Principles shall apply to all judges, including, as appropriate, lay judges, where they exist.

Procedure 4

States shall ensure that the Basic Principles are widely publicized in at least the main or official language or languages of the respective State. Judges, lawyers, members of the executive, the legislature, and the public in general, shall be informed in the most appropriate manner of the content and the importance of the Basic Principles so that they may promote their application within the framework of the justice system. In particular, States shall make the text of the Basic Principles available to all members of the judiciary.

Procedure 5

In implementing principles 7 and 11 of the Basic Principles, States shall pay particular attention to the need for adequate resources for the functioning of the judicial system, including appointing a sufficient number of judges in relation to case-loads, providing the courts with necessary support staff and equipment, and offering judges appropriate personal security, remuneration and emoluments.

Procedure 6

States shall promote or encourage seminars and courses at the national and regional levels on the role of the judiciary in society and the necessity for its independence.

Procedure 7

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/10, section V, Member States shall inform the Secretary-General every five years, beginning in 1988, of the progress achieved in the implementation of the Basic Principles, including their dissemination, their incorporation into national legislation, the problems faced and difficulties or obstacles encountered in their implementation at the national level and the assistance that might be needed from the international community.

Procedure 8

The Secretary-General shall prepare independent quinquennial reports to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on progress made with respect to the implementation of the Basic Principles, on the basis of the information received from Governments under procedure 7, as well as other information available within the United Nations system, including information on the technical co-operation and training provided by institutes, experts and regional and interregional advisers. In the preparation of those reports the Secretary-General shall also enlist the co-operation of specialized agencies and the relevant intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, in particular professional associations of judges and lawyers, in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, and take into account the information provided by such agencies and organizations.

Procedure 9

The Secretary-General shall disseminate the Basic Principles, the present implementing procedures and the periodic reports on their implementation referred to in procedures 7 and 8, in as many languages as possible, and make them available to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in order to ensure the widest circulation of those documents.

Procedure 10

The Secretary-General shall ensure the widest possible reference to and use of the text of the Basic Principles and the present implementing procedures by the United Nations in all its relevant programmes and the inclusion of the Basic Principles as soon as possible in the United Nations publication entitled Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/10, section V.

Procedure 11

As part of its technical co-operation programme, the United Nations, in particular the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme, shall:

(a) Assist Governments, at their request, in setting up and strengthening independent and effective judicial systems;

(b) Make available to Governments requesting them the services of experts and regional and interregional advisers on judicial matters to assist in implementing the Basic Principles;

(c) Enhance research concerning effective measures for implementing the Basic Principles, with emphasis on new developments in that area;

(d) Promote national and regional seminars, as well as other meetings at the professional and non-professional levels, on the role of the judiciary in society, the necessity for its independence, and the importance of implementing the Basic Principles to further those goals;

(e) Strengthen substantive support for the United Nations regional and interregional research and training institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice, as well as other entities within the United Nations system concerned with implementing the Basic Principles.

Procedure 12

The United Nations regional and interregional research and training institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice as well as other concerned entities within the United Nations system shall assist in the implementation process. They shall pay special attention to ways and means of enhancing the application of the Basic Principles in their research and training programmes, and to providing technical assistance upon the request of Member States. For this purpose, the United Nations institutes, in co-operation with national institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, shall develop curricula and training materials based on the Basic Principles and the present implementing procedures, which are suitable for use in legal education programmes at all levels as well as in specialized courses on human rights and related subjects.

Procedure 13

The regional commissions, the specialized agencies and other entities within the United Nations system as well as other concerned intergovernmental organizations shall become actively involved in the implementation process. They shall inform the Secretary-General of the efforts made to disseminate the Basic Principles, the measures taken to give effect to them and any obstacles and shortcomings encountered. The Secretary-General shall also take steps to ensure that non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council become actively involved in the implementation process and the related reporting procedures.

Procedure 14

The Committee on Crime Prevention and Control shall assist the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in following up the present implementing procedures, including periodic reporting under procedures 7 and 8 above. To this end, the Committee shall identify existing obstacles to, or shortcomings in, the implementation of the Basic Principles and the reasons for them. The Committee shall make specific recommendations, as appropriate, to the Assembly and the Council and any other relevant United Nations human rights bodies on further action required for the effective implementation of the Basic Principles.

Procedure 15

The Committee on Crime Prevention and Control shall assist the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and any other relevant United Nations human rights bodies, as appropriate, with recommendations relating to reports of ad hoc inquiry commissions or bodies, with respect to matters pertaining to the application and implementation of the Basic Principles.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/60

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1988/20); agenda item 11.

Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/61 without vote.

Guidelines for the effective implementation of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/169 of 17 December 1979, by which the Assembly adopted the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials set forth in the annex to the resolution,

Recalling also resolution 14 of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in which the Congress, inter alia, called attention to the guidelines for the more effective implementation of the Code formulated at the Inter-regional Preparatory Meeting for the Seventh Congress on the topic "Formulation and application of United Nations standards and norms in criminal justice", held at Varese, Italy, in 1984,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1986/10, section IX, of 21 May 1986, in which it requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its tenth session, to consider measures for the more effective implementation of the Code, in the light of the guidance provided by the Seventh Congress,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its tenth session,

Guided by the desire to promote the implementation of the Code,

1. Adopts the Guidelines for the Effective Implementation of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, recommended by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and annexed to the present resolution;

2. Invites the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and its preparatory meetings to explore ways and means of stimulating adherence to the Guidelines.

ANNEX

Guidelines for the Effective Implementation of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials

I. Application of the Code

A. General principles

1. The principles embodied in the Code shall be reflected in national legislation and practice.

2. In order to achieve the aims and objectives set out in article 1 of the Code and its Commentary, the definition of "law enforcement officials" shall be given the widest possible interpretation.

3. The Code shall be made applicable to all law enforcement officials, regardless of their jurisdiction.

4. Governments shall adopt the necessary measures to instruct, in basic training and all subsequent training and refresher courses, law enforcement officials in the provisions of national legislation connected with the Code as well as other basic texts on the issue of human rights.

B. Specific issues

1. Selection, education and training. The selection, education and training of law enforcement officials shall be given prime importance. Governments shall also promote education and training through a fruitful exchange of ideas at the regional and interregional levels.

2. Salary and working conditions. All law enforcement officials shall be adequately remunerated and shall be provided with appropriate working conditions.

3. Discipline and supervision. Effective mechanisms shall be established to ensure the internal discipline and external control as well as the supervision of law enforcement officials.

4. Complaints by members of public. Particular provisions shall be made, within the mechanisms mentioned under paragraph 3 above, for the receipt and processing of complaints against law enforcement officials made by members of the public, and the existence of these provisions shall be made known to the public.

II. Implementation of the Code

A. At the national level

1. The Code shall be made available to all law enforcement officials and competent authorities in their own language.

2. Governments shall disseminate the Code and all domestic laws giving effect to it so as to ensure that the principles and rights contained therein become known to the public in general.

3. In considering measures to promote the application of the Code, Governments shall organize symposia on the role and functions of law enforcement officials in the protection of human rights and the prevention of crime.

B. At the international level

1. Governments shall inform the Secretary-General at appropriate intervals of at least five years on the extent of the implementation of the Code.

2. The Secretary-General shall prepare periodic reports on progress made with respect to the implementation of the Code, drawing also on observations and on the co-operation of specialized agencies and relevant intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

3. As part of the reports mentioned above, Governments shall provide to the Secretary-General copies of abstracts of laws, regulations and administrative measures concerning the application of the Code, any other relevant information on its implementation, as well as information on possible difficulties in its application.

4. The Secretary-General shall submit the above-mentioned reports to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control for consideration and further action, as appropriate.

5. The Secretary-General shall make available the Code and the present guidelines to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in all official languages of the United Nations.

6. The United Nations, as part of its advisory services and technical co-operation and development programmes, shall:

(a) Make available to Governments requesting them the services of experts and regional and interregional advisers to assist in implementing the provisions of the Code;

(b) Promote national and regional training seminars and other meetings on the Code and on the role and functions of law enforcement officials in the protection of human rights and the prevention of crime.

7. The United Nations regional institutes shall be encouraged to organize seminars and training courses on the Code and to carry out research on the extent to which the Code is implemented in the countries of the region as well as the difficulties encountered.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/61

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1988/20); agenda item 11.

UN standards and norms

The Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/63 on 24 May without vote.

Implementation of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Calling attention to the Milan Plan of Action and the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, the Safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement

Officials, the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules) and the Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners,

Recognizing the important role the United Nations has played in the development of those standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice through its quinquennial congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Acknowledging the valuable contribution the United Nations has made to those endeavours through its activities in the field of human rights, based on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other instruments,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 40/146 of 13 December 1985, 41/149 of 4 December 1986 and 42/143 of 7 December 1987 on human rights in the administration of justice,

Recalling also its resolution 1987/53 of 28 May 1987 on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Commending the steps initiated by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to ensure even closer co-operation, including preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, which were noted with appreciation by the General Assembly in its resolution 42/143,

Welcoming in particular the fact that focal points have been created within the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Centre for Human Rights to monitor the human rights aspects of the administration of justice within various programmes and to provide, as appropriate, advice on co-ordination and other relevant issues,

Convinced of the need for further co-ordinated and concerted action by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Centre for Human Rights, as called for, inter alia, in Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1988/33 of 8 March 1988 on human rights in the administration of justice, 1988/40 of 8 March 1988 on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers, 1988/45 of 8 March 1988 on administrative detention without charge or trial, and 1988/68 of 10 March 1988 on summary or arbitrary executions,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Interregional Preparatory Meeting for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on the topic "United Nations norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice: implementation and priorities for further standard setting",

1. Invites Governments:

(a) To adopt in national legislation and practice and to implement fully United Nations standards and guidelines on crime prevention and criminal justice, making them available to all persons concerned;

(b) To design realistic and effective mechanisms for implementing the standards and guidelines;

(c) To increase, as far as possible, the level of support provided to technical co-operation and advisory services at all levels for the more effective implementation of standards and norms, either directly or through such international funding agencies as the United Nations Development Programme, particularly when developing countries include specific projects in their country programmes;

(d) To devise measures to promote the observance of the principles embodied in United Nations instruments, including educational and promotional activities, the support of the mass media and increased community involvement;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To prepare a compilation of all existing United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice and publish them in a form similar to that of the United Nations publication entitled Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments;

(b) To formulate practical proposals for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on procedures and actions at national, regional and international levels to implement United Nations norms and standards in crime prevention and criminal justice;

3. Encourages the continuing development of strategies for the practical implementation of United Nations standards and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice and of measures to assist Member States, at their request, in their implementation, as well as in evaluating their impact and effectiveness, in particular through the advisory services of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, the Centre for Human Rights and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat;

4. Also encourages intensified co-operation between the United Nations and its regional and interregional institutes in crime prevention and criminal justice, and requests that special attention be paid, inter alia, to:

(a) The strengthening, as far as possible, of substantive support to the institutes;

(b) The application of United Nations instruments by the institutes in their research and training programmes, including the development of appropriate curricula and training materials based on those instruments;

(c) The provision of technical assistance to Member States upon request;

5. Emphasizes the need to strengthen the role of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in overseeing, evaluating and following up the implementation process, including:

(a) Keeping under review the application of existing standards;

(b) Assisting the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other United Nations bodies and related entities, as appropriate, with reports and recommendations relating to their work;

(c) Fostering more active inter-sessional involvement of Committee members, inter alia, by designating them as resource persons on priority topics;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate action to establish pre-sessional working groups of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control which would:

(a) Prepare certain items for discussion by the Committee;

(b) Oversee the elaboration of questionnaires to be used for the reporting system;

(c) Examine in-depth replies, data and reports received from Governments and other relevant sources, including non-governmental organizations;

(d) Identify general problems that may impinge on the effective implementation of standards and norms and recommend viable solutions with action-oriented proposals based on the principles of international co-operation and solidarity;

7. Notes with appreciation that the United Nations continues to give special attention to standard-setting work in priority areas, in pursuance of the mandates of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

8. Recognizes the importance of developing diversified funding strategies, including recourse to voluntary and mixed multilateral and bilateral contributions for specific projects, and of strengthening the involvement of United Nations development agencies, including the World Bank and the United Nations Development Programme;

9. Acknowledges the significant role of the United Nations regional and interregional institutes and the regional commissions, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice;

10. Decides to draw the attention of the regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth Congress and of the Congress itself to the issues raised in the present resolution;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the provisions of the present resolution and to report thereon to the Eighth Congress.

Technical co-operation

During 1989, the Interregional Advisor in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice carried out missions to a number of countries. Advisory services were provided on a range of subjects, including legal reform; the establishment of crime prevention councils or other mechanisms; improving access to justice, especially for the poor or marginalized segments of society; reduction of prison overcrowding and other correctional reforms, with emphasis on non-institutional alternatives and staff training; and upgrading the capability of law enforcement and criminal justice personnel to deal with sophisticated new forms of transnational crime, especially drug trafficking. Preventive and protective strategies and improved juvenile justice were given special attention in advisory services. The Interregional Advisor also visited Italy, Japan, Spain and the United States to obtain financial support for projects in developing countries.

The UN Secretariat consulted with both developing and potential donor countries in order to expand technical co-operation. Through the good offices of the Secretariat, Italy provided advisory assistance to the Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and to Jamaica for the computerization of criminal justice and improvement of prison conditions. The United Kingdom provided advice to Malawi and Zambia on probation and prison reforms. Several possible projects were identified, following consultations with officials of Member States; they included the establishment of a senior police officers' school for Ghana, the prevention of juvenile delinquency in Botswana, an assessment of crime trends in Mauritius, a criminal statistics project in Ethiopia, treatment of drug addicts in prison in Malaysia, and training of judges in Bolivia.

In October, a memorandum of understanding on co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice was signed in Moscow by the United Nations Office at Vienna and the Minister of the Interior of the USSR. It would provide for collaborative activities between the Ministry, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the UN Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute in Rome and the UN-affiliated Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control. Among envisaged activities were a research workshop on the prevention of organized crime and a training course on computer technology and police work.

Information network

During 1989, the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Information Network, established with the co-operation of the State University of New York at Albany, became operational. It was developed to facilitate information exchange and linkages between policy makers, planners, practitioners, scholars and other experts, as well as national correspondents and research institutions, and to ensure better use of the data base of world crime surveys. Electronic bulletins on special subjects were also provided.

Crime prevention institutes

The regional and interregional UN institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders continued wide-ranging activities, including research and dissemination of information. Increasingly, they provided direct advisory assistance on criminal law reform, alternatives to imprisonment, application of modern management techniques to criminal justice systems, juvenile justice and implementation of human rights standards. Their Fifth Annual Joint Meeting on Programme Co-ordination (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 18 January) examined modalities of closer co-operation, co-ordination and joint work, and discussed priority areas for further action, including the Third UN Survey of Crime Trends, Operations of Criminal Justice Systems and Crime Prevention Strategies⁽⁴⁸⁾ and practical implementation of UN standards in crime prevention and criminal justice.

African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

Since the adoption of the statute of the UN African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders by the Conference of African Ministers in 1988, 23 countries had signed the statute, including Uganda, the Institute's host country. At the inaugural meeting of the Institute's Governing Board at Kampala on 14 and 15 June 1989, the Board approved the Institute's proposed 1989-1993 work programme and considered the financing of the Institute and responsibilities of participating States. In August, the Board appointed the Director and the Deputy Director of the Institute. The Institute was to concentrate its activities on training, research and collection and dissemination of information, with major emphasis on the study of juvenile delinquency, economic and commercial crimes, corruption and bribery, violence against persons, and drug abuse and trafficking.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/59 without vote.

African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1984/51 of 25 May 1984, by which it urged the Secretary-General and all the organizations and agencies involved in the establishment of the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to take steps to ensure its prompt creation and appealed to Governments in the African region to co-operate fully and act expeditiously in this respect,

Affirming the usefulness of regional co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice as fostered by the United Nations regional and interregional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, which have played pivotal roles in assisting the Member States of their respective regions,

Bearing in mind that the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, by its resolution 642(XXIII) of 15 April 1988, adopted the statute of the Institute and decided that its headquarters should be located at Kampala,

Acknowledging with satisfaction the activities so far undertaken during the initial phase of the operation of the Institute and the efforts made by the Economic Commission for Africa, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, towards the full realization of the project,

Noting with appreciation the responsiveness of the United Nations Development Programme in earmarking the necessary funds for the initial phase of the operation of the Institute,

Firmly convinced that the Institute should undertake its activities on a continuous basis, so as to respond promptly and efficiently to the needs and concerns of the African States, meet their training and research requirements in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, and contribute to existing regional and international efforts directed towards the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps taken to establish the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue making every effort to ensure adequate support for the Institute, through the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, and to explore other means of ensuring the effective operation of the Institute;

3. Urges the Secretary-General and all the organizations and agencies involved in the establishment of the Institute to make every effort to assist the host country in arrangements necessary for the effective operation of the Institute;

4. Invites Member States in the African region and other interested States to contribute generously to the activities of the Institute to enable it to formulate and implement technical co-operation projects;

5. Invites the international community, including governmental and non-governmental organizations, to respond positively to the need for assistance and support, which would enable the Institute to fulfil its mandates effectively;

6. Urges the United Nations Development Programme to continue providing the necessary financial support to the Institute, and appeals to other funding agencies to do likewise;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to issue special postage stamps on the occasion of the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held in 1990, and to place the revenue earned at the disposal of the Institute for the formulation and implementation of specific technical assistance projects in the African region;

8. Invites the United Nations regional and inter-regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders to strengthen existing collaboration with the Institute, promote a regular exchange of information and experience and implement joint activities of mutual interest;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Council at its first regular session of 1990.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/59

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without VOTE

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1988/20); agenda item 11.

Financial implications. E/1989/C.2/L.13.

United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute

In 1989, the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute was transformed into the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/56 without vote.

Statute of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1086 B (XXXIX) of 30 July 1965, in which it requested the Secretary-General to proceed to the establishment of a funds-in-trust account to be administered by the United Nations for the purpose of strengthening the capacity of the Organization to carry out its responsibilities in the social defence field,

Recalling also the establishment in 1968 at Rome of the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute within the framework of its resolution 1086 B (XXXIX),

Recalling further resolution 20 of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in which the Congress noted with satisfaction the invaluable contribution made, inter alia, by the Institute to the growing international and national recognition of the central importance of action-oriented research as an effective instrument for the formulation and implementation of policies for crime prevention and control,

Noting with satisfaction that the activities of the Institute have been positively reviewed by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on a periodic basis and that the Institute's work programme has evolved and expanded in response to the needs of the international community, particularly in the developing regions of the world,

Noting especially the diversification of the Institute's activities in terms of extension of research results through training and field activities aimed at assisting developing countries and in terms of an enhanced contribution to the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Bearing in mind that the Milan Plan of Action, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, called for the strengthening of the United Nations regional and interregional institutes in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Mindful of the importance of updating the terms of reference and the modus operandi of the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute to bring them into line with current thinking in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in particular in respect of the needs of developing countries,

Mindful also of the importance of making more permanent arrangements for the governance of the Institute,

1. Adopts the statute of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps, in consultation with the Director of the Institute, to implement the statute and to report thereon to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its eleventh session.

ANNEX

Statute of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute

Article I

Establishment of the Institute

The United Nations Social Defence Research Institute (UNSDRI) is hereby established as the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI).

Article II

Objectives and functions

1. The objective of the Institute shall be to contribute, through research, training, field activities and the collection, exchange and dissemination of information, to the formulation and implementation of improved policies in the field of crime prevention and control, due regard being paid to the integration of such policies within broader policies for socio-economic change and development, and to the protection of human rights. The Institute shall assist intergovernmental, governmental and non-governmental organizations in their efforts in this regard. Accordingly, the principal functions of the Institute shall be the following:

- (a) To promote, conduct, co-ordinate and support research and, in collaboration with the countries concerned, to organize and support field activities with a view to:
 - (i) Establishing a reliable base of knowledge and information on social problems involving juvenile delinquency and adult criminality, special attention being given to the new, frequently transnational forms of the phenomena;
 - (ii) Identifying appropriate strategies, policies and instruments for the prevention and control of the phenomena so as to contribute to socio-economic development and to promote the protection of human rights;
 - (iii) Designing practical models and systems aimed at providing support for policy formulation, implementation and evaluation;
- (b) To provide action-oriented research and training relating to the United Nations programme on crime prevention and criminal justice;
- (c) To design and carry out training activities at the interregional level and, at the request of interested countries, at the national level;
- (d) To promote the exchange of information by, inter alia, maintaining an international documentation centre on criminology and related disciplines to enable the Institute to respond to the need of the international community for the dissemination of information world-wide and to serve the needs of the United Nations and of scholars and other experts requiring such facilities.

2. In the pursuit of its objectives, the Institute shall carry out its activities in close collaboration and co-ordination with institutes and other bodies within and outside the United Nations system, especially with the United Nations regional institutes on the prevention of crime.

Article III

Status, organization and location of the Institute

1. The Institute shall be a United Nations entity and thus form part of the United Nations system.

2. The Institute shall have its own Board of Trustees and a Director and supporting staff. It shall be subject to the Financial Regulations and Staff Regulations of the United Nations, except as may be provided otherwise by the General Assembly. It shall also be subject to the Financial Rules, the Staff Rules and all other administrative issuances of the Secretary-General, except as may be otherwise decided by the Secretary-General.

3. The Headquarters of the Institute shall be located at Rome. The Institute may, with the approval of the Board of Trustees and of the Secretary-General, establish such other offices as it deems necessary.

Article IV

Board of Trustees

1. The Institute and its work shall be governed by a Board of Trustees (hereinafter referred to as "the Board") under the overall guidance of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control.

2. The Board shall be composed of the following:

(a) Seven members selected by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control upon nomination by the Secretary-General and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council, with due regard to the fact that the Institute and its work are funded from voluntary contributions and to the principle of equitable geographical distribution. The members shall be chosen from among eminent persons who possess the necessary qualifications and expertise. They shall serve in their individual capacity for a term of five years from the date of the first Board meeting in which they are invited to participate. They shall be eligible for reappointment by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with the endorsement of the Economic and Social Council for not more than one additional term. Members shall retire by rotation; for this purpose, when the members are first appointed, three shall serve for five years, two for four years and two for three years. The members to serve these initial terms shall be determined by the Board at its first session by the drawing of lots;

(b) A representative of the Secretary-General, who shall normally be the Head of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, a representative of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, a representative of the host country and the Director of the Institute shall serve as ex officio members of the Board.

3. The Board, under the guidance of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, shall:

(a) Formulate principles, policies and guidelines for the activities of the Institute;

(b) Consider and approve the work programme and budget proposals of the Institute on the basis of recommendations submitted to it by the Director of the Institute;

(c) Evaluate the Institute's completed and ongoing activities on the basis of periodic reports submitted to it by the Director of the Institute;

(d) Make the recommendations necessary or desirable for the operation of the Institute;

(e) Report periodically to the Economic and Social Council through the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control.

4. The Board shall meet at least once every two years. It shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall elect its own officers, including its President, in accordance with the adopted rules of procedure. It shall take its decisions in the manner provided in its rules of procedure.

5. The Board shall consider methods for enhancing the financial resources of the Institute with a view to ensuring the effectiveness of its operations and their continuity within the overall framework of the United Nations programme on crime prevention and criminal justice.

6. Members of the Board, in furtherance of the principles and policies of the Institute, may be invited to help in achieving the goals of the Institute by attending meetings on behalf of the Institute, raising funds for the Institute's operations and helping to establish national support teams, if possible, in their respective countries for the attainment of the objectives of the Institute.

7. Organizations of the United Nations system and other institutions may be represented as appropriate at meetings of the Board in respect of activities of interest to them under the conditions outlined in the rules of procedure of the Board.

Article V

Director and staff

1. The Director shall be appointed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations after consultation with the Board.

2. The Director shall have overall responsibility for the organization, direction and administration of the Institute in accordance with general directives issued by the Board and within the terms of the authority delegated to the Director by the Secretary-General. The Director shall, inter alia:

(a) Submit the work programmes and the budget estimates of the Institute to the Board for its consideration and adoption;

(b) Oversee the execution of the work programmes and make the expenditures envisaged in the budget of the Institute as adopted by the Board;

(c) Submit to the Board annual and ad hoc reports on the activities of the Institute and the execution of its work programmes;

(d) Submit to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control the reports approved by the Board;

(e) Appoint and direct the staff of the Institute on behalf of the Secretary-General;

(f) Co-ordinate the work of the Institute with that of other organs and bodies of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and international, national and regional institutions engaged in similar fields;

(g) Negotiate arrangements with Governments and intergovernmental organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and academic and philanthropic institutions, with a view to offering and receiving services related to the activities of the Institute;

(h) Actively seek appropriate funding for the implementation of the work programme of the Institute;

(i) Accept, subject to the provisions of article VII, voluntary contributions to the Institute;

(j) Make the necessary arrangements for securing established and continuous contact with, and support from, United Nations Headquarters;

(k) Undertake other assignments or activities as may be determined by the Board or requested by the Secretary-General, provided that any such requests are consistent with the programme budget approved by the Board.

3. The staff of the Institute shall be appointed by the Director under letters of appointment signed by him or her in the name of the Secretary-General and limited to service with the Institute. The staff shall be responsible to the Director in the exercise of their functions.

4. The terms and conditions of service of the Director and the staff shall be those provided in the Staff Regulations and Staff Rules of the United Nations, subject to such arrangements for special rules or terms of appointment as may be proposed by the Director and approved by the Secretary-General.

5. The Director and the staff of the Institute shall not seek or receive instructions from any Government or from any authority external to the United Nations. They shall refrain from any action that might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization.

6. The Director and the staff of the Institute shall be officials of the United Nations and therefore shall be covered by Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, and by other international agreements and United Nations resolutions defining the status of such officials.

Article VI

Fellows and consultants

1. The Director may designate a limited number of well-qualified persons to serve as senior fellows of the Institute. Senior fellows shall be permitted to pursue their research at the Institute and shall be expected to provide advice and assistance in matters related to the work programme of the Institute.

2. The Director may also designate junior fellows as part of the training programme of the Institute. Junior fellows shall be expected to provide assistance in matters concerning the work programme of the Institute.

3. The Institute shall establish a restricted network of national fellows specialized in the field of criminological research to assist the activities of the Institute by advising on studies, research and training.

4. Fellows shall be designated in accordance with criteria established by the Board and procedures formulated by the Secretary-General and shall not be considered to be members of the staff of the Institute.

5. The Director may arrange for the services of consultants for special assignments in connection with the work programme of the Institute. Such consultants shall be engaged in accordance with policies established by the Secretary-General.

Article VII

Financial resources and rules governing the financial management of the Institute

The activities of the Institute shall be funded by voluntary contributions from States. The Institute may derive further resources in cash or in kind from the United Nations, its specialized agencies, other intergovernmental and governmental organizations and institutions, and non-governmental organizations. Acceptance by the Institute of offers of such further assistance shall, in every case, be subject to the decision of the President of the Board, in consultation with the Director of the Institute, in accordance with the basic aims of the Institute and the relevant provisions of the rules governing the financial management of the Institute. The President of the Board shall report on the matter to the Board at its following session.

Article VIII

Administrative and other support

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the Institute with appropriate administrative and other support in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations. The Institute shall reimburse the United Nations the cost of such support, as determined by the Controller of the United Nations after consultation with the Director.

Article IX

Relations with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, and other United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and international organizations

1. The Institute shall establish and maintain a close consultative, co-operative and working relationship with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, including in particular the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch.

2. The Institute may also establish and maintain such relations as it considers appropriate with other United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and international organizations.

Cultural development

World Decade for Cultural Development

In response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution,(49) the Secretary-General and the UNESCO Director-General in May submitted the first biennial report(50) on the progress of the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997).

The report described efforts towards the four objectives of the Decade: acknowledging the cultural dimension of development; affirming and enriching cultural identities; broadening participation in culture; and promoting international cultural co-operation. It reviewed activities undertaken by Member States, by UN organizations (including UNESCO, the lead agency) and by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. During 1988 and 1989, several regional meetings were held by national commissions for UNESCO to identify activities. Although it was still too early to draw a conclusion, the report stated that activities carried out by parties concerned during the first year of the Decade had not been as significant as might have been wished. The slow pace of implementation of the Plan of Action by Member States was attributed to the need felt by government officials to interpret Decade objectives in the contexts of their own economic and social development strategies before envisaging specific Decade activities. In most cases, there was more attention to traditional cultural activities involving artistic and literary fields than to activities taking into account cultural factors in development strategies. The report recommended that Member States that had not yet done so establish national committees for the Decade and resolutely envisage activities and projects in an innovative spirit of development, thereby expanding their efforts to optimize human resources, achieve economic recovery and make structural adjustments.

UN organizations were encouraged to step up their efforts to devise activities by appointing Decade co-ordinators and by periodically reporting on developments in implementing Decade activities. They also were to ensure the interlinking of the aims of the Decade and the new International Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000).(14) The report emphasized the importance of disseminating information on the cultural Decade and its purposes in order to involve the public at large.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/107 without vote.

World Decade for Cultural Development
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/187 of 8 December 1986, in which the Assembly proclaimed the period 1988-1997 the World Decade for Cultural Development, to be observed under the auspices of the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Noting that in addition to the regional meetings listed in the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations

Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the National Commissions for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the Arab States met at Nouakchott in June 1989 to co-ordinate their efforts to implement the Decade,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the progress of the World Decade for Cultural Development during the period 1988-1989;

2. Invites Member States, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to strengthen their efforts, as appropriate, in the implementation of the Plan of Action for the World Decade for Cultural Development;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to take the measures necessary to reinforce the co-ordination of the activities undertaken by the organizations of the United Nations system in support of the Decade through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination; such measures might include the establishment of a steering committee, if appropriate.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/107

27 July 1989 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1989/133) without vote, 18 July (meeting 13); draft by Mauritania (E/1989/C.3/L.5), orally revised: agenda item 9.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/238 without vote.

World Decade for Cultural Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/187 of 8 December 1986, in which it proclaimed the period 1988-1997 the World Decade for Cultural Development, to be observed under the auspices of the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/107 of 27 July 1989,

Recognizing the importance of cultural development based on the affirmation and enrichment of the cultural identities of all countries and its close relationship to overall development,

Welcoming the progress made by Member States and by non-governmental organizations in developing activities within the framework of the Decade,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the progress of the World Decade for Cultural Development during the period 1988-1989;

2. Invites Member States that have not yet done so to establish national committees for the Decade and otherwise to strengthen their efforts to implement the Plan of Action for the Decade;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those countries that have provided voluntary contributions in the form of consultant services to the secretariat of the Decade, and encourages other countries, international organizations and other organizations to make voluntary contributions in support of the Decade;

4. Invites the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to continue their efforts to develop activities within the framework of the Decade, in accordance with directives of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to strengthen co-ordination of the activities undertaken by the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in support of the Decade;

6. Emphasizes the importance of taking the cultural dimension of development into account in the elaboration of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade and in the working documents for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, to be held in 1990;

7. Reaffirms its support for the recommendations of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women aimed at promoting women's participation in the World Decade for Cultural Development, in particular those relating to better integration and promotion of women in the objectives of the Decade;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to obtain the views of Governments, appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on the objectives and scope of the global review for the purpose of evaluation, as recommended in paragraph 92 of the report of the Secretary-General and the Director-General on the Decade, and to submit those views to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

9. Expresses its support for the recommendation in paragraph 92 of the report of the Secretary-General and the Director-General for the conduct of an evaluation at the mid-point of the Decade, in 1993, under the auspices of the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in order to evaluate the implementation of the Plan of Action for the Decade;

10. Requests the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the progress of the Decade for the period 1990-1991.

General Assembly resolution 44/238

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/832/Add.1) by consensus, 4 December (meeting 48); draft by Ecuador (A/C.2/44/L.59); agenda item 12. Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 17, 46, 48; plenary 85.

Restitution of cultural property

Pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly request,(51) the Secretary-General transmitted a report(52) of the UNESCO Director-General on return or restitution of cultural property to countries of origin.

The Director-General described UNESCO efforts to implement the 1987 recommendations of the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to Its Countries of Origin or Its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation,⁽⁵³⁾ including measures to promote bilateral negotiations for the return or restitution of cultural property, international technical co-operation, and steps to curb illicit traffic in cultural property and public information. The recommendations adopted by the Intergovernmental Committee at its sixth session (Paris, 24-27 April 1989) were appended to the report.

The Committee, welcoming the International Council of Museums' Code of Professional Ethics and the International Confederation of Art Dealers' Code of Practice, expressed the hope that they would serve as a standard for acquisitions by private as well as public collectors. It recommended that countries subject to clandestine excavations consider regional arrangements for the certification of excavated cultural property where its locality, but not its State of origin, could be traced. Member States were urged to ensure the widest possible dissemination of notices by the International Criminal Police Organization of stolen cultural objects, not only to police and customs authorities but also to museums and dealers. The Committee appealed to mass media and cultural and educational institutions to accord greater attention to issues of return or restitution, and urged UNESCO to step up efforts to inform and educate both specialized and general audiences about the problems posed and progress achieved in the areas within the Committee mandate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/18 by recorded vote.

Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3026 A (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3148 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3187 (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3391 (XXX) of 19 November 1975, 31/40 of 30 November 1976, 32/18 of 11 November 1977, 33/50 of 14 December 1978, 34/64 of 29 November 1979, 35/127 and 35/128 of 11 December 1980, 36/64 of 27 November 1981, 38/34 of 25 November 1983, 40/19 of 21 November 1985 and 42/7 of 22 October 1987,

Recalling also the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property adopted on 14 November 1970 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in co-operation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Noting with satisfaction that, following its appeal, other Member States have become parties to the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property,

Aware of the importance attached by the countries of origin to the return of cultural property which is of fundamental spiritual and cultural value to them, so that they may constitute collections representative of their cultural heritage,

Reaffirming the importance of inventories as an essential tool for the understanding and protection of cultural property and for the identification of dispersed heritage and as a contribution to the advancement of scientific and artistic knowledge and intercultural communication,

Deeply concerned at the clandestine excavations and the illicit traffic in cultural property that continue to impoverish the cultural heritage of all peoples,

Again supporting the solemn appeal made on 7 June 1978 by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the return of irreplaceable cultural heritage to those who created it,

1. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to Its Countries of Origin or Its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation on the work they have accomplished, in particular through the promotion of bilateral negotiations, for the return or restitution of cultural property, the preparation of inventories of movable cultural property, the reduction of illicit traffic in cultural property and the dissemination of information to the public;

2. Reaffirms that the restitution to a country of its objets d'art, monuments, museum pieces, archives, manuscripts, documents and any other cultural or artistic treasures contributes to the strengthening of international co-operation and to the preservation and flowering of universal cultural values through fruitful co-operation between developed and developing countries;

3. Recommends that Member States adopt or strengthen the necessary protective legislation with regard to their own heritage and that of other peoples;

4. Requests Member States to study the possibility of including in permits for excavations a clause requiring archaeologists and palaeontologists to provide the national authorities with photographic documentation of each object brought to light during the excavations immediately after its discovery;

5. Invites Member States to continue drawing up, in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, systematic inventories of cultural property existing in their territory and of their cultural property abroad;

6. Also recommends that Member States should ensure that inventories of museum collections include not only the items on display but also those in storage, and that they comprise all necessary documentation, particularly photographs of each item;

7. Also invites Member States engaged in seeking the recovery of cultural and artistic treasures from the seabed, in accordance with international law, to facilitate by mutually acceptable conditions the participation of States having a historical and cultural link with those treasures;

8. Appeals to Member States to co-operate closely with the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to Its Countries of Origin or Its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation and to conclude bilateral agreements for this purpose;

9. Also appeals to Member States to encourage the mass information media and educational and cultural institutions to strive to arouse a greater and more general awareness with regard to the return or restitution of cultural property to its country of origin;

10. Requests States parties to the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property to keep the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization fully informed of the measures taken to ensure implementation of the Convention at the national level;

11. Welcomes the steady increase in the number of States parties to the Convention;

12. Invites once again those Member States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Convention;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin".

General Assembly resolution 44/18

6 November 1989 Meeting 45 139-0-16 (recorded vote)

Against: None.

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Speaking in explanation of its vote, the United Kingdom said it could not accept the principle that cultural property legitimately acquired should be returned to the country of origin; however, it condemned illicit trafficking in such property and was willing to discuss specific cultural property questions bilaterally with other Governments. The second paragraph of the resolution ran counter to its belief that the great international collections of art constituted a unique resource for the benefit of both the public and the international academic community, the United Kingdom said.

Chapter XIII

Women

In 1989, the United Nations continued to take steps to implement the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, adopted in 1985 to overcome continuing obstacles to the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985). Key activities centred around preparations for the review and appraisal of progress in implementing the Forward-looking Strategies, to be undertaken by the Commission on the Status of Women in 1990. The Commission held its thirty-third session in Vienna from 29 March to 7 April 1989.

The first regular update of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development was submitted in 1989 to the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly. The Survey, primarily a study of women's economic role in development, suggested that three issues were of particular relevance for future analyses: women's participation in economic decision-making, the relationship between women's economic role and the support functions provided in the family, and women's involvement in crucial issues related to the environment. The 1989 Survey, compiled by the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, updated information contained in the original Survey published in 1985.

The General Assembly in 1989 acted to improve the situation of rural women based on a comprehensive report by the Secretary-General and on the results of an International Seminar on Women and Rural Development, convened in May. In addition, the Assembly addressed matters concerning elderly women, the integration of women into development, and the status of various bodies and instruments to advance the status of women and ensure their equality. The Assembly also took action to improve the status of women in the UN Secretariat.

The Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendations of the Commission on the Status of Women, decided to increase the membership of the Commission, beginning in 1990, and to convene in 1991 a high-level interregional consultation on women in public life. The Council considered questions relating to women and development, including the impact of AIDS and women living in absolute poverty, as well as the situations of women in Latin America and the Caribbean, and in Central America, Palestinian women and those living under apartheid.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women considered reports of States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. On 18 December, the tenth anniversary of the treaty's adoption by the General Assembly, Chile became the one hundredth country to ratify the Convention.

Advancement of women

Implementation of the Nairobi Strategies

In response to a 1988 request of the General Assembly,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General in October submitted a report⁽²⁾ on implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, adopted in 1985 by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women.⁽³⁾ The report provided an overview of actions taken by organizations of the UN system to implement the Strategies, including a comprehensive reporting system for its monitoring, review and appraisal and contributions to the work of the Commission on the Status of Women. It described activities related to the situation of disabled women; new targets for the percentage of women in UN Professional and decision-making positions; more effective public information programmes related to the advancement of women; and plans for a consultation on women in public life and a seminar on women and rural development (see below). The report also detailed issues related to the three priority themes to be considered by the Commission at its 1990 session: equality (closing the gap between discrimination in law and discrimination in practice); development (integrating women fully into the development process and involving them in efforts to protect the environment as part of development); and peace (ensuring women's participation in politics and decision-making).

In March, pursuant to the Forward-looking Strategies and a 1988 request of the Economic and Social Council,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General reported on statistical indicators for monitoring implementation of the Strategies.⁽⁵⁾ The report provided basic indicators on the situation of women in 178 countries from the Compendium of Statistics and Indicators on the Situation of Women—1986.(6) The indicators covered by the report related to population, households and families; women in public affairs; women and crime and justice; economic activity, agriculture and national product; women and education; and health, water, sanitation and housing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/77 without vote.

Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 40/108 of 13 December 1985, 42/62 of 30 November 1987 and 43/101 of 8 December 1988, in which, inter alia, it endorsed and reaffirmed the importance of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000 and set out measures for their immediate implementation and for the overall achievement of the interrelated goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Taking into consideration the resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council on issues relating to women since its resolution 1987/18 of 26 May 1987,

Reaffirming its resolution 40/30 of 29 November 1985, in which it emphasized that the elderly must be considered an important and necessary element in the development process at all levels within a given society, and that, consequently, elderly women should be considered contributors to as well as beneficiaries of development,

Reaffirming also its determination to encourage the full participation of women in economic, social, cultural, legal and political affairs and to promote development, co-operation and international peace,

Conscious of the important and constructive contribution to the improvement of the status of women made by the Commission on the Status of Women, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned,

Emphasizing once again the priority of the implementation, monitoring, review and appraisal of the Forward-looking Strategies,

Recognizing the advancement of women as one of the priorities of the Organization for the biennium 1990-1991,

Recalling that the Commission will hold in 1990 a session of extended duration to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the importance of resolutions 1, 2 and 4 adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its special session in 1987, in particular its recommendation that the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies and the status of women in general should be incorporated as one of the priorities in the introduction to the medium-term plan of the Organization for the period 1992-1997;

3. Reaffirms the urgent need for the Forward-looking Strategies to be translated immediately into concrete action by Governments, within the framework of overall national priorities, as well as by the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

4. Calls upon Member States to give priority to policies and programmes relating to the subtheme "Employment, Health and Education", in particular to literacy, for the empowerment of women, especially those in the rural areas, to meet their own needs through self-reliance and the mobilization of indigenous resources, as well as to issues relating to the role of women in economic and political decision-making, population, the environment and information;

5. Reaffirms the central role of the Commission in matters related to the advancement of women, and calls upon it to promote the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies to the year 2000 based on the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the subtheme "Employment, Health and Education", and urges all organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate effectively with the Commission in this task;

6. Notes the preparations for the session of the Commission in 1990 to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies;

7. Requests the Commission during its session in 1990 to consider the role of women in and their contribution to development so as to ensure adequate attention to issues concerning women in the process of preparing for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries and the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade;

8. Also requests the Commission to consider at its session in 1990 the question of holding in 1995 a world conference on women, at the lowest possible cost, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

9. Requests the relevant United Nations bodies to continue to provide action-oriented input when reporting to the Commission on the priority themes;

10. Emphasizes, in the framework of the Forward-looking Strategies, the importance of the total integration of women in the development process, bearing in mind the specific and urgent needs of the developing countries, and calls upon Member States to establish specific targets at each level in order to increase the participation of women in professional, management and decision-making positions in their countries;

11. Also emphasizes the need to give urgent attention to redressing socio-economic inequities at the national and international levels as a necessary step towards the full realization of the goals and objectives of the Forward-looking Strategies;

12. Urges that particular attention be given by the United Nations and Governments to the situation of disabled women and that Governments take steps to ensure the equalization of opportunities for these women in the economic, social and political fields;

13. Endorses the convening in 1991 of a high-level inter-regional consultation on women in public life, to be financed within existing resources and from voluntary and other contributions;

14. Takes note with interest of the conclusions and recommendations of the International Seminar on Women and Rural Development: Programmes and Projects, held at Vienna from 22 to 26 May 1989;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in formulating the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001, and in integrating the Forward-looking Strategies into activities mandated by the General Assembly, to pay particular attention to the strengthening of national machineries for the advancement of women and to specific sectoral themes that cut across the three objectives, equality, development and peace, and include, in particular, literacy, education, health, population, the environment and the full participation of women in decision-making;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue updating the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, bearing in mind its importance, placing particular emphasis on the adverse impact of the difficult economic situation affecting the majority of developing countries, in particular on the condition of women, and giving special attention to worsening conditions for the incorporation of women into the labour force as well as to the impact of reduced expenditures for social services on women's opportunities for education, health and child care, and to submit a preliminary version of the updated World Survey on the Role of Women in Development to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, in 1993 and a final version in 1994;

17. Requests Governments, when presenting candidatures for vacancies in the Secretariat, in particular at the decision-making level, to give priority to women's candidatures when the required qualifications exist, and requests the Secretary-General in reviewing these candidatures to give special consideration to candidates from underrepresented and unrepresented countries;

18. Once again calls upon the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to establish five-year targets at each level for the percentage of women in Professional and decision-making positions, taking into account the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in order that a definite upward trend in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/206 D of 11 December 1986 may be registered with regard to the number of Professional and decision-making positions held by women by 1990, and to set additional targets every five years;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to report periodically to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, on activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Forward-looking Strategies;

20. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide for the existing weekly radio programmes on women in the regular budget of the United Nations, making adequate provisions for broadcasts in different languages, and to develop the focal point for issues relating to women in the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, which, in concert with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, should provide a more effective public information programme relating to the advancement of women;

21. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, an assessment of recent developments that are relevant to the priority themes to be considered at the subsequent session of the Commission and to transmit to the Commission a summary of relevant views expressed by delegations during the debate in the Assembly;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on measures taken to implement the present resolution;

23. Decides to consider these questions further at its forty-fifth session under the item entitled "Forward-looking Strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000".

General Assembly resolution 44/77

8	December	1989	Meeting	78	Adopted	without	vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/603 & Corr.1) without vote, 20 November (meeting 49); draft by Malaysia, for Group of 77 (A/C.3/44/L.30), orally revised; agenda item 104 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 21-28, 36, 49; plenary 78.

Monitoring, review and appraisal

In February 1989, the Secretary-General submitted a note(7) regarding the convening of a world conference to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies. He pointed out that, because of differences in composition, level of participation and public visibility, regular sessions of the Commission on the Status of Women might not be as effective a forum for review and appraisal as the three world conferences convened by the United Nations in 1975,(8) 1980(9) and 1985.(3) One matter of concern was the lack of response by Member States to his request for information on the implementation of the Strategies, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1988.(4) By 31 January 1989, only 16 Member States had replied, whereas for the 1985 Nairobi Conference information had been received from 127 Member States. The Secretary-General further noted that a number of delegations, in statements to the General Assembly, had suggested that 1995 would be an appropriate date for a new world conference, in line with the schedule of review and appraisal already adopted.

1990 Commission session

In 1988, the Economic and Social Council had decided(10) to extend the duration of the thirty-fourth (1990) session of the Commission on the Status of Women to 10 days, so that the Commission could review and appraise progress made by Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in implementing the Forward-looking Strategies. Pursuant to that decision, the Secretary-General in February 1989 submitted a note⁽¹¹⁾ describing preparations for the 1990 review, including regional preparatory meetings, conference servicing preparations and consolidated views of NGOs in consultative status with the Council on their contribution to the 1990 session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 1989/32.

Preparations for the session of the Commission on the Status of Women in 1990 to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988/19 of 26 May 1988, in which it decided to extend the duration of the thirty-fourth session of the Commission on the Status of Women, to be held in 1990, in order that the Commission might review and appraise progress made in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Concerned about the urgent need to implement the above-mentioned resolution, taking into account the provisional agenda outlined in the annex to the resolution,

Emphasizing the importance of a successful review and appraisal in order to increase the pace of implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies,

1. Decides that a comprehensive report on the progress achieved and obstacles encountered in implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women in the first live years should be submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its extended session in 1990;

2. Further decides that draft conclusions and recommendations arising from the review and appraisal should also be submitted and that they should include measures to overcome the obstacles that should be addressed immediately if the pace of implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies is to be increased;

3. Recommends that the Secretary-General, in order to obtain guidance in the formulation of draft conclusions and recommendations, make available information on the preliminary results of the review and appraisal, which will ultimately be included in the comprehensive report, to an open-ended group of Member States meeting on an informal basis in New York during the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly at the time of the debate on the advancement of women;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the comprehensive report and draft conclusions and recommendations, to use the documents listed in the annex to Council resolution 1988/22 of 26 May 1988, especially the first regular update of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development;

5. Urges the Secretary-General to contact national machineries for the advancement of women that have not yet responded to the questionnaire and exhort them to do so immediately, in order to obtain representative responses to the questionnaire and, if possible, to arrange for diagnostic missions to be sent on request to selected countries to provide assistance in the preparation of responses;

6. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to consider the documentation prepared by the Secretary-General in plenary meeting and to convene a committee of the whole to provide the final text of the recommendations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/32

24 May 1989	Meeting	15	Adopted	without	vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) without vote, 16 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev.1); agenda item 10.

Programme planning

In March 1989, pursuant to a 1988 request of the Economic and Social Council,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽¹³⁾ on the future of the Trust Fund for the Preparatory Activities for the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the UN Decade for Women. In 1988,⁽¹²⁾ the Council had approved continuation of the Fund through the biennium 1988-1989 for the monitoring and review and appraisal of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies. The Secretary-General asserted that long-term extra-budgetary financing was essential for full programme delivery of legislative mandates and suggested that a possible long-term arrangement should be explored with the UN Development Fund for Women. In the mean time, the Trust Fund should be continued to the end of the 1990-1991 biennium.

In April, the Commission on the Status of Women recommended that the Secretary-General explore ways of supplementing the information contained in his overall report on the programme performance of the United Nations with subprogramme-specific information on activities related to the advancement of women, including the following elements: a qualitative assessment of output produced; a quantitative scale differentiating output by scope and scale; and a correlation between output achieved and original objectives, as set out in the biennial programmes of work, medium-term plans and ultimately the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies. The Commission endorsed the proposed work programme of the Division for the Advancement of Women for the biennium 1990-1991.⁽¹⁵⁾

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/30 without vote.

Programme planning and activities to advance the status of women

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the high priority that Member States attach to activities to advance the status of women and the important role played by the Commission on the Status of Women in achieving that objective,

Stressing the need to ensure that, in the allocation of budgetary resources, activities for the advancement of women do not suffer disproportionately from the impact of restructuring and retrenchment measures,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General concerning programme planning matters,

Recalling previous resolutions on programme planning and activities to advance the status of women, including resolution 32/3 of 23 March 1988 of the Commission on the Status of Women, and, in particular, Council resolution 1988/18 of 26 May 1988,

Concerned that not all elements of the recommendations contained in Council resolution 1988/18 have been fully implemented, particularly those contained in section I, paragraph 1, and section II, paragraph 1,

Stressing that in subsuming the programme on the advancement of women under a major programme entitled "International co-operation for social development" of the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, women's issues should not be limited to the rubric of social issues,

1. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to include a separate programme on the advancement of women in his draft proposal for the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, as recommended by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1988/18 and by the Commission on the Status of Women in its resolution 32/3;

2. Decides that the inclusion of paragraph 65 in the draft introduction to the medium-term plan beginning 1992 is not an adequate response to the recommendation contained in Council resolution 1988/18, section I, paragraph 1;

3. Reiterates that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the status of women in general should be identified as a global priority in the introduction to the medium-term plan;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure that women's issues are not marginalized under the rubric of social issues and that they are reflected in particular in the economic programmes of the medium-term plan, as well as in other programmes;

5. Endorses the view expressed by the Secretary-General that the proposed subprogramme entitled "Monitoring, review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies" should be given high priority, and urges that the highest priority be accorded to addressing the fundamental needs of women in developing countries, particularly in such areas as literacy, education, employment, health and population, with a view to ensuring their full integration in the development process and full participation in decision-making;

6. Decides that the proposed subprogramme entitled "Development" should be reoriented to focus on the fundamental needs of women in developing countries, particularly the least developed countries;

7. Reaffirms the decision contained in its resolution 1988/18, section II, paragraph 1, that the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 and subsequent programme budgets should provide for full funding from the regular budget for the implementation of all aspects of legislative mandates for the advancement of women;

8. Decides that the Trust Fund for the Preparatory Activities for the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, established by the Secretary-General pursuant to Council decision 1983/132 of 26 May 1983, should be continued for the biennium 1990-1991 under the terms of reference set out in Council resolution 1988/18, section II, paragraph 2, as indicated in the proposed programme of work for the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat for the biennium 1990-1991;

9. Urges the Secretary-General, in carrying out this decision, to improve collaboration with the specialized agencies and the United Nations Development Fund for Women in consultation with their respective governing bodies, as required;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the future of the Trust Fund to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fifth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/30

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1969/90) without vote, 16 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev.1); agenda item 10.

System-wide co-ordination

In March, in accordance with a 1988 Council request,(16) the Secretary-General proposed a timetable: for the preparation of a system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for 1996-2001,(17), which would be directed towards the objectives of equality, development and peace. He proposed submission of the proposed plan to the Council in 1993, with a preliminary report outlining the proposed framework of the plan to be submitted in 1992 through the Commission on the Status of Women and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination. The proposed timetable would make it possible to take into account in the system-wide plan the views and inputs of governing bodies of the other organizations of the UN system.

The thirteenth ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women was held in Vienna on 10 April(18) to consider activities by UN organizations related to implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies and to discuss the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development (see below). Recommendations were adopted on implementation of the Strategies, which were brought to the attention of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). In October, ACC adopted a statement(19) on the review and appraisal of the Strategies, in which the organizations of the UN system recommitted themselves to the full implementation of their responsibilities under the Strategies: in programmes, in policies, in institutional arrangements and in personnel practices.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1989, by decision 1989/126, the Economic and Social Council deferred action until its second regular session of 1989 on a draft resolution entitled "System-wide co-ordination of activities to advance the status of women and to integrate women into development", recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women.

On 27 July, the Council, on a recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/105 without vote.

System-wide co-ordination of activities to advance the status of women and to integrate women in development

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming its essential role in reviewing and co-ordinating all activities of the United Nations system relevant to women's issues,

Recalling all relevant resolutions on co-ordination matters pertaining to the status of women, particularly Economic and Social Council resolutions 1985/46 of 31 May 1985, 1986/71 of 23 July 1986, 1987/65 of 8 July 1987, 1987/86 of 8 July 1987, 1988/22 of 26 May 1988, 1988/59 of 27 July 1988 and 1988/60 of 27 July 1988 and decision 1987/182 of 8 July 1987,

Noting, in particular, the report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on plans and programmes of the organizations of the United Nations system to implement the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995, the report of the Secretary-General on the preparation of a system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001 and the report of the Secretary-General on the scope and general approach of the cross-organizational programme analysis on the activities of the United Nations system related to the advancement of women,

Recalling the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995, accepted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1987/86,

Considering the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in promoting international co-operation to integrate women fully in economic development programmes and activities,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 42/193 of 11 December 1987 and 43/182 of 20 December 1988 on the preparation of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade,

1. Decides to continue to include the question of the system-wide co-ordination of activities to advance the status of women and to integrate women in development in its programme of work under the item on co-ordination in order to monitor the implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development in the programmes and programme budgets of the organizations of the United Nations system;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Economic and Social Council, biennially in odd-numbered years beginning in 1991, on the extent to which the system-wide medium-term plan is incorporated into the programmes and programme budgets of the organizations of the United Nations system, using as a baseline indicator the cross-organizational programme analysis of the activities of the United Nations system for the advancement of women;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to integrate the parts of the reports of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Council on the programme budget aspects of the implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan into his biennial report on monitoring the progress made by the organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, prepared under Council resolution 1988/22;

4. Recommends that all substantive reporting to the Commission on the Status of Women on the implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan be consolidated in a concise, detailed and analytical way in the biennial report on monitoring the progress made by the organizations of the United Nations system;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, to the extent possible, to subsume under the comprehensive reporting system established by Council resolution 1988/22 the existing reporting obligations to the Commission on the Status of Women not otherwise provided for in the present resolution regarding the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session documents related to the cross-organizational programme analysis of the activities of the United Nations system for the advancement of women, including the analysis itself and the relevant portions of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work of its twenty-ninth session, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development and the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

7. Urges all United Nations bodies, including the regional commissions, and the specialized agencies that have not yet done so to adopt and implement comprehensive policies for the advancement of women, on the basis of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development, and to incorporate them in their organization's medium-term plans, statements of objectives, programmes and other major policy statements;

8. Endorses the timetable proposed by the Secretary-General for the preparation of a system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in formulating the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001, to pay particular attention to the strengthening of national machinery for the advancement of women and to specific sectoral themes that cut across the three objectives—equality, development and peace—of the Forward-looking Strategies, such as literacy, education, population, health and the full participation of women in decision-making;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that specific action is taken to integrate the Forward-looking Strategies into related activities mandated by the General Assembly, in particular those mandated in the following resolutions: 42/104 of 7 December 1987 on the International Literacy Year, 42/186 of 11 December 1987 on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, 42/193 of 11 December 1987 and 43/182 of 20 December 1988 on the preparation of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, 43/15 of 27 October 1988 on the prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) and 43/181 of 20 December 1988 on the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000;

11. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade to attach high priority to issues related to the full integration of women in the development process, particularly by focusing on such prerequisites as literacy, education, employment, child care, population, health and participation in decision-making, and to stress the importance of the improvement of the situation of women for the fulfilment of such prerequisites.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/105

27	July	1989	Meeting	36	Adopted	without	vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/141) without vote, 21 July (meeting 25); draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev.1), orally amended by Canada; agenda item 7 (i).

Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) held its ninth session at the Institute's headquarters in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 20 to 24 February 1989.(21) Among the decisions brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council was one by which the Board endorsed the Institute's medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995, taking into account the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development covering the same period. The main objectives of the INSTRAW plan aimed at strengthening the national capability of developing countries in the area of research, training and information for the advancement of women, and concentrated on network-building for co-operation with INSTRAW.

The Board agreed that INSTRAW mandates in research, training and information on women and development had been further strengthened during 1988. It recommended that the Institute explore the possibility of formulating concrete programmes on communication support for women and development activities in co-operation with other UN bodies and organizations.

After examining, for the first time, the publication policy of INSTRAW, the Board endorsed the different types of its publications and recommended continuation of the policy related to their content and mode of production.

The Board reviewed the report of the first consultative meeting of the regional commissions (Santo Domingo, 16-17 February) and welcomed their suggestions for possible future long-term co-operation with INSTRAW. It also considered ways to strengthen co-operation with the regional commissions in terms of network-building and strengthening of focal points, which it said continued to be crucial to the Institute's mode of operation. Three new focal points for co-operation with INSTRAW at the national level were approved.

The Board also expressed satisfaction with the holding in 1988 of an international consultative meeting on communications for women in development.(22) The meeting's guidelines could provide the basis for formulating concrete programmes on communication support for women and development activities in co-operation with UN bodies and agencies.

The Board invited the regional commissions, INSTRAW focal points, NGOs and others to participate in celebrating the tenth anniversary of INSTRAW in 1990 at the regional and national levels.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/43 without vote.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988/31 of 26 May 1988,

Having considered the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its ninth session,

Convinced of the importance of research, training and information, the three main functions of the Institute, in questions relating to women and development, for bringing about mainstream developmental changes benefiting women and society,

Welcoming the fact that the Institute has intensified its training activities and is elaborating training methodologies, materials and programmes for defined target groups,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its ninth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the fact that networking, the mode of operation of the Institute, has been strengthened by such activities as the consultative meeting between the regional commissions and the Institute, which contributed to programme development;

3. Recommends that the Institute give priority to co-operation with the regional commissions, other United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies in future programming of joint activities;

4. Notes with interest the International Consultative Meeting on Communications for Women in Development organized by the Institute in co-operation with other organizations of the United Nations system, and endorses the recommendation of the Board that the report of the meeting be circulated widely;

5. Affirms that the role of the Institute in the implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development, which places emphasis on analysis of the interrelationship of factors affecting women and development, is important for the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

6. Notes that in 1990 the Institute will observe the tenth anniversary of its establishment;

7. Renews its appeal to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other potential donors to contribute, to the extent possible, to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women;

8. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and organizations that have contributed to the Trust Fund, thus ensuring the continuity of research, training and information programmes crucial for improved methodological approaches relating to women and development.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/43

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) without vote, 17 May (meeting 19); 44-nation draft (E/1989/C.2/L.14); agenda item 10.

INSTRAW activities

In accordance with a General Assembly request of 1987,(23) the Secretary, in August 1989, transmitted a report on the activities of INSTRAW.(24) The report presented the major highlights and results of the INSTRAW programme of activities during the 1988-1989 biennium. It noted that, since the last report of INSTRAW to the Assembly in 1987,(25) the work of the Institute had expanded, with priority given to the launching of a long-term research programme on evaluation methodologies for women and development projects, intensifying training and strengthening the communication component of the programme. In the context of the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995, which emphasized networking and co-operation with the UN system, INSTRAW had given particular attention to the strengthening of co-operation with the regional commissions and the experimental network of INSTRAW focal points established at the national level.

During the 1988-1989 biennium, INSTRAW launched a new long-term research programme related to monitoring and evaluation methodologies for programmes and projects on women and development, as mandated by the Economic and Social Council in 1987.(26) In July, INSTRAW organized a regional seminar on women in development at its headquarters in Santo Domingo.

The Institute expanded the scope of action of its long-term research programme on improving concepts and methods for data collection on women. Its training activities in statistics and indicators on women were intensified. In 1989, INSTRAW jointly organized with the Economic Commission for Europe the second meeting on statistics on women (Geneva, 14-16 November). One sub-regional training workshop (in Costa Rica for the Central American countries) and five more at the national level (in China, Ecuador, Greece, India and Senegal) were held during the year.

The Institute emphasized its public information component by producing material that would reach both the general public and the development community. Its newsletter, INSTRAW News, continued to be published biannually in English, French and Spanish.

In February, the Institute met with representatives of the five regional commissions to co-ordinate strategies within the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for 1990-1995 (see below) and within the Institute's medium-term plan for the same period.

Voluntary contributions pledged to the INSTRAW Trust Fund increased from $488,457 in 1987 to $828,285 in 1989.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/60 without vote.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/65 of 30 November 1987 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/43 of 24 May 1989,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its activities,

Recognizing that research, training and information activities relating to women and development, the three main components of the programme of work of the Institute, have been further strengthened, thus reflecting the current trends with regard to mainstream developmental changes benefiting women and society,

Convinced that networking, the mode of operation of the Institute, has been consolidated by co-operative arrangements with organizations within and outside the United Nations system and that this could strengthen interaction between regions and countries with a view to integrating the participation and needs of women into mainstream development,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the significance and scope of the activities of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and at the special importance attached to research, training, information, documentation and communication activities relating to women and development in order to contribute to the design of mainstream developmental policy;

2. Notes with appreciation that the Institute, in consultation with bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, has launched a new research programme for the elaboration of special methodologies for the monitoring and evaluation of programmes and projects for women, as requested in resolution 42/65;

3. Requests the Institute to continue its research on the contribution of women to development, including the work of women in the informal sector of the economy, and the elaboration of special methodologies for the monitoring and evaluation of programmes and projects for women, and to intensify its efforts to apply innovative training strategies with a view to strengthening national training capabilities, particularly in developing countries;

4. Commends the Institute for the priority that it has assigned to co-operation with the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, and welcomes the ongoing consultations between the regional commissions and the Institute with a view to launching parallel activities relating to women and development;

5. Notes that in 1990 the Institute will observe the tenth anniversary of its establishment;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and organizations that have contributed to or supported the activities of the Institute, thus expanding the scope of its research, training and information programmes relating to women and development;

7. Renews its invitation to States as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, so as to ensure that the Institute has the necessary resources to continue its research, training and information programmes, which are still of vital importance for the elaboration of improved methodological criteria relating to women and development;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the activities of the Institute;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women".

Women and development

As part of its consideration of the priority theme of development, the Commission on the Status of Women, at its March/April 1989 session, reviewed a January report of the Secretary-General⁽¹⁾ examining issues concerning education, eradication of illiteracy, employment, health and other social services in terms of their common function as social support measures, enabling women to contribute to, and benefit from, development. The report also examined the role of social support as a prerequisite for progress in education, employment and health.

According to the report, social, economic and demographic changes were weakening the family or household as the normal source of social support at a time when women were having to work outside the home and were therefore in greater need of such services. Steps needed to strengthen the structure of social support included greater sharing of domestic and family responsibilities by men and women, improved education and training, better attention to health and family planning, and adoption of legislation and programmes by Governments and NGOs covering child care, among other matters.

On the basis of the results of an Expert Group on Social Support Measures for the Advancement of Women, which met in Vienna in November 1988, wide-ranging recommendations were made as to steps that could and should be taken nationally and internationally to heighten the support given to women by the family, the community and society as a whole.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/37 without vote.

Measures to facilitate the participation of women in development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing that women must have education and training to enter the labour market, take part in it on an equal footing with men, and be able to exercise their rights and participate in political and social life,

Considering that women should be able to enter employment without having to sacrifice their right to equality or their reproductive function, and that they therefore require social support measures, especially child care,

Affirming the importance of women's access to health programmes, including nutrition and family planning, for promoting their advancement and equality,

Affirming also that only the advancement of women on an equal basis with men permits the strengthening and revitalization of the family,

Having considered the recommendations of the Expert Group on Social Support Measures for the Advancement of Women which met at Vienna, from 14 to 18 November 1988,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Expert Group on Social Support Measures for the Advancement of Women;

2. Invites Governments to give high priority to programmes to promote the participation of women in education, assuring them equal access to and the availability of literacy programmes;

3. Urges Governments to endeavour to meet the relevant provisions of the conventions of the International Labour Organisation, especially those relating to equal pay and working conditions, thus ensuring women's awareness of their rights in all sectors of the economy, both formal and informal;

4. Invites Governments, in co-operation with the World Health Organization and other agencies, to strive to achieve the goal of the World Health Organization of health for all, by ensuring that all women are provided with primary health care services and related information, and that women are involved in the design of these services and in decision-making;

5. Recommends the establishment of programmes of social support for working women, especially comprehensive child-care systems;

6. Invites Governments to design adequate policies to reduce the need for caring for disabled persons by providing them with opportunities to develop their potential and contribute to society and the family, and to pay particular attention to the special needs of women;

7. Recommends that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other organizations that have mandates in education and training give, in their activities, especially those related to the International Literacy Year, proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 42/104 of 7 December 1987, higher priority to women in programmes and campaigns intended to eliminate illiteracy in all countries, especially in developing countries;

8. Recommends also that the International Labour Organisation undertake campaigns to disseminate the conventions approved by Governments, especially those in which women's rights as workers are referred to, and promote the role of labour unions and employers in providing social support to working women;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 43/98, paragraph 7, of 8 December 1988, to promote and support the establishment of strong national organizations of disabled persons and, on that basis, provide assistance in the formation of networks of disabled women and reinforce the movement for self-help by these women, making use of the appropriate non-governmental organizations;

10. Urges United Nations bodies, including the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the Statistical Office of the Secretariat, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue their efforts to elaborate sufficient and adequate indicators on women in development, especially in terms of education, employment and health, and to improve data collection at all levels so as to enable realistic policy formulation;

11. Calls on Member States and organizations of the United Nations system, within the framework of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, to increase the participation of women in professional and decision-making positions;

12. Recommends that all plans, programmes and activities relating to the family should be considered by the Commission for Social Development and the Commission on the Status of Women in order to ensure harmonious co-ordination and effectiveness in achieving results;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/37

24	May	1989	Meeting	15	Adopted	without	vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) without vote, 16 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev.1); agenda item 10.

Also on 24 May and on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1989/41 by recorded vote.

Women and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/24 of 26 May 1987, by which it endorsed the long-term programme of work of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Recognizing that developing countries are suffering the most severe economic and social crisis of recent decades and consequently a grave deterioration in their social situation, which has disproportionately affected women,

Considering, in particular, the severe effects of servicing external debt and the effects of ongoing structural adjustment programmes on the economies and economic development of the developing countries, which have led to a deterioration in the quality of life of large sections of the population, especially of women and children,

Emphasizing the vital importance of economic growth and development for the effective mobilization and integration of women in the economy,

Noting the link between education, employment and health, and also the negative impact that the lack of adequate social support measures has on the integration of women in development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Women and education, eradication of illiteracy, employment, health and social services, including population issues and child care: the need for social support measures",

1. Urges Governments to accord higher priority to programmes to promote the participation of women in the labour force and their access to education, health and social services, and to allow women access to decision-making on the design and implementation of such programmes;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with regional commissions, to include in the report to be submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session an evaluation of the effects of the debt crisis, including the effects of the structural adjustment programmes, on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

3. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system concerned with development, when designing their relevant programmes, to pay special attention to the role of women, especially rural women and poor women, in the development process, particularly in the fields of education, health, employment, agriculture and social services;

4. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system to maintain and strengthen their institutional support structures for women in developing countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/41

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 40-1-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) by recorded vote (32-1-14), 16 May (meeting 161; draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev.1); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nicaragua; Niger, Oman, Poland, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against United States.

Abstaining: Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, United Kingdom.

Women and AIDS

In connection with its consideration of the priority theme of development, the Commission had before it a report on the effects of the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) on the advancement of women,(2) prepared pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(3) by which the UN system was urged to support the world-wide struggle against AIDS under the leadership of the World Health Organization (WHO). Prepared by the UN Secretariat in co-operation with WHO, the report outlined the effects of AIDS on women and its relationship to the objectives of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women. It concluded that the advancement of women was affected not only by the adverse effect of AIDS on the health of women, but also by its social and economic consequences. It suggested that the multidisciplinary and cross-organizational mandate of the Commission offered it an opportunity to play a key role in activating a world-wide effort to advance the status of women while contributing to the global fight against AIDS. The Commission was asked to encourage all relevant bodies to consider the consequences of the AIDS pandemic on women in development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/127, took note of the report on the effects of AIDS on women. It also requested that the Secretary-General, in close collaboration with WHO, convene an expert group meeting to prepare for an international meeting of representatives of units of national machinery for the advancement of women and of national AIDS committees to identify issues relating to women raised by the AIDS pandemic and appropriate strategies and programmes for possible adoption at the national level, and to promote co-operation between such national units.

Women living in absolute poverty

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/40 without vote.

Women living in absolute poverty

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/195 of 20 December 1988 on international co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries,

Recalling also its resolution 1988/47 of 27 May 1988 on extreme poverty,

Noting with great concern the information on the population living in poverty in developing countries and on women's participation in the labour force contained in the 1989 report on the world social situation,

Convinced that absolute poverty limits the advancement of women in the social, political and economic development of their countries,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account, in the report to be prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolution 43/195, the impact of absolute poverty on women;

2. Draws the attention of the Commission for Social Development to the need to discuss in depth, at its thirty-second and subsequent sessions, the subject of absolute poverty and women, when considering reports of the Secretary-General concerning the world social situation;

3. Urges the Commission on the Status of Women to give due consideration to the subject of absolute poverty when considering its priority themes of equality, development and peace;

4. Appeals to all Member States to make efforts to overcome absolute poverty by increasing the level of integration of women in the economic and social development of their countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/40

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) without vote, 16 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev.1); agenda item 10.

Integration of women in economic development

Pursuant to a 1987 request of the General Assembly, (4) the Secretary-General in June 1989 reported on a variety of steps taken to encourage the effective mobilization of women in development.(5) The report described action taken by various intergovernmental bodies to address the integration of women in development, especially economic development, both in policies and in operational activities. It proposed several measures to enhance co-ordination at the intergovernmental level, including use of the biennial monitoring reports on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women to keep a record of intergovernmental resolutions and decisions. It also proposed more co-ordinated examination of the advancement of women within the work of the Economic and Social Council as part of the implementation of a 1988 Council resolution on its revitalization.(6) The report described action taken by the secretariats of the organizations of the UN system related to the integration of women in development, especially in terms of major surveys and in operational activities and their co-ordination.

On 27 July, by decision 1989/178, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) also considered the question of women in development. It reviewed a report of the Administrator,(7) who noted initial experiences in country programmes and proposed possible approaches for women-in-development, responsive country programming (see PART THREE, Chapter II).

World Survey

The final draft of the first regular update of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development was reviewed at an expert group meeting convened in Vienna from 13 to 17 February. The meeting adopted as the central theme of the 1989 World Survey a statement stressing that the 1980s had been a period of uneven economic conditions and responses to them. While growth continued or was restored in developed countries and a number of developing countries in Asia, economic decline prevailed in Africa and Latin America. One major shortcoming of development strategies had been the failure to take into account the role and potential of women. The facts suggested that that shortcoming had to be remedied if development strategies of the 1990s were to succeed.

The experts, on the basis of the analysis of economic and social changes affecting women over the past years, stated that, despite economic progress measured in growth rates, economic progress for women had virtually stopped, social progress had slowed and social well-being in many cases had deteriorated. They recommended that the World Survey be updated again for consideration in 1994, as an input to the quinquennial review of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies. The 1994 World Survey would also constitute a basic document for the fourth world conference on women, which was recommended to take place in 1995.

In June, the Secretary-General circulated chapter I of the 1989 World Survey.(8) The original Survey—prepared for the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the UN Decade for Women(9)—emphasized material that clearly demonstrated the important role played by women in the world economy. The 1989 World Survey(10) centred on the more complex questions of how women played that role, factors that enhanced or impeded them, and the type of issues that had to be addressed if women's full and equal participation in the economy was to be achieved. That approach, more analytical than descriptive, had been made possible by the dramatic increase of research on economic variables taking gender into account.

On 27 July, by decision 1989/178, the Economic and Social Council took note of chapter I.

The 390-page 1989 World Survey was released in October and submitted to the General Assembly. It included material provided by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the UN Industrial Development Organization, the UN Conference on Trade and Development, the International Labour Organisation, the UN Centre for Science and Technology for Development, the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the UN Statistical Office.

The 1989 World Survey dealt with women, debt and adjustment; development of key economic sectors, including agriculture, industry, services and the informal sector; and certain policy issues such as equal employment, technology, culture and the economic role of women. One chapter explored the interrelationships between equality, development and peace.

Main trends reviewed in the Survey indicated that, while no complete estimate could be made of the direct impact of the economic crisis of the 1980s on the advancement of women, there was no doubt that there had been a differential effect on women. Beyond the effects caused by a reduction in expenditures on public services, with its consequences for education and health, and the documented need for more women to enter the labour force in order to maintain acceptable levels of household income, there were less obvious effects on the fabric of women's lives, reflected in the increase of female-headed households which, in many countries, was becoming a major factor in increasing poverty.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/106 without vote.

Effective mobilization and integration of women in development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988/49 of 26 July 1988,

Noting the section of the World Economic Survey, 1989 on the socio-economic attainment of women,

Noting also that the first update of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development will be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session,

1. welcomes the section on the socio-economic attainment of women contained in the World Economic Survey, 1989;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to maintain that section in the World Economic Survey and to incorporate, inter alia, statistical indicators on income distribution, health, nutrition, fertility and education;
3. Also requests the Secretary-General to focus, in the next edition of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, on socio-economic aspects, inter alia, of emerging trends with respect to women and education, health, population, income distribution, employment and environment issues, as well as the participation of women in decision-making, and to submit a draft text to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1994 for comment;
4. Further requests the Secretary-General to invite the regional commissions, within their terms of reference, to provide relevant input for the section of the World Economic Survey on the socio-economic attainment of women and for the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development;
5. Recommends that the Statistical Office of the United Nations Secretariat play a central role in the intensified co-ordination of statistical data within the United Nations system on women in development and that United Nations sectoral studies be planned and published in a mutually supportive manner.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/106

27 July 1989 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/141) without vote, 21 July (meeting 25); 18-nation draft (E/1989/C.1/L.15), orally revised; agenda item 7 (i).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 44/171,

Integration of women in development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/204 of 17 December 1985 on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development, in which it requested the Secretary-General to update the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development on a regular basis,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/64 of 23 July 1986 concerning the approach to be taken in updating the world survey and General Assembly resolution 42/178 of 11 December 1987, and taking note of Council resolutions 1989/106 of 27 July 1989 on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development and 1989/105 of 27 July 1989 on system-wide co-ordination of activities to advance the status of women and to integrate women in development,

Stressing the need for the operational activities for development of the United Nations system to take fully into account the position of women, and recognizing the catalytic role played by the United Nations Development Fund for Women,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and stressing that activities for the integration of women in development should take into account the relevant recommendations contained therein,

Taking note of the 1989 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development and the report of the Secretary-General on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development,

Recognizing the contribution of new concepts and methods in collection of statistics on women, which enhance the depth and coverage of the analysis,

Bearing in mind that the world survey, as a fundamental assessment of the progress or lack of progress in the advancement of women, should constitute the basic documentation for the world conference on women envisaged in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recognizing that for many women, particularly in developing countries, the evolution of the economic and social situation during the 1980s has not resulted in the benefits anticipated at the beginning of the decade,

Recognizing also the significant contribution women make to economic activity and the major force they represent for change and development in all sectors of the economy, especially in key areas such as agriculture, industry and services, and convinced that the development process should seek to improve and facilitate their participation in all areas of the economy,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to distribute the 1989 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, especially to national machineries for the advancement of women, ministries concerned with economic policy and universities;

2. Invites Governments to take into account, as appropriate, the recommendations contained in the 1989 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development in designing national policies for development, adjustment and economic reform;

3. Considers that the economic role and potential of women should be taken into account fully in the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session an annotated outline of the next regular update of the world survey and requests that the completed update be submitted to the Assembly at its forty-ninth session, through the Economic and Social Council and in co-operation with the organizations of the United Nations system, in a timely manner in order to allow its proper consideration;

5. Requests that the next edition of the world survey, taking into account the recommendations contained in the 1989 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, address the impact on women of the prevailing economic conditions in developing countries and identify obstacles to women's economic role in key areas of development, with particular focus on the socio-economic aspects of emerging trends with respect to women and education, health, population, income distribution, employment and the environment, as well as the participation of women in economic and political decision-making and their economic role at the national, regional and international levels, and that it contain proposals for concerted national, regional and international action to enhance the role of women as development agents and beneficiaries;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in updating the world survey, to ensure that its preparation is co-ordinated with that of the World Economic Survey, the medium-term plan and the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to develop gender disaggregated data and indicators concerning the role of women in development, including regular updates of the United Nations Women's Indicators and Statistics Data Base, at two-year intervals; in this context, particular attention should be given to economic statistics that take into account the remunerated and unremunerated contribution of women to development and to including the informal sector in the new systems of national accounts and balances to reflect adequately women's activities and ensuring that relevant studies and documents produced by the United Nations system contain such data;

8. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system to assist Governments, at their request, in monitoring the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

9. Calls upon the United Nations system, under its operational activities for development, to ensure that it will collect and report gender disaggregated data covering national and international project personnel, including consultants, as well as beneficiaries of its programmes;

10. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include in his 1991 report on operational activities for development of the United Nations system a separate chapter on United Nations efforts to integrate women in development, both as a mainstream and specific activity of the United Nations system, and with particular attention to literacy, education, health, population, environment, employment and participation in decision-making;

11. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to take the present resolution into account when reviewing, at its extended session in 1990, progress made in implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

General Assembly resolution 44/171

19 December 1989 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.4) without vote, 21 November (meeting 41); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.45), based on informal consultations on 21-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.10); agenda item 82 (d). Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 10-13, 16, 35, 41, 42; plenary 83.

Medium-term plan

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolutions of 1987(11) and 1988,(12) ACC reported in March on plans and programmes of the organizations of the UN system to implement the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995.(13) The report provided information on how the plan was reflected in the programmes of the UN system related to: elimination of legal and attitudinal forms of discrimination; access to productive resources, income and employment; access to services; decision-making; improving means of international action; and comprehensive approaches to women and development. An annex to the report contained a list of organizations that had agreed to implement the system-wide medium-term plan.

Report of the Secretary-General. In April, pursuant to recommendations of the Economic and Social Council, most recently in 1987,(11) the Secretary-General submitted a cross-organizational programme analysis of the activities of the UN system for the advancement of women,(14) which was to serve as a baseline for monitoring progress of the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development for the period 1990-1995. The analysis examined policy aims and approaches of the participating organizations, noted identifiable trends and presented recommendations on legislative structures, policy orientation, programme activities, co-ordination and monitoring the system-wide plan.

On 27 July, by decision 1989/178, the Economic and Social Council took note of the reports of ACC and the Secretary-General.

Technical co-operation

In March, the UNDP Administrator submitted a report(15) to the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter II) on actions taken and proposed by the organizations of the UN development system to increase the participation and enlarge the role of women in development through technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC).

In September, the Committee requested(16) the Administrator and the heads of all UN development organs to develop and improve guidelines to ensure full access and participation of women in TCDC activities, stressing the need for UNDP-sponsored exercises to encourage women's participation and to take account of the need to integrate women in the identification, design and implementation of projects adopted as a result of those exercises.

Rural women

In April, the Secretary-General noted(17) that, in accordance with a 1988 Economic and Social Council resolution,(18) a seminar on women and rural development would be convened in Vienna from 22 to 26 May 1989. The seminar would emphasize development assistance strategies, project formulation and execution, monitoring and evaluation. In order that its major findings could be taken into account in his report on national experience relating to rural women (see below), he proposed that that report be submitted directly to the Assembly.

On 24 May, the Council, by decision 1989/130, took note of the note of the Secretary-General and authorized him to submit directly to the Assembly in 1989 a comprehensive report on the improvement of the situation of rural women.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October, pursuant to a 1985 request of the General Assembly,(19) the Secretary-General submitted his report,(20) prepared in consultation with Member States, on national experience relating to the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas.

Reviewing the status and prospects for improving the situation of rural women, the report paid special attention to: the participation of rural women in socio-economic and political life; the exercise by rural women of their rights; the role of agricultural co-operatives in improving the situation of women; agrarian reform; elimination of illiteracy and upgrading education levels among rural women; and assistance to rural women.

The Secretary-General made recommendations on women and sustainable rural development, integrating women into mainstream development policies, programmes and projects, and the role of the international community.

Regarding major issues and policy options for rural women, the Secretary-General summed up the lessons learned from the 1980s and suggested that emerging issues of greatest relevance for rural women in the 1990s comprised three areas: environment, rural employment and empowerment.

Annexed to the report were the conclusions and recommendations of the International Seminar on Women and Rural Development: Programmes and Projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/78 without vote.

Improvement of the situation of women in rural areas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/14 of 9 November 1979, in which it endorsed the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action as adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the importance given to the problems of rural women in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/29 of 26 May 1988, in which the Council urged Governments and development agencies of the United Nations system to pay particular attention to the role of women in rural development,

Taking note with satisfaction of the results of the International Seminar on Women and Rural Development: Programmes and Projects, held at Vienna from 22 to 26 May 1989,

Recognizing that the economic and financial crises in many developing countries have severely affected the socio-economic status of women, especially in rural areas,

Recognizing also the urgent need to take appropriate measures aimed at improving further the situation of women in rural areas,

1. Commends the report of the Secretary-General on national experience relating to the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas;

2. Calls upon Member States to make use of the report and the main conclusions and recommendations of the International Seminar on Women and Rural Development: Programmes and Projects, contained in the annex to the report, and to endeavour to reflect them, as appropriate, in national development strategies, paying special attention, inter alia, to:

(a) Setting up or strengthening national machineries for the advancement of women in order to ensure effective execution, monitoring and evaluation of national strategies in the field of rural development and, in particular, to strengthen liaison with agricultural and rural development institutions;

(b) Identifying and formulating more comprehensive priority development projects aimed at improving the situation of rural women and integrating them into national development plans at all levels;

(c) Taking measures designed to give rural women broader access to material and financial resources, that is, the provision of land, credit and loans, to promote the establishment and strengthening of rural women's associations and to encourage the development of women's co-operatives and other small enterprises;

3. Requests the organizations and funds of the United Nations system, donor organizations and countries to promote the realization of programmes and projects aimed at the improvement of the situation of rural women, and to provide, on request, training opportunities for national machineries in order to increase their effectiveness;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with Member States, a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to submit it to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Economic situation of women in Latin America and the Caribbean

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/42 without vote.

Economic situation of women in Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking account of the fact that the debtor countries of Latin America and the Caribbean are undergoing an economic crisis manifested, inter alia, by the stagnation of their economies and the unprecedented drop in their per capita income,

Considering the negative effect of the economic crisis on social indicators, particularly those relating to the status of women,

Taking account of the analysis of the difficult situation of Latin American and Caribbean women prepared by the Fourth Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean, held under the auspices of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean,

Taking account also of the need to face, at the national, regional and international levels, the problems in the debtor countries that are hampering the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Recommends that:

(a) The organizations of the United Nations system, in their programmes for the improvement of the status of women, take account of the problems facing women in the debtor countries of Latin America and the Caribbean;

(b) Documentation on priority themes of the Commission on the Status of Women prepared by the Secretary-General for submission to the Commission identify the differences between the various national and regional situations and highlight the specific problems affecting women in the context of the economic crisis in Latin America and the Caribbean;

(c) In his report on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, to be submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session, the Secretary-General pay special attention to the obstacles originating in the economic stagnation caused, inter alia, by the burden of the external debt;

(d) The recommendations put forward by the Commission on the Status of Women for future action at the national and international levels include an appeal to the appropriate parties in the debtor and creditor countries to create better conditions for the effective implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/42

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) without vote, 16 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev 1); agenda item 10.

UN Development Fund for Women

The Consultative Committee on the UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), at its twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth sessions (3-19 April and 28 August-1 September 1989) reviewed the scope of UNIFEM activities, fund-raising and strategic objectives for the Fund in the 1990s, as well as project implementation and financing arrangements.

In 1989, UNIFEM initiated an ongoing process of strategic planning, which included setting strategic objectives for UNIFEM's work in the areas of programme focus, management systems, and financial and human resources. Two strategic planning workshops were held, resulting in a "mission statement" setting out UNIFEM objectives and philosophy, together with a strategic plan to achieve those objectives.

The Fund continued the development of global programmes, including those dealing with women and food-cycle technologies and the credit support system. It also worked closely with other UN agencies in system-wide efforts to help women participate in and benefit from development initiatives.

At the regional level, UNIFEM approved 12 new projects for implementation in Africa, focusing on food and agriculture; energy and environment; micro-enterprise development, trade and commerce; and human resources development.

It approved 11 new projects for the Asia, Pacific and Western Asia region, where an "impact points" strategy was developed, identifying four points of intervention that could have significant impact on large numbers of poor women. The four impact points were macro-policies, data and statistics, gender-sensitizing training, and institution strengthening.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, 10 new projects were approved for implementation, stressing a grass-roots approach to assisting poor rural and urban women, and increasing the capacity of existing institutions to serve women.

The Fund's total income during 1989 was approximately $11.78 million, representing an overall increase of 35 per cent over the total income of 1988. Estimated total expenditures for the year were $9.39 million.

In July, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UNDP Administrator on the 1988 activities of UNIFEM.⁽²¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/74 without vote.

United Nations Development Fund for Women

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the decisions contained in its resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984,

Emphasizing the catalytic role of the United Nations Development Fund for Women in the United Nations system as well as with governmental and non-governmental organizations and financial institutions and its support for innovative and experimental activities directly benefiting women in line with national and regional priorities,

Reaffirming those dual priorities of the Fund, which would better position women for more effective participation in the development of their countries,

Recognizing the mainstream initiatives of the Fund to assist national machineries on women, ministries concerned with planning and other relevant ministries and intergovernmental organizations to integrate the concerns of women and to ensure their involvement in development programmes at all levels,

Noting the focused and proactive interventions of the Fund within its regional priority frameworks and its overall strategic objectives through investments in tested and documented models and approaches for women and development,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

2. Notes the Fund's continued co-operation with units concerned with issues relating to women and development throughout the United Nations system and with planning and sectoral ministries and national machineries on women in the development of developing countries;

3. Stresses the importance of strengthening the technical and financial capacities of the Fund to enable it to preserve and augment its flexibility and to facilitate its own implementation of the governmental and non-governmental projects and programmes that it supports at the national, regional and global levels;

4. Expresses its appreciation to Governments, non-governmental organizations and individuals that have pledged and contributed to the Fund;

5. Commends national committees for the Fund and non-governmental organizations for their initiatives in the development of education and public awareness programmes and resource mobilization on behalf of the Fund;

6. Notes with concern that the Fund's resources are still insufficient to enable it to implement fully its programmes and to preserve and augment its flexible approaches to supporting activities at the national, regional and global levels;

7. Invites Governments, non-governmental organizations and others to make substantial contributions to the Fund;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the Fund to be submitted pursuant to Assembly resolution 39/125.

Status of women

Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-third session (Vienna, 29 March-7 April 1989),⁽¹⁾ focused debate on ways to revive the pace of improvements in the struggle for equality of women with men by the year 2000 and considered three priority themes related to equality, development and peace: equality in economic and social participation; women and education, eradication of illiteracy, employment, health and social services, including population issues and child care; and full participation of women in the construction of their countries and in the creation of just social and political systems. As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1988,⁽²⁾ the Commission also discussed enlarging its membership.

The Commission adopted six resolutions and recommended 15 draft resolutions and two draft decisions for adoption by the Council. Among the issues dealt with were: improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (see PART SIX, Chapter II); programme planning and system-wide co-ordination to advance the status of women and integrate them in development; equality in economic and social participation; and the status of women in various countries and situations. It also prepared for and recommended Council action on its 1990 session to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/45 by recorded vote.

Enlargement of the Commission on the Status of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/23 of 26 May 1987, in which it accepted, in principle, the need for an increase in the membership of the Commission on the Status of Women and decided that the Commission, at its thirty-second session, should discuss the matter and submit proposals to the Council at its first regular session of 1988,

Bearing in mind the increase in membership of the United Nations from 120 Member States in 1966 to 159 Member States in 1988, which provides the basis for a proportionate enlargement of the Commission, and taking into consideration the principle of equitable geographical distribution for the allocation of seats,

Recalling its decision 1988/125 of 27 May 1988, in which it invited the Commission to offer its views on the question of its enlargement,

Taking note of the discussions held on this matter by the Commission at its thirty-third session,

Considering that issues relating to women have grown more complex and numerous, particularly in the developing countries,

Recalling that the Commission is to hold in 1990 a session of extended duration to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

1. Decides that the membership of the Commission on the Status of Women should be increased to forty-five and that the seats should be allocated on the basis of the principle of equitable geographical distribution according to the following pattern:

- (a) Thirteen members from African States;
- (b) Eleven members from Asian States;
- (c) Four members from Eastern European States;
- (d) Nine members from Latin American and Caribbean States;

(e) Eight members from Western European and other States;

2. Ah decides that the enlargement of the Commission should take effect from the beginning of 1990 before the convening of the extended session of the Commission to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

3. Further decides that the additional seats resulting from the increase in the membership of the Commission should be filled at the organizational session for 1990 of the Council.

1990 session

On 24 May, by decision 1989/128, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its thirty-third session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the thirty-fourth session in 1990.

Equality in economic and social participation

During consideration of the priority theme of equality, the Commission on the Status of Women had before it a February report of the Secretary-General(3) on equality in economic and social participation. The report contained information on women's economic participation in the formal and informal sectors, on their access to credit and on their participation in co-operatives. The section on social participation covered women's participation in education and leisure activities.

The information available showed that, while progress might have been made in the de jure situation of women, corresponding legal provisions had not been implemented so that the de facto situation had not improved during the previous decade. The Secretary-General suggested that the pace of progress towards equality might be slowing and that, unless special efforts were taken over the next decade, the objective of equality in economic and social participation set at Nairobi in 1985(4) might be at risk.

In April, the Commission recommended(5) that a report on statistics and indicators to be considered at its thirty-fifth (1991) session make suggestions for including in the gross national product the economic value of work carried out by women in informal sectors. It asked that existing activities to that end be covered in the report on the monitoring of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, to be submitted in 1990.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/36 without vote.

Equality in economic and social participation

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, in which the Assembly endorsed the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Noting that progress in achieving de jure equality between women and men has been steady,

Welcoming the clear improvement in some indicators of equality in social participation in most regions, but concerned that progress in other regions is slowing,

Gravely concerned that the pace of achieving de facto equality, particularly equality in economic participation, has evidently been slowing in most countries over the past decade,

Bearing in mind the important economic contributions of women to their communities,

Recognizing that equality for women is closely linked to their economic independence,

Recalling the Plan of Action on equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment of the International Labour Organisation,

Noting that various affirmative action policies can accelerate the elimination of discrimination against women,

1. Urges Governments to give high priority to measures and temporary affirmative action programmes that will more rapidly bring about equality in women's economic participation, in particular to programmes that will ensure the following:

(a) Women's access to the labour market and to education and training;

(b) Elimination of sex segregation in the labour market and in education;

(c) Women's participation in trade unions;

(d) Equal pay for equal work;

(e) Equal access to economic resources, including credit and membership in co-operatives;

(f) Improved conditions in the informal sector including, where desirable, the application of labour standards, and the development or improvement of sex-disaggregated statistics that accurately reflect women's work in the informal economic sector;

2. Also urges Governments that have not yet done so to ratify conventions of the International Labour Organisation on equal pay and working conditions;

3. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session, in carrying out its review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women to consider measures to accelerate the pace of achieving equality in economic and social participation, including the definition and compilation of bench-mark statistical indicators that could be used for national, regional and international reporting, as well as affirmative action programmes;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to present to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session examples of affirmative action programmes that would be effective for the achievement of equality in economic and social participation;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session proposals for the definition and compilation of bench-mark statistical indicators of equality in economic and social participation.

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Women in public life

Under the priority theme of peace, the Commission on the Status of Women had before it a January report of the Secretary-General(6) on the full participation of women in the construction of their countries and in the creation of just social and political systems. The report concentrated on the active and organized participation of women collectively. In most countries where elections were held, it said, legal impediments to women's participation as voters had been removed and women were a significant part of the electorate. Women had also played major roles in independence struggles and reconstruction after armed conflict; that participation was not reflected in the proportion of women in parliaments, however, which raised questions as to why more women candidates were not selected and about the participation of women in political parties, trade unions, national liberation movements and NGOs. The Secretary-General offered a number of solutions, including affirmative action, to increase the participation of women in political life.

In April,(7) the Commission urged Governments to give priority to affirmative action programmes and temporary measures to ensure increased participation of women in parliaments, Governments and other decision-making bodies; equal participation of women in political parties and trade unions; and equal participation in all peace-related activities at the governmental level, particularly in the diplomatic service, in governmental delegations and in peace negotiations. It asked the Secretary-General to organize an exchange of experience on the subject and to report thereon to the Commission.

The Commission also recommended(8) that the Economic and Social Council convene in 1991 a high-level interregional consultation on women in public life. The consultation, to convene for not more than three days, should discuss issues such as a more equal sharing of responsibilities between women and men at all decision-making levels in political, economic and social fields; factors facilitating or inhibiting the entry of women into public life; and changing roles of women and men and their impact on participation in policy formulation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/129, endorsed the Commission's recommendation that it convene in 1991 a high-level interregional consultation on women in public life, to be financed from voluntary and other contributions.

Refugee and displaced women

In April, the Commission on the Status of Women called for a concerted international response to the needs of refugee and displaced women, along with intensified co-operation to ensure that they received full protection and assistance.(9) It called on Governments receiving refugees to take into account the special situation of refugee women in formulating, within available resources, national policies for refugees. It decided that the Secretary-General's report on women in areas affected by armed conflicts, foreign intervention, alien and colonial domination, foreign occupation and threats to peace—to be submitted to the Commission in 1990—should be prepared in co-operation with the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), taking into account the importance of the legal protection of refugee women.

Elderly women

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/38 without vote.

Elderly women

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware that women constitute the majority of the older population and that in the years to come the number of elderly women will increase more rapidly in the developing countries than in the developed ones,

Recognizing the important contribution that these women have made, paid or unpaid, throughout their lives, in particular during their older years, to social, economic and cultural activities,

Concerned that, as they age, women are increasingly exposed to marginalization or to poverty,

Bearing in mind the need for the Commission on the Status of Women to give particular attention to the specific problems faced by elderly women,

1. Recommends that concerted efforts be undertaken or strengthened at the national, regional and international levels in order to enable women to meet the challenges they face during their lives, in particular during their older years;

2. Recommends that, within existing budgetary resources or, where necessary, with the help of extrabudgetary or voluntary resources, the organizations of the United Nations system concerned provide to the bodies responsible for the advancement of women information that would enable them to undertake a precise and in-depth analysis of the situation of elderly women, developing, if necessary, specific new methods for data collection;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to organize a seminar, within available budgetary resources, to study questions arising from the above-mentioned analysis and to transmit the results of the study to the Commission on the Status of Women;

4. Encourages Governments to ensure that women increase their participation in social and economic progress throughout their lives;

5. Urges Governments, in co-operation with the non-governmental organizations concerned, to strengthen activities for the benefit of elderly women, taking better account of their specific needs;

6. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women, in carrying out its review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, to devote particular attention to the current and future situation of elderly women throughout the world.

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) without vote, 16 May (meeting 16): draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev.1); agenda item 10.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/76 without vote.

Elderly women

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/38 of 24 May 1989, in which the Council requested the Commission on the Status of Women to devote particular attention to the current and future situation of elderly women in the world,

Recalling its resolution 40/30 of 29 November 1985, in which it was emphasized that the elderly must be considered an important and necessary element in the development process at all levels within a given society,

Aware that age segregation, in addition to sex stereotyping, makes the social and economic problems of elderly women even more acute, and that they are often viewed only as beneficiaries and not as contributors to development,

Also aware that statistics are an essential ingredient of planning and policy evaluation and that few statistics are available on the situation of elderly women,

1. Recommends that the United Nations and the specialized agencies take the lead in recognizing the important contributions made by older women and their potential to participate in and shape the future of their societies;

2. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/38, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to organize a seminar, within available budgetary resources, to study questions arising from an in-depth analysis of the situation of women as they age, and to transmit the results of the study to the Commission on the Status of Women, under the priority theme of development, at its session in 1992, at which the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Aging will also be observed;

3. Invites the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the Statistical

Office of the Secretariat, in co-operation with the regional commissions, to pay specific attention to older women in their efforts to improve methodology for data-gathering on women;

4. Notes with appreciation the valuable contributions that non-governmental organizations have made in calling attention to the specific needs of elderly women and encourages them to continue to co-operate with the international community on behalf of these women;

5. Appeals to the United Nations system to pay due attention in relevant activities to the importance of the role of elderly women, in all its interrelated aspects, as participants in political, economic, social and cultural development;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Palestinian women

The Secretary-General reported in February(10) on the situation of Palestinian women, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1988.(11) The report described the situation of Palestinian women and children living inside and outside the occupied Palestinian territories in the period from 15 October 1987 to 1 November 1988.

UNRWA continued to provide both regular and emergency programmes to the refugee population. The UN Children's Fund provided immunization and vaccinations, technical assistance for training and improvement of infrastructure, and assistance to reduce water-related diseases. The International Labour Organisation identified for financing several UNDP projects in vocational training for women. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, WHO and the UN Population Fund provided assistance to women and children in primary health care, environmental health and the training and education of health personnel.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/34 by recorded vote.

Situation of Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, Mindful of the humanitarian principles and provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 thereof,

Recalling also its resolution 1988/25 of 26 May 1988,

Taking into account the intifadah of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories against the Israeli occupation and the oppressive practices of Israel against the Palestinian people, including women and children,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report on the situation of Palestinian women, making use of all available information, including United Nations reports, information from Governments, non-governmental organizations and missions undertaken by United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to the occupied territories, and reports of meetings and seminars, as appropriate, and to submit the report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session;

2. Requests the specialized agencies, in sending missions to the occupied Palestinian territories, to include an expert on women's issues to assess the situation of the Palestinian women and to elaborate specific projects of assistance;

3. Strongly condemns the continuation of the "iron-fist" policy practised by Israel, the occupying Power, against Palestinian women and their families in the occupied Palestinian territories;

4. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949 is applicable to the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Again requests the Secretary-General to send a mission composed of experts on the status of women to investigate the condition of Palestinian women and children, in the light of the drastic deteriorating situation in the occupied Palestinian territories;

6. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to monitor the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular the provisions of paragraph 260 thereof concerning assistance to Palestinian women and children inside and outside the occupied Palestinian territories;

7. Reaffirms that Palestinian women, as an integral part of a nation whose people are prevented from exercising their basic human and political rights, cannot fully participate in the attainment of the objectives of the Forward-looking Strategies, namely, equality, development and peace, without the realization of their inalienable right to return to their homes, their right to self-determination and their right to establish an independent State in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions.

Women and children under apartheid

In accordance with 1988 requests of the Economic and Social Council,⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in January 1989 a summary of major developments from 1 October 1987 to 30 November 1988 concerning the situation of women living under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia.⁽¹³⁾ The report outlined new developments in the political, social and economic spheres and described measures of assistance undertaken by UN organizations and the international community. It also examined current economic and social conditions that could affect the pace of women's advancement after the independence of Namibia.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/31 without vote.

Women and children in Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the full implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978, concerning the independence of Namibia,

Recalling its resolution 1988/24 of 26 May 1988, in which it expressed deep concern at the suffering of Namibian women under South African occupation,

Recalling also the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 259, which calls for the speedy and effective implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978),

Recognizing that the agreement recently reached on Namibian independence under Security Council resolution 435(1978) provides a historic opportunity for the Namibian people to realize their right to self-determination following 104 years of colonial domination,

Noting that with the implementation of Security Council resolution 435(1978) on 1 April 1989, Namibia faces a crucial transitional period, with an election campaign commencing on 1 July 1989 and the election scheduled for early November 1989, and that it is incumbent upon the international community to take immediate action to ensure that the elections render the justice and freedom to which the Namibian people have the right,

Bearing in mind that the repatriation of Namibian refugees from neighbouring States, which is scheduled to take place from 15 May to 30 June 1989, poses special problems that require massive humanitarian assistance,

1. Urges Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to make resources available to assist in making the repatriation process as smooth as possible and to continue material and financial support to Namibian women and children during the transitional period,

2. Urges all parties to respect the process of implementing Security Council resolution 435(1978), in order to ensure independence for Namibia;

3. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women to help raise international consciousness of the special circumstances and concerns of Namibian women;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage and give special attention to the full and equal participation of Namibian women, in both registration and voting;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session a comprehensive report on the implementation and monitoring of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women regarding women and children in Namibia.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/31

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) without vote, 16 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev.1); agenda item 10.

On the same date and on the Second Committee's recommendation, the Council adopted resolution 1989/33 by recorded vote.

Women and children under apartheid

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988/23 of 26 May 1988,

Noting the concern of women throughout the world about the continuing degradation and abuse to which African women and children are subjected daily by the white minority régime of South Africa,

Recalling that this concern was expressed in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which also contain proposals for various forms of assistance to be rendered to women and children inside South Africa and to those who have become refugees,

Recognizing that the inhuman exploitation and dispossession of the African people by the white minority régime is directly responsible for the appalling conditions in which African women and children live,

Also recognizing that the equality of women cannot be achieved without the success of the struggle for national liberation and self-determination of the people of South Africa against the racist régime of Pretoria,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on new developments concerning the situation of women under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia and measures of assistance to women in South Africa and Namibia,

1. Commends the tenacity and bravery of those women both inside and outside South Africa who have resisted oppression, who have been detained, tortured or killed, and of those whose husbands, children and relatives have been detained, tortured or killed and who, despite this, have remained steadfast in their opposition to the racist régime;

2. Acknowledges the efforts of those Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have campaigned for and applied sanctions against the racist régime;

3. Condemns unequivocally the South African régime for the imposition of the state of emergency, the forcible separation of black families, the detention and imprisonment of women and children and the restrictions on non-violent anti-apartheid democratic organizations and individuals;

4. Urges the South African régime to accord prisoner-of-war status to captured freedom fighters, in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 relating to the protection of victims of international armed conflicts (Protocol I), adopted in 1977, to accord all political prisoners sentenced to death, among whom are women, a fair trial based on international legal standards, and to stop the execution of political prisoners;

5. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees, among whom are an increasing number of women and children;

6. Again calls upon Governments, in view of the deterioration of the situation in South Africa, to impose, as a matter of urgency, comprehensive sanctions in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council and the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

7. Appeals to all countries to support educational, health and social welfare programmes for women and children under apartheid;

8. Also appeals to the international community for increased assistance for women and children refugees in southern Africa;

9. Urges the international community to look into the newly developing situation of refugees and displaced persons, with a view to providing material assistance for them;

10. Urges Member States and United Nations bodies, in consultation with liberation movements, to give effect forthwith to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies that deal with women and children under apartheid, giving particular attention to education, health, vocational training and employment opportunities and to the strengthening of the women's sections of the liberation movements;

11. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to work closely with women in the liberation movements in order to disseminate information and to ensure a proper assessment of the needs and aspirations of the women and children living under apartheid;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session a comprehensive report on the implementation and monitoring of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies in regard to women and children under apartheid.

Women in Central America

The Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, on 24 May adopted resolution 1989/35 without vote.

Women and peace in Central America

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that, in adopting the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace recognized that women should participate fully in all efforts to strengthen and maintain international peace and security and to promote international co-operation,

Recalling also that the World Conference also recognized that the violence and destabilization in Central America hindered the fulfilment of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, essential for the advancement of women,

Recalling further the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting at Guatemala City, on 7 August 1987, by the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, and noting the subsequent meetings of the Presidents in 1988 and February 1989,

Recognizing the valuable contribution of the Contadora Group and its Support Group to the process of bringing peace to Central America,

Recognizing also the valuable efforts put forth by the Secretary-General and the international community to secure peace and development in Central America,

Convinced of the exceptional importance to the peoples of Central America, particularly the women, of the achievement of peace, reconciliation, development and social justice in the region, as well as the recognition of their economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights,

Considering that the General Assembly, in its resolution 42/1 of 7 October 1987, requested the Secretary-General to promote a special plan of co-operation for Central America,

Desiring to encourage the active participation of women in the promotion of peace and development in Central America,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the will to achieve peace manifested by the Presidents of the Central American countries in their signing of the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" and at their efforts for the implementation thereof;

2. Again calls upon the Presidents of the Central American countries to continue their joint efforts to achieve peace in Central America, particularly the efforts to establish the Central American Parliament, in order to ensure conditions favourable for the attainment in the region of the objectives of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, and requests the international community to support those efforts;

3. Urges all States to support the peace efforts, fully respecting the principles of self-determination of peoples and non-intervention;

4. Also urges the international community to ensure that programmes of technical, economic and financial co-operation for the region take account of the particular needs and interests of women in Central America;

5. Recommends to the Secretary-General that the special plan of co-operation for Central America include specific activities supporting the advancement of women in the region;

6. Exhorts the Governments of the Central American countries and of the countries of the Contadora Group and its Support Group to encourage and ensure the full participation of women at all levels in the search for peace, pluralism, democracy and overall development in the Central American region;

7. Urges national and international, governmental and non-governmental women's organizations to participate in and support actively the processes of democratization, peace and development in Central America.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/35

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) without vote, 16 May (meeting 16): draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27/Rev.1); agenda item 10.

Also on the recommendation of its Second Committee and on the same date, the Council adopted resolution 1989/39 without vote.

Women, human rights and development in Central America

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering the economic, social and political crisis in the Central American region, which involves various forms of discrimination and violence affecting women in particular,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the full participation of women in the construction of their countries and in the creation of just social and political systems,

Considering that in recent years various women's organizations have been formed in the region and that they are fighting and calling for the defence of human rights in general and women's rights in particular,

Recognizing the efforts that the Governments and peoples of Central America are making to achieve a political solution to the conflicts,

Recognizing also the need to unite and strengthen further the efforts of Governments, United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations aimed at achieving a new international economic and social order, so as to make real and effective the development to which the peoples of Central America aspire,

1. Urges Governments, United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations to support:

- (a) Programmes to strengthen women's organizations that are demanding that women be granted their full rights as citizens;

- (b) Activities or forums to broaden and deepen discussion of the problems of Central American women and solutions thereto, in which all social, political and cultural sectors of the countries of Central America may participate;

- (c) Research to analyse the problems of Central American women in all their dimensions and to propose viable alternative solutions based on the opinions of all the women's sectors concerned;

- (d) Publications and information and documentation systems relative to the results of the proposals for integration or practical action that will permit women's organizations in the Central American region to advance within the general context of society;

2. Urges the international community to publicize, and to support through international solidarity, the need for greater participation of women in the processes of change and in the bodies involved in negotiations and dialogue, which are designed to bring about a political solution to the problems and conflicts of the Central American region;

3. Urges national and international women's associations, both governmental and non-governmental, to develop education, training and self-help programmes aimed at improving the living conditions and the social and political participation of Central American women;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies to pay particular attention to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and to the human rights of women in Central America, as a prerequisite for ensuring women's full participation in the building of their countries and in the creation of social and political systems that are just.

Discrimination against women

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established under the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women(1) held its eighth session in Vienna from 20 February to 3 March 1989.(2)

The 23-member expert Committee was set up to monitor implementation of the Convention and progress made by States parties to ensure equality. Its members meet annually to review periodic country reports, traditionally alternating sessions between New York and Vienna. In 1989, CEDAW considered six initial reports of States parties (Belgium, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Gabon, Ireland, Nicaragua) and three second periodic reports (Byelorussian SSR, German Democratic Republic, USSR) on legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention.

Noting that 1989 marked the tenth anniversary of the Convention's adoption, CEDAW, in a general recommendation, asked that countries undertake conferences and seminars to publicize the Convention and invited national women's organizations to participate in publicity campaigns. The Secretary-General was asked to assist in the commemoration by publishing and disseminating materials and preparing television documentaries about the Convention. He was also asked to make the necessary resources available to the Division for the Advancement of Women to prepare an analysis of the information provided by States parties.

Another general recommendation stated that States parties should ensure that their reports to CEDAW included information on statistical data to help clarify the situation of women in particular sectors. A third general recommendation stated that States parties should encourage, support and co-operate in projects for technical advisory services, including training seminars, to assist in reporting obligations. A fourth called for information to be included on legislation in force to protect women against all kinds of violence in everyday life; measures adopted to eradicate violence; support services for women who were the victims of abuse; and statistical data on the incidence of violence of all kinds against women and on women who were victims of violence.

A final general recommendation called for the study, development and adoption of job evaluation systems based on gender-neutral criteria. The Committee recommended support, as far as practicable, for the creation of implementation machinery to ensure the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value.

CEDAW also discussed recommendations to improve the functioning of the human rights treaty-monitoring bodies within the UN system. It suggested that the Secretary-General accord higher priority to the strengthening of the secretariat services of the Committee to ensure its effective operation.

Annexed to the Committee's report were a list of States parties to the Convention, CEDAW membership and the status of submission of reports by States parties under article 18 of the Convention as at 3 March 1989.

Tenth anniversary

In April, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution(3) on the tenth anniversary of the Convention. It strongly supported the view of CEDAW that the Secretary-General should accord higher priority within existing resources to strengthening support for CEDAW. It urged States parties to submit their periodic reports in accordance with the Convention and recognized the special relevance of those reports to efforts of the Commission to review and appraise implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/44 without vote.

Elimination of discrimination against women in accordance with the aims of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in Articles 1 and 55 of the Charter, is to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction of any kind, including distinction as to sex,

Affirming that women and men should participate equally in social, economic and political development, should contribute equally to such development and should share equally in improved conditions of life,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/100 of 8 December 1988 and Council resolution 1988/26 of 26 May 1988,

Taking note of resolution 33/3 of 6 April 1989 of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Aware of the important contribution that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women can make to the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women and to the achievement of legal and de facto equality of women and men,

Bearing in mind that 18 December 1989 marks the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its eighth session,

Noting that the Committee agreed, in examining reports, to take due account of the different cultural and socio-economic systems of States parties to the Convention,

1. Welcoming the ratification of or accession to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women by an increasing number of Member States;

2. Urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible;

3. Urges States parties to the Convention to make all possible efforts to submit their initial reports on its implementation, as well as their second and subsequent periodic reports, in accordance with article 18 of the Convention and the guidelines provided by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, and to co-operate fully with the Committee in the presentation of their reports;

4. Strongly supports the view of the Committee that the Secretary-General should accord higher priority within existing resources to strengthening support for the Committee;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991, to take due account of article 17, paragraph 9, of the Convention and provide the Committee with the staff and facilities necessary for the effective performance of its functions, so that it may carry out its mandate as efficiently as other human rights treaty bodies;

6. Welcomes the efforts made by the Committee to rationalize its procedures and expedite the consideration of periodic reports and to develop procedures and guidelines for the consideration of second and subsequent periodic reports, and strongly encourages the Committee to continue those efforts;

7. Supports the proposal made by the Committee to convene a working group to meet for three to five days prior to the ninth session of the Committee to prepare issues and questions relating to the second and subsequent periodic reports of the States parties, to be considered at that session of the Committee, and invites the General Assembly to take the necessary action;

8. Recognizes the special relevance of the periodic reports of States parties to the Convention to the efforts of the Commission on the Status of Women to review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women in those countries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on 18 December 1989, to provide for, facilitate and encourage, within existing resources, the dissemination of information relating to the Committee and the Convention, taking into account all the relevant general recommendations made by the Committee at its eighth session, in particular general recommendation 10;

10. Recommends that sessions of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women be scheduled, whenever possible, to allow for the timely transmission of the results of its work to the Commission on the Status of Women, for information, the same year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/73 without vote.

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in Articles 1 and 55 of the Charter, is to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction of any kind, including distinction as to sex,

Affirming that women and men should participate equally in social, economic and political development, should contribute equally to such development and should share equally in improved conditions of life,

Recalling its resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979, by which it adopted the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on the Convention, in particular resolution 43/100 of 8 December 1988, and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/44 of 24 May 1989,

Recalling further the decisions taken on 7 and 8 March 1988 at the Fourth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention,

Aware of the important contribution that the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women can make to eliminating all forms of discrimination against women and to achieving legal and de facto equality between women and men,

Noting the emphasis placed by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace on ratification of and accession to the Convention,

Bearing in mind that 18 December 1989 marks the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its eighth session,

Noting that the Committee agreed, in examining reports, to take due account of the different cultural and socio-economic systems of States parties to the Convention,

1. Welcomes the ratification of or accession to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women by an increasing number of Member States;

2. Urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and requests him to submit annually to the General Assembly a report on the status of the Convention;

5. Takes note also of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on its eighth session;

6. Endorses general recommendation No. 10 of the Committee, made at its eighth session, on activities to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention, including the request that its report on the achievements of States parties and obstacles encountered by them in implementing the Convention be regularly updated, and requests that sufficient resources be provided for that purpose;

7. Urges States parties to the Convention to make all possible efforts to submit their initial as well as second and subsequent reports on the implementation of the Convention, in accordance with article 18 thereof and with the guidelines of the Committee, and to co-operate fully with the Committee in the presentation of the reports;

8. Recognizes the special relevance of the periodic reports of States parties to the Convention to the efforts of the Commission on the Status of Women to review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women in those countries;

9. Strongly supports the view of the Committee that the Secretary-General should accord higher priority to strengthening support for the Committee;

10. Endorses the proposal made by the Committee that a working group be convened to meet for three to five days prior to the ninth session of the Committee to prepare issues and questions relating to the second and subsequent periodic reports of the States parties to be considered at the ninth session of the Committee, and invites the Secretary-General to take the necessary action towards that end;

11. Strongly encourages the Committee to enhance its efforts to rationalize its procedures and expedite the consideration of periodic reports and to develop procedures and guidelines for the consideration of second reports;

12. Takes note of the proposals of the Secretary-General for full funding of the Committee and requests that the programme budget for 1990-1991 provide for attendance at all the Committee's meetings by relevant professional staff from the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, legal staff expert in human rights treaty implementation and adequate secretarial staff, and for the necessary facilities for the effective functioning of the Committee in order to enable it to carry out its mandate as efficiently as other human rights treaty bodies;

13. Welcomes the steps already taken by the Secretary-General and requests him, in view of the observance of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on 18 December 1989, to facilitate and encourage, within existing resources, the dissemination of information relating to the Convention and the Committee, taking into account all the relevant general recommendations made by the Committee at its eighth session, in particular general recommendation No. 10;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the report of the Committee to the Commission on the Status of Women for information;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, and to transmit the report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fifth session.

Chapter XIV

Children, youth and aging persons

During 1989, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued to make efforts to reduce infant and child mortality and improve the quality of life for children. Despite the world-wide economic set-backs, 42 countries had achieved universal child immunization by December, and many countries started linking immunization programmes with the basic maternal, child and primary health care systems. Emergency activities were continued in conflict-affected countries. UNICEF actively participated in Operation Lifeline Sudan, launched in April to assist 2.25 million people affected by recurring natural and man-made disasters, civil war and famine. In April, James P. Grant was reappointed as Executive Director of UNICEF for a further term of five years from 1 January 1990.

The education and unemployment problems facing young people were considered by the General Assembly, which, in December, requested the Secretary-General to promote and monitor intensively the inclusion of youth-related projects and activities in the programmes of UN bodies and specialized agencies, specifically in the areas of communication, health, housing, culture, youth employment and education, drug abuse and the environment.

The second review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging was conducted during the year. Taking note with interest of the priorities identified and recommendations made therein, the Assembly endorsed the draft programme of UN activities relating to the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Plan of Action, in 1992.

Children

UN Children's Fund

As in previous years, programmes for children were primarily carried out by UNICEF, which provided assistance for child survival and development, basic services and social mobilization.

In 1989, UNICEF co-operated in programmes in 128 countries and territories, the majority of which were in Africa (44) followed by Latin America and the Caribbean (35), Asia (34) and the Middle East and North Africa (15).

Programme expenditures totalled $501 million, of which $203 million was spent on child health; $76 million on water supply and sanitation; $74 million on planning and project preparation and programme support services; $48 million on emergency relief; $37 million on education; $35 million on community- and family-based services; and $28 million on child nutrition.

In his report on 1989 activities,⁽¹⁾ the UNICEF Executive Director noted that UNICEF programme performance reflected a mixture of continuity and innovation. Immunization coverage was continuing to expand. Some 112 countries, comprising about 99 per cent of developing country populations, had operational control of diarrhoeal diseases programmes, and 60 per cent of children under the age of five had access to trained providers of oral rehydration salts. UNICEF-supported drinking water supply programmes were reaching increasing numbers of developing country populations, especially in rural areas. From literacy to income-generation to food security, the focus had been on integrating women's concerns in all programme development. As a result, programme expenditures for women increased to 29 per cent of total expenditures in 1989, from 23 per cent in 1987. The Executive Director stated that the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child in November (see below) was a major milestone in advocacy for children and set an appropriate stage for the new decade, in which the World Summit for Children, to be held in 1990, would provide new impetus for ratification of the Convention and promotion of attention to children.

Programme policy

Medium-term plan

At its 1989 regular session, the Executive Board endorsed⁽²⁾ the programme objectives of the medium-term plan for the period 1988-1992,⁽³⁾ and also approved⁽⁴⁾ the medium-term plan as a framework of financial projections for 1989-1992, including the preparation of up to $248 million in programme expenditures from general resources. The medium-term plan consisted of five major sections related to planning environment and goals; major programme thrusts for the period; regional strategies; strengthening UNICEF capacity for supportive actions; and the financial plan for 1988-1992. It outlined as basic goals the reduction of maternal, infant and child mortality through the improvement of maternal and child health; the protection and improvement of children's well-being, their family and physical environment through sustainable development actions; the improvement of the well-being, situation and environment of women as well as their role in development; and the promotion of appropriate child-spacing to protect the health of the mother and child.

Strategies for children in the 1990s

In February, the Executive Director presented(5) to the UNICEF Executive Board views on how the needs of children should be addressed in an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (the 1990s), and proposed goals for child survival, development and protection by the year 2000. Those included reduction of the maternal and infant mortality rates by 50 per cent; virtual elimination of severe malnutrition; universal access to safe drinking water and eradication of guinea worm by 1995; universal access to sanitary means of excreta disposal; universal basic education for children and accelerated adult literacy programmes, especially for women; and improved protection of children in difficult circumstances. Also proposed were goals in specific and sectoral areas (maternal health, child health, nutrition, safe water supply and environmental sanitation, basic education, children in especially difficult circumstances) and for children in industrialized countries. Stating that those proposals were ambitious but feasible, the Executive Director suggested strategies to meet them, including the setting up of country- and region-specific targets.

In April, the Board authorized(6) the Executive Director to prepare an operational strategy for UNICEF to guide its activities and to help implement the national strategies, and to consult with Governments and other partners in development. It encouraged him to use the views and proposals presented as a basis for the global strategy for the well-being of children, as well as to serve as UNICEF input into the formulation of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade. It also invited(7) the Executive Director to explore ways to reach the poorest groups and to bring about their participation in the basic services and actions for development.

Policy reviews

The Executive Board considered, among other matters: children and environment; the implementation of UNICEF policy on women in development; UNICEF activities in the prevention of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS); and UNICEF external relations policies and function.

The policy review of children and environment(8) discussed the impact of environmental degradation on the health and well-being of children and women, and reviewed how environmental considerations were reflected in ongoing UNICEF-assisted programmes. Recommendations were made to address explicitly environmental concerns in the situation analysis, country programming and evaluation, as well as to add or strengthen environmental components in programmes. The Board approved(9) the recommendations as the broad policy framework for UNICEF action, and invited(10) the Economic and Social Council to take into account the ideas and expertise of UNICEF on the issue in its future preparatory work for the UN conference on environment and development.

The report on UNICEF policy on women in development(11) analysed the extent to which UNICEF assistance reflected the new policy on women in development and suggested areas requiring further attention, including needs of and services available to young girls, support to women farmers and special measures for women living in countries experiencing political crisis and economic adjustment.

The Board reviewed progress in UNICEF's AIDS-prevention activities in 1988.(12) The effect of AIDS on women and children worsened dramatically as heterosexual transmission spread human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection to increasing numbers of women, who passed the virus to their unborn children. In response, UNICEF would develop projects focusing on information, education and communication, training and the socio-economic impact of AIDS on women and children, and would also address new areas of impact on children, such as orphans of AIDS victims.

In response to a 1988 Executive Board request,(13) the Executive Director submitted a comprehensive review of UNICEF external relations policies and function.(14) Summarizing UNICEF advocacy activities on behalf of children, the review concluded that it had started contributing significantly to shaping the development process, rather than simply making a technical contribution to its advancement, and the full resources of the organization had been mobilized in synergistic, co-ordinated, sustained programme information efforts. The Board requested(15) the Executive Director to analyse and evaluate further the effectiveness of current external relations policies, functions, guidelines and activities.

UNICEF Maurice Pate Award

In March 1989, the Executive Director submitted to the Board a recommendation(16) to amend the process of nomination and selection of the recipient of the UNICEF Maurice Pate Award, established in 1966(17) to commemorate the first UNICEF Executive Director. Under the proposed changes, solicitation of nominations would be expanded to ensure a broad range of nominations and would stipulate a deadline of 31 July of the year preceding the presentation of the Award. The Executive Director would prepare a recommendation for review by the Bureau of the Board at its autumn meeting and the review would be based on the biographical data of all formally submitted nominations. At its April session, the Board endorsed(18) the proposed amendment.

The 1989 Award was presented to Suzanne Mubarak, the First Lady of Egypt, for, among other contributions, her role in establishing the National Council for Childhood and Motherhood in Egypt; her work in creating libraries and child development centres in Egypt; and the critical role she had played as Vice-President in shaping the direction of the Arab Council for Childhood and in mobilizing pan-Arab support for child development in the Arab world.

Adjustment with a human face

Faced with the tremendous social costs of adjustment programmes and the economic set-backs of the 1980s, international financial institutions, as well as many Governments of both developed and developing countries, were increasingly recognizing the need to protect vulnerable groups in the course of adjustment and to restore their long-term economic growth. In support of alternative economic adjustment policies, UNICEF frequently held consultations with the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund and was active in the dialogue between the World Bank and the Economic Commission for Africa on the African alternative adjustment programme. An informal group had been formed with the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and the World Food Programme to co-ordinate agency activities on problems of adjustment and food policy.

Activities related to structural adjustment continued in Argentina, Bolivia, Ecuador, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Kenya, Madagascar, Mozambique, the Philippines, Somalia and the United Republic of Tanzania. Programmes of action to mitigate the social consequences of adjustment were under way, with UNICEF support, in Ghana and Madagascar. In many countries, UNICEF offices actively supported interministerial task forces on priority-setting in social and economic programmes in collaboration with other UN agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

In April, the Executive Board, welcoming UNICEF's efforts to support countries interested in pursuing debt relief for promoting child survival, protection and development, encouraged(19) the Executive Director to explore with regional banks possibilities for voluntary debt-reduction schemes and to invite all private and official creditors to explore expanded application of debt-relief schemes for child survival, protection and development.

UNICEF programmes by region

Africa

The deleterious impact of structural adjustment programmes, external debt, a decrease in foreign aid flows, warfare and civil conflicts, domestic policy failures, natural disasters and AIDS continued to affect the quality of life and survival prospects of millions of African children in 1989. Countries in the sub-Saharan region continued to experience widespread decline in standards of child health and nutrition. As a result of the ongoing economic crisis and the accelerated pace of urbanization, African society was undergoing profound changes that affected the social and organizational behaviour of its populations. Strategies of Governments and organizations were passive, whereas societies were in a state of rapid transformation. Total expenditures for UNICEF's programmes in Africa in 1989 amounted to $170 million.

The West and Central Africa region continued to make progress towards immunization goals of 75 per cent of children under one year of age by the end of the 1990s: Cape Verde and the Gambia succeeded in sustaining universal child immunization (UCI); the Congo, Gabon, Guinea-Bissau and Togo reached over 60 per cent; and the Central African Republic, Mali, the Niger and particularly Nigeria, which accounted for more than half of the region's population, doubled their coverage rates. Multisectoral primary health care/Bamako Initiative planning committees, often including donor agencies, had been established in most countries of the region. Coverage under Bamako Initiative activities was still generally limited, but good progress had been achieved in Benin, Guinea, Nigeria and Sierra Leone. Various community-financing schemes were tested, all of which had as a major objective raising at least enough funds to ensure the continuous replenishment of 30 to 40 basic essential drugs. Oral rehydration therapy (ORT) was used to treat only 19 per cent of child diarrhoea cases, with 13 countries in West and Central Africa having rates at or below 10 per cent. Much assistance was provided for the training of health personnel and volunteers on correct diagnosis and proper use of ORT.

The number of AIDS cases progressively increased in West and Central Africa. With technical assistance from the World Health Organization (WHO), most countries were finalizing or implementing medium-term plans for AIDS control that included priority activities such as strengthening epidemiological surveillance and adopting measures to reduce the risks of sexual, blood and transplacental HIV transmission. UNICEF co-sponsored and participated in the International Symposium on AIDS Education held in Yaoundé, Cameroon.

With regard to water supply and environmental sanitation, strategies were being revised to achieve more systematic participation of the population. Communities were required to prove first that they were capable of maintenance and repair before new water and sanitation services were installed. Sanitation programmes were increasingly sustained by community mobilization, with schools, parents and political leaders becoming involved. Projects benefiting women had been firmly integrated into all UNICEF-assisted programmes in the region. Literacy and social mobilization were especially targeted towards women in Benin, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, Mali and Senegal.

In the Eastern and Southern Africa region, immunization activities continued to be the major thrust of UNICEF activities with Governments. As morbidity and mortality from immunizable diseases decreased, mortality from dehydration, acute respiratory infections, malaria and malnutrition had attracted greater attention as major causes of death among infants and young children. Many countries undertook coverage studies to develop strategies and actions for achieving UCI by 1990 or for sustaining the successes already achieved, and were working on strategies to increase the tetanus toxoid coverage of women of child-bearing age. Access to vaccination against tuberculosis was over 80 per cent, except in Angola, Ethiopia, Madagascar, Mozambique, Namibia, Somalia and Uganda. While the costs of the expanded programme on immunization (EPI) were borne by external funds in almost every country, and some countries still depended heavily on expatriate technical support for programme management, measures were being sought for gradual take-over by Governments. To light against the persistently high incidence of diarrhoea stemming from unsafe water, poor environmental and personal hygiene and AIDS, UNICEF input to country programmes consisted of supplying oral rehydration salts (ORS), training, and equipment and raw materials for local ORS production.

In those countries with a high prevalence of AIDS (Burundi, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia), an increase in deaths caused directly by paediatric AIDS and indirectly by maternal AIDS was of great concern. Paediatric AIDS transmitted via the placenta was the most common route for HIV infection in children under five years of age. All countries in the region had medium-term plans for national AIDS control programmes, formulated with technical assistance from WHO. UNICEF assistance included mainly information, education and communication programmes, supplies (syringes, needles, sterilizers and protective materials), training, and studies on behavioural changes.

The countries in the region were in various phases of planning and/or implementing the Bamako Initiative. The principal focus of UNICEF support was, therefore, to strengthen national capacity. At headquarters, the Bamako Initiative Management Unit continued its central role in developing the conceptual framework of the Initiative into a broad-based maternal and child health/primary health care revitalization effort. Although challenges remained on such issues as the rational use of drugs, cost recovery problems, equity of access to primary health care, and essential drugs supply, provisional data from 44 health centres in Benin, for example, showed an overall increase of service utilization of 144 per cent since the introduction of the Initiative in February 1988. Breast-feeding was promoted through health education by nurses and the mass media. More than 70 per cent of children were breast-fed up to 12 months and 24 months of age in Botswana and Lesotho, respectively.

Good progress was made in 1989 towards the development of a systematic approach to gender-responsive planning and programming. Guidelines for undertaking studies and situation analyses of women and children had been adjusted so as to reflect gender concerns more effectively.

In order to assess the magnitude and severity of the problem of internally displaced children, a region-wide study was under way covering Angola, Ethiopia, Mozambique, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda, and UNICEF responded to their emergency needs. In Namibia, UNICEF organized immunization, provided women farmers with tools and seeds, and supplied school materials.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1989/33 of 24 May, appealed to the international community for increased assistance for women and children refugees in southern Africa, and urged Member States and UN bodies to give particular attention to women and children under apartheid in their education, health, vocational training and employment opportunities.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The economic decline of the 1980s deeply affected all countries in the Latin American and Caribbean region. The region's 1989 gross domestic product was almost 10 per cent below that of 1980 and external debt amounted to $426 billion. It had approximately 103 million poor people under the age of 18. The economic crisis not only eroded the strength and credibility of democratic Governments but also was complicated by war and violence in some countries. Total expenditures in 1989 for UNICEF's programmes in the region amounted to $52 million.

All countries in the region adopted vaccination strategies which reinforced surveillance activities and routine vaccination at all government and non-government health facilities, created national vaccination days featuring application of all antigens, including tetanus toxoid for women of child-bearing age, and executed a house-to-house vaccination campaign in polio-infected communities. By October 1989, the incidence of polio had declined to 105 confirmed cases, concentrated in less than 2 per cent of municipalities. A regional inter-agency committee, composed of the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO)/WHO, UNICEF and the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), set guidelines for the preparation of five-year regional and national plans on the control of diarrhoeal diseases (CDD).

Low-cost water supply systems were developed in Bolivia, Cuba, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras and Mexico, featuring community participation, social mobilization, health education, and training of counterparts and community personnel in maintenance operations. Educational coverage and access were expanded; Bolivia established multi-grade primary education covering 60,000 children in 1,700 schools and promoted intercultural bilingual education, while Colombia included the theme of child survival at all levels of education. Flexible learning systems, church alliances and the use of communication media were promoted in Brazil, El Salvador and Haiti. Initiatives in early child development continued to take place mostly through low-cost family-based approaches. New strategies were developed in the English-speaking Caribbean countries with emphasis on information and social mobilization. A development-oriented approach for women emphasized basic services, income-generating activities, organization of women and institutionalization. By the end of the 1980s the number of programmes featuring actions for women, either as separate activities or a part of all projects, reached 20. Projects for children in especially difficult circumstances focused on health, education, nutrition, occupational training, family and community reintegration and psycho-social adjustment. There had been a clear change of attitude regarding those children, and a regional movement on their behalf was under way.

UNICEF, together with several Governments, addressed the problems of the urban poor by supporting basic service programmes, with emphasis on community participation. Successful experiences in pioneer countries such as Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru had contributed to the development of similar programmes in Argentina, Belize, Central America, Haiti, Jamaica, Mexico and Panama. The Mexico programme developed a methodology for primary health care delivery and a local health information system. Emphasis was on nutrition and income-generating activities for women through a community kitchen project in marginal areas of Mexico City, benefiting 3,000 families.

In April, with a view to ensuring the achievement of development targets, the Executive Board decided⁽²⁰⁾ to consider, in the light of the Executive Director's 1990 report, an allocation of resources to the Special Adjustment Fund for Latin America and the Caribbean.

Asia

While a number of Asian countries reported economic growth in 1989, others experienced high inflation and economic stagnation. High population growth, environmental degradation, inequity in access to services, ethnic unrests, and an overall increase in the number of families below the poverty line remained challenges for the near future. Programme expenditure in Asia amounted to $204 million, or 41 per cent of the Fund's global programme budget.

In the East Asia and Pakistan region and China, progress towards UCI continued to be rapid, with the Marshall Islands, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Thailand virtually achieving it. Indonesia, Malaysia and Pakistan were likely to achieve UCI by 1990. Many countries had CDD policies with ORT training, but implementation still remained low. Sanitation coverage improved throughout the region, as in the case of Bangladesh where it increased by 50 per cent in 1988-1989, although remaining at a very low 5 per cent. In Myanmar, 30 per cent of rural and 35 per cent of urban households had latrines and, in Indonesia, 22 per cent of the population had access to latrines and satisfactory waste disposal. UNICEF's nutritional activities concentrated on growth monitoring, the promotion of breast-feeding, food and nutrition surveillance and family food production. Control activities for iodine deficiency disorders improved in the region, with an increased production of iodated salt. The problem of vitamin A deficiency was pursued through the administration of high-dose vitamin A in Bangladesh, Indonesia, Myanmar, Pakistan and Viet Nam. The number of persons infected with AIDS increased significantly in 1989, with 9,473 cases reported by August. The majority (9,027) were recorded in Thailand.

UNICEF continued to support programmes benefiting women, such as training, literacy, income-generating activities and research studies on women.

Thailand trained 400 women from 20 cities in income-generating skills and formulated a model for granting credit facilities to women's groups. In Kampuchea, the Women's Association produced and distributed booklets for neo-literate women on child survival, women's health and income-generating activities. Activities in China focused on enhancing women's status, role and participation in development. They included the training of women cadres, assistance to teacher training and curriculum development for community-run pre-schools promoted by the All China Women's Federation, and the training of women community extension workers in Tibet. The provision of co-ordinated services for the children of the urban poor in Asia proved to be particularly difficult. However, in Pakistan, the Philippines and Thailand, UNICEF supported urban community organization by training community-level workers and volunteers.

In Bangladesh, UNICEF supported an experimental pilot scheme of "satellite schools" aimed at providing the rural poor and females with access to education. Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam reached almost full primary enrolment. In Solomon Islands, a comprehensive four-year plan of action was developed to integrate nutrition into the non-formal education curriculum.

In May, a regional consultation on strategies for development in Asia urged UNICEF to encourage countries to assess the need for the social education of children; to monitor the safety and well-being of children in armed conflicts or other serious violent situations; to assist with the collection, analysis and dissemination of social indicators; to advocate that Governments allocate more prime broadcast time to child survival and development and women's development issues; and to ensure the selection of well-qualified staff.

In South Central Asia, where about one half of the world's absolute poor lived, the population growth rate was well above the planned level and the gap between the haves and the have-nots continued to widen. A combination of inadequate nutrition, sanitation and education aggravated the health problems. However, there was a continually increasing attention to child-related issues at the policy and planning levels, especially in the area of primary health care.

The UNICEF immunization programme in Afghanistan continued in 14 provinces. In Bhutan, the establishment of more than 300 EPI outreach clinics had brought some 80 per cent of the population into contact with health workers. This led to the introduction of a more comprehensive series of services, including antenatal care, growth monitoring, the treatment of diarrhoea, deworming and concerns for water and sanitation. The phased implementation of the UCI programme in India reached all of India's 436 districts. Immunization coverage rates reached more than 60 per cent generally and over 80 per cent in some parts of the country. Although coverage for measles lagged behind, tetanus toxoid coverage might be one of the highest in the world with a verified 76 per cent coverage throughout the country. Through a mobile team approach, Maldives achieved UCI in 1989, and expanded functions of that team covered a wide array of primary health care activities.

In Mongolia, immunization coverage, supported and completely managed by the Government, exceeded 80 per cent for each antigen. UNICEF focused on the Ministry of Health diarrhoea management programme that included training of health workers in ORT. A public information programme using the press, radio and television resulted in the reduction in diarrhoea morbidity and mortality levels. Encouraging results had been obtained in Nepal with regard to EPI, the control of iodine deficiency disorders, the training of traditional birth attendants and the essential drugs programme. In the community water and sanitation programme, 62 per cent of the planned targets were achieved, although the sanitation component continued to be weak. Despite terrible set-backs due to civil unrest, Sri Lanka achieved UCI in 1989 and formed a task force to monitor and investigate maternal deaths.

Middle East and North Africa

The Middle East and North Africa region, with the possible exceptions of Lebanon and the Israeli-occupied territories, continued to experience a rapid decline in infant mortality. The resumption of diplomatic relations between Egypt and neighbouring Arab countries helped to make Egypt's leading performance in EPI and CDD a more widely accepted model for other Arab countries. UNICEF programme expenditures for the Middle East and North Africa in 1989 amounted to $61 million, 12 per cent of the global budget.

UCI by 1990 came within reach for all but three countries (Democratic Yemen, Sudan, Yemen) in 1989. To reach the target, Democratic Yemen and the Sudan decided to launch immunization thrusts in 1990 and Yemen would continue its decentralization programme. The Maghreb Arab Union and UNICEF co-operated to accelerate coverage through a simultaneous immunization thrust in all five member countries (Algeria, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Tunisia). After the Union's collaborative acceleration day on 14 October, Libya announced its first internationally recognized coverage figures for children under one year old: 100 per cent for anti-tuberculosis vaccine; 84 per cent for three doses of oral polio vaccine and three doses of combined diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus vaccine; and 79 per cent for measles vaccine. For 1989, all countries in the region set a new common purpose of reducing child mortality from diarrhoeal diseases at an accelerated rate.

Sponsored by the United Nations, NGOs and the Government of the Sudan, Operation Lifeline Sudan, a six-month, $209 million famine-relief programme, was launched in April (see below). In the occupied territories, on the other hand, the toll of injuries and deaths among Palestinian children took a sharp upturn.

UNICEF programmes by sector

Child survival and development

UNICEF, together with WHO, the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Rockefeller Foundation, continued to support the Task Force for Child Survival, which was responsible for sponsoring an international meeting in Bangkok, Thailand, in 1990 to promote final efforts to achieve the 1990 UCI goal and to develop an international consensus on strategies for achieving child survival goals for the 1990s.

Immunization

Globally, immunization coverage continued to rise, leading to a significant reduction in disease morbidity and mortality, and preventing an estimated 2 million deaths during 1989. Some 68 per cent of children in developing countries had received three doses each of combined diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus vaccine and polio vaccine by their first birthday. Coverage for anti-tuberculosis vaccine had reached 75 per cent and measles had reached 60 per cent. The immunization of pregnant women with tetanus toxoid also showed a substantial increase.

To reach the more difficult areas and population groups, many countries carried out coverage surveys to evaluate the comprehensiveness and reliability of routinely collected data. UNICEF worked together with WHO and Governments to unify data bases to facilitate the assessment of UCI achievement at the end of 1990.

Control of diarrhoeal diseases

Some 112 countries had operational CDD programmes, covering an estimated 99 per cent of the total population in developing countries. It was estimated that nearly 60 per cent of children under five years of age had access to trained and regularly supplied providers of ORS, although that access varied widely by region, from about 25 per cent in Africa to over 75 per cent in Asia.

By the end of 1989, more than one in three episodes of diarrhoea in children under five were treated with ORT, either in health facilities or at home. UNICEF support included improving and relining national plans of action and/or national treatment guidelines; improving distribution and availability of ORS; establishing diarrhoea training units and ORT corners to train health workers; and reducing the inappropriate use of antibiotics and anti-diarrhoeal drugs. UNICEF also provided assistance for a wide variety of communications activities, including the development of materials for face-to-face communication between health workers and mothers.

Primary health care

There was a greater recognition of the need for community financing of primary health care, not merely to assist Governments with severe budget constraints, but also as a means of increasing community involvement in health. Attention had been on sustaining the significant achievements in immunization; the decentralization of health services; the strengthening of district management systems; and the integration of primary health care, health information, logistics and referral services. Many countries started linking immunization programmes with the basic maternal and child health/primary health care systems and other health interventions such as malaria and CDD. In many countries in Africa, where chloroquine resistance continued to increase, and in South-East Asia, where resistance had spread to various antimalarials, malaria control activities were integrated with maternal and child health care activities.

In collaboration with WHO, USAID and NGOs, UNICEF developed appropriate low-cost technology in the field of maternal and child health and immunization, such as a solar-powered electronic scale and self-destruct syringes and needles. A technology introduction panel was formed in 1989 to institutionalize the co-operation of agencies in that area.

UNICEF support to national efforts on acute respiratory infections (ARI) included the development of diagnosis and treatment protocols, training, communication activities and information-gathering. UNICEF also supported preventive measures. The impact of smoke-free stoves on the incidence and severity of ARI was being tested in Bhutan and Papua New Guinea, and immunization was promoted in the Sudan.

Bamako Initiative

In 1989, the Bamako Initiative made considerable progress in gaining acceptance for its ideas, in developing programmes of action in 24 African countries and in demonstrating further progress in those countries which were already implementing programmes. The Initiative's basic aim was to reinforce primary health care at the district level, including the rehabilitation of health care services at the periphery.

During the year, Benin expanded its primary health care project to 300 subdistricts in 70 districts of a total 517 subdistricts in 86 districts. Guinea's community-based strategy integrated the various components of primary health care, including immunization and essential drugs; the Government's decentralization policy allowed the district level to plan its development and manage local resources for health. Kenya introduced cost-sharing at all levels of the public health system and fees for out-patient services throughout the referral chain. A UNICEF-supported study on the willingness and ability of community members to pay for health care provided the basis for establishing affordability. An innovative approach in Burundi allowed families to pay for health cards in advance. It was estimated that $4.70 per family per year would cover the costs of essential drugs. Angola, Côte d'Ivoire, Malawi and Senegal were in the initial stages of planning on the Bamako Initiative.

In April, the Executive Board called on (21) UNICEF further to integrate education and communication components into the Initiative. It also urged UNICEF to seek supplementary funding for support to individual country programmes.

Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome

It was well-recognized that AIDS-related mortality in children under five years of age would impede the child mortality reduction that had been achieved in the past 20 years. The pandemic nature of the disease was producing a large group of orphans, who had lost one or both parents to AIDS.

UNICEF, in collaboration with WHO, had been assisting national AIDS-control programmes by teaching people to avoid behaviour and practices that could spread the AIDS virus. In Kenya, UNICEF supported a national women's organization and the Christian Health Association of Kenya in training health workers and community and church leaders in HIV/AIDS awareness. School health-education programmes which included AIDS prevention were supported in Burundi, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda and other African countries. In addition, Governments were assisted in understanding the socio-economic impact of HIV/AIDS in order to find solutions to the problems of care for those suffering directly and indirectly from HIV/AIDS.

Nutrition and food security

UNICEF support for nutrition and food security reflected the general recognition that the nutritional status of children was primarily influenced by health care and a healthy environment; maternal and child care, including proper feeding practices; and food security.

During 1989, food and nutrition surveillance activities were expanded in co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and WHO and supported by the Netherlands and Switzerland. Country projects became operational in China, Madagascar, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Viet Nam and Zambia. Regional activities included the development of a training programme in food and nutrition surveillance for the Americas, in close co-operation with PAHO.

To reverse the declining trend in breast-feeding, a wide range of activities was carried out, including training of health workers, use of the mass media, and integrating breast-feeding promotion in maternal and child care programmes. Over 35,000 copies of the joint WHO/UNICEF statement on the topic were distributed.

Support was provided for food production at the household level. The United Republic of Tanzania mobilized communities to plant nearly 100,000 acres of food crops. As a result, many households produced far in excess of their consumption needs, thus contributing to increased levels of household income. In several Sahelian countries, assistance was provided for food production, dry-season gardening activities and community-based cereal banks.

UNICEF support to vitamin A deficiency control programmes more than doubled in 1989 over the levels of the previous two years, and supplies of high-dose vitamin A capsules reached a record 105 million. The distributions of the supplements in Bangladesh and India were built on the successful outreach of their immunization programmes. As for the control of iodine-deficiency disorders, support in 24 countries included advocacy, programme development, implementation, monitoring and evaluation.

The Joint Nutrition Support Programme (JNSP), started by WHO and UNICEF in 1983, (22) was evaluated in 1989. Findings indicated that there was no predetermined set of interventions that resulted in improved nutrition and that a programme to improve nutrition was more likely to succeed if it had a community-based approach. It was agreed that country-level activities would be supported through normal agency channels after JNSP ended in December 1989.

Childhood disability

In 1989, UNICEF assisted early detection and rehabilitation services of childhood disability in 27 countries. Egypt, Kenya and Pakistan reported national commitment at the highest level to programmes for disabled children. In Central America, through an innovative grass-roots approach involving parents and low-cost technology, the programme developed methodologies for providing care for disabled children, often allowing them to be "mainstreamed" in the regular educational systems. In China, there were programmes for the early identification of and intervention for children with special needs and for mentally retarded pre-school children. Brazil emphasized the training of special education teachers in disability prevention and early detection. In Mauritius, where it was estimated that 12 per cent of children suffered from some kind of impairment, UNICEF assistance focused on the design of a system for early identification and intervention in pre-schools and on a widespread sensitization campaign in the community to integrate disabled children in schools and to train teachers.

A systematic situation analysis regarding disabled children was conducted in each country as part of the subregional situation analysis. This new subregional programme included components related to community-based prevention and early detection and treatment of childhood disabilities. In August, UNICEF co-sponsored an international conference on the current state and future trends of rehabilitation of disabled children, held in Tallinn, Estonia, USSR.

Water supply and sanitation

In an increasing number of countries, UNICEF-supported CDD programmes were linked to water and sanitation programmes. Evaluation in some of those countries showed that integrated water, sanitation and hygiene education programmes could reduce the incidence of diarrhoea among children by 20 to 25 per cent. In Benin and Nigeria, the UNICEF water supply projects were linked to the eradication of guinea worm.

In the area of water and sanitation, UNICEF activities included rainwater harvesting via roof and rock catchment in a number of countries; the experimental use of solar pumps in Benin, the Gambia and Myanmar; the rehabilitation of old and non-functional water and sanitation systems simultaneously with the construction of new systems; linking water and sanitation programmes with environmental concerns; and material and equipment development.

In April, the Executive Board called on (23) all endemic States to intensify measures towards the elimination of guinea-worm disease in the 1990s and authorized the Executive Director to support them in the active case-search of the disease and in the formulation of national plans of action. It approved $1.55 million for the period 1989-1990 for country studies and services.

Basic education

In many countries, the number of primary-school students had decreased, the disparity between the enrolment of boys and girls had widened and both the quality and relevance of education had declined. About 100 million children had no access to education. However, UNICEF programme co-operation in education remained modest.

Support for primary education, adult literacy and training, special education for disabled children and education facilities for children in difficult circumstances had been of a catalytic nature. UNICEF co-operated in curriculum reform, teacher training and the production or supply of teaching materials. Lessons on health, nutrition, sanitation and other aspects of child and maternal health had been incorporated in most basic education programmes at the pre-school, primary and adult literacy levels. Linking women's literacy programmes with some income-generating activities had reduced high drop-out rates and motivated poor, illiterate women to become literate.

In April, the Executive Board recommended that, in order to protect children, youth and the unborn child, UNICEF should be more actively involved in control of tobacco-use programmes in public, maternal and school education.

Urban basic services

As the economic situation deteriorated and war or internal strife continued in many countries, their urban centres were strained in trying to cope with the needs of new migrants.

The urban basic services programme in India had reached 118 cities, supporting community development efforts in city governments, community organizations and basic services, including primary health care, immunization, early childhood development, and water and basic sanitation. In Thailand, urban programmes had reached all major and secondary cities, and in Bangkok the programme was extended to include a working- and street-children project. In Latin America, urban basic services achieved solid results in Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua. Colombia was expanding the programme to other poor areas and approaching sustainability. Programmes were being developed in Kenya, Liberia, Nigeria and the Sudan.

Women in development

UNICEF country programme initiatives in 1989 showed growing application of the policy on women, which was to incorporate the needs and concerns of girls and women into the mainstream programmes. In child and maternal health interventions, women and women's organizations contributed to the successes of large-scale immunization and water services in several countries. The provision of community water services in UNICEF-assisted countries had helped to reduce the time and energy spent by women in the task of water collection.

Major initiatives were being undertaken on the education, health and overall well-being of girls, and non-formal education and literacy programmes for women and adolescents continued to be strengthened and integrated with health education, vocational training and economic activities for women. Strategic objectives identifying women's participation, income generation, access to credit, employment, work-load reduction, non-formal education and the provision of child-care facilities for working women were specified in the programmes of Brazil, Burkina Faso, Colombia, Democratic Yemen, Mauritius, Mexico, Nepal, Sierra Leone, the United Republic of Tanzania and Venezuela. Regarding programme design, many countries utilized the area-based approach to target poor women and enhance their participation, permitting the integration of gender concerns in sectoral programmes such as health, education, water and sanitation, nutrition and household food security. The area-based strategy in Mozambique reached women in their communities, identified their needs and successfully involved them in implementing integrated projects covering household food security, health, child care, adult education and training.

Women were the principal mobilizers and agents in health and water and sanitation sectors in Bolivia, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Nigeria, Peru, Somalia and the Sudan. Women participated in the management and maintenance of water systems in Ethiopia, India, Morocco, Pakistan, the Sudan and Zimbabwe. Some 14,200 women mechanics and caretakers in India had been trained with UNICEF assistance.

Emergency relief and rehabilitation

In 1989, emergency relief assistance to 15 countries hit by natural disasters, epidemics and man-made crises was authorized from the Executive Director's Emergency Reserve Fund in the amount of more than $2.6 million for unforeseen and unmet survival and rehabilitation needs of children and women. In addition, a total of $481,000 was diverted from regular programme funds to provide a rapid response to emergency situations in 16 countries, and cash contributions were received for emergency relief operations in 21 countries amounting to $51.3 million. A total of $54.3 million was received from all sources of funding for emergency operations in 39 countries.

In response to outbreaks of meningococcal meningitis in Benin, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Morocco, the Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic, and of measles in El Salvador and Guatemala, UNICEF carried out massive vaccination campaigns. The bulk of emergency assistance to victims of typhoons and floods in Angola, the Caribbean, the Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Malawi, Mali, Mauritius, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam and Zambia was directed to the rehabilitation of essential services damaged during the disaster.

Emergency and rehabilitation assistance continued in conflict-affected countries, including Afghanistan, Angola, Ethiopia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Mozambique, Namibia and the Sudan. UNICEF's emergency appeals for those countries made within the UN system-wide appeal or launched independently received a total of $107.8 million, with a total unfunded balance of $88 million. In the West Bank and Gaza, UNICEF implemented a physiotherapy project jointly with the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in order to provide medical care for injured children with the threat of life-long disabilities from limb fractures as a result of the Palestinian uprising.

As part of 17 UNICEF-supported projects inside Afghanistan, 45 immunization teams reached 400,000 children and mothers, and female health workers were trained. A general survey of childhood disability of all Afghan children was being conducted with a view to establishing community-based rehabilitation services.

Increasingly, UNICEF field offices began to participate in the development of national early-warning and preparedness efforts. In support of those initiatives in Angola, Bangladesh, Ethiopia, Mozambique, the Sudan and Zimbabwe, UNICEF provided programme and operational assistance to the Governments' co-ordinating mechanisms and personnel training. UNICEF's own preparedness was enhanced through staff training in emergency management.

Operation Lifeline Sudan

In view of the grave situation in the Sudan, where recurring natural and man-made disasters, civil war and famine had led to more than 250,000 deaths since 1988, "Operation Lifeline Sudan" was launched in April 1989. The food and non-food supplies required to meet the needs of the affected 2.25 million people were estimated at 120,000 metric tons and the total costs at $133 million.

As the UN Secretary-General's Personal Representative for Operation Lifeline Sudan, the UNICEF Executive Director contacted Governments and international organizations at the highest level to mobilize support and to serve as a point of contact with the central Government of the Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Sudan People's Liberation Army. In addition to its role as the UN lead agency for relief activities co-ordination, UNICEF supported immunization, essential drugs and other health-related matters, supplementary feeding, water supply, general relief provisions and school materials. To ensure the immediate start of UNICEF activities, the Executive Director authorized the provisional release of $2.9 million from the Emergency Fund, prior to the receipt of contributions. An appeal launched within the framework of the plan of action resulted in the contribution of more than $17 million as at 25 December 1989.

By the end of September 1989, total deliveries of food and non-food items amounted to some 106,424 metric tons, representing 88 per cent of the total needs. The Operation officially ended on 31 October 1989. However, it was to be followed by a second phase that would provide a similar level of food and non-food support to the target population.

On 24 October, the General Assembly, in resolution 44/12, reaffirmed the need to continue responding to requests for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction during the forthcoming phase of the Operation.

Children in difficult circumstances

UNICEF remained involved in activities for children in armed conflict and for working and street children. In the Sudan, it created "corridors of peace" to allow relief supplies to be distributed, carrying out the concept of "children as a zone of peace". In Lebanon, over 100 summer camps were organized for specific educational activities to promote peace and mutual understanding among youth from conflicting factions. Action research on the psycho-social effects of armed conflict was under way in Central America and Mozambique.

Ongoing co-operation with ILO to combat child labour exploitation included UNICEF support for a tripartite meeting on child labour in Africa (Cairo, Egypt, September). In Egypt, the Philippines, Thailand and several Latin American countries, programmes were started to provide protection and services for working children. Programmes for street children expanded rapidly in Latin America and were being initiated in Africa and Asia. UNICEF continued to expand its co-operation with national and international NGOs to raise public awareness and concern about child abuse and neglect.

Drug abuse among children

In April, the Executive Board, recognizing the rapid growth of drug abuse among children, especially those living in extreme poverty and in difficult circumstances, requested(25) the Executive Director to co-operate with interested Governments in the planning of an assessment of the causes and magnitude of the problem.

On 22 May, by decision 1989/123, the Economic and Social Council, recalling a 1988 General Assembly resolution(26) in which the Assembly strongly condemned drug trafficking in all its forms, particularly those criminal activities that involved children in the use, production and illicit sale of narcotic drugs, appealed to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to assign high priority to support for programmes to rehabilitate drug-addicted minors.

UNICEF finances

UNICEF income in 1989 totalled $667 million, comprising $423 million in general resources and $244 million in supplementary funds, including $57 million in emergency contributions. Contributions from Governments and intergovernmental organizations accounted for 75 per cent of the total income. Expenditures in 1989 totalled $633 million.

In April, the Executive Board approved(27) new allocations for programme co-operation and the replenishment of the Emergency Reserve Fund of $242,906,000 for general resources funding and $326,924,000 for programmes for supplementary funding. In view of the proposed goals and strategies for children in the 1990s (see above), the Board requested(28) the Executive Director to analyse the criteria used for the allocation of UNICEF resources to support country programme priorities. The Board also approved(29) the revised expenditure estimates and income estimates for the bienniums 1988-1989 and 1990-1991.

Organizational questions

UNICEF Executive Board

During 1989, the UNICEF Executive Board held at UN Headquarters its regular session from 17 to 28 April,(30) two organizational sessions on 12 June(31) and 20 December,(32) respectively, and a special session from 18 to 22 December.(33) The Board elected, at its June organizational session, its officers for the period 1 August 1989 to 31 July 1990 (see APPENDIX III). At its December organizational session, representatives were elected to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education Policy. The special session was devoted to the planning of the proposed World Summit for Children.

At its 1989 regular session, the Executive Board streamlined(34) its procedures on time allotment, draft proposals for adoption and documentation. The Board also amended(35) the UNICEF Rules of Procedure and established(36) a working group responsible for making recommendations to the Board in 1990 regarding the continuation of the updating of the Rules of Procedure.

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1989/189 of 28 July, took note of the Board's report on its regular session.

Greeting Card Operation

In 1989, the mandate of the Greeting Card Operation was enlarged to encompass activities in the areas of product sales, exhibits and promotion, private sector fund-raising support to national committees and field offices, and special fund-raising events and new initiatives. In the 1988/89 season, the sale of 139 million cards brought in revenues of $98.9 million and the Operation contributed $43.2 million to UNICEF general resources.

In the area of sales, new product lines were tested and adapted to new markets, the retail store programme in Europe was expanded and cost controls were implemented to move towards the goal of 50 per cent profitability. The Danny Kaye Visitors Centre at UNICEF House hosted numerous groups of schoolchildren, volunteers and other visitors, and a teacher's guide for the exhibit was produced in co-operation with the United States Committee for UNICEF. The Operation also provided a number of direct mail packages that had been adapted to specific countries and used by national committees to raise funds.

In April, the Executive Board approved(37) budgeted expenditures of $34.8 million to $36.7 million and budgeted income of $76.2 million to $90.6 million, for the fiscal year 1 May 1989 to 30 April 1990.

International Child Development Centre

The Executive Director, pursuant to a 1988 Executive Board request,(38) reported(39) on the International Child Development Centre in Florence, Italy, updating the Centre's staffing and financing status and the use of facilities.

The Centre's work concentrated on four major programme areas: national capacity-building for child survival and development; economic policies and the mobilization of resources for children; the rights of the child; and the needs of the urban child. The first of the new series of global "Innocenti Seminars" was held in Florence in June on the subject of early childhood development.

Inter-agency co-operation

During 1989, UNICEF collaborated with a widening range of partners, including agencies of the UN system, to focus attention on development issues related to children. Major work was carried out in co-operation with the Centre for Human Rights and the Department of Public Information of the UN Secretariat related to the draft Convention on the Rights of the Child (see below); with WHO on a series of health measures, especially in immunization, malaria, essential drugs and health education; with WHO, UNDP, the World Bank and the Rockefeller Foundation in the Task Force for Child Survival; and with WHO and UNDP on guinea-worm eradication efforts. The Task Force for Child Survival was organizing a meeting in Bangkok, Thailand, in 1990, to provide support for the final push to reach the UCI goal and for activities to enable countries to reach additional goals set for the 1990s.

In April, the Executive Board requested(40) the Executive Director to participate fully in the operational activities for development of the UN system and in the forthcoming triennial policy review on them.

UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy

At its twenty-seventh session (Geneva, 23-25 January),(41) the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy considered the impact of the world economic crisis on health and health services, a strategy for improved nutrition of mothers and children in the developing world, and common goals for the health of women and children by the year 2000. It also reviewed progress made in EPI, the Bamako Initiative, diarrhoeal diseases control, the Safe Motherhood Initiative and the Global Programme on AIDS.

In April, the UNICEF Executive Board invited(42) the Executive Director to use the goals for the health of women and children by the year 2000 as the basis for part of UNICEF's contribution to the preparation of the international development strategy for the fourth UN development decade.

UNESCO/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education Policy

In April, the Executive Director recommended the establishment of the UNESCO/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education Policy to facilitate a high-level exchange of views on policy and approaches in areas of mutual interest and to strengthen co-operation at the country level.

The establishment of the Joint Committee was approved(43) by the UNICEF Executive Board in April and by the UNESCO Executive Board in June.

Draft Convention on the Rights of the Child

At its 1989 regular session, the Executive Board requested(44) UNICEF to continue its efforts to facilitate the final adoption by the General Assembly of the draft Convention on the Rights of the Child. UNICEF organized several meetings, involving the Inter-Parliamentary Union (Budapest, Hungary, March); the Maghreb nations (Tunis, Tunisia, June); the heads of States members of the Organization of African Unity (Kampala, Uganda, July); the First Ladies of several Central American countries (El Salvador, September); and the Commonwealth parliamentarians (Barbados, October). Field offices and national committees also organized meetings to support the Convention, through which key constituency groups and the media were mobilized.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1989/79, submitted to the General Assembly the draft Convention prepared by the Commission on Human Rights. The Assembly, by resolution 44/25 of 20 November, adopted the Convention and opened it for signature, ratification and accession.

World Summit for Children (1990)

The Executive Board held a special session (New York, 18-22 December)(33) to consider secretariat support for the 1990 World Summit for Children, initiated by six Governments (Canada, Egypt, Mali, Mexico, Pakistan, Sweden). The Summit had originally been proposed in The State of the World's Children, 1989, in order to bring attention and promote commitment, at the highest political level, to goals and strategies for ensuring the survival, protection and development of children as key elements in the socio-economic development of all countries. The Executive Director recommended that UNICEF take advantage of the opportunity presented by the Summit to promote public awareness and stimulate programme mobilization among Governments, NGOs, the media, professional organizations and public leaders.

Welcoming the initiative of the six Governments, the Board agreed(45) that UNICEF should provide secretariat support for the preparation of the Summit. It noted the initiators' establishment of an ad hoc planning committee and requested that its membership include other Governments. The Executive Director was authorized to enter into necessary committal expenditures for the preparation of the Summit up to an amount of $700,000; he was requested to establish a special account for the preparation of the Summit and a special account for mobilization activities related to the Summit.

Youth

During 1989, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) of the UN Secretariat, at Vienna, as the focal point for youth matters within the UN system, continued to play an important role in highlighting main issues and problems of youth, as well as their possible solutions. It also continued to enhance national capacities in developing comprehensive youth policies and programmes through the provision of policy guidance and information, advisory services and direct operational support.

Follow-up to International Youth Year (1985)

CSDHA co-ordinated global efforts to achieve the objectives of the International Youth Year (IYY).(1) Despite the financial and human resource constraints, it carried out research and analysis to identify youth issues and trends at the national level. It also initiated a global exchange of information on youth issues by disseminating the trimesterly Youth Information Bulletin, the quarterly IYY Follow-up Newsletter and directories pertaining to youth research centres and to international youth organizations.

CSDHA, in co-operation with the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the UN Secretariat, continued to provide the services of the Interregional Adviser on Youth Policies and Programmes to assist requesting Governments in developing long-term integrated youth policies and programmes. From January 1988 to June 1989, the Interregional Adviser undertook missions to 14 countries. CSDHA was developing training programmes and material for juvenile justice personnel and providing advisory services in juvenile justice administration. Greater emphasis was placed on delinquency prevention and dealing with young people "at risk", such as school-leavers, unemployed youth, street children and drug abusers.

Implementation of the guidelines in the field of youth

Pursuant to a 1987 Economic and Social Council request,(2) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-first session (Vienna, 13-22 March),(3) a report(4) on the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth. The guidelines, endorsed by the General Assembly in 1985(5) provided both an internationally agreed framework of strategies for future work and a basis for concerted follow-up activities to IYY. The report presented a review of national activities for the implementation of the guidelines, paying particular attention to efforts aimed at developing integrated national youth policies.

The Secretary-General noted that there had been increased recognition of the need to formulate and implement comprehensive youth policies within the context of integrated development planning. Many Governments had made progress in developing institutional arrangements and setting up mechanisms for that purpose. Priority had been accorded to such areas as improving educational attainment and skills training; non-formal education for out-of-school youth; facilitating the transition from school to work; training schemes leading to employment; health; social services; and recreational programmes. However, a number of obstacles remained, including lack of adequate data on youth, a paucity of financial resources and trained personnel, and insufficient inter-institutional co-ordination.

The Secretary-General recommended that political commitment be strengthened and the national youth policy integrated into the overall national development policy. He also recommended that NGOs and young people should be represented in all relevant decision-making bodies and more attention should be paid to young people in marginal situations, including women, migrants and refugees.

The Commission decided(6) to consider at its thirty-second (1991) session, as a priority subject, the problem of the integration of young people into society.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/51 without vote.

Youth in the contemporary world

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1985/23 of 29 May 1985 and 1987/45 of 28 May 1987,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 40/14 of 18 November 1985 entitled "International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace", in which the Assembly requested the Commission for Social Development to examine, on a regular basis, specific youth issues, and resolution 43/94 of 8 December 1988, in which the Assembly called upon all States, all United Nations bodies, in particular the Economic and Social Council through its Commission for Social Development, the specialized agencies and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to continue to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, in accordance with their experience, conditions and priorities,

Recognizing the necessity of adopting effective measures, particularly in the fields of education, above all, teaching, culture and information, in order to strengthen the efforts for the promotion of understanding, mutual respect and friendship among nations and, primarily, among young people, for the creation of an international climate free from mistrust and discord,

Convinced that it is necessary to ensure full enjoyment by youth of all the rights stipulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 217 A (III) of 10 December 1948, and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) of 16 December 1966,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth;
2. Recognizes that the guidelines provide a constructive framework for a long-term strategy in the field of youth;
3. Expresses its concern that the lack of financial and human resources within the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat has hindered the effective implementation of the guidelines, especially in developing countries;
4. Calls upon all States, all governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the United Nations system, in particular the Economic and Social Council through its Commission for Social Development, to continue to give appropriate attention to proper follow-up and implementation of the guidelines;
5. Urges the Secretary-General to strengthen the efforts aimed at proposing and monitoring action-oriented programmes to promote the process of implementation of the guidelines, inter alia, focusing on the promotion of regional and international co-operation;
6. Invites Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously, according to their ability, to the United Nations Youth Fund, taking into account the specific recommendations included in the guidelines;
7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-second session a report on the implementation of the guidelines;
8. Requests the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-third session to prepare a draft programme of action to mark the tenth anniversary of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace, for implementation at the international level, and to identify future strategies in the field of youth, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/51

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1989/25); agenda item 11.

Policies and programmes involving young people

Responding to a 1988 General Assembly request,⁽⁷⁾ the Secretary-General reported⁽⁸⁾ in September 1989 on policies and programmes involving young people, in which he summarized activities undertaken by Member States concerning the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, and activities carried out by CSDHA (see above). He also outlined activities of intergovernmental organizations and of the Institute of HOPE '87 (Hundreds of Original Projects for Employment), established by the Government of Austria to promote youth employment by encouraging vocational training and educational programmes.

UN bodies and organizations, including the regional commissions, continued to promote the objectives originally established for the observance of IYY. They undertook a wide range of youth-related activities, including technical assistance to Governments to formulate, implement and evaluate national youth policies and programmes, preparation of reports and studies on the situation and needs of young people, organization of meetings, seminars and workshops on youth-related topics, strengthening channels of communication to promote youth involvement in policy formulation and implementation, and strengthening system-wide co-operation through the informal inter-agency technical working group.

In addition to traditional problem areas—development, education and training, employment, family life, health and housing—new issues such as AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and the degradation of the environment seriously affected youth. The Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly provide new directives and mandates, as appropriate, in support of the Secretariat units or specialized agencies to tackle those emerging issues.

The Secretary-General recommended, among other things, that Governments establish appropriate national co-ordination mechanisms in order to secure the effective integration of youth policy into national development planning, and that concerned UN agencies and bodies, including the regional commissions, take measures to assist Governments in that regard.

Strengthening communication between youth organizations and the United Nations

Since 1985, youth-related NGOs had continued to facilitate the global exchange of ideas, information, experience and partnership among their constituencies. Numerous NGOs had motivated Governments to accept the concept of a youth policy by providing them with relevant information, training experiences and research findings, and made a valuable contribution to the work of the United Nations by drawing attention to issues and disseminating information to promote an informed understanding about its aims and activities. However, the Secretary-General reported⁽⁸⁾ that the maintenance of effective channels of communication had become more difficult owing to the decrease in publicity and momentum following the conclusion of IYY and resource constraints of CSDHA. In addition, the emphasis on improving channels for youth organizations excluded the vast majority of young people who did not participate in youth organizations.

He proposed the evaluation of functions, objectives and effectiveness of channels, the targeting of “unorganized youth”, greater efforts to disseminate publications among youth, and the conduct of a survey to understand the perceptions of youth towards the United Nations.

UN Youth Fund

The United Nations Youth Fund continued to provide seed-money grants for post-IYY activities. In accordance with the Fund's terms of reference, special attention was paid to strengthening national capacities and institutions for youth-related concerns in developing countries.

Since 1984, the Fund had received over 300 requests for assistance and had provided nearly $350,000 as at 30 June 1989 for 46 innovative and catalytic youth projects. Income-generating activities and data collection and research accounted for nearly two thirds of disbursed grants. From January 1988 to June 1989, the Fund approved 10 projects for funding, involving a disbursement of $65,700.

Co-ordination

The informal inter-agency working group at the technical level of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), at its seventh meeting (Vienna, 4-5 December),⁽⁹⁾ reviewed progress achieved in the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, and considered ways and means of strengthening national co-ordination mechanisms for youth and co-operation with NGOs for the development of youth activities. It endorsed the recommendations of the Consultative Meeting on Interregional, Regional and National Co-ordination for Integrated Youth Policies and Programmes (Pattaya, Thailand, 2-5 November), which pertained to: organization of informal intersectoral consultative meetings at the regional level; exchange, between CSDHA and other regional organizations, of their work programmes in order to facilitate collaboration and co-ordination of activities; exchange of information on their respective technical assistance activities by international and regional organizations; preparation of action-oriented studies on emergency trends and issues confronting youth in the coming decade; and the creation of a central data bank on youth-related issues under the responsibility of CSDHA.

The working group recommended that appropriate activities be undertaken in the field of youth to enlarge and reinforce East-West co-operation; resolutions on youth emanating from the governing bodies of the member agencies be analysed with a view to determining the priorities set up by the member States; and CSDHA reinforce its role as a co-ordinating body. It also recommended that the next meeting of the working group consider the strengthening of co-operation with NGOs. The Department of Public Information of the UN Secretariat was requested to investigate, through the Joint UN Information Committee, possible inter-agency projects to raise awareness about the question of youth and the need to improve communications with young people.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 44/59 without vote.

Policies and programmes involving youth

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/94 of 8 December 1988,

Recalling also its resolution 40/14 entitled "International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace", adopted on 18 November 1985 by the General Assembly acting as the United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year, by which the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth were endorsed, and its other relevant resolutions,

Recalling further its resolutions 32/135 of 16 December 1977 and 36/17 of 9 November 1981, by which it adopted guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and its other relevant resolutions,

Recalling its resolution 40/16 of 18 November 1985 entitled "Opportunities for youth" and its other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also its resolution 36/29 of 13 November 1981 and its subsequent resolutions in which it, inter, recognized the need to adopt appropriate measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General submitted in accordance with resolution 43/94,

Recognizing that the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth provide a constructive framework for a long-term strategy in the field of youth,

Expressing its serious interest in systematically consolidating and building further on the results of the International Youth Year in order to contribute to the increasingly active participation of young people in the political and socio-economic life of their countries,

Convinced of the importance of making the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations more effective and efficient as a means of providing adequate information on young people and of encouraging their active participation in the United Nations system at the national, regional and international levels,

Recognizing that in many countries the majority of young people, under prevailing critical social and economic conditions, are facing serious problems in the exercise of their right to education and to work and that insufficient education and unemployment of young people limit their ability to participate effectively in the development process and impede their full integration into society,

Emphasizing that the suitable education of young people, which equips them with proper and up-to-date skills and qualifications, prepares them for entering the labour market at a level commensurate with their skills,

Noting that the year 1990 will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the proclamation by the General Assembly, in its resolution 2037(XX) of 7 December 1965, of the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples,

1. Calls upon all States, all United Nations bodies, in particular the Economic and Social Council through the Commission for Social Development, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to continue to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth;

2. Appeals to all States to adopt effective measures, in accordance with their legislations, particularly in the fields of teaching and education, culture, and information, in order to strengthen and promote among nations and, primarily, among youth understanding, mutual respect and friendship, for further progress towards an international climate free of mistrust and discord;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to promote and monitor intensively, by using the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as a focal point, the inclusion of youth-related projects and activities in the programmes of United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies, specifically on such themes as communication, health, housing, culture, youth employment and education, drug abuse and the environment;

4. Calls upon Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other governmental and intergovernmental organizations to implement fully the guidelines relating to the channels of communication adopted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 32/135 and 36/17;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to organize a meeting, from extrabudgetary resources if necessary, between

United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies concerned and non-governmental youth organizations to discuss the problems of existing channels of communication between the United Nations system and youth organizations with a view to improving those channels and establishing effective structures of communication and co-operation between youth and the United Nations;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to develop methods that indicate specifically how the channels of communication could efficiently be attuned to youth-related projects and activities of the United Nations organs and of the specialized agencies, and to include in a report on the implementation of the present resolution, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, concrete suggestions for co-operation between the United Nations system and the non-governmental youth organizations;

7. Calls upon youth mechanisms that have been set up by youth and youth organizations at the national, regional and international levels to continue to act as channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations by putting forward their proposals for co-operation with the United Nations system and, where such mechanisms do not exist, recommends that national co-ordinating committees of the International Youth Year should continue to act as channels of communication;

8. Calls upon all States, all governmental and non-governmental organizations, interested United Nations bodies, in particular the Economic and Social Council through the Commission for Social Development, and specialized agencies to continue to give priority to the formulation and implementation of effective measures for securing the exercise by youth of the right to education and to work, with a view to resolving the problem of unemployment among youth;

9. Calls upon Member States to enable young people to obtain a proper and up-to-date education and to pay increased attention to the promotion of the employment of youth in all sectors of the economy, thereby facilitating their integration into social and professional life;

10. Stresses the importance for youth and youth organizations of freedom of association, in accordance with the relevant national legislation, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant international human rights instruments, that would enable their active and direct participation at all stages of implementation of the policies, projects and activities organized at the local, national, regional and international levels in the field of youth;

11. Emphasizes that providing education and employment to each young person is a worthy goal for all States and should serve the full development of the human being, which can best be ensured by countries that respect the fundamental rights and freedoms of everyone;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to explore the possibilities for a linkage between the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Institute of HOPE '87, referred to in his report, taking into account the importance of that Institute for promoting, technically and financially, income-generating youth employment projects;

13. Again invites Governments to include youth representatives in their national delegations to the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations meetings and international conferences dealing with youth-related issues, thus enhancing and strengthening the channels of communication through the discussion of such issues, with a view to finding solutions to the problems confronting youth in the contemporary world;

14. Invites Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to the United Nations Youth Fund, in order to enable it to continue its mandated role and to contribute effectively to the needs of developing countries in the field of youth;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to include the United Nations Youth Fund among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth and to include therein a draft programme of action to mark the tenth anniversary of the International Youth Year and to submit the report to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council;

17. Decides to consider the item entitled "Policies and programmes involving youth" at its forty-fifth session on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution.

Aging persons

The United Nations continued in 1989 to consider the question of persons aged 60 and over in the context of the International Plan of Action on Aging, adopted in 1982 by the World Assembly on Aging(1) and endorsed later that year by the General Assembly(2) The Plan's primary aim was to assist States in strengthening their capacities to deal with aging populations.

Plan of Action on Aging

Second review of implementation

The Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-first session (Vienna, 13-22 March),(3)

conducted the second quadrennial review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging, on the basis of a report(4) of the Secretary-General on the subject. The report, prepared on the basis of 59 replies to a questionnaire sent to Member States, bodies of the UN system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other information available to the UN Secretariat, presented a demographic analysis of the aging of the world's population, an assessment of the policy implications of that process, and implementation of the Plan of Action at the national, regional and international levels.

According to the projection, between 1950 and 2025 the elderly population of the world would have grown by a factor of six, while the total world population, by a factor of little more than three. The trends showed that the world's elderly would be concentrated in developing regions; a contracting working population would have to support an expanding dependent population; the 80 plus age group would grow twice as fast as the 60 plus age group; and there would be a greater increase in the number of older women than that of older men.

The Secretary-General noted that, in spite of the growing awareness that the world's population continued to age with increasing rapidity, responsive policies and programmes had not kept pace. There were 84 national co-ordination machineries for aging (51 in developing countries and 33 in developed ones), but few developing countries had detailed demographic profiles or projections of their elderly populations. A majority of programmes aimed at the elderly were in the areas of economic matters, health questions, living arrangements and personal social services. With regard to care-giving, the major policy trend, in developed as well as developing countries, was to support family care-giving and the maintenance of the elderly in their own communities. While a majority of responding Member States had an educational policy which reflected the principle of the elderly having a right to education, only a minority had programmes to educate the general public about the process of aging. In developing countries, income security for the elderly remained confined to selected segments of the aging population. The Secretary-General proposed a set of priorities and made recommendations to supplement the Plan of Action and encourage its implementation. In addition, he set forth a draft programme of activities to mark the tenth anniversary in 1992 of the adoption of the Plan of Action.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1989/50 without vote.

Second review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging, conducted by the Commission for Social Development in accordance with General Assembly resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his comprehensive report on the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging;

2. Decides to adopt the set of priorities and recommendations to encourage further implementation of the Plan of Action contained in annex I to the present resolution;

3. Endorses the draft programme of United Nations activities relating to the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Plan of Action, in 1992, contained in annex II to the present resolution;

4. Reaffirms the recommendation made in the Plan of Action that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat should serve as the focal point in the United Nations system for activities related to aging and that, to that end, the Secretary General, within the existing global resources of the United Nations, should give due consideration to the provision of appropriate increased resources for the implementation of the Plan of Action;

5. Recommends the establishment of an open-ended ad hoc working group of the Third Committee of the General Assembly at the forty-fourth session of the Assembly to focus on the conclusions of the second review and appraisal;

6. Decides to establish an open-ended ad hoc working group of the Economic and Social Council to monitor the preparatory activities for the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Plan of Action, in 1992;

7. Recommends the convening of an ad hoc working group of the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-second session to monitor the activities for the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Plan of Action;

8. Decides that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs should co-ordinate, within existing resources or with extrabudgetary resources, activities to mark the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Plan of Action, as suggested in paragraph 103 of the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Urges the Aging Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs to place social emphasis on developing expertise in, and providing technical assistance to, Member States on social and economic developmental issues related to aging;

10. Urges the Commission on the Status of Women to give particular attention to the specific problems faced by elderly women;

11. Urges Governments and the United Nations to involve non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to a greater extent than previously in the implementation of the Plan of Action so that their expertise and well-known contributions in the field may be used more effectively;

12. Notes with appreciation the activities, plans and programmes of the International Institute on Aging recently established in Malta, particularly in the area of training;

13. Recommends that the Secretary-General take into consideration a feasibility study, conducted at the request of the Government of Yugoslavia, recommending the establishment of a United Nations-affiliated international institute on aging at Belgrade;

14. Welcomes the progress made at the preparatory meeting to establish an African society of gerontology held at Dakar from 17 to 22 December 1988, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 43/93 of 8 December 1988, at which a draft statute, draft rules of procedure and a draft work programme were elaborated;

15. Also welcomes the initiative of the Government of Argentina in establishing a subregional South American centre on aging;

16. Calls upon the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, as the focal point in the United Nations system for activities related to aging, to co-ordinate the activities of such institutes or centres, in particular to avoid duplication;

17. Reiterates that the existence of these and any other such institutes or centres would not preclude the establishment in other countries or regions of the world of other institutes or centres affiliated with the United Nations and financed by voluntary contributions;

18. Decides to include the question of aging in the agenda of the thirty-second session of the Commission for Social Development.

ANNEX I

Second review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging: priorities and recommendations

1. As their populations age, most countries are simultaneously confronted by economic constraints. In such a climate, aging is often low on the list of priorities. Yet, as noted in the report of the Secretary-General on the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging, policy interventions are necessary now. In these circumstances, the expanded awareness of aging issues must be tapped, specific priorities must be identified and resources must be marshalled. If specific measures based on existing structures and activities are instituted, and collaborative efforts encompassing Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations are intensified, the synergy will achieve more, even with limited resources.

2. The Plan of Action contains broad recommendations dealing with different facets of aging. It would serve no useful purpose to repeat or reformulate them. Set forth below, to supplement the Plan of Action and encourage its implementation, are specific recommendations that emerge from the second review and appraisal.

3. In considering those recommendations, Member States might wish to bear in mind the following priorities:

(a) The provision of basic services for all—food, water, shelter, health protection and education—must form the corner-stone of any national or community-based group-specific programme;

(b) Specific policies and programmes focusing on the elderly must recognize both the humanitarian needs and the human resource potential of the aged;

(c) Policies to promote the developmental and humanitarian needs of the aged must focus on the family and community as indivisible social units;

(d) The use of the elderly as a societal resource must be predicated upon their involvement and participation in the development of policies and programmes affecting them;

(e) Expanding economic opportunities for the elderly must not be seen to imply contracting opportunities for the young; policies and programmes directed at either end of the age spectrum of the labour force can be mutually reinforcing;

(f) Policies and programmes for and by the elderly must grow upon quality baseline information that reflects the demographic, epidemiological, biological, social and economic aspects of aging.

4. The following recommendations are emphasized for the consideration of Member States:

(a) National machinery should be established or strengthened to ensure that the humanitarian needs and developmental potential of the aged are appropriately addressed within the context of each country and culture;

(b) The United Nations should continue to provide support, particularly to developing countries, in the development of the national, local and voluntary institutional capacities necessary to respond appropriately to population aging;

(c) International development agencies, both governmental and non-governmental, are strongly encouraged to assist Governments, particularly those of developing countries, in developing or expanding their institutional capacities for responding appropriately to population aging;

(d) The expansion of research focusing on the demographic, epidemiological, biological, social and economic aspects of aging, particularly in developing countries, should be supported;

(e) Bilateral and multilateral co-operative research arrangements, particularly between developing and developed countries, should be encouraged in order to understand and respond better to global-specific and country-specific aging issues;

(f) The establishment or expansion of community-based or institutional care systems that provide the necessary health and social services for the frail elderly who have limited or no family support should be encouraged;

(g) The ability of families to care for their frail elderly should be supported and strengthened by the development or expansion of community-based health and social services that foster home care;

(h) Family support for the aged should be promoted by policies and programmes that provide economic and psychosocial incentives for families that care for their older members;

(i) To ensure their dignity and support, elderly women should be given special attention in appropriate policies and programmes;

(j) In countries where institutions are used to shelter and provide services for the frail elderly, policies that ensure active quality control and community integration should be promoted;

(k) Self-help initiatives on the part of the elderly should be encouraged and supported;

(l) Organizations and associations of the elderly that ensure their active involvement in policy and programme development should be encouraged and promoted;

(m) Intergenerational service programmes and educational opportunities should be supported to maintain intergenerational cohesion;

(n) Training in gerontology and geriatrics should be offered by the expansion of international institutes, as well as by individual country institutes and training centres, to ensure that policy-makers, researchers and practitioners have an adequate knowledge of aging issues;

(o) Bilateral and multilateral co-operation between Governments and non-governmental organizations to provide training for specialists in aging, particularly specialists from developing countries, should be encouraged and supported;

(p) Laws and practices that support age discrimination should be discouraged;

(q) Income security programmes, including those related to pensions, employment opportunities and family assistance, should be supported to ensure dignity and opportunity in old age;

(r) Income security should be enhanced, where necessary, by the development and support of income-generating projects for and by the elderly.

ANNEX II

Draft programme of United Nations activities relating to the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Aging

1. A draft programme of organizational and substantive activities to mark the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Aging is given below, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 43/93 of 8 December 1988. The substantive focus reflects priority needs identified in the report of the Secretary-General on the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action.

2. The draft programme aims at stimulating interest, research and responsive policies and programmes, and at promoting the celebration of aging as a significant phenomenon and achievement of the twentieth century. When implemented, the draft programme's substantive focus and organizational arrangements would vary among the entities concerned and from country to country.

3. The Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, as the focal point within the United Nations system for activities on aging, will co-ordinate the programmes of the anniversary year. Working within existing resources, it will endeavour:

(a) To mobilize national machinery on aging to launch national consciousness-raising events;

(b) To use the expertise of the organizations of the United Nations system for action-oriented programmes on aging in their respective areas of concern;

(c) To co-operate with non-governmental organizations in the production and distribution of specialized and general information for wide distribution within their respective networks;

(d) To ensure that the general public is informed of the year and its follow-up activities by increasing channels of communication between the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and United Nations information centres around the world;

(e) To raise extrabudgetary resources for supplementing those activities.

4. Issues selected for special attention during the year and in the course of the follow-up activities will include, in accordance with the findings of the second review and appraisal, policies and programmes relating to the following:

- (a) Income security and income-generating activities;
- (b) Health-care delivery and its financing in aging societies;
- (c) Community-based activities for and with the elderly;
- (d) Organizations of the elderly;
- (e) Training.

In addition to Governments, groups to be targeted during the year and in the course of the follow-up activities will include middle-aged and elderly persons, trade unions and employers' organizations, women's and youth organizations, schools and universities, and research and training institutions.

6. If extrabudgetary resources become available, the following specific activities will be undertaken to prepare for and mark the tenth anniversary:

- 1989 International meeting of non-governmental organizations to assist in the development and organization of concrete programmes and activities for 1992 and beyond;
- 1990 Regional meetings of developing countries, in co-operation with regional commissions and national machinery on aging, to promote the development of country-specific profiles and the preparation of national agenda on aging for the decade 1992-2001;
- 1991 Publication of a graphic and succinct status report entitled "Aging: highlights from the twentieth century, forecasts for the twenty-first century";
- 1992 Activities marking the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Aging, including:
 - (a) A public information campaign focusing on selected aging issues to stimulate the necessary preparation for or response to aging;
 - (b) An international art and literature campaign (including a poster competition) to enlist the general public, artists and writers in celebrating aging;
 - (c) The issue of United Nations stamps to commemorate the occasion;
 - (d) Publication of an agenda for the decade, entitled "Selected priorities for action on aging: 1992-2001". This would complement the broad-based Plan of Action, and priorities would be selected on the basis of national profiles and experience in implementing the Plan of Action at various levels. It would be for use by decision makers, practitioners and non-governmental organizations;
 - (e) An information packet containing technical reports, news features, human interest items and so forth for use by schools, universities, the media and non-governmental organizations.

7. After 1992, substantive activities might focus on several specific issues within the general context of the aging of populations, with a view to ensuring that exchanges of knowledge and expertise can actually be operationalized. Four clusters of activities are suggested below, each one to begin with a draft paper prepared by the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, in consultation with the appropriate specialized agencies; the draft papers will be refined at regional meetings, in co-operation with the regional commissions, and finally published as technical manuals or monographs. The clusters of activities suggested are:

- (a) Establishment of community-based organizations of the aged;
- (b) Income security and income generation for and by the aged;
- (c) Health-care delivery and financing in aging societies;
- (d) Intersectoral co-operation on aging.

8. Information on the activities undertaken on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Plan of Action and the follow-up activities proposed for the decade 1992-2001 will be made available to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session when, in accordance with its Assembly resolution 43/93, the occasion will be commemorated in the plenary Assembly.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/50
24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1989/25): agenda item 11.

Implementation of the Plan of Action

Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly request,(5) the Secretary-General submitted a report,(6) in which he discussed new initiatives on aging, UN activities and co-operation, and development co-operation.

As the traditional social support structure of family and community changed and, on the whole, weakened, new structures such as national machineries on aging, organizations of the elderly, gerontological societies, training institutes on aging, WHO's special programme for research on aging and a world foundation on aging (see below) were emerging.

CSDHA, as the UN system-wide focal point on aging, served as the substantive secretariat on aging for the UN legislative bodies concerned and ensured that the Plan of Action was considered in the context of broad social policy and development. In addition, CSDHA enjoyed the co-operation of six networks, including NGOs, each devoted to a specific function such as policy, research, training, advocacy, technical co-operation and participation strategies. At the XIVth International Congress of Gerontology (Acapulco, Mexico, 18-23 June), CSDHA supported expansion of the international dialogue on aging and promoted awareness of the Plan of Action among the experts. It also held talks with organizations on developing and expanding a technical co-operation network with special focus on small self-help projects throughout the world.

The International Institute on Aging in Malta completed a global survey of service delivery systems to the elderly in developing countries as a basis for assessing training needs. The Institute convened a number of expert group meetings to assist in developing long- and short-term training programmes. The local costs of the Institute were funded by the Government of Malta. In response to a request of Yugoslavia, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the UN Secretariat supported a feasibility study on establishing an international institute on aging in Belgrade. Another feasibility study on establishing a subregional centre on aging in Buenos Aires was being considered at the request of Argentina.

The Secretary-General, in order to further the implementation of the Plan of Action, suggested that the various networks on aging identify and disseminate successful models of contributions by the elderly to society; effective care of the elderly as well as of their informal care-givers; integrated community development, encompassing participation and care strategies as well as intergenerational and intersectoral co-operation; government support to the elderly, their families and communities, to encourage self-reliance and sharing; and census and other information-gathering and -processing for use in policy and programme formulation on aging. He also suggested that the major international NGOs and donor countries, together with the UN system, could establish a technical co-operation network, which would design and support implementation of a series of self-help projects by the elderly.

Inter-agency co-ordination. The third ad hoc inter-agency meeting on aging (Vienna, 30 November-1 December)(7) reviewed activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the field of aging; considered the implications for the UN system of the results of the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action (see above); followed up on the action taken by ACC regarding the system-wide approach to the implementation of the Plan of Action; and considered specific inter-agency projects in further implementation of the Plan. The meeting also addressed itself to future inter-agency co-operation in the context of the preparation of the report on the world aging situation, the elaboration of a system-wide medium-term plan on aging and the 1992 programme for the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Plan of Action.

It recommended, among other things, that in connection with the 1992 survey for the third quadrennial review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action, CSDHA, together with specialized agencies and bodies of the UN system, should initiate for the General Assembly the preparation of a global strategy, with targets, indicators and a timetable, for translating the Plan of Action into concrete programmes.

Funding of policies and programmes

The Secretary-General convened a meeting of eminent persons in New York on 18 and 19 September(8) to develop an international fund-raising strategy for policies and programmes on population aging, established in the Plan of Action. It was co-sponsored by the American Association of Retired Persons, HelpAge International, the International Association of Gerontology and the International Federation on Ageing. The meeting noted that, since the aging of individuals and populations had opened up a growing market, private-sector financing was available, but developing that potential source of funding required flexible organization.

The meeting agreed on the desirability and urgency of establishing an independent international foundation on aging under the patronage of the United Nations, appointed a task force to prepare a blueprint for the foundation, and requested it to present an initial proposal no later than March 1990 to be considered by a further meeting of eminent persons.

Trust funds

Since 1982, the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging had disbursed over $900,000 in seed-money grants to 35 projects. During the period January 1988 to June 1989, the Fund received some 30 project proposals and inquiries; one third of them were approved for funding, involving a resource disbursement of $196,100. The largest sum, $59,300, was for exchange of technical expertise, followed by $57,500 for support to organizations of or for the elderly. The Fund also supported an international seminar on aging and development (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 17-21 July) and enabled scientists from developing countries to participate in the XIVth International Congress of Gerontology. The Fund not only provided direct substantive and financial support, but also acted as a catalyst for resource mobilization; its grants of $196,100 mobilized over $1 million in additional resources for aging-related projects.

For the biennium 1988-1989, the Fund's total income was $302,696, while its expenditure was $410,442. The resource base created during the initial years of the Fund had been gradually eroded and several worthwhile projects in developing countries could not be funded.

With the concurrence of the two contributors to the Trust Fund for the Promotion of the United Nations Programme for the Aging—the Government of the Dominican Republic and the American Association of Retired Persons—the Fund's resources, set at $18,000, were used for the meeting of eminent persons (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/67 without vote.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging and related activities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/93 of 8 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging conducted by the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-first session,

Taking note with interest of the priorities identified and recommendations made in the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action,

Noting with appreciation the renewed momentum of the United Nations programme on aging but deeply regretting the proposed cut in the resources under section 8. subprogramme 7 (Aging), of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991,

Aware of the need of the developing countries for technical assistance and expert advice in the field of aging,

Reiterating the appeal made to the Secretary-General in its resolution 43/93 to maintain and strengthen the existing programmes on aging and to strengthen the United Nations system-wide co-ordination of policies and programmes on aging, with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat continuing in its role as focal point in the United Nations system for activities relating to aging,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of aging;

2. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/50 of 24 May 1989;

3. Also endorses the draft programme of United Nations activities relating to the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Aging, in 1992, as contained in annex II to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/50;

4. Notes with interest that aging is being considered as a priority theme of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade and the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997;

5. Calls upon Member States, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to assist the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat in elaborating for the consideration of the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a detailed global programme of activities for 1992 on the basis of the draft programme endorsed by the Economic and Social Council, which would simultaneously serve as a guide for parallel national and regional programmes;

6. Also calls upon Member States that have special expertise or an interest in aging to consider giving direct staff or extrabudgetary support to the Centre in its preparatory activities for 1992;

7. Decides that the priorities identified and recommendations made in the second review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action should be included as an annex in future publications of the Plan of Action;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the feasibility of preparing a system-wide medium-term plan on aging in order to ensure that all concerned organizations of the United Nations system address the question of aging in a coherent and effective manner, bearing in mind that the Centre is the duly mandated focal point in all matters related to aging;

9. Invites the Statistical Office of the Secretariat to increase the availability and use of national statistics on aging for the formulation and implementation of national policies and programmes and to consider the possibility of dedicating the 1992 Demographic Yearbook to the question of aging;

10. Invites the major international non-governmental organizations and donor countries to join the United Nations system in establishing a technical co-operation network that would design and support the implementation of a series of straightforward self-help projects by the elderly in order to bridge the gap between major funding entities and local self-help initiatives, as well as the gap between globally espoused standards and the real living conditions of the elderly;

11. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to pay particular attention to the specific problems faced by elderly women and to the discrimination suffered by these women because of their gender and age;

12. Urges all the relevant agencies of the United Nations system dealing with refugees to pay special attention to the plight of all elderly refugees;

13. Urges the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to co-operate with the Centre in the preparation of a report on the status and highlights of the global aging of populations for distribution to the media and the general public in 1992;

14. Calls upon the United Nations Population Fund to consider seconding a demographer to the Centre to assist in producing demographic profiles of the global, regional and selected national aging populations;

15. calls upon the United Nations Postal Administration to produce in 1992 commemorative United Nations stamps to mark the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Plan of Action;

16. Recommends that in view of the rapid expansion of activities and infrastructure for aging, the participants in the United Nations programme on aging give careful attention to its mandate with a view to avoiding duplication of the activities of other programmes and continuing in the 1990s the unified approach to implementing the Plan of Action that has been a distinguishing mark of the programme to date;

17. Takes note with appreciation of the progress report submitted by the Secretary-General on the training programmes and activities of the International Institute on Aging in Malta, welcomes the unique contribution of the Institute to the implementation of the Plan of Action and requests the Secretary-General, in reporting on the question of aging to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, to inform the Assembly of the activities, plans and programmes of the Institute;

18. Notes with appreciation the establishment, with the assistance of the United Nations Office at Vienna, of an African Society of Gerontology at Dakar;

19. Notes with satisfaction the offer of the Governments of Yugoslavia and Argentina to establish institutes on aging at Belgrade and Buenos Aires, respectively;

20. Also notes with satisfaction the convening of the meeting of eminent persons to develop an international fund-raising strategy for policies and programmes on population aging, at United Nations Headquarters on 18 and 19 September 1989, takes note of the adoption at that meeting of a declaration on the desirability and urgency of establishing an independent international foundation on aging under the patronage of the United Nations that would encourage the public and private sectors as well as non-governmental organizations to support the work of the United Nations system in the field of aging, and in this regard invites Member States, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to support this initiative;

21. Further notes with satisfaction the success achieved at the XIVth International Congress of Gerontology, held at Acapulco, Mexico, from 18 to 23 June 1989;

22. Strongly appeals to Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging, bearing in mind that the Fund is particularly well placed to act as a catalyst for resource mobilization;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Question of aging".

General Assembly resolution 44/67

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/754) without vote, 9 November (meeting 37); 3-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.15/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 101. Sponsors: Austria, Dominican Republic, Malta. Meeting number. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 12-20, 30, 37; plenary 78.

Elderly women

By resolution 1989/38 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the organizations of the UN system concerned provide the bodies responsible for the advancement of women with information that would enable them to undertake a precise and in-depth analysis of the situation of elderly women, developing, if necessary, specific new methods for data collection. It requested the Commission on the Status of Women to devote particular attention to the current and future situation of elderly women throughout the world.

The General Assembly, by resolution 44/76 of 8 December, recommended that the United Nations and the specialized agencies take the lead in recognizing the important contributions made by older women and their potential to participate in and shape the future of their societies. It invited the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and the Statistical Office of the Secretariat to pay specific attention to older women in their efforts to improve methodology for data-gathering on women.

Chapter XV

Refugees and displaced persons

During 1989, despite continuing and widespread refugee problems in the world, there were encouraging developments in relation to certain long-standing situations. The single most notable of these was in Namibia; the emergence there of an independent State was preceded by the successful repatriation of more than 43,000 Namibians. The International Conference on Central American Refugees formulated in May a special plan of action to facilitate the return and rehabilitation of refugees and displaced persons and to benefit local populations as well. The Comprehensive Plan of Action, adopted at the International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees in June, set out measures to deal with asylum-seekers in the South-East Asian region.

However, the repatriation of more than 3 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan and another 2.5 million in Iran remained stalled by an intractable political situation in Afghanistan. Similarly, prospects for peace in Kampuchea did not materialize, preventing the repatriation of hundreds of thousands of Kampuchean refugees and displaced persons.

Faced with the most difficult financial crisis ever in its 40-year history, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in 1989 undertook repeated cuts in programmed and assessed needs, with serious negative consequences for refugees and the Office's ability to protect and find durable solutions for them.

The Nansen Medal, awarded since 1954 in honour of Fridtjof Nansen, the first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, was not awarded in 1989.

Jean-Pierre Hocké resigned as High Commissioner with effect from 1 November. The General Assembly on 20 November elected Thorvald Stoltenberg of Norway as his successor for a four-year term beginning on 1 January 1990 (decision 44/312).

UNHCR programme and finances

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its fortieth session (Geneva, 5-13 October 1989), the Executive Committee of the Programme of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees(1) reiterated the primary nature and fundamental importance of the High Commissioner's protection responsibilities. In expressing deep concern about the financial situation of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), it called on UNHCR, States, governmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community at large to give the necessary priority to protection activities and to ensure their efficiency and effectiveness. The Committee also expressed concern over the lack of adequate international protection for various groups of refugees, including a large number of Palestinians, and hoped that efforts would continue within the UN system to address their protection needs (for more information on Palestinian refugees, see PART TWO, Chapter IV). States were urged to abide by international prohibitions against expulsion and refoulement, or forcible return of refugees, and were called upon to ensure the protection of refugees from arbitrary detention and violence. In welcoming resettlement opportunities offered by several African States, the Committee invited all States to make places available to respond to urgent or emergency protection situations facing individual refugees.

The Committee welcomed the outcome of the Round Table on Solutions to the Problem of Refugees and the Protection of Refugees (San Remo, Italy, 12-14 July) and called on the High Commissioner to convene, in consultation with the Chairman of the Committee, an open-ended working group of Committee members to examine protection problems and solutions in a coherent and comprehensive manner.

With regard to the promotion and dissemination of refugee law, the Committee encouraged the High Commissioner actively to promote further the universal applicability of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees(2) and the 1967 Protocol thereto(3) and to continue organizing protection training courses for government and other concerned officials. States were asked to adopt appropriate legislative and/or administrative measures for the effective implementation of those international instruments.

The Committee considered the phenomenon of refugees and asylum-seekers who moved in an irregular manner from a country in which they had already found protection or who wilfully destroyed or disposed of their documentation in order to mislead the authorities of the country of arrival. While it recognized that there might be exceptional cases to justify the former, it considered the latter unacceptable and concluded that appropriate arrangements should be made to deal with the problem.

Progress was made towards promoting the participation of refugee women as agents, as well as beneficiaries, in the planning and implementation of protection and assistance programmes. The Committee urged the High Commissioner to develop a methodology for systematically addressing gender issues in refugee programmes and encouraged additional efforts to raise public awareness of the specific situation of refugee women. As regards refugee children, the High Commissioner was requested to give special attention to the needs of unaccompanied minors, particularly with regard to forced recruitment into armed forces and to the risks associated with irregular adoption.

With regard to Central American refugees, the Committee welcomed the commitments of Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico and Nicaragua in the implementation of the Concerted Plan of Action, adopted in May at the International Conference on Central American Refugees (see below). It also welcomed the adoption in June of the Declaration and Comprehensive Plan of Action on Indo-Chinese Refugees (see below).

To help implement development projects relating to refugees, returnees and the areas hosting them, the Committee requested the High Commissioner to establish a close working relationship with relevant agencies of the UN system, including the UN Development Programme (UNDP), so as to examine the conditions and modalities of an appropriate implementing mechanism. It further requested UNHCR to give priority to and identify with development agencies and Governments of host countries appropriate projects and initiatives that might be presented to development agencies for implementation and funding in refugee/returnee areas of developing countries.

The Committee approved the allocation under General Programmes amounting to $389.4 million (including the $10 million Emergency Fund) for 1989 and $414.4 million for 1990.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1989/164 of 5 July, the Economic and Social Council transmitted the report of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees(4) to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth (1989) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 44/137 without vote.

tarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 44/137 without vote.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office, as well as the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its fortieth session, and having heard the statements made by the Officer-in-Charge of the Office of the High Commissioner on 15 and 17 November 1989,

Recalling its resolution 43/117 of 8 December 1988,

Reaffirming the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner, as well as the fundamental importance of the High Commissioner's protection function and the need for States to co-operate with the High Commissioner in the exercise of this primary and essential function,

Noting with satisfaction that, following recent accessions, one hundred and six States are now parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

Noting with concern that, despite developments that offer hope for solutions to refugee problems, refugees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner continue to face, in certain situations, distressingly serious problems, including problems of protection as a result of expulsion and refoulement of refugees, their unjustified detention and measures that do not recognize their special situation,

Particularly concerned that in various regions the safety and welfare of refugees and asylum-seekers are seriously undermined on account of military or armed attacks, forced recruitment of refugees into armed forces and other forms of violence, and noting that further efforts should be made to ensure rescue and disembarkation of asylum-seekers in distress at sea and, in this context, noting also the problems relating to stowaway asylum-seekers,

Noting the efforts of the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to address the special problems and needs of refugee and displaced women and children, who in many cases are exposed to a variety of difficult situations affecting their physical and legal protection as well as their psychological and material well-being,

Emphasizing the need for States to assist, on as wide a basis as possible, the efforts of the Office of the High Commissioner in its search for durable and timely solutions to the problems of refugees based on new approaches that meet current realities and at the same time respect the basic principles and concerns of protection,

Realizing in this context that voluntary repatriation or return remains the most desirable solution to the problems facing refugees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner, and welcoming the fact that it has been possible for significant numbers of them to return voluntarily to their country of origin,

Recognizing that the promotion of fundamental human rights is essential to the achievement of self-sufficiency and family security for refugees, as well as to the process of re-establishing the dignity of the human person and realizing durable solutions to refugee problems,

Deeply concerned about the unprecedented financial crisis that the Office of the High Commissioner is currently facing,

Aware that the application of the principle of international solidarity and the search for durable solutions imply a better sharing of responsibilities and arrangements among all the agencies of the United Nations system and other concerned organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, for the implementation and the financing of related activities,

Recognizing that durable solutions for refugees in developing countries can, in many cases, be achieved through a development-oriented approach and that the heavy burden placed on a host country as a result of growing influxes of refugees requires sufficient resources to redress the negative impact and the strain on its socio-economic infrastructure in rural and urban areas, and emphasizing the need to ensure the compatibility of refugee aid and national development plans of developing countries of asylum,

Welcoming the conclusions and decisions on refugee aid and development adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its fortieth session, in particular the request to the Office of the High Commissioner to continue its catalytic role in the area of refugee aid and development,

Commending those States which, despite severe economic and development problems of their own, continue to admit large numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner into their territories, and emphasizing the need to share the burden of these States to the maximum extent possible through international assistance,

Emphasizing the need for close co-operation between the Office of the High Commissioner and relevant agencies of the United Nations system and other international organizations, both intergovernmental and non-governmental, in devising and implementing specific elements of development assistance for solving problems of refugees and returnees and of areas hosting them,

Stressing the need for the international community to continue to provide adequate resettlement opportunities for those refugees for whom no other durable solution may be in sight, with particular attention being paid to those refugees who have spent an inordinately long period of time in camps and to individuals facing urgent or emergency protection situations,

Welcoming the valuable support extended by Governments to the Office of the High Commissioner in the performance of its humanitarian tasks, and recognizing the need for continuing and increasing co-operation between the Office of the High Commissioner and other bodies of the United Nations system and with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Noting the efforts of the Office of the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner, including the establishment of a Working Group, to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Office, and the need to further strengthen field activities and responsibilities,

Commending the Office of the High Commissioner and its staff for the dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities, and paying tribute to those staff members who have endangered their lives in the course of their duties,

1. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental nature of the function of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to provide international protection and the need for States to co-operate fully with his Office in the fulfilment of this function, in particular by acceding to and fully and effectively implementing the relevant international and regional refugee instruments;

2. Endorses the conclusions on the implementation of the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its fortieth session;

3. Calls upon all States to refrain from measures that jeopardize the institution of asylum, in particular the return or expulsion of refugees and asylum-seekers contrary to fundamental prohibitions against these practices, and urges States to continue to admit and receive refugees pending identification of their status and appropriate solutions to their plight;

4. Urges all States to establish quick and effective procedures for determining refugee status and granting asylum in accordance with internationally accepted criteria and appropriate legal guarantees, in order to deal expeditiously with manifestly unfounded claims and to protect refugees and asylum-seekers from unjustified or unduly prolonged detention or stay in camps;

5. Notes with deep concern, in this context, that large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers in different areas of the world are currently subject to detention or similar restrictive measures by reason of their illegal entry or presence in search of asylum, pending resolution of their situation, and reiterates the conclusions on detention adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-seventh session, which set out the grounds for detention of such persons;

6. Condemns violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, in particular those perpetrated by military or armed attacks against refugee camps and settlements, forced recruitment into armed forces and other forms of violence;

7. Notes the accomplishments of the Office of the High Commissioner in the promotion and dissemination of refugee law, including, in particular, the organization of training courses on protection directed towards government and other concerned officials, and urges the Office to pursue its activities in this regard, making every effort to ensure that such protection training courses continue on a significant scale;

8. Endorses the conclusions on refugee children adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its fortieth session, in particular on the development and dissemination of the "Guidelines on Refugee Children" and the implementation of a work plan concerning refugee children that requires the active co-operation and collaboration of Governments, United Nations bodies, among them the United Nations Children's Fund, and non-governmental organizations with the Office of the High Commissioner;

9. Endorses the conclusions on refugee women adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its fortieth session, in which, in particular, the Executive Committee recognized the need to facilitate the participatory role of refugee women and the need for a policy framework and organizational work plan for the implementation of the next stages of bringing issues concerning refugee women into the mainstream of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner;

10. Endorses the conclusions on durable solutions and refugee protection adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its fortieth session, in which the Executive Committee recognized the need for the active promotion of solutions by the international community and by countries of origin, asylum and resettlement, in accordance with their respective obligations and responsibilities and the desirability of prevention through, inter alia, the observance of human rights, as the best solution;

11. Recognizes the importance of attaining durable solutions to refugee problems and, in particular, the need to address in this process the root causes of refugee movements in order to avert new flows of refugees and to facilitate the solution of existing problems;

12. Approves the decision entitled "Sharing of responsibilities for operational activities relating to refugees", adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its fortieth session, and invites the agencies of the United Nations system as well as all other relevant international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, to establish as soon as possible specific mechanisms of co-operation to assure an agreed division of responsibilities and arrangements for the financing of these activities, while preserving the specific mandate of the High Commissioner to provide protection;

13. Urges the member States of relevant bodies to ensure that their delegates to such bodies as the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the World Bank and regional development banks, and multilateral agencies such as the United Nations Development Programme and the International Fund for Agricultural Development are made aware of the refugee-related conclusions of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its fortieth session and urges them to use their good offices to ensure the adoption of policies and the establishment of mechanisms, both institutional and financial, that will provide for co-ordinated and expeditious implementation of development initiatives related to refugees and returnees;

14. Notes with appreciation the ongoing work being done by the Office of the High Commissioner to put into practice the concept of development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees, as initiated at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa and reaffirmed in the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa, as well as in the Declaration and Concerted Plan of Action in favour of Central American Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons adopted by the International Conference on Central American Refugees, held at Guatemala City from 29 to 31 May 1989, urges the Office to continue that process wherever appropriate, in full co-operation with appropriate international agencies, and urges Governments to support these efforts, being fully aware of the catalytic role of the Office of the High Commissioner;

15. Recognizes the importance of the International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees, held at Geneva on 13 and 14 June 1989, and the Comprehensive Plan of Action adopted at that Conference, as well as the International Conference on Central American Refugees and the Concerted Plan of Action in favour of Central American Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons;

16. Urges all States to support the Office of the High Commissioner in its search for durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the Office, primarily through voluntary repatriation or return, with assistance to returnees as appropriate, and, wherever appropriate, through integration into countries of asylum or through resettlement in third countries;

17. Expresses its deep appreciation for the valuable material and humanitarian response of receiving countries, in particular those developing countries which, despite limited resources, continue to admit, on a permanent or temporary basis, large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers;

18. Urges the international community, in accordance with the principle of international solidarity and in the spirit of burden-sharing, to assist the countries referred to in paragraph 17 of the present resolution in order to enable them to cope with the additional burden that the care for refugees and asylum-seekers represents;

19. Endorses the conclusions and decisions on assistance activities adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its fortieth session, which reflect the gravity of the financial crisis that the Office of the High Commissioner is facing at present;

20. Calls upon all Governments to contribute to the High Commissioner's programmes and, taking into account the need to achieve greater burden-sharing among donors, to assist the High Commissioner in securing additional income from traditional governmental sources, other Governments and the private sector in order to ensure that the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner are met.

General Assembly resolution 44/137

15 December 1989 Meeting 82 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/44/823) without vote, 27 November (meeting 56); 31-nation draft (A/C.3/44/L.67), orally revised; agenda item 110. Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 3rd Committee 44-47, 49, 56; plenary 82.

Financial and administrative questions

The year 1989 was a particularly difficult year for UNHCR in financial terms. Total voluntary funds expenditure amounted to $570.3 million,⁽⁵⁾ reflecting a marked increase compared to $545.5 million in 1988. Of the 1989 total, $386.6 million was spent on General Programmes and $183.7 million went to Special Programmes and other accounts. Total income for 1989 amounted to $533.6 million, compared to $529.1 million in 1988.

Severe funding problems, started by a negative carry-over of some $6.8 million from 1988 in General Programmes, were compounded by a reduction in secondary income while overall requirements continued to increase. The initial General Programmes target had been $429 million. In addition, UNHCR had had to address new situations in Ethiopia, Central America, South-East Asia and Hong Kong, with costs totalling some $42.4 million. Drastic reassessment of priorities had brought about savings of some $34 million. Due to limited levels of contributions, further reductions were made in programmes for all regions. In July, operational projects were cut and austerity measures imposed, for further savings of some $35 million. Thus, the final revised General Programmes target was $389.4 million.

In view of funding difficulties, the Executive Committee in October(1) authorized an exceptional carry-over of a maximum of $40 million into 1990 in order to cover the anticipated shortfall for the year. It also decided to hold an extraordinary session in mid-1990 to address the content of the General Programmes and other assistance activities, with a view to examining the effective use of funds and administration of programmes and projects. The Committee endorsed the recommendation of the Board of Auditors(5) that UNHCR should intensify its efforts to extend fund-raising activities to non-traditional sources, including the private sector.

Contributions

Contributions in cash and in kind in 1989 totalled $505.9 million, compared to $482.7 million in 1988. Paid cash contributions amounted to $407.6 million in 1989; outstanding cash pledges amounted to $55.2 million. Contributions in kind amounted to $10.7 million, with an additional $32.4 million outstanding. Seventy-two Governments made contributions totalling $459 million, while 30 non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations made contributions in cash and kind valued at some $47 million. Donor support continued to be strong in absolute terms, with an increase of 5.6 per cent from the total contributions income figure of $480 million in 1988.

In October, the Executive Committee of UNHCR, noting the shortfall in funds in relation to requirements, appealed to Governments that had already contributed to consider making additional contributions and requested those Governments that had not previously contributed to provide financial support.

Government pledges of $166 million were announced at a meeting on 20 November of the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to the 1990 Programme of UNHCR.

1988 accounts

The audited financial statements on funds administered by UNHCR for the year ended 31 December 1988(5) showed total expenditures of $545.5 million and total income of $529.1 million. In October 1989, the Executive Committee took note(1) of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).(6)

On 19 December, in resolution 44/183, the General Assembly accepted the financial reports and audited financial statements of UNHCR and endorsed the observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and ACABQ.

Administrative and personnel issues

The Executive Committee of UNHCR in October approved the transfer in 1990 of up to $800,000 from the General Programme Reserve to the Fund for Staff Housing and Basic Amenities, bringing the ceiling of the Fund from $5.1 million to $5.9 million.

The Committee urged the High Commissioner to reduce in 1990 the average grade level at headquarters and to raise the average grade level in the field, inter alia, through the reallocation of senior management posts from headquarters to the field.

Refugee assistance and protection

Assistance

During 1989,(1) UNHCR continued to co-operate with concerned Governments and the international community in efforts to meet the humanitarian needs of refugees throughout the world and to direct programmes towards durable solutions through either voluntary repatriation or local integration in the country of first asylum, or, where those were not possible, resettlement in another country.

More than $255 million was obligated in 1989 to promote durable solutions, including $71 million spent under Special Programmes to facilitate voluntary repatriation and the rehabilitation of returnees in their countries of origin. UNHCR continued to emphasize that States must create the necessary conditions in concerned countries of origin to make voluntary repatriation a viable option and, in that connection, advocated the establishment of tripartite commissions to promote and facilitate voluntary return whenever possible.

In Africa, the voluntary repatriation of more than 43,000 Namibians, mainly from Angola and Zambia, was successfully completed as called for in a 1978 Security Council resolution.(2) In Angola and Zaire, a two-way repatriation began in September 1989. In Latin America, some 9,000 persons were repatriated, mainly from Honduras to El Salvador, and another 5,000 persons from Honduras and Costa Rica to Nicaragua. Also, some 1,800 Chileans were repatriated under UNHCR auspices. Where voluntary repatriation was unlikely and where the host Government was agreeable, UNHCR assisted refugees in settling within the host country. In China, Mexico, Somalia, the Sudan, Swaziland, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Zaire and Zambia, rural settlement projects enabled refugees to resume a more normal life and become self-sufficient. Education, vocational training, counselling services, housing facilities and social amenities were provided to refugees in urban and semi-urban areas. An upward trend in resettlement continued in 1989, with a total of 124,244 refugees resettled in third countries under UNHCR auspices. That increase was composed essentially of Indo-Chinese and contrasted with slightly fewer refugees resettled from most other areas, as compared with 1988. Only Africa showed an increase of some 26 per cent, with 4,563 persons resettled.

UNHCR also responded to requests for emergency assistance in 1989. Almost all of the $10 million in the UNHCR Emergency Fund was needed for urgent intervention in Angola ($1.05 million), Ethiopia ($0.6 million), Malaysia ($0.5 million), Mauritania ($0.48 million), Pakistan ($0.73 million), Senegal ($2.7 million), Uganda ($2.6 million) and Zaire ($0.95 million). In October, UNHCR introduced a new Refugee Contingency Plan format. It was complemented in high-priority locations by the UNHCR emergency preparedness profile, containing infrastructural and institutional resource data to facilitate emergency preparedness planning. New emergency measures, including a central emergency stockpile, an emergency staffing roster, an emergency registration kit and a field-level emergency alert system, were being prepared.

UNHCR developed a training course to enable project planners and implementers to conduct a thorough analysis of the situation of women in any refugee population through examination of the gender-based division of socio-economic roles. In July, a Senior Co-ordinator for Refugee Women was appointed to co-ordinate and monitor the integration of women's issues into all UN activities.

Implementation of the UNHCR Guidelines on Refugee Children⁽³⁾ was delayed in several areas due to the continued financial difficulties of the Office. Refugee children continued to face serious problems with respect to protection and general welfare. To identify the most appropriate durable solutions for unaccompanied minors, UNHCR issued draft guidelines for interviewing unaccompanied refugee children and adolescents and for preparing social histories.

During 1989, some $3.5 million was spent on public information activities to create international awareness and understanding of the plight of refugees and the goals and activities of UNHCR. The Office continued to publish the magazine Refugees monthly in English, French and Spanish, bi-monthly in German and Japanese, quarterly in Italian and twice yearly in Greek. Some 200,000 copies were distributed free of charge in over 100 countries. With television networks, UNHCR co-produced programmes on refugee children in Ethiopia, victims of torture, Vietnamese "boat people", Afghan refugees in Pakistan and refugee women.

Refugee aid and development

UNHCR co-operated in 1989 with development agencies to implement projects reinforcing ongoing assistance or facilitating the phasing-out of such assistance. It worked with the World Bank in the "Second Income-generating Project for Refugee Areas in Pakistan" and agreed to a third phase in 1991-1992, pending the voluntary repatriation of refugees to Afghanistan. In Somalia, a joint World Bank/UNHCR/UNDP/European Economic Community mission made initial assessments for a "refugee-affected area project", to help refugees who might opt to remain in Somalia when the majority repatriated. UNHCR undertook project-preparation work with the International Fund for Agricultural Development in Mexico for Guatemalan refugees and in Ethiopia for returnees. Projects in the Sudan and Iran awaited the necessary funding.

In a report⁽⁴⁾ to the Executive Committee, the High Commissioner delineated the role and mandate of UNHCR with regard to other agencies working to resolve and alleviate refugee and returnee problems through developmental initiatives, and addressed the character and operational aspects of a proposed Project Planning Fund for Refugee Aid and Development and financial resources allocated to developing asylum countries. Observing that appropriately targeted development assistance could play an important role in reversing or at least attenuating the root causes leading to refugee outflows, he concluded that the concept of refugee aid and development could contribute to a more cost-effective and co-ordinated approach by UNHCR in its search for durable solutions. He proposed: strengthening co-ordination between national refugee administration authorities and planning and technical departments; advancing refugee-related concerns in policy bodies of international development organizations; and introducing multi-year programme planning into the UNHCR programme.

In October, the Executive Committee requested⁽⁵⁾ the High Commissioner to continue his catalytic role in the area of refugee aid and development and to give priority to and identify ap propriate projects and initiatives with development agencies and Governments of host countries. Member States were asked to respond favourably to refugee aid and development appeals for projects to be undertaken by UNHCR in partnership with refugee-hosting Governments and development agencies.

Also in October, on a related subject on sharing responsibilities for operational activities relating to refugees, the Committee requested the High Commissioner to enter into consultations as soon as possible with UNDP and other development agencies of the UN system, so as to examine the condition and modalities of an appropriate implementing mechanism for development projects relating to refugees, returnees and the areas that received them.

Africa

The overall number of refugees in Africa increased during 1989. Refugees continued to flee from Mozambique into Malawi and from the Sudan into south-western Ethiopia. Events in Mauritania and Senegal in May, and in Liberia at the end of the year, necessitated new emergency operations in a part of Africa that had been relatively free of large-scale refugee movements. African Governments continued to offer generous asylum to refugees, but their increased burden brought greater difficulties in maintaining past liberal practices.

During the year, expenditures in Africa under UNHCR voluntary funds totalled $257.8 million, of which $176.7 million was obligated under General Programmes, the greater part for care and maintenance operations, and $78 million under Special Programmes, the greater part for repatriation operations and the needs of newly arrived refugees.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/176, noted the oral reports made on behalf of the Secretary-General by the High Commissioner on the situation of refugees in the Sudan and refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti and Malawi, assistance to refugees in Somalia, assistance to refugees and returnees in Ethiopia, and assistance to student refugees in southern Africa, as well as an oral report on behalf of the Secretary-General by a UNDP representative on assistance to refugees in Somalia.

Southern Africa

During 1989, assistance continued to more than 120,000 Mozambicans in Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe. A two-way repatriation between Angola and Zaire began by air in September and some 6,500 Angolans and 3,000 Zairians were repatriated. The number of South African refugees reported to have found asylum in southern Africa remained stable at some 35,000, over half of whom received UNHCR assistance.

In discharging responsibilities assigned to UNHCR in a 1978 Security Council resolution,(2) and within the framework of the activities of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group, a total of 43,387 Namibians were repatriated. Of that number, 35,553 returned from Angola, 3,841 from Zambia and 3,993 from 40 other countries (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

Mozambican refugees in Malawi

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(6) the Secretary-General in July 1989 reported(7) on assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi. There were 646,864 refugees in Malawi, mainly from Mozambique, as at 1 April 1989.

The continued influx of refugees over the years had resulted in the Government's policy to discourage refugee settlements among the local Malawian population. Although the Government regularly opened new sites for refugees to keep up with the rate of the arrivals, land shortages remained a serious problem. In addition, government services had to support both national and refugee populations, often to the detriment of the Malawian citizens, he said.

The original target—to provide one potable water point per 1,000 persons—had been achieved by the end of 1988; a new objective of one water point for every 750 was set. As for education, some 206 classrooms were completed, with 60,000 Mozambican children enrolled in primary education programmes following the Mozambican curriculum. Some 20 handicapped refugees received training in carpentry, sewing, shoemaking and tinsmithing. The World Food Programme (WFP) co-ordinated the supply of most basic food items, with UNHCR purchasing additional basic commodities and supplementary and therapeutic food.

Following the establishment of a tripartite commission in December 1988, the Governments of Malawi and Mozambique, together with UNHCR, held two meetings during 1989 on voluntary repatriation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/149 without vote.

Assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/132 of 7 December 1987 and 43/148 of 8 December 1988 on assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, Having examined that part of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees that deals with the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Malawi,

Gravely concerned about the continuing serious social and economic impact of the massive presence of refugees and displaced persons, as well as its far-reaching consequences for the country's long-term development process,

Appreciating the important measures that the Government of Malawi is taking in order to provide shelter, protection, food, education and health and other humanitarian services to thousands of refugees and displaced persons,

Recognizing the heavy burden placed on the people and Government of Malawi and the sacrifices they are making in caring for the refugees and displaced persons, given the country's limited social services and infrastructure, and the need for adequate international assistance to enable them to continue their efforts to provide assistance to the refugees and displaced persons,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered by Member States, the various organizations of the United Nations system, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the refugee programme in Malawi,

Bearing in mind the findings and recommendations of the inter-agency mission to Malawi, particularly on the need to strengthen the country's socio-economic infrastructure in order to enable it to provide for the immediate humanitarian relief requirements of the refugees and displaced persons, as well as the long-term national development needs of the country,

Recognizing the need to view refugee-related development projects within local and national development plans,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the measures that the Government of Malawi is taking to provide material and humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons, in spite of the serious economic situation it faces, and stresses the need for additional resources to lessen the impact of the presence of refugees and displaced persons on the country's long-term development process;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees and displaced persons in Malawi;

4. Expresses grave concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of the massive presence of refugees and displaced persons in the country and its implications for the long-term socio-economic development of the whole country;

5. Appeals to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial institutions to continue providing the Government of Malawi with the necessary resources for the implementation of development assistance projects in regions affected by the presence of refugees and displaced persons, as well as for the development programmes now being implemented;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of ongoing projects in the areas affected by the presence of refugees and displaced persons and for programmes now being implemented;

7. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees and displaced persons in their settlements;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Student refugees

In July, the Secretary-General reported(8) on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa. Assistance was provided by UNHCR to equip student refugees with skills to make them productive and self-reliant in their countries of asylum, and also to prepare them to assume leadership roles in various fields of competence upon their return to their countries of origin. Appropriations for 1989 amounted to $489,000. Higher education for Namibian and South African refugees was funded by the UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa.

The Secretary-General reported that during the 1987/88 academic year, some 708 South African and Namibian students were assisted to study at the lower secondary school level, both in and outside the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 44/157 without vote.

Assistance to student refugees in southern Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/149 of 8 December 1988, in which it, inter alia, requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from South Africa and Namibia who had been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with appreciation that some of the projects recommended in the report continue to be successfully implemented,

Noting with concern that the discriminatory and repressive policies that continue to be applied in South Africa cause a continued and increasing influx of student refugees into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the increasing number of student refugees,

Appreciating the efforts of the host countries to deal with their student refugee populations, with the assistance of the international community,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for granting asylum and making educational and other facilities available to the student refugees, in spite of the pressure that the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for the co-operation that they have extended to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on matters concerning the welfare of the refugees;

4. Notes with appreciation the financial and material support provided for the student refugees by Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from South Africa and Namibia who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

6. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue contributing generously to the assistance programme for student refugees, through financial support of the regular programmes of the High Commissioner and of the projects and programmes, including unfunded projects, which were submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

7. Also urges all Member States and all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the countries of asylum materially and otherwise to enable them to continue to discharge their humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

8. Appeals to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and all other competent United Nations bodies, as well as other international and non-governmental organizations, to continue providing humanitarian and development assistance so as to facilitate and expedite the settlement of student refugees from South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

9. Calls upon agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to continue co-operating with the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees in southern Africa;

10. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to keep the matter under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1990, of the current status of the programmes and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Follow-up to the 1988

Conference on refugees in southern Africa

In response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(9) the Secretary-General reported in September 1989 on follow-up to the 1988 International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa. He summarized activities of UN bodies and Member States in implementing the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action,(11) adopted at the Conference, which were designed to promote emergency preparedness, needs assessment and delivery of assistance, recovery and development, and mobilization of resources.

The Secretary-General also considered the nature of the problem of internally displaced persons and UN mechanisms to deal with that problem. He noted that since internally displaced persons remained within their own territory, they fell under the jurisdiction of their own national Governments, and that there was no formal mechanism within the UN system to deal specifically with that problem. Referring to the arrangements in place at the headquarters and at the field level, in the case of Africa, he concluded that it was not appropriate to establish a new mechanism but, rather, necessary to strengthen existing arrangements so as to enhance accessibility and effectiveness. He suggested that the UNDP resident representative/UN resident co-ordinator should play the key role whenever an emergency situation involving displaced persons evolved, including early warning.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/136 without vote.

International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/116 of 8 December 1988 on the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa,

Gravely concerned about the constant deterioration of the situation in southern Africa arising from the domination and oppression of the people of South Africa by the minority racist regime of South Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa, held at Oslo from 22 to 24 August 1988,

Conscious of its responsibility to provide economic, material and humanitarian assistance to independent States
